OFFICIAL REPORT

Wednesday, June 11, 1947

The house met at 3.30 o'clock.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

BRIEF SUBMITTED TO CABINET BY ALBERTA AND SASKATCHEWAN FARMERS

Mr. BURTON:

1. Has the government given further consideration to the requests made by the Alberta farmers' union and the United Farmers of Canada (Saskatchewan section), in their brief presented to the cabinet in August, 1946?

2. If so, what action has been taken with respect to items one, two and three of the above-mentioned brief?

Mr. GARDINER: I can best answer this orally. As to part 1, a full reply was given later to the brief which was presented in August of last year, and subsequently a committee representing the farm organizations came to Ottawa. There was oral consideration of the request made, and it was agreed—at least if not agreed it was admitted—that an effort had been made to meet the situation which was presented in the brief. Since that time there has been no necessity for further consideration other than the carrying out of the undertaking under the Agricultural Prices Support Act. With respect to part 2 of the question, the explanation I have given covers items one, two and three of the brief.

Mr. SPEAKER: Answered.

WEATHER STATIONS

Mr. McKAY:

1. How many weather stations have been established in Canada's northern territories since V-E day?

2. Has any foreign country assisted the Dominion of Canada financially in the setting up of these stations? If so, to what extent?

3. Where are these weather stations located?

4. Under what department of government are they operated?

5. How many Canadian personnel are involved in their operation?

Mr. McILRAITH:

In so far as the Department of Transport is concerned:

1. Two, one at Baker Lake, the other at Eureka Sound.

2. In the case of the station at Eureka Sound, the Canadian government is supplying the officer-in-charge, one half of the personnel, and the food supplies for these personnel. The United States weather bureau is supplying the remaining half of the personnel until sufficiently trained Canadian staff are available, together with their food supplies, and additional supplies and technical equipment. The United States also furnish the necessary transportation for the establishment of this station which is now in operation.

3. The Eureka Sound station is at 80°13'N. 86°11'W. The other station is at Baker Lake, 64°18'N. 96°5'W.

4. The Department of Transport is responsible for the operation of the Eureka Sound station and for the weather programme at Baker Lake. The weather programme at Baker Lake is actually performed by R.C.C.S. personnel of the Department of National Defence.

5. There are three at Eureka Sound, five at Baker Lake.

ROAD FROM ALASKA HIGHWAY TO YUKON-B.C. BORDER

Mr. ARCHIBALD:

1. Have tenders been called for the building of a road into Atlin, British Columbia, from the Alaska highway to the Yukon-British Columbia border?

2. If so, what are the names of those submitting tenders and what was the price of each tender?

3. To whom was the contract awarded?

Mr. McILRAITH:

1. No.

2. Answered by No. 1.

3. Answered by No. 1.

FARM LABOUR

Mr. HEON:

1. Is there an agreement between Canada and the United States with respect to the recruiting of Canadian farm labour for the United States?

2. If so, what is the nature and extent of this agreement?

3. How many Canadian farm labourers have gone to the United States per province for each year since 1940?

Mr. MITCHELL:

1. Yes.

2. Arrangements were originally made in 1941, following the drawing up of the Hyde Park agreement of April 20 of that year. These arrangements, which provided for the exchange of seasonal agricultural labour and equipment between Canada and the United States, have been continued each succeeding year through an exchange of notes between the respective departments of state.

The purpose of these movements is to facilitate the exchange of workers mainly between adjacent areas of the United States and Canada and to take advantage of labour which may be available due to seasonal variation between the two countries.

Arrangements for these movements are dealt with in Canada under the dominion-provincial farm labour programme. Care is taken to see that workers can be spared from the district in which they are recruited and that they proceed to designated areas when and where their services are required. While many of the workers are recruited from rural border areas, the movements last year included a considerable number of unemployed urban workers

Movements of farm labour arranged under this agreement include:

(a) Movement of combine units, including necessary crews, from the prairie provinces to the midwestern United States during the summer, and a return movement from the U.S. to assist in harvesting crops in the prairies in the fall;

(b) Movement of tobacco workers from the southern U.S. to Ontario and Quebec;

(c) Movement of Canadian potato harvesters from Quebec and New Brunswick to Maine and from Manitoba to North Dakota.

(d) Movement of workers from Quebec to the New England states for fruit and vegetable picking and processing.

3. Under this agreement the approximate numbers of agricultural workers going to the United States on a seasonal work basis since 1942 are as follows:

	N.B.	Quebec	Prairie Provinces
1942	588	600	100
1943	—	700	500
1944	378	1,500	550
1945	300	4,300	2,350
1946	400	5,900	3,900

[Mr. Heon.]

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

IMMIGRATION—JAPANESE

Mr. REID:

Of the Japanese entering Canada from April 1, 1939 to March 31, 1947:

1. How many had previously resided in Canada?

2. What were the numbers who entered in each year from September, 1939?

3. Of the number who previously resided in Canada, in what year did they leave Canada for duties or residence abroad or in Japan?

4. Have any citizens of Japanese origin, either naturalized or born in Canada renounced their allegiance to Japan or the Japanese government?

DEPUTY MINISTERS

Mr. RAYMOND (Beauharnois-Laprairie):

1. Who were the deputy ministers in each department of the government on October 20, 1935?

2. Between October 20, 1935 and June 1, 1947, what appointments were made to these various positions; when was the appointment made in each case and whom did each appointee replace?

ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE

INQUIRY AS TO CADET COURSE—ENTRANCE EXAMINATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. G. ROSS (St. Paul's): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. The papers this morning say that "First peacetime staff course in Canada concludes at Royal Military College." The article goes on to point out that the present location of the Canadian army staff college is—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. May I call the hon. member's attention to the fact that in asking his question he should not give information to the house; he should seek information from the government.

Mr. GRAYDON: He is only laying the foundation.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Is it true, Mr. Speaker, that the present location of the Canadian army staff college is at the historic Royal Military college, where from 1876 to 1941 cadets trained for commissions in the Canadian and British armies? Was Major General J. F. M. Whiteley commandant of the Canadian army staff college, and was Colonel R. P. Rothschild its director? What I want to ask is this. Is it true that the next course to be held at the staff college is scheduled to begin early in 1948? If so, does that mean that the college will not be open as it used to be for the training of cadets of younger age?

Hon. BROOKE CLAXTON (Minister of National Defence): An announcement was made in the house some time ago, and also by way of press release, that it is the present plan to reopen the Royal Military College as a cadet college for all three services in September, 1948, and to carry on two combined service colleges, one at Royal Roads and one at the Royal Military college on a similar basis.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): May I ask a supplementary question? Does that mean that examinations for entrance will be those which are taken in the spring of 1948, and that the selection will be made from the results?

Mr. CLAXTON: An announcement will be made later as to the entrance requirements. At present the entrance requirements for Royal Roads are senior matriculation or its equivalent.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): That does not answer the question about Royal Military college. Are the qualifications the same?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I know that the hon. member is anxious to abide by the rules of the house.

Mr. FULTON: He is anxious to get an answer to his question.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member knows that questions asked on the orders of the day should be brief and to the point, and be on matters of urgency. May I suggest to the hon. member that he put the other question on the order paper.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, the question is urgent from this point of view. I really want to know now, not a long time later, what the plans are to be.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: You are doing well. Stay with it.

P.E.I. CAR FERRY

SUGGESTION AS TO NAME OF VESSEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. KING HAZEN (St. John-Albert): I crave your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, to be allowed to ask a question of the Minister of Transport. I believe it is brief and to the point. In appreciation of the great interest he has taken and the increasing efforts he has made to hasten the construction of the Prince Edward Island car ferry, will the government give consideration to naming the vessel the "W. Chester S. McLure"?

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport): I can assure the hon. gentleman that the minister as well as the government is quite prepared to give that matter consideration.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Might I suggest "Grant MacNaught" as the name?

PUBLIC WORKS

REQUEST FOR TUNNEL BETWEEN TORONTO AND TORONTO ISLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. G. ROSS (St. Paul's): I wish to ask another question, now that we have had all these speeches of congratulation which everybody has enjoyed very much. I congratulate the Prime Minister on his twenty years of service and on all that he has done. It seems to me there has been an announcement that a tunnel is to be put under the harbour at Halifax. Will the Minister of Public Works take into consideration or reconsideration the building of a tunnel between Toronto and Toronto island?

Hon. ALPHONSE FOURNIER (Minister of Public Works): I suggest that the hon. member put that question on the order paper.

INCOME WAR TAX ACT

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance) moved the third reading of Bill No. 269, to amend the Income War Tax Act.

Mr. E. D. FULTON (Kamloops): I indicated to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott), when this bill was in committee, that there were certain representations I wished to make, which it was not possible for me to make at that time. In the course of some ten minutes I wish merely to bring to his attention once more a matter to which I think he should give the consideration it requires, which calls for a decision by the government. It is the question whether or not basic herds shall be classified as capital or income. This matter has been before the house, to my personal knowledge, for the last three years.

I take this opportunity of speaking only because I feel deeply that it is regrettable that a decision has not been made prior to this time. Each year the matter has been brought up, promises of consideration have been made. This year the words of the minister were that "very real consideration" was being given to the question. Previously it was only "consideration". Now we are advised that it is "under active consideration" between him and the Department of National Revenue. The purpose of my rising at this moment is to suggest that more than consideration be given. Active consideration is not sufficient, because not only is hardship being inflicted upon those who are selling their herds at this time, or are anxious to sell them, but a very real injustice is being inflicted on those people.

Instances have been given in the past of sales which have been made and in which injustices have resulted, or of sales that otherwise would have been made but which have been held up because of the hardship which would follow, inasmuch as the proceeds would be regarded as subject to income tax in the one year in which the sale was made. Canadian people, such as the citizens whom I have in mind, who have made a real contribution to the development of this country, who have built up their industry over a period of from forty to fifty years and are now anxious to retire or to pay off debts and have enough left for their livelihood, are prevented from doing that because of what I may call, without exaggerating, inertia on the part of the government; and I think it is my duty as a member to bring this matter forcibly to the attention of the house. While in a sense I feel that I should apologize for taking the time of the house, nevertheless I feel that I would be neglecting my duty if I did not take these few minutes to impress upon the government once again, as I gave notice during the budget debate that I would do, the real urgency of this question.

I am going to give just two more examples of how this failure to recognize a breeding or basic herd as capital works injustice upon our people. I know of the case of a man who in 1943, because of a shortage of feed owing to an unexpectedly severe winter, was forced to sell approximately half his herd, which otherwise he would not have sold because it was a continuing operation. Having sold those cattle in 1943, when he made his return in 1944 he found himself required to pay income tax on the proceeds, though he had intended to keep those proceeds over the winter and reinvest them next year in buying back the animals he had not been able to carry through the winter. In other words, he was realizing on his capital intending to reinvest it the next spring and summer, but was forced to pay income tax on those proceeds at the very high rate then prevailing. So the following year he was simply unable to make the reinvestment which otherwise he would have been able and had expected to make. That is the first example of what happened because of the failure to decide whether or not breeding herds are, in fact, capital.

The other case came to my knowledge just last evening in the form of a letter I received from a solicitor in my constituency, who brought to my attention the case of an estate in the vicinity of Ashcroft. This was the case of an old pioneer rancher in that district who, being taken ill during 1945, was unable to carry on his ranching operations. So he and his family sold his herd, realizing $5,487 through the sale. As I say, that was in 1945. Toward the end of that year the rancher died and his executors set up these whole proceeds in the capital assets of the estate. I would ask the house and the minister to bear in mind that these proceeds were reckoned to be part of the capital value of that estate for succession duty purposes. I think I should continue by reading the letter, since it sets forth the circumstances clearly:

> A short time ago the son of this rancher came in about a claim by the income tax department for some $450 which they claimed to be still due, and I wrote to the income tax department asking them if in view of the fact that this was the sale of the whole band of cattle caused by the fact that the testator was unable to continue operations owing to his illness . . . that the department would use the discretion which the Minister of National Revenue had stated they made a practice of doing in cases of this kind, and not tax the whole amount as the income of one year.

Then, if I may make the request, I want the house to listen carefully to the next paragraph:

> The inspector of taxation wrote back and said that he did not feel disposed to open up the file in this matter and asked for payment in full immediately. He also claimed a penalty of $48.62 for late filing.

The letter continues:

> Now the widow in this case was seventy-eight years old and lives quite a number of miles to the east of the 70 Mile Post.

It then continues with some of the local geography in question, and indicates that this lady could not obtain expert advice as to how to market her cattle so as to avoid liability for income tax, and then concludes:

> The result was that she was assessed the sum of $972.34 which, together with the penalty, amounted to $1,021 or one-fifth of her total capital after disposing of these assets.

There, it seems to me, is a clear example of how this indecision results in hardship to Canadian citizens. Here is an estate forced to realize a capital asset. They cannot continue operations, and this results in the realization of some $5,000 in cash. Because it is all regarded as income and subject to taxation in the one year, they have to pay out over $1,000; and I think the house will realize what that means to a widow of seventy-eight years of age, when over one-fifth of her husband's estate is taken from her under the heading of income tax when in effect it is capital assets and will in its own turn be subject to estate duties by both provincial and dominion governments.

I see that my ten minutes are nearly up, and I shall try to keep my undertaking not to hold up the matter longer. I wish to conclude by saying that last summer I went to see the then minister of finance about this question and had with him a full and friendly interview in which he professed to be impressed, not by my arguments particularly, but by the arguments which could be marshalled in favour of recognition of the principle that a breeding or basic herd is capital. But he said that at the time, because of pressure of business, he was unable to keep all those arguments in his head—and I quite appreciated that—and asked me to submit a brief summarizing these points of view. I submitted that brief to the minister with an accompanying letter on June 21, 1946, just under one year ago. In that brief I made reference to the brief submitted by the Department of Agriculture. Just here I should like to point out that the other evening, when we were discussing the agriculture estimates, I asked the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) whether he and his department had changed their views with regard to this matter. In his reply the minister said that they had not changed their view, but that of course the decision by his department was not the final word. and that he believed the Department of National Revenue was endeavouring to work out a system. Last year, when this matter was discussed in the house, on no fewer than four occasions the present Minister of Finance said that this matter was receiving earnest consideration. I drew to his attention the fact that in the United States the bureau of internal revenue recognized the principle that a breeding or basic herd is a capital asset, and he said then they would look into the United States practice and see. This discussion is to be found at page 3860 of Hansard for July 25, 1946.

These matters have been brought to the attention of the government again and again. The principle has been outlined clearly. I do not think it would be proper for me to repeat the arguments, but I want to emphasize that, in spite of these matters having been brought to the attention of the government, here we have a case, as revealed in this letter to which I have referred today, where an unfortunate Canadian woman seventy-eight years of age is being deprived of one-fifth of the capital value of her husband's estate because of failure to reach a decision as to whether or not a breeding herd is a capital asset. I call upon the government earnestly and urgently to lose no more time in making this decision, so that simple justice may be done these people who have put in many years in building up some of the pioneer and frontier regions of our country.

Mr. H. W. HERRIDGE (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, because I have a large number of constituents who are not at all satisfied with some sections of this act, I want to speak for two or three minutes in connection with taxation of cooperatives. I could speak at some length, but I shall endeavour to be brief.

I should like to make a recommendation to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott). I am of the opinion that the knowledge of the minister and of many of his officials in connection with the operation of cooperatives is strictly theoretical. I do not blame him for that. But I suggest that if the government is going to understand at all the various types of cooperatives—and there are many types—it would be well for the minister to have some senior officials visit typical dairy cooperatives to see how they function and to understand some of their practical difficulties. They should visit some of the fruit cooperatives, some of the fruit producer and consumer cooperatives, and some of the service cooperatives. I have in my constituency a particular type of cooperative in which there are associated about 1,000 or 1,500 members, and which owns cars for transportation purposes, and represents another development in the cooperative movement.

I believe the minister and his officials would have a better understanding of their problem and their difficulties if some of the senior officials would visit these organizations and look into the practical difficulties they face from day to day under the present legislation. The same applies to fishing and to service cooperatives.

I rise at this time simply to make that suggestion and recommendation to the minister, because I believe that it will lead to better understanding of the problems of cooperatives under this legislation.

Mr. C. C. MILLER (Portage la Prairie): Mr. Speaker, I shall take only a moment or two to bring one or two points to the attention of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) or the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann).

In the constituency I represent there are a number of railwaymen, and they have been communicating to me a grievance they maintain they have. That grievance is that there is a deduction made from their salary cheques for pension funds. They feel they should have the same consideration in respect of those deductions for pensions as civil servants have. In other words, civil servants with similar deductions from their pay cheques for pensions can deduct the same from their income tax returns for assessment purposes. The railwaymen, in large numbers, feel that they should have the same privilege. I ask, on behalf of those constituents of mine who work on the railroads, for consideration by the appropriate minister.

There is one other small matter. I believe that in the collection of income tax the inspectors should be instructed to interpret more generously the matter of away-from-home expenses. As I understand it, at the present time the railwaymen of the running trades can deduct from their incomes certain allowances for expenses while they are away from home earning salary upon which they are taxed. We think that provision should be more generously and generally applied.

Let me give one example. In western Canada, particularly during the war years many young men were hockey players. Several of them have gone from my own home town. They had to go to New York, Detroit, and perhaps Toronto. But more particularly they had to go to the United States in order to earn the comparatively large salaries they did earn. Not only were they taxed upon what they earned, but there was added to their incomes the appropriate premium on United States exchange at that time. That seems to be all right, because it is the general practice. But these young men had to be away from home. They were bringing United States currency into this country in substantial amounts when United States currency was badly needed, and no recognition whatsoever has been given to them for that. I maintain that when they are away earning these salaries they should be entitled to away-from-home allowances. I know of no inspector of income tax who is making that allowance. This is particularly important in Winnipeg and Regina.

I would ask that the Minister of National Revenue give serious consideration to a more generous treatment of these young hockey players in that regard. I have mentioned hockey players as an example, but there are many others who earn their money away from home to as great an extent as do those in the running trades on the railroads. I know of no occupation, other than the running trades, which is given this special consideration by way of deduction of away-from-home expenses, and I suggest that consideration should be extended to almost every walk of life where a man has to be away from home to earn the money upon which he is taxed. I maintain, further, that if the act were properly interpreted, it would be interpreted in that way; and I suggest that the minister instruct his enforcement officers accordingly.

Mr. J. A. ROSS (Souris): Mr. Speaker, I should like to endorse the remarks and the argument set forth by the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton). This is not a new matter; I discussed it in the budget debate at this session, and I have discussed it on other occasions.

We thought we were getting somewhere at one time with the predecessor of the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott). Negotiations had taken place between his department and the Department of Agriculture. On the basis of what had happened in that connection in the great nation to the south of us, we were led to believe, some two or three years ago, that something would be done to allow basic herds as capital. There have been many instances of hardship, especially as set forth by the hon. member for Kamloops.

I do not wish to discuss the matter in detail again, but I request that the minister have his department give further consideration to this unfair system, and try to evolve some policy which will be of benefit to those affected.

Mr. ABBOTT: My hon. friend was not in his seat last night, or he would have known that I gave that assurance.

Mr. A. J. BRADSHAW (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I trust I am in order on the motion for third reading of the bill to ask one question of the minister. Last session, legislation was passed in regard to farmers mutual fire insurance companies. The new legislation makes them liable to the thirty per cent corporation tax on profits, and profits are considered by the income tax officials as the difference between the total of all receipts from premiums, interest on investments and from re-insurance, less expenses of management and losses paid. There must necessarily be a substantial surplus to provide a reasonable reserve for unexpected and severe losses. This yearly surplus will be taxed at the rate of thirty per cent.

We have sixty-seven insurance companies in Ontario. The executives of the insurance companies of Ontario interviewed the department in the month of January, and the ruling given at that time was to the effect that mutual insurance companies operated for the benefit of farmers "to the extent stated by you, and which are members of your association, would be exempt from taxation under the provisions of section 4 (1) of the Income War Tax Act, as long as the said section is in force."

I should like the minister to say whether this taxation is still in force.

Mr. ABBOTT: With regard to the point raised by the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Bradshaw), this class of mutual fire insurance companies is treated in exactly the same way as any other mutual corporation, or any cooperative for that matter. They are entitled to deduct from their earnings any refund or refunds, patronage dividends, and the like, before arriving at taxable income. But there is no distinction between so-called farm mutuals and other mutuals. Consequently the ruling to which my hon. friend refers, which was given in January, was in error as to the true position under the law.

Mr. JEAN-FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Temiscouata): Mr. Speaker, some time ago I suggested a plan to dispense with the income tax and replace it with a tax on bank clearings. I should like to ask the minister if he will be kind enough during the recess to give instructions to his officials to examine the matter and offer constructive criticism in that regard. I do not contend that the plan is perfect, but I should like to have all possible objections from the officials of the Department of Finance in order that I may know what can be done with it. If the minister will be kind enough to bring down that information in due course, I think the people will be satisfied.

Motion agreed to, and bill read the third time and passed.

MUNICIPAL IMPROVEMENTS

AMENDMENT OF ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1938—ADMINISTRATION OF PROJECT BY ANOTHER MUNICIPALITY

Mr. R. W. MAYHEW (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 256, to amend the Municipal Improvements Assistance Act, 1938.

Mr. DONALD M. FLEMING (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, this amendment does not appear to be very important. It may be a useful amendment, although I am bound to say that the terms upon which loans hitherto made to municipalities are being altered, pursuant to the terms of this amending bill, are being made so severe that I question if advantage is likely to be taken of the act on many occasions. We are not told in the explanatory note what has given rise to the amendment, but it may be that some municipalities which have already received loans have gone through some change in municipal structure or municipal boundaries.

This is a convenient occasion to ask the government what its policy is with reference to the Municipal Improvements Assistance Act. This act was passed in 1938 at a time when conditions were quite different from those which generally prevail today. Many municipalities were still struggling out of the days of near insolvency or at least financial difficulty, but most of them have since made substantial progress. The act was not drawn upon by many municipalities. This is a proper occasion, it seems to me, for asking the government if it intends to make any substantial use of this act in the days that lie before us.

It will be recalled that the act made provision for loans at two per cent per annum on an amortized basis, the period of the amortization being set by the governor in council, for the purpose of assisting municipalities in proceeding with the construction or extension of works of certain kinds which were defined in the act as self-liquidating projects. Back of it was the intention to assist municipalities at low interest rates in constructing works that would bring not only local benefit to the citizens but would assist in providing employment.

A few months ago I obtained information in reply to a question which I had placed on the order paper with reference to advances made to municipalities under the provisions of this act. I think this is a matter of interest to the house and I should like to ask permission to place this table on Hansard. It is not a lengthy table and I think that would save time, which I am sure we are all anxious to do.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Has the hon. member unanimous consent?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. FLEMING: This is the table:

NOTE.—No advances made during 1946.
The province of Ontario did not avail itself of the provisions of the Municipal Improvements Assistance Act, 1938

No municipality could obtain a loan under the terms of the act unless the loan was guaranteed by the province in which the municipality was situated. It will be seen that in the amending bill the provinces are again being drawn into it. Unless the province stands behind the municipality and the municipality delivers debentures to the dominion government, no advantage of the amendment can be claimed by a municipality. The province of Ontario did not avail itself of the provisions of the act and actually since 1941 only municipalities in one province, Quebec, have obtained advances under the act.

Nothing has been advanced under the act since 1945. The total amount advanced by the dominion government pursuant to the terms of the act in the nine years since it was first enacted is only $6,895,238.

Mr. MAYHEW: I think the hon. member would like to be correct. This act has not been in operation since 1941. It has been in operation for only two years and ten months. It has not been in operation since the war, in other words since 1941, and there have been no loans granted.

Mr. FLEMING: I think the hon. member has misdirected his correction. I am referring to a return made by his department. It may be that the terms of the act were not used extensively by municipalities, but the return made by the Department of Finance shows that since 1941 the following advances were made:

1943	215,687.24
1944	55,545.00
1945	55,545.00

[Mr. Fleming.]

A note on the return states that no advances were made during 1946. I repeat, that is a return made by the Minister of Finance in reply to my question. For these reasons I should like to ask the government to state its intentions with reference to this act. Is it to be allowed to become a dead letter or is there any thought of making any real survey of the purposes for which it was originally intended?

Section 10 of the act reads:

> The minister shall annually prepare a report with regard to loans made under the provisions of this act during the preceding calendar year, and the report shall be laid before parliament within fifteen days, or if parliament is not then sitting, within fifteen days after the beginning of the next session.

The requirements of that section have apparently been honoured more in the breach than in the observance. It is like a great many similar sections that we encounter in statutes passed by this parliament requiring annual reports—they are simply ignored by the government. It is high time the government made a serious attempt to heed and obey the terms of this and other statutes providing for annual reports to parliament on operations under acts.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, the motion before the house is the second reading of a bill to amend the Municipal Improvements Assistance Act. That act grew out of a form of assistance which was created during the depression between the two wars and it was founded on the same principles as the Municipal Assistance Act. I had a return when the minister introduced the resolution preceding this bill; I have not that with me at the present time but I have sent for it. I asked how many dollars had been voted last year in connection with this fund. It was largely a civic problem. In 1936 an act similar to this one was introduced, under which the province was to contribute one-third, the federal government one-third and the municipalities one-third, to provide employment, and under that act in the province of Quebec, Three Rivers got a court house, gaols and roadways, while the city of Montreal got parks and public driveways, and many other municipalities got educational buildings of all kinds. But Ontario, under the leadership of a popular premier of that day did not get one cent of assistance for its municipalities. If we are to have this form of assistance let us have equality of treatment for all the provinces. This legislation is to assist the municipalities with what might broadly be called local improvements, such as waterworks systems and many other forms of municipal ownership, necessary and useful works which the municipalities cannot finance themselves. I believe the time is coming when there will have to be liberal treatment for the municipalities, and particularly there should be equality of treatment.

I had a return brought down to show what was done under the previous act and I found that, while various municipalities in Quebec and other provinces got assistance, municipalities in Ontario got nothing. I could not find one dollar of assistance for Ontario in the return I got ten days ago. I do not say that municipalities out west should not have received assistance; far from it; I am glad that they got assistance, but we ought to have equality of treatment for all the provinces. The time is coming when there will have to be further aid to municipalities. It was always understood at confederation that the principle underlying the giving of these grants under the British North America Act to the provinces was that the provinces should help to maintain the municipal institutions. Oliver Mowat once said that the provinces are only glorified city councils. But when the provinces get these subsidy grants under the British North America Act they do not give the municipalities anything. They just go ahead and spend the money themselves and the municipalities get nothing.

Here is a return that was brought down, under the act now before us, in reply to this question which I asked during this session:

What loans, listed by provinces, have been made to municipalities in Canada by the government towards the cost of self-liquidating municipal works and projects under R.S.C. 1938, Chapter 33, "An Act to assist municipalities in making self-liquidating improvements?"

I find that Greater Vancouver water district got $750,000; Vancouver city $390,000; Saanich, $40,000; Prince George, $25,000; Nanaimo, $200,000, Grand Forks, $11,000; or a total for British Columbia, $1,416,635.

I come now to Alberta. Edmonton got $150,000; and two other amounts of $7,000 and $36,000; Lethbridge got $100,000. I believe that politics was mixed up in some of these cases. In fact everything voted in this house has politics in it because politics is the science of government. Municipalities which feel that they cannot get along come to Ottawa for assistance. I was saying a moment ago that in the province of my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works they had court houses and schools and roads built.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Does the hon. member mean under this legislation?

Mr. CHURCH: Yes; it is the same principle under the act passed a few years ago.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I wish to tell my hon. friend that in the province of Quebec we do not build court houses or roads with federal money.

Mr. CHURCH: With all due respect, I think I know something about this thing.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Not as much as I do.

Mr. CHURCH: I got a return of unemployment relief projects in 1938-1939. Quebec got millions, Ontario nothing, of works built by federal aid. You got court houses and roads and parks and all that kind of thing under the former act. For the benefit of the minister I will continue reading about the assistance given to Alberta under the act now before us. Medicine Hat received $26,000; Calgary, $21,000, $8,000, $37,000, $82,000 and $46,000; Grande Prairie, $50,000; Wetaskiwin, $26,000. Alberta received a total of $591,318.73.

I come now to Saskatchewan. Regina received $60,000; Prince Albert, $75,000; Moose Jaw, $200,000; Melfort, $40,000; Saskatoon, $13,000; Yorkton, $24,000; Canora, $3,000; Pelley, $6,000; Melville, $4,300; Regina, $140,000. We have municipalities in Ontario that would like a hand-out like this. But the Ontario taxpayer has to pay for it all. Under this act there should be equality of treatment, because this money is paid out of direct taxation and the two provinces contributing most to pay for these improvements are the two central provinces. Saskatchewan received a total of $566,200.

I come now to New Brunswick. Fredericton received $200,000; Saint John, $112,000; Dalhousie, $20,000; Sussex, $35,000; Edmundston, $35,000; or a total of $402,513.80 for New Brunswick.

I am not objecting to the principle of this legislation. I am just asking that there be an equality of treatment. I appreciate the fact that the municipalities and towns have not the financial support that they should have, and I am glad to see them get assistance. My argument is that this principle of assistance should be applied to all the provinces, and the fund will have to be much larger. I remember that my hon. friend the member for Vancouver North (Mr. Sinclair) raised this question last year and the year before, that the principle of giving moneys to municipalities as subventions for services rendered should be reciprocal, and I supported it. There should be equality of treatment for all provinces.

Mr. W. ROSS THATCHER (Moose Jaw): If I understood the minister correctly under this act, a municipality can borrow up to $200,000 from the department. The city of Moose Jaw made such a loan some years ago. They were repairing and adding to their waterworks system. Today they are in the position that they may wish to make a further loan, and they are greatly interested in having the ceiling amount of $200,000 increased. This is a resolution which they passed only a few weeks ago with regard to this act. I wish to put it on Hansard for the information of the minister. They recommend that the act be amended as follows:

(a) By the removal of the limitation on, or a substantial increase in the aggregate loans which may be made to any particular municipality.

(b) The extension of the provisions of the act to approved capital works, which may not necessarily be self-liquidating, where appropriate by-laws are passed to service the repayment of the monies borrowed by a levy on the municipality at large.

This is what the Moose Jaw city commissioner himself said to me in a letter:

We are much interested, therefore, in getting the limit on the maximum loans removed. It is our opinion that this act should be placed in readiness where it can be used to full advantage, the moment the need arises for a national works programme.

In view of the fact that we may some day soon, need a larger scale public works programme, I wonder if the minister would consider raising that maximum amount. Would the government give the matter some consideration?

Mr. JAMES SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): I feel in part responsible for the introduction of this measure because it was I who asked the minister to make the amendment. In my riding there were two districts which received loans. The one to which this bill particularly refers is the village of Westview in the northern part of the riding. The large company town of Powell River is nearby, but many of the workers did not care to live in the town and so they started building private homes outside the company limits. They formed a small waterworks and improvement body under the British Columbia waterworks act and obtained, under this very act, a loan of $100,000. As a consequence of the loan and the installation of the waterworks the district grew rapidly and incorporated as a municipality. They wanted the loan transferred from the old waterworks district to the new municipality but there was no provision in the old act for such transfer of loan. For the last few years, therefore, they have been electing dual commissioners, one set of commissioners to operate the waterworks and another set of commissioners to take care of all municipal business except waterworks. It was an unwieldy arrangement and I asked the Minister of Finance whether a change could not be made. He was good enough to introduce the amendment.

As regards the remarks of the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Church) and those of the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming), I think it should be stated in defence of the act that the loans made under it are not gifts from the federal government to the municipalities, but low interest loans. One of the best features of the loans is that not a single loan is in default.

The other municipality in my riding which received a loan in 1940, West Vancouver, received $200,000. The lowest rate at which they could have floated that loan in the public market was seven per cent, and to a small municipality the saving between seven per cent and the two per cent under this act was a substantial one.

The reason there are no loans in Ontario is not the fault either of the municipalities or of the federal government. The provincial governments had to be the intermediary and guarantee the loans, and Ontario did not choose to do so.

Mr. HACKETT: Will the hon. gentleman permit a question? Why would the municipality to which he refers have to pay seven per cent, which seems to be a high rate, if there is any reasonable security?

Mr. SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): As a matter of fact, the municipality at the time was not in a very good financial position. But the good point about these loans is that they have not been given for parks, driveways and houses, but for self-liquidating projects such as waterworks. The loan has been paid off, and two per cent was enough to pay for it. The general finances of most municipalities then were bad, and even loans for self-liquidating projects could have been arranged, except for this provision, only at the higher rate. I think the hon. member for Eglinton will find that no loans have been made since 1941. Advances have been made on loans which were approved before 1941.

Mr. FLEMING: The table I read was a table of advances made under the act.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): But when it is said that there has been no annual report on loans made, I believe the last loans in Canada, except Quebec, were in 1940. The Quebec loans were made in 1941, because up to 1940 the Quebec provincial government had not taken advantage of the act. I think this is an excellent piece of legislation.

Mr. FLEMING: Under section 10 there is provision for reports on administration.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): The actual loans were made and approved in 1941 at the latest.

In conclusion, I wish to thank the government for bringing in this amendment, which will permit the transfer of loans from one municipal body to a larger municipal body if such is established in the district.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Is it possible for the municipalities to get loans under this act today as before?

Mr. SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): I am only a private member. I am neither the parliamentary assistant nor the minister. The hon. member must direct his question to one of them.

Mr. MAYHEW: We are not in committee.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): My chief purpose in rising to say anything on this bill is to suggest to the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Finance that when he speaks he should give the house a fairly comprehensive summary of the operations of the act since it was passed. I do not know how much information he may have with him, but if he has it he should do that, because this act having been passed in 1938 and having been operative only for a part of the time, many members are not conversant with it.

I was in the house at the time the act was passed and I believe it served, within its limited capacity, a useful purpose. Perhaps the time is ripe for a reconsideration of the purpose of the act and its extension considerably as compared with its present scope.

I would emphasize the point made by the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. Sinclair) that the loans made under this act are not hand-outs, as was stated by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Church). They will all be paid back. Security is required, and there is nothing in the nature of a hand-out about the loans. I believe many municipalities have borrowed under the act for purposes of self-liquidating projects, and I am convinced that, in view of the financial condition of many of these municipalities, if not at this session then at the next, when probably it will be more necessary, the act should be extended.

Mr. JOHN T. HACKETT (Stanstead): When the minister does answer the questions that have been put to him and the suggestions that have been made, I wish he would spare a little time to explain the necessity for this act.

The hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. Sinclair) said that the municipality of which he was speaking could not borrow money on the security which was offered for less than seven per cent. It occurs to me that if such is the case the security must have been of doubtful nature. I understand that there may be circumstances in which a government should come to the rescue of communities even if the security that they can offer be not of the best, where the health and general well-being of the community are at stake. On the other hand, if the securities are as good as we have been led to believe they are, it would appear to me to be a useless competition by the government with the proper and ordinary financial institutions of the country. To that extent, until we cease to believe in free enterprise and in the benefits which accrue from competitive undertaking, challenges of this kind to ordinary business should be abandoned. I would ask the minister, when he speaks, to deal with this aspect of the question.

Mr. RODNEY ADAMSON (York West): Some municipalities will be faced with one problem for which provision is not made in this bill; and I am thinking of my own municipality in particular. It is the question of assistance for servicing Wartime Housing projects. I wish to explain to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the parliamentary assistant, what I mean. There is a project in the township of Etobicoke. There were 260 wartime houses put in there as a veterans housing scheme. Each house is rented to a veteran, and I think the monthly rental is $27. One of the conditions was that each veteran should have two children. I think the average is slightly more than two. In the school section there was either a five-room or a six-room school. The municipality is now faced with the immediate problem of an addition to accommodate some five hundred extra children for whom they have to provide schooling. Under the present system this is a direct responsibility of the municipality. Obviously it is grossly unfair to add this great increase of school taxation for carrying charges, for the purpose of building a school, to the ordinary residents of that school section. Both the municipal and provincial authorities are working on the matter at the present time. There may be other cases like that across Canada but this is the only one I know of. I believe that in a case like that the federal government will have to assist either in the way of loans or by guarantees in some way, so that the money for these schools can be raised at the current rate of interest of about 2½ or 2¾ per cent.

This is a serious problem. Here we have a resident of a township who, all of a sudden, finds that his debenture rate on his school is tripled. I think it has gone up from ten mills to thirty mills. That is the estimate. I am not absolutely certain of my figures, but I think the figures have certainly tripled in that school section. Unless something is done, you will virtually bankrupt that school section; and through that school section, as the municipality as a whole will be burdened with the debentures, you will run the danger of putting your urban municipalities in a serious financial position. I do not see anything in this bill, but I ask that the government give serious consideration to the problem which I have tried to present to the house.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: If the hon. member for Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Mayhew) speaks now, he will close the debate.

Mr. R. W. MAYHEW (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Finance): I will answer the questions as best I can. I will try to answer the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) first. He implied that this act was still in operation, but it has not been in operation since 1941. There were some loans in 1941. There were some contracts made on which advances were made since that time. But no further contracts have been made.

Mr. FLEMING: That does not say that the act is not in operation.

Mr. MAYHEW: Well, it is in operation, but no additional loans have been made under it.

Mr. FLEMING: That is quite different.

Mr. MAYHEW: The hon. member also said that the annual report had not been tabled. The act provides that the report shall be tabled, and I think my recollection goes back to the time this year when I tabled that report. This is a copy of what I tabled at that time, and it reads as follows:

APPENDIX 2

THE MUNICIPAL IMPROVEMENTS ASSISTANCE ACT, 1938

Statement of moneys advanced, interest received, repayments of principal and balance outstanding, December 31, 1946

Province	Number of loans	Amount approved	Amount disbursed	Interest received	Principal repayment	Balance outstanding
		$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.
Prince Edward Island	1	7,000 00	7,000 00	932 64	1,623 14	5,376 86
Nova Scotia	7	641,436 96	641,436 96	81,783 85	108,768 30	532,668 66

Quebec	17	1,859,731 74	1,859,731 74	150,088 54	325,470 92	1,534,260 82
Manitoba	5	205,988 00	205,988 00	24,785 20	73,802 64	132,185 36
Saskatchewan	28	851,100 81	851,100 81	107,172 26	245,776 80	605,324 01
Alberta	23	888,254 85	888,254 85	97,094 46	385,001 61	503,253 24
British Columbia	21	2,114,757 70	2,114,757 70	274,306 52	562,555 06	1,552,202 64
	109	7,035,783 86	7,035,783 86	795,389 74	1,816,192 40	5,219,591 46

I think, if the hon. member looks back in the records he will find that this has been tabled.

Mr. FLEMING: Will the hon. member permit a question?

[Mr. Adamson.]

Mr. MAYHEW: Yes.

Mr. FLEMING: I have done just what the parliamentary assistant proposes, and I think if he will look back in the records of the house he will not find any report tabled. What he has been referring to, I think, must be answers to questions asked, just like the table I put on the record this afternoon. Those were answers given in reply to questions which I put on the order paper. I think the hon. member, if he looks back over the record, will find that no report has been tabled in the house during this session.

Mr. MAYHEW: Well, I have tabled a good many reports since the beginning of the year, and I cannot remember them all. I know that we have been very particular about tabling reports which we are obliged to table. Nearly every second day I am tabling some report. If the report has not yet been tabled, I will see that it is. These loans that remain are self-liquidating loans; that is, they are for waterworks, gas systems or electric light systems. They are not for sewerage systems, but are for what are called self-liquidating undertakings. Therefore I think the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Church) was confused when he said that some of these loans were made for parks and the like. There were no loans made for that purpose.

The hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Thatcher) spoke about the way in which the loans were allocated. The total amount of the loans for this purpose granted in 1938 was $30,000,000. The way in which it was appropriated or allocated was this.

The act provides:

> . . . the aggregate amount of the loans to be made to such board, commission or agency and the municipalities concerned shall not exceed the maximum amount of loans which the municipalities would be entitled to receive if acting separately and shall be apportioned between the board, commission or agency and the municipalities concerned on a basis to be approved by the governor in council.

The amount provided would be in the ratio of the number of people in the municipality to the number of people in Canada as a whole, so that no single small municipality could get any really large loan. I hope that answers the hon. member.

Mr. THATCHER: The government would not consider increasing that amount at the present time?

Mr. MAYHEW: I could not state what the government would do, and I am quite sure, if the minister were here he would not be able to say what the government might do. I will see that the representations which have been made in this house today are brought to the attention of the minister. I think it has been a very useful loan, which served its purpose in the period from 1938 to 1941. After that, materials were needed for other purposes; men were needed for other purposes; there was no need to provide additional work, and it seems to me it was a wise move on the part of the government to suspend those loans for the time being, in order that material and men might be used in the war effort. Whether or not they will put this in operation again, I cannot say. The total of the loans made was $7,035,783.86. The amount paid back was $1,816,192.40; the amount outstanding at the present time is $5,219,591.46; and there has been no default on any of the loans.

What we are asking here is something that probably should have been foreseen when the act was first drawn. Canada is a growing country, and perhaps it should have been anticipated that the small district of today will probably be a village a couple of years from now and a town a little later on. That is exactly what has happened. If I may use the words of the hon. member for Vancouver North, who supplied me with this memo:

> The village and the improvement district have exactly the same boundaries and cover the same people. Each year the improvement district, however, had to continue to elect three trustees to administer the water works while the village, at the same time, elected three village commissioners. This seemed a needless duplication, so in 1946 a plebiscite was held in Westview on amalgamation of the water district and village, and was carried. The village commissioners, with the approval of the department of municipal affairs for the provincial government, then applied to the federal government for transfer of the loan from the old improvement district to the village of Westview. This legislation is to enable such a transfer to be made.

That is all we are asking in this amendment.

To answer the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Hackett), I think we have to look back to the time in 1938 when these loans were first made, and see the conditions we were facing at that time. Numbers of municipalities were not in very good shape financially. Work of this kind was needed, and other people were not ready to risk their money in those municipalities. I grant that conditions have changed, and it is easy for us to look at the matter in a different light today; but if we go back to 1938 and look at the conditions which existed then, I think we shall see the advisability of it. What the government may do in future is not for me to say; and I am quite sure, if the minister were piloting this bill he would not undertake to say it either.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee and reported.

Mr. MAYHEW moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. H. W. HERRIDGE (Kootenay West): I have a word to say before third reading is given. I had intended to say something on second reading, but was out of my seat for a few moments. Just before the end of the war and after the war ended, the provincial governments, under the stimulus of the federal government, and the municipalities, under the stimulus of the provincial governments, carried out, I think in most provinces, wide surveys in regard to plans for the rehabilitation of cities, villages, municipalities and local communities. I know those surveys were carried out in British Columbia, in the belief that the dominion government would soon make available funds for such improvements along the lines suggested in this act. I know that in British Columbia a number of municipalities have made plans for certain necessary improvements, expecting to be able to obtain money to finance these works under this or a similar act.

My other remark in this connection is this. There has been a great deal of discussion in this house concerning social credit, free enterprise, national credit and so on. If you will read the history of the reconstruction finance corporation in the United States I think you will come to the conclusion that if there is one form of investment in which we can safely use our national credit, it is investment of this kind. I do not think it would be beyond the ambit of, shall I say, the philosophy of liberalism for the government when it brings this act into operation again to consider issuing credits or loans to the various municipalities concerned through the Bank of Canada. These are self-liquidating investments guaranteed by the province and, as the evidence given this afternoon has shown, the loans are absolutely secure. They represent capital invested in the publicly-owned capital structure of the country; so that I believe the government would be justified, from the point of view of any person in this house, in considering this proposal.

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS

INCLUSION OF POULTRY IN DEFINITION OF LIVE STOCK

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 257, to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act, 1944.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee and reported.

Mr. ABBOTT moved the third reading of the bill.

[Mr. Herridge.]

Mr. H. W. HERRIDGE (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I frequently rise to criticize the government, but on this occasion I wish to congratulate the minister upon having brought this bill before the house. It will be of great benefit to a number of poultrymen in my constituency, who thus far have not secured help under the act in connection with the operations on their premises. On behalf of those poultrymen who, through the years, have looked forward to some amendment in the act to permit them to borrow, I wish to express thanks to the minister and the government.

MERCHANT SEAMEN

PRESERVATION OF COMPENSATION RIGHTS ACQUIRED UNDER REGULATIONS

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of Bill No. 181, to amend the Merchant Seamen Compensation Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is a simple bill, and it is being enacted in order to correct an omission made last year when the Merchant Seamen Compensation Act was passed. The act passed in 1946 did not provide for a reference to the Interpretation Act.

This bill seeks to cancel and revoke the regulations passed under the War Measures Act providing compensation for merchant seamen, and to bring into effect section 19 of the Interpretation Act, so that claims for compensation on behalf of merchant seamen begun under the regulations and not completed before the act came into force will not thereby be lost and the right of seamen for compensation will be protected.

This bill has been submitted to the Department of Justice, which has suggested that it be brought forward in this manner.

Mr. H. C. GREEN (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) has said, this bill amends the Merchant Seamen Compensation Act which was passed last year. That act, in effect, replaced an order in council passed in July, 1945. If I am wrong in any of these statements the minister will correct me. I believe that this is the time to give some consideration to the compensation payable to those men who served in the merchant navy.

As I understand it, the original order in council had effect only from August 1, 1945. In other words, there was no coverage for a merchant seaman who was injured from 1939 until August 1, 1945. I suggest that there should be put on our statute books without further delay some legislation which would cover those men injured in the merchant navy during the time I have mentioned, and which would also cover the dependents of those who lost their lives.

It might be that such coverage could not be given by an amendment to this act. There is, of course, another act known as the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act, in which provision is made for the payment of pensions to merchant seamen, if the injury or disease was the direct result of enemy action, or counter-action taken against an enemy. However, very few cases come under that act, because the merchant seaman has to show that his injury or disease was the direct result of enemy action. In other words, he must almost be hit by a torpedo in order to qualify for the pension.

Mr. MITCHELL: If he were hit by a torpedo he would not be here.

Mr. GREEN: If a torpedo hit a tough man like the Minister of Labour I am sure it would not hurt him much.

Mr. MacINNIS: Too bad for the torpedo.

Mr. GREEN: I do not think it would be possible for a man to qualify under this Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act in respect of disease. I do not know how a disease could be traced directly to enemy action. However, proof that the act does not extend very far is found in the fact that only thirty-one seamen and dependents have been able to qualify for pension. On the other hand, I believe that of about 18,000 merchant seamen who served during the war, 1,091 lost their lives. In addition, many were sick and many others were injured. So that the percentage covered by the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act is very small indeed.

I point out to the minister that there are cases of this type which should be covered. For example, a ship is in port, and is blacked out. Let us say she is in the port of Liverpool. A seaman falls and is injured, or perhaps is killed, as a result of stumbling in the dark. I believe that if that happened before August 1, 1945, the only kind of compensation he or his dependents could get would be through claiming against the shipping company. I may be wrong in that, but that is my information.

Again, the same thing might happen while a ship is at sea. She is blacked out; a seaman falls—perhaps over lumber in the cargo.

Mr. CHEVRIER: He cannot claim under this act.

Mr. GREEN: He gets absolutely no compensation. He could have claimed under the act if it had happened after August 1, 1945.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Yes.

Mr. GREEN: My point is that there is no help for those men between 1939 and August 1, 1945.

Then, referring again to sickness, I know of a case in Vancouver respecting a young lad who at an early age joined the merchant navy and caught a tropical disease. His health has been ruined, but he can get absolutely no help. There are many cases of that type which should be covered by some kind of legislation.

I know the objection has been raised that there would be no report made as to how the injury happened or how the disease arose, but I would point out that all ships have log books in which the facts would be carefully entered and, furthermore, there are port doctors at every port and records would be available from those sources.

Something must be done and done as soon as possible to help these merchant seamen. They are far too restricted, and I am afraid the difficulty is that they fall between two departments, the Department of Transport and the Department of Veterans Affairs. It seems to me that we would get around this difficulty if we decided to treat them as members of the fighting forces. The general public has always considered that the men of the merchant navy were in the fighting forces, and His Majesty the King made a statement early in the war that the merchant navy was really the fourth arm of the services. During a portion of the war they had I think, more casualties than any other branch of the service. Canada has not treated her merchant seamen in the way they should have been treated.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Canada has treated her merchant seamen as well as the United Kingdom and the United States have.

Mr. GREEN: The United Kingdom has never given sympathetic treatment to her merchant seamen. I do not know about the United States and I do not really care. In my opinion, Canada has treated her merchant seamen shamefully and it is time something was done to remedy the situation. I do not see why the act should not be opened up to allow men who were permanently injured while in the merchant navy to get compensation and to provide some assistance for the dependents of those who lost their lives. If help is not to be given in that way, it could be done by amending the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act.

The main decision to be made is whether or not we are to treat these men as part of the forces. This suggestion has been made by the legion right across Canada. Just last month the British Columbia command passed unanimously a resolution asking that the same treatment be given the merchant navy as if its members had been members of the armed forces, including vocational training grants, university education grants and other rehabilitation benefits. It is not only a question of compensation; it goes farther than that. For example, they cannot get vocational training unless they take that training for service in the merchant marine.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I do not want to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but this is a bill concerning compensation for merchant seamen in the nature of workmen's compensation. My hon. friend is now dealing with all the benefits to which merchant seamen are entitled.

Mr. GREEN: Are not entitled.

Mr. CHEVRIER: He is dealing with war benefits. I do not see how he can discuss vocational training under this bill. The act was discussed at some length last year, and this bill has to do with one subject only, workmen's compensation for merchant seamen. I will not attempt to interrupt the hon. member if he deals with that, but if he is going to cover the whole field of benefits to merchant seamen, then I submit that that is something which could be discussed on the estimates of the director of merchant seamen.

Mr. GREEN: I submit that I have a right to discuss the various types of compensation which could be paid to merchant seamen and their dependents. I do not think the minister can say, "You must go this far and no farther." He cannot say, for example, that I cannot go back and deal with compensation before August 1, 1945.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I will not attempt to interrupt you as long as you deal with compensation for merchant seamen because you are within your rights, but if you go beyond that and deal with other benefits, then I do not think you are in order.

Mr. GREEN: I submit that I should be allowed to deal with the different types of benefits which should be given to merchant seamen.

Mr. CHEVRIER: You will have every opportunity to do that on the vote concerning the director of merchant seamen.

Mr. GREEN: That may be brought up during the last days of the session.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I assure you it will not.

Mr. GREEN: The minister cannot be sure himself. I do not think this is a case where the minister should draw the line too tightly.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I would draw the attention of hon. members to the second paragraph of the explanatory note which reads:

> The sole purpose of the bill is to preserve rights to compensation acquired under the regulations before the act came into force and to continue under the act all proceedings taken under the regulations.

I think the discussion should come within the terms of that paragraph.

Mr. GREEN: I would think that really covers the whole field, but I will not press that point. Finally, I would point out to the minister that these men were given gunnery practice; they were assigned to guns on ships and were really treated as men in the forces.

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): They were not paid like that.

Mr. GREEN: The Secretary of State had better keep out of this if he does not want to have his fingers burned. I might mention that they did not get any gratuities. We have had the argument thrown up before by members of the government that these men got good pay and therefore they should not get any further consideration. That is entirely too hard-boiled an attitude to take, and besides it is not correct.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I do not think the government has taken that attitude.

Mr. GREEN: The Secretary of State—

Mr. CHEVRIER: He has not suggested that.

Mr. GREEN: —is trying to show that they got a lot of money.

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): I did not say that at all.

Mr. GREEN: That is what you meant. If the Secretary of State wants to go into that question, I have the facts on that also. I think he will be surprised to find out how little these men did get. They are the forgotten men of Canada of the last war, and it is time this parliament took action to see that that condition is changed.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I want to endorse what the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green) has said, both that part of his speech which was in order and that part which was out of order. I believe that the compensation feature with which we are dealing should be extended beyond the time the order in council came into effect.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Prior to?

Mr. MacINNIS: Prior to. I think the minister will remember a case I brought to his attention in 1943 or 1944. This young sailor in the merchant navy was injured, he was not only crippled but he was paralyzed for life. This boy had a really wonderful physique, but because of his accident he will never walk again. Although the minister and members of his staff made all the inquiries they could when I took up the matter, and although they had the assistance of the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Mackenzie), it was found that nothing could be done for this individual. I am sure that is not a lone case, that there must be many others in the same circumstances. I think it is imperative that consideration be given to making this measure retroactive to 1941 or whatever other time should be specified to take care of all those who were injured in the merchant navy.

Mr. W. A. McMASTER (High Park): Mr. Speaker, I was surprised at what the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green) said in reference to the number of seamen who have taken advantage of this act. I remember, when this bill was up in the house before and a large department was being created, I stated that I thought one stenographer could look after the whole thing.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I think the hon. gentleman misunderstood what the hon. member for Vancouver South said. He was not referring to those who had taken advantage of this act but to those who had taken advantage of the Civilian War Pensions Act, which is an entirely different thing and shows the danger of going off on a tangent when discussing compensation.

Mr. McMASTER: Regardless of that, I would ask the minister when he replies, now or in committee, to tell us the number of seamen who have taken advantage of the act and to give us the cost of its administration.

Mr. CLARENCE GILLIS (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, first I wish to say that I agree with the two Vancouver members who have preceded me that this act should be made retroactive to the beginning of the war, because a large number of merchant seamen suffered serious injury during the war and received no compensation. I know of several cases myself and one in particular I brought to the attention of the house, that of a boy who lost a leg and was crippled for life but could not establish a case for pension, and he will not come under this compensation legislation.

I rose primarily to get information. I should like to know if this act applies to Canadian nationals serving on ships of foreign registry. Many hundreds of Canadian nationals who served during the war on ships of foreign registry lost all the benefits that were applicable to Canadians who sailed on Canadian ships. This is something that should be rectified, and I want to be sure that this act is not carrying forward this injustice perpetrated by previous acts brought down by the government.

Second, I wish to know the mechanics of the minister's department with respect to an application for compensation. How is the application to be made and what are the rates that will prevail? Are they the rates of the province in which the seaman has his domicile? I know the rates are pretty well uniform across Canada, but they vary slightly as between provinces. I should like to have these questions answered, and I trust that the minister will give serious consideration to making this legislation retroactive.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I wonder if I might answer those questions after the bill gets second reading.

Mr. C. C. I. MERRITT (Vancouver-Burrard): Mr. Speaker, I want to support the appeal of other members of the opposition requesting the minister to make the act retroactive before 1945. The kind of case to which the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green) referred of an injury at sea during wartime occasioned by bad weather or black-out is such an obvious reason for awarding compensation to these seamen that I feel that such action can hardly be refused.

I want to say this to the minister—and it arises out of his objection that the hon. member for Vancouver South was out of order in discussing veterans benefits—that even if you do, by this legislation extend workmen's compensation back to 1939 or some date prior to 1945, that is going at the problem of the merchant seamen in piecemeal fashion. To me the really important thing is that we should first establish the principle upon which merchant seamen are to be treated in the period from 1939 to 1945. Once we have established that principle, I do not think we would have this amendment to the act, but we might have a totally different act or a series of acts which would give to these seamen all the benefits that the veterans of the armed forces received, less perhaps certain items which the minister might feel should be excepted because of the special nature of the service of the merchant seamen. If we go on as we are doing now, simply taking one little bite at the problem, I think we shall find that what has been a grave injustice perpetated on the merchant seamen will continue despite our efforts.

It will not do us any good just to get up and discuss these matters on the estimates. We should first establish the principle that the merchant navy was the fourth arm of the service and the minister should bring in legislation carrying out that principle. Then he might find that it would be better to deal with compensation cases before 1945 through the veterans affairs department, rather than under workmen's compensation. All during the war these merchant seamen were treated as civilians. I have the reference in 1942 when the then minister of finance, in refusing to exempt merchant seamen from income tax, gave as a reason for his refusal the administrative difficulties in exempting people employed by private owners of ships. The administrative difficulty there apparently was the only thing that made these seamen liable to income tax.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but I should remind him that this bill deals with compensation to merchant seamen for injuries sustained. I do not think the act is wide enough to allow of a discussion of the income tax merchant seamen pay or of other benefits they might receive for having served in time of war, and I would ask the hon. member to confine his question to compensation for merchant seamen.

Mr. MERRITT: I shall certainly endeavour to keep within Your Honour's ruling. I mentioned income tax merely to illustrate what I was going to say. When we find that because these men are treated as civilians administrative difficulties interfere with their exemption from income tax I very much fear that even if we carry back the workmen's compensation principle before 1945 we shall come up against other administrative difficulties which will again put obstacles in the way of these seamen receiving benefits. I submit to you, sir, that I am speaking very much to the principle of the bill and the principle of the whole question of compensation for merchant seamen when I say that if a more generous principle were adopted behind this present measure, and if the merchant seamen were treated as the fourth arm of the service, then we would find this bill containing more generous provisions for the merchant seamen than if we continue to treat them as individuals who were engaged in a normal civilian pursuit, which is obviously the principle upon which this bill was founded.

It must be quite clear when you consider the figures, 1,400 merchant seamen in 1939 and 13,000 in 1945, that these men were not there in a normal civilian capacity as merchant seamen, but were there directly in pursuance of the war effort. When you have met some of them and learned their ages and the fact that many of them were schoolboys and that most of them had not engaged in seafaring before the war, then again it seems perfectly apparent that we must not treat them as civilians and must not provide for them only the kind of benefits which are ordinarily accorded people in a civilian capacity.

The very fact that this bill is a workmen's compensation bill worries me more than any other feature of it. If the government intended recognizing the other and more important principle, here would have been a splendid opportunity to introduce it. One could go on multiplying examples of the way in which these individuals were treated as civilians, doing an ordinary civilian task. For instance, there is the case of vocational training, which was restricted to those who wished to continue their career at sea. When you look at the figures of the total who served, and think of the size of the merchant navy before the war and in 1947 again you see that was not intended as a war benefit. The idea that these people were carrying on a normal civilian trade was prevalent in the minds of the officials of the department if it was not present in the minds of the minister and the government. I urge the minister, before his estimates come down, to give further consideration to changing the whole principle and dealing with the whole subject at one time.

Mr. D. G. ROSS (St. Paul's): During the last war a great many boys from my riding, a great many boys from the great lakes, who tried to enlist in the army or the air force were turned down because they were not fit, and these boys went into the merchant marine and fought the battle of the Atlantic.

How many of you members of the House of Commons have been out sailing in the early spring when your dinghy upset? How many of you have been out in the cold waters in different places at that time of the year? How many of you have done that? How many of you have had an awful time getting to shore? How many of you have tasted the cold waters for two hours, or maybe an hour and a half, before being rescued?

Mr. SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): We give up.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Who said that?

Mr. SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): I say we give up.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I cannot hear you.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): You asked a question.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): If you would speak a little louder I would hear you.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): You asked a question.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I do not know whether you are a seafaring man or whether you have ever been on the water in your life, but if you do not know what you are talking about, please do not interrupt.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): I was overseas in this war and I came back.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Are you a sailor? Have you ever been on the water? Have you ever been in the water for five hours without being rescued? I am making my speech and I know what I am talking about. I have been four or five hours in the water without being rescued and I know what it is like. A great many of our lads from the great lakes went on the ocean. I know four boys who were in penitentiary and they got out for service in the merchant marine when they could not get out for other service because they were not fit. Should they not have compensation?

How would you like to be on a raft today, Mr. Speaker? How would any of the other members of the House of Commons like to be on a raft for two or three days? Have we had any members who have had the experience of being torpedoed?

Mr. SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): The Minister of Reconstruction.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I wish hon. members would keep their mouths shut.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Golding): I must ask the hon. member to withdraw that statement.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I withdraw it, but the interruptions become annoying.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Golding): Such language is not to be used in the house.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I am sorry it has been used and I withdraw it. I wish the Minister of Reconstruction (Mr. Howe) were in his place now; I wish the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) were here. They have had the experience and they know what it is like to be in the water. The boys that I have been talking about did a good job in the battle of the Atlantic and we should give them credit for what they did. As a matter of fact, our troops have far better care than these boys who were on the boats. They were taken from here, there and everywhere. They had practically no care at all as far as medical examination was concerned, until we had the manning pool set up, and then we took them from every place. They did a good job for this country, for Great Britain and for the United States as well, and they deserve every consideration that is given to any of the armed forces.

Take tne question of dental care. Well, they did not have any, not even after the pool was set up.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Golding): I must ask the hon. member to deal with the bill before us, which has to do with compensation.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I will just try to make a little plea. The bill deals with compensation. It deals with compensation before 1945.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Golding): Workmen's compensation.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Yes, workmen's compensation. If you do not call these people workmen, I do not know what they are. They work just about as hard as any people I ever knew on the job they have to do. Why they should be cut off from workmen's compensation before 1945 is beyond my comprehension. I should like to make a plea for them on this basis. I believe we should have at least workmen's compensation for them. That is the least we should have. I hope I shall not be called out of order when I say that they ought to have much more. I am talking about workmen's compensation now. They should have much more than everyday workmen's compensation and should be treated exactly the same as are members of the armed forces. They cannot get workmen's compensation to put them through the universities. Nevertheless they did a job for Canada, did they not? Certainly they did. That cannot be forgotten. They do not get workmen's compensation for disabilities which they had before workmen's compensation came in. Those boys did not have workmen's compensation when they risked their lives on rafts in the Atlantic ocean when they were torpedoed, but they got the food over there just the same.

I cannot say very much more about them and workmen's compensation, because the government will not do anything for them. But if you want to have a lot of communists around, you can have them if you do not take care of these boys who were incapacitated during those early years and who have no workmen's compensation. Perhaps I have not expressed myself very well. Perhaps the government do not understand what I mean.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I certainly do not.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): I too.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I will tell you what I mean, if you would like to know. Let your workmen's compensation for these seamen be equal to that received by the boys who fought in the forces. That is all I say.

Mr. CHEVRIER: It is.

Mr. H. G. ARCHIBALD (Skeena): I should like to say a few words on this bill, although I spoke on it during the resolution stage. I can well understand why a bill such as this is being brought in, but there is just one thing I should like to repeat and it is this. If we are to have a merchant marine and to have such laws apply, we must protect the seamen we have at the present time under existing conditions, even forgetting what they did for us during the war. What I should like to see the government bring in along with this is legislation providing protection for Canadian seamen with respect to getting jobs on Canadian boats and providing that the Canadian merchant marine is not to be under foreign registry, such as Panamanian registry, and subject to no marine laws. The unions are protesting this at the present time because they are having difficulty in placing their own men in jobs. I believe it would be pertinent for the government at this time to bring in legislation which would guarantee these men full employment. They have no such compensation as the other sections of the armed forces have, and the decent thing to do would be to guarantee them employment by having a real Canadian merchant marine.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Golding): I should like to remind the house that if the minister speaks now, he will close the debate.

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would not rise to say anything in the debate were it not for the fact that the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green) has asked certain questions which I think are deserving of a reply.

It is unfortunate to some extent that the debate on this bill has gotten away from its purpose and object. There is no doubt that this debate should not have been one to consider the benefits to merchant seamen. It is one which has to do with compensation for merchant seamen, which is an entirely different matter. In 1946 there was passed by this house a bill which contained the benefits, the compensation and the manner in which compensation should be granted to these merchant seamen. In that bill there was one omission, namely, that those whose benefits or claims arose between the time the regulations came into effect under the War Measures Act in 1945 and the passing of the act in 1946, were not taken care of. There was a gap which the bill seeks to remedy by protecting that right. The only object of this bill is to provide against that, so that any claims which have been filed under the regulations and were not disposed of before the act came into force, will be dealt with in accordance with the terms of the act. That is the only thing this bill deals with.

That brings me to the question which the hon. member for Vancouver South pertinently asks. He says, "Why is it that there is no coverage for merchant seamen prior to the time the regulations came into force in 1945?" and he refers to the Civilian War Pensions Act and a number of cases for merchant seamen which were disposed of under that act. I have no intention of dealing with that act, but I should like to reply to the hon. gentleman and tell him that this matter was considered carefully by the government. First of all, it was considered in 1945 when the war was still on and when the merchant seamen's compensation regulations were enacted, and it was decided then and there, for the reasons which I will give in a moment, that it was not wise to make the regulations retroactive. Then again in 1946, when the act came down, it was debated at some length in the house and parliament gave approval to the principle that compensation be not made retroactive. What I am doing now is simply bringing in an amendment to the act to preserve rights to compensation acquired under the regulations before the act became effective, but not prior to the coming into force of the regulations.

My hon. friend asks why this is done. The reason is this. Today it would be practically impossible, in fact wholly impossible—to establish claims by medical evidence, because in the majority of cases the board would be unable to uncover satisfactory evidence to investigate the claim. We are confirmed in that position by the fact that the provinces do the same thing. The provinces have compensation for merchant seamen, and what do they do? They do not make their legislation retroactive. I cannot at the moment think of all the provinces which have compensation for merchant seamen, but I know British Columbia has.

Mr. GREEN: They did not have it until 1944 or 1945, did they?

Mr. CHEVRIER: It was quite recent; but they did not make it retroactive, and their reason for not doing so is the same reason as I have given.

Mr. GREEN: It was not their responsibility to look after the merchant navy men.

Mr. CHEVRIER: It was their responsibility to look after merchant seamen within their own province. The legislation we enacted last year had nothing to do with merchant seamen within the confines of British Columbia or Ontario or Quebec. It had to do with merchant seamen on foreign vessels and in certain waters mentioned in the act. So if the provinces came to that conclusion, having had a great deal more experience than we have had in regard to workmen's compensation, I think we can take a leaf out of their book.

Mr. GREEN: Is it not a fact that the provinces cover only the men who are in the coastal trade? What we have been complaining about today is the treatment meted out to the men who were crossing the Atlantic or the Pacific, in the war areas. They are no responsibility of the provinces.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I agree; but that does not detract from the force of the argument I am attempting to make, which is that if the provinces decided against making compensation retroactive, whether it be for merchant seamen or whether it be for workmen in industry or elsewhere, they must have had reasons for it; and the reasons were those I gave. That is why we have followed the same course, because it would be impractical and impossible to establish, by means of evidence today, claims which might have arisen prior to the time the regulations came into force.

Mr. GREEN: The pensions people had the same problem after the last war.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The hon. member made a statement which I certainly think he did not mean, when he said that Canada had treated its merchant seamen shamefully. I am surprised that the hon. gentleman would make such a statement.

Mr. GREEN: I will repeat it right now.

Mr. CHEVRIER: All right; I will prove to the hon. gentleman that it is not so. Perhaps I should not say that; I may not be able to prove it to his satisfaction—

Mr. GREEN: I do not think you can.

Mr. CHEVRIER: —but I intend to place on record what Canada has done for her merchant seamen, and I think the house will agree that we have gone a long distance in coming to their assistance. If Canada has not done more my hon. friend has a share of the responsibility.

Mr. GREEN: Why?

Mr. CHEVRIER: It is not only the government that has the responsibility, because, if I understand the matter aright, a committee was set up, the veterans committee—

Mr. MERRITT: You do not understand it rightly.

Mr. GREEN: You do not understand a thing about it, then.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Let me go on, and we shall see whether or not I do. The director of merchant seamen was asked by that committee for his advice. He was asked what was being done for merchant seamen, and he wrote the acting chairman giving him a list of the benefits that were granted. He sat in that committee for some time waiting to be called to give evidence, but he was not called.

Mr. BROOKS: Was it not understood in the veterans affairs committee that the Department of Transport would bring in a bill which would give merchant seamen treatment commensurate with that given other branches of the service? For that reason the veterans affairs committee did not press for those benefits. That was our understanding in the committee.

Mr. CHEVRIER: There was certainly no such understanding as far as I was concerned.

Mr. GREEN: But there was in the committee.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I was never approached, nor was I ever told, either directly or indirectly, that was the understanding. I want to make that quite clear.

Mr. BROOKS: If the minister will go back over the evidence given before that committee I think he will find we had an understanding to that effect.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I am not denying that there may have been an understanding, but I am saying that if there was an understanding I certainly knew nothing of it.

Mr. BROOKS: That is the cause of all the trouble today.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I come back to the point we are discussing now, namely compensation for merchant seamen. I would not have left that but for the fact that the hon. member for Vancouver South said merchant seamen were being treated shamefully. I do not think Canada is treating her merchant seamen shamefully, and I should like to put on record the benefits this country is giving to its merchant seamen. Then, if I cannot prove my point to the satisfaction of the hon. gentleman I shall let the house decide whether or not the benefits given are satisfactory.

Mr. GREEN: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I was going to put on record the benefits Canada has not given her merchant seamen. If the minister is now going to say what benefits Canada has given them, then I submit we are entitled to put on record the benefits she is not giving.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The minister raised a point of order with respect to a discussion of benefits generally. Do I understand that now he desires to put on record the benefits which are given under the compensation act?

Mr. CHEVRIER: No, I was going to do much more than that. I believe I should be fair with the house, however, and I think the point of my hon. friend is well taken. I was interested in denying the statement my hon. friend has made. He objects to my putting this on the record. There will be another opportunity to do so at a later day.

Mr. GREEN: I do not object to the minister putting it on record if we are allowed to put on record the other side of the story.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I think the minister agrees that it would not be in order for him to put his statement on record without unanimous consent, and I am sure he will not do so.

Mr. GRAYDON: Should not both sides be put on the record?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I was simply replying to the charge that our merchant seamen had been dealt with shamefully. A number of questions have been asked to which I could reply seriatim, but perhaps in view of the hour I should reply when we get into committee on the bill.

Mr. GRAYDON: The public should, I think, have both sides of the story.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. CHEVRIER: The public will have both sides.

Mr. GRAYDON: You had better put on your side and the hon. member for Vancouver South will put on his side.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Golding in the chair.

Progress reported.

SPECIAL CEREMONIES

MOTION TO INCLUDE IN OFFICIAL REPORT ADDRESS BY PRESIDENT TRUMAN AND PROCEEDINGS AT UNVEILING OF PORTRAITS

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, might I have the consent of the house to revert to motions in order to make at this time the usual motion about putting in as an appendix to Hansard the speeches made yesterday afternoon and today. If I have consent I move:

That the speeches delivered at the unveiling of the portraits of the late Right Hon. Sir Robert L. Borden and the Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King on Tuesday, June 10th instant, and also the address delivered by Mr. Harry S. Truman, President of the United States of America, before the members of the Senate and the House of Commons in the chamber of the House of Commons today, the 11th of June, 1947, together with the introductory and related speeches, be included in the House of Commons debates and form part of the records of this parliament.

Motion agreed to.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

SUPPLY

VETERANS AFFAIRS—VETERANS' TAXI OWNERS ASSOCIATION OF MONTREAL

Right Hon. IAN A. MACKENZIE (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

Mr. G. S. WHITE (Hastings-Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair there is a matter I should like to bring to the attention of the house. I am glad that the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Mackenzie) is here tonight and that it was not necessary for me to go on last night in his absence. The matter which I wish to refer to is a matter which I attempted to bring before the house last Thursday on a motion to adjourn the house. At that time Mr. Speaker was of the opinion that the matter was not urgent and that it was also before the courts. In order to prevent any misunderstanding, I want to state quite frankly that it is not my intention to discuss or to refer to any matter now before the courts as far as the veterans' taxi owners association of Montreal is concerned.

There are a large number of veteran members in the house, and it is hardly necessary to say that they and all other members are much concerned with anything that pertains to the welfare of veterans. That was ably demonstrated during the two sessions when the committee on veterans affairs, consisting of some sixty members from all parts of the house, was sitting. Those members were able to sink and forget all party differences; they all worked together and produced a fine charter for the Canadian veteran.

I would point out that only a few days ago nearly a whole day was taken up in the house in discussing the welfare of 100 Polish girls who had recently come to this country. Those young girls were not citizens of Canada and Canada owed them absolutely nothing, morally or legally. The matter which I wish to discuss pertains to veterans who are Canadian citizens. They are all boys who served in the Canadian forces, many of them with long records overseas. They are veterans on whose behalf the government of Canada has expended large sums of money in the way of gratuities, reestablishment credits and other benefits. Let me say here that I do not think anyone in Canada begrudges one cent of the large sums that have been spent on behalf of our veterans.

When matters such as this have been brought before the house in the past I have observed that sometimes some hon. members are unkind enough to say that it is done for political purposes, political expediency or something of that kind. These veterans on whose behalf I wish to speak, some 500 in number, all live in Montreal. The majority of them are French and the remainder are of various nationalities but all are Canadian citizens. Until ten days ago I did not know there was such an association or company as the veterans' taxi owners association of Montreal, neither had I met any of these boys or had any communication with them.

Mr. KNIGHT: Did the hon. member say that the majority of these veterans were French?

Mr. ROSS (Souris): They are Canadians.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings-Peterborough): They are all veterans of the Canadian army.

Mr. KNIGHT: I understood the hon. gentleman to say that the majority were French.

Mr. HARTT: That is right.

Mr. MacINNIS: The majority are Canadians.

Mr. HARTT: Why should the hon. member be so surprised about that?

Mr. REID: You would not call me Scotch; I am Canadian.

Mr. HARTT: Of Scotch descent.

Mr. REID: I am a Canadian.

Mr. HARTT: You are of Scotch descent.

Mr. REID: There is only one nationality, Canadian.

Mr. HARTT: I appreciate that.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings-Peterborough): I regret that there has been any misunderstanding because I thought that I had made it clear that all these are veterans; I am sure I said they were Canadian citizens, that they had all served in the Canadian armed forces and that many of them had long records overseas. I proceeded to say that their number was in the neighbourhood of 500, that the majority of them were French-speaking and that the remainder were of various nationalities.

Mr. HARTT: That is all right.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings-Peterborough): I am quite sure that is what I said. Is there any objection to that?

Mr. KNIGHT: May I explain my position? I simply wanted to know whether they were French citizens or French-speaking Canadians.

Mr. MACKENZIE: They are Canadians.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings-Peterborough): I am sorry, I cannot say whether they are French-speaking or English-speaking. In my opinion it does not make a particle of difference.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): They all fought for Canada.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings-Peterborough): They are Canadian citizens. There has been set up in the government the Department of Veterans Affairs which is charged with the administration of all matters pertaining to veterans. I think it is right to say that in the administration of this department and in dealing with veterans affairs certain principles should be strictly adhered to, and I think three of those principles are most important. First, there should be absolute integrity on the part of all officials in D.V.A. in their dealings with veterans. Second, in the interpretation of legislation and regulations pertaining to veterans the spirit of the law rather than the exact letter of the law should be followed.

Third, the acts of all officials of D.V.A. in handling veterans matters should be binding on the Department of Veterans Affairs. I do not think anyone in the house can quarrel with those three simple principles.

In the spring of 1946 a considerable number of veterans in Montreal wished to be re-established and become the owners of taxicabs to be operated in that city. One by one those boys went to the Montreal office of the D.V.A. where they were directed to an official who was in charge of car priorities, whose name was Leopold Ferland. He explained to each veteran the manner in which he would have to apply for the various credits, the necessity of obtaining a licence from the city and various other matters having to do with obtaining a taxicab and going into business. Apparently a great many veterans in the city of Montreal consulted the department and Leopold Ferland on this matter, because early in May all the veterans who had consulted D.V.A. received a telegram from Leopold Ferland asking them to attend an urgent meeting in the city of Montreal on the 13th of May. At this meeting some fifty odd veterans attended, and from D.V.A. there were two officials, Leopold Ferland and a Mr. Levesque, who acted as chairman of the meeting. At this meeting there was considerable discussion of the veterans becoming reestablished and going into the taxicab business.

I am told that in the city of Montreal there are two taxicab associations, the Diamond taxi association and the LaSalle taxi association. Many of these boys were anxious to become associated with these two existing associations, and so it was decided that a small delegation should go to these two existing taxicab associations and sound them out whether or not they would be prepared to accept a fairly large number of veterans. Mr. Ferland of D.V.A. agreed to go with them as an official. Someone said it might be practical or wise, in order to put a little pressure on the taxicab companies already established, if the veterans would form their own association, but no action was taken at that time. Then it was suggested that each of the veterans present should pay the sum of $50. I am advised that on that occasion some thirty-eight veterans of those present paid $50 to Leopold Ferland, and at the same time Mr. Ferland advised the veterans that any veteran who did not have the money with him would be perfectly welcome to call at his office at D.V.A. the next day or whenever they had the money and make the payment.

I am further advised that the next day and the following days a fairly large number of veterans did call at Leopold Ferland's office in D.V.A. and paid their $50. About two weeks later Mr. Ferland called another meeting, and at this meeting some 250 veterans turned up. At that time I am informed that some 200 veterans or thereabouts, maybe a few more or a few less, had paid their $50 to become associated with this new taxi association. It was agreed then that they would accept 250 veterans into the association. Such matters were discussed as insurance for the taxicabs and things of that sort. Mr. Ferland reported on his negotiations with the other two taxi companies, which was to the effect that only a few veterans could be absorbed. He reported on a trip to the city of Ottawa to consult certain D.V.A. officials regarding 250 priorities and explain to them various matters which he said would justify the officials in Ottawa as to a certain colour for the cabs, and one thing in particular, that the cabs should be all painted in the factory so that when they were delivered to a dealer there would be no possible chance of the dealer selling them to anyone else. I should have mentioned that at the second meeting Mr. Levesque of D.V.A. was the presiding chairman.

Mr. Ferland called a third meeting in July, and at that time he gave no information to these 250 veterans that he had already obtained a charter in the province of Quebec for the incorporation of a joint stock company, nor was there any accounting given or made in any way of the various sums of money that had been paid in to him. The question of insurance was further discussed, and it was agreed that the sum might range between $15 and $20 to be paid by each veteran to cover one large insurance policy. It was also decided that each veteran would pay in $20 a month as fees to this association. Many of the boys paid their insurance then or shortly afterwards, and they started to pay their $20 a month beginning from the time they received delivery of their taxicabs.

Things appeared to be going along very well, but in August of 1946 some of these veterans began to suspect that things were not as they should be. So some of them got together and called a meeting, and somewhere around 300 veterans attended. Mr. Ferland was present and Mr. Levesque was chairman of the meeting. It was at this meeting in August that for the first time these veterans were advised that a charter had been issued for the veterans' taxi owners association of Montreal. The charter was not produced. The reason given was that some amendments were being made by the department at Quebec. It was also brought to the attention of the veterans for the first time at the August meeting that the company had been capitalized at $26,000, divided as follows: ten ordinary shares, par value $100, 250 preferred shares, par value $100. Then a bombshell was sprung on them when they were advised that only the holders of the ten ordinary shares were allowed a vote in the company, and of these ten ordinary shares no fewer than six were held in the name of Leopold Ferland.

The veterans were then advised for the first time that they had nothing to do with this new company entitled the veterans' taxi owners association of Montreal, since none of them held a share in it, and if any one of them wanted to have any connection with or any say in the administration of this company they would have to buy a share at the price of $100. They were further advised that if they did not have the money small payments of $10 would be accepted. I am told that some forty-three veterans have paid the amount of $100 for their shares.

There was great confusion at this meeting. It broke up in great disorder. After that, many of these veterans tried to make some kind of personal investigation on their own behalf into the affairs of this taxi association and to find some trace of what had happened to their money. Apparently they were unable to get anywhere, and in December of last year a number of these veterans banded together and decided to raise a small amount of money among themselves to obtain legal advice and to go to the legal department of D.V.A. I understand that 391 of these veterans are in this association I speak of and that they have subscribed and put up somewhere around $7,000 for legal advice and things of that kind.

I do not wish to go over the long list of interviews they had with officials of D.V.A. I would simply mention that they consulted Colonel Hague of the department in Montreal. They saw a Mr. Campbell, who, I am advised, is in the legal department in Montreal. They were in Ottawa in January, when they had an interview with General Burns and Mr. Gunn. This matter was fully gone over in Montreal and fully gone over again in Ottawa, and at the suggestion of General Burns they were asked to see the solicitor general. I am advised that they did have an interview with him and had a second interview with him in January in Montreal. In February they had a further interview with General Burns in Ottawa. I am told, whether it is correct or not, that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police had made an investigation into this matter, and the veterans were advised by General Burns that D.V.A. could take no action, that the charter had been granted by the government of Quebec and that anything Leopold Ferland had done in connection with the formation and operation of this veterans' taxi cab owners association had been done after he had left the Department of Veterans Affairs.

I am advised that Mr. Ferland either left or was discharged from the Department of Veterans Affairs some time in September, 1946. I am also advised that Mr. Levesque left D.V.A. some time in March, 1947. I may be wrong but that is the information that has been given. The veterans had a further interview with one Colonel Painchaud of the legal staff of the department in Ottawa. He went to Montreal, and once again, with Colonel Hague, the whole matter was gone over. Colonel Painchaud was unable to do anything for them. They had a final interview in May of this year in Ottawa with Mr. Woods, the deputy minister, General Burns and Mr. Gunn as well as Colonel Painchaud. Once again the whole matter was gone over from start to finish and they were told to return the next day to hear what decision had been reached.

The boys came back the next day and had an interview with Mr. Gunn and they say they were advised that D.V.A. could take no action in the matter. Mr. Gunn did tell them that if there was no publicity in the matter D.V.A. would attempt to interfere and endeavour to get control of this company or association from Mr. Ferland and that the money to be used in connection with it would have to be supplied by the veterans.

As I said at the beginning, I did not wish to refer in any way to the action of these veterans through their own counsel, or to any matters before the courts, but to mention only one thing, and that is that a sum in the neighbourhood of $200,000 was involved, apart from the amount spent by each individual veteran for his car.

Mr. MACKENZIE: It was $26,000.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings-Peterborough): Instead of having what they assumed they were getting, a mutual association which would be for the benefit of veterans, which would be controlled by them, in which they would have the say and the direction, and in which, if there were any profits, they would share, they now find that they have a joint stock company in which they have no share or control. They are unable to buy any one of these ten shares which carry the vote. They are obliged to pay $100 for a share if they wish to have any connection of any kind with the company.

I would point out that it was Mr. Ferland, an officer of the Department of Veterans Affairs, who called all these meetings. He called only the boys who had consulted him at D.V.A., and a second official of D.V.A., Mr. Levesque, presided at all these meetings. Mr. Ferland assured them he would go with them as an official of the department to negotiate with these taxi companies, that he would come to Ottawa. He did go to the companies; he did come to Ottawa; he did get priorities and all the other things he had mentioned. He told them to come to his office and pay the moneys and the veterans went to his office and paid the moneys there. I do not think there can be any doubt that Mr. Ferland, during the time he was connected with D.V.A., led the veterans to believe that he was acting as an official of D.V.A., and that D.V.A. was behind them in looking after their interests, because I would point out that when it was time for the boys to return home there were certain officials in the army who had been given special training in regard to reestablishment and rehabilitation of our veterans, and these trained men travelled on the boats that were bringing the troops home. It was a part of their duties to explain to the returning veterans what Canada was going to do for them, to explain the matter of gratuities, reestablishment credits, educational benefits, V.L.A., and everything of that kind.

One of the things impressed on all these returning veterans was that when they returned home they should take no action without consulting D.V.A. They were especially warned of all the various rackets that would be developed and that an attempt would be made to put these rackets over them. I would refer to a small blue book entitled "Back to Civil Life." Probably every member has read it. This is the third edition, October 15, 1945, issued under the authority of the Right Hon. Ian A. Mackenzie. It is a creditable book, because it sets out in a clear and concise way all the information which the veteran would be looking for. It tells him how to take advantage of all the benefits Canada is providing for him. I would read two paragraphs at page 25:

80. Evidence has already come to light indicating that a few unscrupulous persons are prepared, by various means, to cheat veterans of their benefits under the War Service Grants Act. Veterans are therefore advised to consult the Department of Veterans Affairs before making any commitments involving the use of their reestablishment credits. Heavy penalties are imposed both on veterans and those who assist them in unauthorized use of the reestablishment credit.

81. The Department of Veterans Affairs is most anxious that any evidence indicating fraud be brought to the attention of its nearest office at once so that appropriate steps may be taken to eliminate the danger of veterans' reestablishment being impeded through the expenditure of their benefits under this act in other than their best interests.

It seems to me that these veterans were simply following out the sound advice that had been given them. It was emphasized that they should consult D.V.A. and that is exactly what they did. These boys, who consulted an official of the department in Montreal, instead of receiving the help and guidance to which they were entitled, received the very opposite. I would remind the house that under the War Service Grants Act of 1944, under sections 21, 22 and 23, provision is made for certain penalties to be imposed in connection with this very section that I have read from the little bluebook.

It may be all very well, Mr. Speaker, for those of us in the house who are lawyers to pick all sorts of flaws and draw many conclusions as to why this large number of veterans acted in this manner, why it was so easy for them to be defrauded and have this nefarious scheme put over on them. But I would say that in all fairness we must remember that when many of these boys enlisted they were very young. Many of them were just out of school. The experience of those who had jobs was somewhat limited. When these boys have followed the advice which was given to them, namely, to consult the Department of Veterans Affairs, and when they now find that they have been defrauded out of certain benefits which Canada has been providing for them, it is hardly fair now to put the blame on them.

To date, as far as I can find out, the Department of Veterans Affairs has taken no action in this matter. What the report of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police contains naturally I do not know, but the minister has access to that. I would submit that it is the responsibility of the Department of Veterans Affairs to rescue these veterans from the almost impossible position in which they find themselves today. It is also the responsibility of all members of this house, whether they are veteran members or not, to protest against this shameful and disgraceful conduct of an official of the Department of Veterans Affairs. I submit that if nothing is done we shall find that many of these veterans—and many of them are still very young—who gave splendid service overseas will lose the financial benefits of their gratuities and reestablish-ment credits, and will have little chance of being successfully reestablished in civil life.

As I said at the beginning, in the past it has always been the earnest wish of members of this house to protect the interests of the veteran in every possible way. I would urge the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Mackenzie) and the officials on the legal staff in his department to intervene before it is too late.

In conclusion, I should like to thank hon. members for the courteous and careful attention they have given me. I have tried to keep away from any reference to the court action and I have also tried to avoid saying any harsh words. It is hardly necessary to say to the veteran members of the House of Commons that, while these boys may reside in another province than the one in which I reside, we veterans do not recognize any race or creed. I especially appeal to the veteran members to support this not unreasonable request which I have made to the Minister of Veterans Affairs.

Right Hon. IAN A. MACKENZIE (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the first observation made by my hon. friend was that I was not in the house last night. I wish to remind him that I was here at ten o'clock and later on in the evening—at which time he was not here—and I referred to his motion sympathetically.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings-Peterborough): I appreciate that.

Mr. MACKENZIE: May I say that I have no complaint whatsoever with respect to the observations made by the hon. member for Hastings-Peterborough (Mr. White). However, he made one misstatement of fact, probably through inadvertence. He said that Mr. Ferland—and I shall deal with him in a moment or two—was in charge of car priorities. I wish to inform the hon. member and the house that there was no such work, duty or office in the Department of Veterans Affairs.

I shall now deal with this matter briefly if I may, and not in opposition to what my hon. friend has said, because we at once took such action as we could take. We have received representations on various occasions from members of the veterans' taxi owners association of Montreal. I must advise the house that at the present moment our department is unable to find that we have any right or authority to intervene in the situation which has developed. I wish to review the facts. I think my friend has been accurate in his review.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings-Peterborough): Might I just say to the minister, before he reviews the facts, that I have carefully read the statement of claim which was drawn and filed by an outstanding legal counsel in Montreal, and most of my information is taken from that?

Mr. MACKENZIE: I am not disagreeing with it at all. In the first place, Leopold Ferland during the early part of 1946 was a temporary employee of the department in the Montreal district. He was engaged in the reestablishment credit division and his duties included meeting veterans who required their reestablishment credit for various purposes. During the course of his employment Mr. Ferland came into contact with many veterans who desired to use their reestablishment credit for the purchase of automobiles to be used as taxis. The availability of reestablishment credit for such purposes is authorized, as my hon. friend well knows, by the War Service Grants Act. I think he himself quoted the section.

It is alleged—and we must be careful about these matters because they are before the courts—that Mr. Ferland seized the opportunity thus afforded of meeting veterans so inclined, to promote the idea that they would be able to conduct their taxi operations more successfully if they were organized into an association. It appears that Mr. Ferland was able to interest a large number of veterans in such organization and with their consent, express or implied, proceeded to obtain the incorporation of a company under the laws of the province of Quebec, known as the veterans' taxi owners association of Montreal. The structure of the company shows the incorporators to be Napoleon Bigras, Paul J. Ahela, Emilien Montambault—all chauffeurs—and Leopold Ferland, civil servant, of Montreal. The financial structure of the company consisted of $26,000, divided into ten common shares of $100 each and 250 preferred shares of a value of $100 each. It may be mentioned that these preferred shares do not carry, as my hon. friend knows, any voting rights.

Mr. FERGUSON: May I ask a question just there? Is Mr. Ferland who appears in this charter a civil servant?

Mr. MACKENZIE: I am coming to that. If my hon. friend will have a little patience, I will tell him what the situation is.

It is stated that all veterans who became members of this company did so by the acquisition of one share of the preferred stock, for which they were required to pay the stipulated par value. It is also stated that each veteran was required to pay to Mr. Ferland, as my hon. friend mentioned, as part of the promotional expenses of the plan the sum of $50. I say it is stated; I am not saying it is a fact; I do not know.

The plan of operation of the association was to supply to its members such services as telephone communication, certain garage service, station privileges and similar things, at a cost to each member of $20 a month, as stated by my hon. friend. It is stated that the association is now and has been in operation for several months. The complaint of the veterans referred to by my hon. friend seems to consist of charges that Mr. Ferland misrepresented to them the nature of their interest in the association. The complaining veterans said they believed that they were in fact obtaining a participating interest in the company whereby they would become entitled to a share in the profits. It is evident that all they have are the preferred shares, which, of course, consist only of a claim against the company for payment of the amount of the shares at some time in the future together with interest at three per cent per annum. The veterans also claim—and I am using these words very carefully—that they paid the sum of $50 to Mr. Ferland, as stated by my hon. friend, under misapprehension as to the purpose of such payment. It is also claimed by certain veterans that all the common shares have been issued to Mr. Ferland and his immediate associates, that Mr. Ferland has complete control over the operations of the association and that he is unwilling to account to the shareholders in any proper manner.

The activities of Mr. Ferland in connection with this business first came to the attention of the department in July, 1946, at which time Mr. Ferland was on sick leave; he was not on active duty in the department. As soon as he returned, his resignation was obtained. It seems clear that most of his activity connected with the development of this association and putting it into operation was carried on during the time of his sick leave. The action taken with respect to Mr. Ferland's resignation from the department was due to what at that time appeared to be a breach of the regulations, which prohibit any employee from engaging in private business during office hours. This is tantamount to dismissal,* and was then and is still the only action open to the department.

From time to time during the last several months the department has received delegations representing the dissentient veterans mentioned by my hon. friend. They have consistently requested the department to take some active steps leading to the solution of their difficulties. The department has thoroughly studied the whole situation, and has taken the stand that there were no grounds upon which the department as such could intervene. It was pointed out to the veterans that inasmuch as the department did not suffer financially, and inasmuch as no reestablishment credit money had been improperly granted—not by the department—the department has no status as a party to the dispute which has developed among members of this corporation. However, the department did request the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to investigate and report on the possible violation by Mr. Ferland of the War Service Grants Act or any other law. As the result of such report the department was confirmed in its opinion that if any action were taken it must be taken in the courts of the province of Quebec by those who hold themselves aggrieved. It is understood that the complaining veterans have engaged counsel, as mentioned by my hon friend, and commenced criminal proceedings in the courts of Montreal against Mr. Ferland It is further understood that these veterans have also engaged other counsel to commence civil proceedings in the appropriate courts of the province with the object of obtaining from Mr. Ferland a proper accounting and such other relief as may be available at law for their grievances. It may be pointed out that the employment of Mr. Ferland by the Department of Veterans Affairs was obtained through the usual channels of the civil service commission.

That is the complete story as far as I have been able to find it from the records of the department; but if the house would care to have the public accounts committee or any other committee go farther into it, I should be more than pleased. If there are any concrete suggestions as to what may be the responsibilities of the department through the defalcations or wrong procedure of one of our officials I should be very glad to have those suggestions sent to me and to make representations to my colleagues accordingly. I am in thorough agreement with what my hon. friend has said. I have not the slightest criticism to offer, and it was a great disappointment to us to see that one of our fairly senior officials was responsible for these indefensible practices. That is all I can say.

Mr. GREEN: What about Captain Levesque? The minister said nothing about him.

See also p. 4228, June 17*

[Mr. Mackenzie.]

Mr. MACKENZIE: I do not know about him at all. That was news to me tonight when it was mentioned by my hon. friend. I shall be glad to look into it. Has he not been dismissed also?

Mr. WHITE (Hastings-Peterborough): I could not say whether he has been dismissed or whether he resigned, but I understand that he left the department in March, 1947.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Before the minister sits down, in view of the statement that has been made, would he say when Major Ferland went on sick leave?

Mr. MACKENZIE: In July.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): He simply went on sick leave last July?

Mr. MACKENZIE: I am speaking subject to correction.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): It was approximately in July, 1946, then?

Mr. MACKENZIE: I must check on that.

Mr. J. A. ROSS (Souris): I should like to substantiate what my colleague the hon. member for Hastings-Peterborough (Mr. White) has said this evening. I interviewed some of these boys when they were here, heard the statements they made, and saw the brief to which the hon. member has referred. While I am not going to take much time, or repeat all the details my hon. friend has placed before the house, I find difficulty in deciding where government responsibility ends in things of this sort. The hon. member read from the bluebook on civil reestablishment. Certainly all the young chaps in the armed forces were distinctly led to believe that all sorts of things would be done for them. In fact, during the war years I used to claim that they were being oversold by the department and the government on all the things that were to be done for them when they returned to this country.

Mr. MACKENZIE: And a lot has been done for them.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I quite agree that considerable has been done for them; but I say it was put across to them both overseas and in this country as to what the government or the country was going to do for the boys when they came back.

Mr. ROWE: Especially at election time.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): No; I am not talking about elections or anything like that right now. I definitely believe that, after all those years of propaganda, these boys had a right to look to the Department of Veterans Affairs for guidance, as has been pointed o by my colleague. Naturally they thought anything they were told by the department, or anything coming from the department, would be protection for them.

Now then, this Major Ferland, according to this brief, in April, 1946, was located in an office of the Department of Veterans Affairs at 379 Common street, Montreal. The minister has not denied that. He was working there for the Department of Veterans Affairs. According to this brief, in April, 1946, Major Leopold Ferland was an officer with the Department of Veterans Affairs. Then there was this other officer—according to the brief a Captain Levesque—who also was an officer with the Department of Veterans Affairs at that time.

Then they spoke of another meeting about two weeks later than this first one, held in April, 1946, and a third meeting on July 9.

Mr. MACKENZIE: My hon. friend is always fair, but is it correct to discuss what is before the courts at the present time?

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I am not referring to the courts at all. I am referring just to this particular case, and have not made reference to the courts. I do not know anything about the courts, but I do know about this case. The minister said that the company had, to date, about $26,000; but he will readily realize that these boys are out of pocket much more than that—apart from their gratuities or rehabilitation allowances.

An hon. MEMBER: No.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Well, a number of these boys told me that they could prove that some 500 veterans were out of pocket approximately $230,000. I have only their statement. I have not the details, and I am not now going into details. I am not asking the house to take those figures.

Mr. HARRIS (Grey Bruce): I should like to know.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I have only the statements made by a number of those boys. It was Mr. Sweet who told me. All I am doing is giving the house the statement of those boys.

There is something wrong somewhere; nobody denies that. I am not stating exactly how much they are out, but I am giving the figures they gave me. They were led into this on the basis of good faith by an official of the Department of Veterans Affairs of the government of the day.

After what I have said, I believe they have some right to think they were working with the responsibility of the government behind them. In view of all that has been done, and all that was sent out to those boys during their years of service, they have a right to think that.

Another chap—and I could give the name if the minister wished to have it—claims that he spent five and a half years overseas and that he has invested $2,500 in this concern. I am not, of course, saying that all that amount consists of gratuities and rehabilitation allowances. He stands to lose most of it, as things are today.

I have said I do not want to repeat details, but I wish to substantiate the argument so well set out this evening. The point I want to make is this, referring to page 25 in that book, that there was a gesture made toward all the young men and women of the armed services throughout the war years which would lead them to look to officials of that department for guidance, and to believe that their funds would be protected. In the same article they were warned against anybody else who might get hold of their funds.

The point I make is—and I have no doubt the minister is as much concerned as we are—that I am wondering where government responsibility ends in this matter. That is the point. I am of the opinion that, since civil servants undertook to develop these funds, even if they were comrades of the past war, by virtue of the fact that they were employed by the Department of Veterans Affairs of this government there should be governmental responsibility somewhere toward those boys. That is the only point I wish to make.

I had a great deal more detail which I could have pointed out, but it would be only repeating what has already been said. I wish to impress that upon the house; and I should like to impress the further fact that this is a government responsibility to some extent. I am not able to say just where it should end.

Mr. G. H. CASTLEDEN (Yorkton): Mr. Speaker, I am sure every hon. member would support the statement made by the hon. member for Hastings-Peterborough (Mr. White) in protest against what appears to be a betrayal of trust by an official of the Department of Veterans Affairs. I do not think there is any department in which there should be more careful supervision, and there should be a close check to prevent this kind of thing. The men who put their money into this venture did so in good faith. These men, under the circumstances which exist today, where there are several hundred of them, are looking for redress.

The minister says action was taken last year. I understand that Mr. Ferland was dismissed by the department in September; but the information I have is that another officer who, I believe, was in charge of rehabilitation of crippled veterans—Captain Levesque—continued his activities with the company up until March.

I also understand that in February the Royal Canadian Mounted Police were called in to make an investigation. The minister stated that action was taken. On February 23 the mounted police were called off. They must have given some report to the department at that time.

Mr. MACKENZIE: They were not called off, I can assure the hon. member.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Well, they completed their investigation, but—

Mr. MACKENZIE: I must ask for the withdrawal of that remark. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police were never called off by our department.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: They did not continue their investigation.

Mr. MACKENZIE: That is a matter entirely for their discretion. We do not control the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. We gave instructions to go ahead and investigate.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: They probably completed their investigation, then, on February 23. They must have tabled some report with the government. What action was taken on that report when it was tabled? It seems to me they still had a responsibility in their work until Mr. Levesque was dismissed, or given his release.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I will be glad to look into that point. I have not the precise information at hand at the present time. But I do know this, if I may interrupt, that the attitude of the deputy minister all the way through was to pursue this matter to the very limit.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: I was also pleased to hear the minister say tonight that they were considering further action. But we want to know what he will do further. I would suggest this, that surely veterans in this situation require the assurance from him that the government will make good any losses these men have suffered as a result of what appeared to be a breach of the trust which they placed in officials of this department. To the extent that that is given, the matter can be cleared up. That is the least we can expect from the department under the circumstances.

Mr. DENTON MASSEY (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that perhaps I have had more to do with veteran reestablishment than most in this chamber; and the situation which arises out of this debate puts, I think, the Department of Veterans Affairs in a most invidious position.

During the latter days of the war, certainly throughout the Royal Canadian Air Force, there was a concerted effort, both overseas and later in Canada, to lead the then becoming veterans on the right path. At Warrington, in the United Kingdom, there were no less than sixteen personnel counsellors who interviewed upwards of seventy per cent of the returning veterans. Later, in the release centres of Canada—and once again I am speaking about the Royal Canadian Air Force—each veteran was interviewed before he left the service. At my own release centre in Toronto, not only did he have that interview, but also an address was given to him by a representative of the Better Business Bureau, warning him against this sort of practice which allegedly has developed in Montreal. Further than that, there were scores of personal interviews conducted both by myself and my officers with these lads, and in many instances we were able to save them from getting into something which was not good. I am safe in saying that in 100 per cent of all cases, we confidently referred these lads to the D.V.A.

The hon. member for Hastings-Peterborough (Mr. White) has quoted tonight from the booklet "Back to Civil Life". That is an excellent publication and he could have gone on with his quotations. That booklet was more or less a bible for the lads. Certainly it was emphasized to them that before they did anything they should see the D.V.A. to know what they are doing. I am speaking now as a former serving and commanding officer and we, to use service language, "plugged" the D.V.A. as hard as we could and tried to build it up as a responsible organization, a department created, not only to look after the interests and needs of the veteran, but to protect him against those who wished to deprive him of that which he had been given and had so richly earned.

We have the situation here where these lads went to a representative of the D.V.A., in fact to two of them and, again using the language of the service, they have been "let down". That is a serious reflection upon the department and, therefore, the department must take action. The minister has said tonight that action has been taken, that one officer left the service last year and that another left the service as late as March of this year. He says the matter virtually rests there, but that is not good enough. It is unfair to the other officials of this department which we are discussing tonight. It puts them all, to a greater or less degree, under a certain amount of suspicion. Can we trust the D.V.A.? That is the challenge to the minister. It goes much farther than this one case.

To remove it from that realm for a moment into the business realm, if a company is a representative company, a good company and has a name which is valuable; if it desires to protect its good will, and one of its accredited representatives misrepresents that company to such a degree that a customer or client is hurt, retribution is made as rapidly as possible. That is the way in which good will is maintained. It is not just a question of the customer always being right; there can be no question but that the veteran is right. It seems to me that the challenge is clear for the government, not only the department, to give immediate consideration to complete retribution to these lads, not only for the sake of the lads themselves, but for the sake of the name of the Department of Veterans Affairs and all that that implies for the future The challenge is clear. Let the minister act quickly.

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, let us be fair about this thing—

Mr. GREEN: That is all we are asking.

Mr. MITCHELL: Up to now it has been veterans only who have discussed this thing. I understand that the people who have been charged before the courts are veterans. It may be that what every hon. member has said is correct, but is it fair to prejudge the case? One of the fundamental laws of our country is that a man is not guilty until proven guilty by a jury of his peers.

Mr. MASSEY: Why were the men dismissed from the department?

Mr. MITCHELL: If a man in any department works out of hours, he is acting contrary to the civil service regulations. This session we have heard talk of human rights; let us have some human rights in this regard. My hon. friend, who is an old air force man, talks about counsellors. I am an old navy man. We were counselled not to play crown and anchor, but we used to play it just the same and we lost lots of money, or at least I did. Let us get a proper focus. Do not let us prejudge these men as guilty, even though they may be guilty from your point of view, until they have gone through the procedure of the courts of this country which, in my judgment—I do not except Great Britain in this regard—are the fairest on God's green earth.

I think that is the only attitude we can take at the moment. Let the courts have their say. Let these men whom some hon. members opposite think are guilty have their day in court and not prejudge them in the open as some of us are trying to do this evening. Let them be tried by a judge and a jury of their peers if necessary. Then, if they are guilty, we can discuss the matter again. Let me say this: There is no legislation on earth can make a fool into a wise man.

An hon. MEMBER: You should know.

Mr. MITCHELL: Let me say this to my good socialist friends—

Mr. COLDWELL: We did not say a word. We were just listening, but we were thinking though.

Mr. MITCHELL: Some people find it difficult to think. Let me say to my good socialist friends that some of the thoughts which they have expressed in this House of Commons they will find most difficult to enforce should they ever—and they never will—be charged with the responsibility of administering the affairs of this country. I plead with my returned friends this evening to give these individuals, guilty as they may be from their own personal points of view, the rights to which they are justly entitled, to appear before the courts of this country to be tried by a judge and jury and found to be guilty or innocent. Then we can talk about the matter.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: When this discussion started this evening it was mentioned that the matter was before the courts, but the Speaker did not know just what was before the courts. The Minister of Veterans Affairs has stated that there is a criminal and a civil action pending. It is difficult for me to determine when hon. members are discussing matters which are before the courts, but I think we have been quite close to it at times. I do not want to rule any discussion out of order, but I would ask hon. members to be careful not to discuss a matter which is now before the courts and which might affect anyone concerned in a criminal or civil action. As I say, it is most difficult to determine just when we are discussing matters which are sub judice, which all hon. members know is improper to do. I ask for the cooperation of all hon. members.

Mr. C. E. JOHNSTON (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I have been extremely interested in the rehabilitation of veterans ever since they began coming back from overseas. When I say that I am cognizant of the fact that every member in this house is also much concerned with the welfare of the veterans, having in mind the great sacrifices which some of those men made for this country. I was surprised at the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mitchell) making the remark he did, and I just want to refer briefly to that in passing

Mr. MITCHELL: Have you never played crown and anchor?

Mr. JOHNSTON: I am not confessing my sins tonight. The Minister of Labour went to some pains to state to the house that there should be fair play in this matter and that everybody should have his day in court. It struck me that the Minister of Labour was endeavouring to have the government evade their responsibilities and nicely get out from under the difficulty they found themselves in.

Mr. MITCHELL: I do not think anybody can fairly accuse me of trying to get out from under anything. The hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green) paid me a compliment in that regard this afternoon. So far as I am concerned, I am not getting out from under anything. The hon. member is imputing motives.

Mr. JOHNSTON: No.

Mr. MITCHELL: Yes, he is.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I said that is what it looked like.

Mr. MITCHELL: If the hon. member wants to talk politics let him do it outside this house.

Mr. JOHNSTON: The Minister of Labour cannot put over anything like that tonight. He has had his day in court and now he should sit down and listen to those who are putting forward their views. It seems to me quite clear—and I think the Minister of Labour has overlooked this—that the government definitely acknowledged its responsibility in this matter when it discharged its former employees. I believe that the Department of Veterans Affairs are attempting to be fair, but when they went so far as to have representations from these different organizations come to them they did know that there was a transaction taking place that was not in the interests of the veterans. When the government has so persistently advocated that all veterans should accept the services and advice of the D.V.A. and act on their advice and thereby avoid these pitfalls which are now apparent, the government definitely recognized the dangers that lay ahead.

In this particular case it is clear to anyone who has listened to the facts presented tonight that the government did recognize that they were involved and, once having recognized their responsibility, they cannot lightly brush this whole thing aside by discharging an employee or two. If everybody is to have his day in court, as the Minister of Labour has suggested, the fair thing to have done was not to discharge those men. That was not fair, according to the interpretation of the Minister of Labour. These men should have had their day in court—

Mr. MITCHELL: If I may interrupt my hon. friend, I do not know whether he is conversant with the civil service regulation that if a civil servant wants to engage in activities for gain outside his regular office hours he has to have the permission of his minister. These people did not, and so they were out.

Mr. JOHNSTON: As I understood the brief presented by hon. members to my right, the transaction began in office hours, and meetings were called while the department was employing these men.

Mr. MITCHELL: Under the regulation governing civil servants, an employee cannot work out of office hours for monetary return without the permission of the minister. If he does, he is out. That is all. He does not have to do anything wrong necessarily.

Mr. KNOWLES: But this took place in office hours.

Mr. JOHNSTON: The minister is not implying, is he, that the Department of Veterans Affairs discharges a man if he has not done something wrong. If that is the attitude of the department, my opinion of the department is lower.

Mr. MACKENZIE: May I interrupt my hon. friend? I think it would be in the interests of the whole house to refer this matter to the public accounts committee, finish this debate, and get on with the business of the house.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I am coming to that. I have it here in my notes.

The second place where the government recognized their responsibility—and I am of the opinion that they did recognize their responsibility—was when they asked the R.C.M.P. to investigate. I take it that the department asked the R.C.M.P. to investigate this matter while Mr. Ferland and Mr. Levesque were still in the employ of the department. If that is so, they definitely recognized their responsibility there, believing that these veterans were being defrauded. Then, having taken the advice of the R.C.M.P., to whose report they had access but of course we have not, they discharged these employees, thereby endeavouring to wash their hands of the whole affair. That does not seem to me to be the proper way to deal with a situation of this kind.

The Minister of Veterans Affairs has suggested that this whole matter be referred to the public accounts committee. I am not sure whether I agree with that suggestion. I have been on the public accounts committee for a number of years, but in this case it seems to me that the government has a direct responsibility and that it should not be shifted on to a parliamentary committee—

Mr. MACKENZIE: I rise to a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I submit that this whole discussion is out of order because the case is sub judice. I have made the suggestion that this case be referred to the public accounts committee, and that suggestion has not been accepted by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Johnston). I raise the point of order that this discussion is out of order.

Mr. JOHNSTON: Surely every speaker is not out of order just because he disagrees with the minister. That would be a new rule if that were so. I did not say I was absolutely opposed to having this matter referred to the public accounts committee. I was objecting to its being referred to the committee at this time, because that would be an excellent way for the government to get out from under its responsibility in this matter by shifting it to a parliamentary committee.

Mr. MITCHELL: Let us have some decency in this discussion. Do not forget that there are veterans on both sides of the house. My hon. friend has suggested switching this matter from the House of Commons to a committee while the case is sub judice. That does not add up.

Mr. JOHNSTON: That was the suggestion of the Minister of Veterans Affairs.

Mr. MITCHELL: Some of my hon. friends who are applauding loudest are prejudging this question.

Mr. ADAMSON: We are not prejudging the question. I love the Minister of Labour; I just adore him, he is so charmingly illogical. I have listened carefully to the argument tonight and all we are trying to do is this. We say that the government has a responsibility toward these veterans, and the Department of Veterans Affairs has a responsibility toward these veterans entirely irrespective—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. Is the hon. member speaking to a point of order?

Mr. ADAMSON: Yes, Mr. Speaker. There is a definite point of order which the Minister of Veterans Affairs has raised as to this discussion being out of order because the case is sub judice. The question raised by the hon. member for Hastings-Peterborough (Mr. White) has nothing to do with the courts. The point he is bringing out is that the Department of Veterans Affairs has a responsibility toward these veterans, absolutely separate from any court proceedings taking place in Montreal. That is the question before the house, and I submit, sir, that it is entirely in order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: So long as hon. members confine their remarks to veterans affairs and refrain from references either to the civil action or to the criminal proceedings, they may continue to discuss the subject. I think hon. members will realize the difficult position in which the Speaker finds himself. The debate has gone on for some time and I am not altogether satisfied that it has been quite in order, but I would ask hon. members to cooperate and endeavour not to discuss the matter in any way that will relate it to the court proceedings.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I appreciate your difficulty, Mr. Speaker, and I wish to have my remarks conform to the rules, but we have the minister calling me to order and asking you to make a ruling because I said that this matter should not be sent to a committee, and then we have the Minister of Labour saying that I am out of order and asking for another ruling on the ground that it should not be sent to the committee. You are indeed in a difficult position. I did not make either of those suggestions.

An hon. MEMBER: Who did?

Mr. JOHNSTON: The Minister of Veterans Affairs suggested that it should go to the committee and the Minister of Labour said that it should not, and both said that I was out of order because I said that it should not go to the committee at this time. There would be less discussion if the two ministers would get together and decide what to do. I did say, Mr. Speaker, that I thought the situation was too serious for the government to send it to the public accounts committee, thereby putting the responsibility on a committee of this house. I think the government definitely showed their responsibility in this connection when, first they discharged these men and, second, when they caused the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to make an investigation. I suggest that, in all fairness to the veterans concerned and to the Department of Veterans Affairs as well, the government should make an investigation of their own, and not a parliamentary committee investigation. They should make the decision and, if that decision is not satisfactory to both parties, then it will be time—that would be the opportune time—to have the whole matter referred to the public accounts committee for further investigation.

Mr. JOHN T. HACKETT (Stanstead): Mr. Speaker, sometimes when I attempt to address the house appeals are made to you to restrain me from speaking, but I hope that this evening the topic of my observations will be free from controversy. You have been asked to preclude this debate from going farther because there is a case before the courts of Montreal. I have learned from the public journals that there is a case in the criminal courts and in the civil courts, but that is not the case concerning which I now wish to say a few words. My observations will be directed to the case of the veterans against the department of my right hon. friend (Mr. Mackenzie). No such case is before the courts.

There are some subjects, as you well know, Mr. Speaker, concerning which the right hon. gentleman and I cannot always agree. Politics is one of them. But I must say that I have never been to the minister with a question in which the veterans were concerned when I did not have a sympathetic hearing and did not get all that it was humanly possible for him to do.

It is not my function to advise either the government or the house as to the legal rights of veterans against the department. At law—and I see that the solicitor general was recently conversing with the right hon. gentleman—I doubt whether there are rights which can be enforced in the courts. But the facts are that these taxi drivers, 400 or 500 of them, returned men, have lost large sums of money.

Mr. JEAN: Has that been proved? That is the point.

Mr. MITCHELL: That is the point before the courts.

Mr. HACKETT: Mr. Speaker, the fact is that 400 or 500 taxi drivers in Montreal have lost large sums of money—

An hon. MEMBER: Claim to have lost.

Mr. HACKETT: —and they have lost these sums of money because an employee of the Department of Veterans Affairs was false to his mandate. Someone may say, are you going to prejudge this servant of the department? Well, I will say that if I do prejudge him I am but following the example of the department which dismissed him summarily for his participation in this case. But the point I wish to make is that these men claim that they have lost these sums of money because this employee of the department was false to his mandate. If this employee was the cause of their loss, as they contend, it was not the fault of the veterans; it was the fault of those who selected the man and put him in the position which enabled him to be false to his duty and the veterans.

That may not give rise to a claim at law. Undoubtedly the department did not engage this man for the specific purpose of betraying enabled him to be false to his duty and the veterans.

Mr. MACKENZIE: These employees were not appointed by the department at all but by the civil service.

Mr. HACKETT: That is one of the questions which the minister may wish to investigate a little further, and inasmuch as there are a number in the same category, the opportunity for going into them will arise if the suggestion which I am going to make to the minister is, in his appreciation, a feasible one.

The fault was not the fault of the veterans. A man masquerading as the friend of veterans was false to them and the veterans in consequence have suffered irreparable loss. The Minister of Labour says, why prejudge them? Why not await the finding of the court? That sounds reasonable enough.

Mr. MITCHELL: It should sound reasonable to a lawyer.

Mr. HACKETT: It sounds reasonable enough. The difficulty is that 500 veterans, every one of whom every man and woman in Canada wishes to help, have been put in the position that if they must wait for the final decision of the court, it will be too late.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Will my hon. friend forgive me? I hate to interrupt him.

Mr. HACKETT: The minister does not disturb me in the least.

Mr. MACKENZIE: According to the statement of the men themselves, they are all working and earning a living with the cars purchased with their money, part of which may have been derived from war service gratuities or reestablishment credits.

Mr. MITCHELL: They are all working. That is the point.

Mr. HACKETT: I do not think my right hon. friend will wish to rest his case on such a weak and wavering reed as that. My right hon. friend knows—and his heart is too big for him to contradict it—that most of these men are in a serious plight. Their earnings and the bulk of their gratuities have been pledged and lost through the duplicity of an agency of his department.

Mr. MACKENZIE: There is no proof of that.

Mr. HACKETT: If they must await the outcome of the trials, relief will come too late and this group of valiant soldiers will have to suffer a damage which cannot be made good.

Now, what is my suggestion? We have attempted, whenever occasion arose, to be helpful to those who answered the call of duty. As a country we have done well by our veterans. Daily we are sending aid abroad, even to the enemy, even to those who fought against us, because we are proud of our humanitarianism. Here is a group of veterans who have suffered through the blighting of their hopes, if in no other way, as no other group of veterans has ever suffered in Canada. I am going to suggest to the right hon. gentleman that this matter be not shoved aside. I do not think he wants that to be done. I am asking him to give play to those generous sentiments for which he is known in the house, to bring into being some kind of committee or commission which can find out how much these men have lost, and to bring before the house some kind of legislation which will make them whole and do that immediately. But there is a danger in attempting legislation of this kind unless it be surrounded with all possible safeguards. The investigation should be minute and complete, and should be undertaken immediately. It should be made clear that the government is not responsible to everyone who is damaged by reason of the acts of a government employee. But this is an exceptional case. This is the case of men who have returned from overseas service who not only have been invited but have been supplicated not to be led astray by the ordinary businessman or by the ordinary shark on the street; they have been asked to go and place their confidence in the right hon. gentleman's department in order that they might have there the protection and the direction to which their bravery and their overseas service entitled them. They came and gave to the department all the confidence to which the house believes it is entitled. It happens that there was someone there who was false to his mandate, but we cannot let it go forth that our veterans are to suffer in a group numbering five hundred merely because a wolf in sheep's clothing has found his way into the fold of the right hon. gentleman opposite.

Mr. KNOWLES: That is an understatement.

Mr. HACKETT: The way to deal with this is to set up a commission or committee tomorrow or the next day. Let my right hon. friend find two, three or four competent people to sit on it. Let them sift the facts. Let them make restitution to these men. Let the case in the courts proceed. If the plaintiffs succeed, let there be given back to the government whatever is recouped or recovered at the end of one, two, three or four years. But in the meantime the veteran, he who has fought, he who has suffered, he who has been wronged should be enabled to recover now that which was improperly taken from him through the abuse of the confidence he placed in the Department of Veterans Affairs.

Mr. MITCHELL: May I ask—

Mr. HACKETT: If the hon. gentleman will resume his seat for a moment, I will make way for him very shortly.

Mr. MITCHELL: I just wanted to ask a question; that is all.

Mr. HACKETT: I ask the Minister of Veterans Affairs in this case, and possibly only in this case, to let his big heart dominate the other factors which are prominent in his generous make-up.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Golding in the chair.

[Mr. Hackett.]

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

402. Departmental administration, $544,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I would ask that the item stand.

Mr. BRACKEN: Before the suggestion of the minister is acceded to, I wish to ask some questions. How many departments are now in supply and how many are not?

Mr. MACKENZIE: I am speaking from memory now, but my recollection is that we have fifteen departments in supply before this item is called. This would mean sixteen departments in supply, and four more to be called.

Mr. BRACKEN: The minister advises that fifteen or sixteen departments are now in supply.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Sixteen.

Mr. BRACKEN: And that some three or four remain. He is asking now that another department be put in supply. I do not think anybody in this house wishes to delay its work, but I cannot understand why the government desires to have more departments called when practically no estimates at all have been voted. As I see it, when these departments are all called, the government could then go into supply in the latter half of the week without anybody having the right to debate. As long as some of these departments are not in supply, when the government moves to go into supply early in the week, any grievance anyone may have may be raised at that time. I do not think that right should be taken away from the opposition.

Mr. MACKENZIE: May I say a word just here?

Mr. BRACKEN: Yes. All I want to know is why the government desires to have more of these departments called. If you need sixteen now, why have you been taking them two or three at a time over the last two or three months? Why not do it all at once and have done with it?

Mr. MACKENZIE: We tried to do it several times. May I again give my hon. friend the assurance that any Monday, Tuesday or Wednesday, when the question of supply is contested and a request is received from them, we can call one of these items still remaining, at their request, so that they can vent any grievances they may desire to present; and that will apply until the last two or three days of the session. I hope my hon. friend will be satisfied with that.

Mr. BRACKEN: That is a purely voluntary offer which I have no doubt the government will honour, but we do not want to be in the position of having to ask your favour when we want to speak.

Mr. MACKENZIE: It is not a favour; it is a promise.

Mr. BRACKEN: Then I ask another question. Can the minister say why, when there are fifteen or sixteen departments in supply, they want to put in another one?

Mr. MACKENZIE: To help expedite the business of this house.

Mr. BRACKEN: Already we have fifteen or sixteen departments to deal with, and you have five or six or seven or possibly eight weeks to go in order to get the other departments in.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I hope not. My hon. friend may recall that last year we held up one department, legislation, with the promise I made tonight to the opposition and the other parties in the house, that if they decided to raise any question on going into supply on Monday, Tuesday or Wednesday they would have the absolutely free and unfettered right of discussion on that item; and I think that meets the situation.

Mr. BRACKEN: Then this is a perfectly fair question. Will the minister tell me what advantage it will be to the house by way of expediting the business to have sixteen departments in supply rather than fifteen? I do not know, and I should like to be told.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I can tell my hon. friend that I have been here for nearly twenty years; and it has been my experience, not only when we were over there but when we were over here, that in the last week or ten days of every session whatever government may be in office is severely criticized for not having made greater progress in supply. I can also tell my hon. friend there is no sinister motive at all behind this. If my hon. friends do not want another department after tonight we shall just leave them as they are.

Mr. BRACKEN: But you have not answered my question.

Mr. POULIOT: I just want to put a question that may be answered the next time the estimates are brought in. Last year enormous amounts of money were voted for the assistance of returned men. Several acts were passed; I do not know what chapters they are, but you, Mr. Chairman, know the acts I am referring to. What I want to know the next time the estimates are submitted to the committee is, how many members of the Canadian army have been given the advantages of the legislation passed last year, and how many members of any other army, the imperial army or any other, have been given the same advantages? I want to know also to what extent the privileges given—

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. The item before the committee is 402, providing that $544,000 be granted to His Majesty for transport, departmental administration.

Mr. POULIOT: Yes, I know.

Mr. MACKENZIE: On a question of privilege, if I may reply at once to my hon. friend, as soon as the Department of Veterans Affairs is in supply I shall be very glad to answer all the questions my hon. friend has mentioned. It is not in supply as yet. This is the Department of Transport.

Mr. POULIOT: We are before the committee now, and I do not ask that the question be answered this evening. I do not want to back the minister to the wall.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. We are on transport; departmental administration.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I move that the item stand.

Mr. BRACKEN: Might I get clearly from the minister what he proposes now? He is asking that one more department be put in supply, and he is saying that the remainder—?

Mr. MACKENZIE: Will be left over until after consultation with the leaders of the various groups in the house.

Mr. BRACKEN: Thank you very much.

Mr. POULIOT: This is not the estimates; this is the cinema, the moving pictures.

Item stands.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

200. Departmental administration, $531,954.

Mr. TIMMINS: When the committee rose last evening, Mr. Chairman, I was dealing with the subject of cancer research, and I should like to direct my remarks to that subject for a short time again this evening. I point out that in the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare for this year there is no item whatever with respect to cancer research. Last evening the minister said the matter of fighting cancer must engage our fullest attention, but I say now it has received no attention from this government, at least up to January, 1947. Whatever cancer research has been carried on has been done by the national research council. A return filed by the Department of National Health and Welfare shows that in the eleven years from 1935 to 1945 inclusive, some $4,500 has been spent on research. During the same time 142,000 people died from cancer. As far as I can make out, this government has spent no other money on cancer research. The King George V silver jubilee fund has been in existence for twelve years. The moneys subscribed to that fund by public subscription amount to $490,000, according to the minister last evening.

Mr. MARTIN: Approximately.

Mr. TIMMINS: The National Cancer Institute of Canada was formed in January of this year; and according to the minister's statement last evening it will receive from the fund $150,000 a year for the next three years. That will pretty well use up the fund. The point I wish to make is, what does the government itself intend to do? What contribution is the government going to make to this all-important subject of cancer research? Last evening the minister stated the matter correctly when he said that he had no official connection with the National Cancer Institute of Canada, and that goes for his department as well; so that the institute is on its own.

I take it that all cancer research in Canada will come directly or indirectly under the national cancer institute. With respect to the return to which I referred for a time last evening, some figures were given by the minister or his department on May 29, 1947, having to do with the amount of money spent in cancer research through the national research council; and as I have pointed out already, that sum was less than $4,500. As I understand the procedure, having regard to the national cancer institute which has been brought into being, it will be that the laboratories of the various medical colleges throughout Canada, institutions having proper facilities, and any person qualified to conduct medical research and having the necessary facilities, may apply for a grant in aid, and, if approved, the money will be granted.

But where is the money to come from? From press reports it appears that part of this annual sum of $150,000 will go for administration, and to the Canadian cancer society for public education. In addition, there is the administration of the fund, the setting up of local administrative centres, a national cancer survey; and then the remainder which according to press reports would amount to about $90,000, will be for research. I am pointing out that, of this $150,000 about which the minister told us last night, according to the material I have, there will be only about $90,000 for cancer research in 1947.

It seems perfectly obvious that the universities of Canada which have already taken up this work, private scientists who have the equipment and facilities for doing the work, and research laboratories which will apply for a share of the fund, will more than absorb this paltry balance of $90,000.

I have it on good authority from a friend of mine in Toronto who is interested in the work, that already applications for upwards of $200,000 for research purposes have been applied for this year by responsible institutions. So that it is perfectly clear that the $90,000 which will be left in the hands of the institute will not be nearly enough with which to make much research progress this year. It will be a national calamity and will deal a dreadful blow to the work of the national cancer institute if in the first year of its existence the funds available are inadequate to the extent of not making it worthwhile for the various institutions to prepare a programme to take on the work, and to employ young scientists to do the work over a period of years. I believe the responsibility to find the money with which to find the cause and cure of cancer, over and above the sum which has already been subscribed by the people of Canada, rests upon the dominion government.

It seems to me important to point out that this research work cannot be handled on a year to year budget basis. Research laboratories require the brains of the best young scientists in Canada. We do not want to let them slip over to the United States where they can probably get larger salaries and more continuity of employment, through our shortsightedness in not providing the institute with a fund which will be sufficient to permit it to look ahead and to plan for, let us say, five years.

Last night the minister mentioned a three-year plan. He mentioned it only in respect of paying over the money from the King George V fund to the institute. But I am suggesting there must be continuity to the extent of a five-year plan, if the national cancer institute is to survive, and if it is to be useful to the people of Canada. The fact of the matter is that the government cannot afford to let the institute only flutter along in 1947. Any laboratory, any medical college, any research bureau permitted to take part in this work should be placed in a position to lay down a comprehensive plan so that they can tell young scientists who engage in this work that there is some continuity of employment for them.

Let us assume that the minimum sum required in 1947 or in any future year by the institute for research purposes will be approximately $250,000. That would be $100,000 more during the next three years than the institute can obtain from the King George V silver jubilee fund.

Again I ask the question: where is this additional money to come from? It must not be assumed that the provinces have not done a great deal of work in relation to cancer research. The fact is that they have been greatly alive to the problem, and have been busy at work. In this connection I should like for a moment to refer to the record of the various provinces with respect to cancer research and treatment.

In British Columbia the annual deficit of the British Columbia cancer institute is made up by the province, in addition to supplying certain treatment facilities. Alberta supplies all clinical, diagnostic and treatment facilities, with the exception of the cost of hospitalization, medicine and transfusion. Manitoba supplies treatment and pathology facilities. Saskatchewan provides complete free treatment for cancer, including X-rays, radium, surgery and hospital costs, under a specialized clinic. Ontario has contributed a grant of several hundreds of thousands of dollars toward the Ontario cancer treatment and research foundation. The Quebec government has made sizable grants for the purchase of radium, and for treatment and research. The other provinces have all assisted in a lesser degree.

I say: Let the provinces look after diagnosis, treatment and radium, and let the rest of the work in respect of finding a cure and a remedy for cancer be looked after by the dominion government, to the extent of whatever amount may be needed by the institute.

The point is that cancer research is a national problem. We cannot permit cancer research in Canada to be sporadic. It must be directed with intelligence, diligence and forcefulness. That, of course, is the express purpose of the formation of the national cancer institute.

I have read carefully the speech made last night by the minister, and I find nothing in it that promises anything more than real interest and attention. The closest the minister comes to extending any help from his department appears at page 4011 of Hansard, where he says:

> Whatever assistance comes from the dominion or provincial government—and I am not now making any statement with regard to contributions; that I will do at the proper time—it will be recognized, I am sure that whatever assistance is given a large sum of money will be needed over the period, and there will be large sums needed if the research projects contemplated by the institute are to be undertaken.

There is nothing anywhere in the minister's speech—and I am sure he will pardon my saying this—which says directly that the department will assume any responsibility in respect of this work. Probably he will have some answer for me on this point, but I am pointing out to him that, carefully as I have gone through his remarks, I cannot find anywhere any suggestion that the government will supplement the funds of the national cancer institute.

I fail to see where the Department of National Health and Welfare is putting any effort into this matter of cancer research. The record does not show it. I am not making any attack on the minister. As a matter of fact he has been in the department for only about six months. I am simply tidying up the record in that particular. I am asking, "Where do we go from here, with respect to the funds which will be needed to carry on the work of the national cancer institute?" The $500,000 was contributed to the King George V silver jubilee fund by the people of Canada. Unless the government is prepared to give the Department of National Health and Welfare a substantial amount in this year's estimates, over and above the jubilee fund donation, to take care of research under the national cancer institute, then the federal government had better get out of the field of cancer research. After all, as the minister has pointed out, this is a national problem. We should have some understanding from the minister or from the cabinet to assure us that there will be an appropriation sufficient for these research requirements of 1947. The minister—and I say this in all kindness—has taken a considerable amount of kudos for the setting up of the national cancer institute. I think he is entitled to that, having regard to the fact that he brought together the various interests which brought the national cancer institute into being. He has made some laudatory remarks with respect to his department and the interest they are taking, but I say in all kindness that there is nothing here which says directly that the government is going to take a real hand in connection with providing further funds to see that the work of the national cancer institute is carried on. In that regard I should like to tell a little story. It is about the headmaster of a college who was addressing his boys as they were graduating from college. He said, "As you go out into the world you will find two classes of people, those who do the work and those who take the credit. I would advise you to get into the first class because there's less competition."

I say to the minister that we on this side of the house are prepared to get behind him. We think this work is just as necessary as he said it was last night. We do not think the national cancer institute can do the work it is intended to do of coordinating all efforts in research in the Dominion of Canada unless further funds are provided, so that from 1947 onward it can look after the applications which I understand are being made upon it by institutions and medical colleges throughout Canada for the necessary funds for purposes of research. If the minister asks for supplementary moneys for this year and supplementary years I think he will get it. It is not a matter that should be dealt with from year to year. I do not know how you go about the matter in this house; I do not know how you arrange to vote moneys for more than one year, but I think these particular funds must be provided for over a period of years, otherwise there will not be sufficient money to enable the institute to step forward and carry on a complete and comprehensive work. The minister fathered this baby; he will have to feed it or it will starve to death.

There is another matter in the health estimates on which I should like to speak for a few moments, and I refer to health insurance study. On going through the estimates, I find that apparently there is not a full-time director of health insurance studies. There seems to be a gap there and, after all, this is one of the important things which fits in with the government's social security plans. Further, I note that the vote for health insurance studies this year is down by something over $15,000. That is not a good sign, having regard to the fact that we expect this government to bring in some plan in respect to health insurance.

Mr. MARTIN: You do not always measure a contribution by the amount of money.

Mr. TIMMINS: Probably the minister will have something to say on that, but it seems to me that there is a gap there which ought to be filled in. I am reminded of the paragraph in the speech from the throne which had this to say:

> Once suitable financial relationships have been arrived at with the provinces, my ministers have undertaken to seek, in a general conference or otherwise, to work out satisfactory arrangements with the provinces in regard to public investment and social security measures.

I take it that this matter of health insurance would certainly come in under social security measures. It is one matter which should be dealt with at the earliest possible moment.

The minister has been expansive with respect to this matter of national health. I have referred to this before, but speaking at Hawkesbury on April 23 last he had this to say when dealing with social security legislation in Canada:

> Hawkesbury as a thriving industrial centre has a vital interest in the social security plans of the Liberal government. If they are carried out, as we hope they will be, these plans will bring to the families of this community a greater degree of security and a greater chance of happiness and well being than they have ever had before.

As I pointed out, so far as health insurance is concerned we do not seem to have made any start whatsoever in the matter. In other parts of the country, health insurance has already been started. The Ontario medical association has adopted a programme of health insurance which it is trying to bring into being. It is a prepaid medical care plan with no compulsion on the doctor or the patient; they are both to have freedom of choice. There will be small monthly payments and the plan will be for the whole family. Complete medical care will be provided, including attention by specialists. There will be no conflict with the associated medical services plan which has been in existence for ten years.

Other plans are being brought into being and great credit should be given to the pioneers in this field. The fact of the matter is that too many plans are being brought into operation and it is about time that they were coordinated into one big plan. It seems to me that the first thing that should be done is to complete these studies which apparently have been under way for some time but which now seem to be on the toboggan slide.

Some years ago I waded through all the reports of the social security committee for some considerable time and I read the dissertations of that splendid medical adviser that the department had, Doctor Heagerty. However, the report of that committee seems to have been shelved. In the meantime there are insurance company plans for health and sickness insurance which have been in existence for quite some time. I must say—and I have said this on many occasions—that I am not very much impressed by these plans. I do not think the public are getting the service warranted by the money which they put into quite a number of these plans. It seems to me that the disability which occurs is the thing that is left out of the policy.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): You cannot say that.

Mr. TIMMINS: I have had some unfortunate experiences with respect to that. I am afraid that if anyone differs with me, he will have to speak on the matter. I understand that the civil service here has a plan. That is all very well and I agree with it, but I think the time has come when these plans should be coordinated. There are other factors which go to the root of this whole problem, but the fact is that we should have some plan before us. It is not enough that some business firms in their benevolence arrange proper health protection and sickness insurance for their employees when other firms cannot afford to do the same for their employees.

We all know—and the minister has spoken about this himself—of the sad fact that we are short of hospital beds in every province. A return which the minister made the other day indicates that we are short some 27,000 hospital beds throughout the Dominion of Canada. That is where a start with respect to health insurance has to be made. We have to provide hospital accommodation sufficient to look after the people who are sick if any real progress is to be made in overcoming this problem. In the United States they have already started on a plan. Congress has passed an act appropriating $3,000,000 for a hospital survey of the whole United States to find out where beds are needed and in what quantity, and another $75,000,000 has been appropriated for the purpose of building hospitals allocated to various states.

In Ontario a start has also been made. The government of Premier Drew has agreed to pay $1,000 per bed to help various hospitals provide the accommodation that is needed, and I can say from experience that that programme is already bearing fruit. In Toronto, having regard to the donations received from the city and having regard to the donations received from the province, we have had expansions made in a number of hospitals. The Queen Elizabeth hospital is completing a large extension. The same is true of St. Joseph hospital. The Wellesley hospital has been engaged for the last six months on building and is now completing a large extension. The Mount Sinai hospital has bought a site and is also making a start in providing further accommodation. It seems to me that other governments, other agencies, other countries have stepped ahead of us, and I am saying to the minister that he is a little behind public opinion in respect to health insurance and hospitalization.

There is one other matter I should like to touch on and that is a national health programme. Page 23 of the 1946 report of the Department of National Health and Welfare deals with health insurance and a comprehensive national health programme. But on examining the return which was made on May 7 last for the hon. member for Mackenzie, it would appear that the amount which has been spent on planning and organization for a national health programme is very small indeed, something under $2,500, which is not very much over a period of four years. I would say to the minister and his department that we have been looking for some leadership with respect to these various matters of health insurance and a national health programme and we hoped that such leadership would be reflected in these estimates.

May I close with this summary? First of all there does not appear to be any full time director of health insurance studies. Second, practically nothing has been spent for the last four years in planning and organizing a national health programme. Third, no constructive steps have been taken with respect of health insurance. Fourth, no offer has been made by the dominion to the provinces to implement a national health programme.

There is one other point I should mention. In the return that was made on May 7 last the minister was asked what correspondence had passed, or what offers had been made by the dominion to the various provinces which had concluded tax agreements, to implement any national health programme, and his answer was that no offers to the provinces which had concluded tax agreements had been made to implement any part of the national health programme outlined to the provinces in the 1945 dominion-provincial conference. And so I add that matter to the things which have been left undone.

All the provinces have not made tax agreements with the dominion. Two of the provinces are still without tax agreements. But to my mind that does not limit the responsibility of the minister. I submit that a start should be made in respect of these matters I have mentioned, and I am pointing out to him that with regard to the five items I have mentioned specifically, no start has yet been made.

Mrs. STRUM: I wish to congratulate the minister on calling together the people who are best equipped to deal with cancer and to assure him that I and the group I represent will give him every support in his fight against this dread disease.

There are some other aspects of health that I want to mention at this time, and I do not wish to repeat the arguments put forward so well by the hon. member for Lanark and the hon. member for Parkdale. I now desire to draw to the attention of the house that Canada suffers dreadful and unnecessary losses yearly because we fail to take care of the mothers and the babies of this country.

During the years of the war our total casualties for the army, navy and air force amounted to 41,000. During the same period in Canada we lost 130,000 babies, or more than three times the number of our war casualties, due to stillbirth or diseases peculiar to the first year of life.

More staggering still is this figure. Since 1926 we have lost well over 350,000 babies during their first year of life, and nearly 21,000 mothers have died in childbirth alone. That would be the equivalent of a city with the combined population of Halifax, Windsor and Ottawa. Were we to see all these people whose lives were thus lost in one place, the number would be equal to the population of Halifax, plus Windsor, plus Ottawa. That is the extent of this loss of human life.

The Department of Health and Welfare has this to say, that our infant deaths, plus our stillbirth losses, will equal the loss of life from all other causes during the next forty-eight years in the entire population. That is, if all the deaths from all causes in the first forty-eight years for the entire population were put together they would not equal this dreadful and unnecessary loss of life in this one category up to one year of life. That indicates where we can make our greatest gain in population. It also indicates that we have not met the needs of our mothers and children.

I want to draw the attention of the house for a few moments to some figures compiled by the Health Study Bureau of Toronto, in which it points out the facts brought out in the Ebbs survey. Many members will be familiar with the survey conducted in Toronto by Doctor Ebbs and with its results. This simple experiment which cost only $25 for a period of from four to five months gave to expectant mothers supplementary items of diet, simple things like milk, eggs, oranges, tomato juice, wheat germ and vitamin D. In this test group the results were striking indeed. The mothers on poor diets who did not receive this supplementary diet had a much higher percentage of loss of life to mother and child. For the same group the loss of life during the six months in the post-natal period is very much higher too. This and other experiments carried on in other parts of the world indicate that our health's greatest need is to pay more attention to nutrition, and in that field we must consider two aspects. We must see that families throughout the country have sufficient income to buy such simple commodities as milk, cheese, eggs, butter, which should be plentiful on every table. The family income is the basis of purchasing. Then we must educate mothers as to the appropriate diet and the need for her own nutrition.

Another thing that came out in these surveys was that in every family where a check was made, in that household the practice was for the mother to feed the father of the family first, perhaps because he is the bread-winner and the family income depends upon him, and after the father's well-being is considered the children came next, the mother being the last consideration when the family meal was put on the table. This can be serious where there is a large family, and it points to the need of taking care of the mother, not only through family allowances, but through milk subsidies and by means of assistance in the way of income tax exemptions.

I wish to speak for a moment about something that is getting a great deal of attention these days. The minister mentioned it last night. I refer to the booklet put out by Lord Horder, "Rheumatism. A Plan for National Action". I was delighted to get hold of this book because it sheds the first ray of hope on an otherwise hopeless picture, and it gives an encouraging report on what can be done. For the benefit of hon. members who may not have had a chance to see it, I would indicate what a mass survey has revealed about the extent of this disease.

In the state of Massachusetts a house-to-house canvass was carried out, and they found that there were more cases of chronic rheumatism today than of heart disease, tuberculosis and cancer combined. That gives us an idea of how widespread this dreadful malady is. In Great Britain, where the London county council has done some valuable work, we find the extent to which young people suffer and to which students are afflicted with rheumatic diseases. In 1936, of the total of prolonged school absences, 26·7 per cent or more than one-quarter were due to rheumatic disease. This is by far the greatest cause of damage in young lives. The percentage due to tubercular disease was 6·8, and they point out that there are at least 200,000 child sufferers from rheumatism in the United Kingdom.

We should know that even in the present state of incomplete knowledge of this disease, this report tells us that many persons can be cured and helped. I quote from page 11:

> Yet it must be insisted that, even in the present state of incomplete knowledge, there is available a range of efficacious treatments, sometimes, happily, obtaining a complete cure, and, with few exceptions, bringing alleviation of pain and of the degree of disablement. Indeed, it may be said that, if all cases of rheumatic disease were diagnosed in their early stages and promptly submitted to the treatments which present skill can suggest, there would be a prompt and great reduction in the number of lives wrecked by its ravages.

It goes on to suggest what we might adopt as a national objective. I quote from page 32:

The ideal is that every medical practitioner should have sufficient knowledge to detect, or at least to suspect (and, following suspicion, to seek further advice) the first symptoms of rheumatic disease. Like all other ideals, it is humanly speaking impossible of complete attainment; but it must be pursued steadily. It is most urgent in the field of juvenile rheumatism, and among those practitioners entrusted with the care of school children.

It goes on to say that we should have, in addition to a high level of training for the general practitioner, to enable him to detect, and suspect and bring cases to the attention of specialists, specialist centres which shall include not only research but also facilities for teaching. It works out in detail what might be expected of these centres.

Another thing that this report points out, and I think we should notice it and act upon it, is this:

It must be repeated that much of this sacrifice of human well-being is avoidable; there is no refuge in the excuse that since medical knowledge of causes and of the most efficacious treatments is incomplete, nothing can be done. In the majority of cases a great deal can be done. Even if there were no hope of gaining further knowledge by research—which emphatically is not the case—yet the national application of present methods of cure and alleviation would lift much of the burden of rheumatic disease from the community.

This report suggests that in Great Britain they should embark on a seven-year plan. They point out that if attention were given this problem seriously over a period of seven years great things could be accomplished in the field of research and great strides could be taken toward conquering the ravages, on a mass scale, of this dreadful disease. I suggest to the minister that he do the thing suggested last night—proceed without delay to call a conference on rheumatism and arthritis.

Mr. MARTIN: As a result of a consultation which one of my officials has had with Lord Horder and Doctor Wallace Graham of Toronto, the steps I referred to last night have been initiated.

Mrs. STRUM: I am happy to hear it.

I wish now to say a few words about cancer, and I do not want to repeat the arguments put forward so well by hon. members in this debate. What the Department of National Health and Welfare has done in this regard is valuable; I mean putting out material warning us that cancer is a killer. This pamphlet warns us that one in every eight persons will die of cancer, and that is enough to scare the living daylights out of everyone who reads it. The only trouble is, it does not indicate what one must do to find the money to pay the cost of treatment. There are many good publications put out Here is another one put out by the National Cancer Institute of Canada which gives a graphic description of cancer, its characteristics, cancer tissue and so on.

Mr. MARTIN: That is from Life magazine, and distributed by the cancer institute.

Mrs. STRUM: It is a supplement, yes. It points out one of the chief causes of fear and one of the chief reasons for delayed treatment. I quote:

Cancer is a chronic disease economically as well as medically. Over the twelve-to-eighteen-month course of treatment, out-of-pocket expenses climb above $1,000, a figure that puts easily two-thirds of the families of the nation, who live on $3,000 a year or less, in the class of medical indigents. The facilities and personnel required to treat cancer are inaccessible, in any case, to the vast majority of U.S. citizens. The 300 approved cancer-treatment clinics are far less than enough to take care of the estimated 300,000 new cases of cancer that turn up every year.

This indicates that we need research. We must have research, and we hope that steps will be taken to coordinate the work of the researchers and help to finance their programme. But in addition to that we must have treatment centres; we must have hospitalization. We must make provision for surgery. There must be provision to pay for the cost of radium, deep-ray and any of the new treatments that come up.

This brings me to the figures the department has given me in answer to my inquiry about the loss of life from cancer during recent years. I find that the cancer casualties during the war period were 95,627 as compared with 41,000 casualties in the theatre of war. So that actually here in Canada our losses were twice as heavy from the killer cancer as they were in the shooting war where our men were engaged in actual physical combat. That indicates the magnitude of this problem. Here is what we as a nation were spending on cancer through our appropriations for the national research council. In those years from 1939 to 1945 we spent only $4,364.50. According to the figures I gave a moment ago, it would cost at least $1,000 apiece to treat those cases, so that we should have been spending a great deal more than that. Had we spent $1,000 each on those cases it would have cost $95,672,000. Of course we do not know how many could have been saved. In the course of treatment we shall uncover better and newer methods of treatment and, finally, through a combination of clinical and research effort, I hope we shall get this disease under control.

In closing, I merely wish to remind the minister of the proposals of the government of Canada in their brief to the dominion-provincial conference on reconstruction.

Mr. MARTIN: They are ever in my mind.

Mrs. STRUM: Here I think the government did an excellent piece of work. Quoting from page 30, I notice it says:

In May, 1944—

And we should remember that this was before the last election.

—a conference was held at Ottawa which was attended by representatives of all the provinces.

And so on. Farther down it says:

Since the meeting in 1944, health insurance has been further considered by the federal government in the light of the views expressed by the provinces . . .

That is the part that I found interesting. This was the last session of parliament before the election of 1945.

. . . In the speeches from the throne which began the session in January, 1944, and which closed the session in January, 1945, the federal government declared again its desire to bring in a nation-wide system of health insurance as soon as suitable arrangements could be made with the provinces. It was stated that this would be one of the subjects to be brought up at the dominion-provincial conference to be held as soon as possible following the general election.

Then it sets out the various aspects of the scheme for health insurance. I would plead with the government to do for health what they have done in the field of taxation, and to permit the provinces individually to take advantage of health schemes and to work out on the basis of individual agreements steps whereby they can adequately finance health programmes. The report so well sets out the proposals covering the various aspects of the steps by which this could take place. This indicates that the preliminary work has been done. The Marsh report and these reports indicate that we do not need to go on spending money in finding out what to do. We know what to do. These terrible diseases which cause so much suffering and such great loss of life indicate that you must have an overall, blanket scheme of health insurance so that people may have periodic examinations to detect incipient arthritis, to detect the first symptoms of cancer, to give help to the pregnant mother when she needs it most, to care for the pre-school child, to take care of the old people. Until we do that we shall have this terrible and unnecessary loss of life, and we shall be tearing our hair about the sparse population, and asking where we shall get immigration and how we shall populate this country. Yet we lost in cancer deaths alone, twice as many people as we lost in the war, and we lost more than thrice as many babies. Every day we suffer the loss of broken homes through the unnecessary deaths of young mothers. I would urge the government not to wait until Ontario and Quebec come in, not to wait for another dominion-provincial conference, but to permit the provinces separately to save the lives of their people; because, after all, it is the provinces that have jurisdiction and responsibility in the field of health.

Mr. FLEMING: Any suggestion in connection with the revision of the procedure of the house must always take account of the necessity of finding some means of shortening the time spent in the house without the sacrifice of essential discussion. In what I have to say tonight I hope to put forward a proposal which, far from sacrificing any of the time devoted to this important subject of health and welfare, may actually provide more time and more opportunity for getting to the roots of some of these questions and at the same time help to speed up the procedure of the house.

Here we are dealing with an important department, a department charged with the administration of two subjects of vast importance to the people of Canada, namely, health and welfare. Either one of those is of vital importance. The combination of the two of them in the one department marks it as one of the most important departments of government. It is, as the committee knows, the second largest spender among the government departments. Only the Department of Finance, through the payment of interest on government obligations. actually disburses more money and calls for larger amounts in its estimates than does this department. It seems to me that the test which must be applied by the committee in approaching the estimates of this department is this: Is enough money provided to do what is required to be done and is the country receiving a fair dollar's worth in value for each dollar expended?

There is an obligation on this committee in connection with these estimates which at the present time I say we are not equipped adequately to discharge. In the annual report of the auditor general attached to the public accounts for the year ended March 31, 1946, you will find this sentence at page 17:

Parliament's control over public money is, to a degree, dependent on the efficiency employed in calculating estimates.

We are reminded from time to time that the ultimate responsibility for the expenditure of money rests on parliament. At the present time the procedure provided for carrying out that task is not one that permits parliament to discharge that duty efficiently or adequately. We are provided with estimates which give us, by way of information, simply the amount provided by parliament the previous year by way of estimated expenditure. We are not given the actual expenditure. There is not one member of this house who, if he were conducting the affairs of a business, would undertake to prepare his budget of expenditure for the succeeding year without having before him the actual expenditure of the preceding year; or if he is preparing his budget of expenditure before the end of the year, he would at least have the actual expenditure up to the date of making his estimates and the estimated expenditure for the remainder of the year. Parliament is not given to that.

Mr. MARTIN: All the hon. gentleman has to do is ask the question.

Mr. FLEMING: I am coming to that. I have been talking up to the moment about the form of the estimates themselves, which is not adequate to permit parliament to do its duty in respect of a review of the estimates under the present procedure. If we are not to be given in the book of estimates more information about actual expenditure, then a different procedure must be provided for the review of estimates.

We derive little or no help from the actual report of the department. Here we are in June, 1947, asked to vote sums of money for this department in excess of $308,000,000; actually, including the items for demobilization and reconversion, we are being asked to provide about $320,000,000, which is a tidy sum. Yet the last report we have—and this is no greater criticism of this department than of any other department of government—on the operations of this department is for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1946, a year which ended sixteen and a half months ago. No business could be operated by way of budgeting, on the colossal scale on which parliament is being asked to budget, with stale information like that.

What is the method by which parliament can seek to do its duty in respect of estimates, in the face of the handicaps I have mentioned? It is obvious that we must devise a different procedure. What I am saying in regard to the estimates of this department will apply equally, I think, to the estimates of almost every other department, with one exception, External Affairs. What I say is needed, both for the purpose of reviewing the estimates of this important department and for the review of other matters in relation to health and welfare in Canada, is a standing committee of this house. This is not the first time I have put this proposal forward. I have had a motion to this effect on the order paper, but like many other private members' resolutions it will probably be reached about 1960.

Mr. MACKENZIE: You won't be here.

Mr. FLEMING: I do not doubt that a good many hon. members opposite won't be here then, but I think those in this quarter of the house will have overflowed to the other side, and will be occupying the government benches for a long period. As I say, what is badly needed in our structure at the present time is a standing committee which will have jurisdiction to review matters pertaining to health, welfare, social security and housing. Definitely, housing ought to be included within the scope of that committee. We badly need a committee that can review housing and inquire into conditions and remedies; and that is the kind of committee which should be set up for this purpose. At the present time, we have what is called the voluntary health committee of both houses. It does good work within a limited sphere; I am not decrying the useful work done by that committee, but it is not an official body. It is not a standing committee of the house, and it cannot undertake the tasks which I submit such a committee ought to undertake.

It is no answer to say that we have many other committees of this house. I am tired of hearing that answer given by those on the government benches. We have a number of committees, but that is no answer to the fact that there is great need for a committee of this kind. I think we might very well abolish some of these other committees and make way for one that will be alive and will do needed work in these fields. Some of the committees we have at the present time just do not meet. Some of them have not met since this parliament opened. Is it not about time that the organization of this house was recast and some attempt made to modernize the procedure of this house and our committee structure? What would happen if there were such a committee, in a position to review the estimates of this important department? We would have an opportunity to get to the meat of some of these questions that it is almost impossible to deal with in a committee as large as the committee of the whole house. To go into detail on some of these questions which should be gone into by a parliament that undertakes to say it is doing its duty in respect to health and welfare would provoke from all sides complaints about taking up too much time. I will readily agree that to study a great many of these questions in the detail in which they should be studied. if done in this parliament, would involve a wastage of man-power. So in that respect a standing committee of the house would save a great deal of time; and I believe we should devise means to economize the time of the house and direct the energies of hon. members to better advantage than can be done in committee of the whole.

Moreover, there is a great deal of information we have no opportunity to dig into in this house. It would be beneficial if, through such a committee, we could devise a procedure which would enable us to bring officials of the department before the committee. I am not at all deprecating the efforts of the minister, this minister or any other; but it would enable us to obtain the thoughts and ideas of the senior officials, who in the case of this department are very important officials indeed. We could be given their advice and recommendations in regard to policy, instead of having all our questions answered at second hand by a minister. What happens? Somebody asks a question that involves detailed information. It is necessary for the officials sitting on the floor of the house to try to brief the minister in whispered conversations in a matter of seconds, so that he can answer these questions.

Mr. MARTIN: You have not tested me yet.

Mr. FLEMING: It is only because of my fondness for the minister that I have refrained from testing him. I am very fond of the minister, and I have to be careful of him.

Mr. MARTIN: The respect and love is mutual.

Mr. FLEMING: Thank you; I am very glad to have that assurance.

There is another aspect to this matter. Parliament does not provide an opportunity at the present time for doing justice to some valuable proposals that are made from time to time both in the house and outside the house with reference to measures of health and welfare and social security. What happens? On many occasions organized labour has brought forward most valuable suggestions, but what becomes of them? They are made to a minister and go into the files of his department. When does parliament hear about them? Parliament does not hear about them until at long last the government decides to move an inch in some direction. There is no opportunity of breaking down the distressing inertia of this government unless we have a chance, through a committee organization, to sift these proposals through and obtain views upon them on the part of senior, competent officials of the departments. At the present time, we are not doing justice to proposals of that kind. And there is support for this idea on the government benches. Let a free expression be given on the other side of the house in this connection, and I venture to say that under those circumstances we would be setting up such a committee in very short order; the need for it has been so abundantly proven.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we have had many useful suggestions in the course of this debate, and I have not the slightest intention of reviewing the ground which has already been so well covered. Mention has been made of the shortage of hospitals. That shortage is serious. There are other shortages that could be coupled with it, and one is the shortage of nurses. The Minister of Veterans Affairs, in a press release which appears as a Canadian Press dispatch under date of April 29, had this to say about the large number of nurses who had been serving as such in the armed forces during the war:

> A survey of former nursing sisters in the armed forces shows that about 44·5 per cent still are employed as nurses, Veterans Minister Mackenzie announced today.
> The survey was based on replies from 1,571 of the 4,400 who served in the armed forces during the second great war, and showed that 27·9 per cent are busy with home duties, 17·9 per cent taking DVA rehabilitation training, 3 per cent unemployed, 2·4 per cent in poor health, 2·2 per cent awaiting suitable employment and 2·1 per cent employed in an occupation other than nursing.

We are faced with a serious shortage of nurses in this country. This is also borne out by the return which was referred to on an earlier occasion recently brought down by the minister, in which it was indicated that the latest estimate of the present shortage of nurses in this country is 8,700. We wish to hear some concrete proposals for encouraging more young women to train as nurses. We wish to hear some concrete proposals for inducing more of these trained nurses to remain in their profession. A great disservice was done in that respect last year when the government introduced a measure which had the effect of increasing the taxes of married men who are the husbands of nurses who otherwise would be prepared to continue in the nursing profession. Many married nurses were affected by this increase in the tax which arises from the reduction of exemption in the salaries of married men.

This, unfortunately, is the sort of problem in which parliament under its present organization, is almost powerless to assist the minister. I think parliament will welcome an opportunity to assist the minister. Hon. members who have spoken in the debate so far have expressed the desire to be of assistance. I believe there are no members in the house—I would be sorry to think there are any—who would wish to see these important social questions such as health, welfare and social security made the subjects of political, partisan debate. Those are subjects on which all parties ought to be united in their effort to bring about better conditions in this country. But at the present time, with the kind of organization we have in the house, members are prevented from making their full contribution to the solution of these problems.

An hon. MEMBER: What are you doing about it?

Mr. FLEMING: I am doing as much as I can, within the present organization of the house. And I should hope that, like many other members in the house, I would be able to make a better contribution if we had a method of proceeding with more detailed information and more detailed study than is possible at the present time.

There is one aspect of this question of maternal mortality and child mortality which, I think, is deserving of mention. We are all greatly concerned about immigration; it is a matter of vast importance. I believe we are prepared to see some substantial sums spent on immigration, for the seeking of immigrants of the right type, healthy immigrants both in mind and in body. Here we are faced with a situation where, annually, we see 15,000 children die under the age of one year in Canada, and we see also a maternal mortality rate which fills us all with concern. We are glad to note the progress that has been made in recent years in the matter of maternal mortality, through the reduction of the rate over a period of time. But I believe we are all agreed that much more should be done than has been done, because that rate is far too high for this country.

Mr. MARTIN: Has my hon. friend the latest table?

Mr. FLEMING: I have the latest table which appears in the report.

Mr. MARTIN: I just wished to make sure; I am trying to be helpful.

Mr. FLEMING: If this country is prepared to spend a substantial sum of money to obtain immigrants, then I think that equally we want to see that more young Canadians at birth are given an opportunity for life and health. Money can just as wisely be spent in that way. I am not minimizing the importance of immigration; far from it. Let us have the right type of immigrants. But here is an instance where we are losing a substantial number of infant Canadians every year, and something must be done now to improve that situation.

My time has almost expired, and I shall conclude with only one further observation. Of course there are limitations on the powers given under our constitution to the federal government in the matter of health. As we all know, the administration of health is in the hands of the provinces, and it should remain there. Health measures must be administered by the provinces. All these social measures must be administered by those governments which are closest to the people, and that means a substantial measure of administration through municipal governments.

But there are several respects in which the dominion Department of National Health and Welfare can do much in the field of health. The first is in the matter of research. The minister has given a great deal of praise to research workers in respect of cancer. He had less to say about arthritis. I would say there are no limitations on the power of the dominion government to support research work. There must be far more done in the matter of research in Canada, and in connection with health measures, than we have begun to do or have even begun to think of doing up to the present time. Cancer is one example, perhaps the most striking, because of its alarming death rate. Each of us has lost a near relative as a result of this terrible scourge. There is, too, the scourge of arthritis: 600,000 people in Canada are suffering from it at the present time. As the minister has said, there are difficulties in the way of persevering with research in the matter of arthritis; but we must overcome those difficulties. It is a scourge which we cannot meet with folded hands.

There is a great deal more to be done by the dominion in the matter of cooperation with the provinces. We cannot afford in this country to wait indefinitely for the outcome of some trial of strength between the dominion and the provinces. We must work within the constitution for the uniting of forces of the dominion and the provinces in a proper and comprehensive health scheme for this country.

I hope it is not going to be the kind of scheme which will attempt to make the doctors civil servants, and simply put them on salaries. We do not want state medicine. But we do want an adequate and comprehensive scheme of health insurance in Canada. It can be brought about by a united effort between the dominion and the provinces. I urge again that this matter is far too important to await the outcome of a trial of strength between dominion and provincial governments.

Now—and this is my concluding word—we shall have more to say when we come to the detailed items of the department concerning expenditures on publicity. We shall wish to know from the minister that the money asked to be voted for what is now called educational and informational publicity—a much more euphonious title than the former one—is being well spent. I come back to the test I applied in the beginning: In this department as in all others—but certainly no less in this department, because of the vital importance of the subjects of health and welfare—we must see to it as a parliament, because the responsibility is shared by us with the government, that the taxpayer receives a fair dollar's value for every dollar spent.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

APPENDIX "A"

ADDRESS

OF

HARRY S. TRUMAN

President of the United States of America

TO

MEMBERS OF THE SENATE AND OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS AND THE GENERAL PUBLIC

IN THE

HOUSE OF COMMONS CHAMBER, OTTAWA

ON

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 11, 1947

The President was welcomed by the Right Honourable W. L. Mackenzie King, Prime Minister of Canada, and thanked by the Honourable James H. King, Speaker of the Senate, and the Honourable Gaspard Fauteux, Speaker of the House of Commons.

11.45 a.m.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. President, members of the Parliament of Canada: We are indeed greatly honoured in having as our country's guest today the President of the United States of America. Your visit, Mr. President, is a welcome expression of friendship and good will, both personal and national. On behalf of the members of Canada's parliament here assembled, and of all whom we represent, I extend to you the warmest of welcomes.

In paying this neighbourly visit to our capital, we are delighted that you are accompanied by Mrs. Truman and Miss Truman. We are pleased that you have found it possible to make your stay of sufficient length to enable you to see something of Ottawa and its surroundings, and to give members of parliament and others the privilege of meeting you and Mrs. Truman, and your talented daughter. We know how greatly His Excellency the Governor General and Lady Alexander enjoyed their recent visit to Washington, and how very much they have been looking forward to having Mrs. Truman, Miss Truman and yourself as their guests at Rideau Hall. Nothing could be more symbolic of the happy relations between our two peoples than family visits between the White House in Washington and Government House in Ottawa.

I should like to add, Mr. President, how great a pleasure it is to me personally to be renewing today, in my own country, the deeply valued friendship formed with yourself on my visits to the United States from time to time. I shall always recall your wish, so generously expressed, almost immediately upon your assumption of office, that the relations between our two countries might continue to be as friendly as they had been at all times under President Roosevelt, and that you and I might come to share a personal friendship correspondingly close. You know how warmly both these wishes were and are reciprocated.

We are especially indebted to you, Mr. President, for your courtesy in consenting to speak to the members of our parliament in the course of your visit. To most men in high position, an escape from the ordeal of public addresses is a not unwelcome form of relaxation. To this doctrine, I am sure you will readily subscribe. Your willingness not only to speak but to allow your address to be broadcast will be warmly appreciated in all parts of Canada, as also in the United Kingdom, the United States, and elsewhere.

Your visit, Mr. President, vividly recalls the visit to Ottawa, in August 1943, of your illustrious predecessor. It was the first visit to Canada's capital of a President of the United States. That visit was at a time of war. At that time, the allied nations were still two years away from ultimate victory. Today, we are almost equidistant from the final battles which brought an end to hostilities in Europe and in Asia.

It was on the eve of the final battles that President Roosevelt was taken from his people. We do not forget it was without a moment's warning, and at that hour of world crisis, that the mighty burdens which he had borne so long and with such great fortitude were transferred from his shoulders to yours. Before final victory was won, you were called upon to take grave and historic decisions. Since the end of the war you have been faced with the baffling tasks of reconstruction, when the grim effects of world conflict are still more apparent than the foundations of peace. We are glad to have the opportunity, which your presence here today affords, to tell you, Mr. Truman, how greatly the Canadian people have admired the manner in which, under all these circumstances, you assumed and are now bearing the tremendous responsibilities of the office of President of the United States.

May I say how greatly we all admire the qualities of humour, sincerity and courage and the capacity for friendship which you possess in such large measure, and which, if I may say so, have been particularly evident since the last congressional elections. Far be it from me to introduce any note of party politics into words of official welcome, much less to say anything that, even to appearances, might be considered interference in the domestic affairs of another country. At the same time, I think that all of us in public life would agree that to be faced with a legislature of which the majority may be disinclined to accept the government's policies is not the most comfortable position in which to find oneself as head of an administration.

Because of a considerable experience in such matters, I may perhaps be allowed, in an aside to the President, to express a personal word of sympathy and understanding. Many who are assembled in this chamber can tell you, Mr. President, that, as leader of a political party and as head of the government, there have been occasions when I too have had to face situations not wholly dissimilar. It may serve as a note of encouragement to you when I say I have yet to find that such embarrassments are necessarily a bar to many years of office.

May I conclude this word of welcome on a more serious note. You, Mr. President, have said: "If wars in the future are to be prevented, the peace-loving nations must be united in their determination to keep the peace under law. The breaking of the peace anywhere is the concern of peace-loving nations everywhere". This statement of American policy might equally be a statement of Canadian policy. In the solution of all world problems, effective co-operation between nations is a first essential. In effective co-operation, no finer example could be given to the world than that which has been developed between the United States and Canada over the years, and which was especially evident during the years of war.

The Ogdensburg agreement and the Hyde Park declaration are the two great landmarks of our wartime co-operation. During the war these agreements were the basis of joint action in defence, in production, and in finance. Over and over again we have heard it said that co-operation, which was so effective as one of the instruments of victory in war, should be continued as one of the means of achieving and maintaining security and prosperity in a time of peace. By continuing co-operation along similar lines, Canada and the United States will not only be furthering their mutual interests, they will be strengthening the foundation of a new world order, an order based on international understanding, on mutual aid, on friendship and good will.

Mr. HARRY S. TRUMAN (President of the United States): Mr. Prime Minister, honourable members of the Senate, and members of the House of Commons of Canada: This is my first visit to Canada as President of the United States, and I am happy that it affords me the opportunity to address this meeting of the members of both houses of the Canadian Parliament. Here is a body which exemplifies the self-government and freedom of the nations of the great British Commonwealth. The history of the Commonwealth proves that it is possible for many nations to work and live in harmony for the common good.

I wish to acknowledge the many courtesies extended to me on this visit by the Governor General, Viscount Alexander, who paid me the honour of a visit in Washington a few months ago. His career as a soldier and as a statesman eminently qualifies him to follow his illustrious predecessors.

For the courtesy of appearing before you, as for other courtesies, I am sure I am largely indebted to my good friend Prime Minister Mackenzie King. I was particularly happy to be present yesterday when he was honoured in the rotunda of this Parliament Building. It was a wonderful ceremony, and a tribute which I think he richly deserved. I also appreciate the political advice he gave me this morning. I have come to value and cherish his friendship and statesmanship. As our two nations have worked together in solving the difficult problems of the post-war period, I have developed greater and greater respect for his wisdom.

Americans who come to know Canada informally, such as our tourists, as well as those whose approach is more academic, learn that Canada is a broad land—broad in mind and in spirit as well as in physical expanse. They find that the composition of your population and the evolution of your political institutions hold a lesson for the other nations of the earth. Canada has achieved internal unity and material strength, and has grown in stature in the world community, by solving problems that might have hopelessly divided and weakened a less gifted people.

Canada's eminent position today is a tribute to the patience, tolerance, and strength of character of her people, of both French and British strains. For Canada is enriched by the heritage of France as well as of Britain, and Quebec has imparted the vitality and spirit of France itself to Canada. Canada's notable achievement of national unity and progress through accommodation, moderation, and forbearance can be studied with profit by her sister nations.

Much the same qualities have been employed, with like success, in your relations with the United States. Perhaps I should say "your foreign relations with the United States." But the word "foreign" seems strangely out of place. Canada and the United States have reached the point where we no longer think of each other as "foreign" countries. We think of each other as friends, as epaceful and co-operative neighbours on a spacious and fruitful continent.

We must go back a long way, nearly a century and a half, to find a time when we were not on good terms. In the war of 1812 there was fighting across our frontier. But permanent good came of that brief campaign. It shocked Canadians and Americans into a realization that continued antagonism would be costly and perilous. The first result of that realization was the Rush-Bagot agreement in 1817, which embodied a spirit and an attitude that have permeated our relations to this day. This agreement originally was intended to limit and to regulate the naval vessels of both countries on the great lakes. It has become one of the world's most effective disarmament agreements and is the basis for our much-hailed unfortified frontier.

I speak of that period of history to make the point that the friendship that has characterized Canadian-American relations for many years did not develop spontaneously. The example of accord provided by our two countries did not come about merely through the happy circumstance of geography. It is compounded of one part proximity and nine parts good will and common sense.

We have had a number of problems, but they have all been settled by adjustment, by compromise, and by negotiations inspired by a spirit of mutual respect and a desire for justice on both sides. This is the peaceful way, the sensible way, and the fair way to settle problems, whether between two nations that are close neighbours or among many nations widely separated.

This way is open to all. We in Canada and the United States are justifiably proud of our joint record, but we claim no monopoly on the formula.

Canada and the United States will gladly share the formula, which rejects distrust and suspicion in favour of common sense, mutual respect, and equal justice, with their fellow members of the United Nations. One of the most effective contributions which our two contries can make to the cause of the United nations is the patient and diligent effort to apply on a global scale the principles and practices which we have tested with success on this continent.

Relations between Canada and the United States have emphasized the spirit of co-operation rather than the letter of protocol. The Rush-Bagot agreement was stated in less than 150 words. From time to time it has been revised by mutual agreement to meet changing conditions. It was amended as recently as last December.

The last war brought our countries into even closer collaboration. The Ogdensburg agreement of 1940 provided for the creation of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence. It was followed by the Hyde Park agreement of 1941, which enabled us to co-ordinate our economic resources with increased efficiency. Common interests, particularly after Pearl Harbor, required the creation of several joint agencies to co-ordinate our effortsn i special fields. When victory ended the necessity for these agencies, they were quietly disbanded with a minimum disturbance of the national economies of the two countries—just common sense again.

The permanent Joint Board on Defence will continue to function. I wish to emphasize, in addition to the word "permanent", the other two parts of the title. The board is joint, being composed of representatives of each country. Canada and the United States participate on the basis of equality, and the sovereignty of each is carefully respected. This was true during the gravest days of the war and it will continue to be true, in keeping with the nature of all our joint undertakings.

The board was created, and will continue to exist, for the sole purpose of assuring the most effective defence of North America. The board, as you know, has no executive powers and can only make recommendations for action. The record of the board provides another example of the truly co-operative spirit that prevails between our two countries.

The spirit of common purpose and the impressive strength which we marshalled for action on all fronts are the surest safeguard of continental security in the future.

The people of the United States fully appreciate the magnificent contribution in men and resources that Canada made to the allied war effort. United States soldiers, sailors, and airmen in the heat of battle knew their Canadian comrades as valiant and daring warriors. We look back with pride on our association as staunch allies in two wars.

Today our two nations are called upon to make great contributions to world rehabilitation. This task requires broad vision and constant effort.

I am confident that we can overcome the difficulties involved, as we overcame the greater difficulties of the war. The national genius of our peoples finds its most satisfying expression in the creation of new values in peace.

The record proves that in peaceful commerce the combined efforts of our countries can produce outstanding results. Our trade with each other is far greater than that of any other two nations on earth.

Last year the flow of trade in both directions across the border reached the record peacetime total of two and a quarter billion dollars. We imported from Canada more than twice the value of goods we received from the United Kingdom, France, China and Russia combined. United States purchases from Canada were about six times our purchases from Great Britain, nearly ten times those from China, and eleven times those from France. We sold to Canada nearly as much as we sold to Britain and France together.

Gratifying as the volume of our trade now is, it is capable of even further expansion to our mutual benefit. Some of our greatest assets are still to be developed to the maximum. I am thinking of one particularly that holds tremendous possibilities, the magnificent St. Lawrence-Great Lakes system, which we share and which we must develop together.

The St. Lawrence project stirs the imagination of men long accustomed to majestic distances and epic undertakings. The proposal for taking electric power from the river and bringing ocean shipping 2,400 miles inland, to tap the fertile heart of our continent, is economically sound and strategically important.

When this programme is carried out, the waterway that is part of our boundary will more than ever unite our two countries. It will stimulate our economies to new growth and will speed the flow of trade.

There have been times when shortsighted tariff policies on both sides threatened to raise almost insurmountable barriers. But the need to exchange goods was so imperative that trade flourished despite artificial obstacles. The reciprocal trade agreements of 1936 and 1939 made possible a sensible reduction of tariff rates, and paved the way to our present phenomenal trade.

Something more than commercial agreements, however, is required to explain why Canada and the United States exchange more than two billion dollars worth of goods a year. Ambassador Atherton has aptly given the reason as not "free trade", but "the trade of free men". That record flow of goods and the high standard of living it indicates, on both sides of the border, provide a practical demonstration of the benefits of the democratic way of life and a free economy.

The benefits of our democratic governments and free economies operating side by side have spread beyond our countries to the advantage of the whole world. Both nations expanded their productivity enormously during the war and both escaped the physical damage that afflicted other countries. As a result, Canada and the United States emerged from the war as the only major sources of the industrial products and the food upon which much of the world depends for survival.

Canada has responded as nobly to the challenge of peace as she did to that of the war. Your wheat has fed millions who otherwise would have starved. Your loan has strengthened Britain in her valiant battle for recovery.

The United States is particularly gratified to find Canada at our side in the effort to develop the international Trade Organization. We attach great importance to this undertaking, because we believe it will provide the key to the welfare and prosperity of the world in the years immediately ahead.

In sponsoring the International Trade Organization, the United States, with the co-operation of Canada and other countries, is making a determined effort to see that the inevitable adjustments in world trade as a result of the war will result in an expanding volume of business for all nations.

Our goal is a vast expansion of agriculture and industry throughout the world, with freer access to raw materials and markets for all nations, and a wider distribution of the products of the earth's fields and factories among all peoples. Our hope is to multiply the fruitfulness of the earth and to diffuse its benefits among all mankind.

[Mr. Truman.]

At this critical point in history, we of the United States are deeply conscious of our responsibilities to the world. We know that in this trying period, between a war that is over and a peace that is not yet secure, the destitute and the oppressed of the earth look chiefly to us for sustenance and support until they can again face life with self-confidence and self-reliance.

We are keenly aware that much depends upon the internal strength, the economic stability and the moral stamina of the United States. We face this challenge with determination and confidence.

Free men everywhere know that the purpose of the United States is to restore the world to health and to re-establish conditions in which the common people of the earth can work out their salvation by their own efforts.

We seek a peaceful world, a prosperous world, a free world, a world of good neighbours, living on terms of equality and mutual respect, as Canada and the United States have lived for generations.

We intend to expend our energies and to invest our substance in promoting world recovery by assisting those who are able and willing to make their maximum contribution to the same cause.

We intend to support those who are determined to govern themselves in their own way, and who honour the right of others to do likewise.

We intend to aid those who seek to live at peace with their neighbours, without coercing or being coerced, without intimidating or being intimidated.

We intend to uphold those who respect the dignity of the individual, who guarantee to him equal treatment under law, and who allow him the widest possible liberty to work out his own destiny and achieve success to the limit of his capacity.

We intend to co-operate actively and loyally with all who honestly seek, as we do, to build a better world in which mankind can live in peace and prosperity.

We count Canada in the forefront of those who share these objectives and ideals.

With such friends we face the future unafraid.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I call upon the Speaker of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Commons to express the thanks of Parliament to the President for the address which he has just delivered to us.

Hon. J. H. KING (Speaker of the Senate): Mr. President, it is my privilege, more particularly on behalf of the members of the Senate, to express the thanks of all here assembled for the inspiring and historic address which you have just delivered.

Mr. President, your speech of today illustrates what has often been said and is frequently in our minds, namely, that the people of the United States and the people of Canada enjoy, to an exceptional degree, personal friendships and social amenities in cultural and political relations.

This happy situation, as you have made clear this morning, is the result of freedom of personal contact, similarities in customs and in liberty, enjoyed by the peoples of our two countries under democratic forms of government. The comradeship-in-arms in the world's two greatest wars, wars that have taken place in the lifetime of one generation, has, as you have said, Mr. President, drawn us still more closely together.

In conclusion, let me again extend to you, Mr. President, the assurance of our pleasure in and gratitude for your visit to Canada, and for your memorable address of this morning. We pray that the Almighty will continue to give you guidance and wisdom in your great task.

Hon. GASPARD FAUTEUX (Speaker of the House of Commons): Mr. President, it is my privilege to join with the Speaker of the Senate in also thanking you in the name of the members of both houses for the address to which we have just been listening. You may be assured that the unseen audience which, we know, extends over the entire continent, will have listened with the same deep interest as your immediate audience here, and that your message will have been received by them with the same enthusiasm and approval as by those who have had the added pleasure of seeing as well as hearing you in this Commons chamber.

As you are aware, Mr. President, both English and French are official languages in Canada's Parliament. May I be permitted now, Mr. President, since the language of Shakespeare and the language of Molière are both official in Canada, to express myself in the latter, the one brought to Canada from France by your ancestors and which is still our most précious heritage.

(Translation):

On behalf of my French-speaking compatriots, I wish to assure you of our deep admiration and to express our thanks to you for having consented to come to our capital city, and for having made, in our parliament, the splendid speech we have just heard.

In the name of the Commons, who have elected me as the first commoner of the country, may I pray Almighty God to bless and inspire the President and the leaders of the mighty United States of America, and enable them to find, and apply, if I may say so, a spiritual atomic formula which, by the grace of God will ensure to the world a holy peace, with liberty, equality and fraternity.

(Text):

I should like, Mr. President, to express in the English language what I have just said in my native tongue.

On behalf of my French-speaking compatriots, I wish to assure you of our deep admiration and to express our thanks to you for having consented to come to our capital city, and for having made in our Parliament the splendid speech we have just heard.

In the name of the Commons, who have elected me as the First Commoner of the country, may I pray Almighty God to bless and inspire the President and the leaders of the mighty United States of America, and enable them to find, and apply, if I may say so, a spiritual atomic formula which by the grace of God will ensure to the world a holy peace, with liberty, equality and fraternity.

Again, Mr. President, we thank you for the memorable and inspiring address which you have delivered to us today, and which, as of historic significance, will be preserved in the official records of both houses of the Canadian Parliament.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This brings to a conclusion the proceedings of this morning. May I propose three hearty cheers for the President of the United States.

(After three cheers for the President, the gathering dispersed.)

UNVEILING OF PORTRAITS

OF

CANADA'S PRIME MINISTERS IN TWO WORLD WARS

THE LATE RIGHT HON. SIR ROBERT LAIRD BORDEN

AND

THE RIGHT HON. W. L. MACKENZIE KING

JUNE 10, 1947

In the presence of:

His Excellency the Governor General of Canada, Field Marshal the Right Honourable the Viscount Alexander of Tunis;

The President of the United States of America, Harry S. Truman.

Senator the Honourable J. H. King, Speaker of the Senate, and the Honourable Gaspard Fauteux, Speaker of the House of Commons, presided.

Also present were:

The Right Honourable W. L. Mackenzie King, Prime Minister of Canada; Right Honourable Ian A. Mackenzie, Leader of the House of Commons; Senator the Honourable Wishart McL. Robertson, Leader of the Government in the Senate; His Excellency the Honourable Ray Atherton, Ambassador of the United States of America; Fleet Admiral W. D. Leahy, Chief of Staff to the Commander in Chief of the United States Army and Navy; Senator the Honourable John T. Haig, Leader of the Opposition in the Senate; John Bracken, Leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons; Senator the Honourable C. C. Ballantyne; M. J. Coldwell, Leader of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation party; Solon E. Low, Leader of the Social Credit party; Frank O. Salisbury; Kenneth Forbes; and other members of the Senate and of the House of Commons.

At 5.30 p.m. His Excellency the Governor General of Canada and the President of the United States of America arrived in the Chambers of the Speaker of the House of Commons and proceeded to the main lobby.

God Save the King
The Star-Spangled Banner

Hon. GASPARD FAUTEUX (Speaker of the House of Commons): Mr. President, Your Excellency, guests of honour, and honourable members of the Senate and of the House of Commons: We are gathered here this afternoon to witness the unveiling of the portraits of two of Canada's most distinguished sons. In the hours of stress, when the world was in the throes of terrible wars, we were fortunate in having as prime ministers two men endowed with strong patriotism, vision and strength of character. They were, during the war of 1914-1918, the Right Honourable Sir Robert Laird Borden, and, during the recent war of 1939-1945, the Right Honourable W. L. Mackenzie King.

Before I proceed further may I say, in the name of all present, how much indebted we are and how grateful we all feel to His Excellency the Governor General, Field Marshal Lord Alexander, for honouring this occasion by his presence, and for having graciously consented to unveil the two portraits.

We are also deeply grateful to His Excellency for bringing with him his distinguished guest, the President of the United States of America, who arrived in Ottawa this afternoon on a brief visit to Canada. We are indeed delighted that Mr. Truman should, on such short notice, have been prepared to join His Excellency.

Mr. President, Your Excellency, you may both be assured that your presence within our halls of parliament on this occasion is an honour which will long be remembered by the members of both houses and indeed by all Canadians.

For a long time it has been felt that Sir Robert Borden's portrait should adorn the walls of these houses of parliament. When I had the honour to become Speaker of the House of Commons, I soon discovered that the consensus of opinion of members of both houses was that the practice of placing our Prime Ministers' portraits in the parliament buildings should be resumed. Instructions were accordingly given for the painting of a portrait of the late Sir Robert Borden. Mr. Kenneth Forbes, the well-known artist of Toronto, was commissioned for the purpose. How splendidly Mr. Forbes executed his commission you will see when the portrait of Sir Robert Borden is unveiled.

While arranging for this commission I learned of the portrait of the present Prime Minister which was painted by Mr. Frank O. Salisbury, and which had been exhibited in the Royal Academy in London. The portrait was temporarily on exhibition at our own National Gallery. Members who saw it were high in their praise of the great artist who was responsible for this splendid work of art. A general desire was expressed that the portrait should be placed in our parliament buildings.

On the 8th of December last, I took it upon myself to write the Prime Minister in the matter. Several letters were exchanged between Mr. King and myself before I was able to convince him that my request should be granted. Perhaps I may be permitted to use a privilege given to members of both houses, with unanimous consent, and given sometimes by the Speakers, to table for the press the correspondence exchanged.

May I say, in a word, that being assured that it was the wish of the Speakers, and of the leaders of all parties in both houses, that the portrait by Mr. Salisbury should be hung on the walls of these buildings at the same time as the portrait of Sir Robert Borden, Mr. King not only gave his consent to the transfer of the portrait for that purpose, but said he would be pleased to have the portrait accepted as a gift from himself to parliament.

I quite understand Mr. King's hesitation in allowing us to have his portrait for these walls while he is still a member of parliament, but I may assure him that after twenty years in the office of Prime Minister he should experience no embarrassment on that account.

Your final agreement to this step, Mr. Prime Minister, has warmed our hearts and increased your popularity in parliamentary circles. I wish to extend to you, sir, the sincere thanks of all the members of the Senate and of the House of Commons for the very generous manner in which you have acceded to our request.

The Speaker of the Senate, the Honourable J. H. King, then invited His Excellency the Governor General to unveil the portrait of Sir Robert Laird Borden. The Speaker said:

Mr. President, Your Excellency, members of the Senate and of the House of Commons: On behalf of the members of the Senate and of the House of Commons of Canada, I have the honour to invite Your Excellency to unveil the portrait of the Right Honourable Sir Robert Laird Borden, who from 1911 to 1920, a period which included the years of the first great war, 1914-18, was Prime Minister of Canada.

Hon. J. H. KING (Speaker of the Senate): Mr. President, Your Excellency: I have pleasure in presenting to you the artist, Mr. Kenneth Forbes, of Toronto, to whose talent we are indebted for the splendid portrait of Sir Robert Laird Borden.

(Mr. Forbes came forward and acknowledged applause by a bow to the assembled company.)

Hon. Senator KING: Mr. Henry Borden has telegraphed his regret at his inability to be present at this ceremony. We are very sorry that circumstances have prevented him from witnessing the unveiling of this portrait of his illustrious uncle.

The Speaker of the House of Commons, the Honourable Gaspard Fauteux, then invited His Excellency to unveil the portrait of the present Prime Minister. The Speaker said:

Mr. President, Your Excellency, members of the Senate and of the House of Commons: On behalf of the members of the Senate and of the House of Commons of Canada, I have the honour to invite Your Excellency to unveil the portrait of the Right Honourable William Lyon Mackenzie King, who today completes twenty years in the office of Prime Minister of Canada, including the years of the second great war, 1939-45.

Hon. Mr. FAUTEUX: Mr. President, Your Excellency: I have pleasure in presenting to you Mr. Frank O. Salisbury, of London England, the artist to whose talent we are indebted for the splendid portrait of our Prime Minister.

(Mr. Salisbury came forward and acknowledged applause by a bow to the assembled company.)

HIS EXCELLENCY, FIELD MARSHAL THE RIGHT HON. THE VISCOUNT ALEXANDER OF TUNIS (Governor General of Canada): Mr. President, Mr. Prime Minister: I feel that it is an honour, besides being a pleasure, to be here on this historic occasion and to have the privilege of unveiling these two fine portraits of two fine men.

It is particularly fitting that today has been chosen for this ceremony, since it marks our own Prime Minister's twentieth year of loyal and devoted service to king and country.

Further lustre to the occasion is added by the presence here today of the President of that great country which not only is our friend and neighbour, but was our ally in two world wars.

Of the two men we honour today, the one led us to victory in the first world war, and the other in the second. Now these noble pictures of two great Canadians, from the brush of distinguished portrait painters of world-wide reputation, find a happy and fitting home in the very heart and centre of the Canada they have both served so loyally and have loved so well.

Hon. Senator KING: Mr. President, Your Excellency, and honourable members: We have with us this afternoon one of Sir Robert Borden's oldest and closest friends, the Honourable Senator Charles C. Ballantyne. Senator Ballantyne was a member of Sir Robert Borden's cabinet from 1917 to 1920, and he is one of the senior members of the Privy Council of Canada. He was summoned to the Senate while a Conservative administration was in office, and until recently was Leader of the Opposition in the Upper House. I should like to call upon Senator Ballantyne for a few words.

Hon. Senator C. C. BALLANTYNE: Mr. President, Your Excellency, Mr. Prime Minister, honourable members of the Senate, and members of the House of Commons: I consider it a high honour and privilege to be invited to make a brief reference to my former Prime Minister, the Right Honourable Sir Robert Laird Borden, P.C., G.C.M.G., K.C., LL.D.

In the long line of illustrious prime ministers Canada has been fortunate to have had presiding over her destiny, no one stands out more prominently for distinguished devotion and service to Canada, the commonwealth of nations and the empire, than does my former Prime Minister.

The Right Honourable Sir Robert Borden was Prime Minister from 1911 to 1920, including the period of the first great war.

I was privileged to serve under Sir Robert as one of his ministers during the first great war years of 1917-18 and until his retirement, in 1920. I shall always cherish the memory of having been associated with my former Prime Minister during those years.

The Right Honourable Sir Robert Borden was held in high esteem not only by his colleagues in parliament but by Canadians generally, and was as well a recognized world figure.

After Sir Robert's retirement from the premiership our close personal friendship continued throughout the years, and it will always remain with me as a revered and pleasant memory.

May I be permitted on this historic occasion to refer to my old friend of long standing, the present Prime Minister, the Right Honourable W. L. Mackenzie King, C.M.G., who has occupied the high office of Prime Minister for a longer period than any of his Canadian predecessors, and who in a few months will have occupied it longer than any one else in the history of the British empire. It is remarkable that my former Prime Minister and the present Prime Minister both guided our country through great world wars and finally to victory.

It is fitting, therefore, that these two illustrious Prime Ministers should have their portraits placed for ever in these parliament buildings, as a constant reminder to present and future generations, and to the thousands of visitors passing through our portals, of the great and loyal service rendered by them to king and country.

Hon. Mr. FAUTEUX: Mr. President, Your Excellency, Mr. Prime Minister, guests of honour, honourable members of the Senate and of the House of Commons: The time has not yet arrived to appraise Mr. Mackenzie King's long political career. We are too close to him to see it in its true perspective, but we all know that history will class him as a great statesman. We all recognize that he is an outstanding parliamentarian. No man understands our House of Commons better than he does, and none has as much influence in it as he has today. In his many years of leadership he has contributed much to the decorum and dignity of the house.

As has already been said, this ceremony was arranged for today, June 10, to coincide with Mr. King's completion of twenty years in all in the office of Prime Minister. He has been a minister of the crown and the leader of his party for a still longer time, and has been for an even longer time a member of parliament. Mr. King is in years of membership the senior member of the Commons. He is dean of the house. I am sure we are agreed that he has shown in that long period remarkable qualities as a popular leader of men and, in parliament, a capacity to make friends without making enemies.

In his long term of office, Mr. King has had to solve many intricate problems, some of which threatened the unity of Canada. He has faced all such situations with caution and can look back over his long career with the satisfaction of having accomplished, in difficult circumstances, many hard tasks.

Mr. Mackenzie King has administered this country on the same broad principles as Macdonald, Laurier, Borden, and other leaders who were friends of minorities and pioneers in democracy and, above all, true Canadians. As members of the present parliament of Canada we are happy to be able to join together to commemorate Mr. King's long years of public service. We are pleased to be able to do this, irrespective of party affiliation, while Mr. King is still a member of parliament, and on the day of his completion of twenty years in the office of Prime Minister. We have felt that in no more appropriate way could we honour our present Prime Minister today than by giving his portrait a place in these halls of parliament, among those of other prime ministers whose lives are a part of the history of our country.

I am sure, Mr. Prime Minister, that all your friends who are gathered here on this memorable occasion, are very anxious to hear a few words from you.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. President, Your Excellency, and fellow members of parliament: You, Mr. Speaker, have given me a difficult task indeed. Of the kindnesses of all present, there are many acknowledgments I should like to make. I wish I felt equal to the least of them. I doubt if in the twenty years to which reference has been made this afternoon there has been a moment when I have been as conscious of the extent of my obligation to others, and less able to give expression to the gratitude I feel.

I know I speak not less for others than for myself when I say how grateful we are to His Excellency the Governor General for having consented to honour this occasion with his presence, and to unveil the two portraits which he has unveiled this afternoon. It is a happy circumstance that we should have in our Governor General, especially today, one who is at once a Field Marshal and an artist. His Excellency has referred to the association of the portraits with one or other of the great wars. May I say to His Excellency that we have much in mind that he himself is a veteran of the two wars. We are indeed indebted to one who has had so valiant and decisive a role in war for lending to today's proceedings the association of his illustrious name.

We are also especially honoured by the presence at today's ceremony of the President of the United States. That you, Mr. Truman, almost at the moment of your arrival in our capital, should have expressed a wish to accompany His Excellency on this occasion, is an evidence of personal and international good will for which I cannot thank you too warmly. Your presence has added a note of exceptional significance. Those here assembled will never forget that they were privileged to see the President of the United States and the representative of His Majesty the King side by side in the central hall of our houses of parliament.

It is a source of pleasure to me to recall today that in 1919, at the time I became leader of my party and Leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons, it was Sir Robert Borden who was Prime Minister. No one, I imagine, is in a better position than I am today to appreciate the strain and anxieties which Sir Robert experienced throughout the years of war. No one knows better than Senator Ballantyne how cordial at all times were the personal relations between Sir Robert and myself. I am glad it has been given to so intimate and devoted a friend of Sir Robert, one who was a member of his cabinet, and who is the senior privy councillor on the opposition benches in parliament, to speak today of the portrait of his late leader. The senator, I hope, will allow me to express to him my very warm thanks for his all too kind personal references to myself. They come, I know, from the heart of an old and true friend.

I am sure all of us who knew Sir Robert Borden will agree that the portrait by Mr. Kenneth Forbes, which we now see before us, is a worthy and striking likeness, and that it reflects great credit upon the artist. I should like, in the name of the government, to thank Mr. Forbes for the portrait he has painted of Sir Robert Borden, and to congratulate him upon it.

Your Excellency, I come to a very difficult part of what I have to say. How am I to express to my fellow members of parliament my appreciation of the honour they have done me in wishing to have the portrait of myself, by my friend Frank Salisbury, given a place on the walls of parliament? How am I to thank them for wishing to have it given an association with the portrait of Sir Robert Borden, in events which are outstanding in history? How am I to thank them for having selected today—the day on which I have completed twenty years of office—as the day for the unveiling of the two portraits? And how am I to thank His Honour the Speaker of the Commons for what he has just said?

In one thing I am fortunate indeed. It is that the artist, Mr. Salisbury, has found it possible to be with us today. Mr. Salisbury will be able to assure you that it was to his persuasion rather than to any expressed desire on my part that the portrait owes its existence. Perhaps nothing could better illustrate Mr. Salisbury's skill as an artist than what he has been able to make of me! I am indeed grateful to him for including me among the number of those to whom his brush has of itself helped to bring distinction.

After the many years I have been in parliament and in office, I cannot tell you what it means to me to find myself surrounded, as I am at this moment, by those with whom I have been most closely associated in the public life of Canada. It is an expression of friendship and good will on the part of political friends and opponents alike, much too moving to be acknowledged in words. I cannot begin to express what this occasion means to me today, or what it will mean to me for the remainder of my days. I can only thank you, one and all, and this I do with all my heart.

All too soon associations of the present melt into memories of the past. I am happy to think that those who have shared today's associations may not find the memory of them lacking in warmth or colour with the passing of the years. I even venture to hope that, to those who seek a noble calling, the memory of this occasion will serve to lend a glow to public life and to reveal the richness of the rewards of public service.

(The proceedings were concluded by the singing of "O Canada".)

REPORTS AND PAPERS

Copy of order in council P.C. 2180, relating to the movement of displaced persons from Europe to Canada.—Mr. Howe.

PRIVILEGE

MR. MAYHEW—STATEMENT AS TO TABLING OF REPORT UNDER MUNICIPAL IMPROVEMENTS ACT

Mr. R. W. MAYHEW (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Finance): Yesterday afternoon during the discussion of Bill No. 256 the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) made the statement that the annual return under the Municipal Improvements Assistance Act had not been tabled. His words are as follows, at page 4020 of Hansard.

> The requirements of that section have apparently been honoured more in the breach than in the observance. It is like a great many similar sections that we encounter in statutes passed by this parliament requiring annual reports—they are simply ignored by the government. It is high time the government made a serious attempt to heed and obey the terms of this and other statutes providing for annual reports to parliament on operations under acts.

> The hon. member also said that the annual report had not been tabled. The act provides that the report shall be tabled, and I think my recollection goes back to the time this year when I tabled that report. This is a copy of what I tabled at that time—

I referred to the document I was holding in my hand, from which I was reading. The hon. member for Eglinton then said:

> I have done just what the parliamentary assistant proposes, and I think if he will look back in the records of the house he will not find any report tabled.

I want to refer the hon. gentleman to Votes and Proceedings No. 34 of March 18 this year. On that day I tabled order in council P.C. 845, and also the ninth annual report of the operations of the Municipal Improvements Assistance Act, 1938, for the year ending December 31, 1946.

MR. MCLURE—NAMING OF PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND CAR FERRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. CHESTER S. McLURE (Queens): Having lingered somewhat too long at the banquet board yesterday noon, I was late for the opening of the house at 3.30 in the afternoon. At page 4015 of Hansard I find a suggestion in regard to the naming of the Prince Edward Island car ferry. I am greatly indebted to the hon. member for St. John-Albert (Mr. Hazen) for his very kind remarks concerning myself, and also his suggestion. My point of privilege, however, is that it is not my desire to have the Minister of Transport or his government devote too much time to the consideration of the kindly suggestion of the hon. member for St. John-Albert, until I have given the matter some further consideration myself.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

WAR ASSETS—PURCHASES BY COLONEL J. P. J. GODREAU

Mr. CASE:

1. Have goods been purchased from war assets corporation by Colonel J. P. J. Godreau or any company he may represent or be associated with? If so, what goods?

2. When were they purchased and what price was received at time of purchase?

Mr. McILRAITH: In reference to part 1 of this question may I say that it is impossible for the corporation to get the information to answer it in this form, because there is no means of identifying the companies with which Colonel Godreau may be associated. We have also been unable to find any means of locating Colonel Godreau; we have no clue as to where he resides or what part of the country he may be in. The only way we could identify any transactions with him would be to search all the invoices. I have discussed the form of the question with the hon. member for Grey North (Mr. Case) and would suggest that it be dropped in its present form and reworded in such a way as to give him the information he desires.

Question dropped.

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION—AUDITORS

Mr. FLEMING:

1. Who are the auditors of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation?

2. When were they appointed, and on what basis as to fees or other remuneration?

3. What amounts have been paid to them to date for their services, and what services or periods do such payments cover?

4. (a) What reports have they submitted as auditors, and on what dates; (b) what subjects or periods did such reports cover?

Mr. McILRAITH:

1. Mr. W. H. Campbell of Campbell, Glendinning and Company, chartered accountants of the city of Montreal and Mr. Jean Valliquette of Anderson and Valliquette, chartered accountants of the city of Montreal.

2. Appointed by order in council P.C. 262, dated January 24, 1946 in accordance with section 32 of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act, for a term of two years from March 1, 1946. The minister approved a salary of $4,000 each plus expenses, for the fiscal year 1946.

3. $9,762.17 fees and expenses, for audit for the fiscal year ending December 31, 1946.

4. (a) and (b).

On February 12, 1947 a report to the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply containing a statement of the corporation's position with the department as at December 31, 1946 which confirms balances collected on behalf of the minister and balances owing the corporation by the minister.

On February 20, 1947, the financial statements consisting of balance sheet, statement of profit and loss with appended certificate, for the year ending December 31, 1946.

*FEDERAL GRANTS TO MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. CHURCH:

1. On what municipal projects was the grant made by parliament from 1938 to date, annually, to the city of Ottawa as a subvention in exchange for services rendered by the city to the government?

2. What sum of money was spent in each year, and the various uses made of this grant for municipal purposes?

3. What action has been taken to extend the principle in the legislation to other municipalities throughout Canada rendering to the government similar services?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I think I should give oral answers to these three questions. The grants to the city of Ottawa are made under a special statute of this parliament, and the statute does not provide any obligation on the part of the city to show how the money is spent. That would be the reply to Nos. 1 and 2. If and when the government takes action or does anything to extend this principle to other municipalities the house will be informed in due course.

Mr. CHURCH: Even if it is statutory are not the people entitled to know how public funds are expended?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Under that statute there is no obligation upon the city of Ottawa to report to the government or to parliament as to the way the money is expended.

Mr. SPEAKER: Answered.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

PRAIRIE FARM REHABILITATION—IRRIGATION PROJECTS

Mr. WINKLER:

1. By provinces, what has been the cost of irrigation projects in the prairie provinces to the P.F.R.A.?

2. By provinces, what is the estimated cost per acre foot for new irrigation projects under contemplation?

3. By provinces, what is the estimated total cost of irrigation projects being planned?

4. What is the land area involved?

Mr. GARDINER: I have been asking to have this question stand from day to day. It is quite properly asked, but it will take considerable time to get the information, parts of which will have to be prepared in three different provinces in western Canada. If the hon. member will agree, I suggest that it be made an order for return.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order for return.

TOURIST FACILITIES—WESTERN ONTARIO

Mr. BROWN:

1. What assistance has been rendered by the federal government in the development of roads, parks or tourist facilities in the Niagara peninsula?

2. What steps have been taken by the government with respect to development of the ports of entry, such as Windsor, Ontario, to assist the tourist industry?

SUGAR

INQUIRY AS TO DISCONTINUANCE OF RATIONING TO CONSUMERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. E. DROPE (Northumberland, Ont.): In view of the fact that housewives are finding the ration of sugar inadequate, and since the rationing of sugar to consumers in the United States ended yesterday, will the minister inform the house when the rationing of sugar to household consumers will be discontinued in Canada?

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): I have not had notice of my hon. friends question. I shall take it into account and give a statement in due course.

[Mr. Church.]

NAILS

SHORTAGE IN VANCOUVER—QUESTION OF DISTRIBUTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply arising out of letters received from retail hardware merchants in Vancouver. They complain of inability to get nails to supply their normal retail demands. From the letters I get the impression that the situation is one of faulty distribution rather than short supply. Would the minister care to make a statement in the matter?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): Complaints have been received from the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank) and the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. Sinclair) as to the lack of nails in the hardware stores on the Pacific coast. In response to those complaints I asked the coordinator of building supplies to make a personal visit to the Pacific coast to endeavour to discover some method of better distribution. I believe my hon. friend is right, that it is a matter of distribution. Certainly the production of nails on the Pacific coast, in proportion to the population served, is higher than in any other part of Canada.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROVISION TO MEET CERTAIN EXPENDITURES AND GUARANTEE OF SECURITIES AND INDEBTEDNESS

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of Bill No. 258, to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures made and capital indebtedness incurred by the Canadian National Railways system during the calendar year 1947, and to authorize the guarantee by His Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railways Company.

Mr. F. W. TOWNLEY-SMITH (North Battleford): Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for the provision of funds for capital expenditures on the Canadian National Railways. For some years, along with some of my colleagues, I have been asking for the completion of certain railways in the northern part of Saskatchewan, specifically those which run from Frenchman Butte to a place called Heinsburg in Alberta, and another which goes from St. Walburg to Beaver River, also in Saskatchewan.

In the first named railway there is a gap of only about forty miles. It breaks the railway, of course, and is a source of great annoyance and inconvenience to those who happen to live along the line; and besides, it prevents those who live on either side of it from getting to the other end of the railway. That is to say, those who live on the east side of the gap can patronize only that eastern section of the railway. If they wish to get to the west end they have to go a considerable distance east until they reach another line of railway, and then get on that other line and go to the west. The same applies to those who live on the west side of the gap.

We have asked that this forty miles be completed. It is not a great thing, but it is an inconvenience which has been suffered by these people over a considerable number of years. I ask the minister if he will make a special point of doing something about this particular forty-mile gap.

With respect to the other piece of railway, the line has been built at some expense to the north out of Alberta to a place called Cold Lake. That particular piece of line is a good revenue producer; my information is that it is bringing in a lot of money. The break extends now to the southeast and joins up again with the Canadian National railway which at the present time ends at a place called St. Walburg.

I cannot say anything that has not already been said. But I do most earnestly call the attention of the minister to the gaps in these two branch lines, and I should like him to say whether anything has been done toward finishing them, or whether something may be done very soon.

Mr. BENTLEY: Mr. Speaker, before second reading—

Mr. TOWNLEY-SMITH: May I have an answer?

Mr. CHEVRIER: This is not the point at which to answer questions. It should be done in committee of the whole.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would call the attention of hon. members to the fact that we are at the stage of second reading, and that if they have questions to ask they might better wait until we have reached the committee stage. I would ask hon. members to confine their remarks to the general principles of the bill.

Mr. PAUL EDMOND GAGNON (Chicoutimi) (Translation): Before the motion for second reading is carried, I wish to say a few words and make some suggestions as to what could be done in Chicoutimi county by the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would ask the hon. member to confine his remarks, during this debate, to the general principle of the bill before the house. In regard to specific questions, I believe that they should be discussed at the proper time in committee of the whole, when the hon. member and all members of the house will be free to deal with special subjects. They will then have the opportunity of asking questions which will be answered by the minister.

Mr. GAGNON: Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of asking questions of the hon. minister, but I propose to make a statement on certain problems of special concern to my county.

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport): Before the hon. member takes the floor, may I remind him that the bill before the house authorizes certain loans to the Canadian National Railways and does not provide for the hon. member dealing with conditions in his own constituency. He will be given this opportunity when the estimates for the Department of Transport are brought down.

Mr. GAGNON: Are we not allowed to discuss any financial matters of the Canadian National Railways under this bill?

Mr. CHEVRIER: The financial matters dealt with in this bill.

Mr. GAGNON: This bill affects Chicoutimi county as much as any other constituency in Canada.

(Text):

Mr. HOMUTH: Mr. Speaker, we are now on second reading of the bill. Surely it is not permissible to ask questions back and forth at this time.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have suggested that at this stage the discussion be confined to the general principle. The purpose of the bill is to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures made and capital indebtedness incurred by the Canadian National Railways system during the calendar year 1947. I would ask the hon. members to continue their remarks to the principle of the bill before the house. They may question the minister when we reach the committee stage.

(Translation):

Mr. GAGNON: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, your objection is premature. I feel that I have the right to discuss the affairs of the Canadian National Railways in my constituency when such a bill is submitted to the house.

Mr. SPEAKER: I must point out to the hon. member that when the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) comes before the committee to have his estimates approved, including the sums allotted to the Canadian National Railways, the hon. member will have an opportunity to question him and discuss any matters pertaining to the administration of government-owned railways.

(Text):

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

On section 1 —Short title.

Mr. MAYHEW: There has been an error made in the bill; the amount for the Barraute branch line was left out. I am going to ask one of the ministers to move:

That clause 2 be amended by inserting in the table contained therein, after the item:
"New equipment ..... $41,500,000"
the following item:
"Barraute branch line ..... $ 2,684,000"

Mr. CHEVRIER: I move accordingly.

The CHAIRMAN: The parliamentary assistant has given notice that he will move to amend section 2 when we reach it by inserting a new item in the table contained therein.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Will that item to be inserted leave the total of $46,723,000 unchanged?

Mr. MAYHEW: That is right, it will be unchanged.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I should like to ask one or two questions regarding the detailed amounts and then I have a question to ask with regard to the bill itself. This is a measure to provide certain capital funds; it has nothing to do with the operating deficit of $31,000,000 which is referred to in the memorandum furnished to us in connection with the railway budget. That deficit is paid out of consolidated revenue fund and whatever the railroad earns is turned into the consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Yes.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): There is an item of $1,057,000 covering acquisition of securities and retirement of capital obligations, which is to be found on page 6 of this memorandum. After certain other items there occur two items about which I should like an explanation. This page is headed, "Acquisition of securities and retirement of capital obligations." The item about which I should like some information reads, "Chicago, Western and Indiana railroad, advances under agreement March 1, 1936, $169,000." On the face of it that does not look like an acquisition of securities or retirement of capital obligations, will the minister explain it?

The CHAIRMAN: In order to keep the proceedings regular may we pass section 1 and then proceed to consider section 2?

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): My question could be asked under section 2.

Mr. HACKETT: I want to be quite clear. My question is to enable my hon. friend who wanted to ask a few questions concerning his own county, to come into the discussion at this point. I want to know if any of the securities which have been retired affect the whole system. If they do affect the whole system then I think it is competent for the hon. member to speak about that section of the system within his own constituency.

Mr. MAYHEW: I wonder if we could deal with one question at a time. I was looking up the answer for the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario.

Mr. HACKETT: I withdrew for the moment. I shall be here and I can renew my question as soon as the question of the hon. member has been answered.

The CHAIRMAN: I take it that section 1 is carried?

Mr. HACKETT: Before section 1 is carried I should like to ascertain whether the hon. member for Chicoutimi has the right to ask the question which he wishes to ask.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I think my question had better stand until we get to section 2.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I do not think the hon. gentleman wants to ask a question from the way in which he proceeded; I think he wants to make a speech. I notice he nods his head.

Mr. HACKETT: I wish to know whether or not these securities which have been retired affect the whole system. I refer to the securities mentioned in the second section.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Is the hon. gentleman referring to those concerning new equipment?

The CHAIRMAN: It would appear to me that the question which the hon. member for Stanstead has raised should not be discussed under section 1. The committee will have to decide whether it can be discussed under section 2.

Mr. HACKETT: I was merely trying to make it possible for the hon. member for Chicoutimi to follow through with what he started. Before we go into details section by section it has always been the practice to discuss a bill in general terms. I understand that the moneys being sought for additions and betterments will affect the whole system. If they do affect the whole system, my submission is that the hon. member should not be precluded from discussing a matter which affects a part of the system. I do not want to protract the discussion at all; I want to be helpful. I am throwing out the suggestion that inasmuch as the betterments apply to the whole system it is competent to discuss the whole system which is to be improved and bettered by the bill.

The CHAIRMAN: That would be on section 2.

Mr. HACKETT: He could talk about it on section 2, but if that matter is included in section 2 it is possible to talk about it now under our interpretation of the rules.

The CHAIRMAN: I would refer the hon. members to standing order 58, subsection 2, which reads:

Speeches in committee of the whole house must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

There have been times when a general discussion has been allowed on the first clause, but that is not according to the rule. It has been done only by unanimous consent of the committee when there has been no discussion on the principle of the bill on the motion for second reading. I should remind hon. members that when we are in committee of supply a general discussion is allowed on the first item, departmental administration. But we are not now in committee of supply. We are in committee of the whole on this bill. The principle was approved by the house when the bill was given second reading. An opportunity was given to all members to discuss the principle then, and now I must ask hon. members to abide by the rules and to discuss each clause as it is reached.

Mr. HACKETT: Mr. Chairman, there certainly is a misunderstanding. If you feel it is your duty to depart from what has been the practice in the house for a very substantial period, that on the first clause of a bill a general discussion may take place—

Mr. CHEVRIER: That was never the practice.

Mr. MACKENZIE: No, only during the war.

Mr. HACKETT: My right hon. friend opposite can refer to the rule, but I can turn to innumerable instances of departure from it in this session and in previous sessions.

Mr. MACKENZIE: May I meet my hon. friend's wishes by suggesting that clause 1 stand, and that he raise the point he has in mind on clause 2?

Mr. HACKETT: This putting things off and attempting to preclude discussion according to the practice on the basis of which we have carried on business is not satisfactory to members of the house. If an accepted interpretation is to be departed from there is a procedure, which is known to all the members of the house, to bring that about. But invariably, for years, and on innumerable occasions this session, a general discussion on the first clause has been permitted. We are all anxious to get on with the business and to get home, and I think it is well not to make any departure now from what has been or modus operandi. I am perfectly familiar with the book, but nobody knows better than you, Mr. Chairman, that we have frequently built up customs which depart from the letter of the law. I am merely suggesting that we would do well at this stage of the session to go on as we have done up to the present and permit a discussion of the bill in general terms before we pass the first clause.

Mr. MACKENZIE: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend, probably with the best intentions in the world, is entirely incorrect in regard to the rules. During the war on the war appropriation measure it was agreed by all parties that we would have a general discussion on the first item of the appropriation, and so the custom grew up to which my hon. friend has referred, and I think also in supply on agriculture. But it is not the accepted rule of this house.

Mr. HACKETT: It is the accepted practice of this house.

Mr. MACKENZIE: No, it is not.

Mr. GREEN: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, we in the official opposition, and I think in the other opposition parties as well, are very much interested in an attempt to stop discussion on the first clause of the bill.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I rise to another point of order, Mr. Chairman. That is imputing motives to members of the administration and their supporters. There is no attempt to avoid discussion.

Mr. GREEN: The right hon. gentleman is a bit touchy today. I do not believe I imputed motives to anybody. I do say that this privilege or this right of a fairly wide discussion on the first clause of a bill is of the utmost importance to those of us who happen to be in opposition, and after the next election it will be just as important to my friends who now sit on the government benches.

Mr. CHEVRIER: You will have to change your tactics to change places.

Mr. GREEN: I suggest that hon. gentlemen opposite be not too insistent in asking for such a harsh interpretation of the rule. I was here during all the war years and before that, as most other members were, and I have never heard that this right extended only to war appropriation acts, or to the first item in the estimates of a department. I urge upon you, Mr. Chairman, that you do not make a far-reaching ruling of that type without having given it the most careful consideration after hearing submissions from various sides of the house. Certainly, as the hon. member for Stanstead has said, it would be unfortunate if at this late date in the session a harsh ruling of the type requested by the Minister of Veterans Affairs were made.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I object to the word "harsh". I simply wish to see the rules observed. There is nothing harsh about it at all. The rules are fair and equitable.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I think in view of the statement made by the hon. member for Vancouver South, particularly his statement that there seems to be an attempt to curtail discussion. I should say just a word. There has been no attempt to curtail discussion. The facts are to the contrary. There has been ample opportunity to discuss the very matter that hon. members are attempting to discuss today; first of all in the committee of railways and shipping, where the affairs of the Canadian National are brought up, to which committee matters are referred for that very purpose; and now the bill comes to the house consequent upon approval of the C.N.R. budget in committee. Again, there will be more opportunities to discuss this whole matter of railways, first on the estimates of the Minister of Transport, on the general administration item; then on his estimates for railway service and railway matters, and again on another part of his estimates. Are we to have three debates on this question, or one? It makes no difference to me whether we have the debate now or later.

Mr. GREEN: Why not have it now?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I have met this before. There will be the same difficulty when the estimates come up and the whole debate will start all over again. It seems to me that we should stick to the ruling, and the ruling has been that in committee of the whole the discussion should have to do with the clause before the committee.

Mr. HACKETT: Mr. Chairman, I have a good deal of commiseration for you. I sometimes lose my way and sometimes my patience, and if I were in your position I would lose my patience more frequently than I do in my own role. But the fact is we want to get on with the business of the house. We want to ask a few questions concerning this matter. I am drawing to your attention an authority which I am sure the right hon. member for Vancouver Centre will not question. It is the authority of my genial friend who sits just behind him, the Minister of Labour, who is an authority on procedure as well as on many other topics.

Mr. MITCHELL: My hon. friend is taking himself too seriously.

Mr. HACKETT: I always take the Minister of Labour very seriously, and I am going to ask you, Mr. Chairman, to follow my good example. This is a matter which came up just a few days ago. An hon. member wanted to discuss, as we are attempting to discuss now, an item on a resolution, and he put forward this argument as reported at page 3894 of Hansard. The hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Quelch), who was not being given the latitude that he felt he was entitled to, said:

> That may not be true. On the resolution stage you are free to ask any question pertaining to the resolution, but when we are dealing with the bill we are tied down to individual sections and may find it impossible to ask a particular question. We had an example this afternoon when certain questions were asked and hon. members were told that they could not ask them under that particular section. It is quite possible that when the bill comes down there may be certain questions we want to ask that do not apply specifically to any section, and therefore we shall not be able to ask them.

Whereupon the Minister of Labour intervened and said:

> You can ask them on the title.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that we should be afforded the opportunity of asking the few general questions which are of interest to us at this time. It will save time and will be no departure from tradition; it will be merely carrying out the understanding that has existed and been abided by in the house for many moons. I therefore ask you to rule that since the equipment which is referred to in the bill affects the whole system, discussion be not curtailed or restricted in any way, and that the whole system be subject of debate.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. I want to make my position clear as chairman of this committee. I feel that I must abide by the standing orders. Until they are changed by the house it is my duty to enforce them. However, if the committee sees fit from time to time, by unanimous consent, to allow wider latitude than the rules permit, I would certainly have no objection. At all times the chairman is in the hands of the committee. I do not recall any time this session when a general discussion has been allowed in committee on the principle of a bill. I do recall that during the war on the appropriation bills general discussion was allowed on the short title. I believe that a wide discussion can take place under section 2 of this bill. Section 2 has to do with additions and betterments (less retirements) $18 million. I believe that item and other items in clause 2 permit wide discussion, and I am of the opinion that general discussion should take place under section 2 and not under section 1. I would ask the committee to carry section 1 and then proceed with section 2.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—Power to issue securities for capital expenditures.

(Translation):

Mr. GAGNON: Mr. Chairman, will the minister permit me to outline the situation which prevails in my constituency?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Mr. Chairman, I believe that the hon. member should in the first place ask his question. The hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Hackett) suggested a while ago that the hon. member could ask questions; if they are in order, I have no objection.

Mr. GAGNON: Do the Canadian National Railways intend to repair the line which runs from Chicoutimi to Quebec and Montreal?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I am not in a position to answer that question on this bill. If the hon. member will ask his question when the estimates of the Department of Transport are brought down, I shall then be able to answer.

Mr. GAGNON: I wish to thank the minister.

(Text):

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): May I now have an answer to my first question?

Mr. MAYHEW: I shall give the hon. member an answer to his question. The company serves the Grand Trunk Western Railroad in providing its entrance to the city of Chicago for both freight and passenger service. For passenger service, it provides a joint union station, and for freight service it provides the trackage whereby the Grand Trunk reaches its exclusively operated freight station and team tracks.

In addition to participating in the operating expenses of the facilities of which it has the joint use, the Grand Trunk Western Railroad is obligated by agreement to pay as rental sinking fund payments sufficient to retire certain bond issues at maturity and interest as it falls due.

The amount of $160,500 included in the capital budget of the Canadian National Railways for 1947 covers the estimated requirements for sinking fund payments and interest for 1946 which the Grand Trunk Western Railroad are obligated to pay under the agreement.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Is that an annual rental, or is it something that will come to an end after a term of years? Will it continue to be shown as a yearly expenditure?

Mr. MAYHEW: I am told that the bonds mature in 1962 and that this amount will end at that time. It provides for these bonds.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Does that really answer my question? When that happens does it mean that there will be no longer any rental or payment of this kind to be made?

Mr. MAYHEW: Yes, that is right. This is a return of capital.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Is the same relatively true with regard to the last item, which on the face of it does not look like an acquisition of security or retirement of capital?

Mr. MAYHEW: Under an agreement between the Grand Trunk Western Railroad and the state of Michigan, dated July 20, 1927, the railway and the state agreed, in order to enable the state to carry out its highway programme, the railway would surrender its present right of way from Mile Post 13 in Royal Oak to Mile Post 22·1 between Pontiac and Birmingham; the state to procure a new right of way 100 feet wide for a new double track railroad; the state to advance the cost of the right of way, and the cost of the railroad to be constructed thereon; the railway to repay such costs to the state by fifteen annual instalments, without interest; repayment to commence on December 31 of the year in which the state shall have acquired control of the entire right of way.

Total cost of project to December 31, 1946 ..... $	6,460,025.49
Payments to December 31, 1946—from 1934 to 1946—13 instalments	5,598,688.77
Balance unpaid at December 31, 1946 ..... $	861,336.72
Two annual instalments at $430,668.36 each..... $	861,336.72
Provision in C.N.R. budget 1947 for 1947 instalment	430,000.00

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Thank you. I have one further question with regard to section 2. I should like the parliamentary assistant to look at the wording of the section. It sets out the amounts which can be borrowed to a total of $46,723,000. Is there any provision for borrowing the money in other than Canadian funds? Is it the intention that there will be no right to payment in United States funds, or to borrow under a debenture which shall be payable either in Canada or in the United States?

Mr. MAYHEW: I am informed that there is no such intention. I would not think there would be, either.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): It is a matter of some importance. Do I understand clearly that there is no intention of issuing securities payable in other than Canadian funds?

Mr. MAYHEW: I am informed that there is no intention of issuing securities in other than Canadian funds.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I presume it has been a matter of consideration and it has been deliberately decided against.

Mr. MAYHEW: I understand it has been approved by Finance. I think it will be found that over the years the government has not been borrowing money in other countries, and that the amounts are payable only in Canada.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): It has been the practice for some time now to have them payable only in Canada?

Mr. MAYHEW: Yes.

Mr. CHURCH: Section 2 of this bill which has to do with power to issue securities for capital expenditures, is as ancient as 1931. The marginal note opposite the preamble gives a list of enactments starting away back in 1931, and there are acts also in 1932, 1933, 1935, 1936, 1937, 1938, 1939, 1940, 1941, 1942, 1943, 1944, 1945, 1946, and now 1947. Surely this method of financing improvements on the system and power to issue securities for capital expenditures is more frenzied finance. I read the report No. 2 of the proceedings of the special committee on railway and shiping, No. 2, and I saw some reference to this matter in one or two of the questions. I think the hon. member for St. John-Albert said something about it. It was found that in these particular matters of betterments and new equipment, some of it was going to subsidiaries of the Canadian National, the Central Vermont and other places, whereas the old national railways in Canada are starving for new equipment and betterments. Take a look at the cars you are travelling on in the province of Ontario. Surely we should be able to look after our own system within the borders of Canada, fix up the rights of way, provide better rolling stock, and that kind of thing, before we start spending all this money away down in central Vermont. It was in Ontario that the old Grand Trunk and the Canadian Northern made nearly all their money to start with, and that most of the money was made in connection with the national system.

I would further call attention to the stations and the equipment for some of the trains. They have not proper appliances. Why should we spend this money on subsidiaries in the United States? The same thing applies to ships, such as the Northumberland on Lake Ontario. The hon. member for Davenport is not going to risk his life again on that; this year he is going to have his picnic at Centre island instead of at Port Dalhousie. I would call attention to the policy involved in this vote. They should have redeemed all these expenditures out of earnings. The amount of money involved is, for additions and betterments, less retirements, $18,000,000. Then you have to refer to the top of page 2 of the bill where it says:

Less: Available from reserves for depreciation and debt discount amortization, $16,518,000.

That makes a total of $46,723,000. Included in that is $41,500,000 for new equipment. What equipment we are getting I do not know.

It has been the practice in the house to refer these matters to a committee. I have read over the list of questions asked in committee and I fail to see where any improvement has been made on the suggestions made here in committee of supply. The road is doing very well; I am not here to criticize the road. It is a splendid railway, has splendid officials and has splendid equipment in many parts of the country; but there are other sections, such as in Ontario, where it is not so good. I believe the time is coming when the old provinces, especially Ontario, should get some consideration with respect to equipment and betterments and all that kind of thing. I believe that charity begins at home. Why should we spend money on subsidiaries in central Vermont and other places in order to try to keep up with the Joneses, so to speak, with the Century Limited and all the special kinds of new cars we see on trains over there?

Mr. KIDD: Will the minister give an explanation of the first item in section 2? What is the $18,000,000 for? Is there any way of breaking that down?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Yes. The $18,000,000 is divided up with reference to the various regions of Canada as follows:

Additions and Betterments	1947 Budget
Atlantic region	$ 1,912,944
Central region	7,420,829
Western region	3,878,047
Grand Trunk Western Railroad Company	2,476,568
Central Vermont Railway	333,362
Subsidiary companies	3,173,504
Express, telegraphs and other departments	3,157,068
Additions and betterments to equipment (Canada)	2,708,541
Equipment retirements .....Cr.	2,060,863
	$23,000,000
Less—Portion of projects included in the above requirements which will not be physically completed by December 31 each year	5,000,000
Total	$18,000,000

(Translation):

Mr. GAGNON: Mr. Chairman, if I understood the minister correctly, there is no amount provided for improvements in Lake St. John and Chicoutimi districts.

Mr. CHEVRIER: There certainly is. The sum of $1,912,000 will be expended in the Atlantic area.

Mr. GAGNON: Is it proposed to spend part of that amount in our district?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Yes.

(Text):

Mr. TOWNLEY-SMITH: Is it permissible to inquire what is constituted in additions and betterments? Does that include the building of new lines?

Mr. CHEVRIER: No. No new lines are provided for under additions and betterments.

Mr. FERGUSON: Are the government guaranteeing to any large extent the five per cent bonds of subsidiary companies?

Mr. CHEVRIER: This is a financial matter. I know of no bonds of the subsidiary companies which are being guaranteed. But the hon. member is perhaps familiar with the bill which the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Finance had up I think last week, and again at the beginning of this week, concerning the issue of additional securities.

Mr. FERGUSON: Is the government guaranteeing the railway's bonds at five per cent? If so, could any of the bonds be bought back and floated at a lower rate of interest, considering the present interest rates, thus saving millions of dollars?

Mr. MAYHEW: The only five per cent bonds the government has are those of the Canadian National Railway Company. They are callable in 1949, and cannot be redeemed until then. They mature in 1969. Another one is callable in 1950 but matures in 1970. As I understand it, when these bonds are subject to call, it is the intention to call them, and that would be the end of the five per cent bonds. But that was taken up on the refunding bill.

Mr. FERGUSON: Is it the government's intention to float no more issues where the bonds are not callable for a long period, so that when low money rates come along they will not be tied to these exorbitant interest rates? That may bring a smile to the face of the hon. gentleman, but it is a pretty serious matter for the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. MAYHEW: I cannot tell what is going to happen in future, but certainly there is no intention of doing that at the present time. What we may be obliged to do five, ten or fifteen years from now I cannot say.

Mr. FERGUSON: The government can express its intention, and govern itself by future conditions. Its present intentions should be expressed now. No one but the government can express them.

Mr. MAYHEW: The last issue was 2¾ per cent. It is our intention to keep the interest rate as low as possible.

(Translation):

Mr. GAGNON: Out of the figure just mentioned by the minister what specific amount is earmarked for the constituency of Chicoutimi?

Mr. CHEVRIER: There is no way of telling what it would be for the good reason that no separate accounts are kept for each constituency. I may say to the hon. member that if the railroad in which he is interested is under C.N.R. control, close to $2,000,000 will be spent in the Atlantic district.

Mr. GAGNON: The minister cannot then state any definite amount for the Chicoutimi area in particular?

Mr. CHEVRIER: No, I cannot.

Sections 3 and 4 agreed to.

On section 5—Power to aid other companies.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Will the minister please look at the first line of this section, which reads:

> The national company may aid and assist, in any manner, any other or others of the said companies—

And so on. I suggest that this is going quite outside the limitations of section 2, though if that is so I am sure it is quite unintentional. I think that should read, "in any manner not inconsistent with the terms of section 2", because surely this is a broadening out.

Mr. MAYHEW: I am told that this wording is exactly the same as it has been for some years.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Do we never want to make any improvements? This is for the purpose of improving it.

Mr. MAYHEW: The suggestion will be brought to the attention of the minister.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): That does not affect my comment. I should like to ask the Minister of Transport in his legal capacity if I am not correct.

Mr. CHEVRIER: That is just the comment I was making to my hon. friend. I would not want to be discourteous to the hon. gentleman, but I was saying that the question is whether it would be an improvement. In matters such as these we have to take the advice of the Department of Justice, which has gone over this bill and approved it. In view of that fact I feel that the interpretation we have placed upon it is the correct one.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I suppose it is always possible that even the Department of Justice may overlook something. I am not suggesting that it is a mighty matter, but I am confident that I am right, and it seems to me it might be worth while, if it could be done, to let this section stand and refer the matter to the Department of Justice.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. CHEVRIER: May I suggest to the hon. gentleman that in view of the fact that this has been the wording over the years, the hon. gentleman allow it to go through, and I will make it my business to discuss the question with the Department of Justice to see if, in the bill which will come up next year, it may not be possible to meet the wishes of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. IRVINE: May I ask the minister what "said" companies are these? I do not see any except the national railways.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The subsidiary companies of the railway.

FISHERIES RESEARCH BOARD

PROVISION FOR SCIENTIFIC, TECHNICAL AND OTHER OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

The house resumed from Friday, June 6, consideration of the motion of Mr. Bridges for the second reading of Bill No. 264, to amend the Fisheries Research Board Act.

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): In rising to speak on this bill to amend the Fisheries Research Board Act, let me at the outset commend the minister for introducing this legislation and for the amendments proposed therein. I want to take the opportunity now, which I did not have last session, to disabuse the mind of the minister, if I have to, and the minds of hon. members with regard to my attitude toward research and the fisheries research board. I want to make it perfectly clear that I am one of those who believe in research; and if I offered some criticism last year I have no apology for having done so, because I had one object in view. As one who has been here for eighteen years, and since the inception of the fisheries research board, I realized that some startling statements had to be made, and that I or someone had to make it strong if we hoped that any attention would be paid to the criticisms offered. I had no animosity against the personnel of the board; there was nothing personal in the remarks I made last year. I want to make it clear that I am in favour of research, and in favour of expending even more money for that purpose. But I was not in favour nor am I of the way the moneys were being expended under the direction of the fisheries research board. Therefore I am pleased that the minister has seen fit to propose certain changes in that act; and when we are in the committee stage, or if the bill is sent to the fisheries committee, I may have some further proposals to offer which I believe should be incorporated in the bill.

The step being taken now, by which one of the departmental officials will become a member of the fisheries research board, and the action taken to bring the board more under the direction of the minister himself, I think are all to the good. I can speak with some little experience, because since 1937 I have had the honour to be a member of the international Pacific salmon fisheries commission; and I can tell hon. members that if we had allowed the scientists on that commission to do as they pleased, without any check or instructions and without calling upon them to produce results along certain definite lines, I doubt that the international Pacific salmon fisheries commission would be in the splendid position that it is in today. Anyone who has had to deal with scientists, particularly fisheries scientists, knows very well that individuals of this type are sometimes inclined to spend a lifetime on some form of investigation which, while it may be very interesting to them and other scientists, is of very little value to the industry which is dependent upon research.

I am not going into the history of the research board at this time, nor am I going to criticize the expenditures that have been made, because I have quite a number of more important things to say. The general criticism I offer first of all in regard to the activities of the board is that their investigations have been far too general. The varieties of fish in respect of which research should be carried out are far too numerous, and in my opinion the board has therefore dissipated a great deal of its efforts. However I am going to make one or two comments before dealing with the annual report itself, which I have before me. Let me say again that my remarks today will not be destructive though they may be critical so far as the board is concerned, but will be more by way of suggestion—even if at times what I say may appear to be severe in my criticism.

Although Canada is a great fishing nation, Canadians consume less fish per capita than the people of any other nation. According to the latest statistics the consumption of fish in this country stands at roughly eight and a half pounds per head of population.

We are reaching a time when the fishing industry, looking to the future, is beginning to view with alarm what is going to happen to the great quantities of fish produced, especially when our export markets begin to diminish. In what I am about to say I am not making any reflection upon the present Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Bridges); indeed I give him credit for the great personal interest he has taken in the industry, and what he has done for its benefit, from one end of Canada to the other. But I must say that if more had been done to have our people consume more fish, and especially during the years of war, when all countries, with the exception of the United States and Canada were short of food, it would have been all to the good, from the standpoint not only of the industry itself but also of the health of the people.

Those who have examined food and food values have made it abundantly clear that there is no more healthful food for the human race than fish. But today in Canada fish is almost in the same position as the egg was some twenty-five or thirty years ago; when one in past years ordered an egg in a restaurant he was always fearful that he might find a chick or something worse inside. The consumption of eggs in those years in Canada went down, and so the Department of Agriculture undertook to improve the quality. While I will not say there was a rebellion, certainly in certain provinces there was amongst some farmers definite opposition to the regulations designed at that time to improve the quality and increase the consumption of eggs. In Canada today fish and fish products are not being ordered by the average housewife, the average citizen and the average family as a necessity, but rather as a substitute. Much more could have been done by the Department of Fisheries, and especially by the fisheries research board, to improve the quality of our fish. I do not know that it is the duty of the fisheries research board to check the varieties of fish offered for sale, but anyone who knows anything at all about fish must realize that in the central provinces, and especially in Ottawa, when he orders a certain kind of fish he is often served with another kind or variety. I am not throwing out any brickbats when I say that I have been in no city where this happens more frequently than it does in the city of Montreal.

Even in the parliamentary restaurant one finds at times the same condition. Far be it from me to criticize the restaurant in this building, because the meals here, to my way of thinking, are splendid and well served. Anyone who is not content with them—well, I do not know what on earth would satisfy him.

Mr. MacNICOL: You will get an extra piece of pie for that.

Mr. REID: I am not speaking for any favours today.

Mr. MacNICOL: But don't refuse it.

Mr. REID: On occasions I have ordered haddock: it was cod, not haddock, that was served. But in restaurants in Ottawa and Montreal I have been served with varieties of fish which I really could not name. I have ordered haddock, but what I got had no more relation to haddock than a eulachon has to sockeye salmon.

Mr. MAYHEW: Did you ever order sole?

Mr. REID: Yes, I have ordered sole, but I hesitate to order it again, after what I was served. Some check-up should be made in this matter. It is well known that fish is more palatable the closer one gets to the source of production. Efforts will have to be made to have fish brought to inland districts in better form and fresher condition. Some countries are doing that very thing. Only the other day I read that Norway has now established small landing fields along its coastline. Catches of fish, after being frozen, are flown from these locations to the interior cities. Some such step will have to be undertaken in Canada, perhaps not by the fisheries research board, but by the minister's department.

The fisheries research board could do much more than has been done in regards to this. Consider also the smoking of fish. I believe the smoking method was perfected in the maritime provinces over 20 years ago and great credit is due them for that development. But since the smoking process has been perfected, nothing has been done along this line for the past twenty years. Fish were smoked for two purposes, to improve the quality, and to preserve the fish for a certain length of time. Many consumers and many grocers who buy fish still believe that because a fish has been smoked it is preserved for any length of time, and that it can be left indefinitely in the open. Such, Mr. Speaker, is not the case.

Proper smoking is all to the good, because the longer a fish is smoked the longer it keeps, and perhaps the taste also improved. But some firms got tired of using the old smoking methods, and now I understand they give the fish a little whiff of smoke, and then add a lot of paint, in the form of some type of tar product. This, I understand, does not add to the digestibility of the fish. The result of all this is that the consumption of smoked fish in Canada has gone down.

[Mr. Reid.]

Here there is a great field for research work. Fish is one of the finest foods on earth, and fish considered from the standpoint of production and man hours of work, is one of the cheapest sources of proteins. Investigations have been made, where comparisons have been made between pork and fish products. It has been proved beyond peradventure that fish can be produced more cheaply per man hour of labour than can pork.

I want to repeat that we must put across the idea in this country that fish is a necessity, not a substitute food or something to be eaten perhaps on one day in the week. That idea can be put across if we take the proper steps, assisted by the research board, to improve the quality of the product and the methods of preserving. There is a great field in connection with preservation by ice or other methods of freezing. At present there is a world shortage of food and yet before long this country may be faced with a surplus of fish. We consume roughly only 8·5 pounds per capita when we should be eating twice that amount, if not three times as much. If we were we would not be so much concerned about export markets.

Mr. MacNICOL: That is in how long?

Mr. REID: One year.

Mr. MacNICOL: That is really nothing; it should be far more than that.

Mr. REID: One must not be confused with the consumption given sometimes in bulletins that are put out. The figures there refer to the amount of fish when caught and retained in this country for consumption, but I am referring to the edible portion of the fish which is consumed. Some countries consume as much as 75 to 80 pounds per capita and I understand that Denmark and Japan, two of the greatest fish eating countries in the world, consume well over 100 pounds per capita.

Mr. MacNICOL: What is the consumption in the old country?

Mr. REID: I have not the figure for the old country before me but before the war their consumption was far greater than ours. We are one of the smallest fish consuming countries in the world.

There are some matters in this report which I should like now to bring to the attention of the minister. It is my intention to deal only with British Columbia because I have given more attention and study to conditions there than to conditions in the maritimes. I shall leave any criticism or suggestion with reference to that part of the country to hon. members who come from the maritime provinces.

I have in my hand the report of the fisheries research board for 1946 and I should like to deal briefly with some of the matters set out therein in connection with fishing research in British Columbia. I do this, not with the idea of tearing down what has been done, but merely to show where I think they have been amiss and improvements made. Reference is made in the report to the investigation carried out on the Skeena river. Anyone who has given this matter any study cannot avoid coming to the conclusion that the Skeena river fisheries are much too large to be successfully covered by what is being attempted by this board. Their investigations in some lines have been far too meagre. If they intend to cover the Skeena river they should have more investigators, more scientists, and more time and effort should be spent.

Another matter referred to, is the investigation in connection with hair seals on the Skeena river. That is all to the good, but I wonder why they left out the Fraser river. The menace from hair seals is ten times as great in the Fraser river as it is in the Skeena. Looking through the records the other day, I noticed that some fishermen are refusing to go out on the Fraser river because the depradations by hair seals are so great they constitute a financial loss. Not only are the nets damaged but, the fish are destroyed as well. I have been on sand bars near the mouth of the Fraser when the tide was out and on one occasion I saw a herd of over 1,000 seals. Fishermen tell me that where thirty-five to forty fish are caught in a gill net, at least thirty would have their heads or tails nipped off by the seals. It should not be left to the fishermen to destroy these seals. I mention this because the fisheries research board did make some investigations on the Skeena river but, as I say, the menace there is not as great as on the Fraser.

Reference is also made in the report to the general salmon investigations made by the research board. They state that the runs of pinks and chums have been going down. In the north the runs have been going down from 1919 to 1944; yet no recommendation is made as to what should be done to build up the runs in that area. In the south the runs have been going down since 1938. It is all to the good to have the information from the research board that the runs are going down, but steps should be taken to try to preserve the runs and bring them back to their former greatness.

It is suggested to the returning veterans that they should go into fishing, but I would warn veterans in British Columbia not to rush too quickly into that business especially on the Fraser river. There is only a certain quantity of fish each year but 10,000 or 12,000 licences have been issued. If more enter the business they are just cutting down the returns of those who are already there. Unless we do something to build up the runs to what they were in previous years, the situation will be serious indeed, since no steps have as yet been taken to go out into the offshore fisheries and develop these on behalf of our people.

Then, in connection with pink salmon, I wonder why the research board have omitted the Fraser river from their investigation. They did do some investigation on the Fraser river some years ago. I am not going into that other than to say that the picture of their research work on the Fraser river is not as good a story as I would like to tell. We have at present a problem on the Fraser river with regard to pink salmon. Up until 1913 the pink salmon used to go above Hell's Gate and spawn in the upper reaches of the Fraser river and in the lakes and streams of interior British Columbia. Not only did the disaster of 1913 block out the sockeye salmon at Hell's Gate, but the pinks practically ceased to go above Hell's Gate after that year.

Mr. MacNICOL: What caused the disaster?

Mr. REID: The contractors who were building the railroad blasted thousands of tons of rock into the canyon. I think the story has been told in the house before and I would be delighted to deal with it again, but I have so many other matters I want to take up. If I started to talk about that I am afraid I would take up all my forty minutes. That condition was cured with the setting up of the international Pacific salmon fisheries commission. The United States government and the Canadian government through that commission constructed two fishways at Hell's Gate canyon which has cost close to $1,000,000, fifty per cent being paid by the United States and fifty per cent by Canada. It is interesting to note what took place last year. The pink salmon which could not previously get through Hell's Gate canyon because of rough water and the velocity of the water were able to get up through the fishways in great numbers. The United States not only get the first crack at the sockeye salmon heading for the Fraser river but also first crack at the pink salmon, and yet we in this country provide the home for these fish and try to safeguard them as much as we can. They are really Canadian fish. The international Pacific salmon fisheries commission under the treaty can investigate only one species of fish, that is the sockeye salmon. They have no jurisdiction or authority to investigate pink salmon or any other variety. But here we have another variety of fish called the pinks, eighty per cent of which are taken by the United States; yet ninety per cent of the run find their home in British Columbia. Nothing has been done by the fisheries research board to find out what percentage of these pinks go to the Fraser river, how and where they spawn, and how many the United States really get of what I claim are Canadian fish. Either the fisheries research board should be specifically instructed by the minister to investigate this question, as I think they can be when this bill passes, or further authority should be given to the international Pacific salmon fisheries commission, not only to investigate and rehabilitate the sockeye salmon industry but all the other varieties of salmon which come up the Fraser river. That, of course, would require an amendment to the present treaty, but it is something I commend to the consideration of the minister and the house.

Another fishery is mentioned on page 46 of the report, the Cowichan river salmon. It has been investigated over many years but so far with little results. The board point out in their report:

> This investigation has been carried on over a number of years and has resolved itself into a study of the variations occurring in a coho salmon run or population, subjected to commercial fishing along the west coast and in the strait of Georgia, and to an important sport fishery in Cowichan bay . . .
> Nowhere yet is there any body of information of this kind.

I maintain that is not good enough, just to place before parliament and the fishing industry that there is no body of information on this question. I go back to the salmon called pinks and chums and repeat that it is not good enough to simply say that their numbers are going down and leave it at that. That does not help the industry very much unless steps are taken to build up these salmon runs.

The board have investigated pilchards, but I do not think anything has been done by the fisheries research board, so far as I can find out from the report, to investigate pilchards out in the open seas.

Some sunken net fisheries study has also been done. That includes thirty varieties or species of fish. Three or four men allotted to that work are not, in my opinion, enough. If they are to investigate the life history of some of these fish, as they likely will have to do, I wonder just when they will reach any conclusions, especially if only three or four investigators are investigating thirty varieties of fish and carry out their investigations over an area extending perhaps for hundreds of miles. The fisheries industry cannot afford to wait more than a lifetime or two for results. They cannot afford to wait for fifty or a hundred years for recommendations if we are to get any benefit from them. These investigations should be hurried along. I think the minister should tell the board: I want you to investigate this variety or that variety, and that he expects some definite reports or results from their investigation within a reasonable period of time.

I have a word to say regarding oyster studies. I know that the great oyster fisheries in this country are in the maritime provinces, but we in British Columbia have developed some fine oyster beds too. The work in oyster research should be correlated with what is being done in the eastern maritimes. We should also find out what the state of Washington is doing, because the waters and the conditions there are the same as in British Columbia. I might point out that last year British Columbia marketed oysters to the value of $106,000. For many long years we have been bringing what is known as oyster spat or seed from the maritimes to British Columbia waters. The results were not altogether successful. This spat was crossed with the native oyster and even then the product was not as desirable from a marketing point of view as required, although the quality was fairly good. Until the war broke out oyster spat was imported from Japan and it was found that this oyster spat from Japan just suited British Columbia waters. Spat is now beginning to come in again from Japan.

An hon. MEMBER: It was assimilated.

Mr. REID: It is too bad we could not do that with the natives from Japan, but the oysters seem to be in a class of their own. Today in the gulf islands, which I know very well because I lived there for six happy years in the early period of my life, the beaches which had no oysters back in those days in 1911 are now beginning to have oysters on almost every beach. This is due to the importation of spat or seed from Japan which has crossed with the native spat and with spat from the east and now there has developed an oyster that does extremely well in the waters of British Columbia. Under the heading of "Oyster Studies" on page 49 of the annual report of the fisheries research board I find this:

> The only work conducted on oysters in 1946 consisted of experiments by Alice M. Kelley, under the supervision of Mr. Neave, on tank propagation of oysters. If a satisfactory and feasible method of production of seed in tanks could be found, oyster growers would be less dependent on natural setting or on importation of seed from Japan for maintenance of stocks.

I claim that is not good enough for an industry which is today developing and in which success has already been obtained, not through the department, but by those engaged in the fishing industry.

We find also in the report of the board that they actually spent some little effort on a small fish called eulachon which comes to the Fraser river. I think it would be no great loss to leave the eulachon to the Indians and not bother with them from a marketing point of view. You can look through the reports of the Department of Fisheries and not find any mention of this fish, and yet the fisheries research board is spending some time in investigating it. It would be better if the department spent some time in finding out what happened to the great sturgeon of the Fraser river. I have in my hand a picture of a sturgeon caught when entangled in their net by gill net fishermen and weighing 633 pounds. It is worth fifty cents a pound, and a fish that was reckoned at one time and still is, as food fit for kings and for anyone. Yet no investigation of any kind has been made as to the cause of the decline or disappearance of the sturgeon. Only the odd few come into the Fraser river today. In the early days many sturgeon came into the river; at one time it was a regular fish on the market. From the fish that was caught the other day the fishermen took 100 pounds of eggs or caviar and received fifty cents a pound for the fish. The weight of this fish was not a record, because sturgeon up to 1,000 pounds have been caught in the Fraser river. The one that was caught recently weighed 633 pounds. In the light of this, is it any wonder that some of us who have read the report and know a little of the industry out there are not too enthusiastic over the research board. It was that and a lot more which caused me last year to make some of the rather harsh statements that I did.

I have pretty well covered the report in so far as British Columbia is concerned. In conclusion, I wish to say that I have a few suggestions to make and I trust that the minister will give them serious consideration. He may not be ready to adopt them all this year under the present amendments to the Fisheries Research Board Act. It is my opinion that the fishing industry as a whole should be represented on the board. It is true that there is one man, an estimable gentleman, on the board who at the time he was appointed, however, was not connected with any fishing company. Today it is felt by some that perhaps he receives some advance knowledge for his company from the research board. I am not accusing him of that; I am merely stating what some of the fishermen believe out there. They believe also that there should be a representative fisherman on the board. There should be one representative of the fishing companies on the board and, of course, the minister is putting a representative of his department on the board. That is all to the good. I trust that he will give my suggestion serious consideration.

It is high time also that this board was brought closer and made—I probably should not say "made to cooperate" because the two words do not go together. There should be complete cooperation with the fisheries research board and the fisheries departmental officials on the coast and with the department in Ottawa. We cannot allow a board as important as the fisheries research board to remain aloof and apart and do their own investigating without correlating the entire fishing interests into a closer unity and thereby pooling all our knowledge and all our skill. As I resume my seat I want to say again how pleased I am that this first step has been taken. I say to the minister that the statements made last year were not an attack in any personal way against the fisheries research board. I made the statements so that some attention would perhaps be paid to the matter and I have the feeling that somehow or other it has brought some good results.

Mr. G. R. PEARKES (Nanaimo): I am sure the fishermen of British Columbia will be interested to hear that the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid) is interested in scientific research, and I am quite certain that his admission of that fact will carry a great deal of weight because his long experience and connection with the fishing industry are well known out there.

In some of the remarks which I shall make I shall endorse the facts that he has presented and also the recommendations that he has made, but I shall not take quite the same line of approach as he did. It seems to me, listening to his address, that he was holding up the fisheries research board, and particularly the biological station at Departure Bay near Nanaimo as a whipping boy for the government. It is not the fault of the research board; it is not the fault of the biological station at Departure Bay that they have not been able to accomplish as much as the industry would like. It is because they have not had the support of the government, and the government must take the blame and not pass it on to an organization which is not adequately supported.

Then the hon. member for New Westminster went on to criticize the work which had been done by the biological station at Departure Bay and said that it was of little value because the scientists there had dissipated their efforts. In the remainder of his speech, which was somewhat illogical in that respect, he went on to enumerate instance after instance where they might well disperse their efforts by carrying out investigations in other areas on other species of fish, which they had neither the time, the staff nor the facilities to do. You cannot accuse an organization of dissipating their efforts and then suggest that they still further dissipate those efforts and be consistent.

The hon. member for New Westminster referred to the annual report of the fisheries research board. The acting chairman of the board, in making his annual report said:

> The fisheries research board is charged by parliament with the responsibility for carrying out such researches and investigations as will enable the fishery resources of the country to be managed in such a way as to yield the greatest possible return over the longest possible time.

Then the chairman goes on to say that the results of the board's studies are applied in the management and exploitation of the fisheries through the Department of Fisheries and the fishing industry. I must admit that if you judge by the results of the research board as they have been applied in the management and exploitation of our fisheries through the Department of Fisheries and the fishing industry, either the board or the government stands indicted for failure, because the fishing industry is today probably in the most precarious position of any major industry in Canada. It would appear to me that a thorough reorganization of the fisheries research board is long overdue, not as the fault of the scientists, but as the fault of the government in neglecting to support the board.

Some of the reasons why the fishing industry is in this precarious position cannot, of course, be directly attributed either to the board or perhaps even to the government. For instance, the cessation of the bulk buying by UNRRA and the rapidly diminishing purchases of fish products by the United Kingdom have all resulted in the elimination of foreign markets which we have enjoyed in recent years, and have resulted in a sharp decline in the price that has been paid to the fishermen. For instance, on Vancouver island a year ago a fisherman was paid ten cents a pound for fresh cod. In a letter I received only a couple of weeks ago I was informed that for the same fish the fishermen are today receiving only six cents a pound. There is a reduction of forty per cent in the amount that the fisherman receives for his toil. On the other hand, the cost of fishing gear has gone up tremendously. In some instances it has gone up 100 per cent to 200 per cent of what it was in the basic year, 1941.

I refer to one instance only, although I have many of them here if any hon. member is interested. In 1941 the price of one-and-a-half inch mesh cotton netting was 66½ cents. Today it is $1.54. There is a considerable increase to the fishermen in the cost of all gear and supplies, not to mention the cost of living. If this bill is intended to extend and increase the efficiency of the fisheries research board, and to bring that board into closer contact with the department by the appointment of a responsible officer to supervise and administer the work of the board, I think at best it can be described as an eleventh-hour measure to try to save the industry. I am pleased to see that there is this administrative connection because in the main, the board and the officials of the board are scientists, men who are devoting the whole of their energy and time to scientific studies. That type of professor is not always a practical man. He is not always a good administrator. That may be one of the reasons why the board has, in the past, not been able to render all the service that was expected. With the addition of an administrator from the department, I feel that the results should be more satisfactory. I do not think I am exaggerating the case when I say that for years overpressure of work and lack of adequate personnel have prevented the board from functioning efficiently, and that the lack of this administrative personnel has been keenly felt, alike by the scientists of the board and by the industry itself.

As for fulfilling the responsibilities toward maintaining the greatest possible yield over the longest possible time, as the hon. member for New Westminster has pointed out, they can hardly be credited with having achieved results in that direction, because the salmon industry in British Columbia has been, and still is, showing unmistakable signs of depletion. Neither effective nor adequate corrective measures have been taken toward stabilizing the industry at a higher productive level by maintaining or increasing the run of salmon. As has been shown by the investigations carried out by the board and by the biological station at Departure Bay, many of the streams and spawning grounds which were at one time prolific producers have now become seriously depleted and, in some cases, completely exhausted. The investigation is still continuing to find out the reasons why there has been this depletion, and what corrective measures can be taken.

I could give many examples. Examples have been given in the brief which was presented to the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Bridges) by the industry in March, 1946, and again in April, 1947. Perhaps I might refer to just one instance mentioned in that brief. There is an area on the west coast of Vancouver island which, a few years ago, produced 15,000 cases of sockeye in one season; in 1944 it produced less than 1,000 cases. In 1939, 213,000 cases of chum salmon were produced off Vancouver island; in 1944 only 50,000 cases were produced. You may blame the biological station at Nanaimo for not having given you more precise information. But I suggest that these scientific examinations of the run of salmon, particularly when the salmon run in cycles of four years, all take time in order that the scientists may arrive at a correct solution of the problem. I do not think the industry would like to be set off at half-cock and to be advised to follow a course of action which would not be definite and satisfactory, where the results would not be conclusive.

We know that the streams on Vancouver island and on the Pacific coast are affected by many other occupations. They cannot be devoted entirely to the interests of the fishermen. Logging operations clash in some respects with the requirements of the fishing industry; and the general development of the country has, of course, militated against the further productiveness of the streams. However I think I can say that the rehabilitation of the British Columbia salmon industry is a major problem facing the fishing industry on the Pacific coast. I also maintain that this rehabilitation cannot be accomplished without the help of the scientists. While I have suggested that perhaps this research board to date has failed to produce results which satisfy the industry, I do not question the sincerity or the ability of the scientists who have been employed. Rather do I accuse the government of failure to support that board adequately in the past, and I hope that this new bill is a step in the right direction.

As I said before, for years overpressure of work and lack of personnel have prevented this board from functioning properly. I know very well that at the Pacific coast biological station at Departure Bay the work has become so congested that seldom is an investigation completed before ten other new problems are thrown at the staff. Again and again they have been asked to carry out a $100,000 investigation for $1,000. Satisfactory research work cannot be carried out in the conditions under which those scientists are working. The building itself is old and out of date. There are piles of documents which have been collected only after years of long research work. In the past they have been working under the greatest possible handicap, with poor staff accommodation and poor means of storing their records. I know that matter was brought to the attention of the minister when he first visited Nanaimo, and I hope that steps will be taken to provide a new building for that Departure Bay station.

As the hon. member for New Westminster said, general investigations have been conducted on the salmon run in the rivers and streams on Vancouver island and on the mainland between the Fraser and the Skeena rivers. Hundreds of fish have been tagged each season in order to trace their migrations and to test the escapements from the spawning grounds. As the hon. member said, investigations have also been carried out with regard to herring, pilchard, ling cod, clams, oysters, seaweed and many other activities, and I suggest that if it had been possible to carry those investigations to their logical conclusion they would have been of immense value to the industry. But as I have already said, that work has been hampered by lack of staff, cramped accommodation and inadequate facilities.

Biological research is not by any means the only activity this board should undertake. There is the whole field of what might be called technological research. By that I mean research into the methods of production, processing, distribution and marketing, in order to maintain what is referred to in the industry as continuity of quality, that is, continuity of quality of the fish from the time it is caught by the fisherman until it reaches the consumer. It is true that the two major companies on the Pacific coast maintain laboratories and experimental staffs of their own which are investigating these technological matters, but quite naturally the findings of the specialists employed by those companies are not readily available to the smaller companies and the cooperatives. As yet the cooperatives are not in the position where they may maintain staffs in order to carry out this technological research. Therefore they look to the research board for assistance in that way. I suggest that this field of technological research has been hardly touched by the board, though it has a direct bearing on the development of the fishing industry.

The lack of coordination between the department and the research board has, I know, been brought to the attention of the minister and the government on many occasions. Again, if this bill is intended to correct that condition it will be beneficial to the industry. Up to now the chief supervisor of fisheries has had no control over the research stations; and as a result of the lack of close collaboration between supervisory and research staffs, much of the work has been duplicated and become ineffectual. I have mentioned that in the past the board has been woefully short of scientific personnel. As a matter of fact there have been few inducements to attract young men of the right type and with the right education into the service. I understand that in this bill provision is made to extend to them some of the advantages of our civil service, and I should hope that, in addition offers of adequate remuneration will be made, and that there may be a system of promotions and conditions of service that will not only draw into this scientific service but also hold in this service the best type of young Canadians who may be interested in this work. In the past too many of these young scientists who have started out in this scientific research work for the fisheries department have found greater attractions in the United States and have left this branch of the work because the inducements and the security have not been sufficient to hold them.

At the last annual meeting of the Fisheries Council of Canada an educational programme was urged. The hon. member for New Westminster also suggested that an educational programme should be started. I heartily endorse that recommendation. It was suggested by the Fisheries Council of Canada that the department set up a division for assembling and disseminating information on how to care for fish all the way down the line from the fisherman to the producer to the wholesaler to the retailer, and right down to the consumer. It should be remembered that at every stage in that line fish is an extremely perishable product, and there is great scope for thorough investigation and for a thorough educational programme. Further, I think this educational programme would be within the legitimate realm of the board, provided that the board was given the facilities and personnel to carry it out. One has only to remember that for many years other and competitive protein foods have had the support of a vast government educational system. We need only think of the experimental farms which the Department of Agriculture has scattered from one end of the dominion to the other to realize the educational programme that has been undertaken in the past by that department. That has not happened as far as the fisheries are concerned and, as the hon. member for New Westminster has said, the result is that the average Canadian eats 8·4 pounds of fish a year, whereas he consumes 139·7 pounds of meat, 27 pounds of poultry and even 38·9 pounds of eggs. Surely there is opportunity for an educational programme to increase the consumption of fish; but the industry, assisted by the government, has to find a way of producing and delivering the fish in an acceptable manner. The president of the Fisheries Council of Canada said, at a recent convention:

> If the industry could achieve a universally good product, standardized as to quality, and if our fish were prepared and merchandized effectively, our fish consumption would soar.

I suggest that exports would be unimportant, and that lack of production would be our difficulty. He then went on to say:

> If our per capita consumption of fish was increased by three and a half ounces per person per week each year for five years, it would keep the engines of our fishing boats and the machines of our processing plants running at overload capacity to meet the demand.

I suggest that this is a realm in which the fisheries research board could carry out investigations along these lines. The same sentiments were voiced to me in a letter from a practical fisherman, secretary of a cooperative, who wrote the other day and said:

> The average housewife should be educated to the fact of what really fresh fish should be. I am certain very few people across the dominion know what really good fresh cod and salmon taste like. I honestly believe that if the average person could get fish in as good shape as we bring it into our local camps we would have very little difficulty in building up a healthy fish appetite in this country of ours.

Then he goes on to say:

> We must ensure that the top number one product reaches the consumer at all times.

Unlike the Department of Agriculture, which looks after the foods which compete with fish, no marketing service exists in the Department of Fisheries. And I suggest there is no one in the Department of Trade and Commerce with a comprehensive knowledge of fish marketing and produce. Therefore I say this is a legitimate field for the reasearch board.

Before closing, I should like to urge upon the minister that a representative of the fishermen be appointed to the advisory committee of the board on the Pacific coast, to replace Mr. J. H. Deane who, because of ill health, had recently to resign from the advisory board. During the time he was serving on that board he definitely represented the interests of the fishermen.

Finally, I should like to commend all those who are connected with the board and who have made a definite contribution to the industry, and excellent attempts to overcome the almost insurmountable obstacles they have had to face, in spite of what I feel has been in the past a rather half-hearted government support.

Mr. R. H. WINTERS (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I should like to compliment both hon. members who have preceded me, the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid) and the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Pearkes), upon the high plane of their remarks, and the non-partisan way in which they have approached this problem. It augurs well for the industry, when we have so many difficulties, and so much in common, that problems like this can be approached on a non-political basis. To me it is always one of the highlights of any fishing debate to listen to the speech of the hon. member for New Westminster, who is the chairman of the standing committee on marine and fisheries. As usual I have enjoyed his speech a great deal, and have found it most constructive. Then, the hon. member for Nanaimo has placed his finger on many problems which are the same as those we encounter in the east, and in what he has said he has made a constructive contribution to the debate.

I believe the hon. member for New Westminster deplored the fact that there was no practical fisherman on the fisheries research board. When he said that, he may have been thinking more particularly of the west coast, because on the east coast, among others, we have Mr. O. F. Mackenzie from Halifax, who is one of the most aggressive and practical minded fishermen in the industry. His reports on fishing conditions as they affect the maritime provinces are a guiding light, and have been for years back. Therefore I feel the hon. member must have been referring to the west coast when he made that reference.

There is at the present time a great need to strengthen the fishing industry. It was the first to suffer from post-war conditions, and it is now in a difficult position. This bill, which is in fact one to amend the Fisheries Research Board Act is, in my opinion, a step in the right direction. It is an attempt to strengthen the board, and as such it is all to the good.

I would also say at this time that in my opinion, from the time he took office, the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Bridges) has been doing good work in strengthening the fishing industry throughout the dominion.

Basically, as I see it, this bill can be divided into three important divisions. In the first place, it seeks to create the position of vice-chairman for the board. That is all to the good. In the second place, it seeks to establish an executive director of the board. Until now that work has been carried out by the secretary of the board, Major Sutherland, who, in addition to doing a good job and a full-time job in the Department of Fisheries, has been carrying on capably as secretary of the board.

But since the board was established in 1937, and even before that, since the time of the old biological research board, the nature of the industry has changed so greatly, and the problems have become so much more complex and the expenditures so much greater, that the board merits a full-time and capable man. For that reason I endorse this proposal completely.

Third, the bill seeks to give the board statutory rights to control certain of its expenditures, and to appoint and dismiss personnel as required. I believe this is a modernization which is required, in the light of modern developments.

Since its inception the board has grown into something really big, as a business undertaking. It now operates stations at Halifax; St. Andrews; Ellerslie, Prince Edward Island; Grand River; Winnipeg; Toronto (for the preparation and publication of information), and at Vancouver and Nanaimo. In the years from 1939 to 1946 expenditures increased from $240,000 to $636,000, and this year the estimates provide for approximately three-quarters of a million dollars. That is in the realm of big business, and this is an attempt to modernize and to improve the act so as to cope with conditions encountered today. That is all to the good.

As we in the east find it, and as I would gather from the remarks of the hon. member for Nanaimo it is found in the west, the fishing industry is now standing definitely at the cross-roads, and it may well be that the fisheries research board will be an important factor in determining which way it will go. During the war there were heavy demands for fish from foreign markets, with the result that the nature of this traditional fishing industry changed. It rose to great heights of efficiency and production.

Before the war the emphasis was on the production of salt fish, and the major markets were in the West Indies and the Mediterranean countries. During the war the heavy demands came from Great Britain and the United States, with the result that, although there was still a substantial demand for salt fish, the main emphasis was placed on fresh frozen fish and fresh frozen fillets.

The fishing industry in the United Kingdom has now been substantially rehabilitated, as has the industry in France and other European countries, with the result that these markets are no longer available to us. Furthermore, under the impetus of demands arising from the war, the fishing industries in Newfoundland and Iceland developed to the point where they are serious competitors for the United States market.

The United States on its own behalf has expanded its fishing industry by putting into operation many more draggers in the last few months. That nation is therefore in a better position to supply its own needs than it was even a short time ago, although it is not likely that it will be able to meet demands for its own internal consumption, even now.

We hope that under new trade and tariff agreements the United States will still permit a generous quota of foreign fish to enter that country; but we do not lose sight of the fact that there will be keen competition to determine which nation will provide the bulk of the quota, and low costs will decide the ultimate winner.

In recent months there has been a decided indication that the price of fish might not hold. That is one of the most serious things we have to contend with at the present time. Recently the price of cod slipped off one cent and the industry is trying desperately to hold the price at the present level. There are indications that with the large inventories there are on hand, and with the possibility of overproduction at the present time, the industry may be under the greatest strain to hold the price at the present level. Therefore we are asking the government at this time to provide some measure of support in the event that the price slips off still more. It is fully realized that, even though some assistance from the government may be forthcoming, it can be only temporary in nature and that in the long run the industry must either stand on its own feet or fall.

There are two solutions to this problem. We must meet competition in order to obtain a fair share of the United States markets and we must take drastic steps to develop our own home market. Even in our own home market we shall be met with competition. We are fully aware that in such centres as Montreal, Toronto and other central Canadian cities those who are able to produce fish for the least cost will get the market. We feel that cost will be a factor even in connection with our own Canadian market.

In attempting to meet foreign competition we must remember that many countries which produce fish have a standard of living considerably lower than ours. Their fishermen are paid much less for their fish than are ours. Our standards are relatively high and it is quite understandable that every effort must be made to maintain them. But we must face realities. In order to meet competition, and meet it we must if the industry is to survive, there must be a reduction in our operating costs. That is not easy in view of the fact that there have been escalating increases in the cost of the instruments of production, as the hon. member for Nanaimo has so well said. We hope that production costs can be decreased without further lowering the price of fish to our fishermen. All other means of reducing costs must first be fully explored to the complete satisfaction of the fishermen. It is in this field that the fisheries research board may be able to play an important and determining part in finding ways and means of decreasing the cost of production.

The other solution to the problem of protecting our fishing industry is to develop our home market by increasing consumption. I should like to refer to the April bulletin of the Fisheries Council of Canada, as did the hon. member for Nanaimo, and quote the following:

> Arguments that the war years brought an unprecedented demand for food and that the knocking out of competitive fishing countries gave Canada artificial opportunities, weaken substantially in the face of statistics which show that the 1945 per capita consumption of fish was 8·4 pounds as gainst 139·7 pounds of meat. The ratio is absurd, yet if the per capita consumption of Canadian fish products were increased from only three to five pounds—

Presumably they mean by only three to five pounds.

> —it would overstrain the industry's productive capacity if pre-war export markets were maintained but the results would soon be quickly apparent and, assuming that prices were held at a reasonably profitable level, such increased demands for fish products would result in a continuing prosperity and steady employment for the industry.

I submit that the situation in Canada with respect to the consumption of fish is absurd when we consider the consumption of meat, eggs and poultry, if the figures quoted by the hon. member for Nanaimo are correct, and I have every reason to believe that they are except that his figures for the consumption of eggs seemed rather high; the low usage of fish is deplorable by comparison. The per capita consumption of fish in Canada is only 8·4 pounds, and an increased consumption of from three to five pounds per capita would support this industry if exports remained only at the pre-war level. I think that shows the solution to be right in our own Canadian hands.

It seems to me little to ask that every person in Canada should eat from three to five pounds more fish per year, particularly when it has such nutritive value, as the hon. member for New Westminster so ably pointed out. At this time I want to make the strongest plea I possibly can from the floor of this House of Commons that all housewives in Canada see to it that the members of their families are given an opportunity to consume at least three pounds more fish a year.

Mr. BENTLEY: Take the bones out.

Mr. WINTERS: That is with the bones out. An educational programme is required in connection with our domestic markets. The fisheries research board could play an important part in such a programme by assisting in advertising and familiarizing the people in inland Canada with the methods of preparing fish. The proper preparation of fish is all important. The hon. member for New Westminster has told us of the trouble he has had in obtaining edible fish, particularly in Montreal. I think the same holds true in any part of Canada west of the maritimes, and probably the British Columbia members will say that it holds true in any part of Canada east of the Rockies.

The industry is not attempting to place the blame on anyone. It realizes that it must take the lead itself by putting on the market a high quality product in good condition. The industry is fully aware that it should assume that part of the problem. I am sure that with proper methods of handling, inspection and transporting that phase of the problem will be solved in due course and good quality fish will be put on the market to attract the housewives of Canada and make it much easier for them to cooperate in increasing the consumption of fish. We feel that the fisheries research board could be a vital factor in that connection. I would ask the minister to give full consideration to the educational aspects of the problem, which are so important at this time.

I will close by saying that, as far as my constituents are concerned, we feel that this bill is a good one since it is a step toward the improvement of the industry, and I shall endorse it.

Mr. W. CHESTER S. McLURE (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to say anything in this debate after having listened to the wonderful addresses we have had this afternoon. I had prepared a few things to say but most of them have been said by speakers who have preceded me. It is always a pleasure to me to listen to the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid) when he speaks about fish and the fishing industry. He seems to have made a thorough study of this matter both as it concerns the western coast and the country generally. The hon. member said that he had not been able to get the quality of fish he desired in the restaurant. If he had turned to the à la carte section of the menu he would have found one of the most delicous fish he would want, namely, Prince Edward Island scallops. I am sure he would have thoroughly enjoyed them.

The hon. member also referred to the fact that the per capita consumption of fish was something like eight and a half pounds per annum. If he had looked around the house, both while he was speaking and now, and seen the few who are interested in the fishery problems of Canada he would have said to himself: By another year if there is no more interest shown by the people of this country and in the house in the fishing industry I am afraid that the consumption of eight and a half pounds will shrink considerably.

The hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Pearkes) has given an address on the fishing industry which was as notable as that of the hon. member for New Westminster. These two gentlemen have presented the problem in such a way as to interest, I hope not only the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Bridges), but the government and the people who will get the benefit of their addresses.

The hon. member for Shelburne-Queens—

An hon. MEMBER: Queens-Lunenburg.

Mr. McLURE: Yes. I was thinking more of Queens which had been, I was going to say stolen from our part of the country, but I am glad that the hon. member has annexed it to his constituency. His remarks today were of a high educational order. I was very glad to hear him say that in a debate on fisheries all parties in this house are in accord because of their interest in the fisheries in general. But I can hardly agree with his solution of the problem—to consume more fish, educate the people to eat more fish. He also said that there was no blame attached to anyone but the fishermen themselves. I do not believe he meant just that. While the fishermen may be somewhat to blame I place the greater part of the blame on the government, not the government of the present day but on all governments over the past number of years. They have lacked the interest that should have been shown in our fisheries.

The fishing industry is one that many of us are closely associated with and greatly interested in, and I was glad to agree with those who have spoken so far in this debate in favour of the development of the fishing industry.

In rising to speak on the second reading of this bill to amend the Fisheries Research Board Act, I do so, not in a spirit of criticism of the amendments, but in an endeavour to point out to this house the neglect by governments of this great industry of fishing over a period of years. The culmination of the lack of interest, lack of research work, lack of biological work, lack of technological work and the great indifference of our own marine and fisheries committee and of governments has brought about the precarious position in which the fisheries industry finds itself today. This great industry is in the most unfortunate position of all our primary industries, and I should like to contrast for a moment this industry with our great basic industry of agriculture and what has been done for it.

Our basic industry of agriculture has been and is being studied by scientists of every description, by technologists in every branch of farming, by advertising experts, by marketing experts, by processing experts for both production and distribution. Agricultural schools and colleges are dotted across this country for the training of agricultural scientists and for the educating of practical farmers. Besides all these schools and colleges, we have many kinds of practical experimental farm stations all for the benefit of the wheat farmer, the fruit farmer, the cattle rancher, the potato farmer and many other types of men who produce wealth from the soil for the food of man and beast. I am not for one moment going to say that what has been done for agriculture is too great an effort. On the contrary, nothing is too great an effort for the greatest of our industries, the basic industry of agriculture.

Now let us look for a moment, by way of comparison, at our fishing industry. No country in the world is more favoured with all kinds of fish of equal quality and quantity than Canada; yet right across this great country from the Atlantic to the Pacific we have only some six or seven biological stations, and I stand to be corrected by the Minister of Fisheries if I am not correct.

Mr. BRIDGES: Not seven.

[Mr. McLure.]

Mr. McLURE: There are three or four supplemental stations, but there are few if any schools or colleges training experts or scientists in the fishing industry. We have no experimental fishing stations for the training of technologists, fishermen, processors and so forth. The neglect of this great industry can be seen at all times and in all places. The fact of the matter is that we are only tickling the industry. We have not as yet even scratched the great possibilities of this great industry of fishing. Let me here say that I do not desire the Minister of Fisheries to think I am placing any blame on him or his department; I am putting the blame on all governments of the past. They have not realized the possibilities of the great fishing industry. There is no salmon in the world like the British Columbia and the Gaspe salmon. There are no lobsters in the world like those on the east and Atlantic coasts. There are no oysters in the world like the great oysters known as the Malpeques from Prince Edward Island. I could mention dozens of the most delectable fish. I just mention these, and I should like to say further to the Minister of Fisheries that during his regime—

Mr. BROOKS: On a question of privilege, I should like to make a correction in the hon. member's statement. He said that there were no salmon like the British Columbia salmon. I should like to point out to him that it is considered there are no salmon in the world like the New Brunswick salmon, and especially Saint John salmon.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): He was referring to canned salmon. Let us be fair.

Mr. McLURE: I am sorry that I omitted to add the words "Saint John". I did say that there were no salmon in the world like the British Columbia and the Gaspé salmon. However I was dealing with the Department of Fisheries as presided over by the minister. No doubt today he finds himself handicapped by lack of good trained men, research men and so forth for the work that has to be accomplished. The fisheries department, its minister and staff are working out plans for the future of this industry, and the government must not cramp their style.

Hoping that I have paid the compliment that is due the department and the minister, I shall deal with a few other matters. The first step in this great industry is the procuring of the fish, the netting, the hooking, the trapping, the trawling or any other means of gathering the fish from the sea. The first step, namely, the mining of the sea for fish is well taken care of by our hardy fishermen. These men who go down to the sea in boats are real men.

The second step in this industry is where we begin to falter, namely, in the cleaning, curing, salting, drying, freezing and processing of the catch. Here is where the fisherman needs, and needs it badly, the assistance of the science of the industrial arts, technology.

The next step is the distribution of one of the chief stable foods of mankind. Any article of food that requires a certain amount of processing must be made to conform to a standard quality.

On motion of Mr. McLure the debate was adjourned.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Golding in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Science service—

5. Administration, $35,404.

Mr. HERRIDGE: A year or so ago in the discussion I mentioned the problem of the little cherry disease in the Kootenay district and the Okanagan district. At that time the minister gave a short resume of what was to be done and said there was difficulty in obtaining sufficient staff for science service. Will he give the committee a complete outline of what the position is today?

Mr. GARDINER: Investigations are still continuing here from the central bases, but at the moment we have not sufficient staff to man any further research or experiments on the ground.

Item agreed to.

Science service—

7. Bacteriology and dairy research, $79,498.

Mr. BRYCE: Can the minister tell us anything about the research work being done with regard to milk in the Winnipeg district?

Mr. GARDINER: On this particular item?

Mr. BRYCE: If this is not the right item, I shall raise the matter at another time.

Mr. GARDINER: There is nothing being done in bacteriology at Winnipeg.

Item agreed to.

Science service—

Entomology—

10. Agricultural entomology, $857,519.

Mr. FRASER: What progress, if any, has been made in the last year in regard to the peach worm?

Mr. GARDINER: The departmental officers who are concerned with this matter think they have it fairly well under control through spraying and through the use of parasites in order to destroy the worm.

Mr. FRASER: Is there any check on the sale of the peaches which have worms in them? I have reference to shipping them out of the province.

Mr. KNOWLES: The peaches or the worms?

Mr. FRASER: That is, shipping peaches out of the province.

Mr. GARDINER: There is not any quarantine on it now. The only control we have is preventive.

Item agreed to.

Science service—

Entomology—

11. Forest entomology, $827,297.

Mr. CARDIFF: Is any attempt being made to conserve the young trees, and not allow them to be cut under a certain size? Timber men and mill men who buy tracts of timber in the country go into the bush and cut down every tree there. Trees under a certain size are not of any value to them. I would say that it does not pay them to do the cutting of trees under the six-inch size. Is any attempt being made to conserve them?

Mr. GARDINER: So far as our department is concerned, we have control of entomology only as related to the forests. The activities which are spoken of are really under provincial control.

Mr. FRASER: Has any progress been made with regard to pine rust? I notice this year that throughout the country a great many pine trees are dying or have died just within the last six or seven months.

Mr. GARDINER: No effective way of controlling pine rust has been found. Investigations and research work are being carried on with regard to it, but no system of handling it effectively has yet been developed.

Mr. FRASER: In the southern part of Ontario this year I noticed that many trees were dying, especially in my own district. I wondered if there was any chance of this disease being stopped.

Item agreed to.

Experimental farms service—
13. Administration, $97,448.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I am not sure that this is the right item, but I think it would be. I should like to ask the minister about the later types of wheat. I have special reference to a type Durum wheat which I think is called "Stewart". Will the minister tell us what research has been done with respect to both durum and hard wheat? What are the latest types which the experimental people are now recommending?

Mr. GARDINER: If the committee is desirous of having full information with regard to that, and I imagine it is one of the most important items that we shall have in the estimates—

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Yes, it is. That is why I mentioned it.

Mr. GARDINER: —I think I had better have Doctor Archibald here. He is not here at the moment.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I quite agree.

Mr. GARDINER: I would suggest that we allow items 13, 14 and 15 to stand, and go on from there. As soon as Doctor Archibald comes in, I shall get the full information. He will be here in a few minutes.

Items 13, 14 and 15 stand.

Production service—
16. Administration, $43,855.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): What has been done about the production of live stock? The minister should at least make a short statement at this time.

Mr. GARDINER: As hon. members know, there has been some reduction in live stock production pretty well all along the line. There has been, prior to this year, a considerable reduction in hog production. During this last year there has been a slight reduction in the production of cattle; that is, during the year we are now in. There has also been a dropping off in the production of milk. Milk production is down, but not greatly. It was over 17 billion pounds a year ago and it is 16 billion and and some odd pounds now. There has been a considerable reduction in cheese and butter production. The main difficulty in connection with all those products is that we are inclined to compare the present production with the production in 1943 and 1944. As I have stated before in the house, the condition existing at that time was an abnormal one. It was one under which at the beginning of the season of 1943-44 we had 600,000,000 bushels of wheat in our elevators, and when we had the whole of an average year's producton of feed grains on the farms or in elevators across the country, as compared with the situation in preceding years. Under those circumstances it was, of course, possible greatly to increase the production of all live stock products. As is generally known, hogs can be increased rapidly under conditions of that kind; and within the twelve-month period we were producing hogs at the peak of production. We continued that production pretty well through 1944; then in 1945 there was a dropping off; and there has been a dropping off until this spring when, as was stated in the house earlier this session, production increased in Ontario and Quebec. In fact there was an increase in all eastern Canada, taking the maritime provinces together with Ontario and Quebec. But there is still a decrease in production from month to month in the western provinces. In April it worked out about equal to April of the preceding year all across Canada, taking the entire production of the western provinces and the eastern provinces and comparing it with the entire production right across Canada in 1946. So the department feels that production is on the increase, and probably that increase will continue in eastern Canada if we have the feed grain.

Today I met a delegation representing producers of feed, feed dealers and dairy producers right across Canada. They expressed the view that the biggest problem confronting producers of live stock of all kinds is a shortage of feed grain and that this difficulty existed at the moment, entirely apart from what we might be able to produce in the crop that has just been seeded. There is a considerable shortage of feed grain with which to finish the live stock we now have. So, as was stated a year ago, our greatest problem in connection with production is that of getting feed grain. Unfortunately the area which has been producing about half the grain fed to their live stock and getting the other half from the western provinces—that is, the two central provinces—is having difficulty in getting in the seed this spring. It was stated to me today by these men, who are well informed on the question, that present prospects are that not more than forty-five per cent of the feed produced in Ontario and Quebec last year will be produced this year. If this turns out to be the case it will mean that if farmers are to finish the live stock for which they have already made preparations on their farms, at least fifty per cent more grain will have to be shipped from the prairies than was shipped last year. That is, merely to maintain production at the level of last year we shall have to ship about fifty per cent more feed grain to the eastern provinces.

As far as the western situation is concerned, I believe western members and others know it is about three or four weeks too soon to begin to talk about what our crop is even likely to be. However I had in my office yesterday one of the chief authorities in the west in connection with grain production, and he told me the prospects for a crop this year are as good as they have ever been at this time of year, taking western Canada as a whole. So I think it is proper to say that the acreage of coarse grains seeded in western Canada this year is as great as anyone anticipated it would be; and if the season continues to be as good as it has been up to the present —apart from the fact that it is about two weeks late, which may be helpful or otherwise —we should have sufficient feed grain to supply the needs of eastern farmers as well as the needs of western producers if live stock production is kept at about the level of last year. We are hopeful that if we have a bumper crop we can take care of even more live stock than we took care of last year. So at present we are urging farmers not to anticipate shortages of feed grain for at least another month, until we have a look at the western crop and are able to advise better as to what that crop is likely to be.

Mr. WRIGHT: Would the minister say something in regard to the establishment of artificial insemination areas in Canada with respect to dairy animals or other live stock?

Mr. GARDINER: I wish the hon. member would wait and bring up that question when we reach the item concerning health of animals.

Mr. WRIGHT: Very well.

Mr. QUELCH: Could the minister give any information as to what is likely to be the market for horses in future? I am not referring to the canning factories, but I should like to know if there is likely to be any market in Europe.

Mr. GARDINER: As hon. members know, our chief market for horses outside Canada during the last two years was in France and Holland. In Holland it was anticipated that a considerable number of horses would be required in the years immediately following the war, and they entered into an agreement with the government under which they agreed to take five thousand. Unfortunately for us, but fortunately for the people of Holland conditions were not nearly as difficult as they thought they would be. I was in Holland in January, 1946, and visited the officials of the department who were concerned with the importation of horses. They suggested that, although Holland had taken only half the number they had contracted for, they preferred to drop the contract and not take any more, because they expected to be exporting horses within a year instead of importing them. So that market, which about a year and a half ago we regarded quite hopefully, will probaby not be taking any horses from this country.

At the same time we had a contract with the French government under which we were to deliver horses to that country. A year ago last fall we did deliver horses to France; then in the spring of 1946 the French government expressed the desire to deal directly with our private dealers, and sent buyers from France to deal with our people and arrange for a considerable shipment of horses to that country. When the French minister of agriculture was here during the winter months he told me that they desired to get just as many horses this year as they had obtained last year, and that they were sending buyers to look after the purchase of the horses in the same way as they had done a year previously. I am not in a position tonight to say when those buyers will be here or the extent to which they will purchase horses this year, but my understanding is that they are just as anxious to have them this year as they were last year, and that buyers will be here to purchase them.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): I understand that the provincial government is undertaking to provide a certain amount of storage in order to build up a fodder bank. Is the federal government cooperating with the government of Saskatchewan in any way along that line?

Mr. GARDINER: For many years there has, of course, been talk in Saskatchewan of building up a fodder bank, and also of building up a bank of feed grain. So far as I know, most of the fodder, which has been stored up in Saskatchewan under any plan, up to date, has been stored in connection with the operations of the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act. We had considerable storage of feed at Valmarie in the south central part of Saskatchewan. Some of it was put up as far back as 1938. Some of the feed that was put up in 1938 I saw there a year ago. That feed was in the form of oat straw which had been baled and properly protected from the weather; and that oat straw, which had been there from 1938 until 1945, to all appearances looked to be about as good as when it was first baled and piled up. It is true that only a very small part—I would say not more than twenty per cent at the outside—of what had been put up in 1938 was still there in 1945. I would expect that. in view of the nature of the season last year, probably all that storage was disposed of last year.

In addition to that, we had promoted the production of alfalfa both at Valmarie and at Eastend. The hope was that farmers there would take 40-acre or 80-acre plots under irrigation, grow fodder and store it for the purpose of maintaining live stock throughout any drought year which might come along. Unfortunately, when drought did strike them two years ago, we found that the intention which we had in mind in the beginning was not being carried out. Perhaps that was owing to the fact that we had not kept a close enough check on the matter ourselves. When I was driving down to inspect what was going on at Valmarie two years ago I met truckloads of alfalfa coming in to plants in Swift Current, at which point, or at other points to which it would be shipped from there, it was to be distributed to different parts of Canada in the form of alfalfa meal, which could be used for the feeding of live stock in different places.

Of course that was not our intention when, at a cost of $120,000, we put in a dam and made provision for irrigation and the seeding down of land to alfalfa in the centre of the drought area. Our intention was that that fodder would be retained in that district, at least until some intimation had been given that it was not going to be needed there.

This year we did enter into an arrangement with the government of Saskatchewan. I am not certain that the forms are completely signed up; nevertheless an agreement has been reached. Before stating what the arrangement is, I should point out that there is a development under which we drain Rush lake, and seed down part of it. That has been available for the purpose of providing feed. I was going to say that in connection with the Swift Current storage project, or the Swift Current irrigation project which, as hon. members from Saskatchewan will know, extends from west of Swift Current over to Rush lake and the district surrounding it, we have this year entered into an arrangement with the provincial government under which they have the first claim upon the feed that may be produced on this land for the purpose of providing forage for live stock. If they do not require it, then, of course, the federal government has the right to dispose of it in different ways, in order to make provision for securing the feed position. There is complete cooperation between the two governments in connection with that activity.

I may say that is a plan which has been worked out as a result of experience over the years and which, it is hoped, we shall be able to apply in any areas where irrigation is being carried on with the support of moneys provided by the federal government.

Mr. WRIGHT: The minister has stated that when they began the production of alfalfa it was the intention that it should be used in the area in which it was produced. He stated also, however, that a year ago he found that quantities of it were being shipped out. When that was the intention, did the government make any provision for purchasing and storing it? Otherwise it was only natural that the farmers who produced it would sell it. Until the dominion or the provinces made some provision for the purchase and storing of it, it seems to me it would continue to be shipped, because the people producing it will need the cash, and naturally they will sell it.

Mr. GARDINER: As I said earlier, I think some of the blame for what happened can be placed on the administration of the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act in connection with that project. But, as I said later, there has been developed a plan under which the provincial government has the right to purchase the feed and make use of it, first; and after they have exercised their right the federal government still has the right to make use of the feed in order to assist people in those areas.

Mr. McLURE: Under these items for production service I am wondering if I might ask whether the special freight rates on coarse grains from the west to the maritime provinces will be continued for the benefit of farmers in the production of live stock?

Mr. GARDINER: The question does not really come under this item, but rather under the special votes. However I do not know that there is any real objection to discussing it now. It does come under the heading of production. But the expenditure itself, in connection with the paying of freight rates and assistance to farmers through the payment of subsidies does not really come under this vote, and part of it is under trade and commerce.

Mr. McLURE: Is there any assurance that it will be continued?

Mr. GARDINER: We have already announced that the freight on feed grains will be paid until July 31, 1948. That was announced as part of the feed grains policy earlier in the session; and, of course, it is the intention of the government to carry out that undertaking. At least until July 31, 1948, the government has undertaken to pay the freight on all grains moving east for feeding purposes from Fort William. The freight, on grain moving to Fort William is, of course, taken care of in the price paid to farmers in the west. The freight is paid by the federal government from Fort William, east.

From 1943 until March 17 last there was a subsidy of ten cents a bushel paid on oats to the western farmer who produced oats, and a subsidy of fifteen cents a bushel to the western farmer who produced barley. On March 17 not only did we announce the continuation of the payment of freight, but in order to encourage the production of more barley we announced that the price of barley would be based on a floor of ninety cents for No. 1 feed barley. The intention was to have that apply when it was first proposed from August 1, on, in order to encourage the production of more barley in 1947. But we realized that, unless something was done further than that, no barley would be delivered until August 1, 1947. The farmer would simply hold it for a higher price. Therefore we announced that the higher price would come into effect that evening at midnight, and that all barley was then worth, not 64¾ cents, as it had been prior to that date, but that it was worth ninety cents, basis number one feed at Fort William. And having said that with regard to barley which was not yet delivered, we at the same time said that we would make provision for paying at the same rate all the farmers who had delivered barley during 1946-47. Provision was made for taking over the barley then in elevators, and making that policy effective.

In order to carry out our undertaking with the eastern farmer, in view of the fact that we had said to him that the ceiling price for his barley would be 64¾ cents during 1946-47, which we were under obligation to carry out down to August 1, 1947, we undertook to maintain the price to the eastern farmer at 64¾ cents down to August 1, but not beyond that date. This necessitated our paying out by way of subsidy considerably more than the fifteen cents we had previously paid out. We thought that would amount to about twenty-five cents a bushel, but in the process of carrying out the policy it actually amounted to about twenty-eight cents, so that we were paying out thirteen cents more than we paid prior to March 17, and we now provide it as a drawback to the eastern producer rather than as a producer's subsidy. We are still paying that subsidy, but we are not under obligation to do so, in so far as any announced policy is concerned, beyond August 1 next. So to that extent there is a possibility that the cost of grain will be higher after August 1.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): With respect to the payments on barley delivered prior to March 17, that is the ten cents the minister spoke of, could he tell us how that is to be handled and when the producers may expect those payments? I have had several inquiries about this. Will it be paid direct by the elevator company to the producer?

Mr. GARDINER: That is being handled by the wheat board which is really not under my department, but my understanding is that the wheat board are making provision for the elevator companies to make payment to the farmers from whom they purchased the grain. They will have a record of the amount purchased, from whom purchased and the method by which the transaction was carried out. The government took delivery of all grain at the price at which it had been delivered to the elevator companies; the government took it over on a certain date on the basis of ninety cents for No. 1 feed or ninety-three cents for No. 2 C. W. barley. My understanding is that the arrangement between the wheat board and the elevator companies is that the elevator companies will pay that additional amount to the farmers. I am not in position to recite the details.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): It is just a matter of bookkeeping.

Mr. GARDINER: That is as I understand it.

Mr. BURTON: Has the minister given any consideration to removing the ceiling on the five-cent malting premium on barley?

Mr. GARDINER: Consideration was given to that at the time we announced the policy on March 17 and at that time it was thought wise to do it. However, on examining further into the question we found that there were many things in connection with which malting barley was used. When we were considering the matter first we had in mind the fact that it was used in making beer, but we found that it was used in connection with so many other things which were still under control that at that time it was not thought possible to take off the ceiling. It is anticipated that in due course it will be taken off. I could not state the date, and I do not know whether it would be wise for me to state it even if I knew it.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): Last year I brought up the question of the prices received by our farmers for No. 2 C. W. barley and other high quality barleys which they had shipped to the terminal at Winnipeg. They found they were receiving less than was being paid for inferior quality barleys. The spread between high quality barley and the lower grade feed barleys is not sufficient and the result is that many farmers are not producing high quality barley. I would suggest to the minister that he remove the ceiling on malting barleys in order that the price may be higher for these better grades.

Item agreed to.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. member for Northumberland, Ontario, would like to have the committee revert to item 7, bacteriology and dairy research, $79,498. Will the committee consent to reverting to that item?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. DROPE: Would the minister explain the increase of $3,863?

Mr. GARDINER: The details are set out on page 83 of the main estimates. It will be noted that for 1946-47 there was voted $4,350 for an agricultural scientist, grade 6; there is an increase of $150 in that item. Then the next item, agricultural scientists, grade 5, shows an increase of one, or $3,810. The next item, agricultural scientists, grade 4, shows the same number, but there is an increase in the pay. The next item, agricultural scientists, grade 2, shows an increase in the number and the amount is increased from $5,580 to $8,700. The next item, assistant bacteriologists, is not shown for this year. Then there is a new position, clerk, grade 3, $1,809. Then there are two other positions which have disappeared, stenographer grade 2 and laboratory assistant, the reduction in each case being $1,380. Then there is a new position, assistant technician, at $1,380. On balance, there is the difference between $32,160 and $35,013.

Production service—
Health of animals—

17. Administration of Animal Contagious Diseases Act and Meat and Canned Foods Act, $2,372,599.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I notice in the minister's report there is a paragraph dealing with tuberculosis which reads:

> Assistance to stock owners in the control and eradiction of this disease is provided under the restricted area plan, accredited herd plan and the supervised herd plan. Progress under all plans has been restricted due to an acute shortage of veterinary inspectors.

Could the minister make some statement as to the situation with regard to veterinary surgeons in Canada? I understand that the number graduating from the veterinary colleges is not large enough to fill the vacancies which normally appear in the Department of Agriculture. I understand that in the Saskatchewan and Nova Scotia governments action is being taken to help cope with this problem. Would the minister indicate whether the federal department is considering ways and means of increasing the number of veterinary surgeons in the country?

Mr. GARDINER: We employ full time all the qualified personnel we can get. In addition to that, we have made provision for utilizing veterinarians all over Canada. Up until this year or some time last year we required these veterinarians, many of whom had taken their examinations thirty or forty years ago, to take another examination in order to qualify to do this work. Since all these men who are being considered have been and still are constantly in practice it was thought they might be employed under existing conditions without the special examination, and in that way we have many more men on now than we would have been able to get even on part time. The work is advancing much more rapidly than before. That is one of the chief reasons for the increase in this item.

Mr. NICHOLSON: The minister did not answer the first part of my question. I understand that in Saskatchewan and Nova Scotia the provincial governments are making grants with a view to assisting students in the veterinary colleges. In view of the minister's statement that a shortage of veterinarians is crippling the work of the department, has the federal government considered making grants to students with a view to encouraging them to attend a veterinary college? I find from page 172 of the report that the percentage of prospective slaughters for each province varies from 24·65 per cent in Ontario to a very small percentage in New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. It is well recognized now that the inspection of animals has been a factor in reducing the deathrate in different parts of the country. Since a shortage of veterinary surgeons makes it impossible to have proper supervision, it would seem to be reasonable to include an item in the estimates for the purpose of increasing the number of veterinary surgeons who would be available in the near future.

Mr. BLAIR: On two previous occasions in this house I have pointed out the danger to human beings from becoming affected with undulant fever, on account of using milk from infected herds of cows suffering from contagious abortion, Bang's disease. This disease is common in all the provinces and affects human beings, and therefore undulant fever is common. As a physician it is only natural that I approach this question from the point of view of public health.

Undulant fever or Brucellosis is a disease which presents problems in control and diagnosis and treatment so far as human beings are concerned. To the dairy farmer, contagious abortion is an economic problem and seriously affects his livelihood. It might be of some interest to the committee to give a short outline of this disease.

In human beings undulant fever was first recognized during the Crimean war when the British army surgeons were unable to diagnose a strange fever which made its appearance among the troops. Undulant fever resembles several other diseases, and this made the diagnosis difficult in those days when it was rather hard to make a diagnosis without laboratory facilities; that is, they had no opportunity of making blood examinations. The British surgeons did not understand the disease because they had never seen it before. At the end of the year there were 8,000 sick men and only half the army was left fit to fight. Nothing further was discovered in the way of diagnosis until Doctor Bruce, a medical officer stationed on the island of Malta, discovered the bacterial cause of the disease. At that time it was called Malta fever. Doctor Bruce reported that the source of the disease was to be found in goat's milk. Goats are the main source of milk on the island of Malta. He discovered that by boiling the milk or pasteurizing it he was able to cut down the number of casualties to practically nil. Natives on the island of Malta who were still drinking the raw goat milk still continued to suffer, because half the goats on the island were infected.

The disease was introduced into the United States in 1905 through the importation of goats from Malta. A Danish research worker, Bernard Bang, discovered a microbe which causes contagious abortion in cattle, sometimes called Bang's disease. In 1918 a United States bacteriologist proved that Bang's disease of cattle and Malta fever, were caused from the same bacteria.

Undulant fever first appeared in Canada about 1929. It is now a fairly common disease, with a mortality of three per cent. Many cases, probably the majority, are not recognized, and are thought to be rheumatism, grippe, or influenza. Synovitis and arthritis, which we have been discussing on the estimates, are common symptoms, and it is necessary to make a diagnosis between undulant fever and infectious arthritis. Not all the cases are reported to the health authorities in Canada, but in one instance where 11,400 blood samples were examined, 600 samples showed the presence of undulant fever. Doctor Alice Evans, an authority on this disease, considers that about ten per cent of the rural population of the United States is affected. It is not a disease with a high mortality—I have already said it was three per cent—but it leaves a patient incapacitated from several weeks to two or three years, and it may leave permanent injury. Time may prove that it is one of the diseases responsible for rheumatic infections in human beings. Pasteurization is a preventive measure, but otherwise there is no cure for the disease. That is why I am concerned about the disease.

So far as cattle are concerned, Bang's disease has a high incidence in cattle throughout Canada. In 1945, among 2,713 herds tested, 905 showed a positive reaction to blood agglutination tests. This figure is taken from the report of the Department of Agriculture of Canada, 1945, at page 7. The loss to Canada's live stock can only be estimated. It has been stated that in Ontario, Bang's disease costs the farmers of this province alone over $20,000,000 annually. The United States department of agriculture has estimated a yearly loss of $80,000,000 for cattle, and $10,000,000 for hogs.

To prevent Bang's disease in cattle, a vaccine containing the living Brucella has been produced. This vaccine has proven highly effective for immunization purposes. It is necessary that it be handled and administered only by trained workers. Careless handling of the vaccine, and exposure to extremes of heat and cold, spoil its efficiency. The disease is highly contagious in herds, and many owners are living in fear that valuable herds, built up over a period of years, may acquire the disease. Even if every care is used to protect a herd, there is still the danger of infection being carried to a clean herd by dogs, horses, hogs, dealers' trucks, or human beings. The value of Cotton's strain No. 19 lies in the fact that it produces immunity in a high percentage of the animals, and does not permit the disease to spread to susceptible animals.

It would be economically impossible to wipe out undulant fever in human beings by destroying all the dairy cattle that have become infected with Bang's disease. Such drastic action is not necessary, and the disease in cattle can be controlled by the vaccination of calves. While a definite programme is being carried out by the departments of agriculture in the various provinces, it is not as effective as it could be because the campaign is not unified; it varies greatly in each province.

Bang's disease is subject to federal control in cases where breeding animals are exported to the United States or imported from the United States. The law, as it stands at the present time, permits cattle to be moved from one province to another, thereby helping the spread of the disease. In view of the tremendous loss to live stock owners and the danger to human beings, a widespread campaign of calfhood vaccination should be instituted to control or to eliminate the disease. Up to date, this is the best weapon that we have to wipe out the disease for the benefit of live stock owners and for the benefit of human beings. No specific treatment has been discovered for undulant fever in human beings.

Mastitis is another problem which is causing severe losses to dairy herd owners in Canada. Last winter I attended a meeting of milk producers and found that this was one of their major problems; in fact they discussed it all afternoon. Not only is it a problem to the dairy farmers, but it is also a problem and a danger to human beings. Streptococcus infection can be acquired by people using the milk from herds infected with mastitis. Penicillin offers a cure to this disease in cattle, but it is not always possible for a farmer to obtain a veterinary surgeon or to use penicillin as a treatment for mastitis.

It has been known for some time that bovine tuberculosis in human beings is caused by milk from infected tubercular cows. Any person seeing the pitiable results, especially among children, of this disease will readily agree that every measure should be taken to control and eradicate tuberculosis in cattle.

I have mentioned the loss to dairy farmers from tuberculosis, Bang's disease and mastitis. If these diseases are not cleaned up in our live stock, we stand in danger of losing our export market for dairy cattle to the United States. I am informed by the director of the division of live stock disease control in the department of agriculture for the state of Massachusetts, that twenty-nine per cent of all the reactors in that state were Canadian cattle. The same situation exists in the state of New Jersey. The regulations were changed in September, 1946, to become effective November 1, 1946, regarding the importation of Canadian dairy cattle. I quote the order passed at that time.

The state board of agriculture at its meeting on August 28, 1946, ordered that on and after November 1, 1946, only purebred cattle which comply otherwise with the regulations for importation into New Jersey shall be eligible for entry from Canada; that such cattle must be tuberculin tested by a salaried veterinarian employed by the health of animals division of the dominion of Canada; that they must have originated in fully accredited tuberculosis-free herds or in herds of like standing in tuberculosis-free areas within the dominion and must be shipped direct from point of origin in Canada to New Jersey, and shall be accompanied by health charts carrying the endorsement of the veterinarian in charge or his designated agent of the health of animals division of the Dominion of Canada.

In explanation of this order, I quote from a letter from the chief of the bureau of animal industry of the state of New Jersey:

In explanation for the reason taken by the state board of agriculture of New Jersey, you should be apparent of the fact that for a number of years we have been closely watching animals of Canadian origin which were consigned to New Jersey and became a part of the herds of this state. During the war years, our importations from the dominion increased remarkably from an average of 500 to around 3,000 annually. We have had animals certified for this state originating in Canada which within two weeks of the time of entry were disposed of for slaughter because of mastitis or other reasons which proved on autopsy to be generalized cases of tuberculosis.

We have had the experience with a great number of Canadian inshipped cattle that they would pass one test after arrival in this state and react to subsequent injections and be found infected with tuberculosis. Investigation brought to light the fact that the programme for tuberculin testing recommended by the committee on tuberculosis of the United States live stock sanitary association in 1940 and adopted by the United States bureau of animal industry differed somewhat from the procedure employed in the Dominion of Canada, with particular reference to the method of handling herds in which reactors occurred.

We have seen in our northern counties, where most of the Canadian animals enter herds in New Jersey, a steady increase in the number of tuberculosis infected herds, many of which were accountable for through the fact that infected animals of Canadian origin had been added to the herds. This increase became of sufficient importance to, in our opinion, warrant the regulation under date of September 12, to become effective November 1, which is included herewith.

Information that we received from various sources indicated that animals originating in herds that had never been subjected to a tuberculin test in Canada were being added to herds that had a tuberculin test history tagged with tags recovered from unwanted animals originating in tested herds but consigned to slaughter and certified as modified members of a tested herd for inter-country movement.

It was for this reason that the state board of agriculture was advised to limit the importation of animals from Canada to only purebred cattle maintained in tuberculosis accredited herds or in herds of comparable standing in tuberculosis free listed areas. In this manner, we believe that it would be very difficult for the shippers or dealers to falsify the herd of origin and as a consequence we would be assured of obtaining in fact animals that were free from tuberculosis.

It is reported that new United States import regulations are expected to go into effect on June 1 in this regard, and I quote from an article in the Toronto Telegram of May 13:

New U.S. Cattle Import Barriers Viewed as Blow to Ontario Herds

All But Accredited Cattle Barred in Some States

Adoption of Rule by New England Group Will Hit Bay of Quinte Area

Belleville, May 13—New United States cattle import regulations, expected to go into effect June 1, which will bar the importation of cattle except from accredited herds or from fully accredited areas, will mean a considerable loss of revenue for cattlemen in the bay of Quinte district, according to veterinary officials here. States in the United States adopting the new regulations include the New England states, where a very large percentage of export cattle from the bay of Quinte area are sold as milkers. Formerly cattle from non-accredited areas could be imported into New England providing they successfully passed two separate tests given at sixty day intervals.

Referring to the new regulations affecting cattle imported into United States, Dr. H. M. Younghusband, district veterinary inspector at Belleville stated that cattle from accredited herds or from fully accredited areas would still be eligible for export.

The regulations would affect Prince Edward cattle as well as those in Hastings, because although the first named county is an accredited area the county has not been completely retested as is required by the department. Four men are at present working in the county, but it is not expected the test will be completed until fall.

According to Dr. Younghusband there are but aproximately 275 fully accredited herds in the three counties of Prince Edward, Hastings and Northumberland.

The new American import regulations when they go into effect will certainly mean a considerable loss of revenue to farmers in the bay of Quinte district.

At a time when production of dairy products and live stock products are of marked importance to the farmers of this country, and to the nation, I maintain that every effort should be made to control these diseases which are working havoc and causing such tremendous losses in production and finances.

It may be argued that the shortage of trained veterinary staff makes the control of tuberculosis and Bang's disease in cattle difficult. I suggest that students in agricultural and veterinary colleges could be trained to carry out protective measures during the summer as assistants to veterinarians.

During the consideration of the agriculture estimates on May 9, 1946, on page 1351 of Hansard, the hon. member for Stanstead made inquiry of the Minister of Agriculture regarding the exportation of Canadian dairy cows to the United States. In reply the minister stated:

This increase in the exports of dairy cattle is just as important to the farmer who is milking cows as is the sale of milk itself. The farmer is raising dairy cattle not only to produce milk but to raise breeding stock that he can sell, and if the farmers had four million of dairy stock on their farms in 1945 as against 3,623,000 in 1941, and sold 47,000 head of dairy cattle in 1945 as against 13,719 in 1941, then I think it is only fair to say that they took in at least three times as much; and when you add the increase in price for cows over that period of time, they took in a greater increased amount from the sale of dairy cows as compared with the years from 1941 back. In addition to that, they have been taking in, as I have indicated by the figures with regard to milk, more every year, first because of increased production, and second because of increases in price as compared with 1941 and 1945 from the milking of cows. In the light of those two facts I do not think anyone will contend that the dairy farmer is worse off as a result of anything that happened during those years.

The minister definitely admits the importance to Canadian farmers of our export market for dairy cows. His department admits their failure to get veterinarians to give proper service and tests to farmers. The farmers are suffering, and the government has not been able to carry out its programme. It is time for action.

In view of the tremendous financial loss to dairy farmers through the ravages of disease and the impending loss of an export market for dairy cows, definite protective measures should be taken. From the point of view of the national health of our people, an opportunity is presented to eliminate a disease which, although the mortality from it is only three per cent, causes prolonged illness and suffering.

I make no apology for again bringing this matter before the committee. As long as I am a member of this parliament I intend to continue the fight to force the government to take action to clean up these diseases, both for the health of our citizens and for the benefit of the live stock owners.

Mr. CARDIFF: I do not intend to elaborate further on the explanation given by the hon. member for Lanark with regard to these tested areas. I just want to ask the minister what the government intends to do now that the war is over? Before the war, I understand that the government gave considerable consideration to the problem of tested areas. At that time, if a county desired to be in a tested area, it was required to make application to the government. I come from one of those counties which made application, and I should like to ask the minister now what the government's programme is for this year and what their intentions are with regard to carrying it out.

Mr. GARDINER: With regard to which county?

Mr. CARDIFF: The county of Huron.

Mr. GARDINER: My understanding is that no testing has started yet in Huron. That county has made application for it. As I stated a few minutes ago, we still have a shortage of veterinarians through whom we can undertake this work as rapidly as we should like to see it going forward. I am not able to state at the moment the actual date at which we shall get started in Huron. It will be started just as soon as we can get around to it with the staff we have and any staff we can add to it.

Mr. CARDIFF: Did I understand the minister to say that he did have an application from the county of Huron?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes. Application was first made by Huron in 1939.

Mr. CARDIFF: That is right.

Mr. GARDINER: Just prior to the war.

Mr. CARDIFF: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: And it has been held up from that time to this.

I think I should say something with regard to the remarks which have just been made. I believe this is the third time the hon. member for Lanark has brought this question before the committee, and I agree with him that it is one which he is quite justified in bringing before the committee and discussing on each occasion that these estimates are up. The desire of the department is to complete the tests of all the counties just as soon as possible. In the early days of the efforts to test cattle and have cattle destroyed because of their having tuberculosis, we met with considerable opposition in certain areas, but I think that opposition has now pretty well disappeared. When the war started we were getting along fairly rapidly with the bringing of new counties into the certified areas. But, as was suggested, there has been some difficulty in relation to the shipping of breeding stock into the United States. The position now taken in the United States is this. From any district which has been tested and accredited within the last twelve months, the cattle may move readily into the United States. But where that test has not been made within that time, there must be a re-test before the cattle can move readily into the United States. In other words, any cattle going from an area which has not been tested within the last twelve months will have to be tested; and that test causes delay in the shipping of breeding stock from Canada to the United States. Our desire is to overcome that difficulty just as soon as possible.

The other matter of Bang's disease is just as serious as the hon. member has outlined it to be. As soon as we can get sufficient help to undertake the task, and at the same time get into a position where we are a little farther away from the war and have more money for this kind of work, I hope we shall be able to do more. When I say that, I realize that I am talking about something which probably should be taken care of in spite of the fact that we are spending considerable sums of money; but as soon as we can get around to having staffs with which to deal with it, I hope that we can deal more effectively with Bang's disease than we have been able to up to the present.

Mr. WINTERS: It is not generally considered that there are many agricultural problems in Nova Scotia, but there is a real one in connection with tuberculosis tests. Tests in my own constituency have not been applied for many years, and farmers find themselves under a decided handicap. The minister and I have had quite an exchange of correspondence and I must say that I found him most helpful and cooperative. I know he has done everything he can under the circumstances, and there is an outstanding shortage of veterinarians. I know the farmers of Queens-Lunenburg are anxious to have the minister make some statement indicating whether there has been any change in the availability of veterinarians and when the tests are likely to be applied in Queens and Lunenburg counties in Nova Scotia.

Mr. GARDINER: I understand that this year, in addition to the staff we now have, we are getting an increase of between twenty and thirty veterinarians who can be utilized full time across Canada to take care of this problem. I am sorry to say I am not in a position to indicate just how many of these will be utilized in Nova Scotia.

Mr. REID: Will they be distributed over all the provinces?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. JOHNSTON: What salaries will they be paid?

Mr. GARDINER: Normally these men are engaged in the different provinces where they are now found, but that is not necessarily the case. We may move them from one place to another, depending upon the necessity for undertaking work at various points. It will be understood that special cases develop where tests must be made within twelve months if the cattle are to be exported. Certain areas where exports are very high, where purebred stock is being raised and exported in considerable numbers, no doubt will be taken care of just as soon as we can get to them, and perhaps other areas may have to wait a little longer in order to have their cattle inspected. If we make allowance for that, however, most of these inspectors will be utilized in the provinces and near the areas where they are engaged.

Mr. WINTERS: Could the minister say whether any of this new crop of veterinarians will be assigned to Nova Scotia?

Mr. GARDINER: I am sorry I cannot give that information. The competition closed quite recently, and the only information I have is that between twenty and thirty qualified. I have no information as to where they are located. I can get that information and send it to the hon. member in writing.

Mr. WINTERS: Thank you; I should like to have it. I feel sure the minister will do everything possible to see that these tests are carried out in Nova Scotia at the earliest possible day.

Mr. ROBINSON (Bruce): Following along the line of the remarks made by the hon. member for Huron North, I should like to read a resolution passed by the Bruce county council in January:

> I beg to advise you that at the session of Bruce county council held last week the following recommendation of the agricultural committee was unanimously approved in open council:
> "We recommend that testing according to the restricted area plan be commenced in Bruce county at an early date. It is eight years since the canvass was completed. Bruce is in a comparatively isolated position and has only a comparatively small boundary adjacent to tested areas."

Could the minister say whether, since we were almost first in line when testing was discontinued, we shall still be among the first when testing is resumed.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes. Bruce county made application at about the same time as Huron county. Both counties made application in 1939, and the position they held at that time will be maintained. Whatever order they were in then will still be the order when testing is resumed, and they will be taken in that order. Even if the application dates back to before the war, they will still remain in that order.

Mr. CARDIFF: It will not be necessary to make further application?

Mr. GARDINER: No, it will not.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): Following the question asked by the hon. member for Mackenzie, I happen to be a member of the Canadian livestock breeders' association, and our accredited supervised herds are not inspected by competent veterinarians for long periods, sometimes ranging from one to two or three years. The hon. member for Mackenzie asked if the federal government was assisting to bring about conditions which would give us more qualified veterinarians. I understand that the province of Saskatchewan is giving $1,000 to municipalities which have their own veterinarian serving a certain district. The hon. member for Lanark made a remarkable speech here this evening, and I think he can count on the support of all hon. members. I believe the situation is so serious that something should be done about it at once, so I would suggest to the minister and the government that grants be made to municipalities or other areas setting up and maintaining properly qualified veterinarians adequately to inspect our herds.

Mr. GARDINER: I neglected to answer the hon. member for Mackenzie on this point, and I think I had better do so in order to have it dealt with. The position is that the federal government itself employs all the veterinarians who undertake this work. We have many veterinarians employed full time, and we also have others who are employed to do this work and who at the same time carry on their own practice. So, as is indicated in these estimates, a considerable amount of money is spent for the purpose of utilizing the services of veterinarians after they leave college. As to making provision for them while they are at college, no definite grants are made to the veterinary colleges, of which there are only two in Canada, one at Guelph and one at Oka. There has been some discussion about the possibility of establishing one at the university of Saskatchewan, but I do not think anything has actually been done in that regard, though I am not fully acquainted with what has taken place there. While we have not made grants to these students, over a long period of years—and I think this is true irrespective of what government has been in power—we have made it a point to engage young men who go to veterinary colleges in various of the government services throughout Canada during the summer months. We are constantly receiving applications for employment from these young students, and we try to assist them through college by giving those who wish to work for us employment during the summer months. However, no direct grant is made to assist students to go to these colleges.

Mr. CHARLTON: Once more I take the opportunity to bring before this committee the gross injustice, not only to the veterinarians employed in the health of animals branch, but also to the farmers and all the people of Canada, caused by this government's programme in relation to bovine tuberculosis and Bang's disease. I wish to endorse heartily all that has been said by the hon. member for Lanark; I feel that this matter is of such vital importance that these things should be repeated over and over again until the government does something in regard to the matter. It is my opinion that the salaries paid the veterinarians are by far the greatest single factor in bringing about these difficulties. I have in my hand three lists recently circulated by the civil service commission. The first, No. 1263, lists veterinary inspectors, male, grade 1, $2,580; grade 2, $2,700 to $3,300. I will admit at once that these salaries represent a considerable increase over 1938 and 1939; but now I take the next list, No. 1282, which is for dental surgeons, grade 2, $4,500 to $5,100. I think we must admit that there is very little if any difference between the university course a man must take to become a veterinary surgeon and that which a dental surgeon has to take. Then I have a list No. 1265, for a medical officer, grade 9, epidemiology; $6,000 to $6,600. Need I go farther to indicate the answer as to why there are not enough veterinarians in the health of animals branch? I think not, with almost $2,000 of a difference in the starting salaries between a grade 2 veterinarian and a grade 2 dental surgeon. They both take four years to complete their course. I do not say this in disrespect of dental surgeons or members of the medical profession, but I must say that, in so far as the veterinary profession is concerned, it is a good deal harder course. I say that because the patient who comes to the medical doctor can tell the doctor where his pain is, and can almost diagnose it himself, after he is asked a few questions.

Mr. GAUTHIER (Portneuf): It is not so easy.

Mr. CHARLTON: But the veterinary surgeon must diagnose completely with comparatively few indications from the animal as to what is wrong with it. As I said before, is it any wonder that there are not enough veterinarians in the health of animals service?

Just a few moments ago the minister said that there were twenty or thirty more veterinarians coming into the service this year. I hope he is right. But I should like to ask him where they are coming from. The lack of help bogey has been held out for a considerable number of years, at least for the last three or four.

Before I complete my few remarks, I shall offer a few suggestions, the carrying out of which will not require any added help, but which, I believe, will give a better service and go a considerable distance toward controlling the two diseases of which I have spoken. I had not heard of any such number as twenty or thirty new veterinarians. As a matter of fact the last word I had was that there would probably be two or three coming from the Ontario veterinary college at Guelph, the largest school of its kind in the dominion.

Why are they not coming into the service? Because they can get practically double the salary by going to the United States. That is where most of them are going. I believe most hon. members will agree with me when I say that the veterinary inspectors of the health of animals branch can do more toward lessening the incidence of tuberculosis in this country than can the medical profession, owing to the fact that they are working at the base of the trouble, or where a good deal of the disease—not all of it—originates. I refer to their work in connection with the disposal of tubercular infected cattle and hogs.

Of course improved methods of sanitation and treatment have helped considerably. With regard to Bang's disease, or Brucellosis, I wish, first of all, to congratulate the Ontario department of agriculture upon the programme it is carrying on in connection with the vaccination of young cattle and adults in the control of Bang's disease, through the Ontario veterinary college at Guelph.

In that connection I should like to quote a few excerpts from this pamphlet, which I received recently. Various things have been said throughout the country with regard to calfhood vaccination which, I believe, should be made clear. Of course there is still a variation of opinion on the point. I believe the department in Ottawa is on one side, some veterinarians on the other. However I shall just read what Dr. MacNabb of the Ontario veterinary college at Guelph has to say. This is what he says about calfhood vaccination:

1. Build up a herd resistant to Bang's infection through calfhood vaccination.

2. Vaccinate heifer calves at six to ten months of age. A veterinarian can procure the vaccine on application to the Ontario veterinary college.

3. It is neither necessary nor of value to blood test the vaccinated calf thirty days following the calfhood vaccination procedure with strain 19 B. abortus.

4. Note that without the practice of rigid sanitation, no control measure can be a success. It is inconceivable for any biological product—a vaccine or serum—to give the desired results in the absence of proper sanitary precautions.

5. The vaccine used for calfhood vaccination purposes is a living suspension of strain number 19 B. abortus. Must be maintained at refrigeration temperature until used.

6. Develops animal's resistance during early pregnancies.

7. The only safe and effective method of establishing immunity in replacements for clean herds, so they will have a degree of resistance against exposure to the disease.

8. A means of establishing a relative resistance of the cattle population when used as calfhood vaccination programme on an area basis.

9. Calfhood vaccination will protect about 80 per cent of the animals for from three to five years. It will prevent the act of abortion in about 95 to 97 per cent of the vaccination animals.

10. There is no evidence accumulated to date which would indicate the transmission of strain 19 B. abortus. Hence calfhood vaccination has been practised in blood negative Ontario governmental herds for the past seven years.

11. No direct evidence has been shown that calfhood vaccination with strain 19 B. abortus induces sterility amongst the young vaccinates.

12. Calfhood vaccination is best performed on young calves, dairy breeds at the age of six to nine months; beef breeds six to seven months.

13. When abortion infection breaks in a herd, vaccination with strain 19 B. abortus at any age up to eighteen months is advisable. It should be borne in mind the older the calf or heifer when vaccinated the more pronounced will be the resistance. The blood will remain positive for varying periods of time in different individuals. Hence an animal vaccinated at twelve or fifteen months of age may be blood positive till it reaches thirty months of age.

14. Calfhood vaccination on a community basis is a recommended procedure.

Then, I shall read what Doctor MacNabb has to say about adult vaccination. I brought this question up on two other occasions in the house. Of course the health of animals branch does not agree with me, but I hope it will before many more years. With respect to adult vaccination he says this:

Not yet endorsed as a general routine control measure, adult vaccination has, nevertheless, been practised; unfortunately, at times without merit. Adult vaccination is justified under certain conditions. The problem of control of contagious abortion is an individual herd problem. Adult vaccination is especially justified in herds where the abortion rate is high—as in the case of herds previously negative and suddenly exposed to infection. It is also justified in herds where the infection is widespread and the act of abortion has become chronic, resulting in an annual herd abortion rate of more than five per cent.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: What is the hon. member quoting from?

Mr. CHARLTON: A pamphlet issued by the Ontario veterinary college at Guelph, under the direction of Doctor A. L. MacNabb.

Mr. GRAYDON: From Cruickshank on Bang's Disease?

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Cruickshank does not read his speeches like you fellows do.

Mr. CHARLTON: Then Doctor MacNabb states:

Adult vaccination is a possible means of salvaging a herd where the owner cannot bear the economic burden of a test and slaughter method. By vaccinating adult animals and vaccinating all heifer calves at ages from six to nine months in the case of dairy herds, and five to seven months in the case of beef herds, a resistant young herd will replace the adult herd in a reasonable time.

In herds where contagious abortion infection is actively spreading, the adult vaccination of blood negative, non-pregnant females reduces the severity of the infection. Adult negative females when vaccinated respond just as readily as do calves.

Adult vaccination is not a cure for abortion, but is a tool which when appropriately used will reduce the number of abortions, and thus aid the owner in the establishment of a young herd.

What is the policy of the dominion government re Bang's disease? For instance, after one negative test you can apply for the listing of your herd. Then there must be another negative test in ninety days and a third negative test within one year from the first test. I have nothing against negative herds, as I have said before, but in my opinion they are one of the most dangerous types of herd a man could have. They are susceptible to every infection carried in by birds, dogs, horses and drovers; they have absolutely no immunity, either natural or acquired.

On top of that, they are allowed to vaccinate the heifer calves but if, at the end of twenty-four months—the minister will correct me if I am wrong, but I think recently this was increased to thirty months; I do not know whether it has been made public but I believe it has—if at the end of twenty-four months or thirty months, as the case may be, that heifer is still positive in her blood test she is tattooed with a "B" in her ear. The fact that a heifer reacts to the blood test only shows the presence of anti-bodies in the blood stream. Those anti-bodies are in the blood stream only when the animal has the disease.

There is no evidence at all to show whether the disease was acquired by infection or through vaccination.

How do they arrive at this twenty-four or thirty months' period? Who is to say that when these anti-bodies persist beyond twenty-four or thirty months that the animal is again a menace to the herd? If the twenty-four months' period was thought to be right, what caused the change to thirty months? Why not thirty-six months? Under the Ontario department of agriculture plan they are allowed in one class of herd until they are thirty-six months of age. Then again if the heifer remains positive for twenty-four months, she may be negative the next week. If the heifer has been tattooed you can sell her only to a herd which is positive. No matter how big a price you have been offered, you cannot export to the United States because she has been tattooed. Yet a week after the heifer's blood reacted positive she may go negative.

Then again an animal which is negative but which has not been vaccinated may be positive the next week and may abort the following week.

The suggestions which I am going to make would not necessitate an increase in the number of veterinarians because I believe the suggestions could be carried out with the present help. First, I suggest that the veterinarians now in the service should be advised to consult with the owners of all listed herds in the country and explain to them thoroughly what vaccination means and the advantages of vaccinating calves. It should be explained also that vaccination is not a cure-all, that they may have to revaccinate after three or four years.

Some heifers which were vaccinated in 1937 or 1938 are now aborting, and this is destroying the confidence which a lot of men had in vaccination, although that is the natural thing to expect. These men should be advised that that is the natural thing to expect. Therefore I suggest that the veterinarians be instructed to advise the owners of listed herds to vaccinate all their calves, both heifers and bulls. I believe that adult vaccination should be allowed in the case of severe outbreaks in a listed or all-negative herd or where, as is mentioned in this pamphlet, the incidence of abortion is greater than five per cent.

There is one other thing I wish to mention. Because of this tattooing of the ear of a positive reacting heifer after twenty-four months, many farmers with listed herds—I do not blame them one particle—are having private blood tests made before the government inspector comes. They can then get rid of doubtful animals and retain their listing. Where do those animals go? I am not saying they do, but it is possible that they can go into negative herds and spread the disease to other animals which are susceptible. I should like to see these private blood tests of listed herds prohibited.

I should also like to see the tattooing of the letter "B" in the ears of vaccinated heifers discontinued. You have no proof that just because a heifer persists to be blood positive beyond twenty-four or thirty months she is a menace to the herd. I should also like to see the department permit the revaccination of animals which have already been vaccinated. We are not sure just what the desired age would be, but it would be between three to five years. I have here an article written by Mr. Conklin, who, I believe, is editor of the Ayrshire Digest. It is taken from the Ayrshire Digest and was reprinted in the Holstein-Friesian Journal. In order to corroborate some of the things I have said, I should like to read some excerpts from this. The first, dealing with the United States reads:

> Shocking as it may be, the score to date in the game of Bang's control shows that over three million cattle have been condemned as reactors, in order to have the present accredited population of only 827,809, a considerable number of which have also been vaccinated.

Three million cattle were slaughtered from what they call accredited herds, because of Bang's disease, to get a total of 827,000 negative cattle. The article goes on:

> The condemnation of vaccinated cattle that react is inexcusable and wasteful, particularly in a world that is hungry for dairy products—(unless they are animals of low producing or breeding value and in the midst of a storm of abortion).

Here is a short paragraph from the same article on the absurdity of the "24-months-old" rule:

> Consider the absurdity of the Bang's regulations under which the cattle industry is operating. The vaccinated heifer that reacts any time before she is 24 months of age is legally safe; and may be a favoured member of an accredited herd; whereas her sister that reacts after she is past 24 months of age is legally a danger to the herd and must die in order to save the accreditation certificate.

Here is an editorial note in the Holstein-Friesian Journal for October, 1946, in connection with the article from which I have just quoted:

> While this article by Mr. Conklin, who is secretary of the American Ayrshire Breeders' Association, deals primarily with United States conditions, what he says regarding outmoded Bang's disease control regulations is equally applicable to Canada. Excellent leadership in control by vaccination is being given by provincial authorities but the federal test and slaughter programme for "listed herds" still fails to recognize vaccination and meet present day conditions. Many good vaccinated breeding animals are being forever condemned with a "B" in their ears because they fail to show a negative blood test at 24 months of age. Herd after herd is giving up federal supervision because of this.

I do not apologize, Mr. Chairman, for taking up the time of the committee, because I think this is an important matter and I hope the government will take some steps to remedy the situation.

Mr. JUTRAS: I should like to make one brief suggestion to the minister. This shortage of veterinarians is an acute one in my province, and particularly in my district where we have several T.B. tested areas. One has had an application in for quite a few years. My suggestion to the minister is that the regulations of the department might be waived, in view of the acute shortage of veterinarians, to allow the old practising veterinarians to do the work for the department. In my district, a few months ago there were two practitioners in the area who were willing to do the work of testing for the department, but apparently the department did not feel that it could employ any veterinarians unless they had written the examination of the department. These men have been in practice and successful practice for many years and do not like to have to sit down at a desk and write a long technical examination, and they refused to do it. For that reason we have not been able to use their services. I recommend to the minister that, in view of these circumstances and the fact that there are no other men available at the present time—and it may be some years yet before we have qualified veterinarians in sufficient numbers—the regulations be waived, so that the services of these men may be obtained without being required to sit down and write the long technical examination of the department. If we could use the services of these men I think we could carry on the work at least in all the southeastern part of the province.

Mr. GARDINER: As a result of representations made by members on both sides of the house, including the hon. member for Provencher, the necessity for an examination of the kind spoken of has been done away with within the last year. These veterinarians are not now required to write an examination to determine whether they are competent to do the work. It is assumed that if they have been in general practice for more than one year they are competent to do the work.

To answer the question which was raised a few moments ago with regard to pay, it is true that two years ago the pay was very low. I think the maximum which most of those in the service were able to get was about $2,520. There was the possibility of the senior veterinarians going up to $2,800 odd. But now they can go up to $3,900, and within a very short time they get up to over $3,000. The result of this increase was reflected in the figures I gave a few moments ago. About twenty or thirty of our veterinarians are old practising veterinarians; quite a few of whom were in the service of the department before but left the service to enter general practice. But now under the new rates they have applied to get back into the service again, which does indicate that a considerable number of them think that being in the service with the present rate of pay has some advantages over being out in general practice. They are not required to write an examination of the kind mentioned a moment ago by the hon. member for Provencher. They indicate what their experience has been and are classified by the civil service commission as being competent to do the jobs that are available in the department. Not all of them are going to do the kind of work we have discussed tonight, namely, field work in connection with these diseases. Many of them will be employed in packing plants and elsewhere, performing services which the department requires of veterinarians.

Mr. GRAYDON: May I raise again at this sitting of the committee a question which I raised last session and which attracted considerable attention by the department and the minister at that time. It is a problem which arose in connection with a T.B. test made in the spring of 1946 which resulted in the slaughtering of the animals at the abattoir on May 15, 1946. It was a herd of Holstein cattle owned by a farmer named Donald McIntyre, on rural route Stayner, Ontario. He had a fully accredited herd of Holstein cattle and was engaged in the dairy business there in a very successful way. He had had for some ten years regular T.B. tests made of his herd, and during all that time none of his cattle had gone down in the tests or had reacted positively. But in the spring of 1946 no less than forty-four out of forty-four cattle in the herd reacted unfavourably to the T.B. test, and all went down. All his herd had to be taken to the abattoir in Toronto and were slaughtered there. During the testing of the carcass meat in the abattoir only one animal showed any signs of tuberculosis at all, and the certificate of condemnation which I hold in my hand for that one single animal said that the animal was not affected by T.B., but with pneumonia. I raised this question last year and the minister was good enough to go into the matter as fully as he could at that time. This is a problem and an issue which is given a good deal of notoriety in the district. It is one which is agitating many farmers in other sections of the province as well and is what is believed by the farmers in that section and others. Whether it is right or wrong I am not able to say. The minister ought to clarify it. The feeling among the farmers is that a new form of vaccine was used on this occasion, a new form and a new formula for the testing of T.B. in cattle. That would seem to be a reasonable assumption and is supported, I understand, by evidence that a new type of vaccine was actually used on that occasion. It would seem to me that we ought to have some information other than what was given the committee last session.

I should like to put these questions to the minister. First, what type of vaccine was used in this case? Second, has that type of vaccine been continued to be used by the department in view of the fact that this and perhaps other herds suffered in the way in which I have mentioned this evening? If that is so, then I suggest to the minister, if it is the fault of the vaccine, it becomes a departmental and a governmental responsibility to put that man back in the position in which he was had the vaccine of that strength not been used on his herd. I make an appeal to the minister. I think we have to go farther in this case than we did on a previous occasion, because I believe there is a definite responsibility somewhere lying on the department to see that more than the usual compensation is paid for that herd.

Here is a man who should not suffer because of what may be regarded as a departmental mistake or at least a departmental error in judgment. I suggest to the minister that he ought to inform the committee of the case fully, because the department knows all the details of it. It is a matter which has become quite an issue in certain sections of Ontario, and I should like the minister to answer the questions that I have put to him, so that we may have some clear conception of what the real issue is.

Mr. GARDINER: The explanation is that the vaccine which was being used in the tests earlier was one which was satisfactory to the department and is still satisfactory. There are certain states in the United States which use a different vaccine and which is more sensitive than the vaccine we use, and it was thought that in areas where cattle were being exported to the United States it was wise to have the cattle in those districts vaccinated with the United States type of tuberculin test.

Mr. GRAYDON: Was the United States type used on the McIntyre herd?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, it was the type used in certain of the states of the United States. The reason for that was that we were rather afraid of having our breeding stock debarred from the United States because of the number of reactors which were showing up through the utilization of this vaccine in the United States, and we used it for some time. It is true that the herd which is spoken of was one of the herds upon which that tuberculin was used, and a number of other herds were affected similarly. I am not certain of the exact number, but probably some eight or ten. The department decided to discontinue the utilization of it in making tests of districts, and we have now gone back to using the bovine test that we had utilized.

When cattle are being shipped to the United States we do, however, still continue to test these cattle; that is, if the district has been tested within twelve months and declared to be free we do not test these cattle; but if cattle are going over that do not come from a district which is free, they are tested with this same type in order to avoid having cattle going to the United States which do react to the tuberculin test that they are using. That is the story.

The question of the extent to which the department should assume liability is one that I do not care to discuss here. I am sure that hon. members will understand why, but it is a matter to which some thought is being given.

The utilization of the tuberculin test was, of course, brought about in a desire to avoid having our cattle barred from the United States.

Mr. GRAYDON: Have any other herds had a similar experience to that of the McIntyre herd since that time?

Mr. GARDINER: Most of them were around about the same time. I should not like to say how many were before or after, but they were around about the same time. The result of this general experience indicated that the test was too sensitive. It may be that there is something in the animal, such as the pneumonia which is spoken of, which causes the reaction, but when the animal has been taken to the plant to be destroyed veterinarians cannot find that there is tuberculosis extant in the form in which we are looking for it.

Mr. GRAYDON: I take it from what the minister has said that the matter is receiving consideration. If so, I shall not press the matter further.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, it is being considered.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I noted that veterinarians in the minister's department are receiving substantial increases over what was paid a few years ago.

Mr. GARDINER: About one-third higher.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I must congratulate the minister upon taking this step. I should like to support the hon. member for Brant who has argued that salaries are still so low that I am afraid, without some grants by provincial or federal governments, we are not likely to overtake the serious shortage. For example, in the estimates I notice that last year there were twenty-six veterinary inspectors, grade 1, who were getting $2,670. That number has dropped to nine. Then, in veterinary inspectors, grade 2, it seems that we have quite a drop. The senior class has dropped from eighty-two to seventy-five. In view of the importance of providing services so that we can accept the meat which is slaughtered and have cows inspected for tuberculosis, the minister should have no hesitation about going to the treasury board to get larger appropriations for this important work.

A young veteran in my constituency who had reached grade 12 spoke to me, after returning from overseas, regarding his plans. He is fond of live stock and discussed taking a veterinary course in the hope that more attractive salaries would be available when he finished. But after investigating the situation carefully, he decided against it. I am told that quite a number of veterinarians, on graduating from college, find that they can hang out a shingle in Montreal and Toronto to look after cats and dogs and be assured of a good income. If they go to rural communities to make a living in looking after live stock they are compelled to accept a low standard of living. Certainly the information the hon. member for Brant has given us with regard to the salaries offered to people with a medical or dental degree bears out his argument. And I think if he had the information in connection with salaries offered to men with a legal degree, he would find further evidence to support his claim.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I could hire dozens for $200 a month. You go on from there.

Mr. NICHOLSON: In the federal department here there are not so many with a legal degree who are working at that salary. Unless the minister can enter into an agreement with the provinces to make grants for the purpose of encouraging young people to go to university, I do not think there is much likelihood of our overtaking that problem. Will the minister indicate whether he has had any discussion with the provinces regarding the making of grants for the purpose of encouraging young people to take university courses?

Mr. GARDINER: I do not know of any discussions which have taken place with the provinces in order to bring that about. I can only say that there are about 100 in the third year class at Guelph. Most of these men came back from overseas, and their courses are being financed largely as a result of the fact that they were overseas. In this class I think it will be found that most of the expense of going through is now being provided. I know a number of these men personally, and they had the notion that they wanted to go through the course before they went overseas, even under the conditions which then existed. It is difficult for some of us to understand that because just prior to the war, as everyone knows, live stock were low in price. Most of the veterinarians out in the country districts simply disappeared. Even today most of us have to send twenty-five, thirty, and sometimes fifty miles to get a veterinarian. That is an aftermath of the conditions which existed prior to the war. I imagine what most of these young men were thinking of, when they were trying to make up their minds as to whether they would take up this line or not, was whether we would be able to maintain live stock returns at a level which would make it possible for those who have live stock to call in veterinarians when anything happened to an animal. I am hopeful that we shall never go back to the conditions we had before. The first class that will come out after the war will be the one which comes out in 1948; and there will not be so many then. The big class that will come out following the war will be the one which comes out in 1949. From there on, if we can maintain conditions as they are in relation to the live stock industry, I feel certain that young men will continue to go into that profession. To date there has not been any real necessity for discussing the question, largely because most of the men who are going in are returned men who are getting their assistance to go to university in the ordinary way.

Mr. DROPE: This matter is of great concern to all people who have dairy herds or any kind of cattle. What is the position of a county such as Northumberland, Ontario, where the first test was made in 1936, and a re-test was made in 1939 which, to my understanding, was not completed? Of course the war came along and nothing has been done since that time, as far as my knowledge goes. What is the position of that county in regard to the testing being taken over again? When can we expect that something will be done along that line?

While the officials are looking that up, I will go on with another question which has to do with part-time employees or veterinarians who are located in the county or adjoining counties? What does the department pay them per day or per head? On what basis are they paid, or does the department employ anybody in that way? It appears to me that there are in counties veterinarians who could be employed advantageously and I see no reason why they could not do some of the work. As a result of discussing this matter with a number of these men, my understanding is that the pay is not sufficient to warrant them taking on the work. That situation will not improve unless the scale of pay is raised so that it will attract these men to do this work. I think that is something which should be pursued. As I said at the start, it is of great concern to owners of dairy herds. I should like to hear what the minister has to say in that regard.

Mr. GARDINER: What I now say is subject to correction because I have not the exact figures here; but I will check it immediately after the house adjourns, and if what I am stating is not correct, I will correct the figure in Hansard so that it will be on the record tomorrow. My understanding is that at the present time we pay $15 a day to part-time men and they take care of their own expenses. We pay them $15 a day for this work. There is, of course, some question as to the manner of man who can do this. Since we raised the pay—and the pay was raised about a year ago, I think—we have had the experience of two or three of our own men leaving our service, going out into the field and taking on this part-time work. This would indicate that at least those two or three thought they were better off out in the field taking part-time work than they were with the pay we were giving them. We think the pay is reasonable, and quite a number of men are taking advantage of it.

On the other question with regard to Northumberland, I understand, from what the hon. member said, that one inspection was made.

Mr. DROPE: That is right.

Mr. GARDINER: And that the second inspection was only started.

Mr. DROPE: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: We do not seem to have here a complete record of Northumberland, but I take it that what has been said is correct. That county would stand in its same order of precedence as before the war when those two inspections were made, or when the one was made and the other was started. It will take its turn along with the others in having the second inspection completed.

Mr. DROPE: How can we get the information as to how the schedule is set up? Is any list kept so that we can see just how we are coming along from time to time?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, there is a complete list. As a mater of fact we are supposed to have it here in front of us. We have been examining it to find out what the position of Northumberland is, but have not been able to locate it. However, there is a complete list.

Mr. DROPE: When the minister says that he has a complete list in front of him and then says he has not anything on Northumberland, I would suggest to him that he has not a complete list.

Mr. TUSTIN: From the county of Prince Edward, which is a tuberculosis tested area, a great many cattle are being shipped to the United States market. The farmers in that county are having great difficulty in getting these cattle tested. Of course there is a shortage of veterinarians in that part of the country. I have been advised on several occasions that the independent veterinarians or the veterinarians who are out on their own, carrying on their own practice, are refusing absolutely to go out and test these cattle. They say they have not the time or that the price does not appear to be nearly enough for them to give their services in that kind of work. If the rate is only $15 a day, and these men are required to pay their own expenses, I submit to the minister that it is not nearly enough under present-day conditions and that it should be considerably raised. I would ask him to see if it is not possible to raise that in the very near future in order that these people may be able to take advantage of the market in the United States. About a month ago one of my constituents told me he was unable to have a shipment of forty cattle tested in time to carry out a sale he thought he had made, because the firm in the United States refused to go through with the bargain. That resulted from the fact that the independent veterinarian would not take on the job at a rate the farmer was able to pay.

Mr. GARDINER: If I may be a little more specific in my statement with regard to Northumberland and other similar areas, the position is that the country is more or less divided into blocks. That is, we have a number of veterinarians who are working in certain areas, and the number available will depend on the size of the district. While generally the counties—in Ontario it is counties—are taken in the order in which they apply for their first inspection within that district, when it comes to second inspections and others as we go along there may be some variation for the reason that those who are working on the task of re-testing may find it more convenient and less costly to take the areas as they go along, so that they may work right out of one district into another. That may vary what I said a few moments ago, that Northumberland would come along in the same order as would have been followed if the war had not interfered. But we attempt to keep them pretty much in the order in which they make application.

Mr. DROPE: With regard to the payment of $15 a day for veterinarians, on an average how many cattle do you expect a man to test in a day? I ask that question because I have heard a good many complaints by veterinarians that the amount the department offered them for this work did not make it worth their while. If it is $15 a day whether they do five or ten or thirty cattle, it might be advisable to change it to so much a head. Probably something along that line would be more satisfactory.

Mr. GARDINER: One of the difficulties in that connection, as will be understood by hon. members, is that if a man goes into a stable where there are 100 cattle and makes a check it is a simple matter, as compared with going to perhaps five different farmers to test the same number of cattle. The question of whether or not the veterinarians are paid enough should remain on its merits and be considered in that light. My own experience has been that if a veterinarian is fully engaged; if he has all the work he can do or all the work he wants to do in general practice; if he is able to do fairly well at that you are not going to get him to take on this other work, and I doubt if he would do so, no matter what you offered him, provided that it was within reason. But if you find a veterinarian who is not fully employed, whose time is not all taken, he is usually quite ready to take on this work. I think you would find it difficult to get the busy fellow to take it, no matter what the pay might be.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I know there has been quite a bit of discussion on this item, but it is an important one and I want to support much of what has been said by various hon. members this evening. The area in Manitoba where I live was made a restricted area quite a few years before the war, but in all this time there has not been a second inspection. Those people were quite prepared to wait during the war years, but in the meantime many other municipalities in the west have made application to be brought into the restricted area, and they are also still waiting. I want to offer a suggestion to the minister. I understand that quite a number of students are taking the veterinary courses right now, and I am wondering if this thing could not be reorganized and a number of these students brought in under a graduate veterinarian, in order to expand this work. It seems to me that if it were tackled in that manner at this stage we could expand the restricted areas of this country right now and also reinspect some of the existing areas which were tested five, ten, or fourteen years ago. We must remember that at this time the production of pure-bred live stock is important in this country. As my good friend the hon. member for Assiniboia has said, the national live stock people are very much concerned about this matter right now. The hon. member and I both live in a fine live stock country, though at one time it was considered the drought area; and we are right on the boundary, with the export market available to us. The minister should be able to give us approximately what expansion is anticipated for the coming year. Surely that must be worked out by now. I would earnestly suggest that students taking these veterinary courses be employed in this work during their holidays, to expand this work further. Our people back home are very much concerned about these matters right now, and if the minister could say that a certain amount of expansion would be carried out during the next year, in order to give these people some concrete idea of what is going on, I believe it would be encouraging to them.

Mr. GARDINER: I have discussed that point with the departmental officials previously, suggesting that we might use these third year students, at least; but there is some hesitation about doing that, for two reasons. In the first place, it is sometimes difficult to satisfy the owner of the herd that a person who is not fully qualified should be given authority to condemn his animals. On the other hand, the question is always raised as to whether the Americans would accept a test made by anyone but a fully qualified veterinarian. It might be possible to have the work done more quickly by having one student go along with each fully qualified veterinarian. I am not sure about that, but it is a possibility, and in any event we shall consider it carefully. I am just informed by my officials that they think some of that will be done this year. It has been under consideration, and we may be able to go to the extent of sending one student along with each qualified veterinarian and speed up the work in that way.

Mr. ROBINSON (Bruce): After this beneficial and enlightened discussion of cattle, I am going to change the subject to diseases of horses, nobler animals. We have good cattle in Bruce county but we also have good horses and good cabinet ministers. If any hon. members can come up to the Teeswater fall fair they will see that we have horses comparable with those at the royal winter fair in Toronto.

I am rising now to bring to the attention of hon. members the fact that there is a disease of horses which is not known to a great many. I did not know of it until the fall of 1946, when there was an outbreak in our township. That disease is called infectious anaemia; the nickname is swamp fever, and I think it also goes under about twelve other names. Learning of this outbreak in our township, and that the veterinary surgeon from the provincial department, Mr. Schofield, was there, I wrote the minister here in Ottawa. He was attending to some duties in the west, and in his absence I had a reply, part of which I should like to read:

While the loss to an individual owner may over a period of years, be considerable, there appears to be no tendency for the disease to spread to neighbouring premises. No regulations relating to swamp fever have been established, and the department has no authority to order diseased animals destroyed, or compensate the owner.

In this instance the outbreak of swamp fever meant the destroying of eight horses on one farm. The department at Guelph tried some different remedies which had not been tried before, including penicillin. The owner went to considerable expense, and found that no benefit was being derived. The result was that eventually he destroyed the horses which were infected.

I should like to give a few details I obtained from a book called "Diseases of Horses," published by the United States department of agriculture. It says that infectious anaemia was known in Europe as far back as 1843. Since 1900 it has been reported in twenty-nine of the forty-eight states of the United States of America. When a horse is affected with it he is incapable of regular work. Once a horse is infected, even if apparently it gets well, it is a carrier of the disease for life. The germ is transmitted by bloodsucking flies, and it has been reported that in a few instances in Europe men have been infected with the disease. The control depends upon the identification of the virus carriers. Up until now there has been no inoculation for the disease.

I should like to read some correspondence from veterinary surgeons with respect to this disease. The first letter is from Doctor A. L. MacNabb, principal of the Ontario veterinary college at Guelph. He writes:

Dear Dr. Robinson:

Dr. A. R. Campbell informed me that you were inquiring regarding swamp fever infection. As you know this is a condition long recognized; it is caused by an organism which is too small to be seen by the microscope and is transmissible from horse to horse. Age appears to make little difference.

The disease is transmitted by the exchange of horses during the incubative stage. This disease is not infrequent in the central west. There is every indication that it was introduced to the east from shipments of horses from these communities.

In your community I am informed eight horses either died or have been destroyed as a result of swamp fever infection. Dr. Schofield of our staff visited your community, and after post-mortem examinations had been made the evidence points that the source of infection was due to the purchase in the fall of 1944 of a driving mare. The citizen who lost these horses was instructed by Dr. Schofield to disinfect the stables.

The eradication of the disease would take place much more quickly if the condition were a reportable one, the infected animals destroyed and the immediate contacts.

If there is any further information you desire in this connection we will be pleased to communicate with you.

Then I have this further letter from one of our local veterinary surgeons:

In regard to swamp fever in horses I wish to say that I believe this disease should come under the contagious diseases act and when an animal is affected it should be disposed of and the owner paid for it and the remainder of horses quarantined for a length of time until one sees fit to release them.

And this is a letter from another veterinary surgeon in my district:

I understand that you are attempting to have swamp fever in horses dealt with under the contagious diseases act.

This is a move that would be very much in my favour, and I cannot express the necessity of having this disease more closely guarded.

In this territory in the last few years I have been in charge of several outbreaks, and of these, two were very costly, and not having authority to isolate these animals properly, and dispose of them properly, certainly gave the disease a very widespread area of infection. Especially in a disease of this kind where there is seemingly no treatment, and no apparent control measure, I believe it would be a very good measure to have it dealt with under the Animal Contagious Diseases Act.

I might also add that this disease has been recognized by our chief pathologist. The report of the science service of the Department of Agriculture for the year ended March 31, 1945 states, briefly:

Infectious anaemia of horses has continued to receive attention. A number of vaccines have been prepared but none of these has given encouraging results. For a time there was the suggestion that horses might be protected against the virus of infectious anaemia by inoculating another unrelated virus. The encouraging results in the early experiments have not been borne out.

And the 1946 report goes on to say:

Infectious anaemia — Further experiments directed towards the production of a vaccine were carried on. A crystal violet vaccine, prepared after the manner of swine fever vaccine, did not give rise to any immunity in susceptible horses. Intradermal inoculation of a very small dose of living virus did not produce infection, nor did it stimulate any immunity.

So, according to these science service reports, the disease is giving the chief pathologist some concern. I should be inclined to thnk it would be advisable for the minister to consider placing the disease under the contagious diseases act.

In connection with the local outbreak, may I say that the man who owned the horses deserved much credit. There was nothing to prevent his disposing of those horses to innocent people who would not know the animals were infected. The disease had been transmitted to his horses through a driving mare which he had purchased in 1944 and which had come originally from western Canada.

I should be inclined to think that in the event of an outbreak there should be some regulation whereby the disease would become reportable and animals clinically showing symptoms would be immediately destroyed and the owner recompensed for the loss. Probably other ones not showing clinical symptoms could be quarantined, or whatever measures are considered necessary could be taken.

May I point out that the book to which I have referred says there is no way of testing a horse to find out if it is infected with the disease, other than by the process of drawing blood from one horse which it is believed is infected and injecting it into a horse which it is known is not infected, and then watching the results on the uninfected horse. So that whatever conclusion the department arrives at will not be an easy one; they are so much in the dark about the disease at the present time. However I would be inclined to think the minister's department would be well advised to look into the matter to see what can be done in an effort to stamp out this disease.

Mr. WRIGHT: I asked a question earlier in the evening—

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Is there an answer to the question which has just been asked?

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. Since Doctor Archibald is now here I was wondering if we might revert to item 13.

Mr. GARDINER: Might I point out that items 17 and 18 have been fully discussed. We have been going back and forth, one to the other. Perhaps if there are only one or two questions to ask we might carry them, and then go back to the experimental farms item.

I should like to answer what has been just said with regard to this matter. It is true that swamp fever in horses is prevalent in some parts of the west, and there is a possibility that horses shipped from there have brought the disease along with them. The departmental officials are of the opinion that one of the conditions which brings about swamp fever is faulty sanitary conditions, inadequate or improperly balanced rations, exceptionally hot weather or other debilitating influences which react unfavourably on the animal. No specific diagnostic tests for swamp fever have yet been found. Mercurial chloride tests, while not specific, may be of some value as an aid in the diagnosis of swamp fever. Although swamp fever has engaged the efforts of many workers, no means of prevention or specific cures have resulted from their studies. Practising veterinarians employ certain treatments using a number of preparations, especially sodium cacodylate; rest, an abundance of good feed, good sanitary environment and the elimination of all influences that are debilitating in character constitute the best known means of combating the ravages of swamp fever.

As to the suggestion that they should be put in the same class as animals suffering from T.B., that there may be difficulties in that. One can understand why it would be helpful to persons who have animals suffering from that disease, but that is the situation. It is not so general as T.B. I do not know that it is in a class which warrants the same type of action as some of the other diseases in cattle, such as Bang's disease, which we have been discussing tonight, diseases which are more prevalent throughout the whole of Canada. The question of means of eradicating the disease or dealing with it has come up from time to time, but I do not think much consideration has been given to the suggestion of carrying on the same type of battle as we do against T.B. in cattle.

Mr. BRYCE: I am delighted to know from the minister that he intends to have more veterinary surgeons to carry on this necessary work. I think most of us who were in the house when the hon. member for Lanark spoke found his remarks most interesting. With his medical knowledge he was perhaps able to express his thoughts better than the ordinary farmer. The ordinary farmer thinks of what his own children may get from using milk not obtained from T.B.-free cattle.

Another point which has not been raised tonight, is the compensation paid for animals that are condemned when you set up a T.B.-free area. The compensation of $38 a head might have been all right in the days referred to by the minister when we got next to nothing for our cattle. It was about half the price, but today it represents only about one-fifth of what an animal is worth. When we have an animal that reacts and has to go out of the herd it costs us anything from $150 to $200 to replace it. I am referring to the ordinary good grade of milch cow.

If this compensation is not raised I know that farmers are going to be reluctant to let this test go on. The last time I spoke in the house and drew the attention of the minister to this matter, some hon. member said that $96 was paid for purebred animals. That is all right, but we do not all have purebred animals. The average dairy man today is working with grade animals, and I am sure the minister knows that. Compensation of $38 is not sufficient for an animal that is condemned.

When I sit down the minister may say that the farmer has the benefit of the beef as well, which brings quite a good price today. However, in the case of the animal that goes into the tank you get nothing but the $38 and it may be worth $150 or $160. I went through this in 1939, and in the case of some of my animals I got the whole animal less the head whereas in the case of others I got a couple of quarters.

I think the government will have to revise their policy and make the compensation higher than $38. I want to assure the minister that I am not talking just for myself because I live in a T.B.-free area. I have in my room a file containing half a dozen resolutions from locals of the Manitoba federation of agriculture urging me to bring this matter before the committee at this time. I hope the minister will see his way clear to revise this schedule and make it fairer than it is at the present time.

Mr. MILLER: Until the minister spoke a moment ago, I did not know that we were considering item 18.

Mr. GARDINER: If there is a desire to discuss item 18 at some length, I think, out of fairness to the hon. member for Souris and to Doctor Archibald who has been brought here to answer some questions, we should deal first with item 17.

Mr. MILLER: I am not going to discuss it at length; I simply want to confirm what the hon. member for Selkirk said. I notice that item 18, compensation for animals slaughtered, is decreased by $150,000. Can the minister tell us the reason for that decrease? I am not a farmer, but it seems to me that if there have not been inspections since before the war the number that would go down on T.B. tests would be much greater than those last year. Perhaps the item should have been increased instead of decreased, but the department would know more about that than I. I should like the minister to tell us why there has been a decrease in this particular item. Like the hon. member for Selkirk, I have been getting resolutions from various farm organizations and, as he said, they emphasize the fact that this compensation is based on pre-war values, whereas the present price of animals is quite high. The farmers feel that some consideration should be given to increasing the compensation paid for animals that go down in the tests.

Mr. GARDINER: The main reason for the amount of the compensation being down is the fact that much of our inspection this year will be done in areas which have been tested once. We are assuming that there will not be so much cost involved. We may be wrong, in which case we shall have to ask for a supplementary vote to cover it.

Mr. MILLER: Is there any thought in the mind of the minister that the compensation should be increased by the government?

Mr. GARDINER: Our experience is that in the case of nine out of ten cattle destroyed the compensation plus the value of the meat is obtained and the owner is able to get pretty well the value of the animal, and in many cases more than the value. It is true that there are exceptional cases where the condition indicated by the hon. member for Selkirk exists, but I am informed that, with the price of meat being what it is and the $40, which is the top limit that can be paid for grade cattle, those two combined pretty well take care of the value of the cattle.

Mr. BRYCE: Would the minister consider varying that where there is a total loss? A man's animal goes right into the tank; they keep even the price of the hide for killing the animal, and the owner gets nothing.

Mr. GARDINER: There might be some reason for that in exceptional cases, but in most cases where you find T.B. in a herd, one such animal may go down but others may be affected. It is difficult to deal with individual cases under a general provision of this kind. I do not know just how you would go about it. You might say that where the animal condemned entirely and went into the tank was the only animal condemned in a herd, the entire payment should be made, but the matter has not been considered from that point of view up to the present.

Mr. BRYCE: You might do something better in the first test when clearing up the area.

Mr. GARDINER: We shall have another look at the matter and see whether anything can be done.

Mr. CHARLTON: I should like to support what the hon. member for Bruce has said in regard to swamp fever. Could you not quarantine a small area if it were known that swamp fever suspects were in the district? The present regulations seem unfair to the chap who has an opportunity of disposing of an animal that he knows is subject to the disease, but he is fair enough to have it slaughtered and he gets no remuneration whatsoever. That seems conducive to spreading the disease around other districts, because a man who was not honest could dispose of an affected animal to an unsuspecting purchaser.

Mr. GARDINER: I am informed that this disease is found on particular farms here and there, that it does not cover an entire district. I know, from all the difficulties we have had in connection with quarantining dogs, that if we started quarantining horses we would run into great difficulty, because the man who had a team which was well would want to use them to drive into town, and so forth. I really do not know enough about the disease to say whether quarantining would be worth while; but, judging from the letter read tonight and from the statement we have here from the authorities, there is some question whether the disease is carried from one animal to another as some other diseases are.

Mr. CHARLTON: If it were made a reportable disease, that would be of some help.

Mr. GARDINER: That might be worth while.

Mr. ROBINSON (Bruce): I have word from high officials in the department that they would be agreeable to some degree of control being put on this disease. I doubt if it would cost the country much money because there is a vast difference between this disease and diseases of cattle that are widespread and readily detectable. An animal that shows clinical symptoms of this disease should be immediately slaughtered and the owner recompensed, and control should be kept of all the outbreaks throughout Canada. I do not know whether a system of quarantine could be worked out, but there is no comparison between the diseases of cattle and this disease, which is so hard to detect.

Mr. WHITE (Middlesex East): I have had requests from several farmers in the county of Middlesex to have an inspection of their herds so that they could have their herds accredited. We in western Ontario this year are facing a poor crop year. Many of the farmers around me have not yet sown their spring grain. We hear of things being done for the west when they have bad years, and if the farmers of the east could reap a little more from their live stock by having their herds accredited as soon as possible, if some of these veterinary surgeons who are to be made available for this work could be located in Ontario or western Ontario to speed up the work of testing herds in this critical year, it would be of advantage to our farmers.

We hear of the shortage of United States dollars. Probably the one county in Ontario that brings into this country the most United States dollars through the sale of its good live stock is Middlesex county. Prior to the war, our exhibitors of live stock from Middlesex county took more prize money at the Chicago exposition than any state in the American union. So, speaking for the live stock breeders of the county of Middlesex, I hope that something can be done along this line, and shortly.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): Would the minister indicate the government's policy in regard to vaccine used for Bang's disease? On the prairies our veterinarians have to go long distances, owing to the shortage of veterinarians, to inoculate herds. I should also like to know whether the vaccine is free?

Mr. GARDINER: No, the vaccine is not free. We issue it under permit to veterinarians in different areas who utilize the vaccine to test cattle shipped out of Canada to the United States, but it is not free. I would ask, Mr. Chairman, that item 18 stand and that we revert to item 13.

Item stands.

Experimental farms service—
13. Experimental farms service administration, $97,448.

Mr. GARDINER: A question was asked by the hon. member for Souris with regard to the new wheats that have been produced. There is a new wheat known as Redman, which is resistant to both leaf and stem rust.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): That is a hard wheat—

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, a hard wheat for the southern areas for the western section. There is about 30,000 bushels of it now being distributed to the seed growers' association to be multiplied and distributed, as special strains of wheat and other grains always are. Then there is also a wheat known as Saunders, which is a northern wheat and will replace Garnet for growing in the northern areas. There are about 20,000 bushels of that being multiplied for distribution in the same way.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): What have been the results of the latest experiments with durum wheat?

Mr. GARDINER: There are a number of new selections, none of which is yet ready for distribution.

Mr. McLURE: We are now dealing with the administration of experimental farms. In March I asked a question of the minister which I think comes under this item. The question was:

When will the appointment of a superintendent at the experimental farm at Charlottetown be made?

The reply was:

It has not yet been made but is under consideration and, of course, it will be made by the civil service commission.

Since that time I understand the appointment has been made. There has been a great deal of disagreement with regard to the official who had been expecting it and who was acting superintendent for some months after the retirement of Doctor Clarke. While I have no objection to the man who has been appointed and brought in there, yet the man who was acting superintendent did not get a chance to receive the appointment, notwithstanding that his qualifications were equal to all the others. I also understand—and I may be corrected in this if I am wrong—that the civil service commission did not make the appointment on the records of the examination but were influenced by men in the department. Since it is a matter that should be looked into, I should like to have an explanation, because the young man who had been on the farm for some thirteen years and had given excellent service was recommended and well qualified. He was recommended by Doctor Clarke, the superintendent under whom he had worked, and had all the necessary degrees from the different colleges. In spite of that, he was turned down. When he asked for an appeal it was not granted to him. I should like to have an explanation when the officials are here.

Mr. GARDINER: The case at Charlottetown is one where the appointment was being made, not by examination, but by a promotional competition; that is, it was not open to applications from outside the service. There was to be a promotion, and under the first tests that were made the gentleman who was finally appointed and whose certificate, by the way, came through today, was placed at the top of the list among those within the service who were interested in the appointment or whom the department was interested in having appointed.

Provision is made whereby anyone who feels that he has not been given proper consideration can make a protest, and when that protest is made an independent board is set up which conducts another examination, not an examination in the sense that persons write, but checking the qualifications of the different applicants. That independent board again placed the same man at the head of the list. That was done through the civil service commission, not through the department itself. The appeal is through the civil service commission.

Mr. McLURE: Who was that independent board?

Mr. GARDINER: I am informed that they were appointed by the civil service commission. The officials who are here are not able to give the names of them at the moment.

Mr. McLURE: It is a vital question and I should like to have it answered.

Mr. GARDINER: I can get these names later when we are on the estimates. If we get back to these estimates tomorrow I shall bring in the names at that time. The present appointee was placed again at the head of the list, and I understand that the other gentleman who made application was placed even in a lower standing htat he had been placed by those who made the first test.

Mr. McLURE: Did he enter his protest?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, he entered his protest and the protest was heard under the regulations as provided for the civil service generally.

Mr. McLURE: I shall be interested in finding out who this independent commission was because, if the civil service commission could not appoint this man or could not decide who it should be and then had to call in an independent commission, I think the matter deserves some investigation.

Mr. GARDINER: The whole procedure is set out and has been over a long period of years. The civil service commission appoints persons to the service. That is, men write examinations and get into the service on the written examination. When it comes to promotion within the service the department recommends the promotion of certain persons within the service, and they recommend one over another or over a group of others and say that he is the person we think is the man competent to fill that position. If, as has been done, anyone who thinks he has not been given proper treatment by the department can lodge a protest with the civil service commission, and then the civil service commission determines whether the department made the correct decision. In this case that procedure was all gone through and the civil service commission set up an independent board. That board decided that the first decision was the correct one, and the man, Mr. Parent, I think it was, who was at Fredericton prior to that time, was appointed to Charlottetown.

Mr. McLURE: Does the minister mean by that, that this independent board answered the protest of the man from Charlottetown who had applied for it and reconsidered his case, or did they just decide that the first appointment was the one the department wanted?

Mr. GARDINER: No; they decided on the qualifications and placed the second man lower than the department itself placed him before.

Mr. McLURE: I shall expect to have the names of this independent board.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes; I shall get the names of this board.

Item stands.

PRIVILEGE

MR. DIONNE—STATEMENT RESPECTING POLISH GIRLS BROUGHT TO CANADA

Mr. LUDGER DIONNE (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. At the outset may I crave the indulgence of this house, on whose generosity I hope I can count, to make a statement with reference to the extensively publicized question of the one hundred Polish girls whom I have brought to Canada. I consider it my duty to inform the house and the people as to the exact facts pertaining to this matter. If my colleagues and Your Honour will kindly permit me to do so, I shall immediately proceed with my statement. It will take me about thirty minutes.

Mr. SPEAKER: Has the hon. gentleman unanimous consent to make the statement?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman may proceed.

Mr. DIONNE (Beauce): It has been said in this house that I am short of female help. That is true, since my mill was built in 1941. It is also true that there was a turnover of 550 girls in my mill in 1945. The reason for the turnover is mainly the shortage of houses in St. Georges. We had to hire some farmer girls from the neighbouring communities. These girls have no board to pay at the parents' homes, and they are not obliged to work. If they do so it is mostly because they wish to make a few dollars for their personal expenditures. Furthermore they have to go home in the spring to help make maple syrup and sow and gather the crops, so we cannot rely on these girls as steady employees. In a few words, these girls are not industrially minded, and are not looking to make a career out of their jobs. In the meantime my mill is operating under adverse conditions. Other mills all over Canada whom I supply with yarn consequently are in the same situation, because they cannot rely on steady weekly deliveries from my plant to keep in full operation.

In order to illustrate the dislocation that an irregular supply of yarn produces in a weaving mill, let me tell you that looms in such mills consume a definite quantity of yarn daily. When this plant runs out of yarn the looms have to be stopped and help discharged. When production resumes or increases, employees have gone away on other jobs and cannot be replaced except by inexperienced help. The same conditions apply to the knitting industry and dress-making establishments. The owners of knitting and weaving plants could not stand such adverse conditions. So they went to the United States and bought yarns to keep their looms in operation. As the price of yarn is much higher in the United States than in Canada, the Canadian government has to give a subsidy on United States yarns to these manufacturers, in order to keep the selling price of their fabrics in line with the ceilings imposed by the wartime prices and trade board.

Who will have to pay for this? The Canadian people. Who is penalized by lack of employment? The labouring class in this country. During the war I bought buses to bring help to the mill from neighbouring communities. Unfortunately this method was too expensive to be carried on after the war. I advertised in rural newspapers all over the province for months asking for female help. I wrote to the parish priests and mayors of municipalities from Beaumont to Gaspe, including the Magdalen islands, without success.

When the dominion arsenals were closed in Quebec city I got in touch with the employees social welfare officers of those plants to get some female help, but with no more success. I also got in touch with the unemployment office.

In 1945 I built ten apartment houses to shelter large families who would be willing to come to St. Georges. I had authority from the wartime prices and trade board to charge $40 a month rent for those houses. I offered them to my employees for $20 a month, which is the price they are still paying me.

All this was not enough. I was still short of female help. I cannot understand why I should be blamed for trying to improve the conditions in my mill, and at the same time to improve the conditions in other mills in Canada.

It has been said that the wage paid in my plant to female help was 25 cents an hour. This is exact for the first month. But the second month the rate is 30 cents. I would like the house to know that these salaries are above the minimum imposed by the province of Quebec. When girls become more acquainted with their respective duties they are paid on piecework. When a girl has gained enough experience she can make a salary of from $16 to $25 a week, according to her ability and her ambition. The price the girls have to pay for their room and board at St. Georges is between $5.50 and $6 a week. This is due to the offices of the good nuns who make it possible, by their devotion to duty and humanity. I think these salaries are not so bad when compared with those paid in Ontario, where the cost of living is much higher.

I have received many letters from people all over the country since this matter has been debated in the house. I will read only one, to show you that facts are much different from words. This letter is from Toronto, under date of June 2, and states:

> For the last few days since the arrival of the two groups of Polish girls to work at the Dionne spinning mills we have heard blasphemy over the radio and newspapers about you and your good heart. I, as a Polish-French girl, wish to tell you that, as I see this case, I am proud to say I see nothing wrong. What you are doing to my Polish sisters is a great magnificent deed.
> I cannot express myself exactly what I think, but I am very proud of your work.
> I would like to tell you that these people who spread blasphemies about your work are people who do not look into their own front garden to see whether it is as perfect as the neighbour's garden, before criticizing others. These people say that you pay very little, whereas here in Toronto people receive the same amount and no one mentions about it. I will give you an example as to myself and many other girls similar to myself. In November, 1946, I worked as an experienced hand at $12.50 a week. That was after finishing high school and graduating a year later from designing school, which cost my parents $150. The reason I could hold out on a pay as this was because of my good parents that gave me room and board free. But my money was spent for carfare and lunch. The remaining money went for other expenses, which was not much.

The rest of the letter is to the same effect. Some people have declared that if I was short of labour the reason was that I did not pay salaries high enough to attract labour. Well, any textile man will tell you that it costs $100 to his employees rather than lose it in that when there is a turnover of 550 girls in a plant in a year it costs the employer $55,000. Do you not think that an employer who knows his business would prefer to give this $55,000 to his employees rather than lose it in inefficiency and be always operating with learners?

I have enough experience to tell you that when a girl has decided to quit her job, either to get married or to enjoy the beautiful summer sun at her home, there is no money to keep her working in a plant.

Some union members have declared there were 2,000 women out of jobs in Quebec city. I knew that. I endeavoured to take advantage of this reservoir of female help. But Quebec girls do not want to come to work in the country.

The responsibility of an employer is to keep his plant in full operation at all timees in order to improve the conditions of his employees. When a plant is working at part capacity it costs the same price for fuel, electricity, water, insurance, interest on money, overhead and the like. The elementary duty of an employer who is short of labour is to try to hire some and keep his mill in full production. In a spinning plant there must be a certain percentage of female help and male workers. The more female help I can get, the more male employees I can give work to. This improved situation will reflect itself in weaving and knitting mills, as well as in dress shops throughout Canada.

Someone has said that the textile industry is the worst industry in Canada in the matter of wages. In view of the information I have placed before the house, I hope hon. members will admit that the textile industry is not so bad, after all, so far as wages and working conditions are concerned.

The same person has said—and I quote this from page 2480 of Hansard.

> It is therefore unfortunate that we should bring these women in and put them in the worst industry in the worst province.

I am not ready to admit this. I have a duty on behalf of my constituents to protest against this declaration as being inexact. People living in my constituency, and more particularly in St. Georges, are happy, and would not change their way of living with that of the constituents of any other province.

We all know that the province of Quebec is the rampart against agitators and advocates of socialism, communism and atheism. These trouble makers do not make much headway because our people have the knowledge of sound principles of life, such as the dignity of man, that the state exists for man and his needs and not vice versa, and a firm belief in the unit of civilization which is the family. We also believe that the province of Quebec is a good place to bring up our families in the love of God, of our country, of our province and of our fellow man. With these principles we cannot help but be good citizens.

When I arrived in London I was directed by the intergovernmental committee on refugees to General Wood in Frankfurt. When I reached Frankfurt, Germany, I was received by General Wood and Mr. Elliott Shirk, United States director of intergovernmental committee on refugees in Germany. These people were very helpful and courteous. There are two organizations looking after the refugees: the UNRRA, who have charge of camps, and the I.G.C.R.—that is the abbreviation for the intergovernmental committee on refugees—who have the exclusive authority to analyse each request for refugees, accept or reject them. The girls were actually selected by the international Catholic welfare association and were examined by Canadian doctors. The reason why they were selected by the international Catholic welfare association was that the I.G.C.R. had no time to look after my request, being busy with 15,000 miners they had to send to Belgium, 5,000 families for Brazil and 1,500 for Venezuela. They authorized the international Catholic welfare association to look after my request.

It took me four weeks before I could have access to some camps. It would be silly to report all the details of the different conferences that were held on the matter between the UNRRA and I.G.C.R. authorities. Some officers made the same accusations against me at these conferences as those that were made in the House of Commons not long ago, namely, "sold into slavery; sold down the river," "brought here to be exploited"; "contract labour"; "cannot marry for two years"; "they are slaves until they pay back their transportation." There is only one accusation that was made by them which was not repeated here. Here it is: I was accused of bringing these women into Canada for prostitution purposes. I imagine this accusation was not made against me in this country because nobody would have believed it. It only goes to show the extent to which some people will go to accomplish their ends, to create discord and confusion amongst free nations while they proceed to grab the poor unfortunates now in displaced persons camps.

The result of these conferences brought orders from the I.G.C.R. to open the doors of the camps and let me in with the officers of the international Catholic welfare association. Just a week or two after this was finally decided upon, some members of this house and the press began to criticize me. It is possible some people in this country were unknowingly spreading communistic propaganda. After all, how can you explain the turmoil which has been created in this matter and which spread so rapidly, not only in Canada but in the United States and England? What do 100 girls amount to if you compare them to 850,000 who are in the German camps? A drop in the bucket. To support my suspicion, I will read an article which appeared in a Frankfurt newspaper on the 22nd of May. I quote:

> Frankfurt, Germany: Elliott M. Shirk, U.S. Zone, Director of the intergovernmental committee on refugees now in displaced persons camps, charged today that Russia has actively opposed and obstructed resettlement of displaced persons, and their tactics have created fear and despair in their minds, and is a planned campaign to libel the motives and actions of displaced persons who refuse to return to eastern European countries. Mr. Shirk also said that Russian demands for forcible repatriation was coupled with Soviet liaison officers attempts in Germany and Austria to accomplish the same thing.

After all, Canada is a small country which we do not hear much about in European newspapers. All at once the press of the whole world practically is talking about 100 poor helpless girls who have come to Canada. If Canadian planes had dropped bombs on the Kremlin, there would not have been more publicity. Is there any sensible man to imagine that people are simple enough to believe that I deserve all the sharp criticism and false accusations made by some members in this house, as well as in the press? Is it possible that some underground concerted action might be behind this propaganda? I do not think I deserve any praise, because the motive that animated me was business, but when I witnessed this great human distress it finally ended in a humanitarian action.

I have assumed the guardianship of these war-torn refugees, many of whom have seen their fathers and mothers killed and do not know where or if they have any relatives still living. Many of these girls are from sixteen to twenty years of age. I am grateful for this opportunity to contribute my feeble efforts to help them. I publicly state that I will carry out my part of the agreement to the best of my ability. I would like all of us Canadians, regardless of political ties and beliefs, to unite in a common effort to alleviate this blot on humanity. Let us get more refugees from under the shadow of hunger, despair and violence and from under communist dictatorship and regimentation. Let us give them hope and individual dignity and make them free. I am certain that when we all die our Creator will not ask us what is our nationality, or what language we speak, or from what province we come, but rather: How did you love your neighbour? I hope that my 100 little Polish girls will help me answer that question.

Some members did not like the idea of bringing these girls to Canada by plane. There was no room available on ships, therefore there was no other means of transportation. I had to take immediate steps to bring these girls to Canada and I personally arranged and paid for their air transportation. I could not expect them to swim across.

Some trade union leaders have declared that these girls have left one concentration camp in Germany to find another in Quebec. These leaders have not seen the building in which these girls are sheltered, because they would be ashamed to make such a false declaration. The foyer in St. Georges where these girls are living is a brand new building with terrazzo flooring all over, covered with pale grey battleship linoleum. The kitchen, dining room, lobbies and rooms are just as nice and clean as any up-to-date hotel in Ottawa. If you can call such a building a camp, my only wish is that everybody in Canada had such kind of camp to live in. We would not hear so much in this house about slums. The girls noted it as soon as they arrived, and seem to be very happy to have something to eat when they are hungry and enjoy freedom. Would it have been better if they had been allowed to come to Canada under open immigration and landed in Canadian cities without any funds? Could they have counted on any support from labour leaders who made this charge? I have a letter here from a man who came to Canada from England on the Aquitania on the 15th of April asking me for a job. I will not read it, because it is marked "personal", but it shows clearly that people coming here without a job and without funds may be in a desperate situation.

Someone has talked about English immigration. How can you expect to get many immigrants from England when the Britishers themselves are canvassing the British zone in Germany to bring 100,000 refugees into their country?

Someone has said I should not have been allowed to make a contract with these Polish girls. Why not? What harm have I done to the country, to the girls and to any member of parliament in so doing? Would you have preferred that the government let these girls come into Canada and then have them look for a job themselves? I can visualize the criticism that would have been unloaded on the government right here in this house had that been done. After all, I am not responsible for this contract. It was drawn up and three hundred copies mimeographed by the authorities of the I.G.C.R. in London. One copy will be given to each girl and the others will be kept at the I.G.C.R. office in Ottawa. It is the same organization that has inserted, with my consent, in the contract the clause by which I am not allowed to deduct one cent from the salaries of the girls to refund me for their transportation. I have a copy of the contract right here and I will read the clause referring to transportation. Clause (d) reads:

No deduction from the wages will be made by the company for the cost of transportation of the worker from Germany to destination in Canada.

Someone has said in this house that the girls cannot freely think, act, associate or marry for two years. This is too ridiculous to answer. Someone has talked about government supervision in the selection of immigrants. I would like to emphasize that refugees are dying daily in these camps. Of the number of girls examined, there were many who were rejected by the Canadian officers in Germany. I will not give the percentage, or the percentage of those dying in camps, for fear my speech would reach their camps and add to their sufferings. If you had witnessed the tears and despair of some of these girls who were rejected by the Canadian officers, you would be deeply moved. Who will cure the victims of T.B.? Who will prevent the spreading of the disease in camps where there are some 14,000 people? In some cases a room 10 x 12 is the only space available for two and three families. How can you expect these people to live long enough under these conditions to wait for government formalities?

When one has to deal with such pressing conditions, words and speeches do not make much headway or bring much relief. It is action which is needed, and quick action. There are hundreds of thousands of girls in camps who would make good maids for private homes. How many thousands can we absorb? No matter where you go in this country, in villages, towns and cities, you will hear people by thousands asking for maids. Having seen the suffering and the desperate situation of these refugees, I think those who need a maid cannot do any greater charity than to get one of these girls. I will go so far as to say that if the government is willing to grant the permits, the intergovernmental committee on refugees will handle the applications. The office of Mr. Colley, the representative of the I.G.C.R. in Canada, is located in the Royal Bank Building in Ottawa. I am sure any application sent to this gentleman will be given the attention and the cooperation it deserves.

The intergovernmental committee on refugees pays the fares of these refugees up to destination when they are brought over by boat and rail, so that nobody has to look after transportation. It may take some time to get the refugees here on account of the shortage of space on boats. However, when I was in Germany I met some people who told me they could put a boat at the disposition of the refugees provided that we could reserve space for 2,250 each voyage, in order to fill the boat. I am convinced that it would be an easy matter to collect 2,250 applications from the people who need maids in this country.

In conclusion, I do not wish any of my remarks to be construed as an apology for my activities. I am proud of what I have done and would gladly repeat it if necessary.

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to enter into debate on this matter, but may I ask the hon .gentleman, since he has mentioned the contract and read a clause from it, that the entire contract be tabled? I would also like him to table if possible a copy of the correspondence with the government of Canada and with the international refugee organization. Is the hon. gentleman going to table a copy of what I asked for? The answer is no?

Mr. HOWE: The contract has been tabled. I tabled it a week ago.

Mr. DIONNE (Beauce): I deposited the contract with the I.G.C.R. The originals are there. I have only a copy here.

Mr. COLDWELL: May we have the copy laid on the table?

Mr. DIONNE (Beauce): Yes.

Mr. MACKENZIE: A copy of it was tabled last week.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Fifth and sixth reports of the standing committee on external affairs.—Mr. Bradette.

STANDING ORDERS

CONCURRENCE IN FIFTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. MATTHEW MacLEAN (Cape Breton North-Victoria) moved that the fifth report of the standing committee on standing orders presented on Tuesday, June 10, be now concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

IMMIGRATION

INQUIRY AS TO TRANSPORTATION FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GORDON GRAYDON (Peel): May I direct a question to the Acting Minister of Mines and Resources? In view of the statement made a few moments ago by the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Dionne) which, as I jotted it down, seemed to indicate that there was shipping space available on boats if a contract for 2,250 passages were entered into coming and going, will the minister comment upon it so that the house will be clear as to what the hon. member meant?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Acting Minister of Mines and Resources): The Department of Mines and Resources has been actively engaged in attempting to find space for immigrants. It may well be that there is a source which has not been discovered. If so I shall obtain further information and certainly explore the possibility.

Mr. GRAYDON: Was I right in my assumption that the hon. member for Beauce did say that there was contract space available for 2,250 persons?

GIMLI BREAKWATER

REPAIR OF DAMAGE CAUSED BY STORM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. WILLIAM BRYCE (Selkirk): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works, arising out of a telegram I have received from the mayor of Gimli regarding the destruction of part of the breakwater by the last storm which is causing buildings to fall into lake Winnipeg. Will the minister give me some assurance that the repairs will be made at once?

Hon. ALPHONSE FOURNIER (Minister of Public Works): I received notice of this question before coming into the house. I called up my officers and they told me that as yet they have received no report of these damages. I instructed the engineer in Winnipeg to make a survey, investigate and report. The moment I receive that report I shall communicate it to the hon. gentleman.

PEACE TREATIES

INQUIRY AS TO APPROVAL BY PARLIAMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GORDON GRAYDON (Peel): I should like to direct a question either to the Prime Minister or to the Minister of External Affairs. In view of the grave uncertainties and disturbing possibilities in certain sections of Europe, does the government intend at this session to press for approval of the treaties of peace involved in the resolution now on the order paper and dated May 28 last?

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I think it will be proper at this session to ask the houses of parliament to approve the treaties of peace, as has been done in the United Kingdom and in the United States. The resolution on the order paper calls for such approval by the houses of parliament, and that is necessary before instruments of ratification can be deposited. When the motion was drafted in this form consideration was given to the question of how soon after it passes parliament it might be proper to deposit the instruments of ratification, which, as the hon. member knows, have to be signed by His Majesty the King. It was felt that we should endeavour to secure the approval of parliament now, and decide, in the light of the circumstances as they may exist at the time when His Majesty's instruments of ratification should be actually deposited.

FISHERIES RESEARCH BOARD

PROVISION FOR SCIENTIFIC, TECHNICAL AND OTHER OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

The house resumed from Thursday, June 12, consideration of the motion of Mr. Bridges for the second reading of Bill No. 264, to amend the Fisheries Research Board Act.

Mr. W. CHESTER S. McLURE (Queens): When the house took recess at six o'clock yesterday I adjourned the debate. At that time I had almost come to the conclusion of my remarks, but I have a few more words to say with reference to some of the conditions in the fishing industry. I had dealt briefly with fishing, curing and part of the distribution. I now wish to place on record the plight the fishermen find themselves in at the present time.

Today fishermen and the industry are faced with lower prices for their produce and soaring high prices for all commodities and all supplies that they need to engage in their calling. As I said, the price of their commodity has dropped. The price of everything they purchase has advanced to a very high degree. I should just like to give a few of these prices in percentages. Take twine. The advance in twine of different kinds, makes and meshes has amounted to about 150 per cent during the last four years. Rope has advanced fully 150 per cent. These two articles are largely used in the fishing industry. Shooks which go into the making of boxes are in the same position. Shooks for boxes which contain up to 200 pounds have advanced in price about 130 per cent. Shooks for medium-sized boxes have advanced 150 per cent. The smaller sized boxes which contain five, ten and twenty pounds and in which the great bulk of the fish is shipped have increased 290 per cent.

When we come to gear we find this situation. Let us look at the advance that has taken place in boats, for instance and repairs to boats, dories and all kinds of fishing smacks. These have increased in price from 60 per cent to 75 per cent. Wages have also increased. On the whole the fisherman is faced with highest prices on everything he has to buy to continue his fishing. The prices of all his commodities, averaged together, show a percentage of 140, he has to pay this on all the gear which he must purchase for his fishing activities. These are the conditions which face the fishermen, the canners and the packers. This is one matter in respect to which the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Bridges) will, as soon as possible, endeavour to assist the fisherman so that he may continue his industry.

For a moment I wish to refer to the consumption of fish, as previous speakers did yesterday. Fish does not seem to be in the class of an essential food. Housewives do not look upon it as necessary, and I think that is the reason why it is not consumed in the same proportions as other stable foods. It was recorded here yesterday that the consumption per capita per annum of fish was 8½ pounds, while the consumption of meat was 137 pounds, of eggs 38 pounds, and so on through the stable foods.

If the fisheries department could place before the housewives and the people of the country an educational programme to show the nutritional value of fish, I believe it would be a great help in the pressing time that the fishermen are having.

I wish to put on record a little item from the fisheries council bulletin with regard to the nutritional value of fish.

> Nutritionally, no foods are better and a few are equal to fish. Proteins, fat, minerals are abundant. Protein is the most important food substance found in fish, an average serving supplying sufficient to satisfy the daily requirements of the body. The iron in seafoods helps to prevent anaemia. Iron prevents goitre. The important body functions are regulated by calcium, phosphorus, copper and magnesium, all of which are found abundantly in fish.

I think that if we had proper advertising of fish, with instructions in the preparation of it for food, it would do a great deal to help the industry.

We have now before us Bill No. 264 to amend the Fisheries Research Board Act. The amendment to section 8 is intended, in my opinion, to take the control away from the Minister of Fisheries. Personally I do not agree with that. I believe that if more control were given the minister, so that he would not have to go to some other body when he had an idea of what was best for the industry, it would be better. I would rather see this clause remain as it is. However, we will deal with it when we come to it. I should like to see the minister retain control so that he could urge on his own government that they give him adequate allowances for the further development of our great fishing industries.

Mr. H. G. ARCHIBALD (Skeena): I will not keep the house long inasmuch as the members for New Westminster (Mr. Reid) and Nanaimo (Mr. Pearkes) covered the ground in outstanding fashion. However, I want to bring out one point I heard in the discussion, which interested me, namely that the solution of many of our fishing ills lies in the consumption of more fish. The point, as I am coming to see it, is that it is not going to be a solution at all because it looks as if we are depleting our banks to such an extent that it will be difficult to get any fish.

According to the December 7 issue of Collier's magazine, which contains an excellent article on the fishing industry, I gather that what is true on the Pacific coast is also true on the east coast. The grounds are being depleted to a large extent. Out of 100 fish caught in a drag, from 40 to 90 fish were not saleable and died. That was the result of a dragging experiment carried out by the halibut commission.

As far as sable-fish are concerned, in 1943 and 1944 statistical returns showed that out of 11½ million pounds of sable-fish landed by line fishermen, draggers landed 2 million pounds, and it is recorded that there were more fish in the 2 million pounds than in the other proportion. So that with modern fishing the beds are being destroyed in both halibut and sable fishing. Granted that they are under the control of the international halibut commission, and to a large extent the problem of a continuous crop is solved there, but the fact is that the season is now getting shorter and shorter. The season in No. 2 area lasted only thirty-nine days. Therefore it is not altogether price that is affecting the fishermen. The season is becoming shorter, and other means will have to be found to use their boats and equipment in order that they may carry on as an independent fleet.

On the east coast they have some form of credit legislation put through by the provincial authorities, but on the west coast we are not blessed with an advanced government that puts through that form of legislation. If we could get the federal authorities to assist the fishermen on the west coast with credit legislation, I have no doubt an independent fleet could be maintained.

I thought I would bring up these points, because it has been pointed out that a crisis is building up in the fishing industry. I do not know exactly how it can be solved under the present methods but I do hope that more money will be allocated for educational purposes among the fishermen so that they will understand the problem they are facing.

While on the coast last winter I received complaints that there is not enough money allocated to the university of British Columbia extension department. There is a far greater amount allocated to the east coast, and yet 50 per cent of the fish are caught on the west coast. The fisherman appreciate this service and would like to see a greater amount allocated to this department. With the number of boats engaged in fishing constantly on the increase, a crisis is developing.

I fully believe that in the final analysis, if it is not going to end in a cut-throat affair, the fishing grounds will have to be far more rigidly controlled than at the present time, and to a large extent fishing will have to be turned into one large cooperative unit where self-discipline and education will be scattered among the fishermen so that they themselves will protect their grounds. At the present time, with so many competing interests, the fishermen at times cannot afford to be honest, and there is too much bootlegging of fish, and raiding as well. The only thing I can see as a solution for the fishing problem, so far as the west coast is concerned, is to have a complete cooperatively owned system of canning and processing of fish so that the fishermen will work through their own organization to protect their own interests.

Mr. A. W. STUART (Charlotte): I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that my remarks will be brief and to the point, as most of the hon. members who have preceded me have been brief.

First I wish to associate myself with the remarks that have been made by those who have taken part in this debate. It would appear that in discussing fisheries members on all sides of the house are pretty much of the same opinion as to the ills of the industry and what might be a cure or at least some relief in a very difficult situation. As has been stated already, the fishing industry is the first to feel the effects of the post-war period. Today conditions are not good. The facts must be faced and the problems studied very carefully. In my own county, marketing conditions are responsible for an enormous drop in production, particularly in the sardine trade where over fifty per cent of our markets are lost. It is hoped there will be an improvement in the near future. At the present time the supply is very much greater than the demand. Undoubtedly this seems incredible to many hon. members who are aware of the fact that millions of people in the world today are without necessary food.

The matter of markets and distribution would still seem to be one of our major problems in the fishing industry. If the industry is to survive in the maritime provinces, home consumption of fish must be encouraged and markets must be found for surplus. On different occasions I have pointed out in this chamber the absolute necessity of United States markets for our fishermen, and have suggested the benefits that might follow an international gathering of fishermen and government officials. Another matter I have continually brought to the attention of the fisheries department and research board is the necessity of establishing lobster hatcheries on the Atlantic coast. I am aware that an investigation was made into the hatcheries in the state of Maine and an unfavourable report brought back, but this information does not coincide with the reports I have received personally from the operators of hatcheries in the state of Maine, or with articles published in their fishing magazines. I could read several of those reports, but shall refrain from doing so at the present time. The great problem the Maine fishermen have to face in this regard is the lack of funds to carry on this important work. Our problem is not lack of funds but lack of interest or action by the research board. The United States, with a population of 130,000,000, is spending less on fisheries research than is Canada, with less than one-tenth that population. The fishermen in Maine, however, are interested to the extent that they provide funds themselves to carry on this work. If a lobster fisherman in the state of Maine catches a spawn or berried lobster, it is taken to the hatchery, where he is paid the sum of $1 for it. In many instances lobsters have appeared at these hatcheries three and four times. Each time a lobster is received a puncture is put in its tail, so they are able to say that some lobsters have been caught, liberated and caught again by fishermen and returned to the hatchery. If that much interest is taken in the lobster industry in the state of Maine I think it is time the research board in our own country decided at least to give the hatcheries one more try. This would please many fishermen on the Atlantic coast; and until this is done the feeling will always be that the industry is being neglected.

At this point I wish to make my stand very clear in regard to research. I realize the value of scientific research to the fishing industry. The exception I take, however, is that too much time and money is spent on inland or sport fishing, while our commercial fisheries are neglected. I also agree with the statement made by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid) that we have too few practical men associated with the research board, too few men who have had actual experience. My thought is that the scientist is not always right. In his estimation a bumble bee should not be able to fly; the body is too large and the wings too small, but very much to his disgust and amazement it does fly. I believe this same rule would apply in many instances in reference to the fishing industry. Knowledge obtained over a period of years in any industry should be helpful to the government department concerned, and in this case such information could be useful to the officials if they were willing to accept it. I regret, however, that little consideration is given ideas that do not originate within the department. In other words suggestions coming from those on the outside are not greatly appreciated.

I have no complaint whatever in regard to the minister. I believe he is earnestly striving to put his department in order and to assist every branch of the fishing industry in all parts of the country. At the same time I fully realize that he must be guided by the officials of his department. It would be very much out of order for him to do otherwise. Any suggestions coming from the outside must be very carefully studied and screened by the officials, after which a report is made; and the minister naturally is influenced by that report in coming to a decision. During the months of July hundreds of thousands of spawn or berried lobsters will be available in the maritime provinces. It is to be regretted that they are of little interest to the fisheries research board. Therefore I would again impress upon the officials of this department the importance of the lobster fishing industry to the maritime provinces, and at the same time point out to them the indifferent attitude they have taken to date.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but the other day I was obliged to call to order an hon. member who was reading his speech. I think it only fair, therefore, to suggest to the hon. member who now has the floor that he is reading his speech and that he should not do so.

Mr. STUART (Charlotte): Well, Mr. Speaker, I am reading a portion of it, but I can assure you I am not reading it completely.

In one portion of this bill mention is made of superannuation for the employees of the fisheries research board, and I think this is a good idea. In my own town I know of employees of this board who have been working for the department for perhaps thirty years. Unless there is some change in the regulations, however, when it comes time for these men to retire they have no chance in the world of obtaining any benefits by way of superannuation. I believe an injustice is being done in this case, and that these men should receive exactly the same consideration as other people in the government service who come under the Civil Service Act. Two particular friends of mine have been with the department for many years. Their work has been very helpful to the research board and the biological board, and I feel that this department should take action at the present time to see that these people are placed in exactly the same position as other government employees. There are also younger men who have been with the department for perhaps only a year, two years or a little more. My understanding is that they have never had an opportunity of becoming members of the civil service. At one time I believe a vote was taken, but men who had been in the service for many years voted the measure down. Many of these employees are keenly interested in becoming civil servants. As to the older men, I believe it would be impossible for them now to pay into the fund sufficient to give them the amount of pension they rightly deserve and such instances some adjustment will be necessary. But I would urge upon the minister and the department that they give careful consideration to the providing of pensions for men who have given years and years of faithful service to the research board and the fisheries department.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, there is very little I wish to say in this connection, because, as other hon. members have said, the ground has been fairly well covered. But in my opinion the government—and by that I mean of course the Department of Fisheries—will have to give more attention to the conservation of our fish resources. I do not know that there is any natural resource which will respond more quickly to proper conservation methods than the fishing industry. On the other hand, the industry can be quickly depleted if orderly fishing and other conservation methods are not provided for. Of course orderly fishing in itself is a method of conservation.

From what I can hear and read my impression is that the fishing industry is getting into a bad way. Certain kinds and classes of fish have now reached the point where the supply is greater than the demand

If that condition continues or develops to any considerable extent, the fishermen, who never were very prosperous, will again be in a bad way.

I hold in my hand the bulletin for April of the Fisheries Council of Canada. I wish to draw the attention of hon. members to one or two statements made by Dr. D. B. Finn, formerly deputy minister of fisheries, now director of the fisheries division of the food and agriculture organization. I gather from what Dr. Finn has said that he believes we shall have to enter into international marketing arrangements in connection with fish and in saying this I do not believe I am placing too wide an interpretation on what he said. Dr. Finn stated that the surplus of fresh and frozen fish already developing would probably lead to more fish under salt, and eventually produce a surplus in that commodity. He said that might lead to a fall in price. And to quote him—

> If this occurs the danger is that fishermen's incomes will fail to support them at minimum standards of living. Price support subsidies and relief will follow.

Then he went on to point out that aggressive countries in need of markets are already recapturing some of the markets we had during the war. To quote further:

> The resulting fight will mean ruin to all—the downward spiral, which we know so well, will have commenced. He offered as solutions the conviction and understanding that this problem is common to all countries——and that it should be studied cooperatively, in an effort to find an orderly method of marketing. Then, further in this regard he said:

> I am sure that we all wonder what the result will be when, after recovery, Europe's normal production is added to that which we already have. The fish canning industry is well aware of such questions. Once again we shall have to face the problem of adjusting the power of the world to consume the goods if we are to avoid the consequences of expanded capacity to produce, the consequences which we felt in the depression of the inter-war period . . .
> Surely, if there is a solution, it lies in the direction that has already been struck. It lies in a thorough examination of the nature of the problem, such as is taking place in Washington by the preparatory commission on world food proposals.

So that all I would care to add to what has already been said is that the fishing industry in this country is an exceedingly important one. It is important in the matter of the wealth produced, and in the production of fish as a healthful and staple food. Any serious setback to the fishing industry would be a serious setback to the economy of Canada. Everything that possibly can be done by the Department of Fisheries to help the fishing industry should be done.

Mr. J. L. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I wish to add a few words to what has already been said. I shall be as brief as possible so that this measure may be passed, because there is a great deal of work before the house.

First I would compliment hon. members who have spoken in the debate, because I believe all have added something to the general knowledge on the subject. I believe all hon. members will agree that this is a pretty fair bill; it is a step in the right direction. I believe it is fairly well agreed in the house that what we need for a solution of the basic problem confronting the fishing industry of Canada is a greater consumption of fish.

I believe, too, all hon. members agree that the Fisheries Prices Support Act should be implemented in due course. However there seems to be considerable disagreement among hon. members as to just how this legislation can be most effective.

The hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) has just read a statement which would indicate that probably subsidies will be necessary, unless some action is taken. In the House of Commons there are about twenty men representing fishing constituencies. All look like intelligent chaps—at least they talk like them—and it has occurred to me that members of parliament may depend too much on the minister and his officials in dealing with problems which we as members should be helping them to meet. We know a good deal about fish, and the marketing of fish. It is pretty well agreed that we would eat larger quantities of fish if it was presented in the proper way, if it was palatable, and if the purchaser could always be assured of its freshness. If between now and the time the estimates for the Department of Fisheries are before the committee hon. members were to give some study to the problem, I am sure they would be able to give the minister and his officials some good suggestions as to how we can increase our consumption of fish.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mrs. Strum) said last year she was certain the women in the prairie provinces would be glad to eat more fish if it were made available to them at reasonable prices, and if they could be assured of its freshness. I happen to be associated with the fishing industry and I have seen products offered for sale to the consumers of Canada that I would not feed to my cat and to tell you the truth I do not care much for cats.

One of the areas in Canada turned down the opportunity to have the government inspect their canned products. I think that was one of the greatest mistakes that area ever made. They did not want to have the government grade their fish and guarantee to the consumer that it would be good fish when he got it. They just have not sold their product. Up in the restaurant you get excellent food, as the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid) has said, but the finnan haddie they serve does not taste like the finnan haddie I used to eat. I think the cause of this is that there is not enough smoke in it. Smoking dries out the fish, and it does not weigh so much, but that is the only way you can get flavour into finnan haddie. I think the fish packers in the maritimes could put out an excellent product, but they seem to have decided that there is more money in selling water than in selling smoke.

There are many ideas which the fish packers themselves could introduce in order to make their products more attractive. The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Archibald) says that he would like to see this a government controlled enterprise, but I do not think anyone would be eating fish after a few years of that.

Mr. KNOWLES: He said a cooperative.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): I think there is a wonderful opportunity for all of us to assist the minister in solving this problem. It is a great problem in Canada. If all we have to do to cure the ills of the fishing industry in Canada is to have people eat five pounds more per year, I do not feel we should have any difficulty in solving the problem provided we use a little imagination.

Mr. A. M. NICHOLSON (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, hon. members from the east and west coasts have made important contributions to the debate, but I would remind the house that there is a fishing industry in the central portion of Canada. While there are not many people depending upon the fishing industry for a livelihood in my constituency, it is an important industry in the far north. When the act was passed in 1937 apparently that fact was lost sight of, because section 4 reads:

> The board shall consist of fifteen members appointed by the minister as follows: two from the department, two representing the fishery industry on the Atlantic coast, two representing the fishery industry on the Pacific coast, and nine scientists selected from a list including nominations which may be made by any Canadian university whose staff embraces scientists engaged in research work in any way bearing upon fishery problems . . .

I note that no proposal has been made to revise the act to make sure that there would be representatives from the prairies on the board.

I take exception also to the continued policy of the government that no member of the board shall receive payment or emolument for his services as such, but that each member shall receive such payments for his travelling and other expenses in connection with the work of the board as may be approved by the governor in council. As a matter of policy I do not think we should limit membership on important boards to those who are able to give all their time without compensation. If the members of the board are to do a worthwhile job the minister should not make any apology in coming to parliament and asking that they be paid for the time spent doing this important work.

When the minister was speaking in April to the council he said:

> It is a commonplace to say that the prosperity of Canada depends mainly on the levels of export trade. But of all Canadian industries, there is hardly one more dependent on exports than is the fishing industry.

I want to support the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid) who said that we have a market here in Canada which has never really been cultivated. When we consider that our consumption is less than ten pounds per person per year as compared with over 100 pounds in Denmark and Japan, as he pointed out, I think we should be looking at our own market. Those of us who were at the luncheon at the chateau the other day will agree I think that if they had to select one item on the menu and none other they would have taken the Gaspe salmon. That is the kind of food that one remembers having eaten. It shows that Canadian fish can be served in Canadian restaurants and provide pleasure to those who eat it. I think more could be done to make sure that the scientific information we have with regard to the handling of fish is acted upon in order that our own citizens, and tourists and visitors, may be able to get good quality fish in all parts of the country more frequently than once a week.

Mr. D. KING HAZEN (St. John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say just a word about the amendments to the act proposed by this bill. It seems to me that they will add to the efficiency of the board. As the bill is to be referred to a committee I was surprised at the length of time this debate has taken. It seems to me it would have been more appropriate to discuss the matter of fisheries when the estimates were before the house. However, that is perhaps a matter upon which I cannot speak with any authority.

I want to support the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Stuart) who has requested that further attention be given to establishing lobster hatcheries along the bay of Fundy on the Atlantic coast. Two years ago I proposed in the house that lobster hatcheries should be established and the matter was referred by the minister to the biological research board which made an adverse report.

This report, of which the minister kindly let me have a copy, says that the lobster fisheries along the New England coast have more than doubled in the last few years. I have not the figures before me, but I know the lobster fisheries along the bay of Fundy have not increased in any such proportion. If the lobster fisheries along the New England coast have increased to such a great extent there must be reasons for it. It seems to me that one of the reasons is the fact that lobster hatcheries were established in the state of Maine. There may be others, but surely there must be some connection between the increase in the lobster fisheries along the New England coast and the establishment of the lobster hatcheries. I have been informed that the lobster fishermen on the island of Grand Manan attribute their increased catches to the Maine hatcheries.

If there is nothing in these hatcheries, if they are to be damned as the report submitted to the minister suggests, how is it that only last year the state of Massachusetts established one or more of them? New England people are long-headed; they do not throw their money away merely for the purpose of erecting hatcheries if they do not produce results. The fisheries people in Massachusetts must have investigated the matter pretty thoroughly before they went ahead and put up their hatcheries. I know it is difficult for the minister in view of the report he has received, but I would urge upon him that he give further consideration to the establishment of lobster factories along the shores of the bay of Fundy. Let him give the matter another try, in view of the experience of and the modern methods which have been adopted in the state of Maine and will be adopted in the hatcheries in Massachusetts.

There was one thing said by the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Stuart) in the course of his remarks—perhaps more than one—with which I did not agree. He said, if I understood him correctly, that too much time was taken up in the minister's department with inland fisheries and sport fisheries.

Mr. STUART (Charlotte): I said that the research board was taking up too much time with inland and sport fisheries.

Mr. HAZEN: With that statement I do not agree. I think the board has been carrying on important investigations in inland and sport fisheries, and I have no criticism to offer of what they have been doing. I hope their work along these lines will be continued and their investigations if necessary extended, and that increased sums will be appropriated to carry on the work that should be done.

If I were the Minister of Fisheries or a member of the fisheries board my chief objective would be to make two fish grow where one grows now. That is the target to aim at. I am perturbed about the salmon fisheries in the bay of Fundy. I noticed recently that the minister was taking some interest in the dams in the Nashwaak river with a view to improving the salmon fisheries in those waters, and I think he is to be commended for what he has done. It seems to me that all the tributaries of the Saint John river and the rivers that enter in the bay of Fundy should be investigated, not only from the angling point of view, but also from the point of view that salmon will come up these rivers to spawn if they get the opportunity and are protected. The better the returns we have from these rivers, the better the commercial fishing in the bay of Fundy should be.

Mr. G. K. FRASER (Peterborough West): Mr. Speaker, when the minister makes his statement in reply will he tell the house what his department is doing in regard to what the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid) mentioned as to the proper keeping and distribution of fish throughout the country. I brought up this question on the minister's estimates last year. I pointed out that by the time the fish reaches our cities in Ontario it was not fit for human consumption, and that proper check should be made of the freezing, preserving and distribution of the fish.

Hon. H. F. G. BRIDGES (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to make any extended remarks at this stage, but I feel that it is advisable I should place certain facts on the record in order that the house may be a little better informed concerning certain matters in view of what was said in one or two of the addresses which were made on the second reading of this bill.

In the first place, I do not believe that the house as a whole realizes that the board operates certain stations across Canada. There is, first of all, the biological station at

The present act which sets up the fisheries research board definitely sets out that:

> The board shall have charge of all dominion fishery research stations in Canada, and shall have the conduct and control of investigations of practical and economic problems connected with marine and fresh water fisheries, flora and fauna, and such other work as may be assigned to it by the minister.

My reason for placing that on the record is so that the members of the house will have definitely in their minds just what are the functions of the fisheries research board and also the functions of the fisheries stations which are operated in Canada.

The hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Pearkes) when speaking yesterday made several statements which I regard as extravagant. I am sorry he is not in the house this afternoon to hear my reply, but I feel that I cannot let some of his statements go unanswered. I notice that at page 4086 of Hansard of yesterday he is reported as saying:

> It would appear to me that a thorough reorganization of the fisheries research board is long overdue, not as the fault of the scientists, but as the fault of the government in neglecting to support the board.

Again, at page 4160 he made this statement:

> Rather do I accuse the government of failure to support that board adequately in the past, and I hope that this new bill is a step in the right direction.

Then, again, he culminated his address by saying this:

> Finally, I should like to commend all those who are connected with the board and who have made a definite contribution to the industry, and excellent attempts to overcome the almost insurmountable obstacles they have had to face, in spite of what I feel has been in the past a rather half-hearted government support.

Having listened to remarks such as that, I consider that I should give the house some information as to just what support this government has given to the work of the fisheries research board.

If we are to carry on fisheries research the first thing that is absolutely essential is an adequate amount of money to spend on research. I am frank to admit that I do not always get all the money I ask for and have asked for in the past, and I think any other member of the cabinet will have to be frank and admit the same thing.

Mr. GRAYDON: What stops it?

Mr. BRIDGES: Quite often it is the opposition. In other cases it is the financial position of the country. I would point out that the hon. member for Nanaimo when he made that statement had evidently not made any study of the expenditures which have been made on research by this government. It might interest the house to know that in 1920-21, when the old biological board, as it was called at that time, was in being, only $30,690.11 was spent on research, whereas in 1946-47 up to February 28—I have not the final figures up to the end of the fiscal year—$626,341.19 was spent. In other words, in a period of some twenty-five years the amount of money spent on fisheries research has gone from a little over $30,000 to over $625,000. It is of special interest to me that the amount of money spent on research has increased greatly during the present administration. I am going to compare for a moment the time when the government under the leadership of Mr. Bennett was in power and the amount of money spent on research at that time. I do this only to show—and I think I can show it conclusively—that this government has not given only half-hearted support to the work of the fisheries research board. I have the figures for a certain number of years but I shall not put them all on the record. In 1931-32 there was approximately $275,665 spent on research. In 1932-33, $228,062 was spent on research. In 1933-34, $176,239 was spent on research.

Mr. MacNICOL: The minister should state that that was during the depression.

Mr. BRIDGES: I am quite frank to admit that it was during the depression, but what I want to impress upon the house is that this government is not giving merely half-hearted support to the work as was alleged in the house yesterday by the hon. member for Nanaimo. In 1944-45 this government spent $338,428.08 on the research board. In 1945-46 we spent $502,009.76. Just a few moments ago I gave the figures of the amount that was spent during the past fiscal year which, up to February 28, 1947, amounted to $626,341.19.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. BRIDGES: Yes.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): In other words, the increase in the amount spent on this board does not begin to keep pace with the increased revenue of the country, does it? I am speaking comparatively.

Mr. BRIDGES: Probably the hon. member knows the exact percentages. I have not worked them out; I do not know. Maybe he has; maybe he has not.

The hon. member for Nanaimo also made some reference to the expenditures which were being made on the Nanaimo station which, incidentally, I believe is very close to his own constituency and in which he is interested. In 1935-36 when this government took office we spent on the Nanaimo station $48,610; in 1936-37, $49,284; in 1937-38, $40,739; in 1938-39, $60,722; in 1939-40, $61,332; in 1940-41, $60,081; in 1941-42, $51,886; in 1942-43, $53,629; in 1943-44, $52,874; in 1944-45, $88,041; in 1945-46, $140,304 and in 1946-47 up to February 28, instead of up to the end of the fiscal year, $166,795. I believe—and I think the house will agree with me—that this shows conclusively that this government is not giving merely half-hearted support to the work of the fisheries research board. As a matter of fact one of the reasons why we have introduced this bill is to make a certain change in the administrative set-up of the board. We have done that because I found, as the minister in charge of the department, that the expenditures were running to such amounts each year that I felt some one person should be charged with responsibility of supervising, at least to some extent, the work of the fisheries research board.

In the past the fisheries research board has been comprised of, as was said a little while ago, a group of persons, two of whom represented the department, two represented the fisheries industry on the Atlantic coast, two represented the fisheries on the Pacific coast, and nine scientists. These men met annually once a year in Ottawa and outlined their programme for the year. It so happened that the assistant deputy minister of fisheries, Major D. H. Sutherland, acted as honorary secretary of the board. But what impressed me was the fact that the expenditures ran up to the figure of $600,000 and that no one person was charged with the responsibility of that amount of expenditure. It was for that reason that this section has been put in the bill.

The hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Nicholson) when he spoke a few moments ago referred to the fact that there was no representation on the fisheries research board from the prairie provinces. He said he hoped that the act would be amended to include representation on the board from the prairie provinces. I, of course, was not here in 1937 when the Fisheries Research Board Act was passed, but I assume—and this is only conjecture on my part—that the reason there are no members of the industry from the prairie provinces on the board, as set out in section 4 of the act, is that the federal Department of Fisheries does not administer the fisheries in the prairie provinces. I make that statement only as an assumption of my own. However I would point out that the distinguished chairman of the board, Doctor A. T. Cameron, professor of biochemistry of the university of Manitoba, does live in the city of Winnipeg. I assume that Manitoba can be regarded as one of the prairie provinces.

Mr. MacNICOL: Will the minister permit a question? Does the department not administer the fisheries in the Northwest Territories? In that area there are two great lakes from which vast quantities of fish are shipped, Great Bear lake and Great Slave lake.

Mr. BRIDGES: I quite agree with the hon. member. In these lakes the research board has done quite extensive research work in the past.

I would also point out to the hon. member for Mackenzie that we do maintain a central fisheries research station in Manitoba. From information I have received, not from the board itself, but from others, I believe that it is doing good work there.

A great many other remarks have been made concerning a great variety of subjects which I do not believe are really germane to the issue before the house, namely, the principle of the bill. It is not my intention to make any statement regarding the great variety of subjects which were discussed. I feel, as the hon. member for St. John-Albert (Mr. Hazen) does, that these matters can be discussed much more appropriately when the estimates are before the committee.

Just before taking my seat, I should like to reply to the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Stuart) and the hon. member for St. John-Albert regarding lobster hatcheries. The hon. member for St. John-Albert told the house exactly what did happen. I am not a scientist; I do not know the answer, but I do happen to know that when this subject of lobster hatcheries was referred to the scientists of the fisheries research board they did report adversely on the proposition. I should like to give both these hon. gentlemen the assurance that I shall see that further consideration is given to the matter.

I do not think there is any necessity of my going any farther at this stage. After the bill receives second reading, it is my intention to move that it be referred to the standing committee on marine and fisheries, and there will be ample opportunity to discuss it in detail.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on marine and fisheries.

MERCHANT SEAMEN

PRESERVATION OF COMPENSATION RIGHTS ACQUIRED UNDER REGULATIONS

The house resumed from Wednesday, June 11, consideration in committee of Bill No. 181, to amend the Merchant Seamen Compensation Act—Mr. Chevrier—Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

On section 1—P.C. 4755, July 17, 1945, revoked.

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport): May I be allowed to answer four questions which were asked on this bill yesterday? The hon. member for High Park (Mr. McMaster) asked what was the number of seamen who have taken advantage of the act. The answer is 285. He asked what was the cost. The answer is, there was no cost, because, under the Compensation for Merchant Seamen Act, employers are required to pay not only compensation costs, but cost of administration of the act as well. The hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) inquired whether Canadian nationals on ships of foreign registry were covered. The act provides for a definition of "seaman", in section 2 (i). He will find there the answer to the question, namely, that seamen of foreign registry are not covered unless the ship has been demised to a Canadian or has been leased to or chartered to a Canadian corporation. It would be impossible to force others than Canadians to pay compensation. His other question was: What is the amount of compensation and what is the procedure? The act covers that clearly in sections 7, 30 and 25. In any of these sections he will find set out the procedure, notice that has to be given, to whom and the amount of compensation payable.

Mr. BROOKS: This bill in itself is simply for the purpose of reserving rights in respect of compensation acquired under the regulations, but like many other bills of this kind it has afforded an opportunity for a discussion of some other matters. I was not in the house on Wednesday when there was a general discussion of the bill, but I have read Hansard since and with all that has been said with reference to merchant seamen I most heartily agree. With a great many other members of the veterans affairs committee, I did feel that there should have been more opportunity, possibly not under this bill but in some other connection, to discuss the situation affecting merchant seamen.

These merchant seamen have been called the fourth branch of the service, and it was for this reason that the members of the veterans affairs committee considered it was a matter which should have been dealt with by that committee. In speaking of the fourth branch of the service, I should like to read what was said during the war by the then minister of transport. The Hon. J. E. Michaud on one occasion said that no other body of men in Canada's fighting services—

Mr. CHEVRIER: I do not wish to interrupt the hon. member or to curtail discussion, but it was agreed, when the bill came up for discussion before, that the remarks should be relevant to the section before the committee. We are now dealing with compensation for merchant seamen, compensation within the meaning of this act, which, as I understand it, is compensation in case of accident or injury. That is what the act of last session dealt with and this is to amend that act. I cannot interrupt my hon. friend if he deals with that, but if he goes beyond that I shall have to ask him to abide by the rules.

The CHAIRMAN: I do not think the hon. member for Royal has gone beyond the question of compensation. I do not know what he intends to do. He has read Hansard, however, and he will recall that the Chairman then ruled that only questions affecting compensation to merchant seamen would be in order.

Mr. BROOKS: There was no limit on the date—

Mr. CHEVRIER: Yes, there was.

Mr. BROOKS: As I understand it, this deals with compensation from 1945. The matter of compensation for seamen during the war, from 1939 to 1945, was discussed here the other day, and there was a general discussion. It was this matter which I intended saying a few words upon today.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Workmen's compensation.

Mr. BROOKS: It was compensation for men who had been injured or in respect of men who had lost their lives.

Mr. CHEVRIER: That is right.

Mr. BROOKS: Men lost their lives through accident from 1939 to 1945, and sometimes that loss of life was due to enemy action, while at other times it was due to some other cause. I do not think we can split hairs on this question. As a matter of fact, I would say right here that there has been very little opportunity, practically no opportunity in this house since the session started, to discuss the matter of merchant seamen's compensation.

Mr. CHEVRIER: There have already been two opportunities.

Mr. BROOKS: I tried on a former occasion to discuss it and was declared out of order. The other day when we were discussing this subject I mentioned the fact that the veterans affairs committee did desire to take up, together with other matters, this very question of compensation for merchant seamen during the war from 1939 to 1945. At that time I said that the veterans affairs committee would have dealt with the matter on a broader scale if we had not had the intimation, if perhaps not the assurance, that some consideration would be given the question by the Department of Transport.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Certainly not from the minister.

Mr. BROOKS: The minister at that time said it was not from him. In that connection I did wish to quote from the pages of the veterans affairs committee's report, and I do not intend to take any longer than I can avoid, to show that it was a matter which the veterans in all parties in the house—and the Minister of Veterans Affairs can bear me out—felt should be considered. The veterans of all parties in the house considered that this question of compensation for men belonging to the fourth branch of the service, who suffered more in proportion than any other branch, should be taken into consideration, and it was the fact that we thought the Department of Transport was going to give consideration to these matters that more consideration was not given in the veterans affairs committee.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I am sure the hon. member would not blame the minister for that.

Mr. GREEN: But the minister tried to blame the committee the other day.

Mr. CHEVRIER: No. The minister tried to say to the hon. member for Vancouver South that he had some responsibility in the matter.

Mr. GREEN: Because he was on the veterans affairs committee.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Yes.

Mr. BROOKS: We are willing to assume our responsibility.

[Mr. Brooks.]

Mr. CHEVRIER: And the hon. gentleman replied that I knew nothing about the matter. I hope he has changed his mind since.

Mr. BROOKS: Who has the floor, Mr. Chairman? I would refer to page 396 of the report of the veterans affairs committee in 1946. At that time we were discussing the question of compensation and other benefits to the different civilian groups:

> Mr. Green: Take the case of the merchant seamen. Is it our idea that the officers of the Department of Transport would appear before the sub-committee? Because that is the one case I have in mind, and I think we should have these men right here in the main committee.... and not in the sub-committee.

The chairman at that time, who was the hon. member for Rosthern, said:

> On the point you mention, Mr. Green, I agree with you that we should have representations from the merchant seamen and also that the committee would want to hear from the Department of Transport. But the sub-committee in a lot of these things would be able to find out which witnesses would be most useful to the committee and it would assist in that way.

That is, it was the chairman's opinion that this sub-committee would be useful in picking out different witnesses, and so on. Then I quote also from the minutes of proceedings of May 14, 1946, after the committee was set up:

> The chairman reported that the steering committee recommended that the representations of ex-members of the R.A.F. ferry command, together with those of the V.A.D.'s and other members of the Canadian Red Cross Society and St. John Ambulance Brigade, and of all other civilian groups—

The merchant seamen were considered one of the civilian groups.

> —urging claims to benefits under veteran legislation, be referred to the sub-committee appointed to study the draft bill respecting civilian war pensions and allowances.

The CHAIRMAN: May I remind the hon. member for Royal that it has been agreed in the committee that we cannot refer to any benefits other than compensation to merchant seamen. The hon. member has read from a committee report which refers to V.A.D.'s, members of the Red Cross, and so on. I do not see how the question of workmen's compensation could affect them.

Mr. BROOKS: That was just to connect it up. My point is that a sub-committee was set up to study these matters affecting civilian groups, and I wanted to show that in the veterans affairs committee we did intend to study matters concerning the merchant seamen, of which compensation was one. Some question has been raised in this committee as to whether this matter was brought up in the veterans affairs committee last year, and what action was taken. My point is that if we had not been told in that committee at that time that the Department of Transport intended to deal with this matter and provide compensation for these men, the veterans affairs committee would have done so.

Mr. CHEVRIER: In the hon. gentleman's discussion of the matter yesterday did he not say it was his understanding that the Department of Transport was to bring in a bill which would have to do with a veterans charter?

Mr. BROOKS: No, not with a veterans charter.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Then let me put it in this way. Did he not say it was his understanding that the department would bring in a bill to deal with compensation?

Mr. BROOKS: I have here exactly what I said. It is at page 4033 of Hansard:

Mr. Brooks: Was it not understood in the veterans affairs committee that the Department of Transport would bring in a bill which would give merchant seamen treatment commensurate with that given other branches of the service?

In other words, we were of the opinion that a bill would be brought in which would give merchant seamen the same treatment that was given other branches of the service. After all, the merchant marine has been called the fourth branch of the service.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I am sure my hon. friend would not want to attribute any blame to the Department of Transport if that department were not aware of that fact. Since the previous discussion I have looked at the evidence. I find that a witness was called and was asked about a certain bill, and replied that he knew absolutely nothing about it. The only bill I had in mind was the bill that is now being amended. That is the only bill that ever came to my attention, and certainly it is the only bill that I had in mind last session. It had to do with compensation, not in the general sense, but compensation for injuries or death resulting from accidents.

Mr. BROOKS: Then all I can say in that connection is that when the veterans affairs committee considered this matter it was not thinking of civilian compensation. The bill the minister has brought down deals with civilian compensation from 1945 on.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Not civilian.

Mr. BROOKS: I mean the merchant seamen, from that time on. But if we are going to say that the men who from 1939 to 1945, were recognized by various ministers of the crown as constituting the fourth branch of the service, the men who sacrificed more in proportion than those in any other branch of the service, are going to receive compensation only after 1945, I am satisfied that not a member of the veterans affairs committee would have agreed to it.

Mr. CHEVRIER: No one is saying that is all they are entitled to. I am not saying that, nor have I ever said it. I simply say the bill which was referred to in that committee was the very bill we are now dealing with.

Mr. BROOKS: Then, if the minister feels, as I am sure he does, that these men are entitled to more consideration, may I ask if it is his intention either now or in the very near future to bring in a bill which will do justice to these men?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Certainly it is not my intention to bring in a bill as an amendment to this act. I do not think this is the place to bring in a bill covering the items my hon. friend has in mind. My own view is that it may very well be a matter that should be studied. A number of things have been done for the merchant seamen since this act was amended last year. I hope it will be possible to do more.

Mr. BROOKS: We admit that. I am not going to emphasize this point further. I agree with the minister that we cannot amend this bill to do the things we think should be done, but here we are near the end of the session—

Mr. MACKENZIE: We hope.

Mr. BROOKS: We should be; and if anything is to be done for these seamen it must be done this session. Otherwise it will go over for another year, which will be the third year after the war. If the minister will say he will give serious consideration to bringing down a bill in the near future, and will study the situation with regard to these men, I shall have no more to say regarding the matter at the present time.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I cannot say any more than I have already said. If it will be of any assistance to the hon. gentleman I will add this, that as far as giving consideration is concerned I shall be glad to give consideration to anything at any time. I can go a step farther and say that I do not think a bill can be brought in at this stage of the session, because of the statement made by the Prime Minister some time ago in regard to the number of bills still remaining on the order paper. It may be possible to do something in another manner. I am not prepared to say that cannot be done, but I do not want to commit myself on this bill at this time, as to what can or may be done, other than to say that I shall be glad to consider the suggestion made by my hon. friend.

Mr. CHURCH: This bill contains only one section, and its sole purpose is to preserve rights to compensation acquired under the regulations before the act came into force, and to continue under the act all proceedings taken under the regulations. I should like to have seen equality of treatment for all the seamen who served us in the last war. Canada is now the fifth trading nation of the world. You only have to read the report of the Minister of Reconstruction to see the growth of our shipping on our inland lakes, our rivers, the gulf and on the oceans of the world today.

First, I should like to see this provision made retroactive to the time before 1945. Second, while the minister may not be able to do much for them today, what is to be done for all these brave seamen? I suggest that during the recess of parliament he should consider making the regulations retroactive. He will be deluged with the facts concerning merchant seamen from almost every city and town of Canada, including those in the prairies, from where many of our best seamen have come, who served in the great war in the merchant marine.

In conclusion, may I say I do not see how the minister can ignore the storms we have on the upper lakes in the early spring and in the fall of the year. Two dozen men lost their lives in one year, 1927. I would ask the minister to consider, during the recess, this matter of aid to the brave men who sail the upper lakes.

In May, 1928, a statement was made in the house by me regarding brave seamen on lake Ontario, lake Erie, Georgian bay and the upper lakes who had lost their lives in the fall of 1927. These seamen were advancing the grain crop from the western provinces to the east, and many of them had been soldiers in the first great war. The towns of Owen Sound and Collingwood, and many other places along the inland waters, were in mourning for weeks. But all the men in the doomed ships could do was blow their sirens and get help from the United States life-saving stations.

I urge upon the government that they give better treatment to these brave merchant seamen, many of whom served in both wars. The minister who has presided over the Department of Veterans Affairs has given approval to generous bills for the soldiers in both wars; but let us not forget the brave seamen who bore the brunt of the battle of the Atlantic, and those also who ride the storms of the upper lakes, in peace as well as in war.

Mr. GREEN: If a seaman were injured in a port of the United Kingdom, by falling from a ship during a blackout, what compensation could he obtain? What could he expect to get if the accident took place before the order in council preceding this measure came into effect on August 1, 1945?

Mr. CHEVRIER: If the hon. member is referring to compensation in the nature of workmen's compensation arising from such an injury, under the law as we had it prior to the time the regulations came into force in 1945 he could not claim. He might be entitled to pension from enemy action or counter-action; but that is a matter with which the Department of Transport does not deal—although it is keenly interested.

Mr. GREEN: The case I have in mind could not be directly attributed to enemy action. Is no compensation available to a merchant seaman injured in the way I have indicated?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Not under this act.

Mr. GREEN: Or under any other act?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I know of no other act, because I am responsible only for the administration of this one. There may be other benefits from other departments with which I am not familiar. But in the department with which I am charged there is no claim, unfortunately, that the seaman could make under workmen's compensation legislation prior to July, 1945.

Mr. GREEN: The Minister of Transport is the minister responsible for merchant seamen.

Mr. CHEVRIER: In so far as the civilian aspect is concerned. The Minister of Transport is not responsible for all the gratuities and benefits to which they may be entitled under veterans legislation.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Perhaps I might be permitted to say a word in that connection. I have before me a document setting forth the reasons for retaining orders in council P.C. 133/510 of January 26, 1944, amended by P.C. 127/1111 of February 21, 1945; P.C. 109/2100 of March 28, 1945; and P.C. 148/5045 of July 18, 1945. It states that the number of eligible claims filed and paid to date were 1,583. The number of these claims paid to next of kin was 454; the number of these claims paid to seamen themselves was 1,129, and there were no eligible claims filed and outstanding. The total amount paid to date stands at $210,221.31.

Compensation is paid to any personnel of ships of Canadian registry, also to Canadians in ships of foreign registry, provided that the amount paid in such case is reduced by any amount which may be paid by the government of the country in which the said ship is registered.

Claims are still occasionally coming in, usually from next of kin who were not previously aware that compensation was payable, particularly where the next of kin are resident in countries released from enemy occupation.

With regard to the question as to why only seventy per cent is paid to dependents, it may be said that the purpose of payment of compensation for loss of effects to merchant seamen was originally to assist the seaman in replacing those effects in order that he might proceed to sea again. Therefore, at first no provision was made for payment to next of kin.

Then, however, claims were made by parents and others who had provided clothing, et cetera, to men who had gone to sea for the first time, and provision was made in order in council dated the 31st March, 1943, permitting the total amount payable to a seaman to be paid to his next of kin.

This was further amended by order in council of June 8, 1943, to restrict the payment to widow, children, father or mother of the person to whom the regulations applied, and also to restrict the amount to be paid to next of kin to seventy per cent of the total amount payable. It is thought that this proportion is fair when consideration is given to the intrinsic value of the used clothing.

The individual payments have been controlled by schedules of rates recommended by the committee on war risks insurance and bombardment compensation, which rates have been slightly changed from time to time, and which are graded according to the rank or rating of the seamen and whether the ship was engaged in foreign trade, home trade, or other trades, at the time of loss.

In the case of foreign-going vessels, the payments, according to the latest schedule, vary from a maximum of $100 for a rating in the victualling department below the rank of bedroom steward or waiter, to $450 for master. In addition, payments were made on account of instruments or tools proved to have been carried by masters, officers, carpenters, etc., bringing the maximum for a master to $675.

In order, however, to bring the matter to a conclusion at a reasonably early day, it has been recommended that an advertisement be placed in the press to inform all interested persons that on and after a certain day no further claims for compensation will be admitted.

Mr. GREEN: Is the Minister of Veterans Affairs referring to claims arising out of injury caused by direct enemy action?

Mr. MACKENZIE: Loss of effects.

Mr. GREEN: It does not include claims where the loss does not arise out of direct enemy action?

Mr. MACKENZIE: I believe it does.

Mr. GREEN: What provision is there for the protection of a merchant seaman injured, as I said earlier, by falling from a ship in port, not due to enemy action?

Mr. CHEVRIER: If the hon. member wishes to know whether the legislation is retroactive, I said the other day that it is not, and I gave the reasons for its not being so. I cannot do any more than that.

Mr. GREEN: I realize that, but here is an injustice which must be remedied. I am not blaming anybody for trying to evade responsibility. As I said the other day, these merchant seamen have fallen between the two departments, with the result that they are not properly protected. I do not think there is any order in council or act which was in effect throughout the war or since the war covering the merchant seamen who was injured through other than direct enemy action. The restriction in the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act, which was passed last year and which, I believe, just followed prior orders in council, was that it should be as a direct result of enemy action or counter-action taken against the enemy. Unless the merchant seaman qualifies under that provision, he gets no compensation.

I think the Minister of Transport will agree that there should be on our statute books some law protecting these men just as there is a law protecting the men who served in the navy, army and air force. His predecessor, the Hon. J. E. Michaud, stated in an advertisement which appeared in The Searchlight of February, 1945, a publication put out by the Canadian Seamen's Union.

They have earned the title of the "fourth arm of the fighting services."

That is only one sentence from a long advertisement praising the merchant seamen. I do not think the Minister of Veterans Affairs can point out any provision protecting the man who was injured other than as a direct result of enemy action. I would also ask him what protection there is for the merchant seaman who suffered disability through disease, for instance the man who contracted a tropical disease and is permanently disabled. My understanding is that he gets absolutely no protection. Furthermore, I do not believe the man who contracted tuberculosis is protected even under the bill before the house today, because that is not considered to be an occupational disease. The Minister of Transport will correct me if I am wrong in that statement.

These men should be covered in some way and the responsibility rests with the two ministers now before us. Frankly, I should like to see the Minister of Veterans Affairs made responsible for protecting these merchant seamen who suffered injuries during the war. It is a little out of the line of the work of the Department of Transport and I think this protection should be handled by the Department of Veterans Affairs. In the veterans affairs committee last year this question was side-tracked in some way or another because the two departments were concerned, but every member of that committee was in favour of giving the merchant seamen the same protection given to the men in the other three forces.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I was going to enumerate the benefits they receive but I think I am out of order.

Mr. GREEN: We are restricted to questions of compensation. What compensation is payable to the seaman who was injured before August 1, 1945, by other than direct enemy action?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I do not want to prolong the debate, but does not the difficulty to which my hon. friend refers arise out of the fact that from the inception the merchant marine were considered as volunteers as opposed to the other armed services? That certainly was the attitude taken by my predecessor and that was the attitude taken on more than one occasion in the British House of Commons. A statement to that effect was made in this house. The merchant marine were given certain benefits, such as those under the workmen's compensation regulations which were enacted in 1945.

I do not say this to start another debate, but my hon. friend has pointed to certain differences which exist between the armed services and the merchant navy. I agree that there are some differences and perhaps they should not exist, but that is a fact. I should like to place on the record a question which was asked in the British House of Commons on February 27, 1945, by Sir W. Wayland, just at the time we were considering enacting these regulations. I quote:

> Sir W. Wayland asked the parliamentary secretary to the ministry of war transport whether His Majesty's government propose to accord to the personnel of the merchant navy any recognition of its splendid services on the same lines as the services gratuities.

The minister replied as follows:

> His Majesty's government have frequently expressed their deep appreciation of the magnificent services rendered to the nation by the officers and men of the merchant navy. But they must take into consideration the fact that these officers and men have been employed throughout the war at industrial rates of wages, negotiated and settled by the national maritime board. In view of this fact, the government consider that they would not be justified in granting to the men of the merchant navy the gratuities which the services will receive.

Mr. GREEN: That does not refer to compensation.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I tried to limit the debate to workmen's compensation, but my hon. friend, as well as the hon. member for Royal, discussed other benefits.

Mr. GREEN: We were not allowed to discuss other benefits such as university training, vocational training, civil service preference and so on. Those were ruled out of order and we have been able to discuss only compensation.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Compensation other than workmen's compensation is certainly another benefit.

Mr. GREEN: Compensation for injury.

Mr. CHEVRIER: There is more than one kind of compensation; there is workmen's compensation; there is compensation for injuries from enemy action and counter-action; there is detention allowance which is a compensation. There are at least five or six different forms of compensation.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Exactly fourteen.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The Minister of Veterans Affairs corrects me and says there are exactly fourteen. When these regulations were put into effect under the War Measures Act the Minister of Veterans Affairs then made a statement which I should like to place on the record. I think it answers to a large extent the objections raised by the hon. member for Vancouver South and perhaps explains the misunderstandings, if any, which have arisen. I should like to quote what the minister said.

Mr. GREEN: Is that the United Kingdom minister?

Mr. CHEVRIER: No, the present Minister of Veterans Affairs.

Mr. GREEN: When was this?

Mr. CHEVRIER: This is in 1945 when the regulations covering workmen's compensation were enacted. What we are doing now is to amend the act that gave legislative effect to those regulations. The minister said:

> Without doubt our merchant marine, which has grown from 37 foreign-going ships before the war to 190 now has made a magnificent contribution to the cause of the united nations. Moreover, the risks taken by merchant seamen while serving in dangerous waters and the arduous conditions under which they frequently served are universally appreciated.
> It is necessary, however, to recognize that merchant seamen do not serve under the same conditions as men of the Royal Canadian Navy. They are not required to enlist for the duration of the war. They are employees of the steamship companies, free to take or leave employment when and as they wish, and are paid industrial rates of wages for stated hours of work, negotiated and settled with the employers by their own unions. Without detracting in any way from the gallantry of the men who go down to the sea in ships and brave the lurking menace of the submarine, it is also important to note that they receive a substantial war risk bonus in addition to their basic rates of pay for voyages in dangerous waters. As a result, the rates of pay of all men, except a number of officer categories, in the merchant marine are considerably higher than those paid to corresponding rates in the Royal Canadian Navy, even allowing for the fact that the remuneration paid to officers and men in the merchant marine, except war risk bonus ,is subject to income tax, while men in the fighting navy below the rank of officers are completely exempt.
> Therefore to make available to merchant seamen gratuities and reestablishment benefits on the same scale and basis as those provided for ex-members of the armed forces would clearly constitute unjust discrimination against the armed forces who had to give up their freedom and enlist for the war's duration for service under military discipline and at a rate of pay not determined by commercial consideration.

That is I think, the basis, not only in the United Kingdom, but in Canada, for the position as we find it today. I am not going to argue with my hon. friend that the men of the merchant navy are not entitled to additional benefits, but until that position is changed I say that nothing can be done. I have told the hon. member for Royal that I shall give consideration to what he said. I do not think a bill could be brought down, but it may be possible to find some other method of adding to what has already been done. Since that statement was made, a number of things have been done. My colleague the Minister of Labour brought in a bill having to do with unemployment insurance, and that covered merchant seamen after the manning pools were closed. I can think of one or two other things, but I do not want to rule myself out of order, Mr. Chairman, because I know the hon. member was not allowed to go beyond the question of compensation. I simply wanted to make that statement to explain the position as it is now.

Mr. GREEN: That submission might be some answer to the question of gratuities but we are not arguing about gratuities today. The statement read by the Minister of Transport was never intended, I am sure, by the Minister of Veterans Affairs to mean that a merchant seaman who was permanently injured should not get compensation. I do not think the Minister of Veterans Affairs had that in the back of his mind at all. There remains this injustice, that many of these men were permanently injured and that some lost their lives, not through direct enemy action, but by falls on the ship and in many other accidents that occurred, or through some disease, and they have no protection and their dependents have no protection. That is an unfair situation. I am sure that the Canadian people would not want that condition to continue. I do not think the Minister of Veterans Affairs is in favour of these men and their dependents going without proper compensation. We are trying to emphasize to the ministers and to the house that something must be done and done quickly to remedy that situation. The members from the central provinces may not run into these cases so frequently as those of us do who represent ridings on the seacoast, but we are meeting these men repeatedly, men who have been permanently injured or the dependents of men who have lost their lives, and it is not fair that there should not be compensation for these people. Most of them were not professional seamen. They went to sea during the war. Many boys left school to go into the merchant navy and did a grand job, and now they should be given every consideration. I do not see any reason why the two ministers cannot between them work out some scheme that would protect those men and the dependents of those who lost their lives.

Mr. MacINNIS: It seems to me that the protection which has been mentioned by the hon. member for Vancouver South is quite important. I think he has made a very good case for it. I mentioned a case yesterday or the day before when this bill was up for second reading, and I am sure there are many others of a similar nature in my own city of Vancouver, and something should be done to provide for such cases. It seems to me that when we say something should be done we must mean that the act should be made retroactive until the beginning of the war in 1939. Whether that is possible I do not know, but if provision is to be made in this act for these people it can be done only by making the act retroactive. Those who know the law much better than I do or have, at least, been better trained in it, may have a better way of doing it, but it seems to me that making the legislation retroactive is the way to do it. The minister should give an undertaking that he will see whether it is feasible to do that. I do not suppose he can do it without some consideration. If I or any one of us were in his place I do not suppose we would care to do it without consideration, but if he would give that undertaking to the committee I think it would meet the situation.

Mr. GILLIS: I asked the minister a couple of questions when he first came before the house with his estimates.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I answered the questions asked by the hon. gentleman before he came into the chamber.

Mr. GILLIS: I will read the answers. Very likely they are not satisfactory.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The answer to the second question will, I think, be fully satisfactory.

Mr. GILLIS: The reason I am interested in the mechanics of an injured seaman making application is that I have a specific case about which I have been corresponding with the minister up to as late as February 10 of this year, and to the best of my knowledge it has not yet been straightened out. This merchant seaman landed in Newfoundland in pretty bad shape. He left his ship and proceeded to hospital, and between the time of his leaving the ship and getting into hospital he was discharged from the ship. When he made application for compensation it was denied on the ground that he was not an employee on the ship at the time he made his application.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I do not recall the case. Was this seaman injured on the ship?

Mr. GILLIS: I am not quite sure. He must have been injured because he applied for compensation. His name is William Muise. I wrote the minister about the matter and he replied that it was being investigated. The man has been waiting since last February and has received nothing yet.

I agree with the hon. member for Vancouver South that this compensation should be made retroactive. If the legislation is to go through on its present basis I think the minister might just as well not have brought it in.

Mr. CHEVRIER: It was brought in and approved last year.

Mr. GILLIS: I know, but you have an opportunity now of amending the act. Most of the cases that will come under the act go back to 1940 and up until 1945. Provision has been made for pension for combat veterans, but the difficulties in establishing a case for pension for a merchant seaman are much greater, and the fact that he is entitled under the Pension Act gives him little relief. I had one case of a chap who lost a leg through falling into the hold of a ship during a black-out. I corresponded with the Minister of Veterans Affairs about it and a lot of sympathy was expressed, but that fellow still has a leg off and has not received a pension. He is a young man and cannot secure employment and cannot buy a leg. If pension entitlement was not available to this man he should be made eligible to compensation under the present act, to say the least, because during the war the hazards aboard ship were much greater than they are today. Equipment was poor and there were black-outs—

Mr. MACKENZIE: How was the leg lost?

Mr. GILLIS: This man fell from the deck into the hold of the ship. The leg was so badly injured that it had to be amputated. Unfortunately, between the time of his injury and the time that he made application for his pension the captain of his ship passed away and essential evidence which might have been obtained from the captain of the ship was not forthcoming. The entry in the log book was taken as the official record, but it was mixed up to some extent, with the result that this boy has not been able to establish anything.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Could not the black-out be construed as enemy action or as the result of enemy activity?

Mr. GILLIS: There were other complications. I do not want to go into the whole story; the minister has it. What I am trying to say is that this boy should be brought under the compensation act. I believe that some compensation pension should be given to him. Many cases are outstanding. As the hon. member for Vancouver South has pointed out, there are many disabilities acruing from disease which could be attributed to the occupation that these men followed. At least we should be as fair as the provinces are. In the provinces they have compensation for industrial diseases. The provision should be written into the national act.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The provinces do not make their compensation retroactive.

Mr. GILLIS: They have been in effect for many years.

Mr. CHEVRIER: When they came into force they were never made retroactive.

Mr. GILLIS: I would not know; that is pretty much history. The acts have been in force for a long time. I know they provide for a lot of industrial diseases which are peculiar to the industry in which the men were and they are compensated for it. I think the major portion of the permanent disabilities from which merchant seamen suffer arise out of disease or out of accidents rather than from enemy action. I would strongly urge the minister to do the thing right if we do it at all. It is much better not to do it at all than to enact something which leads the merchant seamen to believe that there is some provision for them and, within the next two or three years, have the minister and hon. members getting a shower of correspondence trying to unravel cases that are not covered. If we made the act retroactive to at least 1940 and provided for diseases which were peculiar to the occupation or calling of the merchant seamen we would be doing something that would not create a lot of administrative difficulties later or bring about a lot of correspondence explaining why this was not done.

As I see the matter now, I do not think there is much use in amending the act as it is unless these two provisions are made. I was a member of the veterans affairs committee and took quite an active interest in the merchant seamen, because I come from a coast and I run into a lot of them. I think it was mixed up in the veterans affairs committee the last time. I had a distinct recollection that when the auxiliary services' problem was passed over to a sub-committee of the main committee it was understood that merchant seamen were to receive the same consideration as the regular service personnel. Unfortunately, when that sub-committee reported back it made no recommendations at all on the matter of merchant seamen because, as the chairman of the sub-committee said, it was to be handled by the Department of Transport, and we allowed it to go.

Without taking up any more time, I would strongly urge that the two points with reference to retroactivity and diseases be brought under this act while we are amending it.

Mr. GREEN: What method is used now in checking these injuries? For example, is use made of the log books of the ships and of the records kept by the doctors in the various ports at which the ship calls?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Yes.

Mr. GREEN: Suppose a man is injured in Shanghai or in Liverpool, what system is used for getting back the record of the injury?

Mr. CHEVRIER: The man would probably be examined, and the master of the ship makes his report of the accident. There is also a record in the log book. Under the act as it stands today, if there is an accident the details are recorded. That is why it is difficult, if not impossible, to make this matter retroactive, because of the inability to obtain evidence in order to substantiate the claims.

Mr. GREEN: The same kind of records were kept by the masters of the ships during the war, were they not, and the same records would be available from the doctors in the different ports? Is that not so?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I am not in a position to say. In addition to what I said a moment ago, this act is on an insurance basis. By that I mean that money is paid into the fund—

Mr. GREEN: By the shipping companies?

Mr. CHEVRIER: —Yes; and in order to make it retroactive you would have to ask the ship owners to pay into the fund moneys that they certainly would not want to pay in view of the manner in which compensation is awarded. Assessments are payable under the act on an actuarial basis, I presume, and to upset that now and ask the ship owners to pay into that fund money which would cover any accident which took place from 1939 to 1945 is something that would be almost impossible of accomplishment.

Mr. GREEN: My own opinion would be that the country should pay for these injuries that were suffered during the war years. I agree that it would not be fair to go to the companies now and say that they must pay compensation. I think it is an obligation of the nation and the money should be paid by the country. If the act could not be made retroactive to cover these cases another solution of the problem might be to amend the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act to make it applicable. It is much too restricted now. That act contains a provision that funds can be paid only where the injury is received as a direct result of enemy action or counter-action taken against the enemy. These men could be covered by that act. There is another provision in the act which is much too stringent, namely, that application must be made within one year of the occurrence of death or disability. That is causing great hardship now even in cases where there was an injury as a direct result of enemy action. But there are these two alternative ways of meeting the situation: first, by making the compensation act retroactive and, second, by amending the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): Apropos of what the hon. member for Vancouver South has said, it has been suggested in the public accounts committee that we set up a royal commission to take care of the claims of Japanese citizens suffered by reason of the war or through enemy action. Probably the same course could conceivably be followed in taking care of what, I am sure, has been serious injustices which have taken place among the merchant seamen.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

13. Experimental farms service. administration, $97,448.

Mr. SHAW: While we are on this item, there is one matter to which I should like to give a moment's consideration. For some twenty years it has been my privilege to live among and be associated with farmers located in that grey wooded soil area, more particularly west of the Canadian Pacific line of rail between Calgary and Edmonton. During those years I have been able to develop some appreciation of the problems which confront those farmers, and have felt that the government, probably through its experimental farms and stations, should be giving a great deal more consideration to a study of the problems that are found where farmers are carrying on in those grey wooded soil areas. It was with a great deal of satisfaction that I learned on March 17 of the government's intention to establish two experimental sub-stations in Alberta. One, I understand, is to be located at McLennan, to operate in connection with the experimental station at Beaverlodge, but at that time no decision had been reached with respect to the location of the second sub-station. I should like to ask the minister if a location for the second station has been decided upon and, if so, what progress has been made in its establishment. May I also ask if he will give us a little more information than was given on March 17 with respect to the type of work these sub-stations will be primarily concerned with?

Right Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): Both types of soil are, of course, to be found at the Beaverlodge station. I do not think the second one has yet been established; at least we have no record of it here, and I am quite sure it has not been established.

Mr. SHAW: Then, may I urge upon the minister what I regard as the urgent necessity for action with respect to the early establishment of this second experimental station. As I say, I have been very close to the problems confronting the farmers in that area, and I realize what it will mean to them if the department gives some study to the problems connected with production there. Incidentally, it is a vast area, covering thousands of acres and including hundreds of farmers. If something can be done to enable them to increase production it will not only give them greater security but add immeasurably to the productive capacity of western Canada.

Mr. GARDINER: I have just located the information, and the answer I gave is correct. A survey is being made of the grey soils area, but the location has not yet been established, and will not be until the survey has been completed.

Mr. SHAW: Then, perhaps I may go one step farther before leaving that matter. I have given a great deal of thought to the matter of the location of this station, though, of course, I realize more will be required than just my expression of opinion; and I would suggest to the minister that the Rocky Mountain House district being the centre of that area between Calgary and Edmonton, that would be an ideal location for a station working out of Lacombe. It has a good all-weather road, and is right in the heart of the district.

Mr. REID: I understand that in March of this year the Fraser valley turkey improvement association petitioned the minister or his departmental officials for the establishment of an experimental station or for research to be undertaken in connection with the problems the turkey breeders are now facing in connection with feeding and diseases. While I am asking the minister if consideration has been given that appeal, I wish to draw to the attention of hon. members from all provinces the fact that it was in the riding I have the honour to represent that the first mammoth, big-breasted bronze turkeys were hatched, which have since spread all over Canada and the United States. We hear people speaking about the turkeys of the prairies, of Ontario and elsewhere, but it was to county line road, Langley municipality, that Mr. Joseph Throsseld brought foundation stock from the old country. Might I also draw to the attention of hon. members from the prairies, particularly Alberta, the fact that in 1926, 1927 and up to 1930 and perhaps a little later, turkeys were judged in that province by the feathers, not by the breast at all. At that time most of the turkeys throughout Canada were wedge-shaped. But Joe Throsseld, who lived in my district, brought this foundation stock to British Columbia, and since then his stock has spread all over Canada and the western United States, and has been the means of building up the great turkey industry, both in the United States and in this country.

We have reached the point in the lower Fraser valley, and I suppose the same condition obtains on Vancouver island as well, where in 1946 the turkey production increased to a million birds, and it is ever increasing. We have made the eating of turkeys so popular that most restaurants that know anything at all about serving the public are now buying turkeys instead of other poultry, because they find they can pay the increased price for turkeys, and make more out of those turkeys than they can by buying ordinary fowl weighing from three and a half to seven pounds.

They have a live association out there, but they are in some dilemma in connection with disease and feeding. They believe the industry is important enough to warrant some research being done by the Department of Agriculture. They appeal to the Minister of Agriculture and the department, and I now ask the minister if any decision has been arrived at and, if so, if anything is to be done?

Mr. GARDINER: The hon. member has asked if anything has been done or is to be done. I presume that he asks his question in connection with the broad-breasted turkeys.

Mr. REID: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: There has been some work done, largely in connection with marketing conditions. That comes under Mr. Shaw's branch, which we have not yet reached. However, that work is largely in connection with promoting the sale of broad-breasted turkeys, as compared with other types, for the very reasons just given by the hon. member. I am pleased that the hon. member for New Westminster has taken the opportunity on this occasion to speak of the origin of the broad-breasted turkey and to call to the attention of the committee the importance of raising as many as possible of these on the farms across Canada.

Mr. HERRIDGE: I wish to say a word on this item. First of all, on behalf of the farmers I represent I should like to express appreciation for the work done at the experimental stations at Summerland and Invermere. The work that has been done for years at those stations has been of tremendous value to the fruit and vegetable industry in the interior of British Columbia. We all recognize that.

At the same time the farmers feel that those stations cannot adequately serve the Kootenay, Slocan and Trout Lake areas, because they are operating under different conditions. In the Okanagan and Summerland areas they have experimental stations which serve an arid country requiring irrigation, and at Invermere we have an experimental station serving a similar dry country requiring irrigation, but much lower winter temperature. In the Kootenay, Slocan and Trout Lake areas we have a much more humid climate, and the other conditions are quite different.

The farmers in my district have felt for many years that if they are to be served satisfactorily, because of the variation in soil types and in climatic conditions there should be at least an illustration station established somewhere in the Kootenays.

Some of our apple varieties are different from the Okanagan, as well as our other fruit varieties. In addition to that, we have a number of new settlers in localities which have not been previously cultivated to any extent. On their behalf I would ask the minister to consider the establishment of an illustration station to serve the area which I represent, and which covers about 30,000 square miles.

Mr. McLURE: Last night when we were on this item the minister referred to the appointment of the experimental superintendent at Charlottetown, whose appointment was not through the civil service commission, as the minister stated before, but by a special committee called in for the purpose. May I have the names of the committee?

Mr. GARDINER: The committee was appointed by the civil service commission. The following are the names of the members of the board of review convened for the consideration of an appeal in respect of the appointment of the superintendent of an experimental farm, grade II, for the Department of Agriculture at Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, in connection with competition Number 4794.

Mr. G. E. B. Sinclair, general executive assistant of the Department of Mines and Resources, was one. Mr. Sinclair was representative of the professional institute of the civil service of Canada. Mr. Tinney, who appealed the appointment, requested a representative of the professional institute, and the appointment was that of Mr. Sinclair. Mr. C. V. Putman was the representative of the civil service commission, and was chairman of the committee. Mr. Putman is no longer with the civil service commission, although he was at that time. Mr. J. C. Maynan was representative of the Department of Agriculture. Mr. Maynan is chief supervisor of the illustration stations experimental farm service and was chosen, not by the department but by the civil service commission.

Mr. McLURE: Is it customary for the civil service commission always to call in someone to make recommendations with regard to these matters? I thought the commission did that work themselves. If they have always to call in a tribunal to settle an appointment in positions of the kind to which I am referring, then what is the benefit of having the civil service commission?

Mr. GARDINER: The job of the civil service commission is to appoint persons to the civil service. That is their primary responsibility. Once those persons are in the civil service, then, of course, they are part of it and can have promotions from time to time. Some of those promotions are more or less automatic, while others are made in a different way.

In so far as this particular promotion was concerned, there was, first, an examination of all those who were competent to fill the position, made by the department's own officials. They selected the man who now has the appointment, and recommended him for the appointment to that position. As a matter of fact they were prepared to put him into the position on the responsibility of the department.

Then the gentleman who was acting in Charlottetown and who had applied for the position raised the question as to whether the appointment was being properly made. The provision is that that request goes to the civil service commission, to ask for a re-examination by the commission. The commission then appoints a committee to make an examination into the qualifications of the different persons being considered. That committee recommended the same man as the departmental officials had previously decided should have the appointment. He got the appointment.

Mr. McLURE: This appointment still does not look very clear. I have one other question. How many applicants were there in addition to the one who got the appointment yesterday, and the assistant superintendent who was appointed in August last? Who was the successor to the man in Fredericton? This appointment should have been made in February last, but it was carried over for nearly five months longer. Most of these appointments are made within six months after the man in the position has been retired, but they carried on and led this man to believe he was to be superintendent. There seemed to be a nigger in the woodpile.

Mr. GARDINER: What happened was what almost has to happen in any case where there is a vacancy. The superintendent is retired, and the natural person to take charge until the appointment is made is the next in line on that particular farm. This man who was the assistant did take charge, of course, under the direction of the department. Applications were asked for from the maritime provinces and four were received. The gentleman who received the appointment was chosen from among those four as being the best suited to take charge. No one has been appointed to take his place at Fredericton. One reason why there was so much delay in the appointment at Charlottetown was that the assistant superintendent himself made a protest with regard to the appointment. A committee had to be appointed and the whole matter was reconsidered. When it was reconsidered his standing was not as high as it had been placed by the department itself.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): The item under discussion is for $4,100,000, which represents quite a considerable amount of taxes to be taken from the Canadian people. Under the experimental farms service the federal government has set up experimental stations and illustration units throughout the country. These stations can be most valuable to our farm people. What I am concerned over is how to bring these stations into practical use so that we may have better agriculture.

At the present time these stations are not giving as great benefit to our people as they would if, for instance, our school children were taken to them. Quite often we may not be able to get the older farmers to realize the practical application of scientific agriculture and therefore the best step to take would be to try to attract our young people. I would suggest to the minister that he seek an appropriation and work out a plan whereby more of our school children may be taken to these experimental farms and illustration stations so that they may become familiar with what is being done and utilize the knowledge they obtain.

Mr. GARDINER: We are not considering an item of $4,100,000; the particular item we are considering is for $97,448. We have not yet reached the central experimental farm item or the item dealing with branch farms and stations and illustration stations. I wonder if we could stay with administration until we get cleared up?

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: We are dealing with item 13.

Mr. CARDIFF: According to the particulars on page 87 of the main estimates there seems to be a new appointment of agricultural architect, $3,450. What are his duties?

Mr. GARDINER: One of his duties is to plan the farm buildings which are erected at experimental farms across Canada, but his principal duty is to draft plans, which are distributed free of charge across Canada, for farm buildings. These plans are what we consider to be the most suitable buildings for certain purposes.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Is it the intention of the department to open any new experimental stations or sub-stations?

Mr. GARDINER: I wonder if we could wait until we reach that item.

Item agreed to.

Experimental farms service—

15. Branch farms and stations and illustration stations, $2,869,586.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Perhaps I could get an answer to my question now.

Mr. GARDINER: The only sub-stations under consideration at the present time are those in the north country, one at Yellowknife and the other at Aklavik.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Are there no new stations to be opened in Manitoba?

Mr. GARDINER: There is to be one in the area east of Melita in the southwest corner and another one up in the north, I presume somewhere in the area about which the hon. member for Dauphin is concerned.

Mr. McGARRY: Is the department considering establishing an additional farm in Inverness?

Mr. GARDINER: There has been no further decision made since the visit was made to that area.

Mr. MacNICOL: Is the farm at Aklavik to be located at the former farm of Doctor Livingstone?

Mr. GARDINER: The location has not yet been decided upon, although the farm of Doctor Livingstone is under consideration. It is to be an arrangement between the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Mines and Resources, but the final decision has not yet been reached.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): Without my repeating what I said, would the minister indicate whether his department is considering trying to get more of our children to visit these experimental farms and illustration stations?

Mr. GARDINER: There is some question as to where the responsibility rests for getting the people to the experimental farms. When I was much younger than I am now and living in Ontario I remember the excursions which were run to the experimental farm at Guelph, which is a provincial undertaking. Everyone in the section of Ontario in which I lived looked forward to that day and most of the families were represented in the excursions.

Mr. GRAYDON: With clothes-baskets full of cheese.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes. Ever since I have been in western Canada I have wondered why we did not make more use of our experimental farms. When I was in the provincial government I attempted on many occasions to encourage people to go and I tried to organize the same thing. There are some people in the area in which I live who are active in that direction, and particularly in the Abernethy district which was the home of the late Hon. W. R. Motherwell. Those people make up little picnics and go to the experimental farm quite regularly and we can see the results in the farming around the district. I quite agree that it would be a good thing to have not only the school children but the adults as well go and look over what is being done on these farms. When I was west the last time I took occasion to visit Indian Head experimental farm myself and I know that, just from looking over the farm for an hour or two and seeing what was about the buildings in the way of live stock, one does gain a good deal of valuable information. I quite agree that everything possible along that line should be done. We have not carried out systematically any organized plan to bring that about, but I think we should give consideration to it. I welcome the suggestion of the hon. member.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): This is quite an increase, some $574,000. I notice on page 89 of the main estimates there is a list of superintendents and assistants. How many new experimental branches are to be set up?

Mr. GARDINER: Actually there is a reduction in the vote. When I was speaking in a general way on the administration item I called attention to the fact that, since 1939 when we went into war, the department has been drawing on the funds of P.F.R.A. for certain work which usually is financed direct under the experimental farms vote. Last year we made a change. The explanation that is given here would indicate an increase in the vote for branch farms and illustration stations; but when the whole transaction is taken into account, involving expenditures last year as well as this, there is a reduction in this particular item, while the vote for prairie farm rehabilitation remains exactly the same.

Mr. McIVOR: On this vote for branch farms and sub-stations I should like to pay my tribute to the superintendent of our sub-station west of Fort William. At first the farmers were a bit lukewarm toward it, but now the influence of that sub-station pays for itself several times over in the raising of grains and grasses and fruits and vegetables, and especially in the use of fertilizer. The farmers now realize that the use of fertilizer pays for itself over and over again. When a farmer takes his wife out to see a field where fertilizer has been used he stands up and says: This is the result of using fertilizer when you thought we were wasting money.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I want to come back to the question I asked earlier. Would the minister indicate if he would be prepared to give consideration to the opening of a pilot plant for flax fibre experimental work in the Dauphin area similar to the one opened at Portage la Prairie? If such a plant were established in the Dauphin area it could do a great deal of good work. As the minister is probably aware, the Dauphin area is one of the best farming areas in Manitoba and a good deal of flax is now being grown. On page 99 of the minister's report there is a brief account of the work done by the pilot flax mill at Portage la Prairie, and it would appear that the same type of project would be very desirable for the Dauphin area.

Last year I referred to two airports, one on each side of the town of Dauphin, and I urged the minister to secure one of these airports for an experimental farm or sub-station. Since then, one of these airports has been sold, but there is still one left and I would suggest that if anything along the line of an experimental station is being considered for that district it would be wise to secure some of the buildings that are left at one of these airports because, once they are torn down, it would mean much more expense to build them up again. They are excellent buildings which could be easily transformed into the type of buildings required for an experimental station.

Mr. GARDINER: The pilot station at Portage la Prairie is the only one we have in western Canada for carrying on experimental work in connection with fibre flax. We did carry on experimental work in the production of hemp at a much earlier stage, before my time as minister. One reason why Portage has been chosen for this pilot flax mill is that the soil and all other conditions there are more favourable for trying out fibre plants of any kind than can be found anywhere else except in the irrigated areas such as around Lethbridge, where you can apply the water. The conditions at Portage are considered most favourable, and it is hoped that it can be established that fibre flax can be produced satisfactorily in such an area. We are satisfied that if we cannot prove it can be produced satisfactorily there, there is nowhere else in western Canada outside of limited irrigation areas where it could be produced satisfactorily, and until that experimental work is completed, there would be no reason to establish pilot plants to determine whether fibre flax can be grown successfully in less favourable areas.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: In the report mention is made of cooperative experimental tests being conducted at the illustration stations at Arborg and Dugald. Would the minister indicate what the degree of success has been at these points? If such a test were successful at Arborg it would be a sure thing in the Dauphin district.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): Following along the line taken by the hon. member for Dauphin, I think the minister is aware that in the southeastern part of Saskatchewan in the constituency I represent, certain experiments are hoped to be carried out whereby we can utilize flax straw. That would not be a fibre flax. But in past years Americans have been coming over and buying baled flax straw, shipping it out of the country and processing it into certain types of paper. Has the minister any information in regard to experiments and work along that line?

Mr. GARDINER: The experiments that are being carried on are not exactly what one might think by speaking just in terms of fibre flax. Fibre flax is, of course, for the making of the finer varieties of cloth as well as for making rope, twine and that sort of thing. But the experiments that are being carried on at Portage la Prairie more or less recognize the fact that, under the climatic conditions we have in western Canada, that type of flax cannot be grown. What we are attempting to do is to establish some other uses for the fibre, not only of the flax that is being grown as a fibre flax at Portage, but also of the flax that grows generally. An attempt is being made to establish that it can be successfully used for cigarette paper, which is in great demand and which is made from other products at the present time. Then some experiments are being made as to the utilization for making wallboard for building purposes. The experiments are not along the line of just using the fibre flax for the ordinary purpose for which fibre flax is used; its purpose is to try to establish some method of utilizing the great volume of fibre straw which is available in western Canada from the production of flax.

Mr. MARQUIS: I understand that the minister is aware that one of the most important experimental stations is located in my county of Kamouraska at Ste. Anne de la Pocatière. I wish to thank the minister for what he has done in the last few months in the way of improving the conditions of the working men, but I would ask him if he intends to make more repairs to the buildings on the farm and to improve more and more the conditions of the workmen and the employees there.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, the intention is to make some repairs there and the amounts are included in the public works estimates.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: The report dealing with the pilot flax mill at Portage is brief as a general report would have to be. Can the minister indicate whether a separate report has been published dealing in particular with that one experiment which has been going on since 1945?

Mr. GARDINER: One is being prepared now which covers the three years of work since the plant was first established. It is not yet in print but will be printed shortly.

Production service—

18. Compensation for animals slaughtered, $223,036.

Mr. WRIGHT: Last night I asked the minister a question in regard to artificial insemination of dairy herds in Canada. What assistance is the department giving in this matter? To what extent is it being used and what success, if any, is being obtained by its use?

Mr. GARDINER: There is an association known as the artificial insemination unit. The practice that is being followed by the department is to put out one bull for at least every one that they put out. We do the experimental work in connection with it.

Mr. WRIGHT: Has the minister any idea what success is being attained?

Mr. GARDINER: It is particularly good with dairy cattle; it is more successful with dairy cattle than with others and it has resulted in very good developments.

Mr. WRIGHT: Is a report issued on it which is obtainable?

Mr. GARDINER: No report has been issued on it up to the present.

Mr. McLURE: Are all purebred registered stock eligible for compensation if they are authorized to be slaughtered by some veterinarian because of disease?

Mr. GARDINER: If they are properly registered as purebred stock, payment is made on the basis of purebred stock. If they are not registered, then they would not be eligible.

Mr. McLURE: There have been considerable losses among the purebred registered stock on the farm of Silver Foxes owing to the prevalence of disease there last year. Most of these are purebred animals and are registered in the records of the department at Ottawa. The claim has been made that these people should be compensated in cases where a veterinarian has been called in from the department who orders the animals to be slaughtered in order to protect other herds in that vicinity. Up to the present very little compensation, if any, has been paid and the losses have been extremely heavy.

Mr. GARDINER: In a general way the only time we pay for the slaughtering of live stock is that provided for in order to deal with tuberculosis, in order to try to control the development of tuberculosis or prevent it. There are other cases where we pay compensation in connection with hog cholera, for example, and in a few other instances where our officials order the slaughter of animals. But in a general way it is correct to say that no compensation is paid for any live stock other than cattle. The real reason for that is to prevent the spread of tuberculosis among human beings. The government does not assume the responsibility for paying for losses that individuals have because of diseases which animals may have which do not affect human beings. That is, of course, the strength of the argument which was made last night in connection with Bang's disease. It is a disease which does affect the human being and which can be transferred from the animal to the human being. It is in order to combat that kind of disease that we pay for slaughtering of animals.

Production service—
19. Live stock and poultry, $979,111.

Mr. CARDIFF: There seems to be an increase of $139,486 in this item, and in one particular item, $30,000 for buildings and land. Can the minister tell us where that was expended?

Mr. GARDINER: The increase amounts to $189,486. Did the hon. member ask what the increase was for?

Mr. CARDIFF: There is an item of $30,000 for buildings and land. Where was that amount expended?

Mr. GARDINER: For pig-testing stations at Moncton and Waterloo.

Production service—
20. Plant products—seeds, feeds, fertilizers, insecticides and fungicides control, including grant of $31,000 to Canadian Seed Growers' Association, $826,255.

Mr. WHITE (Middlesex East): This item deals with seeds and like matters. Last evening I had an opportunity to say a word or two about the county of Middlesex and western Ontario so far as live stock was concerned. I have a certain amount of justifiable pride in the county of Middlesex. I am also grateful to the county for the opportunities they have given to me. In the county of Middlesex we have a crop and seed improvement association. They put on, I think, the outstanding seed fair in Ontario, if not in the Dominion of Canada. Over a period of some eight years there has been a tremendous increase in the production of seed grain in the county; not only in that county but in the various counties surrounding, there has been also an enormous increase in those counties. Less than twenty years ago there were only three registered seed growers in the county of Middlesex; today they number in hundreds.

I wish to mention three of these outstanding men. One is Mr. Alex M. Stewart, who became oat king of North America. Last year Mr. Clifford Dale was winner in the barley contest in the province of Ontario, and part of the credit for this crop and seed improvement association should go to the first president, Mr. Andrew Murray, also of Middlesex county and from my home township.

In 1945 there was exported from the area 100,000 bushels of seed grain to the United States. Last year, in 1946, there were 7,500 acres contracted for registered seed grain growing purposes in Middlesex county alone, to say nothing of the other nine or ten counties surrounding. The results have been improved varieties and yields.

Western Ontario is the centre of a rich and fertile area, and besides the growing of grains there are pasture grasses and clovers, soya beans and corn, coarse grains, spring wheat and other seeds. In the crop year now approaching there were contracts for a large acreage of flax seed, but owing to the very wet season it has not been possible to plant all the acres contracted for. Also in the area we have sixty seed cleaning plants and therefore in western Ontario we are equipped, we have the know-how, to produce some of the finest seed grains anywhere in the province.

Also located within the western Ontario area is the university of Western Ontario. They should and could be equipped to carry on education, training and research in the agricultural sciences, which would be of vast use to the farmers of western Ontario.

Some members of the house look upon the estimates we are now discussing as an expense. Actually they are an investment in agriculture, our basic industry, and I think we should look upon them in that light. A few nights ago I heard a discussion here about the difficulty of collecting income tax from the farmers. I suggest that if the farmer received a price that put him in the income tax brackets he would gladly pay income tax. We all pay tribute to the minister and the remarkable memory he has. Some time ago representative groups from the county of Middlesex and surrounding areas made representations to him regarding the setting up in western Ontario of a seed testing laboratory. I would ask him to remember that area.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): A matter of extreme importance that I wish to speak about, a matter of importance not only to farmers but to all Canadians, is fertilizer, and soil conservation in Canada. Earlier in the discussion of the estimates I spoke at some length in this regard. Tonight I do not intend to duplicate my remarks but I shall speak, first, of conservation, second, of the general picture of fertilizer in Canada, and, lastly, give what I hope will be some constructive proposals which will be of assistance in this matter.

All hon. members, whether farmers or not, should recognize that in Canada today we are following a policy which is depleting our soils of their nutritive content. If this process goes on we shall finally be in the position where we shall have smaller and smaller crops as a result of robbing the soils of their various chemicals and foods which are necessary for plant growth.

The government was in a splendid position to see that we would have an increased use of fertilizer throughout Canada and it could easily have made it possible for our farmers to become accustomed to the use of fertilizers. I feel that the fertilizer policy in Canada is such as to discourage the widespread use of fetrilizer, and in this regard I would say that today we have a fertilizer monopoly in the country. Most of the responsibility for this lies at the door of the present government.

I would refer the committee to the report of the price spreads commission which in 1935 pointed out that for all practical purposes a monopoly may exist where there is more than one seller. In that inquiry they listed fertilizer as one type of monopoly in Canada. Since that time we have seen the growth of monopoly in the control of fertilizer. Before the war, Canadian Industries Limited had four large mixing plants: Canada Packers, four; Agricultural Chemicals, two; International Fertilizers, two, and smaller companies, about three. The situation was such that these companies were taking the sulphate of ammonia from the coke and steel plants, and in central Canada Canadian Industries Limited took the whole supply of it. While they were buying this commodity, which was a by-product of the coke mills, at $21 a ton, without touching it they were selling it at $33 a ton. Allowing for freight to the amount of $2, they were making a net profit of $10 a ton.

That was bad enough, but since that time conditions have got worse. We find now that, as I indicated earlier in this house, the government has seen fit to sell out our three large plants, the plant at Trail, the one at Calgary and the large Welland plant, to monopoly interests. The policy followed by the government is, I maintain, a sell-out of the Canadian farmer. It is against the wishes of organized agriculture, because I am going to put on the record communications between the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and government officials to show that they knew nothing about the sale of these plants and also to show that the plants were sold against the wishes of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture.

First, I should like to read from the Rural Cooperator of Tuesday, January 14, 1947, a summary of a speech given by Mr. Colin Groff, Secretary of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture:

> We reported last year respecting the disposal of the government-owned nitrate plants at Calgary and at Welland, Ontario. The situation at that time and throughout the year, so far as our understanding with the government was concerned, was that the government, through the Hon. C. D. Howe, had assured us that even though the Calgary plant, where cheap nitrate was being produced, might be sold, there would be a protection for prices for nitrate for fertilizer through the fact that the government intended continuing operation of the plant at Welland. It was only in December that we learned that the government had disposed of this plant also to private interests a short time ago, a decision which was made without any information being given to us at the time, or without any consultation with us.

Before continuing with that, I should like to say that these plants were built at considerable expense to the Canadian people. I have here a letter from the office of the deputy minister of reconstruction and supply, which indicates that the total cost to the Canadian taxpayers for the Welland chemical works was $19,129,246. That plant was sold to the North American Cyanamid people on December 1, 1946, for $4,750,000. I do not think it is necessary to put on record again the prices realized from the sale of these plants, but I should like to indicate this in reference to the profits made by the fertilizer industry in this country, and I am going to read this extract because I think it should be placed on the record:

> The farmers of Canada should take a good look at recent financial reports of the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company. This company has always been a dominant factor in the production of lead, zinc and other metals, and its monopoly position has undoubtedly affected farmers in one way or another without attracting too much attention to itself.
> But this year the financial statement is interesting especially to farmers. The annual report shows that the net profit for 1946 was $23,323,168, or $7.12 per share, compared with $3.52 per share in 1945, an increase of over one hundred per cent. This vastly increased profit was realized chiefly from greatly increased sales of fertilizers, combined with higher prices for base metals. Production of fertilizer was 484,720 tons compared with 369,666 of the previous year.

The company, in its annual report, says "the year 1946 was marked by a record production of fertilizer due mainly to the purchase in April of plants from the dominion government."

Last year the Canadian Federation of Agriculture asked the government, through the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply, what disposition would be made of the government plants. Here again I quote from the report of Mr. Herb Hannam, president of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, at the annual meeting in Winnipeg. The Minister of Reconstruction and Supply had assured him that—

. . . "even though the Calgary plant, where cheap nitrate is produced, might be sold, there will be protection for prices for nitrate for fertilizer through the fact that the government intended continuing operation of the plant at Welland." It was only in December that we learned that the government had disposed of this plant, also to private interests, a short time ago, a decision which was made without any information being given to us at that time, or without any consultation with us.

The Canadian Federation of Agriculture then, in a resolution, charged the government with breach of faith.

In regard to what might have been done by the government had we kept these plants in operation, we have found that the Alberta Nitrogen Products plant was producing nitrate, which is the most costly ingredient going into fertilizer, for $19 a ton, The Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company was producing it at $29, and the Welland plant at $39. These were the prices, of course, when the plants were first being operated. Naturally we understand that, as more fertilizer was produced and the plants were used more, these costs would be greatly reduced.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Why were the costs so different?

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): Simply because of the nature of the plants and the source of the material.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): They use natural gas in Calgary.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): That is one reason; yes. I might say the farmers quickly recognized that here we had an opportunity of getting cheap fertilizer for which we had been paying, going into the mix, $44 a ton. I have here an extract from a letter sent to the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply by Mr. Hannam on December, 28, 1943:

[Mr. McCullough.]

Canadian farmers are already appreciating the fact that nitrogen costs especially have been substantially reduced since there came into operation government owned ammonium nitrate plants operated by your department, and which are now supplying a large quantity of ammonium nitrate for fertilizer purposes in Canada

An attempt was made on the part of organized farmers in this country once more to prevent the monopoly of this ingredient going back into the hands of private enterprise. I want to quote from sessional paper No. 160, tabled in this house on Friday, February 4, 1947. It contains the letter of December 28 from the president of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, in which he said:

The continued operation of the fertilizer plants after the war, to supply Canadian farmers with cheap nitrogen for fertilizer purposes, will be a very important factor indeed in agricultural production and it is hoped that the government in the best interests of all the farmers of Canada, will continue to operate these plants or to make such arrangements as will assure these plants being operated at cost. In any such arrangement the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and the large commercial cooperatives represented in it, assure you of their desire to cooperate and to undertake whatever responsibility is agreed upon through negotiations of our representatives with your department.

As private nitrogen fertilizer interests may wish to obtain control of these government plants, in order to protect their own positions and to continue at least some measure of monopolistic control of nitrogen for agriculture, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture representing the farmers of Canada, asks that it be consulted before any disposition of these plants is made and preferably before any negotiations are undertaken with private interests that might be interested in them.

Early in 1944 a committee of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture again interviewed the minister and discussed the possibility of keeping one of these plants under government control. This committee was composed of managers and presidents of such corporations as the wheat pools, live stock cooperatives and cooperative wholesales. At this stage I might say the minister indicated that the government was not considering offers for the plant, and that, instead, it was considering continued operation of the plant. His letter, dated June 12, 1944, contains the following statement:

Mr. MITCHELL: What is my hon. friend reading from?

Mr. VIAU: I thought it was understood that in this house we were not supposed to read speeches.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): I am not reading my speech.

Mr. VIAU: You are reading material prepared at Woodsworth House, and it has to be stopped.

Mr. WRIGHT: The hon. member is reading correspondence tabled in this house in an order for return.

Mr. VIAU: He is reading material prepared by people who have never been in this house. It is well typed and well written.

Mr. GARDINER: I would just like to call attention to the fact that this speech was put on record on June 3, and it was put on record last year. That applies to almost every word which is being put on record now. It has been answered twice already.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): I can put on record what I like.

Mr. GARDINER: Let me point out just what is on record. At page 3758 of Hansard for June 3 the hon. member who now has the floor made the same statements and read some of the same articles into Hansard. When he had finished I said:

> I judge, from the trend the discussion has taken up to the present, that the C.C.F. party are carrying out what their leader announced the other day was an organized plan in the party; and I compliment them upon carrying it out, because of its effectiveness.

Mr. WRIGHT: On a point of order—

Mr. VIAU: Sit down.

Mr. GARDINER:

> —But the representative of the Social Credit party stated a few moments ago that they intended to carry out what is the recognized and proper procedure in connection with this discussion, and would discuss each one of these matters on the appropriate item when it came up.
> Mr. Ross (Souris): And the official opposition.
> Mr. Gardiner: And the official opposition, while they have not announced it, have carried it out in practice all evening.

As a result, other members in the house desisted from discussing the question and going into the matter farther. Now, tonight, we are listening to the same speech being read again. The point of order is that one cannot discuss this question a second time by reading the same speech. The hon. member might as well pick up this volume of Hansard and read the whole speech again into the record.

The first point of order is that he should not be reading his speech at all; and the second point of order is that he is just reading again what is already on Hansard, and is thereby wasting the time of the house.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): On a question of privilege, I wish to say that the only portion I am reading consists of letters or correspondence either tabled in the house or between the minister and the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. I say that is perfectly in order.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: It is not in order to refer to a debate of the same session.

Mr. KNOWLES: The minister did that.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): I am not doing that.

Mr. GARDINER: You do not have to say you are referring to it, but you may be still referring to it.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. I think the hon. member for Assiniboia will agree that no good purpose will be served by putting on Hansard again what has already been put on Hansard. I hope he will try to save the time of the committee, and will not repeat what is already on Hansard.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): Mr. Chairman, I am repeating only very little of what was put on the record on any previous occasion. I want to clarify this, and say that, no matter if I do repeat myself, so long as I am a member of the house, when I think there is something I should fight for, on behalf of the farmers and people of this country, I am going to do it.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I hope the hon. member does not take the attitude that he defies the rules of the house.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): That is what he says.

Mr. MITCHELL: Do not have any mock heroics about this.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): Have I the floor?

Mr. MITCHELL: I rise to a point of order. It is still a free country. I appreciate that when we are discussing a difficult and intricate subject it may be necessary to read a speech. I think we all agree on that. But if you want to use Hansard as campaign literature, you understand, it is totally out of order.

Mr. WRIGHT: What is the point of order?

Mr. MITCHELL: The point of order is that you should not read a speech, even in committee.

Mr. WRIGHT: The hon. member was not reading his speech. He was reading a quotation.

Mr. MITCHELL: What has he in his hand, then?

Mr. JUTRAS: That was my first point of order. He was reading what he had said in the house before.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: If the hon. member is reading letters tabled in the house in relation to the matter, he would be in order. But I would call the hon. member's attention to the fact that no good purpose will be served by placing on Hansard again what was put there a few days ago.

Mr. JUTRAS: That is right.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): I repeat, as I indicated before, that I am not putting on the record anything that was put there before. So far as the Minister of Labour is concerned, let me say that some people have pretty short memories, and it would not do them a bit of harm to have things repeated to them.

I have already indicated that there was an undertaking or a commitment made by the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply to the farmers of this country. As I said before, there was a breach of faith there, and they sold out the organized farmers of this country, and the Canadian people generally.

Now, to continue—

Mr. MITCHELL: Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order—a point of privilege. I do not think my hon. friend should accuse this government or any individual in the house of selling out the Canadian farmer, because he knows it is not true.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): By the time I have finished, if you allow me to continue my speech, I will indicate what I mean by it.

Mr. JUTRAS: You are only playing politics.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I rise to a question of privilege. I think the hon. member should be allowed to proceed and play the record. But I also think he should get a new needle.

Mr. JUTRAS: That is the way I entered into it, by saying that he was still using the old broken record.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. I would ask the hon. member not to put on Hansard again what is already there.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Our records are original. Do not repeat them so often.

[Mr. Wright.]

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): I would not want to read the record of hon. members to my right.

Mr. JUTRAS: Get your own speech, not one you made previously.

Mr. KNOWLES: Make your own speech.

Mr. BRYCE: You make a speech; you haven't made one yet.

Mr. JUTRAS: I made more than you did.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): The suggestion in the letter of the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply was agreed to by Mr. Hannam, where he said this in his letter of June 16, 1944:

> It is not my purpose at this time to discuss how one or more of these nitrogen plants may be operated after the war in order to best serve agricultural producers in Canada. If, in consultation with the fertilizer committee of our Canadian Federation of Agriculture, it is found that continued government operation is the best way to provide for the production of agriculture nitrogen, I think I can assure you that it will have our whole-hearted support.

I will say right here that there was a lot of controversy on the point. I think the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply should have known that they could not merely have given such a commitment or assurance that these plants could be sold to any agricultural group in this country.

Then, I have here the recommendation of the war expenditures committee. This was the recommendation of sub-committee number four of the war expenditures committee of the House of Commons. They made an investigation into the manufacture of ammonium nitrate at the Calgary plant. Their report is as follows:

> That the plants both at Calgary and Niagara Falls should remain the property of the crown and should be operated as a government enterprise for the purpose of the manufacture of ammonium nitrate for the use of Canadian agriculture and other chemicals. The sub-committee fully appreciates the fact that this recommendation is contrary to the existing agreement but believes that the manufacture of ammonium nitrate and other products is of sufficient importance to Canadian agriculture that the terms of the agreement should be re-negotiated after the war.

I might say that even on September 20, 1945, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, by their president, again made a further appeal to the government that these plants be not turned over to private enterprise, but be kept or put under cooperative ownership.

Then Mr. Hannam had this to say, and I quote the letter to the minister:

You will recall that on several occasions our federation of agriculture interviewed you regarding future operation of government owned nitrogen plants. In view of the importance of nitrogen in a soil building programme for Canadian agriculture, we made a special appeal to you and the government, to provide that at least one of these plants—the Calgary plant—be operated by a cooperative corporation to be formed by member bodies of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, in cooperation with federal government. Should this arrangement not meet with approval, we urge very strongly that the federal government continue to operate this plant for the benefit of Canadian farmers, in order to supply them this vital element of their fertilizer requirements at the lowest possible price. In fact, it seems evident to us that a high price nitrogen product would be a definite bottleneck in the fertilizer industry in the years immediately ahead.

As we have mentioned to you on former occasions, we do fear the result if these plants are permitted to be sold to private corporations whose policy in the past has been to charge all the traffic will bear.

You were good enough to assure us on one occasion, that the government would not permit this to happen without prior consultation with our Canadian Federation of Agriculture. Accordingly, we are very anxious to know what, if any, development there may be in connection with these plants, and what, if any, assurance you can give us that at least one will be government operated, in order that our farmers may receive their nitrogen fertilizer at a reasonably low figure.

Here again the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply indicated that the government was going to sell the Calgary plant, but that the Welland plant in eastern Canada would be used for the purpose of producing fertilizer in this country and would be kept under government operation. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture objected to the suggestion that the Calgary plant was not to operate under government ownership, because it was able to produce nitrogen there much more cheaply. Again they suggested to the minister:

We understand also, that the cost of manufacturing amonium nitrate in the Calgary plant is only about half the cost of manufacturing in the Port Robinson plant in Ontario.

When the minister answers tonight I should like him to say why it was not deemed reasonable to keep in operation a plant which could produce fertilizer more cheaply rather than to keep the Welland plant continuing. This letter continues:

If the Port Robinson plant is to manufacture fertilizer for the farmers of Canada, are they to pay a high price, while the Calgary plant will go to private hands, where the new owners would be in a position to make excessive profits while selling at the same price as the products manufactured at Port Robinson?

In an interview with yourself some time ago, we felt we had a definite understanding with you that this plant would not be offered for sale to private interests, without consulting our Canadian Federation of Agriculture. Now in your letter, you state "Steps are, therefore, being taken to dispose of the property." Does this mean that the property would have been sold very shortly, and we would have known nothing about it, had it not been that I happened to make inquiry regarding this plant in my letter of September 20?

In his reply to Mr. Hannam the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply indicated that the plant at Calgary might become a white elephant. I remember the debate in the house on February 10 last when I brought up this subject, and the Minister of Agriculture said that we could produce all the nitrates at one of these plants for Canadian use and then in a very short time we would have to export our surplus production. I want to ask, what is wrong with having fertilizers here in Canada for export? Do we not want industries? Why should we turn this over to private enterprise so that they can make the profits I have indicated. The Minister of Reconstruction and Supply, in his letter of October 2, 1945, said:

As I wrote you previously, Welland Chemicals is capable of manufacturing products other than fertilizer, and should probably be kept as a government operation. This plant is being operated on a very profitable basis, and probably can continue to operate at a profit, regardless of the export situation. It is capable of furnishing all Canadian requirements for many years to come, and can do so cheaper than the Calgary plant. Certainly, its use would regulate the price of fertilizers produced privately in a manner that will fully protect users of fertilizer.

While no time for receiving tenders for the plant has been fixed, there is no doubt that sufficient time will elapse to give the Canadian Federation of Agriculture ample time to formulate a proposal for the purchase of the plant, provided early steps are taken by yourself to that end.

In October, 1945, the Alberta government wired to the minister when it became known that the Calgary plant had been sold to private interests. They said:

Today's press announces Honourable C. D. Howe considering sale of ammonia plant at Calgary. Alberta government desires to exercise its priority on this plant immediately to prevent loss of the industry to the province unless sale by dominion government contains undertaking and guarantee by purchaser of continuous operation in the province.

I wrote to the Department of Reconstruction and Supply to ask whether the contract of sale provided that the plant would be kept in operation, and I should like to quote from the letter I received from the department in reply:

The sale contract does not place any responsibility on the North American Cyanamid

Limited to keep the plant operating at full capacity nor to manufacture any particular type of product.

Not only did the government sell the plant, but they gave away the benefits of all the experiments which had been carried on during the war. I have a clipping here from the Globe and Mail of March 6, 1947, which asks why Ottawa wonders why the chemical plant sale alarms the United Kingdom minister. It is indicated there that even the right to the manufacture of picrite is given to these American Cyanamid people, and they are thus given complete control of that production. I do not intend to go on any farther, Mr. Chairman.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): I know there are many hon. members to my right who would like to get this through. The leader of the C.C.F. party got up and made a fine speech against the growth of cartels in this country. I remember that at that time the hon. member for Kamloops said that all he needed to do was to complain about it, and another hon. member to my right said that the leader of this group could go and lay a complaint against the cartels. Here we have an indication that the government are allowing a cartel to exist in this country. We have set up the Combines Investigations Act with a commissioner to try to control this sort of thing. However, if the government cannot control this I wonder how any individual in this house or in the country can control it. If hon. members to my right are in favour of this sort of thing, let them get up and say so.

Mr. FERGUSON: Who said they were?

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): You seem to be in a hurry to pass this item.

Mr. FERGUSON: Nonsense.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): I want to tell the committee why I brought up this matter. We know that farmers who want to use fertilizer are forced to pay prices which they cannot afford. Earlier this evening we passed items running into millions of dollars to set up experimental farms and stations so that our farmers may be informed about soil conservation and thus have greater production. According to experiments which have been conducted by our universities, a wide-scale use of fertilizer would increase production by eight to ten bushels per acre. The world is crying for food and we want stable production in this country. Therefore I submit it is the responsibility of the government to make these fertilizers available to our farmers at prices they can afford to pay. Throughout the west, and especially in Saskatchewan, the district which I know best, 11-48 fertilizer is being sold at $63.50 off the car, or $64.50 at distribution points. It can be well understood why farmers are not using it.

Here are the results of tests made by the college of agriculture of the university of Saskatchewan. After using 11-48 at four different rates per acre the average increase in bushels per acre ranged from 6·3 to 10·2. That is a considerable increase, and when you apply that increase over the whole of the province it can readily be seen of what tremendous value it would be to our farmers. The use of fertilizer also on grazing land is of great value because it increases greatly the nitrogen content in the dried grass and hay from that pasturage.

It is too late to do anything about these plants because they are sold and gone, but I should like to make a constructive proposal to the government. The only thing I see now is for the federal government to subsidize the use of fertilizer in this country so that our farmers will become used to it. Our land is a heritage, and I do not think we can afford to exploit it as we have our other natural resources. If we are to make a scientific attempt at soil conservation it is up to the federal government to do something about fertilizer.

Mr. FERGUSON: I rise to a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman. Two days ago we had as our guest in this country the President of the United States, and a few years ago we had as a guest a great man in the person of the late President Roosevelt. There appears in a reputable Canadian newspaper today an article which I believe all members of this house would like to have repudiated or corroborated. It says that it was originally intended to have inscribed on the carillon bells at the Rainbow bridge at Niagara Falls the names of the late President Roosevelt and Winston Churchill. But in today's newspaper, travelling all over the Dominion of Canada and, I am sure, into the United States, it is stated that through pressure—

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. FERGUSON: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, I think hon. members will be glad to have this matter brought to their attention.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. When the Chairman rises will the hon. member kindly be seated. When the house is in committee there can be no question of privilege on the matter about which the hon. member is speaking. If the house were sitting as a house there might possibly be a question of privilege, but not at the present time.

Mr. GRAYDON: The member ought to be allowed to finish his statement, Mr. Chairman. Three ministers of the crown are involved.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. The house is in committee.

Mr. GARDINER: I think I should make a few remarks with regard to the statements that were put on Hansard within the last few minutes by the hon. member for Assiniboia. The statement which has been largely read to the committee this evening was in substance put on the record on June 3 last and was also put on the record a year ago. At the time it was placed on the record a year ago I called attention to some remarks which had been made which were not entirely in accordance with the facts. I am going to say this evening that, while the record which was placed on Hansard—

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): On a point of privilege, to what statements is the minister referring?

Mr. GARDINER: I am coming to that and will indicate what they were. The hon. member has been reading to the committee letters that were received by the federation of agriculture from the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply and has referred to discussions which took place between myself and the president of the federation. The letters in themselves in so far as they were read are, of course, in accordance with the facts. But my hon. friend did not tell all the story, as he himself knows.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): You finish it then.

Mr. GARDINER: I will finish it and when I have finished the hon. member may have something else to say. The position which was taken by the hon. member and read on to the record previously was to this effect, with regard to the agreement entered into for the sale of the nitrogen products plants at Calgary and in the Niagara peninsula:

> If hereafter for any reason the (U.K.) government at any time or times within twenty (20) years from the date hereof shall desire or determine to lease or dispose of said plant or any department or part thereof except to "any government within the British empire or North America," N.A.C.L. shall be given the first opportunity.

The impression has been left with the committee by the hon. member that governments did not have any opportunity to buy this plant, and that the farm organizations had no opportunity to buy it. The fact is that the president of the federation of agriculture carried on a correspondence, first, with the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply, and when he felt that the plant would probably be sold if something further were not done he came to the Minister of Agriculture and carried on conversations with him in regard to the matter. As a result of the representations made, I met the farm organizations from western Canada, at the suggestion of the president of the federation, and discussed with them the whole question whether arrangements could be made for the disposal of this plant to some government or to some farm organization in western Canada. It is true that, strictly speaking, the farm organization probably could not, under the terms of the agreement, have obtained the plant directly. But there is a suggestion that governments could have retained possession of the plant.

A letter has been read on to Hansard to the effect that the Alberta government did make inquiries, but I notice that the hon. member did not follow through or give any indication to the committee or the country of what the final outcome of that correspondence was or whether the government of Alberta pressed its desire to obtain the plant which was located in Alberta. My memory of the discussions and my understanding of them is this, and I know something whereof I speak because I went to the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply myself and asked him to hold these plants in possession of the government until such time as every possible concern in western Canada that might want to purchase the plants had an opportunity to do so. It was only after the president of the federation of agriculture came to me personally—and I am sure he will take no exception to my saying so tonight, and he will so state anywhere—and said it did not appear that any arrangement could be made to have these plants handled by any of the organizations in western Canada, or by the governments in western Canada, that the plant was disposed of. We had exhausted every possible attempt that could be made to see to it that if any government or farm organization desired to take over these plants an opportunity would be given them to do so.

I agree that, strictly speaking, there are terms in the agreement which may have made it difficult, if the company had desired to make it difficult for this kind of thing to happen; but there was no indication given to the government or to the minister, so far as I know, that the company itself would have objected to the operation of this plant by farm organizations or by a government. The fact of the matter is that every farm organization in western Canada—and some of them have considerable funds of money running into millions of dollars—examined into the possibility of taking this plant over and operating it, and decided, without any exception whatsoever, that they had no desire to do so. The government itself examined into the possibilities of operating the plant—

Mr. BLACKMORE: The federal government?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes. The federal government also examined into the possibility. I do not say that the federal government arrived at the decision which it did on the basis of the possibility of operating it; the federal government took the position that we were not desirous of going into that type of business in the western part of Canada.

The suggestion has been made that when we were discussing this question before, I stated that the chief reason for it was the fact that the greater part of the product had to be exported. It was not the idea that the product had to be exported that had anything in particular to do with the matter; it was the fact that if we were to operate the plant as a government we would operate it in opposition to plants being operated in other areas in other countries, not to serve our own people, because the product which is an ingredient of fertilizer is not a product which is used, in quantities comparable with the possible production of the plant, in the fertilizer that would be useful in the western part of Canada. It is an ingredient of fertilizer which is used to a considerable extent in parts of eastern Canada and in parts of the United States. The product which is obtained in the United States for that purpose is partly provided locally and partly obtained from Chile. If we had undertaken the operation of that plant it would have meant that as a government we would be operating a plant which would not serve any real purpose in so far as the farmers of western Canada were concerned, and which would take us into competition within another country and with other organizations that were producing similar ingredients—

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): The Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company are doing very well.

Mr. GARDINER: I do not know whether they are doing particularly well out of the plant or not; I am not in a position to say, but I am in a position to say this, that my hon. friend again threw out the suggestion that they might close it up. Well, if they are doing so well in it, why would they close it up? As a matter of fact, on the previous occasion when this matter was under discussion I said, in as definite terms as I could state it, that when I suggested out on the coast that there might be a possibility of the plant being closed up I immediately received a telegram from those who were operating the plant saying that it would not be closed up, that it would be operated. So far as I know, it will be operated. The plant is being operated there; but the point I wish to make is this. The government decided, as a matter of policy, that it would not operate that kind of plant. That is not the policy of the group in the opposition that are raising this question. Their policy is that they should purchase and operate plants of this kind in order to serve—

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): For the benefit of the people of that part of the country.

Mr. GARDINER: My friend says, "for the benefit of the people of that part of the country". He refers particularly to Saskatchewan. There was not a thing in the world to prevent the government of that province from buying this plant had they wished to do so. He says the service that is to be given is to be given to thousands upon thousands of farmers in Saskatchewan. If that plant could be of service to thousands and thousands of farmers in Saskatchewan, why did not the socialist government which believes in that kind of thing buy the plant at Calgary and operate it? It could have operated it just as successfully as this government could have done or as any other government could have done. I would suggest to them that when they are advocating governments taking over plants of this kind they take a look at what their own government is doing in connection with these matters in the province in which they live. If they do that, they will find that there is not very much that the government has taken over out there and tried to operate as a government, which has been of assistance to thousands and thousands.

Mr. WRIGHT: That is not what the minister says when he goes to Saskatchewan.

Mr. GARDINER: They took over a little box factory which employs some fifty or sixty men and they took over a brick plant at Estevan, which is operated on clay from which you cannot make good brick, as everyone in the western part of Canada understands.

Mr. WRIGHT: On a point of order, I am wondering just what the plants that are taken over in Saskatchewan have to do with fertilizer.

Mr. GARDINER: I know it has this to do with fertilizer. If the government of Saskatchewan had wanted to operate a plant and produce fertilizer it could have done so; it could have operated it. But of course they had no desire to do so for the same reason that others did not desire to do so.

If there happens to be some concern in Canada that, by operating a plant in cooperation with some other plant, can make a success of operating it, then I do not know of any reason why they should not operate it.

There is a great deal of argument as to what they will charge farmers in western Canada for the product. There is far more necessity for considering just to what extent the plant could be used by farmers in western Canada even if it were operated. By whomever it was operated, that plant would produce very much more in the way of an ingredient of fertilizer than western Canada will use. If it is to operate at all it will operate for the production of fertilizer for somebody somewhere else, and therefore it was not so much a matter of concern to this government from the point of view of the western farmer as has been made out.

All I want to say is that those who believe in government ownership and control of all industries in Canada, when they have an opportunity to take over a plant that is considered so valuable to the farmers of western Canada as the plant at Calgary is considered by them to be, should have made a much better effort to take it over and operate it themselves and provide the farmers with this much needed fertilizer about which we have been hearing.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I wish to ask the minister two questions. I think it might be well—and it may be obvious—to say that I have no intention of entering into a debate with respect to fertilizer. Is it not true that when that plant was operating during the war and making ammonia, over ninety per cent of the product was exported and used largely on the gulf coast of the United States? In other words, ten per cent of it could be used in this country. Is it not true, that that plant, in one month's operation, could make all the ammonia which could possibly be used in fertilizer for the whole of Canada and that, therefore, during the other eleven months it would be operating simply for export business for the gulf coast of the United States? Is that not the simple situation with respect to that plant?

Mr. GARDINER: That is a fact, yes.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Is it feasible today to fertilize the wheat areas in Saskatchewan? Is it not true to say that fertilizer is used today for smaller patches and more intensive cultivation? Is that not the fact? Could a man at any price fertilize a half-section of land? I do not know whether he could or not. I am simply asking the question to obtain information.

Mr. GARDINER: There are certain places where it would pay the farmer to fertilize his land, but not necessarily with the type of fertilizer that would be made from the product which is produced in Calgary. On the other hand, in an area where the land has been cropped for fifty years and which will still grow fifty bushels of wheat to the acre, farmers are not very likely to spend very much money on fertilizer. All over western Canada there are areas where, whenever they get sufficient rain, without any fertilizer whatever they grow anywhere from thirty to fifty bushels an acre, and some of those lands have been under crop continuously for from forty to fifty years. Of course the time may come when some of the ingredients of that soil will be used to such an extent as to make it absolutely necessary to fertilize it with something, but there has been no suggestion that any considerable amount of the product of the Calgary plant could be used for the purpose of improving cropping conditions in western Canada.

Mr. WRIGHT: It has been proved beyond doubt that the experimental station in Saskatoon, at the university, which has used fertilizer for the last five or seven years, has increased thereby the crop yields from six to eight bushels an acre.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Is that from the ammonia plant?

Mr. WRIGHT: Yes. It uses a considerable portion of fertilizer from this plant. The minister tried to indicate that this type of fertilizer is not used in western Canada. It is, and we have been short of fertilizer in the west ever since 1942. This year when I was at home at Easter the man who sells fertilizer in the area I represent came and told me that if I wanted fertilizer for 1948 I would have to put in my order immediately. He said that unless I had the order in within a short time I had very little chance of getting fertilizer in 1948. There is a shortage of fertilizer in western Canada. There was a shortage this year and there will be a shortage next year. The minister is just trying to wash the thing out, but I am afraid he cannot do so as far as the farmers of western Canada and the farmers in eastern Canada are concerned, because they realize more than ever the need of fertilizer. They realize that the fertility of the soil in the country has been going down. Yields have been going down in many areas simply because we have not learned how to use fertilizer to the extent to which it has been used in Europe and in other parts of the world. Anyone who has gone to Europe and has seen the use of fertilizer there, and the yields obtained from the intelligent application of fertilizer, must realize that we have to use fertilizer more and more in this country if we are to maintain the fertility of the soil.

We had in this house a committee set up in the early days of the war, and that committee recommended to the government that these fertilizer plants should be maintained. On that committee the majority of the members were government supporters. As soon as the war was over, however, as the minister stated, the government had no further interest in maintaining the government plants and sold them. That is the whole story. They were not interested in maintaining these government plants or in seeing that fertilizer was produced here so that it could be sold to the farmers at prices which would enable them to use it.

Mr. GARDINER: That is part of the story but not the whole story. No one else was interested in keeping them either. No one else was interested in buying them. Those who, it was thought, might be interested were consulted in the matter and, after examination, they said they were not interested.

Mr. WRIGHT: Again the minister is not stating the whole truth because the plant at Welland—

Mr. GARDINER: I am speaking of the western plant.

Mr. WRIGHT: —was sold before the people out there knew it was sold. They did not know it had been sold until they saw reports in the papers. The government had given an assurance to those people that, before the plant was sold, they would be notified. Not only that, but the minister himself stated in a letter that the government did not intend to sell the plant but intended to operate it. But they did not carry out their word.

Mr. GARDINER: I would ask my hon. friend to stick with the area he is interested in.

Mr. WRIGHT: I am sticking with a matter that is of interest to the whole country. I am not interested in western Canada alone; I am interested in agriculture throughout the country.

Mr. GARDINER: There is not an organization in eastern Canada that has control of government that believes in government ownership and control of plants of that kind. There is only one place in Canada where that condition exists, namely in Saskatchewan, and the government of Saskatchewan, which believes in that policy, had no interest in buying this plant.

Mr. WRIGHT: Quite right, but the plant was not built in Saskatchewan. If it had been they would have been interested in it. The plant was in Alberta.

Mr. GARDINER: They took some interest in the meat packing plant in Edmonton. Why should they not take an interest in the plant in Calgary?

Mr. WRIGHT: Again the minister is not stating the truth. The plant in Edmonton is a cooperative.

Mr. GARDINER: My hon. friend is not stating the facts when he says that I am not speaking the truth.

Mr. WRIGHT: I did not say the minister was not speaking the truth.

Mr. GARDINER: Better read Hansard.

Mr. WRIGHT: I said the government did not carry out their promise.

Mr. GARDINER: The government of Saskatchewan took an interest in the opening up of the plant in Edmonton and guaranteed the funds of the farmers cooperative that operates the plant. So did this government. But not only did the Saskatchewan government do that. Ever since, they have been taking credit for what has happened in those plants. As a matter of fact, this government put up much more than the provincial government of Saskatchewan put up, and negotiated all contracts for the sale, and if the government of Saskatchewan could take an interest in the plant in Edmonton, why could it not take an interest in the plant in Calgary?

Mr. WRIGHT: I might ask the minister the same question. If his government could take an interest in the plant in Edmonton, why not take an interest in the plant in Calgary?

Mr. GARDINER: We did. We arranged for its building.

Mr. WRIGHT: You sold it.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I am not going to have my province slighted. As I understand it, the socialist government, according to the statement of the hon. member who last spoke, did not take an interest in this plant for the reason that it was located in Alberta. That is one of the queerest reasons I have heard advanced for anything. The reason the plant is in Calgary is the fact that it uses natural gas. I say to my hon. friend, your government's money would have been just as good as anyone else's if it had been offered to this government as purchase price. I go a long way with you in some of your ideas, but let us not say that your socialist government in Saskatchewan is afraid, ashamed—what should the word be?—to deal with us in Alberta. We will use you well and give you a profit on every deal you make with us. You will be treated all right.

Mr. WRIGHT: The hon. member has little to say about the government of Alberta.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I will make a speech on that if you want me to. I think they are a splendid government.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Much better than Saskatchewan.

Mr. HERRIDGE: This vote is for $826,255 for plant products—seeds, feeds, fertilizers, insecticides, fungicides control, including a grant of $31,000 to the Canadian Seed Growers' Association. There is an increase of $111,999 over last year. I presume that is for fertilizer subsidy. I notice that an order in council, P.C. 2084, was passed on May 19, 1947, which deals with subsidies in connection with fertilizer chemicals, and so on. How are these subsidies operated? What is the procedure?

Mr. GARDINER: None of that increase involves fertilizer, but that does not prevent my answering the question which has been asked. There is no part of the $111,000 increase used in fertilizer subsidy. The facts with regard to fertilizer are set out, up to the end of last year, at page 178 of the annual report which has already been tabled in the house. The facts relative to what has been asked are these:

Canada used in the past year approximately 600,000 tons of fertilizers of all kinds as against 560,000 tons in 1944-45 and 275,000 tons in 1939-40. These requirements were obtained by increased production in fertilizer plants in Canada and by imports allocated by the combined food board. As a result relatively few, if any, farmers were unable to obtain surplus supplies, despite the tight position. Regulations established under the wartime prices and trade board and the agricultural supplies board were administered by officials of the plant products division, and these regulations permitted—

(a) the subsidizing of imports to the extent of $260,000;

(b) the enforcing of regulations designed to effect the best use of fertilizers;

(c) freight assistance on fertilizers as follows—

Prince Edward Island	$ 45,297.75
Nova Scotia	22,305.64
New Brunswick	81,837.82
Quebec	115,899.37
Ontario	94,412.26
British Columbia	25,957.12
Total	$383,996.02

((d) assistance on the production and distribution of lime as follows:

Prince Edward Island	$ 10,144.45
Nova Scotia	33,075.64
New Brunswick	45,380.85
Quebec	139,243.86
Ontario	3,322.29
British Columbia	3,150.04
Total	$234,317.13

Mr. HERRIDGE: This new order in council does not represent any change in policy?

Mr. GARDINER: No, there has been no change up to date. I would not guarantee that there will not be any change during the year, but there has been none up to date.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I think the Minister of Agriculture was unfair in his remarks to the hon. member for Assiniboia. I should like to remind the minister that on June 3, at page 3758 of Hansard, he declined to discuss the question, when he said:

I should like to suggest that an address like the one to which we have just listened is an appropriate one to have in connection with these estimates, but the place to have it is on the item of fertilizers.

I might remind the committee that we are now on item 20, and the minister has not been before the committee for very many hours. I think he will agree that usually he spends as many hours on the first item as he has now spent in getting nineteen items through, and the committee has cooperated by spending very little time on the general item. The hon. member for Assiniboia, I think quite correctly, was prepared to discuss this question of fertilizers, because it does affect the whole field of agriculture. I have read over the remarks of the hon. member for Assiniboia on June 3, and it is pretty clear to me that there has been very little if any repetition this evening. He has covered new material; and the fact that the minister has found it difficult to answer the arguments advanced by the hon. member for Assiniboia and also the hon. member for Melfort would indicate that this is a matter of national concern. The fact that the hon. member for Assiniboia discussed it a year ago is immaterial, for I think it is the duty of hon. members to discuss these matters year after year until they get some redress. Would the minister make some comment on the complaint of the hon. member for Melfort that it is impossible to have any assurance of supplies for 1948 in the western provinces?

Mr. GARDINER: There is no reason whatever to doubt that supplies will be available for the coming year.

Mr. REID: I wonder if I might draw the minister's attention and have his interest in regard to the sending of an inspector by his department to California at least once a year. The seed potato growers in my district go to California, where there are seed plots planted. There some eighty acres of land have been set aside for the growing of seed potatoes. The various states take plots of land and plant their seed potatoes there. The states participating in the scheme send inspectors to examine and look after the plots; then at the proper time buyers from all over the country visit those plots and buy the potatoes they desire. Apparently we do not recognize what is being done in the United States. I am not familiar with what takes place in the maritimes, but I know that in British Columbia they go to considerable expense to send men to California, not only to plant the seed, but to look after the potatoes until they mature. This is being done with the view of building up a trade in seed potatoes, and I might say it is doing very well. But our growers feel that some notice should be taken of it by the Department of Agriculture and that it should be recognized by the dominion government. So that I am asking the minister if he will take note of this and give the matter some consideration, to see if it would not be possible to have one of our own inspectors go to California and cooperate with the growers of seed potatoes in British Columbia.

Mr. GARDINER: In recent years we have had at least four persons go to California, including one of the gentlemen sitting in front of me tonight, checking their operations and bringing back whatever information can be obtained.

To speak of another product than potatoes, as hon. members from the west know we have even multiplied the sawfly-resistant type of wheat in California and brought back the product for utilization here. In other words, we have been keeping in touch; but I will take under consideration the suggestion that has been made that we should do even more in that direction, and supply more information.

Mr. WRIGHT: Are the government carrying on any experiments in connection with spraying from aeroplanes in regard to weed control?

Mr. GARDINER: The item with which we are now dealing is not the item under which that information can be obtained, and those who are specialists in those matters are not here at the moment. However, considerable experimental work has been done, as the hon. member knows, in connection with killing weeds by sprays; and it has been extremely successful. I am not in a position to say whether it has been done to any considerable degree with aeroplanes. I believe it has been done mainly by vehicles moving on the ground, but elsewhere it has been carried out by aeroplanes, and no doubt they could be utilized here if it were thought advisable to do so.

Mr. SHAW: It was my intention to ask a number of questions concerning experiments in the use of chemicals for the destruction of weeds, but since the minister has indicated it is not possible to discuss that matter under this item, may I ask under which item it would be proper to ask those questions?

Mr. GARDINER: That would come under botany and plant pathology, item 8, which we covered last night.

Mr. SHAW: I feel that this matter is of sufficient importance that, even though the item may have been dealt with, I should hope the minister might make provision later on for some discussion. I find a great deal of confusion today in newspapers and other publications. The farmers are inquiring about the success or otherwise of the use of certain chemicals, and the sum total of it is that they are rather bewildered.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): To come back to the question of fertilizer, the hon. member for Calgary West asked the minister if it would be unreasonable to expect that western farmers in large sections of Saskatchewan and the prairie provinces could not use fertilizer, at any rate, because it would not be practical to do so. I have here a scientific report showing the effects of phosphatic fertilizers on summer fallow wheat crop in certain areas of Saskatchewan. In the controlled tests covering the years 1939 to 1943, using approximately fifteen pounds to the acre of 1148, the average cost per acre would be forty-six cents. The return averaged 6·8 bushels to the acre. If we figure that out on a dollar basis it would make a return of $9.18 per acre to the farmer for his expenditure of forty-six cents.

I would say, too, with all due deference to the minister's ability as Minister of Agriculture, I saw him out on the ball diamond last night, where he did some skidding around. But in my opinion he has done even a better job of that tonight.

I believe I have put on the record what the government did with respect to fertilizer. I say the statement of the minister in regard to Saskatchewan where we have a C.C.F. government, that they should have undertaken this proposition of buying up government owned plants, is not sufficient and is beside the point. I might say to him that his own government has many crown corporations. I refer specifically to the Polymer Corporation, where they have reduced the price of synthetic rubber three times. One of the last reports I received from the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply was that it is selling at around sixteen cents a pound. They have reduced the production costs of synthetic rubber by one-half since they went into operation. We could have done the same thing in regard to fertilizers.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Did not competition reduce that price?

Mr. NICHOLSON: No competition there.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Oh, yes; there is the competition of natural rubber. That is what reduced the price of synthetic rubber.

Mr. WRIGHT: They are still making a profit at the new price.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I do not doubt that they are.

Mr. GARDINER: They do not produce it on farms, anyway.

The CHAIRMAN: There must not be so much conversation between members.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): There is one other thing concerning which I take issue with the minister. He got a little out of his orbit when he referred to clay products in my constituency at Estevan. We are trying to do a good job in Saskatchewan, with our C.C.F. government there; we are trying to do a good job for our people. It is not fair for the Minister of Agriculture to state in the house that he is not a ceramics engineer, but that our clay in Saskatchewan utilized at our clay products plant at Estevan is not suitable for the making of brick. My opinion is entirely different.

Mr. GARDINER: Well, I used to be minister in charge of it.

An hon. MEMBER: That is why they went on the rocks.

Mr. GARDINER: And I happened to know that the brick is not used extensively.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): Maybe that is why the Liberal government decided to sell it out for one dollar to private interests.

Mr. GARDINER: The Liberal government never owned it.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): You owned part of it. You put a lot of cost into it—several hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. GARDINER: No, you are dreaming.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): My information from ceramic engineers is that not only can we make brick, tile and face brick, but we can also make different types of pottery.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Would the minister make a statement with regard to negotiations with the Canadian seed growers' association? A few years ago, apparently in error, part of the requirements of the association were overlooked. While we had a supplementary vote later on, my recollection is that the association did not receive as much as they normally should have had for their operations. Would the minister indicate whether correspondence with the association indicates that they are satisfied with the grant, and also whether consideration cannot be given to increasing the grant, in view of the contribution to Canadian agriculture by the seed gowers association? I think the vote is altogether too small. Are they satisfied with the adjustment?

Mr. GARDINER: Two years ago there was a misunderstanding in the matter of supplementaries. Last year that was adjusted. Everything the seed growers asked for was provided for them. I am not saying they could not spend more money to good advantage. But everything they have asked for, to date has been provided for them; and they are not asking for more at the present time.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I gather from the minister's tone that if they have places where they could spend additional money a request from them in the near future would receive favourable consideration.

Mr. GARDINER: I did not say that.

Mr. CHARLTON: It is not my intention to bring back the fertilizer issue. I should like to say to hon. members to my left that if they canvassed southwestern Ontario they might be able to buy a considerable quantity of fertilizer probably at less than cost price, because it cannot be used this spring on account of flood conditions. Then again I would suggest that if they had enough copies of today's Hansard scattered around the west it might eventually become very good fertilizer.

I wish to ask the minister one question regarding the feeds situation in eastern Canada. I know he made a statement last night, but in view of the tremendous shortage which might be expected this year, which is estimated at nearly 70,000,000 bushels of oats and barley alone, and which means a critical situation, I would urge him to make a definite statement in the very near future, if he cannot do so tonight, in regard to the government's policy.

Mr. GARDINER: I think I said last night, before concluding my remarks with regard to feed, that for at least another three weeks it would be almost impossible for the government, or anyone, to be satisfied as to what conditions will be in relation to feed.

We know at this stage that there will not be within at least fifty per cent of the amount of feed which will be required in eastern Canada, as compared with last year. We must take account of the fact that of all feeds used last year about half was shipped in. We also know that the crop condition in western Cnaada, with regard to both acreage and seeding, and the present condition of the crop, is as good as it has been in some of our best years. But that can all change in the next three weeks. We are, of course, hopeful that it will not, and that it will go on and be a bumper crop.

If it is, then the government can announce a certain line of policy which would mean that we would move grain down east as rapidly as it can be moved. In any event, we will move whatever there is down as rapidly as arrangements can be made to have it moved. But in case there is any change in crop conditions out west, the policy would have to be different. At the present time I should not like to attempt to say what the policy will require to be, or will be.

Mr. CHARLTON: I realize that the minister knows the seriousness of the situation. But I must point out that if a policy is not brought forward in sufficient time there is the possibility that a good deal of live stock in eastern Canada will be sold at reduced prices. If they know they have not the feed here they may not be willing to take chance on waiting until the government policy is announced.

Mr. GARDINER: We are urging them strongly for the next three weeks not to take any such action as that. By that time we shall probably be able to see the picture more clearly.

Item agreed to.

Production service—

21. Grants to fairs and exhibitions, as detailed in the estimates, $308,500.

Mr. ROBINSON (Bruce): I am interested in obtaining some information with respect to class B fairs. I see where there are forty-three class B fairs across the dominion. How many are there in Ontario? How many are being added this year?

Mr. GARDINER: While we are looking up the information which has been asked for, I think I might place on Hansard a statement which I had intended to make. This is perhaps as good a time as any to give it.

Under the authority of orders in council P.C. 2294 and 2295 of June 6, 1947, the basis upon which assistance will be given to class A and class B exhibitions and to winter fairs by the Department of Agriculture is now established. This basis has the support of the Canadian association of fairs and exhibitions, with which organization the question was discussed in detail some months ago. As in pre-war years, financial support will be given by the department to all the above classes of fairs in featuring activities of junior farm club organizations and in securing judges. The main departmental grant to class A and class B exhibitions, with the same maximum limitations as applied in pre-war years will, however, in future be centred on financing capital expenditures rather than current expenditures as in the past. Owing to their limited opportunity to obtain revenue from gate receipts, et cetera, winter fairs may utilize the departmental grant for which they qualify in financing either capital or current expenditures.

Eligibility for classification as either class A or class B exhibitions in each province will, as in the past, be determined in consultation with the provincial department of agriculture. Among other things, the average prize money awarded by a fair in utility classes of live stock, poultry, grain, vegetables, fruit, dairy products and honey in the three years prior to that in which the application for such classification is made, and the location of the fair in relation to other fairs already classified, will be important factors in determining eligibility.

Each exhibition association interested in securing assistance from the department toward its capital expenditures on improvements will be expected to submit its proposal in time to permit of agreement being reached prior to undertaking the work. Acceptance of an application will be conditional upon at least one-half of the cost of the undertaking being financed by the association itself.

It is evident that many exhibitions and fairs will wish to take advantage of this assistance in undertaking improvements, toward the cost of which the departmental grant available in one year would represent a very minor contribution. To enable them to finance such undertakings, the department is now authorized to enter into formal agreements covering departmental grants over periods in no case exceeding ten years. Each such agreement will be subject to final approval by the governor in council. I might explain that by saying that the amount for this purpose to a class B fair is $1,800 and to a class A, $2,500 a year. It will be possible by arrangement to have the entire amount over a ten-year period or less spent in the one year.

Mr. ROBINSON (Bruce): Do I understand that the $1,800 has to go to capital improvement?

Mr. GARDINER: The $1,800 has to go to the improvement of facilities that are being used by the fair board, and I presume that that could properly be called a capital expenditure. But if they wish to make, let us say, a $18,000 expenditure, or a $36,000 expenditure, $18,000 of which is to come from this government, then it can be arranged that ten yearly grants can be spent in the one year, but there would be no regular grants paid during that ten-year period. The same would be true with regard to the $2,500 grants provided for class A fairs.

Periodically, requests are received from exhibition associations for assistance in constructing buildings or other major capital undertakings, the cost of which would greatly exceed that which could be approved under the general plan of departmental assistance in two-way agreements. In such cases the department is now authorized, subject to the final approval of the governor in council in each case, to reach agreement with such associations, under which the departmental assistance over a maximum period of ten years will not exceed one-third of the total cost of the undertaking, and will be limited to a maximum annual amount of $10,000.

This means that over a ten-year period it might be possible for an arrangement to be made to spend $100,000, which would be provided by the federal government. In other words, if an expenditure of $300,000 was to be made and if an arrangement was made with the province to spend $100,000 and with the association or city concerned to take care of $100,000, the federal government might take care of $100,000 over that period of time, provided that, after discussions had taken place, the council could be convinced that this was the proper procedure to follow in that particular case.

In answer to the hon. member, I would say that there are thirteen class B fairs in Ontario. They are at Barrie, Belleville, Brampton, Galt, Kingston, Leamington, Lindsay, Port Arthur, Renfrew, Richmond, Simcoe, Stratford and Woodstock.

Mr. ROBINSON (Bruce): Is the department considering any class B fairs this year?

Mr. GARDINER: There are some under consideration. The statement which I have just given outlines the conditions under which they may be admitted. It is based on their record for the past three years and on the discussions with the provincial governments.

Mr. ROBINSON (Bruce): I understand that an application has been made by Teeswater. Teeswater is strictly a rural district; you cannot by any stretch of the imagination find anything urban about that district. I have been led to believe that there is a probability that two class B fairs will be added this year, and these are what I would class as semi-urban. My information may be wrong, but I understand that they are to be at Markham and Welland. I think I am justified in asking the minister to see that Teeswater does not miss out to those two places.

Mr. GARDINER: I understand that all three places have made application. Those applications are being considered but no decision has yet been reached.

Mr. CARDIFF: The fair at Teeswater is not in my riding, being in Bruce, but I wish to say that it is considered to be one of the best, if not the best fall fair west of Toronto. It draws three times the crowd that other fairs do, and I think its reputation in the past ten years will substantiate that. I certainly ask the minister to give due consideration to this application. It is an absolutely rural fair, there being no cities within miles of it.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I notice in the details on page 94 of the main estimates mention is made of nineteen class A fairs at $4,000 each and forty-three class B fairs at $2,500 each. In the statement made by the minister a few moments ago, he seemed to indicate that the grant to class B fairs was to be $1,800, and I am not just clear where the difference comes in. Has there been a change in policy and has the amount for class B fairs been reduced from $2,500 to $1,800?

Mr. GARDINER: There is a grant of $500 for the boys and girls club and there is a grant of $200 in connection with judges. Then, for class A fairs these grants are $500 and $500, which raises the total grant. There are these other special grants. The total given in the statement is exactly the same as it was before the war.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: The total is still $2,500 for class B fairs?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: The minister indicated that applications for eligibility as class B and class A fairs will be considered in consultation with the provincial department of agriculture. The minister may have some knowledge of the situation in Dauphin, where the agricultural society for many years put on what is known as a class B fair. It was on the class B circuit. But during the war it was found impossible for it to continue because the entertainments were not available. War conditions caused it to drop out of the circuit for the time being, and that put them in a lower category. Since the war, they have not been able to get back on the class B circuit because their dates have been taken by other fairs. What is done in a case of that kind? Have they to put in their application anew to qualify as a class B fair or, in view of the fact that they have been a class B fair for a period of years before the war and put on an excellent fair, will they be considered as a class B fair in the future? It is through no fault of their own that they are not on the class B circuit. It is simply because their dates have been taken by other organizations.

Mr. GARDINER: Those that were class B fairs when the war started are still rated by us as class B fairs. A letter has already gone to Dauphin asking them if they want to take advantage now of being put on the basis of B fairs.

Mr. McLURE: Would the minister put on the record the nineteen class A fairs?

Mr. GARDINER: The class A fairs are Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island; Halifax, Nova Scotia; Saint John, New Brunswick; Lachute, Sherbrooke, St. Hyacinthe, Three Rivers and Valleyfield, in Quebec; London, Ottawa, Peterborough, Toronto, in Ontario; Brandon, Manitoba; Regina and Saskatoon, Saskatchewan; Calgary and Edmonton, Alberta; Vancouver and Victoria, British Columbia.

Mr. McLURE: Amherst is included in the winter fairs and gets a grant of $5,000. The Amherst fair takes in three provinces: Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward Island. Besides this grant of $5,000, there is a building grant of the same amount, is there not, making a total of $10,000? The same applies to all the other provinces. I was wondering whether the minister in the supplementaries, in view of the fact that Amherst fair serves three provinces, could not increase the grant for the winter fair at Amherst.

Mr. GARDINER: The plan for the winter fairs is that we make a grant of $5,000, and they may utilize that either for current expenditure or capital expenditure. Of course they would also be able to benefit by the other plans that are proposed here of capitalizing that expenditure over a period of years.

Mr. WRIGHT: Has any consideration been given to increasing the number of class B fairs in Saskatchewan? The town of Nipawin and the agricultural society there have been anxious to get into the class B circuit. They are situated in an exceedingly good mixed farming area and have a live board of directors, and very fine grounds, and are prepared to put on an up-to-date class B fair in that area. Would the minister say whether their application is being given consideration and if there is a chance of Nipawin getting into the class B circuit in Saskatchewan?

Mr. GARDINER: The present class B fairs in Saskatchewan are Estevan, Lloydminster, Melfort, Moose Jaw, North Battleford, Prince Albert, Weyburn and Yorkton. Those are the fairs which are now in the class B circuit. The only comment I would make at the moment is that Melfort and Nipawin are not very far apart. They are practically in the same district. I am not aware that consideration has been given to Nipawin up to date.

Mr. FRASER: In regard to these capital grants, if a fair board cannot put on a fair this year, are they allowed to make application for this capital grant? Some may not have their grounds ready this year.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, they are able to make application.

Mr. FRASER: They can make application for that capital grant?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. FRASER: Thank you.

Mr. McKAY: What is the record of the class C fairs held in the dominion? Has any consideration been given to making an advance to these fairs on a smaller scale than the grant for the class B fairs?

Mr. GARDINER: I have not the record for the class C fairs. Consideration has been given many times to whether we should support the class C fairs and the decision has always been against it.

Mr. McKAY: There has never been a grant given to the class C fairs?

Mr. GARDINER: There were a few small building grants, as relief payments, made in 1938 and 1939.

Mr. MARQUIS: Will the regulations be amended to facilitate the admission of new fairs into the class B circuit?

Mr. GARDINER: There are regulations which now provide for their admission. Their record over the three years preceding their application is taken into consideration, and there is also discussion with the provincial government to determine the distribution of the fairs in the province.

Mr. MARQUIS: That applies in the province of Quebec?

Mr. GARDINER: In all the provinces.

Marketing service—

23. Marketing service administration, $122,749.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I wish to say something to the right hon. minister in regard to beef cattle. I realize that this has been discussed before and I intend to be brief. What I am urging is the opening of the cattle market to the United States. But, first, could the minister give me approximate figures for any year which he has as to the number of Argentine, United States and Canadian beef imported into Great Britain, and can he tell me the price spread which Britain is paying to these three countries? I know the highest price goes to the United States, the next to Canada, and the lowest price to the Argentine. At least that is my information.

I point to something else. In 1944 we shipped to the United States dairy cattle to the value of over $4 million; in 1946 we shipped dairy cattle to the value of over $7 million. In other words, the increase was almost 100 per cent, and yet not one beef animal was shipped during that period. What I am anxious to know is why the man who grows the beef is discriminated against in that particular way.

I intend to read two extracts from a copy of a letter which has come to my possession, a letter written by Mr. W. L. Clayton, undersecretary of state for economic affairs of the United States government. It is dated January 29, 1947, and was written to a United States senator. I may say that this letter was prompted by an inquiry made by a large rancher in southern Alberta to a senator whom he knew in Salt Lake City. He communicated with Mr. Clayton and this is the reply. He says:

> The action taken by the Canadian government in 1942 prohibiting exports of cattle was designed to make available for export to England maximum quantities of beef and other meats. It was in order to ensure the delivery of the large quantities of meat required during that critical period that the Canadian government undertook to buy and ship the meat on a government to government basis.

Then, skipping a portion of it which I do not consider relevant, I continue:

> This procedure appears to have been continued as the most practicable and efficient means of meeting commitments later incurred in the Anglo-Canadian meat contracts. These contracts and similar ones which the United Kingdom has concluded with some of the other dominions are understood to have been motivated by the desire on the part of the United Kingdom to secure during the period of uncertainty both as to supply and price adequate supplies of foodstuffs at reasonable prices.

I do not think there is anything controversial so far. I continue:

> In fact this government has pointed out to both the United Kingdom and Canada that it considers such long-term bulk purchasing contracts on a fixed price basis to be incompatible with plans for the removal of barriers to trade to which both governments have given their support.

It seems to me that that is almost self-evident as well. Then he goes on in the last paragraph as follows:

> With regard to the department's attitude toward the importation of Canadian cattle, it is our desire that all war-time controls be ended as soon as the purposes for which they were imposed cease to exist. This is in accord with our commercial-policy objective of an expanding international trade open to private enterprise on a competitive and non-discriminatory basis. The Canadian government has expressed a similar attitude. Therefore, if the Canadian government should be willing to allow the exportation of cattle to the United States, the department would have no objection. Cattle imported into the United States would, of course, be subject to import duties as modified under the trade agreement act.

I mentioned that in 1944 we shipped $4 million worth of dairy cattle and in 1946, $7 million worth. I was not referring to the pure-bred animals which are admitted into the United States duty free; I was referring to grade dairy cattle which went in under a duty of a cent and a half a pound or whatever it is. As the minister knows, the Mexican quota has been stopped because of foot and mouth disease in that country. The importation of cattle from there is closed at the present time. The suggestion I am making in all seriousness to the minister—I know he is sympathetically inclined to the idea—is that we should now, without further delay, get some shipments into the United States while the duty remains as it is. I realize fully that we shall be met with the difficulty with respect to supplying our contracts to the old country but this is what I greatly fear, with the greatest respect for the minister. I am not saying that the minister is devising a policy to hurt this country; I do not make stupid criticisms of that kind. I am quite sure that he feels he is doing what is in the best interest of the producers of this live stock; but I have seen a number of them lately. I am not referring to the small ones; I am referring to the large ones, and they have a real fear that if we cannot continue some flow of cattle across that line, we shall lose that market. In fact they state definitely that if this one-way traffic with Great Britain is continued until 1950 we shall lose that opportunity. As the minister agreed once before, the United States is our natural and logical market. The live stock producers greatly fear that something may happen in the meantime by which the opportunity of shipping to the United States may be lost. It is certainly simple. Once matters have adjusted themselves, where is Great Britain to look for her cattle? She will look in the cheapest place she can buy them. There is no doubt about that. We know we cannot raise beef cattle in this country at a price comparable with the Argentine, because in that country they do not have to do any feeding; they have year-round pasture. The only feeding that they do is a little finishing at the end of the road.

Having regard to the fact that Mexico is cut off not by their action, but by an embargo because of foot and mouth disease, I suggest, with the greatest respect, and with some hope, that the minister find ways and means to permit some of our cattle to go across the line. It is a well known fact that today there are more beef cattle on the hoof in Canada than there have ever been. I assume that much of the beef which goes to England is killed and shipped as chilled or perhaps frozen meat or something of that kind. Here is the place to put a lot of cattle which are on the hoof in western Canada today. I ask that the minister give this matter further consideration and that something may come of it even at this late day.

Mr. GARDINER: I should like to refer to one or two of the remarks made by the hon. member. In the first place, the statement that was given by Mr. Clayton in the letter which was read is not news so far as we are concerned. The attention of the British government and also of the Canadian government was called to the possibility of a long-term contract being contrary to the spirit and letter of the international agreement or the international trade conference idea which had been presented to the united nations by the United States. But when they made that protest it was not made to the Canadian government; it was made to the British government, and the Canadian government was acquainted with the fact that they had made it. The British government was just as definite in its reply that it did not contravene the proposals which had been made by the United States; and I understand that, since the meeting was convened in Geneva to discuss the international trade organization arrangements, Mr. Clayton himself admitted that it was not contrary to the proposals which were made by the United States government for the convening of the international organization meeting, that this type of agreement be made. That is with regard to the one matter which is referred to and which I have seen in print in this form for the first time when this letter is handed to me, and I think it is only fair I should say that at the time the British government replied definitely to the statement and said that it was not in accordance with their understanding of the proposal. I understand now that the United States government and the British are in agreement that it is not, and that type of contract is in agreement with the principle laid down by the Americans in their proposal.

With regard to the matter of the Mexican boundary line being closed, that of course is a matter of fact. The Americans have refused to take cattle from Mexico because of a foot and mouth disease which they believe to be prevalent there and which they do not wish to have introduced into the United States.

The statement made with regard to prices obtained in Britain by the United States, the Argentine and ourselves is also correct. I am not in a position to give the exact amounts, but I think it is right to say they are paying the Americans more and the Argentine less.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): What is the price so far as we are concerned?

Mr. GARDINER: About twenty-five.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I think the figures are: United States, thirty-five; ourselves, twenty-five, and the Argentine, as low as eleven or thirteen.

Mr. GARDINER: It depends on quality; twenty-five is the basic figure.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): For us?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, and again it must be remembered that ours is a long-time contract and the others are not. That is, one cannot tell at this stage how it will average over the entire period, but there is no doubt and never has been any doubt that cattle can be produced cheaper in the Argentine than in Canada and can be laid on the British market at a lower rate than we can produce them. There is no doubt that our natural market for a long period is in the United States.

The other factors being considered are related to the necessity for having beef supplied to Britain at present, and also have something to do with what we hope will be trading relations in the future as well as the fact that price control would be affected. But particularly, for the time being, the most important factor is the fact that this meeting is being held in Geneva, and we have stated in our discussions with everyone that, so far as this kind of contract and the arrangements for it are concerned, we think we should carry on as we are doing, at least until the conference is fairly well completed and we know the direction in which we are going as a result of the conference. That is the chief factor at the moment, although the main reason at the beginning was the reason stated in this letter; and the chief reason, I would say, still for continuing even to the end of the conference, is that Britain is in greater need of beef today than she has been for a considerable period of time. No later than today the representative of Britain was in my office inquiring with regard to the possibility of getting beef. Very little beef is going to Britain at the present time, as a matter of fact none, and little has gone over for some time. Apparently we are eating all the beef in Canada ourselves at present.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Could the minister give an approximate idea of the amount going to Britain over the last year from the three countries? I do not want it in dollars; I would be content with rough percentages.

Mr. GARDINER: Exports of beef cattle to the United Kingdom, in pounds, are: for 1944, 98,000,000; 1945, 184,378,000; 1946, 123,787,000. There is a reduction of about 60,000,000 pounds as between those two years.

Mr. MacNICOL: Do you mean pounds weight or money?

Mr. GARDINER: That is weight of cattle. In head that means 201,000 head in 1944, 385,000 in 1945 and 261,000 in 1946. To the United States, the numbers were: in 1944, none; in 1945, 66,000—

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I meant from the United States to Britain and from the Argentine to Britain.

Mr. GARDINER: I have not those figures and I doubt very much whether you could get them. During the war the British were very particular in that regard and I doubt very much whether we could get the figures. The British government has been following this practice all through the war, and it still is, of taking all the food it can get, whether the British produce it themselves or whether it comes from the Argentine, the United States or Canada, putting it into one pool; and, to avoid difficulty about supplying the product of any particular country, they say their people will get so many pounds of beef under their rationing system and it does not matter where it comes from. Apparently it is easier to administer that kind of thing if they do not advertise how much they get from this or that source.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): We do not know over here?

Mr. GARDINER: It would be difficult to get those figures.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Apparently what we are trying to do is to get all the food we can to England. Is there not something in this point? Instead of sending $7 million odd worth of dairy cattle into the United States in 1946, could we not have got more food to England if we had retained those dairy cattle here? Certainly the products from the dairies are most excellent food, and we might have been able to save these and send some of our beef, keeping that line open.

Mr. GARDINER: The main difficulty there is the one I mentioned last night, that we have not enough feed left to feed what we have. If the others had been kept here the farmers would have found it difficult to feed them—probably they could not have fed them at all—but they have sold their live stock to the point where they can feed what they have left.

Mr. BOUCHER: Can the minister give a statement on the relationship of the export of meat products to Britain, up to the present time this year, as compared with the corresponding period last year?

Mr. GARDINER: We will get that for the hon. member at the next sitting.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

CARILLON AT NIAGARA FALLS

INSTALLATION AT INTERNATIONAL BOUNDARY—QUESTION OF INSCRIPTION ON LARGE BELL

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. On Friday evening the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Ferguson) attempted in committee of the whole to raise a question of privilege with regard to the inscription on the large bell of a carillon being installed at Niagara Falls by the Niagara Falls bridge commission. The hon. member for Peel (Mr. Graydon) referred, and the press has also referred, to the statement that three ministers of the crown were involved.

I was one of the ministers concerned, and I have no apology to make for what I have done. The inscription on the bell came to the attention of the federal government as a result of an application by the secretary of the Niagara Falls bridge commission for remission of customs duty on the bells, which were cast in England. The inscription is headed with the name "Churchill" in capitals. The name is followed by a verse which I shall not read. Then come the words:

> To God's glory and in grateful memory of our nation's leaders, Winston Spencer Churchill and Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

Hon. members will note the expression "our nation's leaders". Remember that this bell is being installed on the international boundary between Canada and the United States, not between Britain and the United States. The purpose of the inscription at once becomes obvious. It is clearly intended as an affront to the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mackenzie King). Surely it is equally an affront to Canada to suggest that our country has to seek its leaders outside its own boundaries.

I did what I believe any other real Canadian would have done in the circumstances. Together with my colleagues from Ontario we drew the attention of two of the Canadian members of the bridge commission to the impropriety of such an inscription in Canada. The members of the commission in question were Mr. A. J. Haines, the chairman, and Mr. Ross Harstone. I have here a statement from the chairman of the commission as to what followed. Mr. Haines' statement reads:

> Mr. Harstone and I were both extremely indignant on learning of the inscription which had been placed on the great bell of the carillon. The inscription in question had been placed there apparently on the sole responsibility of Mr. T. B. McQueston, who, at the time the bells were ordered, was chairman of the commission. The inscription had never been submitted to, much less approved by, the other commissioners.
> Our first action was to seek technical advice as to the possibility of removing the inscription without harming the tone of the bell. We learned that this would be possible. I then called a meeting of the commission which was held on Wednesday, June 11, at which it was decided to have all the names removed from the inscription, so that the inscription would read, "To God's glory and in grateful memory of our nation's leaders."
> In making this change, no disrespect to anyone is intended and none is involved. Indeed the purpose is to remove disrespect.
> Mr. McQueston's statement regarding the technical difficulties and cost of removing the names is completely inaccurate. It is surely most unbecoming in one who acted arbitrarily, and without the authority of his colleagues on the commission, in placing the inscription on the bell, to misrepresent the action of the majority of the commission when they are seeking to repair his error.

It will be clear from this statement by Mr. Haines that no pressure was required from federal ministers or anyone else. Once the members of the commission knew the facts, the majority, both of Americans and Canadians, were eager to remove this affront to the Prime Minister of Canada, as well as to other leaders in Canada's war effort, and to Canada as a nation.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PRESENTATION OF SEVENTH REPORT—MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN FIFTH AND SIXTH REPORTS

Mr. J. A. BRADETTE (Cochrane) presented the seventh report of the standing committee on external affairs.

Mr. BRADETTE moved:

That the fifth and sixth reports of the standing committee on external affairs, presented to the house on Friday, June 13 last, be now concurred in.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I should like to get more information from the chairman of this committee about these reports five and six, which were presented last Friday. They were in Votes and Proceedings, and they had to do with the atomic bomb and the UNO farce. Now we have another report being presented today. The foreign affairs matters on May 23 and on the order paper today have not been considered at all. I should like to ask the chairman to postpone the motion for concurrence in these reports because they deal with matters of importance and some hon. members are away, including the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Graydon). I think the motion should stand because the government should take up all these questions of dissolution of the empire and decide them. The committee forgot all about these main questions; they have ignored them altogether. The committee has not been fulfilling the functions for which it was appointed. It ought to be discharged at once.

Motion agreed to.

REFERENCE OF CERTAIN ESTIMATES TO COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance) moved:

That items 41 to 56 both inclusive of the estimates for 1947-48, approved and reported on by the standing committee on external affairs, be referred to the committee of supply.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

NATIONAL FILM BOARD—INSPECTORS OR FIELD MEN

Mr. FRASER:

1. Does the national film board employ inspectors, or field men, whose duty it is to check on film councils throughout Canada?
2. If so, what are the names of these men, or women?
3. What salary does each of these employees receive?
4. What was the total travelling and other expenses allowed to each of these employees during the year 1946?

Mr. McCANN:

1. No.

2, 3, 4. See Answer to No. 1.

LOSS OF S.S. "EMPEROR"

Mr. CHURCH:

What is the nature of the inquiry being held by the government into the disaster of the S.S. Emperor, thirty-five miles south of Port Arthur on Thursday morning last?

Mr. CHEVRIER: A preliminary inquiry, under the provisions of section 548 of the Canada Shipping Act, was held on June 6th by Captain W. N. Morrison, supervising examiner of masters and mates, Toronto, Ontario. As a result of this inquiry, a formal investigation, under the provisions of section 551 of the said act, will be held at an early date.

LIFE SAVING STATIONS

Mr. CHURCH:

What life saving stations has the government on the following lakes: Lake Ontario, Lake Huron, Georgian bay, Lake Superior, and adjacent waters; where are they located and what life saving equipment have these stations, if any?

Mr. CHEVRIER: None at present. As pointed out in an answer to another question tabled today, life saving stations were previously maintained during the navigation seasons at points on the great lakes but, due to the small volume of service they were called upon to render, they were abolished, the last to be maintained being Point Pelee, Ontario, which was not reopened after the 1940 season of navigation.

[Mr. Abbott.]

Mr. CHURCH:

1. Does the government contribute anything towards the life saving station at Toronto?
2. What sum of money has been spent during 1947 on life saving on the inland waterways of Canada, and where?
3. Who is responsible for this work?
4. Are all Canadian registered ships required to have radio equipment on board?

Mr. CHEVRIER:

1. No. The life saving equipment in use at Toronto is maintained by the Toronto harbour commissioners.

2. No actual life saving stations are operated on the great lakes at present, but as pointed out in an answer to another question tabled today the department does maintain and operate on the great lakes, between Kingston and the Canadian-U.S. border near Fort William, 426 light stations, fog alarm plants and light and signal buoys as well as approximately 1,100 unlighted buoys, beacons, etc. In addition government vessels are available on short notice to render assistance to vessels in distress in their immediate vicinity.

3. The Department of Transport has no knowledge of any formal responsibility existing with regard to life saving facilities other than those required to be provided under the Canada Shipping Act.

4. No, not all.

Mr. CHURCH:

1. What has been done since 1928 to provide adequate life saving stations and appliances and equipment on the Great Lakes, and how many sailors were lost there in the fall season of 1927?
2. What action has been taken to prevent merchant ships operating without adequate aids to navigation?
3. What agencies have afforded aid to Canadian ships in distress on the Great Lakes?

Mr. CHEVRIER:

In so far as the Department of Transport is concerned:

1. Life saving stations were previously maintained during navigation seasons at points on the great lakes but, due to the small volume of services they were called upon to render, they were abolished, the last to be maintained being Point Pelee, Ontario, which was not reopened after the 1940 season of navigation.

According to departmental records, 22 lives were lost as the result of shipping casualties reported on the lakes during 1927—20 in the founding of the S.S. Kamloops, and 2 in the stranding of the S.S. Lambton, on December 4 and 9, 1927, respectively.

2. (a) (i) The life saving appliances and equipment required to be carried in ships operating on the great lakes are specified in the regulations respecting life saving appliances made under authority of paragraph (b) of section 405 of the Canada Shipping Act, 1934, as approved by order in council P.C. 3 of the 6th day of January, 1937.

(ii) All merchant ships operating on the great lakes are required by the terms of section 387 of the Canada Shipping Act, 1934, to have the hull and equipment inspected by the steamship inspectors at least once a year, and inspectors are required to ascertain that the ships are equipped with all equipment necessary for safe navigation, and certificates of inspection are not issued until this equipment is on board.

(b) There are on the great lakes between Kingston and the Canadian-U.S. border near Fort William, 426 lightstations, fog alarm plants and light and signal buoys and in addition thereto there are approximately 1,100 unlighted buoys, beacons, etc. Also, there are seven ship-to-shore radio telegraph and telephone stations to provide constant 24-hour communication with ships on all the great lakes. These stations regularly broadcast weather forecasts, storm warnings and notices of dangers to navigation. There are also fifteen automatic radio beacons from which ships take their bearings by radio.

3. Salvage companies, Canadian government vessels and U.S. government vessels.

ROWELL-SIROIS COMMISSION—LEGAL ADVISERS

Mr. GAGNON:

1. Did the Rowell-Sirois commission have any legal advisers?
2. If so, what are their names ?
3. What were the conditions of employment of the said legal advisers?
4. How long was each one employed?
5. What amount did each one receive for his fees and other expenses?

Mr. MAYHEW:

1. Yes.

2. J. McGregor Stewart, K.C., Halifax; Louis S. St. Laurent, K.C., Quebec.

3. $150 per day and actual travelling expenses.

4. J. McGregor Stewart, K.C.—126 days; Louis S. St. Laurent, K.C.—81 days.

5. J. McGregor Stewart, K.C., fees, $18,900; travelling expenses, $2,315.27. Louis S. St. Laurent, K.C., fees, $12,150; travelling expenses, $506.69.

PASSPORTS

Mr. POULIOT:

Why, since when, and in virtue of what authority is an application for a passport considered as a confidential document?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: The application for a passport contains statements of a personal nature which are made by the applicant to the department in order to obtain a passport. It is considered that these statements are made in confidence and are privileged. The information contained in a passport application might, howver, be revealed if there were an overriding public interest in the particular instance. Likewise, information would be divulged to an appropriate inquirer if the person who had made the application has given his consent, or if the circumstances are such that it may be assumed that he would wish to have the particular information revealed to the inquirer, e.g., giving information to the executor of an estate in order that the date of birth of the deceased person may be established for the purpose of payments of life insurance.

It would appear from the records of the department that applications for passports have at all times been considered to be confidential documents.

The issuance of passports is an exercise of the royal prerogative. There is no statutory authority for the issuance of passports in Canada, although there are several orders in council with respect to such matters as the fees to be charged for the issuance and renewal of passports. The royal prerogative is exercised through the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who decides whether information contained in applications for passports shall be made public.

HEALTH AND WELFARE—FILMS ON HEALTH EDUCATION SUBJECTS

Mr. GOLDING:

1. Does the Department of National Health and Welfare propose to produce any films on health education subjects?
2. What films, if any, are now in production?
3. What films have been produced in the last year?
4. Who produces such films and what is the cost?
5. Have any of these films been produced for commercial distribution?
6. Does the department produce films in both English and French?

Mr. MARTIN:

1. Yes.

2. (a) A five-reel film in technicolor on pre-natal and post-natal care for the child and maternal health division.

(b) A two-reel film on restaurant sanitation for the health branch.

(c) A two-reel film on recreation and physical fitness for the physical fitness division.

(d) A one-reel film on rodent control for the health branch.

(e) A one-reel animated cartoon film on nutrition and diet for the nutrition division.

(f) A two-reel film on oral hygiene for the dental health division.

(g) A two-reel film on rural sanitation for the health branch.

3. (a) A two-reel film entitled "Your morning milk", stressing need for pasteurization, for the public health engineering division.

(b) A one-reel film entitled "What's on your mind" (cost shared with the national film board).

(c) A one-reel film entitled "Small Fry".

(d) A two-reel film on water purification entitled "Let's Look at Water" for the health engineering division.

(e) A two-reel film for professional group therapy use entitled "Mental Mechanisms—the Feeling of Rejection, its Development and Growth", produced for the mental health division.

(f) A three-reel film dealing with occupational therapy entitled "Condition Improved" made in collaboration with the Department of Veterans Affairs and the cost shared by two departments.

(g) French version of a one-reel film for the Victorian Order of Nurses.

(h) A one-reel film entitled "Know Your Baby".

4. All the above films, except 3 (h), were produced by or through the national film board. "Know Your Baby" was purchased after completion by Crawley Films Limited, Ottawa. Costs range from $5,000 to $46,000, depending on the length, subject matter, amount of synchronized sound necessary and other considerations.

5. Yes, 3 (b) and 3 (c).

6. Yes.

HEALTH AND WELFARE—LEGISLATIVE MEASURES WITH CONTRIBUTIONS FROM PROVINCES

Mr. BERTRAND (Terrebonne):

1. Does the Department of National Health and Welfare administer any legislative measures the operation of which depends on an equal or partial contribution from the provinces?

2. If so, what are such measures?

3. Was the province of Quebec asked to contribute to each one of them? If so, to which measures did the said province agree or refuse to agree?

Mr. MARTIN:

1. Yes.

2. The National Physical Fitness Act; the Old Age Pensions Act.

3. The same offer was made to the province of Quebec, in the terms of the legislation on the statute books, as was made to all the other provinces. In 1936 the province of Quebec took advantage of the offer contained in the Old Age Pensions Act. Up to the present time the province of Quebec has not taken advantage of the offer contained in the National Physical Fitness Act.

[Mr. Martin.]

PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE—ONE PER CENT DEDUCTION FROM GRAIN TICKETS

Mr. WINKLER:

1. By provinces, how much has been paid out under P.F.A.A. since its inception until January 1, 1947, or any convenient date this year?

2. As above, by provinces, how much has been contributed to the P.F.A.A. through 1 per cent deductions from grain tickets by the Canadian wheat board and/or any marketing agencies.

Mr. GARDINER:

1. Amount of awards paid under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act to March 31, 1947: Manitoba, $1,720,474.13; Saskatchewan, $54,188,578.69; Alberta, $16,344,203.04.

2. Amount collected through the 1 per cent levy to March 31, 1947: Manitoba, $4,265,918.28; Saskatchewan, $14,736,773.12; Alberta, $7,378,755.79.

OLD AGE PENSIONS—QUEBEC

Mr. BERTRAND (Terrebonne):

1. In what year did the dominion parliament enact the Old Age Pensions Act?

2. In what year did the province of Quebec adhere thereto?

3. Since then, what has been the total cost of old age pensions in the province of Quebec, each year?

4. What has been, each year, the share contributed by the dominion government?

Mr. MARTIN:

1. 1927.

2. 1936.

3. On account of adjustments between provinces the dominion does not publish the total expenditure of any province. A province's share of the cost of old age pensions is approximately one-third of the dominion's contributions to the province.

4. The dominion's contributions to the province of Quebec for each fiscal year from 1936-1937 to 1946-1947 were as follows:

Fiscal Year	Dominion's Contribution
1936-37	$ 2,345,107.05
1937-38	8,386,230.60
1938-39	7,637,019.04
1939-40	7,758,257.34
1940-41	7,199,832.61
1941-42	6,762,038.15
1942-43	7,048,885.34
1943-44	8,535,362.81
1944-45	10,386,114.68
1945-46	10,823,345.20
1946-47	11,466,940.27

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—QUEBEC

Mr. BERTRAND (Terrebonne):

1. In what year was the Family Allowances Act enacted by the dominion parliament?

2. Since then, what has been the amount of family allowances distributed, each year, in the province of Quebec?

Mr. MARTIN:

1. 1944.

2. July 1, 1945 (date of first payments)—March 31, 1946, $57,978,816; April 1, 1946-March 31, 1947, $82,614,860; April 1, 1947-May 31, 1947, $14,536,695.

PENSIONS TO THE BLIND—QUEBEC

Mr. BERTRAND (Terrebonne):

1. In what year did the dominion parliament establish an act respecting pensions to the blind?

2. In what year did the province of Quebec adhere thereto?

3. Since then, what has been the total cost of such pensions in the province of Quebec, each year?

4. What has been the total share of the dominion government, each year?

Mr. MARTIN:

1. 1937.

2. 1937.

3. On account of adjustments between provinces the dominion does not publish the total expenditure of any province. A province's share of the cost of pensions for blind persons is approximately one-third of the dominion's contribution.

4. The dominion's contributions to the province of Quebec for each fiscal year from 1937-38 to 1946-47 were as follows:—

Fiscal Year	Dominion's Contributions
1937-38	$ 57,028.48
1938-39	263,451.54
1939-40	294,276.96
1940-41	336,873.46
1941-42	365,525.53
1942-43	379,129.29
1943-44	452,061.25
1944-45	530,168.53
1945-46	568,427.51
1946-47	605,760.62

HEALTH AND WELFARE—LEPER STATIONS

Mr. PEARKES:

1. How many leper stations are operated under the Department of National Health and Welfare?

2. Where are they located?

3. What is the annual cost of maintenance of each?

4. How many lepers are there at each station?

5. What has been the average number of lepers at each station during the past ten years?

Mr. MARTIN:

1 and 2. At Bentinck island, B.C. a lazaretto is maintained.

At Tracadie, N.B., leper patients are housed in a separate wing of a hospital maintained by the sisterhood of the Hotel Dieu de Saint Joseph.

3. 1946-1947—Bentinck, $4,941.41; Tracadie, $8,246.60.

4. 1946-1947—Bentinck, 3; Tracadie, 7.

5. 1946-1947—Bentinck, 2·8; Tracadie, 7·5.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR—LEGISLATIVE MEASURES WITH CONTRIBUTIONS FROM PROVINCES

Mr. BERTRAND (Terrebonne):

1. Does the Department of Labour administer any legislative measures the operation of which depends on an equal or partial contribution from the provinces?

2. If so, what are such measures?

3. Was the province of Quebec asked to contribute to each one of them? If so, to which measures did the said province agree or refuse to agree?

Mr. MITCHELL:

1. Yes.

2. Vocational Training Coordination Act—

(a) Youth training agreement;

(b) Apprenticeship training agreement;

(c) Training of veterans' agreement;

(d) Retraining of civilian workers' agreement;

(e) Assistance to vocational schools' agreement.

Dominion-provincial farm labour programme, funds for which are provided under appropriation for Department of Labour for 1947-48.

3. Vocational training coordination act—of the measures listed under (2) above, the province of Quebec has accepted the following:

(a) Youth training agreement;

(c) Training of veterans' agreement;

(e) Assistance to vocational schools' agreement.

Dominion-provincial farm labour programme.

(It is expected that Quebec will continue to participate in this programme in 1947).

Note.—There is another act—the old technical education act which was extended in 1944 and calls for contribution by the province of Manitoba only. This is an extension of the original act under which all the provinces benefited but Manitoba is the only province with an unexpended credit balance remaining, and the act was extended to enable the province of Manitoba to use up its credit.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

NATIONAL DEFENCE—LENDING OR LEASING OF TENTS

Mr. LENNARD:

1. Is the Department of National Defence loaning or leasing tents to other than cadet corps this year?

Mr. STUART (Charlotte):

1. What was the total amount of moneys expended by the Public Works Department in dredging operations in Saint John harbour, Courtenay bay and immediate vicinity from January 1, 1935 to December 31, 1946?
2. What was the total expenditure in dock improvements, wharves, elevators, breakwaters, etc., in Saint John harbour, Courtenay bay and immediate vicinity from January 1, 1935 to December 31, 1946?
3. What steps have been taken by the government with respect to new buildings, wharves, breakwaters and dredging in Saint John harbour and immediate vicinity?

WHEAT BOARD—PERSONNEL

Mr. ROSS (Souris):

1. What are the names of all executive officers, advisory committee and employees of the Canadian wheat board?
2. What are their duties, annual salary, travelling and living allowances for the past year?
3. What was their previous employment or occupation and annual salary?

Mr. MacKINNON: I am not just sure whether all the information that it would appear is being asked for here can be revealed, but I am looking into the matter and I proposed having a chat with the hon. member who has asked the question. It will call for a rather large return and I suggest that we make it an order for return now.

MCNAB'S ISLAND, N.S., DETENTION BARRACKS

Mr. DIEFENBAKER:

1. How many prisoners have served terms in the detention barracks at McNab's island, Nova Scotia, during the twelve months period ended 30th April, 1947?
2. How many of those prisoners were (a) naval ratings; (b) army personnel of all ranks; (c) air force personnel of all ranks?
3. How many of these prisoners were punished by warrant during the said period?
4. How many of the punishments were for ninety days detention or over?
5. What is the official daily routine for prisoners undergoing detention?

HOUSING—VETERANS' LAND ACT—EAST YORK AND SCARBORO TOWNSHIPS

Mr. McGREGOR:

1. What is the cost of repairs since January 1, 1947, to each home constructed under the Veterans' Land Act in East York township and Scarboro township in the county of York?
2. Are repairs made prior to January 1, 1947, included in the cost of above homes? If not, what is the amount of such repairs?
3. What capital or other costs in addition to repairs to above homes, since January 1, 1947, have been paid or are payable or will be payable for work now being done in East York township and Scarboro township in the county of York?

HOUSING—VETERANS' LAND ACT—EAST YORK AND SCARBORO TOWNSHIPS

Mr. McGREGOR:

1. What is the total cost of each home constructed under the Veterans' Land Act in East York township and Scarboro township in the county of York?
2. Who was the contractor or contractors in each of the above areas?
3. How many homes were built under the V.L.A. in East York township and Scarboro township in the county of York?

4. What is the present proposed sale price of each home in the same areas?

5. What is the original price asked in each case?

6. What was the cost per unit of project overhead and how was the same made up?

7. Have any veterans made deposits on proposed purchases and later declined to proceed with the purchase of such holdings? If so, by whom and why were said deals not completed?

8. Who were the government inspectors in each of the above areas and what was the term of employment and salary of each inspector?

9. What qualifications did the inspector have to become an inspector under V.L.A.?

10. Is the purchase price asked any veterans in excess of the cost to the government? If so, how much, and what units are affected?

11. Does the government permit veterans to obtain half-acre plots and build homes on same under V.L.A. in East York township and Scarboro township in the county of York?

12. Has the government received any complaints about construction or price of homes in East York township and Scarboro township in the county of York?

13. Has the government been requested for new price contracts or rental agreements by veterans in these areas?

14. On whose advice were the locations for veterans' homes chosen?

15. Who recommended the sites chosen in East York township and Scarboro township in the county of York?

IMMIGRATION—DISPLACED PERSONS

Mr. MacINNIS:

1. Have any Canadian industries made application since January 1, 1946, to the government for permission to bring to Canada persons from the displaced persons' camps in Europe?

2. If so (a) what are the names of such industries; (b) how many persons were asked for in each case?

3. Have any permits been granted to such industries? If so, to whom?

4. Have any representatives of industrialists received permits from any department of government to visit displaced persons' camps for the purpose of selecting such immigrants?

5. If so, who are they?

6. Have any contracts covering wages and working conditions been submitted to the government in connection with such applications?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

EMPIRE DEFENCE

Mr. CHURCH:

For a copy of all documents, letters, cables, orders in council and all other correspondence exchanged between the government of Canada and the government of Great Britain on the statement made in the House of Commons of Great Britain on May 16 last, by the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (the Right Hon. Mr. Bevin), namely, that Britain will withdraw her empire defences and military bases in the Mediterranean, Suez, and middle east, and other areas now considered to be the United States' responsibility, and retire to the coast of East Africa.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I am sure the hon. member must have been misinformed as to the contents of the statement made by Mr. Bevin on the 16th of May last. The motion is so framed as to call for correspondence on the statement made in the House of Commons of Great Britain on May 16 last, by the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Right Hon. Mr. Bevin, namely, that Britain will withdraw her empire defences and military bases in the Mediterranean, Suez, and middle east, and other areas now considered to be the United States' responsibility, and retire to the coast of East Africa. I have had an extract made of that portion of the Foreign Minister's statement which deals in any way with these areas. I shall be glad to hand it to the hon. member, and perhaps after seeing it he will wish to frame his motion in other language.

Mr. CHURCH: I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the motion stand and that I have a conference with the minister about it. I wanted all the papers.

Motion stands.

SOLDIER SETTLEMENT—CORRESPONDENCE WITH T. L. POULSOM

Mr. CASTLEDEN:

For a copy of all agreements, contracts, accounts, reports and correspondence, since March, 1919, exchanged between the Soldier Settlement Board, Department of Veterans Affairs and Mr. Tom L. Poulsom, Rochfort Bridge, Alberta.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I understand that my hon. friend is to have access to all the relevant files either in my personal office or in the office of the director of the Veterans Land Act and that he wishes the motion to stand.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Agreed.

Motion stands.

INCOME TAX—FARMERS

Mr. FAIR:

For a copy of all regulations and directives, dealing with farmers' income tax, issued by the Department of National Revenue to the various administrative offices during the years 1939-40 to 1946-47.

Mr. McCANN: I now wish to table the regulations and directives called for by this motion.

IMMIGRATION—DISPLACED PERSONS

Mr. MacINNIS:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, contracts or other documents received by any department of government from April 1, 1947 to date, from firms, companies or other employers, relating to the bringing of persons from the displaced persons' camps for employment in Canada.

TAX AGREEMENTS

COMPENSATION TO PROVINCES IN LIEU OF INCOME AND OTHER TAXES

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to present a bill to authorize (a) the Minister of Finance, on behalf of the government of Canada, to enter into agreements with the governments of the provinces to provide, subject to terms and conditions to be agreed upon, that in consideration of the said goverments agreeing not to levy income tax, corporation income tax, corporation tax or succession duties for a period of five years ending on December 31, 1951, or any lesser period ending upon the said day, the government of Canada will pay compensation to the said governments; and (b) the Minister of Finance to pay to the government of each province one-half of the income tax collected from corporations whose main business is the distribution to or generation for distribution to the public, of electrical energy, gas or steam in respect of income of the corporations derived from the said distribution or generation in that province during the period commencing on January 1, 1947, and ending on December 31, 1951.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the house.

Mr. GEORGE BLACK (Yukon): I suggest to the Minister of Finance that in both paragraphs of this resolution, along with the governments of the provinces should be included the government of Yukon territory. The government of Yukon territory made the same agreement with the dominion government as did the provinces to give up the imposition of income tax—I am not so sure about corporation income tax or succession duties, but that could be easily ascertained. In consideration of the territory's having surrendered to the federal government its right to collect income tax for a few years, the federal government made a grant to Yukon territory in compensation. But as Yukon territory was fortunate or unfortunate enough to make considerable profits on the sale of liquor, its grants were considerably reduced.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): I am speaking to the motion, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is not debatable.

Motion agreed to.

[Mr. MacInnis.]

OFFICIAL SECRETS ACT

PRESS REPORT AS TO FILMING OF LOCUS AND PERSONS INVOLVED IN ESPIONAGE INQUIRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GEORGE BLACK (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. My question is based on a statement, published in the Ottawa Evening Journal of Saturday June 14, that Hollywood moving picture makers are to come to Ottawa to film the locus and persons involved in the recent spy investigation here. May I precede my question by saying that that incident is a blot on the history of Canada, in which it was disclosed that spies, criminals and traitors had infiltrated the public service of Canada, and had even come into the membership of this House of Commons, in an endeavour to injure the country. Those found guilty have been sentenced. My question is this. In view of the present tense situation in world conditions does the government consider it advisable to allow that regrettable affair to be capitalized by the makers of sensational movies for the entertainment of the public?

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the question asks whether the government intends to do something that is not within the powers or the jurisdiction of the government. I certainly do not consider that it is within the domain of the Department of External Affairs to determine what pictures Hollywood interests may or may not make. If they come here and behave as orderly citizens, there is nothing I know of in our legislation which would give any department of the government the right to interfere with their conduct. It seems to be something that their own good taste or their own judgment of their own interests should determine. If the committee now sitting on human rights see fit to recommend to this house that legislation be passed to give some department of government further control over the life and activities of individuals, the house will then have to consider it; but for the time being I would be at a loss to put my finger on any text which would allow my department or any other department of government to take any action about the matter.

Mr. HOMUTH: May I ask the minister a supplementary question? Has any department of government, or the government through the cabinet, given consent that any data be furnished to these moving picture makers or rights given to take pictures within government buildings; or have any other favours been granted so that they can make this picture?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I know of no permission given or of any permission applied for. I did see some reference to this in newspapers, but it was my impression that it was a private undertaking. If those who were carrying it out did nothing that it is not improper for any ordinary tourist to do, there would be no interference with their conduct.

Mr. COLDWELL: May I ask a supplementary question? Have any facilities of the mounted police or of others been placed at the disposal of these people to take this picture? If not, I think the minister is quite right in saying that it is a private undertaking and as such does not come within the province of the house.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I do not know of any facilities having been placed at their disposal, or any application for facilities having been made.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SUGGESTIONS FOR EXPEDITING WORK OF SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to ask the consent of the house for a moment in order to make a suggestion to the Prime Minister, or to the Minister of Veterans Affairs in his capacity as house leader. It has to do with the heavy programme of work ahead of us, and the necessity of doing everything that is practicable and possible in order to get it advanced to avoid the mad rush at the end of the session.

A month ago the Prime Minister outlined to us the work that was then before us. Everyone will agree that it was a long programme. Reasonable progress has been made since then, but there is still a heavy programme of work to do. I have consulted a number of my colleagues—it has not been a wide canvass, but I think I can speak for all or nearly all of them—and if the government feels it will help to expedite the work of the session we are prepared to have morning sittings and sittings on Saturday as well.

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): I sent the views of our party to the Prime Minister a few days ago, and was very glad indeed to discuss it further. I suggest that some consideration be given to sitting throughout the afternoon, or, say from two to six and from seven-thirty to eleven. If I may speak for myself—I have not had an opportunity to discuss this with my colleagues—I suggest that we sit from three right through to eleven, with no dinner adjournment. Most hon. members need the mornings to do some work when the committees are sitting. I do not know what the house will desire, but I am throwing out these suggestions for consideration.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I am very glad that my hon. friend the leader of the opposition has raised this question. I thank my hon. friend the leader of the C.C.F. party for what he has just said. Both hon. gentlemen will recall that I wrote a personal letter to each of the leaders of the parties opposite on May 30 last, mentioning that the government would welcome any suggestions that they might make with respect to the work of the session and its expedition. I said in my letter I would suggest that when I received their views we might meet together and discuss them. I have now received answers from all three. I should therefore like to suggest that, if five o'clock this afternoon should happen to meet the convenience of all we might meet in my office, and, in the light of what has been suggested, discuss the matter further and perhaps have something to offer to the house tomorrow in the way of concrete suggestions or general agreements. Every hon. member I know is anxious that the business should be expedited, and equally that nothing be left undone that should be done. I do believe that at a conference among all of us, particularly as the leaders have the support, I understand, of their respective followings, we should be able to announce tomorrow a programme that will help materially to expedite the business.

Mr. COLDWELL: Since the whips have to carry out the undertaking, I wonder whether the Prime Minister would object to their accompanying the leaders.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Quite the contrary; all are welcome. I give them a cordial invitation now.

EMPIRE DEFENCE

REFERENCE TO NOTICE OF MOTION ON TODAY'S ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): Some days ago I attempted to adjourn the house to discuss an urgent matter, but was not successful. That matter was contained in the notice of motion on foreign affairs which appears on the order paper today in my name. This is the ninety-first day of the session, and we have had no opportunity to discuss the empire matters involved in this motion. Today the Secretary of State for External Affairs tabled a part of Mr. Bevin's statement which was made in the British House of Commons on May 16, but the one I have here is May 15. I sent him a copy of that statement on May 23. Today I asked that my motion stand in order that I might discuss it with the minister. I now ask the government when are we to have this matter discussed on a supply motion.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. CHURCH: I wish to have an opportunity to discuss it on the motion to go into supply.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member will remember that this motion was called on the order "Notices of motion for production of papers", and the Secretary of State for External Affairs asked that the motion stand to give the hon. member an opportunity to discuss the matter with the minister. That order of business has been disposed of and I do not think the hon. member is in order to discuss the motion at this time.

Mr. CHURCH: The matter is an urgent one, and I shall raise it on going into supply. I hold in my hand a copy of the British Hansard of May 15, not of May 16. As I said before, I sent this to the minister on May 23. When my motion for the production of papers came up and the minister referred to what Mr. Bevin said, I said that it could stand until I conferred with the minister. I am saying now that I should like an opportunity to discuss the matter later on going into supply.

PEACE TREATIES

JAPAN—CONFERENCE OF COMMONWEALTH NATIONS AT CANBERRA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. C. GREEN (Vancouver South): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. A press dispatch from Washington, dated June 14, indicates that there is to be a British commonwealth meeting on Japanese peace problems at Canberra, Australia, in August. Is Canada to be represented at that meeting? The article also indicates that the United States are prepared to lift the negotiation of a Japanese peace treaty out of the council of foreign ministers and submit it to an eleven-nation peace conference direct. Will the minister tell the house whether such is the case, and could we now have from him a statement of the attitude being taken by the Canadian government in respect of the Japanese peace settlement?

[Mr. Church.]

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I saw the dispatch to which the hon. member refers, and the writer of the dispatch appears to have more information than the Department of External Affairs. There is under consideration a proposal for a conference of representatives of the commonwealth nations at Canberra. A suggestion had been made that that conference take place early in July. It was not possible for the government of the United Kingdom or for the government of Canada to be represented at that time. Consideration is now being given to the holding of a conference toward the end of August. If that is arranged I have no doubt that Canada will be represented at the conference.

With respect to the second part of the question, the article indicates that the United States is prepared to lift the negotiations of the Japanese peace treaty out of the council of foreign ministers and submit it to an eleven-nation peace conference direct. There has been no official announcement by the United States of any intention to do that. The hon. member knows that there is a commission known as the far eastern commission, which has been sitting in Washington for I think over a year now, dealing with many aspects of matters that will have to be disposed of for the purposes of the peace treaty. There was a suggestion recently that there would be an attempt to avoid the procedure that has given rise to a lot of criticism in connection with the European peace treaties in preparing a draft for the Japan peace settlement. The attitude being taken by the Canadian government is that it would be much more satisfactory to have the eleven nations that have been represented on the far eastern commission represented in the early stages of the preparation of the treaty, so that there might not arise those causes of controversy that have arisen in connection with the preparation of the final drafts of the other treaties.

GERMAN NATIONALS

SCIENTISTS AND TECHNICIANS—PROVISIONS FOR EMPLOYMENT IN CANADIAN INDUSTRY AND UNIVERSITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. C. GREEN (Vancouver South): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Press reports state that German scientists and technicians are to be brought to Canada where their services are to be made available to Canadian firms. This movement apparently is under the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Will he make a statement to the house with regard to the question?

Hon. J. A. MacKINNON (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Before coming into the chamber I received notice of the hon. member's intention to ask this question. It was my idea that the matter had been fairly well covered in the press at least, and I thought an order in council dealing with it had been laid on the table. However, I shall be glad, and perhaps it would be a good thing for the record, to make a brief statement in answer to the hon. member's question.

Conditions under which the services of German scientists and technicians might be made available to Canadian industry and universities were indicated in letters forwarded this week to the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Canadian Manufacturers Association, and educational institutions. It was requested that the specific requirements for individual Germans should be submitted to the Department of Trade and Commerce, which has prepared form contracts in accordance with regulations of the United Kingdom governing the transfer of such nationals. For the employment of German scientists and technicians in Great Britain, a contract must be concluded between the government and the individual concerned, and between the government and the ultimate employer. This system provides for security screening, which has been approved by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The following provisions have been made:

Contracts must be signed by the German scientists or technicians before they leave Germany.

The scientists will be brought to Canada at government expense, which will be recovered from the eventual employer of the individual concerned.

Employment is for an initial period of one year, but may be renewed for a further period of one year. The government is free to return the scientists or technicians at any time.

Payment of salaries will be in accordance with scales prevailing in the United Kingdom, and salaries will be subject to ordinary taxation.

Employers will be responsible for finding suitable accommodation for the scientist or technician, but the German concerned will be required to pay for such accommodation.

Employers will be required to make monthly reports in writing to the Minister of Trade and Commerce on the ability and conduct of the German employee.

The German scientist or technician will not be permitted to write articles for publication or to give interviews to the press while under contract in Canada without the written consent of the minister.

The employee will assign to the government, or to whomsoever the minister may designate, his title to all inventions, processes or improvements for which he may be responsible during the period of his contract.

While every effort will be made to employ listed German scientists and technicians for whose services there is an actual need and for whom a request has been received by the Canadian government, no action will be taken to absorb in Canada German scientists for whom no such requirements exist.

At the present time it does not look as if there will be more than twelve or fifteen such people seeking entry into Canada.

BEAUHARNOIS LIGHT, HEAT AND POWER

GRANT OF WATER DIVERSION FROM ST. LAWRENCE RIVER

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of Bill No. 179, respecting the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

On section 1—Grant of water diversion.

Mr. MacNICOL: Is the minister going to make a statement?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Yes. There is no new principle involved in this bill. It is a simple bill which seeks the confirmation of a principle already approved by this parliament. The bill seeks to obtain authority to divert from lake St. Francis, through the Beauharnois power canal, all the surplus water available, subject to prior rights of navigation, for power development.

By section 2, chapter 19, of the statutes of 1931, this parliament granted authority to the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company to divert from lake St. Francis up to but not exceeding 53,072 cubic second feet of water of the flow of the river St. Lawrence, to be returned to lake St. Louis, and in that act it was provided that any additional water which was required by Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power should be authorized by application to this parliament.

By section 1 of chapter 20 of the statutes of 1940 an additional application was made to parliament for 30,000 cubic second feet of water and that too was granted.

The position today is that there is a great shortage of power not only in the area served by Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power but also in the province of Ontario, and this company now comes forward and asks for authority to divert such quantities of water of the flow of the river St. Lawrence as the governor in council may from time to time determine, up to but not exceeding all the surplus water of the flow of the said river not required for navigation. In other words, in order to save several applications being made in case additional diversion is required, Beauharnois now seeks, by means of this application, permission to divert all the surplus water available.

Mr. ADAMSON: What does the minister mean by surplus—over the normal mean flow of the river?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Over and above that which has already been applied for and all that is available in order to serve the requirements of the units installed at Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power. I was going on to say, when I was asked the question, that this diversion is subject to prior rights of navigation, and the governor in council, in previous agreements as well as in orders in council which followed the approval of parliament to the diversion, set out the terms, conditions, stipulations and reservations under which the diversion would be approved. It is subject to the prior rights of navigation and is also subject to additional rights held by certain corporations, as will appear in the course of the debate. I believe that is all I have to say at this time.

Mr. CHURCH: On a question of privilege, I was in my seat ready to discuss the principle of the bill on second reading. I understood from the Speaker that I should have the first opportunity in committee, and I consented to the second reading on that understanding. I may tell the minister that the government are not going to get away with that again.

Mr. MacNICOL: I thank the minister for his concise explanation. One thing I like about the Minister of Transport is that he always knows his subject and presents his arguments clearly. In the creation of the world the great architect of the universe, who also was a marvellous engineer, endowed what is now called Canada with vast reservoirs out of which flow many gigantic rivers. Those rivers, through their falls and rapids, have almost inexhaustible power. This bill concerns just a small portion of one of these great rivers, the St. Lawrence, particularly the portion of it which lies between lake St. Francis and lake St. Louis. The distance between those two lakes is fourteen and a half miles, and in that distance the river falls approximately 83·5 feet. This portion of the river contains three main rapids, and has a large capacity for the production of power. This bill has to do with the production of power from that water.

As the minister has said, this is the third bill which has been before the house having to do with this matter. I remember distinctly the two previous bills, one in 1931 and one in 1940. The fact is that the province of Quebec owns all the power rights in that water. By the law of this land they, owning the river bed, can have possession of all the power which can be produced in that section. The only rights which belong to this parliament are those of navigation. I shall deal with both those aspects of the bill. I am not opposing it in any way; I am for it. In fact, if I might digress for a moment, I should like to say that, when a similar bill was before the house in 1940, I recommended that they be given the full right to divert, if and when they required it all the surplus water. It seems to me that in the meantime the country has lost the opportunity to produce much more power.

The situation at the present time is this. Apart from navigation there are now two power plants on the 14½ miles, one just east of Coteau at St. Timothée, and the other farther east at the Cedars. I believe that at the Cedars about 75,000 cubic feet of water per second can be taken out, if it is desired.

Mr. CHEVRIER: That is right.

Mr. MacNICOL: I do not know whether that amount is taken out or not. From that it is possible to produce approximately 225,000 horse-power on a head of 30 feet. That is a very low head, Mr. Chairman. At St. Timothée 6,000 cubic feet per second are taken out with a head of about 50 feet more or less and approximately 30,000 horse-power are produced. In other words, on that section of the river at the present time, approximately 250,000 horse-power are being produced. At the lake itself at the head of the river before the water starts to descend over that 14½ miles to lake St. Louis, the Beauharnois Company quite a long time ago purchased, and were finally granted by this parliament, the rights to divert, as the minister has so well said, 53,072 cubic feet of water per second. This is made up of the two rights which existed at that time for the diversion of water in the river for two power-houses. I believe the Beauharnois itself controlled 40,000 second feet and the Montreal Cottons had 13,072—

Mr. CHEVRIER: That is right.

Mr. MacNICOL: —making a total of 53,072 which the Beauharnois Company afterwards obtained permission from this parliament to divert out of lake St. Francis. Then in 1940 we gave them the right to divert another 30,000 second feet. It was at that time I suggested to the house that they be given all that they are asking for now, and with that I am in accord. This makes a total that Beauharnois may divert through their power canal of 83,032 cubit feet per second.

Mr. CHEVRIER: That is right.

Mr. MacNICOL: That is all the water that has so far been diverted out of the St. Lawrence through their power houses for the production of power. Out of the 83,072 cubic feet of water per second that the Beauharnois Company now diverts through its splendid canal and pours back into the river at lake St. Louis, it develops 689,000 horse-power, I believe, from thirteen units of 53,000 horse-power.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I am informed that it is 650,000 horse-power.

Mr. MacNICOL: That may be so. There may be a diversity of opinion. I was told that there were 13 units of 53,000 horse-power each. I went down to the power house and that was the information I got there. That would make 689,000 horse-power. However, that is neither here nor there.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I am informed that the units are of 50,000 horse-power each.

Mr. MacNICOL: I was told that they were 53,000 horse-power each. If it is 50,000, the development would be 650,000 horse-power. For a long time I have been hoping that the Beauharnois Company would buy out the rights, if they have not already the right to do so. Since the Beauharnois Company is wholly owned by the Quebec government and operated under that hydro electric power commission to the best advantage of its people, I for a long time have been hoping that the Beauharnois Company, or its new owner, the Quebec government, would purchase the rights at the Cedars and at St. Timothée because those two together make 81,000 cubic feet per second.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I understand that is the case. The information I have is that the Quebec Hydro expropriated Montreal Light, Heat and Power, which were the owner of the majority of the shares of Beauharnois.

Mr. MacNICOL: I am glad to hear that. That being so, I hope they will proceed as rapidly as possible to divert that 81,000 cubic feet per second, prevent it from going down the river, take it down through their own canal and pour it through their power house and then into lake St. Louis.

Mr. CHEVRIER: That is exactly what they wish to do.

Mr. MacNICOL: There is no objection to their doing it, is there?

Mr. CHEVRIER: No.

Mr. MacNICOL: That is fine, because that would give them sufficient water to increase their production up to about 1,750,000, more or less. That is a large block of power. In fact the province of Quebec has been thrice blessed in its very large blocks of potential and actual power energy. First, there is the great power site at Shipshaw. At present in the three plants on the Saguenay we are developing 540,000 and 300,000 and 1,200,000, or roughly 2,000,000 horse-power. I am told that when they conserve the waters of the other rivers which flow into lake St. John, in addition to the present conservation on the Peribonka river, they will be able to produce practically another million horse-power. So far as I know that would be the largest block of horse-power for electrical energy produced anywhere in the world.

In addition they have Shawinigan, which has a large volume. When they take this additional 66,000 feet per second out of the St. Lawrence river it will bring the total up to about 1,750,000 horse-power at Beauharnois.

So that I look forward to a vast expansion of business when all this power is developed and distributed. At the outlet of lake St. Francis the flow of the river is 230,000 cubic feet per second, or thereabouts, depending of course on the flow from higher up in the lakes. In that flow at lake St. Francis there are 5,200 cubic feet per second of water diverted out of the Albany river watershed in Ontario, which, if it followed its natural course, would flow into James bay. However, because of an agreement made some years ago it now flows into lake Superior and down through the St. Lawrence basin. It flows through lake St. Francis.

I have said several times that the fact that approximately 40,000 horse-power can be developed at Beauharnois out of that 5,200 feet which comes from the Albany river watershed is perhaps one of the reasons Quebec has been so generous to Ontario in the matter of power. I wish to thank Quebec for its generosity to Ontario in this respect. I believe they are now selling us 250,000 horse-power out of Beauharnois; is that correct?

Mr. CHEVRIER: About half of the development from the Beauharnois power plant.

Mr. MacNICOL: That would be about 325,000 horse-power.

Mr. CHEVRIER: It is going to Ontario.

Mr. MacNICOL: That is good. At the same time they are giving—and I do not mean that they are giving it for nothing; we are buying it, and rightly so—but I believe we are buying about another 450,000 horse-power from the two leading large rivers which flow into the Ottawa just north of here.

So that Ontario has every reason to be grateful for what Quebec has allowed us to take out of her power production. I hope they will continue that policy when all the river is diverted through Beauharnois. After all, the watershed behind lake St. Francis is about 230,000 square miles, of which roughly 115,000 are in the United States, and the other 115,000 are in Ontario. In reality one-half of all the water which will flow through Beauharnois will come from Ontario, so it is quite right that Quebec, in her generosity, should let us buy from that power.

I am not going to go much further in the matter. I have a warm feeling for the minister, because he looks into these matters much more than most ministers do. I am not praising him unduly in that regard, but I like the way he makes a study of the work of his department. I suggest that he have a survey made of this watershed, not by a commission, but by his own engineers. The department has most excellent engineers; there are no better to be found anywhere. If they make a survey of the whole watershed perhaps they will be able to give us some good advice. At the present time the watershed is losing some water—not much, it is true. I believe about 3,500 cubic feet per second are taken out at Chicago. They require about 1,500 cubic feet per second for domestic purposes, and they take out about 2,000 cubic feet per second for sewage purposes, street flushing and the like. That is not a great amount of water, and I do not believe it can be reduced.

At Niagara Falls all the water that is diverted at that point flows back into the watershed. I believe even that which goes into the Erie canal flows back through the Lakeport or Erie canal into lake Ontario. So we are not losing anything there. The same applies to the Welland canal. What goes through by DeCew falls through our own power plant goes back into the watershed or into the course of the river. I believe a little water—not very much; perhaps not enough to bother about—is taken out through one or two rivers in Ohio for canal purposes. Then there is a little bit taken out and poured into the headwaters of the Allegheny river. However, all those losses are small. The whole watershed in my judgment has been pretty well safeguarded.

I hope the minister will consider these points. I thought I should mention them in case he is not familiar with them. Of course I am familiar with them, having covered all those areas, having seen them with my own eyes and having noted where these diversions take place.

There have been really only two diversions; I mentioned them a minute ago. I should have said they are from the one watershed, the Albany river watershed. The Kenogami river pours 1,200 cubic feet per second into lake Superior, and through the Nipigon river pours 4,000 cubic feet per second of Ogaki river water into lake Superior. There is a total of 5,200 cubic feet per second from the Albany river watershed. When those diversions came up some years ago I said I hoped that the diversion of 5,200 cubic feet of water per second, which is the equivalent of 500 million tons of water per year, up over a height of land into another watershed, would not upset the whole normal flow of water, and the return of that water in clouds to where the water came from. I am not at all sure that it has not done so. I do not believe anyone can prove that it has or it has not. I have given it most exhaustive study, and the fact is that the great lakes levels have seldom before been as high as they are now. The water today, we are told, is higher in lake Ontario than it has been in seventy years. Toronto island and the cottages all along the lake shore are being severely damaged.

This condition applies all the way up lake Erie. City engineers and other engineers in western Ontario, who have known about my interest in water diversion, have communicated with me about what I said before in the matter, when I pointed out that perhaps at some other time the people living along the shores of the great lakes would have a legal right to sue the governments of the United States and Canada for the destruction of their property through the rising of lake levels on account of this diversion. I do not know, of course, whether the people have that right.

It is a question whether 500 million tons a year poured from one watershed into another might not cause the damage that is being caused today. Certainly there is some cause for it. Perhaps the minister, who I know is interested, might look into that phase of it.

This matter of the flow of air and water is a most interesting study. The diversion of water out of one watershed into another upsets and alters the handiwork of Divine Providence. Maybe it makes no difference, and maybe it does. That may be the reason for the very heavy precipitation of recent weeks, and may be responsible for the general tendency along this line this year and in previous years. If we could have it in the west rather than in the east it would be beneficial all the way through.

I shall close by asking the minister a few questions. He need not answer now; he may answer when he gets time. We are deciding to allow the Beauharnois Company, or the Quebec power commission, as it is now, to divert all the surplus water beyond what will be used for navigation. That is what it means. As to navigation in the Soulanges canal, I would point out that the Welland and Erie canals take about 3,000 cubic feet per second, but I doubt if the Soulanges canal will take more than 1,000, if that much. If it does not take more than 1,000 cubic feet per second throughout the whole year—the navigation season lasts only eight or nine months—in fact it is immaterial whether it is 1,000 or 2,000 cubic feet, but even if we say that 5,000 cubic feet per second are required, that would leave an average volume of 225,000 cubic feet per second. Through this bill the Beauharnois project is to take the whole of that out. That will mean that not even a rowboat will be able to go down the river from lake St. Francis to lake St. Louis. I do not know whether that is of any importance, because with the Beauharnois canal completed they could go that way and would have a straighter line to sail and through deep water. They would not need to bother going through the five locks there are now in the fourteen and a half mile Soulanges canal between lake St. Louis and lake St. Francis. I just want to see whether the minister and his officers have made sure that at no time will the river bed itself be used for navigation from lake St. Francis to lake St. Louis. That is question No. 1.

Has the United States any rights? In reading up the whole question of diversion from the St. Lawrence I found that just a few years ago the President of the United States appointed a commission with instruction to ascertain the best routes of navigation from the great lakes to the ocean as far as the United States was concerned. That commission was given five references to inquire into, one being the possibility of diverting from lake St. Francis across Quebec and New York to lake Champlain, a distance of about 52 miles, during the course of which the canal would drop about 53 feet. My opinion is that that could not be done, but if it could be done I think it is worth while for the minister to know about it. I am sure he does know about it. The 5,000 feet per second which might be taken at any future time would then reduce our power production at Beauharnois by roughly 40,000 horse-power. I do not think we need worry about that, but it is worth mentioning.

I do hope that the Quebec government will continue to be generous and allow the Ontario government through the Ontario hydro—I believe they are very friendly—to purchase on the present basis one-half of the full production at Beauharnois. We need power very much in eastern Ontario.

I could not find the passage in Hansard, but I remember asking when the 1940 bill went through if diversion works were to be built at the head of the river. I presume they will now be right at the head of the river. Will these be built by the Quebec power commission? The answer to my question at that time was yes.

Mr. CHEVRIER: They are built already.

Mr. MacNICOL: They will have to build new ones at the head of the river when they take all the water. There will be no water going down to the power plants at St. Timothée and Cedars. I imagine they will have to have gigantic works right across the head of the river if and when the time comes to proceed with the construction of the St. Lawrence ship canal. That should be in due course.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I hope so.

Mr. MacNICOL: We were all interested in what the President of the United States said a few days ago. I believe the answers given me in 1931 or 1940 were that any navigation works that were built would be built by the Beauharnois Company. They would have to deepen the 3,000 foot channel to 27 feet, and make locks at Melocheville where the ships go down to lake St. Louis. I should like the minister to reassure us that that will be done, because we are now giving all the water to the commission.

When the minister gets the time I hope that he will have a survey made into the wonderful possibilities of power production along the whole 1,800 miles of this river. In my judgment there is nothing that we can do that would provide as great a return in jobs as to develop these possibilities. First, there is the work entailed in building the canal. Second, there is the building of transmission lines and so on. Third, there are the hundreds of thousands of jobs that would be provided in factories all across Canada. There is nothing in the world that will encourage production in a plant to the extent that cheap power will. I would ask the minister to extend his survey in an effort to find some way whereby the maritime provinces and Saskatchewan may enter the cheap power field. These provinces are badly handicapped by lack of cheap power. There is no hope of their greatly expanding their manufacturing potentialities, as we all would like to see them expanded, without cheap power. That would help everywhere in Canada. I ask the minister to see what his officials can do toward providing cheap power for the maritimes and Saskatchewan.

Mr. CHURCH: Mr. Chairman, I shall detain the committee only a few minutes in connection with this bill. Unfortunately there are only three more than a quorum present to discuss one of the most important matters on the North American continent, namely, the St. Lawrence waterway and the cheap light and power movement. I have been a pioneer in connection with this bill. I have tried to prevent the stealing of power by private ownership all over the great lakes. The foundation for this particular company was laid in 1927 when two or three bills were introduced.

I am opposed to the method and manner of bringing up this matter. The Navigable Waters Protection Act was passed shortly after confederation to preserve water powers, inteprovincial and international, on the great system of inland waterways which we have in this country. That act was always under the administration of the Minister of Public Works, but it has been transferred. We find that this bill was introduced in the senate. There are only nine government members present today, six Conservatives, five C.C.F., two Social Credit and one Independent. This is one of the matters which in 1929-30 brought the Liberal party into the valley of humiliation, as it was called then. An investigation into the Beauharnois deals was made afterward by the Bennett administration. I had been a pioneer in the cheap light and power movement in Ontario and strongly opposed the original Beauharnois Company and the methods they used to put this over. My opposition to it drove me out of parliament. These people had all along opposed the cheap light and power movement.

You have to follow certain principles with a matter such as this. Why was this bill introduced in the senate? Why is the Navigable Waters Protection Act violated? After all is said and done, this bill was introduced into the senate, not as a government bill but as a private bill, and the speakers were all private members. After the first Beauharnois scandal some of them had to resign, but I do not want to refer to names. There was a long investigation into it and a change was made after the general election of 1930.

I object to this bill for the following reasons: First, on account of the danger to navigation. Second, it is proposed by the great leader of our great ally who visited us the other day that construction of the St. Lawrence seaway be begun at once. We have to consider the Chicago diversion of waters in connection with the construction of the St. Lawrence seaway. Hon. members will have noticed in the press and in the congressional reports that there are interests which want a second rival canal to the St. Lawrence seaway, using the Mississippi river. Where are we going to be with the St. Lawrence seaway then? There are cycles of high and low water in the great lakes system in this country, and where shall we be with a rival canal in existence. Navigation will be nowhere. Yet navigation is paramount. You cannot take a bucket of water out of the boundary streams if it affects or injures navigation. Water can only be taken out to develop light and power if it is not necessary for navigation.

I object to the principle of this bill. The explanatory notes say that the Beauharnois Company got a charter and constructed the canal and the works connected with it, and then by chapter 19 of the statutes of 1931 the company was granted the right to divert from lake St. Francis 53,072 cubic second feet of water of the flow of the river St. Lawrence, to be returned to lake St. Louis and to be used for the development of hydro electric power on certain terms and conditions set out in P.C. 504 of March 1, 1932.

Then by chapter 20 of the statutes of 1940 the company was granted the right to divert an additional 30,000 cubic second feet of water from lake St. Francis on terms and conditions set out in P.C. 3210 of July 18, 1940.

The Beauharnois canal and works constructed and designed in accordance with approved plans permit of the development and use of an additional quantity of water for power purposes.

The Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power company is now owned by the Quebec Hydro Electric Commission, which also owns Montreal Light, Heat and Power Consolidated and Provincial Light, Heat and Power Company. These two last named companies enjoy power rights on the river St. Lawrence between lake St. Francis and lake St. Louis.

The explanatory notes go on to refer to the demand for power. Yet they are exporting a whole lot of power now. They were allowed to export a certain amount of power during the war to certain munitions manufacturing plants. Are they to be allowed to continue to export power when this country needs power and will need it for many years to come for industrial development in the two central provinces?

The explanatory notes say that the purpose of the bill is to obtain from parliament its approval of the further diversion by the Beauharnois company of such additional quantities of water of the flow of the river St. Lawrence as the governor in council may authorize.

I am opposed to the principle of this bill, which parliament should not pass unless the two central provinces are consulted and consent to it, and even then we should safeguard navigation rights, which are paramount. The Navigable Waters Protection Act is under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Public Works, and I see no reason for transferring that jurisdiction without a hearing before the minister and before the railway committee of this house.

We are going to have a rival seaway, as I have already pointed out; are we going to allow this company to export power that is badly needed in Canada by the two central provinces?

I object to the principle of this bill on the ground that it would be adopting a different type of rival seaway through the Mississippi valley. We may not be able to carry out the St. Lawrence seaway project if this diversion goes through, particularly as Chicago is diverting more water for canals and municipal purposes every year, and there is no proper check being made at the present time of that diversion of water. We used to have a debate in this house lasting for three or four days on the Chicago diversion of water, but now there is no reference to it. That diversion should be checked up, especially as we have cycles of a heavy flow of water followed by a scarcity of water on the great lakes system.

Interests in the United States want a rival canal to the St. Lawrence seaway extending right down the Mississippi to the gulf, and they are going to get away with it. There is nobody to stop them. Chicago is getting away with more water than the treaty calls for, and they will do the same thing with the St. Lawrence and the Mississippi seaway; and then where are we going to be? Future generations will pay for this misuse of the water powers of this country. There is nobody here to stop them now. In the old days when the Conservatives were in power in Toronto our benches here were full. We had 127 members but today we have only five or six listening to this debate. We were the original pioneers in Ontario of public ownership, with cheap light and power for the people.

I believe that this bill should be laid over for a year. There is no demand now for this extra water. The bill should stand over until we know more about the St. Lawrence seaway. It should go first to the railway committee. I can tell you this, that if this bill goes through, it may prove to be the death knell of the whole St. Lawrence seaway proposition. There are shipping interests in this country that do not want the St. Lawrence seaway. They are opposed to it. The ports of Montreal and Quebec have been developed by a large expenditure of money and this great inland waterway should be extended right up to the head of the lakes. Providence blessed us with this great inland water system. You can go up the Amazon river for a thousand miles. If this bill goes through the way it is you can just fold your arms so far as the St. Lawrence seaway is concerned. I warn the house and the country of the danger. The people today are blindfolded. They do not know what is going on, in local affairs, foreign affairs or anything else. But they will soon wake up to the fact that they have been blindfolded and they will be blindfolded and fooled no more. This is a very dangerous bill for the province of Ontario, if it is passed without all due safeguards. Let us wait until we have all the information about the St. Lawrence seaway. The Beauharnois Company was a private company but eventually it is to be a Quebec public ownership enterprise. This seaway business may become a racket unless the necessary safeguards are provided. History always repeats itself in light, power and transportation. Cheap light and power did great things for our province. We could not have had our great industrial development without it. But those who proposed it and brought it forward were ridiculed and blackguarded, but public ownership in Ontario has succeeded and proved a gold mine. I hope the same thing will be true in the province of Quebec.

I have concluded about all that I have to say because I have dealt with the principles of the bill. The next time this bill is up for discussion I do hope that we shall have a larger attendance from Ontario, anyway. I do not know where we would be if we did not have some of these great national policies which the Conservative party launched and made a success of in that province, including its support of the St. Lawrence waterway.

Mr. COLDWELL: On previous occasions when the matter of the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company has been before the house the proposals have met with strong opposition from the members of this group. Since then, however, a change has occurred. This is now a publicly owned enterprise which, of course, puts a different complexion on it from our point of view. Whether one accepts the general proposition for public enterprise and cooperative enterprise, as perhaps we do to a greater extent than most hon. members of other parties in the house, all parties agree that electric power development is something which in its very nature must be a public enterprise. I am glad to know that since we discussed this matter in 1940 the ownership of this organization and of the Montreal Light, Heat and Power Company has passed into the hands of the government of the province of Quebec. From the point of view which I wish to express that is a very useful thing.

The statements which the hon. member for Broadview made are serious and should be given careful consideration by the government. As I understand the proposition—and if I am wrong I want the minister to correct me, because I want to be quite sure in supporting this bill—the water we are dealing with in this bill is surplus water, and the country is adequately protected so far as navigation is concerned.

Mr. CHEVRIER: There is no question about either of these two things.

Mr. COLDWELL: There is no question about that from the point of view of the advisers of the department, who are competent engineers, and we must therefore take the advice they give us that the country is adequately protected in that regard. I understand that when the St. Lawrence waterway is built, as I hope it will be, the Beauharnois canal will form a part of the whole plan.

Mr. CHEVRIER: It does.

Mr. COLDWELL: In laying out the canal originally the St. Lawrence waterway project was protected in the minds of those who designed the canal. I understand that the depth will be sufficient to take ships up to 27 feet draught.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The depth will be 27 feet throughout from the head of the lakes to the ocean.

Mr. COLDWELL: That, I understand, is the proposal generally for the whole waterway project, as I have read it and studied it.

[Mr. Church.]

Mr. CHEVRIER: Yes; and the power canal has been worked into the whole scheme.

Mr. COLDWELL: The power canal will form a part of the whole St. Lawrence waterway scheme?

Mr. CHEVRIER: That is right.

Mr. COLDWELL: If we are satisfied on that point, in view of the present shortage of power the government of the province of Quebec through its power commission should be given the right to use the surplus water so long as the navigation rights of the dominion are adequately protected. I hope this project will be beneficial to the province of Quebec and that the people will derive from it the benefit that one would hope should accrue from an undertaking of this description.

I may add that when we hear it stated that there is a power shortage in Quebec we are reminded that we were told during the war that much of the new power developed in Quebec could not be utilized in peace time. We now find it necessary to divert another 30,000 cubic second feet from the river. Including the 30,000 that were diverted in 1940, that makes a total of 60,000 cubic feet over and above the 53,000 cubic feet which it is necessary to divert on account of the shortage of power. This is very interesting to those who were told during the war that much of the power development that had taken place in Quebec could not be utilized after the war was over.

May I join the hon. member for Davenport, without going into the matter as he did, in expressing the hope that the minister and the federal government will do everything in their power to facilitate the building of power projects in the navigable streams, on, of course—from my point of view—a publicly owned basis, so that we may provide electric power for parts of the country to which up to the present it has not been made available.

As I say, the change of ownership from the private corporation to the province of Quebec makes a very great deal of difference from my point of view. In 1940 I objected to the diversion of 30,000 cubic feet per second to the Beauharnois corporation.

Mr. JACKMAN: The same people use it.

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes, but it is not the use of the thing that matters; it is who owns it, to whom the benefit of the ownership accrues. I am not going to argue with my hon. friend, who is so deeply imbedded in a sort of prehistoric philosophy that it is not worth arguing about.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I am not going to get into the argument.

Mr. COLDWELL: I do not blame the minister for not getting into the argument. At least this bill is on the right side of the argument, and therefore I am supporting it.

Mr. IRVINE: Before the bill passes I wish to say one word. I am not opposing the legislation, and I am in entire agreement with what has been said by my leader, but I should like to ask this question. How is it known that the required water for navigation has been safeguarded? For instance, you may have ships now that have a draught of 30 feet. Five years from now they may have a draught of 36 feet. How do you know that you are going to preserve navigation?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I think I can answer that question. In the first place the department provides checks. At the power house at Beauharnois there are engineers who measure the flow once a week, and our own department officials measure it every month. We also maintain at Coteau water level gauges, as we do at Iroquois and at Cornwall, and we know the level of the water every day. The officers read the reports, and also the reports of the water taken by the Beauharnois company or by the Quebec hydro commission, and by means of comparing these two levels are able to see immediately whether they are taking more water than is required. That is one way. There are several other checks. For instance, under agreements which will be drawn up between the government and the Beauharnois company it will be stipulated upon what terms and conditions this water may be taken. If these terms and conditions are not complied with, penalties are provided.

Mr. IRVINE: After we have granted the right to divert the water, and the diversion has taken place, suppose subsequent events should require that large ocean going ships should have much greater draught than they now have. The water has been diverted. Would not that mean that these large ships could not go up the river?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Well, the provision today is for 27-foot navigation, and if the draught of the ships were greater in future we would have to provide for greater depth.

Mr. THATCHER: Are there any other persons or corporations that have rights or interests and, if so, have they made representations to the minister either opposing or supporting the application?

Mr. CHEVRIER: There are three others and they have made no representations. They are owned by the Quebec hydro commission, with one exception, the Canadian Light and Power Company, and it diverts a very small amount of power out of the old Beauharnois canal.

Mr. THATCHER: Then there is no corporation which is opposed to this.

Mr. CHEVRIER: None. I will answer the questions asked by the hon. member for Davenport. I believe there were four. The first had to do with the position with regard to navigation. Navigation cannot use the river now between lake St. Francis and lake St. Louis. The river was completely dammed in 1941 to permit a total diversion at Beauharnois of 83,072 cubic feet per second.

Mr. MacNICOL: The water must be flowing through to feed the two power houses, one at St. Timothée and the other at Cedars.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Yes. The water flows through lake St. Francis into the Beauharnois canal. The water is dammed on the river St. Lawrence. Navigation is not carried on through the north channel of the river St. Lawrence because of this dam, but there is enough water allowed through for development at Cedars to Provincial Light and Heat.

Mr. MacNICOL: As I understand it, the water that is now used to supply the power plants at St. Timothée and at Cedars is taken in both cases out of the river itself, and it must therefore flow down the river to get there.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The water that is diverted for development at Cedars is diverted out of the river St. Lawrence and there is a dam there providing for that, likewise for the water which is diverted through the old Beauharnois canal for development by Canadian Light and Power Company at St. Timothée. But the water we are discussing now is that which does not come out of the river but out of lake St. Francis down through the power canal into lake St. Louis.

Mr. MacNICOL: This bill provides for it.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Yes. With respect to United States rights, I am informed that the United States have no rights or interest in power development at Beauharnois as long as the levels are not raised on the United States side at the head of lake St. Francis. There was a question about further diversion. No additional works are required to permit a further diversion of water. These diversion works were built in 1941; the navigation locks will be built and paid for by Canada when the deep waterway is eventually built, and the power company will provide a channel to the required depth. As a matter of fact, that channel is practically complete with the exception of one mile.

May I deal now with two questions asked by the hon. member for Broadview? His first question was why this bill was introduced in the senate. The answer is, because for several weeks we were discussing legislation on controls in the House of Commons. This bill was ready and it was thought reasonable that it should be introduced in the senate so as not to lose any time. The hon. member complained about navigation. He said that navigation would not be protected. The answer is that navigation is fully protected. If navigation were not protected the dominion government, under its former agreement and under the agreement which it will enter into with Beauharnois, will have the right to expropriate the works, so that at all times rights of navigation are fully protected under the bill.

Mr. ADAMSON: I understand that the export of primary power is not a federal matter, but I would ask the minister whether steps have been taken to safeguard the interests of both Ontario and Quebec with regard to the export of primary power.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I do not want to get into a discussion on export of power. This bill has nothing to do with the export of power but only with the diversion of water from one lake to the other through the canal.

Mr. JACKMAN: But it makes power possible.

Mr. CHEVRIER: So far as export of power is concerned, while that question does concern the federal authority and is one in which they authorize by licence, it is not a matter that comes within the purview of the legislation.

Mr. ADAMSON: I realize that, but I want to make a protest now, or to warn the government against the export of power. We are facing a frightful power shortage in industrial Ontario and industrial Quebec at the present time. This diversion of water means an increase in installation of horse-power at Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power. That power is needed in the worst way in Canada, and I want to plead with the government, in case there is any such intention, to stop this new increase of power from being exported.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I do not think the question is in order but I will answer it. The hon. gentleman was here when I made the statement that about half of this power goes to Ontario.

Mr. ADAMSON: Yes.

Mr. CHEVRIER: He knows how serious the shortage of power is in Ontario at the present time.

Mr. ADAMSON: It is desperate.

Mr. CHEVRIER: With reference to the export of power, that is a matter which has been decided by this parliament. It was decided as far back as 1927 by the Electricity and Fluid Export Act when the principle was laid down by parliament as to how power should be exported. There is nothing I can add to that. I believe the principle laid down was a good one.

Mr. ADAMSON: Half of this power will be used in Ontario. The minister does not know how the other half will be used?

Mr. CHEVRIER: That is a matter for the Quebec hydro commission.

Mr. ADAMSON: And they are a sovereign body.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Yes.

Mr. ADAMSON: I have another question. How much increased power does this diversion entail? I do not think that question has been answered.

Mr. CHEVRIER: That is a difficult question to answer. It depends on the flow of water.

Mr. ADAMSON: You have 30,000 cubic feet per second. You must know how much that means to Beauharnois.

Mr. CHEVRIER: It depends entirely upon the flow of the water. The flow of water varies. The minimum flow may be 146,000 c.f.s. at a certain time of the year and at another time it may be close to 350,000 c.f.s., so that the surplus amount of water cannot be told in exact terms.

Mr. ADAMSON: This bill entails an extra 30,000 cubic feet per second.

Mr. CHEVRIER: No; it does not. It entails all the surplus water available subject to rights of navigation et cetera, to be taken out of lake St. Francis through the canal into lake St. Louis; and, upon the terms, conditions and stipulations laid down in the agreement which will follow this bill.

Mr. ADAMSON: This takes everything.

Mr. CHEVRIER: It takes the surplus.

Mr. ADAMSON: This takes the whole works, every cubic foot of water flowing between these lakes, now going through the Beauharnois canal, except for navigation.

Mr. CHEVRIER: No, it does not take the whole works. There have already been granted by two additional acts of parliament two diversions, one of 53,071 cubic feet per second and another of 30,000 cubic feet per second.

Mr. ADAMSON: This takes all that is left.

Mr. CHEVRIER: This takes the surplus, subject to that granted other corporations.

Mr. ADAMSON: Which is not needed for navigation.

Mr. CHEVRIER: This authorizes the governor in council to enter into an agreement with Beauharnois to grant it the surplus amount of water available.

Mr. ADAMSON: One more question. Has any navigation machinery; have any locks been installed on the canal? Have the sills or anything like that been installed in the power canal? I understand that the Beauharnois people are using the power canal as part of the ship canal. It works hand in glove with the future deep waterway system. Have any installations been made?

Mr. CHEVRIER: No.

Mr. ADAMSON: Nothing has been done? The canal as at present constructed is suitable for ships of 27-foot draught?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Yes.

Mr. JACKMAN: Am I correct in my understanding that neither the government of Canada nor the government of the province of Quebec will have to come back to parliament for any permission to divert any water from the St. Lawrence?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Yes. This grants Beauharnois the authority, and it will not have to come back.

Mr. JACKMAN: That is what I understood. May I ask the minister, as a matter of information, exactly what is contained in the act of parliament which has to do with the export of power to the United States? Will he give me a brief explanation, because parliament will not have a chance to discuss this diversion right again?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I do not intend to allow myself to get into a discussion of the export of power. This bill has nothing to do with that. Although I answered the question asked by the hon. member for York West a moment ago I told him I thought it was out of order. I referred to a debate and a resolution of this house by which the house agreed as to the principles governing the export of power, and successive governments have abided by the terms of the resolution. I propose to go no farther than that.

Mr. JACKMAN: Is all the power in Quebec being used at the present time, or is some of it, because of its location, not being used?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I understand it is all in use.

Mr. JACKMAN: Does the Quebec government own all the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company? If it does not, what do the people who own shares in the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company, now own?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I am informed that the government of Quebec has expropriated the Montreal Light, Heat and Power, which was the owner of the majority of the shares of the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power.

Mr. JACKMAN: I realize that, but there are shareholders in Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company who had nothing to do with the Montreal Light, Heat and Power. I am asking the minister what they own; because in the explanation of this bill, it is stated that the Quebec government owns the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power. They only own a controlling interest. Is that the understanding?

Mr. CHEVRIER: My officers inform me that they own the whole of it.

Mr. ADAMSON: I should like to correct one statement which I think was made by the leader of the C.C.F. party during the war about the surplus power. I think he is confusing the surplus power at Shipshaw with the power that is needed in this bill.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. ADAMSON: This matter was raised on this bill, Mr. Chairman, and is pertinent to it. There is a desperate shortage of power in the industrial heart of Canada and, in my opinion, it will increase. But the development made on the Saguenay was an isolated one, for a specific purpose, hundreds of miles away from the industrial centre of Canada. That was the reason why it was thought that the power from the Shipshaw development might not be used. It was, I think, 400 miles away, and that is an extremely long distance to be covered by transmission lines.

Mr. MacNICOL: Perhaps I can answer the hon. member for York West. It was a good question which he raised. The 40,000 horsepower is shipped to the United States but they return that to us at Niagara falls. In other words, we exchange that 40,000 horse-power there for 40,000 horse-power at Niagara falls.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT

INCREASED SALARIES TO TRANSPORT COMMISSIONERS—RAILWAY GRADE CROSSING FUND

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of Bill No. 255, to amend the Railway Act.

Mr. RODNEY ADAMSON (York West): Is the minister going to make a statement?

Mr. CHEVRIER: No. I made a complete statement on the resolution. We are now on second reading of the bill.

Mr. ADAMSON: I should like to make a short statement. I wish to thank the minister for having incorporated in this bill two parts of the bill introduced by myself in the last two sessions of parliament and sponsored by my silent partner, the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Graydon). The sections of this bill which have to do with the abatement of noise, particularly the whistling noise at railroad crossings, deal with a matter which is a serious one for the urban areas in question. It has been, I think, completely substantiated that, in an urban area with properly protected crossings, the sound signal does not have the effect as a safety measure that it has in rural areas. I merely want to go on record as saying that I think this bill was thoroughly discussed in committee last year when I introduced a private bill, and that all the evidence possible was adduced in that committee. Speaking for the hon. member for Peel, who is absent today fulfilling the necessary democratic function of casting his vote in his own county—

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): To drink or not to drink.

Mr. ADAMSON: —and for myself, I wish to thank the minister for introducing this bill.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Golding in the chair.

Sections 1 and 2 agreed to.

On section 3—Grant for ten years from 1947.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Section 3 is, I take it, the one which covers grade crossings. I merely rise to express my complete approval of such a fund being provided. Perhaps I am repeating myself at this time, but I should like to mention something that was mentioned last year. I believe I said at that time, and I now repeat, that level crossing accidents stand as one of our greatest scandals. Indeed, only a few weeks ago, right in my home city, three people were killed at a level crossing. These are the type of crossings to which funds such as those we are now discussing, contributed as they are by the government, the railway and the municipality, could be allocated.

I have risen simply to express my approval of the granting of this money, although I am not strongly in favour of the ten-year provision. I believe there might be occasions when the amount should be increased. Of course the only way to do so would be by amending the statute. This, however, is only a matter of detail. I am very much in favour of spending this money.

Mr. FLEMING: I should like to add a word to what has been said by my colleague, the hon. member for Calgary West. There can be no question that we have fallen far behind the requirements of the country in the matter of grade separation. The grade separation fund has not been augmented in recent years. Of course we realize that works involving grade separations had to be curtailed during the war. But now that the war is over, I suggest that we should raise our sights in the matter of construction of grade separation works.

When the minister spoke on the resolution he indicated that, in addition to this annual vote to the grade crossing fund, by means of this amendment to the Railway Act the government had in contemplation some augmentation of the fund by special grant to provide funds necessary to carry out grade separation at a number of places where surveys by the board of transport commissioners had indicated grade separation needs were well established. I should like to express the hope that there will be no delay in that respect.

The grant involved in the bill before the committee is not adequate to undertake any large-scale programme. There will have to be some further augmentation if we are to make any serious attempt to catch up with the arrears of work. The expansion of road traffic has increased the existing dangers. Along with that, as I pointed out earlier, the work of grade separation has been largely at a standstill in recent years. So that there is a substantial backlog of grade separation work now to be done. That will require augmentation of the fund.

To add to what has been said by my colleague, the hon. member for Calgary West, let me express the hope that the government will not lose any time in furthering this programme and augmenting the fund.

There is, perhaps, one other matter worthy of mention in this connection, and affecting amounts to be voted in respect of railway grade crossings. The point is that for a period of time it has been the tendency of the board of transport commissioners in its decisions to increase the proportion of total cost of any of these works levied against the public purse, rather than against the railways immediately affected. That is another factor which enters into the problem before us and increases the necessity for our thinking in terms of substantial augmentation of this fund to meet a great need.

Mr. CHEVRIER: May I say one word in connection with the remarks of hon. members who have just spoken. There seems to be some misunderstanding about the amount of money paid into the grade crossing fund. It may be thought that this is the only amount of money being provided for the elimination of grade crossings. Such is not the case and it would be unfortunate if the committee were to gain that impression. Since the grade crossing fund was established, there has been paid into the fund, not only these amounts voted at the rate of $200,000 a year, but also other additional amounts which total $11,795,000. Apart from that, there have been spent by the provinces and municipalities $15,675,000 as their share toward the elimination of grade crossings; an additional $16,397,000 have been paid by the railways, making a total of $43,867,000 provided for the elimination of these crossings. Then, as my hon. friend suggested a moment ago, parliament can grant a special vote for certain projects which may come to the attention of the government and receive approval.

Then, as I said on the resolution, the board of transport commissioners has been asked to make a survey of grade crossings which in the country are in such condition as to require work being undertaken at the earliest possible moment. Just where the report stands, I do not know. When it does come before the government and what action will be taken I am not in a position to say. However I hope that certain priorities may be established, and that the funds will be voted out of the appropriations of the Department of Reconstruction and Supply or, again, perhaps, out of the funds of the Department of Transport, to eliminate such dangerous crossings. So that it is not only the grade crossing fund which is directed toward the elimination of these crossings. There are other funds, as well.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): It is all set out in the railways report.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Yes. While I am on my feet, perhaps I might answer one or two questions. First, the hon. member for Durham asked about the quantity of American as opposed to Canadian materials which went into signals at grade crossings and level crossings. The answer is that approximately two-thirds of all materials used in the installation of automatic signals are purchased in the United States. They are not manufactured in Canada. The duty on such materials coming from the United States is twenty-five per cent. The remaining one-third of materials is of Canadian manufacture.

Then the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario asked who carries out the work of grade separation, and whether it was done in each instance by the railways. The answer is that where grade separation involves the building of a highway bridge over the railway, if the highway authority is a provincial department or a large municipality the bridge is generally designed and built by the highway authority. All work on railway property is carried on under the supervision of the railway company. If the highway authority is a small municipality which has no adequate staff for carrying out the work, the bridge is designed and built by the railway company. Where grade separation involves the construction of a subway to carry the highway under a railroad, the subway is designed and constructed by the railway company.

Then the hon. member for Calgary West asked about the duties of the board of transport commissioners. I have gone to the trouble of getting the 1945 and 1946 reports, and obtaining from those reports the actual work of the board. It would be somewhat lengthy to place it all on Hansard; but if the hon. member insists, I can do so.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Perhaps the minister would let me have it?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Yes. It is a summary of what is done, and I shall be glad to let the hon. member have it.

Mr. FLEMING: I have one question with respect to a further vote based on the survey now being undertaken by the board. Is there any expectation that that report will be available this year, and that the vote will be included in this year's appropriation?

Mr. CHEVRIER: There is every expectation that the report will be available this year, but I cannot tell my hon. friend whether it will be available in time to be included in the supplementary estimates. I doubt very much whether that would be possible, because when the report is received it must receive the approval of the Department of Reconstruction and Supply. It was that department which asked the board of transport commissioners to make the survey. Therefore the engineers of the Department of Reconstruction and Supply will have to look at the report so as to ascertain which should have priority and where, perhaps because of spotty unemployment, there might be greater urgency of doing the work in one particular area than in another.

Mr. FLEMING: The board of transport commissioners was just invited to make recommendations as to crossings and grade separation works?

Mr. CHEVRIER: That is right.

Mr. ADAMSON: Just one matter with regard to the materials used for safety devices at level crossings. Some years ago and again last year I made representations to the Minister of Finance that the materials and equipment made by the United States company—I just forget the name—should be admitted at a lower rate of duty or duty free. This equipment is not made in Canada, and the duty imposes an extra tax upon security and safety at level crossings.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The hon. member for Durham made the same representation the other evening and I shall see that it is brought to the attention of the Minister of Finance.

Section agreed to.

On section 4—Fencing approaches.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): This section has to do with fences at approaches to level crossings. It reads:

> Such fences or other structures as the board may by order or regulation direct shall be erected and maintained on the sides of the approaches mentioned in subsection one of this section.

The explanatory notes point out that the present subsection was introduced at a time when vehicular traffic was confined almost entirely to horse-drawn vehicles, and the reason for the suggested change is that fences as previously provided for tend to obstruct the view. I wonder if we need to change the statute. It will be remembered that a legal fence is a fence four foot high with so many wires. Will this make things safer?

Mr. CHEVRIER: It will. This is being inserted at the request of many provincial ministers of highways who think the old fences obstruct the view and who feel that if this were left to the board it would be safer for the public generally.

Section agreed to.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Sections 5 to 8 inclusive agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN NATIONAL-CANADIAN PACIFIC ACT

JURISDICTION OF FEDERAL AUTHORITY OVER RATES OF PAY, HOURS OF WORK, ETC.

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of Bill No. 254, to amend the Canadian National-Canadian Pacific Act, 1933.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Golding in the chair.

On section 1—Employer-employee agreements.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I think the committee is entitled to an explanation as to why this bill is being brought forward at this time. The Canadian National and Canadian Pacific railways have been experiencing difficulty with their collective agreements across the country. Under section 92, subsection 10, paragraph (a) of the British North America Act, this parliament has jurisdiction over railways connecting a province with any other or others of the provinces, or extending beyond the limits of a province.

As the committee knows, the railways have entered into collective agreements covering rates of pay, hours of work and other terms and conditions of employment with their employees. They have run into certain difficulties, because the provinces under property and civil rights have enacted legislation having to do with the same subjects such as rates of pay, hours of work and certain other working conditions. For example, Ontario provides for one week's holidays with pay after the first year of work. Saskatchewan provides for two weeks of holidays after the first year of work. Alberta provides for one week of holidays after the first year of work and two weeks thereafter. In Saskatchewan I think there are some five provincial statutes having to do with labour matters. In Alberta there is similar legislation and also in British Columbia.

What is happening is that when the railways enter into collective agreements with their employees they are face to face with legislation which is different in each of the provinces. In other words, it is not uniform and is creating chaos. The railways simply cannot operate under these conditions. In Saskatchewan the railways were prosecuted by the provincial government for infraction of their labour acts. A stay of prosecution was granted pending an application by the railways to the courts for clarification and for a pronouncement by the courts upon the legality of the provincial legislation. The courts decided against the legislation.

Mr. JAENICKE: Only as far as railway employees are concerned.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I am dealing only with railway employees. The hon. member is quite right in bringing that forward. The supreme court of Saskatchewan decided that the legislation was ultra vires in so far as railway workers are concerned. In fact the judgment goes beyond that and says that the railway agreements would cover hotel employees because they are an integral part of the system.

The collective agreements that are made with the brotherhoods are made after careful negotiation and the railways are most anxious that the legislation be uniform. After careful consideration, the government came to the conclusion that the only way to do this would be to amend the Canadian National-Canadian Pacific Act. The object of this bill is simply to avoid a chaotic condition across the country and I hope that the legislation will commend itself to the committee.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I am very much in favour of this legislation for the reasons the minister has given, but I should like to ask a question or two in order that we may be sure of what we are getting. Is there some definition which defines National Railways and Pacific Railways. The section reads:

> The rates of pay, hours of work and other terms and conditions of employment of employees, of National Railways or Pacific Railways.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Yes, it is defined in the Canadian National-Canadian Pacific Act.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): It goes on to refer to "construction, operation or maintenance of National Railways or Pacific Railways". What does that include? In other words, does the act apply solely to the railway corporations or does it apply to any subsidiaries which they may have? Hotels were mentioned by the minister a moment ago. Let us assume that a railway company has its own trucking service, which they do have in some places. Perhaps the minister would not propose to go so far as to cover some local situation like that. In other words, does this bill include all the subsidiary businesses into which a railway might care to go? I hope it does not. I think the words are rather well chosen, "construction, operation or maintenance," but perhaps they need a bit of clarification. May I say again that I am very much in favour of the bill. I think this is the only way the railways can operate. I also know that the railways and the men themselves on both the main lines are in favour of the measure as we have it.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Perhaps I may read the definition of "National Railways" as contained in section 3 (e) of the act:

> "National Railways" means the National company, as owner, operator, manager and otherwise, and its transportation, communication and hotel system, which system shall be deemed to comprise all companies which are elements of the Canadian National Railways as defined in the National Act, the respective undertakings of such companies, the National company in its capacity as owner, manager, or operator, in whole or in part, of any railways, including Canadian government railways, or of any land, water or air transportation or communication services or hotel services, and the said railways and services, their works and property, and all such works and property as are ancillary.

The same definition applies to Pacific Railways. So it includes all that my hon. friend contemplated in his question.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Our railways operate ships, for example, on both coasts and on the great lakes. They own those ships, although the name of the company may be somewhat different from that of the railway. According to what the minister has just read, the definition seems to cover everything, and I question very much if he intended this to apply to seamen, for example, who are working on the lakes or on our coasts on boats owned by the railways. I want to make sure that all the people who are to be brought under this have been consulted and are agreeable to being brought in.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I am informed that the bill covers everything in the definition.

Mr. WRIGHT: Would it include Trans-Canada Air Lines?

Mr. CHEVRIER: No; I am informed that is a separate corporation.

Mr. HAZEN: As the minister has told us, and as is stated in the explanatory note, the purpose of the bill is to provide that rates of pay, hours of work and so on, shall be such as are set out in employer-employee agreements filed in the office of the Minister of Transport. The new section 27A reads:

> The rates of pay, hours of work . . . shall be such as are set out in any agreements . . .

Then it says at the end:

> . . . if such agreements are filed in the office of the Minister of Transport.

What puzzles me a little is this. I see no provision in the bill that makes it obligatory on a company to file an agreement in the office of the Minister of Transport. Possibly some section of the act which this bill is proposed to amend provides for that, but as I read this bill it does not state that any agreement has to be filed.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The answer is that if they want to take advantage of the act they will have to file the agreement.

Mr. HAZEN: That is not satisfactory, is it?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I would say it is.

Mr. HAZEN: Is it satisfactory to the government?

Mr. CHEVRIER: It is satisfactory to the government, and I am sure it will be to the brotherhoods because I agree with the hon. member for Calgary West when he said that he knew this had the approval of the brotherhoods. I have in my file a letter from the brotherhoods. While they have not all approved this, I think the majority of them have.

Mr. HAZEN: The agreement could be filed by either the company or by one of the brotherhoods?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Yes.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Remember, I am all in favour of the bill. I am only worried that perhaps we may be taking in some territory we do not intend to take in. For example, the hotel employees have their union which is quite separate from any railway union. The staff of the Chateau Laurier, for example, are in a union which covers the other hotels in Ottawa. I think the Minister of Labour will agree with me on that. Here is my difficulty. I am going to vote for this bill—let there be no doubt about that—but I do not want us to deal too hurriedly with the rights of a number of people who have not been consulted and whose interests have perhaps not been considered. I mention hotels as one thing, and I mentioned trucking as another. Certainly the railways have many interests. Let us assume that a railway has gone into the bus business, as the railways have in some places, and operates a bus line which is not interprovincial or anything of that kind. I am not just sure that we should not limit this bill to certain operating trades which have agreements that we know exist. I am not being critical at all, but I do not think the minister wants to spread himself into perhaps dangerous territory. That is all I am trying to avoid.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The hon. gentleman's point is well taken, and I am glad he has raised it. I have in mind definitely the question of hotels, because there is pending at the moment in British Columbia a lawsuit over this very thing. The government of British Columbia have, I understand, no objection to this legislation, save that they say it should not be applicable to hotel employees because hotels are a matter which come under property and civil rights and should be legislated upon by the province. Mr. Justice Bigelow, in his decision in the Saskatchewan case, agreed with the minority judgment of Mr. Justice O'Halloran of British Columbia that this legislation should cover hotel employees because that was an integral part of the railway's business. That is with respect to the local aspect only.

With respect to the other aspect, I am informed that the railways, both the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific, have consulted with all their employees, including hotel employees and express company employees, and that they are in agreement with this legislation. I am further informed that the employees' organization known as the joint negotiating committee have approved this legislation.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I doubt that the hotels are represented on the joint negotiating committee. If they are I have not heard of it.

Mr. MITCHELL: The Canadian Brotherhood of Railway Employees represents the employees of the Chateau Laurier; it is a national organization, a member of the joint negotiating committee. I have not it with me, but I have seen a copy of the letter sent by this organization to the Minister of Transport. The Canadian Brotherhood of Railway Employees joined in the request that this legislation be adopted.

Mr. McKAY: A moment ago the minister said that certain provinces had labour legislation which seemed to be at variance. For instance, some provinces had one week's holiday with pay, and others two weeks' holiday with pay. This seems to indicate that we have great need for a national labour code to govern that sort of thing. The minister also mentioned the fact that the railway companies had consulted the brotherhood. Did the minister make any direct representation to the brotherhoods to find out their reaction to this bill?

I should like the minister to clarify another point. Since there is varying provincial legislation having to do with labour conditions, will the agreement which is mentioned in this bill vary from province to province because of the different types of legislation that are found in the different provinces which have been mentioned?

Mr. CHEVRIER: The answer to the first question is that the minister made no representation to the brotherhoods. It was the other way round, if anything. The chairman of the negotiating committee, Mr. F. H. Hall, wrote to me under date of June 2, 1947. Perhaps I had better put the letter on record:

The Honourable Lionel Chevrier, Minister of Transport,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Mr. Minister,—

A copy of Bill 254, "An Act to amend the Canadian National-Canadian Pacific Act, 1933," has just come to hand. It embodies the principles which some time ago received approval of the organizations, national and international, representing the employees on Canadian railways.

This approval was expressed in a formal motion adopted by the negotiating committee of these unions, and was conveyed to the railways. The Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen withheld its acquiescence pending some further consideration, and no advice has been received subsequently as to its position in the matter.

The organizations participating in the action referred to are as follows:—

Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.
Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen.
Order of Railway Conductors.
Division No. 4, Railway Employees' Department (A.F. of L.) (shop crafts).
Order of Railroad Telegraphers.
Commercial Telegraphers' Union of North America.
Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, Freight Handlers, Express and station employees.
Canadian Brotherhood of Railway Employees and other Transport Workers Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees.
International Brotherhood of Firemen and Oilers.
Brotherhood of Express Employees.
Brotherhood of Railroad Signalmen of America.
Hotel and Restaurant Employees' International Alliance.

Should you desire any further information in this connection please advise.

Yours very truly,
(signed) F. H. Hall,
Chairman, Negotiating Committee

copy to: The Honourable
The Minister of Labour.

The second question of the hon. gentleman was whether this would apply uniformly to all the provinces. The answer is yes; the moment this is enacted, it gives legal force to collective agreements made between the railways and the employees all across Canada.

Mr. McKAY: And will it take precedence over provincial legislation?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Yes, by virtue of the British North America Act.

Mr. FRASER: The minister said Trans-Canada Air Lines would not come under this bill. Will Canadian Pacific Air Lines come under it?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I do not think so. I am informed that the Canadian Pacific Air Lines are on the same basis as Trans-Canada Air Lines, and are an excepted company.

PORT ALBERNI HARBOUR

PROVISION FOR INCORPORATION OF COMMISSIONERS

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of Bill No. 240, to incorporate the Port Alberni harbour commissioners.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Golding in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Mr. Chairman, I think a word of explanation should be given at this time. This bill seeks the establishment of the Port Alberni harbour commissioners. The Department of Transport, apart from the national harbours board, operates public harbours in two ways: first, under the control of a wharfinger or a harbour master, both of whom are paid fees of office; second, under the control of harbour commissioners, such as is being sought at this time by the port of Alberni.

There are several examples of the latter class of control of ports, such as the Toronto harbour commissioners, the Belleville harbour commissioners, the Trenton harbour commissioners and the city of Hamilton harbour commissioners in Ontario; St. Boniface and Winnipeg in Manitoba, and North Fraser and New Westminster in British Columbia. When the business of a harbour master and a wharfinger expanded to such an extent that the harbour master and/or the wharfinger is unable to cope with the traffic that is offering in the port, then the question arises as to whether or not there should not be another form of control. That is exactly what is happening in the port of Alberni. It is deemed there that the volume of business is now too great to permit of effective control either by the wharfinger or the harbour master. The wharfinger is on a 24-hour call and has a crane operator and several wharf employees under his direction. The wharf, besides being used for freight in transit, is used for storage of lumber. There are perhaps two or three large companies and possibly a dozen smaller ones handling lumber. This necessarily complicates the routing of traffic and increases the business.

The demand for this sort of legislation has come from the municipal authority. The port of Alberni city council, the Alberni city council and the Alberni and district board of trade have all made representations for a commission such as this to be set up, and that the business of the port be controlled in such a manner that the commissioners will be responsible to someone in authority. There is nothing new about the principle or about the sections set out in this bill. It is a model bill based on the New Westminster bill and the North Fraser bill. I can think of little of any difference between the statute which incorporated those commissioners and the one at present before the committee.

Mr. FRASER: Are they full-time or part-time commissioners?

Mr. CHEVRIER: That depends on the amount of work. They are part-time commissioners—

Mr. FRASER: At the present time?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Well, they are not set up now, but when they are set up they will be part-time commissioners with perhaps one officer, such as a secretary, who would be a full-time appointee.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): On behalf of the city councils of Alberni and Port Alberni and also the board of trade of Port Alberni and district, I wish to express to the minister appreciation of his action in bringing forward this legislation at the present time. I should also like to thank the staff of the Department of Transport for their courtesy to me in working out the various details of the legislation.

As is well known, Port Alberni has expanded rapidly, being one of the most important shipping ports on the Pacific coast in recent years. It is not generally known in the house that Port Alberni is the western terminus of the Canadian Pacific railway.

As the minister explained, the administration of the port has been carried on under a wharfinger, in part, the rest of the administration being conducted by a part-time harbour master, and it has been found that with administration of that kind, directed as it was from Victoria and with further relation to Ottawa, such a great distance away, there was not that close personal attention to the development of the port which was necessary in view of the expansion that was taking place. All I can say to hon. members is that this meets with the approval of the people of Port Alberni and I recommend it to their consideration.

Mr. GREEN: Has the minister the tonnages over the wharves?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Cargoes loaded for and unloaded from foreign countries at the ports of Alberni for the years 1938 to 1945 inclusive are:

	Tons
1938	852,119
1939	935,151
1940	996,360
1941	2,133,450
1942	248,275
1943	152,413
1944	291,267
1945	357,876

Mr. GREEN: Can the minister give the number of ships?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I have not the ships, but I can give the gross collections and it may be worked out from that. The collections for the fiscal years from 1937 are:

1937-38	$20,796
1938-39	25,009
1939-40	30,924
1940-41	16,508
1941-42	9,896
1942-43	2,690
1943-44	5,995
1944-45	8,082
1945-46	14,130
1946-47	20,436

Mr. ADAMSON: The minister mentioned 2,000,000 tons in 1941, and then there was an amazing drop to something like 180,000 tons.

Mr. CHEVRIER: In 1941 it was 2,133,450 tons and that dropped to 356,000 tons in 1945. I understand that in 1946-47 there is an increase but I have not the latest figures.

Mr. HAZEN: Has the national harbours board any jurisdiction over this port?

Mr. CHEVRIER: None whatever.

Section agreed to.

Sections 2 to 10 inclusive agreed to.

On section 11—Remuneration of members.

Mr. FRASER: What will be the remuneration?

Mr. CHEVRIER: The remuneration is a matter to be fixed by the commissioners themselves. Some commissioners receive no remuneration. The Toronto harbour commissioners receive no salary. Winnipeg and St. Boniface commissioners receive no salary. On the New Westminster board the chairman and the commissioners receive salaries. It will be a matter for the commissioners to determine, subject to the approval of the governor in council.

Section agreed to.

Sections 12 to 18 inclusive agreed to.

On section 19—Expropriation proceedings under the Railway Act, R.S. c. 170.

Mr. HAZEN: Is the harbour owned by the town? Is it an incorporated town that owns the harbour, or who owns it?

Mr. CHEVRIER: There are two incorporated municipalities. There is the city of Port Alberni and there is the city of Alberni. The land is owned by either or both of these two municipalities, subject, of course, to government wharves, which are the property of the dominion government, and this bill will grant a conveyance. The information I have is that we are the owners of the harbour as it is now, and the section which we have passed setting out the description by metes and bounds is for the purpose of the commission and the departmental officers, so that we shall know over what territory the commissioners will have jurisdiction.

Mr. HAZEN: I understand that the dominion government owns the harbour. Am I right?

Mr. CHEVRIER: It owns certain wharves and owns the bed and the inlet of the river.

Mr. ADAMSON: The Alberni canal is a purely natural inlet from the sea?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Yes.

Mr. ADAMSON: There is no artificial dredging?

Mr. CHEVRIER: None.

Sections 20 to 31 inclusive agreed to.

MARITIME COMMISSION

PROVISION FOR DUTIES AND FUNCTIONS UNDER CANADA SHIPPING ACT

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to present a bill to establish a corporation to be known as the Canadian maritime commission to exercise certain powers and perform certain duties and functions under the Canada Shipping Act, to administer any steamship subvention voted by parliament, and to exercise powers or perform duties and functions under any other act or order of the governor in council.

Provision is made further for the advisory functions of the commission, for the employment of professional and technical advisers and assistants and the remuneration thereof, and for all expenses under the act to be paid out of moneys appropriated by parliament for the purpose.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

Mr. HOWE: I have a somewhat lengthy statement setting out the purpose of this legislation. I could make it either on the resolution or on the bill. I suggest for the consideration of hon. members that the resolution be allowed to pass, that the bill be introduced and that I make my statement on the bill.

Mr. GREEN: I am afraid we cannot consent to that. We wish to have all the information available at the resolution stage.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): Mr. Chairman, in moving the resolution I propose, first, to review briefly the developments which have led to the present Canadian shipping and shipbuilding position which, in the opinion of the government, makes the establishment of a maritime commission desirable at this time.

During world war I, the historic Canadian shipbuilding industry, which had fallen on hard times with the coming of iron and steel, was revived by being given orders for forty-two merchant ships to be built for the imperial munitions board. Early in 1918 the government of the day decided that cargo ships for Canadian account should also be built, and a programme for the construction of forty-five ships was started. This was subsequently increased by a further eighteen ships, making sixty-three in all.

In January, 1919, the Canadian Government Merchant Marine Limited was formed as a government agency for managing and operating government-owned ships.

The first of these ships was delivered to the Canadian Government Merchant Marine Limited on February 22, 1919, and deliveries were spread over the following three years until the last ship of the programme was put into service on January 29, 1922.

The entire fleet therefore only commenced to earn revenue after the armistice, and by the time all the ships were in service the post-war boom in shipping was over and freight rates had dropped more than fifty per cent. The cost to build this fleet at the peak of shipyard prices was approximately $80 million.

The government held a five and one-half per cent mortgage on the capital cost of each ship, which the ship's earnings were intended to amortize. This had the effect of saddling each ship with very high charges which they were never able to earn. Various recommendations were made from time to time that the costs of the ships should be written down to their new post-war depreciated values; but these recommendations were never given effect to. This arrangement produced a total accrued interest for the whole fleet of over $51 million during its full period of operation, which amount finally had to be written off, together with a total depreciation of over $31 million.

In March, 1923, the sale of twenty-seven of the ships by public tender was authorized, but bidders were few and by 1926 only eighteen ships had been disposed of.

In 1929, seven vessels were transferred to the newly formed Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships Limited.

Between 1932 and 1935, all but ten of the remaining ships were disposed of and, finally, in 1936, the last ten were sold expressly for operation by a private syndicate between Canada, Australia and New Zealand.

The commencement of the second world war in 1939 found Canada with only thirty-five regular ocean-going ships of over 1,600 gross tons on its register, totalling, in all, 241,880 gross tons. Of these, twenty-two were owned either by the Canadian National Steamships (a company which had been created in 1928 principally to take care of our West Indies trade commitments) or by the Imperial Oil Company.

Once more the Canadian shipbuilding industry was revived, but this time on a very much larger scale than in the first great war. At first, building was confined to naval escort vessels, but in the fall of 1940 the building of merchant ships had become a matter of the highest priority for the allied cause and the United Kingdom called upon Canada to build ships.

In April, 1941, Wartime Merchant Shipping, a crown company, was established to deal with this essential building problem and to develop to the fullest possible extent all the shipbuilding resources of the country.

The first batch of ships programmed by this company consisted of ninety vessels of the "North Sands" type (10,000 tons deadweight). It was later arranged that these should be sold at cost price to the United States, which would in turn "lease-lend" them to Britain.

As a result of this, the British government only bought for cash two completed ships of the twenty-six which they had ordered before the lease-lend arrangement was made.

[Mr. Howe.]

As soon as construction was well under way, the government decided that a proportion of the ships building in Canada should be retained for Canadian operation.

The Park Steamship Company, another crown company, was accordingly formed in March, 1942, to take over the ships allocated for Canadian operation on the government's behalf. This time, however, it was decided that the ships should not be operated directly by the government agency, but should be allocated by it to various private shipping organizations in the country who would manage and operate them on a fee basis. By this means, private operators were given additional experience in the management of ships, whilst the profits earned by the vessels were turned back through the Park company to the treasury to offset the cost of their building.

As a result of this decision, the first "Park" ship went into service all but three years before V-E day and, by carefully controlling the shipbuilding programme, the last "Park" vessel was completed in September, 1945, one month after V-J day. This was a very different state of affairs from that which occurred during and after the first world war.

By the time that the ninety ships for Lease Lend had been delivered to the United States, arrangements had been completed for the proportion of ships not required by Park Steamships to be "Mutual Aid-ed" to Britain direct by Canada on a nominal charter hire basis.

The Park Steamship Company was responsible only for ships which were turned over to it by the government. These vessels were recognizable by the suffix "Park" after their original names (except one, Camp Debert which was also a "Park"). In all, Park Steamship Company have been directly responsible for 176 ships.

One ship named Fawkner Park was bought by the mutual aid board direct from Wartime Shipbuilding, lent by them to Australia, and finally sold to an Australian firm. It never came under the Park company.

The 10,000-ton ships built in Canada and turned over to Britain both by American lend-lease and later by Canadian mutual aid were named after North American forts, and the word "Fort" was a standard prefix before all their names. In addition to the ninety bought by the United States of America, a total of ninety-eight "Forts" were turned over to Britain, under mutual aid from Canada. These ships were placed on the British registry but Canada retains title to them.

As the war progressed, various developments took place in the shipbuilding field. The original "North Sands" design, which had coal-burning boilers, underwent two modifications. First, the ships were fitted with oil-burning water tube boilers, and this type was known as the "Victory" type. Later, ships were again fitted with Scotch burners but adapted to burn either oil or coal as required. These were known as the Canadian type. To overcome the chronic shortage of tankers in 1942, one "North Sands" and twelve "Victory" type ships were converted to carry liquid cargo. Six small tankers were also built and one was created by a conversion.

A smaller type of ship of 4,700 tons dead-weight, suitable for carrying cargoes where the depth of water precluded the use of larger ships, was also constructed. A number of this type were chartered from Park Steamship Company by the Canadian mutual aid board for operation by Britain and proved particularly useful in helping to provide the requisite tonnage for the invasion.

In the later stages of the war, a number of 10,000-ton ships were suitably modified during building for use as "store issuing" ships and "maintenance" ships for the British fleet. These naval auxiliaries were planned for use in operations against Japan in the Pacific. Later still, the construction of two types of small "China coasters" for eventual use in far eastern waters was undertaken, and three 7,500 ton dead-weight 16-knot diesel driven ships were laid down in order to gain experience in the building and operation of a faster type of vessel.

In October, 1943, the government appointed a special committee to investigate and advise upon future Canadian merchant shipping policy. Two important recommendations of this committee were: that merchant ships should be operated in peace time by private enterprise; and that all government machinery dealing with merchant shipping should be coordinated. The first of these recommendations has already been fully implemented. The resolution now before the committee seeks to provide for the second.

Immediately the war was over, the government set about the disposal to private interests of its Park fleet, together with the diesel ships and china coasters under construction. It was provided that, so far as possible, these ships should be sold to Canadian companies for operation under the Canadian flag. There were, however, a certain number of ships which, for various reasons, were not considered likely to be of use to Canada in peace time, and these were offered for sale in the open market. Eleven 10,000-ton converted tankers, one small tanker, seventeen 4,700-ton freighters and one 10,000-ton freighter in damaged condition were sold to foreign interests. Newfoundland also bought one 4,700-tonner. Fifteen of the thirty-five China coasters were also sold to foreign interests as soon as they were completed.

The remaining government-owned merchant ships were offered to Canadian companies on the basis of a special sales formula. This formula for 10,000 and 4,700-ton ships will be found in Hansard for Tuesday, November 20, 1945, at page 2286. One modification was made to the formula then announced, in that the remainder of the purchase price was to be paid in seven equal annual instalments, and not fifteen as originally set out. In addition to these terms, ships purchased by Canadian companies were to be considered as eligible for the double depreciation under the provisions of section 6(I) (n) (ii) of the Income War Tax Act and order in council P.C. 8640 of November 10, 1944. Moreover, an additional special depreciation allowance of thirteen per cent of the cost of the vessels was allowed in the first year of operations.

It was considered that oil-burning vessels would be more in demand by Canadian buyers. As at that time twenty-eight of this type remained amongst the Forts lent to Britain, arrangements were made to exchange these for twenty-eight coal-burnings Parks then on the Canadian register. Just after this exchange was complete, each batch unfortunately suffered one casualty, so that now only twenty-seven ships are on the exchange list. The coal-burning Park ships were transferred to British registry, Canada retaining title to them. When the "Forts" arrived in Canada, the Park Steamship Company acted as agents for War Assets Corporation in disposing of them to Canadian companies under the special sales formula, and the ships came on to the Canadian register.

The response of private enterprise to the sales formula offer was most satisfactory, so that, with the exception of the three 4,700-ton ships which are on long-term charter and seven 10,000-ton ships under sales agreement to be delivered to their prospective purchasers upon the termination of their present charters, the Canadian operated government-owned fleet, including the twenty-seven exchanged "Forts", has now been disposed of. This means that six small tankers, 104 10,000-ton vessels and nineteen 4,700-ton vessels are now in the hands of private operators comprising thirty-three different companies registered in Canada.

The three diesel driven ships were sold by War Assets Corporation to the Canadian National Steamship Company. Nineteen China coasters were sold by the corporation to eleven other Canadian companies, and one was taken over by the Department of Transport. The terms of sale to Canadian companies under the special sales formula provide that the ships must be operated under Canadian registry, and no application for transfer to any other flag can be made without the written approval of the Canadian government.

Eighty 10,000-ton ships presently under bare boat charter to the United Kingdom, in which are included the twenty-seven exchanged Parks, remain to be eventually disposed of. A total of ninety-eight of the ships were "Mutual Aid-ed" to Britain and, since mutual aid ceased, have been operated by the ministry of transport. In the meantime, the British have bought ten of the ships outright, and seven of the original ninety-eight became casualties. One damaged ship among these ninety-eight was sold by Park Steamships as agents for War Assets to foreign interests. The remaining eighty will be returned to Canada for disposal as their charters expire. All are to be returned before the end of 1950.

All told, we built, during the war years, a total of 446 merchant vessels in this country. And although I include the forty-two naval issuing and maintenance ships in this total since they had normal merchant ships' hulls and engines, I am not counting the number of naval escort vessels, mine-sweepers, landing craft and tugs which also featured largely in our total war shipbuilding effort. I will now place on Hansard a break-down of these 446 ships. Of this number, 176 vessels were turned over to the Park Steamship Company.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Has the minister the consent of the committee?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. HOWE: The statement follows:

†Completed in 1946.

I should explain that the government carried its own insurance risk on the ships to which it held title. The eighty ships now on charter to the British ministry of transport are, however, protected by a compensation clause in the charter agreement which covers them from September 1, 1945, when mutual aid ceased.

The casualties which our ships have sustained have been very light considering the risks to which ships were exposed. Whilst of the ninety "Forts" lease-lent by U.S.A. to Britain, twenty-two were sunk and one seriously damaged by enemy action, the enemy only sank six of the mutual aid-ed "Forts" to which we retained title and seriously damaged one.

As regards the Park fleet itself, four ships were lost by enemy action whilst two have been lost by marine peril since the war. One of these vessels was under charter to the British at the time of loss and we were compensated for it under the current agreement.

Four Park vessels have suffered severe damage: one small tanker by enemy action, and two large tankers and one freighter by fire and explosion.

Whilst the committee will deplore the loss of the lives of thirty-five Canadian crew members and eight shore workers, which occurred as a result of these casualties in the Park ships, we must be thankful that the loss of life in our Park fleet was not greater.

I will now place on Hansard, with the permission of the committee, tabular accounts as of March 31, 1947, of our expenditure on purely merchant shipbuilding during the war, together with the amounts accruing from the operation and sale of the ships.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the minister have permission to place these figures on Hansard?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. HOWE: The accounts are as follows:

Total	7·3	3·5	1·16

From the above statements hon. members will see that, of our Park fleet, seventy-four per cent of the original cost of its construction should be recovered. Of the non-Park ships, sixty-one per cent should be recovered. In this case, account must be taken of the fact that, up until September 1, 1945, these vessels were on mutual aid to Britain and earned no revenue or hire.

Moreover, this group includes the three diesel-driven ships and the thirty-five China coasters, which were disposed of for other than war purposes as soon as they were completed at prices which were, of necessity, considerably below their construction costs.

In all, we spent a total of $626·9 million on the construction of these fleets for war purposes. We should finally recover approximately $418·9 million or sixty-seven per cent of our expenditure, leaving an estimated net loss of $208 million. Of this loss, $7·3 million, or 3·5 per cent is due to casualties.

I suggest that the government can look with some satisfaction upon its shipbuilding, ship operating, and ship disposal policies during the past-seven years.

We now find ourselves with a considerable merchant navy. A survey made in 1946 by the united maritime consultative council, which has since ceased to exist, credited Canada with the possession of a total of 1,948,000 gross registered tons of merchant shipping. On the same basis, the United States were credited with 41,078,000 tons; the United Kingdom, 13,441,000 tons; Norway, 2,663,000 tons; with Canada in the fourth position followed by the Netherlands, Sweden, and France in that order, all of which possess more than one million tons.

A more recent survey made in my department on April 1, 1947, showed that Canadian registered ships of over 1,600 gross tons, which is usually taken as a statistical minimum size for an ocean-going ship, amounted to 386 self-propelled ships having a total of 1,667,724 tons. However, of this total, fifty-two large cargo vessels are confined to operating on the great lakes, whilst seventeen more are passenger ships operating in comparatively sheltered waters.

With the consent of the committee, I will now place on Hansard a table showing the result of this survey for the convenience of hon. members.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the minister have permission to place this on Hansard?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. HOWE: The table follows:

Canadian-registered tonnage over 1,600 gross tons
(as of April 1, 1947)

Oceangoing freighters	142 No.	898,444 tons
tankers	11 No.	84,425 tons
			153 No.	982,869 tons
Canal freighters	121 No.	232,571 tons
tankers	25 No.	52,883 tons
			146 No.	285,454 tons
West coast passenger boats	16 No.	51,235 tons	16 No.	51,235 tons
Saint John-Digby ferry	1 No.	4,055 tons	1 No.	4,055 tons
Total possible oceangoing tonnage			316 No.	1,323,613 tons
Plus the following 70 other vessels over 1,600 tons gross:
Icebreaker N. B. McLean			1 No.	3,254 tons
Paddlesteamers			5 No.	11,060 tons
Inland passenger ships and ferries			12 No.	58,711 tons
Upper lakers			52 No.	271,086 tons
Total Canadian self-propelled tonnage over 1,600 gross tons			386 No. vessels	1,667,724 tons

There are also 21 barges over 1,600 net registered tons totalling 61,931 net registered tons.

In addition to the above, Canada holds title to 80 ships totalling approximately 560,000 gross tons at present on charter to the British Ministry of Transport and temporarily under British registry.

From the above table it will be seen that our regular ocean-going tonnage today is 982,869 gross tons, compared with 241,880 tons in 1939, or four times as great. This does not include some 560,000 tons on charter to the United Kingdom and temporarily on British registry. When these British boats are returned the Canadian fleet will be six times as great as it was in 1939. Therefore, whether we like it or not, we are now in the merchant shipping business in a big way. Not only that, but we also have a big shipbuilding potential in this country.

The Canadian shipbuilding industry today comprises seventeen major well-equipped shipyards, and there are also a number of smaller ship and boat building concerns. During the peak of our war effort, there were 53,000 men employed on ship building in these major yards alone. Today they have over 16,000 men in their employ and have orders on hand for 122 various ships, which total roughly 300,000 gross tons.

Before the second world war, the normal government supervision, common to all countries, of our privately owned merchant fleet was carried out by the Minister of Transport, who is responsible for the administration of the Canada Shipping Act, 1934. We also had a section in the Department of Trade and Commerce which administered the various steamship subventions voted annually by parliament, and the Department of National Revenue was responsible for licensing ships in the coastal trade under part XIII of the Canada Shipping Act.

War conditions made it necessary to augment these arrangements considerably, and hon. members will recall that, amongst other agencies, the Canadian shipping board, under trade and commerce, the transport controller, under transport, and the director of merchant seamen, under transport, were set up to cope with the additional problems which arose. Of these, the shipping board and the transport controller's office have since been disbanded.

We now find ourselves in a world where all governments are interested in the maintenance of the merchant fleets owned in their respective countries.

The united nations has under consideration the formation of an intergovernmental maritime consultative council. Moreover, a number of important developments in the general conditions of sea service are taking place. Hon. members will recall that on February 28 of this year my colleague the Minister of Labour tabled the texts of conventions and recommendations which were adopted at the maritime session of the international labour conference on seafaring conditions held at Seattle in June, 1946. Since then, the British shipowners' and seafarers organizations have agreed upon and introduced a far-reaching scheme providing for virtually continuous employment for merchant seamen. For these and other reasons, the government feels that the time has come to reorganize our peacetime shipping administrative machinery, in order that it may better be able to assist and encourage our shipping and shipbuilding industries to maintain themselves in a healthy and efficient state. The government attaches considerable importance to this objective from both the general economic and the defensive points of view.

There is no question in our minds of trying to support a large merchant navy merely from the point of view of national prestige. We do feel, however, that a merchant navy adequate to our needs should be retained. It should be one of the duties of the proposed organization to keep those needs continually under review and to advise the government upon the general Canadian merchant shipping and shipbuilding situation.

Hon. members are well aware that a merchant navy is basically an industry which, like other industries, has to pay its way if it is to survive. It is, at the same time, a definite part of a nation's defensive armoury, and a considerable factor in a nation's economic structure. The efficiency of such an important industry is therefore a matter which must be of concern to any government.

Inseparably related to the merchant navy is the shipbuilding and repairing industry, which must also be taken into full account.

Finally I would remind the committee that, as a result of our war effort, we have established in this country merchant shipping and shipbuilding industries of considerable size.

The continuation, development, prosperity, and welfare of these enterprises is of national importance, both economically and strategically, and it is for this reason that I move the resolution now before the committee.

Mr. CHURCH: I congratulate the minister on the splendid address he has just given on the need for developing a national shipbuilding policy. I remember when I first came into the house what the condition of the shipbuilding industry was, not only on our coasts but also on the great lakes and the ocean. In Toronto we spend $30 million in buying up property on the waterfront and in building and developing our harbour and grade separation and waterfront. When I first entered the house there was a proposal similar to this for the creation of a maritime commission, something like the railway commission, to regulate maritime shipping. In connection with that, a contract came up in the house in 1923, which was known as the Peterson contract with weeks of debate here. As I remember it, the maritime commission found that they had little jurisdiction on the ocean at that time.

I should like to mention the large shipping plants and others along lake Ontario and the upper lakes. As you look across the Detroit river to the United States side you can see the magnificent plants standing on the banks of the Detroit river. You can see the great United States steel and shipbuilding plants; you can see steamships built in the plants passing through the Welland canal which cost this country $130 million, and has a tonnage as great as the Suez and Panama.

We are an aquatic people. We have never given waterborne traffic and shipbuilding the recognition which it should have had long ago as a great national industry and a competitor with rails to regulate freight rates in this country. During the war, as the minister has said, 53,000 men worked in seventeen plants. I hope that some of these plants will be established in our harbour because it was one of the pioneers of shipbuilding on the great lakes. I think of the plants in Toronto that carried on shipbuilding during the war. There was a great shipbuilding plant at the foot of Spadina avenue in Toronto. Dominion Shipbuilding built all kinds of warships in the last war. I hope that this industry will be brought back to our city again as one of the pioneer cities in the construction of these boats.

I should like to mention the condition in which shipping found itself between the two wars. During that time, in the house I used to hold up copies of the Times of London, England, and the New York Times, showing that great liners and other large ships were being sold for taxes for $50,000 and $60,000. That was the awful condition in which shipping found itself before the second war broke out. If we are to have a maritime commission it is now time that we did something about it because I do not know what we shall do in six months time. This matter was referred to in the debate which we had on civil aviation. In that debate the minister showed what the British shipping commission had done in developing shipping the world over to help the empire on the seven seas and Canada. The growth of the empire has been due to shipbuilding and the union coal and steel, which made Britain mistress of the seas.

In view of what has happened at Moscow and Paris, and the fact that the conference there has failed utterly and has been postponed for six months to meet in London in November next, we shall need ships next November when the four powers reassemble. Shipping will have to be on a proper bigger basis so that the maximum food production may be sent to Britain, Germany and to other parts of Europe to save us from an awful disaster over there in the British zone and central Europe and provoke a third war. I believe one of the ways to prevent that is to have more Canadian ships available next fall and winter. In the short time that Canada has been building ships in war time she has shown what can be done. It is a marvellous achievement. A few mistakes were made in connection with war shipping, but that is bound to come about in and after any great war. I wish to commend the minister for the fine report he has made to the committee and to support the principle of the bill. This Canadian maritime commission is to exercise certain powers and perform certain duties and functions under the Canada Shipping Act, to administer any steamship subvention voted by parliament and so forth. Various other functions may be added to the commission from time to time. Shipping is a great national industry and we should have had maritime shipping commission established in the country long ago to keep pace with our trading position as the fifth best in the world for a nautical people.

Mr. GREEN: The minister had made an interesting statement with regard to shipbuilding in Canada and the Canadian merchant marine. I am sure we are all happy that the merchant marine is in a better position today than it was before the commencement of the recent war. As the minister spoke, I could not help thinking of the great difficulty we had in persuading him and the government to get started building these merchant ships.

Mr. HOWE: But for the opposition we would have been nowhere.

Mr. GREEN: Today I ran across a portion of Hansard of June 14, 1940, which contains my pointed and sincere pleas to the minister to get started on a programme of building merchant ships, and his reply at that time, as reported at page 785 of Hansard, was to this effect:

> Whether at a time like this we should divert the productive capacity of Canada to the peacetime operation of building merchant ships is, I think questionable.

Mr. MACKENZIE: It was true at that time.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Somebody else's guess, now.

Mr. GREEN: A month or two after that, the minister was torpedoed on his way overseas, and it was not long until the government was sold on the need for building merchant ships. But quite apart from that, the main thing is that we did build merchant ships.

The statement this evening said very little about the proposal before the committee, which is to set up a maritime commission. It would have been helpful if the minister had given us as much information in his statement about this maritime commission. However I suppose one of the jobs of an opposition is to dig around and find out what these things are all about, and that is what we propose to try to do this evening.

I should like to ask the minister a number of questions. First of all, I take it that the main purpose of setting up the commission is set out in his statement in these words:

> That all government machinery dealing with merchant shipping should be coordinated.

In the statement the minister pointed out that there are different branches of government dealing with different aspects of shipping and the shipbuilding problem in Canada. I would ask him to tell the committee what different branches of the government service are to come under the maritime commission. For example, are all the subventions which are at present administered under Trade and Commerce to be handled by the maritime commission?

Then I come to the different functions of the Department of Transport having to do with the Canada Shipping Act and other features of shipping. Are they to come under the maritime commission? Where do the national harbours fit into the picture? Strong recommendations have been made by different bodies that the ports of Canada should be modernized. Probably that would come under the national harbours board, but we should like to know whether it is to come under that board, or is to be the responsibility of this maritime commission. Where do the other branches of the governmental service fit into this picture?

We should like to know which minister is to have control of this maritime commission. The Minister of Reconstruction and Supply is fathering the resolution, although we notice that he has the Minister of Transport sitting with him. Our understanding is that the Department of Reconstruction and Supply is a temporary one which is to be wiped out in due course; that its function is to take charge of reconstruction work. We should like to know what minister is to be responsible for this maritime commission.

A third question is whether the functions of the commission are to be advisory or are also to be operational. In the minister's statement we find these words:

> It should be one of the duties of the proposed organization to keep those needs continually under review and to advise the government upon the general Canadian merchant shipping and shipbuilding situation.

In a press dispatch from Ottawa, published in the Vancouver Province of June 3, I find this statement dealing with the proposal to set up a maritime commission:

> The commission will be purely advisory, but it will have power to secure all relevant information. It will be charged with presenting a complete picture of both shipping requirements and development possibilities, together with a survey of shipbuilding capacity.

In other words, according to that dispatch, the functions are to be purely advisory. We should like to know whether or not that is the case.

One other group of questions—and these are, I think, of the utmost importance to the committee—are along this line: Is the government or is this maritime commission assuming any responsibility for such things as, first, the number of vessels there are to be in the Canadian merchant marine, and, second, the type of vessels there are to be in that marine. That brings up the question whether we are to have a proper proportion of modern ships. I notice that Mr. Percy R. Bengough, president of the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada, made representations on this point to the cabinet, as reported on March 28 of this year in the Vancouver Sun. He is quoted as having said:

> We also bring to your attention the need of expanding Canada's merchant marine with faster and more modern ships so that Canada will be in a position to compete on equal terms with other maritime countries in expanding Canadian economy and world trade.

It is all very well to have a good merchant marine as of today or as of the war years, but is the policy to be that of keeping the merchant marine up to date? If so, in what way is that policy to be worked out?

Another important consideration is whether the government or the commission is assuming any responsibility for where our ships are to be built. That, I think, is important. I am not sure of this, but I believe the United States maritime commission has some power in that regard. In any event, the suggestion has been made that the Canadian maritime commission is to be put in a position to see that shipbuilding is carried on in certain parts of Canada. I believe the situation in Canada is this. On the Pacific coast some shipbuilding is going on, which we hope will be continued and expanded, but very little is going on in the maritimes. The hon. member for Royal (Mr. Brooks) says that no shipbuilding is going on there at the present time.

Mr. HOWE: Perhaps he has not been home lately.

Mr. GREEN: I would point out most earnestly that it is of vital importance that a shipbuilding industry be maintained and built up on the two coasts of Canada. It is a great tragedy that Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island were not continued as the great shipbuilding centres they were in the last century. They have the steel industry and the coal there and I suggest that now is the time to build up and increase the shipbuilding industry on our two coasts.

Mr. MITCHELL: What about Ontario and Quebec?

Mr. GREEN: Ontario and Quebec are usually well able to look after themselves.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Hear, hear.

Mr. GREEN: I am speaking now for the maritimes.

Mr. MITCHELL: I am talking about shipbuilding.

Mr. GREEN: I was speaking of British Columbia and the maritimes—Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I am with you.

Mr. GREEN: I do not think the Minister of Labour is an expert on shipbuilding. He is on nearly everything else—

Mr. MITCHELL: I know as much about shipbuilding as my hon. friend does.

Mr. GREEN: —but I question his qualifications on this particular subject.

An hon. MEMBER: He was in the navy.

Mr. GREEN: He was in the navy twenty-five years ago and that gives him some authority.

Mr. MITCHELL: A pretty good navy too.

Mr. GREEN: Another question is this. What authority and what responsibility will the government or this maritime commission be assuming for directing traffic through Canadians ports instead of letting it go through United States ports? Mr. Bengough made a representation along that line when he spoke to the cabinet in March. He is quoted in this way:

> He also advocated establishment of a maritime commission with authority to divert traffic through Canadian ports, adjust rates, and generally to ensure that this traffic is moved for the benefit of the dominion generally.

By the way, that question of fixing rates is another important one. Is the maritime commission to have anything to do with rates? If it is to function along the lines suggested in my last series of questions I think it can be of great help to Canada. Probably it will be of help in any event, but we would greatly appreciate having the minister give us clarification on the different points I have raised.

Mr. HOWE: It seems to me that my hon. friend is asking for details of the bill. He asks what powers the bill contains. Surely that is material which should be left until the bill is before the house.

Mr. GREEN: I may point out that one great purpose of the resolution stage, from the point of view of parties in opposition, is that we can make suggestions which may then be incorporated in the bill. It is very helpful to us, and I suggest to the government that it would be well to have these questions asked and answered at this particular stage.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The object of the resolution is to discuss the principle.

Mr. GREEN: I hope the bill is not in such iron-clad form that suggestions made now by members of the committee are of no value.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Does the Minister of Transport suggest that the statement of the Minister of Reconstruction dealt only with the priniciple of the bill? He started it.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I said no such thing. I said to the hon. gentleman that the object of discussing the resolution is to consider the principle, and that is a fact.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I merely asked whether the hon. gentleman thought the statement of the Minister of Reconstruction followed his formula.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The hon. member heard what I had to say.

Mr. HOWE: If I may continue, the statement I made did not discuss details of the bill. It discussed the background, showing the necessity for a maritime commission, which I understand, is the purpose of the resolution. If the committee agrees that a maritime commission is necessary and desirable it will certainly pass the resolution and discuss the details of the bill when it has the bill in hand.

Mr. GREEN: We are entitled to know what the commission is to do.

Mr. HOWE: It is to advise the Minister of Transport on matters affecting shipping and shipbuilding.

Mr. GREEN: We are entitled to more details than that.

Mr. HOWE: I suggested that I make my speech when the bill was before the house. Then we could have discussed the bill. In the meantime we are discussing the principle. The question may be asked as to why the bill is being introduced by the Minister of Reconstruction. The reason is that the Park Steamship Company which is at present under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Reconstruction, is carrying out many of the functions which will be those of the maritime commission after it is formed. In other words, it will be looking after the government's interests in the former Park fleet which has now been transferred to private interests.

The question was asked as to whether the maritime commission will deal with harbours. That matter would, of course, not fall within its jurisdiction. The maritime commission will merely look after ships and all matters affecting ships, but the matter of harbours for ships will be handled separately by the national harbours board, as at present.

It is the intention that the Minister of Transport will transfer to the maritime commission from time to time certain functions which are now being performed by other officers of the minister. It is the intention that the maritime commission will administer all subsidies. It is the intention that all matters affecting shipping will gradually be coordinated through the maritime commission. My hon. friend has suggested that the maritime commission should allocate shipbuilding.

Mr. GREEN: I did not suggest it. I asked if it was the intention that it should.

Mr. HOWE: Well, what does my hon. friend think? Why did he ask the question?

Mr. GREEN: I thought I was asking somebody who knew.

Mr. HOWE: I think I know the answer. It is a strange question for an advocate of private enterprise to ask. The shipyards are owned by private enterprise and the ships are owned by private enterprise. I assume that the private enterpriser who wishes to build a ship will build it where he pleases. I also presume that, unless the yards are operated efficiently and competitively, they will in time go out of the shipbuilding business. It will be the efficient yards which will survive over the years.

My hon. friend has suggested that the work is unevenly distributed at the moment. That is not correct.

Mr. GREEN: I did not hear that.

Mr. HOWE: I said that it has been suggested that certain yards have work and certain other yards have no work. The fact of the matter is that every major shipyard in Canada has all the work which it can do for the next twelve or eighteen months, which is a situation that I hope the maritime commission will be able to maintain over the years as the department of reconstruction has been able to maintain it over the past five or six years.

Mr. BROOKS: Is that true of the shipyards in the maritime provinces?

Mr. HOWE: Yes, that is true of the shipyards in the maritime provinces?

Mr. BROOKS: Are not many men being laid off in the Halifax shipyards?

Mr. HOWE: No. They are being laid off in the naval dockyard, not at the shipyard. I am glad to give my hon. friend that information, because I should like to set him right on that point.

Mr. BROOKS: I am glad to get that information.

Mr. HAZEN: Can the minister give a little more information about that? I think he said there were 122 ships being built at the present time and 16,000 men employed. Of that number, can he tell us how many ships are being built in New Brunswick and how many are being built in Nova Scotia; how many men are being employed in shipbuilding in New Brunswick and how many are being employed in shipbuilding in Nova Scotia?

Mr. HOWE: Living as he does in Saint John where the only major New Brunswick shipyard is located, my hon. friend should be able to tell me that. I cannot tell him offhand. I can tell him how many ships are being built in Port Arthur, which is in my own constituency, and I presume that the hon. member for Vancouver South could tell me how many are being built in Vancouver.

Mr. JACKMAN: But you are the responsible minister.

Mr. HAZEN: The minister gave the total number of ships and the total number of men employed, and I thought he would be able to break that down from the information he has.

Mr. HOWE: I will try to give that information when the bill is being discussed. Is there any question I have left unanswered?

Mr. GREEN: I also asked whether the commission would have anything to do with the number of vessels in the merchant marine or the types of vessel, also whether the functions of the commission were to be purely advisory or whether they were to be operational.

Mr. HOWE: The functions of the commission will be as determined by the bill when it is passed by the Minister of Transport. The Minister of Transport will assign such duties to it as he may deem desirable. Certainly one duty of the commission will be to take over the functions which are now being exercised by the Park Steamship Company in the management of Canada's wartime merchant fleet.

Mr. GREEN: Those ships will all have gone out to private industry.

Mr. HOWE: In a short time; over the next two or three years. As I say, this is a commission under the minister. The minister assigns to it such duties as he may wish to from time to time. I assume that its duties will be both advisory and operational. Certainly it will be its duty to watch Canada's merchant marine in the best interests of the government, to advise the minister when changes in policy may be required from time to time, to recommend such incentives as may be needed to induce private industry to build a different type of ship or to modernize its fleet; and certainly it will be the function of the commission to advise the minister of any steps that should be taken to stimulate shipbuilding in Canada and make it competitive with shipbuilding in other countries. Surely my hon. friend does not wish me to tell him any more about the bill at this stage.

Mr. GREEN: Yes, I have one more question. Is it government policy to subsidize shipbuilding in Canada?

Mr. HOWE: No, not at present.

Mr. CARDIFF: Is it a fair question to ask how many men will be appointed to this commission?

Mr. HOWE: That is a matter of detail in the bill. My hon. friend may be advised that the bill provides for three.

Mr. FLEMING: I should like to ask the minister a question which bears directly on the resolution, which reads in part:

Resolved, that it is expedient to present a bill to establish a corporation to be known as the Canadian maritime commission—

The statement made by the minister this evening does not at all enlarge on the corporate aspect of the commission. What has been said by the minister would be perfectly consonant with a commission which has not a corporate character. Will the minister enlarge on that for the information of the committee?

Mr. HOWE: The corporate character of this commission is exactly parallel to that of the national harbours board. It is formed as a corporation so that it may own property. In other words, at the moment the government owns some ninety ships, eighty of which are on lease to the ministry of transport of the United Kingdom, and about ten are on long-term charters to various Canadian enterprises. These ships will be transferred to the maritime commission. If, in future, it is required to undertake shipbuilding for government account the corporate character will be desirable as an efficient method of doing business.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: I was interested in the remarks of the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply when he said the shipyards in Canada had all the work they could handle for the next eighteen months. Well, certainly nobody is getting nervous from the rattle of rivetting guns in Prince Rupert at the present time. I would like to see eighteen months of work ahead of them at the present time, in that city, and if he could attend to it I would appreciate it.

I look forward to the formation of this maritime commission, but I should like to know if it will administer all the various points that cover seamen who come under all the various departments. Last year I spoke about the conditions of seamen, and when I got on one angle of it I was referred to this minister and on another angle to another minister. Will all the points come under this commission, so that we may know where we stand, as far as seamen and their conditions of work are concerned?

Before this commission is set up, I should like to see the matter put in the hands of a committee, and have the Canada Shipping Act thrown in along with it, so that we can have a really all-round policy formulated.

When the Canada Shipping Act was reviewed, in 1935 I believe it was, both the present Minister of Veterans Affairs and the Minister of Labour objected to the speed at which it went through. I should like to see more time spent on it in a committee as we will be doing with the national labour code which, we understand, is to come before the house shortly. The formulation of an all-round maritime policy should be done likewise. The interested parties should be before us.

I hold in my hand a brief from the Canadian shipbuilding and ship repairing association. Some of the headings are most interesting. For instance, they recommend "that Canadian shipbuilding and shipping policies should be controlled through one responsible government authority, and that Canadian shipbuilders be invited to nominate a representative to all government-appointed committees dealing with questions relating to marine transportation". We do not know the individuals who will comprise the commission, but I should like to see labour represented on it.

I wish to go through one or two of the points which are bothering the seamen at the present time. They would like to see the abolition of the advance note system, and the substitution of slopchests on Canadian vessels. They would like to see a definite ruling on cash draws made by seamen on wages due when in port, similar to the practice in the United States. They would like to see crew accommodations on shipboard similar to those of the United States. Then, they recommend the abolition of shipping fees extorted from seamen for signing on and off ships articles of agreement. They would like to see watches, hours of labour, legal holidays and provision for the eight hour day, the same as obtain in the United States. With respect to sick mariners they would like to see a complete revision of section 308 of the Canada Shipping Act which covers sick mariners, and the coverage of all seamen regardless of whether their vessel sails foreign or coastwise. They would like to see a manning scale, under which there would be a declaration of the government on the question of manning scales for all vessels, and requirements, qualifications and regulations as to crews, certificate of service as able seaman, and penalties for undermanning.

At the present time, on the coast for example, a company can hire some stubble jumper and put him on board. He does not know anything about the work at all. One or two might have a lifeboat certificate, but they might be down in the stokehold. Then, if a boat hits a reef those with experience would be valueless below deck and the deck crew helpless because of lack of experience.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: I have been in one or two panics like that, and I would not want to see any more. I should also like to see duplicate certificates of discharge, to be issued free of charge when originals are lost through shipwreck.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I would call the hon. member's attention to the fact that he is not dealing with the resolution before the committee.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): What is a stubble jumper?

Mr. ARCHIBALD: You should know.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Is that the same as a sod buster?

Mr. ARCHIBALD: Along the same lines.

Mr. GREEN: On the point of order, may I point out that only a few minutes ago the minister himself said that this maritime commission is to carry out all the functions now being exercised by the Department of Transport.

Mr. HOWE: No.

Mr. GREEN: With regard to shipping. All the points raised by the hon. member for Skeena are in that category. I submit that he is in order.

Mr. GARDINER: A stubble jumper is a C.C.F. name for a farmer.

Mr. HOWE: The hon. member is discussing the Canada Shipping Act.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. member is discussing the Canada Shipping Act, which has nothing to do with the resolution before the committee.

Mr. GREEN: Yes, it has. This new commission is to take over certain of the administrative work under the Canada Shipping Act.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: In dealing with a resolution of this kind, the committee can deal only with the principle involved, as to whether or not a commission is to be set up, and what the functions of that commission should be. I believe the hon. member is dealing with something with which, in all probability, this commission will have nothing to do.

Mr. GREEN: On the point of order, in his statement the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply referred to the Canada Shipping Act and its administration. And the statement goes on to intimate that the maritime commission will take over that work.

Mr. HOWE: What did I say? Quote the words.

Mr. GREEN: These are the words:

Before the second world war, the normal government supervision (common to all countries) of our privately-owned merchant fleet was carried out by the Minister of Transport, who is responsible for the administration of the Canada Shipping Act, 1934.

Then he goes on to deal with the Department of Trade and Commerce, which administers steamship subventions; then, with the Canadian shipping board, the transport controller and the director of merchant seamen. My understanding is that these functions are now to be taken over by the Canadian maritime commission.

Mr. MACKENZIE: He did not say that.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I should like to see the committee support the Chair sometimes in trying to conduct business in an orderly fashion. I have spent a good deal of time in looking over debates involving problems such as this which have been dealt with by chairmen of committees. I have looked into what happened during the first period of time I was here, when Mr. Bennett headed the government. I find that the same rulings were given by chairmen at that time, and that on many occasions hon. members who then sat in opposition were taking the same position as the hon. member for Vancouver South now takes.

After all, a chairman must assume responsibility and give direction to the committee. I believe the committee will make better progress if it tries to support the Chair. I want to be fair to all. But at the same time there are rules by which we should be governed.

Mr. FLEMING: May I say a word—and I do so only to assist the Chair, as I conceive it my duty to do. There is one sentence which might have been read from the minister's statement where it deals with merchant shipping. After reviewing the activities of various government agencies, some of which were mentioned by the hon. member for Vancouver South, he proceeded to discuss the functions of the proposed maritime commission in this way:

It should be one of the duties of the proposed organization to keep those needs continually under review and to advise the government upon the general Canadian merchant shipping and shipbuilding situation.

I call special attention to the words "general Canadian merchant shipping and shipbuilding situation".

Mr. MACKENZIE: Question.

Mr. GREEN: Don't be in a hurry.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: I had the floor, until someone else jumped up and took it. I did not ask for any help, and I was not fighting with the Chairman. I accept his ruling. The minister did deal at length with the Park Steamship Company. He did not, however, tell about the wages they paid during the war —and they were not so hot. I have brought up the question at this time because I thought I was being constructive. The resolution, as it reads, deals with certain duties, functions and powers. But one has to be a bit of a mind reader to find out what those principles are. If you inject something constructive into it it would be worth while.

I would point out, however, that I should like to see this go to a committee of the house where it would be threshed out, and from which might come an all-round shipping policy which would be suitable both to the shipping companies and to labour. It is apt to be too one-sided and we should try to bring peace into an industry which has not been in too steady a state for a number of years.

Mr. BLACKMORE: The resolution and the minister's comments on it are, I think, both highly commendable at the present time. I was particularly pleased when the minister said:

. . . that merchant ships should be operated in peace time by private enterprise and that all government machinery dealing with merchant shipping should be coordinated.

I agree fully with that. I liked also this statement of the minister:

We spent a total of $626·9 million on the construction of these fleets for war purposes.

And also the statement:

Therefore, whether we like it or not, we are now in the merchant shipping business in a big way. Not only that, but we also have a big shipbuilding potential in this country.

Those were good things to say. The minister further said:

I suggest that the government can look with some satisfaction upon its shipbuilding, ship operating and ship disposal policies during the past several years. I think those policies have been thoroughly justified.

Then the minister said:

We now find ourselves in a world where all governments are interested in the maintenance of the merchant fleets owned in their respective countries.

The minister indicates there what I consider a most commendable attitude toward the responsibility of Canada in connection with the defence of freedom in the world in the days to come. I wish to congratulate him upon that statement. Then he went on to say:

> We do feel, however, that a merchant navy adequate to our needs should be retained. It should be one of the duties of the proposed organization to keep those needs continually under review and to advise the government upon the general Canadian merchant shipping and shipbuilding situation.

And again:

> Inseparably related to the merchant navy is the shipbuilding and repairing industry, which must also be taken into full account. Finally . . . as a result of our war effort, we have established in this country merchant shipping and shipbuilding industries of considerable size.

While the war was on, I had the privilege of travelling around a little bit in connection with the work of the war expenditures committee; I was greatly impressed with the size and quality of the shipbuilding industry which had been established in this country. I was genuinely proud; I felt much more happy to be a Canadian after seeing what we were able to do in Canada.

Finally, the minister said:

> The continuation, development, prosperity, and welfare of these enterprises is of national importance, both economically and strategically, and it is for this reason that I move the resolution now before the house.

Those words find a responsive chord in my being; I am glad the minister used them. While it is said to be poor politics for a member of the opposition to congratulate the government upon what they have done, I do not look at the functions of the opposition in that way. I believe that in a democracy when people do a good job everybody should recognize it as a good job and say so frankly. I think in the past war the minister and his colleagues had a tremendous responsibility and I believe they discharged that responsibility well. I think they deserve commendation and I am ready to give my little quota toward rewarding them. I wish to congratulate the minister upon his achievements in the past and upon his attitude toward the future. I want to say also that I believe this setting up of a maritime commission is a right step at the present time. It inidicates that the same skilful and far-seeing mind that guided our work in this respect during the war is still in charge.

I know I do not need to suggest to the minister that there are enormous problems ahead, probably quite comparable with those which he has solved in the past. The cost of the suitable measures which will have to be taken in order to attain the objectives which the minister's words clearly indicate he envisages will be a tremendous item for consideration. I hope the house and the country will be ready to support the minister with the financial means he will require.

I should like to express some doubt that he will be able to acomplish all the things which he has envisaged under the present financial system. I do not wish to go into any considerable discussion on that matter because I would be quite out of order at the present time, but I believe that sooner or later we shall have to face up to the fact, and we must adopt a realistic financial system if we are to attain the wide objectives which must be attained in the days immediately ahead. I just throw out that suggestion to the minister so that he may keep it in mind should he have any spare moments in which to consider such matters.

In closing, I should like to urge the minister that he go forward with the vision and energy and effectiveness which have characterized his efforts during the war. Further, I urge him that if he should find himself hampered by the present financial system he should not hesitate to advocate that such changes be made in that system as will enable him to serve Canada first, and not the financial system first.

Mr. JACKMAN: Mr. Chairman, I shall not trespass upon the rules of the house by attempting to discuss the details of a bill which I have not seen, but it does seem to me that the minister's remarks were largely of an historical character and contained very little about the principles which we might expect to be contained in a bill having to do with the setting up of a maritime commission. What we learned from his remarks was a history of shipping and shipbuilding in Canada and that we are now in the business in a big way, whether we like it or not. Then he said that we must reorganize our shipping administration. I failed to learn very much, either from the document which he circulated or the speech which he made, about the principles to be contained in the bill to be presented to this house.

The minister did say that the merchant navy of Canada under Canadian registry should be adequate to our needs. The word "adequate" is capable of broad and differing interpretations. Before the resolution is carried, I think we should have more enlightenment as to what the minister means by the words "adequate to our needs." It has been the habit in the past for Canada to have a great deal of her foreign trade carried by bottoms of other countries, and in that way those countries were able to pay for the wheat and other natural and manufactured products which they purchased from Canada.

I come now to a matter of deep principle and concern which I think the minister should have touched upon. I find that the United States maritime commission is made up of five members, and their act contains a provision that not more than three of those members shall be from the same political party. I hope that that comment will rise to the level of a principle in this bill in the eyes of the minister. How long is the term of these commissioners to be? In the United States the terms are staggered. From the inception of the committee the terms were two, three, four, five and six years, and upon retirement of a member the new member is elected for a period of six years. Then the minister has said nothing as to what this commission is to do. Is it to run our ocean services and supervise rates and so on? Is it to deal exclusively with foreign shipping, or is it to deal also with domestic shipping or shipping which is partly domestic and partly foreign?

The minister mentioned that there would be subsidies or the possibility of subsidies in connection with shipbuilding in this country. May I ask him if there will also be operational subsidies as well as construction subsidies?

Mr. HOWE: Will my hon. friend quote the passage where I said there would be construction subsidies?

Mr. JACKMAN: I gathered from the minister's general remarks that there would be subsidies, but if he indicates to me I was mistaken I shall be glad to withdraw. Shipbuilding, however, is generally conceded to be much more expensive in Canada. If I recall correctly, the cost of the destroyers we built was almost three times as much as in Great Britain, and it is a natural assumption that shipbuilding may cost more in this country. If that is not so I am sure the country will be happy to hear it. Perhaps the minister will explain how private owners of shipping lines will be able to purchase ships built in Canada as cheaply as they can purchase them in Great Britain or in other countries.

Will there be a provision in the bill for the acquisition by the maritime commission of obsolete vessels? In the United States maritime commission act there is a provision whereby vessels seventeen years of age or over which have become obsolete will be taken over by the commission and funds are made available for ship-owning lines to acquire new ships built in that country.

The minister did not mention anything about insurance. It may be a question of principle whether the government intends to embark on that very large and important aspect of the shipping trade, as has been done in the United States.

I think it would also be most useful to the committee to learn something about the intergovernmental maritime consultative council which the minister mentioned in his remarks. Has it been set up, or is it likely to be set up soon, and what is expected of it?

Is it the intention under this bill to have a reserve fleet set up, which would be of great assistance in the event of another war? I might quote from an article in the Yale Review, which says:

> The strategic importance of merchant shipping has long been known and ably expressed by many writers from the time of Rear Admiral Mahan on. Admiral Nimitz has recently stated: "This war has fully confirmed the necessity for a strong and sound merchant marine in time of peace so that it may be employed as an auxiliary of the army and navy in time of war."

Other authorities are quoted in the same article. We heard so frequently during the war, as you will recall, Mr. Chairman, of an eastern Canadian port not named but which we all knew to be Halifax. That port found itself of great use in the first world war and of inestimable value in the second world war, but in between those two wars it became a Cinderella so far as governmental activity and shipbuilding was concerned. If the government does contemplate establishing a reserve fleet and perhaps reserve shipbuilding facilities I would urge that Halifax be made the centre of that activity because of its proximity to the European continent and also because it was the base for ships which left Canada for the old country and carried cargoes through the North sea to the Archangel route. It is a port which should be greatly strengthened from both its strategic value and its natural shipbuilding advantages. Would the minister be kind enough to answer some of the questions I have asked?

Mr. HOWE: My hon. friend asked a number of questions. Some of them had to do with details of the bill. The purpose of the maritime commission is to watch the interests of Canada and Canadians in shipping and to recommend such adjustments in policy to the minister as may make for the best use of a Canadian fleet for the benefit of Canada.

My hon. friend asked if we are to have a reserve fleet. All the boats we built during the war are now actively engaged in commerce and as long as they are required in commerce I presume they will be active. If they are not required in commerce it will, I presume, be the function of the commission to advise the government on questions such as setting up a reserve fleet, but that is a matter of policy which will be decided in due course by the government of the day, with the advise of the maritime commission.

My hon. friend said that shipbuilding costs a great deal more in Canada than in other countries. Our yards seem to be having no great difficulty in competing with the world in building ships at the present time. They are building ships for Brazil, Holland, France and, if I am not mistaken, for Portugal, and I believe that there is a very good prospect that we may be building ships for Argentina. Our shipbuilding is wholly competitive and, all things taken into account, it operates at a lower cost than obtains in United States yards.

Mr. JACKMAN: Their yards are subsidized, are they not?

Mr. HOWE: I do not know. Ours are not. So far as the United Kingdom yards are concerned, they may be able to build ships cheaper than we can, but they are booked up for the next three or four years, and if anyone wants a ship he finds that Canadian yards suit his purpose very well. Whether in the future it will be sound government policy for Canada to subsidize certain shipping routes, as is now done with certain inland routes is a matter which the maritime commission will study, and upon which it will advise the government.

As to whether any policy should be devised to stimulate shipbuilding, that is a matter for study by the maritime commission and advice to the government of the day. The maritime commission should be wholly familiar with all the requirements of Canada's maritime fleet and familiar with the government's needs in shipping and shipbuilding. It should weigh the two and be in a position to give sound advice. It will be the one agency of government whose duty it will be to examine every detail of maritime matters, shipping, and shipbuilding and to keep itself fully informed on the situation in Canada and in other parts of the world, and be in a position to answer any question which the government may require to have answered.

Mr. JACKMAN: Would the minister amplify his statement, "We do feel, however, that a merchant navy adequate to our needs should be retained." Would he explain exactly what the government had in mind when he made that statement?

Mr. HOWE: That means adequate to our needs from time to time. I am not suggesting any policy; I am not in a position to do so. I would not suggest that we have a merchant navy sufficient to carry all our exports. I would suggest that we require a merchant navy able to carry a substantial part of our exports and to protect Canada's position in the matter of freight rates and other problems of carriage. Today we are the fourth maritime nation in the world, and when the boats now on British register are returned we shall probably be the third maritime nation in the world. Whether Canada in the future will require to maintain that position is a question for the maritime commission to study, so that it will be in a position to advise the government. Being a shipping and shipbuilding nation at the moment, it is important that we shall remain a shipping and shipbuilding nation.

Mr. GREEN: What about the intergovernmental maritime consultative organization?

Mr. HOWE: That is a conference of interested governments formed to consider establishing an intergovernmental maritime organization. It met first in London and then in Washington, and is meeting at the present time in one of the Scandinavian countries, I think Sweden. It is discussing the present and future position of shipping; whether the present tonnage afloat is sufficient to meet the requirements; and, in general, all matters affecting world shipping. As I understand the functions, they are wholly advisory. Canada has been represented at the meetings and intends to continue as a member of that body.

Mr. FRASER: In his statement the minister mentioned merchant seamen. I am wondering whether they come under the commission and, if the commission takes over, will parliament have a chance to discuss with the minister the different regulations in regard to the training of these merchant seamen? At present we have a school at St. Margaret's bay, and I imagine that that would come under this commission. Am I right in that?

Mr. HOWE: No.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The school at St. Margaret's bay is no longer in existence.

Mr. FRASER: When did it go out of existence?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Some months ago.

Mr. FRASER: We are not going to have a school any longer?

Mr. CHEVRIER: There were two training schools set up during the war, one at Prescott and one in Nova Scotia. Both have been closed down. They were established for the training of merchant seamen, engineers, stokers and so forth. Seamen are trained today in schools. There is provision for this in Toronto and in Rimouski and in certain other parts of Canada.

Mr. FRASER: Will this commission have any control over that at all?

Mr. CHEVRIER: That is a question to be dealt with when the bill is before the committee.

Mr. FRASER: I do not know whether it is or not. That is something we want to know now.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I am submitting that it is.

Mr. FRASER: The minister mentioned merchant seamen in his statement. Parliament should have a chance to discuss the different regulations in regard to merchant seamen.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Parliament will have every chance of discussing anything that the commission has to do with reference to seamen when the bill is before the house.

Mr. FRASER: Under some of these other crown companies and boards that have been set up by parliament we find that we have no chance at all to discuss anything about them. We cannot find out much about them when we put questions on the order paper.

Mr. CHEVRIER: If my hon. friend was here when the discussion took place on the compensation for merchant seamen he was told under what headings and under what conditions the position with reference to merchant seamen could be discussed. I said that they could be discussed on at least two or three occasions. I do not want to anticipate what is in the bill, but I think there will be a further opportunity at that time.

Mr. FRASER: I think the minister will have to agree with me that quite often a minister has said that we could discuss a certain question at such and such a time, but when that time comes along we are politely told that we cannot. I wondered whether we could be put straight on this.

Mr. BAKER: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. FRASER: I should like an answer.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I have answered to the best of my ability every question that my hon. friend asked. I cannot go beyond that.

Mr. FRASER: Will this commission be responsible to parliament? Can we ask questions in regard to the commission when the Minister of Transport is before the committee?

Mr. CHEVRIER: The commission will be responsible to the minister. It is a corporate body which will be set up in the nature of the national harbours board. It will be a corporate body which can be sued and can sue. The actions of the body can be discussed from time to time.

Mr. FRASER: What jurisdiction has it over merchant seamen?

Mr. HOWE: At the present time merchant seamen are governed by the Canada Shipping Act and under the regulations of the Department of Labour. It may or may not be that at some future time the maritime commission may take over certain functions which are at present under these two jurisdictions. There is nothing in the legislation which specifies that the maritime commission will have direct charge of merchant seamen.

Mr. BAKER: I am sure that all shipping and seafaring men will be anxious to see what the bill contains. They will appreciate this resolution which establishes a corporation to be known as the Canadian maritime commission. We need to coordinate, correlate and consolidate all matters pertaining to merchant shipping. This is something which should have been done long ago, and I welcome this resolution. I am not going to speak at any length on it because I want to see what is in the bill. I wish to say that at one time the township of Yarmouth owned more shipping per capita than any other place in the world. At one time Canada was a country to be very much considered when it came to world shipping and I should like to see her in that position again. This is a step in the right direction without any question. I just wish to say that I heartily endorse the resolution.

Mr. McLURE: I have a question or two to ask on the principle of the bill, that is, if there is any principle in it. The resolution states that the Canadian maritime commission is:

> ... To exercise certain powers and perform certain duties and functions under the Canada Shipping Act, to administer any steamship subvention voted by parliament. . . .

Will all subsidies and subventions, which are one and the same thing, be under the control of the Canadian maritime commission?

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. McLURE: That will make for a lot less work for quite a few of the departments. For instance, all the subsidies paid by the Department of Public Works will come under the maritime commission?

Mr. HOWE: We do not refer to ferry boats as shipping.

Mr. HOMUTH: Some of them are not because they do not float.

Mr. McLURE: The sudsidies under the Department of Public Works which go to the ferries and the different boats are not classed as subsidies under shipping?

Mr. HOWE: Not the subsidies under the Public Works Act.

Mr. McLURE: Under Trade and Commerce?

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. McLURE: And under Transport?

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. McLURE: Here is a chance for the ministers in these departments to have a lot less work to do. These matters will all be administered under the Canadian maritime commission. I am not going to go into the details of this resolution, but I should like to know if all the subventions and subsidies which are to be expended by this commission will be put in the estimates and then handed over to the commission and the commission be not responsible to any minister.

Mr. HOWE: It will be responsible to the Minister of Transport.

Mr. McLURE: The Minister of Reconstruction mentioned some very large ship building plants in Canada, and I should like to ask him, if it is relevant to the resolution, to tell us where the largest privately owned shipyards in Canada are located.

The CHAIRMAN: That is not relevant to the resolution.

Mr. HOWE: My first impulse would be to say Canadian Vickers in Montreal, but I am not sure.

Mr. McLURE: I have nothing more to say at the present time, but when the bill is before us we may get some information with regard to subsidies.

Mr. GREEN: The minister has not answered certain questions I asked. First, will the commission have anything to do with rates? Second, will the commission have power to direct traffic through Canadian ports?

Mr. HOWE: Ocean rates, I should judge, are fixed by competition. The maritime commission might fix rates and find that the ships could not operate under them. The answer is that ocean-going rates will not be fixed by the maritime commission. As far as inland rates go, adjudication is the function of the board of transport commissioners.

Mr. GREEN: What about the question of directing traffic through Canadian ports? Will the commission have power in that regard?

Mr. HOWE: No. The shipbuilding industry is a private industry and I presume ships will go where the traffic offers. Usually it is traffic that attracts ships and not vice versa.

Mr. POULIOT: I have just a few observations to make on this resolution. Last year I supported the proposal for a Canadian maritime commission and I was not alone; I had the support of the late member for Halifax. Now it is the intention of the government to increase the powers of that commission by placing all steamships subsidies voted by parliament under the administration of the commission. Those subsidies were granted by the Department of Trade and Commerce and I desire to pay tribute to Mr. F. E. Bawden, who has retired but had been there for a long time. He was very helpful to members of parliament whenever they needed his assistance in establishing the amount of the subsidy.

I believe, sir, that all subsidies should be under the control or administration, not of a commission, but of a competent civil servant responsible to the minister, who, in turn, should be responsible to the house. Perhaps I am old-fashioned. Perhaps I am too old a member of parliament to be sufficiently streamlined in my views, but that is my conception of parliamentary responsibility. I am strongly opposed to any commission that will dispose of moneys voted by parliament. The minister is responsible to the house, and the minister never had any trouble about subsidies. Sometimes there was a little discussion but everything was in order, and while members of the opposition looked at the estimates through magnifying glasses they found no scandal. Some subsidies were given to large companies like the Canadian Pacific Railway Company; others were given to maritime companies that were doing excellent service.

This proposal with regard to the commission is one step further in increasing bureaucracy. I may be wrong, but this is a matter of principle with me. I do not know those who are in charge of subsidies at the present time, not in the Department of Reconstruction and Supply, but in the Department of Trade and Commerce. They may be competent, but if they are not competent the minister should replace them with competent people. No one will convince me that there are no civil servants who can do the work. I would suggest to the minister that he amend the resolution and replace the commission with the same men he has in view for administering the service, but no commission. That is the first point.

The second point is this:

Provision is made further for the advisory functions of the commission, for the employment of professional and technical advisers and assistants and the remuneration thereof—

Oh, the remuneration thereof. That is important. It goes with technicality and profession.

—and for all expenses under the act to be paid out of moneys appropriated by parliament for the purpose.

What the department needs in this regard is not so much professional men and technicians as plain common-sense men with experience. The trouble in all departments at present—and I waited for an occasion to say this—is that there are too many technicians and too many professional men. Most civil servants do not want to start at the bottom and go up quietly, learning from experience every year. They come out of universities as geniuses ready to govern the whole world, and they are too bright and clever for our time. They give the cold shoulder to those who have been there for a long time, who know their business, who have experience, and who are not so competent because they have not so many letters after their names.

Mr. MacNICOL: The hon. gentleman is perfectly right.

Mr. POULIOT: Thank you. In other times, what was needed of civil servants was intelligence, common sense and a good high school education and they were ready to learn. Now they do not want to learn. They are ready to teach, and that is the trouble, and they teach us a great lesson, the lesson of incompetence. I remember, in the old times when Jim Malcolm was Minister of Trade and Commerce, there was a small company organized at Rivière du Loop to operate a ferry service between Rivière du Loup, Tadoussac and St. Simeon, which is one of the finest services of the kind in Canada. In those days the thing to do was to see the minister, and if he felt that the service was needed he told us to go and see Mr. F. E. Bawden, who was a nice old gentleman with experience. He would tell us what were the requirements for passengers and traffic and what the department could do. He had experience and everything was done in a familiar way. Nothing was said against him in former times, because he was doing his work very well.

I do not criticize those who are in charge now; I do not know them. I simply say that the old practice was an excellent one. There is something much more important about the Canadian maritime commission, and that is that, in the first place, we should have a Canadian merchant marine. We had a big navy during the war. Very well. Now that we are in the post-war period, we need a big merchant marine, and last session I made suggestions accordingly to the railway and shipping committee when I inquired about Park Steamships.

The Minister of Reconstruction and Supply and the Minister of Transport are two of the best and most active ministers in the cabinet. I may say the same thing about another one who will be closely related to them under this legislation, namely, the Minister of Trade and Commerce; and this is not to depreciate the other ministers. I speak of one thing, the Canadian maritime commission. I believe that we should have kept all the ships we had during the war, and that Canada should have her own bottoms for shipping Canadian goods throughout the world. Why should we be dependent on any other country for that? I have been told, although I am not sure about it, that the Greek firm of Goulandris offered to buy quite a number of Canadian ships, and they are waiting for a short time longer to put the Greek flag on those ships. I wonder if that is true. I should like to have some information about that.

At the present time, ships are just as precious to the country as are railways or aeroplanes. We appreciate the new methods of transportation. Everything is being modernized. Nevertheless, ships will always have their place in trade. That is why I cannot say otherwise—though without any undue spirit of criticism—than that there is no need for a Canadian maritime commission at the present time, if this commission is to do part of the work actually done by the Department of Trade and Commerce. I am warning the government about the new trend toward getting so much technical advice in trade. Trade is done by a buyer and a purchaser, and Canadian tradesmen who ship their goods by water or by air and who may require information, get it mostly from the bureau of statistics, although they may get some information from those who have been in the department for a long time. The dealings of trade must be carried on by two people or by two companies, the seller and the buyer. Nothing can be changed about that. That principle cannot be streamlined. When there is a third party, it causes embarrassment to the other two. This is no criticism; it is a warning.

I believe that trade is the lifeblood of this country and we cannot play with it. We must keep the largest possible number of ships. We should build ships for Canada instead of building them for any other country or selling our own ships. I remember that in 1937, on the eve of the war, I went to England and visited the Clyde. What was I told by Scottish and English shippers? I was told that the maritime trade of England had gone down precisely because England had built too many ships for foreign countries. This is a warning. At the time I remember that the newspapers of Edinburgh and Glasgow were repeating the same thing constantly. What I say now is what I read then. It seems to me that it does not serve any purpose to recall facts which are positively true and it does not serve any purpose either to recall the experience of other countries. If Great Britain had built ships for herself instead of building them for other countries, her position in world trade would have been much better on the eve of the war and Germany could not have controlled the trade of many other countries.

I will just leave it at that, and I warn the minister seriously about this problem which I consider to be of the utmost importance, the problem of Canada having the largest possible number of ships, selling Canadian ships to no one except a Canadian and having Canadian ships registered in Canada. Why does the Canadian Pacific Railway Company register ships in London and elsewhere? Why does it not register its ships in Canada? What is the use of having our own legislation about shipping if it is not taken advantage of by the biggest shipping company in the country and which calls itself a Canadian company? It is for the protection of our own trade and for the protection of the Canadian people that I am so emphatic about this. I do not want the Canadian maritime commission. I do not believe in it. I want the control of shipping under parliament. That is all I want.

Mr. HERRIDGE: I have been trying to catch your eye, Mr. Chairman, for about twenty minutes. I desire to ask the minister a question or two. For about fifty years there has been a passenger and cargo steamer service on the inland lakes of British Columbia, some ships carrying passengers and cargo and some carrying cargo only. Throughout the years, organizations representing farmers, commercial and business interests, have urged that those steamers be brought under the board of railway commissioners and, more recently, under the board of transport commissioners, but so far without success. My understanding is that the board of transport commissioners at the present time have control of passenger rates and freight tariffs but do not have any control over schedules or services given on those inland lakes, with respect to either passenger or freight service. That has been a great handicap to producers in that district for many years, because many of them depend on the steamer service for getting their produce to market. Even last year carloads of apples were taken down the Arrow lakes on a barge pulled by a tug supplied by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, after the weather was nearly at zero. Hundreds of tons of baled hay stood in the open on the wharves, because the accommodation supplied by the small barge, taking one carload on it at a time and making two or three trips a week, simply could not handle the product in the time required. I myself saw a whole carload of hay standing on the wharf and it had been there for nearly three weeks waiting for transportation. In view of the fact that this resolution says:

> That it is expedient to present a bill to establish a corporation to be known as the Canadian maritime commission to exercise certain powers and perform certain duties and functions under the Canada Shipping Act, to administer any steamship subvention voted by parliament, and to exercise powers or perform duties and functions under any other act or order of the governor in council.

I wish to ask the minister this question. At the present time I understand the postal department pays a subsidy to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for carrying the mails on these lakes. In view of the fact that through the years it has been impossible to get these steamers brought under the board of railway commissioners, or more recently, the board of transport commissioners, will these steamers be brought under the control of the maritime commission, in view of the terms of the resolution?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I presume that, in order to answer the hon. gentleman, one would have to have the bill before him. However I can tell him that the resolution, in its present wording, would not cover a position such as the one to which he refers. The Transport Act was amended last year in order to do that. While I am not familiar with the locality he has in mind and cannot answer the question which he asks, I can say that it is not the purpose of this resolution to deal with that situation.

Mr. HERRIDGE: Thank you.

Mr. CARDIFF: If it is not out of order, I should like to ask the minister whether the three commissioners are to be full-time men or just part-time men. How are they to be chosen? For instance, is a labour man to be chosen, one with experience in shipbuilding; or will one be chosen from the Pacific coast, one from the Atlantic coast and one from central Canada.

Mr. HOWE: There is no provision in the bill specifying how the commission will be appointed. There will be three full-time commissioners, and they will be appointed by the governor in council. But what system the government may adopt, if any, will be determined by the government.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Howe thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 336, to establish the Canadian maritime commission.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Marketing service—

23. Marketing service administration, $122,749.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Mr. Chairman, the North Battleford agricultural society held a fat-stock show and sale in May of this year. Some of that beef found its way here to the city of Ottawa. I saw an advertisement in one of the local papers advertising the North Battleford beef. I went to the store which had advertised, and said I wanted to get some good beefsteak. When I asked for that North Battleford beef I was shown a piece of beef which certainly was not of choice quality. I protested and said I did not think that could be show beef, whereupon the manager of the store, hearing the discussion, came along, went to the cooler and brought out a piece of choice beef.

I bring this matter up because I believe, when these meats are offered for sale in butcher shops, and held out as show beef, there should be some means of identification for the protection of the buyer and that of the producer. Has the minister or his department any means of identifying beef by marking, or in some other way, for the protection of the consumer and the producer?

Right Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): So far as I know, there is no practical way of checking that, except in the way it was checked by the hon. member. When he saw an advertisement and went in to buy a certain thing, he saw that he got it. Apparently that is what the hon. member did in this case. Stores do advertise things for sale, and do sell other things. If one goes in and asks for beef he is likely to get only beef; but if he says he wants a particular kind he will probably get that kind. So far as I know, there is no other protection.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Then there is nothing to stop a butcher from buying one carcass of choice beef and then selling perhaps ten or fifteen carcasses. There would seem to be no great difficulty to have some way of branding beef as a special type. The butcher will charge nine or ten cents a pound more for the choice beef, and I should think it would be simple to identify it from the time it leaves the farm until it is sold to the customer.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I should like to say a word on this item. I believe when it was last considered there was a good deal of discussion concerning beef. The people in my constituency are not at all satisfied with respect to the situation in connection with beef, and are greatly concerned about the loss of the United States market. They envisage a time when we shall be left without that market, and when the beef situation will deteriorate seriously.

I do not propose to enter into a detailed discussion on this matter, because I understand the whole question was taken up in considerable detail the other day. The minister assured the house that he was taking care of the United States meat market, and that it will be there for us when the time comes that we have taken care of Britain's needs. I understand that assurance was given by the minister. I appreciate it, and congratulate him upon it. I hope he will be strong enough in the cabinet and in the country to see that that assurance is made good.

Meanwhile the people who produce beef in my constituency have told me they consider that the minister should take steps to increase meat production in Canada, which they believe he could do to the point where we could take care of Britain's needs and also provide a surplus to hold the United States market. The people in my constituency say that it is just a matter of price; that if the price of beef is taken care of the production will increase to a point sufficient to supply all the needs.

The minister may feel he has done all he can up to the present time to increase beef production. The best informed men in my constituency do not believe that is so. I do not attempt to speak with authority in the matter, although those closely connected with me are engaged in the production of beef and probably know a good deal about it. Men in my constituency who, I am sure, do know, are satisfied that if the minister changed his policy in connection with beef we could supply Great Britain's needs, and also the United States market.

I now turn to the matter of hog production. Again the people in my constituency who produce hogs are dissatisfied with the situation. Mine is one of the major hog producing constituencies. When the minister had a suitable price for hog production during the war we saw hogs in all directions in my constituency, but now one has to look many miles to see any hogs. Men who have allowed their hog producing facilities to fall off are hard-headed and practical men, men who know whether or not money can be made in the production of hogs; men who know when the hog situation is precarious and when it is stable. These men have gone out of the production of hogs for purely business reasons.

I do not propose to try to suggest to the minister the details of what is necessary; but once more the difficulty arises, according to what they tell me, from the fact that the prices they have to pay for the things which enter into the production of hogs and the prices they get for the finished hog show unsuitable relationship. Then there is the fact that the income tax collector takes away a considerable amount of what is gained through the production of hogs. When those three items are considered they say it simply is not worth while to produce hogs.

They point also to the fact that there is a lack of stability in the hog situation; that there is no assurance that the price of hogs will not suddenly go out just when they have sows and other facilities to produce hogs in considerable supply. Therefore they will be the loser or, to use a common expression, they will be left holding the bag. I am not criticizing the minister and I want him to understand that fully. I do not want to be harsh about the matter at all, because I realize that the minister is not master in his own department; that at times he must defer to the opinions of other men in the cabinet; that sometimes those men do not know nearly as much about agriculture as they ought to know.

I just want to say this in strengthening the minister's hands in striking out for a better situation with regard to hog production. Men in my constituency are not by any means satisfied with the set-up with regard to hogs and if that set-up were made right, if the prices of the things which they have to feed to hogs and the price which they get after the hogs are shipped were right and if they were given a reasonable assurance that the income tax collectors would not come around and steal a large percentage of what they had gained by their hard efforts, the minister would have a tremendous production of hogs in my constituency. I believe that would apply generally to all constituencies in western Canada.

I notice, in reading over Hansard, that the minister has said that there just is not the feed available. Perhaps there is not the feed available at this time, but I would say that the men in my constituency and in other western constituencies with whom I have talked are of the opinion that the minister could get the feed if he just had a free hand in connection with the conditions under which that feed could be produced. Once more price is an important factor. Feed could be produced. There are irrigation areas in Alberta which could be turned into the production of barley and other feeds if it were found profitable so to do. I just wanted to draw these matters to the attention of the minister so that he will know how the people of my constituency feel anyway.

I wish to turn now to sheep production. There is widespread dissatisfaction, I would say universal dissatisfaction in my constituency with the sheep policy of the Department of Agriculture. It is pointed out that the cost of producing wool and producing sheep is going up from year to year, and there are considerable risks which must be faced. The result is that men do not feel they can produce sheep with confidence and assurance. They point to conditions across the line which are much more conducive to an attitude of confidence among sheep producers. They say that if those conditions could be imitated in Canada we would have plenty of sheep and wool produced in this country.

I shall say no more with regard to that. I just wish to say in a general sort of way that now is the time to increase the production of feeds, of beef, of pork and pork products and of wool and sheep. I think this country should be turned into a perfect larder of food from coast to coast. I believe the minister agrees completely with me. It is the duty of the Department of Agriculture to come out strongly for measures which will enable the people who are engaged in the production of these important commodities to produce to the full of their capacity right now. I know the minister cannot tell of the difficulties which surround him and I realize there are many of them. However I have said what the people in my constituency think. Therefore I have discharged my responsibility as the representative of the federal riding of Lethbridge in the year 1947.

Marketing service—
24. Agricultural economics, $287,536.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I notice in the minister's report that reference is made to farm management which comes under the economics division, and there are a few questions I wish to ask on that particular subject. On page 189 of the report reference is made to a study that is being carried on in the milk district of Winnipeg with a view to providing an analysis of costs of production. The report states that a preliminary report has been distributed to cooperators. I should like to know what is meant by the term "cooperators". Also, I should like to know if there is such a report and, if so, will it be made available to the public and when may we expect it?

Mr. GARDINER: The Manitoba dairy study on the central tendencies of dairy costs was carried on by the economics branch. The major value of cost accounting to any enterprise is in the fund of information that is necessary to be supplied in order to calculate the costs. This requires data on food production, labour and other details of farm management not likely to be secured otherwise. The end results in cost calculations are also valuable if only to appraise what is likely to happen under any given price situation. The central tendencies in the cost of milk production in the Winnipeg milk area were placed in a table by those who carried on the investigation. The general result is that they give a number of forms of cost groups. In 1942-43, 104 farms were examined into; in 1943-44, 93 farms; in 1944-45, 91 farms. Those were farmers who cooperated with the economics branch in making this investigation possible. They carry on and give information as to what happens on their farms and the costs of everything related to them. Results are calculated on the experiences obtained through the cooperation of these farmers. The average cost for the first year was 73·5; for the second year, 83, and for the third year, 85·9. That is on the basis of butter fat.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I asked whether the report would be made public and if so, when we could expect it.

Mr. GARDINER: When the report is completed it will be made public.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: In the same report there is a section dealing with land utilization, and it is stated that the land use committee met in Regina on April 5, 1945, and made certain recommendations. It states that a great deal of information is available or has been accumulated on the question of land utilization, but it is said also that this has not been effectively distributed for public use. These words appear in the minister's report:

> ...that too few persons are aware of these facts; and too little use is being made of these facts. It was felt that coordination of this information should be undertaken and a broad policy of land use developed.

That is very good advice. What is the department doing at the present time to distribute the information more effectively than has been the case in the past?

Mr. GARDINER: We put out reports when the investigations have been completed in connection with any districts investigated, and through those reports we distribute the information which has been gained. For example, I presume the investigation referred to about which there were discussions at Regina is something along the lines of what I have here, which says that in Saskatchewan a land classification was completed in the Elrose-Conquest area in a block of twenty municipal units in the extreme southwestern corner of the province. Such a report would be available to the persons interested and most of them would live in that area. The reports are published for distribution.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Does that mean that they are mailed in accordance with a specific mailing list to get into the hands of the people who would benefit from the report?

Mr. GARDINER: They are distributed free to anyone who asks for them. When an investigation of that kind is made in a district nearly everyone in the district would know that the investigation was going on. In the milk investigation in Manitoba, for example, when you visit and get in touch continuously with 109 farmers I would expect that all of them would ask for a copy of the report when it was made. I would presume that it would go even farther than that; that the reports would go not only to those interviewed who inquired for it but to others roundabout who knew that the investigation was going on and inquired for a copy of the report.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I might make a suggestion to the minister. I have had a little experience in adult education, and I found that one of the chief obstacles arose from the fact that the people did not know that a report of that kind was available. Most people would ask for the information if they knew it was available, and where they could get it. Those who would be directly involved in the investigation would, of course, know all about it, but a great many would not know. I would suggest that reports of that type might be sent around to all the schools, perhaps with a note requesting the schoolteacher to make it known to the public in the area that such a report was available. It might then find its way into the hands of the people who would benefit from it the most.

Under "Marketing Research" in the economics division there is an account, in the annual report of the minister, of an investigation that was made and may still be under way into the marketing of fruits and vegetables in the city of Winnipeg, a study which was requested by the Manitoba department of agriculture. It is pointed out that the investigation was carried on to find out, first, the feasibility of building a wholesale terminal market in Winnipeg for the marketing of fruits and vegetables, and, second, what portion of that market could be served by Manitoba-grown vegetables and potatoes. It is further pointed out that seventeen per cent of the volume laid down in Winnipeg was of Manitoba origin and that about $9,000,000 worth of fruits, vegetables and potatoes were marketed in Winnipeg during 1944-45, which is a substantial amount. Is there a full report available of that investigation which would show what part of that product was sold in the city of Winnipeg and what portion of it was distributed to other towns in the province, together with any information along that line?

Mr. GARDINER: There is a report of that investigation which has been published by the Manitoba government. The investigation was asked for by the Manitoba government; the results have been made known to them, and their report has already been published.

Mr. WRIGHT: To what extent is the department carrying on investigations to determine the cost of production of various agricultural crops? I suppose that would be carried on under this branch, and I should like to know the various products that have been investigated and where one can get information as to their cost of production in different areas?

Mr. GARDINER: The only one that is being carried on at the moment is the one in Winnipeg with regard to milk costs. There is information available in regard to the three years that I mentioned. That is continuing, the information is being brought up to date, and when that is completed the report will be published.

Mr. WRIGHT: I wonder why more work of that kind is not being done, if that is the only such project now being carried on. If we are to implement the principles of the Agricultural Prices Support Act the department will require information on the cost of production of a variety of agricultural products in order to be in a position to establish intelligently floor prices for the different agricultural products. I am surprised to hear the minister say that costs of production of only one product are now being investigated. The department must have information on costs of production of various farm products if it is to establish floor prices intelligently. I would ask the minister how he expects to establish reasonable floor prices without such information.

Mr. GARDINER: Of course for many years organizations have been set up in the provinces to do this very work. To my knowledge, the economics branch of the Department of Agriculture has been doing this very type of work in Saskatchewan at least since 1914, when I first went into the legislature. The branch was there then.

Mr. WRIGHT: That is the provincial branch?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, and the gentleman in charge of that branch then has, for quite a number of years, been in charge of the branch here. I refer to Doctor Booth. He had his experience first in Saskatchewan; later went to Washington, and still later came here and has been carrying on these investigations with the cooperation of the provinces. There is one difficulty about such information. I have, for instance, a table here showing production costs as 73·5 cents for 1942-43, 83 cents for 1943-44, and 85·9 cents for 1944-45. That bears out the contention of many persons. By the time you get through with your investigations the costs have changed. While it is an advantage to know what the costs have been in the months or years that have gone by, the information is not just as valuable as one would expect in determining what costs are today. It simply gives one a method by which he can make perhaps a pretty close calculation for his own operations, but as for giving statistics that can be relied on at the time you are operating, such figures are not as helpful as they might appear on the surface.

Mr. WRIGHT: I agree with the minister that the cost of production continually fluctuates with the costs of the elements entering into production. I know that studies have been made at various times on the cost of producing wheat and various other products on different sized farms, and the costs vary not only with the method of production but with the quantity of production. But it seems to me that the department should be carrying on a running inventory of costs of production so that it will know from time to time approximately what those costs are. I do not know whether that would be expensive.

Mr. GARDINER: It would be a costly operation.

Mr. WRIGHT: But I think it is a necessary operation if we are to deal intelligently with agriculture. It could be carried on as the minister suggested, in cooperation with the provinces. It seems to me that that particular line of study was not followed very closely during the war. As a matter of fact we could not do it very well because we were too busy with a lot of other matters. It seems to me that the time has now come when the department, either by itself or in cooperation with the provincial department of agriculture, should get into that field again and determine the cost of production. It is interesting not only from the fact that it may be necessary to implement the Agricultural Prices Support Act but also to determine and to give the farmers some idea of the most economical size of unit for them to operate. There is a tremendous field of investigation in this work. It is one of the ways in which we can reduce cost of production in the country.

I would suggest to the minister that this is one place in which some expansion might be made in determining the cost of production. Certainly, if the time comes when it is necessary to implement the Agricultural Prices Support Act, unless the minister has available in the future information that will give to him some idea of what is a fair price he will have quite a time explaining to farmers that the price established is a satisfactory one. The only way he can prove it satisfactorily is by having figures on the cost of production.

Item agreed to.

Marketing service—
25. Dairy products, $514,340.

Mr. CARDIFF: I have a few questions I should like to ask the minister in regard to this item. Is the dairy inspector who inspects the dairies that supply fluid milk, bottled milk, responsible for the price paid, or is there a standard price that should be paid according to the amount they are getting for their bottled milk, or are they allowed to buy it at whatever price they can get it?

Mr. GARDINER: In so far as the distribution of milk is concerned, as has been stated quite a number of times on the floor of the house—and the last time I remember it was under discussion was a year ago when the hon. member for Haldimand, who, I am sure, we are all sorry is not with us during the discussion, brought out the fact that when this question was investigated at the time of the prices board investigation—it was demonstrated that all matters such as have been referred to, really come under provincial control. The milk boards of the provinces have control over that matter. Investigations with regard to prices are carried on by the provinces or by the local people in some community where they have a board in charge, but not by Ottawa.

Mr. BRYCE: I should like to ask the minister a question about laboratory assistants. There were three last year. They are now done away with and three assistant technicians have been appointed. Are these the same people just receiving an increase in salary? Can the minister tell us something about that?

Mr. GARDINER: It is a change in the title.

Mr. BRYCE: And an advance in salary.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. CHARLTON: Before the item carries, I should like to ask a question about the production of cheese thus far this year as compared with the production in 1944, 1945 and 1946.

Mr. GARDINER: The cheese production in Canada for May, 1946, was 17,000,000 pounds, and for May, 1947, 12,225,000 pounds. The change is downward; it was 28·1 per cent for May. From January to May the production for 1946 was 30,245,000 pounds, and for 1947, 22,830,000 pounds, or a decrease of 24·5 per cent. Of course I think it will be readily agreed that probably it is too early in the season to compare one year with another. It will be noted from these figures that nearly all the production was in May, and there is some question as to whether May was a favourable month for production for this year as was May a year ago. The season is some weeks late this year all across Canada in connection with all production. But I think we would have to be pretty well through June and probably into July before we could make a comparison which would indicate clearly just where we are going in that production.

Mr. CHARLTON: Is the minister optimistic enough to think there is to be as much production this year as there was last, in view of the fact there are so many cheese factories closed in eastern Ontario. How many cheese factories have been closed in the eastern counties over the past year or two?

Mr. GARDINER: There is no indication at the moment that we are likely to be quite as high in our production this year as we were last year.

Mr. CHARLTON: The minister has not answered the question as to how many cheese factories have been closed in the eastern counties over the past two years.

Mr. GARDINER: I am sorry, but I shall not be able to give them for eastern Ontario. I can give the figures for Ontario. They are not broken down into eastern and western Ontario. The number of cheese factories in 1943, 1944 and 1945—there is nothing later than that; I am sorry, but I shall not be able to give them for the last year—were as follows: in 1943, 561; in 1944, 556; in 1945, 547. I have been given to understand that the decrease has been running at about that rate through 1946 and 1947, but the number of cheese factories is not the complete answer. As is known, since 1939 we have been paying subsidies to encourage the enlargement and improvement of cheese factories. In some instances you have two converted into one; that is, two closed up and one of a larger type opened up and better equipped, so that the decrease as to numbers would not entirely show the picture.

Mr. CHARLTON: I think the minister will agree that the decrease in the amount of cheese produced has been just about on a ratio with the number of cheese factories closed. Most of that has been due to the low price of milk for cheese purposes. A lot of milk has been going to the larger cities in the whole milk trade in view of the larger price obtainable for that milk.

Another question is this. In view of the fact that our cheese has been going to the old country in the same form for the last fifty years, 90-pound cheddars, and marked there as an empire product instead of as a Canadian product, and also in view of the fact the New Zealand cheese is going there in small attractive packages, has this government made an attempt to have the exporters from this country make our cheese a little more attractive to the English consumer?

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. GARDINER: That was one of the efforts made when we did pay the subsidy, to have cheese made up in some factories in a form different from that in which it had been made before. One idea was to standardize the forms in which the cheese was pressed in order to produce cheese more acceptable in form. In addition to that, during the war we carried on investigations as to possible coverings of cheese, cheesecloth, which would make possible the marking of cheese, and today we have cheese going to Britain completely marked with the name "Canada" to distinguish it from what is generally known as empire cheese. That work is being done now as effectively as possible, but it has been completed only within the last few months.

Mr. CHARLTON: Is it sold under Canadian auspices in England or sold by British commission men and still sold as empire cheese even though it is marked Canadian?

Mr. GARDINER: You cannot sell anything in Britain today as anything but a food board product. They do not permit the Danes or anyone else to put up an advertising sign in the country. As a matter of fact, they are all pulled down. People cannot go and ask for any particular kind of any particular food, and the reason is obvious. The food board has great difficulty in securing sufficient food for the people of Britain, and therefore it has entirely ruled out the possibility of people going to a shop and saying they want a particular commodity, whether Canadian cheese or Canadian bacon or Danish cheese or Danish bacon. They simply go and ask for cheese or bacon and they get whatever food the ministry can provide them with. There is no possibility of getting it delivered as anything else.

Mr. CHARLTON: But advertising is not all done on a printed basis. A lot of it is done by word of mouth, and if someone is not fighting for or boosting Canadian cheese, something can be done in that direction.

Mr. GARDINER: The product is distributed in Britain by the ordinary merchant and he has to take what he gets.

Mr. CHARLTON: We are looking forward to the day when that situation will be changed and we may be able to advertise Canadian cheese. We want people to know what Canadian cheese tastes like.

Mr. BROOKS: In connection with the production of dairy products, it would be interesting if the minister could tell us the production of butter in 1946 for the same months as in 1947, just as in the case of cheese.

Mr. GARDINER: Creamery butter in May, 1946, was 31,864,000 pounds and, the production for May, 1947, is 31,269,000 pounds. That is, it is down by 1·9 per cent, or almost two per cent.

Mr. WRIGHT: Does the Canadian government maintain storage facilities in England for Canadian products, or do we turn over Canadian products to the British food board at the Canadian seaboard?

Mr. GARDINER: The British food department takes delivery of all our food products at the Canadian port. That was the arrangement made during the war because they assumed all responsibility for shipping, and that has continued. I should have given the figure for the entire period from January to May in 1946 and 1947. It was 81,753,000 pounds for 1946 and 82,563,000 pounds for 1947, which is an increase of about one per cent over the whole period.

Mr. BOUCHER: Can the minister explain how there is an increase in butter of approximately one per cent and yet a decrease in the manufacture of cheese of twenty-eight per cent in the same month this year?

Mr. GARDINER: It is largely explained by what was mentioned a few moments ago, that probably the greater part of the fluid milk comes out of areas where cheese was originally produced. That may be due to the fact that the cheese area extends from about Three Rivers in Quebec to Ingersoll in Ontario, and all the large cities in Canada are in that area. There is a much larger urban population in that section than in any other, and therefore fluid milk would be taken from those districts to the cities. Much of our butter is produced in western Canada where the population is not nearly as dense as it is in the eastern part and where we do not produce cheese in any event. For that reason the variation will be greater in cheese when you take out the fluid milk.

Mr. BOUCHER: Can the minister give particulars as to the situation in the manufacture of butter in May, 1946, and May, 1947, in Ontario so that we can make a comparison?

Mr. GARDINER: In 1946, in May, the figure is 7,986,000 pounds, and in 1947, 8,259,000 pounds. That is, butter production is up there. From January through it is also up considerably. Cheese production in Ontario through the whole area is down and cheese production is down through the whole period from January to May, which, of course, does not bear out the suggestion I was making; nevertheless the cheese is not made anywhere else except in that district. I am quite sure therefore, that the cheese reduction itself is due largely to milk goinig as fluid milk. It is not due to the fact that it is going to that extent into butter.

Mr. BOUCHER: But if that were so with regard to cheese, would it not be equally so with regard to butter? It seems to me that there is quite an alarming reduction in the manufacture of cheese, particularly in Ontario this year, and that is reflected across Canada by the great decrease in the export of cheese overseas. That being the case, I think it is time, for the sake of the cheese producer in Canada, for the Department of Agriculture to be greatly concerned with the retrograde movement of an industry that is important to Canada. The hon. member for Brant asked certain questions about the advertising of Canadian cheese and the marking of that cheese overseas. Now that the war has been over for two years, and in view of the fact that cheesemaking is a fundamental industry to a great number of farmers who have not the same access to city markets as others, I suggest that the time has come for the department to give serious attention to the cheese industry in Canada and to foster the production of this commodity in every way possible. The facts revealed tonight in that regard are alarming.

Mr. GARDINER: On the question of advertising, the British will not permit us to advertise at all. We had a large advertising programme on in the last few years before the war. We started it in 1936 and built it up to 1939, but we are not permitted to advertise there at present. The only means of getting advertising there is through news items. The discussion we are having tonight may appear in the newspapers and, if it does, we shall get advertising to that extent. Otherwise we are not allowed to advertise there.

On the other question I should repeat what I said earlier in the discussion. Cheese production is a month late this year because of the nature of the season. That in itself largely accounts for the fact that cheese is down as compared with butter. My hon. friend shakes his head, but I have heard him use the argument time after time since he has been here in the house that price has something to do with this. Everyone admits that cheese is higher in price than butter at the present time, and much higher. If price is the only thing that counts, or the return that the farmer can get for it, then cheese production should certainly be higher. But everyone who knows anything about farming in Ontario knows the production season is at least a month late. A month or a month and a half from now we could make a much more valuable comparison than we can at the present time.

Mr. CARDIFF: Will the minister state what surplus of butter we have at the present time as compared with what we had a year ago?

Mr. BOUCHER: Before the minister rises to answer, may I ask him to tell us if the Canadian government has made any representation to the British parliament asking them to permit the advertising of Canadian cheese?

Mr. GARDINER: We know better than to make that representation, because we are told regularly that we cannot do so. We have the United Kingdom government's representatives here in Ottawa all the time. As a matter of fact they live in the same building as I do and I see them regularly. We know we cannot advertise in Britain at the present time.

Mr. BURTON: The minister might go a little farther and state that for a number of years we have not been allowed to advertise.

Mr. GARDINER: Since the war.

Mr. CHARLTON: The minister made the statement that it was only because of the late season there was less cheese production this year.

Mr. GARDINER: I said that was the main reason.

Mr. CHARLTON: I should like to remind the minister that it is unlikely that as much cheese could be produced with fewer cheese factories in this country; therefore it is not just the late season which has caused the smaller production of cheese.

Mr. GARDINER: A question was asked about storage. On June 1, 1947, the amount in stock was 23,533,331 pounds of butter; and a year ago on the same date the amount was 18,226,957 pounds.

Mr. BLAIR: While we are talking about the production of cheese and the closing of factories, may I say that in eastern Ontario last year—and that is not taking into account the month of May—twenty-three cheese factories closed up. Very few of those cheese factories amalgamated, and where they were amalgamated there was little influence on production because of the long haul to bring the milk to the cheese factory. A number of these factories have gone into other forms of processed milk. So there is no other reason than that for the production of cheese being cut down in eastern Canada. We cannot expect to get as much production when we have twenty-three cheese factories less. I know of several more factories which closed this spring; and several of them, instead of making Cheddar cheese, have gone into making other forms of cheese.

Mr. BRADSHAW: Will the minister say how much increase there has been in powdered or concentrated milk? Some of our factories in Perth county are closed and some of them are milk powder factories.

Mr. GARDINER: On condensed milk, there is 3,104,000 pounds for May, 1946, and 2,801,000 pounds for May, 1947, or a decrease of 9·8 per cent. On the whole period from January to May, the decrease has been a little greater, namely, 10·9 per cent. On evaporated milk the decrease is 0·4 per cent for the month and the increase is 1·8 per cent for the period. On whole milk powder there is a decrease of 3·9 per cent in the month of May and an increase of 6·6 per cent for the whole period from January to May inclusive.

Mr. WHITE (Middlesex East): Much has been said about the number of cheese factories being closed. We have had the viewpoints from various members. I should like to have a statement from the minister himself as to the explanation.

Mr. GARDINER: I have given it twice, and I think that is enough for one night.

Mr. JACKMAN: May I just say to the minister that I hope he will bring strong representations to bear on the British government with respect to our advertising our own products. In Canada it is true that we are attentive to the possibility for the future, as well as for the present, of the British consumer of our agricultural products. It surely cannot be said that we are not entitled to advertise our own agricultural products in Great Britain. I can understand the viewpoint of the government there when they say they do not wish to encourage more consumption because they have not more to give to their people. At the same time, if you read any British magazine or journal you will find advertised many things which are in short supply. When we supply these foodstuffs largely, if not entirely, at our own expense, at the present time, I find it difficult to understand why we should be dictated to by the United Kingdom government. As a Canadian, I resent it. I feel that the minister should do everything possible to make sure that we establish our brands for a time when conditions may be more competitive than they are today.

Mr. WHITE (Middlesex East): Representations have been made by the Ontario cheese producers' association from time to time. Would the minister state if those representations have been implemented as far as possible by his department?

Mr. GARDINER: Most of the discussions we have had with the cheese producers have been with regard to price, and the negotiations that we have had with Britain have established the price under the contract. We have, of course, not been able to secure as much as any producer I know of thinks he would like to have. Cheese producers are no exception. We have, however, discussed the matter fully with them, and I think they have finally agreed that we are getting all we can expect to get under the circumstances.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Mr. CHARLTON: I ask that the item stand.

Item stands.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Fourth report of standing committee on public accounts—Mr. Isnor.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION FOR SITTINGS FROM 2 TO 6 AND FROM 7 TO 11 P.M.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, hon. members will recall that I invited my friends the leader of the opposition and the leaders of the C.C.F. and Social Credit parties to meet with me yesterday afternoon at five o'clock to see if we could not together work out a plan that might help to expedite the business of the session. I am happy to say that all were agreed that if hon. members would lend their support it would be advisable to have the house meet from two o'clock until six and from seven until eleven each day from tomorrow until the end of the session. There was some consideration of the question of beginning morning sittings, but it was thought that at least for the present hon. members would prefer to meet for a longer number of hours in the afternoon and evening and have the morning free. If we are hard pressed to get through at the time we hope it may be possible to get through, we shall consider the possibility of meeting on Saturdays as well.

I may say that this plan has back of it the hope and, possibly, the expectation that if all hon. members cooperate we might be able to wind up the business of the house towards the end of the first week of July. That will depend altogether on cooperation between the different parties and the support of their members in the house. To that end we have considered what were the most important measures still on the order paper and the general wish that they should be brought forward as soon as possible. My colleague, the house leader, the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Mackenzie) announced last night that there would be two important measures proceeded with today, the resolution of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mitchell) respecting industrial relations and investigation of industrial disputes, and the resolution to amend the Old Age Pensions Act. How far we can proceed with these measures will depend upon the general consent the house may be prepared to give.

It was thought it would best suit the convenience of hon. members and help to expedite business if we reserved Wednesday evenings and all day on Fridays for the consideration of estimates. By knowing in advance that no government measures other than supply would be taken up on Wednesday evenings and on Fridays hon. members would be in a better position so to arrange their time as to give it to those matters in which they are most interested. On Mondays, it was felt we might take up any measures that are on the order paper. It would not however be the purpose of the government to bring forward on Mondays the most important measures.

I think that covers pretty much the line of agreement that we reached in the course of our conference.

There is a small bill which my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) is interested in bringing before the house as soon as possible, an act to amend the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act, 1932, and the Foreign Insurance Companies Act, 1932, notice of which appears in the Votes and Proceedings. In order to have it presented to the house today the house would have to give its unanimous consent. If that can be given the Minister of Finance will introduce that bill first thing this afternoon.

With respect to some of the measures I have mentioned there was also the feeling that if we could have it generally agreed that the discussion would take place on the bills rather than on the resolutions that would greatly expedite the business.

There appears in the Votes and Proceedings of today, Mr. Speaker, a motion that the house meet tomorrow at two o'clock and from then on until the end of the session along the lines I have indicated. As the notice of motion appears there is some lack of punctuation or a small hiatus in printing that might mislead the members, but I will read the motion as it would appear if correctly punctuated and will ask that it be presented to the house immediately. Under the rules of the house this motion does not require any notice:

That on and after Wednesday, June 18 instant, until the end of the session, the house shall meet at two o'clock p.m. of each sitting day; and at six o'clock p.m., Mr. Speaker shall leave the chair until seven o'clock, all notwithstanding any standing order or resolution of the house in relation thereto.

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, what the Prime Minister has had to say was I think a correct summary of the conference which took place yesterday afternoon. On behalf of this party I wish to say that we are prepared to support the motion he has just now moved. My understanding of that conference was that on one important measure there will be no debate at the resolution stage, namely, the old age pensions resolution, but that the debate will take place on the second reading of the bill. I do not know that we were quite so definite with respect to other measures, but on that particular measure there was that definite decision.

Might I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the government give early consideration to the question whether some measures now before us cannot be dropped from this year's programme in order still further to expedite the business of the house. That question was raised yesterday but did not reach any finality. I leave the suggestion with the government to see what they can do in that respect.

Motion agreed to.

HUMAN RIGHTS

CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Justice) presented the second report of the special joint committee on human rights and fundamental freedoms, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVILEGE

MR. MACKENZIE—REFERENCE TO STATEMENT IN DEBATE ON JUNE 11*

Right Hon. IAN A. MACKENZIE (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I wish to raise a question of privilege. The other day in the course of a debate, in reply to a question by the hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. Castleden) I said that Mr. Ferland had been dismissed from the Department of Veterans Affairs. I regret to say that it was a misstatement of fact. He was on sick leave and personally tendered his resignation, which was accepted by the department. In fairness to him I think I should make this correction.

INSURANCE COMPANIES ACTS

AMENDMENT OF 1932 STATUTES TO AUTHORIZE INVESTMENT IN SECURITIES OF RECONSTRUCTION AND DEVELOPMENT BANK

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): With the unanimous consent of the house I should like to move for leave to introduce Bill No. 337, to amend the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act, 1932, and the Foreign Insurance Companies Act, 1932.

Mr. CHURCH: Will the minister explain it?

Mr. KNOWLES: Explain.

Mr. ABBOTT: This bill if passed will authorize insurance companies to invest in the securities of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. I may say that various states of the union which have jurisdiction in these matters are taking similar action to authorize their insurance companies so to invest.

Mr. CHURCH: Does the superintendent of insurance recommend it?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

FOREST CONSERVATION

EASTERN SLOPE OF ROCKY MOUNTAINS—AGREEMENT WITH ALBERTA

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply, for the Minister of Mines and Resources) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to present a bill to approve a certain agreement between the dominion of Canada and the government of Alberta respecting the protection and conservation of the forests on the eastern slope of the Rocky mountains and to provide for the payment out of the consolidated revenue fund of sums required for capital expenditures, payments to the province of moneys for formulated programmes carried out by the province, salaries of officers and employees appointed under the act and expenses incidental to the operation of the act.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

POSTAL SERVICE

AIR MAIL TO TELEGRAPH CREEK, B.C.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. ERNEST BERTRAND (Postmaster General): On the 4th of June the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Archibald) inquired respecting delay in the delivery of mail for Telegraph Creek, B.C. I took the question as a notice, and the answer is as follows: I have now established that the difficulty in this case arose from the change-over from winter to summer routing of mail for Telegraph Creek. In the winter, mail for that post office is dispatched from Vancouver to Carcross, Yukon, whence it is forwarded by air stage service to destination. In the summer the mail is dispatched to Wrangell, Alaska, whence it is forwarded by river boat to Telegraph Creek. The last air stage flight from Carcross to Telegraph Creek for the winter season was made on April 2, and mail dispatched to Carcross on April 8 and 19 had to be reforwarded from the latter point to Wrangell to connect with the river boat to Telegraph Creek. Since April 30, mail for Telegraph Creek has been regularly forwarded via Wrangell.

WINNIPEG-FLIN FLON AIR MAIL CONTRACT

Mr. R. S. MOORE (Churchill): I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. Have Canadian Pacific Air Lines approached the Post Office Department for an air mail contract for their new air line from Winnipeg to Flin Flon via Dauphin and The Pas? If so, can the minister advise whether or not such a contract will be awarded?

Hon. ERNEST BERTRAND (Postmaster General): The answer to the first question is yes. As to the second question, we are studying the terms of the contract now.

WHEAT

INQUIRY AS TO PRICE OF CLASS 2 IN LAST TWO MONTHS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. WILLIAM BRYCE (Selkirk): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. At what prices has class 2 wheat been sold by the wheat board during the last two weeks?

Hon. J. A. MacKINNON (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The hon. member for Selkirk gave me notice of his intention to ask this question. The price of class 2 wheat, that is the so-called world price based on the United States price, has continued to decline and dropped five cents yesterday. Since May 28 the price has fallen 56 cents per bushel, as will be noted from the following chart:

	Price of Class II Wheat, basis No. 1. Northern
May 28	$3.06
May 29	2.99
May 31	2.89
June 2	2.79
June 3	2.78
June 5	2.76
June 7	2.72
June 10	2.64
June 11	2.59
June 12	2.58
June 13	2.56
June 14	2.55
June 16	2.50

There was no change in the price today.

CHEESE

REQUISITIONING FOR UNITED KINGDOM CONTRACTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. E. DROPE (Northumberland, Ont.): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the uncertainty which exists among the cheese producers in regard to government policy concerning United Kingdom cheese contracts, will the minister inform the house whether cheese will or will not be requisitioned for these contracts during the current year? A clear statement of government policy at this time would contribute substantially—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. DROPE: —to the stability of all phases of the Canadian dairy industry during the uncertain period ahead.

Right Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): The question just asked was raised on my estimates last night at about half a minute to eleven o'clock. When I get back on my estimates we will discuss it.

INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES

INVESTIGATION, CONCILIATION AND SETTLEMENT —PROVISION FOR BOARDS AND COMMISSIONS, ETC.

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to present a bill respecting industrial relations and investigation of industrial disputes and to make provision therein for the payment out of the consolidated revenue fund of the remuneration and expenses of the members of the boards and commissions and the officers, clerks and employees appointed or engaged by or under the authority of the act.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

Mr. MITCHELL: This bill is intended to replace the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, chapter 112, revised statutes of Canada. 1927, which had been the main federal labour law from 1907 until February, 1944, when by order in council we suspended the operation of the act and gave effect to P.C. 1003, commonly known as the wartime labour relations regulations.

Last year we had a conference with ministers of labour of the various provinces and their officials, at which we discussed the more important principles of a new federal law—and, I may add, in a very encouraging atmosphere of cooperation.

The chief purpose of the conference, of course, was to obtain the views of the provinces as to when it would be most appropriate to restore to the provinces full responsibility for dealing with industrial disputes in industries ordinarily under their jurisdiction.

As hon. members know, the provinces resumed their full jurisdiction in these matters, some on March 31 and others on May 15. The bill now before the house applies only to employees and employers in industries under the jurisdiction of parliament, as follows:

(a) Works, undertakings or businesses operated or carried on for or in connection with navigation and shipping, whether inland or maritime, including the operation of ships and transportation by ship anywhere in Canada;

(b) Railways, canals, telegraphs and other works and undertakings connecting a province with any other or others of the provinces, or extending beyond the limits of a province;

(c) Lines of steam and other ships connecting a province with any other or others of the provinces or extending beyond the limits of a province;

[Mr. Gardiner.]

(d) Ferries between any province and any other province or between any province and any country other than Canada;

(e) Aerodromes, aircraft and lines of air transportation;

(f) Radio broadcasting stations;

(g) Such works or undertakings as, although wholly situate within a province, are before or after their execution declared by the parliament of Canada to be for the general advantage of Canada or for the advantage of two or more of the provinces; and

(h) Any work, undertaking or business outside the exclusive legislative authority of the legislature of any province.

The act will apply also to crown corporations unless excluded by the governor in council.

P.C. 1003 was found to be of great value in contributing to stable labour relations during the critical war years and since, and we have included in the new legislation the best features of that order, changed in some respects and amplified in others, based upon the experience gained in its administration. We have also taken into consideration more recent representations which have been made to us by the provinces and by labour and employer organizations.

I believe the committee will agree with me that it is most important we should have an act for the settlement of industrial disputes which will be fair to the worker and employer alike and that will make possible the equitable and sensible adjustment of differences between them.

The legislation provides what I consider are appropriate procedures and conciliation machinery to deal with disputes of this character affecting undertakings over which parliament has legislative authority. It establishes procedures for the negotiation of collective agreements on wages and other terms of employment, giving the employees the right to organize for the purpose of collective bargaining without interference and to be represented in negotiations by a trade union of their own choice.

In disputes arising out of the negotiation of collective agreements, strikes and lockouts and the taking of strike votes among employees are prohibited until the procedures of negotiation and conciliation laid down in the act have been completely followed. Strikes and lockouts also are prohibited during the time that a collective agreement is in effect, except where the parties have agreed to renegotiate a provision of the agreement before the whole agreement terminates. In any case of renegotiation the provisions for such conciliation which I have mentioned would apply.

The provisions of part I of the act are capable of being applied, by provincial legislation, to all or any particular industry within the jurisdiction of the provinces.

In other words, we have tried to set a pattern which some of the provinces may care to apply knowing that we shall not be moving as rapidly as we should towards the goal of industrial peace in this country if we have widely varying legislation of this nature in the spheres of dominion and provincial operation.

The unfair labour practices section of the act will prohibit discrimination by employers against employees on account of trade union membership or activity or interference by them in the organization and carrying on of a trade union. Likewise it will be unlawful for any person to use coercion to compel anyone to become, or not to become, a member of a trade union. Trade union organizing work in a plant during working hours is prohibited except with the consent of the employer.

The question of certification of a trade union is, of course, important, and the act provides that a union may obtain recognition as the exclusive bargaining agent of employees if it satisfies the labour relations board that its membership represents a majority of the employees in the bargaining unit which the board also has the authority to define.

The board may order a secret vote where it is considered necessary. In order to take care of a jurisdictional dispute between unions, provision is made for a new certification to be granted if application is made after the expiry of ten months of the term of a collective agreement.

An employees' organization dominated by an employer is not recognized under the act, and there also is a provision revoking the authority of a union to serve as the exclusive bargaining agent when it is shown that the union has lost the support of the majority of the employees.

Once a union has been certified as a bargaining agent, the parties are required to enter into negotiations for the conclusion of a collective agreement. If they cannot settle matters between themselves, then the act requires them to obtain the conciliation services of the Department of Labour. If that fails, a conciliation board may be appointed by the Minister of Labour upon the request of either party. This applies to the renegotiation of existing agreements.

An important provision of the act prohibits an employer declaring a lockout, employees going on strike, the taking of a strike vote or the declaration of a strike until all conciliation procedures have been exhausted and fourteen days have elapsed.

Parties negotiating a collective agreement are required to include in the agreement an appropriate provision for final settlement by arbitration or otherwise, without stoppage of work, of disputes which arise between the employees who are bound by the agreement and their employer during the currency of the agreement, concerning the meaning or violation of the agreement. Where an agreement does not contain such provision, the labour relations board is authorized to write it into the agreement.

A further provision of the act authorizes the appointment by the Minister of Labour of an industrial disputes inquiry commission of one or more persons for the purpose of looking into any industrial dispute and to report thereon. This provision is similar to the provisions of P.C. 4020, an order in council which was extensively used during the war.

For administrative purposes, it is proposed that we establish what will be known as the Canada labour relations board, to be composed of a chairman and not more than eight other members equally representative of labour and employers.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, may I say that we have received representations for the inclusion of measures severely curtailing union activities; from others have come suggestions which would involve, under certain conditions, the compulsory application of the principle of union security in collective agreements and the adoption of other innovations.

We have not given effect in this legislation to such representations, since it is not the desire of the government to place impediments in the way of free collective bargaining between employers and their organized workers, or to legislate conditions or terms of employment that properly lie in the field of collective bargaining.

The essential purpose of the legislation is to create conditions favourable to the free exercise of the collective bargaining function in order that negotiations between the parties to a dispute can be carried on with the greatest degree of success.

For that reason, only such regulation of employer and employee activity in their industrial relationships considered as necessary to protect the public interest is incorporated in the legislation. It leaves with labour and management the major responsibility of settling between them their problems in regard to negotiation of collective agreements and administration of such agreements.

It has long been my view that legislation of this nature will fail in its fundamental objective if it introduces features of a punitive and coercive character which could only result in driving employers and employees further apart. That would make it more difficult for them to establish those friendly relations of good will and cooperation which are so necessary.

Human nature cannot be corrected by a law, and in the final analysis, Mr. Chairman, the major consideration in improving human relations between employers and employees is the simple matter of trying to see each other's point of view and developing mutual understanding.

Mr. CHURCH: I should like to ask the minister one or two questions, the answers to which I think it is only proper that the committee should have, with regard to the legislation now before us. The act used to be called the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act; it is now changed by having the word "relations" added to it. It is to be called the Industrial Relations and Investigation of Industrial Disputes Act. So far, so good. But does this statute apply to public utilities? Some of the utilities are publicly-owned, such as those having to do with light, power and transportation. For instance, there are the street railways. A strike may occur next winter, for one of many reasons, in the light or power services shutting off power or light at a time when meals are being prepared. In view of the decision of the privy council in the Snider case, it is doubtful whether the dominion has jurisdiction over some classes of public utilities such as those having to do with power. If we are to make any change in the remuneration of these boards, we should have value for the money expended. In view of the difficulties we have had during the war and after, may I ask if the act will be made effective by any change of name? Is it a mandatory act? Does it compel the two sides to come together? Why should the citizens of the city of Ottawa or of any other city suffer because of a strike brought against the public? In view of the changes now made in the act, and of the wide discussions in Washington on the subject, are we getting some proper method of bringing the parties together, which we should have, when the law is brought into force?

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the resolution carry?

[Mr. Mitchell.]

Mr. CHURCH: I should like to hear what the minister has to say about the question I raised.

Mr. MITCHELL: I can answer my hon. friend in two minutes. I think I have a recollection of what he called the Snider case. That was some twenty years ago. The industries referred to by my hon. friend of course come purely within provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I understand that any general debate in this matter is to take place on second reading; in that I most heartily concur. Speaking for most of the party over here, I wish to say that we will not debate the matter now, but will reserve our rights until the bill comes up for second reading.

Mr. COLDWELL: I was going to say very much the same thing. I regret that this measure is brought forward so late in the session. It is an important measure which we think—and I speak now on behalf of my party—should be proceeded with after thorough examination by an appropriate committee of the house. In order that the bill may be studied and the principle understood, I suggest to the minister that we proceed with the resolution and give the bill first reading today but defer second reading until the next sitting.

Mr. MITCHELL: That is all right.

Mr. JOHNSTON: As far as this group is concerned, we appreciate having this legislation brought down, although it is late in the session to have such an important piece of legislation brought down. I understand that after second reading the bill will be referred to the committee on industrial relations and there will be given a thorough going-over. Having that in mind, and also the understanding that no discussion was to take place until the second reading, we shall allow it to go through to that stage.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Mitchell thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 338, to provide for the investigation, conciliation and settlement of industrial disputes.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

OLD AGE PENSIONS

INCREASES IN AMOUNTS AND INCOME ALLOWABLE —MODIFICATION OF ELIGIBILITY REQUIREMENTS

Hon. PAUL MARTIN (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Old Age Pensions Act which will enlarge the scope of the act by providing increases in the pension payable and the income allowable to pensioners and by modifying certain of the eligibility requirements for pension.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Golding in the chair.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Martin thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 339, to amend the Old Age Pensions Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. FLEMING: Will the bill be distributed forthwith?

Mr. MARTIN: I understand the arrangement made—and the leader of the house will correct me if I am wrong—was that the bill be given first reading today and I would move second reading tomorrow.

Mr. FLEMING: What about distribution of the bill?

Mr. MARTIN: The bill will be distributed before the day is out. I imagine it should be distributed now that we have had first reading.

Mr. BRACKEN: That is the question the hon. member asked, if the bill would be distributed now. That will be necessary; otherwise, we cannot proceed with second reading tomorrow.

Mr. MARTIN: It will be distributed shortly, today.

UNITED NATIONS

ACCESSION OF CANADA TO CONVENTION ON PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Secretary of State for External Affairs) moved the second reading of Bill No. 272, to provide for privileges and immunities in respect of the united nations and related international organizations.

Mr. J. H. BLACKMORE (Lethbridge): I believe it is inadvisable that this bill be now read the second time. I think it requires a great deal more study than we have yet given to it.

Mr. COLDWELL: It is suggested that it is to be sent to the committee on external affairs.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Has that been suggested, that the bill go to the committee on external affairs?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Yes.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Is it not possible to refer the bill to the committee on external affairs before it is given second reading? I suggest that this be done, because if the house gives the bill second reading it approves the principle and thereby limits in large measure the authority of the committee on external affairs to discuss the bill in detail. I would urge that the bill be referred to the committee for careful study, before it is given second reading, and I would oppose giving it second reading now.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is not for the Speaker to give direction to the house as to what it should do. The motion is for the second reading of Bill No. 272, and after second reading is given it is the practice to put the motion to go into committee of the whole.

Mr. BLACKMORE: But I desire that the bill be referred to the committee on external affairs before it is given second reading, in order to give that committee greater latitude for discussion of the details of the bill and their implications.

Right Hon. IAN A. MACKENZIE (Minister of Veterans Affairs): If I might say a word in regard to the practice of parliament, when we were over there some years ago the Bank of Canada Act was introduced. We were bitterly opposed to the bill, but we allowed it to be given second reading, reserving all our rights, because the bill was to be referred immediately to a committee. That is exactly what my hon. friend has the right to do now; but the proper practice is to have second reading given by the house; with reservations, and the bill referred to the appropriate committee.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I wonder if the Minister of Veterans Affairs would specify what those rights are. It seems to me his suggestion is good, but what rights would be reserved? For example, we could not reserve the right—

Mr. MACKENZIE: My hon. friend can reserve full freedom of discussion for whatever members of his group or party are on that committee, to criticize the bill and, if they can, defeat it in committee. That is what we did in regard to the Bank of Canada Act.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Does that mean freedom to discuss it in detail in the committee on external affairs or in committee of the whole?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: At this time I am moving second reading of the bill, for the purpose of then moving that it be referred to the committee on external affairs. My understanding is that in that committee the whole matter can be gone into. The committee will then make a report to the house, and the whole matter can then be gone into again here. The house will not be bound in any way by the report of the committee. The standing order provides that a bill cannot be sent to a committee until it has received second reading. The subject matter can be sent to a committee, but in practice that involves killing the bill. Here the motion is that the bill receive second reading. When that is given I will move that it go to the committee on external affairs, where there can be a full and complete examination of its provisions. There will be a report from the committee, or no report. If the committee finds that this is a bill which should not be passed, it will not report it, and the bill will die there. If on the other hand the committee feels that it should receive further consideration, the bill will come back here and will have to come up in committee of the whole house where every provision can be examined, discussed and debated. I am quite sure the hon. member will not be deprived of any rights whatever by this procedure, which was suggested in our conference as the most practical and expeditious way of dealing with the subject matter.

Mr. BLACKMORE: This would mean, I take it, that in committee the full discussion could take place on clause one of the bill. Is that the point? I just want to be sure, because when the bill comes back to this house the chairman can do a person a tremendous amount of damage by just riding him every step of the way. I want to be sure to be able to discuss every aspect of this matter.

Mr. ST. LAURENT. I have never known the hon. member to be prevented from speaking his mind in this house ,and I am sure there will be no occasion or opportunity for that to happen in connection with this bill.

Mr. BLACKMORE: It will be on clause 1?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I want to have that assurance, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER: I must call the hon. member's attention to the fact that we are on the motion for second reading of the bill. He knows perfectly well that a member is entitled to rise only once. I cannot permit a debate between the hon. gentleman and the minister at this stage. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

[Mr. St. Laurent.]

Mr. JEAN-FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Temiscouata): What the right hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. St. Laurent) has said is perfectly right. We can send this bill to the committee on external affairs or any other committee only after it is given second reading. Then if it is reported by the committee it may come before the committee of the whole house, as the minister said would be done. On the other hand the right hon. Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Mackenzie) expressed a wrong view when he said the giving of second reading would not be an acceptance of the principle of the bill. I remember very well what happened in regard to the precedent the minister quoted, the Bank of Canada Act. The parties were unanimous in accepting the principle of that bill, because it was one of the fourteen points of the Liberal party which Mr. Bennett had stolen. So there was no disagreement as to the principle, which was admitted by the whole house.

Here the question is obvious. This is one case where we will have to decide whether we shall have world government or keep the constitution of this country. That and nothing else is the obvious question. It is part of the scheme to bring Canada under the dominion and jurisdiction of a world government. Where it will stop I do not know. This is a theory which has been expressed by some leading men of the world, that we should be governed by a super-administration belonging to all the big powers. I am opposed to that, in the first place because I do not believe that the right of justice belongs to the so-called big powers. That is the first thing. In the second place I do not believe the big powers have been so successful or have shown such good results in what they have done up to the present. In the third place, if things go on like this I am afraid this country will be the trailer of all the other countries of the world, and we in this parliament will be just rubber stamps.

If we are to keep the constitution as it is we cannot accept this kind of government. I am very sorry to have to rise and express personal views about this matter, but they come from deep convictions. If I had not a deep conviction, the constitution being what it is and what it has been for eighty years, I would leave it at that, close my eyes and let it pass.

I do not want to detain the house by making a long speech. If human rights exist, if we in this house intend to apply them to all other nations, then we cannot forget that one of those rights is freedom of speech. Shall we still have that right with an organization like that? They do not have freedom of speech in Russia; they hardly have freedom of speech in France, and they do not have it in China. They still have it in the United States, as in England, but we know nothing about the future. I say all this with the most friendly disposition.

Do hon. members realize the immunities that are to be given to the representatives of all the specialized agencies of the united nations? The list is formidable; it is enormous. The other day I asked for that information, and the right hon. minister who is sponsoring the bill was kind enough to give me a copy of it. Here they are:

Representatives of members to the principal and subsidiary organs—

Not only the principal, but also the subsidiary organs.

—of the united nations and to conferences convened by the united nations, shall, while exercising their functions and during their journey to and from the place of meeting, enjoy the following privileges and immunities:

(a) immunity from personal arrest or detention and from seizure of their personal baggage, and, in respect of words spoken or written and all acts done by them in their capacity as representatives, immunity from legal process of every kind;

(b) inviolability for all papers and documents;

(c) the right to use codes and to receive papers or correspondence by courier or in sealed bags;

(d) exemption in respect of themselves and their spouses from immigration restrictions, aliens registration or national service obligations in the state they are visiting or through which they are passing in the exercise of their functions;

(e) the same facilities in respect of currency or exchange restrictions as are accorded to representatives of foreign governments on temporary official missions;

(f) the same immunities and facilities in respect of their personal baggage as are accorded to diplomatic envoys; and also,

(g) such other privileges, immunities and facilities not inconsistent with the foregoing as diplomatic envoys enjoy, except that they shall have no right to claim exemption from customs duties on goods imported (otherwise than as part of their personal baggage) or from excise duties or sales taxes.

They can bring in as many trunks as they wish without paying any duty. When they are in the country they cannot import goods from their own or other countries free of customs duties, but that is the only difference from fully accredited diplomats. That is going pretty far. My deep regret is that the united nations are following the same lines as the old defunct league of nations. No imagination is being shown, and we are much worse off than before because all these people who belong, not only to the specialized agencies but to their subsidiaries, will have the same rights as ministers and ambassadors.

Quite often I express personal views, but they are sincere. Sometimes I have the support of hon. members of my party; sometimes I have the support of all groups of the opposition, but in this case I want to congratulate publicly the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore) and the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Quelch) upon the foresight they showed when we were in the resolution stage. We may differ at times, but opinions are free. The hon. gentlemen to whom I have just referred meant what they said, as I did. We were sincere in this matter. We gave a solemn warning to the government not to be caught in the web of the united nations.

I entertain great fears about these people, for the reasons that I have given. I do not trust most of them. Nobody trusts them individually, but when it comes to considering them jointly we are all ready to accept anything from them. How is it that when we will not accept the form of super-government they have, we are ready to accept orders and instructions given by those governments? We may trust a few of these governments, but we do not trust all of them. The majority of the big powers have governments that we would not accept. We would not accept the government of Russia, the government of China or the present unstable government of France. With regard to the socialistic government of England and the capitalistic government of the United States, there are differences of opinion. In the case of three out of five they have governments which we would not accept in this country. I challenge any group to say that they would accept any of those three governments. Yet they represent a majority in the government of the united nations. Small nations like Canada will have no say.

We will see caravans of members of specialized agencies and their subsidiaries crossing Canada and living here, and they will be quite free as long as they can show credentials given by any country. The deep fear I have is that it will encourage spying. Their belongings will be untouchable, and it will be impossible to verify what papers they may have because they will be under diplomatic seal just the same as those of ambassadors, ministers and high commissioners. They will be given special privileges, and I am against special privileges. It is all right to receive the representatives of foreign countries, but what about international organizations that are most dangerous? The control of those organizations, and even the control of the united nations, may be taken over by one of the three dangerous governments I have mentioned.

I want to make myself clear: I do not condemn the people of the big five countries, but I entertain fears about their governments. I would remind the house that the song of Soviet Russia is "The Internationale". The idea of Russia is to create that kind of feeling which will destroy patriotism in all other nations. Then when there is no more patriotism we shall have an international organization where right counts no longer and where might is always right. Those powers will try in their own way to take control of the united nations and establish communism throughout the world. Canada does not count before the united nations. It may count socially but not politically.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Or economically.

Mr. POULIOT: Economically when it comes to giving, but not receiving. Here we are with this new world plan which I have opposed from the start and which I shall continue to oppose as a Liberal who loves his country and does not want the domination of the united nations.

Mr. BLACKMORE: All honour to you.

Mr. POULIOT: I do not say that because I am opposed to Russia or some other country, but I do find that the government of Russia is one that I would not support by my vote if I were a Russian, and as only one vote is given in that country I would abstain from voting, to my great regret.

I hope the members will think of these things. I hope I have expressed myself clearly. I warn the house, I warn you, sir, I warn the cabinet and all my colleagues of the dangers of this policy.

After the last war we heard the same kind of speeches we are hearing today; but then it was about the league of nations, and not only the league of nations, but the Briand-Kellogg pact, which was signed by the Prime Minister of Canada after Sir Robert Borden had signed the treaty of Versailles. Those treaties were official treaties binding the signatory nations to maintain peace throughout the world, and they turned out to be scraps of paper. We hear no more about the Briand-Kellogg pact; we hear no more about the Versailles treaty.

There is a complete lack of imagination in those who want to establish this new world policy. History repeats itself, history with all its failures. Now we are confronted with the danger of a powerful organization of the few impairing the sovereignty of the many small powers, the so-called small nations.

When I speak in my own constituency my speeches are not longer than the one I have just made. I let my constituents finish them by thinking of what I have said to them and drawing their own conclusions. I always tell them: Do not accept blindly what I tell you. Think about it, and if you think I am right, support me. If you think I am wrong, tell me, but tell me why.

In this case, Mr. Speaker, I have spoken earnestly and I need your protection. This debate is much more in conformity with the human rights theory than the discussion we had when the resolution came before the house. It was pitiful at that time and very sad to see my hon. friends the members for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore) and Acadia (Mr. Quelch) and myself unable to ask questions that we had a right to ask. I draw your attention to that, sir, and I hope that on future occasions the discussion in the committee, when we ask questions, will be on a higher level and will be similar to the debate we are having now.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I wish to withdraw my opposition to this measure, because I do not think the united nations will amount to anything anyway, and the immunities may never be used. I have not the faith in that organization that the minister and other members of the house have because you have given a first-class power, Russia, the right to veto everything UNO does. Mr. Bevin and Mr. Marshall are going outside of the united nations organization, as they did at Paris and at Moscow. Mr. Bevin has made an arrangement with France, and Mr. Marshall proposed "economic unity" for the whole of Europe, outside of the united nations. The Japanese treaty is to be handled outside of the united nations organization altogether by Mr. Bevin and Mr. Marshall. This organization is going to wind up like the league of nations. It is merely going to postpone things and nothing will be done for next winter. But as long as we belong to the organization I suppose we have to accord to them these privileges and immunities, and I have no objection to that. The organization will shortly die a natural death as the first league did.

Mr. SOLON E. LOW (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I shall delay the house for just a moment to put the position of my group squarely before the house. We do not like this bill. We think this is the booby trap that has been set for the government of Canada to walk straight into, and we are determined to see that they do not do it and get completely softened up so that they can be easily gathered into this web of the united nations that is strangling us and dragging us forward to world government. That is why we want a full and free discussion of this bill at some stage. The only concern we have is whether or not on section 1 of the bill we shall have ample latitude to discuss any feature of it we desire. If we have that undertaking we shall not delay the house further at this stage, but we certainly want perfect freedom in committee to discuss in the fullest possible manner any matter concerning or relating to this bill. We would like to reserve all our rights to discuss the bill when it comes back from the committee, because we certainly shall have something to say about it.

Mr. STANLEY KNOWLES (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I shall be only a few minutes. I have refrained from speaking on other matters in which I was interested, and I think I have demonstrated something by that, but in view of the remarks that have been made thus far this afternoon in opposition to this bill I feel that the debate cannot be concluded without something being said on the other side. Therefore, I rise to support whole-heartedly the second reading of this bill.

Mr. LOW: That is a good reason for opposing it.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Unity in diversity!

Mr. KNOWLES: Frequently I find myself in the right, even though in the minority. This time I happen to be in the right, and the majority is with me. The member for Peace River (Mr. Low), in the remarks he has just made, has indicated clearly his reasons, and I believe the reasons of others who have spoken, for his opposition to this measure. It is not just that they are opposed to the granting of these privileges and immunities. It is rather that they are opposed to the structure of the united nations and are afraid that we are heading towards the loss of Canadian sovereignty in a world government.

Mr. BLACKMORE: We are certain of it.

Mr. KNOWLES: In other words, I have stated the hon. member's position quite correctly.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Certainly we are running into difficulty.

Mr. KNOWLES: The fact of the matter is that sovereignty, as we know it today in individual nations, simply is not good enough to protect the peace and welfare of the people of the world. The time has come when we must create a larger and wider sovereignty for the protection of mankind.

Mr. LOW: How about the United States forces in Canada?

Mr. KNOWLES: That, Mr. Speaker, was not a case of creating wider sovereignty. That, in our view, was a case of surrendering our sovereignty to another nation in the government of which we are not represented. But with respect to the united nations the matter is one of creating a new world sovereignty in which we have a very definite voice.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I would call the attention of the hon. member to the fact that the measure before the house is not one to create sovereignty for peace. The bill which is before the house is entitled "An Act to provide for privileges and immunities in respect of the united nations", which is already organized, "and related international organizations" which are already organized. I would ask hon. members to confine their remarks to the principle of the bill which is actually before the house.

Mr. KNOWLES: Mr. Speaker, if I may say so, I think you have not only given a good ruling but made a good argument in the debate itself. That is exactly the point that I was seeking to make in reply to the hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot), the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore) and the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low)—that what they are opposing is not the bill which is before us but the united nations organization, together with its specialized agencies, which are already set up, and of which Canada is a member, and to which this parliament agreed unanimously.

In deference to Your Honour's ruling I shall cut short my remarks. I contend that we are not surrendering sovereignty; we are creating a new sovereignty for the peace of the world. In the charter of the united nations we have agreed to accept these terms. Article 105 of the charter states that the organization shall enjoy in the territory of each of its members such immunities and privileges as are necessary for the fulfilment of its purposes. That is the meaning of this bill, and any attempt to defeat it is contrary to the spirit of the charter and would be nothing more or less than an attempt to defeat the purposes of the united nations. Such an attempt I regard as a disservice to mankind. For these reasons I think the bill should be passed and the principle approved.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. LOW: On division.

Motion agreed to on division, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on external affairs.

DOMINION COAL BOARD

ADMINISTRATION OF SUBVENTIONS OR SUBSIDIES VOTED BY PARLIAMENT

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to present a bill to establish a corporation to be known as the dominion coal board to administer subventions or subsidies relating to coal voted by parliament, to exercise and perform certain other powers, duties and functions.

Provision is made further for the advisory functions of the board, for the employment of professional and technical advisers and assistants and their remuneration, and for all expenses of the act to be paid out of moneys appropriated by parliament for the purpose.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

Mr. GREEN: Will the minister make a statement on this resolution?

Mr. HOWE: Yes. This resolution provides for the establishment of a dominion coal board as a further step towards solving a problem that has been before this house and the people of Canada for the past seventy years. The first report on coal which has come to my notice is by a select committee of the House of Commons, dated April 27, 1877, dealing with "the state of the coal trade and for the promoting of interprovincial trade". That report suggested that bounties and subsidies be granted for the movement of Nova Scotia coal to points in Quebec and Ontario.

The intervening years have produced numerous reports on coal by parliamentary committees, royal commissions, and provincial commissions. The last report on the subject is entitled "Report of the Royal Commission on Coal", which was tabled in this house on January 31, 1947. The report represents months of careful and conscientious study by the commissioners, and I commend it to all members of this house for careful study.

Direct intervention by the government in the production and distribution of coal dates back to June, 1917, when the government appointed a coal controller to deal with fuel difficulties that were an outgrowth of the war period. At that time it became necessary to make regulations to protect the production, sale, delivery and consumption of all fuels to meet wartime requirements. The final report of the first coal controller, dated March, 1919, stressed the necessity for having a continuing body to deal with coal supplies generally. The dominion fuel board was created by order in council in November, 1922, and since that time has functioned within its original terms of reference. The recent royal commission report states that the powers of the present board are not sufficiently wide in scope to deal with the present problem.

Shortly after the outbreak of the second world war, the government appointed a coal administrator under the wartime prices and trade board, with jurisdiction over the supply, distribution and price of coal. The staff of the dominion fuel board was taken over by the coal administrator. By 1942 the problem of coal supply became of paramount importance and to deal with it the government appointed an emergency coal production board under the chairmanship of the coal administrator. Shortly after this, since supply problems generally were being dealt with by the Department of Munitions and Supply, the duties and responsibilities of the coal administrator were transferred to that department under the direction of a coal controller.

Coal control ended on December 31, 1946, and the functions of coal administration ended with the lifting of the price ceiling on coal on April 15, 1947. At that time, the dominion fuel board was reconstituted and is at present functioning within its original terms of reference.

The government is in full agreement with the recommendation of the royal commission on coal that a dominion coal board be established and charged with the responsibility for implementing the recommendations of the report. The board will take over the records of the dominion fuel board, as well as those of wartime controls, and these will form a valuable background for the work of the new board. I might add that, if proof is needed that these records are valuable, it will be found in the fact that during the period of wartime coal control it was possible to arrange for supplies of coal that maintained full industrial production without one day's loss of time from coal shortage, as well as a full supply to the household consumer.

Much has been said and written about the Canadian coal problem. This is not a single problem—we have many coal problems, differing in kind and degree. There is the problem of maintaining an adequate supply of coal for our national requirements, and there is also the problem of building up in Canada a sound and healthy producing industry. There is the problem of finding steady and adequate markets for Canadian coal, and the problem of providing reasonably full employment at fair wages for our miners. Each section of Canada has its own coal problem, differing from that of other sections.

The report of the royal commission on coal accepts the necessity for industries in central Canada to secure the major portion of their coal requirements from the United States. Developments in low cost production and transportation may possibly alter this concept in some measure in the future, but it would appear that for many years industry and households in central Ontario will continue to secure supplies from the nearest source, namely, the immense deposits in the Appalachian field in the United States. However, this finding need not preclude the growing development of a stable and prosperous producing industry within this country; nor need it preclude the provision of an increasing and remunerative field of employment for Canadian coal miners.

The commission has found that the government policy of subventions to assist transportation of coal, arising out of investigations made by a special committee of the House of Commons in 1921, has been both well designed and reasonably adequate, and should be continued. This subvention policy has been directed primarily to the marketing phase of the Canadian coal industry. The problem of providing and maintaining an adequate market for Canadian coal is constantly changing, and does not, by its very nature, lend itself to the establishment of a rigid and invarying policy. Therefore the commission recommends that the present dominion fuel board, composed of civil servants, be replaced by a new statutory body which will serve full time in the administration of present subvention policies and such new measures of assistance as may be required from time to time. In this way the marketing problem will receive the constant attention of a body set up for the purpose. The resolution now under discussion has for its purpose the implementation of this recommendation.

I will now discuss the other main problem, namely, the production of coal throughout Canada at the lowest possible cost. The report of the commission gives the salient features of the operations in each of Canada's main coal fields. In normal times, and during the war, the industry has been in a healthy state in Saskatchewan, and in Alberta, including the southeast corner of British Columbia. On the other hand operations on Vancouver island, and particularly in the maritime provinces, have not been in a healthy condition for many years. The mines producing industrial and railway coal in the mountain regions in British Columbia have had a particularly good record. The profits of the group are not excessive, but in wages paid, in constant and increasing output, and in efficiency of production, these operations stand out over the general average. The production of domestic coal in Alberta has suffered from seasonal operation, inherent in the nature of the coal, but even under this handicap shows a sound and encouraging record. The lignite coal mines in Saskatchewan have built up by their own efforts a sound and profitable market, and have a record of expansion that is by no means ended. There are few serious problems in the operation of this section of the industry that cannot be solved by the industry itself. The provision of a stable market for the industrial and railway coals is bound up with the general prosperity of the country, but there would appear to be good prospects for the maintenance of an adequate and orderly marketing of the output from this area. The greatest improvement can be effected by developments in research that will solve the present seasonal fluctuations in the production of domestic coal in both Alberta and Saskatchewan. When the solution for this problem can be found, the freight subvention policy recommended in the commission's report should be adeqaute for this section of the industry.

The coal fields of Vancouver island represent a special problem. The output per man day has been consistently lower than in the mountain and prairie mines, and the market has been restricted and highly competitive as against other fuels, such as oil and wood. For the past four or five years there has been a market for every ton of coal that could be produced, but for a variety of reasons, the mines have not increased their output to meet the challenge. In fact production has gone down, and it has been necessary to sustain operations by means of production subsidies. The ending of production subsidies calls for a reorganized production programme, required to maintain a sound and healthy coal producing industry on Vancouver island.

A still more serious outlook is presented by present conditions in the maritime provinces, and particularly in the Cape Breton area. We have here the largest concentration of the Canadian coal mining industry, located in a heavily populated area, that is almost wholly dependent on this industry for means of livelihood. The other large maritime industry, steel, depends for its wellbeing upon an adequate supply of coal, at a cost that will permit the sale of its products at competitive prices. Maximum production from the maritime coal fields has been a matter of national necessity during the two great wars within our generation. Thus the maritime coal problem is of the highest importance, not only to that locality but to all parts of Canada.

Mining has been carried on continuously in the Cape Breton field for a longer period than in any other Canadian area, and part of the problem arises from the technical difficulties, inherent both in the nature of the deposits, and in the very fact that mining operations have continued along lines laid down years ago. The methods adapted to mining of coal in earlier years may not be best adapted to the present situation. The royal commission report devotes considerable space to mining methods in these areas.

The production of coal in the maritime provinces, since early in the war, has presented an increasingly difficult and distressing problem. Production in this area has dropped by over two million tons per annum from normal, and the cost of production has skyrocketed to the point that the federal government has been obliged to provide upwards of twenty million dollars to the mine owners since January 1, 1942, in production subsidies, to prevent the industry from collapsing. The operators have placed the blame for decreased efficiency and higher cost on labour, and in turn, labour has been very critical of the management.

Special production subsidies no longer can be justified. The royal commission recommends the ending of production subsidies, but two of the commissioners suggest continued government aid to the maritime industry for a short reconversion period. The report is definite in its indication that the industry must expect to stand on its own feet, except for enlargements of its markets through freight subventions. Unless increased production can be obtained, subvention assistance is likely to be of little benefit, as production of coal, and its consumption, are at present about in balance within maritime provinces.

In pre-war years, wages for coal miners in the maritime provinces have been lower than in other fields, and the necessity for this disparity was recognized and accepted. It is, however, an unsound policy to attempt to perpetuate an industry through low wages. Therefore every effort must be exerted to provide, through a return to low cost and efficient production, for the payment of wages that will return a fair and reasonable standard of living to the workers. We are faced with the outstanding fact that if production in the mines were brought up only as far as the pre-war level of efficiency, the present difficulty would fade and disappear. Such an improvement would provide for increases in wage scale, as well as for surplus earnings available to management for necessary mine improvements.

I would sum up the maritime situation by saying that unless the problems facing the industry are quickly solved, the industry is heading for disaster. The problem of restoring the coal industry of the maritime provinces to a healthy condition is wrapped up with the continued prosperity of the area, and constitutes a plain challenge to private enterprise, as it is also a challenge to organized labour.

The coal report concludes with both majority and minority recommendations, but it is interesting to note that there is in fact a substantial measure of unanimity. There is agreement with the policy of assisting Canadian coal to find a wider market by means of subventions and the present tariff, as that policy has been developed and administered in the past, is sound and should be continued, although there are some small differences of opinion as to the future scope of the policy. The commissioners are unanimous in the opinion that nationalization of the industry, in whole or in part, does not offer any promise of improvement over present conditions. There is agreement that a statutory board should be established to carry on the functions of the dominion fuel board and to assume additional responsibilities in the national interest.

Returning to the supply problem in Ontario and Quebec, geography and economics make it inevitable that these provinces must depend largely on imported coal. Thus the supply is subject to interruptions beyond the control of Canada. We had an example last summer, when you will recall that a protracted coal strike in the United States was followed by a protracted seaman's strike in Canada. Strikes in the steel industry in the United States, result was that at September 1 our imports were three and one-half million tons lower for that period than would supply our minimum requirements. I had every reason to fear that Canada would face a situation this winter similar to last winter's situation in the United Kingdom. However, the coal controller and his staff combined with the Canadian shipping board, both of which had war emergency powers, in a determined effort to correct the situation. Lake carriers were taken out of their normal trades and diverted to the carriage of coal. Emergency arrangements were made to transport Alberta coal to Ontario markets and to move American coal by rail into this area. The result was that the close of navigation found us with our minimum requirements provided for, plus one and one-half million tons of bituminous coal, and one million tons of anthracite coal, as an additional cushion against further interruptions to supply. This correction could not have been made without the agency of overriding emergency powers. If in future Ontario and Quebec are to have reasonable security of coal supply, it seems necessary that the new statutory board must be clothed with emergency powers adequate to enable that board to deal quickly with any dangerous situation that may arise. The bill based on this resolution will provide accordingly.

Hon. members will find in the resolution and in the bill to come before them, the details of the constitution, responsibilities and authority of the proposed new board. These have been drafted in general accordance with the recommendations of the royal commission, and it has been considered advisable to avoid any attempt to circumscribe the usefulness of this new body by too precise a definition. In the last analysis the responsibility for policy must rest directly upon parliament and government, since the expenditure of public funds will be directly concerned. The matters with which the board will deal are, however, so diverse in character that it will be necessary, for the efficient discharge of the responsibilities imposed, that a wide area of authority be provided for investigation and consideration. The implementation of the findings of the new body will remain the responsibility of government.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): The report of the royal commission on coal has been in our hands for some time. This resolution provides first:

> That it is expedient to present a bill to establish a corporation—

In the first place, the minister has given us no reason why this should be a corporation. It is just one of the many crown corporations which we have been forming in times gone by, although in this particular case I can see no reason whatever for clothing this arm of government with corporate powers and then taking it, like other things, outside the civil service, outside audit by the auditor general, and so on. The minister did not mention that in his statement. There may be a reason, but if there is it is quite unknown to me. The resolution continues:

> —to be known as the dominion coal board to administer subventions or subsidies relating to coal voted by parliament, to exercise and perform certain other powers, duties and functions.

The last remark the minister made was, I think, the only one he made with respect to these other powers, duties and functions, when he said that he intended to clothe this board with emergency powers. The recommendations of the royal commission are found on two pages, 582-3, of their report, and Mr. Justice Carroll and Mr. Justice McLaurin had this to say. The last paragraph is really the acting one:

> It is not generally practical to fix subvention aid by statute because the assistance must vary from time to time with changes in the competitive situation. It is exceedingly important that any aid extended should be attended by scrutiny of the efficiency of operations.

Mr. Morrison, at page 600, in his summary puts it in this form:

> A Canadian coal board should be established, to advise the government on assistance to the industry and protection of the public interest, and to administer such assistance as the government deems necessary.

There is this distinction. He thinks the government should determine the assistance necessary, and in my opinion perhaps the other two think it should be a function of the board. The second paragraph of the resolution reads as follows:

> Provision is made further for the advisory functions of the board, for the employment of professional and technical advisers and assistants and their remuneration, and for all expenses of the act to be paid out of moneys appropriated by parliament for the purpose.

I have now read it all. All I am urging now is that I am not in favour of this bill at this time, and I intend to explain why at this time I can see no necessity for it. If I had a much better idea than I now have or a much better idea than the minister has given me about it, I might then be in a position to support it. But what does it amount to? It is nothing more than a resolution saying that we should set up a new corporation to do what certain employees in the government, in the very language of the coal commission, have been doing satisfactorily over the years. At the moment I can see no reason whatever why these functions should not be performed by the men on the fuel board, one of whom I know very well and whom I regard as one of the greatest authorities on coal in the Dominion of Canada; he would certainly be better than any chairman the government can pick out of the air and put at the top of this board.

The point I am making is that, at the moment and with the brief explanation we have had, I cannot see why we should go to the trouble or expense of creating a new corporation with all the attributes and functions—that is, aside from the civil service and so on—which attach to corporations of that kind.

I realize that what I am going to say will be quite unpopular with some people where I live, but I intend to say it anyway. What happens is this. We set up this commission, and I commend them for the immense amount of work they did. I also add that they could have found ninety-five per cent of this information in the files of the government right now. That could have been done, because I know it is there. All these vast summaries have been done again and again, as the minister pointed out, from the time we first started investigating this business many years ago. But that commission was appointed, and they are not blameworthy. They were appointed to find a national policy with respect to coal. I mean, in my own language that is the function for which they were set up. As is admitted by everybody, in discharging that function they have found no answer whatever. In this book there is no answer to the Canadian coal problem. It may be, as the minister said—and I think he is right because he has great knowledge of this business—that as far as central Canada is concerned, we must rely perhaps for a considerable time on imported coal. But he added that we got into an emergency a short time ago and had to switch railroad stock from other purposes in order to save this situation.

This whole thing comes down to a matter of dollars. The big problem is, is the coal problem in the Dominion of Canada a national problem, or is it not? I think we all admit that it is national. Then the only thing we have left to consider is whether it is worth while, I mean to provide the dollars necessary to give coverage to this country for our own coal. There is no doubt whatever that we have the coal. Unfortunately it lies largely on the eastern slope of the Rocky mountains, at least in that area right from the border away up through the coal branch to those mines in there. That difficulty may be insuperable. I must say I am discouraged; I have no ready cure to offer the minister at the moment. But it does seem strange that in a land like this, where we have the coal out there and the great need for it down here, we have developed no scheme by which those two elements may be brought together and thus create industry.

[Mr. A. L. Smith.]

The minister covered our various fields, and I was very happy to hear him say what he did about Alberta. But in justice to those who operate fields in other parts of the country, let it not be forgotten that in Alberta they work under rather good conditions. You find seams anywhere up to sixteen feet in height. On the Highwood river, where I have been myself—I am not like the hon. member for Davenport; I have not travelled much, but that is only sixty-five miles from my home—I have seen seams of solid coal forty feet in thickness, and I may say that is quite a thick seam of coal. There you will find three and four seams underlying each other, perhaps three feet, six feet, eight feet and forty feet in thickness, all in the one formation. So that there is no problem there as to competition with any other place, one might say, with respect to price. Then on the coal branch, that is the branch running south, at Edson I believe they are stripping their coal, which, of course, means that the cost has been brought down to a very low figure. I understand that they operate both a deep mine and a strip mine at the same time. Then you come into Saskatchewan, about which the minister spoke; and if I am not mistaken the successful operation in that area is largely a stripping operation. Then he spoke of British Columbia. I am very far from being an expert in this business, and I am not referring to the district around Fernie, Shelley and so on, but is it not a fact that the Vancouver island field is practically worked out at the present time? I have not been there for several years, but at that time I was in very good company—

Mr. MACKENZIE: Oh, oh.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I do not blame the minister for laughing. I was in the company of mining men; one of those places was available and we patronized it. The point I am trying to make is that at that time it seemed that those fields had practically reached exhaustion. Certainly it was a matter of not many years before they would reach the end of the blocked-out supplies.

Then the minister went to the maritimes. I am not going to say anything about that, save this. It seems to me that there of all places our national coal problem is simple. It is obvious that if things proceed as they have been proceeding in the last four or five years, as the minister says one can see the thing fading and disappearing as an industry at that place. As the minister stated, this coal commission has said that subsidies to the industry must cease, and I believe such steps have been taken. They do favour subventions, by which they mean assistance with respect to freight rates in carrying the coal from one place to another. But I just wonder if at this time we can say that subsidies there should cease. As I said to the Minister of Labour in a previous debate in this house, and as the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply just repeated, down there the men blame management, the reason they give being inadequate machinery and inadequate power. On the other hand, management blames the men, saying they simply are not doing the work. The taxpayers have spent $20 million there by way of subsidies. As the minister has said, if we return to conditions as they were prior to the last war, then the industry can carry itself and pay a decent wage.

So, sir, with great respect I say I do not think we can ever thoroughly understand and, having done that, handle that problem unless we find out which of those statements is true. If it be that the ton and a half per man per shift, approximately, is the best that can be accomplished, then I think it is obvious that the worst fears of the minister will come true unless something more than subventions is done; and of course the only other thing is subsidies. But I do not see how this government or this parliament can say we should stop doing this or that until that specific and simple question is answered. And it can be answered; that can be done in a month by sending some experienced people down into those pits. The minister shakes his head. I do not often disagree with him; he is an authority on coal and many other matters, but perhaps I might get a little shot in somewhere edgeways. I say that can be solved by four men going under ground in those pits; I make that statement, and in it I have the support of a number of people engaged in the business with whom I have discussed it. Until we have that question answered, what are we doing? We are groping in the dark with respect to one of the greatest national problems facing us, and with respect to what may be one of our greatest assets if it can be properly and profitably handled.

Before we are through with this discussion I want the minister to tell me one thing. Having regard to the limitations on this board which I see in this resolution; having regard to the fact he has told us that the commission itself found that subventions had been satisfactorily handled in the past, what gain is there to anybody by transferring that function from officials of the department to a new and expensive corporation? That is a simple question which I think is worthy of an answer, and which I believe can be answered simply. I had something to do with subventions in connection with the late Charles Stewart and the late Wesley Gordon. At different times I have come here with different sides of the coal industry trying to wangle subventions out of these people for certain areas, and I am very happy to say that at times I met with certain success. But I do not see how bringing a new face into the picture will make it any more efficient than it is at present, particularly when we have the finding in the report, as the minister said, that the subventions question has been well handled. The two commissioners have said that conditions change quickly; and at page 583 of the report they object to the statutory form. But let us remember that, as the minister has said, the money can be provided only by statute. If we should have a change in the business during the course of a year, when parliament is not sitting, I do not see why an official of the government, keeping in touch with and studying the matter, cannot make up his mind just as quickly as another official of the government who is called a corporation. I am utterly unable at the moment to see any necessity for setting up a board at this time.

I do not want any one to think I am speaking against the general recommendation that subventions to that industry be continued. I remember coming to Ottawa some years ago to appear before the railroad board. The results were bad, but now that we are to pay them better, perhaps my luck will change next time. I endeavoured to find out what it costs to haul a ton of coal from Drumheller, Lethbridge and the Crowsnest pass, first to North Bay and then to Toronto. The board made a finding and I admit that the figure was prohibitive. After that finding, the subvention situation was carried on.

May I say with respect that I do not think we yet know what the cost is. It is probably my fault that we do not. I was not good enough and I certainly did not have the same kind of help as the railroads had. I felt rather like a fool and I probably acted like one. I do not think anyone knows what it costs the railroads to haul a ton of coal from Cape Breton to Montreal or from Drumheller or the Crow to North Bay or Toronto. I believe there is an opening for our domestic coal in the area north of North Bay, but I cannot prove it. If we could really get down to it and find out what the cost of doing this thing was, then perhaps we might find a basis for a coal policy.

Coming back to where I started, I should like to have the minister explain, first, why the creation of a corporation and, second, what more will this new group or body do or what more can they do than has been done already by some efficient people who at one time formed the dominion fuel board?

Mr. BROOKS: Mr. Chairman, we have heard a lot about coal in this house during the past years, and I think we agree with the minister's statement this afternoon that the coal industry in the maritime provinces is headed for disaster unless some satisfactory means can be found of putting it upon its feet. We all know what the situation has been during the last few months because of coal strikes and other things that have occurred. The hon. member for Calgary West has suggested that there are two alternatives; either the coal industry in the maritime provinces must be maintained, or it can be allowed to go down. He did not suggest that it be allowed to go down. We in the maritime provinces realize what a tragedy that would be. As the minister knows, there are about 100,000 of our people who are more or less dependent upon the coal industry in the maritime provinces and upon industries which, in turn, are dependent upon the coal industry.

As far as the setting up of this board is concerned, I am not familiar enough with the coal industry to say whether it should be set up. However I do know that as far as the dominion fuel board was concerned, there were certain parts of Canada, in my own province in particular, where it was felt that the board did not meet the situation. Whether the board proposed to be set up by the minister will meet the situation is something which I am not prepared to say. I know this action was recommended by the Carroll commission and I believe it has also been recommended by the operators and the workers in the coal industry.

There is no question that this industry has been kept alive by subventions and subsidies, but we in the maritime provinces feel that that is not any great favour. The minister mentioned that industry in the central provinces, apart from the coal industry, has been kept on its feet to a great extent and built up by the fiscal policies of this country and by our tariff. All industry has been helped greatly, and there is no reason in the world why the coal industry, which means so much to the eastern and western parts of this country, should not be assisted in the same way. The Carroll commission mentions that in its report

Whether subventions and subsidies can best be handled by a board as suggested by the minister, or in some other way as suggested by the hon. member for Calgary West, is something that I am not prepared to say. I understand that subventions were first given to the Nova Scotia Coal Company about 1930, in the depression years. Those subventions were given as a protection against United States coal. We must realize that Canada cannot produce, or at least she cannot deliver all the coal required in the country. At best we have never provided more than one-third, about 15,000,000 tons out of the 40,000,000 to 45,000,000 tons which are needed by industry and consumers. Therefore it is necessary to bring in coal from the United States. The subventions were given to assist in the movement of coal from Nova Scotia to Montreal and central Canada.

I should like to speak for a moment with reference to my own province. Subventions were given to the mines in Nova Scotia to assist in the introduction of coal into New Brunswick. The mines in New Brunswick depend entirely upon the local market. They sell their coal to the pulpwood industry, to the provincial hydro plants and to the railroads. Sufficient coal is mined in New Brunswick to provide a large portion of these needs. Because of the subventions paid to Nova Scotia mines to assist in the movement of coal into New Brunswick, the industry in New Brunswick has had a most difficult time. Coal from Nova Scotia, with the assistance of subventions, can be sold in New Brunswick more cheaply than New Brunswick coal. The subsidy paid on Nova Scotia coal to the Dominion Coal Company is about $1.67. There is a feeling among the smaller operators in the maritime provinces that the Dominion Coal Company, being a large and strong corporation, can get what they want while the smaller operators have always had a difficult time in getting anywhere near the same treatment as Dosco.

I wish to emphasize that I am not objecting in any way to the subsidies and subventions which have been paid in Nova Scotia, but in so far as the subventions apply to coal that is shipped to New Brunswick, we feel that they constitute an unfair discrimination. We submit that our people have not had the opportunities they should have had.

I should like to ask the minister whether it is the intention to appoint this board on a geographical basis, whether men appointed to the board will be men who understand the coal situation in western Canada, whether they will be men who understand the producers' and consumers' points of view. In New Brunswick the coal situation is entirely different from what it is in any other part of this dominion, and I should like to know whether New Brunswick will have a representative on the board. How many members will constitute the board, and what technical advisers and assistants is it proposed to appoint?

We in the maritimes have been producing fifty-two per cent of the coal that is produced for sale in Canada, and in the sale of that coal the sellers have received about one-third of a cent per ton. But in western Canada, which produce forty-eight per cent of the total for the dominion, the sellers received 19½ cents per ton. That just shows what a great difference there is between the different parts of this dominion. This board will have to be a very wise board indeed. It must understand the situation in all parts of this country. I hope that something will be done to keep the coal industry on its feet and that every section of Canada which depends on the coal industry will receive consideration.

Mr. CHURCH: I have been in favour of protection, bonuses, subventions and subsidies for this great industry of coal ever since I entered this house, so that we might develop in this country a national fuel policy and be dependent no longer on a United States supply, but on a supply of British coal, from Wales, from the maritime provinces in this country and from Alberta. At the time I was ridiculed and laughed at, but I had a powerful newspaper behind me, the Toronto Evening Telegram, which pioneered and was the author of this national fuel policy for Canada. In 1947, in some places we shall be using coal in Canada for ten months of the year on account of the unseasonable weather.

In 1915, when the Right Hon. Stanley Baldwin was president of a great industry in Swansea, Wales, a ship came out and landed a cargo of Welsh coal in Ashbridge's bay, Toronto at the Baldwin granite plate plant. The Evening Telegram spent large sums of money in publicizing this importation of Welsh coal and generally an all-British fuel supply, and I introduced my resolution for a national fuel policy in the house in March, 1923. That same day Hon. Mr. Drury, then premier of Ontario, was in the building and denounced protection as an unmitigated evil that should be torn up by the roots. At that time we had very few supporters among hon. gentlemen opposite for a national fuel policy. I do not see any in the house who were here then. But Hance Logan and the present Mr. Justice Carroll of the coal commission, who was then a member of the house from Cape Breton, supported my resolution. It went to a committee of the House of Commons under the chairmanship of Mr. W. F. Carroll, M.P. That committee made a report, but the report was not adopted until five years later, after the election of 1926. About 1929, the government spent large sums of money by way of bonuses, subventions and subsidies for the coal industry. I give them credit for it, and we can see the results today.

I believe that the minister has done a great deal of good work. I am not one of those who think all the evils and all the good are confined to one party; far from it. I should like to see the functions of this board extended to cover wood peat and other forms of heating, because we shall have a difficult winter. People are going to freeze to death in Canada because of the scarcity of coal and wood. Passing on the train two or three weeks ago, I looked at the coal pile in Ashbridge's bay, Toronto harbour, in my constituency. Normally there will be 600,000 to 800,000 tons of coal piled up at the docks there, but there was very little coal there two or three weeks ago, on account of the strikes and the use of coal in June in some places. The coal situation the world over will be acute this winter. Many in Europe will freeze to death.

I have not the report of the coal commission before me, but I knew the chairman, Mr. Justice Carroll, when he was a member of this house and I had great confidence in him. I believe he has done great work as head of the coal commission, and its report contains a great deal of valuable information, and reveals a lot of labour spent on the problem. I just looked over it the other day; I hope to read it later.

Then think of the great riches of this country in water powers. We have a potential 47,000,000 horse-power in this country, of which only 7,000,000 horse-power has been developed and a portion of that 7,000,000 horse-power is used only seasonally, not for the whole twelve months of the year.

I support the principle of this bill and would like it to include a labour safety clause. I do not want any party to claim credit for it, but I like to pay credit where it is due, and protection was always Conservative doctrine, and in this form of it to pay bonuses, subventions and subsidies to be properly applied to the national development of the country and its resources. My hon. friends to my left were then, after the last election, about fifty-one in numbers in this house led by a very fine man, now a senator and a former cabinet minister, but I did not get very much support from his party at that time when their friends in Toronto, led by Mr. Drury, said that protection was an unmitigated evil.

Now let us get on with the business. In less than six months we shall be having the hardest winter we have ever had.

As I said, I hope the functions of this board will be extended to cover fuel, wood, peat, also cheap light and power. There is no reason why only one-seventh of our potential horse-power should be developed. There should be a national hydro policy for the whole dominion. A long time ago I was surprised to learn that they had no hydro electric policy in British Columbia, but they have established one recently. The province of Quebec is also starting on public ownership of hydro. I hope that in the years to come a national hydro electric policy will be developed for this whole dominion.

In the old days we used to have wood brought down by the old Nipissing railway from south of North Bay. This wood was used for fuel. A lot of it could be used now.

I hope that every effort will be made to see that this board which is to be appointed is the board which will expand itself as years go by and that we may get a national fuel policy which is needed for health purposes and to develop this country.

Mr. JOHNSTON: It is not my intention at this time to speak at any great length, but I should like to say that we must have a fuel policy before the difficulties of the country are solved. It was the hope of every hon. member, and certainly of those in the west who are particularly interested in coal production, that when the coal commission's report was brought down there would be some indication of a national fuel policy. I have gone carefully over the report and, so far as I can find out, there is nothing in it which would bring about a solution of that great problem. Whether the payment of subsidies will be the entire solution I am not sure. From my reading of the report I gather that the commissioners did not favour the idea of a production subsidy.

Like the hon. member for Calgary West, I am not in a position to say whether a production subsidy would be worth while. I do not think anybody is in a position to say that until he knows the actual facts. Certainly from my scrutiny of the report I did not think the commissioners were in a position to tell us, other than to say that conditions in the eastern part of Canada were not as good as they should be. I am not one of those, and never have been, who favour subsidizing inefficiency. It is poor business to start with, and it would be an exceedingly poor policy from the government's point of view.

The government has paid out large subsidies, particularly during the war, to get badly needed production. It subsidized production. During that time the government was spending hundreds of thousands of dollars in subsidies; yet the report revealed that there was not the proper provision in the mines to warrant large payments in view of the fact that the companies themselves did not improve the working and safety conditions of the mines as they should have done. The result was that the miners who were compelled to work in these mines were working under a great handicap and in great danger. Whether the problem can be solved by the payment of subventions remains to be seen. I believe that by setting up this corporation the government would lead one to believe that subventions would be the solution. Whether that will prove to be true I am not certain, but I am certain of this, that whatever method the government intends to use to try to solve our coal problem it will have to see that steady employment is given in the mines. The solution will have to be one under which the miners themselves will be assured of steady employment the year around with sufficient income to keep them in a decent standard of living. That is fundamental. Whether it can be done by subsidy or by subventions I am not sure. It is a certainty that one of the great problems which we find in the west particularly is that of the long transportation haul.

If my memory serves me correctly—and I have hauled a great deal of coal—the mines in Alberta can produce coal at somewhere around $3 a ton. If you go out to the western part of the province in the foothills, I am told by good authority that coal can be put on the cars at around $1.50 a ton because, as the hon. member for Calgary West has indicated, of the great seams of coal in the banks. But whether it is $1.50, $2 or $3 a ton, the point I wish to make is that by the time the coal reaches Ontario there is a vast difference in the price. It jumps from the prices I have indicated to around $15, $16 and $17 a ton. I would assume that the difference is made up in transportation costs and so forth. Whether that can be overcome or not is a problem which remains for the government to solve.

As I have pointed out on many occasions, I think we missed one of the greatest opportunities this country ever had when during war time the government did not see fit to adopt the suggestion that some of us from the west made, namely, to create some industries out where this coal is to be found. If some of our larger industries were encouraged by the government to go out and establish themselves where the fuel is, it would be one of the things which would go a long way toward solving the problem which faces us. It is an easy matter to transport labour into the different parts of the country, much easier than shipping coal these long distances. It seems a strange thing that a country so vast as Canada should have all its major industries centralized in a comparatively small area. In time of war particularly, that is a dangerous state of affairs. From the point of view of safety of the country, it would be a great advantage to have our larger industries scattered throughout the dominion. That is something which should be looked into by the government, and in way it might ease the subvention problem. I am certain of one thing, namely, that when the plan is made the government should pay particular attention to putting the mining industry on a solid and firm business foundation. We remember the days of the depression when the miners worked only 100 days a year. It is true that, while they were working, they received fairly good pay. I remember that when I was teaching in the mining district of Evansburg west of Edmonton—I spent quite a few years out there—the miners worked approximately 100 days a year. One would have to get exceptionally high wages, which they did not get, to carry him over a full year. That is one of the things that the miners fear today. They fear that the season will be extremely short for them, and they are looking ahead to the time when a depression will come upon them.

No matter what the government does, it must see to it that the operation of the mines will be such that the miners will earn enough to carry them over a full year. This will be a big job. I had hoped that when the commission brought down its report there would be something concrete in it for the government and for hon. members to go on in formulating a national fuel policy. I am extremely sorry to see that, in my view, the commission did not so report. The responsibility is on the government. I myself am not convinced that the shifting of the responsibility for this problem from the government to the corporation will be a solution. Something more concrete will have to be done. Nevertheless, when the bill comes down we shall see what is provided in that regard. Until the bill comes down I shall refrain from making any further remarks.

Mr. HARKNESS: Like other speakers who have taken part in this debate, I was greatly disappointed to find that the report did not indicate any national fuel policy or even point out any avenues by which we might reach a satisfactory policy in that regard. I think we all agree that in this country we need a policy which, first, will keep the mines working the year around and, second, will make the country as self-sufficient as possible in coal. In this connection I have thought that we in Canada should do a great deal more in the matter of research to find means to reach these goals. I do not know just what amount of research is being carried on to discover new uses for coal. There is in Ottawa a small plant which carries on a certain amount of research, but I would suggest that plants should be established at the mines and that this is a matter which should receive a considerable amount of attention over and above what it has had so far.

Many people think the eventual solution of our fuel problem, in view of the fact that we have coal at the extremities of the country and none in the central parts where coal is most needed, will take the form of liquefication of fuel. I should like the minister to indicate what is being done in the matter of research into the possibilities along that line, how far they have been explored, and whether there is any idea of establishing pilot plants to devise new uses for coal at the mines on a sufficiently reasonable scale to ascertain whether such operations would be practicable and economic. The establishment of this coal board as called for by the resolution would seem to me to result in considerably increased expenditures without, so far as we have been able to find out, any real improvement in the way in which things are carried on at present.

Before we get through with the bill, we should have some information from the minister as to what the increased expenditure will be as a result of the setting up of this board. I should think it would be considerable, and unless there are reasons which can be advanced to show that a great improvement in the whole coal picture can be brought about by the board, and savings effected by it, the increased expenditure is not warranted.

Mr. COLDWELL: May I say a word on this? We, of course, are supporting this resolution that stands in the name of the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply, but I hope that the appointment of a board of this description will not be considered to have solved the problem. You cannot solve a problem by merely appointing a board. The board has to do more than just sit.

I agree with what the hon. member for Bow River has said, and I do not want to repeat what he has said, that the solution of the problem depends in great part on the manner in which we can place the industry on its feet, provide the people working in that industry with a decent standard of living, and utilize our resources for the benefit of the country as a whole.

This is, of course, a phase of economic planning. It frequently comes before the house in various forms, but it indicates over and over again that we must get down to a consideration of plans. The hon. member for Calgary East indicated that clearly when he spoke of the necessity for going into various methods of utilizing coal in new ways. As we know, in European countries over the past number of years a great deal of low grade coal has been utilized for all kinds of new purposes. With our hunt for oil, gasoline and so on, perhaps economic and cheap methods can be found by means of research, of producing gasoline and motor fuels from coal, besides the hundred and one things that we know are derived from that product. I have been surprised in years past to discover the number of products obtained from coal, such as dyes, sweetening material, flavourings, medicines and the thousand and one things one had no conception of before.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): The Germans fought the last two years of the war on gasoline produced from coal.

Mr. COLDWELL: That is right, and a good deal of it was a very low grade of coal, brown coal from eastern Germany. That was the basis for a great deal of their gasoline. We in this country are blessed with an enormous quantity of coal. I have seen various estimates of the quantity of coal we have in Canada, sometimes the estimate being put at one-eleventh and sometimes one-fourteenth of all the known coal in the world, and that Canadian coal is in the area we now know as the coal-bearing region of Canada.

Everyone in this house is anxious to see this board established, but it must function so that we may have, not only a coal policy, but a national fuel policy for a country which needs fuel very badly indeed at most seasons of the year.

Mr. HOWE: The hon. member for Calgary West asked a pertinent question. Freely translated, his question was, why is a dominion coal board any better than the dominion fuel board? The answer is that the coal board will have much wider terms of reference. I was a member of the dominion fuel board from 1935 until it was succeeded by the emergency coal production board in 1942, and therefore I know something about its workings in that period. The board was called together perhaps four times a year. There was an efficient manager or secretary—

Mr. GREEN: Who did all the work.

Mr. HOWE: —who did all the work. The board set the policy; he continued as long as he could under that policy, and then devised another policy and called the board together to approve the revision. At the end of the year we approved an appropriate estimate for the new fiscal year. The work of the board was wholly confined to carrying out the subvention policy which was formulated in 1922 and carried on with modifications until 1942.

It has been said that the subvention policy has been satisfactory, but that does not mean that it has been the cure-all for Canada's coal problem. It was a subvention policy which allowed coal to move from the maritimes into Quebec and sometimes into Ontario and, more recently, allowed a small tonnage of coal to move out of western Canada into northern Ontario. However, hon. members are aware that the subvention policy did not prevent the coal mines in the maritime provinces from being reduced to a working week of three days in certain years in the thirties. They know also that the subvention policy did not make for continuous employment in western Canada in certain periods. In other words, it was a good policy as far as it went, but it did not solve all the nation's coal problems.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): No one worked full time in the thirties. Isn't that the answer?

Mr. HOWE: Some of us did. I did myself, and I think my hon. friend was fairly busy.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Dodging the sheriff.

Mr. HOWE: There are several coal problems. Subventions helped in the marketing problem. They have helped to dispose of coal and they help indirectly in the problem of finding continuous employment for miners. But there are limits to their effectiveness. For example, it would seem reasonable that by subventions the practice suggested by the hon. member for Calgary West would be effective, and that it is lack of money that prevents us from using Alberta coal in Toronto. That is not the situation. The physical capacity of our railroads to move western coal into Ontario is limited to about 1,000,000 tons, and with all the money that we could use in 1947 the quantity we were able to move into Ontario was not much more than half that.

Mr. GREEN: One million tons a year.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I mentioned North Bay, not Toronto.

Mr. HOWE: That does not matter. When it gets to North Bay it may as well continue to Toronto so far as the limitation of transportation is concerned. Western coal can be moved fairly freely in July and August, but those are not months in which people buy coal, for domestic use at any rate. In September, October, November and usually in December, when people are buying coal, there is a tremendously heavy eastbound movement of wheat, which not only takes all the boxcars and rolling stock the railways can put into western Canada but also keeps railway operation at a very high level. That is the situation affecting western Canada.

However, the same situation does not apply in the maritime provinces. While the St. Lawrence river is open, it is possible to move into central Canada any quantities of coal which the maritimes have as a surplus. Therefore the subvention policy is a substantial help in solving two of the problems—that is, the problem of finding markets and the problem of maintaining continuous labour—but it does not help materially in solving the problem of Ontario and Quebec, which is one of obtaining the necessary supplies of coal from one source or another, and very largely from outside this country.

Mr. JOHNSTON: Can the minister say what is the cost of transporting a ton of coal from Alberta to Ontario?

Mr. HOWE: I cannot. The government provides a subsidy of $2 a ton and the coal moves with that subsidy. Whether or not the railroads break even on the movement, I cannot say.

Mr. JOHNSTON: Is it possible for the government to find out?

Mr. HOWE: It all depends on what is considered as cost. If cost is calculated as the cost of supplying a few extra boxcars on the end of a freight train which has to operate anyway, that is one cost. If it is calculated to include interest and depreciation on the roadbed, that is another cost. It is difficult to segregate railroad costs as between commodities.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Is that not being done to the south of us? The railroads there are working on a cost basis, under the interstate commerce commission.

Mr. HOWE: They may have broken the costs down, but I would not attempt to do so. Therefore I say I do not know.

Then my hon. friend asked why this commission should take the form of a corporation. I shall have to get a more satisfactory answer to that question than I can give offhand. All I can say is that for a commission to operate and do business it seems to be necessary that they be formed into a corporation. All the commissions I know of that operate around Ottawa are formed into corporations; for example, the national research council is a corporation; as is the national harbours board. I could mention others. I do not know why, other than that a corporation is a convenient form. It provides convenience of accounting and an accepted pattern for doing business that is lacking when three men simply form themselves into a committee. The old dominion fuel board was a committee. It met a few times a year. Our efficient secretary told us what we should do, and we felt no particular responsibility except giving the decision of the moment. A corporation is required to meet at regular intervals, and has definite responsibilities which confine its activities more directly to the problem in hand.

Mr. HARKNESS: The pension commission does that without incorporation.

Mr. GREEN: And the war veterans allowance board.

Mr. HOWE: That may be so.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): The minister is going to get a better answer than that, and he will need one.

Mr. KNOWLES: It is similar to the maritime commission which was being set up yesterday.

Mr. HOWE: That is right.

Then a question was asked about the geographical aspect, whether the committee would be appointed representing geographical sections. There are other factors to be taken into consideration. For instance, we shall need men with mining experience and men with marketing experience. The point is that the board should be representative of the problems of the various areas of Canada; the nature of the appointments must be both geographical and functional. Those considerations will be taken into account.

Mr. BROOKS: Can the minister tell us how many will constitute the board?

Mr. HOWE: It will be a board of seven, of which only one is a full-time member. The others will meet at regular intervals, as provided in the act.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): He is like the secretary of the old fuel board. He will run it.

An hon. MEMBER: With more latitude.

Mr. HARKNESS: And will get paid twice as much, no doubt.

Mr. HOWE: Well, I do not know about that.

Then there was the question raised by the hon. member for Broadview which is also a pertinent one: Why not include other fuels in the responsibilities of the board? I will admit at once that there is one other fuel which might very well be included, namely, liquid fuel. The position of liquid fuel is very similar to that of coal, in that the larger part of Canada's requirements must be procured from outside. We are facing two difficult years, in so far as fuel oil is concerned. The shortage in fuel oil for next winter will be serious indeed and is likely to cause serious difficulties to a great many people. When the bill is before the house, I think I may offer an amendment to it. At the moment the bill confines itself to coal. I may offer for the consideration of the house an amendment which will include liquid fuel. I will not, however, press the amendment unless it meets with general acceptance.

There are certain aspects of gas as fuel which are interprovincial. On the other hand, the provinces have the gas problem well in hand and, I think, are better able to handle it than a central board would be.

A good deal of research has been done on coal. Roughly, I think the result of that research on this continent is to discard the hydrogenization method of producing gasoline from coal, as being too expensive to be practical in the near future. The major oil companies in the United States have conducted active research into that problem for a good many years. Recently they have discarded that line of research, and are now devoting their research toward making gasoline out of natural gas. That seems to be quite feasible. I think research on that problem would be of great interest to Canada in view of the large surplus of natural gas which is at the present time being produced in western Canada. However, it will be the duty of the coal commission to initiate research into coal and into fuels and to pursue any avenue which may open up in that direction.

I think I have said sufficient for the resolution stage, Mr. Chairman, and would ask that the resolution be adopted.

Mr. KNOWLES: Will the board be responsible to the minister and, through him, to parliament?

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES: To what minister?

Mr. HOWE: At the moment the responsibility for coal is in the Department of Reconstruction and Supply. In time, I presume it will go to the Department of Mines and Resources.

[Mr. Howe.]

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Howe thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 340, to establish the dominion coal board.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE

CROP FAILURE PAYMENTS—AWARDS TO FARMERS WITH MINIMUM PRODUCTION

Right Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture) moved that the house go into committee on Bill No. 261, to amend the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, 1939.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Golding in the chair.

On section 1—Definition of "crop failure."

Mr. GARDINER: This bill has been before the committee on agriculture, and every section has been read carefully. The committee suggests three amendments. The first is to section 1, subsection 3, paragraph (e): that in the second last line the word "farm" be inserted between the words "cooperative" and "association".

Mr. HOWE: I so move.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 2—Sum awarded as assistance.

Mr. GARDINER: There is an amendment in line 26 of the bill: that the last word in the line, "continuously", be deleted.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Does that come from the committee?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. HOWE: I so move.

Mr. BRACKEN: Were those decisions pretty well unanimous?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, they were unanimous.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Section 3 agreed to.

On section 4—Regulations.

Mr. GARDINER: There is an amendment to this section; that the word "farm" be inserted between the words "cooperative" and "association" in paragraph (b). It is the same amendment that was made to section 1.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Section 5 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CRIMINAL CODE

RACE MEETINGS—ADMINISTRATION AND SUPERVISION OF PARI-MUTUEL BETTING

Right Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture, for the Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. 268, to amend the criminal code.

He said: This is a bill which comes from the senate, where it has already been fully considered. It contains three amendments of importance, one on page 1, the second on page 2, and the third on page 3. The first has to do with an amendment we put through the session before last, I think it was, based upon actions taken during the war. Many years ago, I believe in 1912, a bill was brought in limiting horse racing, and allowing so many days each year on certain tracks. When that bill was brought in it was declared that all charters then in existence were continued in existence. During war time provision was made to transfer racing from tracks which were being used for other purposes for the time being to certain other tracks. Permission was granted for the transfer of perhaps seven days of racing from one track to another, and that was continued under legislation brought in two sessions ago.

In administering the act we discovered that some persons apparently found it was possible to make some profit by utilizing old charters, many of which had not operated since some time before 1912, and claiming the right to have seven or fourteen days of horse racing on the basis of those charters by transferring that racing from what had been an operating track at one time to some other track. When these requests were coming before me from time to time I finally concluded that I should not permit these old charters to be utilized for this purpose. So it was decided to bring the matter more up to date and to eliminate the possibility of using these old charters to transfer racing from one track to another, by stating that old charters not operative between January 1, 1938 and May 19, 1947 could not be used for the purpose of transferring racing from one track to another.

The second matter has to do with the holding of eight races daily under a charter. The old act provided that there could be eight races, one of which had to be a steeplechase. Very few horses in Canada are trained for steeplechasing, and the provision now is that of the eight races one may be a steeplechase, though not necessarily so.

The other provision makes it possible for trotting races to be held in the evening or under floodlights, as well as in the afternoon. These are the three main provisions. The bill has been through the senate, where it was carefully considered, and I submit it for second reading.

Mr. KNOWLES: Six o'clock.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Perhaps I might tell the house the business for the evening. We shall continue with the bill my colleague the Minister of Agriculture was just discussing; then order No. 25, the bill to establish the Canadian maritime commission; then supply in agriculture and national health and welfare, and we hope to finish them all tonight.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. SPEAKER: The question before the house is the motion by Mr. Gardiner for the second reading of Bill No. 268.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Golding in the chair.

On section 1—Betting, pool-selling and bookmaking.

Mr. FLEMING: There is one point upon which I wish to have the minister's assurance. He will recall that when the amendment of 1946 was before the house a question was raised concerning the rights of certain associations which were holding races. I should like to be clear that in the present bill there is nothing which impinges upon the rights which were carefully preserved to those associations in 1946. The minister will recall that representations were made at that time by some of these associations which felt that the form in which the amendment of 1946 was being introduced would have the effect of depriving them of some of their rights. In the form in which the bill was finally adopted those rights were carefully preserved.

Mr. GARDINER: There is in this bill nothing which impinges upon the rights which were jeopardized when the bill came here from the senate the last time. It will be recalled that that bill was changed somewhat in this house and it is in the same form now.

Mr. HARKNESS: What is the effect of the changes which are being made. I refer particularly to those at the end of paragraph (b) of section 1.

Mr. GARDINER: The amendment provides that trotting and pacing races may be held in the evening under floodlights.

Mr. HARKNESS: I was referring to the words "betting" and "system" which appear at the top of page 3 of the bill. Apparently it is provided that betting must stop before the horses have passed a certain point.

Mr. GARDINER: They are just clarifying amendments to agree with what is now being done.

Mr. McKAY: Why are not other types of racing such as dog and automobile racing included in this bill?

Mr. GARDINER: The only explanation I can give is that the government decided that at this time we should not provide for further pari-mutuel betting in Canada.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported.

MARITIME COMMISSION

PROVISIONS FOR DUTIES AND FUNCTIONS UNDER CANADA SHIPPING ACT

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply) moved the second reading of Bill No. 336, to establish the Canadian maritime commission.

Mr. GREEN: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I am amazed that the government should try to have second reading of this bill this evening. As Your Honour knows, the resolution went through late last night; when it went through I asked the Minister of Reconstruction whether we would have some time to consider the terms of the bill and I think I mentioned at least two or three days. His answer was, "Oh, yes; that is quite all right." There was no suggestion of the bill coming on for second reading today. I did not get my copy until I was sitting here this afternoon when it came through the mail. There was absolutely no chance to consider it this afternoon and we have just had the supper recess. There has been no opportunity for any of us to prepare to debate the bill.

Furthermore, I understand that it has not yet been printed in French. Just this evening I sent out for a copy in French and the report came back that the bill was not yet available in French. I submit that that alone makes it impossible to have second reading this evening. This is an extremely important measure for us who come from maritime ridings, and I submit that second reading should not be called this evening.

Mr. SPEAKER: If hon. members want to discuss the bill on the second reading, if I were to put the motion for second reading it would then be open to any hon. member to move the adjournment of the debate.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. GREEN: But my point is, Mr. Speaker, that the government should not be asking that this bill be called for second reading this evening.

Mr. HOWE: The leader of the house announced at six o'clock that the bill would be proceeded with this evening and I had understood that there was no objection. However, the government has no desire to press the matter if hon. gentlemen are not ready for second reading now. This is a simple bill, and easily understood.

Mr. GREEN: It is a blank cheque bill.

Mr. HOWE: For everything except money.

Mr. FRASER: There is money involved.

Mr. HOWE: I have no objection to calling another order, Mr. Speaker. We will take supply, Department of Agriculture.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: On a point of privilege, we were told that we would get the old age pensions bill this evening.

Mr. HOWE: That will be on the agenda for tomorrow.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: But when shall we get the bill so that we may know what we are discussing?

Mr. HOWE: I am not in charge of that bill and I cannot speak as to that. But the convenience of hon. gentlemen will be considered.

Motion stands.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Golding in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Marketing service—

25. Dairy products, $514,340.

Right Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): Probably it would assist the members of the committee and perhaps shorten the discussion if I were to call attention to the items under "Demobilization and Reconversion—Agriculture", on page 68 of the estimates. They are items, 485, Agricultural Prices Support Act; 486, agricultural supplies board; 487, programmes to encourage the production of essential supplies; 488, feeds administrator; 489, fertilizers and pesticides administrator; 490, seeds administrator; 491, dairy products board; 492, meat board; 493, special products board. I call attention to these items, because discussion on the contracts with Britain should come under these items which we shall proceed with when we have finished with the items on marketing and specials; or we could take the items on page 68 first, whichever is desired. I mentioned that to facilitate the discussion of these items, which are, after all, the general items we have always had in connection with marketing even before the war.

Mr. CHARLTON: Since we were debating cheese last night I think we should continue with that discussion. In his remarks last night the minister gave us the number of cheese factories in Ontario as follows: in 1943, 561; in 1944, 556; in 1945, 547. The hon. member for Lanark gave us the figures for 1946 for eastern Ontario by saying that twenty-three cheese factories had been closed down in the eastern part of the province. That makes at least thirty-seven fewer cheese factories in Ontario than there were in 1943. But in spite of that, the minister insists that the lateness of the season was the main reason for the reduced production of cheese. Let me quote his words at page 4225 of Hansard:

I should repeat what I said earlier in the discussion. Cheese production is a month late this year because of the nature of the season. That in itself largely accounts for the fact that cheese is down as compared with butter. My hon. friend shakes his head, but I have heard him use the argument time after time since he has been here in the house that price has something to do with this. Everyone admits that cheese is higher in price than butter at the present time, and much higher. If price is the only thing that counts, or the return that the farmer can get for it, then cheese production should certainly be higher. But everyone who knows anything about farming in Ontario knows the production season is at least a month late. A month or a month and a half from now we could make a much more valuable comparison than we can at the present time.

The lateness of the season should have nothing to do with the freshening date of cows and that is what controls the production of cheese in Ontario. Cows are largely milked during the summer months and dried during the winter months. Pasturage has been very good this spring. So that the lateness of the season has very little to do with the reduced production of cheese. The minister says that I shook my head last night. I still insist that price is the main factor in the reduced production of cheese and I make no apology for bringing that fact before the committee frequently. I think the minister is from ten to eleven months out in his theory, because for most of Ontario the production season will be almost one year late, for very few farmers have crops in now.

Cheese has been one of our main exports for many years, and it is an important factor in the dairying industry in this country. It has been the best outlet for our surplus milk products to date. I think the minister should be fair with us and admit that price is the main factor and he should not try to blame the reduced production on the lateness of the season. He should do something with respect to our lucrative export market for cheese.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: When the ceiling was taken off butter, cooperatives and other organizations were told the date-line on which their prices would be set. In other words, they could not take advantage of any price increase.

Mr. GARDINER: That was at May 1, yes.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: What I am getting at is this, many of the cooperatives or other organizations, whether private industries or cooperatives—I am interested in cooperatives —had a lot of butter on hand. I do not know why we should not be permitted to take advantage of the increase when, according to this morning's press, a man named Bickell made $4 million or $5 million in one year on gold. He defies the government and says that he will take the increase in price. Will farmers be put in the same position if they defy the government? In other words, will they get away with it, or will they be sued? I am interested in Mr. Bickell of Toronto if he gets away with making $4 million or $5 million and hoards his gold, and I should like to know why the farmer is not allowed to take advantage of the profit that will be derived in an increase in the price of butter.

With regard to butter the government set a date-line and above that date-line you could not get the advantage of the profit that may be derived from the butter. As I say, according to this morning's press, this man Bickell in Toronto says he will hoard the gold and take the increase. I want to know what the Department of Agriculture is going to do to see that the farmer gets the benefit of the increase.

Mr. GARDINER: The announcement that was made in June was made for the purpose of protecting the farmer. The butter which was dealt with in that announcement was not in the hands of the farmer; it was in the hands of the person or organization that stored it. That organization might be a farmers' cooperative, or it might be that the creamery which was holding the butter was operated by farmers. But if it were, it would be possible for it to benefit to the same extent as others benefited. The fact is that the undertaking given was that if a group of persons who were storing butter had, at that time, some six or seven million pounds they would not be allowed to take advantage of the increase which was made at that time in the price of butter, that is, the ten cents that it was increased by the action which was taken by the government. That advance in price would not be given to the persons who were holding the butter. The government declared it would provide means whereby those storing the butter would not be permitted to gain.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: This is important to my province. In my section we have a large cooperative of which I am a member. We have a large amount of butter in storage. Some of my own colleagues in the house told me that I wanted to profiteer as a cooperative on the butter in storage because of the increase in price. This butter was produced by the farmers themselves. It is our own butter, and we have it in storage in our own cooperative. If we are to be told that there is a date-line and for the sake of argument butter was selling at forty cents a pound, and then went to fifty cents a pound, but we cannot take advantage of that, but we must go back to the forty cents a pound on our own butter, and if at the same time this man Bickell in Toronto, who made $5 million or $6 million profit in one year on gold, says that he is going to defy the government, according to this morning's press, I for one wish to protest. He said that he was going to hold the gold, and his only excuse is that the government knew he had the gold. The government knew we had the butter. Do not make any mistake about that. The government knew how much butter we had to the pound. The statement which the minister has given is not good enough so far as I am concerned. I knew what the minister would say long before he said it, but I want to know whether the farmers of the Fraser Valley, in whom I am particularly interested—and the same applies to farmers all over Canada—are to be held to a date-line and told that they cannot take advantage of a rise in price. I know that the Minister of Agriculture has nothing to do with gold; it comes under the finance minister; but, so far as I am concerned, the Minister of Agriculture is in charge of and is responsible to the farmers of Canada for everything pertaining to agriculture.

Mr. GARDINER: What really did happen was that the government had already paid the farmers 8½ cents on their butter, or ten cents a pound on their butterfat. They had already paid that to every farmer in Canada, including those in this cooperative. The only action the government took was to make it impossible for someone who happened to have butter on the first of May to make another 8½ cents or ten cents a pound on it. It would not have been the farmers who would have benefited.

Mr. DROPE: The Minister of Agriculture has just made a statement about the 8½ cents paid on butter. He said it was already paid and it was a matter of the government protecting the people and recovering a portion of it from the persons who were holding the butter.

I should like to ask the minister a question about cheese. This afternoon when I asked the question the minister said that we would get an answer tonight. What is the policy of the government in regard to these overseas contracts for cheese? Does the government propose to requisition cheese to fill these contracts? That should be cleared up so that the cheese producers will know where they stand in this matter. An answer to this question would probably clarify the whole dairy picture, since so much depends on cheese, a product which is exported. Will the minister make a statement?

Mr. GARDINER: If the hon. member would not mind, the item under which that is dealt with is 491, dairy products board. If the discussion on it could be left until we reach that item I shall discuss it fully then.

Mr. HERRIDGE: What is the present position with regard to the export of tree fruits this year?

Mr. GARDINER: The present position with regard to tree fruits is this, and particularly with regard to apples: the bill that we put through earlier in the session made it possible for the government so to arrange that an agreement could be entered into with Britain to take a certain percentage of our apples this year. The board that is concerned with that matter, which we undertook at that time to work through, had discussions with the government shortly after the measure was put through the house and suggested that it would like to have a contract entered into as between Britain and the special products board which had negotiated similar contracts before with regard to other products. The matter was taken up with the representatives of the British food ministry, and it was suggested to us that the time was not opportune to discuss the matter. That was in the early part of May; it was not known then what the condition of the British apple crop would be, nor was it known what the condition of the Canadian apple crop was likely to be, and they preferred to have the discussions opened at a later day. I expect that these discussions will take place in July. We have not carried the discussion further because we did not think the time was opportune to press it any further. There is a perfect understanding as between the apple board and the government with regard to the matter.

Mr. CHARLTON: Does the minister wish to discuss pork and bacon products on this item or on item 492?

Mr. GARDINER: No; on the meat board item.

Mr. CHARLTON: Not under this item?

Mr. GARDINER: No.

Mr. HERRIDGE: I should like to ask a question. In 1945 I brought up the question of the Kootenay poultry producers who wish to have an inspector appointed in the interior of British Columbia. The minister said that the staff was not available and that he was looking into the matter. I brought it up again in 1946 and received a similar reply. During this year the poultry producers of Kootenay West intend forming a cooperative egg grading station to be established at Nelson, which would perform a useful function for all poultry producers. There has been a steadily growing poultry industry there. Some of the minister's officials have complete knowledge of the situation. Again, on behalf of the poultrymen, I urge upon the minister the necessity for an egg inspector to be situated in the interior of British Columbia. I would like him to say what is being done in that respect now.

Mr. GARDINER: My information is that it is now under consideration. I am not able to state anything more definite than that with regard to it. It is being given consideration at present by the officials.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I was wondering why this should be $25,000?

Mr. GARDINER: As regards appointments made outside the civil service, the amount with which to pay them cannot exceed $15,000 out of the $25,000. The remainder would have to be utilized through expenditures carried on under appointees of the civil service commission. We did not use it to any great extent during the war, but the reason for it is that we desired, in connection with marketing, in such matters as were referred to last night and again shortly today, to send to Britain men who were officials of farm organizations in order that they might obtain first-hand information as to what type of product was required there, and also acquaint the British with the nature of production here and gain knowledge as to any improvements that could be made so as to meet their requirements. We did send two or three such parties to Britain prior to the war, and it is anticipated that we may send some now that the war is over. They are not civil service appointees; the appointments are made by the government from among the farm organizations.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I was just wondering what it was.

30. Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act and water storage, $3,000,000.

Mr. MacNICOL: I rise to support this item as strongly as I possibly can, as well as the one following it, for they go together. I am disappointed that it does not call for twice as much, $6 million instead of $3 million. I am afraid that the minister is a bit timid, although I wish to thank him for going as far as he has gone. Coming as he does from the west and having his heart in the west, as I believe he has, he could easily, I am sure, have envisaged an expansion that would have taken at least $6 million instead of $3 million. For that reason I am disappointed that the amount is not much larger. Of course, I notice that under item 570 there is an amount of $5 million, but it does not say where that $5 million is to be spent. If it were to be spent under the Minister of Agriculture I would be confident that a good portion of it would go to the west. Since it is not in his department, I fear the west will not get its proportion out of it.

I am not going to speak at great length tonight, because I have spoken on this subject before, but this year will commemorate a wonderful event. On July 24 next, in the city of Salt Lake, Utah, will be commemorated the hundredth anniversary of the inauguration of irrigation on the continent of North America. Two days before the 24th of July, 1847, namely on July 22, the Mormon brigades were approaching the future site of that city. The leader of the Mormon brigade, Brigham Young, sent forward two or three men, led by Orson Pratt, and told them that when they arrived in the valley they were to dam a river flowing out of the mountains into that valley. The leader of the Mormon brigade himself and a major portion of the party arrived on the 24th, and this year that arrival will be celebrated by a great demonstration at a large monument which has been erected in Salt Lake City and which I hope myself to see late in October when I am on my way to the national reclamation association's meeting at Phoenix, Arizona.

That event inaugurated irrigation on the continent of America, and within two or three days after July 24, 1847, five acres had been reclaimed and put under irrigation. With them it was an absolute necessity. The season was late, but of course the climate was favourable. The soil was exactly the same as we have in Alberta and Saskatchewan, wonderful soil that will grow anything, but it was without water. They began at once to work; they worked very hard, and in the ensuing eighteen years, that is to say up to 1865, they had constructed over 1,000 miles of irrigation canals and had reclaimed roughly 150,000 acres of land.

The results have been phenomenal. Anyone who knows Utah knows it is largely a mountainous state, with tremendous mountains and a few valleys, one of which is the great Salt Lake valley; yet, although it has only an area of 84,000 square miles—that is not a large area—the population today is about 550,000. That is a remarkable demonstration of what can result from an irrigation programme, and I am convinced that the same results would accrue in both Alberta and Saskatchewan if this house would support the minister—I believe it would—in an endeavour to inaugurate a programme comparable with what has been accomplished over there.

Last fall I had the high honour—it was a high honour to me, a very humble person—to be invited by the national reclamation bureau of the department at Washington to attend a function at Omaha, at which I learned a great deal about the tremendous results, beneficial results they have been too, that have accrued throughout the seventeen dry western states by water conservation and irrigation. There are seventeen states that are afflicted with low moisture, like our own western provinces. When the function was over I was invited to go with a body of engineers and statisticians, which I was glad to do, to survey the great improvements in the valley of the Platte river. The Platte river is very much like the Saskatchewan river. It has two great branches, the North Platte and the South Platte. They both rise in the mountains and join away down in Nebraska, flowing into the Missouri river, much like the Saskatchewan. We have two great branches rising in our own Rocky mountains and flowing down, joining in the province of Saskatchewan and on into Lake Winnipeg.

I am in deadly earnest in my desire to do anything I can, as long as I am in public life, to assist in the reclamation of the western provinces and to further the whole economy of those provinces. And it can be done through irrigation. On that journey up and down the Platte river valley we ascended right up into the mountains. There were reservoirs 10,000 or more feet high up in the mountains on the North Platte particularly, and on the South Platte about 12,000 feet high in the mountains, to the everlasting springs from which the water rises and flows on down across the prairies. Many gigantic dams and reservoirs have been constructed there. I am not going to describe them as I should like to do, because I do not want to hold up the minister's estimates. On the North Platte, in the mountains, there are four gigantic dams. Up in the mountains themselves there are three gigantic dams, and there is one down in the foothills, namely, the Seminoe, the Pathfinder, the Alcova, the Kingsley and the Guernsey. The first three reservoirs conserve about 2,500,000 acre feet of water which is being used down on the dried-out prairies; the fourth, the Kingsley, contains over 2,000,000 acre feet of water; the next one, the Guernsey, contains about 50,000 acre feet. I am sure that altogether on the North Platte over 5,000,000 acre feet of water are contained in the reservoirs for irrigation purposes. On the South Platte something marvellous has been done.

I must confess that I am not in favour of diverting water from one watershed into another, but what is done in the United States is not for me to criticize. However, a branch of the Colorado river was diverted and the water taken through the high mountains, through a thirteen-mile tunnel. The amount of water taken through there is 550 cubic feet per second. It is pumped up to the level of the tunnel. Once through the mountains, it goes down 2,900 feet, passing through five power-houses on the way. In the course of its descent it produces 250,000 horse-power, part of which, namely, that from the first power-house in the foothills, goes back over the mountains to supply the power that pumps the water up. It is the only place I know of where perpetual motion is achieved as a result of electricity.

East of the mountains themselves there are three large reservoirs, the Horsetooth, Carter lake and Flatiron. These three together conserve water which comes through the mountains to the extent of 350,000 acre feet. From them the water flows out through the irrigation canals. The transformation there has been stupendous. I should like it if this whole house could be taken to the Platte basin so that they could see with their own eyes the marvellous transformation which has been made in those three states of Colorado, Nebraska and Wyoming; they are states which are just as dry as the driest part of southern Alberta or the driest part of Saskatchewan. In many cases the water must be pumped up. It can be done in Saskatchewan. When I was making a survey between Elbow on the Saskatchewan and Moose Jaw and Regina, someone asked me if the water could be pumped up to irrigate the higher areas. It could be. It has been done over there in the United States, and the results have been stupendous.

In a word, what are the results? If one travels west across our own prairies, after leaving Winnipeg the next place of any consequence is Portage la Prairie, and then Brandon. Then you go a long distance until you come to Regina. From Regina the next place is Moose Jaw. Then you go another long distance to Swift Current. Then from Swift Current you go to Medicine Hat where you enter a really dried-out area. It is pitiable to see the territory around Medicine Hat; it is magnificent land but without water. Then, after another long distance, you come to Lethbridge. That, I believe, is somewhere near 800 miles, using an arbitrary number, in which we have those few cities, every one of them struggling for life, except Lethbridge, because the country roundabout, although it is productive, lacks water. It may have a good deal this year, but we cannot count on years like this. We have too much water in Ontario this year, but we do not want to count on this very often.

In the same distance, Mr. Chairman, in the Platte basin there are forty fine towns and cities. All of them are rich; all of them are growing and all of them are extremely prosperous. All roundabout is an agricultural area the like of which I never saw before. If one drives into any of these cities in the Platte basin, what does one find? Take, for instance, Scottsbluff. I suppose very few hon. members have ever heard of Scottsbluff, but I drove into it at night time from another city on the prairies called Alliance, and I thought I was going into New York city. for ten miles out of Scottsbluff every farmhouse, barn and farmer's yard were lit up. I asked the chauffeur, on one occasion when we were about eight miles out of Scottsbluff if we were in the city. "Oh, no," he said, "we have eight miles yet to go." That power is produced as the water tumbles down from one level to a lower, so that not only do they have irrigation which produces tremendous crops and provides ample fodder for all their large herds—and their herds are extremely large—but it produces electric power. We can do the same thing in the west.

If one wants to see a demonstration of what is being done in the west in the way of power production, he just needs to start at Banff and go as far as the city of Calgary. I believe the company is called the Calgary Power Company. The water coming down the Bow basin passes through three, if not four, power-houses and produces a great deal of electricity. That can continue on down the river. Much of these prairies can not only be irrigated and at least three to five million acres reclaimed but can be lit up. I know of no other way in which we can save these prairies. It is the most heart-breaking thing to read that in the last five years, in the three prairie provinces in Canada—Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta—the population has decreased by 104,000 souls. This means that our three prairie provinces, which have a combined area of 705,000 square miles, have gone down to approximately 2,350,000 persons.

What has happened in the Platte basin? I believe that Colorado, Nebraska and Wyoming have a combined area of about 278,000 square miles or thereabouts. But those three states have a population of 2,700,000 as compared with the population in our three provinces in the west. If our three western provinces are to be reclaimed there must be a similar programme undertaken there. I am convinced of this, and I would give my strongest support to any such programme. I do not care what government it is that does it; any government that will bring in a programme to reclaim these prairie provinces I will support to the limit. What has been the result in the United States? Just as I have said. On those 278,000 square miles there are more than 300,000 more people living on those bald-headed United States prairies, and part of them covered with mountains, than on our 705,000 square miles in our own three western provinces.

If the same ratio of population were distributed over Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta as now live in Nebraska, Colorado and Wyoming, our three prairie provinces would have a population of 7,000,000. They should have that population, and will have it if they get fair play. What does that mean? It means another forty towns and cities as firm buyers of products made in the east. I like to couple up both east and west, because the more the prairies grow, the more their cities and towns boom and prosper, the better it is for us here. In many addresses I have delivered during the last year both in the east and in the west in the advocacy of programmes such as this, I have found everyone unanimously in favour of reclamation both in the maritime provinces and in the west.

The minister of course knows how far he can go, but I am sure he, as a westerner would have far more influence in the cabinet than anyone else—and so he should have—as far as the western reclamation programme goes. I wish this whole reclamation programme were under his department. It is now divided between the reconstruction department and agriculture; but the problems, the needs and the requirements of the prairies are matters in which his voice should be paramount in the cabinet. To me it is a terrible tragedy, as I said a moment ago, to see the population go down and down because, Mr. Chairman, that means fewer buyers for the threshing machines and agricultural equipment made in your own fine little towns of Seaforth, Clinton, Goderich, and other eastern centres. But if the population went up instead of down it would mean more buyers and more jobs down here. We in Ontario and Quebec go forward as these outlying parts of the country go forward. The man who cannot see that we all expand together cannot see very much.

The matter of water conservation and irrigation is not a matter of cost, it is an extremely sound investment, as I proved a moment ago by pointing out the increase in population in those three dried-out western states of the United States. Over there they are so thrilled with their towns and villages in the dried-out areas, always growing and expanding; towns and cities like Scottsbluff; Greeley, Alliance, and I could name a dozen or two more, each with many secondary industries. We should have exactly the same thing in our own west. Every town and city in Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba should have several times the secondary industries they have today; and they would have those industries if they could get water for the prairies. And they can get it; the Saskatchewan river can supply it.

[Mr. MacNicol.]

So I support this vote, as I will support the other vote under the reconstruction department when it is brought in. I hope the minister will press hard not only for the completion of the dam on the St. Mary river, as he will be doing in a moment or two, but for the construction of other dams. Why allow all that God-given water, that rich resource of water, to flow down to the sea and do no good as it moves across the prairies? So it is a delight on my part, knowing, as I believe I do, what can be achieved out there, to support this and any other vote that will mean reclamation and conservation of our own western prairies.

I expect that when I come back from Phoenix next fall I shall have a more extended story to tell, because when I am down there I shall thoroughly survey the marvellous transformation that has taken place in Arizona, Nevada and southern California, where today they are spending or rather investing millions of dollars. One has only to look at the gigantic works they are completing to increase the productivity of their soil to realize the benefits that will accrue from the programmes they are carrying on right now. I believe they are so satisfied with the tremendous achievements that have so far been completed that they are now initiating another great programme, on which they have many engineers working, for the reclamation of the whole Missouri valley. That is expected to cost about $2 billion, and they expect to increase the population of that valley by several millions. From the many miles I have travelled on the lower Missouri river, it seems to flow very largely through a flat country, where there would not seem to be many opportunities for the development of power; but their programme calls for the development of over 2,000,000 horse-power of electrical energy on the Missouri river and the reclamation of an additional 5,000,000 acres of land. Just think what that will mean, taking 100 acres per farm. That will mean 50,000 farms, which, at the Colorado average of nearly twenty people to each 100 including those in towns and cities, would mean a tremendous increase in population. The average here in Canada is from five to ten; so just look at what it would mean if we should ever reach the Colorado average of twenty per 100 acres. So I say this is not a cost but an investment. If I were sitting in the minister's place—as I never could, knowing nothing whatever about agriculture and being unable even to attempt to answer the questions he is asked, although I can answer a great many questions concerning matters I know something about—I would come in here with a gigantic programme of reclamation for the western provinces, first, for their own benefit and, second, for the benefit of all Canada. We would all prosper and profit out of anything that might be done in the west.

When I first rose I did say I was disappointed over the size of this vote, $3 million. But it is something, and I believe it is more than was voted at any other time, though last year we voted $10 million, which was not spent. I do not like votes of that kind; I like to see money voted and invested.

The minister has a golden opportunity in connection with reclamation. Take the Bow river, for instance. It is really pitiable that all the land northwest of Medicine Hat, the 300,000 acres west from there on the north side of the South Saskatchewan river, should be just lying there pleading for reclamation. It can be reclaimed; the Bow river has the water. I appeal to the minister not to be held up by anyone else in the cabinet. Stand up and double up your own fat fists and demand that this country be given a chance to live. It has not had a chance. as no one knows better than the minister. Give it a chance and our western prairies will blossom and bloom just as the land around Lethbridge is blossoming and blooming. No city in the west is comparable with Lethbridge in regard to expansion. I am very sorry I shall have to ask the minister, when he goes to Lethbridge for the inauguration of the western Canada reclamation association on July 11, to express my extreme regret at my inability to be there. I have an invitation as he has, but I shall not be able to go. However I am very happy to have had a part in initiating the western Canada reclamation association, covering the four western provinces. I know that when they get organized with all these delegates, of whom I have lists, they will have a potent influence with the combined strength of the four western provinces behind them. I am sure of what the minister will see at Lethbridge on July 11. Those men will say to him, "Mr. Minister, we will all go to Ottawa on special trains to back you up in the cabinet in your efforts at least to give us a chance out here to live when we have struggled for so many years". And how they struggled! I often think of the horrible struggles they have gone through. Give them that chance and I am sure you will be supported at Lethbridge by a body of men and women who will strengthen you to ask, not for $3,000,000 next session, but for the $10,000,000 that I suggested last session. And that should be kept up for twenty years—$10,000,000 a year for twenty years. When the estimates of the Minister of Reconstruction are before us I am going to ask for $5,000,000 a year for twenty years for the reclamation in the maritime provinces.

Mr. GARDINER: Before the discussion goes any farther, I should like to refer to one matter that was brought up a few moments ago. Item 31 of the estimates for 1947 reads:

> Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act and water storage. (This does not include the costs of survey and engineering work on the Medicine Hat irrigation and Red Deer diversion projects in Alberta and the South Saskatchewan river project in Saskatchewan, which costs are to be made available from the item of $10,000,000, No. 606, Department of Reconstruction and Supply), $3,000,000.

It was intended to have that same declaration appear in these estimates. With regard to item 570, which corresponds with the item for $10,000,000 last year, that item is in the reconstruction vote and is for $5,000,000. I have made representations to the Minister of Finance to have it put in the supplementary estimates and I hope it will be there when the supplementaries come down. In getting money for these projects, we are required to go to the Department of Reconstruction. I am referring to the larger projects such as have been discussed in the last few moments. They would not be provided for in this $3,000,000 vote which is for ordinary rehabilitation work in the Palliser triangle. Most of the large works will also be in the Palliser triangle, but expenditures on them will come out of the $5,000,000 reconstruction vote. Last year I prevailed upon the Minister of Finance to have this explanation put in, so that any one reading it could see that the provision was there. It was omitted this year when they were printing the estimates, but I hope to have it in again.

I should like to make one or two remarks with regard to the recital which has just been made to the committee. When I was a boy I had the privilege of living in the area of which the hon. member has been speaking. We lived for five years in the valley of the Platte, close to where it joins the Missouri, but we were starved out and came back to Ontario. The conditions which existed there in the early part of the nineties were almost identical with the conditions that existed in Saskatchewan and Alberta in the early part of the thirties. The same conditions prevailed in Nebraska and Kansas in the thirties of this century as prevailed there in the nineties of the last century. There has been no difference in the weather conditions. We had exactly the same conditions in western Canada in the nineties as they had in Nebraska, and as we had in Saskatchewan during the thirties. There is nothing new about it. Those conditions have prevailed on a number of occasions and they will come back again. Some provision must be made for the better distribution of the water that is in that country if people are going to live there.

I have driven the whole length of the Platte in recent years since these dams were built. I may say that some of the cities spoken of were there before irrigation was put in, but they were in much the same position at that time as some of our cities in western Canada; they were going down in population rather than up, but now it is a different story with irrigation. In driving from one end of the Platte river to the other one can discover many of the things we should do and also some of the things that perhaps we should be careful not to do. I do not know whether the hon. member visited the higher lands where you can see the foundations of houses that were put up when the irrigation scheme was first put through.

Mr. MacNICOL: That did not occur around Alliance, which is a city of from 15,000 to 18,000 people. They pump the water up, but the land is thoroughly irrigated and they have marvellous crops.

Mr. GARDINER: One can see the foundations of houses that were built and the remains of old cars beside those basements. I made a point of going to see that, because there are some things they have done in the United States that we should avoid. The story they tell there is that the contractors were obliged to make a declaration that water had passed through the ditch before they could get paid and they say that some water was taken through in bottles behind horses. Of course that was in the earlier days of the undertaking. I think that story is an exaggeration of what actually happened, but the ditches are there and there is no water in them; the foundations are there, but there are no buildings on them; the old cars are there that were worn out in the district and no one is using them. This is all up in the higher lands which are much higher than Nebraska or the eastern part of Montana. As I say, that area is the exception.

One can learn from that there are acres and acres of land, hundreds of square miles or even thousands of square miles of land in western Canada as well as in the western states on which you cannot put water, or if you do you waste it. The sub-soil of the area of which I was speaking is gravel and it is very high. One dropping there from an areoplane and not knowing anything about the altitude would think he was on the prairies up north of the boundary, but he would find that he was probably up three or four times as high as the prairies. That also has some bearing on the question of what one can do.

There are many things that we can learn that we ought to do on the prairies in Canada, and there are many things that we can learn to avoid by going there and looking at the development. Anyone who has lived as a boy in the drought areas of the United States or who has lived through the drought periods in western Canada will agree with everything that has been said to the effect that there is only one way in which you can maintain population in that area, even the population that is there now, and that is to get all the available water distributed over the land which is suitable.

In so far as pleading with the government is concerned, I do not think I need to make any excuse or to hesitate in saying that ever since I have been in the government at Ottawa, and even before I came here, I have been advocating, just as the hon. member has been advocating, the placing of every possible gallon of water on the lands of western Canada. I think the leader of the opposition will agree with me when I say that, before the P.F.R.A. was brought in at Ottawa, he and I and the then premier of Alberta, Mr. Reid, met in Saskatoon and discussed this whole question. I think we can claim credit for pretty well having laid out the programme which was taken on under P.F.R.A. in 1935. We met in 1934 and in the early part of 1935, went over the whole programme and made our representations known to Ottawa at that time when the present leader of the opposition was premier of Manitoba and I myself was premier of Saskatchewan and Mr. Reid was premier of Alberta. The meeting was held in Saskatoon and the plans outlined.

But I found when I came to Ottawa that I had great difficulty in convincing this house that we should have even $5,000,000 to spend over a four-year period, and all the difficulty was not on this side of the house. As a matter of fact, after two years of battling, it was finally agreed that whatever amount of money we could get, spread over whatever length of time we could get it, could be spent on irrigation and water conservation in western Canada. But never have we been able to get more out of any government so far than $3,000,000 a year. The limit prior to this government was $1,000,000. That was the most any house ever agreed to vote. The amount agreed upon for 1935 was not spent under the previous government. But we have been spending from $2,000,000 to $3,000,000 a year, until now the expenditures total well over $20,000,000. So far as I personally am concerned, I think the expenditure should have been double that in the past, and it should be four or five times that in the future. But all these matters have to be discussed with representatives from right across Canada, as everyone knows; there are arguments that expenditures should not be made as rapidly as some of us think they should be, and after the whole question has been weighed, the fact is that we have provided $3,000,000 this year for these smaller undertakings. I hope that in due course we shall be able to obtain more, and that before very long we shall be able to spend at least the amount suggested by the hon. member on these other projects. If so, we would be spending some $5,000,000 or $6,000.000 yearly.

Mr. IRVINE: I do not desire to follow the trend of thought which has been followed for some time by the hon. member for Davenport, beyond saying that I agree that there are great needs in western Canada and in other parts of Canada for extensive irrigation projects, and I hope that the minister will, as he said, keep in view the great need and take steps in the future to launch some real enterprises along that line.

I wish to bring to the minister's attention a much more modest request under this item. For some years I have brought to his attention the desire of the people of the Peace River block to have P.F.R.A. applied to that section of the community. I have asked for this several times, last year on several occasions, and if I recall the minister's answer aright it was to the effect that he had intended extending the application of P.F.R.A. to practically all western Canada and practically all Canada, but that he had been prevented from going ahead because of the unsettled state of dominion-provincial matters. But in view of the fact that British Columbia and Alberta have come to satisfactory tax arrangements with the federal government, we feel that we should not be punished because some other provinces have not done that.

The minister is, I am sure, well aware that the farmers in the area to which I have referred have petitioned his department and passed resolutions time and time again, year after year, asking for the application of P.F.R.A. to their area. I have explained to the minister—I do not think it is necessary because he knows it just as well as I do—that there are peculiar conditions in that area. There are very few wells to be had either for watering stock or for water for the homes. People have to melt ice in the winter for water and often have to haul their water for miles from the river to do their washing and water their cattle. In the summer, the area is fairly well supplied with rain, which helps to grow crops, but they have not water for their stock, and they want to use the privileges which P.F.R.A. makes available in the west where it now applies.

Is it the intention to extend the application of P.F.R.A. to the Peace River block under the present vote, and, if not, can the minister say when it will be possible to extend it to the Peace River block? I can assure him that there are thousands of farmers who will be anxiously waiting to hear his answer to that question. I do not want to hold up the estimates by making any emotional pleas, but I hope that the minister will give this matter his serious consideration.

Mr. GARDINER: In reply to the question that has just been asked, all I can say is what I did say in making the announcement a short time ago, namely, that P.F.R.A. would not be extended this year and that the government intended to undertake expenditures under votes which would be in the supplementary estimates. Those expenditures are to be made in the maritime provinces on the marsh lands that are dyked and on some special projects in British Columbia, one of which is under way and by the way is in the constituency of my hon. friend. The other amount is to be utilized in the areas of the western provinces which are not under P.F.R.A., which includes the Peace River district of British Columbia, and also in the eastern provinces. That expenditure is not intended to be on the same type of work that we are doing under P.F.R.A., the reason being that the responsibility for that type of work has always been with the provinces. As members from the western provinces and also from the eastern provinces know, works of that kind, such as finding water for household use, have been carried on provincially or municipally. In Saskatchewan, for example, which I know best, the provincial government through the department of public works or the highways department provided nearly all the dug-outs and dams that were built there prior to P.F.R.A. That is, they assisted in the building of them, or the farmers put them in themselves individually. In some places municipalities had equipment to assist the farmers in doing the work. So far as wells are concerned, the territorial government, before even the provinces were formed, dug wells, and they can be seen in the older settled areas of western Canada today, most of them being on the road allowances. If one starts digging wells for people and you do not dig the well as close to one house as you do to another there is trouble. Sometimes the water is not located as close to one house as it is to another, and so it was thought good politics, if not good business, to dig the wells on the road allowance and let everybody go to it for their water.

These practices were carried on under local organizations, not from Ottawa. Any activities that have been in eastern provinces or in western provinces, outside the P.F.R.A., have been carried on under provincial governments, or provincial governments working in cooperation with municipalities or counties. We said last year and again this year that until there is some further agreement than we have up to the moment with regard to responsibilities of that kind, the dividing of responsibilities, and the dividing of responsibility for collecting taxes, probably we should not take on any long-term policy in connection with this particular matter. Therefore we have undertaken to carry on P.F.R.A. where it is now being carried on in the Palliser triangle, and decided to bring these other water expenditures to bear upon the problems that exist there in so far as we think we ought to enter into agreements with the provinces to carry them on. I am not in a position to say the amounts that will be in the supplementary estimates which will be brought down in a few days. I know how much we have submitted to the treasury board. In a few days these estimates will be brought down and we shall know how much the amount is.

Mr. FULTON: I do not wish to make a long speech on this matter, since I made reference to it on March 6 during the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, but I wish to refer to the fact that up until May 22 we had hoped—I am speaking for the members from British Columbia—that the same principle as exists under the P.F.R.A. should be extended to our province. The reason I want to go back to that point again is that in his statement—to which the minister has just referred—which he made on May 22 and which he has elaborated tonight to some extent, he seemed to imply that it is not contemplated in any way to extend to British Columbia a thorough-going scheme of land reclamation and irrigation, but rather that it would be small local projects such as might be brought forward from time to time by the provincial government. I suggest to the minister—he no doubt has the advice of experts, and I am not going to put myself up against them—that the type of country which we have, particularly in the interior of British Columbia, does not lend itself to these small, local schemes. Speaking on the 6th of March, I said, and I am still of the opinion, and am supported by all the briefs and expert opinions which I have been able to read, that what is needed is something in the nature of what they call in the United States an integrated project for the development of water power and irrigation as well as land reclamation. In the dry belt areas of the interior of British Columbia where you cannot divert a stream to irrigate large tracts of flat land but require to pump water probably 100 feet up to the bench above the river, you need water power for these projects. That is why it is so disappointing to us to read the statement which the minister made on May 22 and to find that he said, as reported at page 3318 of Hansard:

> The dominion government would be prepared to discuss with the provinces concerned plans under which development could proceed over a period to be agreed upon, sufficiently long to bring about the desired results, but not to exceed five years.

That seems to me to indicate a very short-range and local project which will not fill our needs.

I wish to bring to the minister's attention one particular brief which has been submitted, and of which I know he has received a copy. It was submitted by the association of British Columbia irrigation districts. After going into the principles which they felt should apply in this type of work, they set forth a summary of the acreage available for irrigation under some such thorough-going scheme. They show that there is a total of 97,155 acres available throughout the dry-belt portion of the interior of British Columbia. In my opinion that does not include actually all the land which is available, because no mention is made of the land between Kamloops and Ashcroft on the Thompson river. There was, for instance, once a project at a place called Walhachin, where their objective was a million boxes of fruit a year. They developed an irrigation scheme, but it was all by bringing water down in ditches some twelve or fifteen miles from lakes back in the hills. Then one year the ditches washed out; there was found to be no more money available from the private interests who were behind the scheme, and the thing folded up. You can drive through a tremendous area of derelict fruit trees where they were within a hair breadth of realizing their objective of a million boxes of fruit a year, when this happened, and today there is hardly a soul about. Nothing has since been done. It proves conclusively that you cannot put in an irrigation scheme if you expect the land which is brought under irrigation to bear all the costs without some government assistance. That is why the thing folded up. They did not have enough money left in the treasury; they had not enough back from the sale of the land when the ditches washed out. There is all this tremendous acreage available down our river valleys and lying back from the rivers, but they require pumping from the land itself up to the bench lands before it can be got under way.

I have had a lot of correspondence with the minister and with other departments. I wish to refer to it and to ask the minister some questions in elaboration of his statement. The correspondence which I have had was with the Department of Public Works, the Department of Agriculture and, to a lesser extent, with the Department of Fisheries trying to get all the departments concerned with the rivers in British Columbia to work in with the British Columbia government with this idea of an integrated project. In one of his replies the minister indicated that he did not feel his department had any interest in that particular matter. I have, however, a letter from the Minister of Public Works on this subject in which he says his department is going ahead to appoint a commission in consultation with the provincial government to investigate conditions on the Fraser and Thompson rivers. He says:

> A decision has already been reached to proceed in this matter and the provincial government and interested departments of the federal government are being approached in connection with the personnel of the proposed board or commission.

It does seem to me that if that is being done, here is a favourable opportunity for the two departments concerned, in conjunction with the provincial government, to work out some such scheme. All that we ask at the moment is that a survey be made. Look at the land available and decide how best we can bring it under irrigation and build up the water power necessary to pump the water and provide electric light, power and so on. I know there are engineers of the department of the P.F.R.A. out there now working with the Department of Veterans Affairs. That is another reason why I think the Department of Agriculture and the P.F.R.A. should be interested, because in that area the Department of Veterans Affairs is settling a number of veterans on the land. That is a dominion responsibility, not solely a provincial responsibility. The potentialities of that area are so tremendous that once we get the water on the land, although it might cost a lot of money—I know I have advocated economy—it would more than repay the cost over the years. The proceeds from the development of the land and the bringing in of secondary industries would more than repay any initial capital expenditures. If it were regarded as a continuing project, a long-range project, we would find that we would recoup more than any outlay which was made in the first place. I hope that the minister will reconsider the statement which he made on May 22 and take under consideration again the institution of a full-scale integrated project in conjunction with the Department of Public Works and the provincial government.

In his statement the minister referred to certain projects related to farm lands in British Columbia, and I should like to know whether that is the Pemberton Meadows project, to which he referred a moment ago, in what is now the Cariboo constituency.

Mr. GARDINER: That is one of them.

Mr. FULTON: I believe the engineers of the P.F.R.A. are doing service in the Thompson valley around Chase and Pritchard for the Department of Veterans Affairs.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. FULTON: Have they any other work going on there at the present time?

Mr. GARDINER: There are about six projects in British Columbia which are being investigated for soldier settlement.

Mr. FULTON: Has the provincial government brought forward yet any projects following the statement the minister made on May 22 when he indicated that the dominion government would be prepared to discuss with the provinces any project which they might advance?

Mr. GARDINER: The government of British Columbia has written to us asking for a date at which they can come and discuss the matter with us.

Mr. FULTON: A final question. Are the P.F.R.A. officials doing anything directly in conjunction with the Department of Public Works along the lines of the letter I read from the Minister of Public Works with regard to a commission to inquire into flood control and other conditions on the Fraser river and the Thompson river watershed?

Mr. GARDINER: There has been correspondence back and forth between the minister and myself with regard to the possibilities, not only in British Columbia, but in some of the other provinces as well.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I should like to get certain information from the minister for purposes of clarification, because I am not as optimistic in this matter as the Prime Minister seemed to be about getting out on the 8th of July, if one may judge from some of the speeches tonight. It is not clear to me what the minister intends to do in British Columbia under this act. It seems to me that the hon. member for Kamloops is a little mixed up on the question of flood control. What we are interested in, so far as my part of the district is concerned, from the request that came from the associated boards of trade, is the question of river bank erosion and flood control in the Fraser valley. We do not want that mixed up with any irrigation scheme.

Mr. FULTON: I am not interested at all in what you are interested in.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: But you are trying to bring the Fraser valley into it and we are not interested in irrigation. We are interested in keeping the water off.

Mr. FULTON: There is a great deal more to the Fraser valley than your constituency.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I want to make it clear that we are not interested in irrigation. Our concern is to keep the water off. Yesterday I had a complaint from a farmer which I took up with the Minister of Public Works. I believe New Brunswick has the same problem because the farms are being washed away through the erosion of river banks. This is a serious matter in the Fraser valley and I submit that this act should be extended to cover it. I am disappointed in any statement the minister has made so far. I understood from his original statement that, if the provincial government and the local authorities were prepared to come in with the federal government, money would be available. That is what I understood the five-year period meant. I understood the minister to say that is what is happening in the maritimes in connection with the dykes. I should like to know whether the department, in conjunction with the provincial government, is providing funds for taking care of river bank erosion.

Mr. GARDINER: Most of the work which has been done, in fact all the work which has been done in the past, of the nature that has been discussed by both the last speakers, has been done under votes in the Department of Public Works, and I think much of that work will still be done under votes in that department. Probably what the minister had in mind in that regard was that some organization would be set up to survey the whole field and determine where the responsibility lies in connection with many of these works. There is a division of authority and responsibility as between the province and the dominion with regard to these matters, which makes it impossible for anyone to make any general statement about what this government will do, or what the provincial government will do; and until someone has determined that, it will be impossible for me to say what projects we shall work on, or how many. I only know that we shall work on as many as we have money to cover, and that will be determined in the usual way. Votes will be brought before the house and submitted for discussion, and then that money will be spent on whatever it is provided for.

Mr. FULTON: Has the minister in mind any general principles governing the sort of project he would be prepared to work on with the provincial government?

Mr. GARDINER: We have one which we have already done, or it is almost done, and that is the Pemberton Meadows lands. That one is now practically finished. The expenditure there was all made by the federal government. No assistance was given by the province at all in that. There may be special reasons why that was done by the federal government. Those reasons may not exist elsewhere. Each project would have to be considered on its merits and dealt with accordingly, but it is that type of thing. The work being done there is the work of keeping water off the land instead of putting it on, as was stated by the hon. member for Fraser Valley.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: How do you approach the government to get a grant similar to that in connection with Pemberton Meadows? Is it through this department? The minister says there is to be some money available for this, and I believe he spoke of six projects. Who will settle what these projects are, the federal government or the provincial government?

Mr. GARDINER: These projects that have been spoken of are not under our department at all but under veterans affairs, and we have been giving services of that kind, not only to other departments of this government, but to provincial governments and municipalities, in connection with water matters, by utilizing the engineering staff we have under P.F.R.A. When we do provide that engineering staff to investigate, it does not necessarily follow that we shall spend money on it. The Pemberton Meadows investigation started three or four years ago. We had a vote of $10,000 to provide for covering the expenses of sending engineers there. They went and investigated, and we finally undertook that work on our own, largely because it was almost altogether soldier settlement put there by the federal government following the first war. We undertook to control the water on the lands, because it was running over the lands that these men had. This was a special condition that existed, which we undertook to deal with. Each one of these projects, or any projects that we undertake there, will have to be dealt with on their merits. The amount of money which will be voted will more or less determine how much work we can undertake.

Mr. FULTON: In his statement the minister said it was considered that there were certain works outside the drought area which, if undertaken, would be of assistance to all Canada through making possible increased developments of farm lands which, if left to provincial or municipal responsibility, might greatly retard Canada's development. Can the minister amplify that statement? Are there any characteristics or particulars which the department has in mind and which such lands must fulfil before anything can be done?

Mr. GARDINER: I had in mind, when making the suggestion to the government, which was accepted, that this expenditure would relate largely to the opening up of new lands for settlement purposes. That settlement may be a movement of people out of Montreal into northern Quebec; it may be moving people from one part of the province to another or from one province into another; or it may be bringing in new settlers altogether. They are projects of a type which may make for further development of the country.

Mr. McGARRY: I have been following the minister's estimates through from the beginning and I think they are all justified. Particularly do I approve the estimates for the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act and the Prairie Farm Assistance Act administration. If I were to offer any comments on those expenditures I would suggest that they be increased rather than reduced. For some years I have been advocating the extension of the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act so that its provisions would render some assistance in solving the problems which the eastern farmers are trying to deal with. I refer particularly to the flooding of the dyke lands and to the damage and destruction wrought on our meadows and intervale lands along our rivers and streams.

I notice that the hon. member for Fraser Valley referred to a specific case, and I imagine I may be pardoned if I do likewise and refer to one which has been brought to my attention for several years. It is the damage and destruction that is done to our meadow lands along the Margaree river. Every year acres of that most fertile land in the maritime provinces have been rendered unproductive and acres of it have been washed away by flood waters, by ice floes and by uncontrolled waters which the farmers have been trying to control. They have now reached their limit. Knowing the situation as I do, I will say for these farmers that they have done their very best to deal with the ravages of these destructive agencies, but a point has now been reached where this damage and destruction cannot be controlled by individual efforts. I do not know through what means or through what department some assistance can be rendered, but I honestly believe that, unless some government assistance is given, the most fertile lands of the Margaree valley will be washed out into the Atlantic ocean. I believe that the assistance which could be rendered to combat those agencies would not mean a great contribution from the government. If the government were to assist the farmers, those who have vested holdings there, to build at strategic points breakwaters, small protecting walls, sheer dams and to do a little bit of dredging in order to keep the river in its natural channel, I believe that a great deal of the damage could be prevented. I honestly believe that if some such assistance is not rendered to our farmers in that particular section of the country, that fertile land in the Margaree valley, which is one of the most productive in the whole of the maritime provinces, will be washed away into the Atlantic ocean.

I would urge upon the Minister of Agriculture, although possibly this remedial measure does not come under the authority of his department, to collaborate with some other department of the government and point out to them the emergent need of conserving this fertile land. It is all right to be undertaking to rehabilitate lands which are today unproductive. But when we have productive land which has been destroyed by these damaging agencies, it is just as important to preserve land that is in productivity now as it is to spend money to rehabilitate land that is out of production. I would urge the minister to collaborate with the department which has to do with this matter, to impress upon them its emergency nature, and the necessity of something being done to assist our honest farmers who are trying their best and have exceeded their means in endeavouring to preserve these holdings.

Mr. GARDINER: The matter which has just been referred to has been brought to our attention and has been under consideration by the different departments. Might I suggest that we could discuss these projects we are now discussing to much better advantage when the supplementaries come down, which will be very shortly, when we shall know just what amounts of money are being voted. We can then discuss the expenditures of these moneys. If the committee would agree, now that we have had a sort of general discussion on the question, I think we could then enter much more intelligently into a discussion of these projects when the amounts voted for them are before us.

Mr. THATCHER: Originally I had intended to speak at some length on this item, but I think I shall spare hon. members inasmuch as they are trying to get along in a hurry. However I think this parliament should realize that in western Canada there are still large semi-desert areas. Unless we do something to reclaim those areas in the very near future, our national economy may be in danger. From history we know that these droughts come along, roughly, every seven or ten years. We realize, therefore, that we are probably due for another one of these droughts fairly soon. Since coming to parliament, I have found it difficult to understand why, every year, we talk about irrigation, but do very little about it. Canada's behaviour in this regard compares unfavourably with that of the United States. Back in 1935, drought conditions in the United States were even worse than they were in western Canada. Whole areas had turned into dust bowls. People were moving out and going on relief. But since 1935, the United States have irrigated about 5,000,000 acres and have begun plans or actually started construction for the irrigation of about 10,000,000 other acres. Yet we in Canada have irrigated only about 155,000 acres. I certainly do not think this compares favourably with what has been done in the United States. As far as I can see from what the minister has said tonight, I do not think the reasons or the excuses he has given for not proceeding are sufficient. I suppose lack of funds is the main reason. I think the $3,000,000 we are bringing down in the estimates tonight is disgraceful, to say the least, for meeting this western problem.

Mr. GARDINER: This $3,000,000 has nothing to do with the projects my hon. friend is discussing.

Mr. THATCHER: I realize that.

Mr. GARDINER: Unless it may be a small part for engineering.

Mr. THATCHER: I realize that; but that is the amount we are giving for irrigation.

Mr. GARDINER: No, that is not irrigation.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. THATCHER: There may be a few millions more; I do not know. I will not argue with the minister about that tonight. But last year, two years ago, I saw this parliament vote in gifts and loans almost $2 billion for the reclamation of other countries, and probably most of those amounts were justified. If we could give so much to these other countries I do not see why we cannot find a few million dollars for a project so badly needed here at home, and one which would be self-liquidating. In the war years we spent $110 million, which I think was the amount mentioned by the minister as the total sum required for western irrigation, in a few weeks; yet here we cannot find that much money for this work today. Recently President Truman said that probably there would soon be great benefits from the St. Lawrence river project. I think that is so, and I believe many Canadians would support it; but many westerners would find it difficult to vote for that project before getting the irrigation they need. I think easterners are going to need that project just as much as westerners, because, as the hon. member for Davenport has said, they will soon need markets. During the war years our factories increased their capacity by about forty per cent, and we know that when the Canadian loans are gone some of these foreign countries will not be able to continue to buy from Canada. Where are the eastern manufacturers to sell their products when that time comes. I suggest to hon. members from the east that perhaps then they will be glad to have people living in these irrigated areas on the prairies, who will be able to use some of their manufactured products.

I have several questions I should like to ask the minister in this connection. In my constituency we have been waiting years for something to be done in connection with irrigation.

Mr. GARDINER: May I suggest that those matters come under the next item. Could we pass the rehabilitation item and go on to irrigation, what comes next? The St. Mary river dam is the first of the big projects, and it is the next item. If the question my hon. friend has in mind has to do with the Saskatchewan river project, and other similar projects, they are not provided for in this item.

Mr. THATCHER: All right; I will leave those questions until then. But I want to ask the minister one question which I am quite sure applies to this item. A few months ago I had the privilege of hearing the minister speak about irrigation. A few nights before that, he had spoken in Lethbridge, and the Financial Post reported him in this way:

> He assured industry and agriculture that . . . $100 million in federal funds will be made available for a long-range programme of irrigation.

Will the minister tell us if that is to be over a long period of years, with just a little coming through each year, or if we are to get that $100 million some time soon. Will he tell us, furthermore, whether the government is waiting to use this irrigation programme as a post-war project?

Mr. GARDINER: That has to do with the next item, also.

Mr. THATCHER: All right; if the minister will answer it then, I can wait, but I want that information.

Mr. BROOKS: In view of the minister's statement that the reclamation work in the maritimes would be better discussed on the items in the supplementary estimates, I shall reserve what I have to say until that time; but I would point out that, as far as the repairing of dykes in the maritime provinces is concerned, it is a matter of urgent necessity. Time is really of the essence in connection with the work there, because these dykes are disintegrating, not only every year, but every month. When the supplementary estimates are brought down this year I hope they will not be simply for investigation, but that there will be something for the reconstruction of the dykes in the maritimes.

Mr. GARDINER: The provincial ministers have already been here. Mr. Taylor, minister of agriculture of New Brunswick, was here. Mr. McKenzie was not able to come, but his deputy was here, and we have discussed the possibilities in connection with expenditures for this year. An amount is being placed in the supplementary estimates. I am not at liberty tonight to say what that amount is, but I can discuss it freely at that time.

Mr. QUELCH: The members of this group have a very high appreciation of the work done under P.F.R.A. in the past and at the present time, but we feel that the time has come for the government to launch larger scale projects than have been undertaken in the past. We particularly feel that the conservation of the waters of the Rocky mountain watershed is of paramount importance, not merely to western Canada, but to the whole of Canada. While it was not possible to do anything along that line during the war, we believe that the time has now come when the government should undertake that work. We consider it important that irrigation projects should not be looked upon as a form of relief works for the purpose of providing employment. I believe the minister will agree with that statement, but I am not so sure the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply will agree with it, because I understand his department look upon reconstruction projects mainly as a means of providing employment. Of course if that attitude is taken it means delay, a continued loss of wealth, and a permanent loss in the form of dried-out crops and soil erosion. During the spring in western Canada there is a very heavy run-off of water that may be urgently needed a month from now. A great deal of that water could have been saved if larger scale projects had been undertaken. Of course there is the other important point, that we are under a moral obligation to provide irrigation projects in the drought areas of the west, because those people were encouraged to settle in that area, in spite of the fact that the government of the day knew it was not suitable for settlement.

I want now to make a few remarks and to ask a few questions in regard to the Red Deer river diversion scheme.

Mr. GARDINER: That comes under the next item, too.

Mr. QUELCH: Then when we get to that item I hope the minister will not say we can discuss only the St. Mary river project.

Mr. GARDINER: No, I won't.

Mr. QUELCH: Last year we had an item of $10 million under the reconstruction department. This year we have an item of $5 million, and I understand that the minister hopes to get another $5 million. Last year I waited until that $10 million item came up; then I was told by the Minister of Reconstruction I should have discussed the matter under P.F.R.A., because it would be under P.F.R.A. that the work would be carried out. So this year I have no intention of waiting until the reconstruction estimates come up.

Mr. HERRIDGE: I think I shall have to make a few remarks on this item, because I want to talk about more than just irrigation. I am sure a number of the fruit farmers and others I represent, and all those in the Okanagan who were mentioned by the hon. member for Kamloops, are somewhat disappointed at the delay in the plans of the government in connection with the application of P.F.R.A. to British Columbia. I support what was said by other hon. members as to the great needs in the Cariboo and the Okanagan with regard to irrigation, but I just want to add a word or two about conditions as they exist in my own district of Kootenay West. We are not actually in the dry belt. We can grow crops without irrigation, but in some districts and on some land there would be a greatly increased yield with irrigation. I want to draw to the minister's attention the fact that in this district some thousands of acres are owned by the provincial government. There is one large tract consisting of several thousands of acres, formerly owned by the Christian community of universal brotherhood, which has been taken over by the provincial government from the mortgage companies, and which, I believe, could be developed very well under this scheme. The provincial government owns the land, and the provincial and federal governments could cooperate in developing it. Then the land could be sold to settlers. It is ideal for tree and small fruits. Then again there are thousands of acres of first-class bottom land alongside various rivers and lakes which can be reclaimed at very little expense. I know of one tract of some ten thousand acres in the Lardeau valley, first-class black loam, natural meadow, which can be reclaimed by lowering the bed of the river four or five feet, and this can be done at relatively small expense. The cost, however, would be too great for any small group of individuals to undertake. Then again we have a number of smaller areas along the Arrow, Slocan and Kootenay lakes that could be greatly helped by this type of legislation.

In these areas you would not be developing land that is marginal. You would be developing land which has a high productive value. I think I am quite safe in saying there are probably fewer mortgages on the farms of my constituency than in any other constituency in the west. A mortgage there is quite a rare thing, which indicates productivity of the land and the skill and thrift of the farmers working it. However I am under the impression that this act might not be flexible enough to meet the varied conditions across Canada. I have spoken of these provincial lands, the dried-out land, and that which requires drainage, which I think should be developed jointly by the dominion and provincial governments. If the government is going to go ahead and assist these smaller areas which are already developed, something should also be done to assist the people I have mentioned, even if it is only to the extent of providing money at low interest rates, on long terms.

The people I represent are not people who ask for something for nothing. They built up that country as a result of their own labour. Possibly this act is not flexible enough to cover the varied conditions that exist across Canada. I throw out that suggestion to the minister, and I hope that at some time in the future he will take time to visit that district and see its potentialities. If he does I am sure he will be convinced that there are great possibilities for the application of this act in providing assistance to those farmers.

Mr. GARDINER: May I point out that no one has been discussing this vote. This vote applies only to the Palliser triangle and it is to build small dams and dug-outs as well as to provide community pastures and small irrigation projects. The discussion which has now taken place should have been on item 36, and all the other discussions should have been on item 31. Unless someone wants to discuss small dams and dug-outs and pastures provided for in this vote, perhaps it might be passed and we could get on to the proper vote.

Mr. MATTHEWS (Kootenay East): Mention has been made of various areas in British Columbia which should be brought in under the P.F.R.A. and I was wondering if the Creston area is one of those?

Mr. GARDINER: The Creston area is not in. None of British Columbia comes under the act for which this item provides money.

Mr. HARKNESS: I will make the minister happy by staying strictly on this item. A thing I have had in mind for a long time is how the dividing line is drawn between the P.F.R.A. and the P.F.A.A. It seems to me that those two acts are working against each other, at least in the southern part of Saskatchewan and in Alberta. To illustrate, you may have a piece of land which is under P.F.R.A. and where people are being paid not to grow crops, to get off the land and go into certain valleys. Then you have another piece of land right next to the first piece where the people are being paid under P.F.A.A. to put in crops which may not grow. It seems to me that one of the great fallacies in these two acts is in an area such as southern Alberta where people will be paid under P.F.R.A. to leave certain areas and gather themselves into a valley, or leave altogether and go somewhere else so that the land may be taken out of cultivation, and in the same area another group of people are paid to stay there and put in crops which they probably will never harvest. They are given so much per acre planted. The thing I want to get is how the dividing line is drawn or how it is decided which area is under P.F.R.A. and which is under P.F.A.A.

Mr. GARDINER: The only area under P.F.R.A. is the Palliser triangle, the dividing line of which runs through the city which my hon. friend represents. It extends northward to Lloydminster and then from Lloydminster almost in a straight line across to the Manitoba boundary at the northern end of the Assiniboine basin, then down along the east side of the Assiniboine basin to the Red river. All the area south of that is under P.F.R.A. The hon. member asked as to how the dividing line was drawn between the two.

Mr. HARKNESS: I do not need a description of the Palliser triangle.

Mr. GARDINER: The P.F.A.A. may cover part of that area, or it may go up into the northern country. People are taken from submarginal land and put on good land or land on which water can be placed. That would be done under P.F.R.A. We encourage people to go into valleys which can be irrigated or on to land to which water can be supplied. Under P.F.R.A. we encourage people to get off sub-marginal land. All that is done under the one act. We pay the expenses of moving off the sub-marginal land on to the better land. For example, at Brooks we had 25,000 acres that were irrigated. We moved people off sub-marginal land in different parts of the Palliser triangle on to those 25,000 acres which had been irrigated. All but two of the families so moved are well satisfied and we have had complaints from only one of them.

When we move people off sub-marginal land that land is turned into a community pasture. These pastures run from 40,000 acres up to 115,000 acres. It is fenced in with a permanent fence, as near as you can make a fence permanent with creosoted posts and four barbed wires. The farmers who are left there are given an opportunity to use the pasture by paying fees.

It is correct to say that through P.F.R.A. we do encourage farmers to leave submarginal lands in order that they may be fenced in as community pastures. Once that is done, the farmers around the pasture are organized into grazing associations. We first take those in the first mile round about the pasture. Then we take those in the second mile, and we continue until such time as we have a sufficient number of farmers with sufficient stock to utilize two-thirds of the grazing capacity of the pasture. They then pay fees in order to put their live stock in, and the costs of operating the pasture are paid out of those fees.

When once those pastures are formed the sub-marginal land is taken out from under the P.F.A.A. There is nothing paid on those sub-marginal lands. The only places where payments are made are on lands roundabout the pastures. The same principle applies all the way through the application of the legislation. For example, we say that a person who has had assistance in the form of irrigation cannot receive payments under the P.F.A.A. We have assisted him by putting water on his land; therefore he does not get assistance under the P.F.A.A.

Mr. HARKNESS: That is just what I am getting at. You say that all the people surrounding the community pasture are taken out from P.F.A.A. except those who still happen to be staying there?

Mr. GARDINER: After the pasture is out from under P.F.A.A., the people who are utilizing the land roundabout do not draw on the acreage in the pasture; they draw only on the acreage they themselves are cultivating.

Mr. HARKNESS: What the minister has said is quite correct, but it seems to me that the P.F.R.A. is the act which, if anything, will reclaim a lot of these dried-out areas in the west. I am all in favour of it and I believe it should be extended. However, one of the things in the way of its extension is the fact that sub-marginal lands are being maintained in cultivation or semi-cultivation under P.F.A.A. There is a conflict between the two acts and I wanted to get a reasonable explanation, which I do not think the minister has given.

Mr. FAIR: Is there an extension this year of the area in which dugouts are being constructed?

Mr. GARDINER: There is no extension of the area except that there may be a municipality here or there where it is shown we have not drawn the line in the right place in order to take in the entire basin of some particular river.

Mr. WRIGHT: To what extent are community pastures being extended this year? If they are being extended, where are you moving the people who are in those areas?

Mr. GARDINER: There is one in Manitoba. The only work that is being undertaken up to the present in Saskatchewan is the extending of pastures already formed. Areas are being added to them, and they are being added only because people have gone off the land. There may be one or two persons there, but mostly they would be on the edge of the area that is being taken into the pasture.

Mr. WRIGHT: There are no large movements?

Mr. GARDINER: No.

The CHAIRMAN: It has been suggested that we revert to item 26.

26. Subsidies for cold storage warehouses under the Cold Storage Act, and grants, in the amounts detailed in the estimates, $777,599.

Mr. BRYCE: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. There are three firms in Winnipeg getting a subsidy of $108,000. My question is, how long will these subsidies last? Also when was the last agreement drawn up for the payment of this subsidy? Have any new arrangements been made to enable cold storage lockers to be set up throughout the country?

Mr. GARDINER: There are three cold storages in Winnipeg toward which we have made payments. The act provides that where we are satisfied, after inspection, that the cold storage is required and that all the conditions are met, we can pay thirty per cent of the cost of building the cold storage. That applies of course, to any organization, cooperative or otherwise, which is making cold storage available to the public. The Winnipeg plants are handled the same as the others. The only reason the payments are higher is that the costs of the plants are higher in Winnipeg than they would be in the smaller communities. The last agreement I think was made two years ago. Thirty per cent of the cost is paid, half of it the first year and the other half is divided over the next four years.

As to the small lockers, the provision in the act has been in the past that not more than fifteen per cent of any plant could be utilized for putting in small lockers. There was a reason for that under the conditions which prevailed before. These plants were practically all in cities and towns and were put in for the purpose that cold storage is usually put in for, to take in products from the public and store them and charge for storage. It was thought wise to limit the locker space to fifteen per cent, but that limitation is now being removed so that, where a group of people have got together for the purpose of putting in these lockers in the smaller communities, payment can be made on the same basis as for the larger plants. That is an entirely new provision. I do not think any payment has actually been made under it. The regulation has been changed within the last month or six weeks.

Mr. BRYCE: Will that be retroactive?

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. GARDINER: We have not considered that up to the moment. There are a number of these plants, but most of them we know of are put in by individuals who are simply hiring out the lockers. It is not intended that under the new regulation payments shall be made on those. There are reasons why that would be objectionable. But it is possible for a group of farmers or a group of village people or farmers to get together and organize one of these plants to serve the community, and then the payments can be made.

Mr. BRYCE: In the smaller country towns where the farmers get together and build themselves a plant consisting of small lockers entirely, they can still get the thirty per cent?

Mr. GARDINER: That is right.

Mr. WRIGHT: Would that apply where a cooperative is already in operation, say a cooperative store, and the cooperative store decides to expand and build a cooperative locker in connection with the store?

Mr. GARDINER: That is a cooperative in the sense referred to here, but my hon. friend is aware that some organizations known as cooperatives are more or less joint stock companies.

Mr. WRIGHT: I am speaking of a true cooperative.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, where it is a true cooperative.

Item agreed to.

Mr. STEPHENSON: May we revert to item 28?

Mr. GARDINER: Are we going back over them all?

Mr. STEPHENSON: I just want to ask a question.

Mr. GARDINER: Very well.

28. Live stock and live stock products, $795,199.

Mr. STEPHENSON: I wish to ask a question with reference to the restricted area in Durham county from which I come. It was made a restricted area in 1937. We have had one or two tests up there and the county is due for another test this year, but possibly because of the shortage of veterinaries the test may not be made. Can the minister say whether that test will be made this year in Durham county?

Mr. GARDINER: I would have some difficulty in locating that information at the moment, but if the hon. member would permit me to reply to him by letter I will indicate in writing what is being done in Durham county. Generally speaking, what is being done is this. As soon as we can obtain the services of a veterinarian the check will be made. That is what we are doing.

Mr. STEPHENSON: The federation at a meeting recently was preparing a petition to present to the government. I should like to be in a position to inform them what is being done if I could have the minister's reply this week.

Mr. GARDINER: I think I can let my hon. friend have it tomorrow.

31. St. Mary river dam project, $1,500,000.

Mr. THATCHER: I have four simple questions in regard to the South Saskatchewan irrigation project. Has a satisfactory dam site yet been located for this project? Have they found a site where they can actually build the dam?

Mr. GARDINER: Our engineers have located what they think is a satisfactory site. The recommendation they have made and the information upon which it is based have been sent to the consulting engineer, General Ferguson, who has been over the whole area. The report has not yet come back. I had expected it long before this. But we think we have located the proper site.

Mr. THATCHER: Can the minister say whether actual construction work will be commenced on that project this year?

Mr. GARDINER: I am not in a position to say at the moment whether or not it will be started this year. Once we get that report, I shall have to approach Reconstruction for funds from the amount which will be voted under Reconstruction, the $5,000,000. I cannot say at the moment what the position will be.

Mr. THATCHER: Can the minister say offhand how much has been appropriated in the estimates as they stand today for that project this year?

Mr. GARDINER: Whatever was used for the purpose was taken out of the $10 million that we voted last year; that is, $10 million of Reconstruction. Whatever was utilized last year for engineering purposes was received from Reconstruction; it was not out of this vote. It was taken out of the amount which was voted for Reconstruction, and it was noted in the estimates last year that we could draw from the $10 million vote. The amount is $115,000.

Mr. THATCHER: I know the minister is anxious to have this project completed. Everybody is wondering why the delay in this project. Will the minister say whether it is government policy to hold this project over as a measure to help solve our employment a few years hence? Would that be the reason for the delay?

Mr. GARDINER: No; the irrigation work is not bound up in that class at all. The irrigation work is not among those projects put on the shelf, so to speak. Irrigation projects are intended to be development projects which should be carried on whether we require relief or not; but it will be affected to this extent, that it is more difficult to get labour and material in times when work is plentiful than in times when work is not plentiful, and there might be some delay if the greater part of our labour was fully employed at something else. It might be more difficult to get them for that work then; but I would say that up to the moment, the delays, if there are delays—I would not classify them as delays—the time that it has taken up to the moment has been fully required in order to satisfy ourselves that a reasonable site had been found where we could have a reasonable chance of making a success of building a dam and utilizing it for the double purpose of power and irrigation.

Mr. QUELCH: I am very glad to see this item of $1,500,000 for this project. I, and the people in the Acadia constituency, realize that there is a very good reason why the federal government should proceed with this project, because of the agreement that we have with the United States. However, the people of the constituency of Acadia are very much interested, as the minister knows, in the Red Deer diversion project. I am not going to go into the details of this project because I have placed them on record on several previous occasions. The project provides for the irrigation of 500,000 acres. As far as I can understand, the surveys have now been completed and a permit has been granted by the provincial government to divert 750,000 acre feet of water a year from the Red Deer river. I also understand that the federal government and the provincial government have reached an agreement regarding the joint allocation of the costs and administration so that, as far as I know, all that is now holding up the project is the decision of the government to proceed with the construction. Last year when I raised this question on the estimates of the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply—I notice that he is now in his seat—on the $10 million item he told me that I could raise it on the estimates of the Department of Agriculture because there was nothing to prevent the Minister of Agriculture from putting an item in if he so desired. Apparently the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply did not desire to put it in his estimates. I should like to read to the Minister of Agriculture what he said last year when this matter was discussed. I am reading from page 2025 of Hansard of May 30, 1946:

> Ever since about 1938 we have been doing a certain amount of engineering work on the project. The engineering work which is now being done is the checking of that work by an expert . . .
> I would hesitate to say that we shall be in a position this summer to call for tenders on the work . . .
>
> Mr. Quelch: There is a good chance of going ahead next year, then?
>
> Mr. Gardiner: I think so.

I was wondering whether the minister could give a progress report on the Red Deer diversion and what likelihood there is of the government proceeding with the project in the very near future.

Mr. GARDINER: The engineering report on the Red Deer diversion, that is the P.F.R.A. report, came to me about a month ago. It has been gone over with the idea of checking the amounts that it is likely to cost, and the report has now been referred to the consulting engineer. That is the stage at which it is now; but I did discuss the matter with the government of Alberta last January when I was in Edmonton. The understanding that we had after the discussion was that the St. Mary project would be proceeded with as rapidly as possible as the first project, and second in importance, consideration should be given to a completion of the Bow river project which has been underway for a long time and that we should follow that up with the Red Deer project. I am quite satisfied that with the programme which is ahead of us it would not be possible to start with the Red Deer programme this year. If we go on with the St. Mary project and spend the money which is voted, $1,500,000 on the St. Mary project and then proceed with the same work on the Bow river project, costing probably a quarter of a million dollars the work on the Red Deer will have to stand over until another year, even if the reports that we get are satisfactory to proceed upon. At the moment I am not in a position to say whether we can secure money for that purpose a year from now, but we have money sufficient to take care of the engineering and all the investigational work which is being done.

[Mr. Quelch.]

Mr. QUELCH: Can the minister say whether the reason the government cannot proceed with the Bow river project at the same time as the St. Mary project is largely a matter of cost, or is it the difficulty of getting the necessary men and materials to do the work?

Mr. GARDINER: It is a combination of both.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): I was very glad to hear what the minister had to say to the effect that he was not satisfied with the appropriations made for these two large projects for the twofold purpose of irrigation and power. I should like to support the hon. member for Moose Jaw who indicated that, in effect, we are just spending what might be termed a drop in the bucket as compared with what is necessary to develop our rivers in this country so that we might be able to have a more stable economy, not only in such areas as I come from in Saskatchewan, but also in some of the other large sites which have been mentioned here this evening. Anyone who has lived through the depression in the drought areas as I have will recognize that there is a great deal that can be done if we vote the money and scientifically attack this problem.

Since I have been a member representing the constitutency of Assiniboia—and I refer specifically to the Souris river project—I have been most interested in the development of the project. I have gone down there and inspected it to the best of my ability and have made recommendations to the Department of Agriculture. The authorities of the P.F.R.A. tell me that the Souris project lends itself to irrigation perhaps better than any other project in Saskatchewan. I have also gone with the provincial member for the constituency of Souris-Estevan and interviewed P.F.R.A. officials. I am told that we can irrigate from 3,000 to 10,000 acres in that area cheaper than perhaps any other area in the province. I say to the minister I believe that this is a project which, if given the attention of his department, can be developed to take care of thirty or forty returned men, preferably, and set them up on a basis of permanent homes. They could take thirty to eighty acres of land irrigated by the pump system and go into intensive farming, producing vegetable market gardens. In addition to that, they could have running back from the main irrigated projects tracts of land where they could have dairy herds. I say to the minister that this project would lend itself to further development whereby we might be able to set up cooperative canners to take care of the truck farming which I believe is feasible there. I would urge the minister to give cooperation to the provincial government which is giving support to this idea so that we might see something come out of it in the near future.

Mr. McKAY: Would the minister indicate what progress has been made with regard to the Wascana creek and Many Bones creek project in the Regina-Sedley area?

Mr. GARDINER: The engineering work has all been done in relation to it and the cost determined around $125,000. The possibility of sharing the cost has been discussed with the provincial government and an agreement has been reached that an amount should be paid by each, but we did not think it wise —it was brought up last year and the engineering was completed then—to take anything out of the $3 million, which is the item under which that would come if it were being done as against putting in dug-outs and small dams to provide stock watering supplies for the farmers at the present time. It may be that in due course we shall proceed with it.

Mr. McKAY: Is it planned to build one or more?

Mr. GARDINER: Either two or three.

33. To provide for assistance to encourage the improvement of cheese and cheese factories, $1,700,000.

Mr. DANIEL: This is to provide for assistance to encourage the improvement of cheese and cheese factories, and there is a reduction of $300,000 for the coming year. My observation would be that within ten or fifteen years we may be able to do away with this item altogether. The hon. member for Lanark the other night mentioned the fact that there were twenty fewer cheese factories in eastern Ontario than there were the year before. In western Ontario it may not be quite as bad as that, but what is happening up there? If this trend of events continues for another ten or fifteen years we shall have a few cheese factories left there, because what is happening in western Ontario is this. A man improves his factory, gets it in first-class working shape, and one of the large concentrated evaporated milk plants comes along and buys that factory. That does not necessarily put the factory out of business as a cheese factory, because at certain times of the year, when there is a flush of milk, they do make cheese, but in the winter months when milk is short they take the milk for their concentrated milk plants. Therefore the minister would do well to see what can be done to encourage the production of cheese. I am not blaming him for this condition. I am not blaming the government, nor am I blaming those men who get an opportunity to sell factories and make a good profit; and I cannot blame the manufacturers of concentrated milk for buying a factory. But it is a condition that will certainly put the cheese factories out of business, in western Ontario at least, in the not too distant future.

Mr. TUSTIN: I should like to ask the minister how this $300,000 reduction comes about. Has the minister definitely made up his mind that production of cheese will be so much less this year that he will not require the $300,000? I notice that $250,000 of the $300,000 is taken off the premium to be paid on quality cheese. There is no doubt that this premium on quality cheese has done much to increase the quality of cheese in this country, and I should think the minister ought not to make reductions at this particular time. Last night he endeavoured to tell us that cheese production in Ontario and Quebec was a month behind that of other years. If that should be the case, there may be a considerable increase in the production of cheese within the next few months, and it may be necessary that this amount of money should then be in the estimates in order that subsidies can be paid on this quality cheese. The other $50,000 is taken off the improvement of cheese factories, and I should like to ask the minister why there is the reduction of $50,000 in that regard.

Mr. GARDINER: The amount of decrease is $50,000 on construction subsidies and $250,000 on the premiums. The reason is partly as suggested, that there is anticipated a reduction in cheese production. There was a reduction last year. When we put through the vote of $2 million a year ago we were anticipating a larger production than we actually had, but it was estimated when these estimates were prepared that there would be some further reduction. That partly takes care of it. It does not make any difference whether there is or is not. If claims are made and amounts are due, under the legislation we must find the money. This is only an estimate of what we think will be required, and if more is required we shall require to have a supplementary next year to cover it. It will have to be paid whether it is in this vote or not, because the legislation provides for it.

Mr. TUSTIN: I realize that, and I realize the difficulties that some factories have had in the past. When it was late in the season and the Department of Agriculture claimed they had not more money left in these appropriations a considerable part was held up for some months before it was paid to the factories. I know of a number of factories that had to go to the bank and borrow money to pay subsidies to their patrons while they waited for several months to receive their money from the department.

Mr. GARDINER: I am told that none of these cases happened in connection with the federal government. There are provincial subsidies too, you know.

Item agreed to.

Special—
35. To provide for administrative expenses, Agricultural Prices Support Act, 1944, $60,000.

Mr. BROOKS: This item has to do with the Agricultural Prices Support Act. In 1945, at the dominion provincial production conference it was requested, I believe, that there be a certain acreage of potatoes in New Brunswick. The amount was 68,700 acres. The farmers planted 68,700 acres of potatoes and had an excellent crop. As a matter of fact, it was so good that they could not find a market for it. The agricultural prices board, I believe, guaranteed the farmers in New Brunswick that if they would sell their potatoes to the starch factories they would get a price of $1.65 a barrel. I understand that is correct. In the constituency of the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton (Mr. Hatfield), who is away on account of illness, and who is interested in this matter, there were two starch factories, and the day after the prices board agreed to pay this price one of the starch factories was burned, with the result that the farmers could sell only a small quantity of surplus potatoes to another factory at Grand Falls, New Brunswick. The minister's department has received petitions from the potato producers of that section asking that, in view of the fact that this starch factory was burned, the board adjust prices to the potato producers so that they receive the $1.65 which was guaranteed by the starch factory if the potatoes were sold to them.

My question to the minister is this: Is any provision being made to pay the difference between the price that the potato farmers received and the amount that was guaranteed by the starch factory? I understand that the price they received was much less than that guaranteed by the factory. Will the minister please let me know what the situation is?

Mr. GARDINER: The amount paid for potatoes diverted to processing plants under P.C. 4295 was as follows: In New Brunswick, quantity, 241,764½ barrels. The amount paid is $120,837. I think I should give these figures in hundredweights because I have not the second one in barrels. In New Brunswick, 198,763 hundredweight—

Mr. BROOKS: May I suggest to the minister that he might save time. I have not asked for the amount that was paid. He just mentioned an amount there which was small. There were some 15,000,000 barrels of potatoes produced in New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island and there were 7,000,000 or 8,000,000 which could not be sold; 300,000 or 400,000 barrels to the starch factory is only a drop in the bucket. What I asked the minister was this. On the representations of the different departments in New Brunswick for the payment of the difference between what was guaranteed if they sold to the starch factory and what they received, did the government or the prices board take into consideration the paying of this difference in view of the fact that few of the potatoes went to the starch factory?

Mr. GARDINER: I understand all that and I will get around to it in a minute.

Mr. BROOKS: I thought the minister wanted to save time, and I was trying to help him.

Mr. GARDINER: I have one more figure to give and I should like to give it. Prince Edward Island, quantity, 69,803 hundredweight, and the amount paid was $22,336.52, making a total of $143,173.52 that was paid.

The question that is raised is as to whether there was any amount paid or whether the board has decided as to whether it would make payment of the difference between what might have been guaranteed and what some potatoes might have been sold for. The answer to that is that the matter was considered and it was decided that there was not any obligation, under the circumstances, to make further payment; and that if payment were made on the basis on which it was asked for, it would require the consideration of payment, not only there, but right across Canada for the same purpose.

The other part of the answer is that eventually the potato crop was all sold at a much higher price than anyone expected it to be at the time this agreement was entered into; that is, having the whole crop under consideration, a much higher return was received than was expected. Part of that was done through negotiating a contract with Britain to take 70,000 tons from Prince Edward Island which, by the way, was more than delivered; and there is the further fact that, as is reported in the press today—I think it is editorial criticism—the Americans overdid the job of destroying potatoes, and after they had done that, the potatoes of New Brunswick were sold at a much higher price than anyone expected they would be. As a matter of fact, at one time we were being urged to stop shipment of potatoes out of Canada in order to make it possible to keep down the price of potatoes. We did not take that action. The final position was that the potato crop of the maritimes was sold at a much higher level than anyone expected it to be.

Mr. BROOKS: That is not my understanding. As far as the United States disposal of their potatoes was concerned, there was a great waste. We know that, but the United States government paid their farmers $2.20. My understanding is that the farmers in New Brunswick received fifty cents less for the potatoes than they would have received had they sold at the price of $1.65 to the starch factories. I know there were some potatoes from Prince Edward Island—three million bushels—sold to Great Britain. But New Brunswick did not benefit to any great extent from that. As I understand the minister's statement, the government has refused to pay the difference between what the farmers would have received had they sold to the starch factories and what they actually did receive where they sold otherwise.

Mr. GARDINER: The undertaking was to take at a certain price all the potatoes which were left on May 1. As a matter of fact, there were not any potatoes left on May 1, to be supplied at that price. The potatoes were all being marketed by that time; and any potatoes that were sold before at a lower price were sold, of course, under the arrangement.

Mr. MICHAUD: I did not expect this discussion on potatoes to develop. I received a telegram. The minister just stated that all the potatoes had been marketed. I have information to the contrary.

Mr. GARDINER: They had better make their claim; that is all they require to do.

Mr. MICHAUD: There is no claim to be made; but I received a telegram—

Mr. BROOKS: There would not be much use in making a claim because the minister says they are not going to pay.

Mr. GARDINER: No. Any potatoes that are left unsold after May 1 can be offered to the government, and we have to buy them at $1 a bag. None has been offered. I think we are quite justified in saying that there are not any potatoes left, at least that can sell at a higher price.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Mr. MICHAUD: I was not through, Mr. Chairman. The remarks I wish to make arise out of a statement the minister just made to the effect that all the potatoes are marketed. I was somewhat under that impression until I received a telegram on Friday—a copy of which was sent to the minister's secretary—from a member of the legislative assembly in Victoria county informing me that there were quite a few potatoes left. He was complaining that we were allowing United States potatoes to come into this country, with the result that this was bringing the price of our potatoes down. He asked me to make a recommendation along that line, and to try to prevent United States production from coming in, in order to enable our farmers on the Saint John river to market the remainder of their potatoes. I have not the telegram with me—it is in my office—but the minister has a copy of it. I had to leave on Friday; I just came back. The answer I received was about something else altogether, informing me that the price was above the support price. I know it is above the support price. It has been since about April 20, when the United States started buying from us. Naturally prices went up above the support price from May 1. A great many of our potatoes have been marketed, but now I understand that the farmers on the Saint John river, at Grand Falls, are complaining that they still have fifty or 100 carloads; I do not remember the figure, but the minister has it. The difficulty they are having in marketing at the present time, as represented to me, is this. Potatoes were coming in from the United States; and that has bothered our farmers on the Saint John river and prevented them from marketing their potatoes at a fair price. Has the minister any further information on this point?

Mr. GARDINER: Over the week-end they have sold fifty carloads from there to the United States. I presume they are selling them at United States prices, which are quite high. That is the reason we do not get them at $1. The agreement made months ago—last fall, as a matter of fact—was that the government would take at that price any potatoes which were left at May 1. My understanding is that there were no potatoes offering at that price on May 1, which must mean that there is a market for them somewhere at a higher price than that. Of course there are potatoes coming in from the United States now, and they are new potatoes. I presume the potatoes we had in the diningroom today on the sixth floor were new potatoes from the United States.

Mr. BROOKS: They were not very good.

Mr. GARDINER: Those potatoes are selling at a price two or three times as much as old potatoes are selling for in Canada.

Mr. MICHAUD: Then I should like to ask if there are any old potatoes coming into Canada from the United States at this time.

Mr. GARDINER: I understand not; but there are old Canadian potatoes going to the United States.

Mr. WRIGHT: I wish to ask the minister a question or two in regard to the board that was set up. In 1944, when the Agricultural Prices Support Act was passed, as reported at page 5576 of Hansard for July 29, 1944, the minister said:

> . . . I make the suggestion to the house that we should content ourselves for the time being with the appointment of a permanent chairman and take two officials of the department and make them pro tem members of the board.
> Our intention is that the board shall immediately begin to study the relationship of the conditions which now exist to the prices which now exist and that all facts with regard to matters of that kind be made available for use immediately the war is over. If I am the minister at that time it is my intention to appoint two permanent members of the board to act with the chairman when the operative part of section No. 9 is brought into effect.

Based on that statement, I want to ask what recommendations or reports were made by the temporary board, and whether those reports are available. Various agricultural organizations have been interested in trying to find out just what work was done by that temporary board and what reports were made. I should also like to know what members have been appointed to the permanent board, and if that permanent board is making further reports.

Mr. GARDINER: An annual report was tabled last session and another this session, both of which are available to hon. members. The two new appointees are Mr. Proulx, who is a farmer in Quebec, who at one time was an employee of the Quebec government and was also employed at one time on temporary work by this government; and Mr. Earl Kitchen, a farmer of Woodstock, Ontario, who was secretary of the dairy association before his appointment. They will be making reports annually, as the other board did.

Mr. WRIGHT: Then there is an advisory board.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, there is an advisory board of seventeen members.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. WRIGHT: Were any other reports made in addition to the annual reports?

Mr. GARDINER: Reports are made every time delegations come to see us. When a delegation comes to discuss dairy products we get a report from the board as to the situation. When they come to discuss meat products, or any other products, we get reports from the board to indicate what are the conditions.

Mr. WRIGHT: Are those public reports, or are they private within the department?

Mr. GARDINER: I would doubt very much if they are public. They are the sort of things that pass from officials to a member of the government, advising as to what the position ought to be in relation to certain things. As a rule they are not made public.

Mr. BRYCE: Does the board give support to any other product than potatoes?

Mr. MICHAUD: There was another point I wanted to bring out in connection with this item, in connection with the bonus paid for potatoes processed into starch. There was a great deal of criticism in my part of the country, particularly along the Saint John river, in regard to the date set for the guaranteed price, which was May 1. I brought up this point during the budget debate. I do not know what the next crop has in store for us, but if it should be necessary to take some action in the fall I should like to impress upon the minister, that while the action taken in regard to the bonus on processed potatoes seems to be quite satisfactory, the other part of the order in council, having to do with the board undertaking to buy as of May 1, fixes the date too late. There has been criticism by the farmers of my section of the country that when officials of the department went along the Saint John river they interviewed just a few big shots and the ordinary men could not get near them. How this date of May 1 was arrived at, I do not know.

Mr. GARDINER: It was suggested by the delegation which came here from your area.

Mr. MICHAUD: I was with that delegation, though I was not there all the time.

Mr. GARDINER: That recommendation came from them last fall, the first time they were here.

Mr. MICHAUD: I cannot think they were in their proper spirits, then, to make such a suggestion. It is altogether ridiculous. Early in the year, in January, and possibly before that they began making representations to the effect that it was too late.

Mr. GARDINER: Experience showed it to be early?

Mr. MICHAUD: I would not agree to that. As I say, because of the mistakes made by the United States government our potatoes went up in price, and the government did not have to purchase them after May 1. It was just a little short of miraculous. I again emphasize that if next year it should become necessary to do such purchasing, May 1 is much too late. This year, of course, we had snow until June and we have had rain ever since. But in ordinary years we start farming around May 1, and when we start farming the farmers do not have time to market their potatoes.

Mr. BRYCE: I am still waiting for an answer to my question. Did you support anything but potatoes?

Mr. GARDINER: No; potatoes were the only item that required to be supported. All the others were supported under the agreements made with Britain, and the floors have been maintained at higher levels than investigation would have shown it necessary to maintain.

Mr. BRYCE: Then would you tell the committee how you set a floor price? What knowledge do you go on, or whom do you consult? How do you go about it; because I know you are going to need to support a lot of things before many years. If you could give us an idea of how you go about it I can tell my constituents when they ask me.

Mr. GARDINER: What we do is negotiate a contract with Great Britain, under which we get the highest price possible. Then we calculate whether that contract price bears the relationship we indicated should be maintained as compared with the last three years of the war. So far, all those prices have more than taken care of what we undertook to take care of.

Mr. WRIGHT: That is hardly right. You had not negotiated a contract with Great Britain—

Mr. GARDINER: I do not like the way in which my hon. friend, after asking a question, keeps telling me that what I have said is not right. Last night it was not true; tonight it is not right. I do not know what the difference is, but my statement is right.

Mr. WRIGHT: You will admit that you did not negotiate a contract with Great Britain on potatoes.

Mr. GARDINER: I am not talking about potatoes. The hon. member was asking about other products.

Mr. WRIGHT: He asked about potatoes, too, and that was the answer you gave. We have not a contract with Great Britain for all these things.

Mr. GARDINER: In the case of potatoes we took the recommendation of the committee that came here representing the potato people, as I said before.

Item agreed to.

Special—

36. To reclaim and to prevent the flooding of valuable agricultural lands in the valley of the Lillooet river, near Pemberton, B.C., $100,000.

Mr. REID: I have one or two questions to ask the minister, and also something to say about this item.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Eleven o'clock.

Mr. REID: If you want to go on it is all right with me. I want some information concerning this item.

Mr. GARDINER: I think we can clean it up in a few minutes.

Mr. REID: This is an item of $100,000 to reclaim and to prevent the flooding of valuable agricultural land in the valley of the Lillooet river. I am wondering why the dominion government has gone in there. I notice that project No. 1 covers 2,604 acres, 2,000 acres of which are Indian lands. My information is that the Indian branch recommended that money should not be spent in there. A little while ago the hon. member for Fraser Valley asked that something be done to prevent erosion and washing away of the banks of the Fraser river, but he did not get very much support. We have to go back to our people and tell them why the dominion government are going to spend nearly half a million dollars in connection with land which some of us think is not worth very much. Project No. 1 will cost $131 per acre and some of us are wondering who asked for this to be done. Is the provincial government putting up any money? Are the farmers putting up any money? I have been through this district, and if the dominion government is to come into our province to do this kind of thing I can point out more valuable land where the farmers have had to carry the load for many years. I want to ask some more questions on this item.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

It being five minutes after eleven o'clock, the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Wednesday, June 18, 1947

The house met at two o'clock.

PETITION

HUGH KIRKPATRICK AND OTHERS—BILL OF RIGHTS—POINT OF ORDER, MR. DORION—RULING, MR. SPEAKER

The Clerk of the House laid upon the table the 47th report of the clerk of petitions stating that he had examined the following petition presented on the 9th instant by Mr. Stewart, viz:— of Hugh Kirkpatrick, of Nanaimo, B.C., and allegedly 500,966 other Canadians, praying that the British North America Act be amended by inserting therein a bill of rights; and finds that all the requirements of standing order 68 have been complied with.

Mr. FREDERIC DORION (Charlevoix-Saguenay): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. The rules concerning the presentation of petitions are found in standing order 68, section 7 of which reads as follows

On the next day following the presentation of a petition the Clerk of the House shall lay upon the table the report of the clerk of petitions upon the petitions presented and such report shall be printed in the Votes and Proceedings of that day. Every petition so reported upon, not containing matter in breach of the privileges of this house and which, according to the standing orders or practice of this house, can be received, shall then be deemed to be permitted to be read and received.

My contention is that this petition contains irregularities that make it non-receivable. The practice of this house to which section 7 which I have quoted refers is well defined in paragraph 591 of "Beauchesne" third edition, which reads:

The language of a petition should be respectful and temperate and free from disrespect to the Sovereign, or offensive imputation upon the character and conduct of parliament, or the courts of justice, or other tribunal, or constituted authority.

I refer Your Honour to the fourth paragraph of the petition, which reads as follows:

That recent experiences of Jehovah's Witnesses in the province of Quebec prove that throughout the whole dominion basic personal rights are open to attack and loss because of a failure to have them guaranteed by a written constitution.

The words "recent experiences in the province of Quebec" cannot mean anything else than the legal proceedings that were instituted against Jehovah's Witnesses. Therefore this paragraph constitutes an offensive imputation upon the character and conduct of the courts of justice, which, as is well known, have already rendered decisions on the conduct of Jehovah's Witnesses.

There is another reason why this petition is irregular. It is also a well known fact that matters pertaining to the conduct of Jehovah's Witnesses are at the present time under consideration by some tribunals, namely, courts of the sessions of the peace and the Supreme Court of Canada. Therefore, as it is a matter sub judice, it should not form the subject of a petition before the House of Commons.

Mr. SPEAKER: I should like first of all to say to the hon. member that I am very grateful to him for being kind enough to advise me of his intention to raise a point of order today when the report of the clerk of petitions came before the house, because it gave me an opportunity to study the matter.

The petition of Hugh Kirkpatrick of Nanaimo, British Columbia, and 500,966 other Canadians was presented in the house on the 9th instant by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Stewart). Paragraph 4 thereof reads as follows:

That recent experiences of Jehovah's Witnesses in the province of Quebec prove that throughout the whole dominion basic personal rights are open to attack and loss because of a failure to have them guaranteed by a written constitution.

The hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Dorion) takes exception to this allegation on the ground that there is now before the courts of the province of Quebec a case connected with the activities of Jehovah's Witnesses in that province. The hon. member's contention is that the matter, being sub judice, cannot be dealt with on the floor of the House of Commons.

I have failed to find any authority or precedent justifying the contention that a petition cannot be received on the ground that it refers to matters before the courts. There is no reflection on the courts of Quebec in the statement that recent experiences prove that personal rights are open to attack and loss. As a matter of fact I am inclined to think that, as long as the case on trial is not discussed but only referred to, a petition referring to it is quite in order. The prohibition referring to sub judice matters applies particularly to debates but it cannot curtail a citizen's right to present a petition. All authorities agree that the right of petitioning parliament for redress of grievances is acknowledged as a fundamental principle of the constitution. It has been uninterruptedly exercised from very early times and has had a profound effect in determining the main forms of parliamentary procedure. The historical aspects of petitioning were originally directed to judicial rather than legislative remedies.

In 1669, the Commons of England passed a resolution declaring that it is the inherent right of every commoner to prepare and present petitions to the House of Commons in case of grievances and the House of Commons to receive the same; that it is an undoubted right and privilege to judge and determine, touching the nature and matter of such petitions, how far they are fit and unfit to be received. The mere mention of recent experiences in the province of Quebec with respect to personal rights is not sufficient to deprive petitioners of their right to request that the British North America Act be amended so as to empower parliament to pass a federal bill of rights in order to secure freedom of speech, press and worship to all people in Canada. The report of the clerk of petitions is in order in the statement that all the requirements of standing order 68 have been complied with and there can be no objection to the petition being received.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

ADVANCES FOR ACQUISITION OF TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES CAPITAL STOCK

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): In accordance with the provisions of section 28 of the Trans-Canada Air Lines Act, 1927, I desire to lay on the table a copy of order in council P.C. 2009 of May 23, 1947, respecting advances to the Canadian National Railway Company to enable the company to acquire the remaining capital stock of Trans-Canada Air Lines.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

FAMILY ALLOWANCES

Mr. WRIGHT:

1. With what provinces have agreements been reached for the provincial department to handle family allowance investigation work?
2. What are the financial arrangements with each province in the carrying out of this work?

Mr. MARTIN: Stand.

Mr. WRIGHT: This question has been on the order paper for a month. It is a simple question, asking with what provinces have agreements been made with regard to investigational work on family allowances and what the financial arrangements are. I should like to ask the minister why this question is not answered, or when it can be answered.

Mr. MARTIN: As the hon. gentleman knows, I would not keep him waiting very long if I could possibly avoid it. Since we have the same objective in mind I hope he will allow the matter to stand for a little while longer. As he appreciates, the matter is one which involves many factors. I shall do my best to give an answer to his important question at the earliest possible moment.

MIGRATION TO BRITISH COLUMBIA FROM OTHER PARTS OF CANADA

Mr. FULTON:

1. What is the total number, by provinces, of those who have moved from other parts of Canada into the province of British Columbia in each year since the 1st January, 1943?
2. Are any figures available for the current year?

Mr. MacKINNON:

1. No information. Although there are no available statistics on the number of persons, by provinces, who have moved from other parts of Canada into the province of British Columbia in each year since the 1st of January, 1943, an estimate has been made, based on the count of ration book distribution, of the net internal migration by provinces for the periods 1941 to 1944 and 1944 to 1946. These estimates show that there has been a net inflow of population into British Columbia of 89,000 between 1941 and 1944 and a further net migration into the province of 56,000 between 1944 and 1946. Since the estimated net movement out of the prairie provinces between 1941 and 1944 was 126,000 and between 1944 and 1946, 101,000, it would appear that most of the gain in population in British Columbia over this period due to internal migration was from the movement of the people from the prairie provinces to British Columbia.

2. No.

HOLLAND, BELGIUM AND LUXEMBOURG——AGREEMENT CREATING ECONOMIC UNION

Mr. CHURCH:

Is the government a party to the agreement or treaty made with France by Great Britain as to an economic union of these two countries, and for an economic union with Holland, Belgium and Luxembourg?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: No. No agreement has been concluded by the United Kingdom and France regarding an economic union between the two countries. Holland, Belgium and Luxembourg alone are parties to the instruments of agreement creating an economic union between these three countries.

TRADE MISSION TO CHINA

Mr. CHURCH:

1. Has any trade mission gone to China, and with what results, and is there yet any improvement in the economic conditions of that country?

2. Is the government aware of the trade treaty recently made with America by China, and is a similar trade treaty under way on behalf of Canada with China, or is one being sought there yet?

Mr. MacKINNON:

1. No trade mission has been sent to China, but Canada maintains in addition to the Canadian embassy at Nanking, a senior trade commissioner at Shanghai who is keeping the government constantly informed of trade conditions. Economic conditions remain very uncertain and trade greatly restricted without immediate prospects of improvement.

2. A treaty of friendship, commerce and navigation between the United States of America and the Republic of China was signed on November 2, 1946. The treaty provides for the reciprocal most favoured nation treatment between the two countries.

A commercial modus vivendi between Canada and China was completed on September 26, 1946, in Nanking by an exchange of notes between the Chinese government and the Canadian ambassador to China. The modus vivendi provides for the reciprocal exchange of unconditional most favoured nation treatment. This means that the products of each country on importation into the other country will not be subject to customs duties or charges greater than those which apply to any third country. Similarly any concession which either Canada or China may grant in the future to a third country will be automatically extended to the other. Thus imports into Canada from China will be subject to the intermediate tariff and lower rates rather than the general tariff as heretofore. The tariff treatment which Canada affords to British countries is specifically excepted from the operation of the modus vivendi so that the British preferential system is not affected by it.

COUNCIL OF FOREIGN MINISTERS

Mr. CHURCH:

When is the next meeting of the Moscow conference powers, Great Britain, Soviet union and the United States, to be held, and where, and what is the agenda postponed from the Moscow meeting to the next meeting?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: The next full meeting of the members of the council of foreign ministers who participated in the recent Moscow conference will be held in London in November. If, however, the foreign ministers of the United Kingdom, the United States of America, France and the U.S.S.R. are all present at the meeting of the general assembly of the united nations which is scheduled to take place in September, a brief meeting of the council of foreign ministers may be held at that time. No information is available concerning the agenda for these meetings.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

BELLEVILLE ARMOURIES

Mr. STOKES:

1. Has any day or piece work been done in connection with repairs or alterations or otherwise of the armories at Belleville, Ontario, since 1st of January, 1944?

2. If so, what is the total amount of said work done in each of the years 1944, 1945, 1946 and 1947 to date?

3. To what persons has payment been made for such work or repairs and how much has been paid to each, and, if not all paid, what are the amounts owing to each of said persons as of this date?

RESERVE ARMY AND CADET TRAINING

Mr. PROBE:

What amount of money has been spent, by military districts or by provinces, in each of the fiscal years from April 1, 1937 to March 31, 1947 for: (a) reserve army training; (b) cadet training?

MOTION FOR PAPERS

PEACE TREATY WITH JAPAN—JAPANESE TEXTILE INDUSTRY

Mr. CHURCH:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, cables, orders in council and other documents exchanged between the government of Canada or any officer thereof and the governments of Great Britain, Australia and the United States of America, or from General MacArthur and the Right Hon. Dr. Evatt of Australia, in relation to the proposed peace treaty with Japan. Also any correspondence with respect to the rebuilding of the textile industry in Japan to a pre-war standard, as proposed by the United States of America.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I understand that the hon. member is prepared to allow this motion to stand, and I think together we can perhaps modify it and put it in a form in which it can be adopted.

Motion stands.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

ARRANGEMENTS FOR SERVICE TO BERMUDA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply. In view of recent press reports, and in particular a dispatch from Washington which appeared in the Montreal Gazette on June 17, regarding the delay in initiation of Canada's air service to Bermuda arising out of difficulty over use of the United States airport there, would the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply care to make a statement which would clarify this situation?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): The following statement has been prepared in answer to this inquiry.

The Canadian government has for long made no secret of its intention to operate an air service southward through Bermuda and the Caribbean area to Latin America. The necessary agreement has been reached with Bermuda and with Trinidad and Jamaica regarding traffic rights, and Trans-Canada Air Lines is anxious to initiate the service at the earliest possible day. In fact this service would have been in operation considerably before this time if it had not been for difficulties arising out of the use of Kindley field, which is the only available air base in Bermuda.

This base, along with certain others in British colonial possessions in the Caribbean, is a United States army base obtained in the destroyer-bases deal during the recent war. It is available for civil use by the United States and by the United Kingdom, of course, but the question of its civil use by the air lines of other countries was left for agreement between the United States and the United Kingdom, and until such agreement has been reached the civil aircraft of other countries are not, apparently, allowed to use the field.

The Canadian government, of course, made known a considerable time ago its desire to use Kindley field, and discussions between the United Kingdom and the United States have, we understand, taken place regarding civil use of this and other United States military airports in British possessions farther south. We also understood that general agreement in principle had been reached between the United Kingdom and the United States on this subject. The United Kingdom has informed us that it would have no objection to immediate use of Kindley field by Trans-Canada Air Lines. However, we are informed that the United States is unwilling to permit any temporary use of Kindley field by Trans-Canada Air Lines or the air lines of any country—other than the United States and the United Kingdom—until formal agreement with the United Kingdom regarding civil use of this and other bases concerned has been signed. We are also informed that the United States does not wish to sign this agreement unless and until an agreement is signed covering similar use of United States military bases in Newfoundland. Negotiations between the Newfoundland commission of government and the United States in this connection have been going on over a long period of months, but no final agreement has as yet been reached. Meanwhile the United States has not allowed Trans-Canada Air Lines to make use of the air base in Bermuda until it has reached agreement with Newfoundland regarding similar use of United States bases there as a prerequisite to signature of the United Kingdom-United States agreement regarding the base in Bermuda. Until that time, therefore, the Canadian air service to Bermuda and farther south must, much to our regret, be deferred.

We, of course, are not a direct party to any negotiations regarding the bases in Newfoundland, and all we have been able to do is to make known our hope that this matter may be cleared up speedily.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

FLAG ON POST OFFICE BUILDING IN QUEBEC CITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JEAN FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Temiscouata): Mr. Speaker, I have something very sad to tell you. During the week-end I passed though Quebec city and there was a flag on the mast over the post office. It was a red duster with a big hole in it, and many Americans who were there in convention asked me, "Is this the pattern or design of your flag?" A flag with a big hole in it! I hope it will be changed. Moreover, I would ask the government not to allow that flag to be hoisted after sundown.

DOMINION DAY

INQUIRY AS TO SUSPENSION FOR JULY 1 OF ORDER RESPECTING MEATLESS DAYS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. A. CRUICKSHANK (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a question. Does the government intend to waive the meatless days regulation on our national holiday, July 1? If not, why not?

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): The prices board issued a statement the other day announcing that the requirements with respect to meatless days were being relaxed to the extent of allowing frankfurters and weiners, otherwise known as hot dogs, to be sold on that day—as a matter of fact, to be sold on Tuesdays and Fridays from now until the end of September at outdoor events, picnics, and the like. Apart from that, it is not proposed to relax the restrictions with respect to meatless days.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: What about the second question—why not?

Mr. ABBOTT: The answer to that is that the continuance of restrictions with respect to meatless days results in a substantial saving of meat which is thereby available for shipment to needy countries.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: One day?

CRIMINAL CODE

RACE MEETINGS—ADMINISTRATION AND SUPERVISION OF PARI-MUTUEL BETTING

Right Hon J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture, for the Minister of Justice) moved the third reading of Bill No. 268, to amend the criminal code.

Mr. E. G. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, before this bill is given third reading there are a few words I have to say about it.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but the question had already been put to the house and no one had risen to speak.

Mr. COLDWELL: Mr. Speaker, I doubt whether you heard the hon. gentleman, but when you rose he was on his feet trying to make himself heard.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): The purpose of this bill is to amend the criminal code to give certain rights to people in this country to undertake and run pari-mutuels at different affairs throughout the land. I feel that this is a type of legislation which no hon. member should support, and I say that mainly because it gives to certain people in Canada the right to carry on pari-mutuels while it is discriminatory in that it prohibits other associations from undertaking dog racing and car racing.

I do not rise to support betting or pari-mutuels. I rise to protest against the fact that we have here a situation wherein wealthy people, race horse owners in this country, are given the right to carry on pari-mutuels at our fairs under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Agriculture. I submit that if the government sees fit to allow any type of gambling of this sort it should not pass an amendment such as this which, as I have pointed out, is discriminatory. On that ground also I protest. I feel that if we are to have a provision of this kind it should apply to other associations such as dog racing. They should have the same privilege.

In conclusion, I wish to protest the whole affair. I do not think that this house should pass such legislation at all.

Mr. SPEAKER: Shall the motion carry?

Some hon. MEMBERS: On division.

Motion agreed to, on division, and bill read the third time and passed.

OLD AGE PENSIONS

INCREASES IN AMOUNTS AND INCOME ALLOWANCE —MODIFICATION OF ELIGIBILITY REQUIREMENTS

Hon. PAUL MARTIN (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved the second reading of Bill No. 339 to amend the Old Age Pensions Act.

Mr. BRACKEN: Surely we shall have a statement from the minister before second reading.

Mr. MARTIN: I think all hon. members will agree with the leader of the opposition that the house will expect a comprehensive statement about this measure.

Mr. Speaker, the bill which is introduced by this resolution represents another forward step taken by the government of this country in the building of an adequate social security programme for the Canadian people. It has particular significance because of the fact that the legislation which is being amended by this bill represented, when it was passed in 1927, the first occasion on which the federal authority in this country assumed responsibilities of a permanent nature in the public assistance field. Prior to that date action had been taken with respect to labour legislation including the establishment of fair wage legislation and the provision of a scheme of government annuities. We have now had a continuous period of twenty years through which the federal authority has maintained, and indeed from time to time increased, its commitments with respect to the care of the needy aged in all parts of the dominion.

This government has given conclusive evidence of its concern for the welfare of the aged among our population. It was a government under the leadership of the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) that first introduced the Old Age Pensions Act in 1927. Through the amendments and changes which have been made since that time up to the present, the intention of the government has been to make easier the lot of our older citizens who had need of financial assistance.

It is important at this stage to recall the proposals the federal government made in August 1945 to the provinces with respect to a programme covering national health, public investment and social security. These proposals include a suggested scheme for a national old age pensions and old age assistance programme of a fundamental character.

What we do now must be consistent with the dominion government's proposals to the provinces. We have a plan and it is a good plan. What we do today must not in any way prejudice the over-all plan. I would remind the house that the proposals of the dominion government with regard to old age pensions, and indeed in the whole field of social security, remain an essential part of the government's programme as has been repeatedly stated by the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilsley), the Minister of Justice (Mr. St. Laurent) and myself.

The Old Age Pensions Act of 1927 originally provided for a $20 monthly maximum pension totalling $240 a year, with an outside maximum income of $125 a year apart from the pension. I ask hon. members to bear these figures in mind in the light of what the government is now proposing in the present amendments.

Later amendments to the act were made which, without increasing the benefits to the pensioners themselves, relieved the provinces of a considerable share of the pension cost by increasing the federal government's percentage of contribution from 50 per cent to 75 per cent and correspondingly reducing the provincial share from 50 per cent to 25 per cent.

The first occasion on which the scope of the act itself was widened was when the then government of Canada, under the leadership of the present Prime Minister, introduced amendments to provide additional categories of pensioners, extending the benefits of old age pensions legislation to the blind.

In addition to this, since 1942 a number of the provinces have been paying supplementary allowances to pensioners in addition to payments made by the provinces and the federal government jointly under the Old Age Pensions Act itself. These payments have ranged in amount from nothing at all in some provinces up to $10 monthly in British Columbia.

In 1943, action was taken by this government under the War Measures Act to increase the maximum pension payable from $20 to $25 a month, and, a few months later, to increase the maximum income allowable under the act from $365 to $425 a year, inclusive of pension.

Finally, as a result of the meeting of the interprovincial old age pensions board in November, 1946, a complete revision of the regulations under the Old Age Pensions Act was undertaken and made effective on May 15 of this year. These regulations are now considerably more generous than they were before, particularly in making it possible to set the commencement date of pension back to the month following application, and in respect to the interpretation of residence and the calculation of income. More generous provisions have also been included dealing with the kinds of evidence that can be accepted as proof of age. The effect of these new regulations, which relax the present restrictions applying to applicants for pension and to the circumstances under which pensions may be granted, will be to add an additional half a million dollars yearly to the cost of old age pensions.

I would point out, however, that the government has for some time now made clear its desire to introduce comprehensive and sweeping changes in the provision for the aged and the blind throughout this country. Hon. members know of the proposals which were advanced by the dominion government to the provinces in the conference of August, 1945. These proposals fall into three main categories—public investment, social security and tax reform.

As part of its programme in the field of social security, the federal government proposed a system of national old age pensions. This provided for the federal government to assume the full responsibility for paying pensions at the rate of $30 a month to all persons in Canada seventy years and over. The federal government proposed these pensions for all eligible persons without any income or means test whatsoever, and the federal government proposed to administer this scheme directly and bear 100 per cent of the cost, amounting to an estimated $200 million annually.

In addition to this, the federal government also undertook to pay, on a fifty-fifty basis with the provinces, the cost of pensions to the aged between the ages of sixty-five and seventy years and to the blind from the age of twenty-one. This was to be subject to a means test more generous than at present and was to be paid on a basis of $30 a month pension. The provinces were, under this proposal, to administer this scheme and the cost of this part of the programme was estimated at a total of $34 to $40 million annually, with the federal government's share of this approximately $17 to $20 million annually.

This, in broad outline, represents the proposals made by the federal government to the provinces with respect to the aged and the blind. These are an integral part of the objectives in social security which this government has set for itself as soon as satisfactory over-all arrangements on social security, fiscal and other matters can be made with the provinces.

I mention these proposals at this point because I wish hon. members of this house to see not only the background of the various steps that have already been taken by the government of this country with respect to provisions actually in existence for the aged and the blind, but also the plans which we have laid before this country as to the direction in which, with the cooperation of the provinces, we hope to move.

The government has also indicated in its proposals to the provinces, and elsewhere, the advantages of a more strictly contributory system of old age insurance. The principal advantage of a contributory system is that, like the universal pension scheme, it offers payment as of right to persons reaching the established retirement age who have paid into a fund specifically created by joint contribution for that purpose. It removes the fear of destitution without impairing the dignity and self-respect of the person who reaches the later stages of life and is no longer able to maintain himself by his own earning effort.

In most respects, the contributory system of old age insurance shares common advantages with the universal pension scheme at seventy contained in the dominion's proposals to the provinces. To quote from the dominion government's proposals:

> Payment of pension as of right to people of this age offers the best kind of economic security. It removes fear of destitution much more certainly than any other method, and relieves the old people of the necessity of seeking work, or of endeavouring to keep on working in unfavourable circumstances and beyond the age at which they should be able to retire, without dependence on charity or burdening the family. In addition to providing a minimum subsistence for those with no other resources, this system would enable other persons with moderate private savings to retire from active work sooner, or in more comfort, than would otherwise be possible.

I make reference to this inclusion in the explanatory features of the proposals made to the provinces to show that the government has in mind what the Prime Minister stated in this house a number of years ago to be ultimately the kind of pattern in respect of social insurance which we must envisage in this country. Admittedly in a country like ours, with great open spaces, a federal state, a contributory system along the lines I have been talking about is not as feasible as it is in some unitary states; and certainly the far-flung rural parts of our provinces do present difficulties in the consideration of such a scheme. My own belief is that we must ultimately look to the establishment of such a system, perhaps beginning in stages, and that our long range plans should be directed toward that desirable goal. It would therefore be a mistake—and I say this with all the seriousness that I know hon. members will recognize in my approach to this problem—to take any action now which would result in placing additional obstacles in the way of what I believe to be a desirable objective.

I have already said that in the consideration of this measure one must bear in mind the broad scheme of social security envisaged by the government in its proposals made to the provinces twenty-four months ago, and which, in its general objectives we believe meets the wishes of the great majority of the people of this country.

No greater disservice could be rendered to those who support the desirability of a broad social security system than to throw out of balance particular phases and destroy the desired ultimate pattern. That pattern is in the thoughts of the present administration now as it was when it laid before the provinces its objectives in the field of health, public investment and social security. I say with great respect that pattern hon. members should keep before themselves in the discussion of this measure. No one has stated that pattern in terms of general objectives better than the Prime Minister of Canada, who, speaking before the annual convention of the American Federation of Labour in Toronto on October 9, 1942, declared:

> The era of freedom will be achieved only as social security and human welfare become the main concern of men and nations. It is necessary that social security and human welfare should be expressed in definite terms—of the kind of objectives I have in mind I would merely mention the following as a national minimum; useful employment for all who are willing to work, standards of nutrition and housing adequate to ensure the health of the whole population; social insurance against privations resulting from unemployment, accident, the death of the breadwinner, ill health and old age.

That, coming from a man whose whole life has been devoted to placing the general above the particular interest, I know will be accepted by this house as a serious statement of direction. Also this matter we are now discussing must be considered in the light of the solid and responsible basis which has been already provided for in the growing structure of social security which stage by stage we are building in this country. I am thinking in particular of the Unemployment Insurance Act of 1940 which today protects from the hazards of unemployment over 2½ million Canadian workmen and serves as a major bulwark of social security. I am thinking also of the Family Allowances Act of 1944, also initiated by this government, which today brings to 3,600,000 Canadian children in 1,600,000 homes the means of ensuring better opportunities and a better standard of living. By this single measure alone we have been able to provide an increased measure of security to fully one-half of the total population of our country. Two-thirds of the entire population of Canada are benefited directly either by the protection afforded through unemployment insurance or by the increased social well-being offered through our family allowances legislation.

We must also take note of the important social security measures extended through the Department of Veterans Affairs, its grants for land and housing, its reestablishment credits, out-of-work benefits, retraining in vocational and trade schools; its underwriting of university courses for our veterans. The Department of Veterans Affairs programme for the rehabilitation and reestablishment of veterans is the most generous and comprehensive that any country has provided for its servicemen and women, and forms a part of the structure of social security.

When one considers the extent and coverage of our present fourfold programme of unemployment insurance, family allowances and veterans legislation, and our present benefits for old age pensioners, together with what I am proposing in the amending bill, one recognizes the basis for the statement that fully three-fourths of the people of Canada today come directly under the protection of these four measures which we have established as the cornerstone of our social security structure in Canada.

The present Old Age Pensions Act which we are discussing today already provides assistance to something like forty per cent of our total aged population seventy years and over. The figures supplied to us by the provinces show that as of the end of March, 1947, no less than 209,000 aged persons and 7,000 blind persons were in receipt of pensions under the legislation as it exists today. This represents in some provinces as high as sixty per cent of the total aged population.

The measure which is being introduced today will make it possible for the provinces to increase by twenty per cent or more the assistance which has been given to date to this substantial section of our aged population. Where, because of outside income, pensioners have not been receiving the full pension, the increase which the provinces will be enabled to give under the new legislation will be even greater than twenty per cent.

Of equal importance, if not greater, is the fact that because of the more generous provisions which are included in this amending bill respecting the amount of outside income which a pensioner may have and still remain on pension, thousands of persons will be brought for the first time within the benefits of our old age pensions legislation.

It is estimated that when the provinces have taken full advantage of the increases in maximum income allowable for aged and blind persons which are permitted by this proposed amending bill, the result will be an increase in the pension rolls of something between 60,000 and 65,000 additional persons. In other words, when this new bill becomes law in all the provinces, fully 50 per cent of the aged people of Canada will be receiving benefits under it, and that 50 per cent comprises that section of the aged population which can genuinely be said to be most in need of outside assistance.

The financial implications of this bill deserve the most careful consideration. The provincial supplemental allowances at present being paid —and there is nothing in this bill to prevent them from being continued—amount to well over six million dollars annually. If the provinces take full advantage of these new provisions, the provincial share of old age pensions under the act itself will advance from approximately sixteen million dollars to approximately twenty-three million dollars. This will automatically mean that the federal government's share of the cost of old age pensions will rise from forty-eight million dollars to sixty-eight million dollars a year. When this bill becomes law and full effect is given to it in all the provinces, this country will be spending on old age pensioners and blind persons close to one hundred million dollars a year.

Perhaps at this stage it would be of assistance to hon. members if I were to outline the main provisions of the amending bill.

1. It is proposed, in this amending bill, to do away with the provision which has been in the act up to the present time, section 9(1), setting the maximum pension which any province is permitted to pay. Under these new amendments, therefore, the provinces themselves will be free to fix the maximum pension.

2. The amount of income which a pensioner is permitted to have, inclusive of his pension, is increased in the case of a single aged person under the proposed bill from $425 to $600 annually. The practical effect of this will be that any province will be free, if it chooses to do so, to set a pension rate as high as $50 a month or $600 a year for a person who has no other income of his own with which to supplement his pension allotment.

In case of a married pensioner, this maximum income limit is set at $1,080 instead of $850 as at present.

In the case of a single blind pensioner the new amount of maximum income allowable will be including pension $720, whereas formerly it was $500.

In the case of a blind pensioner married to a sighted spouse, the maximum income limit is set at $1,200 whereas it was formerly $925.

In the case of two blind persons married and living together, the maximum allowable is set in the bill at $1,320.

In all of these cases the amounts mentioned are inclusive of any pension or pensions receivable by one or both spouses under the provisions of the act.

It will be seen therefore that this provision raises substantially the margins of outside income which an individual is permitted to have and still qualify for full or partial pension. Because of these higher income limits the number of aged and blind persons who will now be eligible for pension will be substantially increased. I have already stated that the department's estimate for this increase is about 60,000 additional pensioners, assuming of course that all the provinces will take full advantage of these higher income limits.

Mr. FLEMING: Does that estimate of 60,000 include blind pensioners, or only old age pensioners?

Mr. MARTIN: Both.

Mr. FLEMING: Has the minister broken down those figures?

Mr. MARTIN: We will discuss that in committee. Perhaps if I might make my statement without interruption we might discuss those points in committee, by way of question and answer.

3. The maximum federal contribution to any pension, based on the seventy-five per cent formula which has now been in existence since 1931, is increased to $22.50 in this amending bill, as compared to $18.75 at the present time. In other words, a province will be assured that, on the basis of a pension of $30 a month, it will receive reimbursement from the federal treasury to the extent of seventy-five per cent of its net payments. At the same time it will be free to provide pensions higher than $30 a month if it deems it advisable to do so.

In this connection it is interesting to note that the federal contribution has risen by successive stages from $10 per month per pensioner in 1927 to $15 in 1931 to $18.75 in 1943 to $22.50 under this present bill. At the same time, the provincial contribution which was originally $10 went down to $5 in 1931 and increased to $6.25 in 1943. Apart from the provinces which are paying supplemental allowances of $5 a month or more, the other provinces are paying less per pensioner today than they were in 1927.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Not in British Columbia.

Mr. MARTIN: I said, apart from the provinces which are paying supplemental allowances. I shall have something to say about British Columbia in a few moments which might warm the heart of my hon. friend and colleague.

4. Another feature of this new bill, which I am sure will commend itself favourably to all members of this house, involves a modification of the present residence requirements. At the present time the act states that a person must have lived in Canada for the twenty-year period immediately prior to application before he can be considered eligible for pension. While this requirement has been somewhat modified by regulation, cases of hardship still arise. Persons who were born in Canada and have lived here almost all their lives sometimes disqualify themselves for pension by moving within the twenty years, before applying for pension, to the United States or to some other country and remaining for periods in excess of the four-year limit permitted by the present regulations.

The amending bill makes provision to cover such cases. It provides that any gaps in Canadian residence during the twenty years prior to application may be compensated for by earlier periods of residence. These earlier periods of residence must be double in amount to the periods of absence during the twenty-year period before application. In other words, if a person makes application for old age pension at 70 years of age, and it is shown that he has been absent for ten years from Canada between his fiftieth and his seventieth birthday, it does not necessarily follow that that person is ineligible for pension. He can get a pension if he can prove that he resided in Canada prior to his fiftieth birthday for a period of twenty years. This provision thus compensates on a two-for-one basis for the ten-year absence from Canada during the latter portion of his life.

It is felt that this provision will enable the pension authorities, which under the act are the provinces, to deal with a significant number of cases where, under the present act, there has been obvious hardship on this score.

5. Hon. members will also note that the requirement regarding national status has been eliminated by this amending bill. This is consistent with the provisions of the unemployment insurance and the family allowances acts, neither one of which limits eligibility for benefit in this way. It is felt that the requirement of twenty years' residence in Canada as a minimum provides an adequate safeguard.

I am sure there will be general agreement with the view that, as a matter of equity, any person who has spent twenty years or more of his working life in Canada and paid through taxes his full share towards the maintenance of public and other social services should not be debarred from application for old age pension when he reaches his declining years.

6. One special change in respect to the blind should perhaps also be noted. The existing provision debarring blind persons who marry from receiving more than one pension between the two of them will now be eliminated. This provision was originally inserted to discourage persons suffering from hereditary types of blindness from marrying. While it is undoubtedly true that no one wishes to encourage the marriage of persons suffering from hereditary blindness, it is not felt that the existing provision has been particularly effective, nor is it felt that this represents the constructive approach to the solution of this problem. This problem should not be met by depriving a blind married couple of this subsistence which they require for their actual maintenance.

7. There is one final change of importance which I have left to the last because it concerns the provinces much more than it does the federal authority. This change affects the determination of the province responsible for the payment of the provincial share of pension.

At the present time there is a complicated provision which says that the provincial share of pension shall be divided proportionately between those provinces in which the pensioner has resided during the twenty-year period prior to his application for pension. For example a pensioner may reside in British Columbia but his twenty years of residence prior to coming on pension might be divided between eight years in British Columbia, six years in Saskatchewan, four years in Quebec and two years in Prince Edward Island. British Columbia has to bill each of the three other provinces for their respective shares of the $6.25 monthly, which is the provincial portion of the pension. This is an obviously cumbersome method of apportioning provincial costs, especially since for most provinces these amounts paid out and the amounts received from other provinces balance off fairly evenly in the long run.

This amending bill introduces a simpler method of apportioning the provincial cost. It provides that the entire provincial share shall be paid by the province in which the pensioner has lived for the greatest number of days in the three-year period prior to his reaching pensionable age or prior to making application for pension, whichever is the later.

Needless to say the provinces have been consulted on this change, as they have indeed been advised of the intentions of this government with respect to the principles involved in the other proposed changes in the act.

I should like to have it noted that as a result of the bill, the contribution to pensions for the aged offered by the federal government represents an increase of 125 per cent over the contribution originally offered under the Old Age Pensions Act of 1927.

The bill provides in permanent legislative form for an increase of $10 in the amount of pension at present authorized under the Old Age Pensions Act itself. This is so because the order in council authorizing a $5 supplementary payment was never incorporated in the Old Age Pensions Act itself and will expire when the Continuation of Transitional Measures Act runs its course within the year. The bill, therefore, incorporates this supplementary payment, and the pension payable under the act is increased by $10.

But the bill actually does more than that. It does not merely make it possible for the provinces to raise the pension to $30 a month. By removing the pension ceiling and by increasing the federal contribution, the government is, in fact, opening the way for the provinces to pay more than $30 a month. If the six provinces which are now paying supplemental allowances continue to do so, the result will be a pension in most parts of Canada substantially in excess of the standard rate of $30 a month, and this in most cases without an additional cent of expense per pensioner to the provinces.

Take the case of Alberta, for example. This province is already paying a combined pension and supplemental allowance amounting to $30 a month. Of this amount the Alberta government is currently paying $11.25, made up as follows: $6.25 a month as Alberta's share of the $25 pension provided by the federal law and wartime orders in council, and an additional provincial bonus of $5 a month which has been paid since 1942. The federal share payable at the present time is $18.75 a month, which, under the provisions of this amending bill, will be increased to $22.50 a month. If Alberta does no more than continue its present payment from provincial funds amounting to $11.25 a month, this sum, together with the increased federal contribution of $22.50, will mean that Alberta can actually raise its pension rate to $33.75 a month without an additional cent of cost per pensioner to the province over what it is paying at the present time.

Exactly the same situation, and I know there will be special interests in this, prevails in Saskatchewan.

Mr. COLDWELL: Is it not a fact that the province under this bill may pay less than $30 a month?

Mr. MARTIN: We have no control over what a province may do.

Mr. COLDWELL: Under this bill they are permitted to pay less if they so desire.

Mr. MARTIN: No bill which this parliament can pass can in any way affect what a province may do within its own constitutional jurisdiction. What applies to Alberta applies in equal measure to Saskatchewan. The house will recall that the government made known in January of this year its intention as to amending the act. Saskatchewan is now, since April of this year, paying a combined pension and allowance of $30 monthly, the provincial share consisting of the $6.25 a month which represents the province's part of the combined federal-provincial old age pension and, in addition to this, a $5 supplemental allowance. This means that the provincial contribution from these two sources currently amounts to $11.25 monthly. With the increase in the federal contribution from $18.75 to $22.50 provided in this amending bill, it will now be possible for Saskatchewan to pay a pension as high as $33.75 a month without an additional cent of cost per pensioner to the province over what it is paying at the present time.

Turning now to the province of British Columbia, we find that there the province which started to pay a provincial supplement of $5 monthly in 1942 is now paying a provincial supplement of $10 a month, in addition to the sum of $6.25 a month representing the provincial share of the combined federal-provincial old age pension. In other words, the provincial contribution here amounts currently to $16.25 a month compared to the federal contribution of $18.75 a month which, under this amending bill, will be increased to $22.50 a month. This will mean that the province of British Columbia will be enabled by this legislation to pay a pension as high as $38.75 a month without an additional cent of cost per pensioner to the province over what it is paying at the present time.

Ontario is paying a somewhat smaller pension and allowance, not exceeding $28 a month. It too provides a provincial supplement over and above its statutory contribution of $6.25 a month under the federal-provincial old age pension plan. This contribution in Ontario is a variable one, being 15 per cent of the actual amount of pension being paid, up to a maximum of $3 per month in any one case. In other words, the maximum provincial contribution to any pension at the present time is $9.25 a month, consisting of the $6.25 monthly contribution which is required of the province under the federal-provincial old age pension plan and the additional $3 provincial supplement. Since this amending bill calls for an increase in the federal contribution from $18.75 to $22.50 a month, it will be possible for the province of Ontario, by maintaining its current rate of contributions, to pay a pension of $31.75 a month without increasing its current expenditures per pensioner on old age pensions.

In summary, it will be apparent that the result of the present amending bill will be in effect to set a standard minimum pension of $30 per month in all the provinces, assuming, of course, that all the provinces will be anxious to take full advantage of the federal contribution. More than this, however, it will undoubtedly result in a number, and perhaps even a majority, of the provinces of Canada going beyond this $30 pension to set higher pension rates in their respective provinces. The illustrations I have just given make it clear that in a substantial number of cases the provinces will be able to do this without increasing in any way the commitments that they have made already, on their own initiative, with respect to the limits of their contributions to old age pensions at the present time. Nothing in the federal Old Age Pensions Act as it will be amended by this present bill debars any of these provinces from incorporating their present provincial supplements into their basic pension rates, and it is thought that the provinces already paying provincial supplements will, in fact, be encouraged to maintain their provincial contributions on at least the present basis. If this is done, the result will be that we will have in actual fact a pension rate throughout all of Canada which, on the average, will exceed substantially the standard pension rate of $30 contemplated by these present amendments.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that after consideration of this measure the house will conclude that this bill goes a long way towards easing the lot of our aged people and those who have been afflicted with blindness. It is a progressive and advancing step. It will aid and assist both the present pensioners and those who will, for the first time, become eligible for pension. What this bill will accomplish, if the provinces take full advantage of its provisions, may be summarized in this way:

1. It does away with the provision limiting the maximum pension which any province is permitted to pay.

2. It establishes a basic standard pension of $30 a month to which the dominion will contribute and leaves the provinces free to increase the standard pension rate as they deem advisable.

3. It raises the statutory pension to which the dominion will contribute from $20 to $30 a month.

4. It increases substantially the amount of outside income which a pensioner may have and still qualify for full or partial pension.

5. It increases the amount of allowable income for a single aged person, from $425, inclusive of pension, to $600 a year.

6. It increases the maximum allowable income for a married old age pensioner from $850, inclusive of pension, to $1,080 a year.

7. It increases the maximum allowable income for an old age pensioner married to a blind person from $925, inclusive of pension, to $1,200 a year.

8. It increases the maximum allowable income for a single blind pensioner from $500, inclusive of pension, to $720 a year.

Mr. GREEN: May I ask the minister if these figures include the extra allowance paid by certain provinces?

Mr. MARTIN: Of course, that is part of the income. I think that my statement is pretty clear on that point.

9. It increases the maximum allowable income for a married blind pensioner from $925. inclusive of pension, to $1,200 a year.

10. It increases the maximum allowable income for a married blind couple from $1,000, inclusive of pension, to $1,320 a year.

11. It will add to our federal-provincial pension lists, because of the more generous provisions, between 60,000 and 65,000 additional pensioners.

12. It modifies and makes more generous the present residence provisions and eliminates national status as a requirement for pension.

13. It increases the federal contribution for old age pensions and pensions for the blind by an estimated $20 million a year.

14. It simplifies the division of provincial responsibility for pension in cases where a pensioner has lived in more than one province before applying for pension.

15. It does more than raise the pension to $30 a month. Six provinces are now paying supplementary allowances. If the provinces continue to do this, the result will be in most parts of Canada a pension substantially in excess of $30 a month, and this, in most cases, without an additional cent of expense to the provinces over what they are paying at the present time.

The hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith) said that no member of this house has any monopoly of interest in the aged people of this country. I believe that to be a correct statement. The government is very much aware of the need for improving the lot of our aged people. Our older citizens are the people who have built this country and made it the nation it is today. I firmly believe this parliament will recognize that it has a solemn obligation towards those who on reaching the later years find themselves in need of assistance in maintaining themselves.

What we do now—and I cannot emphasize this too strongly—must be consistent both with present need and the need of tomorrow. It must be consistent with what we are trying to achieve with the joint cooperation of the provinces. It must be consistent with the ultimate realization of a self-sustaining and nation-wide contributory system of retirement insurance.

In conclusion I should like to summarize the objectives and the general nature of these proposals made by this government two years ago, particularly in relation to the establishment of a national health programme and a national social security programme, because they are inextricably intertwined and interwoven with the matter that we are now discussing. The national health programme as laid down by the federal government included financial assistance to the provinces in establishing health insurance, to provide health services to individuals, health grants to assist and extend public health and preventive medicine, a grant for organization and planning of medical services, and provision for low interest loans for the construction of hospitals. The dominion also proposed the extension of unemployment insurance to cover a much wider range of workers. It was proposed to provide unemployment assistance to cover able-bodied unemployed who do not have benefit rights at present.

Finally, to achieve security for the aged members of our population, the federal government proposed to establish a system of universal old age pensions paying $30 monthly to all persons 70 and over without means test. Additionally, the federal government undertook to share on a fifty-fifty basis with the provinces—

Mr. FLEMING: When?

Mr. MARTIN: Just as soon as my hon. friend can persuade some of his colleagues to come to an agreement.

Additionally, the federal government undertook to share on a fifty-fifty basis with the provinces the cost of means test pensions at a similar rate to the blind at 21 and to the aged 65 to 70.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): May I ask the minister a question?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No; sit down.

Mr. MARTIN: I prefer to finish my statement.

The measure which is today being placed before hon. members of this house for consideration has been deliberately designed to keep within the framework of the dominion's proposals to the provinces on assistance to the aged, so that it may be abundantly clear that we are not offering this measure to the house and to the country as a substitute for the proposals themselves, but rather, indeed, as a forward step taken to provide a greater measure of assistance to the aged at the present time, but taken in a manner that will be completely consistent with the proposals and within the broad framework of the social security objectives that the government enunciated therein.

Ten governments of Canada today—federal and provincial—by establishing ministries of health and public welfare, have indicated their acceptance of the fact that the provision of public welfare services is an essential responsibility of government in a modern democratic society.

Canada is already in the forefront of nations who seek to raise social standards and protect the wage earner and the family, the veteran, the farmer and the needy aged. We can only proceed by progressive stages and it is as an additional stage that I present this bill today.

We have set our hand to the attainment of long-range social objectives. Upon the attainment of those objectives a great deal depends not only for the present day but for the future.

The task of this government in cooperation with the provinces is to provide for the welfare of the nation as a whole. It is with this in mind that the government has made clear its objectives in regard to national health, social security, public investment.

National programmes of such a broad and fundamental nature cannot be achieved in a country like Canada only by the central government. They can be achieved by all governments, dominion and provincial, acting in cooperation to ensure the greatest possible measure of well-being, economic security and social welfare for the Canadian people.

This present measure, representing as it does a joint cooperative effort of the dominion and the provinces, brings us one step nearer to the achievement of the objective that we seek—all governments alike—the greatest measure of security for all the people of Canada, in whatever part of this great country they may live.

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): The measure before us is a bill to amend the Old Age Pensions Act. The minister has put his own interpretation upon the details of this bill, and he has supplemented that interpretation with a review of the government promises of the last twenty-five years and their repetition in detail to date. He has told us of the great plan that was put forward two years ago, a plan which the government voluntarily brought forward, declaring it would undertake to pay $200,000,000. And now he tells us that the proposals which are now before us will cost this nation only $20,000,000. He says that is a great step forward. I suggest that if it is a great step forward it is a very short one. The government has laboured and brought forth a mouse. The mouse has been a long time coming and it is very small when it gets here.

I want to compliment the minister upon making much out of little. He has told us about this grand scheme of two years ago, which everyone in this house, I think, feels was a grand scheme, and then he comes along with a plan which will cost the government only one-tenth as much. Then he takes two-thirds of his speech to excuse himself for bringing such a small edition of the main plan.

In starting out he tells us to keep in mind one basic fact, that the needy aged of this country are getting only $240 a year and that now they will get $360. What he failed to emphasize is that the needy aged of the country are now getting $300, not $240, and these proposals represent an increase of only $5 a month or $60 a year. That is the basic fact.

Mr. MARTIN: What about the maximum income allowed?

Mr. BRACKEN: You are not paying that.

Mr. MARTIN: I am not paying anything.

Mr. BRACKEN: The basic fact about this bill is that the government is proposing now to increase the old age pensions by $5 a month. That is basic, and all the other features which the minister has elaborated are just details—important, yes, but of relatively minor importance. That is the basic fact. The minister has gone a long way today to talk about national health, public investment and other things, but what this country wants to know is what the government will do now for the needy aged. That is the question before us, not the promises of two years ago or twenty-eight years ago, or any promise for the future, but what will be done now.

I do not propose in my remarks today to deal with the details of this bill. I propose rather to discuss the general principles involved in it. My criticisms of the measure can be briefly stated. There are four general criticisms. The first is that the measure has been too long delayed.

Mr. MARTIN: The bill is retroactive to May 1, of course.

Mr. BRACKEN: The minister is excusing himself by saying it is retroactive to May 1. It should have been retroactive to several years ago.

Mr. MARTIN: If that is the case—

Mr. BRACKEN: You made your speech and you refused to let anyone interfere.

Mr. GARDINER: If it had been patterned after your action of a few years ago it would not have gone very far.

Mr. BRACKEN: You will get your chance to speak too. The second criticism is that it provides only partial justice to the aged. I propose to elaborate on these criticisms later. I say, Mr. Speaker, that the measure has been too long delayed by far, both in this session and in previous years, and it provides only partial justice to the aged. The third criticism, an important one, is that the measure is a complete reversal of the government's policy as announced two years ago. Two years ago the government promised old age pensions at 70 without a means test. In this measure they are continuing the test. This government promised two years ago—

Mr. MARTIN: I rise to a question of privilege.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. MARTIN: I rise to a question of privilege, and no one will recognize it more than my hon. friend. I know he will agree—

Mr. BRACKEN: Let us have the point of privilege, but do not make a speech.

Mr. MARTIN: The point of privilege is that the government has not reversed its position at all. What it has done is perfectly consistent with what was proposed in 1945.

Mr. FRASER: That was an election year.

Mr. BRACKEN: I say it is a complete reversal of the government's policy. Two years ago the government proposed old age pensions at 70 without a means test, but in this measure it is perpetuating the means test. Two years ago it proposed old age pensions at 70, the whole cost to be borne by the dominion government. Under this measure a portion of the cost is being put upon the provinces.

Mr. MARTIN: No change made in that at all.

Mr. BRACKEN: There is a change from your promises.

Mr. MARTIN: Not a bit of change.

Mr. BRACKEN: Now, another point. Two years ago this government proposed an old age assistance plan to apply to persons from 65 to 69 years of age, a joint plan to which the dominion and the provinces would contribute. There is nothing in this measure providing assistance for persons between the ages of 65 and 69. And I suggest there should be particularly for widows between those ages; they form a class of people who need assistance at this time. It should apply to persons between those ages. My fourth criticism is that the measure gives no consideration at all to blind persons under 40 years of age—none whatever. I suggest that if there is any justification for aiding blind persons over 40, if there is justification for increasing assistance to them, there is justification for some assistance to blind persons of 39, 38, 37 and lower ages.

I have one other observation to make and a question to ask. In the original old age pensions bill there was no assistance for the first inhabitants of the country, the Indians. They were excluded. That exclusion is continued in this measure. I would ask the government to state its policy with respect to this particular group of people.

I wish now to make a brief statement on the historical background of this measure. As the minister said, it was in 1927 that legislation relating to old age pensions was first enacted in Canada. In that year this parliament passed an act which enabled the dominion government to negotiate agreements with one or more of the provinces by which the dominion and the provinces would each pay fifty per cent of the pension provided that the age of seventy years had been reached. The dominion government prescribed in this legislation that the pension itself was to be limited to $20 per month. The minister today says the provinces can increase the amount beyond what the dominion pays. Some members raised the question—and it could not be denied—that under the bill the provinces can also lessen the amount they pay. Under the original bill they were required to pay, first, half the cost, and then 25 per cent of the cost.

Mr. MARTIN: No.

Mr. BRACKEN: That was in the agreement.

Mr. MARTIN: My hon. friend has not understood it.

Mr. BRACKEN: I know something about it because it was my responsibility and privilege to sign that agreement for Manitoba.

Mr. KNOWLES: It was either the whole thing or none at all.

Mr. BRACKEN: That is correct. The record speaks for itself. The minister is quite wrong in denying what I have said.

An hon. MEMBER: He doesn't know.

Mr. MARTIN: Wait until we get in committee.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. BRACKEN: The pension could only be paid to a British subject not less than seventy years of age who had resided in Canada for twenty years, and for five years in the province where application for pension was made; who was not an Indian, who was not in receipt of an income of more than $1 a day, and who had not transferred any property for the purpose of qualifying for a pension. That was the condition. Those are simple statements of fact in the record.

I might point out the order in which the provinces came into the scheme. The dominion came along and said, "We will pay half the cost of this plan in any province where the province will pay the other half under these conditions." The provinces came in in the following order: British Columbia in 1927—

Mr. REID: We lead.

[Mr. Bracken.]

Mr. BRACKEN: —Manitoba, 1928; Alberta and Ontario, 1929; New Brunswick, 1930; Nova Scotia, 1931; Prince Edward Island, 1931; Quebec, 1936. The Yukon was brought in in 1927, the year in which the measure was passed, and the Northwest territories in 1929.

Mr. COLDWELL: In what year did Saskatchewan come in?

Mr. BRACKEN: 1928.

An hon. MEMBER: One of the first.

Mr. JACKMAN: They are in all right.

Mr. BRACKEN: It was after British Columbia and after Manitoba. In 1931 a major change was made in the act, namely, in the distribution of the costs. The dominion then began to assume seventy-five per cent of the cost and the provinces twenty-five per cent. And in 1937 the blind over forty years of age were made eligible for the pension scheme. For twenty years there has been no statutory revision of the amount of pension paid; in fact, there had been no financial revision of any kind until the war came along, and then by order in council, I think in 1943, provision was made for a $5 increase a month. That increase which was made possible by dominion order in council did not precede but followed the action of certain provinces. Certain provinces went ahead on their own to make increases when they found the dominion only slowly recognizing its responsibilities.

During these years almost all other incomes have increased in this country. From 1939 until the present time the cost of living has increased from 22 to 25 per cent; I am calling on my memory there. Industrial wages have increased by about 25 per cent. Many other wages and incomes have increased. This government itself made provision for increasing the incomes of members of parliament by $2,000 a year. Yet in that whole period of time only $5 a month or $60 a year increase was made for the old people, and now $60 more a year is being added to their income.

As I said, after the war the provinces and not the dominion began to take action in increasing the amount to be paid. British Columbia and Alberta in 1942 passed legislation authorizing increases. Early in 1943 Manitoba and Nova Scotia took similar action. The dominion government in August 1943 passed an order in council by which pensions payable could be increased by $60 a year, or $5 a month; but the dominion provided also that the amount of other income which could be received by the pensioner had to be reduced by a similar amount. I am glad to see that today the government is changing that attitude.

I wish to go back to these detailed criticisms. I said this measure had been too long delayed. I pointed out that it is twenty years since it first came in, that there was no change in the rate of pension until the war was half over, and then only $5 a month. Now the minister brings in a measure which goes only one-tenth of the way toward meeting the objective or the plans which they announced so boldly in the press and otherwise two years ago.

Secondly, I said that the bill provides only partial justice to the aged. Twenty years ago the pension was $20 a month; four years ago it was raised to $25 a month.

Mr. MARTIN: Why did the Conservative party oppose it?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. BRACKEN: Now it is to be raised to $30 a month. I pointed out the increase in the cost of living, the increase in industrial wages, the increase in the incomes of everybody else. These old people now get only $60 a year increase from this government. I said this was a complete reversal of government policy. Two years ago they promised old age pensions at seventy without the means test. I want to read their promises of that time, found in this document "Proposals of the Government of Canada". Here is what they have to say on national old age pensions at age seventy, on page 37:

As part of the general proposals now put before the conference, it is proposed that the federal government would establish a system of national old age pensions entirely financed and administered by the federal government, and paid at the uniform rate of $30 per month regardless of means to men and women aged seventy and over in all parts of Canada.

As I said before, the present bill does not carry out either of those promises. Then it goes on:

The cost of national old age pensions by 1948, for example, is estimated at $200,000,000.

Now the government brings in a watered-down proposal which, according to the minister himself, will cost them no more than $20,000,000 and probably less. Our estimate is considerably less.

Mr. MARTIN: I said the very opposite.

Mr. BRACKEN: It goes on:

There would be a partial recovery from people over seventy paying income tax.

Then they enlarge upon these promises in this way:

The principal feature of the proposed national old age pensions is the elimination of the means test after reaching age seventy,—

But it is not eliminated in this bill.

—regarding this (the means test) as unsuitable for the oldest group in the community over eighty per cent of whom are not in fact capable of supporting themselves in useful remunerative work. Payment of pensions as of right to people of this age offers the best kind of economic security.

Yet they do not do it in the bill they bring in. I read on:

It removes the fear of destitution much more certainly than any other method, and relieves old people of the necessity of seeking work, or of endeavouring to keep on working in unfavourable circumstances and beyond the age at which they should be able to retire, without dependence on charity or burdening the family.

These are all arguments for a great programme; then they come along with this mild edition of it and ask us to accept it.

In addition to providing a minimum subsistence for those with no other resources, this system would enable other persons with moderate private savings to retire from active work sooner, or in more comfort, than would otherwise be possible.

Then they go on:

The removal of the means test would make it possible for these pensions to be administered by the federal government alone on a uniform national basis, without the necessity for provincial participation, and would therefore considerably relieve provincial finances.

Yet they do not remove the means test.

As the federal government would be assuming full financial responsibility, it would also administer the payment of these pensions.

So much for these particular promises of two years ago and the government's promise to carry it out. No wonder the minister devotes two-thirds of his speech to excusing himself for not carrying it out.

Then I said the government had completely reversed its policy in another way. It promised an old age assistance plan for persons between sixty-five and sixty-nine years of age, the cost to be borne equally by the dominion and the provinces. Here is what they had to say on that point at that time. I am reading from page 38 of the government's document. These are the words of the government:

In addition, it is proposed to provide old age assistance for persons of age sixty-five-sixty-nine, in cases of need and in accordance with local conditions and individual circumstances, under dominion-provincial agreements broadly similar to those presently existing with respect to old age pensions for persons of age seventy and over, but with certain changes designed to liberalize the conditions under which assistance is given.

Those are the promises to persons between sixty-five and sixty-nine years of age, but there is nothing at all in this proposed measure which would give them any assistance whatever.

Mr. MARTIN: That is not true.

Mr. BRACKEN: I quote again:

> The proposal is that the provincial governments should administer this old age assistance and that the federal government should contribute fifty per cent of the cost, up to fifty per cent of $30 per month. The total cost of this measure by 1948 is estimated at $34 to $40 million . . .

This one feature of their 1945 proposals they say would cost from $34 to $40 million; now the minister himself estimates that the whole additional cost of all the government is proposing will be only $20 million.

Mr. MARTIN: Twenty million more.

Mr. BRACKEN: Then in elaborating this particular feature of the policy which they have now discarded they go on to say:

> The minimum age for national old age pensions must be definite and fixed; it cannot vary with individual cases. It must be recognized, however, that there will be an intermediate age group in which a significant minority of persons will be unable, by reason of age, to support themselves without assistance. These persons who, in fact, suffer from the disability which old age pensions are intended to assist, should not be left with no other resources than local poor relief for the temporary period which must elapse till they reach the qualifying age for old age pensions.

Yet they bring forward a measure that contains nothing for these people between sixty-five and sixty-nine years of age.

> Accordingly, it is proposed that the existing system of joint dominion-provincial old age assistance on a means test basis, which it is proposed to supersede as regards persons of seventy and over, should be adapted to meet the needs in particular cases of persons of age sixty-five-sixty-nine, with a federal government contribution of fifty per cent of the cost.

Those are the three main features of the much-heralded policy of the government of two years ago, which I believe most people in this country thought was a good plan. And this bill is the watered-down sample brought forward today by the minister. It carries out none of these promises. My fourth criticism is that the government plan offers no consideration for blind persons under forty years of age. A few years ago an amendment was brought in to the old age pensions legislation providing for pensions to blind persons; but it was stipulated that no blind person under forty years of age could benefit by the provisions of that legislation. Now the government comes along and proposes certain additions to the pensions for blind persons over forty years of age, but does nothing at all for those under that age. I suggest this is a serious criticism of this measure.

The question of cost has been referred to. The minister has told us what it is estimated this plan will cost, and has given some other figures. I took the trouble to have some figures of an historical character looked up in connection with this measure. This legislation was passed in 1927. It did not get going fully for several years. The first year it only cost this country $131,000. In 1931-32 it cost approximately $10,000,000, in round figures. In 1941-42 the cost was $28,000,000. Under the present act it will be about $65.000,000.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Not to the government; to the people of Canada.

Mr. BRACKEN: It is estimated that pensions for people seventy years of age and over, with no means test, at $30 a month, would cost $200,000,000 a year. It is estimated also that pensions at sixty-five and over, at $30 a month with no means test, would cost about $336,000,000 a year; and it is further estimated that a plan covering people sixty-five years of age and over, at $50 a month with no means test, would cost this nation $560.000,000 a year. That is the material side of this question, which of course is important, just as it is important to recognize that the aged poor must have from some source, this government or the governments combined, enough to meet their needs on a cost of living basis, regardless of all other conditions.

I have here some details in connection with the supplemental allowances granted by the various provinces for old age pensions. That might be put on the record at a later stage, when we are in committee. It indicates that the different provinces have proceeded along somewhat different lines. Some have been more generous than others. But perhaps it might be well to put this information on record now; I can do so in three or four minutes and then it will be there for the information of hon. members.

Manitoba, British Columbia, Alberta and Nova Scotia made provision for the payment of supplemental allowances to old age pensioners before the passing of the dominion order in council, P.C. 6367, dated August 10, 1943, which authorized a supplement of not over $5 a month to be paid by the dominion and the provinces on the same basis as the pensions, 75 per cent and 25 per cent respectively.

Alberta was one of the first to move in this direction. In 1942 they authorized an additional allowance of $5 a month from January 1, 1942, and authorized an agreement with the dominion government relating to supplementary allowances. That is still being paid.

British Columbia made its increase effective on April 1, 1942. It authorized a cost of living bonus of $5 a month. This was raised to $10 on January 1, 1947. No part of the bonus is recoverable from the dominion, and it is being paid in addition to the dominion government increase granted in August, 1943.

I do not suppose the minister has any intimation from any of these provinces as to what their attitude will be with respect to [illegible] supplementary aids, when this new measure comes in.

In 1943 Manitoba made provision for a supplementary allowance of $1.25 a month, which it recognized as its share of a possible contribution of $5 a month by the dominion. This is still being paid.

Nova Scotia commenced its supplementary assistance in April of 1943. It provides for a supplementary allowance not exceeding $10 a month. It could allow up to that much, if the income exclusive of pension is $125 a year or less. But the allowance with the pensioner's income is not to exceed $365 a year. No such allowance was to be paid for any period before June 1, 1943. This allowance is still being paid.

Mr. KNOWLES: Can the leader of the opposition indicate under what conditions that allowance is paid in Nova Scotia?

Mr. BRACKEN: I made it clear that the measure only gave the government permissive power to pay up to that amount, $10 more a month. Just what they have paid I cannot say.

Mr. MARTIN: We can get it all later in committee. It is a very complicated story.

Mr. BRACKEN: In 1944, after the dominion order in council, New Brunswick, Ontario and Saskatchewan made provision for supplemental allowances as follows:

In New Brunswick there is an arrangement which is retroactive to the commencement of the New Brunswick old age pension act, authorizing supplementary agreements with the dominion government. My information is not positive, but I understand there was no New Brunswick bonus.

The Ontario plan was made retroactive to April 1, 1942. It empowers the lieutenant governor in council to provide for a cost of living bonus. It is a bonus of fifteen per cent of the pension, which is still being paid by the province from its own funds.

In 1944 Saskatchewan took power to enable the lieutenant governor in council to provide for a supplementary allowance of $1.25 a month. The act as revised in 1945 enabled the lieutenant governor in council to provide for a supplemental allowance, without stating the amount. The regulations of April 6, 1945, authorized an allowance of $3 a month, payable from May 1, 1945. This has been increased during the present year to $5 a month.

That concludes the summary of these supplementary allowances, the information for which was obtained through the official records of the library in the Department of Labour here in Ottawa.

I do not propose to keep the house longer at this time. As I have said, my criticisms of this measure, speaking broadly, were four in number, some of which can be amplified.

First, it comes in too late. The government is too late in bringing it forward.

Second, it provides only partial justice—and the government's own proposals of two years ago are the best evidence of that fact. As I said, it is a complete reversal of the government's policy as announced in August 1945.

Mr. MARTIN: Why does my hon. friend say that?

Mr. BRACKEN: With respect to the means test, and with respect to the amount to be paid by the dominion—

Mr. MARTIN: A leader of the opposition is a leader of the opposition—

Mr. BRACKEN: I know that without your telling me. If you have anything else to say, go ahead.

Mr. MARTIN: There is a rule, a tradition, of the house, which is always respected, and I know the hon. member will respect it. It is that a minister of the crown is always given the privilege of asking a question of the leader of a party. I ask the leader of the opposition: Why does he persist in making a statement which is so obviously wrong?

Mr. FRASER: What rule?

Mr. BRACKEN: I suggest, with all respect, that hon. members ought not to be allowed to interrupt a member who has the floor.

An hon. MEMBER: Answer it, then.

Mr. BRACKEN: I will answer it. This government promised two years ago, in this public document I have read, a pension plan which would provide for elimination of the means test.

Mr. MARTIN: If the provinces accepted it.

Mr. BRACKEN: But the government has not done that. The dominion government can do it; it is the dominion government's own plan.

Mr. MARTIN: If the provinces accepted it.

Mr. BRACKEN: This government then proposed to eliminate the means test. Now they are bringing forward a measure which retains the means test. They promised old age pensions at seventy, all to be paid by the dominion. They now bring forward a measure in which they leave twenty-five per cent of the cost to be paid by the provinces. And they proposed old age assistance for people between the ages of sixty-five and sixty-nine, half to be paid by the dominion and half by the provinces. Yet there is nothing of that in this bill which they have taken so long to prepare, and which the minister has promised us so often would be forthcoming soon. One other thing: they have provided nothing whatsoever for blind persons under forty years of age.

That is my submission. As I said at the beginning, the government has laboured and brought forth a mouse. The mouse has been long in coming, and it is very small even when it gets here.

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I am sure our disappointment in the minister's pronouncement this afternoon will be shared largely throughout the country. His long expected and long delayed measure will be a bitter disappointment to all who are interested in improving the conditions of old age pensioners.

The promises that the minister made this afternoon regarding future social security measures we can take with a grain of salt as the people of Canada should have taken the promises made in 1918. I have in my hand a bound volume of Liberal platforms of the years 1918 and 1921. A reference to the 1919 platform, adopted in this city in 1919 and specifically to a paragraph dealing with labour and industry, will show what I mean. "Oh", someone says. Yes; I know they do not like to be reminded of a twenty-eight-year old promise which in many respects has never been fulfilled or attempted to be fulfilled. But again, as with the minister this afternoon, there were so many ifs and buts with regard to what might happen in the future; that is; if something is done, we will do something else.

[Mr. Bracken.]

So we find in this volume:

> And further resolved that in so far as may be practicable, having regard for Canada's financial position, an adequate system of insurance against unemployment—

That came in 1940.

Mr. MARTIN: And by this government.

Mr. COLDWELL: And in a special war emergency. Then, "sickness"—which we have not got; "dependence in old age", which we have not got, not because it is not required. It continues:

> —and other disability, which would include old age pensions, widows' pensions and maternity benefits, should be instituted by the federal government in conjunction with the governments of the several provinces;—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. COLDWELL: Just a moment with "hear, hear." It goes on:

> —and that on matters pertaining to industrial and social legislation an effort should be made to overcome any question of jurisdiction between the dominion and the provinces by effective co-operation between the several governments—

And so on. What I have read was adopted in the city of Ottawa as part of the Liberal platform in the year 1919, twenty-eight years ago. I ask you, Mr. Speaker and hon. members of the house, to look it over and see how many of those promises have been fulfilled in the course of twenty-eight years.

Mr. MITCHELL: You have a manifesto issued at Regina.

Mr. COLDWELL: Certainly, but we have never been in office. Let me say this to my hon. friend, that one C.C.F. government that was elected to office in a province in its first two years in office put into effect every promise it made to the electors of that province. Laugh that off. That was done not in twenty-eight years but in two years. This afternoon what have we got?

Mr. MITCHELL: Saskatchewan does not pay as high an old age pension as British Columbia, if you want to talk about what Saskatchewan is doing.

Mr. COLDWELL: To begin with, the federal government recognizes that Saskatchewan has not the resources of British Columbia. That was recognized in the grants made to Saskatchewan through the dominion-provincial tax agreement. Moreover if Saskatchewan is not paying as high an old age pension as British Columbia, the government of Saskatchewan on slender resources has done something which is even more appreciated by the old age pensioners of that province, and that was to give them free medical, dental, optical and other services for the last two years. Count that up in dollars and cents and see what it is worth.

An hon. MEMBER: And how much are the people taxed there?

Mr. COLDWELL: I am not discussing British Columbia, I am not discussing Ontario, and I am not answering the foolish and revealing question just interjected by my hon. friend of the Progressive Conservative Party. I am very glad to have the support of hon. gentlemen to my right this afternoon, but I know their record in regard to old age pensions. It was the Conservative party in the old days which did its level best through its friends in another place to block the introduction of old age pensions.

Mr. MARTIN: They did block it.

Mr. COLDWELL: I remember that. We have heard a great deal from my hon. friends to my right in the last few months about the necessity of cutting the estimates by one-third. If you do that, you cannot grant increases to the old age pensioners in this country.

Mr. FRASER: Oh, yes; you can.

Mr. COLDWELL: My hon. friend says, you can. I challenge my hon. friend to come before the house and say where he will cut the estimates to that extent. Let him give us a clear indication of where he would save the money.

What I rose to say this afternoon was this. The view of the party I have the honour to lead in this house at the moment is well known to every hon. member, and it is pretty well known throughout the country. I say with a good deal of pride that my predecessor in this seat, the late J. S. Woodsworth, toiled unremittingly to establish in this country a system of old age pensions and social security. I want to tell my hon. friends on both sides of the house that one of the most cherished possessions we have hanging framed on the wall in our national office is an exchange of letters between the late leader of this movement, Mr. Woodsworth, and the present Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mackenzie King) in that fateful year, 1926, when neither Mr. Meighen nor the present Prime Minister commanded a majority in this house but were dependent upon the votes of Mr. Woodsworth and his labour colleagues. A letter was written to both hon. gentlemen. Mr. Meighen promised that he would consider the introduction of old age pensions and of unemployment insurance if he were accorded support on a vote of confidence motion. Mr. King said that if he were accorded that support he would introduce old age pensions at that session and would consider unemployment insurance. Mr. Woodsworth supported the vote of confidence in the present Prime Minister of Canada, and that is how old age pensions came to Canada. I am glad to pay that tribute to the late Mr. Woodsworth. My hon. friend the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mitchell) knows perfectly well that when he ran as a labour candidate in the city of Hamilton and was elected to this parliament, before he jumped the fence—

Mr. MITCHELL: As you did too.

Mr. COLDWELL: No, that is wrong, but let me put it this way: before he fell over the fence when straddling it my hon. friend was largely elected on the statement that Mr. J. S. Woodsworth and the Labour party had secured old age pensions in this country.

Mr. MITCHELL: I wish my hon. friend would give some credit to the trades union movement in this country and to many of us who came to see the Prime Minister of Canada.

Mr. COLDWELL: I will give credit where it is due. Mr. Woodsworth was not alone. No one man in this country could have achieved it alone. I am pleased to pay tribute to the labour movement in this country which first nominated and elected Mr. Woodsworth to this parliament. I think it is a tribute I should pay.

It is now twenty years since the present government introduced some measure of retiring allowance for—I am not going to refer to them as the aged poor; let me call them the senior citizens of this country, those who have performed a service to Canada over the major portions of their working lives. Once more across this country we have heard the swelling of the voices demanding a greater measure of justice for these people. A short time ago I had the honour and privilege of presenting to this house a petition signed by over 250,000 citizens, and may I say that not very much effort was required in putting the petition before the people across this country. Signatures were easy to get for it, because the people of Canada want a squarer deal for senior citizens. I do not think there is a member of this house who has not been receiving in his mail almost every day letters pointing out the necessity of improving conditions for the aged; and may I add, that many of the persons who signed the petition and sent in letters are to my personal knowledge not themselves in dire need. The people of Canada, men and women of all ages, have come to recognize that the treatment of our old folk in Canada is entirely inadequate. They recognize that no mere five dollar increase such as is proposed in this bill, of which the federal government pays 75 per cent of the cost, is sufficient to alleviate the conditions under which those who are dependent upon the old age pension are now suffering. As the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) indicated, no group in this country has been harder hit by increased prices and by the removal of price controls than the aged people about whom we are talking this afternoon, those who are trying to get along on some sort of pension, and others who are attempting to live on a small fixed income. Parliament at this session decided to allow the cost of living to rise. Consequently many of the disabilities from which the older citizens suffer today are due to the action of this parliament in permitting an increase in the cost of living through the removal of beneficial controls. Now we say that the aged—and this bill covers only those of seventy—and the blind—and, as the leader of the opposition pointed out a few moments ago they are covered only if they are over forty—

Mr. MARTIN: Forty and over.

Mr. COLDWELL: If they are forty and over. We say that the aged and the blind require at least fifty dollars a month in order to maintain anything like a little home and receive some comfort in it. I have no doubt that in this debate we shall have this bill compared with old age pensions of other countries. The minister nods his head.

Mr. MARTIN: What I meant by that nod was that this country compares most favourably with any other country in the matter of social security.

Mr. COLDWELL: I shall deal with that in a moment. And it will be said—

Mr. MARTIN: It will be said fairly.

Mr. COLDWELL: —that there are no countries with pensions as high as $50 a month. Well, in some of the Scandinavian countries they are going up toward that figure pretty rapidly; but I should like to point out in that regard that you cannot make comparisons without comparing the cost of living.

Mr. MARTIN: That is right.

Mr. COLDWELL: It may be said that in New Zealand, for example, those who get old age benefits and universal superannuation will receive only about $35 a month. But in this connection I draw the minister's attention to the fact that it is possible to rent a decent house in New Zealand for $18 a month.

[Mr. Coldwell.]

Mr. JACKMAN: Subsidized.

Mr. COLDWELL: Of course it is subsidized. I know it is subsidized, but whether subsidized or not it is possible for an aged couple to get a decent house at $18 a month. Where can you get a decent house in Canada at that rate?

Mr. IRVINE: Where you subsidize millionaires.

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes, and insurance companies to build houses. I am certain that you cannot do it under the policy which was enunciated in the house by the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply (Mr. Howe) a short time ago, that four or five-roomed units were to be built to rent at from $50 to $70 a month, not more than $70 a month.

Mr. REID: Is it not the fairest way to ask how much labour a man puts in to purchase these things?

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes, that is true, but let me point out to the hon. member that the minister is comparing money values.

Mr. MARTIN: No.

Mr. COLDWELL: The minister said that they did not have as much as $50 a month.

Mr. MARTIN: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but when I come to comparisons I shall show that, after taking into account the cost of living in Canada, the system of old age pensions envisaged by this bill will compare favourably with that of any other country in the world.

Mr. COLDWELL: We shall wait until the minister does that. In the meantime I am going to have my say on the same point.

Mr. MARTIN: And no one will listen with greater pleasure than I.

Mr. COLDWELL: I dispute the point. I go to Britain where there has been a substantial increase in the old age pension. While it looks very little in pounds, shillings and pence, I hold in my hand something I clipped from the Montreal Gazette of today just as I was coming down to the house. It is an article written by a gentleman whom I do not know, but I imagine the minister knows him because his name is Richard Graybiel of the Windsor Star.

Mr. MARTIN: An excellent journalist and a good friend.

Mr. COLDWELL: The article reads as follows:

Goodbye, England. You have been a good host to us during the last eight months, and we are really sorry to be leaving.

We've done a great deal of grousing about conditions here, probably haven't praised you enough for your achievements. Our basic food items—bread, milk, fats, meat, potatoes—cost less than they would almost anywhere else in the world. We marvel at the modern apartments you have built on the site of sprawling slums, apartments where a working man can house his family for two or three dollars a week.

I just put that before the house to indicate that a dollar in some countries will buy a good deal more than it will buy in our country.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I say at once that that is absolutely inaccurate.

Mr. COLDWELL: I must contradict the minister flatly. I know better. I can take my hon. friend to any of the large cities, Sheffield, Birmingham and the suburbs of London and I can show him the kind of houses that can be rented for that amount.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I know them all.

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes, the minister knows them. Why contradict me?

Mr. MACKENZIE: Because I think it is wrong. I think the prices there are wrong.

Mr. COLDWELL: Therefore I say that you cannot compare dollars and cents between two countries. Of course there they have now a social security system which gives them a measure of security from the cradle to the grave. A little known fact in this country is that the necessities of life and rent have been pinned down rigidly in Britain and, as I have been told by members of parliament who are not of the party in power, that the stories of starvation in Britain are wrong; that the working man and the little child are today better fed than they were before the war, because of rationing and that the present government has had the moral courage to maintain controls and rationing and so on to ensure that that shall be so. That is true. My hon. friend shakes his head.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I am sorry to interrupt again; it is impolite. I have met several people from the old country in the last two or three weeks and my information is entirely contrary to what my hon. friend has said.

Mr. POULIOT: The hon. gentleman should take lessons in diction from the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I ask the hon. member for Temiscouata not to be a pot-bellied valiant.

Mr. COLDWELL: Mr. Speaker, I should be very grateful if these pleasant exchanges between the minister and the hon. member for Temiscouata were kept out of my speech.

Mr. MACKENZIE: May I tender my apologies to my hon. friend.

Mr. COLDWELL: What I was going to add was this, in spite of the devastation of war, in the British isles they have been able to improve the conditions of the old age pensioner, while we, suffering from no devastation and no destruction from war, with a functioning economy and prosperity such as we have seldom if ever known, are able to do only what is being done this afternoon.

We have always said that the amount of the old age pension should be based upon the national income of our country, bearing in mind its total population, and that it should be considered in relation to the per capita income of our own people. Our national income has doubled during the war while our population has changed relatively little, so that our per capita income must be high. During the war a very large proportion of our production went into the war effort. I was interested this afternoon in hearing the minister give the figures which he thought would be involved in the old age pension bill now before the house. He said it amounted to $65 million.

Mr. MARTIN: The amount is $68 million; that is the federal share. Provincial and federal will be approximately $100 million.

Mr. COLDWELL: We will take $100 million.

Mr. MARTIN: Excuse me; that is for this year. It will increase every year.

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes. My hon. friend will remember that during the war our national budget amounted to over $5 billion a year. In other words, the total cost of the old age pension under this bill this year, including the provinces, will be equivalent to one week's cost of the war. Let us put it in that light: one week's cost of the war to provide what this bill provides both federally and by the provinces for the aged of Canada.

Mr. MARTIN: It is only one payment of many.

Mr. COLDWELL: If my hon. friend will let me make my speech, as I allowed him to make his, and reply afterward, I shall be greatly obliged.

Mr. MARTIN: I am very sorry.

Mr. COLDWELL: I accept the apology. I think the house and the country will be more interested in getting a proper reply to the criticisms I am making now, and that reply cannot be given in these interruptions. Surely with our 750,000 or 800,000 young people back into active production, we could, if we properly planned the economy of the country, utilize our resources to produce sufficient to give our senior citizens a reasonable and decent standard of living, which we say should not be less than $50 a month.

I want to make a plea again this afternoon, as I have done before, for the complete abolition of the means test. I see no reason whatever for continuing this humiliating test, which is entirely unnecessary. In another act the government have recognized the validity of not applying the means test. They have recognized this in connection with children's allowances.

Mr. MACKENZIE: What about New Zealand?

Mr. COLDWELL: I am a member of parliament for Canada and I will not assume responsibility for any other country.

Mr. MACKENZIE: We hear a lot about New Zealand.

Mr. COLDWELL: I will say to the Minister of Veterans Affairs, who is muttering under his breath something which I do not quite hear, that the means test should be entirely abolished. It is humiliating, and I am pointing out that it was abolished in connection with family allowances. If it is not applied in connection with family allowances the same principle can be followed in connection with old age pensions. The fact is that many well-to-do Canadians receive family allowances and indeed were urged to apply for them, and over and above the allowance it was taxed back through income tax in proportion to the amount that was not needed. That is the way in which we should deal with old age pensions. If the principle is just and valid with respect to family allowances it is equally just and valid for old age pensions.

My hon. friends who believe in free enterprise are invariably telling us that we need to encourage thrift, that saving is something which is absolutely essential to the free enterprise system. I know of no greater discouragement to thrift than the means test for old age pensions. Let us take a look at it. Here is a young man, or a young woman, twenty-one or twenty-two years of age. This young man decides to take out an annuity. Suppose he goes to an insurance company or to the government. Let us say he goes to the government.

Mr. McIVOR: Hear, hear.

[Mr. Coldwell.]

Mr. COLDWELL: Hear, hear, says my hon. friend the member for Fort William, and I agree with him. Well, this young man takes out an annuity for $50 a month payable at the age of sixty-five. The amount he has to deposit every month—and I believe I am using the actual figure—is $8.37 or thereabouts, or approximately $100 a year. Under the scheme we have before us, when that young man, or young woman, reaches the age of sixty-five he will have denied himself at the rate of $100 a year the pleasures that some other young man or some other young woman in the same condition has enjoyed in the interval; for when they reach the age of seventy the young man and the young woman who have not denied themselves anything get the old age pension, whereas the young man or the young woman who has saved all through life at the rate of $100 a year to buy an annuity is told, "You cannot get the pension because you now have $600 a year", which in this bill is the limit of income, including pension, that anyone may receive.

That, I say, is a distinct discouragement to thrift, and I may add that in my own circle of young people, as soon as they are old enough to earn I advise them to take out a government annuity in the hope that some day the means test will be abolished and their thrift will be rewarded instead of being penalized.

I say to all my friends, particularly those who believe in free enterprise, that one thing which they should be doing is to urge, as I am doing, the abolition of the means test.

Mr. ABBOTT: For non-contributory pensions?

Mr. COLDWELL: Oh, yes. I am saying this, that if a young person contributes to the purchasing for himself of a pension of $50 at the age of sixty-five or seventy he should not be penalized under this bill.

Mr. ABBOTT: My question was this: Is my hon. friend advocating the abolition of the means test in connection with non-contributory pensions?

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes.

Mr. MacINNIS: On the same basis as judges' pensions.

Mr. COLDWELL: Or family allowances. If I may interject this, I believe that this house would be wise to give consideration to a comprehensive social security system including old age pensions, health and all the rest of it, to which individuals would contribute during their active life. I do not know whether my hon. friend's party are on record in this regard, but we are on record—

Mr. MARTIN: I just said the same thing.

Mr. COLDWELL: I do not know whether the hon. gentleman's party is on record, but we are on record that that is a reasonable proposition, but not for a paltry $30 a month and nothing else.

Mr. KNOWLES: Forty-eight years hence.

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes. I have in mind a social security plan that will cover invalidity and the other hazards of life as well as old age.

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): My hon. friend spoke about not providing for the annuity because, with the means test, young people would be debarred from having the full extent of the pension. Does that not apply to every other saving as well as the saving of $100 a year for the purpose of the annuity?

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes.

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): Then the hon. gentleman is arguing in favour of everyone spending every cent he gets.

Mr. COLDWELL: Oh, no. I am urging the very opposite. I am saying that the policy of the government now encourages young persons to spend every cent and not even to own a home, because if they own a home they are penalized.

Mr. MARTIN: Not under the regulations.

Mr. COLDWELL: Oh, yes; $2,000 is the limit on the estate.

Mr. MARTIN: When we get into committee my hon. friend will see that under the new regulations that is not the case.

Mr. COLDWELL: I have looked at the bill.

Mr. MARTIN: When we get into committee I will show that that is not the case.

Mr. KNOWLES: Why did you not say all that in your speech?

Mr. COLDWELL: Instead of entering into a political address, why did my hon. friend not explain the bill?

Mr. MACKENZIE: That goes both ways.

Mr. COLDWELL: The speech I am making now and have made this afternoon is not the type of speech I intended to make when I came into the house at two o'clock. It was the political atmosphere engendered by the minister that changed my speech this afternoon.

Mr. MARTIN: My hon. friend and I are good friends and I know he would not accuse me of being politically minded.

Mr. COLDWELL: Then the hon. gentleman is a poorer judge of a political speech than I thought he was. That is all I can say if he says that.

As far as the age goes, we are far behind some of the other countries. Not one of the following countries has a starting age as high as seventy: Denmark, Sweden, France, the United Kingdom, New Zealand, Australia and the U.S.S.R. Only one of those has a higher starting age than sixty-five and several have a lower one. It seems to me that the system in use in some countries whereby the pension is increased if the recipient is prepared to wait for a few years, is also a system which might be considered by this house, and I throw it out as a suggestion. However, that is something for the future. The point is that we are now discussing an old age pension plan to come into effect immediately, and I say that plan should be more generous and should come into effect at age sixty-five.

I agree with the leader of the opposition regarding blind pensions. I have always had a personal reason for taking a keen interest in them. I think that to set the blind pension at forty years of age is to cause hardship to large numbers of people under forty. As soon as the child passes the period of dependency, the pension should be available. In some of our provinces that age of dependency, under the children's allowance act, is sixteen; in other provinces it is eighteen. As soon as the individual passes out of the age of dependency, the pension should be paid to the blind person.

The bill before us then is inadequate. It fails to recognize the dominion's responsibility for old age pensions. I say that the entire responsibility for old age pension payments should be in the hands of the dominion. I know that never has been the policy of my hon. friends opposite. They started with the dominion contributing fifty per cent, and when my hon. friends to my right got into office in 1930—after their leader, Mr. Bennett, had promised that the old age pension would be entirely borne by the federal authority—they raised the federal contribution to seventy-five per cent. For the reasons which I gave when I first rose to speak, I want to see the federal contribution raised to 100 per cent. Some provinces have limited resources; other provinces have greater resources. Some provinces can afford to pay something in addition while others cannot. This bill, drafted in the way in which it is drafted, does not compel any of the provinces to pay $30 a month.

Mr. MARTIN: We cannot do it.

Mr. COLDWELL: My hon. friend says we cannot do it. I want to tell him that time and time again his government has said, and even today is saying to the provinces of Ontario and Quebec: "You can have certain benefits under dominion legislation if you will enter into certain agreements with us." I say that the same thing could be done with regard to old age pensions—

Mr. MARTIN: There is no doubt about what the provinces would say.

Mr. COLDWELL: —instead of saying to the province, "If you want to pay $25 or $20, we will pay seventy-five per cent." What is actually being done under this bill is, of course, to cause a good deal of unfriendly discussion as between the various provinces. At a time when we need national unity the government is putting into this bill something which aims a direct blow at national unity.

Mr. KNOWLES: And the old age pensioners will be the victims.

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes; as my hon. friend says, the old age pensioners will be the victims. Why should the old age pensioner be penalized because he lives, we will say, in New Brunswick where there are inadequate natural resources as compared with an old age pensioner who lives in British Columbia where there are tremendous resources?

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: They all ought to live there.

Mr. COLDWELL: Why should that differentiation exist? All Canadians should be entitled to the same benefits under national legislation. My hon. friend reminds me that, when war comes, all Canadians have to defend the country no matter where they may live.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: They will not all do it, though.

Mr. COLDWELL: I said that some provinces, instead of giving an additional amount of money, gave additional services, and that is something which should not be overlooked when we are discussing how much a province is doing. My own province is doing a great deal in the way of additional services to the aged. Moreover, I hope they will endeavour to do something for that group of people not provided for in this bill, namely, the indigent people who are under seventy. They have a real claim on the people of this country. If we are to ration poverty, which the government's measure is actually doing, then let us see that we ration it so that those who are really in need get some small ration as well. The position I have referred to is a desperate one for any province to be in, and is a desperate thing for this government to put upon the country at the present time.

I see that my time is just about exhausted. I have not covered all the points I should like to have covered, but I think I have said enough to show that we are bitterly disappointed with the inadequacy of this measure, that the people of the country were expecting something better, and that after twenty-eight years since this Liberal platform of 1919 was adopted.

An hon. MEMBER: The pages have become yellow.

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes, as someone remarks, the pages have become yellow. They have become as yellow as the government has become with regard to its own programme.

Mr. MACKENZIE: May I ask my hon. friend a question? Is he opposed to the increased benefits in this bill?

Mr. COLDWELL: My hon. friend need not ask that question. He knows perfectly well that, while we asked for more, we shall take the little that is given and try to make the best of it in the meantime. However, we are expressing our belief that the people of this country will be as dissatisfied with this measure as we are.

Mr. SOLON E. LOW (Peace River): I am sure that the minister who introduced this bill will want to know exactly what our group thinks about his offspring; and I am going to try to tell him, in a short space of time, exactly what I think about it.

Mr. JOHNSTON: Using parliamentary language.

Mr. LOW: I shall be using parliamentary language.

Mr. BENTLEY: But you will not be meaning it.

Mr. LOW: I am speaking for my group, Mr. Speaker, and I do not intend to take more than ten or fifteen minutes. While the minister was making his statement I had visions of the hon. gentleman on his hands and knees, struggling with all his might to push with his nose a peanut from here to the Rideau river. It was a great struggle.

Mr. JOHNSTON: It is too bad he did not reach the river.

Mr. IRVINE: The peanut bill!

Mr. LOW: That is just about the way we look at this bill. It is just about the size of a peanut so far as help for the aged citizens and the blind pensioners across this country is concerned. Let me say further, Mr. Speaker, that no group in this house has any monopoly on interest in the aged people. We do not pose as being the lord protectors of the aged and the blind; not by any means. I agree with what the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith) said in debate a short time ago, to the effect that the C.C.F. cannot lay claim to being their sole protector, nor can the Social Credit group, the Progressive Conservatives or the Liberals. In spite of the fact that the Liberal government is reputed to have introduced a bill back in 1927, I think the minister said, and that in the twenty-year period following they have brought the benefits up to the present level, I feel they must give credit to other hon. members in other parts of the house for continuously pressing for and advocating these changes, being consistent day in and day out, year in and year out in their endeavour to have these pensions improved.

There is, however, one thing I should like to say in that connection. Our movement generally, from the first year of its administration in Alberta, undertook to translate its views and philosophy into action; and, as has been stated already in this debate, in 1942 we attempted to get the dominion government to join us in increasing the pension to $30 instead of $25. The federal government could not see its way clear to do so at that time; therefore the Alberta government went it alone and paid an extra $5 per month per pensioner. That does not seem like a very large amount of money, but I would remind hon. members that with approximately 11,000 pensioners it meant a yearly outlay of over $700,000, which the Alberta government had to make by itself. That is a considerable achievement for a province the size of Alberta, with fewer than 800,000 people, particularly in the period following some devastating years through which the province had to pass. In the intervening years a programme of medical assistance has been worked out, and now Alberta is extending medical, dental and hospital facilities to the aged and blind pensioners of that province and their dependents, as well as mothers and their dependents who come under the mother's allowance there. I understand that Saskatchewan has a similar programme, and I say all honour to them for recognizing their responsibility toward the older and unfortunate citizens of this country. I merely mention these things to emphasize that at least some groups other than the Liberal party have had at heart the welfare of the senior citizens and the blind in Canada.

Some things in the bill I look upon as great improvements over the old act, and I congratulate the minister on having introduced those improvements at this time. Let me say quite clearly that we do not fail to recognize that the minister is trying to operate within the restricted confines of a financial structure which perhaps makes it impossible for him to do a great deal more than he is doing at the moment. He must dip into the pockets of the taxpayers of this country to get the money he pays out in old age pensions. We realize that, and we have sympathy for him under the circumstances. I have been in a similar position, vying with other ministers in asking for money, and I know exactly what he is up against and the competition he runs into. So, as I say, while I may make some disparaging remarks about the child he has brought forth today, at the same time I have great appreciation and sympathy for him in the circumstances. It makes it very hard for our group to vote against this measure, because there are some improvements over the old act and some great benefits to our aged citizens. So I must make our position clear. We will, of course, support the minister in paying these extra benefits and in relaxing the qualifications, and what-not; but we must register our complaint that the bill falls far short of what senior Canadians had a right to expect.

For a few moments I should like to deal with the suggestion of the minister that we must have a long range programme looking toward the day when Canada can introduce a system of contributory old age pensions and social security. While the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) and the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) were speaking, I made a few hasty calculations. They may not be exactly right, but the figures will convey the general idea. I took the average head of a Canadian family. At the present rate he will have to surrender to a very much inflated state, that is to the government of Canada, $700 worth of the fruits of his labour every year in taxes. Over a period of fifty years, if this average head of a household began his active earning career at twenty years of age, he will have to surrender $35,000 to the state. When he reaches seventy years of age he has a life expectancy of eight years and 296 days, according to the latest insurance mortality tables. If at that age he becomes a pensioner and lives out his expectancy he will receive back under the new bill just introduced eight times $270 plus $242.50, or a total of $2,402.50, in the form of a pension.

Mr. BLACKMORE: And will pay hidden taxes on every dollar of it.

Mr. LOW: Yes; as my hon. friend says, he will pay hidden taxes, sales and excise taxes and so on, on every single penny he spends. Let us ponder these figures for just a moment. This average head of a Canadian family is forced to surrender to the federal government—and I am speaking of the federal government only; I have neglected to calculate what he would surrender to provincial and municipal governments—$35,000 of the products of his own labour over the active years of his life. So I ask this question. Can anyone seriously or successfully argue that this average head of a Canadian family has not thereby purchased for himself social security in his old age, so long as the Canadian economy can produce sufficient goods and services to keep him in decency in his old age? I would challenge anyone successfully to argue that he has not so purchased a decent security in his old age.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Without contributing.

Mr. LOW: Yes, without contributing anything more. I maintain that he has; and I maintain, further, that all the talk about the desirability of a contributory pension in the years to come is so much eyewash. We already have a contributory shadow of a pension, and I contend that every Canadian during his active years, particularly under present circumstances with the burden of taxes he has to surrender to the state, buys a pension as of right when he is ready to retire from employment in the productive enterprise of of sixty or sixty-five. Anyone who thinks he our country, any time after he reaches the age has not should present his arguments during this debate to show that is not so.

All our tendencies in this country today are toward robbing men of their independence through taxes and death duties at rates that are punitive; and those tendencies are toward reducing the productive individual to a mere vassal of a non-productive state. As a result, many individual citizens in Canada are kept on the borderline of poverty throughout most of their lives, so that in too many cases our people simply cannot reach the age of retirement with the means to keep themselves in decency for the rest of their days. Might I suggest that if the government do not want to make pensions represent a reasonable living allowance they leave with the individual Canadian over the years of his active life a greater portion of the product of his own labour, and he will look after himself.

The Social Credit group in the house has felt since 1935, and now feels, that it will be necessary to lower the pensionable age to sixty years and to bring in a general pensions act providing for not less than $50 a month, without a means test. We have advocated that consistently.

The Alberta Social Credit government has consistently passed resolutions to induce thinking Canadians to insist that such changes be made. We do not think we should go any longer under provisions for the means test. It is unfair; it is unjust, and in future years it will become obvious that it is unworkable.

On another occasion I made our position clear by saying in effect that the absolute necessity for bringing up the pension, abolishing the means test and bringing down the pensionable age will become more apparent as the problem of unemployment develops to its full intensity, under the discredited system of finance which this government persists in following.

We are reaching the time right now when unsaleable surpluses are beginning to appear in the Canadian economy, and when provision will be made to destroy or to waste those so-called surplus products in our country. I suggest that, unless a scientific method of distributing these surpluses be found soon unemployment is bound to follow within a matter of months.

The paying of a pension of $50 to every Canadian at the age of sixty years or over may sound like a big undertaking. But in the light of the colossal gifts which Canada made to her allies during the war, and to other friends during the same period of time, and in the light of the further fact that in the giving of those colossal gifts we made ourselves more prosperous than we ever were in our lives before, the aggregate sum required to carry out the undertaking we propose becomes quite commonplace.

I know the minister is hard pressed and will continue to be hard pressed for money. He would find it difficult to implement the set of conditions we propose so long as pensions must be paid out of taxation. While that condition obtains, he will continue to have trouble. I suggest that the old age pensioners of this country, if they ever expect to receive anything like a decent standard of pensions for their maintenance in the twilight of their years, must advocate a system different from the taxation system of today. Adequate pensions will never be paid if the government has to dip into the pockets of the taxpayers to pay them.

In addition to our humanitarian interest in the welfare of our aged and blind citizens, we have other interests in this matter of old age pensions. Our interest is not in catching votes. We say that from an economic point of view it is absolutely necessary that we increase allowances to our pensioners and to the blind, if we are ever to balance consumption with production in normal times.

The minister is anxious about the self-respect of Canada's senior citizens. That is a worthy concern. I, too, am concerned about their self-respect; and I suggest that a man's self-respect can easily be lost if he knows he is the object of charity or that what he gets by way of pension is taken from the pockets of other people. Certainly in those circumstances he loses his self-respect; I agree with that. But I say now without fear of successful contradiction that the self-respect of any man in Canada is not lost when he is placed in the position of a shareholder in Canada Unlimited —a Canada that can produce enough that every citizen can live in security during his lifetime as well as in his declining years. If he receives during those years a pension out of moneys which do not first pass through the channels of industry, more particularly will his self-respect be retained. If he sees that, while he is a shareholder in Canada Unlimited, there are being wasted hundreds of millions of dollars worth of goods and services he may be sure it is because we are proceeding under an outdated and outmoded financial system which will not distribute those goods and services.

Mr. BLACKMORE: We are decreasing purchasing power where we should increase it.

Mr. LOW: Perfectly true. It is high time we began to recognize the need for saving what is otherwise wasted. When we do save, let us see that it is not wasted. The first thought that comes to the mind of any Social Creditor—indeed, to the mind of any decent Canadian—is: let us use the millions of dollars worth of goods and services in normal times wasted to improve the lot of the unfortunate citizens of this country, including the aged and the blind.

I wish to say just a word with respect to one other feature of the bill. After it has been passed, and while the minister is carrying on what I think should be conferences with the provinces, I hope he will have in mind the possibility of simplifying the administration of old age pensions. I had something to do with their administration for a period of eight years in Alberta, and I know the many difficulties of administering pensions under a divided authority and under the regulations as they have existed.

Mr. MARTIN: The hon. member has had wide experience.

Mr. LOW: Thank you.

Mr. MARTIN: Yes; the hon. member was a very good minister, despite his politics.

Mr. LOW: Since I learned about it, I have often wondered why pensions are not paid in the Yukon Territory. Perhaps in his rebuttal the minister will answer that question. If a person is a citizen of the Yukon for, let us say, a period of fifteen years and moves into Alberta or Saskatchewan, or some other province and, while there, reaches the age of seventy years, he is denied his pension upon application, because the Yukon Territory does not as yet pay pensions to its citizens. Many a hardship results.

Mr. MARTIN: Depending upon the action of the elective body in the territory.

Mr. LOW: Yes. I must say it seems to me that the federal government is much more responsible to the people in the Yukon than it is to the people in the other provinces. It has a direct responsibility. However, the minister will have a chance to answer that point.

One further matter. I am hoping it will be possible for the minister to announce that reciprocal arrangements have been made with Britain and perhaps some other countries, whereby pensions can be paid to British people and others who come to Canada and, while here, reach the age of seventy years. Let us say that they reach that age after living in Canada for eight or ten, or perhaps even only five or six years. At the present time I understand that there is no reciprocal arrangements between Britain and Canada, with the result that many Britishers who have reached the age of seventy years while in Canada and find themselves without the means of sustenance, are not able to obtain pensions. If I am wrong I should like to be corrected. Perhaps in his rebuttal the minister will make that point clear.

In conclusion, let me say that certainly we will support what the minister has brought forward; but we deplore the fact that the pensions paid to the aged people of Canada have not in any way increased with the cost of living in this country. We deplore the conditions under which many of our citizens have had to live during past years. We will continue to press with all our might for a sane and Christian system of pensions which at, let us say, the age of sixty or sixty-five, will provide to every Canadian a reasonable amount on which he or she can live in happiness during declining years. Let that pension be as a matter of right. That is our position.

Mr. DAVID CROLL (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this bill for the good it contains—and it contains a great deal of good. Under the circumstances, the minister has perhaps sweated out the best possible bill he could. I do not think it is good enough; perhaps he does not think so, either. But it is the best he can do, within certain limitations.

Mr. JACKMAN: What are the limitations?

Mr. CROLL: If the hon. gentleman across the way wants cross-fire on this particular subject I am prepared to give it to him, and then some.

In common with the speaker who just sat down I have had experience in administering old age pensions in the province of Ontario, and it was my duty to understand the federal Old Age Pensions Act. It is with that experience in mind that I hope to make some contribution. This bill represents a progressive step for the relief of the needy and the aged people. It lays a foundation and points the way as well as opening the door to a contributory system. In the past the minister has always indicated that he has a special interest in matters of welfare, particularly of the older people, and in his outline he has indicated the principles that lay behind this bill and the changes which it effects. He has emphasized that in liberalizing the conditions this government is spending $20,000,000 more. That is not a trifling sum; it is not an unimportant sum. Nevertheless, when it is considered that two-fifths of this year's budget is devoted to the social services—old age pensions, $65,000,000; family allowance, $250,000,000, veterans affairs, $430,000,000, unemployment insurance, $100,000,000—it is a matter of some considerable consequence.

I know that, by virtue of the rules of this house, there is nothing anyone of us can do to amend this bill; but our observations here today—and they have been very helpful up to now—will indicate that we accept what we get here today, but at the same time we notify the minister and the government that we are beginning a new fight for improvements. In the field of social legislation it was ever thus.

In the past our Old Age Pensions Act has been to some extent unrealistic. The basic pension, to which the dominion contributed seventy-five per cent, was $25 a month. This was increased by supplementary payments or provincial bonuses as we call them, and free medical care. The leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) has already placed on record the supplementary contributions made by the provinces, and I will not repeat them.

I have a special interest in this bill because I come from Ontario, and I do not enjoy all the snickering, good-naturedly, that has been done by members living outside that province. Nevertheless I see British Columbia doing such a splendid job for old age pensioners, while Ontario at the present time stands sixth in the amount of payments made to old age pensioners. Ontario is the richest province in the Dominion of Canada. Only those provinces which pay no supplement at all stand lower in the list. Just as a matter of interest, I wish to compare a few basic statistics concerning Ontario and British Columbia, and these figures I quote are from the "Canada Year Book, 1946".

The population of Ontario is 3,878,655, and of British Columbia, 817,861. The old age pensioners in Ontario number 59,774, and in British Columbia, 16,213. The capital invested in industry in Ontario is $2,994,953,988, and in British Columbia, $450,360,048. The gross value of production in Ontario is $5,254.698,241, and in British Columbia, $957,244,576. The net ordinary revenue in Ontario is $115,719,000, and in British Columbia, $40,962,000. In other words, Ontario's invested capital is roughly six times that of British Columbia; her gross value of production is five and a half times greater; her net consolidated revenue is almost three times greater, and her per capita wealth is twenty-two per cent greater. Yet British Columbia manages to provide an old age pension twenty-five per cent higher than that of Ontario. Ontario reminds me of a very rich son who fails to look after his needy parents.

Under this bill the government now proposes to increase the basic pension. If the provinces continue their current contributions British Columbia, as I think the minister pointed out, will pay $38.75. I see by this morning's press that the Ottawa Journal says:

> Some of the provinces are expected to add something to the higher basic pension. British Columbia has been reported as ready to tack on another five dollars, bringing the pension total to $43.50.

I hope that is true, and it may be because they have done so well.

Mr. MACKENZIE: British Columbia always leads.

Mr. CROLL: Nova Scotia will be able to pay $35.41; Saskatchewan $33.75, and Ontario, $31.75. The reason I give those figures will be evident in a moment. Ontario at the present time is paying less in old age pensions than it was on November 1, 1929. When it first came into the scheme Ontario was paying $10 and the dominion was paying $10. In 1931 the dominion government increased its share by one-half, from $10 to $15, and thereupon Ontario reduced its share by one-half, which meant that its $10 contribution was cut to $5. Now the Ontario government's share of the $25 that is authorized by the present Old Age Pensions Act is $6.25, which is what the pensioner receives each month at the present time from the province. To this we must add the provincial bonus, which is fifteen per cent of the actual pension, but not higher than $3. If we add the $3 we shall find that the Ontario government is now paying $9.25. At the present time Ontario is paying $9.25, whereas in 1929 it was paying $10 to the pensioners, and that is the sum that it originally undertook to pay.

I wish to emphasize that Ontario has a much smaller percentage of persons seventy years of age and over actually on pension than any other province. Only three persons out of ten in Ontario over seventy years of age qualify even for a partial pension; whereas in New Brunswick the figures indicate that six persons out of ten over seventy years of age qualify. The point I make is that if Ontario were paying a pension in accordance with her ability and in accordance with the need of the people comparable with that which is being paid by British Columbia she would now be paying $46.50.

Mr. TUSTIN: Why did the hon. member not increase it when he was minister?

Mr. CROLL: I am glad the hon. member asked that question. My hon. friend wants to know why I did not increase it. I was minister from 1934 to 1937. In those years in Ontario we had 400,000 people on relief. We spent $15 million of our own money for people on relief. At that time $20 was a tremendous sum of money and was worth far more than $30 that is being paid now or even $40 at the present time. At that time our sole interest was to make sure that the people got the $20. Instead of talking about increasing it, we had to hold it. We were then in the depths of the depression. That is why we did not increase it at that particular time, if my hon. friend wants to know. But we never stopped advocating that—

Mr. TUSTIN: The Liberal government was in power until 1943.

Mr. CROLL: I should take some of the responsibility. It must also be remembered that we gave the supplement in 1942, which was in accordance with what the others had to pay, and we provided medical attention of the kind that is provided by the other provinces. We were in line up to 1942, though my responsibility as a minister finished in 1937, as the hon. member knows.

May I now return to the argument. At the present time Ontario provides about forty-nine per cent of the revenue of the Dominion of Canada. Under the various agreements with the provinces, Ontario money is being used for the purpose of raising this pension. With that I have no quarrel. I am wholly in agreement with it, but it seems to me to be foolhardy that this attitude should obtain between the provinces whereby the old and the sick, the lame and the blind are being used as a pawn in a political campaign.

Mr. GREEN: By the dominion.

Mr. CROLL: Not by the dominion. The same agreement is open to Ontario, and the other provinces seem to find satisfaction in it. Under the present bill, it is possible for Ontario to pay the maximum pension of $31.75 without increasing her current contributions one bit. My appeal to Ontario is that they should pass on—

Mr. KNOWLES: Hear, hear.

Mr. GREEN: That is all the hon. member is interested in.

Mr. CROLL: —to the old age pensioners at least the benefits which are being provided at the present time in this bill. In my opinion there is no reason why the wealthiest province in all Canada should not at least be on a par with British Columbia.

I have said that the percentage of old age pensioners in Ontario—

Mr. GREEN: Why did they not do it in 1942?

Mr. CROLL: —as compared with British Columbia and other provinces is no greater. Ontario owes it to these needy people to see that the pension is brought up not only on a par with British Columbia but in accordance with the need of the people.

There are two other matters on which something needs to be said. I am not going to deal with the administrative part of the bill. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low) indicated that there might be administrative difficulties. There are administrative difficulties, and they are not easy to hurdle. Steps should be taken to lay down a uniform administration of some kind and to simplify the administration. Today we have local boards. We are the only province in Canada which still maintains these cumbersome local boards whereby the old age pensioner in a small town has to pass through various hands. Rather than face up to it, many of them go without pensions far longer than they ought to. These are administrative matters that are of some consequence.

There are two things in this bill that particularly appeal to me. One is the matter of clarification of residence and the other that of nationality. They did not attract a great deal of attention when the matter was discussed, except for a few words here and there, but they are important. A large minority of Canadians will rejoice over the liberal wording of these two clauses in the resolution. At times every hon. member has had instances of persons come to his attention who were born in Canada and who lived here almost all their lives. Because they went away from Canada for five or ten years in the period between their fiftieth and seventieth years they found on their return to their native country, that they could not qualify for old age pensions. I am thinking now of a specific case of a man who was born in Canada and lived here until 1916. He went to the United States and was absent from 1916 to 1935. At seventy years of age he applied for the old age pension. This man had lived in Canada fifty-one years but had lived here only twelve years out of the last twenty. At that time he was advised that he was not eligible for the old age pension. This bill now corrects what I thought was a mistake and what is now recognized to be a mistake.

The bill is also more generous with respect to those who are now in Canada but who are not citizens of Canada. There are a great number of people who were born in other lands and who, for some reason or another had not become naturalized. They have spent the required number of years in this country. They have contributed to the general economy even though they were not citizens. They have paid their taxes; they have worked in our factories and on our farms; but, for one reason or another, perhaps because they came too late in life to learn the English or the French language, or perhaps for some other reason, perhaps just from neglect, they have not become naturalized. It is to the credit of this government that they have decided to follow the precedent established in the unemployment insurance and the family allowance measures and extend the benefits of old age pensions to all persons in this country over seventy years of age who have completed the required period of residence or otherwise complied with the act.

I said a few moments ago that this debate would be an acceptance of what we have offered to do, but that we would immediately begin a new fight for improvements. In the field of social service we can never stand still. The status quo is never good enough. We must continue constantly to go forward and we must do a thorough job of it. I appreciate that putting a few blow-out patches on the 1927 act, now twenty years old, is just a beginning. We are now living in an age that calls for a new social deal, not only for the underprivileged, but for the aged and the needy.

It must be said in fairness that this bill is a step forward, but it only touches the fringes of the problem. In an appreciation of the problem of old age pensions there are three considerations which are uppermost in our minds and which have been touched on by speakers who have already taken part in the debate. These are the means test, the amount of pension, and the age at which pensions become payable.

I should like to consider these for a few moments. Two years ago I described the means test by referring to it as invidious or, as I believe a member of the house referred to it, as the poverty test. I have not changed my mind on that. It is a hangover from the old days of the poor laws when a person claiming a pension had to prove himself completely destitute and without relatives to support him. I know it is beyond question that a great number of deserving people are debarred from receiving a pension because they cannot submit themselves to the indignity of the means test; yet we are forced to insist upon it and, by doing so, we condemn some of them to an old age that is barren and cheerless poverty. This bill is an improvement. A person may have an income of $600 a year. It is a tremendous improvement over the previous limit of $425, but I, too, say that it is not enough. It seems to me that we are setting a maximum living standard of $600 a year for our senior citizens, and I would ask this question: Are we justified in requiring old persons to live on a maximum of $600 a year when we consider that the benefits of unemployment insurance, inadequate as they are, assure to a single person without dependents, who has been earning $26 a week, a maximum of $636 for a year? A man of seventy years of age has basically the same needs for food. clothing and recreation as the man who is younger and he must pay the same prices.

I have always been opposed to the means test. It is archaic and ungenerous. I wonder if we in Canada cannot afford the dignity of an old age pension free from that test. I could not agree with the leader of the opposition when he said that we had reneged on our promises made in this house two years ago in the white paper. I have here the statement made today by the minister in which he recalls the proposals made in August, 1945, to the provinces with respect to a programme for national health, public investment and social security, and he reiterates that we stand by them now as we stood by them at that time. That certainly envisaged a contributory old age pension scheme.

May I touch upon another matter. I wish it were not necessary to shame ourselves into taking some of these forward steps in social services. I am a little bit tired, as I know other members are, of pointing out what other governments are achieving in progressive little countries like New Zealand, Denmark and Sweden, and then calling upon this great country of ours to catch up with them. In every branch of social welfare, from old age pensions, yes, to divorce, we have always had to wait for someone else to show us the way. Why can we not show these other countries an example of humane and advanced social legislation?

I said a few minutes ago that we did envisage such a plan in 1945. In so far as the basic pension is concerned, it will be of little value to specify an optimum amount of pension that should be paid. Clearly $28 a month paid in Ontario is not enough. Previous speakers have suggested $50 a month as adequate. I should like to have voted for $50 a month. I believe it would far more nearly meet the situation. But personally I think it is a very poor idea for the various political parties to start bidding against one another in this matter. For my own part I should like to see the old age pension raised to the highest possible level, but rather than name an arbitrary figure I think the government should relate the old age pension directly to the cost of living as it fluctuates from time to time.

Mr. LOW: Starting where?

Mr. CROLL: The food index has risen 48 points above the pre-war level, or almost fifty per cent, whereas the statutory amount of the pension until now has increased from $240 to $300, which was a matter of twenty-five per cent. The bill now raises it to $360, or fifty per cent of an increase, which brings the pension into line with the present cost of living.

Mr. IRVINE: Assuming that they could live on it before.

Mr. CROLL: I am trying now to see where we should start from. I have no quarrel with the hon. member on the old figure; I am trying to see that we improve the new figure. This might be done by paying a cost of living supplement to augment the basic pension. Such a supplement would rise or fall with the cost of living index, always leaving the basic rate unchanged, which is now $30.

Finally, there was a question of the qualifying age, the age at which the pension should be payable. In different countries opinions vary on this point and they change with the economic cycle. In bad times there is a tendency to lower the pension age and to tempt the needy people out of the labour market and so make room for younger workers. While it is true that in an expanding economy like ours there is room for every employable person, I consider it wrong for us to compel senior citizens to work by setting the qualifying age so high. As a guiding principle we ought to adopt the recommendation of the 1932 international labour conference, that the pensionable age be set at not more than sixty-five, and in doing so we would only be following the example set by almost every other civilized country in the world, as was pointed out by the leader of the C.C.F. (Mr. Coldwell). In at least nine countries—the United States, England, New Zealand, France, Australia, Czechoslovakia, Sweden, Denmark and the Soviet Union—the pensionable age has been fixed at sixty-five or less.

Mr. IRVINE: It is fifty-five for women in the Soviet Union.

Mr. CROLL: Among the great middle powers, we are still holding out with respect to age. I think it is time that we fell into step with these other countries.

Mr. MARTIN: We are prepared to do that.

Mr. CROLL: That is good.

Mr. KNOWLES: After twenty-eight years.

Mr. IRVINE: Why does the government not do it and get ahead with it?

Mr. CROLL: There is another matter which I think ought to be given consideration. There is a situation which frequently arises—and it was referred to on the floor of the house, I think by the hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Bentley)—where the head of the house is unable to work and draws the old age pension. His wife is younger than he is, but not eligible under the statute. Both of them must try to live on his pension. I think it is high time, in cases where the wife is unable to work, that the regulations be changed so that the pension to her becomes automatic. That may appear to be a small point, but I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the lack of just such a simple provision is causing real hardship in many families throughout this country.

These many things about which I have been talking—abolition of the means test, increase in the amount of pension, lowering of the qualifying age—cover only half the problem. Taking care of Canada's senior citizens is more than a matter of dollars and cents. Even though they have withdrawn from active participation in business and industry, we cannot feel that they are not members of the community and that they have not a place in society. They are not to be just pensioned off and forgotten. This is becoming a really serious social problem in view of the changing position of Canada. We have always looked upon ourselves as a young country. The emphasis has always been on youth. Yet it is calculated that, within a generation and a half, thirty per cent of Canada's population will be over fifty-five years of age. This inevitable trend toward an older population is a matter of some significance. I have here a newspaper report, from the New York Times, of a statement made last month by the director of the social science department of the university of Michigan. This is what he said in part:

> For one thing the political power of the older person will grow. With that development will come more and more demands for social security. Old age insurance will become more important. Business will be giving more attention to annuity and pension plans. Taxes for support of old age persons will rise sharply. Positions of importance in government and business are more apt to be held by older persons.
> Consumer demands also will change. Our recreation planning will have to take into account the demands of older persons. Travel should increase and books and concerts should become more popular. Population shifts will continue as the older people, who have retired, drift to the states with the mild winter climates.

These are just a few of the changes which we may expect to find mirrored in our own society in the next twenty-five years, and we must begin to plan now to cope with them. We must prepare to face the growing problems of support, physical and mental health, recreation and social relations, of our senior citizens who, within the next thirty years, will comprise at least one-third of our population. In the post-war world we are trying to fit everyone into a spot. We have not yet successfully fitted our older generation in at all. Unless we do something more than we have done up to the present time, we shall build up a Townsend movement for social security which will crusade with more zeal than good sense. If we can ensure for all Canadians a broad programme of social services, we are not likely to be troubled with fabulous plans for $200 or $300 a month pensions and the like.

But money payments are not the whole answer. Britain and other countries supplement the cash pension, not only with medical services, but with extra food, recreation, health services, and even domestic aids for pensioners. In my own province of Ontario we not only pay low pensions but provide none of those social services. It is the duty of the government and the community to do more than they are doing at the present time. They must provide community centres, clubrooms and other facilities for the use of the old people. Perhaps some of our existing facilities might be reserved exclusively on specific days for these older people, as is done in the United States and Britain. The older third of the nation made Canada what it is today; and to them we still look for counsel and example. We must neither forget them nor take them for granted. As members of parliament charged with responsibility, we must do everything in our power, not only to make their lives richer, but to make them more meaningful.

Mr. DONALD M. FLEMING (Eglinton): We have listened to some unusual political speeches during the course of the debate this afternoon. I think it is fair to observe—in line with some of the observations which have been made here today, particularly those that harked back to a remark dropped in the house a few days ago by the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith)—that is a pity that the subject of old age pensions should be made the vehicle for political speeches. While on the subject of political speeches, I wish to say with some vigour that the two speeches we heard this afternoon from the government benches certainly struck a partisan note. I feel confident in saying there was not anything which could have been said by way of extenuation of the government's failures in times past in the field of social security and old age pensions, which was not said by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin).

Mr. MARTIN: It hit the spot, apparently.

Mr. MACKENZIE: It struck home.

Mr. FLEMING: There was not anything that could have been said, concocted or imagined in praise of the government which was not said, concocted or imagined by the minister. I say of him that he undoubtedly did a masterly job this afternoon, but not of making a presentation of this bill in its true proportions and proper perspective. It was a masterly job of inflation.

Mr. HALLE: Let us talk business.

Mr. FLEMING: I shall have more to say about that later.

Mr. HALLE: I hope not.

Mr. FLEMING: As to the speech made by the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Croll), I should like to say that his detour from the theme of his speech in order to make a deliberate, partisan attack on the government of his province and mine was an obvious attempt to play politics with a national issue.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MARTIN: The hon. member must not impute motives.

Mr. FLEMING: I shall have more to say about that. My hon. friend has not yet heard all that I propose to say in regard to those two efforts. I ask the hon. member for Spadina, for instance, why, in trying to abuse the government of Ontario and make that province appear to be a laggard in the matter of social security, he did not tell the house, as he might well have done, that Ontario was one of the first provinces to come into the old age pension scheme.

Mr. MACKENZIE: No; British Columbia.

Mr. FLEMING: I said one of the first. If the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Mackenzie) will permit anyone to discuss any other province, perhaps I might say a word concerning Ontario. I think the minister has had a pretty good inning this afternoon, and he might let Ontario have a little time.

Mr. KNOWLES: Let us give the old age pensioners an inning, too.

Mr. FLEMING: That was a sound remark. It is about time the old age pensioners had their inning in this debate. I am glad to say that Ontario has been no laggard. It has been well to the front in matters of social security. I will say that Ontario takes second place to no other province in Canada in matters of sound social security. When I was interrupted I was saying that Ontario was one of the first provinces to come into the old age pension scheme, coming under it in 1929. It is to be remembered also that Ontario was the pioneer province in providing free medical service and free medicine for old age pensioners. It was far ahead of those provinces which are making much of the fact that they do this now. Why did the hon. member for Spadina not say that?

Mr. CROLL: I didn't want to brag, because I did it.

Mr. FLEMING: The hon. member for Spadina may have started it, because he had the opportunity to do so when he was head of that department in the government of Ontario. He did not say it has been carried on by the government that has been in office since that time. He did not say the government of Ontario has maintained that leadership. To those not acquainted with the situation in this province, his remarks today must have left the impression that Ontario was lagging behind, whereas Ontario has been the pioneer and, under the present government of that province, still holds the leadership.

Neither were we told by the minister or by the hon. member of Spadina that it was a Conservative government under Mr. Bennett that in 1931, on behalf of the dominion, recognized and assumed the dominion's primary obligation with respect to old age pensions. You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that up to that time they had been a matter of equal financial responsibility as between the dominion and the provinces. Mr. Bennett's legislation placed three-quarters of the responsibility upon the dominion. That was a recognition of the primary obligation, the primary responsibility of the dominion in respect of the provision of old age pensions.

Mr. HARTT: Did he carry it out?

Mr. FLEMING: Yes, he did; he put it on the statute books. He did not leave what he had to say to moulder in musty books containing party platforms; he put his promise into the form of a statute in 1931, and not even the present government have dared depart from that principle. They have not increased the proportion, nor have they reduced it. That proportion has stood since that time. This is very important, because I am going to place before the house today the contention that in the speech we heard this afternoon by the Minister of National Health and Welfare there was an attempt to reverse the policy which has been recognized ever since 1931. The primary responsibility was recognized then by the dominion. It has not been disavowed since, until we come to the speech by the Minister of National Health and Welfare today.

Mr. MARTIN: May I ask a helpful question? Where did the province, whose government my hon. friend lauds so much, stand through its premier in regard to family allowances?

Mr. FLEMING: The government to which my hon. friend refers, which is the government of his province and mine, did not say it did not believe in family allowances. The premier of that province did attack the motives of the administration in introducing that measure at that particular time; but he said then and has often repeated since that he believes in family allowances.

Mr. MACKENZIE: A national bribe.

Mr. FLEMING: Oh, well, now, if the Minister of Veterans Affairs is making that as a statement, who am I to disagree with him?

Mr. MACKENZIE: I am quoting your leader.

Mr. FLEMING: I think the hon. member for Spadina did create the impression—I hope quite innocently, though he has been in political life for a good long time—

An hon. MEMBER: He is not that innocent.

Mr. FLEMING: Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not mind answering questions if I can hear them.

Mr. MARTIN: Go on; you are making a good speech.

Mr. FLEMING: Thank you; may I continue? I think the hon. member for Spadina did create the impression this afternoon that the matter was closed as far as the other provinces are concerned.

Now, here is a government which for months has been trumpeting its intention to bring in changes in old age pensions. There has been a great deal of fanfare, as there always is about the intentions of this government. They are never slow or backward in tooting their own horn. It has been trumpeted throughout the length and breadth of Canada that great changes were coming in the old age pensions; increases, of course. They did not say how much; they did not dare say how much, because it was so little. The governments of the provinces in the main have been waiting to see what would come out of all the fanfare, and they did not know until very late last night.

Mr. MARTIN: Why does my hon. friend say that?

Mr. FLEMING: I lay at the door of this government responsibility for the fact that none of the provinces, with the exception of British Columbia, have been taking steps in this field in recent months. Why should they, when the air was filled with uncertainty because of the vaporizing of this government?

While I am on that subject, may I remind hon. members that the premier of British Columbia has been asking this government to call a conference so that this whole question may be the subject of sensible negotiation. The dominion government still refuse to call that conference; apparently they do not want negotiation. The premier of British Columbia also made it clear that he hoped the increase introduced at the recent session of the British Columbia legislature would not be required for more than a temporary period, because it was his hope that this government would rise to its responsibilities and not seek to cast the burden on the provinces. Here is a Canadian press dispatch under date of February 11, reporting on the joint announcement of that day by Premier John Hart, finance minister Herbert Anscomb and provincial secretary George S. Pearson, with regard to the increase in the old age pension in that province, at the entire expense of the province. The dispatch states:

> Old age pensioners in British Columbia will receive a $5 cost of living bonus retroactive to January 1 this year, a joint announcement by Premier John Hart, finance minister Herbert Anscomb and provincial secretary George S. Pearson said today.

May I just pause there to say that British Columbia had the courage to make the increase in old age pensions retroactive to January 1. The best this government can do under the present measure is to start it from May 1. The dispatch continues:

> The bonus, second to be granted by the province, will bring the monthly old age allowance to $35. Of this amount British Columbia will pay $16.25 and the federal government $18.75.
> Premier Hart said the bonus was being given for a temporary period pending revision of the old age pension arrangements by the dominion government.

Let us bear that well in mind. Let the Minister of Veterans Affairs, who comes from that province, bear that in mind when he gives some indication of support for the proposals advanced today by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and when he takes great credit—as credit is due—to the government of British Columbia for doing what the delays of this government compelled that province to do.

I shall read that again:

> Premier Hart said the bonus was being given for a temporary period pending revision of the old-age pension arrangements by the dominion government.
> The premier said that, while in Ottawa last November, he was assured by Prime Minister King that the moment a sufficient number of provinces had signed agreements, he would call a conference to discuss the question of implementing the social security measures and public investment programme submitted to the dominion-provincial conference in August, 1945.

I interject there that they have seven provinces now, but they are no nearer to calling a conference. The government always has some excuse for not calling a conference together, when everyone knows it ought to be called.

The dispatch continues:

"It now is my intention to press for a convening of that conference and I have every hope that more generous treatment will be accorded those in receipt of old age pensions," Mr. Hart said.

The new bonus will cost the province $900,000 annually. Total amount now paid out in pensions to British Columbia's 18,000 pensioners is $5,700,000 annually, of which the dominion's share is $3,761,000.

It is perfectly clear from the statement made by Premier John Hart that he expected the dominion would rise to its responsibilities. He demanded or requested that the dominion government should measure up to its responsibilities, and call a conference to work out a new agreement. But it is clear that the government of British Columbia was not recognizing any obligation on the province to assume the primary load or the primary responsibility in respect of old age pensions. That responsibility, in his statement, rests with the dominion government.

If that responsibility is not to be discharged, if the dominion government is simply going to fold its hands in the face of the need, and say to the provinces, "Well, thus far we will go, and no farther; if pensioners do not get enough, from that point on it will be your responsibility"—

Mr. MARTIN: No one has said that.

Mr. FLEMING: —then they are turning their backs on an obligation which has been recognized by parliament and by the government of this country ever since 1931.

Mr. MARTIN: Who is playing politics?

Mr. FLEMING: You are.

Mr. MACKENZIE: May I ask a question. I do not like to interrupt—

An hon. MEMBER: Oh, no!

Mr. MACKENZIE: Does the hon. member not think it is better for the old age pensioners to receive the benefits projected in my colleague's legislation than to wait upon the contingency of a potential provincial conference?

Mr. FLEMING: That is a double-barreled question, and I should like to deal with both parts of it, in justice to the minister who has asked it. I shall take the second part first. Implicit in the second part of the question is apparently the assumption on the part of the minister that his government is not going to call a conference together.

Mr. MACKENZIE: No.

Mr. FLEMING: If that is the minister's idea, then I say this government is false to its trust.

Mr. MACKENZIE: No, no. My hon. friend is imputing motives which have no foundation in fact.

Mr. MARTIN: This is too important a matter for a minister of the crown to let pass, this suggestion as to a conference. My hon. friend should—

Mr. FLEMING: Is the minister asking a question?

Mr. MARTIN: I am asking a question.

Mr. FLEMING: One at a time. I will deal with one at a time. First, I shall deal with the question put by the minister from British Columbia. I do not think the Minister of National Health and Welfare should break in when I am attempting to answer his colleague's question. I do not think that is fair to his colleague.

Mr. MARTIN: I would not wish the hon. member to give the country the wrong impression.

Mr. FLEMING: I am trying to give a serious answer to a question by the Minister of Veterans Affairs.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. The hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) has the floor.

Mr. MARTIN: On a question of privilege—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: If the minister is rising to a question of privilege, very well.

Mr. KNOWLES: Make sure it is.

Mr. FLEMING: I thought the minister was just asking a question.

Mr. MARTIN: As the hon. member knows, he and I have been friends for many years.

Mr. FLEMING: And still are.

Mr. MARTIN: I would not interrupt him unnecessarily. But I do not want him, in a matter affecting the welfare of the people of this country, to give the impression that the government of Canada is not prepared at the earliest opportunity to sit down with the provinces to discuss this important matter of social security, which this government since 1945 has been prepared to do.

Mr. STIRLING: That is nothing like a question of privilege.

Mr. FLEMING: I wish to say this to my good friend the Minister of National Health and Welfare, that he can trump up more excuses for making speeches on bogus points of privilege than, I believe, any other minister on the government benches. Anything serves as a pretext for him to jump in on a point of privilege. No matter who has the floor, he does it. I never object to a question. My good friend the Minister of Veterans Affairs had asked me several, and I was endeavouring to give answers to them. But the Minister of National Health and Welfare will not even give justice to his colleague. He has to break in with one of his bogus points of privilege.

Mr. MARTIN: I admit I was wrong.

Mr. FLEMING: I come back to the Minister of Veterans Affairs, and deal, first, with the second part of his question. If I were to make the assumption which I think was implicit in the second part of his question, namely, that the dominion government is not going to call a dominion-provincial conference together—

Mr. MACKENZIE: No.

Mr. FLEMING: —then I would have to say half a loaf or perhaps a tenth of a loaf—for that is all we have here—is better than no bread.

Mr. MARTIN: That is not true, and you know it.

Mr. FLEMING: I pleaded with the government before and I plead with them again. I plead now with the Minister of Veterans Affairs, who has a big heart, in the hope that he will hear it. I plead with the minister of Veterans Affairs to influence his colleagues to call that dominion-provincial conference together. This question, and all other questions in the country which must be settled in a dominion-provincial conference, should be settled, and that soon.

On motion of Mr. Fleming the debate was adjourned.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

454. Departmental administration, $1,651,360.

Item stands.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Special—

36. To reclaim and to prevent the flooding of valuable agricultural lands in the valley of the Lillooet river, near Pemberton, B.C., $100,000.

Mr. REID: I was asking some questions on this item when the house rose last night. I want to make it clear that we from British Columbia are not objecting to this money being spent there, but should like to know whether the provincial government and the farmers concerned are putting up any money? How is it that this particular project was given preference? If the minister would give an explanation the item might pass.

Right Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): The item is to cover a project which has been under way for some time. It was undertaken, in the first place, by P.F.R.A., but not as a P.F.R.A. project. People of that area made representations to the government to the effect that a number of returned soldiers had been settled in that area by the federal government and that each year the area was flooded just about the time the returned men were ready to put in their crops. The land was flooded as a result of waters coming down from the glacier which feeds the stream. About seeding time the floods were at their height and it became almost impossible for these men to make a living on this land. I had the privilege of visiting that area myself some years ago, I think in 1938. I looked over it, and anyone knowing the circumstances that exist there should be able to see that people cannot make a living on that land unless something is done. Personally I think that when a government, be it federal, provincial or municipal, puts a number of human beings on a piece of land I am satisfied that it has assumed a responsibility towards those settlers and that it should attempt to rectify the circumstances which prevent such men from making a living.

It is one of the most beautiful valleys that can be found anywhere in the dominion, and the land these men are on can be made the finest farm land in Canada. I cannot imagine any finer homes anywhere in the world than can be established in this valley. These men are in there—I have forgotten the exact number of them, but I could get that information if required—and they have built nice little homes. Most of them have put up barns, and then they found that all that was needed to destroy their work for the whole season was for a few trees or some other obstruction to fall into the stream to cause it to overflow and flood their land. Because of the river being held back to a level which came up almost to the level of the land, a slight blockade would cause the river to overflow and flood their land. After having seen this actually happen at a season of the year when the land was being flooded, and believing that I knew something of the possibilities of that area, I asked the government to provide $10,000 to have an investigation made as to what might be done purely as an experimental project to ascertain what could be done in British Columbia in spots of that kind, and more particularly to give some service to these returned men who, some years ago after the end of the first war, had been placed in that area.

We had an investigation made and our engineers examined the whole project and made a report. I have a summary of their report before me, and I do not think the remarks that were made last evening should be allowed to stand as made without some correction, because they give a different impression from the facts as we know them.

The area is divided into three different projects, area No. 1, area No. 2 and area No. 3. I quote now from the report:

Area No. 1

Lillooet river between Lillooet and Tenasse lakes

In considering the reclamation of area No. 1 above, being the area from Lillooet lake to Green river, the method that gives the greatest assurance of success is to lower the elevation of Lillooet lake, both at its high and low stages.

In order to lower the level of Lillooet lake, both at low water and at high water, we proposed to construct a channel 300 feet wide at the bottom with side slopes of two to one over its entire length of 6,000 feet.

The report goes on to deal with the estimated cost per acre of the reclaimed land in this area, and says:

The cost per acre of land which will be reclaimed directly due to the lowering of the lake will be $131.50 per acre.

I think that was the figure mentioned by my hon. friend last night as the cost per acre of the project. It goes on:

This land at the moment is not being used for agricultural purposes, nor can it in its present state so be used. This is the cost when the total estimated cost has been charged to the land directly benefited. However, the effect of this lowering of the lake will be felt far beyond this area, as the success of the proposed works farther above in area No. 2 will depend in considerable degree on the lowering of the high water in Lillooet river at the mouth of Green river. Thus a certain proportion of this cost should be charged against lands in area No. 2.

In any event the reclamation of 2,706 acres of land at a price of $131.50 per acre appears to us to be worth while. The amount of such arable land in British Columbia is limited, and only occurs in our valleys. The benefits of this productivity to the district as well as to the province are quite apparent.

Area No. 2

Area No. 2 comprises all the land lying south and west of the Lillooet river, lying between Green river on the south and Miller creek on the north. The success of the reclamation of this area depends in a large measure on the degree of scouring of the bottom of the Lillooet river below Green river due to the lowering of the high water level of Lillooet lake. This scouring will have to be assisted where submerged logs or snags occur.

Cost per acre: The cost per acre of the works is $27.96. The benefits derived should soon pay the cost. Total cost of this project would be $55,915.

We are confident that the work outlined for area No. 2 will ensure reasonable reclamation.

Area No. 3

Area No. 3 comprises all the land west of the Lillooet river lying north of Miller creek and south of the north fork of Ryan creek. This area includes the district called Pemberton Meadows and is the most thickly settled and best improved area in the valley. The land produced some of the best potatoes and turnips in the district, yields of ten and twelve tons of potatoes per acre and twenty tons of turnips being average crops. The danger of overflow from Lillooet river has always been present, but the good farmer usually was able to gather in his crop as only the higher ground was utilized. Ryan creek runs along the west side of the valley at a higher elevation than the most of the land. Thus we have a strip of land between the Lillooet river and Ryan creek averaging from one-half to three-quarter miles in width, in which the high ground is close to the banks of the river and the creek, and the intervening ground is three to four feet lower than the banks. Of course this is on low ground which under certain conditions becomes flooded.

Of late years the water table has risen due to seepage and overflow from Ryan creek There appears to be very little seepage from Lillooet river as its banks are composed of fine silt closely resembling clay in its appearance. Many of the farmers now find it impossible to grow potatoes on land which formerly gave good crops, and have had to use the land for grazing. This does not give nearly the returns formerly received, as there was and still is a great demand for Pemberton potatoes to be used as certified seed.

Cost per acre: The cost per acre of the land which will be directly benefited by these proposed works, on the basis of $62,115.62 distributed over 2,120 acres is $29.30 per acre. We are confident that the added returns from this land will more than make up this amount.

Area No. 4

This comprises all the land lying north of the north fork of the Ryan creek. This area consists of land which is approximately the same height as the average high water. The grade of Lillooet river is increasing in this area. It has been frequently changing channels. Drainage ditches will help. We think that for the moment this area should not be considered. This is one of the most costly areas. We think that its treatment should be postponed until the experience gained from the river area No. 3 can be used to design the protection for this area.

All the lands in the valley are covered by the proposed agreement between the dominion, the province and the proposed Pemberton valley dyking district. Assuming that the Indian department becomes part of the Pemberton Valley dyking district—this suggestion was made last night; as our part of it is the reserve, it could be—we are informed that there is a total of 30,000 acres in the valley and covered by the agreement: 10,000 acres privately owned lands, 10,000 acres government lands and 10,000 acres Indian lands. We have no detailed break-down as to the occupancy of privately owned lands; neither have we in detail the arable acres of crown lands. The same holds for the Indian lands in the project.

There was a report made, which was known as the McGugan report, dividing the area of the Pemberton valley which will be directly benefited by the proposed works into roughly four portions, the areas of which I have just spoken. These are pretty well covered by what I have just read.

The expenditures which have been made up to date are expenditures made by the federal government. An agreement was drawn up as between the province and the association at Pemberton which has to do with the utilization of the lands afterwards and the maintenance of these lands. A copy of the agreement has just been handed to me. Since that is the question which has been asked directly, I shall deal with it from that point of view. The agreement runs as follows:

His Majesty the King in the right of Canada as represented herein by the Right Honourable James G. Gardiner, Minister of Agriculture for Canada, hereinafter called the Dominion of the First Part

and

His Majesty the King in the right of the province of British Columbia as represented herein by the Honourable Edward T. Kenney, Minister of Lands and Forests for British Columbia, hereinafter called the Province of the Second Part

and

Pemberton Valley Dyking District, hereinafter called the district of the Third Part

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Whereas it is necessary and in the public interest to reclaim an area of fertile agricultural lands in the valley of the Lillooet river in the province of British Columbia and

Whereas these lands were largely settled by returned soldiers after the first world war; and

Whereas these lands are being damaged from seepage silting, stream erosion and periodic flooding from the waters of the Lillooet river and its tributaries and also great damage is being caused in the lower section of the valley by the formation of a barrier in the river between Lillooet and Tenasse lakes, which barrier raises the level of Lillooet lake and thereby causes progressive inundation of some of the best agricultural lands in the valley; and

Whereas these conditions have resulted in the almost complete abandonment of a large area of said lands by the original settlers; and

Whereas the prairie farm rehabilitation branch of the dominion Department of Agriculture has completed surveys of certain areas of the Lillooet river valley to determine what remedial works can be undertaken for the reclamation of the agricultural lands, and the rehabilitation of the settlers now resident, in the section of the Lillooet river valley above indicated; and

Whereas the surveys indicated that these lands can be reclaimed; and

Whereas the remedial measures that can be undertaken are set out in detail in a report signed by D J. McGugan, consulting engineer for the federal Department of Agriculture, dated the 10th day of August, 1945, a copy of which report is hereto attached and marked appendix "A" to this agreement;

Now, therefore, this agreement witnesseth that in consideration of the premises and the agreements hereinafter contained, each with the other, the parties hereto agree as follows:

1. The dominion agrees forthwith with the funds appropriated by parliament in the current fiscal year and with such funds as may be appropriated for the purpose by parliament from time to time hereafter, to undertake the construction of such reclamation works as it may deem feasible and necessary to effect the reclamation of agricultural lands and the rehabilitation of settlers now resident in the section of the Lillooet river valley above indicated;

2. The province agrees to furnish free of cost to the dominion all rights-of-way for canals, dykes, ditches, access roads, and relocation of existing roads, or such other rights-of-way as may be required for the execution of the works, provided such title thereto is now vested in and will remain in the province;

3. The district agrees to make available free of cost to the dominion or province all rights-of-way for canals, dykes, ditches, access roads and relocation of existing roads, or such other rights-of-way as may be required for the execution of the works not provided, as above by the province.

4. The province agrees to improve existing bridges so as to enable the dominion to transport the necessary equipment and machinery to the scene of operations and from place to place during the construction of the work and to improve and condition such provincial roads as may be necessary to transport the necessary equipment and machinery to the scene of operations and from place to place during the construction of the works; so far as the title to said bridges and roads is now vested in the province;

5. The province further agrees to obtain the release of any, and all, timber and mining leases of lands required for or in connection with the execution or construction of the works herein referred to and to make available to the dominion free of all let or hindrance the use of and access to all or any part of the lands so required;

6. The province further agrees to make its crown lands lying in the area referred to in the premises to this agreement available for the re-establishment of returned soldiers and that, to this end it will for an indefinite period reserve such lands from other disposition;

7. The province further agrees to cooperate with the dominion and the district and to provide any necessary legislation, and to make available its administrative machinery, to facilitate the execution of the work herein contemplated and generally to carry out the intent and spirit of this agreement;

8. The district agrees to take over and to assume the control of the said works as soon as notified in writing by the dominion that the said works has been completed; the district further agrees that upon assuming control it will operate the said works efficiently and maintain the whole of the said works in a proper state of repair and in conformity with any statute or any statutory provisions applicable thereto, and agrees to operate and maintain the whole of the said works without expense to or assistance from the dominion;

9. The district agrees to save, defend and keep harmless and to indemnify the dominion of, from and against all claims, charges and actions that may after the signing of this agreement be brought against the dominion by reason of anything the dominion has done or failed to do in the performance of the works undertaken pursuant to this agreement.

10. If any question arises as to the interpretation of this agreement or whether the dominion has performed any of the things by the dominion agreed to be performed, such question shall be decided by the Minister of Agriculture for the dominion, whose decision shall be final and binding upon the parties hereto.

I think it will be agreed that the agreement makes it possible for us to go into the valley and carry on experiments in a place where we can at the same time do a great deal of good, and the results obtained from that experience can be utilized in order to set up other projects elsewhere in the province.

I would say, in answer to the suggestion contained in the question, that it is not the intention of the government to proceed with projects of this kind, with the total cost assumed by the dominion government over large areas. The intention is to use this as an experiment if we can, and utilize it for the purpose of deciding what to do elsewhere and at the same time provide relief to returned men put on the land at the end of the first war.

Mr. FULTON: I was glad to hear the minister speak in defence of this item, as, of course, one would expect him to do. I have a considerable interest in the question myself, and on March 6, I made specific reference in this house to the Pemberton Meadows project. Hon. members will find reference to it at page 1074 of Hansard, where I mentioned that an area of several thousand acres could be brought under cultivation, an area which is considered to be one of the most fertile in the province.

As the minister has pointed out, this is designed to help settlers who have been there for many years and have done a great deal of work on the area themselves, and who now find it beyond their resources to cope with the flooding of the land without government assistance. I think it is proper for the dominion government, through the Department of Agriculture, by means of the prairie farm rehabilitation administration, and as an experiment, to go into projects of this kind, because it is not a case of throwing away money. It is not a wild-goose chase, because we know, from the fact that these have been valuable farms in the past, that whatever work may be done there will be of value to the settlers themselves, and give some indication of how this work can be carried on in the future.

The minister pointed out, I believe, that there are 30,000 acres of valuable agricultural land involved in the project, and in that connection I would refer to what the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid) said last night, as reported at page 4277 of Hansard. He said:

> We have to go back to our people and tell them why the dominion government are going to spend nearly half a million dollars in connection with land which some of us think is not worth very much.

I would be the last to suggest that the hon. member does not know the province, because he does. He knows it thoroughly, since he has made a great study of its resources and has spent a good deal of time travelling. But he is not quite accurate in thinking that this land is not worth very much, because all reports, as verified by the minister, indicate that it is some of the finest agricultural land in the province.

I am sorry to hear any member from British Columbia discourage or criticize work that is being done by the prairie farm rehabilitation administration in that province. We have been urging for some time now that the administration should go there in a larger way than they are doing. They are undertaking only scattered surveys and we have been urging that they should go there in a larger way than contemplated in this particular project on which they are working. I think we should encourage any and all work done by the administration along these lines.

There was one thing to which the minister referred that I should like to emphasize. He said that they undertook a preliminary survey, and I believe the initial outlay was some $10,000, as a result of which they were satisfied that it would be a valuable and paying project to go ahead with the work which is now being undertaken. I would repeat the request that was made last night, that they do the same thing for the whole interior of the province and make a survey. We are not asking them to rush in and spend large sums of money without investigation. We are asking that they send engineers throughout the area to make an investigation along the lines I suggested last night.

Again, with reference to this particular scheme, the hon. member for New Westminster referred to the interest of the Indian affairs branch in the question. As I understand their attitude, they are not opposed to the development, but they rather want their own lands brought under the same work which is being carried on for the white settlers. It is a question whether it will be enlarged rather than a question of their opposing any work at all.

In conclusion, I have no hesitation in supporting this particular item because it is work which will repay the capital outlay. It is work that is being done on behalf of settlers long established there who are unable to carry on without government assistance, and it is work which will enable the settlement, when this land is reclaimed, of a large number of returned soldiers of this war. I think the money involved in this item of $100,000 is something that we should support and encourage rather than criticize.

Mr. REID: There are one or two things that should be said for the purpose of keeping the record straight. First of all, regarding the remarks of the hon. member for Kamloops, I am grateful to him for bringing to my attention what I said last night. It is true I did make the remark which he quoted, but I am frank to say that it was made after eleven o'clock and a little in haste. I did say at the time that the land was of little value. That is on record but it is somewhat of an exaggeration. I am willing to admit that tonight. I am not objecting to this item. My principal reason in rising last evening on this item was to put my position before the committee. To my way of thinking, there is more fertile land in danger in the lower Fraser valley and elsewhere, but every time we approach the government we are turned down and can get no such assistance. When we see an item for $500,000 to be expended, naturally we want to know how it comes about that the dominion government can make such an expenditure and yet, when we want relief and some assistance, we are told that it is not a dominion matter, and that we have to wait until the P.F.R.A. is passed. We are curious to know how this item without P.F.R.A. being passed could pass the financial council of the government.

I want also to put on the record certain facts because the minister made a statement intended to correct me in regard to the figures I gave last night about the $131 an acre. I have the documents before me. There are three areas. The first will cost $355,456, which works out at $131.50 an acre. The minister rather suggested to the committee that this $131.50 had to be spread over the three areas. Well, there is a total in the three projects of 6,826 acres and as the total expenditure is $473,785 in areas 1, 2 and 3, dividing that, the average is around $80 an acre.

Mr. GARDINER: The minister did not say anything. The minister read the report which my hon. friend says he has before him. The report says that.

Mr. REID: Let us look at the report and be clear about it because I do not want the minister to get away with that and to suggest that I am quoting figures which are wrong. For area No. 1 the report gives 2,706 acres. The total expenditure is $355,756.50, and the cost per acre is $131.50. In area No. 2 the report gives the total cost as $55,913, and then at the bottom of the page gives the cost per acre as $27.96. Then we go on to area No. 3 where the total cost is given as $62,115.62, and the cost per acre as $29.30, as the minister has said. I do not know what it is going to cost per acre over the whole district, but if you take each of the areas—area No. 1 costing $131.50 per acre and areas No. 2 and No. 3 costing the amounts I have just quoted—and lump them altogether, as the minister, I think, said we should have done, it works out at $80 per acre as the average. That is the record. Is it any wonder I criticize when we in the Fraser valley at the moment are faced with the loss of hundreds of farms? We are losing the fight with the Fraser river. Two or three thousand farmers do not know whether or not their farms will be washed away, the river rose so many inches today. It is different from the Ottawa river. It rises when the heat strikes the interior and the snows begin to melt. The farmers have worked hard. The last danger we had there was in 1936. The farmers are taxed to the limit to keep the Fraser river within bounds. That is one of the most fertile areas in British Columbia, notwithstanding the statement made about Pemberton Meadows. Then when we are asking for relief and come here for it we are told we have to get prairie farm rehabilitation. If that is the case, how does the government come to be spending half a million dollars up in Pemberton Meadows? I leave the answer to the committee.

Mr. GREEN: I hesitate to venture into a discussion on an agricultural item, but it happens that I go up through this district every summer. There is no doubt that the money voted is being well spent and there is great need there. As the Minister of Agriculture has said, the land is fertile and the settlers themselves have gone to great trouble and expense to try to solve their own problem. They have convinced both the dominion and provincial governments that something should be done. I believe the minister will agree with me that the provincial government have been in there too, have made surveys and are entirely convinced that this work should be proceeded with. I know the former member for Cariboo, who is now Hon. J. G. Turgeon, took a great interest in this work and I suppose he had a good deal to do with getting it started.

Mr. REID: I think he did.

Mr. GREEN: I do not think anything should be said in this house which would prejudice the work being carried through to a successful conclusion. We should like to support the hon. member for New Westminster in his request. I do not know, but perhaps he has been a little bit slow in making that request to the government. I know a good deal of money has been spent in his riding, in dredging and in other ways, none of which we begrudge him. But certainly it is not right that any British Columbia member should take the position that this particular vote should be cut out.

Mr. REID: Nobody has suggested that.

Mr. GREEN: It is necessary work, and I am glad the Minister of Agriculture has decided to go ahead with it. I can assure him that he will have our support.

Mr. IRVINE: I have listened with a good deal of interest to the remarks made by hon. gentlemen on both sides of the house in regard to this item. It has to do with an area which happens to be in the southern part of the Cariboo riding and I know it very well. I want to commend the minister for the vote and to assure the committee that the work being done there is essential and that the land is undoubtedly fertile. The government is to be commended for its efforts in this regard. I have no doubt that the hon. member for New Westminster has a legitimate protest with regard to certain parts of the country to which he has referred, but I do not think we shall get anywhere by setting one against the other. I think both these projects should be undertaken. Perhaps when the project to cope with the Fraser river which my hon. friend refers to is undertaken and when it is worked out to so much per acre, he may find that the figure is quite as high as the figures he has just been giving the committee with respect to Pemberton Meadows. I do not wish to do any more than merely assure the committee that the work is well worth doing. Now that it has been started, I hope it will be carried through to a conclusion. Can the minister tell us just how far the project has been carried to date, how much has been spent so far on it, how much more will be required to complete it, and when he thinks it will be completed?

Mr. GARDINER: We spent $48,000 last year, and at the present time we are busily engaged in spending more money. However, until this vote is through we are not able to proceed as rapidly as is wished.

Mr. WHITE (Middlesex East): This spring when the Thames valley authority had a meeting in London, there was considerable disappointment over the announcement here that prairie farm rehabilitation would not be extended beyond the three western provinces. Ontario farmers have seen considerable amounts of money spent in the west, and when I noticed this item being spent in British Columbia on river control I was a little bit alarmed about it. I understand the explanation given by the minister. On the other hand, I believe the government did not deny the fact that if a project were undertaken there, they would be prepared to help. I should like to know just what position we are in, in that regard. Some have said that the fact that prairie farm rehabilitation was not being extended did not mean that help would not be extended to that valley if and when the project was undertaken. I should like to have a statement from the minister regarding that.

Mr. GARDINER: The works which were undertaken on the Grand river in Ontario, in so far as the dominion had anything to do with them, were undertaken by the Department of Public Works just as the works on the Fraser river in British Columbia have always been undertaken by the Department of Public Works. Similar projects all over Canada have been undertaken under votes provided for public works. If there is any work of that kind to be done in Ontario it will come up under the public works vote here rather than under agriculture.

Special—
37. Agricultural research special projects, $100,000.

Mr. WRIGHT: This item shows a decrease this year of $100,000. What special projects are being carried on and are any of them being dropped?

Mr. GARDINER: No, none are being dropped. The special projects being carried on are projects such as that at Portage la Prairie having to do with flax; there is one at Morden, and I think one at Lethbridge, and there may be some other smaller undertakings. Those have been established, and it was not anticipated that this year we would spend more than $100,000. As a matter of fact, while the item has been $200,000, we have not spent that much in past years, and we think $100,000 will cover all we shall be able to accomplish this year.

Item agreed to.

Mr. GARDINER: There are some special items attached to my estimates, on the inside of the first page; I am not sure whether or not the Chair has them. The first is item 609, for the Agricultural Products Act, and the next is item 610.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I have supplementary estimates 609 and 610.

Mr. GARDINER: Are those ready for passing?

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I imagine they have been passed; they have been signed.

Mr. BROOKS: I do not think hon. members have those items.

Mr. BENTLEY: Yes; we have had them for a long time.

Mr. GARDINER: They were passed around, and I think were on the desks for a long time. As far as I am concerned, there is no objection to leaving them until the other supplementaries are being considered, if hon. members desire to do so. I might explain, however, that one is for the necessary expenditures under the Agricultural Products Act, which we passed a few days ago, and for which we have to supply funds. The amount is $100,000. The next item is to authorize and provide for payment of subsidies on oats and barley used as feed for live stock under such regulations as may be approved by the governor in council. These are the subsidies being paid down to August 1, which many hon. members are suggesting we should continue beyond that date. Those are the two items. I think they must have been carried.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Those two items have been carried and signed by the chairman.

Mr. GARDINER: Then that is all right; we will not start another discussion.

Demobilization and Reconversion—
485. Agricultural Prices Support Act, 1944 (formerly the agricultural food board), $2,030,500.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): There is an item which I think comes under this vote, which concerns me. I refer to what I consider a rather shortsighted policy on the part of the government in regard to barley. I might just indicate that in 1943 we exported to the United States 35,800,000 bushels of barley, and in 1944 we exported 35,400,000 bushels.

Mr. GARDINER: Which item are you on?

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): I am on item 485. I want to indicate the price for barley, in relation to the government's policy.

Mr. GARDINER: That is not under the Agricultural Prices Support Act. That is the act which sets a floor under prices.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): But we set a floor and ceiling for barley. My understanding is that we have a floor of ninety cents under barley.

Mr. GARDINER: We are not utilizing any funds from this vote for that purpose. Those funds come under the item I was just talking about, No. 610, which I now recall was passed just after the legislation went through.

Item agreed to.

Demobilization and Reconversion—
491. Dairy products board, $19,546.

Mr. DROPE: The minister said that under this item he would make a statement concerning the cheese contracts. I should like to hear that statement.

Mr. GARDINER: The dairy products board was set up during the war for the purpose of entering into contracts and providing cheese for Britain. Since then, it has been continued as the body under which these contracts which have been negotiated are carried out. I think the question in the hon. gentleman's mind is how we are to proceed now, whether we are to requisition cheese or whether we are buying on the market. The position at present is that we are buying on the market. The price we offer is twenty-five cents. For the time being I think the price being bid is 26 1-16 cents, which I believe would mean that, while that price is being offered, the board will not get cheese. The facts are that about thirty per cent of the cheese is consumed in Canada and about seventy per cent goes to Britain. That is approximately true every year; and since we do not intend to take all the cheese this year, as we did for two years during the war, we have not considered it necessary to requisition cheese. We say we will buy cheese at twenty-five cents, which in all probability will mean that, after Canadian supplies are obtained, cheese will sell at around twenty-five cents. I quite understand that the hon. member might say this will probably have the same result as though we requisitioned the cheese, except for the thirty per cent for Canadian consumption. That is the plan under which we are proceeding, and under which we hope to be successful in obtaining about seventy per cent of the Canadian cheese production.

Demobilization and Reconversion—

492. Meat board, including quality premiums on A and B1 grade hog carcasses, $5,657,818.

Mr. CHARLTON: I see an increase of $489,019 in this item. From all reports, and according to government statistics, the production of bacon hogs has gone down this year. Would the minister give the explanation for that increase.

Mr. GARDINER: I have a statement showing the position in regard to hogs marketed in Canada, comparing 1947 with 1946 and 1945. If hon. members so desire I can place this table on Hansard.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. GARDINER: The table is as follows:

In reference to the table which has been placed on the record, it will be noted that in respect of the hog marketings for Canada we reached a low point in February, 1947, as compared with the same month for 1946. The percentage of decrease was reduced to 16·2 per cent in March, and then in April it reached a point where it was approximately the same as last year. Then, in May of 1947 we have come up 8·2 per cent above the figure for 1946.

In respect of the figures for the provinces it will be noted that in Ontario we started out in January of 1947 with a small loss, and in February we had a loss of 1·2 per cent. In March, it will be noted the loss was only 0·1 per cent, and in April there was a gain of 26 per cent. Again in May the gain amounts to 32·6 per cent. So that in Ontario it is climbing fast.

However, the big improvement is seen in the figures given for Quebec. In January of this year we were up 3·8 per cent. In February it went down to the extent of 2·6 per cent, but in March it was up 20·6 per cent; in April, 41 per cent, and in May it was up 73·4 per cent. I give these figures to indicate that in our opinion the low point in the decrease in hog marketing has been passed. The figures show that during the first five months of this year Quebec has accomplished what the farmers there were asked to accomplish at the conference held last December. We asked them to produce in 1948 as many hogs as they had produced in 1945. They are now ahead of that programme. They have produced more hogs in the first five months of 1947 than they did in the first five months of 1945.

It will be noted from these figures that Ontario has accomplished the same thing. They are really a year ahead of the programme as it was set last December. Up to date our difficulty has been in the west. The figures show that in the three western provinces there was a decrease of 35·3 per cent in January, and 39·5 per cent in February. But, just as happened in the other provinces, the change came in March, when the decrease was reduced to 37·1 per cent, to 30·2 per cent in April and to 20·5 per cent in May. While our figure is still a long way below the 1945 figure, so far as the production of hogs is concerned, it will be noted that the production is on the increase. We are estimating that by August or September of this year we shall be producing in western Canada as many hogs as we produced in 1946. And we are hoping that, even in the western part of Canada, we shall overtake the programme set out in December and, by 1948, get our production up to the 1945 level.

Mr. CHARLTON: I hope it is not wishful thinking on the part of the minister. As a matter of fact the statistics show that the over-all drop throughout Canada is a little more than ten per cent in respect of hog production. All hon. members know what is happening in the west. Early this spring both in the west and here in the east sows have been going to the slaughter-houses by hundreds, and the prices on little pigs have dropped by over fifty per cent in the eastern provinces in the last month. Little pigs are now being offered, and cannot be sold.

The minister thinks that by August the increase will come up to the 1946 figure. I venture to say that might take place, because so many pigs are reaching the slaughter-houses before they are ready, on account of the shortage of feed. Sows have gone, and pigs light in weight are being offered. If the minister will look into the grades he will find that within the next two months they will be light in weight. The minister considers that he will need half a million dollars more this year for grade A and B1 premiums than he needed last year. I think it will be just the other way around.

Mr. GARDINER: Would the hon. member like to cut it down to that and place the producers in the position in which someone said the cheese producers were placed?

Mr. CHARLTON: I did not say that.

Mr. GARDINER: It was one of the members from that corner of the house.

Mr. CHARLTON: I venture to say the minister would admit that if the amount were cut down it would have to be made up, regardless of where the figure was. This is a contract made by the government with respect to grade A and B carcasses, and the money has to come from somewhere, whether it is in the estimates or not.

Mr. GARDINER: If it was not there we would have to ask them to go without it to the end of the year.

Mr. CHARLTON: Well, that is characteristic, anyway. But we can say that the amount of bacon which has been sent to the United Kingdom has been less so far this year than it was in 1945 and 1946.

I should like to refer to the way in which our bacon is marketed in England. I understand on good authority that our bacon is still being marketed there by interests who have more interest in Danish bacon than they have in Canadian bacon. If that is true—and I believe it is—it is a serious state of affairs. The minister said the other night that at the present time we are not allowed to advertise any Canadian products in England. My only comment on that is that in the main we are giving Great Britain products at a fairly good price; that is, a price reduced as compared with world prices. But if we are not given some consideration for that, then I believe the Canadian producer should have some preference over foreign producers in the English market.

I would ask the minister to make a statement with regard to the commission houses which are dealing in our Canadian bacon and selling it, and to state whether the people who have an interest in Danish bacon are also dealing in our bacon.

Mr. GARDINER: There are no commission houses selling bacon in Great Britain at the present time. The commission houses which were doing business before the war did handle both Danish and Canadian bacon. The prices were determined by a board which sat at the beginning of each week and determined what the prices were on bacon coming from Denmark, Canada and elsewhere. But that was all discontinued during the war. There are people who say—and probably they are correct—that the same persons are making this distribution under the instructions of the food ministry, and there is, of course, the suggestion that if that condition continues until they get back to the natural system of marketing again there would be a preference shown probably for Danish bacon.

But the thing that is promoting Danish bacon to a much greater extent is what Canadians are doing themselves. If any member of this house were to go into Eaton's or Simpson's or any other of the larger stores tomorrow and order a parcel to be put up for delivery in Britain the parcel would in all probability be put up in Denmark and Danish bacon would be sent to Great Britain, paid for by a Canadian. That, of course, is one method of getting around the British regulation which says that you cannot advertise. We feel that the British are doing just what we ourselves would do under similar circumstances. The British have a situation where they are not able to feed their people as their people want to be fed and they must ration most of the food they are distributing. So the British authorities say: If we must distribute the food and tell our people this is what you have to take, we cannot at the same time permit others outside Great Britain to come in here and advertise urging our people to buy Canadian bacon instead of Danish or Danish bacon instead of Canadian; our people will have to take what we have to distribute to them. That is, I think, the only way in which the government can keep itself out of some difficulty, and this government or any other government would do the same thing under similar circumstances. That is what the British are doing. But we are helping the Danish to get around that when we walk into our stores and, instead of putting up a parcel ourselves and sending it to Britain, order and pay for a parcel to be made up in Denmark and sent to Britain from there. In almost any daily paper in Canada you will see advertisements of the products that can be sent to Britain from Denmark. I submit that if our Canadians assist in that advertising programme they are not helping Canada.

Mr. CHARLTON: Was that practice not started because of the postal restrictions imposed by the government here?

Mr. GARDINER: No; that movement started just as soon as the German troops were out of Denmark. We have had it stopped once or twice but it started up again. There is no way in which we can legally stop it.

Mr. CHARLTON: There were restrictions all during the war and since on the kind of food we can send to Britain.

Mr. WRIGHT: How do they get Canadian funds into Denmark to purchase this food?

Mr. GARDINER: I am not going to explain that. I had too much difficulty on the continent in getting money exchanged to try to explain how it is done. But they get paid for what they send.

Mr. WRIGHT: Surely there is some way to stop it. We have a foreign exchange control board with control over Canadian funds that are going abroad to be used abroad. Surely we are not going to lend the money to Denmark through some department of our government to enable them to carry on advertising against ourselves?

Mr. GARDINER: We have tried to stop it and will continue to try, but we have not succeeded up to date.

Mr. BRYCE: I do not want to get into any argument about bacon. But I agree with the minister that this time he is right. I said once before in the house that I had been over there, and I am going to repeat what I said then, that the best bacon going to Britain today is Canadian. It is ahead of even the Danish product. I sympathize with my hon.

friend in our not being able to advertise over there. The only advertisement we have is when a British housewife gets good bacon and says, "That is the best we ever had," and I would always assure her that it was Canadian bacon she had that morning. Bacon that goes out in sliced form, no matter how you may advertise it, loses its identity when it gets there. I would be very sorry if this country, both east and west, fell down in bacon production, because we have a wonderful market in Britain. The people there want our bacon, and I hope we shall be able to maintain that market.

At page 102 of the estimates two bacon specialists are listed. What are their duties? Are they for the use of the meat board, or have they other functions?

Mr. GARDINER: They are two inspectors, Doctor Miller and Major Leighton. Doctor Miller is on this side inspecting the bacon as it is loaded on the ship, and the other inspector inspects the bacon when it is landed in Britain. The condition of the bacon is reported on from each end, when it is shipped and when it is landed, to see if it is in good condition.

Mr. BRYCE: There are six stockyard agents employed. Is there any liaison between these agents and the meat board?

Mr. GARDINER: Their task is concerned with administration in the stockyards.

Mr. BRYCE: For the meat board?

Mr. GARDINER: For the department.

Mr. BRYCE: They have nothing to do with the meat board?

Mr. GARDINER: No.

Mr. BRYCE: I should like to ask a question as to the meat board protecting the farmer's produce. Some time ago the meat board announced that they would buy all the lambs at one-quarter of a cent less than the ceiling or the floor price, whichever you call it, and that was supposed to help the farmer. But it did not really help the farmer anyway, because the farmer sent his lambs to the stockyard or to the abattoir, and they paid just what they liked in a competitive market. It was only after the lambs were in the hands of the packing companies that that price came into operation. You have the same situation in regard to a carload of steers. I know what the minister's answer will be before he gives it, because he is going to say there are times when the farmer gets more than he is entitled to; but over a number of years I know that the farmer is always on the wrong side of the deal. If the packer pays more for something in one month or two months of the year, in the other ten months he pays less than he should. I wish to know if the minister has altered the policy of the meat board to give the farmer better protection than he has had in the past. I think the meat board is good, but it is only after the carcass is hung up by the heels that the price is considered. Something should be done on a hoof basis. They do it in other countries. I have seen it done in other countries. They bring the animal in and grade it, and when they hang it up by the heels there is not much difference in the grading. As it is today, the meat board is more help to the packing industry than to the farmer. Will the minister give me some information on it? The way it is done is not right.

Mr. GARDINER: I think the hon. member knows as much about the transactions on the Winnipeg market as anyone; he has always been close to it and has had considerable to do with trading on it. He will agree that we have never had, up until the time we established the meat board, the same stability in prices over the years as we have had since the establishment of that board. Prior to the establishment of the meat board, our prices were quite high in July as a rule. It is true that they still go up to some extent in July, as do other markets, but only slightly when compared with what they did prior to the operations of the meat board. In the fall of the year when stock was coming off the pastures, and when farmers were getting a little anxious to get their hogs on the market because the cold weather was coming, the market went down. In many years there was no limit to where it went. Then again we had difficulties when we started to put the finished cattle on the market in the spring of the year. For two or three years, and maybe three or four years after the bacon board, which eventually became the meat board, came into existence, there was a tendency on the part of everyone to say that we ought to provide a high price in July because it cost more to feed hogs through the winter, to have them carried through the winter and delivered in June and July; and that we ought to provide for the price going down in the fall just as it did when the market was following the natural rules of supply and demand. We tried that for one year at the beginning of the war. We did not set seasonal prices, and we found out that on hogs it simply resulted in approaching what had always happened; when you had a volume your price went away down and when you did not have a volume your price went away up.

No one can gain by that method of marketing excepting the packer. He had the means of storing meat in cold storage from one period to another and he could benefit greatly by it. There was only one group of people in Canada who might have had any reason for saying that we should continue that, and they did. We did not continue it. We tried to establish a flat floor price at least for hogs and finally for cattle. It took us two years longer to persuade the cattle producers to agree that it ought to be done with cattle; but finally we were able to persuade them to agree to a fair price over the year, so that the farmer could get just about as high a return when he had a big volume to put on the market as he could get when he had a small volume to put on. We think it is beneficial to the farmer to stabilize the price over the whole year. We think, too, that it is a good thing for the farmer to extend that stabilization over two or three years. For that reason we have expanded these contracts from one year contracts into two and finally into three-year contracts in order to be sure that the price can be maintained above the floor over a longer period, or stabilized over a longer period. That is what the board is attempting to do and we think they have done it successfully. There have been very few times when the price has been below what would be the established floor. I think if you examine the records—I have them in front of me for anyone who shakes his head about it; I will read them if you wish—you will find that prices have remained almost at the same level for months back.

Mr. BRYCE: Has the minister any policy which will permit the meat board to buy these animals and kill them?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. BRYCE: The minister has that?

Mr. GARDINER: We bid on hogs, for example, and we have not had any serious difficulty about it. The hogs all go to some forty odd plants which are government inspected; that is, all the hogs on which we pay a premium, and these are the hogs that we desire to get for overseas shipment. Practically all of them go to some forty odd plants. It is a simple thing to go to forty odd plants, provided that you have authority behind what you are doing, as we had under the War Measures Act and now have under the legislation which was passed this session. It is a simple thing to say to one of these plants, you must do what the others are doing, or to two or three plants, you must do what the others are doing. If we can say that, we find we have no difficulty at all in getting the plants to cooperate in putting on to the domestic market what is required here, and putting on the British market the surplus. All of them are doing it in about the same proportion. Under that plan we have been able to get the hogs; but when it came to the cattle the situation was somewhat different. We had strong pressure, as I said, from producers, and more particularly from the larger producers, to set a price which was two cents lower in the fall than it was in the spring in order that cattle could be taken in and fed with the margin to begin with. We argued against that for about two years and finally got them, not exactly to agree, but to consent to trying out the other plan, which is working now. Here is how it operates, as the hon. member said a few moments ago. On the higher carcasses of beef we say we are prepared to buy every day at a certain price, which is only one-quarter of a cent below the ceiling. We are prepared to buy any time at a quarter of a cent below the ceiling all red and blue beef and send it to Britain. If the beef drops a quarter of a cent below the ceiling we get the beef that comes on the market during that period.

Mr. BRYCE: You buy only on a dead meat basis.

Mr. GARDINER: We are buying on a dead meat basis; that is the only place we can buy meat.

Mr. BRYCE: You could buy meat on the hoof if you wished to.

Mr. GARDINER: We could buy meat on the hoof, but I think it would be agreed that under the plan we are following beef is selling on the hoof at a higher level than it ever sold before.

Mr. BRYCE: It is never sold too high in the beef line.

Mr. GARDINER: That is the argument, and I wish to correct what my hon. friend said a few moments ago. He said that the answer I was apt to give was that the farmer was getting all he was entitled to, anyway. I am a farmer. I never think that the farmer is getting all that he is entitled to. I think he ought to get more all the time.

Mr. BRYCE: I do not want to take up any more time. There is one thing the minister did not explain, namely, why we tried this two-cent scheme. I was one of the men on one of these boards when this two-cent system was tried out. We ran up against this. In a country so large as Canada there are many types of farmers. There is the eastern farmer and the western farmer. You can feed steers in the west and sell them and find that the eastern farmer will buy them for as much as the packer will pay for them and then feed them on the grass farms in Ontario. The minister said that the westerner was offered the two cents more. You run up against a different type of farm in the east. They want to buy the steers cheap in the spring to put on these grass farms. There was a conflict of opinion.

Mr. GARDINER: The feeder who wanted to feed grain wanted to buy as cheap as he could in the fall so that he could sell at a profit in the spring. We have pretty well overcome both these things.

Mr. WRIGHT: There is no provision whereby a cooperative or an individual, if not satisfied with the bids on the open market for a carload of beef which they have for sale, can have it slaughtered and sold direct to the meat board at the meat board price. Is there any provision for that?

Mr. GARDINER: There is no provision for it. If the cooperative is prepared to deliver beef to the meat board at a quarter of a cent below the ceiling, I will guarantee that the meat board will take every pound as fast as it can be sent in. That is what we are trying to do. Right now we cannot buy any.

Mr. WRIGHT: But the cooperatives have no packing plants.

Mr. GARDINER: There are custom slaughterers over the country who would slaughter it for them.

Mr. CHARLTON: The minister said that there was little fluctuation in the price of hogs since the meat board has been in operation, and he has also said that he has the prices before him. Will he quote the prices for last November, December, January and February on the Toronto market?

Mr. GARDINER: I am not quite sure that I can find the market the hon. member wants. Does he want hogs or beef?

Mr. CHARLTON: Hogs on the Toronto market, or Montreal.

Mr. GARDINER: This is the monthly price of bacon hogs B1 live weight at Toronto in dollars per hundredweight: November, 1946, $15.13; December, $15.60; January, 1947, $16.28, February, $16.04 and March, $16.04. It will be remembered that in January we raised the price one cent and a fraction, just about the difference you have there, but the price right through starting in June was $15.62, $15.68, $14.90, $15.13, $15.60 and so on, the average being $14.89 for the year 1946.

Mr. CHARLTON: It is not necessary for the minister to give all that.

Mr. GARDINER: Not to prove your point, perhaps, but it is necessary to prove my own point.

Mr. CHARLTON: These prices do not coincide with the prices in Toronto, because the prices in November, December, January and February ranged from $22 to a possible low of $18.

Mr. GARDINER: These are official figures reduced to live hog basis for purposes of comparison with years before rail grading. I cannot tell you what some fellow went in and bought a hog for on a certain date. These are the official records taken on that market each day and averaged for the month.

Mr. CHARLTON: Those were probably weekly averages, but they ran from $22 to a low of around $18 in less than two months.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Has the minister taken into consideration the recommendations made by certain organizations in the west with regard to assisting in increasing hog production? There is no doubt that today the world needs hogs as badly perhaps as it did in 1944. If the farmer is to go through the work of growing barley and oats and raising hogs, staying with them day after day, particularly during the winter months so as to maintain production, and then finds at the end of that time that the amount of money he gets for his hogs as a result of doing all that laborious work in the winter is taken up in income tax, he will decide that it is not worth while. Has the minister taken into consideration the question of trying out for a period the granting of an immunity in respect of $400 or $500 of the farmer's first money received for hog production? It would not mean that hog production would be exempt from income tax. It would mean the difference between what the farmer would get for selling the coarse grain and the price he would get for marketing grain in the form of hogs. It has been represented that if this were tried out the minister would find a great increase in hog production in the west.

Mr. GARDINER: In reply to that, I may say that the advertisement I am about to read gives what the farmer himself thinks about the matter. This is an advertisement put out by a cooperative in Alberta:

An appeal to the farmers of Canada and North America.

Grow another hog for Britain. Forward, Canadian farmers.

Join the live stock march to greater economic prosperity. Britain is hungry. Britain will pay. Britain can pay, Britain has paid. This is not another charity campaign. Today prosperity is a pig! Never before have cash returns been greater for Canadian hog raisers. Never before has the overseas market promised greater permanence. One million extra hogs are needed from Canada to complete this year's contract with Great Britain. Many million more will be required. The "pig bank" will never again be a novelty. Launching the "Grow another hog for Britain" campaign opening in Edmonton, Alberta, April 29, 1947. Special broadcasts carried at Edmonton, Calgary, Lethbridge and Grande Prairie on the ALC show, 12.15 noon daylight time. Why be content with income from grain alone when 25 per cent additional can be made from hogs? This campaign is sponsored by the Alberta Live Stock Cooperative Limited, Edmonton and Calgary. Copies of this announcement will be forwarded to British ministry of food, London, England.

That is one of the advertisements.

Mr. McIVOR: It is a Liberal ad.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: We will all support that.

Mr. GARDINER: But that is not what my hon. friend was just saying. He is repeating the old story that if you gave somebody the right to produce without paying income tax we would get more hogs. There are 138,000 farmers in Saskatchewan and only 7,958 of them paid income tax in the highest year of payment, which was last year, so that there are 130,000, or more than 130,000, who do not pay income tax. How will you get them to produce more hogs by deducting something from their income tax when they are not paying any? These farmers were not within $300 of the tax-free income that they will have this year, because the exemption was only $1,200 and now it is $1,500 for a married couple. Therefore they have to make another $300 in addition to what they made last year to get into the brackets at all.

The kind of campaign we want is the kind put on in Alberta with the support of the Alberta government and of the farmers and of this government. The thing for the farmers to do is to get into the income tax brackets instead of staying out of them. If every farmer were to produce what would enable him to get into the income tax brackets we would get our proportion of income in this country, and the sooner they get into those brackets the better for them. The government should not do anything to encourage them to stay out because they are not as well off when they are out. Let them get into the income brackets and it will be better for everyone, but particularly for the farmer.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: They are not raising the hogs, though.

Mr. GARDINER: We have brought them in from one per cent up to 3·7 per cent. We are getting along slowly, but we are getting along.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: When will we be up to the 1944 production?

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. McLURE: When the minister was giving the figures for the production of the various provinces, probably he had the figures before him with reference to Prince Edward Island as to whether there was an increase or a decrease.

Mr. GARDINER: I am sorry, but in the sheet which I had—and I can find it here if it is desired that I should do so—it just gave the eastern part and the western part without dividing it into provinces.

Mr. McLURE: I was going to say that the farmers in Prince Edward Island are taking a great interest in breeding a select class of hogs. Today they have an outstanding class of Yorkshires, so much so that they could sell practically fifty per cent of their hogs to the other provinces for breeding purposes. For instance, only within the last two or three months they have shipped to Manitoba a carload or two of breeding stock. Buyers from Saskatchewan and Alberta are there now, but there is only one snag with reference to the selling of our breeding stock that is of a good quality. When those hogs are slaughtered, over sixty per cent of them are in the class A premium class. The demand for this stock is great. As I said, we have one snag, namely, the long freight haul from Prince Edward Island to Saskatchewan and Alberta. Will the minister take this as a suggestion, and consider giving an allowance on their freight rate to purchasers of this valuable stock which can be bought in Prince Edward Island?

Mr. GARDINER: At present purebred stock gets a freight rate of one-half. That is arranged for purebred stock all over the country. I want to agree with everything that has been said by the hon. member. Prince Edward Island stands right at the top in the production of quality hogs. Their hogs are being utilized all across Canada to improve our hog population. I do not think anyone can say too much by way of eulogizing the effort which is being made there.

Mr. CHARLTON: I realize, of course, that there is a great variation in the number of days it takes a vessel to get across the ocean. Can the minister give us, on the average, how many days it takes for the average cargo of bacon to go from Montreal to England? Can he also tell us how long it is held in storage in England before it goes out to the consumer?

Mr. GARDINER: It takes about eight days for the fastest boats that are carrying bacon across the ocean to make the trip. They are making it in about eight days. It is sometimes a little less than that and sometimes a little more, but it averages about that.

As to the matter of carrying the bacon in Britain, it is true that a few months ago—I would say a year ago—we had some difficulty in that there was a tendency to deliver in Britain freshly delivered bacon from Denmark. But there was an understanding entered into whereby the British bought only the heavy cured bacon from Denmark, the same as they were buying from Canada, in order that they could keep both Danish and Canadian bacon in storage for the same length of time. However, that difficulty is gradually disappearing; in fact, it has pretty much disappeared now. Britain is compelled at present to deliver to distributors over Britain practically all the bacon she gets as she gets it. That is partly because she is not getting as much from us as she got before and is not able to pile up storage that she utilizes in her rationing from time to time. I should also say that their transportation facilities have improved and their storage facilities are improving too.

Mr. CHARLTON: Having regard to the way in which Canadian bacon was marketed in Britain prior to the war and in view of the fact that in the near future we hope we can get back to the ordinary system of marketing our bacon in Britain, can the minister give us any idea as to this government's policy regarding the building of storages in England and the handling of Canadian bacon in the old country?

Mr. GARDINER: Both we and the British government would be tickled to death if we could get enough bacon to be able to store any. We cannot get it fast enough even to keep the rationing up to the level at which it ought to be kept. As a matter of fact, it has to be rationed very low by Britain. There is not any possibility of building up any storage at the present time, either on this side or on the other side.

Mr. CHARLTON: Is the government going to wait until the last minute to think about it?

Mr. GARDINER: We have been thinking about it during the twelve years I have been here, and we did a considerable amount about it before the war. We did a good deal about it in the first year of the war when Britain did not really want our bacon at all. We stirred them up to the extent of being able to sell them some fifty million pounds more than they wanted to take, in the second year of the war. But since that time they have been wanting far more than we can give them.

Mr. CHARLTON: Was it rented storage that was used or were there Canadian facilities?

Mr. GARDINER: The storage we used in the early part of the war was blown all to pieces in 1940. It was not there at all, and it has to be reestablished.

Mr. CHARLTON: Was that storage Canadian owned?

Mr. GARDINER: Smithfield market was bombed. The storages along the Thames were completely destroyed during the first big raid that was made by the German air force. Those facilities have not yet all been put back, but they will be in due course.

Mr. CHARLTON: Was that a Canadian-owned building which was destroyed, or Canadian-owned storage?

Mr. GARDINER: No. Canadians did not own any storage. But it does not make much difference who owns it, as long as it can be utilized to full capacity. I did not know that my hon. friend was a socialist.

Demobilization and Reconversion—

493. Special products board, $84,831.

Mr. BROOKS: I wish to ask a sort of general question which applies to most of these items. As will be noticed, there is a big decrease in this item. There is a reduction from $280,279 to $84,831. I wanted to ask the minister about the staffs of these various boards. I notice that in the agricultural prices support board there was a reduction from $53,000,000 to $2,000,000; in the dairy products board, there was a reduction from $2,000,000 to $19,546. If you turn to page 266 of the estimates under "special products board," for instance, temporary assistance is mentioned. I presume that is staff which has been operating this board since it was set up. Is that correct?

Mr. GARDINER: They are just secretaries and stenographers that are there.

Mr. BROOKS: The secretaries and stenographers in 1946-47 were paid salaries of $38,985; in 1947-48 they are to be paid salaries of $43,161 when there is evidently little work for them to do. The same applies with reference to the prices board and most of these other boards. Temporary assistance in the agricultural prices support board for 1946-47 was $18,460, and for 1947-48 it is $18,075. I should like an explanation from the minister. If the work of these boards is practically completed, as would seem to be indicated by the amount of money being expended, why is it necessary to maintain these staffs and pay them the same or larger salaries?

Mr. GARDINER: We are not paying them any salaries under this item.

Mr. BROOKS: Then perhaps the minister will explain just what this item of $18,000 for temporary assistance means. I understood that it was for stenographers and temporary help.

Mr. GARDINER: Perhaps I should say that the special products board is composed of Dean Shaw, Mr. Hamer and one representative from the Department of Trade and Commerce. They are not paid anything for this work, in addition to their usual salaries. They have been in the department for years; they draw their salary on the basis of their ordinary jobs, and are doing this work in addition. One other man, Mr. Neely, is also operating. He has been an official of the department for years; he has been asked to do this work, and his salary remains as for his usual position. This $18,000 is for the purpose of paying any additional help they may have to get from time to time in order to carry out their operations. That is, it may be to pay people at some point where they want conditions investigated, or it may be at the point from which we are shipping, where special investigations have to be made. The staff itself is very small, and is composed of people who are drawing their salaries from the government for their regular work and who are doing this work in addition.

Mr. BROOKS: That is pretty hard for me to follow. Looking at these different boards, I see their cost is almost exactly the same—

Mr. GARDINER: I am speaking now only of the special products board.

Mr. BROOKS: Well, in connection with the special products board the sum provided for temporary assistance, which the minister says is for stenographers and other help, is more for next year.

Mr. GARDINER: What page are you reading from?

Mr. BROOKS: From page 266. As a matter of fact what I say about this board applies to all these boards which seem to be going out of business. The cost as far as the staff is concerned, still remains the same, if not more, as when they were administering large amounts.

Mr. GARDINER: This board is not going out of business. It is administering amounts now just as large as it ever did; that is, in the way of dealing with farm products which are being delivered to Britain. We are still dealing with sums of money, perhaps not as large, but we have to go through the same operations as before in order to get delivery of farm products.

Mr. BROOKS: If the duties of these boards are found to have more or less come to an end, are the temporary officials dismissed, are they absorbed by some other departments, or what becomes of them?

Mr. GARDINER: In general it is as I explained a moment ago. These are special persons who have to be put out to inspect certain operations. Most of those who were put out under the item of $38,000 were egg inspectors, at the time egg deliveries to Britain were high. The year before last they were at their peak; last year they were not quite so high, and this year they are not as high as last year. It was the setting up of the system to get those eggs delivered, and the inspection in connection with it, that cost the amount shown. As the hon. member has suggested, these men are removed when the work is finished. They are not civil servants in the ordinary sense.

Mr. STEPHENSON: Is the minister in a position to answer the question I asked last evening in reference to the restricted area in Durham county?

Mr. GARDINER: I am sorry I have not that information. I will have to get it for the hon. member when I go up to the office.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

200. Departmental administration, $531,954.

Mr. NICHOLSON: When these estimates were before the committee previously I wished to make a few remarks but was unable to do so. Some of what I have to say will be of a critical nature, but before going on with that I should like to thank the minister for the announcement he made in the house on May 19 in connection with federal assistance to the Montreal neurological institute. I happened to be in Montreal in January visiting one of my constituents who was a patient there. While I was in the city, I happened to see a copy of the Montreal Standard containing a feature story outlining the critical financial position of this internationally known institute. Perhaps I might read a portion of it:

Staff members at the neurological institute are mixing their neurology these days with discussions of the financial difficulties which have put the institute close to bankruptcy. The MNI faces a bleak future unless more money is forthcoming, and soon. Otherwise, the institute will be forced to close the hospital unit by April of this year. The MNI is owned by McGill university and, in certain aspects of its clinical activity, the Royal Victoria hospital acts as its agent.

My friend, who had been to Rochester previously, was extravagant in his praise of the neurological institute in Montreal; and I am very happy to learn that the minister and other members of the cabinet have regarded this as a national institute and that an adequate financial grant is to be made. I am sure that when the supplementary estimates come before the house hon. members in all sections will unanimously support the government in this wise decision.

Having said that, I consider that the minister is open to criticism because of his failure to place the problem of health in its proper perspective. The other evening the hon. member for Lanark gave an interesting address, outlining some of the major problems. Most of his material was not new; it was brought to the attention of the country in 1943, prior to the last election. I looked up some of the evidence given before the social security committee, and I find that on Friday, March 19, 1943, the late Doctor Heagerty gave evidence before that committee outlining the position in Canada. He said:

We have been losing an average of a thousand mothers each year. It is down a little during the last two or three years, due to the concentrated efforts of the provincial departments of health. When a mother dies, the child usually dies. The child dies because there is no one to take care of the child. We would like to have incubators—to take the newborn child to the hospital—we haven't got them and we cannot get them, we have no money for them. Why have we this condition? We have been losing over the past ten years on an average of 15,000 children under one year of age each year.

Then he referred to the situation in regard to tuberculosis:

And now, what is the situation in regard to tuberculosis in the various provinces of Canada? Can you do anything about tuberculosis? Well, you take Quebec and Ontario. They are very, very close together. They have the same air, very much the same living conditions; and you find that the death rate in Ontario is 25, as compared with 80 in Quebec. Why is that? Ontario has provided practically free treatment, it is now X-raying all the people of the province at a cost of 30 cents per X-ray. In Saskatchewan the death rate is twenty-nine. Free treatment is provided in Saskatchewan.

There are three provinces which have adequate facilities for the prevention and treatment of tuberculosis; they are Saskatchewan, Ontario and Alberta.

I might mention that this interesting information was compiled prior to the last election. The present administration created the impression that they really planned on doing something about the health problem in Canada. I find that on April 29, 1946, in outlining the government's proposals before the dominion-provincial conference the Prime Minister made this suggestion in the field of health regarding planning grants. He said:

The dominion will pay to any provincial government which so desires immediately upon completion of the agreement, $5,000 plus five cents per capita of its 1941 population (but not less than $15,000) to be spent within two years on studies of the requirements of the province in the field of essential medical, hospital and related services. Quarterly reports would be submitted by the provincial governments.

Then there is a paragraph on health insurance, another on health grants and another on hospital construction.

I find that the present Minister of National Defence, who was then the Minister of National Health and Welfare, outlined in greater detail the government's proposals in the field of national health. He recognized definitely that there are great inequalities in the quantity and quality of health care available in different parts of Canada, and in the cost of such public and private health services and medical and hospital facilities as were then available. He continued:

These inequalities in part reflect differences in personal incomes, and in part are due to differences between rural and urban areas. Great differences between provinces arise from these same factors.

Then, to give an indication of what the government planned to do, he said:

To remove the disparities in standards of health services in different parts of Canada, to avoid the risks of sudden heavy expenditures, and distribute health costs more widely and equitably, and above all, to obtain the benefits of better health for the great majority of our people—these are the objects of the proposals which the federal government is now making with respect to health insurance for all, and increased public health services assisted by federal grants.

The minister went on to outline the grant for planning and organization, health insurance proposals, and different benefits to be made available for fighting tuberculosis, mental disease, venereal disease, aids for crippled children, and moneys for professional training.

It is not good enough for the Minister of National Health and Welfare to come before the committee and make the sort of speech he made the other night when discussing the problem of cancer. What the minister said was of general interest; but when he had finished he had not told us how much the federal government is planning on spending to fight this dread disease. The hon. member for Lanark drew attention to the fact that we have had about half a million dollars tied up in a fund for about twelve years, and that that is a fund which does not belong to the federal government.

The major part of the minister's speech was devoted to the setting up of a national cancer institute for Canada. He mentioned that this institute is not responsible to this or any other government. If the minister is so concerned about cancer he should be prepared to make an adequate grant to see that the necessary scientific personnel will be trained and will be made available in different parts of Canada to fight the disease. The amount of $150,000 a year for the next few years is just a drop in the bucket when one considers the cost measured in lives caused by this disease in Canada.

I suggest that the minister, in introducing the item, should have made a statement indicating that he is now calling the ministers of public health from the provinces, and that he is prepared to recommend to the cabinet that the federal government now enter into an agreement with those provincial governments which have been able to reach agreement with the federal government in the matter of dominion-provincial relations.

I need not remind the committee that when the matter of old age pensions was introduced we did not wait until all the provinces were agreed at one time to introduce legislation for old age pensioners. We had old age pensions in some of the provinces for almost ten years before the benefits were claimed by other provinces.

I suggest that if the minister wishes to bring the premiers of Ontario and Quebec to reason, all he has to do is to announce that, if they want to, the other seven provinces will be able to go along with the federal government in carrying out the objectives which were outlined at the dominion-provincial conference, and that grants will be made for those services which were discussed at the conference.

May I mention that in my own province of Saskatchewan we have taken the federal proposals seriously, and we are proceeding to extend public services in many different directions. Hospital services legislation, the first of its kind on this continent, has been introduced in Saskatchewan. The experience we are having will be useful to other provinces in Canada, and it is hardly fair that, with our limited resources, Saskatchewan should be asked to bear all the expense in connection with this essential educational work which must be undertaken before any part of Canada can proceed with an over-all hospital or health services programme.

Then there is the matter of providing an adequate number of doctors, dentists and nurses. The hon. member for Lanark referred to the shortage of nurses. In some of the evidence presented by the federal government during the war, it was recognized that there are places in Canada where lack of medical services has placed the people living in those communities in an unfair position. When war breaks out, people in all the provinces are expected to offer their lives in the service of their country. If in some parts of the dominion there are young people who are rejected on physical grounds, that is a national misfortune. So in peace time I believe it should be our objective and goal to see that in all parts of Canada we should have a sufficient number of doctors, dentists and nurses adequately to care for the people.

In the national health survey conducted by the Canadian medical procurement and assignment board during the war, we found that provinces with the lowest average incomes had the lowest number of doctors, and that in those provinces doctors had to travel greater distances over worse roads. In Ontario where the average income is highest there was one doctor for every 872 persons. In Saskatchewan where, in 1931, the income was down to $285 per capita there was one doctor for every 1,578 persons. The experience in my constituency has been that when the young people from there have attended medical colleges in Montreal, Toronto or Winnipeg they have established contacts while in college and have found it easier to practise medicine away from the communities in which they lived. The result has been that we have never been able to attract a sufficient number of professional people to that area to serve the population. At the present time our ratio is one doctor for 3,300 persons. In the Canadian army the ratio was something more than four doctors per 1,000, while in the United States it was even higher.

In most civilized countries it is considered that there should be at least one doctor for every 1,000 or 1,500 of population. While we are making some progress in Saskatchewan in attracting doctors to practise in that province, we shall not be able with our own resources to train a sufficient number, nor shall we be able to provide the type of medical and hospital services that a country with the great resources possessed by Canada, should offer.

The same is true with regard to dental services. The boundaries of the constituency I represent will be defined in the redistribution measure, and we shall then have only one dentist for some 48,000 persons. At present we have three dentists in the area, in the ratio of one dentist to 19,000 people. The redistribution will take two of those dentists out of the area, and one of them is about to retire. While Saskatchewan is offering inducements to dentists to come to our province, we have not a dental college and hospital, and our young people have to go east or west to get their dental education and too many of them do not return to the province.

I was interested in a study made by Doctor Clare Robinson in the field of providing medical education. Doctor Robinson is from Queen's university. He points out what is generally known, but I think the statistics will come as a surprise to a great many. He tells us, for example, that although thirty-six per cent of our people in Canada give agriculture as their occupation, only 12·2 per cent of our doctors come from this group. From finance we get over five per cent of our doctors. We have four per cent of our population in the professional groups and they supply twenty-eight per cent of our doctors. Doctor Robinson goes on to explain that a great many of our children have not much chance of ever becoming medical doctors under the present set-up. He mentions that earlier in the century it was possible for people to work their way through university, but that nowadays, with the cost of university education rising every year, it is next to impossible for young people, regardless of their mental qualifications, to find the wherewithal to get through university. A chart shows the cost of medical education. He says that if you want an expensive medical education choose McGill, and the next most expensive universities are Toronto and Dalhousie, where averages of $975 and $974 were reported. Next comes Montreal. The universities where you can start taking your university course at the lowest cost are the western universities, the university of Saskatchewan with an annual cost of $628, and the university of Alberta with $698, as compared with $1,206 at McGill university.

Mr. BLAIR: In the western universities those are pre-medical courses, are they not?

[Mr. Nicholson.]

Mr. NICHOLSON: In Alberta and Manitoba the complete course is given, but in Saskatchewan it is a pre-medical course.

Mr. BLAIR: What was the cost in Alberta?

Mr. NICHOLSON: It was $698 as compared with $1,206 for McGill and $975 for Toronto. In war time it was considered a national responsibility to train personnel for the air force, army and navy. I recall that the Minister of National Defence for Air told the house that it cost $25,000 to train a pilot for the air force, $27,000 for an observer and $28,000 for a navigator. It costs $5,000 to train a medical doctor, Doctor Robinson says. If we could spend $25,000 to train young Canadians by the thousands in the art of war it should not be a problem to find $5,000 to train an adequate number of people as doctors and dentists. It is very difficult for me to explain to the veterans in my constituency that Canada was able to supply one dentist for every 500 soldiers in war time and that now we have only one dentist for 44,000 or 45,000 people in peace time. It is not fair to say that this is a provincial responsibility, that the province should bear the cost. The students who graduate from these colleges are free to practise in any part of the dominion if they pass the dominion examinations. In war time the problem of financing the war was a national responsibility. In peace time the fighting of disease should claim a larger percentage of our total national income than has been the case. So I suggest that the minister should, without further delay, convene a conference of dominion and provincial health authorities and reach an agreement with those provinces which are prepared to go along and carry out the spirit of the decisons reached by the previous Minister of National Health and Welfare, so that a programme can be carried out that would be satisfactory to the dominion and provinces concerned. I am sure that the great volume of evidence placed before the social security committee before the last election demonstrates that health is a national concern.

I was particularly interested in the brief "Health on the March" presented by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. There are some striking paragraphs in the proposals submitted by the federation. For example:

(a) The large majority of the people are unable to pay for adequate medical care with its rapidly increasing scope and costs; while at the same time, those who give the services are not receiving a just remuneration. This state of affairs is having a serious effect on the welfare of our dominion.

(b) Health is a national problem which is becoming more and more evident under the stress of war conditions. The responsibility of the federal government in calling on man and woman power from all classes entails federal responsibility for the people's health.

(c) A national health plan would encourage a strong national sentiment. Confederation was intended to foster a national economy. There is now urgent need to revive this interest.

They make recommendations how they would organize and find the wherewithal, a system of financing that would be equitable so far as the individuals are concerned, and they propose nine different methods of raising funds. They suggest that a fund should be raised by the federal authorities, that the plan should include all citizens, not merely those who can afford the luxury of good health, and they say:

Complete coverage is necessary to achieve financial soundness and to spread the cost equitably.

They go on to say that the promotion of positive health and the prevention of disease should be the primary purpose of the plan. I am not insisting that the minister should accept the plans which the members of this group have emphasized or the plan of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, but I submit it is imperative that the government's own proposals made to the provinces should now be presented again to the seven provinces which have made financial agreements with the government; the minister should be able to persuade members of the cabinet that an adequate budget for health should be provided, and his officers and his department should fight disease in peace time with the same imagination and the same determination as we fought it in war time.

Mr. FLEMING: I thought we were going to receive some information from the minister. I had asked for a break-down of the actual expenditures for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1947, as a guide to us in approaching the estimates for the current year, and for purposes of comparison. Has the minister that information?

Hon. PAUL MARTIN (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I think the best way would be for the hon. member to ask as we come to the individual items.

Mr. FLEMING: With respect, I submit that that would take a great deal of time. If we had the information now it might obviate the necessity of asking many questions. We are all desirous of economizing time, and to draw out the information required item by item will take a great deal of time. I suggest that the information be made available early in the discussion in order to save time.

Mr. FRASER: A short time ago the Department of Health rented a place on Parkdale avenue.

Mr. MARTIN: Will the hon. member wait until we come to the item on the laboratory?

Mr. FRASER: Will "other properties" come under that item?

Mr. MARTIN: Yes.

Mr. FRASER: Under that one item?

Mr. MARTIN: Item 206.

Mr. FLEMING: Is the minister going to supply that information, or is he going to force us to ask for information on every item?

Mr. MARTIN: I think it is the most convenient way of dealing with them.

Mr. FLEMING: With great respect, I disagree with the minister. I thought we were trying to save some time. If we are to stop at every item and ask for an explanation of it, that will take much more time. I am trying to cooperate with the minister to save time and to avoid asking questions on every item. If we were furnished with the information in advance, that would not be required, but apparently the minister is not prepared to do that.

Mr. MARTIN: I can only say that I think my hon. friend is trying to cooperate and I am trying to cooperate with him, but I believe that is the most expeditious way of dealing with the item. As we come to each item, I shall be glad to give him the information.

Mr. FRASER: I wish to repeat my question. How many different offices or laboratories has the department in Ottawa? How many different buildings are occupied at the present time?

Mr. MARTIN: Two laboratories only.

Mr. FRASER: Where are they?

Mr. MARTIN: On John street, and the new one.

Mr. FRASER: John street; is that the laboratory?

Mr. MARTIN: Yes, and the new one is on Parkdale avenue.

Mr. FRASER: That is the old laboratory?

Mr. MARTIN: The new one.

Mr. FRASER: The new one on Parkdale avenue is not in operation yet.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I should like to ask the minister two or three questions regarding facilities for research into the cause of cancer.

What item would he suggest would be the proper one under which to ask these questions?

Mr. MARTIN: There is no specific item on cancer. I suggest that when we come to the item on epidemiology we might deal with it.

Mr. FLEMING: I understood that the minister was going to say something on the subject of the various items scattered through the estimates under the headings "educational and informational publicity". I made a passing comment on this subject when the committee was last in session on the estimates of this department. In the fiscal year 1945-46, a total of $416,000 was appropriated for publicity and information—

Mr. MARTIN: If I might interrupt, I think when we come to that item we shall deal with it. I do not think we should deal with it under departmental administration. When we come to the item on information and educational publicity we can deal with that particular question. That is a more orderly procedure. If we wait until we come to each item and discuss the matter I shall be very glad to give all the information asked by the hon. member to the best of my ability.

Mr. FLEMING: This is not something that is found in any one item of the estimates alone; it is scatttered throughout. There are some fifteen items.

Mr. MARTIN: It is a primary in many items.

Mr. FLEMING: In this first item "departmental administration" there is a substantial sum for this purpose. I wanted to make one or two general observations and ask for comment by the minister. I mentioned that in the fiscal year 1945-46 a total of $416,000 was appropriated for publicity and information. In 1946-47 the total appropriated was substantially increased; it was $570,530 altogether. According to my calculation, the aggregate is $390,000 in the various items this year. I should like to ask the minister a question as to the intentions of the department in this field, because last year quite a few of us were not at all satisfied with the evidence that was put before the committee by the then minister as to the way in which these substantial amounts of money were being expended. Undoubtedly the work of dissemination of educational information is an important function of this department. We wish to be certain that what is being circulated is something really helpful to the public and that it will assist in the maintenance and promotion of public health. Last year some of the evidence submitted indicated that money was being spent on things which were anything but helpful. I need only remind the committee of fillers that were being issued advising people, for instance, to expend their family allowances on certain necessities and then to spend the remainder to add zest to living. That sort of trash is an insult to the intelligence of the Canadian people. Just imagine telling people to spend their money to add zest to living. I should like, and I am sure all hon. members would like, some assurance from the minister that in all these items in the total of educational information scattered through these estimates the money is to be well and wisely spent; that it will not be spent on issuing fillers that have no more to commend themselves to the intelligence of the people of Canada than the one to which I have referred and which was not an isolated case by any means; there was a number of them.

Item agreed to.

National health branch—

201. National health branch administration, $143,727.

Mr. FRASER: I should like to know what has been spent on advertising, because some of the advertising from this national health branch has been terrible.

Mr. MARTIN: Was the question about educational information or advertising?

Mr. FRASER: Advertising.

Mr. MARTIN: No money is spent on advertising.

Mr. FRASER: National health across Canada.

Mr. MARTIN: No money is spent on advertising.

Mr. FRASER: What about the national health league?

Mr. MARTIN: The Health League of Canada is a private, volunteer organization.

Mr. FRASER: Sponsored by this department.

Mr. MARTIN: It receives a grant.

Mr. FLEMING: Has the minister the amount of expenditure on these two items?

Mr. MARTIN: What two items?

Mr. FLEMING: Items 200 and 201. The minister's attitude compels us to ask this question on each item. The minister's refusal to give us that information in advance compels us to ask this question on each item, and I protest that.

Mr. MARTIN: With regard to departmental administration, we have a publication called "Canada's Health and Welfare" of which there were approximately 58,000 copies in English and 25,000 copies in French distributed each month last year.

Mr. FLEMING: What is the total of the item?

Mr. MARTIN: The total expended was $24,276.54.

Mr. FLEMING: I think the minister misunderstood me. I was asking for the total expenditure, first, as against the appropriation of $525,000, item 200, and, then, against the appropriation of $226,537, item 201. That is the expenditure we are asking for.

Mr. MARTIN: $48,350, departmental, and under item 201, it is $36,250.

Mr. FLEMING: I am sure that we are at cross-purposes. What I am asking for is the actual expenditure on this item. Surely the minister is not saying that, out of the appropriation of $525,000 last year, the total expended was $48,350. What I am asking for is the total of the actual expenditure so that I can compare it with the estimated requirements for this fiscal year.

Mr. MARTIN: Covering the entire department?

Mr. FLEMING: Yes, I want the item of expenditure corresponding to item 200, of the estimates.

Mr. MARTIN: Covering the entire department, it is $278,000 for educational and informational publicity.

Mr. KNOWLES: I note there is a sizeable decrease of over $82,000, which seems to be made up, in the main, of a reduction in temporary assistance and a reduction in educational and informational publicity. Is the work of the department suffering from either of these decreases? I should like to know why there is such a considerable decrease in educational and informational publicity. Is it by any chance the result of attacks which my hon. friends opposite received last year from hon. members to my right?

Mr. MARTIN: The decrease in this item is partly explained by a decrease of $25,958 in salaries, and in other pay list items of $5,521.

Mr. KNOWLES: Before the minister leaves that, why are there these decreases?

Mr. MARTIN: There are a number of positions that have been deleted, and a number transferred to other divisions, but it is not felt that the efficiency of this particular division has suffered in any way as a result.

Mr. KNOWLES: There are no jobs that were being done before that are not done now?

Mr. MARTIN: No. With regard to educational and informational publicity, there is a decrease. A start has already been made on certain films previously recommended by the dominion council of health, a body which meets twice a year at the instance of the Department of National Health and Welfare to discuss matters of mutual and national interest. The council's special committee on films in 1945 suggested a representative list including restaurant sanitation, rural sanitation and rent control, and steps have now been taken to implement these recommendations. Certain films were suggested as a result of the health education conference last fall and are now under active consideration. This will include such subjects as the common cold, immunization and tuberculosis. It is hoped that we shall be able to get on as quickly as possible with the scripting and shooting of a number of these films under this year's budget, but it will be necessary to provide for a carryover of a considerable quantity of work next year. This we feel will be adequately covered for the time by $32,000 requested, which it is thought is sufficient to produce two such films.

On the general item of public information, I did feel at the outset that there were some items which could be eliminated; for instance, one telling people how to ski. One of the first instructions I gave was that there be no further moneys expended on that publication. I must say at this stage, however, that my review of the educational work of the department convinces me that if we are to do the job which hon. gentlemen generally believe we should pursue, an assignment with which I am in full accord, we must take the suggestion of the hon. member for Lanark, who last year took issue with some of his own colleagues in saying that rather than curtail information we ought to extend it.

Mr. KNOWLES: Hear, hear.

Mr. MARTIN: I believe that is a sound view to take. It is all very well for hon. gentlemen to criticize this item, which has been reduced considerably from the sum of over $590,000 to $390,000. I am bound to say that at the moment my view is that that is a curtailment, to which perhaps I would not have consented earlier in the year had I known as much about my work as I do now. I say that quite honestly and frankly. If we are to bring home the facts to the people of this country, in pursuance of the constitutional responsibilities of this government in the matter of health, we should not hesitate wisely to bring home, in as graphic a manner as we can to all groups of the population, rural and urban, the steps which it is thought by our technical staff should be taken to improve the standards of health of the Canadian people.

We have heard a discussion tonight, an admirable discussion thus far, though not too complimentary to a minister who is doing his best within a short time to tackle the great responsibility that devolves upon him. We have heard suggestions tonight about a cutting down in maternity mortality rates, infant mortality rates, deaths resulting from tuberculosis, cancer and the like—all of them projects that cannot help but capture the imagination and the interest of any responsible minister—and I think I can say this to the membership of a house that knows my interest in these things. I feel keenly that we should do some of the things about which mention has been made tonight, and one of the ways of doing this is to bring the matter home to the people of the country.

Take the work of industrial health. We can bring home the importance of this to the men who work in our factories, pointing out ways and means of improving health standards. Take the work of Doctor E. Couture, whose book, "The Canadian Mother and Child" has now reached a total circulation of over 750,000 copies. That kind of work is having an incalculable benefit. I have looked through carefully the criticisms which were leveled last year, responsibly directed criticisms I know, but which perhaps were made without a full knowledge of the facts. I must say that, having gone into the items carefully, I can find only a genuine demand throughout the country, from all kinds of groups, for the kind of publication we are putting out.

No two people will agree on what is the wise way of bringing home to the public information in regard to problems of health and the ways and means of meeting health deficiency. We must put ourselves at the disposal of those who, through radio or films or by writing, or through other methods of graphic portrayal, feel that these are the most effective ways of dealing with the matter. Take the question of press fillers. I am not convinced by the argument of the hon. member for Eglinton. I have been trying to find some way of agreeing with him, but I regret to say that I have not found one item on which I am fully in accord with him.

These press fillers go, not only to the daily press, but to the weekly press as well, and I find that there are literally thousands of letters coming to the department from men and women on our farms and in our factories, workers and others, asking for further information of the kind disseminated by some of these films and fillers. I can only say that in my judgment they serve a useful purpose, and rather than complain about the quantity, perhaps we should be open to some suggestion with regard to increasing them.

A trial survey of the press some months ago convinced me that a widespread use of these educational fillers is a wise assignment. Newspapers large and small are slipping them in where they have space. Some of the most influential newspapers in Canada, such as the Toronto Globe and Mail, a well known Canadian paper, the Ottawa Journal, the Montreal Gazette, use them frequently.

Mr. MacNICOL: Do not forget the Windsor Star.

Mr. MARTIN: And the Windsor Star, Canada's first newspaper. In fact some of the larger newspapers have asked for more copy along the same line. The Montreal Star arranged for us to provide a continuous service on health hints to be used in connection with one of its special feature pages. The Northern Ontario called for additional material to feature on its woman's page. Editors of house organs and trade journals have asked to be included in the service.

I had a case brought to my attention only yesterday. The bulletin of the department had an issue on cancer about two or three weeks ago. From a nearby community not many miles from this city, a doctor wrote in telling us that he had left that at the home of a woman whom he was attending in connection with another malady. The pamphlet was lying in the home. The husband read it. As hon. gentlemen may recall, in that pamphlet there was a suggestion that an examination for cancer should be undertaken whenever any apparent symptom appeared or there was any thought of it on the part of the potential victim. This person read that health bulletin and went to a doctor, who is a member of this house. As a result of his diagnosis, this doctor found that the person had cancer in an early stage. I sincerely hope that as a result of that doctor's care, and the diagnosis which was immediately made, that particular individual may be relieved of the dreadful malady. That is one example. One could go on.

I can only say that I am convinced beyond peradventure of the wisdom of the department's programme. At the request of hon. gentlemen earlier in the session I tabled a list of the publications of this particular division. If there is any item to which any hon. gentleman takes exception, I shall be prepared to discuss it, argue as to its merits and deal with it right on the floor of this house.

Mr. CHURCH: I wish to say something in connection with this general administration. I want to congratulate the minister on the degree he got at Michigan university. He appears to be getting extremely popular by degrees. I visited Detroit a few years ago when Mayor Cousens was mayor of that city, just about the time of the discovery by Doctor Banting, who hung out his shingle in Toronto after his graduation from Varsity, and another medical student called Mr. Charlie Best, who was a joint discoverer of this great boon to humanity. At that time I was in Detroit city addressing the Canadian club in 1923 and I found fifty doctors there from the universities of this country, McGill, Queen's, Toronto and other universities. When I came back as a young member of the House of Commons, I had a long connection with public health, with the hospital system and the development of the hospital system in our city. We brought Doctor Hastings, a great health officer, into the Department of Public Health. At that time there were so many cases of typhoid and diphtheria that we had to get a new sewage system, a new water supply system, chlorination and filtration of water, inspection of milk and all that kind of thing. An ounce of prevention was found to be worth a pound of cure. I do not wish to interfere with other hon. gentlemen who desire to speak in this debate, but I just wish to bring two or three matters to the attention of the government.

The young minister has shown a great deal of activity since he joined this department. I do not altogether like a lawyer in his position. He is good at the law business, but a lawyer at the head of the health department is another matter. Once in a while I become ill and send for the best doctor I can get. I wish to point out to the government that we are losing a great many of the graduates in medicine from our universities. They are not staying here but are going to the United States. I found this to be true of the great Johns Hopkins medical school at Baltimore, before I came into this parliament; the head chairs were occupied by Canadians. There were Doctor Howard Kelly, Doctor Thomas Cullen, Doctor Llewellyn Barker, Doctor Sweetman and those great men who brought medicine to the distinguished position it had in that university succeeding the greater Doctor Osler who went to Oxford. I brought before the house on February 27, 1923, this question of a large annuity to our scientists because I saw this general exodus. Doctor Banting was going to go to the states. Mr. Best was then a medical student. A great many of the medical students of our country are poor people, and have had to struggle to get a degree. I venture to say ninety per cent of them are poor people. I know that one of the doctors—I do not want to give his name—took menial positions on boats in the summer, sold papers and did all kinds of things in the summer months in order to earn money for the fees. In the faculty of medicine the fees have been going up in geometrical progression, two, four, six, eight. You need to be a rich man to be a doctor.

I wish to point out one or two things. On February 27, 1923, I spoke on this matter. I have the Hansard debates here but I will not read it all. I referred to the history of medicine, where all these discoveries which have been made in medicine down through the ages were made by people who never made a nickel out of them but gave their lives to science in the way that Doctor Banting and Mr. Best gave theirs. They got only a small amount of money from the government. If we want to do something, the Canadian government has got to be up and doing. There is no use in our having a skeleton department and turning the matter over to the municipalities and the provinces. It should be made a federal matter entirely. They have that in England, Germany, and France; they have a national system of health. It is the duty of the government to look after the health, wealth and happiness and prosperity of its people. Life has no object at all unless a person has good health.

Look at the poor Indians in this country, people who are not even citizens. We have spent two sessions trying to find out if they are citizens. If they are citizens, and they should have been fifty years ago, they are entitled to health laws. We have taken two sessions to find anything out about it. If you look down the history of medicine you will find that the discoveries of medical men to cure disease have been given to the world freely, without fee or reward, such as antiseptics which were given freely to the world by Lord Lister, anaesthesia by Simpson and Morton, vaccination by Jenner, and many others. For the most part, they never made anything out of them at all. There was only one case I think, where it was capitalized in Germany, the discovery of what was called 606 by Erlich. Burdock's blood bitters and all those quack medicines which people buy unnecessarily in many cases are a commercial matter. There is one country which has done something, and that is France, where they honour men of science. If you go to Paris you will see monuments and parks called after Pasteur. Here in this country we have forgotten about these men. The other day I saw the grave of Doctor Banting in Mount Pleasant cemetery. There was a small monument on it about the size of this desk, made of concrete, with the word "Banting" on it. We do not want all our bright scholars to go to the United States. I call attention to the debate away back on February 27, 1923, where I introduced a resolution asking a grant of $7,500 for Doctor Banting and one for Doctor Best. The government of the day said they could not do anything then. I like to give credit where credit is due. Away back in June, 1923, I called attention to the fact that in the supplementary estimates Doctor Banting was given an annual grant of $7,500, and I said Doctor Best should be given an equal grant. That discussion will be found in the debates of this house at page 4439 of Hansard for June 27, 1923; and I also discussed the matter on February 27 of the same year. That was a creditable action on the part of the government. It led to the establishment of the Banting institute. At that time I was at the Johns Hopkins hospital, and I was informed by one of the leading doctors there that at that time they had nearly nine hundred thousand cases of diabetes in the United States. I do not know where we would have been in the second war had it not been for that great discovery.

I hope we may have a national policy in regard to medicine. I do not mean state medicine; I am not referring to that. For one thing I believe internes in our hospitals should be given $600 a year as well as living expenses. That would not be very much. Then there is the question of nurses. Four sessions ago, when you could not get a nurse, when they were not available, I asked what the government was going to do about it. They have not done very much, and the same difficulty still exists.

I might mention many other matters tonight, but I urge upon the government that these men of science should be kept in Canada, and that our universities should be given large grants of money. Instead of building up a great central health department here, I believe certain universities could take up different branches of this work, including the work on cancer; and they should have federal assistance by large capital grants all along the line. The King George V cancer fund is now pretty well gone; by the end of this year there will be very little money left in the treasury, and I think the government should give a very large grant for that purpose. I believe the day is not far distant when we shall need a national health policy for this country. The housing situation is simply ridiculous, and it leads to a great deal of poor health in regard to water supply and sewage disposal. I remember back in 1914 and 1915, when the late John Ross Robertson did such magnificent work in Toronto in connection with the sick children's hospital, which has been a blessing to the children of our city and province ever since. At that time the question of medical and dental inspection in the schools came up, and we were the first city to have that service, which has since been extended to the secondary schools. So I hope the government will come to the assistance of the municipalities by means of substantial grants. Perhaps this should be done through the provinces, but the provinces seem to like to hang on to the money. I believe the government should do something for the hospital system of the whole country in order to help out the municipalities, because this represents a serious drain on real estate and the cost is going up by leaps and bounds.

I know other hon. gentlemen wish to take part in this debate, but I want to impress upon the government that something must be done to keep our young scientists at home, the way France and the United States and Germany have done for many years past. After all is said and done, we can take a lesson from what was done by the German people before the war in regard to medicine and many other branches of science, though no doubt some of them went too far. Instead of marking time, I believe we should have a large fund, perhaps $25,000,000 to start with, among other things for research into medical matters by Canadian students in our own universities; and we should also see to it that our university graduates in medicine are not exported to the United States.

Mr. BLAIR: To go back to the question of education, I agree that education, or propaganda put out to the people, is one of the most effective weapons we have. I think that piece of literature on the cancer programme was one of the finest things I have ever seen. It is unfortunate that in an item which appears further down in the list the minister has had to cut expenditures on child and maternal health from $80,000 to approximately $46,000.

Mr. MARTIN: It is not as bad as it seems. That was as the result of not providing for a film such as that which was completed last year. When we come to that item we can deal with it.

Mr. BLAIR: Excellent work has been done under this item. I do not think a finer piece of work than Doctor Couture's book "Mother and Child" has ever been put out by any department of health. Some of the things put out under this educational policy are the very best, but some things still creep in that are very foolish. I have mentioned Doctor Couture's book, and now I will go from the sublime to the ridiculous. Here is a filler which I think must have been written by a sailor. He has it headed, "Woolies Away", he must have been thinking of "Anchors Aweigh." In it he warns the people of the country to have their woolies cleaned, because if they do not they are liable to get vermin. This may contain scientific facts, but I do not think it is any great contribution to Canadian literature. I want to point out that some of this ridiculous propaganda is still included in the fillers sent out to the newspapers. I criticized this practice last year. There has been a great improvement since then, but I think there is room for still further improvement.

Mr. FRASER: When the minister was speaking he mentioned industrial hygiene.

Mr. MARTIN: Laboratory hygiene.

Mr. FRASER: Yes, but the minister said industrial hygiene.

Mr. MARTIN: There is a special item for that which we will come to shortly.

Mr. FRASER: But you were talking about it a few minutes ago.

Mr. MARTIN: I was trying to illustrate the value of educational work under item 200. We are now on item 201. When we come to the item dealing with industrial health I shall be glad to deal with any relevant question.

Mr. FRASER: The minister also said he had considerably cut down the amount for publicity, which I think was a good idea because now he can start from scratch and build up again. I believe in pubilicity of the right kind, but in the past I think you have had the wrong kind. Now you have a deputy minister who, I am sure, knows his business, and I think you will get somewhere.

Mr. MARTIN: He comes from Peterborough, which helps a great deal.

Mr. FRASER: I know, but that is not what I mean.

Mr. MARTIN: Certainly that is not a harmful fact.

Mr. FRASER: No, I think that might help him; but now I think you may have a chance to get ahead. I feel quite sure the deputy minister had something to do with that cancer book which was sent out.

Mr. MARTIN: A great deal.

Mr. FRASER: If the rest of the literature you put out is of that calibre I do not think one member of the opposition will have any criticism to offer. But you have put out films that have been no good, and you have had advertising that has been absolutely no good, an absolute waste of money. In regard to publicity for industry, which you are coming to later, I think the more you put out for that purpose, of the right kind, the better it will be for this country.

Mr. KNOWLES: Could the minister give us the cost of the two excellent booklets that have been referred to, the one on cancer and the one on the mother and child?

Mr. MARTIN: About $1,700 for the cancer bulletin. I shall have to get the other figure later.

Mr. FRASER: The mother and child booklet was issued some years ago, and then reissued.

Mr. MARTIN: Yes.

Mr. FRASER: That mother and child booklet is distributed to welfare and children's aid societies, is it?

Mr. MARTIN: To provincial health departments, and through them to all sorts of groups and individuals. Some 750,000 copies have gone out.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I find in the annual report of the director of health insurance, dated December 29, 1945—

Mr. MARTIN: That is another item. That is item 217.

Mr. FLEMING: I am trying to get the figures on expenditures for last year.

Mr. MARTIN: I will give them now. With respect to item 201, the estimate for 1947-48 is $143,727, whereas in 1946-47 it was $226,537. The expenditures for 1946-47 amounted to $89,421.74. The unliquidated commitments for 1946-47 are $13,437.11. The total commitments for 1946-47 are $102,858.85.

Mr. FLEMING: That is just the reason why I think it is so important that we have the actual expenditures. Last year the minister asked for an appropriation of more than $226,000. He has actually spent or contracted to spend $102,000. That indicates how different the estimates and the expenditures can be. I am sure the minister spent everything he felt it necessary to spend under the item. And yet we find that only about forty per cent of the amount of money he persuaded parliament last year to put at his disposal in respect of this item has been spent.

Surely we do not need any better example of the need for some better method of checking the estimates of these departments. This is the first example we have reached tonight. I have not the slightest doubt that the ministers—and when I say "the ministers" I mean ministers who have been in office from time to time; there have been two of them in the last year—expended everything on that item they considered should be spent. It shows that last year parliament was imposed upon when it was asked to put $226,000 at the disposal of the department in respect of this item. We need no better proof of the fact that we ought to have, in respect of every item coming before the committee of supply, the actual expenditures in the preceding fiscal year on the item. The estimate of the previous year is no guide. Anyone running a business would insist upon the actual expenditures. Will the minister be good enough to furnish similar information on the other items?

Let me point out that, whereas hon. members talk about reductions in expenditures, what the committee is faced with in respect of this item is an increase in expenditures. It is all very well to bring before us in print these estimates which show reductions in estimated expenditures. Looking at this item, one sees what appears to be a handsome reduction of $82,810 from the appropriated amount for last year. But when one looks into it and finds what was actually spent, he finds that the department is asking the committee this year to provide $41,000 more than was actually spent last year.

Let us not be misled by what appear to be reductions in the estimates. Let us remember that when reductions appear they are only reductions as compared with the estimated expenditures of the preceding year, and have nothing to do with actual expenditure. We do not need any further proof of the fact that the way in which parliament is going about the task of checking expenditures is little better than a farce.

Mr. MARTIN: I have listened with interest to what the hon. member has said. He has told me privately and in a kindly fashion his views on the subject. He will appreciate the task any government or business has to estimate as well as it can, in the light of personnel available, and of proposed projects for the ensuing year.

But the picture is not exactly as my hon. friend has stated it. For example, part of the reduction is accounted for by a reduction of approximately $26,000 in salaries. Funds were provided for a number of vacant posts which remained unfilled for part or all of the year because of the difficulty of obtaining personnel. I say frankly to my hon. friend that in a department like this you cannot hire just anyone. The government had a policy of carrying on certain projects. That work entailed certain personnel. We simply were not able to do it, to the extent represented in this particular instance by the figure of $26,000. Another explanation is in the pay list item. Then in respect of the item for educational and informational publicity, because of the shortage of materials and due to other factors such as the lateness in obtaining a director it was not possible to proceed with the planned programme.

With regard to the other items, I must point out that this is a comparatively new department. It was only a year old when the estimates were finally made; and it is only fair to my predecessor to suggest that naturally in respect of some items he miscalculated. But that miscalculation is one which is not altogether provocative of criticism. My hon. friend and other hon. members would have a more legitimate right to criticize if, instead of overestimating the important work in connection with health, there had been underestimation. In so far as humanly possible, let me say we will endeavour to do our best to make our estimates accurate. But I have no doubt that when we come back next year, while I trust we shall not deserve censure to the same extent, we shall have to say that we were not able to spend this money. The important thing is to spend wisely the money allotted by parliament; and that we are undertaking to do.

Mr. FLEMING: To save time, would the minister just give the actual expenditures corresponding to the different items? He does not need to give the estimates for last year and this year. We have that information. Perhaps he would just run through these votes, giving the number of each vote and the actual expenditures. He will save us a great deal of time by so doing.

Mr. MARTIN: When we come to each item. My hon. friend can see that we have before us voluminous material and information. The information could be easily obtained by him later in the public accounts. However, when we come to each item, and if he insists, I shall give that information. He is asking that we proceed in an unusual way. I suggest that the proper way is the one I have proposed.

Mr. FLEMING: I wish to make it perfectly clear, and all in good part, that I have no apology to make for asking for the actual expenditures in respect of the items in this department. However I am not going to repeat what I said before. If the minister would give what I have asked we would save a good deal of time. If not, he will compel our asking for the expenditures on each item. I repeat what I said last week, that it is the duty of this committee to see that the money is well spent. We are not going to be niggardly in matters of health and welfare, so long as we see that the people of this country are getting value for money spent.

Mr. MARTIN: Correct.

Mr. FLEMING: But we want to see something more approaching accuracy than we have seen in the present estimates, where one of these estimates has exceeded by 250 per cent the required expenditure.

Mr. MARTIN: We will give that information.

Mr. FLEMING: Then I would ask for the actual expenditures in respect of item 200. The minister gave a different figure.

Mr. MARTIN: We have passed that item.

Mr. FLEMING: I think the figure the minister gave was obviously based on a misapprehension.

Mr. MARTIN: We have passed item 200. I shall look up the hon. member's question, and then tomorrow or at the next opportunity I shall have occasion to look into it. But I think we ought to stick to the item before the committee. We had a general discussion on item 200. Now we are on a specific item. I will look at his question and give him an answer at the first opportunity.

Mr. FLEMING: I can tell the minister my question now.

Mr. MARTIN: We must do it in an orderly way.

Mr. FLEMING: This is a disorderly way.

Item agreed to.

National health branch—
202. Food and drugs, $419,448.

Mr. FLEMING: What is the expenditure?

Mr. MARTIN: Estimated expenditure for 1947-48, $419,448; estimated expenditure for 1946-47, $385,240; expenditure for 1946-47, $314,780.73; unliquidated commitments, 1946-47, $16,873.87.

Item agreed to.

National health branch—
203. Opium and narcotic drugs, $93,743.

Mr. FLEMING: What is the expenditure?

Mr. MARTIN: Estimated expenditure for 1947-48, $93,743; estimated expenditure for 1946-47, $94,820; expenditure for 1946-47, $82,929.92; unliquidated commitments, 1946-47, $110.

Item agreed to.

National health branch—
204. Proprietary or patent medicines, $21,327.

Mr. FLEMING: The same question.

Mr. MARTIN: Estimated expenditure for 1946-47, $19,832; expenditure for 1946-47, $15,905.67; unliquidated commitments, 1946-47, $162.15.

Item agreed to.

National health branch—
205. Quarantine and leprosy, $225,876.

Mr. PEARKES: A few days ago a return was tabled showing that there were two stations in Canada where lepers are taken care of, one at Tracadie in New Brunswick, and one at Bentinck island in British Columbia. In the former station there are some seven patients kept in a special ward of a hospital at a cost of something over $8,000 for the year. At Bentinck island there are three who have been maintained for an expenditure of roughly $5,000 for the year. Those two figures have been constant over the past ten years.

I should like to offer the suggestion that it is an unnecessary expenditure to maintain these two stations, and that a saving could be made by their amalgamation. I know something about the situation in British Columbia because the station there is in my constituency. It is located on an island where the unfortunate patients live. For a number of years there have been only two. I believe one was a Chinaman and one was a Jap. The great unhappiness that these individuals experience is the loneliness of that station. If, for instance, the seven were moved from New Brunswick to that island I do not think the cost would go up very much, because there is ample accommodation for them on that island and they are cared for from the quarantine station at Williams Head. But I do not mind in the least whether the seven are moved to British Columbia or the three in British Columbia are moved to eastern Canada. It is just whichever would be the most economical and the most suitable so far as the department is concerned, but I suggest that it is uneconomical to maintain two separate stations for so few patients. It is unlikely that there will be any sudden change, for these numbers have now been constant over a number of years. It is one way in which money can be definitely saved, I suggest to the minister.

Mr. MARTIN: I just want to say briefly that the problem struck me exactly as it struck the hon. gentleman. I have had several discussions with my officials about the matter, and while I cannot say that it is finally closed, I must say that my officials do not take the view my hon. friend takes. It is true that at Bentinck island there are three leprosy patients and seven in the eastern part of Canada. Among those seven in the eastern part of Canada some are native to the area. Only one actual institution is maintained at Bentinck island; the others are put in a separate wing of the Hotel Dieu hospital at Tracadie. The arrangement proposed has not been finally completed, and I shall give careful study to the suggestion of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. PEARKES: Would there be any objection to moving the three from British Columbia to the other station?

Mr. CARDIFF: How long do these patients live?

Mr. MARTIN: Some live as long as thirty years.

Mr. McKAY: Are these seven lepers Canadian citizens? Were any cases of leprosy reported last year?

Mr. MARTIN: Of the seven patients in hospital, four may be considered as under active treatment and showing signs of variable degrees of active leprosy. The other three are considered arrested cases. There are four males and three females. Three are French-Canadians; one is of French-Scotch ancestry; two are of Russian ancestry and one is Canadian-born.

Mr. FRASER: Are these lepers receiving the new treatment?

Mr. MARTIN: Every treatment known to medical science.

Mr. FRASER: Including the new treatment that was discovered a couple of months ago?

Mr. MARTIN: Every care is taken of them.

[Mr. Pearkes.]

Mr. FLEMING: May I have the expenditure on this item?

Mr. MARTIN: The hon. gentleman was persistent at college, and in his public life he is equally persistent, constructively persistent. The estimated expenditure for 1946-47 was $264,307; the expenditure for 1946-47 was $226,847.62; unliquidated commitments for 1946-47, $7,622.84.

Item agreed to.

206. Laboratory of hygiene, $217,059.

Mr. FLEMING: What is the expenditure, please?

Mr. MARTIN: Estimated expenditure for 1946-47, $211,440; expenditure for 1946-47, $170,078.16; unliquidated commitments, 1946-47, $7,226.31; total commitments, $177,304.47.

Mr. FLEMING: There are two questions I should like to ask the minister. The first has to do with the progress made in the development of the manufacture of penicillin carried on under this item by the department. I am thinking particularly of the old Knox college on Spadina avenue in Toronto which was outfitted during the war as one of the pioneer plants for the manufacture of penicillin. What is the situation there today? Perhaps the minister can give us some indication of the use being made of that plant.

At the same time I should like to ask for some information with reference to the item of temporary assistance under the heading "Laboratory of Hygiene" on page 169 of the estimates. There is an increase in this item. Perhaps the minister will give the committee an explanation of the increase and, in particular, why temporary assistance bulks so large in the appropriations of this particular branch.

Mr. MARTIN: It is a new department.

Mr. FLEMING: That is my very point. It is a question of when the necessary staff is to pass from the status of temporary assistance to that of permanent.

Mr. MARTIN: I think the general practice in the service is that everybody stays temporary for at least a year. Then, the question of quota system has to be decided. It is a matter pretty much for the civil service commission. I should think that by this time next year I shall be able to report something more stable in that particular. Was the hon. member asking about the Connaught laboratory?

Mr. FLEMING: Yes, I am thinking of the work carried on under the direction of the Connaught laboratory in the old Knox college building.

Mr. MARTIN: I think I can give some information directly on what is being carried on in our own laboratory. I could give my hon. friend information about the Connaught laboratory through information that they themselves give. With regard to penicillin and our own laboratories, the methods of assaying penicillin have been studied carefully. There are now known to be at least four types or fractions of penicillin with varying therapeutic efficiency. I am able to say—and this is by way of tribute to our own laboratory—that a Canadian standard penicillin has been prepared and is distributed to manufacturers for control of their production. A second lower potency standard is distributed to hospitals and clinical laboratories for use in controlling penicillin therapy. The regulations for the control of penicillin have been revised in the light of the most recent advances. Studies have been carried out on the chemical and enzymatic destruction of penicillin in the search for a more satisfactory sterility test to ensure that preparations of penicillin will be free from contaminating organisms. A practical method for large-scale production of the enzyme penicillinase has been found. I may say that this—and I am sure that the medical men in the house will appreciate this—has been a notable contribution on the part of our laboratory.

Mr. FRASER: Why was it necessary to rent this building on Parkdale avenue when there must be war buildings unoccupied?

Mr. MARTIN: That is a matter for public works. The war buildings were unsuitable for this work, and we have been crowded out in the buildings occupied.

Mr. FRASER: I know the department has been crowded, but $18,000 seems to be a lot of money to spend at a time like this.

Mr. MARTIN: They were simply crowded, and this is extremely important work. While the cost may be important, the actual details are, of course, looked after by public works. I am anxious that we be given every opportunity to put our men in places where they can do an adequate job which vitally affects the welfare of this country, and I am sure the hon. member will agree.

Mr. FRASER: I agree with that, but I just did not think this was the time to build a new building when the veterans cannot get building material.

Mr. MARTIN: I would say that every time is the time in a matter such as this

Item agreed to.

National health branch—

207. Immigration medical inspection, $143,182.

Mr. BLAIR: I should like to ask a question about the medical examination and inspection of immigrants. Are there Wassermann tests taken on every immigrant coming to this country before they leave their land, and do they have chest X-rays?

Mr. MARTIN: With regard to the first question, the answer is no. With regard to the last question, the Minister of Mines and Resources will, I am sure have a statement to make. We merely service that department on requisition. He will have to declare a new policy, but I think my hon. friend will find the new policy will meet what he conceives to be the correct procedure with regard to the medical examination of new immigrants.

Mr. FRASER: We were told by the external affairs department that these immigrants coming in in the mass were being X-rayed.

Mr. MARTIN: That is right. The appropriate answer to that should, I think, come from the appropriate minister. Speaking for myself and my department, I can only say that that is our view, and I think my hon. friend will find that the announcement will show that what he thinks should be done is to be done in the future.

Mr. FRASER: I thought it should have been done five or six years ago. That is what I have been advocating right along. That is why I am anxious to have it done.

Mr. MARTIN: What the hon. gentleman has said is also my own judgment.

Mr. HERRIDGE: I was going to ask the same question that was asked by the other hon. member. I also am concerned with what sort of examination these immigrants are receiving on coming to this country. We want to be sure we do not permit people to come to this country who have tuberculosis or venereal disease.

Mr. FLEMING: What were the expenditures on this item?

Mr. MARTIN: Item 207 estimate 1946-47, $124,905; expenditure, 1946-47, $87,683; unliquidated commitments, 1946-47, $654.70.

Mr. FLEMING: On page 169 of the estimates we again have an item for temporary assistance which is about double what it was last year. Has that anything to do with overseas inspection?

Mr. MARTIN: Yes.

Mr. FLEMING: If so, is it adequate to meet the requirements for the present year, if the policy that was enunciated some time ago by the Prime Minister is to be translated into an increased volume of immigration, and if the teams that he spoke of are to be increased in Europe to examine the intending immigrants without undue delays? Is the minister going to ask for a supplementary appropriation later?

Mr. MARTIN: Yes.

Mr. FLEMING: Can he give any indication of what it might be?

Mr. MARTIN: At the right time, yes.

Mr. FLEMING: What is the amount?

Mr. MARTIN: At the right time I shall give it; I should not give it now.

Mr. FLEMING: Will it bear any relation to this amount?

Mr. MARTIN: Whatever will be done my hon. friend will think it is right, I am sure.

Mr. FLEMING: I doubt it.

Item agreed to.

National health branch—
208. Child and maternal health, $82,625.

Mr. FRASER: This item has been reduced this year. I would think that this is an item which would have been increased, since it has to do with child and maternal health.

Mr. MARTIN: The main decrease is in the item under educational and informational publicity. There is a decrease of approximately $34,000. The higher item in 1946-47 was due to the production of a sound film on maternal and infant care and film strips for this picture. The $46,000 for this fiscal year is to provide for a reprint of the "Canadian Mother and Child", and new publications on poliomyelitis and posture and care of premature infants, and so on. The decrease is largely a matter of adjustment on account of films.

Mr. FLEMING: I would ask for the expenditures on item 208.

Mr. MARTIN: Estimate 1946-47, $120,443; expenditures 1946-47, $86,437.74; unliquidated commitments 1946-47, $20,010.56.

Item agreed to.

National health branch—
209. Public health engineering, $149,507.

Mr. FLEMING: Will the minister give the expenditures?

Mr. MARTIN: Estimate 1946-47, $173,843; expenditure 1946-47, $121,387.19; unliquidated commitments, 1946-47, $9,497.20.

[Mr. Martin.]

Mr. IRVINE: I do not know whether the question I wish to ask can properly be put under this item, but perhaps the minister will permit me to ask it anyway. What is the health department doing with respect to arthritis?

Mr. MARTIN: That should have been asked under a previous item. I take it that the hon. gentleman could not have been in the house when I indicated what we are doing in this regard. This is public health engineering, but I did make a statement as to what we are doing about arthritis and what we propose to do. If the hon. member will look at Hansard of last Tuesday he will see what I said, and if he is not satisfied and will ask the question under some other item I shall try to get the indulgence of the committee to give the information.

Mr. MacINNIS: The title of this item is quite a mouthful. I am wondering how many members of the committee know what is involved in public health engineering. Would the minister explain it?

Mr. MARTIN: The purpose is to carry out a number of functions; first of all, to provide for active cooperation with the international joint commission in connection with the present investigation of the pollution of international boundary waters by the discharge thereinto of industrial waste and sewage; supervision as regards public health of railways, vessels, aeroplanes and other forms of transportation engaged in interprovincial and international traffic; supervision of the application of regulations, made by the international joint commission, promulgated pursuant to the treaty between the United States and His Majesty relating to boundary waters; supervision of the application of regulations pertaining to vessels navigating on the great lakes and inland waters, also on the coasts of Canada and regulations pertaining to common carriers engaged in international and interprovincial traffic; administration of Public Works Health Act regulations; cooperation with provincial authorities in all matters relating to sanitation; cooperation with other departments of the government of Canada regarding water supplies, sewage and wastes disposal, and other matters of sanitation; supervision of the shellfish industry regarding matters of health and export of shellfish from Canada to the United States; and cooperation with the United States public health service on matters of international sanitation.

National health branch—

210. Treatment of sick mariners, $399,926.

Mr. MacNICOL: When the minister replies I should be glad if he would tell us something about the activities of the department in this regard on the east coast, the west coast and on the great lakes, and just what hospitals, if any, sick mariners are sent to. I have no fault to find with the estimate. This is an important branch of the department and a very necessary one, but looking over the list on page 170 of the estimates, I notice one hospital guard. If we have many hospitals to which we send sick mariners there should be more than one guard. Further, I notice an item for certain services. I should like to have an explanation of that. Between the two of them they amount to $355,000. That is necessary money, but I am sure the committee would like to have an explanation of the whole programme of the department in connection with the treatment of sick mariners.

Mr. MARTIN: Does the hon. member want it now or later? It is a long story. I am prepared to give it, but possibly I could take note of the question and give a series of answers to many questions that have been asked.

Mr. MacNICOL: This is an important item. It is an item that I am interested in because of my connection with the navy league.

Mr. MARTIN: No one is more entitled to information on the item than the hon. gentleman. I will make a statement on it:

This service administers part V of the Canada Shipping Act, sick mariners and marine hospitals, to provide such medical, surgical and other treatment as the case requires to any sick mariner employed on board and belonging to a ship which has paid sick mariners dues during the current calendar year.

Revenue is obtained by a compulsory levy on the registered tonnage of a ship arriving in any port in the provinces of Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, British Columbia and Manitoba and Ontario on Hudson bay or James bay.

Applications for treatment are approved by the local collector of customs, who is also responsible for the collection of dues. Payment is made prior to the first fishing voyage of each season.

Vessels engaged in the coasting trade within the limits of one province are exempt from the payment of dues; also vessels arriving at any port in the province of Quebec from any port in the province of Ontario.

Hospitals are maintained at Sydney and Lunenburg, Nova Scotia, for the use of sick mariners. At other ports, hospital care is provided by contracts with local hospitals. Clinics, under full time medical officers of the division are maintained at Vancouver, B.C., Quebec, P.Q., Sydney, N.S., Halifax, N.S., and Saint John, N.B. At other ports, part time doctors are appointed to act as port physicians for this purpose.

Mr. MacNICOL: Does the department maintain hospitals under its own direction?

Mr. MARTIN: At Sydney and Lunenburg. At other ports the service is provided for by contract with local hospitals.

Mr. MacNICOL: Does the department own these hospitals?

Mr. MARTIN: Yes, at Sydney and Lunenburg, Nova Scotia.

Mr. MacNICOL: There is nothing in the estimates here referring to repairs to hospitals or to maintenance.

Mr. MARTIN: That is under public works.

Mr. MacNICOL: The minister also said something about the payment of dues. What about sick mariners for whom dues are not paid?

Mr. MARTIN: They all pay dues.

Mr. MacNICOL: I thought the minister said something about ships that have to pay dues. Why would it be necessary to use that expression?

Mr. MARTIN: Did I say that?

Mr. MacNICOL: I thought the minister did.

Mr. MARTIN: If I did it must have been a slip of the tongue.

Mr. MacNICOL: Do all ships have to pay dues?

Mr. MARTIN: Yes.

Mr. MacNICOL: Which means that all sick mariners are eligible to be taken care of.

Mr. MARTIN: That is right.

Mr. MacINNIS: In view of the minister's explanation in answer to the question asked by the hon. member for Davenport, I should like to know this. When have all ships begun paying dues and when have all sick mariners begun to be provided for out of these dues? Unless the change has been made quite recently, the minister has been misinformed.

Mr. MARTIN: I said: "Vessels engaged in the coasting trade within the limits of one province are exempt from the payment of dues; also vessels arriving at any port in the province of Quebec from any port in the province of Ontario." Has the hon. gentleman reference to the Canada Shipping Act?

Mr. MacINNIS: I took this matter up with the minister's predecessor last year. I tried to introduce an amendment to the Canada Shipping Act which would rectify what I regard here as a discrimination against sailors, particularly on the Pacific coast. A ship plying from Vancouver or Victoria to Seattle, or any other United States port is liable for the payment of dues, and pays dues under that section of the Canada Shipping Act. Sailors and other staff on that ship are entitled to have their expenses paid in case of accident or illness. The trip to Seattle from Victoria or Vancouver is a short one. The same ship, if it were sailing from Vancouver to Prince Rupert, does not pay dues, and consequently the sailors on that ship do not receive the benefits which are provided under this act. I think the department or the minister should consult with the Minister of Transport and see if that arrangement could not be made. Why should the crew on a ship sailing from Vancouver to Prince Rupert be outside the provisions of this act and the crew on a ship sailing from Vancouver to Seattle, or any foreign port there, come under the act? The same thing applies, perhaps to a more glaring degree, when you go to the maritime provinces. A ship crossing the Northumberland strait pays dues and the crew on those ships are entitled to receive these benefits. It seems to me that it is high time this discrimination was eliminated by appropriate legislation. I should like to have the minister's views on that.

Mr. MARTIN: I am afraid I cannot give any finality of view in this matter. I know the point which has been raised by the hon. gentleman; he raised it last year. The problem is one that would create a real difficulty. I have been giving the matter consideration and I have been discussing it with the Minister of Transport. My present view is that the matter is one that lies wholly within provincial jurisdiction; and the provinces are extremely jealous of the traditional power which, under the constitution, they have exercised over the years. I can only say at the moment that I am aware of the problem. I am not being purely formal in my reply, because I should like to do something about things which require doing. I am giving the matter consideration, but there is a difficulty involved.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Mr. FLEMING: No. I asked for the expenditures.

Mr. MARTIN: Estimate for 1946-47, $341,823; expenditure for 1946-47, $358,281.09; unliquidated commitments, 1946-47, $1,069.14.

Mr. FLEMING: This branch earns revenue. Can the minister give us the revenue from its operation for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1947?

Mr. MARTIN: Revenue, $216,166.39; expenditure, $321,375.34 for 1945-46.

Mr. McLURE: Are there any special hospitals for the treatment of sick mariners?

Mr. MARTIN: I gave that. There are two institutions and, in addition, contracts are made with private hospitals.

National health branch—

211. Industrial health, $112,439.

Mr. MacNICOL: Most of the provinces have their own departments on industrial health. Will the minister tell us how his department cooperates with the health departments of the various provinces? They all have their own staffs.

Mr. MARTIN: Quite so.

Mr. MacNICOL: It seems to me that there is tremendous duplication.

Mr. MARTIN: There is no duplication whatsoever. We entered into that field on invitation. My hon. friend, who has been a member of this house for some time, will recall the great debate in this house urging participation by the federal government in this particular field. At a dominion council of health meeting, an organization which meets twice a year, and made up of federal department of health officials and health officials of the nine provincial governments, the latter requested that, as a coordinating body in this field, we should set up this particular division. It was done at their request, and there is no duplication of effort. It is a complementary effort to try to deal with what I know my hon. friend will recognize as an important problem.

Mr. FRASER: Educational and informational publicity has been cut $5,000, although the total item is only down $1,000. Transportation and travelling expenses are up $2,000. This whole item on industrial health is practically all publicity, is it not?

Mr. MARTIN: Oh, no.

Mr. FRASER: Just what does this department do? I thought it was an educational branch.

Mr. MARTIN: The functions of this division are as follows: first, it is responsible for educational, investigational and cooperative work with provincial departments in matters pertaining to the maintenance of health of the working population of Canada. Our power to act is under section 5 of the National Health and Welfare Act, paragraphs (a), (b) and (i).

I said a moment ago, in answer to the hon. member for Davenport, that our intervention in the matter came, pursuant to the section which I have referred, at the instance of the unanimous request of the nine provincial governments.

The division also acts as special consulting agency to the civil service health division in the matter of healthful working conditions within the public service. The industrial health laboratories—

Mr. FRASER: That is a separate item.

Mr. MARTIN: No. It is also under this. The industrial health laboratories are responsible for providing technical services in relation to investigation, research and cooperation with provincial departments within the terms of reference provided by section 5 (i) of the act.

The laboratories are also responsible for control of industrial health appliances under authority of the Food and Drugs Act.

Mr. FLEMING: Can we have the expenditure on this item?

Mr. MARTIN: Estimate for 1946-47, $113,151; expenditure for 1946-47, was $77,569.26; unliquidated commitments for the same period, $9,778.13.

Item agreed to.

National health branch—

212. Civil service health, $211,301.

Mr. BLAIR: I notice there is an increase of $31,000. Have arrangements been made for an X-ray survey of all the civil service? Is there a regular X-ray check-up of these employees?

Mr. MARTIN: As my hon. friend knows, this division has just been set up, and the assignment given the division is an important one. I can only say that plans are being made, within the availability of existing personnel, to meet that problem. It is the intention to try to standardize physical examinations, both for pre-employment and periodic review purposes. Such physical examinations will be complete, including wherever possible X-rays of the chest, ocular and dental examinations. On the basis of defects and disabilities found on these examinations, the division will undertake to advise the various departments of government on the suitability or otherwise of proposed employment and will be prepared to advise individual civil servants on the manner in which they can enjoy the best measure of health within the limitations of such defects or disabilities as may be discovered by such examinations. An effort will be made to look after these matters. We cannot look after the treatment of all the people in the civil service; obviously that is the function of the doctors, but there is work to be done prior to employment. That kind of work, together with what work can be done afterward, is being seriously considered now by an eminent man whom I am sure the hon. gentleman knows very well, and who has undertaken this important task.

Mr. McLURE: I do not quite understand this. The minister says it is a new service.

Mr. MARTIN: It is a new division.

Mr. McLURE: Will the civil service health examinations be for all civil servants, no matter where they are, as long as they are in the service of the government?

Mr. MARTIN: That is the broad intention.

Mr. McLURE: That will be carried out through the health branch in each province?

Mr. MARTIN: We will utilize our own clinics, D.V.A. facilities and doctors in the various communities, according to circumstances. That is all part of the expanded service.

Mr. FLEMING: May I ask for the expenditure under this item last year? ?

Mr. MARTIN: The estimate for 1946-47 was $180,078. The expenditure was $61,112.38, with unliquidated commitments for 1946-47 of $2,019.13.

Mr. FULTON: Since I was in another committee and unable to be here at the time, I am going to ask the minister if he will be generous enough to go back to item 206 and give a short statement of the work being done in the laboratory of hygiene.

Mr. MARTIN: I have covered all that.

Mr. FULTON: I understand that no outline of the work was given.

Mr. MARTIN: Yes, I covered that very carefully. I have had to refuse two similar requests from this side, and I could not do it for one and not for another. If, following an examination of Hansard, the hon. member finds that the explanation given is not sufficient for his purpose, toward the end of the estimates I shall be glad to enlarge upon the question.

Mr. FLEMING: I wish to make a brief comment in connection with this item. We have just been told that the actual expenditure last year amounted to $63,000, in round figures. The amount appropriated by the house a year ago at the request of the minister was $180,000.

Mr. MARTIN: If my hon. friend will permit me I might try to save time by saying that this is a new effort, and when that estimate was conceived the staff had not even been selected. That is the main reason for the lower expenditure. I only say this because I think I anticipate the tenor of his argument and am trying to economize on time.

Mr. FLEMING: I still would like to offer this brief comment. The answer given by the minister is substantially the same as that given by his predecessor in 1946 and 1945. In each case it was a new branch.

Mr. MARTIN: It could not have been in 1945, because the branch was only authorized in September of that year. No, pardon me, I am in error.

Mr. FLEMING: We had it before us in the session of 1945, and we made provision for it. The programme outlined then was the same as the programme outlined now; and we were told the same thing in 1946. If the minister seriously expects that he will have occasion to spend $211,000 wisely on this work, then I think this committee is prepared to hear his case and make the money available if he proves his case. But a great deal more will have to be usefully done than was done last year with an expenditure of $63,000. What is being asked this year is three and a half times what was actually spent last year. Is this programme developing now to the point where an expenditure three and a half times greater than that of the fiscal year recently ended is to be required?

Mr. MARTIN: Every endeavour will be made to spend it properly, to realize the objectives and carry out the functions of the division.

Item agreed to.

National health branch—
213. Nutrition, $138,448.

Mr. FLEMING: What was the expenditure under this item, please?

[Mr. Martin.]

Mr. MARTIN: The estimate for 1946-47 was $162,992. The expenditure for 1946-47 was $132,343, with unliquidated commitments for the same period of $6,087.07.

Mr. KNOWLES: I just want to make the comment again that it seems to me there are too many reductions of too large an amount in the estimates for educational and informational publicity. I fear there is false economy, and I hope the minister will make sure that we are not losing something, in connection with a matter like nutrition, by cutting down on these expenditures.

Mr. MARTIN: I give my full assurance that the reduction does not in any way affect the purposes the hon. member and I have in mind.

Mr. FLEMING: Just on that point, I think it would be of interest to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre if at some appropriate time the minister would give us the actual expenditure, during the fiscal year just closed, on educational and informational publicity, as it is now called, or publicity and information as it was called last year.

Mr. MARTIN: I will do that.

Mr. FLEMING: The figures I gave earlier this evening were the estimated expenditures, not the actual amount spent.

Mr. MARTIN: I said I would do that.

Mr. FLEMING: Just a moment. I think it may be interesting to see whether the minister is really budgeting for a reduction in expenditure, as compared with the actual expenditure.

Mr. MARTIN: The minister is definitely budgeting for wise expenditure—

Mr. FLEMING: I know that.

Mr. MARTIN: —or for a reduction, whatever you wish me to say.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I think there must have been something wrong with the budgeting last year, if I may say a word in support of what my deskmate, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, has said.

Mr. MARTIN: I have just explained that it does not represent any reduction in functions. Eleven thousand dollars of the amount asked for last year was to meet a commitment carried over from the previous year. My hon. friend may be sure I am not going to reduce this division if I can possibly avoid doing so.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Would the minister tell us the actual expenditures on educational and informational publicity last year?

Mr. MARTIN: Yes; $278,326.84.

Mr. NICHOLSON: That cannot be right, for there is an amount of only $61,627 shown in the estimates.

Mr. MARTIN: You want the break-down?

Mr. NICHOLSON: No. How much of the $61,000 allocated last year was spent?

Mr. MARTIN: Would you just let that stand so that we can pass on? I will give the information before the estimates are through.

National health branch—
Combating venereal diseases—
214. Administration, $37,875.

Mr. MacINNIS: I note that the estimate for administration has been reduced by nearly $9,000, and it was not very large in the first place. Is the venereal disease situation so well under control that any lessening of the activity of the department is justified?

Mr. MARTIN: As my hon. friend will know, this matter is primarily one which comes under the provincial authorities. Our interest in the matter is under section 5 of the National Health and Welfare Act, referring to supplementary assistance and coordination. The decreases do not represent anything in the way of fundamental functions, but are rather represented by transfer of personnel. For instance, in respect of one position for a medical specialist, advertised during October, 1946, it was found that of many applicants no one was judged to have the required qualifications. The position will be re-advertised with some revision of qualifications in the hope that it may be filled in the forthcoming fiscal year. That accounts, in part, for the item of $8,400.

Mr. MacINNIS: That means you will not have that specialist this year. I note that the bureau of statistics now reports in respect of these diseases, and I also note in the annual report for the year ended March 31, 1946—and I believe that is the last available—that the figures for 1945 are higher than those for 1944. Has the minister the figures for 1946?

Mr. MARTIN: There is some difficulty in giving those figures. My hon. friend is quite right when he refers to the bureau of statistics. But this is the Department of National Health and Welfare, and my officers take the position—and I must say I believe they are correct—that because these reports are not complete it would be giving an erroneous picture for the Department of National Health and Welfare, on what is not a complete report to give figures which might be misleading. That is the position my officials think we should take, and I think perhaps it is the proper one.

Mr. MacINNIS: The department has at least gone so far as to give figures. I do not say they are considered as being absolutely accurate. They realize that all these cases are not reported. But how are people to have a knowledge and understanding of the danger of these diseases unless they have statistics which will give them that information? If it is proper to give a figure for 1944—

Mr. MARTIN: That is a figure from the dominion bureau of statistics. To the extent they are helpful, our department uses those figures. However I have indicated that it is a matter of incomplete reporting. That is not the fault of the bureau of statistics; rather, it is the fault of reporting agencies throughout the country. An attempt is being made to try to perfect the system of reporting to a central office, so that we can be in a position to give a much more accurate set of figures.

Mr. MacINNIS: I did not ask the minister if the figures were those from his own department. I asked if he had similar figures. Has he figures for the year 1946 which will compare with these for 1944 and 1945? The question is a simple one.

Mr. MARTIN: Does the hon. member want the figures from the bureau of statistics?

Mr. MacINNIS: Yes, if you have them, for 1946. The bureau of statistics figures are the ones I have before me.

Mr. MARTIN: I will give them for 1946, as they are given by the dominion bureau of statistics; but I want to emphasize clearly that that is the source from which these figures come. The total venereal disease cases in 1946 is placed at 41,556. The reason I hesitate, as my hon. friend will understand, is that I cannot say too strongly that these are not based on a complete report.

Mr. MacINNIS: But there is no note to that effect.

Mr. MARTIN: But that is the figure by the bureau of statistics, not of this department.

Mr. MacINNIS: But I have before me the annual report of the Department of National Health and Welfare for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1946. It begins with a letter addressed to His Excellency the Governor General, and states:

May it please Your Excellency:

The undersigned has the honour to present to Your Excellency the annual report of the Department of National Health and Welfare, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1946.

Respectfully submitted,
Brooke Claxton,
Minister of National Health and Welfare.

I wonder what the minister has in mind. Has he no confidence in the report of his department?

Mr. MARTIN: I have. My hon. friend knows me better than that.

Mr. MacINNIS: I am afraid I do not.

Mr. MARTIN: Well, this particular minister has taken the position I have stated tonight on the advice of those in the department who, I think, are in a position to advise. And in taking that position, I take it in the belief that it is the proper thing to do. I cannot say more than that. Should I give a report next year, my hon. friend will have to compare it in the light of what he has just read.

Mr. MacINNIS: Let us go into this farther. I understand that the Department of National Health and Welfare has had report forms made so that doctors in various provinces can fill in those reports and report those cases.

Mr. MARTIN: That is to the dominion bureau of statistics.

Mr. MacINNIS: Will the minister let me say what I have to say?

Mr. MARTIN: I am just trying to be helpful.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): There is nothing like listening to an expert.

Mr. MacINNIS: Well, if my hon. friend wanted to get the information perhaps he could be an expert, too. I imagine he is an expert in certain lines.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): If you wish to go farther, yes.

Mr. MacINNIS: At least he leads us to believe that he would want information. I do not want help from anyone who does not know anything about it. I am trying to get information from the minister.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Accept information from any place you can get it.

Mr. MacINNIS: Yes, if I consider it correct. I have here the report of the Department of National Health and Welfare which sent out forms. All the provinces but one filled in those forms, and it is from them the bureau of statistics got their information. Does the minister say that next year, when he makes out his report, he is not going to give the people of Canada any information on the point?

Mr. MARTIN: I did not say that.

Mr. MacINNIS: That is exactly what the minister said.

[Mr. MacInnis.]

Mr. MARTIN: My hon. friend is one of the fairest members in the house. I know he would not say that. I am not refusing. But I am not going to give information, the full authenticity and completeness of which I am not satisfied with. I cannot say more than that at this time.

The estimate 1946-47 is $46,510; expenditures, $20,007.07; unliquidated commitments, 1946-47, $102.17.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Thursday, June 19, 1947

The house met at two o'clock.

PRIVILEGE

MR. STEWART—REFERENCE TO ARTICLE IN TODAY'S "GLOBE AND MAIL"

Mr. ALISTAIR STEWART (Winnipeg North): I rise to a question of privilege. An article on page 10 of today's Globe and Mail is, in part, completely wrong. The part of which I complain reads as follows:

> When Mr. Stewart originally presented the petition, he said he did agree with the religious views of the Witnesses, but had undertaken to see that the petition sponsored by them reached parliament.

What I actually said was that although I presented the petition I did not agree with the religious views of those who sponsored it.

RENT CONTROL

COMMERCIAL ACCOMMODATION—EXPIRY ON MARCH 31, 1948

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce that the government does not intend to ask parliament for authority to retain rental and eviction control on commercial accommodation after the expiration of the Continuation of the Transitional Measures Act, March 31, 1948.

The house will recall that on March 1 last, as part of the programme of orderly decontrol, certain items of commercial space, chiefly new commercial buildings, commercial buildings rented for the first time or for a term of three or more years, as well as commercial space which had been sublet, were removed from control.

At the same time a provision was made which would enable the landlord of any commercial space to obtain a 25 per cent increase of the maximum rental by offering to his tenant a two-year renewal lease on certain terms and conditions. These measures provided a free bargaining opportunity with respect to a substantial proportion of commercial space, and experience has indicated that many landlords and tenants have taken advantage of it. It is now felt that it will be possible to effect complete decontrol of commercial accommodation next spring.

Amendments being made to wartime prices and trade board rental regulations to take effect immediately will remove from control vacant lots used for motor car parking or sales, as well as gas stations owned by oil companies.

In the field of housing accommodation the only change made provides for the removal of rental and eviction control from all new houses, apartments, duplexes and other self-contained buildings completed after January 1, 1947. This is felt to be desirable as an encouragement for the construction of housing accommodation for rent at a time when it is so urgently needed.

Mr. TUSTIN: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a question on the statement he has just made? Is there to be no relief until next spring for returned veterans to secure their own properties?

Mr. ABBOTT: As I said a little while ago, the whole question of any possible relaxation of rental control with respect to necessitous cases has been under consideration for some time and is still under consideration. I am not yet in a position to make any statement as to what the result may be.

WAR ASSETS—SALES TO MAYOR OF SALABERRY DE VALLEYFIELD

Mr. RAYMOND (Beauharnois-Laprairie):

1. Has the war assets corporation sold any property, real or person, to Robert Cauchon, mayor of the city of Salaberry de Valleyfield, or city of Valleyfield?
2. If so (a) what property; (b) what quantity of each kind, in each year; (c) what was the selling price in each case; (d) when and where did each delivery take place; (e) when was such property paid for?

Mr. McILRAITH:

1. Yes.
2. (a) The wharf in the parish of St. Timothée, county of Beauharnois with the land leading to the wharf was sold to Mr. Robert Cauchon on or about October 24, 1946, but later the federal government department reporting the wharf and land leading thereto as surplus was not able to provide title deeds to the land. On this becoming apparent the sale of land only was cancelled on April 22, 1947, with no change in sales price.

(b) Only as in (a), in 1946.

(c) $150.

(d) Delivery was made on or about October 24, 1946.

(e) The property was paid for on October 21, 1946.

ST. TIMOTHÉE, QUE., WHARF

Mr. RAYMOND (Beauharnois-Laprairie):

1. Has the wharf in the parish of St. Timothée, county of Beauharnois, together with the land leading to such wharf, been sold?

2. If so (a) to whom; (b) at what price; (c) when was the payment made?

Mr. McILRAITH:

1. The wharf in the parish of St. Timothée, county of Beauharnois, with the land leading to the wharf was sold on or about October 24, 1946, but later the federal government department reporting the wharf and land leading thereto as surplus was not able to provide title deeds to the land. On this becoming apparent, the sale of the land only was cancelled on April 22, 1947, with no change in sales price.

2. (a) To Mr. Robert Cauchon.

(b) $150.

(c) October 21, 1946.

CANBERRA CONFERENCE OF COMMONWEALTH NATIONS

Mr. CHURCH:

1. Has Canada been invited to an empire conference at Australia regarding the Pacific question and the proposed peace treaty with Japan?

2. When is it to be held and where?

3. Has the government received a copy of the proposals of last February from General MacArthur and Dr. Evatt, or from the countries they represent, on this matter?

Mr. ST. LAURENT:

1. In replying to a question by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green) on June 16, page 4176, I informed the house that there is under consideration a proposal for a conference of representatives of the commonwealth nations at Canberra toward the end of August to discuss the Japanese peace settlement. I added that if that is arranged I have no doubt that Canada will be represented at the conference.

2. Answered by No. 1.

3. So far as I am aware the only proposal with regard to the Japanese peace settlement made by General MacArthur in February last, was in an informal interview with a party of American editors and publishers reported in the press on March 1. General MacArthur made another and more widely publicized statement on this subject in a brief and informal talk at the Tokyo Correspondents club on March 17. The government has received copies of various press reports on these statements. The government has also received a copy of the speech on external affairs delivered in the Australian House of Representatives on February 26 last, by Dr. H. V. Evatt, in which, among other matters discussed, he made a strong case for an early peace settlement in the Pacific.

LOANS OR CREDITS TO OTHER COUNTRIES FOR PURCHASE OF CANADIAN GOODS

Mr. BRYCE:

1. To what countries has Canada made loans or made credits available for the purchase of Canadian goods and produce since January 31, 1947?

2. What are the amounts of such loans or credits?

Mr. MAYHEW:

1 and 2. No credits have been authorized to foreign countries since January 31, 1947. However, the total amounts advanced and encumbered to June 18, 1947, of credits authorized prior to January 31, 1947, are as follows:

	Authorized	Advanced	Encumbered
United Kingdom	$1,250,000,000	$690,000,000 00	.....
Belgium	100,000,000	56,000,000 00	.....
China	60,000,000	23,298,315 61	$10,484,165 13
Czechoslovakia	19,000,000	5,224,766 34	6,221,418 91
France	242,500,000	169,300,000 00	.....
Netherlands	125,000,000	87,139,461 56	.....
Netherlands Indies	15,000,000	6,700,000 00	.....
Norway	30,000,000	18,856,000 00	.....
Union of Soviet Socialist Republics	3,000,000	2,866,098 69	.....

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS—CHIEF ARCHITECT'S BRANCH

Mr. DIEFENBAKER:

1. How many employees, permanent and temporary, are there or have there been in the chief architect's branch of the Department of Public Works in each of the years 1943 to 1947 inclusive?
2. What are the names, rank and length of service of each of them?
3. How many of said employees have received promotions during the last four years and what increases in salary has each received in consequence thereof?
4. Have any of said employees received a war work supplement? If so, who, and how much was paid to each in each of the years 1943 to 1947 inclusive?

WARTIME HOUSING—EAST YORK TOWNSHIP

Mr. McGREGOR:

1. How many houses were constructed in East York township, county of York, by Wartime Housing, and what is the total cost of each home constructed?
2. Were any sub-contracts given out? If so, what sub-contracts and to whom?
3. Who was the general contractor, and what was the contract?
4. What is the present proposed or actual rental for each home?
5. What was the cost per unit of project overhead, and how was the same made up?
6. Who were the inspectors in the area; what was their term of employment and what were their salaries?
7. What qualifications did the inspectors have?
8. Have any complaints been received about the construction or state of repair of any of the homes? If so, what complaints were received?
9. On whose advice was the location for the homes chosen?
10. Who installed the various services such as street, sidewalk, water, sewer, electricity, or landscaping, and what was the cost of each?
11. What was paid for the land per lot, whether by way of purchase or rental?
12. Did any municipality contribute to any part of the project and what was the cost of such contribution?
13. What provision was made for schools in the area, or for the education of any children living in the area?
14. What are the details of any tax arrangements made with the municipality?
15. What are the details of the management provided for the project and the costs of same?

NAVAL SERVICE—DESTROYERS

Mr. McGREGOR:

1. How many destroyers have been built or are being built in Canada today?
2. By whom were they built or are being built and how many destroyers in each yard?
3. Did the government contribute to the costs of these ship yards?
4. If so, how much did they contribute to each yard?
5. Have any destroyers been completed?
6. What is the estimated cost of each destroyer?
7. Does this include the cost of their equipment?
8. If not, what is the estimated cost of further equipment for each boat?
9. What is the total expenditure to date on each boat?

BOOKS—DUTIES AND SALES TAX

Mr. KNOWLES:

1. Is there any duty on books brought into Canada?
2. If so, what is the rate and on what basis is said rate applied?
3. Is there any sales tax on books (a) produced in Canada; (b) imported?
4. In the case of imported books, is the sales tax applied to the duty as well as to the value of the book?
5. Are there any distinctions as between different kinds of books for customs purposes? If so, what are such distinctions?
6. Is consideration being given to the removal of customs duties from books (a) educational; (b) scientific; (c) religious; (d) others?

TORONTO ISLAND—DAMAGE BY HIGH WATER LEVELS

Mr. CHURCH:

What action has the government taken with regard to adequate shore protection after the serious damage done at Toronto island to the federal government's breakwaters and groynes from high water levels and the floods in cottages at Ward's and Centre island?

INSURANCE COMPANIES AND CHARTERED BANKS—INVESTMENTS IN FOREIGN COMMON STOCKS

Mr. CHURCH:

What were the losses incurred by each of the Canadian insurance companies and chartered banks in investments in foreign common stocks between the two great wars?

WHEAT BOARD

EXECUTIVE OFFICERS, ADVISORY COMMITTEE AND EMPLOYEES

Hon. J. A. MacKINNON (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Last Monday, in reply to a question asked by the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross) regarding the personnel of the Canadian wheat board, I suggested that pending further inquiry the question might be made an order for return. I have since looked into the matter and I find that it would not be appropriate to furnish all the information asked for. I had intended speaking to the hon. member direct but I have been unable to do so as yet. I therefore ask the house to allow me to table a partial answer to the question.

SUGAR

ALLOCATION AGREEMENT—INQUIRY AS TO AVAILABILITY OF LARGER QUANTITIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. GROTE STIRLING (Yale): May I ask the Minister of Finance whether he has any comment to make on the statement that there may be a larger quantity of sugar for distribution under the allocation arrangement of the nations?

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker, I have no comment to make. I promised the house about a week ago that I would make a statement shortly with respect to sugar, in the sense that I was asked whether we would change our rationing policy in view of what was contemplated in the United States. I expect to make that statement within the next week. Apart from that I have nothing to add today.

CIVIL SERVICE

USE OF WORD "COLOUR" IN QUESTION ON APPLICATION FORM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. ALISTAIR STEWART (Winnipeg North): I should like to ask a question of the Secretary of State. In view of the equal rights of all Canadians as citizens, regardless of creed or colour, why is the word "colour" used as question 17 in the civil service application form?

Hon. COLIN GIBSON (Secretary of State): The hon. member spoke to me about this question, and I have made inquiries through the chairman of the civil service commission. There is of course no doubt whatever as to the eligibility of all Canadian citizens, regardless of colour, race or creed, for appointment to the civil service. I understand from the chairman of the commission that the question on the application form as to colour is to enable the commissioners, when an application is received from a member of the negro race, to place the applicant in a position which will be congenial.

HALIFAX DOCKYARD

POSSIBILITY OF EDUCATION IN NUMBER OF CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GORDON B. ISNOR (Halifax): In view of the statement made by the Minister of Reconstruction on Monday, June 16, and reported in Hansard, page 4208, in regard to H.M.C. dockyard, Halifax, employment, I wish to ask the minister the following question: When referring to men being laid off in the Halifax dockyard, did he mean the men laid off prior to March 31, or is a further reduction in civilian employees proposed?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): In my remarks in the house I referred to the lay-off that was discussed in the house last March. I did not in any way intend to imply that at present a lay-off is contemplated. I have made inquiries of my colleague the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Claxton) and I learn from him that no general lay-off is anticipated, either at present or in the near future.

OLD AGE PENSIONS

INCREASES IN AMOUNTS AND INCOME ALLOWANCE REQUIREMENTS—MODIFICATIONS OF ELIGIBILITY

The house resumed from Wednesday, June 18, consideration of the motion of Mr. Martin for the second reading of Bill No. 339, to amend the Old Age Pensions Act.

Mr. DONALD M. FLEMING (Eglinton): Those of us who listened yesterday to the speech of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, had we been able to dismiss all other thoughts from our minds, had we been able to dismiss from our minds all recollection of what had gone before in the way of government propaganda, must have thought that the millennium had come as we heard the minister dilate upon the alleged virtues and excellences of the bill he was presenting. But there must have been a rude shock—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I would ask hon. members to moderate their voices. I cannot hear the hon. member who is speaking.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. FLEMING: It was with a dull thud, Mr. Speaker, that we turned back to the bill itself to see how far this puny measure fell short of the glowing description of it given by the minister. Again we are driven back to meditate upon the contrast between the fine words used by government ministers and the sorry performance that we see in actual fact, the usual contrast between the glowing praise they heap upon their measures and the disappointing reality of those measures themselves.

In the present measure, Mr. Speaker, we have a bill which will not only disappoint this house, if the house is free in all quarters to express its true opinion, but will bring profound disillusionment to many people in this country who had been led to expect something really substantial in the way of justice for our aged pensioners. They had been led to expect great things by the government's own propaganda.

There has been a great build-up for this measure. It has been going on for a long time, but it has been proceeding at an accelerated pace since the speech from the throne. Nearly five months have passed since we listened to that speech on January 30 of this year, when the government first announced this measure to bring relief in the form of increases to old age pensioners, and here, after waiting for five months, we are offered this puny bill, a meagre installment on account of the lavish promises of the government.

What has been done in the light of this bill is to perpetrate a cruelty upon old age pensioners in this country who were led to expect from it a reasonable measure of help. I wish to return to a theme I touched upon briefly yesterday, because in this bill, and in the reasons given by the minister in his speech yesterday for seeking the support of the house for the measure, we see the government turning its back upon a position which has been recognized by parliament and by succeeding governments since 1931, namely, that the primary responsibility with respect to old age pensions and the provision of those pensions rests upon the federal authority and not on the provinces.

I refer to the fact that that principle has been embodied in our statute law since Mr. Bennett put it there in 1931; seventy-five per cent of the pension has been paid at the expense of the federal treasury. But in what the minister had to say yesterday, a clear attempt was betrayed—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I am sorry to have to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but it is impossible to hear him. There is too much noise in the chamber, and it is disagreeable not only to the member who is trying to make himself heard but to others who are listening and trying to hear what he has to say. I would ask hon. members to be good enough to refrain from conversation.

Mr. FLEMING: I was saying, Mr. Speaker, that the speech of the minister revealed an apparent determination on the part of the government to cast responsibility on the provinces with respect to meeting the needs of our aged people. What is the situation under this bill? Yesterday we heard, from both the minister and the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Croll), words of praise heaped upon the provinces which have been going farther than others in supplementing the inadequate old age pension to which the dominion has been contributing. Why? These are the provinces which were pictured by the minister and the hon. member for Spadina as setting an example which ought to be followed by the other provinces. In other words, the provinces are now to be asked to assume the ultimate responsibility with respect to old age pensioners. It is implicit in what was said yesterday in this house by the minister and the hon. member for Spadina, that the pension—even with the slight increase offered in this bill to the pension to which the dominion will contribute seventy-five per cent—is inadequate and therefore the provinces must make good any inadequacy. In holding forth that contention I say that this government is turning its back upon a principle which succeeding governments have acknowledged and which parliament has recognized ever since 1931.

Not only that, but this government is turning its back on and making a complete retreat from the proposals which it made to the dominion-provincial conference in 1945. The leading feature of those proposals with reference to the provision for the needs of the aged that the dominion should assume full responsibility for providing a pension of $30 a month without a means test to every person seventy years of age and over in Canada. Where is that principle today? This government has turned tail, has cast aside that principle and has made a complete retreat from it. It is absolutely idle for the Minister of National Health and Welfare to stand in his place, as he did yesterday, and have the temerity to say to this house that the government is keeping within the framework of its proposals of 1945. The fact is that this government has cast that principle and these proposals overboard and has beat a retreat from them.

Mr. MARTIN: Not at all, and the hon. member knows it.

Mr. FLEMING: The minister cannot expect to change the facts simply by having his tongue wagging incessantly in this house and interrupting hon. members.

There is in the bill before us another illustration of this retreat. Is it realized by the house that by inviting the provinces, as the dominion still does in this bill, to supplement an inadequate old age pension contributed to in part by the dominion, the dominion is saying in effect that if the result of the old age pension with the provincial supplement and earnings is to bring the pensioner's income to over $600 a year, the reduction which will be made does not fall on the provincial supplement, does not fall on the earned income, but comes off the dominion pension? Let us take an example of that. Suppose an old age pensioner earns $250 a year at odd jobs. The maximum pension is $360. Let us say the province in which he lives contributes a supplement of $5 a month, or a total of $60 a year. The total income of that pensioner would be $670 over the year. What becomes of the $70? That is taken from him. Is it taken off the provincial supplement? No; it is taken off the pension to which the dominion is contributing; and the more the provinces contribute by way of supplement in a case such as this where a pensioner earns some additional income, the more they are contributing to a reduction of the dominion pension. That is a fine state of affairs.

Mr. MARTIN: May I ask one question?

Mr. FLEMING: Well, I am told that I have only about ten minutes left.

Mr. MARTIN: It is an important question. In view of what the hon. gentleman said yesterday, does he know if it is true that the premier of Ontario as a result of the discussions in this house has raised the contribution to the extent that the pension is now $40?

Mr. MERRITT: This is a speech.

Mr. FLEMING: I am sure if the fact is that the premier of Ontario has announced that it is the intention of the government of that province to increase the supplement offered by the province to eke out the inadequate dominion pension, it is not as a result of anything which the federal government has done by way of providing for the old age pensioners, but is a burden which has had to be assumed by the provincial government as a result of the failure of this government to measure up to the responsibility which it has recognized since 1931, which it recognized again in 1945 and has turned tail on since.

We shall not soon forget, Mr. Speaker, that the dominion government increased by $5 a month, by order in council in 1943, the old age pension which then was only $20 a month, only after they had been driven to it by demands from all parts of the country. The same situation exists today. This meagre advance which they have proposed in the pension has been brought about only as a result of widespread demands throughout the whole country. It is the old story of this government being roused from its inertia only when it is driven. Apparently it must remain for those who sit on this side of the house, as well as for informed opinion throughout the country, to drive this government as long as it is in office and then at the first opportunity turn it out and make way for a government which will measure up to its responsibilities.

Mr. MACKENZIE: You tried it.

Mr. FLEMING: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. MACKENZIE: You tried it several times.

Mr. FLEMING: It seems that the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Mackenzie) is in the debate again. I should like to remind him that the government of his province—and he was boasting yesterday about the record of his province—said that it was increasing the old age pension in that province several months ago as a temporary measure while they were waiting for the dominion government, of which he is a member, to do something adequate.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I may tell my hon. friend that we led the way as usual.

Mr. FLEMING: Knowing the record of this government as we do, the house will be able to add two and two together and make four. Putting the speech of the Minister of National Health and Welfare of yesterday with the speech made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) in this house on March 28, I think it will add up to this, that the provinces which have been induced to come into agreements have been forced to buy a pig in a poke, and this is as much as they may expect to get by way of old age pension. Here is what the Minister of Finance had to say in this house, as reported at page 1841 of Hansard, when he was asked what was the meaning of the statement which he made in Toronto—

Mr. MACKENZIE: Order.

Mr. FLEMING:—when he said—

Mr. MACKENZIE: Order.

Mr. MERRITT: Paraphrase it.

Mr. FLEMING: I am referring to a speech by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. MACKENZIE: The hon. member must not quote from a debate of the present session.

Mr. FLEMING: He said that the dominion government would have to take account, in coming to negotiate with the provinces with reference to social security measures, the increase that the dominion had given in its successive offers to the provinces with respect to tax agreements, and the increase in the last offer was $26,000,000. The Minister of Finance intimated at that time that when the dominion government comes to sit down with the provinces and discuss a comprehensive system of social security, if it ever does, that $26,000,000 would be taken into account. Now you have the answer in the speech made yesterday by the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. MACKENZIE: A good speech, too.

Mr. FLEMING: These provinces which had been led by the dominion government proposals of 1945 to expect that the dominion was going to honour those proposals and assume the entire cost of old age pension for persons of seventy years and over without a means test, find that now they may expect to have the load cast upon them and that the ultimate contribution of the dominion is to be seventy-five per cent of the pension of $30, with the continued means test. There, it seems to me, you have the complete explanation, putting two and two together. And of course the dominion government, politically astute as it is, is now seeking to cover up the tracks it made in retreating from its proposals. It has cast about for a scapegoat, and is trying to find in the governments of Ontario and Quebec that scapegoat to excuse the dominion government for its failure to honour its own promises made in 1945. It will take a lot more than the kind of guff that was perpetrated upon this house yesterday by hon. members opposite, including the minister, to satisfy any sensible person in this country that the responsibility of the federal government for failure to honour its obligations rests upon anyone except the federal government itself.

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate my first words are of congratulation to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) for the splendid speech he delivered the other day and for his outline of the entire history of old age pensions right from its inception, together with the steps in social legislation which have been taken by the Liberal government of this country right from 1927 to the present date. As I sat here yesterday afternoon listening to the discussion I wondered if once again the old people of this country were going to be deluded by some of the speeches delivered by the opposition the other day; if once again this important subject was going to be made a football by the opposition, in an attempt to ride into office on the backs of our senior citizens. So today I am warning our senior citizens to take some of the statements made here yesteray afternoon not with a grain of salt but with a quantity of salt, because some of them were simply preposterous.

I am sorry the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) and the leader of the C.C.F. party (Mr. Coldwell) are not here, at the moment, because I have something to say about their speeches. Referring first to the remarks of the leader of the official opposition, let me say to the hon. gentleman and his followers that some of us are just wondering—though we are glad it has happened—why Colonel Drew has just seen fit to increase the pension in Ontario to $40 a month. They may say it has not been expediency, that it has not been pressure, that it has not been because of this bill. But why has he delayed until this late date in giving the poor people of the province of Ontario that to which they have been entitled for a long time?

Mr. FULTON: Why did the dominion government delay until this late date in giving them anything?

Mr. REID: My hon. friend does not see the point. After a great deal of pressure, and after having a look at this excellent bill, this morning Colonel Drew saw fit to rush in and get on the popular band wagon, so to speak, by giving the people in Ontario what he knows they should have had long ago. When I was a boy there was an old precept, to the effect that he who is faithful in that which is little is faithful also in much. As I heard the speech of the leader of the Progressive Conservative party, in which he wilfully endeavoured to chide this government for a reversal of its policy—about which I will have a word to say later—I could not help wondering about the poor people who left the province of Manitoba during his years as premier, and who told me about the terribly meagre allowance on which the government of which he was head was giving the aged citizen of that province. He was in office then; and so I am asking the people of this country not to judge a man entirely by his words but to judge him by his actions. I repeat: he that is faithful in that which is little is faithful also in much.

Mr. IRVINE: He was a Liberal then, was he not?

Mr. REID: He was a Liberal, so-called.

An hon. MEMBER: What are you?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. REID: Oh, they can call names if they like; it may confuse but it will not help the aged people of this country one iota. Let them go to it. Let the country realize that they are more interested in calling names and trying to howl me down than in hearing a discussion of this important question.

Mr. FLEMING: You are calling the leader of the opposition names.

Mr. REID: To continue with what the leader of the official opposition stated yesterday, in my opinion the half truths that were stated by him and by the speaker who followed today are more dangerous than whole truths. They may be termed by them political truths, but in truths' name it is not true, because here is the statement made by the minister on behalf of the government, at page 4283 of Hansard for yesterday:

> It is important at this stage to recall the proposals the federal government made in August, 1945, to the provinces with respect to a programme covering national health, public investment and social security. These proposals include a suggested scheme for a national old age pensions and old age assistance programme of a fundamental character.

Then on another occasion he said:

> Pending final consideration of these proposals at the appropriate time, when it is possible to join with the provinces in consideration of our joint social security responsibilities, it is not the desire of this government to embark upon any programme which would jeopardize in any way the eventual implementation of these objectives.

In the face of those words how can any man honestly say there is now any reversal of government policy in this bill? It simply is not true; it is not according to the facts. I well remember listening to the great debate from across the other side of the house regarding what we were doing to the provinces when we suggested we should go to London and ask for a change in the British North America Act. Each and every member of this house knows that under the British North America Act the provinces have certain rights and jurisdiction, and, as the minister rightly says, they are extremely jealous of them. Would the leader of the Progressive Conservative party, if he were sitting on this side of the house, deliberately do other than this government has done? Oh, no; the speeches that he would make if he were in office would be far different indeed. So I say to hon. members that they should not be carried away too much by some of the utterances which have come from the opposition so far.

Now I want to say a word or two with regard to the leader of the C.C.F. party. An hon. member reminds me about the promises that were made by Mr. Bennett. I am not going to talk about those promises; I am not going to hold the leader of the Progressive Conservative party to promises made by others years ago. Those promises could be quoted, but I am not going to waste time doing so, because that is all water under the bridge, and I believe there are more important things to speak about. To come to the statements made by the leader of the C.C.F. party, I agree with some of the things he said. In his opinion the pension should be the same in every province, and I entirely agree. Personally I think it should be national in scope. But the hon. member did introduce a remark about New Zealand, about the low cost of houses to rent in that country, and so on. Conditions in New Zealand is one subject to which I have given a little study. The other day I made a suggestion which I thought perhaps the hon. member had taken to heart, but evidently he did not. I suggested that the true guide in relation to actual costs in a country is how much labour a man has to expend for a suit of clothes, for his food, and so on. Yesterday something was said about the low rentals being charged in New Zealand. Well, one has only to remind hon. members that New Zealand farmers are getting far lower prices for their butter fat than are the farmers in this country, and have to pay two or three times as much for their machinery as our farmers pay. I have before me the official records, in case anyone doubts my statement. The price of butter in Canada at the present time averages 40 cents per pound. I have in my hand the latest dairy records of the dairy association of New Zealand, which is an official publication, and there the average price is around 31·48 cents per pound.

Mr. NICHOLSON: What is the cost of producing it?

Mr. REID: The cost of producing it? If they were paying in butterfat for some of the things they have to buy they would just have to pay about one and one-half times more in New Zealand than the Canadian farmer would have to pay. I will just give those figures.

Mr. NICHOLSON: It is an entirely different climate.

Mr. REID: I would like to have the whole afternoon to talk with the hon. member about New Zealand and Canada. I say that because I am proud of what this country is doing; I am not one who dangles something before our people, either, about what is being done in Russia or in any other country. I say there is no better country than Canada, and in no other are they in as good a position as we are in this country.

In that connection let me give just one more figure—and perhaps this will hold for a time the hon. member who interrupted. In 1943, if a farmer in New Zealand were buying a tractor plough of the same make and variety used in Saskatchewan or Manitoba, he would have had to put up 570 bushels of wheat, whereas in Canada the farmer in Manitoba or Saskatchewan would have been called upon to put up only 180 to 200 bushels, for the same kind of machine. That is quite a difference. We could spend the whole afternoon on New Zealand.

Mr. WRIGHT: Has the hon. member the figure for 1947?

Mr. REID: No, but I will tell you what I will do. You can ask about New Zealand in any year you like, and I believe I can show you that this country is much better off.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Are you proud of the Canadian old age pension plan?

Mr. REID: So far as it goes yes; and I will add that this process of making comparisons with other countries is not helping our aged people at all. Canada has treated its aged, destitute and other needy people better than any other country or government in the world. I realize that it does little good to make comparisons because we are not particularly interested in what other countries are doing. We are interested or should be more in what we are doing for our own people.

Mr. WRIGHT: Why not talk about it, then?

Mr. REID: Well don't interrupt so much. I will take you on with respect to New Zealand and a comparison with the country any time. I am proud of Canada and conditions generally here.

Then mention of Great Britain was made by the leader of the C.C.F. There again the same thing enters into the picture. I have before me the last statement of wages paid to the people in London. This is an official record right from Britain. I shall not take up a great deal of time to deal with it, other than to say that the highest wages paid to metal engineers in the shipbuilding trade works out at around $100 to $110 per month. Compare that with the wages paid in this country to our mechanics—and when doing so let us not overlook the fact that in England they work 47·4 hours a week compared to an average of only 44 hours.

I now pass on to something else. We are all I trust in favour of lowering the age limit somewhat, and increasing the pension further. But certain facts must be faced. None of us is entirely content with what the government has brought down, but we realize nevertheless that it will be of great assistance to our aged people. At this point I am going to urge upon the minister something which I am surprised to say has not thus far been mentioned in the debate. I suggest that when seven provinces of the dominion have come to a financial agreement with the federal government, steps should be taken then by the government to implement complete social security. I ask that, and I feel sure that if that step were taken the other two provinces would not be long before they joined.

Something should be said about the means test. Anyone who has spoken to our senior citizens realizes that the means test is one of the things which should be certainly done away with. I realize it is of no use to tell our aged citizens that in all countries in which we find a system such as we have in Canada, the means test prevails. There is no country—and this includes Great Britain, Australia and New Zealand, and all other countries which have social security measures—which does not have the means test. Personally I am in favour of doing away with it, because I believe that the sooner we get to complete social security for all our people, the better it will be for all.

I believe the heaviest burden falls on the women of this land. I am sure every hon. member has met women of fifty, sixty or sixty-five years who are ill or whose husbands have passed on and left them in straitened circumstances. There is no hon. member here who has not met persons who have not dissipated their earnings, or what little means they had, but who in after years have found themselves dependent upon their families or on charity. In many instances there are no families upon whom they can depend, and so must depend upon some organization to help or tide them over to the end. I am sure every hon. member could say he has met with many cases such as I have described. Therefore I say no one person, or no one member of any party, should claim that his party is the sole champion of the unfortunate and the aged.

I look forward in the near future to a far better deal for our aged citizens. For a moment of two I shall place before hon. members a few important figures. According to the latest figures given by the income tax branch, out of a total of 4,101,980 workers receiving incomes, 3,449,990 earn $2,000 or less per year. In other words, if one goes further into these figures he finds that only fourteen per cent of the people are earning between $2,000 and $5,000. Then, those who talk about soaking the rich must bear in mind that while perhaps there are a few well-off people in this country, the number is not as great as some would have us believe. There are about 47,000 with salaries ranging between $5,000 and $10,000 a year; and 14,307 with salaries between $10,000 and $25,000. Those with more than $25,000 number only 2,750.

I am not particularly interested however at this time in the higher income brackets, because the income tax branch takes care of them—it takes care of them fairly well indeed. However I am more interested in those in the low income groups. We find that in 1943 there were 524,696 earning less than $1,000. To me those are startling figures. I cannot visualize a young man marrying and raising a family under those circumstances, who could find himself with anything at all left to take care of his old age.

I say that when one realizes these facts he cannot help rising in his place in the house to champion the cause of the less fortunate who have never had enough in this life to save for their later years. I should like at this point to read one paragraph from a letter—and I believe it should be read, because to my mind it is important. First of all may I say the giving of pensions as a means of social security is a good thing particularly because it lengthens the lives of those who are up in years. The letter I have before me is from Mr. Creighton, who is in charge of the administration of old age pensions in British Columbia. He says:

> On more than one occasion observant officials of old age pensioners' organizations have remarked that the lives of many of their members have definitely been lengthened by the receipt of the pension. They assert with evident conviction that this is due to the added sense of security which even this modest income gives them. These expressions of opinion, and the awareness of the rapid lengthening of the life-span of people generally, interested us in doing some research work to find out how well British Columbia pensioners really are doing relatively in the race for longevity.

He proceeds to point out that a survey was made, and it was found that in 1928, the year the pension was first paid in British Columbia, there were 210 male pensioners who died at an age of about seventy-seven years. In 1944 the figures show that of 810 male pensioners who died, the average age was something more than seventy-nine years. They come to the conclusion from these figures that the pension has had the effect of adding about two years to the life-span of these aged citizens.

One could go on setting out the benefits of social security measures, and especially old age pensions to our senior citizens. Another striking example of what social security can do is found when one looks at the life span of members in the other place. I have seen them go in there sick and half bent over, so much so that you would think they would not last long, and the week after their appointment you would hardly recognize them; the way they would revive was just wonderful. It seems to lengthen their span of life. If that can be done for those who in most instances are fairly well off, just what will it do for the under-privileged?

I am sorry in a way that the leader of the Progressive Conservative party made a comparison between raising the members' indemnity and old age pensions. However, I noticed that he did not get up and denounce the increase when it was brought in, nor did he say that he would not take it. Nor did I hear him say one word about the $2,000 being tax exempt. I am willing to go just as far as he, and if he wants to have it taxed I will support him. I believe it should be taxed. But he never said a word. Now he gets up and makes a comparison which I think is not exactly fair.

As to increasing pensions the question may be asked: Can we afford it? Of course we can afford it. In Switzerland they have a wonderful philosophy. In that country they sacrifice something in peace time rather than wait until a war comes. This country of ours made great sacrifices during the war and did its full share. Perhaps it did not do as much as Great Britain and other countries, nevertheless our people rose to the occasion during the war. If we had the philosophy of Switzerland and were willing to do a little more in peace time, I believe our nation would be the better for it.

Let us look also at our bank balances. I am not saying that bank balances represent our true wealth, because after all, real wealth consists of labour and material things. In 1939 there were 4,846,000 depositors with $2,530,200,000 standing to their credit. In 1947, in spite of all the cry against this government that we had gone to the demnition bow-wows, some 6,902,000 depositors had to their credit $5,803,445,396, more than double the amount of 1939. When one considers those figures one cannot but come to the conclusion that this country can afford more for our aged. We have afforded it for our children; why not afford it for our aged people?

In British Columbia the unemployment insurance people made a survey of those seeking employment, and they found that life is getting more difficult for people in the forty-five years and over age group; it is harder for them to get employment. Perhaps we are losing sight of the principle that the life of every individual who reaches a certain age should be used, not just spent. We are not doing our duty fully by providing old age pensions alone. I believe we are drifting to the time where the aged people may become the forgotten men and women. We will have to take note of the conditions under which they live, and of course provide an adequate amount upon which they can live.

Because of superannuation and annuity schemes many business concerns today are reluctant to engage people who are forty-five years of age or over. In the government service, where superannuation applies to all permanent employees, age may be a determining factor in employment. There is a place in life for people of all ages, provided they are competent. I have just been reading a booklet put out by the Department of National Health and Welfare which is under the jurisdiction of the minister in charge of this bill, from which I should like to quote as follows:

> Fitting the older worker into gainful employment is becoming more urgent every year as the age composition of our population changes. In 1971, it is estimated that more than five million Canadians will be over 45 years of age. At that time, 36 per cent of the population will be in this age group as compared to 26 per cent today.

I think we could very well take stock of what has happened in Great Britain. In that country it has been estimated that only some eighteen per cent of the workers are carrying the entire nation—a staggering figure. I am warning the people of this country not to let us go so far in that direction that our younger people will be carrying the entire nation. We must take steps to see that useful employment is provided for all who are able to work. The very fact that superannuation and annuity schemes are becoming so popular is evidence that the people of this country are social security minded. I am just afraid that we may be drifting in the same way as Great Britain has drifted. Some evidence was given before the immigration committee, and if hon. members wish to look this up they will find it on page 207 of the proceedings of that committee of Wednesday, May 14. A most interesting table was given by Mr. Forsey of the Canadian Congress of Labour, I believe, which shows that in 1921, 2·8 per cent of our population were seventy years of age and over and that by 1941 this percentage had increased to four per cent. I merely mention these things to bring home to our people that something more than merely providing pensions will have to be done. We shall have to take stock also of a class of our citizens who are below sixty or sixty-five years of age and who are unable to find employment because of the age limit restrictions of superannuation schemes which have been put into effect by dominion and provincial governments and many industrial employers.

I see my time is going on, but before resuming my seat I want to say that in my opinion we should have or aim at an old age pension of not less than $50 per month and $75 per month retirement allowance under a social security scheme. No one in the house has ever quoted figures to show whether $40, $50 or $60 is enough. There are some in receipt of pensions who may be able to get by nicely, but there are many of our citizens who have rent to pay, who have food and clothing to buy who certainly cannot get by in our towns and cities on less than $50 a month or more.

I have no apologies to make for getting up in my place and advocating increased pensions for senior citizens, which should be the same in every province. The rate of $50 a month is not too much and that should be our aim, with at least $75 a month under a social security scheme for those who are deprived of employment, with the means test removed and with a lowering of the present age limit.

Mr. STANLEY KNOWLES (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, when we strip the verbiage to which we were treated yesterday by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) from this debate, together with all the argument and crossfire we have had since, the simple fact is that this House of Commons now has before it a proposal that $30 per month be made the basic old age pension for Canadian citizens. That implies that we in this house, intelligent, responsible representatives of the people, are to be asked to approve the suggestion that old people can live on $30 a month. Mr. Speaker, it simply cannot be done.

Mr. MARTIN: No one ever suggested that.

Mr. KNOWLES: I am glad to hear the Minister of National Health and Welfare make that interjection. In other words he knows himself that it cannot be done, as does every hon. member. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that after you have used such words as the minister used yesterday, when in one place he said "ultimately" and in another place he talked about long range plans, about moving stage by stage and not upsetting the balance of the social security plans, about doing things within an over-all framework, and so on—after you have heard all these words, after you have listened to the pounding of desks, such as we heard during the remarks of the last speaker, the plain fact still is that we have before us a proposal for an old age pension which is disappointing and utterly inadequate to enable our elder citizens to live in comfort, indeed to live at all.

Last year the present minister of national health and welfare was Secretary of State. In that capacity he had the honour and the privilege of piloting through this house an historic piece of legislation which makes it possible for us to be known as Canadian citizens. It seems to me that he should be hanging his head in shame to have to bring into the house this year a proposal that Canadian citizens, when they reach the age of seventy, be asked to live on $30 a month. It is an insult to citizenship; it is an insult and an affront to the members of parliament to bring such an inadequate measure before us. The Minister of National Health and Welfare knows, as well as all the rest of us in the house do, that this amount is inadequate, and I am sure that he knows from experiences of his own how distressing poverty is in the lives of old people. I am certain that in the cabinet he must have fought for something better than this. It seems to me that he should not be willing to continue in a government which asks him to stand by a measure so inadequate.

During the past number of months we have had a great deal of publicity leading up to this measure. We had the promise in the speech from the throne on January 30 that the Old Age Pensions Act was to be amended, and then we had a definite promise from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) on February 4. On that occasion he was not able to tell us just when this measure would be before us, but he did say that when it came down it would include all that we had then, on February 4, and something more. Well, I suppose there are those who will argue that $30 is more than $25; but as a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, in terms of the cost of living today as compared with what it was a few months ago, $30 today is not worth as much to old people as $25 was on February 4. I submit that in practice that promise has been broken. Our old people are not to get more than they had on February 4. In terms of food, clothing and shelter, they are to get less than they had then. It seems to me, therefore, that this was no occasion for the boastful kind of speech we had from the Minister of National Health and Welfare yesterday; it was an occasion on which he should have come into this house in sackcloth and ashes.

The bill which is before us and the speech which was made yesterday by the minister make two obvious admissions. Those two admissions are made in two ways. First of all there is the admission that $30 a month is not enough. That admission is made by the fact that the ceiling on the total income of old age pensioners is raised by this bill to $50 for a pensioner living by himself and to $90 for a married couple. I submit that these figures, $50 for a single pensioner and $90 for a couple, should be made by this government not a ceiling but a floor. The government should be coming before this house with a proposal to guarantee that our Canadian citizens, given the right last year to call themselves such, when they reach the age of not seventy but at least sixty-five should be guaranteed that for the rest of their days they will not fall below the standard of living which could be obtained at these figures.

The admission that $30 a month is not enough is also made in the appeal that the Minister of National Health and Welfare made yesterday to the various provinces. He appealed to the provinces that already have certain supplements in effect to continue these supplements; he appealed to other provinces to add to the $30, a frank admission that this government is not discharging its responsibility to our elder citizens, because he asked that the provincial governments take on part of that responsibility.

Mr. MARTIN: I made no such appeal.

Mr. KNOWLES: I suggest to the minister, who seems to be enjoying putting the remaining part of his speech in the speeches of other hon. members, that he go back and read his speech and see what he actually said.

Mr. MARTIN: I made no such appeal, and the hon. member knows it.

Mr. KNOWLES: The other admission that is given in the minister's remarks of yesterday is this, and I suggest that it accounts for the bombastic way in which he presented this measure to the house. The admission is that so far as the old people of the nation are concerned, at least those in the four western provinces, this measure does not provide any increase at all unless the provinces continue to pay their supplements. This amending bill sets a basic pension of $30 a month.

Mr. MARTIN: No, it does not do any such thing.

Mr. KNOWLES: As a matter of fact in one sense the minister is correct. It does not even guarantee that there will be a pension of $30 a month.

Mr. MARTIN: You have not read the bill.

Mr. KNOWLES: I have read the bill carefully.

Mr. MARTIN: I shall give you a lesson later in the evening.

Mr. KNOWLES: The bill, Mr. Speaker, does not—in legal language—provide any basic pension; it does say that the federal government will pay seventy-five per cent of $30 a month, or of what the province pays, whichever is the lesser. In other words a province can pay $20 or even $10 a month under this new act and it would be in keeping with the language of the bill itself.

Mr. MARTIN: Read the bill again.

Mr. KNOWLES: We shall be reading it during the committee stage and I hope to goodness that we can get some changes made in it. But, as a matter of fact, as I was just saying, the minister knows that unless in the case of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia, they continue to pay their supplement there is no increase at all as a result of this bill, because in these provinces $30 is already being paid as the maximum pension.

I may say also, Mr. Speaker, that the minister knows that there will not be any increase in the eastern provinces, in Quebec and the maritimes, if you like, unless they agree to the increases.

Mr. MARTIN: That again is not true.

Mr. IRVINE: What is true?

Mr. KNOWLES: I am beginning to doubt the minister's understanding of the bill that he has brought before us.

Mr. MARTIN: I cannot give the hon. gentleman understanding.

Mr. KNOWLES: The bill clearly says that the federal government will pay seventy-five per cent of $30 a month, or of what the province pays, whichever is the lesser. That means for example, that Quebec or New Brunswick can continue, by agreement with this government, to pay $25 a month and draw seventy-five per cent of that amount. There is no guarantee that $30 will get to the pensioners in these provinces through the passing of this bill. It is no wonder that the minister had to indulge in so much boasting yesterday; it is no wonder he has had to interrupt every speaker who has spoken since during the course of this debate.

Mr. MARTIN: Because you are wrong, that is why.

Mr. MacINNIS: Here is one member who is not wrong.

Mr. KNOWLES: In connection with the relations that the bill proposes to be made with the provinces, I may say that this strikes me as one of the worst features of the legislation that is now before us. I find it difficult to reconcile this feature of the legislation with the loud preaching about Canadian unity that we get from the benches opposite. For several years now the provinces have been telling their old people who have appealed to them for higher pensions that the responsibility rested with the federal government, and in that contention I say the provinces are right. But because the federal government has been so slow in coming through with any kind of increase, provincial governments of all political stripes have had sufficient moral responsibility to their people to realize that they had to do something for them pending action by this government. And so in Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia—Conservative, Liberal, C.C.F., Social Credit, and coalition—we have had an attempt by provincial governments to fill in the gap and give their people something pending the time when this government may act. Each time these governments have made it clear to their people that these were temporary grants that they were making until such time as responsibility was really recognized by the federal government.

At long last we got this year, in the speech from the throne, the promise that the Old Age Pensions Act would be amended, and our elder citizens across the country, particularly in the western part of Canada, which I know best, took heart. They felt that at last the responsibility for them, which rightly belongs here at Ottawa, was being recognized.

Now what happens? The government comes down with a proposal for a basic pension of $30 a month, and the minister stands in the house and admits that $30 is not enough to live on—he admitted it today again by an interjection in the course of my speech a few moments ago—but appeals to the provinces to make additions to the pension to bring it to $31.75 or $33.75, or $40 or $50 or whatever it really ought to be. This is not only an admission that $30 is hopelessly inadequate. It is a course that helps to bring about disunity in the country. The only fair and sensible basis for dealing with this matter in a country like Canada is to recognize the complete federal responsibility for old age pensions. I shall have a little more to say about that in a moment, but before I do I want to express my deep regret and bitter disappointment that the government not only failed to raise the amount to something adequate, but failed to meet some of the other pressing demands in connection with our elder citizens.

The failure to abolish the means test is utterly reprehensible on the part of this government. The failure to bring down the age has no logical justification at all; and, as other members have been rightly pointing out during the course of the debate, the failure to recognize the need for other services simply throws out of court completely all claims which the minister and all his colleagues make to any interest in social security and human welfare. It is just so much talk. The least they could have done would have been to bring in some sort of plan for medical services for our old people. As a matter of fact, that is one of the main features that were included in the petition which the leader of this group laid on the table of the house some weeks ago, signed by over a quarter of a million citizens, for it included a request for free medical, hospital and dental care.

I have done a little figuring in connection with this matter on the basis of what the experience of the Saskatchewan government has been in providing these services to the old age pensioners in that province. My reason for mentioning this is not to get into a political debate but to show what it would cost to meet this request, and how niggardly the government is in failing to come through with it.

Since the government of Saskatchewan instituted free medical, dental, optical and hospital care for all old age pensioners in that province, they have found that it costs an average per pensioner of $33.70 a year. I would like to break that figure down.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The hon. member will realize that if I gave him latitude to continue his remarks in that direction I should be obliged to do the same for other hon. members. I would ask him to confine his remarks to the principle of the bill which is before us.

Mr. KNOWLES: That is what I am seeking to do, Mr. Speaker, and if you detect me wandering from the proposal to amend the Old Age Pensions Act I shall be glad to be called to order. You will notice that I am not going to New Zealand, nor am I talking about dairy butter and such things.

And hon. MEMBER: Who did?

Mr. KNOWLES: The last speaker went all over the map.

[Mr. Knowles.]

Mr. SPEAKER: I think the hon. member will agree that what he was saying to the house when I called him to order was not relevant. He was discussing the social policy of the province of Saskatchewan, whereas we have before us a bill to amend the Old Age Pensions Act.

Mr. KNOWLES: What we have before us is a bill to amend the Old Age Pensions Act, which is supposed to concern itself with the welfare of Canada's old people. I find, according to the census of 1941, that in that year the total number of Canadians sixty-five years of age and over was 767,815 and the total number of Canadians in 1941, seventy years of age and over, was 450,091. I am taking this figure of seventy years and over, rather than sixty-five, because it is the figure that the government still has in the bill. I am suggesting that this bill should have included provision for completely free medical care at least for the 450,091 Canadians who are seventy years and over. I know, although I have not the exact figures before me, that the number in that bracket has increased since 1941. I would suggest a round figure of 500,000, which I am sure is liberal. On the basis of the experience in Saskatchewan, where completely free medical services have been provided at a cost of $33.70 per old age pensioner, this means that it would cost only $16,850,000 to provide completely free medical, hospital, optical and dental care for all Canadians seventy years and over.

What the hon. member who preceded me has said about the longevity that comes from security applies particularly to the value of having medical care. I suggest that what it would mean to all our Canadians who are seventy years of age and over to have the guarantee of all the medical and hospital care they need simply cannot be measured by such a small sum as $16,850,000. Even if the government sticks by the bill the way it is and refuses to accept some of the amendments we should like to see made to it, I hope that the Minister of National Health and Welfare, in his capacity as head of the department, will give consideration, even after this bill is passed, to implementing such a programme of free medical services for our elder Canadian citizens. Even if that benefit were given to all those sixty-five years of age and over, on the basis of the figure of 767,815 which I have given, it would still cost only $25,000,000 a year.

I now come back to the question of federal responsibility for old age pensions. I look upon old age pensions not as a form of charity and not as a social service. It is largely because it has been viewed in that light that people have argued about provincial responsibility. It is rather a matter of security; it is a matter of the rights of citizenship in a country the economic forces of which are controlled largely by the federal government. This has been coming into the thinking of our Canadian people and our leaders across the years. In the election of 1930, Mr. Bennett, then leader of the Conservative party, promised the electors that if he were returned to power he would raise the federal contribution to old age pensions from the fifty per cent, at which amount it was then, to one hundred per cent. In 1931 the government of the day brought before this house a measure to implement partly—and I suppose that is pretty good for an old party—the promise which had been made in the election of the year before. The amount was brought up to seventy-five per cent, but Mr. Bennett and his party are on record as believing that the federal government should pay one hundred per cent. In the course of that debate in 1931 the present Prime Minister called upon Mr. Bennett to implement his promise. I want to read one or two quotations from what the present Prime Minister said on July 27, 1931. First of all I quote from page 4197 of Hansard, and this is the present Prime Minister speaking:

> So my right hon. friend need not regard any agreements existing at the present time as being either a bar to action or a cause for delay in implementing the pledge he made to the electorate that there would be a national old age pension system on a one hundred per cent basis.

He went on to quote from Hansard some remarks along the same lines made by Mr. Cahan, a former secretary of state, and then said this:

> That, I think, is advice that might well be heeded at the moment.

A little later, at page 4198, the present Prime Minister, after proposing a dominion-provincial conference, said this:

> Let the dominion, if so agreed, take over in its entirety the administration and control of old age pensions.

The present Prime Minister went on to say, in the second column on the same page:

> I am just as strong an advocate of provincial rights as any person can be, but I do believe that the people of Canada sent us here not to represent the provinces but to represent the interests of the dominion.

In 1943 the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Ilsley) who was then minister of finance and in charge of old age pensions, made a similar declaration in the course of a debate on that subject, as reported at page 5419 of Hansard for July 24, 1943—this is the present Minister of Justice speaking:

> I wish to say that I myself am in favour of old age pensions being within the jurisdiction of the dominion parliament.

Then we have had the Rowell-Sirois report, the whole point of which was that in view of Canada's economic structure, if we are to provide for Canadian unity and minimum social standards, we must do some of these things on a national basis. That too was the meaning, as I take it, of the proposals made by the dominion government to the provinces in 1945. Yet now, after all this development of the realization that old age pensions, as a mark of the security that should go with citizenship, is a responsibility of the federal government, we have the minister coming in yesterday, on June 18, 1947, and proposing that this house approve an inadequate pension, and that, in turn, the provinces be asked to add to that in varying amounts. For example, he suggested that Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta should pay a pension of $33.75. That would mean this government paying only 66 per cent of the total pension the pensioners would receive there, and the province paying 33 per cent. He also suggested that British Columbia might pay a pension of $38.75. There again, since this government's contribution would be only $22.50, that would be a split as between 58 per cent paid by the federal government and 42 per cent by the provincial government. Instead of moving on to 100 per cent the government is moving back toward the fifty-fifty basis, long since recognized as obsolete and unfair. Today the Minister of National Health and Welfare stood up and boasted of the fact that he has jockeyed the premier of Ontario into adding another $10 to the pension; in other words, that he has jockeyed Ontario into taking on part of this government's responsibility. I am glad that the people of Ontario are getting another $10, but I suggest it is a crime the way in which our old people are simply tossed back and forth from dominion to province and made the victims of a political football game, such as we have been having for months and years.

Mr. MARTIN: Does the hon. member think we shall get action in Saskatchewan now?

Mr. KNOWLES: There we are. I hope that is on the record.

Mr. MARTIN: Shall we get action?

Mr. KNOWLES: That is a supreme example of the irresponsibility of a man who calls himself a minister of the crown. He says: Do you think we shall get action in Saskatchewan by not discharging our responsibility here and by throwing it on them?

Mr. MARTIN: On a point of order, the hon. gentleman has used a term which I believe to be unparliamentary. I will not ask him to withdraw it, because I am surprised that he ever used it. But I do ask him to answer my question. What will Saskatchewan now do as a result of this bill?

Mr. CLEAVER: Will they pay the $40?

Mr. KNOWLES: I hope that Saskatchewan, along with the other provinces, will still continue to press for recognition of the fact that the responsibility for old age pensions rests with the federal government. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, a couple of years ago this government made certain proposals to the provinces, including Saskatchewan, and asked them to make certain commitments in terms of taxation arrangements, in return for which the people of Saskatchewan were to get an old age pension of $30 a month at age seventy without the means test, and old age assistance from sixty-five to sixty-nine on a fifty-fifty basis. Saskatchewan, along with six other provinces, has fulfilled its part of that bargain. They made their agreement with this government, but the people of that province who were supposed to get old age pensions, old age assistance, public works programme and other things as a result of that agreement, are not getting them. Yet here in this house—

Mr. MACKENZIE: What will Saskatchewan do?

Mr. KNOWLES:—as part of this disgraceful football game that goes on back and forth between the two old parties—

Mr. MACKENZIE: My hon. friends are the biggest politicians in Canada.

Mr. CLEAVER: Will the hon. member answer the question?

Mr. KNOWLES:—we have the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) yesterday and today complaining, and condemning the government because they do not implement their proposals, when as a matter of fact it is a prominent figure in their party—and rumours are that he may be more prominent as time goes by—who is helping to block complete agreement with respect to the dominion-provincial proposals of 1945.

Mr. FRASER: He is not; absolutely not.

Mr. MACKENZIE: What is his name?

Mr. KNOWLES: His name is Drew; and he has a friend by the name of Duplessis. On the other hand my friends across the way sit there and forever put the blame on Drew and Duplessis in such a manner as to give some of us in this house the impression that they would be completely nonplussed if Drew and Duplessis should agree. Then they would be in the position of having to implement their proposals.

Mr. FRASER: Didn't Drew get more money for Saskatchewan and the other provinces? Certainly he did.

Mr. KNOWLES: The fact of the matter is that if this government really wants to implement their proposals, the long range objectives the minister talks about in this house and in the speeches he makes throughout the country, they are in a position to do so right now; and I contend they are being irresponsible to the people of this country in not going through with the proposals they have made.

Mr. MARTIN: Then you refuse to answer my question?

Mr. KNOWLES: I have answered the question.

Mr. MACKENZIE: How about Saskatchewan?

Mr. KNOWLES: I am not a member of the legislature of Saskatchewan or the government of Saskatchewan. I am a member of this parliament. I will give this as an answer to my hon. friend, from an authority I think he will accept; that is, the present Prime Minister who said at page 4198 of Hansard for July 27, 1931, following a quotation from the same page I gave a few minutes ago:

> I submit that is, or should be, our first concern in all matters between the provinces and ourselves. The provinces have their own representatives who will feel a corresponding obligation.

Mr. MACKENZIE: That is the answer, is it?

Mr. KNOWLES: The answer is that I leave the representatives of the provinces to discharge their responsibility. My responsibility—and I am not going to be deflected from it by the statements of the minister—is to press this government to recognize its responsibility to our old people. My hon. friend knows that just as well as I do.

Mr. MARTIN: My hon. friend is quite fair and quite correct; his responsibility is to this house, and so is ours. But will he not accede to this suggestion, that he might also direct his remarks to Saskatchewan and ask them now, as a result of this bill, to bring about an increase in that province?

Mr. KNOWLES: As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, good as it is for the old people in the province of Ontario to get the extra $10 they are going to get because of this jockeying that is going on; good as it was in the western provinces for them to get the extra $5, and good as it would be for them to get even more, in the long run it simply delays proper consideration of this whole problem. I am interested in the people of Saskatchewan. I am also interested in tne people of my own province of Manitoba, and the people of Quebec and of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick. Where are they in this picture?

Mr. MACKENZIE: What about British Columbia?

Mr. KNOWLES: Yes; even in British Columbia they might get better consideration than they have been shown thus far. But they are not going to get it by simply making our old people the victims of dominion-provincial or interprovincial warfare and competition. The responsibility rests here; and I am glad to see the minister wagging his head up and down, which means that he agrees with me.

When one talks about this question of federal responsibility the question also can be raised, what about the cost? I want to dip back into Hansard again. It is a very interesting institution, this business of Hansard recording in black and white the things hon. members have said. I find that back in 1943, at page 5420 of Hansard, the present Minister of Justice, then minister of finance, was replying to a request of the then hon. member for Burrard, now one of those fellows who have had their longevity stepped up by being put in the other place, and told him that in his view the provinces should take on this matter of increasing old age pensions because of the substantial surpluses they then had. Let me quote:

> I do not think there is anything unreasonable or uneconomical or obsolete about the view that, when the provinces have changed their position from a combined deficit of perhaps $20,000,000 before the war to a combined surplus of from $60,000,000 to $70,000,000 today, while we have changed our position from a balance before the war to a deficit of over two billion dollars today, the people who have the primary responsibility should take the thing in hand.

That is the sort of remark the then minister of finance made a number of times during the war; I have the references here, but I will not bother giving the rest of them at the moment. That was a position we all remember quite well; he kept telling us time and again, "Oh, the federal government has a deficit. The provincial governments have huge surpluses. They are the ones who should increase old age pensions." If that kind of argument was logical then, it is logical now. Remember, this year with great boastfulness the Minister of Finance told us this government was now reporting a surplus, not of sixty to seventy million dollars as all the provinces together had back in 1943, but a surplus of over $350,000,000. Well, if surpluses of those days in the provincial financial statements should have been turned into improved old age pensions, I suggest that a surplus of $350,000,000 in this government's financial statement should be turned into a much better deal for old age pensioners than they are getting under the bill now before us.

I see my time is nearly up, and I want to put in just a word in reference to the blind, about whom I shall have something more to say when we get into committee. It has been pointed out already by the leader of this group that the provisions for this particular class of Canadian citizens are hopelessly inadequate in this measure. As a matter of fact they should be covered by a separate measure entirely, and I hope that before long we will get to that stage in this country, for it is long overdue.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that this whole case which is being made in the course of this debate by members on all sides of the house should not be looked upon merely as a matter of sympathy for old people. The statement has been made a number of times that no party has a mortgage on sympathy for our old people, and we all agree with that. The point I wish to make is that this matter of granting old age pensions should not be thought of as something that is done out of sympathy or out of pity for those sometimes referred to as "poor old folks." That is not the proper basis at all. Old age security is a matter of right, and what we should be building up here is a programme of security for all Canadian citizens; and our concern in this debate is not just for the so-called "aged poor"—I dislike that phrase immensely—who are now in their advanced years. We are also concerned about security as a symbol, as something that is achieved by Canadian citizens who live their lives here, who work and contribute to the wealth of Canada, and who have something to look forward to in their declining years. It is a symbol of something that can offset the fears, the insecurity, the feeling of frustration that comes over so many human beings when they realize that life consists of working from one depression to another and never having anything very sure to look forward to. The importance of this debate, the importance of old age pensions, as I have already stated, involves sympathy for our old people but it goes far beyond that. What we should be doing is building security. I contend that either we build security in this country or thousands of Canadians have died in vain. Either we build security or our way of life becomes too vulnerable to last in the kind of world we are in today. For the sake of democracy and freedom nothing is more important than that we establish security for Canadian citizens, for all our citizens. There is no better place to begin than with old age. The present government has failed to do that, but the fight for security goes on.

Mr. F. D. SHAW (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, prior to the introduction of bill No. 339, to amend the Old Age Pensions Act, it was my fervent hope that the bill would be of such a character as to render unnecessary a prolonged debate. Unfortunately my hopes have been shattered tragically. I was also hopeful that the changes proposed in the Old Age Pensions Act would render it unnecessary for us to engage in certain types of debates which from time to time have already cropped up.

I sincerely hope that throughout the remaining hours or days of the debate—whatever time may be registered—we can at least keep this matter wholly and completely above the realm of party politics. It has been said, and rightly so, that no party has a monopoly on the interests and welfare of our pioneer citizens. But we all have a responsibility, and I for one fervently hope that that responsibility will be recognized and carried out. Possibly I was too optimistic when I assumed that since this is the twentieth anniversary of the passage of the Old Age Pensions Act, and also the twentieth anniversary of the Prime Minister's acceptance of leadership of the government in Canada, some satisfactory legislation would be placed before us. I thought that in the light of these anniversaries, and of the further fact that we have a new and young minister in charge of the bill, something would be brought forward which all of us could praise to the skies.

But I was altogether too optimistic. Only recently I decided to look back through history in an effort to determine whether or not we have made any reasonable progress in connection with the treatment of our pioneer citizens. I found, sir, that we have made some progress because I learned that primitive peoples disposed of their aged in the simple and straightforward fashion of dashing out their brains with clubs. We have gone beyond that. I have learned further that among some primitive peoples it was the custom simply to abandon the old people and leave them to die. I was going to say we do not do that—and possibly I should not say that. We are modern, or at least pride ourselves upon our being modern. We pride ourselves, too, upon our civilization. We contend that we are progressive and that we are Christian. No, we could not tolerate such inhumane treatment as was accorded the old people of primitive time. Our developments render those means more or less impossible. It is essential that we apply methods which at least are less repulsive.

Mr. JOHNSTON: But more barbarous.

Mr. SHAW: Today, in effect, we say to our pioneers, "If you manage by hook or by crook to survive until you are seventy, you may become eligible for pension." I place emphasis upon the word "may"—all the emphasis at my command. Then there are provisos—and it is with respect to many of these provisos that I feel most bitter. And before proceeding further let me say that while I may not display a great deal of heat, it is not because I do not feel that way. By the utilization of a vast amount of control I manage to suppress some of the feelings I harbour.

I have said there were provisos of extreme importance, one of which is associted with the iniquitous means test. On previous occasions I have said that through the provisions of that test we pry into the most personal affairs in the lives of these people. It is a continuous process, too. Periodically we go back to pry—at least once a year, and in some instances more frequently.

The second proviso, associated with the first, is one which seems to indicate that if upon some previous occasion the individual did have a few hundreds or a few thousands of dollars, and neglected to invest the sum in an annuity, with the result that the money disappeared, that person is not eligible for pension. Recently no less than four cases in one community came to my attention. It so happened that some years ago these poor unfortunate people had some money—not a great deal, but some. They were asked why they did not keep it and why they did not invest it. Because the answers were not satisfactory to the officials those people were completely deprived of pensions.

Then there is another proviso which has to do with relatives of our older people. I know the act is not always administered in the way it could be, so far as the degree of viciousness is concerned; but when I learned that the department may go to the son-in-law of a prospective pensioner to ascertain whether he is in a position to support his father-in-law, it made me sick.

Mr. JOHNSTON: And so it does everybody else.

Mr. SHAW: I am sure it does. I recall not so long ago assisting an applicant in the preparation of his form. Perhaps I should not have done it, but after reading the form I became so much disturbed that I said, "Write on it 'it's none of your damn business' ".

Then there is another proviso which is wrapped up with a multitude of baby provisos. This one refers to residential qualifications. I am not saying there should not be some residential requirements. But when I see some of the methods employed in a determined effort, so it seems, to deprive persons of their just dues on this ground, I am greatly exercised.

We come, of course, to the matter of establishing age. It does not matter whether a person is so old and decrepit he can barely move; it does not matter whether fifty persons looking at the individual would place his age at one hundred, he must still produce proof before the pension is paid. I remember an old lady of about seventy-five who for some reason or another could not procure a birth certificate. Evidently there was something lacking in the census record. Finally the officials said to her, "Well, there is still another door open to you. If you can find some one who was present at your birth and who can complete an affidavit to the effect that you were born on that occasion, then we will grant you a pension". Such a ridiculous thing! I suppose such an individual would have to be from ninety to a hundred years of age to be able to complete that affidavit. Just how many such persons were present at these births? They do not usually call in all the neighbourhood. How many can produce the evidence essential for the establishment of age?

I know that the pioneer citizen advances certain arguments in support of his right to pension. He points out that possibly for fifty years he has struggled in order to develop Canada. He may have gone into some undeveloped backwoods area and helped to bring that area into production to add substantially to the wealth of this great nation. He says, "I have played a most important part in putting Canada in a position where today her production is valued at $10,000 million to $11,000 million." He also points out, as was indicated by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low) last night, that he has paid $20,000, $30,000 or $40,000 in taxes during the years he has been a resident of the country. He points out, and rightly so, that perhaps on one occasion he served in defence of this land, and he reminds us that in many cases his sons and his grandsons have also served in that capacity. It makes him bitter to realize that after all that, if he is still unable to provide for himself between the ages of sixty and seventy if he cannot meet all the conditions laid down and applied at the age of seventy, he is not receiving, from that land which he helped to build, justice in the smallest degree.

Many of these older persons point out that prior to the terrible depression they were in such a position that had things continued as they should have continued, they could have made adequate provision for their old age. Hundreds of them lost almost everything during those bitter years. They attained an age when they could not make recovery. Were it not for the fact that governments were responsible for the depression were it not for the fact that governments did not take the action they should have taken to alleviate the distress which prevailed at that time, his argument might not have been quite so good. He says, "I am willing to argue that I cannot be expected to secure and carry out my assignments in connection with employment." It is recognized by all reasonable persons, and it has been emphasized already in this debate, that competition in the labour market is becoming more intense all the time. Men over fifty years of age are finding it desperately hard to secure employment. Why should they, after all the working years they have put in, be expected upon attaining those ages to go out and seek work? I contend that their services are not required for the continued welfare of this country.

Then finally he says, "We found $20,000 million during the war for destructive purposes. We thought we were paying for it while it was being fought, but we find now that it has to be paid for completely." He says, "If that could be done, that which reflected the best productive capacity of this country, then surely Canada is in position out of the vast production of this day to make sufficient available to guarantee a standard of decency we deserve."

Running parallel with those arguments are the observations of the officials to these persons and the rest of us. We are constantly advised of the great debt and the financial obligation of interest associated with it; we are told that Canada must honour these obligations, that we cannot add to this debt the amounts essential for the welfare of these people. That argument is advanced, and it is also pointed out that our present rates of taxation are tremendously high. They argue that we cannot possibly increase taxation if that is necessary—I say it is not—in order to make adequate provision for these persons. They endeavour to beat them down on that point.

They are told, "You cannot blame us for what you lost during the depression because that depression was an act of God." This man is told that his sons were adequately compensated, because they preserved their own freedom. He is told that he can find work if he wants it. I have heard that argument offered in connection with certain cases. He is told that the increasing proportion of older people in our population may later create an intolerable burden if we grant higher rates of pension to those who are now past sixty years of age. As a matter of fact, the same argument is used when we advocate increasing the pensions paid to those above seventy years.

Then we come to this extremely interesting argument that is advanced. It is said by government spokesmen, and the minister was as guilty as the others, that they expect that eventually their long-range programme will materialize and then these persons will be infinitely better off than they are today. That is small comfort for the individual who is in distress today. I am not one of those who contends that the government has abdicated the position which it formerly held in respect to this matter; I am not going to say that this bill is a reversal of government long-range policy. What I am saying is that it does not deal adequately with the problem which confronts us today.

The minister may talk all he likes about unemployment insurance, family allowances and veterans rehabilitation benefits, but he knows and I know that those things do not in any way alleviate the distress which is today facing so many of our older citizens. They may be part of an over-all long-range policy —they are commendable and I am not criticizing them—but for heaven's sake let us divorce them from the problem with which we are now confronted.

I have referred already to this question of proof of age. I sincerely hope the government will find it possible to revise the regulations covering the establishment of age. When I look over the average payments by the provinces it fills me with horror. When you find these persons getting less than one dollar a day in actual cash it makes you wonder, especially when you realize that, all government statements to the contrary notwithstanding, the cost of living today as compared with pre-war years is completely staggering. Let us take food and clothing alone. I do not have to deal with these, but anyone should realize how hopelessly intolerable the situation is today, and goodness knows even during the pre-war years at the prevailing rates the situation was pretty hopeless too.

Those provincial governments which have extended medical, dental, optical, hospital and other services to their people are certainly to be commended, I do not care what the complexion may be. Possibly competition between provincial governments is a pretty fair thing. It seems to me that sometimes it is the only way that some persons do receive the justice which they deserve. But to those provinces which have not extended the services, I say, do it. If we are able to do it in the western provinces, the provincial governments elsewhere should be in a similar position, possibly not to extend the same degree of service, but certainly to extend some service in that respect to their people. I note too often when we talk about living costs—and I referred to it a moment ago—the old age pensioner has it indicated to him, directly or indirectly: Well, after all, the cost of living is pretty high and your pension is pretty low, but you should thank God you do not live in China. That is small comfort, but that, sir, is in effect one of the answers we constantly receive.

I do not like to hear hon. members continually going aboard to find that something there is better than or worse than something here. My philosophy is, let us make this country the very best. That is our concern. The thing that makes me feel very sad is the fact that these pensions are reduced in many cases on the slightest pretext. I cannot refrain from telling this story. In a community with which I am quite familiar we have an old gentleman of eighty-three years of age. He is a wonderful individual for that age. He is anxious to work; he does work; he has an old team of ponies; he has an aged cow. He has three or four chickens; possibly they have reached the maximum of production and just about laid the last egg. That old fellow goes out with the old team of horses. At Christmas time, for instance, when it was very cold, he peddled trees from door to door; he came to my house when the temperature was 40 degrees below zero. That man raised his own family and adopted two children. One of them is now around thirty years of age and served with distinction in the recent war. His little girl is eleven years of age. That poor old fellow's pension was cut down to $6.25 a month. After constant fighting we got it back. After quite a number of years I think it is now at the maximum. I know this is just one case, but I ask, is it isolated?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. SHAW: I am sure it is not.

Mr. MITCHELL: Who would be the administrator?

Mr. SHAW: All right; I expected that question. Let us not lose sight of the fact that the Old Age Pensions Act is a federal act; that it is administered by the provinces under the strict supervision of the dominion which pays seventy-five per cent of the cost. In fact—

Mr. MARTIN: That is not right. Will the hon. gentleman permit me? The hon. gentleman will agree that that is not an accurate statement. The regulations are the result of a joint conference of the provincial pension authorities and the federal government. The regulations are administered by the pension authority, and if in the particular instance to which my hon. friend is referring there was a grievance I am sure he must admit that it was the provincial authority—in this case Alberta—who was responsible, and no other authority.

Mr. SHAW: Actually the minister has not changed my mind one bit. I possibly have had a little more to do with this than he has, and I am telling him that the federal government, which pays seventy-five per cent, holds the big stick. The regulations under which the pension is paid are the creature of the dominion government which pays the seventy-five per cent, and the provinces have very little to say with respect to the nature of these regulations.

Mr. MARTIN: No.

Mr. SHAW: Let me also suggest—

Mr. MITCHELL: My hon. friend knows that that is not so.

Mr. SHAW: Are the accounts audited by the federal government authority?

Mr. MITCHELL: All public money is audited.

Mr. SHAW: And audited strictly in the light of the regulations which are laid down, as I say, primarily by the federal government. I am reminded that every estate is checked over as well. You know, Mr. Speaker, it interests me when the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mitchell) interjects, because I have had occasion to read more than one speech he delivered during the middle thirties when he sat in the opposition ranks, and I could probably quote him in defence of every argument I have advanced today. But I have more important things to do, and I would rather use myself as an authority.

Mr. MITCHELL: I was talking old age pensions when my hon. friend was not even a member of the House of Commons. I signed the agreement which brought old age pensions into existence in Ontario.

Mr. BLACKMORE: All the more reflection on the minister.

Mr. SHAW: I should like to ask the minister if he is proud of the thing as it stands at the present time. I do not want to deny the minister any happiness which he may procure from the realization that he had something to do with this; but I simply say to him that when he sat in the house as a member of the opposition he was just as vehement in his argument in defence of justice, which we are still fighting for, as anyone over on this side of the house, and I certainly hope—

Mr. MITCHELL: And still am.

Mr. SHAW: —that in view of his proximity to the Minister of National Health and Welfare he will use strong arm methods if necessary in order to carry out the very things which he believed in when he sat on this side of the house and which he says he still believes in.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Don't forget the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott); go to work on him.

Mr. SHAW: Under this proposed bill certain changes are forecast. Certain of these changes are welcome, it is true, but it amuses me the way the government emphasizes this question of outside income, because to the great majority of our elder people it means absolutely nothing. The great majority of them will be limited to the payments made under the provisions of the act; whether they are permitted to earn $200, $300 or $10,000 it will make no difference, because for them the employment is not available. In many cases their health would not permit it were the employment available. As I see it, we can discard outside income so far as it applies to this act.

Mr. BENTLEY: They could sell Christmas trees.

Mr. SHAW: Yes, there are still quite a few out there.

Mr. BLACKMORE: And be docked for it.

Mr. SHAW: Yes, he would no doubt have his pension cut because he showed a desire to do something further in his declining years to assist this great country.

Mr. COTE (Matapedia-Matane): This is another gift off the Christmas tree.

Mr. JOHNSTON: You want to tax him for it.

Mr. SHAW: On two or three previous occasions I brought up something in the house in connection with old age pensions, and I am still waiting for an answer. I trust that with a new minister the explanation will be forthcoming. I can at least expect an attempt to answer it. When a man becomes seventy years of age and qualifies for pension he will secure the maximum; let us say for illustrative purposes, that it is $30 a month, as it is in some places. If he has a wife who is under seventy, so far as the actual pension payment is concerned she is completely ignored. In other words they as much as tell him he should not have been fool enough to get married. At least he should have married someone as old as he was—or she should. It works both ways. I wonder if, when they look upon a wife who happens to be sixty-five, they think that there might be still a couple of working years left in her. That is something I cannot understand. They completely ignore the presence of the wife; because, if the man is a widower or bachelor he gets the same amount as though he were a married man. Of course, the old question of outside income might come in, but once again you can drown that as far as this bill is concerned.

I think I am safe in assuming that the citizenship qualification is to be eliminated, and that is a good thing. I understand there are to be modifications in the residential requirements, and I commend the government for that too. I understand also there will be a new arrangement for balancing off accounts as between the provinces, and that is proper. I commend the government for it. But that is about all that I can commend them for.

I regret that in this year 1947 we have not been able to offer our pioneer citizens something more than we are giving them. We have constantly boasted of what we are able to do in this country, and I may say to the government that they never hesitate when it comes to something that they consider it desirous of going ahead with. Costs never seem to concern the government so far as some other things are concerned. They boast about the great productive capacity of the country, and all that these people are asking for is an effective claim against enough of this production to enable them to live out their lives in decency.

I say that so long as this act remains on the statute book as it stands we had better keep our mouths shut. I have faith in the minister; I have not lost it all. I simply hope that he will within the cabinet shake things up as far as he can, even by using physical force, and I am sure the Minister of Labour will help him. I am not going to say more on this occasion. I am absolutely opposed to the present rate of pension. I expected the Minister of Labour to bite at that one. I thought he would say, "Well, are you going to vote against it?" He realizes as well as I do that another $5 to the old age pensioner will mean something. I am not one to deprive the pensioner of another $5, although I feel mighty cheap in playing a part in offering him that paltry sum. I am unalterably opposed to the means test as one of the most vicious things. The Minister of Labour in 1933 dealt with that and said that the pension should be paid as a matter of right. In fact, he said, it is nobody's business what you earn. I commend the minister for that.

Mr. MacNICOL: He was right then.

Mr. JOHNSTON: Does he back it up now?

Mr. MITCHELL: Don't forget the qualification. Give the whole story.

Mr. SHAW: I noticed, in reading the minister's speeches, that he qualified his statements, but I was giving him the benefit of the doubt when I took that statement. It started with a capital letter and ended with the proper punctuation mark. In fact, it was a paragraph unto itself, and I know enough of the language to conclude that I repeated exactly what he said in this house, though not verbatim. I recognize that.

I am going to continue pressing the minister for an explanation of what I mentioned a moment ago, namely, the utter failure to recognize the existence of the wife if she is under seventy.

Mr. MARTIN: That is not true. My hon. friend has not read the bill. He will find that there is provision to cover that situation.

Mr. SHAW: Only as far as outside income is concerned.

Mr. QUELCH: He must have brought the wrong bill in.

Mr. MARTIN: My hon. friend has not read the bill, and I do not think he listened to my statement.

Mr. QUELCH: You have a different interpretation of it from anyone else's.

Mr. SHAW: I do not know whether the minister's observation was directed to me, but he is rather presumptuous in it. I say to him that unless both the wife and the husband qualify for pension on the same basis they do not receive the pension in each case. Goodness knows I have had enough to do with these cases to know that. If the wife is seventy and if the husband is seventy and they meet all other conditions they can each get the maximum pension; but if the wife is sixty-five he is permitted to earn a little more per year than he would if he were single. But as far as the actual pension payment is concerned, it is not increased by virtue of the existence of a wife under seventy. If I am wrong I will apologize, but if I am wrong I shall be greatly astonished.

Mr. MARTIN: The hon. gentlemen is now right as he has just stated the position. We are all anxious to get the situation straight. The provision which the government introduced yesterday is one that is more generous in that particular than any similar provision in New Zealand or the United States, in Australia or Great Britain.

Mr. SHAW: As I said a while ago, I do not give one hoot about New Zealand. We are concerned with providing for our aged people a decent standard of living, payable on a basis that bears a proper and fair relationship to our capacity to provide that decent standard.

May I make one more observation before I conclude. If the minister reads my remarks with reference to the wife under seventy he will find that I did not change my position at all from the first statement I made. I said that from the standpoint of outside income the pensioner's position was improved. Even under the old bill, as far as outside income was concerned, his position was slightly better when he enjoyed the married status. But as far as the pension payment itself is concerned, the wife is ignored. I wonder how the women feel about a government which will simply write them off as it would a bad debt.

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): I should like to make just a few remarks on this bill. My hon. friend has read speeches of mine which I made a good many years ago when I was about as old as he is today. I like my hon. friend. He comes from one of the best provinces in this dominion.

Mr. SHAW: And the best part of that province.

Mr. MITCHELL: I have had a great deal to do working with the government of Alberta since I have been Minister of Labour and before that. Like the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis), I took part in the agitation for old age pensions years ago when they called us revolutionaries because we suggested such a policy. We were young people and we made many observations like some of those that have been made by my hon. friends, without responsibility, in this House of Commons in the last couple of days.

Mr. SHAW: Was the minister applying that remark to me?

Mr. MITCHELL: I was thinking of Mr. X; let me put it that way. I have a vivid recollection of the agitation that took place right across the dominion in connection with the establishment of the principle of old age pensions. I am not going to go into the history of this matter. It was introduced by the Liberal government of that day. Other people can take all the credit they wish for the crystallization of public opinion in that regard. In my opinion, notwithstanding views to the contrary, the greatest contribution made to the establishment of old age pensions in this country, and in the education of the people which is necessary before any forward-looking policy can be put into operation, came from the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada, and other labour organizations. I was closely associated with the trades and labour congress, and labour organizations can take an unpopular opinion and make it stick. May I say this with regard to political parties, and I do not exempt any political party in this House of Commons; as a rule, in a general way, they follow public opinion. But I remember the years of agitation until public opinion was crystallized and we established the principle of old age pensions in Canada.

This afternoon I mentioned, as I have mentioned before, that I was a witness to the agreement—signed by Hon. Howard Ferguson, a Conservative in the province of Ontario, and Hon. Peter Heenan, who was federal minister of labour—which established old age pensions in Ontario. Let us not wear our consciences on our coat sleeves. I think every self-respecting member of the House of Commons believes in the principle of old age pensions.

But we went into the thing blindly, as one does in many things. I believe that any nation which over a long period of time gives away something for nothing is placing itself in jeopardy.

Mr. SHAW: You are not doing that in this country.

Mr. MITCHELL: Wait a minute. Do not forget that I supported the principle of a non-contributory old age pension plan at that time. I often talked the matter over with the late Tom Moore, with whom I was closely associated. I think one error in judgment which we made was that we did not adopt a contributory policy from the start, as a result of which the old age pensioner would get the pension by right and not on the basis of charity.

Mr. JAQUES: That is not what we want.

Mr. MITCHELL: I know my hon. friends would print money and do it in that way, but I do not believe in their theory.

Mr. JAQUES: Piffle.

Mr. MITCHELL: My hon. friend says it is piffle. He knows my opinion about money; if it is not hard to get, it is not money. I believe that many of the troubles of the world today have been brought about by a nation which thought they could print their way out of trouble, as the Germans tried to do after the last great war. But that is a matter of opinion and has nothing to do with the matter now before the house.

Mr. SHAW: It has nothing to do with social credit either.

Mr. MITCHELL: I do not say this in a critical spirit, but I believe my Social Credit friends could render a service to the old people in Alberta if they would go back there and suggest to the government of Alberta that they follow the policy of the government of British Columbia, and, if I am given to understand it correctly, the policy of the government of Ontario, and raise the pension from $33.75, as I think it is there at the moment, to $40 a month, which it will be in those two provinces.

Mr. JOHNSTON: And let the government here get out from under as regards responsibility.

Mr. MITCHELL: My hon. friend talks about responsibility. That is an easy thing to say. He knows something about the constitution of this country, and you cannot laugh it off. It is my frank and candid opinion that the fathers of confederation builded better than they knew. When one is in a corner and wants to get out from under, it is the easiest thing in the world to say that they did not. I am not offering this as a criticism, but I know of no provincial government which is more conscious of its constitutional prerogatives than the government of Alberta; and I agree with them. I do not believe that the Creator ever meant that we should all be cast in a common mould, in a nation as big as Canada.

Mr. MacINNIS: Thank God for that.

Mr. MITCHELL: My hon. friend says, "Thank God for that", and I agree with him. I do not think we were ever intended to be cast in a common mould. I believe that there is strength in diversity and decentralization, which is, may I say—and I am not talking politically now—good sound Liberal policy and philosophy. There are those in this nation who would centralize everything. As I said before in this House of Commons, I was in Germany when Hitler put over his revolution. Any fool can govern a country with a bayonet in his fist as long as he does not stick it into himself. What happened there? Everything was centralized in Berlin. I point that out to the great centralizers who want to get out from under in this present argument, if they say that responsibility should be on a national basis rather than on a cooperative basis in connection with the matter now before the house.

I believe that in the light of experience it will be proven that the act passed in 1927 was a sound one. I do not think that any political party in this house has a first mortgage on ability or willingness to make provision for improved conditions for the people of this nation in the sunset of their lives. When the suggestions made to the dominion-provincial conference by this government are carried out —and we mean to carry them out—and when we move to a policy of old age pensions, with a reduction of age, based on the contributory principle, I believe it will be a tremendous step in the direction of a sane method of approaching this vital question in the life of this nation. We must remember this. With a contributory basis, there is the right to have some say in the administration of the money which has been contributed. We have heard a good deal about the means test, and I suppose we shall hear more about it. On a contributory basis, of course, the means test is not necessary because when a person contributes, he is justly entitled to the benefits of the plan. We have heard Great Britain quoted in this debate. If newspaper reports are to be believed, only this week a member of the British cabinet—a former member of a labour government; a member of the government of Lloyd George in the first great war—is placed in the position of having to make a public issue of his own position because of the means test in Great Britain. They have the means test for non-contributory pensions at the moment. I am not talking about whether the principle is sound or otherwise. What is done in New Zealand and Australia has all been pointed out. But let me say this to my hon. friends. All these social matters—and I am all for them, and have been all my life—in effect mean the redistribution of the national income of a country. I do not believe that a nation can have a body of rich people—as we see in some countries of the world today—and a mass of poor people at the bottom, and maintain its equilibrium as a nation. That condition, by its very nature, spells revolution irrespective of the country in which it exists. As these great schemes of social advancement are placed in operation we must be prepared—and I myself am prepared; I speak personally now—to pay the bill through taxation, as is being done in Great Britain, as we are doing in the Dominion of Canada, and as is being done in New Zealand, Australia, or any other country where these reforms have been placed in operation in the last generation or so. We must be frank and honest with our people and tell them that these schemes mean the redistribution of the wealth of the nation and require willingness to bear taxation in order that they may be put into force. I know some people in this dominion think it can be done in some other way. I have no objection to listening to their theories, but of course I still believe two and two make four, though I left school at a very early age. In connection with any of these schemes; whether it be workmen's compensation, where there is an assessment on the employer on the basis of the risk in the particular industry, which, of course, in turn is paid by the public generally so that in effect it is a tax; whether it be children's allowances; whether it be old age pensions; whether it be unemployment insurance, of course in smaller measure because that is contributory; in the same breath that you speak, in my judgment—and I know this is not good politics—you must tell the people frankly that this redistribution of the wealth of a nation can be done only on the basis of taxation. Those members who say in this House of Commons that we should do this here and that there; who advocate increased old age pensions and increased unemployment insurance, as the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) did this afternoon, cannot in one breath demand a reduction in taxation and in the next breath increased expenditures by the government of this country, as the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) has done.

Mr. KNOWLES: It needs increased production.

Mr. MITCHELL: Of course it does; and may I say this to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—

An hon. MEMBER: Look out.

Mr. MITCHELL: Don't worry about that. I don't need to look out; I have been in this business too long. I wish my hon. friend would preach to the working people of this country that the wealth of a nation can be expressed only in the unit of production of the people within the confines of that nation, and would not preach pie in the sky, the old socialist philosophy of the less you do, the richer you are.

Mr. KNOWLES: This is sheer nonsense. That is not what I have said at all, as the minister knows.

Mr. MITCHELL: Well, you interrupted me; you stuck out your neck for that one.

Mr. KNOWLES: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. MITCHELL: Any question you wish.

Mr. KNOWLES: The minister had something to say, and quite properly, about the part the trade union movement has played in building up the principle of old age pensions. Does the minister know what the trade unions think of the proposal of $30 a month?

Mr. MITCHELL: I do not know. Some people express opinions on acts of parliament before they read them.

Mr. KNOWLES: I have here a letter from the international association of machinists condemning it outright.

Mr. MITCHELL: I introduced a bill two days ago, I think it was, and before any member of this House of Commons received a copy of that bill some persons expressed an opinion on it. That is an easy thing to do. Getting back to my point—

Mr. IRVINE: Have you got one?

Mr. MITCHELL: Now, the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Irvine) and I are friends of many long years standing. He is a little more mellow than he used to be, like myself. He learns from experience

Mr. WRIGHT: He did not slip as far.

Mr. MITCHELL: Well, I don't know; he has been pretty well all over the lot. He has about boxed the compass.

Getting back to my point, when my hon. friend interrupted me I was saying the wealth of a nation can be expressed only in the unit of production within that nation; and in my judgment—though I am quite frank to admit it is a matter of opinion—you cannot increase the living standards of the people unless the unit of production is increased. Of course I speak across the board, not of the exceptions.

An hon. MEMBER: A vague generality.

Mr. MITCHELL: No, it is not. My hon. friend represents a farming constituency. Probably he never farmed in his life; nevertheless he represents that constituency. We are talking about production; and I think the farmers of this nation stand in a position unexcelled by any other group in the nation because they have increased their unit of production as individuals.

Mr. QUELCH: The price of that unit has increased; that is the most important point.

Mr. MITCHELL: I should like to develop that argument, but I have not time now.

Mr. QUELCH: I am talking about the farmer.

Mr. MITCHELL: So am I. What I want to point out, following the line taken by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, is that unless you increase that unit of production or at least maintain it, it does not matter how much you increase old age pensions, soldiers pensions, unemployment insurance or any other kind of insurance, because what counts is what you can get with the money you have in your hand.

Mr. KNOWLES: That is perfectly right, and we want the government to take steps to bring about increased production in this country.

Mr. MITCHELL: I have been drawn off my track by some of these interruptions, but in conclusion I want to say—

Mr. KNOWLES: The subject is old age pensions.

Mr. MITCHELL: That is right; but I can say to my hon. friend that I was talking old pensions before he lived in Canada.

Mr. KNOWLES: And don't forget to tell us that you signed the agreement in Ontario.

Mr. MITCHELL: Yes, I did.

Mr. MARTIN: Isn't that something to be proud of?

Mr. MITCHELL: I feel proud of it; and I also feel proud of the part I played in the establishment of workmen's compensation in Ontario.

Mr. KNOWLES: I think you should be proud of it, but I think you should follow the lead of the trade union movement, which asks for $50 a month.

Mr. MARTIN: Why do they not do that in Saskatchewan and Alberta and British Columbia?

Mr. KNOWLES: The responsibility is federal, and all the ministers know it.

Mr. MITCHELL: My hon. friend says the responsibility is federal. No one knows better than he that that is not so.

Mr. KNOWLES: It is so, and the minister knows it.

Mr. MITCHELL: Don't turn a sharp corner, now. No one knows better than my hon. friend the basic policy, how the grants in aid are actually made by the dominion.

Mr. KNOWLES: What about family allowances?

Mr. MITCHELL: My hon. friend knows about family allowances, too. He is not out in the little red schoolhouse now; he is before a jury of his peers.

Mr. KNOWLES: I offer my apologies to the noble lord.

Mr. MITCHELL: My hon. friend knows the constitutional basis for the establishment of family allowances. It is as clear as anything could be. The dominion has complete jurisdiction.

Mr. KNOWLES: That is right.

Mr. MITCHELL: Nobody knows that bettter than my hon. friend; and my advice to him—

Mr. KNOWLES: This is not charity or social service, which might be called provincial. This is security, a right of citizenship.

Mr. MITCHELL: My advice to my hon. friend is that he go back to Saskatchewan and make the same kind of speeches to the government of that province that he has been making to this government, and the same indirect reflections on the parties to his right and to his left. But I say that, whether you like it or not, the real driving force behind this legislation came from the trade union movement of this country.

Mr. KNOWLES: They want $50 now.

Mr. MITCHELL: My hon. friend was not in this country at the time I am talking about.

Mr. KNOWLES: I rise to a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. A good many times in this house the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mitchell) has introduced as an argument the fact that he was in this country before I was. I submit that has nothing to do with the case. I came to this country at a younger age than he did; and when I came here I was coming back to the land of my forefathers.

Mr. BENTLEY: And I was here before the minister. Laugh that one off.

Mr. IRVINE: He is not all here yet.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. The minister has allowed—probably encouraged—a great many interruptions. However I feel it my duty to remind the house that the minister has the floor and should not be interrupted.

Mr. IRVINE: What is the subject, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. MITCHELL: The subject is too interesting; that is the trouble. And if I might say so, if my hon. friends would stop interrupting and just listen for a while, it would be better.

Primarily, the men who are responsible for the establishment of old age pensions in Canada were the trade unionists of this country. And when I say that I am taking no credit away from the late member for Winnipeg North Centre, or from any other member from Winnipeg or any other place, irrespective of party. Let us give credit where credit is due. Old age pensions in British Columbia were introduced by a Liberal government. In Ontario they were introduced by a Conservative government. In Quebec it was a Liberal government, again; and so on, across the dominion. Let us not play politics in this, but give credit where credit is due. I say to hon. members from every province in the dominion: Here is the contribution of this government. Let those hon. members go back to their own provinces and make to the provincial governments the same kind of speeches they have been making in the House of Commons in this debate.

Mr. JAMES SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): Mr. Speaker, it is difficult for a back-bencher to follow a minister, particularly after that minister has covered the field as widely as the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mitchell) has done.

Mr. KNOWLES: He covered it widely, all right.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): It is also difficult for a back-bencher to rise in his place and be critical of his party. On most occasions, of course, it is the wise thing to keep silent, and do one's battling in caucus. However I should not like to remain silent on a matter which is of such great concern to the people of my province and of my constituency.

I can say to the minister who is piloting this bill through the house that the bill is a great disappointment to me, and it must be a very great disappointment to labour unions in my riding which have been such strong advocates of an improved scheme. And it must be a bitter, bitter disappointment to the old age pensioners of British Columbia.

Very high hopes were raised in that province and right across the dominion by the proposals in the green book of the dominion-provincial conference, which have already been referred to in this debate. I must admit that I stood on platforms and spoke with pride as to what the federal government would do in the way of better old age pensions, along the lines of what is contained in the green book. And so, when I find the present proposals so far from what was contained in the book I feel I must stand in my place, say my piece, and then, at the end, suggest what the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Gibson) and I intend to do about the matter.

There are four major things wrong with the bill. They are the amount of the pension, the means test, the age limit and the failure now to begin to introduce a contributory pension scheme.

I need not go into these subjects at length, because the basic principles have been repeated again and again for many years by all hon. members on all sides of the house. However adequate or inadequate the amount may have been before the war, I am sure no old age pensioner today could begin to provide for anything like an adequate standard of living on the pension proposed.

It is all very well to look back to 1926 when the government introduced old age pensions, and to say that it was never intended to be a living allowance, and that it was intended only to be as a supplement to the savings which an old person had managed to accumulate up to that time. But as the years passed, more and more attention has been paid to considering it as a total pension. The depression aided in this movement, because few of our old people were able to save anything between 1930 and 1940, to provide for their old age.

So today at least in my province—and I am sure in many other provinces—old age pensions are actually to the great majority of pensioners their total living allowance. The cost of living has greatly increased. We have seen the well organized trade unions fight for and receive substantial increases in their rates of pay, in an effort to compensate for the increase in the cost of living. And that cost of living affects the aged just as much as it does those who are today employed by industry or by the government.

More than that, as was pointed out recently by the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario (Mr. Macdonnell) there has been a downward drop in interest rates on bonds and securities, a good thing for the country but which has affected those people who put their money into government and industrial bonds in the hope that the returns from them would be of assistance in their old age. Because of those two factors, I say the present proposal, so far as amount is concerned, is quite inadequate.

I need not say much about the means test. It has already been described as being offensive, not only because it carries the taint of charity, but because, as was pointed out by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Shaw) there is a continual prying, again and again and again, into the personal affairs of these old people. Certainly it is a great discouragement to thrift, a point which was covered the other evening by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell).

There was brought to my attention a case which affected a postman in my constituency who had been retired on a pension of $52 a month. He was complaining bitterly that if he had not been so thrifty and had spent a little more on beer instead of contributing to the superannuation fund, upon his retirement he could have got what some of his fellow postmen were getting on retirement, a war veterans allowance of $60. He had applied and got the difference of $8. To him there had been absolutely no advantage to have, during the years in which he was working, tried on his own behalf to make some provision for old age, and not to rely upon charity.

I believe there is a growing tendency to rely too much on the state. Instead of encouraging this tendency with a means test, we should be going in the other direction and giving people encouragement to make their own plans for their old age. Certainly the removal of the means test would be the first step to encourage people to make their own plans for their old age.

So far as the age level is concerned, the employment situation in Canada is not so good for people over the age of sixty-five, or even those over the age or sixty. We know that. The government itself, one of the greatest employers in the country, will not employ anyone anywhere near that age. Most industrial firms in Canada now recognize that at sixty-five years of age a man's working days are practically over, and that the same applies to a woman at sixty. That is why industrial pension schemes set these age limits.

Then, there is one factor which makes the situation worse. There is the human factor that most men do marry girls a year or two, or perhaps more than that, younger. At the present time we have a situation whereby when the husband reaches the age of seventy he will draw a pension of $30, but his wife who is sixty-eight or sixty-seven years old will draw nothing. So that if they are destitute their total living allowance for the two of them is only $30 a month.

A few minutes ago the minister objected strongly to comparisons being made between this country and New Zealand, Great Britain and other countries. He said in that respect that by allowing the husband a little larger theoretical earnings we were compensating for it. I do not find it necessary to make that comparison. Let us look at our own legislation. We have another old age pension scheme in Canada which is known as the war veterans allowance, and referred to by the veterans as the burnt-out pension. The principle behind it is that service in combat prematurely ages a man, even though he suffered no wound in combat. As he becomes older, his nervous system shows the effects of shock and exposure to combat fighting. And so at the age of sixty we pay an old age pension to any man who has had combat service. When the man is sixty years old his wife collects too, and they receive the full burnt-out pension of $60, not $30. I suggest that it is not necessary to refer to New Zealand and Great Britain, but merely to look at the very good legislation passed by this government just last year in that respect, under the supervision of the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Mackenzie), to get a precedent for paying double pensions to the husband, even if his wife is not yet seventy.

The point about which I feel most keenly in this whole statement is the failure to make any specific mention of the introduction of a contributory scheme. One of the excuses or defences against going ahead with a larger pension scheme is the enormous cost. We talk so easily in terms of millions and billions these days that at times we forget we are a comparatively small country in population and that our tax bill bears heavily upon those who pay income tax. The figures which were offered in this house for a $50 pension at sixty years of age were $800,000,000 a year. Last year there were about 2,000,000 taxpayers, so that would mean an additional $400 to be paid annually by every income taxpayer.

The figure mentioned yesterday by the leader of the opposition was $560,000,000 for a pension of $50 at sixty-five years. There again, with the reduced number of income taxpayers this year that would mean almost $300 extra for every income taxpayer in Canada. While that may be some defence it should not stop the consideration of an adequate old age pension, because the way it can be done is to inaugurate now a contributory scheme.

The excuse immediately offered is that it would take a constitutional amendment and that we made our promises to the provinces that in all these dominion-provincial agreements there would be no suggestion of an amendment to the British North America Act. I think we can carry that sort of thing too far. I see no reason why the people of western Canada and the maritimes should suffer because of the obstinacy of George Drew and Maurice Duplessis. The government is wearing these excuses a little thin. I am quite sure there would be a much better feeling throughout the country if the government in announcing this inadequate measure, had said, "It is just a stop-gap for we are now preparing legislation for a contributory scheme which the provinces can, if they choose, adopt, but which at least will be a start toward the payment of pensions on a decent basis." Most of the people in my riding that I know do not want charity from the government. The labour unions in my riding say that they are willing to pay for their pensions during the period of their working days. The sooner such a scheme is inaugurated, the sooner the large sums necessary will accumulate and a great part of the present load can be taken off the government exchequer.

I am speaking, of course, in a critical fashion on this bill, but I cannot join wholeheartedly with the remarks of some of the opposition members. I was not in the least impressed by the remarks of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken). He ducked around, quite skilfully for him, what the Conservative party would do. At the top of page 4294 of Hansard he is reported as saying:

> . . . and it is further estimated that a plan covering people 65 years of age and over, at $50 a month with no means test, would cost this nation $560 million a year.

He gives no indication whether that is the committed policy of his party. More than that, he has a responsibility—after all, he is paid by the people of Canada to act as leader of the opposition—to suggest alternative programmes which are practical. He makes no mention of how that $560 million is to be raised each year, except by the old implication of the Tory party that it can be done by cutting out extravagance. The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar rightly challenged him on that—his party has been challenged before—and on other occasions the only extravagance which the Tories suggested could be cut out was the travelling expenses of the national film board.

Mr. FRASER: May I say that I can give you something on that.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): You were the one who suggested it; you have been challenged before.

Mr. FRASER: I can tell you what they are doing.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): Are you asking a question?

Mr. FRASER: Yes.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): Ask your question now and make your speech after I have finished.

Mr. FRASER: What they are doing there—

Mr. SINCLAIR (Vaucouver North): Ask your question. I will give the hon. member this credit; he is the one Tory who has suggested a way in which a little money could be saved. I want to say, however, that the people in the rural parts of my riding have a great admiration for the work done by the national film board, and would oppose reduction in their estimates.

Mr. FRASER: I can give you the whole story; I have it right here.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): You can speak after I have finished. As the estimates come out, on every item I should like to ask the members of the Tory opposition and the members of the C.C.F., who have shown a little appreciation of the difficulties of raising money because they have authority in Saskatchewan; "How much of this $560 million are you going to save on this item; how much do you want to cut out?" Instead of talking loosely with a complete lack of responsibility, they should consider the matter in that way.

The attitude of the Tory party is best described by a phrase which I am quite sure the leader of the opposition thinks be used unfortunately. He accurately disclosed the Tory outlook toward our senior citizens when he called them the aged poor. That is certainly a return to the Tory policies of the middle eighteenth century with their poorhouse system.

More than that, there are two provincial governments in this country which are Tory run, one openly and one under another name. Let them begin to measure up to what the poorer western provinces are doing, and then there will be some justification for the many remarks they have been making. We will watch with great interest when the estimates come up for the great slashes which the Tories have promised so that they can find $560 million a year with which to pay $50 at sixty-five years, without any increase in taxation.

The C.C.F. were a little bit more guarded. The real leader of the opposition is the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar. He has a little more expectation of being in this seat over here at some time in the very distant future. As I say, he was a little more guarded. He was not as explicit as the Minister of Labour, who got right down to the crux of the matter—taxes.

Out in British Columbia the C.C.F. are also quite guarded. Generally the C.C.F. in British Columbia are the revolutionaries of the party. That is the word they like to use. They are the great promisers. This spring they held a convention to which I have already referred. Colin Cameron, at one time member for Comox, was elected president. They discussed old age pensions at great length. Some of their delegates suggested, just like some C.C.F. members here have suggested, that we in the province should go ahead and give a $15 to $20 bonus. Mr. Winch, the British Columbia leader, answered, and I quote from the Comox District Free Press—this is interesting because this paper is published in the home town of the president of the C.C.F. in British Columbia—of Thursday, April 17, where he is replying to the suggestion that the C.C.F. as a provincial unit should pledge themselves to go on and increase the provincial old age pensions contribution. I quote:

> At the convention, house leader Harold Winch, referring to old age pensions, cautioned against committing a future C.C.F. government to permanent bonuses for which finances would have to be found.

[Mr. Sinclair.]

Mr. KNOWLES: That is right, the responsibility is federal.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): His friends at that convention did not think so. It was being urged that the provincial bonus should be supplemented. That is what they were wanting to do, but Mr. Winch seemed to think the mantle of leadership of the government was about to fall upon his shoulders and he was very guarded. That is the only reason I can think for the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar being a little more guarded than the hon. member for Neepawa, on where the money was to come from.

A great deal has been said about the generous pensions paid in New Zealand and Great Britain, the inference being that those socialist countries are the only ones which can provide a decent pension. I am amazed that no mention has been made of the pensions paid in the western states of the United States of America, which, after all, is the last great home of private enterprise, such as Washington, Oregon, California and, above all, Colorado. Colorado has a basic pension of $45 a month which is paid for by taxes on racing and liquor, two admirable sources from which to provide old age pensions. They have a most excellent system—my source of information is the Canadian Press account of last Christmas, which I do not doubt—under which they do not allow any funds to accumulate from year to year. At the end of each year they declare a bonus out of the accumulated surplus, and this year the bonus was $220 per old pensioner. The result was that the pension paid in Colorado amounted to $63.30 a month. Therefore I do not think a government has to be socialist in order to pay an adequate old age pension.

Having been a little critical of the government and the government's proposals, as well as of the remarks of the Conservative and C.C.F. parties, I think it is only fair that I should say at this time how I think the pension should be paid for. I believe it would have been a most excellent start to have brought in today the actual proposals which were made in the green book. The fact that Drew and Duplessis do not agree is neither here nor there. Seven provinces have agreed, and I am sure that if that offer had come forward the others would have agreed. The federal payment would be $30 as of right without any means test, at seventy, and I am quite sure that my province, which is now paying $16.75, would continue to pay $16.75 as a supplement, making an adequate old age pension. The federal government would also pay half of the pensions down to age sixty-five, which is getting the old age pension age limit reduced. It is true they were to have a means test there. Of course there is a defence for the means test. If you have only so much money in the national budget to devote to old age pensions then you should certainly see that it goes to those who need it most which means the means test does. There is a counter-argument, of course, that if paid to everybody, the rich would give it back in income tax. That is a fallacious argument, because even in the very top branch of the income tax there is at least a twenty per cent amount kept by the income taxpayer and in the lower branches the actual amount kept would be three-quarters. That amount would be kept by people who do not really need it.

I would suggest that the exact standard used in the family allowances be adopted. An hon. member said there was no means test in family allowances. But there is a restriction on a sliding scale up to $3,000 on the amount of family allowance given. The argument is used that those who have incomes above that level do not need the help; but to avoid the taint of charity everyone is paid as of right. I would suggest that if the means test for pensions at sixty-five in the green book proposals should be adopted, or even, if by unfortunate chance the present bill should go ahead as it is, that the same thing should be done. The old age pension should be paid as of right, and returns secured by our present income tax exemption on a sliding scale. Hon. members will notice that the total allowable earnings, announced by the minister, of the pensioner come very close to the bottom income tax salary or wage. Therefore there would be very little change there. It would remove the taint of charity, and it would also facilitate the payments of old age pensions across the country, as is the case in family allowances. I think, too, that the government could well copy their own act, the War Veterans Allowances Act and pay the double pension, not just permit double the allowable outside earnings, if any, but double pension to any man or wife who, on reaching seventy years of age, has a spouse just below seventy. That would be copying their own good legislation.

Lastly, and I think most importantly, a start must be made on a contributory pension scheme. The simple way to do it is as they did it in the United States, expand our Unemployment Insurance Act. We have the administration already set up, and an expansion of the unemployment insurance with a slight increase in premium would begin a contributory scheme for all the industrial workers in the country. The matter of finding funds then comes up. As has been pointed out by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mitchell), we must face up to it. Any scheme which is not contributory must be financed out of the public treasury which means payment of taxes.

I did not speak on the budget. I have spoken neither on the budget in the house nor on the radio to my constituents, because I had the feeling that it would have been a far better thing at this time to go ahead and enact an adequate old age pension scheme rather than provide tax cuts. It is quite true, of course, that both the Tories and the C.C.F. went after the government for not having made greater tax cuts, but at the same time ask for increased expenditures. Anybody who is paying income tax today is earning enough to live on. I do not think anyone in my riding, which is composed mostly of industrial workers, would have given great opposition to a lesser tax cut had they known that out of that revenue an adequate old age pension would be paid. For that reason I say that I cannot stand here and talk lower taxes and higher old age pensions. I believe in an adequate old age pension, and will forgo tax cuts to get it.

There is one last thing I should like to mention as a British Columbian. My province has been mentioned a great deal here in a congratulatory way. The remarks made by so many hon. members from the other eight provinces only go to show that they are envious of our record, for today everybody has been speaking very well of British Columbia. But the thought that is left in the minds of most members is that British Columbia is doing this because it is a rich province. British Columbia is rich in natural resources, but unlike Ontario and Quebec it has not been made rich by artificial laws, by the tariff, by exorbitant freight rates over the mountains, by the concentration of industries such as has taken place in Ontario and Quebec. Whatever riches we have we have got in the face of merciless competition from the central provinces, by being forced to buy our supplies in their protected markets and sell our goods on the open markets of the world. We have managed to keep ahead only by plundering our natural resources. Despite our difficult economic situation, the government out there has a remarkable appreciation of the plight of the old age pensioner. Of course we have many more old age pensioners per capita than any of the other provinces. There are two reasons for that. The first is the mild climate. An old age pensioner who is drawing $30 a month cannot afford to spend very much of that $30 on heating the room in which he is living, and so comes to British Columbia where a minimum of fuel is needed. The second reason is, of course, the fact that there is a higher pension paid there and old people are naturally attracted by this. That extra $5 is a very important $5 in the small amount paid to the old age pensioners. That is one reason why I cannot understand why the British Columbia government has agreed, as the minister says, to this new way of apportioning the provincial costs. If an old age pensioner has lived for the greater part of three years immediately preceding application in the province where he applies, that province is now to take the total cost. I foresee British Columbia paying old age pension costs for the whole of western Canada if that goes through.

I must say my feeling is that a basic old age pension sufficient to secure an adequate standard of living across the whole country is a responsibility of the federal government. But I also say that a progressive local government which feels that it should, because of either local wealth or local need, supplement that pension, should be encouraged to do so, as we are doing in British Columbia.

I had thought that to stand up today and simply talk and give my views would not be of much help, because they are not so very different from the views of most hon. members. The difficulty, however, of discussing old age pensions in this house is that we are speaking only with the facts and figures supplied from the government benches, and from those brain-trusters who are brought in to relay answers through the minister; but we have never had a good opportunity to take this legislation apart ourselves and to summon our own experts in a committee away from the committee of the whole.

It has been said in this house that no party has a monopoly on its interest in the problem of the old people. Unfortunately, however, the government has a monopoly on the preparation of legislation in that regard. My friend, the hon. member for Comox-Alberni came to me at noon today and suggested that perhaps we could do something about the matter. Instead of this bill being referred to the committee of the whole and the same vague sort of discussion being held again, this bill should be referred to the committee on industrial relations, where we could get before us some of the experts and question them ourselves. We could find out for ourselves exactly what it would cost the country to remove the means test, and what the constitutional difficulties are now in introducing a contributory scheme, and what the attitude of the provinces is—

Mr. MARTIN: It would cost $200 million.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): That is what you tell us. If it is to cost $200 million, then we should have the taxation people come before us and tell us in what way that money could be secured and what changes in taxes it would involve. The case of the old age pensioner could be much more fairly advanced and the plight of the old age pensioner more dramatically called to the attention of the country if, instead of this bill being referred to the committee of the whole after second reading, it were referred to the committee on industrial relations. Therefore, when it comes to that stage the hon. member for Comox-Alberni and myself shall so move.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): We are now dealing with the second reading of a bill to amend the Old Age Pensions Act. It brings into the act what has been done so far, including the start made in 1927 when the present government brought in the first old age pension scheme, as will be found in the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, chapter 156. By that act the dominion was to pay fifty per cent of the provincial expenditures. By an agreement with the provinces it was put on a fifty-fifty basis. By the revised statutes of 1931 that act was amended and the dominion increased its contribution from fifty per cent to seventy-five per cent of the provincial expenditures, and twenty-five per cent of the expenditures were carried by the provinces. By the statute of 1937 the blind, who should have been included long ago, were also added when they reached the age of over forty. I wish to state that, so far as I see it, the government have now gone seventy-five per cent of the way. They should go the whole way, because of the difficulties of this particular manner of doing business. I do not believe that it should be any part of politics. I do not believe that there is any room for party politics when we deal with so important a manner as care for the aged and afflicted. The problem is not political, but social only. After all, he that hath pity on the poor lendeth unto the Lord. The whole problem relates back to two important matters, overgovernment and overtaxation. We must remember that times have changed since the British North America Act of 1867, because there were no aeroplanes, no telephones, no radio and no automobiles when that act was passed. The development that has taken place in every direction since that time has resulted in overgovernment and overtaxation and waste in this country, and it is almost impossible for us now to deal with any social problem because of overlapping of jurisdiction and duplication of effort between the provinces and the dominion. The municipal system is an extension of the provincial system; in other words, we have one local system within another.

I should like to refer for a moment or two to the history of this question. When I first entered the House of Commons I pointed out, as I have pointed out many times since, that the larger municipalities of the country had instituted in the very early days of the century, in 1904, pensions for firemen, policemen, schoolteachers and others engaged in various services, on a contributory basis. As I say, however, owing to changed conditions it is impossible under the system we now have, and owing to the difficulties involved in the British North America Act, to deal properly in a contributory way with this problem. In the early days in Toronto we had a pension scheme, not contributory, whereby we paid $6 a week at the start and increased it to $12 for every employee over the age of sixty who was incapacitated or getting too old to carry on. In Toronto we have a local old age pension board, and I might say that the actual number of residents of our city receiving old age pensions in December of last year, the last year of record, was 11,425. They qualified under the act, and the amounts paid out totalled $3,672,000. At December 31, persons receiving blind pensions, paid to those over the age of forty, received $83,000. The city was required to provide office space for purposes of administration.

When I entered the House of Commons in 1922, I had a motion on the order paper with regard to this whole question of old age pensions. It was on the order paper the first day I came here, and in that motion I proposed that we should follow the system which had been followed in the old country, in France and elsewhere so as to give some direct aid to the aged by a modern system of old age pensions. Everywhere people were lodged in gaol or in homes of one description and another for no other reason than the fact that they were no longer able to make a living. They were too old to work. As every medical health officer will tell you, there is always a large part of the population who will be unable to work. There are about twenty-five per cent of the people who, from physical causes, find it impossible to earn a living. As I say, I introduced a resolution into the house in 1922, and Mr. Woodsworth, at one time a member of this house, put on the order paper a similar motion a few months later. Both resolutions were referred to the industrial relations committee and that committee reported favourably to the House of Commons, but evidently the members at large were not prepared to support the proposal. There were a few votes for it on that occasion. This matter was referred to last year by the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Nicholson), who gave a fair statement of what had been done up to that time by Mr. Woodsworth and myself.

In 1927 the present government introduced the first legislation dealing with old age pensions. I suggest that the government should go much further than it has gone. In fact it should go the whole distance. It is contributing seventy-five per cent, and with such economy as could be effected in the administration of other departments it might very well go the whole way. The minister has made a considerable extension under this bill. In 1940 the government's contribution was $29,141,000. Of course a stupendous war was on and not much could be done, but in 1941 the amount was $28,472,000; in 1942, $28,770,000; in 1943, $30,496,000. Then they brought in the blind. In 1944 it was something like $38,000,000 and in 1945 the amount was $40,722,000. Now it is $60,000,000 and, if I understood the minister's speech correctly, this year's bill is not final; it will go eventually to nearly $100,000,000.

So far so good, but one of the objections I have to this way of looking after the problem is the means test. I am opposed to it. It is well named when it is called the "means test". I know a family in Toronto with five children. The father died, having been unable to work for years, and he had been getting an old age pension of a total over the years of $472. After he had died they billed his estate, which was worth very little, if anything, apart from a small house, because this means test had to be applied.

Some provision should be made in these grants to take care of the high cost of living, because today a room costs more than the amount of the pension for one person. You have to pay the amount received by the pensioner, $28 or $29 or $30 a month, and sometimes it is almost impossible to get a room for that amount.

The blind were brought into this scheme and throughout the provinces, from Prince Edward Island to British Columbia, there is an average of $24 per person. I suggest that special consideration should be given the blind because they must have a guide, and they have to meet other expenses that persons not so afflicted do not incur.

I hope that in the recess of parliament some study will be made of this problem. The government should canvass the whole situation and we should have a national system of old age pensions, because that is the only way in which we can properly deal with the problem. The day has long gone by when it should be made a political football, something peculiar to the party system—"You did this; we did that", and all that kind of thing. Where do the poor people come in in the meantime? "Faith without works is dead."

Another objection to the system is, I think, the residence provision of twenty years in the country and the five-year residence rule in the provinces. That rule should be amended, because twenty years is altogether too long to qualify for a $30 pension. I hope there will be some improvement in the law. The government should make it a national responsibility and take it over from the provinces. Even if you pass this bill, you will have to make agreements tomorrow with the provinces, and that will take months, so that probably next winter no one will qualify to gain anything under the legislation.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): Several members prefaced their remarks in this debate by saying that no party had any monopoly of the concern for the welfare of our senior citizens, as the phrase has been used. I am quite willing to agree to that without any reservation. I have a particular interest in this matter myself because, among our group, as I suppose among all parties in this house, we try to have our members specialize in the things in which they are most interested or for the consideration of which they are best fitted. In the arrangement of work the matter of old age pensions was allotted to me. In the last two sessions I introduced resolutions urging this House of Commons to give an expression of opinion on the Old Age Pensions Act. On both occasions I asked for three changes in the act: reduction in the age, an increase in the amount of the pension, and removal of the means test. This afternoon I shall try to confine myself to urging upon the government that they take further action in those three vital matters.

Yesterday the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Mackenzie) asked the leader of this party, just as he was concluding his speech, if we were opposed to the improvements in the Old Age Pensions Act amendment which is now before us. That is an old political catch question. I want to reply to it right away and say that we will not vote against this bill as it is, although we consider it shamefully inadequate. I think the storm which the introduction of this bill has raised in this house, and what has been said on both sides, should be sufficient proof to the government that the measure they have introduced meets with the approval, neither of members of this house, nor of the people of this country.

When the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mitchell) spoke a little while ago, he said he favoured a contributory form of old age pension, so that the pensioner would get his pension as of right and not as a charity. Surely the minister did not want to imply that the pension now is a form of charity. Even as a form of charity it is inadequate. But for my present purposes I do not care whether it is on a contributory basis or whether it is paid out of the consolidated revenue funds of the federal and provincial governments. I contend that it is not now charity and cannot be defined as such. By and large, the people who receive monetary benefits under this scheme have earned their right to them because of their contribution as citizens of the country, and I object to any attempt to place it on the basis of charity.

The first point I shall deal with is the amount of the pension. When introducing the measure yesterday, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) said that this was in effect an increase of $10 a month.

Mr. MARTIN: No.

Mr. MacINNIS: I think that is what he said.

Mr. MARTIN: In statutory form.

Mr. MacINNIS: That is quite right. I was going to point that out, because the $5 previously added was by order in council. That makes the old age pensioners' benefit $30 a month. I should like either the minister or some other member of the government to explain how they came to conclude that $30 a month was an adequate pension. What was the test or the formula applied as a result of which they found that a person, after the age of seventy, could live decently on $30 a month?

Mr. MARTIN: It was never intended that they could.

Mr. MacINNIS: If the government did not intend that they could, they must have come to the conclusion that they could not. Having come to that conclusion, how is it that they still made the amount $30 a month?

Mr. MARTIN: And they could not live on $50 a month, either.

Mr. MacINNIS: If they cannot live on $30 and cannot live on $50, why have we $30 in this bill? That is what I want to know.

Mr. MARTIN: I might then ask the hon. member, why he does not oppose $50?

Mr. MacINNIS: Because I have a feeling that they could make a living on $50 a month. My friend shakes his head and I am glad that he does because it strengthens my position. If he wants to increase it beyond $50, he will have my support.

Mr. MITCHELL: Did my hon. friend say the pensioners could live on $50 a month?

Mr. MacINNIS: Yes. I believe they could. They would not have a very good living. I want to assure him that they could not live as well as he and I can live. Nevertheless I believe they could get by. But I do not think they can get by on $30 a month.

I know a great deal is made of the fact that the amount of income pensioners can have, over and above the pension, has been increased, and I am grateful that has been done. But those who receive benefits under this bill fall into two categories, namely, those who depend on the pension for their entire living, and those who have other income with which to supplement the pensions. The minister has said that they cannot live on $30 a month and that they cannot live on even $50 a month. I think there is general agreement that no individual in Canada can live on $30 a month and that if they are compelled to try to exist on that amount, it just means slow starvation. In this rich country, where we have demonstrated that we can produce so abundantly, I am of the opinion that no one should be asked to live on an income which means ultimate starvation.

Let us look at the situation as it really is. I obtained cost of living figures today from the bureau of statistics. Taking the cost of living index of 1935-39 as 100, as at May 1 of this year the cost of living index was 133·1. That was the general cost of living index. That is an increase of one-third in the cost of living since 1939. One-third of $30 is $10; and with the addition of this $10 the old age pensioner is where he was in 1939. In my own opinion he is even worse off, because the cost of living index for food, which was 100 for the period from 1935 to 1939, was 154·9 or 155 on May 1 of this year. Since those in the low income brackets spend a greater percentage of their income on food than those receiving larger incomes, consequently the $30 received by the old age pensioner is worth considerably less than it was in 1939.

Mr. MITCHELL: My hon. friend is quoting the food index, not the cost of living index.

Mr. MacINNIS: I mentioned both. The first was the general cost of living index, or the average of the various items, which is 133·1; while the food index is 154·9. So we can say that under this measure we are not really holding our own. It reminds me of those folk in "Alice in Wonderland" who had to run with all their might to remain in the same place. Here we are doing exactly what we have been doing all along the line by our reductions in income tax, the elimination of subsidies and so on. We are helping those who have something already and taking away from those who have not, even the little they have. So I would suggest to the minister and the government that the proposal made by this party early this winter, of $50 a month, is not a bit too high.

The next point I want to touch upon is the eligible age. When the Old Age Pensions Act was passed in 1927 the eligible age was set at seventy. I could never understand why it was done. I have a suspicion, realizing the familiarity of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) with scripture, that it was because in the ninetieth psalm it says the age of a man is three score years and ten, and they decided that if they made the age seventy, which is three twenties and ten, and made the pension $20, it would not cost the government much anyway as no one could live very long on that amount. And we are still sticking to it. I do not wish to bring into this debate any invidious comparisons as between what Canada is doing and what other countries are doing in this regard, but I will make a few comparisons. I should like, before doing that, to quote from the proposals of the dominion government to the dominion-provincial conference on reconstruction in August, 1945. On page 37 and other pages of this document considerable space is given to old age pensions, and I am going to quote briefly from those proposals because they express the opinion of this government at that time..

Today the question was asked as to whether Saskatchewan would now increase its supplementary contribution to equal that of British Columbia and Ontario. That question is one of those political catch-phrases that should not be used at a time like this. You might ask the same thing in regard to Prince Edward Island or New Brunswick or Nova Scotia or one or two other provinces. Some provinces in Canada can increase the amount of pension above $30 a month, but there are other provinces which, no matter how much they might desire to do so, cannot because of their limited financial resources. In the proposals made by the federal government to the conference in 1945 that fact was recognized. They said:

> Thus, in one province 28 per cent of all persons age 70 and over were receiving old age pensions in 1945, and in another province 57 per cent. Likewise, the amount of average monthly pension varies from $18.63, in one province to $29.41 (including provincial supplement) in another.

Then I want the minister to pay particular attention to this:

> Generally speaking, the need for pensions is, as might be expected, greatest in those provinces which are least able to finance such payments out of local revenues.

What is the use of all the tommyrot, asking is this province going to do this, or is it going to do that? As I have pointed out, several provinces, no matter how much they may want to increase the pension, cannot possibly do so, as the minister knows very well.

Mr. MARTIN: Does that apply to Saskatchewan?

Mr. MacINNIS: That applies to the province of Saskatchewan.

Mr. MARTIN: Did you read the last budget speech of the provincial treasurer of Saskatchewan?

Mr. MacINNIS: Yes; and I can tell my hon. friend that the provincial treasurer of Saskatchewan pointed out that the province's good financial position was due, in some measure at least, to the prosperity of this country resulting from the war; that perhaps prosperity on that scale will not continue, and they have to think of the future as well as the present.

Mr. MARTIN: There is a difference between the C.C.F. in opposition and the C.C.F. in power?

Mr. MacINNIS: Well, I would not disagree with my hon. friend, because I think to disagree with him on that point would be dishonest. All parties when in opposition say things and ask for things to be done which they do not say or do not ask to be done when they become the government. The minister's friends and indeed some of his colleagues in the cabinet are sinners in that respect, as well as others.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

[Mr. MacInnis.]

Mr. MITCHELL: It took some courage to say that, Angus.

Mr. MacINNIS: Well, I don't know; I realize that it affects your effectiveness as an opposition member, but during my time in this house I have tried not to ask the government to do anything I would not be prepared to do myself if I were in the place of the government. So now when I ask the government to increase the pension to $50 a month, I am asking them to do something I would do if I were in the government; and if it were not done I would walk out of the government. I will now put on record some of the government's own policies in regard to old age pensions, as presented to the dominion-provincial conference in 1945. The section to which I am referring is entitled "Deficiencies of the present scheme," and may I say this bill has removed very few of those deficiencies:

> (1) The means test is generally recognized as undesirable after a certain age. It has been noted that about 40 per cent of all persons of seventy years of age and over make application, satisfy the means test requirements, and receive pensions.

That is, forty per cent under the Old Age Pension Act as it is at the present time, which demands almost absolute destitution for qualification. Forty per cent of the people reaching the age of seventy years in this country, who make application for old age pension, satisfy the means test requirements and receive the pension. I say that does not speak well for the fairness of the distribution of wealth in this country. Then it goes on:

> There is little doubt that a very considerable number in addition are not able entirely to support themselves but are dependent upon their family and refrain from applying for pensions because of the embarrassment occasioned by the means test.

If you have not there all the arguments necessary for the removal of the means test, particularly after the age of sixty-five, then I do not know what other evidence can be produced. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has said, it is the government's own statement. Then:

> (2) The minimum age of 70 though convenient as a dividing line with respect to the payment of any kind of universal old age pension, is nevertheless too high in a number of cases of actual need. A strong case can be made for reducing the age limit to 65 in order to provide assistance at least for those in the age group 65 to 69 who are actually in need.
> (3) The statutory amount of $20 per month, although increased to $25 during the war, may still be too low as a national minimum.

That is an understatement, if I ever heard one.

(4) Any broad extension of the present plan would impose serious burdens on limited local revenues in a number of provinces. Even without such an extension, the costs will increase very considerably as the proportion of old persons in the population will continue to rise for 30 or 40 years.

In view of that, I ask this question: How can the government bring down a measure of this kind without a substantial increase in the amount of pension, and without a substantial reduction, if I may use that term, in the eligible age?

As I said before, I do not wish to make comparisons. I do not indeed want to say anything that would give my remarks any partisan or political connotation. But I must point out that, so far as I know, there is no other country, comparable in wealth with ours, which has an eligible age as high as ours, an eligible age of seventy years. In Great Britain the age is sixty for women and sixty-five for men. In New Zealand it is sixty for both men and women, and in Australia it is the same.

A person could go on for an hour giving reason after reason why the eligible age should be reduced at least from seventy to sixty-five.

Mr. MARTIN: We want to do that, too.

Mr. MacINNIS: The minister says they want to do that, too. If so, why do they not do it?

Mr. MARTIN: I can explain that, if the hon. member will let me.

Mr. MacINNIS: The minister will have an opportunity to close the debate.

Mr. MARTIN: Very well.

Mr. MacINNIS: I should like to hear him explain that one thing. I know that he will say that if they were to reduce the age, perhaps the provinces would not be able to carry their share. But in the proposals made by the government to the 1945 conference, a plan was offered under which the dominion was going to assume the total cost of $30 a month without means test for old age pensioners. That would be for all persons over seventy years in Canada.

Mr. MARTIN: Seventy and over.

Mr. MacINNIS: Yes, seventy and over. I tell the minister and the government there is nothing to prevent their doing that. In my speech on the budget last year, I urged that the government enter into agreements in matters of social welfare with those provinces which were willing to enter into such agreements. I am sure, if the government did that, the pressure of opinion in the other provinces would force those governments to enter into such an agreement. As a matter of fact that was the basis upon which the Old Age Pensions Act was drafted in the first place.

Mr. MARTIN: Would the hon. member permit me to say one thing—and I know he is interested. The government, and I as a member of the government, are interested, not only in seeing an adequate system of old age pensions, but also in seeing other types of social insurance, including health insurance. When one brings in a matter of this kind I think the hon. member will agree that one must bear in mind the whole scheme of social security which is wanted. We want health insurance. We want adequate old age pensions. We want different forms of social insurance. It is because of these considerations that, in the matter of cost, one has to bear in mind the consideration which at this time the government has borne in mind.

Mr. MacINNIS: It was pointed out yesterday that if what is involved in this particular instance, and what we are suggesting, were done, it would not equal our war costs for more than a week. Yet if the war had gone on for another year, or for several years, we would still find money to carry on.

I am not at all impressed with the statement made by the minister. In 1943 and 1944 we had before us a health insurance bill. A committee on social security sat for two sessions of parliament dealing with the provisions and implications of that bill. Yet, as I surmised would happen, after the election was over, nothing more was heard about it.

So when the minister tells me that the government would like to do this and would like to do that, I tell him the government has power to do it now. And if the government does it, it will receive the support of the group with which I am associated, and receive it most effectively.

Mr. CLAXTON: Does the hon. member suggest that the government has power to introduce a contributory scheme?

Mr. MacINNIS: It may and it may not. The government has an agreement now with the provinces—at least with seven of them—for the collection of all income tax. The dominion government may—and perhaps we may use a stronger word—if it chooses the dominion government can use a proportion of that income tax as a contribution to a social security programme. I do not believe social security should be on an actuarial basis. I believe social security benefits should be provided for by contributions from income, and if those contributions are not sufficient to meet the monetary demands they should be supplemented by sums from the consolidated revenue fund. The social security books should be cleared off each year as we do at the present time with our ordinary expenditure.

I do not believe the government has made out a good case in this matter, so I suggest that when the bill is in committee the minister move the necessary amendments to bring the eligible age down to sixty-five years. The retirement age for government employees is sixty-five years. Good employers in industry are endeavouring today to put pension plans into operation so that they can retire their employees at sixty-five years. Employers who do not come within the class I mentioned try to get rid of their employees as soon as they are unprofitable. When they reach that stage they are thrown on the scrap-heap. With the exception of those with special training or qualifications, it is impossible today for a man over fifty-five years of age to obtain any kind of work.

Mr. MACKENZIE: It looks bad for me.

Mr. MacINNIS: It has been bad for me for a long time. In hiring persons for the civil service, the government will not hire any one over thirty-five years of age unless he has a veteran's preference. Therefore I suggest that there is no justification for maintaining the eligible age at seventy years. The government's own proposals in 1945 made out the best case I know of for lowering the age and abolishing the means test. When I spoke on this matter last year I referred to the percentages of applicants for old age pensions who held real and personal property. The percentages I gave were:

Holding real property of value	Per cent
Under $251	57·41
$251 to $500	8·66
$501 to $1,000	13·68
$1,001 to $2,000	14·20
$2,001 to $5,000	5·80
$5,001 and up	0·25

For personal property, the figure was much less.

It is not right that people should be put to the humiliation of revealing their every source of income in order to get the miserable pittance provided by the present act or by the bill now before us. I want to say that we shall vote for this measure. We have expressed our disapproval of its inadequacy in the strongest terms that we can use, and I believe we have done that with the general approval of this house. I want to make it quite clear that we shall continue to point out the inadequacies of this measure in the country after parliament prorogues.

Mr. MARTIN: We shall seek to improve it in the light of our desire to realize a complete programme of social security.

Mr. MacINNIS: I rather think the minister did not make the best use of his time when this bill was introduced. If he had made better use of his time before the bill was introduced he would have made a better speech when introducing it. But not having made good use of his time, he is trying now to make good use of mine as he has tried to make good use of the time of every hon. member on this side of the house who has taken part in the debate. I suggest that, before this debate ends, he prepare himself to wind up the debate and make a really good speech.

This bill does not meet the needs of the senior citizens of Canada. It is not what the country wants; it is not what the country expected, and it is not what the country is willing to pay for. To bring forward such a puny measure to meet so great a need will not, I was going to say add to the prestige of this government, but I must say more than that and say that it constitutes a disgrace to this government.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at seven o'clock.

Mr. E. G. HANSELL (Macleod): When the house took recess at six o'clock we were discussing the bill on old age pensions which had been brought down yesterday by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin). I cannot think of any piece of legislation this session that could mean any more or be any more important perhaps than legislation on old age pensions. I do not suppose that I ever visit any part of my constituency without having someone come to me and ask what is being done on behalf of our aged citizens. We are all asked such questions as: When will the pension be raised? When will the age limit be reduced? And what answers have we been able to give? Over the past few months, and particularly since the session opened and the speech from the throne was read, hopes were raised. At last the long expected has happened. The bill has arrived. I do not want to be considered too harsh this evening in my criticism; but I will say that the forty or fifty-minute speech which the minister made when he introduced the bill amounted to nothing more or less than an apology for a poor job badly done.

I cannot imagine how it is that, with all the wealth of our country, all that we are able to do is to increase the old age pensions by around $5 a month. We live in perhaps the wealthiest country in the world in respect of natural wealth and productivity, and yet all we can do is to give our aged people the barest necessities of life. With our abundant wealth we can keep the wolf only from coming too far inside the door.

In his speech the minister made a great deal of the Liberal government's desire for social security. He referred to the present Liberal leadership and carried us back over the years in an attempt to show the gradual growth of their social service programme. Then he projected the house into the future in another attempt to show how the present administration has worked toward contributory social services, including a scheme for contributory old age pension. The alarming thing to me is that, when he said that, he also told us that fifty per cent of our aged people are on old age pensions.

The present administration have been at the helm for a good many years. It has been their responsibility so to legislate and so to administer the affairs of this country that people should be able to have security in their old age, and yet the same administration of which the minister boasted so much find themselves in a position where fifty per cent of our aged people have not been able to make life secure and contented for themselves. I wonder whether the minister is proud of that.

In talking of a contributory old age pension scheme which he hoped the present government might be able to introduce at some time—he did not say when; perhaps when I am a very old man—the minister said that if the government went too far in giving to our aged citizens too large a pension scheme it might have the result of throwing everything out of balance when the time came to put in a contributory scheme. That is tantamount to saying to our aged, "We are sorry we cannot give you more because when we eventually ask our younger citizens to pay for their security when they are old they will revolt and say, why do we have to pay for this? Our mothers and fathers have all the security they want and they did not have to pay for it." The minister might just as well have said that. When he made those remarks he emphasized with great tenderness, if you please, that he was saying it with the greatest respect. I said I did not want to be too harsh, but I say to the minister as kindly as I can that he said it with the greatest disrespect.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the government want to move on from the present old age pension scheme, which is non-contributory, to a pension scheme which is contributory. In other words, they want to move from the present taxation scheme to another type of taxation scheme in order to pay them that pension. At the present time we are all taxed to pay the aged. That is nothing more or less than a form of charity. When we tax the people themselves under a contributory scheme, so that by that taxation they put aside something for themselves in their declining years, then we chisel on their present incomes. So that what the government desire to do is to move from the principle of charity to a principle of chiselling.

Surely the citizens of this country have what might be called a common heritage. Here we are living in a very modern civilization when we can produce so much because of our scientific power age. Who is it that supplied that science and that power? Was it the present generation? Why, of course not. Throughout the centuries of time, civilization developed, one generation built upon another, and the reason we live in this modern age is that our forefathers long since left us a common heritage. Surely it is not just to say that the only people who can inherit that common heritage are those who have invested their dollars; in other words, it is not just for that common heritage to go only to those who happen to have the monetary units that have come their way.

The minister gave a great number of figures and a great deal of statistics. His speech seemed to be loaded with figures and statistics. And what was it all for? It was all for the purpose of trying to impress the country with the idea that the government could not afford to pay any higher pensions. We cannot afford to do it! I wonder what that phrase means. I said we had come along through the centuries of time to a very high order of civilization. Let us go back over the centuries and see what sort of civilization they used to have, and we can go back to the cave men if we want to.

I imagine the cave men are holding their council meeting and the chief of the council says: "Gentlemen, we have a younger generation coming along; our population is increasing; it is necessary for us to establish another community just across the river. Let us discuss the question how we can establish that community. Have we enough stone in the vicinity? Have we enough lumber? Have we enough human skill in our tribe?" Through the council of these cave men they decide: "Yes; we have the stone; we have the timber; we have the human skill". In other words, they decide that it is physically possible to do it.

Now imagine some younger man of the council rising in his place. I do not suppose this younger man was from the constituency of Essex East; I do not suppose he was the minister of health and welfare in the tribe. But suppose some young chap in the council should rise and say: "Mr. Chieftain, may I have a word? It is true we have the stone and the timber, the man-power and the skill; but, Mr. Chieftain, do you think we can afford it?"

I think the chieftain would look at that young man and say: "Young man, are you not feeling very well?" Now, if we have come so far in our modern civilization, if we have developed so much in our modern way of living, have we become so confounded with our science that we are behind the men of the stone age? They did what to them was physically possible, but even though it be physically possible for us to produce an abundance and to distribute it to all, the minister rises in his place and says, "Yes; it is physically possible but we cannot afford it." I feel like asking him if he is not feeling very well. Yet he is the minister of health. He should be feeling all right.

It is true, is it not, that the present Liberal administration of this country have the power to do three things. They have the power to legislate; they have the power to tax—and believe me they have been exercising that power—and they have the power to create the means of payment out of nothing, the way our present banking system is doing it today. They have all three powers, and yet they say they cannot afford to increase the old age pension. What do they mean? Do they mean that they cannot afford to create the means of payment? Do they mean that they cannot afford to create those monetary symbols we call dollars, which is only another name given to figures used for a certain purpose?

Suppose this country wanted a road somewhere and the minister should rise in his place and say, "Well, yes, we would like to have that road. We have the gravel, the machinery and the man-power, but we cannot build the road because we have not enough miles". Then we would surely ask him if he was not feeling very well. But he might just as well say that we cannot build the road because we have no miles as to say that we cannot increase old age pensions because we have no figures. That is the truth of the matter. They have the power to legislate. They have the power to tax if they wish to, and we do not believe they have to tax to do it; they have the power over currency and credit.

An hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

Mr. HANSELL: My hon. friend says, "hear, hear".

Mr. BROOKS: That is all he ever says.

Mr. HANSELL: I like to hear him say that. Then why does not his government use its power?

An hon. MEMBER: It does not know how.

Mr. GAUTHIER (Nipissing): The water is too high.

Mr. HANSELL: There is another thing our aged people were desirous of, and this bill will be a sad disappointment to them. They were desirous that the means test should be done away with. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Mitchell), in his speech this afternoon, said that in matters of this kind we should stop playing politics. I am now going to read to you, Mr. Speaker, an advertisement which appeared in every daily and weekly paper in this country prior to the last election. It was published by the national Liberal committee. The address is not given but it emanated from the Liberal headquarters in Canada. It is entitled "Just Plain Sense". In item 9 of this very large display advertisement I read this with respect to old age pensions: "Higher pensions, lower age limit and no means test." If anybody is playing politics, who is it now, after catching votes on the basis of that and then bringing in an old age pensions bill which does not lower the age limit and still retains the means test?

Mr. BLACKMORE: That constitutes a betrayal.

An hon. MEMBER: That is Liberal politics.

Mr. HANSELL: Yes, that is Liberal politics, when they raise the hopes of our aged mothers and fathers and then dash them to pieces when they bring down the bill. The very word "pension" means that a person is given a certain security for life. The word "pension" does not carry with it any idea of charity. The very moment the means test is brought into the old age pensions scheme, it is reduced from a pension to charity. As soon as the factor of financial status comes into the picture, the whole character of the plan is altered. It is not a pensions scheme at all then. It is nothing more or less than glorified charity which is imposed upon our aged parents by a system of beggary. Our aged mothers and fathers do not mind proving their age. Some of them are proud of the honour. Some of our aged people are revered. We respect them. One of the first Christian principles is respect for the aged. When they apply for old age pensions, they are quite willing to prove that they were born on a certain day and that they have now reached pensionable age. It is not humiliating for them to prove their age. But they must not only prove their age; they must prove their poverty. Furthermore, because of existing regulations, they must prove that they will continue to be paupers. I want to ask if that is a respectable old age pension scheme. Surely when a pensions act is brought down, it should be brought down with dignity for our aged people. Surely we should say to our aged people, "You have lived well. You have pioneered this country. We now give to you part of your heritage as a right of citizenship. We give you the reward for being respectable citizens."

There is something else which should be involved in any pension scheme. Any government or any treasury board should administer a pension scheme with this one great principle in mind: we are now giving it to you and we want to give you more. But what has happened through all the regulations we have had in our pensions bills? We have had regulations which have made inspectors nothing more or less than white-collared sleuths going around to see whether or not our aged parents earned a dollar.

Mr. LOW: Or found one.

Mr. HANSELL: Yes, or found one.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Or had one given to them.

Mr. HANSELL: Or if their son, who has a fair position, gave them a little present once in a while. It is a great civilization we are living in, is it not? It is a great country we are living in, is it not? It is a great government we have in this country, is it not?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. NICHOLSON: There is not much enthusiasm in those "Hear, hear's" from the other side.

Mr. HANSELL: If that whole Liberal side were filled with people over seventy, you would not hear one "Hear, hear," coming from that side of the chamber.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. LOW: They all want to be in the senate.

Mr. HANSELL: Our aged parents cannot earn a dollar without having the bloodhounds on their tracks. Parliament passes legislation for the purpose of providing pensions. That, shall I say, should be our objective. But the government comes along and makes such regulations that, in effect, they take upon themselves to do their best to prevent our aged people from getting the full pension. That is what actually happens in practice. I said that pensions as administered today and as administered under this new bill are a form of charity. Our aged people have to prove their poverty. Let me ask one question. Why is an aged person poor in this country? Here is one thing I should like to say at the very start. As I used to go around in those depression days—and I do not want to refer to that too much—how often hive I heard this remark, "Oh, well, that man has not got anything because he was not thrifty enough; he did not save enough."

Mr. BLACKMORE: Too lazy to wark.

Mr. HANSELL: Yes; that he was too lazy to work, and so on and so forth. Thrift was regarded as a sort of virtue. Let me say that it is time we were revising our thinking. In these days the term "thrift" has become perverted. We formerly used it in the sense that mother would sew patches on our trousers; she would save materials, and put away foodstuffs so that they would not spoil. Why? Because in an age of scarcity people had to practise thrift. But in a modern civilization thrift has become nothing but a pinch-penny business of never spending. How are the wheels of industry made to go around? By people spending. I want to say, with the greatest respect, that a good citizen is one who will spend his money. It is a poor citizen who will save his money, strange as that may sound, because you cannot save money and at the same time turn the wheels of industry.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Nor make jobs for people so that they can earn income.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): You can invest it.

Mr. HANSELL: You see this is an asinine system under which we are living. A man has to save or he will not have anything; yet the more men save, the less our ultimate production becomes, and the less we get. It is all back end forward, and the present administration evidently have not the wisdom to put the right end forward. The same thing goes for contributory pensions, which simply mean that money is taken out of the stream of purchasing power. We need to recognize that we have passed that pinch-penny phase of finance, and that we now live in an age of abundance.

I should like to refer to one or two other matters before my time speeds away. There is another disappointment which will be sad for our aged people; that is, that there is no reduction in the age limit. They were hoping that something along this line would be done. I can quite understand the government not being able to give us all the details and facts and figures of their pension scheme ahead of time, but at least they could have said something like this: "We will raise the old age pension, we will not say how much, but we will not lower the age limit." Then our aged people would have known what would happen. But that is not the picture; the picture is that our aged people were living in hope that the age limit would be lowered. Why did the government not come out and say, "We want you aged people to know you cannot expect the age limit to be lowered at the present time," instead of raising their hopes and then dashing them on the rocks of disappointment?

I should like to mention a few other things with respect to pensions, but I shall touch upon them only in passing. There is a class of people in this country who are entirely forgotten. I mentioned this last year; I shall mention it again now. I refer to those people who are numbered among the incurables. This does not, I know, come directly under old age pensions, but here are young men and young women who have been struck down by infantile paralysis, epilepsy, and so on. They are bed-ridden cases, pronounced absolutely incurable, and are thrown upon charity for the rest of their lives. In a land of abundance, a land of wealth, a land where we are short of nothing, we cannot look after them. I wish some Liberal member would explain why that should be. The only explanation they can give is: "We have not the money."

Mr. BLACKMORE: We have not the intelligence in high places.

Mr. HANSELL: I am glad the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore) mentioned that. We have not as much intelligence in high places today as they had in the councils of the chieftains of the stone age to which I referred some time back.

I am not going to say just now how I intend to vote on this bill. This is what I should like to see, and here I am speaking personally, on my own, without having consulted with any members of my group. I should like to see a solid opposition vote against this bill, if possible a majority against it, to send this government to the country to see whether or not the people are satisfied with the paltry increase of $5 a month to our aged people. If anyone ever worked a generation ago it was those people who have now reached the age of seventy, who pioneered this country. If I have to vote for this bill, what position am I in? Well, I am going to say this, and I say it in all kindness. If I vote for this bill I have to vote for a disgraceful insult; and that is my choice.

Mr. MARTIN: Before the hon. member concludes, may I ask him a question?

Mr. HANSELL: Yes, I do not mind.

Mr. MARTIN: He said the pension under the bill was $30. Of course he will appreciate that the pension can be greater than that, in view of the provincial contribution. In the case of Alberta, without any further expenditure on the part of the province, the pension under this bill will be $33.75. Can the hon. gentleman tell me whether or not it is likely that the province from which he comes will follow the example of British Columbia, and the example set by Ontario today, and increase that pension to a higher figure?

Mr. LOW: If I may reply, they are already doing so. They are extending a great deal more by way of medical services, dental services and hospitalization than either of those provinces mentioned by the minister.

Mr. HANSELL: I thank the leader of this party for answering the question, and I am going to answer it in another way. Is my hon. friend the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) proud to stand up in this house and argue over $3 a month?

Mr. MARTIN: Are you asking me a question?

Mr. HANSELL: Yes; I want to know if you are proud to argue as to whether it should be $33 or $30.

Mr. MARTIN: I am anxious to do all we can to help the aged; and in that responsibility the tradition and law of this country has been that the provincial and federal governments together will do so. I have asked the hon. gentleman a question with respect to Alberta. Is he prepared to answer it?

Mr. BLACKMORE: You will always find Alberta in the lead.

Mr. HANSELL: My time is going and I do not like interruptions right at the end of my speech, but I can answer that question. I do not know what the government of Alberta is prepared to do. All I say is that this government has the power and the responsibility to make that which is physically possible financially possible; and it does not do so. I am not concerned about $33 a month. Why not $50 a month? Why not make it that, regardless of what the provinces do? The first thing the minister knows, he is going to compel me to vote against this disgraceful insult, by adding insult to injury.

Mr. J. L. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, generally speaking this debate has appeared to be of a very high order. I must personally congratulate the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. Sinclair) upon what I thought an able and well considered speech this afternoon.

I must confess, of course, that when I hear the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell) tell about the philosophy of the Social Credit party, even after three years in the House of Commons I am unable to follow him.

Mr. CAOUETTE: Some people are slow.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): I admit I do not come from Pontiac, where all the privileges of education are available to everyone. But when I hear the hon. member for Macleod say that anything that is physically possible is financially possible, I know he is just quoting from the hallucination of some previous speaker.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Don't you wish you knew better than that?

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): It would be quite possible, of course, to take all our old age pensioners in Canada, obtain rooms in the Chateau Laurier for each and every one of them, and provide them with room service every morning. That, possibly, would be physically possible. But I do not think I would care to sign the cheques the government would have to sign to take care of them in that manner.

As I say, the subject has been particularly well covered. Various statistics with regard to old age pensions have been given, and in what I have to say I intend to be brief. Certainly I do not intend to introduce into the debate anything which indicates I am a believer in paying for old age pensions with funny money of any kind.

Mr. CAOUETTE: We use the same kind of money you use.

[Mr. J. L. Gibson.]

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): I suppose you do. And I have found that is the only kind people will take.

Mr. CAOUETTE: That is the only kind you are taking from the people.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): I trust I earn mine as well here as the hon. member evidently thinks he does.

I believe it is the duty of every hon. member to act with responsibility when he undertakes to spend the money of his constituents, the people who sent him here. After all, it is not our money we are spending; it belongs to the taxpayers of Canada.

Certainly we cannot pay out anything in old age pensions or any other kind of pensions until we first collect it from the people. And despite what the hon. member for Macleod says—and once again I admit I am not as bright as he is—the only way I know of getting it is through taxation.

Mr. QUELCH: Did you pay for the war in that way?

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): We certainly shall.

Mr. BLACKMORE: We shall, if we keep a Liberal government in power.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): My objection, of course, to the present non-contributory scheme of old age pensions is the very fact that those who have contributed to it in the past and who will contribute to it in the future are the ones who, because of this means test, will be unable to collect any portion of it.

It would appear to me, personally, that we have certainly removed any incentive for the old person to go out and try to make a few extra dollars to supplement his income under the pension scheme. My experience has been that old people who have nothing to do and who do not feel useful do not last long.

Mr. LOW: That is good sense.

An hon. MEMBER: How about going to the senate?

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): I said once in the house that I had no hope of getting to the senate because there are too many ahead of me. Probably there are some priorities in the matter.

The present means test of course places the stigma of pauperdom on anyone who applies for an old age pension, when one considers the investigations which take place, and to which reference has already been made in the house. I believe I can honestly say that there is no member in the House of Commons but who, because of the amount of expenses members have, will find a great deal of difficulty in making both ends meet, despite the raise of $2,000 we got last year. I do not believe there is a member in the House of Commons who would care to go to the old age pensions authority and ask for a pension for his mother or father. In my view that condition of affairs is wrong. If we have an old age pension it should be available to every old person, and should not be payable by the children, even if they are able to pay it. Under the means test, the present pension is a form of charity, in the way it is administered.

I object very much to the fact that people who have been thrifty and who have provided for their old age find that, when examinations are made, their pensions are cut in half in some cases. There is no provision made for people of that kind, who have saved, to obtain a cost of living bonus. They certainly are not organized today, like members of labour unions, so that, because of the present high cost of living, they might be able to obtain some relief.

I think the suggestion of the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. Sinclair) to refer the bill to the committee on industrial relations is a good one; and I can see no reason, if the government were prepared to support that suggestion, why there should be any necessity to have this bill killed. There is no reason why we cannot go ahead with this old age pensions bill in this session of parliament. It seems to me that the average responsible member in the House of Commons would like to know what the removal of the means test would cost.

Mr. MARTIN: About $200 million.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): The minister says it would cost about $200 million. I imagine he has worked it out. However I am not entirely convinced he has taken into consideration what we may recover from our income tax, if our income tax is applied and the amount is recovered from those who do not need this pension.

My principal objection is that in this measure we segregate the people into two classes, so far as old age pensions are concerned. I believe that in a committee of that kind we could get both the federal and the provincial viewpoints. I believe that if we went into that committee we would get away from a lot of politics. My own experience has been that everyone tries to make a contribution, and in this instance they would try to work toward what everyone will agree is a worth-while thing, the provision of security for our old citizens.

I believe that if this were discussed in committee it could be brought back to the house with recommendations as to what should be done. Each one of the members of the committee would feel a responsibility in the matter and would be prepared to support income tax proposals to make it possible to pay these pensions to our old people.

It is high time that a responsible and thrifty element of Canadian society were given an opportunity to present their side of the case for the removal of the means test.

Mr. DANIEL McIVOR (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I have only a few words to say, and I mean what I say. I am reminded of that great Scottish poet who has said:

> O wad some power the giftie gie us
> To see oursel's as ithers see us!

As I try to see the minister as he is, as I try to see him as the government of Ontario has been seeing him these last few days, and as I try to see him as that great university of Michigan with its high standards saw him recently, when it bestowed upon him the degree of Doctor of Laws—and I congratulate him upon that; his head is not a bit bigger since he got it—

Mr. BROOKS: It could not be.

Mr. McIVOR: —I note the contrast in these views. I believe this bill has come a long way in doing good. I was only sorry that this afternoon the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said that, on account of the bill, the minister should bow his head in shame. My experience in life is that no man should bow his head in shame unless he commits a sin. I believe the minister should hold his head higher because of what he has done in the bill for people who are in difficulties. I am pleased with the amendments that have been brought in, and there is one that I appreciate very much. I know of many people who moved from the country during the war, some going to the south and some to the old country. When they could not get back they lost their pensions because they had stayed away for more than the allotted number of days. They are now to be able to get their pensions and I thank the minister for that.

I notice that there is to be a fifty-fifty payment to those between the ages of sixty-five and sixty-nine years who are in difficulties financially. That is a good thing because some men are older at sixty-five than others are at seventy-five. I have no difficulty in proving that. Some men hold their youth because they take care of themselves; some do not because they do not take care of their minds. I thank the minister for that fifty-fifty payment.

I have heard some say that it is too little and too late. There were a lot of people in this house who said that the war effort of this government was too little and too late. I must admit that it went down below my diaphram when I heard that, because I thought we were not doing all that we could. What happened? The government was doing everything behind the scenes to help Britain and Russia defeat Hitler. It was not too little and too late because they won out in the end.

I want to tell the minister that I think he is on the right track. It may not be a large pension, but it is something. I know a couple whom I helped get an old age pension, and they are now each receiving $28 a month, or a total of $56. I had pancakes and coffee with them in their home and anyone would have been glad to have had a meal like that. Everything was clean and tidy and they were saving a little for their old age. They showed me their bank book.

I have used the words of that great Scottish poet because he understood human nature. I want to congratulate Ontario—there are some here representing that province—upon raising its old age pension to $40 a month. My hon. friends from British Columbia must now take second place to our great province. I want to thank that province for its generosity; I want to give credit where credit is due. There will be some people who are sufficiently hard-hearted to say that that is smart politics. If it is, let us have more politics of that kind because it will help many older people get their $40 a month. I believe the minister is indirectly responsible for that increase.

What is going to happen in Quebec, and I dare to refer to your great province, Mr. Speaker? I do not think Quebec will take second place to Ontario or British Columbia. I did not meet him there, but I see the premier of Quebec is attending the great Marian congress. If he gets the spirit of that congress there will be nobody in want in Quebec. He will go back to his cabinet and say, "We as a great province cannot stand idly by and not feed and clothe our old people, not give them a bit of fun and a little tobacco into the bargain."

There are some people who think members of parliament are paid a lot of money, and dear knows we are. However I am no richer today than I was ten years ago. The more we get, the more we spend and we are the happier at it. I would be glad to have my sessional indemnity held by the government if it would increase old age pensions a little or help those who are suffering from arthritis or who cannot get treatment when they are suffering from cancer.

There is another side to this great question. When I was quite young I was taught to memorize the ten commandments, and there is one commandment I have never forgotten: "Honour thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee." I do not think any young man or woman should take the farm or property of his or her parents, have it put in his or her name and then let the old folks go on old age pensions. It is not fair to the government.

There is another thing in this bill I like very much, the possibility of a national pensions scheme. The minister made it quite clear that we should have contributory pensions. Those who have worked in our day remember that there were many who earned fifty cents an hour but when the week was over they did not have a cent left. They had not the ability or willingness to save a little. If there were a contributory scheme on a national basis it would be a great thing for this country. I say to the minister, more power to your arm and to your head for your willingness to keep this thing going.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) congratulated the minister upon piloting the citizenship bill through the house. I am not an Irishman, nor is the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid) a Scotsman; we are both Canadians and we thank the minister for that. I know, when the minister tackles this question of pensions for our senior citizens it will be like the balky horse I helped to break in. When he once got the bit in his mouth he would go his own way, no matter what any one did. I hope the minister gets the bit in his mouth and goes to the finish. As I said before, we shall not then be giving our older citizens $50 a month, we shall be giving them enough, no matter what the standard of living is.

Mr. J. R. MacNICOL (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I hope that nothing I say shall be interpreted as politics. To my mind politics should be left out of this subject. The distress of old folks should not be played up politically.

In the addresses so far in the debate, there is one matter that has not been touched upon. Most of those now coming into the old age pension brackets are those who have come down through the years without large wages or salaries. Something has been said about the large salaries and wages which have been paid in late years, but that does not apply to those now coming up for old age pensions.

When the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mitchell) spoke this afternoon he referred to the length of time he had been advocating old age pensions. My advocacy of old age pensions and pensions for the maimed and blind goes back to some years prior to 1920. I became an enthusiast of pensions for the blind and for the maimed and aged workers from a long association with thousands of workers. Many times I saw them blinded and maimed. I saw thousands of them getting old. I am talking of the time when I was with them. I know these men with whom I worked, and multitudes of others now coming into the old age pension age down through the years who did not at any time receive a sufficient salary or wage to lay up a competence for their old age. I think of the moulders, of the machinists, and of the artificers working in a big plant of whom I knew so many. I saw them laid off quite often for as much as three months of the year. A man cannot save very much for his old age if he is laid off work for three months of the year. I am not speaking of the last ten years because everything has been swimming in that time. I am speaking of the time years before that, of the people who are now coming into the old age pension age. Being working men, most of them had families. God blesses the working man. It is to those people that He sends the families. Many of their wives were frequently sick. If a man is out of work and has sickness in his home he cannot save at all. Therefore, sir, I am one of those who advocates as strongly as I can the abolition of the means test. That is my own opinion. I do not care a fig about what anybody else advocates. I give my own opinion and my opinions are based on my experience. We should abolish the means test. How in the name of heaven could a moulder, a blacksmith, a machinist or a carpenter fifteen or twenty years ago, out of the mere pittance of a salary or wage that he received, lay aside anything for his old age? They did manage to get together a little home. How in the name of common sense can we ask them, when they ask for old age pension after the struggle of a lifetime, to sign away the rights to their little homes?

I hold in my hand a letter which I received from a lady I know in Toronto. Her husband was a soldier. He went overseas in the first great war. He was not allowed to go to France because he was too proficient at drilling or in some other army service. He was an expert in that line and they kept him in England. When he came back to Canada he died. That service barred him from a military pension and also his wife. But through thrift they had managed to get together a little home. I know the home very well. It may be worth $2,500. I am not speaking of the inflated prices of houses today which will certainly be flattened out in the next few years. As I say, that house is worth $2,500, but it would probably sell at $7,500 today. She came to see me and importuned to get an old age pension, but she had to sign away her home. At that time her son, who was a returned soldier, was living with her. After a while he died and left her in straitened circumstances. She decided to sell her home because she could not possibly live on $20 a month and whatever was given in pension by Ontario plus the cost of living allowance. She sold her house after having received a pension for just a few years. Of course the old age pension board was at once notified about the sale of the house and they took from what she had received for the house all that they had paid her in old age pension; so she came to see me again. She has now bought a much smaller house for which she paid around $2,200. but it is not nearly as fine a house as the one she sold, because the one she bought recently was built recently and everyone knows what kind of houses they are.

She applied for old age pension again because she could not live on what was coming in from the little bit that she had left after selling her house. An old age pension official came to see her. I had appealed to the department to give this war widow of seventy-seven or seventy-eight years of age a chance to live. They wanted her to sign a paper for this little house worth about $2,200. I said to her: "Do not sign it." I am bound to say that she did receive old age pension this time without having to sign away her house. Whether it was a special ruling or not, I do not know. Anyway, she was given a pension without a means test. The means test should be abolished.

Some time ago I received a letter from her. I will not give her name. The letter reads:

> I have had a note from the old age pension board to say they would reinstate me—

This is a month or two ago now. I continue:

> —but they gave me no assurance that the same thing won't be repeated. They asked me to sign. I did not, as I don't trust them again.

I cannot blame her for that after her other experience. The letter continues:

> It is too bad they can only gyp old people and poor widows who are left alone. I do think the thrifty people should be considered a little more after paying taxes fifty years and not penalize them for being thrifty and clean. I for one think it is a detriment to the housing shortage as people will not buy on account of that. I am sending you two more victims I cut out of the Telegram this week.

She sent me two items from the paper about two more people who had been victimized by their homes. Because of the numbers of experiences I have come in contact with, I am opposed to the means test. However I am glad to say that it has not been 100 per cent enforced. I know of two or three cases myself where the head of the house died; then the mother died; and the old age pension board in settling up with the estate, after my writing them a letter and telling them that one family had sent seven sons overseas—the parents had left nothing but the little home they had saved up—did not take the home away from the heir. While some lose their homes, others do not. I think it would be only fair all round to abolish the means test.

I know quite well that some people do not always do the right thing. They will sign away their homes to their children in order to get a pension without signing. A farmer will sign away his farm to his son or daughter in order to get a pension without signing. I do not think people should be put in the position of falsifying their financial status. It would be much better simply to abolish the means test.

Mr. HODGSON: You would penalize thrift then.

Mr. MacNICOL: No; in my opinion the situation as it is penalizes thrift.

Mr. HODGSON: That is what I say.

Mr. MacNICOL: I had a letter a day or two ago from a clergyman's widow; she is one of a multitude I know. She is getting up toward seventy years of age. Her husband had been a clergyman in a charge in Saskatchewan or Alberta. Anyone who knows anything about the salaries of clergymen in the west a few years ago knows that they could not save anything out of their salary. Before going to the first great war, he was invited to take some official position in the army which did not allow him to get a pension. He came home and died. That poor widow woman of sixty-five years of age or more cannot even buy car tickets; she cannot buy any clothes; she cannot go to a picture show. She lives in one room with another family. She has nothing for medicine; she cannot have her teeth attended to. She has nothing that makes life worth living. She is just living to be taken away to the next world. That is not a situation of which any of us can be proud. Therefore I am in favour of lowering the age limit to permit women, perhaps especially widowed mothers, to receive pensions at the age of sixty-five.

I know that this or any other government would have a stiff job providing pensions for everyone at the age of sixty-five. I am not one of those who advocate high taxes, but I believe in lowering the age limit for women to sixty-five, because, after all, women age more rapidly than men, particularly if they have had families. That is the position I take, and one of the reasons I take it is that during the years I served in big industry, coming into contact with thousands of workers in my time, I have seen too many of them going down the years unable to put by anything against their old age.

I am strongly in favour of lowering the age limit, for women in particular to sixty-five, and I also strongly advocate the abolition of the means test. I do not wish to say a word that would inject politics into this debate. Someone tried to do so earlier in the evening, but this is not a debate for politics. If, therefore, I say that I am very happy that the Ontario government has made the announcement it has, I hope no one will interpret that observation as political. The sum of $40 a month by the Ontario premier will cheer the heart and soul of many old folks in this province.

That brings this thought to my mind, and I am sure it will be shared by the minister, for he is just as much interested in these matters as any other member of this house, and perhaps more, considering that he is minister. I hope it will be an incentive to him, if not this year, then perhaps next year, to try to bring about uniformity throughout Canada. Forty dollars at least for every province would be an objective to aim at, because if we get it in Ontario and the people do not get more than $32 or $33 or $35, say in Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick or elsewhere, that is a penalty imposed on them for living in those provinces. That is not fair. The amount should be uniform throughout Canada, and I hope the minister will look ahead to some time in the near future when the rate will be the same throughout the dominion. I am well aware of the fact that Viscount Bennett did announce that the federal government would pay the whole pension, and I believe I heard the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) say that that had been in the Liberal platform. So there is no politics in my saying that, and I think that is the way it should be, that the federal government should carry the whole burden of the old age pension. After all, it goes round and round and it all comes back anyway. We get it in the form of sales tax or one tax or another, so that in reality it all comes out of the pocket of the federal government in any event.

I do not know that I have much more to say. I have taken an interest in the old age pension question for many years. I do not take my hat off to anyone in the advocacy of it, for I advocated it as a necessity many years ago for those I knew so well. I do not think it is necessary for me to go further. I do not wish to criticize, because that will not get us anywhere. On the contrary, I would encourage the minister to go still farther, and if what I have said will help him to do so, when the bill comes in the committee it may be that, after consultation with his colleagues, amendments will be offered for the abolition of the means test or lowering the age limit, for instance. I hope someone will move an amendment to that effect and also propose that there be uniformity throughout Canada in the way I have suggested. If anything I have said will help the minister to go farther I feel that I have done my duty. I put my duty first to those who are in the class requiring old age pensions, and if I interject politics into the question I know it will do no good. It will not help either us or those who are in need of old age pensions.

Mr. F. S. ZAPLITNY (Dauphin): In discussing this measure, which is an act to amend the Old Age Pensions Act, I believe that we in this house should be careful not to become too deeply involved in dollars and cents. The question of how it will be paid for is, I think, a minor consideration compared with the question whether it is desirable or not that we shall have better pensions and at a lower age. It seems to me that what we need to do first is to set out for ourselves what are the desirable national objectives and then try to introduce measures in this house in order to make them possible. Everyone will agree that if we were to state our national objectives in a brief way we would desire, first of all, that the general welfare of all citizens shall be looked after. We would strive for the highest possible standard of public health and also the highest possible standard of education.

What we are debating at the present time is not the desirability of these things, because I believe that we can agree on them. We are debating, however, whether the present government and the measure which is at present before us are adequate toward attaining these desirable ends. If we take the speech delivered by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) yesterday, and consider two parts of it together, it will give us a lead as to whether the government, in this measure, is reaching out far enough to attain these desirable objectives.

First, I wish to quote from the minister's speech where he referred to the speech of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) on a different occasion, and which incidentally I placed on Hansard on a previous day, having to do with what the Prime Minister declared in 1942, on October 9, speaking to the American Federation of Labour in Toronto. He said:

> The era of freedom will be achieved only as social security and human welfare become the main concern of men and nations.

He followed that up with this significant sentence:

> It is necessary that social security and human welfare should be expressed in definite terms.

I come back to the earlier part of the minister's speech in which he said, at page 4282 of Hansard:

> This government has given conclusive evidence of its concern for the welfare of the aged among our population.

I do not know what he meant by "conclusive evidence", but I would take it that the present measure is the conclusive evidence to which he referred of the extent to which the government is expressing its concern for the aged of the country.

Mr. MARTIN: That and our proposals to the provinces.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Unfortunately we are not in a position to debate the proposals to the provinces, which are not placed before this house for consideration. The proposals that were made to the provinces are now a nebulous thing.

Mr. MARTIN: Oh, no.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: What we have before the house is the present bill, and we have to decide on the basis of its provisions whether the government is expressing its concern for the aged and to what extent in definite terms, using the language of the Prime Minister. This is the measure that is before the house. I hope the proposals made to the provinces will be repeated in definite terms in the form of a bill in this house at a future time, but at the present time this bill is all that we have before us, and on that basis I fear I must agree with those on this side of the house who have expressed disappointment and criticism of the method, not only for the meagreness of the provision under consideration, but also for the fact that the measure has been so long delayed.

I want to agree with something that the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell) said this evening. He observed that when we consider such measures as social security and other desirable objectives we should ask ourselves whether it is physically possible to provide the goods and services that are required before we get into any question of finance; because if we decide that it is desirable to have old age pensions at the age of sixty-five and at the rate of $50 a month, and if we have the natural resources and the productivity to provide the goods and services therefor, then the only question that remains to be decided is whether we shall divert the necessary portion of our production to provide for those people, or whether we shall not.

I think the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Gibson) came out pretty plainly and flat-footedly when he said that it would be possible to provide for these people, that we could build them an hotel as good as the Chateau Laurier and bring meals to their rooms, but he asked, who is going to pay for it? So you see, we are not prepared to do these things for the aged people. We can do them but we are not prepared to do them. He does not think it would be fair for the other people to provide such facilities. I am not advocating that we build any hotels for our aged people, but I say that the people of this country have expressed in no uncertain terms their belief that people at the age of sixty-five are entitled to a pension of $50 a month. The leader of this group had the honour to present to this house a petition signed by over a quarter of a million people of all ages urging the government to make that provision. I have here on my desk a whole stack of letters, resolutions and briefs, as have many other hon. members, urging us to take those steps. I believe that many of the members on the government side of the house are in sympathy with what I am saying; all that is required is for the government to decide whether they will take that step on a national basis, or whether they will not.

I also want to say that to me one of the most disappointing things was the fact that no mention was made of removing the means test. Another disappointment was the fact that the provisions for blind persons' pensions remain practically the same as before; particularly is that so as to the age. In my opinion the means test is the most objectionable feature of the present Old Age Pensions Act. Any hon. member who goes through his correspondence on old age pensions will find, I think, that nine out of ten letters he receives stem from the means test provision. People cannot understand the way in which the whole thing operates, to start with; and when they begin to fill in the old age pension application form, a copy of which I hold in my hand, they find that they are in for a nightmare. It can truly be called a cradle-to-the-grave affair, because on the first page, in question 8, it asks for the date of birth and place of birth; and on the last page, in question 41, it asks, "Who will be in charge of your affairs following your death?" There they have you from birth to death and almost everything in between. I can give a few samples. Question 15 reads:

> Give particulars of children living with you or with whom you are living.

They want the name in full, sex, age, occupation, married or single, number of dependent children, income during the past year, contributions. Not only that, but in the next question they say:

> Give particulars of children not living with you.

How in the world would you expect anyone to know all about their children who were not living with them, when some might perhaps be living in a foreign country? Again they ask for all the particulars I enumerated under the previous question. Then we go on to page 4 and we find question 32 which reads:

> Give date and amount of each contribution to your support by each member of your family during the year prior to making application.

That is another question which is almost impossible to answer. Then question 33:

> If any members of your family have failed to contribute give names and reasons for said failure to assist.

It would take a Philadelphia lawyer and a couple of assistants to fill out a form of that kind. How can the old age pensioner know why any of his children or other members of his family failed to assist him? He is required to give reasons why they did not do so. Then there is question 37:

> How have you been meeting living expenses during the past year?

That is a ridiculous question. What business is it of anyone how a person has managed to live within the last year? I have already quoted question 41, but it wants to know who is to be in charge of your funeral. I have other forms that go with it, and there are plenty of these. One asks for the assessment of the property owned by the applicant or his or her spouse, in detail. They want to know everything. In fact, under one of the questions, question 30, they ask you to give the value and description of the furniture, farm equipment or any other property not yet specified. If you happened to have a couple of pipes and a few pipe cleaners and forgot to put them down, you possibly would be accused of having falsified your application.

The thing becomes ridiculous, and the reason for that is that the application must, of necessity, be based on the regulations which are in force. I am not criticizing the pension authorities who drew up the application form. They had to ask questions to cover all the regulations which are in force under this act. It is because these regulations are ridiculous that the application form is a nightmare, that it is nosey and confusing, and that it is almost impossible for the ordinary person to answer the questions without legal assistance. All that is based on the fact that we have a means test. If there were no means test; if the old age pension were payable to all people as a matter of right—in the same way as family allowances are paid, for example—it would then be unnecessary for every person to go through that nightmare; and it would also be unnecessary to send out, twice a year, a letter or form which has to be filled out—almost as complicated as the other one—to prove that you have not received five cents from anyone else while you were receiving your pension cheque. All that could be wiped out and we should then have our pensions on a commonsense basis. Therefore, had the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) and those associated with him included in this bill a provision to wipe out the means test, I believe that in itself would have been a great step forward in providing a proper system of old age pensions.

I now want to come back to the other disappointment I mentioned, namely, the fact that the age limit for the blind still remains at forty. I have here resolutions and briefs from various organizations making representations on behalf of blind persons, asking that the age limit be lowered. In his speech the other day, the leader of our group advocated that the age limit should be lowered to the point where the family allowance stops; in other words, that at the age of seventeen they should become eligible for the blind pension. That seems to be only common sense because, after the age of dependence ends and he or she is not eligible until the age of forty, there is a gap there of almost twenty years, and sometimes more than twenty years, in which the blind person has absolutely nowhere to turn for assistance, except to charity.

While I am at it I also want to say that I had expected that the government would sooner or later make some provision to pay the old age pension to Indians, but apparently nothing has been done in that respect. All I can say is that our record so far, in our treatment of these people, has not been the best and leaves much to be desired. I hope that in the future they will be included.

I was particularly interested in listening the other day to the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) speaking on behalf of the Conservative party—and what I want to say now is not said in any spirit of carping criticism—and in listening this afternoon to the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) who was speaking vigorously and with great volume. I was reminded that on a previous occasion he accused me of shedding crocodile tears. I am not going to go that far. I want to be far more charitable to him and his party than he was to me. But as the leader of the opposition spoke, I remembered that I had an advertisement which appeared during the Portage la Prairie by-election; and it struck me as being a little incongruous that the same party which advocated such drastic cutting down of expenditure by this government were now advocating the spending of more money for social security. I want to say clearly that I am not criticizing them in any way for advocating greater expenditures on social security, particularly under this measure, because we are on the same side on this question. But I believe that if the policy advocated during the Portage la Prairie by-election had been followed by this government it would have been impossible, not only to increase the amount of the old age pension, but to pay any old age pension at all, or to pay any family allowances at all. Why do I say that? I have an advertisement here, with the picture of the genial member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Miller); and incidentally it is a very fine picture.

Mr. MERRITT: A very fine fellow, too.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Yes. It is headed, "Make Miller your member," and underneath that in large letters it says, "He believes in and will work to stop billion dollar government spending." If that were taken seriously; if we were to make a move in this house to cut the expenditures of the government to less than a billion dollars, which is the only way you can stop billion dollar spending, it would be impossible to provide any old age pensions or any family allowances at all.

Mr. MERRITT: If I may ask a question, does the hon. member think this government is an extravagant spender, or not?

MR. ZAPLITNY: Certainly on old age pensions it is not.

Mr. MERRITT: That is hardly an answer to the question.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I will say this to my hon. friend, that I am not criticizing the speech of the leader of the opposition yesterday, but I think if we are to make proper expenditures in regard to these matters we should be careful at election time not to go out advocating the cutting out of billion dollar spending. I want to say quite frankly that I am not against billion dollar spending. I would be just as happy if the government spent twice as much as they are spending now, provided that we got a dollar's worth for every dollar we spent, and that the people who most needed the expenditure were the recipients of it.

Mr. STEPHENSON: How is the C.C.F. party going to pay the extra taxes?

Mr. ZAPLITNY: That is hardly a question which requires an answer.

Mr. STEPHENSON: Oh, yes, it is.

Mr. KNOWLES: We spent five billion dollars a year during the war, out of production.

Mr. MERRITT: And we owe it now.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I hope hon. members have had their little chat and that I may go on with what I was saying.

Mr. MERRITT: How about going on with old age pensions?

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Exactly; that is what I am going to do. I also want to remind hon. members who sit across the way that if there has been a delay in improving the old age pensions situation it has been the fault of the government, but not only of the government itself. There are members who are not part of the government, but who support it, private Liberal members on the other side of the house, who in previous debates have advised the government to go slowly. I say this merely because one or two hon. members opposite have expressed their impatience over the lack of progress in this matter. I strongly sympathize with them; they are not the members who gave the advice to which I just referred. I find that in 1946, when the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) introduced his almost annual resolution seeking higher old age pensions at a lower age, one of the hon. members sitting opposite, the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare (Mr. Baker), had this to say at page 745 of Hansard for April 10 of that year:

> However, I believe the motion is premature at this time. I hope that some day in the future, and the sooner the better, we shall be able to have these things so arranged in Canada that the old and aged people will be able to pass through the twilight of their lives with dignity, comfort and security.

I agree with the latter part of that statement; but if hon. members on that side of the house are as anxious as we are that some progress should be made in these matters—and I believe they are—why do they advise the government, when we present a motion of this kind, that the matter is premature? When shall we be ready to do the things we believe are right?

An hon. MEMBER: When you stop talking.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: The hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska (Mr. Michaud), who is a charming member, in the same debate at page 749 of Hansard, had this to say:

> . . . I do not consider it advisable that the house should adopt it at this time.

And at page 751:

> If the resolution is put to the vote I shall vote against it because I do not think it advisable to pass upon it while the proposals are before the dominion-provincial conference . . .

Well, it appears that this conference has not been a succeess. It has not finished its deliberations, but for all practical purposes it has ended, and today I do not think those hon. members would take that attitude, or at least I hope they would not. Then I find that on October 3, 1945, speaking on the same subject at page 718 of Hansard, the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Cote), also a charming member, used these words:

> . . . I am of the opinion that this resolution is premature and inappropriate at this time and should not be adopted.

There is the record, which shows there have been hon. members, I suppose on both sides, who have not been prepared to do what we think is right because it has been premature, or inappropriate, or not the right time to do it. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) reminds me, they promised this in 1919, and still they think it is premature.

I am not going to take much more of the time of the house; I am going to follow the advice of the hon. member opposite who said that as soon as I sat down they would start doing these things. I am so anxious to see them done that I am not going to hold up the house longer.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that the question of improving our old age pensions, putting them on a national scale, removing the means test, making better provision for the blind and including in that category also the crippled, is something that has been before this house actively for the last three years. It has been before the house in one form or another for the last fifteen or twenty years, or perhaps longer; and I believe it is time, before this parliament ends, that we should take this matter seriously and, even though we may have to pass the present bill, inadequate as it is, on this occasion, immediately after that we should set up a committee charged with the responsibility of bringing into this house a proper bill covering all these needs, including pensions for the blind and crippled, old age pensions on a national scale and so on, to bring before the house something of which we can all be proud.

Mr. P. E. COTE (Verdun): Mr. Speaker, I should like to open my remarks by referring to a word which the previous speaker emphasized, and which he extracted from speeches made by two hon. members on this side of the house during the debate on this matter a year or two ago. The hon. gentleman objects to the word "premature", as it was used at that time. If I may, to please him I would use that word again today and say that in my opinion this debate is premature. We all agree on the principle involved in this amending bill, which is the improvement of the Old Age Pensions Act; but most of the criticism that has been heard here should have been reserved for the committee of the whole when this bill was considered clause by clause. This is a money bill. No hon. member can do anything to increase its provisions, and a great deal of time is being wasted without any benefit. I had intended to make a few remarks during the committee stage; but since the debate has taken the trend it has taken, I feel that, coming from the province of Quebec, I should voice my opinion.

I do not intend to speak at length; but what I should like to emphasize, first, is that, despite the criticism we have heard yesterday and today on this point, for the past twenty years this party has been interested actively in old age pensions. The first bill was introduced in 1927; and if one will refer to the various steps which have been taken since then to improve the original statute, he will realize at once that our system of pensions has developed gradually during those twenty years.

The opposition is not satisfied with the milestone we reached today with the amendment contained in this bill. I would repeat what has been said by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin), that this measure will bring our system on a par with other systems in force in countries having a similar constitutional complexion. I refer more particularly to New Zealand, Great Britain and the United States.

I would say to hon. members opposite that old age pensions legislation has been on the statute books of New Zealand for the past fifty years, while in Canada we have had it for only twenty years. Yet, during that half century New Zealand has covered only about the same distance we have covered in less than half the time. The same statement could be made if a comparison were made between our system and that in other countries to which I have referred.

I would emphasize the fact that our government has been more interested in the broader picture of social security. Listening to some opposition members, one would think they are concentrating all their thought and action upon old age pensions. I believe it would be unwise to act as some of our critics are acting at the present time with respect to this matter, because since the beginning of the last world war more particularly, social security at large, and as an over-all scheme for the protection of our freedoms and privileges, has been in the minds of the people, not only in this country, but in countries throughout the world.

Our people are not thinking in terms of this or that piece of legislation as much as in terms of a system for which our country fought during the last war, a system of security for each and all of us in our way of life, and to cover our various requirements. This state of mind developed more particularly after the Atlantic charter gave expression to certain principles in August, 1941. To the principles contained in that charter, Canada has subscribed through her acceptance of the declarations of the united nations signed in Washington on January 1, 1942, and we have subscribed on a great number of other occasions in the years following.

As all hon. members know, the principles of freedom proclaimed in the Atlantic charter were the foundation upon which was built the constitution of the united nations organization and they have served as guiding lights to the various committees set up under its supervision and control.

Our country has not delayed unduly her action to implement the obligations she has assumed jointly with the other united nations. On March 8, 1943, this house appointed a select committee whose order of reference was to examine and to report upon a national plan of social insurance which would constitute a charter on social security for the whole of Canada. The committee sat during the session of 1943, was reconstituted in 1944 and did a great amount of work.

In the course of a debate such as this, which deals with old age pensions, it is proper that one should ask himself what importance he should attach to the setting up of an overall scheme of social security, and what place old age pensions should have in such a scheme. I was particularly interested in the views expressed before the special committee which sat in 1944, by the then executive director of the Canadian welfare council, a gentleman who, since that time, has been honoured with the appointment to the important post of deputy minister of welfare in the dominion government. To precise questions on this point, Doctor Davidson offered the following order of priority:

1. The maintenance of the fullest possible measure of employment;
2. The establishment of adequate minimum wage levels;
3. Children's allowances;
4. Health insurance;
5. Old age and retirement insurance.

Before the close of the last war, parliament agreed to and passed important measures of social security which have done much to bring our country into line with other leading nations of the world. I refer more particularly to the Unemployment Insurance Act and the Family Allowances Act, and an important step was taken with the establishment of a special department for national health and welfare.

How has our government acted in the matter of expressing its firm belief in the necessity for setting up an over-all and comprehensive system of complete social security in Canada? I have already placed on record the expert views of a gentleman who certainly had sufficient knowledge and experience to express such views.

The minister referred to the fact that the national health programme represented a great gap in our social security programme, and he pointed out the necessity of improving our old age pensions.

The federal authorities have held, and rightly so, that the only constitutional way to act was to confer with the provinces, and they have done that on several occasions since 1945. They made proposals which involved the expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars by this government, provided that those proposals were agreed to by the provinces. More particularly, the scheme of old age pensions which they suggested called for an expenditure of $200 million by this government, while the scheme of health insurance called for an expenditure of $150 million. Family allowances, which have since been put into effect, called for a net expenditure of $200 million by this government.

I do not intend to go over the explanations given by the minister of the amendments provided by this bill. He has stated that this is the maximum pension possible, and he has stated that there is to be a relaxation of certain restrictions in the application of the means test and so forth. I may have something else to say when the bill is in committee.

At this time I wish to state my views in connection with certain criticisms which we have heard since this discussion commenced. As the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McIvor) has said, the foundation of the criticism from all quarters of the opposition seems to be that this measure has been too long delayed and that it provides for only a partial measure of justice to the aged. That is the usual refrain of the opposition, and if one takes the trouble to read Hansard since this parliament opened in 1945 he will notice that in each case the criticism of the opposition has been along the same theme—too little, too late.

I shall not go over the legislative activities of this parliament prior to the last war, but I would point out that Canada has been marching forward and has achieved a success which has placed her in a leading role among the medium nations of the world, in spite of the criticism which we have heard throughout the war and since, that she was doing too little and it was coming too late.

Listening to what has been said on the other side, I wonder what would have been the reaction if the minister had brought in a bill containing the exact proposals of the green book, proposals which have been agreed to by seven out of the nine provinces and which are still waiting for the agreement of the other two. I can hear the criticism by the opposition. I am sure they would have blamed the government for taking an autocratic attitude and for disregarding the rights of the provinces in doing something which had not been agreed to. I do not see any soundness in the stand taken by the opposition on this bill.

We could have waited even longer. The proposals made are definite and concrete. They were made two years ago and the provinces were invited to cooperate in their realization. There are still two important provinces which have not yet come forward. We could have waited and I think we would have had valid reasons for waiting. However, the government has felt that the aged people should not be penalized by having to wait until the agreement had the signature of all nine provinces. We have today a compromise, a measure which comes halfway between the present system and that contained in the proposals which we had hoped would be accepted by the provinces and by which we would have had a more comprehensive and complete social security programme in Canada.

Criticism has been heard with reference to the means test, but there has been no mention of the fact that the countries which have been compared with Canada, such as New Zealand, Great Britain and the United States, still have the means test. They are in the process of transition toward an over-all contributory plan. After twenty years of operating our old age pensions in Canada, it is our hope—and I believe that is shared by hon. members in every corner of the house—that some day, with the cooperation of the provinces, we shall have a contributory old age pension plan in Canada.

It has been suggested during the debate that if this bill provided for hospitalization, medical, dental and optical care for our aged people, it would be much more acceptable. But this suggestion does not strike me as being quite in order, since all these matters are under provincial jurisdiction, and I do not see what more we can do until all the provinces agree to allow us to enter these fields. These hon. members have certainly not followed the reaction in some of the provinces when we were discussing health insurance in the committee of this house on social security three or four years ago.

Suggestions have been made to increase the maximum pension payable to $50 at the age of sixty. Others are advocating the payment of a pension of $60 at the age of sixty, but I do not see any soundness in these proposals. I cannot see any argument to support them, unless at the same time it is advocated that our taxation should be set up at a higher level in order to meet these additional expenditures. From the estimate of our population for next year, a pension of $50 at age sixty would cost $850 million. This is nearly as much as the estimated receipts from the income and corporation taxes for the fiscal year 1946-47. If the pension were put at $60 at the age of sixty the cost would exceed the receipts from these two taxes and would involve an expenditure of over one billion dollars.

I should like to have heard something about the fiscal system which would be advocated to meet the requirements of all these proposals that we hear about for additional benefits or services or to increase those that we already have, such as old age pensions. If hon. members on the other side are sincere when they say that we should aim at a coordinated social security programme which would provide for every hazard that a man is apt to come up against in modern society, they might give more importance to cooperation between the provinces and to the necessity of an agreement between those to whom our constitution has particularly entrusted the responsibility to take care of these hazards and needs of our population. I do not see that anything worth while can be achieved in the field of social security when considering an over-all long-range scheme, unless we discuss at the same time our constitution and the cooperation that we need. To lay down any durable foundation for the future of our country, as is done in the proposals to the provinces with regard to old age pensions, we should not just pick out that particular hazard by itself and offer to spend $600 million or $700 million or more every year and give old age pensions to a greater number of our citizens. We have aimed, first, to cover a wider field; we have given a place of importance to old age pensions, and we have given a more important place to a service which our country does not have, to help ensure a national health programme with the intent of filling the important gap and with the desire of laying the basis for a continual and worth-while alleviation of the difficulties and needs of our population. I think we have a balanced programme of social legislation already in our statutes and in the proposals to the provinces. It is the duty of hon. members, as it is the duty of the citizens of Canada, to impress upon the provinces which have not as yet agreed to these proposals, the necessity of concurring with their sister provinces in helping to lay down a foundation for a social future for our country.

Coming from Quebec, I could not conclude my remarks, Mr. Speaker, without pointing to what the situation is in my province. The province of Quebec entered into agreements with the federal authorities with regard to old age pensions in 1936. In the years following, until the war broke out, nothing was done by Quebec to increase the maximum pension payable to our destitute and needy citizens. It is true that during the war, from 1939 to 1945, a good excuse could be offered for not doing so; but for the past two years, if one bears in mind that the provincial budget has had substantial surpluses, if one has regard for the economic and financial position of Quebec as compared with that of the other provinces, one cannot avoid asking himself how it is that in Quebec there is but $25 as maximum pension payable to the aged. The example set up by our neighbour province of Ontario today should be an invitation to Quebec and to its neighbour provinces to get closer to the other provinces and to the federal government in a true association and partnership in the working out of a greater future for our country. The first step that Quebec could take toward that aim would be to take the necessary steps for the immediate voting of increased pensions. I would not be satisfied until such time as Quebec is on the same level as the great provinces of British Columbia and Ontario as far as the alleviation of the lot of all our old people is concerned.

May I refer to a statement which was made on the 16th instant by the provincial treasurer of Quebec, Hon. Onesime Gagnon, at the bankers' convention in the state of New York. The statement is in the French language, but I may say, from what the newspaper La Presse reported in its issue of the 17th instant, that if the Quebec provincial treasurer would translate into legislative action the feelings to which he gave expression on the occasion of that convention, Quebec would no longer consider Ottawa as a foreign country; Quebec would no longer consider her sister provinces as competitors from whom she should keep away in case they might lean against her and infringe upon her privileges, traditions and rights. I would hope that Mr. Gagnon would communicate to his leader the premier of Quebec the spirit which he has there expressed and that from now on there will be between Quebec and Ottawa the same spirit of partnership as Mr. Gagnon preached between Canada and the United States in the course of his statement. This is what he said. I quote in the French language:

(Translation):

Only the close cooperation between the United States and Canada, can prevent the catastrophe of a third world war, which would surely destroy civilization.

(Text):

And later on, Mr. Speaker, he said:

(Translation):

The Canadians and the Americans, united in their love of freedom, struggle for the progress of civilization. Both countries are staunch supporters of the federal system and both are equally interested in the return of peace to the universe. To achieve these aims they must cooperate and such cooperation is bound to ensure important results.

Mr. Gagnon said to the 600 delegates assembled here since Saturday, "That there can be no question of staying aloof or of minding our local business alone."

Mr. McIVOR: Hear, hear!

(Text):

Mr. COTE (Verdun): It would appear, Mr. Speaker, that for the past two years, if the Hon. Mr. Gagnon is sincere in his statement, there has been some progress in the attitude of the provincial government of Quebec toward the government of any place outside the province. I hope that what I have read will be true so far as the relations between the provincial government and the federal government are concerned. I trust that we may expect closer cooperation between the two governments, to start with, in order to improve the situation of the aged of the province of Quebec, and, in the second place, in order to build for Canada a great future, social security in the province of Quebec, in the whole of Canada, which would be better, and in the whole world—and that is what Mr. Gagnon had in mind the other day. That is, I am sure, the aim of each person of good will on this continent and elsewhere.

Mr. PATRICK H. ASHBY (Edmonton East): The old age pensions bill we have before us should never have been drawn up in the first place, and, in the second place, it should never have been brought before this house, because it is none of our business. Here are we assembled like a lot of old bachelors discussing among ourselves, as it were, whether or not Mrs. Murphy's kids should have peanuts or popcorn. Let me illustrate what I mean when I say it is none of our business.

When I was a little boy "my mammy done told me" that God was a great and good being, that He was all that was right, just and honourable, but that there was another called the devil, who was the very opposite, and I often wondered as a child why God permitted the devil to hang around. Over a quarter of a century ago I dissociated myself from artificial entities and dealt only in realities. In other words, I went back to the farm where I became intimately acquainted with nature, with God if you like, and, having in mind since childhood the puzzling fact of the devil and God existing side by side, I asked God one day, figuratively speaking, of course, why He did not knock the devil out of Old Nick and be done with it. The answer I got made me stagger back on my heels. My mouth opened, my eyes nearly bursting from my head, for the answer I got was: Demon est deus inversus. "You", I said in amazement, "don't say so". Well, isn't that queer, that it never occurred to us before? I began to see and to realize things that I had never seen or understood before, and one was that we merely have things turned wrong side out, upside down. That is all that is the matter. Put things right side up and everything is all right. There is nothing to it.

Getting bolder, still figuratively speaking, I asked God if He minded my taking His place for a while. "Oh," I hastened to explain, "I do not mean I want to dominate the world. I am not an internationalist, a communist. I do not even want to dominate Canada. I am not a bureaucrat, a socialist. I do not even want to dominate our old folks; I do not even want to set their standard of living. All I want to be is a small god, a little bitty god on my own farm, over some pigs and sheep." "Sure", He said, "go ahead". So I clambered onto a pedestal, which happened to be a mound thrown out of the barn door, driving off the barnyard rooster, who had been flapping his wings and crowing to the world like a politician at election time. Climbing to the top of it, I raised my hand and said, "Let there be life" and there was life; for, as I said before, I was dealing in realities and not in artificial entities. I was not dealing with pens and pencils, with paper and figures, with words, with budgets and estimates and old age pensions. I was dealing with chromosomes, and determiners, germ cells, with living things. I was dealing with life itself, and, having created life of my own choosing, I discovered many interesting and instructive things, among which was that I must not interfere with the freedom of any individual under my care. I also learned that there was one Divine right that I must never encroach upon, and that Divine right is this: We have no right to take from one to give to another. I am making this statement, that any human being who takes part in this taxation swindle is committing a crime, not merely against his fellow man, but against the Almighty God, who has that Divine right, and Him alone.

Mr. LESAGE: Taxation?

Mr. ASHBY: Taxation, yes. We have no right to tax anybody. There was a time when human beings believed that a king had that divine right, but at the time of magna carta we took that divine right away from kings and introduced checks and balances which governed taxation. Today this divine right is being usurped by bureaucrats who claim they can force their fellow human beings to hand over to them money which belongs by right to those who earn it. Taxation results in all this confusion. Taxation is robbery. Taxation alienates production, or goods, from the people who are the rightful owners.

I should just like to point out one or two things, Mr. Speaker. So much has already been said, and I do not want to repeat too much, but here is a typical case, a little old lady who writes as follows:

> I am a widow, sixty years of age. What is there in life for us? Many people think there is a widows' pension; they are confused with the mothers' allowance which does not help a widow of this age.
>
> We are old, tired, and afraid of the future . . .
>
> All the discussion on lowering the age limit for the old age pension is good but in the meantime many widows are desperate and afraid.
> [Mr. Ashby.]

Then we talk about freedom from fear! What a sham! Here are poor old souls who live in fear. They know not where the next meal is coming from. I have a soft spot in my heart for the ladies, and when I was in the city of Edmonton I spotted a dandy across on the other side of the street. She was just like a little partridge hurrying through a crowded barnyard, ready to take off at any moment. There being no policeman around, I took after her, breaking the traffic rules. I caught up to her after a while, puffing and blowing like a grampus. I raised my hat to her and told her who I was. I am a kind of mind-reader, and she said to herself, "So what?" and grabbed her handbag all the tighter. I took her by the sleeve of her coat. No wonder she was backing away from me because she had a hammer handle in it; that is, I thought it was a hammer handle until I saw her hand dangling on the end of it. She had no meat on her bones at all. I do not think that poor little soul would have weighed over seventy pounds. I think I could have picked her up like a suitcase and carried her home. And what hands she had, too!—lined with dirt, broken fingernails. Her clothes were old but neatly mended. I got into conversation with her, and this is the little story she told me. She was over seventy. She earned her living at odd jobs—picking berries, digging potatoes, weeding people's gardens, doing charwoman's work, doing any job at all. But her eyes showed nothing but fear. There was no smile of happiness on her face. That was right here in Canada, in the city of Edmonton, Alberta, in this day and age. Can you imagine it?

An hon. MEMBER: Shame!

Mr. ASHBY: I asked her where she lived. She told me she lived in a cot she herself had constructed under the cellar steps of a home, where the people permitted her to stay at night.

An hon. MEMBER: That happened in Canada!

Mr. ASHBY: She told me that as a girl she had been a schoolteacher and had taught school for nearly twenty-five years. Can you imagine it? I have another letter here with me which reads:

> I am a widow . . . I am seventy-nine today. I have nothing coming in only what I can earn.

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): What about her pension?

Mr. ASHBY: She has to remain in Alberta for another year, I think, before she gets any reward at all. I asked this old lady to whom I spoke, what she did. She said, "I am a contractor. I contract to hang wallpaper."

I believe that old lady would contract to paper this hall, absolutely unafraid of high places on scaffolding. Sometimes when I see our Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) sitting over there, I wonder how he would be able to earn his living if he and she were put side by side under identical circumstances. I think she would be the one who would bring home the bacon.

What is the solution? I am not going to take up very much more time, Mr. Speaker, because so much else has been said. The solution is to free every individual. Who are we to decide whether others shall have their freedom or not? Once they get their freedom, suitable education will enable all these old folks to enjoy their remaining years in their own way. I think that is all I need to say.

To sum up, I might once more say that we must get rid of this bureaucratic rule or statism. We have an abundance of experts. If they do not know how to do the jobs, it is time we discharged them from office. We know what our old folks want. If we put it up to a vote throughout Canada I am sure they would soon let us know. Why not give instructions to these hordes of experts, the civil servants, and make them civil servants? I notice they no longer sign their names, "Your obedient servant." They are usurping the power of this parliament and it is time we put them where they belong. In the meantime, instead of calling this an old age pension or an allowance, why not say that this shall be a refund of taxes which have been collected from these old people during their lives and the refund shall be at $60, $75 or $100 a month as they see fit, not as we see fit?

Mr. G. A. CRUICKSHANK (Fraser Valley): I am rather nervous in rising tonight, Mr. Speaker, following a member from Alberta. I cannot exactly understand why anybody in Alberta should be entirely short of money. I understood that everybody in that province received at least $25 a month. Inasmuch as I have had something to say in the past about quoting from notes, and since I intend to quote quite extensively, in order that there may be no misunderstanding I would suggest that a member of the Conservative party and the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Irvine) sit on either side of me to see that I am not reading my speech when, in fact, I am quoting.

Strange to say, though I support this government, I do not at all like the bill that has been introduced. I do not think it goes far enough; I do not believe the people in my riding think it goes far enough. Early in 1943 we from British Columbia sitting on this side of the house were not satisfied with the Old Age Pensions Act of that day and appointed a member from our province to represent us. The member we appointed is now in the other place, to which I am not permitted to refer as I should very much like to. He was a distinguished member of this house, the former member from Burrard and mayor of the third largest city in Canada, which in a few years will be the largest city. These recommendations were unanimous, though two of our members at that time were serving overseas. I endorsed the recommendations on behalf of the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. Sinclair), as his representative here. He was a squadron leader in the R.C.A.F., serving in Africa at that time. I simply give this explanation to show that our recommendations, which were made to the leader of our party in British Columbia and to the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mackenzie King), were unanimous on the part of the British Columbia members on this side of the house. I want to quote what we recommended at that time:

1. An amendment to the constitution making old age pensions a federal responsibility.
2. Reduction of the age limit. In the case of men from seventy to sixty-five years and in the case of women from seventy to sixty years.
3. Increase in the maximum amount payable from $20 per month to $1 a day.
4. Removal of the onerous and restrictive regulation now in force.
5. In addition to the existing old age pension system the establishment of a contributory system as a part of our unemployment insurance scheme now in operation.
6. Similar adjustments for the blind veterans in need and invalids.

To follow that up, I should like to quote also what the special committee on social security, set up by this parliament, recommended in its report on July 23, 1943:

That the government review the existing regulations governing old age pensions, pensions for the blind and war veterans' allowances, and consider the advisability of adjusting the eligibility age to a lower level, and of increasing the amount of pensions. That an investigation be made into conditions and bases of grants of these pensions in the various provinces, cost of subsistence, inequalities, responsibility for and distribution of obligation, and all the matters relating to the problems involved, in order to effect greater coordination, equality and adequate adjustments.

At that time I was speaking, as I think I am still speaking, for the British Columbia members. If our recommendations had received the full support of all the provinces in 1943 the present inadequate bill would not have been brought down now. This matter was discussed in the house on April 1 and July 4, 1943. At that time the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Ilsley) was Minister of Finance. I have the greatest admiration for him, because I know he has the greatest ability of any man in Canada to say no. On July 24, 1943, he announced an increase in old age pensions from $20 to $25 a month; that is at page 5490 of Hansard for that year. My point is that if in 1943 it required $25 a month, for the Minister who is sponsoring this bill to tell me this increase from $25 to $30 a month meets the present cost of living just does not add up. In July, 1943, the then premier of Ontario agreed to carry on the increase of $3 a month in this province, and British Columbia agreed to $5 a month. At that time the British Columbia members on this side of the house pointed out to the provincial premiers that we thought the age should be lowered. We did not go only to our own premier; we went further and tried to convince even Ontario that this should be done. In fact we wrote the premiers of all the provinces. We thought we had a very good reason for doing this. We believed in a contributory old age pension scheme; but, pending that, we felt the old age pensions should be adequate, because it was obvious that people now in receipt of these pensions were not in a position and should not be asked to contribute.

I now want to quote from a man who, I think, has done more for old age pensions in Canada than any other man in this country; a man who, I believe, has at heart the interests of the old age pensioners as much as any man in Canada, if not more. I refer to the present Prime Minister, my leader. I think this ought to be good enough. I am referring to pages 2260 and 2261 of Hansard for June 2, 1931; and when I am through, I am sure the minister sponsoring this bill will bring in an amendment to bring it into line with what I think it should be. This is what the Prime Minister said:

> The Liberal administration fought for many years for an old age pension act, and care I think was taken to make it clear that an amendment to the British North America Act would be required before this federal government would have power to administer an old age pension scheme. It was recognized that an amendment to the British North America Act would take some time, and for that reason the government of the day adopted the method of agreeing to give these grants in aid to the provinces on condition that they would carry out a scheme framed by the federal government which would be similar in all the provinces.
> An hon. Member : A vicious principle.
> Mr. Mackenzie King: The principle, from a financial point of view, was unsound. I am quite prepared to concede that. But I will go a step further and say that, in my opinion, this parliament ought to remedy the unsoundness of the principle, not by discontinuing to vote money for old age pensions, but by assuming the entire obligation, one hundred per cent. This government should take over the whole scheme and itself pay out the money. That is the position that should be taken; that is the proper way to remedy what there is of unsoundness in the principle . . .
> Obviously the principle is thoroughly sound. I have always taken that position and have fought strenuously for it; and to get that principle recognized by parliament I was prepared to go so far as to support a grant in aid, which I am perfectly frank to admit was, from the point of view of financing, an unsound method. Now I say, let us recognize that the principle of old age pensions itself is perfectly sound and involves an obligation which the federal parliament should assume. Let us undertake to administer the Old Age Pensions Act from Ottawa and have all the moneys which are necessary for the payment of those pensions voted by this parliament.

I believe that policy has been reaffirmed by the Prime Minister on other occasions. We from British Columbia on this side of the house, after hearing the then minister of finance on April 1, 1943, wrote our provincial premier, with copies to the premiers of all the provinces, giving our understanding of the policy then laid down:

> 1. The responsibility for old age pensions is primarily of provincial jurisdiction;
> 2. The amount paid to old age pensioners is inadequate;
>
> 3. The dominion government will not contribute any portion of any increase in the amount payable;
>
> 4. The provincial governments are now in a better position to meet the cost of old age pensions than is the dominion government;
> 5. The dominion government will give consideration to a request made by substantially all of the provinces for a reconsideration of the maximum limit in the Old Age Pensions Act (as outlined on pages 1789 to 1793 of Hansard April 1, 1943.)

That was our conception of the policy of the then minister of finance. We were not in accord with that. We wrote to our provincial premier and to the premiers of the provinces as follows:

> That the British North America Act be amended to nationalize old age pensions;
>
> That the age limit be reduced;
>
> That the maximum payable be raised;
>
> That many of the arbitrary restrictions now in the act, and the regulations, be repealed;
>
> That the policy adopted for old age pensioners should be extended to include pensions to the blind, and mothers' allowances.

And note this, that this is the recommendation by members from British Columbia in the House of Commons, recommendations to our premier in 1943. We continued:

> That the proportion paid by the federal government for pensions and administration should, pending the amendment to the constitution, be increased to 99 per cent.

The reason we thought that, and still think it, is that we realize it takes time to amend the constitution. Some may think it takes too much time, but the fact is it takes time to amend it. However, while it takes time to amend the British North America Act, it takes no time to make a grant in aid to a province. That could be done tomorrow by this parliament.

I should like to quote just a few figures; because, frankly, I do not like the present bill. I do not think it meets conditions as they exist today. I for one cannot understand why in a country with our vast resources we do not give more thought to our greatest resource, the youth of our country. We financed the war through taxation and borrowing; and we financed our borrowing on the strength of our resources. Let us recognize that our greatest resource is the youth of our country. This country was built up by our pioneers, and we owe them a pension which would be adequate—not charity, but a pension which is due to the pioneers of this country.

I would point out that as of the latest figures, those published for 1942, the amounts paid per month, and the daily allowances are set out as follows:

Province	Average Amount Paid per Month	Daily Allowance cents
British Columbia	$19·02	61
Alberta	18·63	60
Saskatchewan	17·17	55
Manitoba	18·70	60
Ontario	18·66	60
Quebec	16·20	52
New Brunswick	14·89	45
Nova Scotia	15·06	45
Prince Edward Island ..	11·37	36

While I am not prepared to admit that Canada is not the greatest dominion in the British commonwealth, the following table as of March 31, 1942, will give the comparative situation as between Canada and Australia in the matter of pensions:

	Canada	Australia
Population	11,586,650	7,000,000
Number of old age pensions	185,992	275,456
Number of invalid pensions	Nil	60,597
Total pensions	185,992	336,053
An increase of Australia over Canada		150,061
Amount paid to pensioners	$28,530,000	$93,580,000
Increase of Australia over Canada		$61,150,000
Age limit
Men	70 years	65 years
Women	70 years	60 years

That just does not add up, to my mind. Half a loaf may be better than no bread, but it does not add up when I am told that Canada cannot afford to meet the cost.

In this connection I wish to quote the words of my leader, a man who, in my opinion, has done more for the unfortunate people in this country than anyone else has done. I speak as an old-time Liberal, one of the few free traders on this side of the house—

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Who is the other one?

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner). I quote the Prime Minister as of March 26, 1926, as he is reported at page 1976 of Hansard:

If we were legislating as my hon. friend has suggested, for young people of the age of ten or twelve; if we were providing an old age scheme for page boys about the house, for schoolboys and girls, then it would be wise to lay emphasis upon the importance of a contribution on their part towards a system intended to help to maintain them in their old age. But I take it that this house at the present time, in discussing old age pensions, is not thinking of your people of ten, twenty or thirty years of age or even of persons of forty or fifty years of age. We are thinking more particularly of that large body of men and women now in Canada who are approaching the age of seventy years. We have in mind those between the ages of sixty and seventy who are finding it difficult to get the assurance that their declining years are not going to be spent in dependence on charity.

In the course of the debate today reference has been made to the old age pension scheme as though it were something related particularly to inmates of poorhouses. I am inclined to feel that there is no class in human society today that has not in its numbers a very considerable percentage of persons who are living in constant dread of the moment when, in their advanced years, they will be thrown upon their children or upon society for support.

One of the greatest needs in the industrial life of Canada today is that the standards governing industrial relations should be more or less identical as between one province and another. That can only be brought about by some kind of action on the part of the federal government leading to cooperation between the federal government and the provinces and among the different provinces themselves. I submit that this scheme of old age pensions as here drafted will have that effect.

It will be the natural thing to ask the representatives of the provincial governments to meet with the departments of the federal government which may be administering the old age pensions plan, to discuss further its details, and to consider the regulations for its effective operation.

I do not see why old age pensioners throughout Canada should be penalized because of the selfishness of two provinces which claim to have the greatest population and the greatest wealth, which has been built up at the expense of the rest of Canada. I refer to Ontario and Quebec. Why should the rest of Canada, including the old age pensioners, have to wait because Ontario and Quebec have been selfish, through their present administrations? I suggest that is where this government and the minister are falling down, because, if Ontario and Quebec do not want to come in, then why should all the rest of Canada be penalized?

An hon. MEMBER: What does your leader say?

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: You can make your speech, and you will have to explain away the province of Ontario. You stay with us in British Columbia, and we will do our part. But why should we be asked to wait because Ontario and Quebec, for purely political reasons, and no other, ask us to? It does not add up.

I wish to point out why I think the present bill is inadequate, and why the present policy of the Liberal party is not sufficient. The leader of the C.C.F. made a quotation today in an excellent speech—although in it I believe he was taking an unfair advantage because after all, no party in Canada ever intends to live up to the promises it makes in a national convention. The Conservatives were going to blast their way into the markets of the world. We were going to reform the other place. Providence is doing its best to help us.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: That started in 1896.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Yes, and you were going to reform Saskatchewan, too. You were going to nationalize the breweries, but you did not do so. And you said we got campaign funds from them. But you have not nationalized them.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: That is part of the national programme.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Since when has Saskatchewan become national?

Mr. CASTLEDEN: The hon. member said it was part of the C.C.F. provincial programme.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Yes, and you said you were going to nationalize the breweries.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: We said it was part of the national programme.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: You were going to nationalize them. Then you said we were getting campaign funds from them. I wish someone would give me some. You have no intention of nationalizing them. I know you raised prices and all that. I will tell the house what they did in Winnipeg in 1919, and here I should like to quote the Prime Minister, as reported on page 1116 of Hansard of June 25, 1940, as follows:

> Insofar as it may be practicable, having regard to Canada's financial position, an adequate system of insurance against unemployment, sickness, dependence, old age and other disability should be instituted by the federal government in conjunction with the governments of the several provinces. When the Liberal administration came into office in 1921 we indicated our hope that while we were in office we might soon be in a position to enact some measure of social insurance. It took time to gain that end. It was a new field for a federal administration to enter. Old age pensions appeared to be the obvious place to begin. It was possible to obtain the cooperation of the provinces for such a measure more readily than for one respecting unemployment, invalidity or health insurance. An old age pensions measure was enacted by the Liberal administration in office in 1927.

I believe the Liberal party has gone a long way in that connection; but, as I understand the policy of the Liberal government, it has not gone far enough. You have your choice and there can be no buts or ifs about it. We are not living in the ox-cart days, at least in British Columbia; we are living in the modern, atomic age. We do not want socialism in that province and we will never have it. I am not prepared to tell the people in my riding, and I do not think any member from British Columbia is prepared to tell his people that we cannot finance a decent living for the pioneers of this country. Any country which can finance $10 million to $12 million a day at times for destruction, surely can find ways and means to do this. I know nothing of monetary reform, but I do know something of common sense. No one can tell me that we cannot find the money to give a decent living to the pioneers of our country.

I want to tell the minister that I am a supporter of this government and I intend to support this bill, just as do my hon. friends opposite, because half a loaf is better than nothing. If I could move an amendment to double what these pioneers are to be granted, reduce the age limit and wipe out the means test I would be glad to do so. However, I realize that, since that would involve the expenditure of money, I cannot do so as a private member.

Let me say to the hon. member from New Brunswick who enthusiastically supports me: Will you go back to your riding and tell your people that that is the policy of the Liberal party, this measly little bill?

Mr. MICHAUD: I will tell my story tomorrow.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: May I say to you—

Mr. SPEAKER: I ask the hon. member who has the floor if he will kindly address himself to the Chair.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker.

I want to refer to 1943. A pension of $38.75 is paid in British Columbia, but New Brunswick, which should know better, being at the extreme other end of Canada and, like British Columbia, always having had a dirty deal from central Canada, paid $14.89 a month. I ask the hon. member to answer that tomorrow in his speech.

The hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McIvor) has just reminded me that I have not said a word about Port Arthur or Fort William. They are at the head of the lakes and that is a wonderful country. Edmonton is a wonderful place for raising sheep and hogs. I admire even Calgary.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Louder.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I am speaking low and I hope he will not hear me.

I can say the same for the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mrs. Strum). For once I am not in accord with my party on this bill. I do not think it is worthy; I do not think it is adequate; I do not think it is doing justice to the pioneers of Canada, and I do not think it is doing justice to the Liberal party.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I had the honour of being on the first committee appointed to consider old age pensions. From the evidence given before us at that time. I came to the conclusion that a pension of $50 a month should be paid to the people of Canada who had reached the age of sixty or sixty-five years and that this should be a federal responsibility. I was alone in the committee in that regard, but I have not seen any good reason to change my mind on the matter up to this time.

I should like to preface my remarks with a brief quotation from an official summary of the legislation of the state of Washington providing for old age pensions. This states:

> On no other issue are the people of the state of Washington as well as our nation as united as they are in the recognition of the economic and social necessity of returning to our senior citizens, the fathers and mothers of our country, part of the wealth which their labour helped to create.

I imagine that is the sentiment of this house. There is no issue upon which there is so much unanimity in Canada as that of the need of taking care of our older people. As a matter of fact old age pensions are not of interest only to our older people; they are of equal interest to our young people. Many times it relieves them of burdens which they are unable to bear, the burden of taking care of old parents, or grandfathers and grandmothers. But apart from that, if any person in Canada is lucky enough to live long enough he may want an old age pension. So it matters not how you consider the thing, this is an issue which directly affects every one in this dominion.

Most speakers have repeated the statement made by the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith) to the effect that no party can claim a monopoly of interest in this question. Most certainly I do not make any special claim and I do not think any one has made that claim. We all recognize that it is not a political question in the narrow sense of partisan politics, but we also recognize that it is fundamentally a political as well as an economic question in the wider application of those terms. Nevertheless, while it is not necessarily a partisan political question, there can be no doubt that the views which form the background of party policy do necessarily affect the actions of a party in power with respect to this or any other issue.

I think it is true to say that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin), who is piloting this bill through the house, did strike a political note in introducing the legislation; and perhaps he merited the criticism which a number of hon. members made to him for having done so. I think, however, that he perhaps made a mistake in his own interests He quoted to us the programme which the Liberal party offered to the people of Canada at the last election. It was a fairly good programme with respect to old age pensions, even though it did not go far enough; but it did propose to increase the amount paid to old age pensioners; it did propose to lower the age at which pensions were to be paid, and it did propose to remove the means test. Of course that is not being done. It is true that they are raising the dominion contribution slightly, so that it makes possible a pension of $50 a month; but I venture to say that if an account should be taken of the increased cost of living as between 1947 and 1926 when the Old Age Pensions Act was originally introduced, the present proposal will grant a pension very much lower in purchasing power to the people of this country than was done in 1926. Therefore this does not really represent an improvement over the original act.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare went on to say that the reason why the programme as promised by his party was not being implemented to the full in this legislation was that the provinces had failed to come to a satisfactory arrangement with respect to taxation and other matters of interprovincial and dominion importance. In this way he found for himself an excuse, if not a reason, for the limited advance which he is proposing in his legislation. Then he rose in his place today when some hon. member from the Progressive Conservative party was speaking and suggested that the legislation now proposed had so stimulated the premier of Ontario that he had come forward with a proposal to pay $40 a month old age pensions to the people of that province. I thought that was very well counteracted by the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) when he pointed out that, in doing so, the premier of Ontario was doing what this legislation or the parliament of Canada had failed to do for all the provinces of this dominion. But I think the argument might be carried beyond that. It is true that Premier Drew has been one of the stubborn figures that have prevented a satisfactory arrangement between the provinces and the dominion—

Mr. MERRITT: That is not so at all.

Mr. IRVINE:—in matters of this kind. I am not criticizing Mr. Drew in that. I am merely saying that he was one of the stubborn ones, in the sense that he had some ideas which were not satisfied. I am not blaming him; he may have had a good idea. I am only pointing out the fact, and he might now very well say to the other provinces which have accepted the agreement: "Look, our province which did not accept the agreement is now paying $40 a month and you have to be satisfied with $30 or less as the case may be." Therefore I think from a political point of view the minister was perhaps not as astute in the particular efforts that he made as he usually is.

In this connection I should like to say that I deplore the inequity which is likely to develop between the provinces in a matter of this kind, an inequity which is inexcusable and indefensible. The fact that British Columbia may have a little greater natural wealth than some of the other provinces and may be able to pay a little more to its older people is no reason why people in another province with a little less natural resources from which to draw should have to receive less; especially let us say, people living in the city of Winnipeg, living in a country which is very cold in the winter time, where older people need more warm clothes, more coal to keep them warm, a better house in which to live and such improvements as must be available in a country with a climatic condition as rigorous as the winter is in Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan; whereas in, say Victoria, where they can almost live in a shack and still be as comfortable as they are in Winnipeg in the winter time and—

An hon. MEMBER: At any time.

Mr. IRVINE: All right, at any time, and where they can live on less food of certain kinds. It seems ridiculous that there should be that disparity. I am emphasizing this point, sir, that whatever amount of pension is paid in Canada must be paid on the basis of Canadian citizenship; that to be done in that way it must be fundamentally a federal responsibility, and to allow this hole-in-the-corner business to go on is representing a viewpoint that is beyond comment.

The hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid), in commenting on the bill, had something to say about the necessity of changing the constitution. I have no doubt that it may be wise and necessary to change the constitution here and there. But I want to point out to him and to the house that the same constitutional right which the government now exercises in paying a pension of $30 a month at the age of seventy with a means test can enable them to pay $50 a month at sixty-five without a means test. There is no fundamental change in the constitution which will differentiate between a pension of $30 a month and a pension of $50.

Most of the speakers from all sides of the house have indicated in this debate that they intend to vote for the measure. I will not go so far as that at this moment; I am not so sure about it. The other day I was reading a letter from an old pensioner who said virtually this: "I cannot live on $30 a month. I am less than existing, and if it is not going to be improved sufficiently to make an existence possible it might be better to stop it altogether and end the matter much more quickly." That is the view of a pensioner. Perhaps the house would not wish to go that far with him, but still there is a good deal of logic and reason in what he says. Everybody admits that $30 a month is too little for one to live on. Well, if they cannot live on $30, what do they live on when they have nothing to live on but $30? They try to eke out an existence which gradually saps their strength until they tumble into the grave a few years sooner than they otherwise would. That is a miserable way for our old people to end their lives. Moreover, taking the argument that if we vote against this measure it may appear to the old age pensioners that we are depriving them of the proposed increase of $5 a month, by that same logic we would be prevented from amending this bill at any time in a manner that is worth while, and sooner or later we shall have to do what I once heard a French-Canadian friend of mine, who got a little mixed up in his English idioms, say: "Some time we will have to grab that bull by the tail and look her straight in the eye." I say that some day we shall have to face up to this issue and not be afraid of its political implications. The fact that we stand for a greater pension may for the moment put us in the position of being opposed to the pension bill which is now before us.

The burden of criticism so far levelled at the bill by those who are opposing it may be summarized, and I shall summarize it, very briefly; because the same road must be travelled by me in this regard as by others. I do not wish to weary the house by going into details and an elaborate comment on points that have already been dealt with pretty thoroughly by a number of speakers. But perhaps I may put it in a little different language and do so briefly.

The first and most obvious criticism is that the pension is too little. It may be assumed that a little of something is better than nothing of anything. I think that much may be said for the bill: A little of something is better than nothing of anything. But $30 a month is not enough for anyone to live on in Canada. The minister himself admits that. He said it was not enough.

Mr. MARTIN: Is the result of this bill in six provinces not more than $30 a month?

Mr. IRVINE: I am going by the bill, and if the minister can show me how it produces more than that, and how it might not produce less, I shall be glad to listen to him when he replies to some of the questions that have been asked by a number of speakers, who have taken the same view of the legislation that I am now taking. As I say, if we have misinterpreted the bill, then, in the first place, the minister has no one to blame for that but himself. He should have spent his time in telling us exactly what the legislation does mean instead of leaving us to interpret it for ourselves and then saying that we have not the right interpretation of it. Instead of that, he spent much of his time in building up party propaganda, which, I think, may be a boomerang and come back at him later.

It has been mentioned in the debate that not only is the $30 a month too little for any individual; but in the case where the old age pensioner, the head of the house, has a wife, who is younger than he is by a few years, he still has to maintain his wife. This view was first expressed in this house, so far as I am aware, by the hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Bentley), and I believe it has been implemented in the soldiers pension act. But the point I want to emphasize is not only that, in the case of a man who has reached the age of seventy, who has a wife of sixty-five, that thirty dollars has to do both of them. I would point out the case of the woman whose husband has died before she gets any pension at all. I had a letter yesterday from an elderly lady about sixty-five years of age, whose husband had just died of cancer, and she told me that, in order to pay the hospital bill and bury her husband, she had sold their cows and even their chickens. There are no pensions for widows of that type in any of our provinces. She is left absolutely stranded. She is not able to work for a living, and she has no means, until she reaches the age of seventy, of receiving any income at all. How she is to reach the age of seventy without any income at all is more than I am able to say.

The minister frankly admits that $30 is not enough. But if it is not enough, why is it not enough? I reiterate the question put by the member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis): On what basis were the calculations made? How did the government arrive at $30? What was the object of arriving at $30 if it were not to make it possible for the older people to live on that amount? I want to emphasize again that if the people of Canada, with our great wealth of natural resources, with the extent to which modern science has been applied to production, with our great plant equipment and our capital equipment, and with our technical skills, can produce the food and clothing as well as the homes necessary to keep our old people in decency during the last years of their lives, then there is no reason under heaven for stopping them from getting what is necessary.

Can that be done? Can we produce enough for our older people, or must we submit to a condition under which the old people of Canada must be allowed to go on suffering under an inadequate provision during their old age? I say, in the first place, that we can produce more than ample of the goods required for sustaining the lives, not only of our aged people, but of all our people. The Minister of Finance, (Mr. Abbott) indicated that our production in Canada this year will reach $12,000,000,000. That is a considerable income for the nation and represents a vast advance over 1926, when this legislation was originally passed. But I suggest to the minister that not only can we produce $12,000,000,000 worth, but with the increased facilities of production which the war stimulated we can produce in the next few years very much more goods with even less labour than we did before.

I saw an estimate by a competent statistician in the United States that in 1947 they will be able to produce, with approximately 30,000,000 men, what it required 40,000,000 men to produce in 1938, and I imagine a similar advance has taken place in Canada. So that there are two grounds, as I see it, upon which we should arrive at a pension that should be paid to our older people. The first is, what are the essential needs of our old people, in food, clothing, shelter and a little bit of the comforts of life? What are the irreducible minimums of services that they require? The second is that our old age pension should either be based on that or be commensurate with the national income when production is in full swing. Those are the underlying principles.

The next point of criticism is that not only is the pension too little, but it is too late. It is too late because many of our older people from sixty to sixty-five and up to seventy die in poverty and misery before they are seventy years of age and never get any pension at all. It would appear to me that the principle behind the present bill is, "Not to many and not for long"; for if we maintain the age limit of seventy it will not be to many; and it will not be for long that those who get it will continue to do so.

I now wish to mention what is done with regard to the age limit and the means test in a few other countries of the world. Denmark pays pensions at sixty and Sweden at sixty-five; Britain, at sixty-five for men and sixty for women; Australia at sixty-five for men and sixty for women; Russia, at sixty for men and fifty-five for women. None of these has a means test at all. With regard to the means test, I think the thrift argument was pretty well exploited. As a matter of fact, it is a double-barreled argument, but I think the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. Sinclair) and my leader, the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) fired the same barrel. They pointed out that there was no incentive given to those people who tried to put away a few dollars each year in order to secure for themselves an annuity at a certain age, because when that time came they were not recompensed as were other citizens who qualified for the old age pension; thus they had little encouragement to save. But the same argument applies to the old age pensioner himself. Up until this bill came in, I think it was something like $125 a year which he was allowed to earn, if he could. Here and there there are individuals who might have done a little better than that; but if they did, it was taken away from them or their pension was reduced accordingly. In this bill the amount has been silghtly raised. The limit of the means test has been modified somewhat. But still, if the pensioners received the highest amount they could receive, they still would not have a sufficient income on which to live comfortably in Canada at the present time. The pensioner himself should be allowed to make all that he can, if he can make anything, and his pension should be paid regardless of his income.

The next point is that no permanent plan for adequate old age pension is contemplated in this legislation. I want to emphasize the point of view that my group has constantly put forward, that there should be an over-all social security programme for Canada, which would have to be carried out through federal legislation, whether by cooperation with the provinces or whether by an amendment to the constitution which gives the federal government the complete right to pass such legislation. I do not think we are going to worry about what the actual details of the technique of bringing it into fulfilment may be. What we are interested in is to see that it is brought about. I believe that it can be brought about even under the constitution as it is. But if not, let us take steps to change it.

In the second place, I believe that such a system might very well be contributory. If we look at the amounts which reasonable pensions would involve, we shall see that perhaps it would be wise to have a contributory system started as soon as possible. The programme which the government promised, but which it is not giving, would have cost Canada in 1947 over $550,800,000; in 1951, $731,520,000; and in 1971, $1,100,880,000. I am not worried any more than anybody else about the millions and the billions. Under the system under which we are living, every government must find the means by which this is to be done. That means collecting through taxation under our present system That could very well become a burden in taxation which was too great. But in the last analysis, all our old age pensions must come, somehow, in some way, from the people. It is merely a matter of arrangement. I think it might be advisable for the government to undertake, as quickly as possible, a scheme by which contributions may be made by individuals, starting young, so that very soon we should have a contributory system fully developed which would afford to all the people of Canada a worth-while income. I am in thorough agreement with the hon. member for Vancouver North. I want to take this opportunity to pay a compliment to that hon. gentleman. I want to congratulate him. He is a brilliant young man and he has shown courage. He stood up for the thing he wanted. In doing that, not only did he do honour to himself, but he honoured the membership of this house; more than that, he honoured the party to which he belongs; for no party which holds within its ranks people who are free to say things, as he was today, can be said to be utterly dead.

Mr. MARTIN: You cannot do that in the C.C.F.

Mr. IRVINE: Yes, we can, or I would not be in it. We have always taken that attitude; that is why I feel free to congratulate the hon. member on what he did and what he said. I want to press the minister, when he closes the debate, to indicate that he is willing to allow this bill to go to the appropriate committee for more careful consideration. I venture to say that if it had not been that an amendment to the motion for second reading, to send the bill to a committee, might have had the effect of killing the bill, such an amendment would have been moved long since. No one wants to kill the thing, though it is only a matter of $5 a month or $60 a year for every old man and every old lady of seventy. That is all we are talking about; but, even so, no one wants to take the responsibility of killing it and preventing them from getting that much more. But none of us is satisfied with it. When hon. members say they are disappointed they put it very mildly indeed; and those who have said that are just echoing what all Canada will say.

In conclusion, I repeat what I said in the beginning, that there is no other issue upon which all the people of Canada are more completely united than this one, and I hope the minister has realized that in listening to the reaction of this house to the bill he has introduced. I should like to support the bill, provided that it goes to that committee where there may be some hope of amending it. Until I am sure it is going to that committee, I shall not commit myself as to whether or not I shall vote for it. But I would say the time has come when we should cease playing with an issue of this sort—

Mr. MARTIN: Hear, hear.

Mr. IRVINE: I hope my hon. friend means that from his heart—an issue which is fraught with so much misery or so much happiness for the people of Canada, depending upon the contents of the measure now before the house.

Mr. C. C. I. MERRITT (Vancouver-Burrard): I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank) on his contribution to this debate. I think he said many things to which the government and the minister might well listen, coming as they do from a member of the government party. I was particularly interested when the hon. member quoted the words of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) in 1931, in which he said he would go as far as grants in aid to the provinces in order that the dominion might take over the whole cost of old age pensions. I could not help thinking, when I heard those words read, how very far below that principle the Prime Minister and the government have now dropped, and what a great recession from the green book proposals is being made in the measure presented to the house by the minister.

In what was said by the hon. member for Fraser Valley, there was only one thing with which I did not agree. He suggested that there was some need to wait, in connection with this matter of old age pensions, until there was a general agreement with the provinces and a new conference. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that there is no need to wait for a new conference or for fiscal agreement before the policy to which the Prime Minister pledged himself in 1931 is carried out. If the dominion is to take over the full cost of old age pensions for those over seventy years of age, why is there any need to wait? I have here the green book proposals of August, 1945. After referring to the national health programme and pointing out that it provides for dominion assistance to a series of provincially administered health schemes, those proposals go on to say, at page 42:

> The proposed system of old age pensions payable as of right without means test to persons seventy or over would be instituted and administered by the dominion government and specific agreements with provincial governments would not be essential to its implementation.

I simply want to say to the hon. member for Fraser Valley and to the minister that there is no justification whatever for the government to hide behind the projected dominion-provincial conference and neglect to implement its green book proposals on old age pensions. I suggest to the hon. member that, instead of getting up as he does and criticizing the government from that side of the house, we shall never have action of the kind he wants as long as he continues to support this government. I want to make this prophecy now, that the social security programme set out in the green book proposals of 1945 will never be implemented by this government. It is my belief that they have gone a long way from those proposals and that they have no intention of carrying them out in the form in which they were made in August, 1945.

Mr. MARTIN: That is not the case; we have gone toward them.

Mr. MERRITT: The minister interrupts and says that is not the case, but we have only his statement to that effect. I have made my prophecy and I stand by it. I am quite satisfied that what I have said will prove to be the case, and that we shall never have these proposals carried out by this government.

What is there in this bill? There is not even an increase of $5 provided by the dominion government. The actual increase in the pension being provided by this government is $3.75, and a further $1.25 is being placed upon the provinces. When I look at the figures concerning my own province I find a peculiar situation. Under a Conservative prime minister in 1931, the dominion assumed seventy-five per cent of the cost of old age pensions, leaving twenty-five per cent for the provinces. That was an advantage to the provinces over the original scheme brought in, as we have heard ad nauseam, by a Liberal government. Now, only fifteen years after Mr. Bennett took over that additional twenty-five per cent, I find that British Columbia is once more bearing almost fifty per cent of the actual cost of the pensions being paid there. The province is paying 43·75 per cent of the cost and the dominion is paying 56·25 per cent. It looks to me as if in this bill all the good work done by Mr. Bennett in 1931 is being undone.

Mr. MARTIN: Did he raise the pension?

Mr. CASSELMAN: You heard what he said.

Mr. MARTIN: Did he raise the pension?

Mr. MERRITT: I think the minister is not being very successful in his interruptions in this debate. I happened to be away yesterday, but we received almost hourly bulletins. There were reports as to his continual interruptions when people were speaking, and the reports were that he had been very unsuccessful in those interruptions. So I suggest to him that he might be well advised to desist in that practice.

Mr. MARTIN: Hear, hear.

Mr. GRANT: What did Bennett promise to pay?

Mr. CASSELMAN: Oh, keep quiet.

[Mr. Merritt.]

Mr. MERRITT: That very interruption by the minister brings me nicely to my next point. The minister has asked how Mr. Bennett's change helped the old age pensioners. I will tell him. The worst feature of this bill is not merely that it is not raising the pension as much as it should, but rather that it is pushing all future responsibilities and initiative on to the provinces. And in doing that, it is making it very dfficult indeed for the provinces to raise the pension in the future. It is putting an almost insuperable barrier in the way of the old age pensioner getting any increase, so long as the ultimate, whole responsibility lies on the provinces.

The old age pensioner can best hope to have his pension increased by the dominion assuming a greater proportion of the total cost. And the proof of that is in the fact that my province has been able since 1931 to add $12.50 to the amount they were paying, while the dominion has added only $7.50 in that time. As you continue to push the provincial government percentage of payment up, and as you bring it, as it is going now, back toward fifty per cent of the total pension paid in my province, so you reduce the power of the province to give any further increase.

When one reads what the minister said in introducing the bill, and when one sees that he relies so greatly upon the provinces to give increases over the uniform pension he is providing in this bill, it is clear that it is his definite intention to leave any future increase entirely up to the provinces. And I feel sure that that policy is one which will not do the old age pensioners much good in the future.

I wish to turn to a point which arises out of the regulations. There were many who hoped that the dominion would carry out its promise of 1945 and bring in an old age pension at the age of seventy, without a means test. But that hope is now completely dispelled. What I would not have expected was that the means test would be tightened up.

Mr. MARTIN: It has not been.

Mr. MERRITT: There is the minister, interrupting again. And he will prove to be wrong in his interruption, as he has in every other case. I have before me the old and new regulations. I find that, under the old regulations, an annual visit to old age pensioners was required. The purpose of the annual visit was to check up on the means of the old age pensioner, to find out if his circumstances had changed, and if, therefore, he was no longer entitled to pension. However, in section 6(c) of the old regulations, the pension authority was permitted to waive that annual inspection, in cases where it was satisfied by other information that the circumstances of the pensioner had not changed. But when we turn to the new regulations and look at section 5(5) we find that the discretion given to the pension authority to waive the annual visit, and to be satisfied on other information that the circumstances of the pensioner have not changed, has been removed. The pension authority is now bound to make a personal annual visit every year to check up on the circumstances of the old age pensioner, whether or not there is any real need for that personal visit.

I wish to ask the minister to look into those subsections I have mentioned to see if he cannot restore the previous position.

Mr. MARTIN: Of course your statement is inaccurate.

Mr. MERRITT: I have the regulations in my hand.

Mr. KNOWLES: The minister is treating you in the way he has treated everybody.

Mr. MERRITT: The minister can look it up for himself and see whether or not I am accurate. If he looks it up and finds that the new regulation is not different from the old one, I shall be satisfied. But he will not find it so.

When I am on this question of means test—now that we are going to keep it—let me say it seems to me that one of the nagging and undesirable parts of the test is this annual check-up. If the minister will look at Hansard for April 10 of last year and refer particularly to page 733 he will find where the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) put on the record the holdings of real and personal property of old age pensioners in British Columbia for 1944-45. I shall not read them into the record at this time, but shall simply say that eighty per cent of the old age pensioners in British Columbia in that year had less than $1,000 worth of real property to their names. Then, ninety-four per cent of the old age pensioners had less than $1,000 in personal property to their credit.

It seems to me that this annual visit might well be made for the purpose of seeing how the old age pensioners are getting along, and whether they have any complaints or needs which social welfare authorities can satisfy, rather than asking them questions to find out whether they have inherited any money or come into any property, so that the pension can be cut down. I believe the annual visit is a good thing if it is done for the welfare of the old age pensioner, but it is a bad thing if it is done simply to pry into his affairs. The facts are, and these percentages show, that the vast majority of these old people have not a great deal of chance of being forced off the pension by sudden wealth, once they have passed the original means test. Could not instructions be issued that this visit should be one for the welfare of the individual and not primarily for the protection of the treasury?

I believe that the pensions for the blind should have been treated differently from old age pensions, particularly with regard to the age limits and residence qualifications. The age of forty is a most arbitrary figure. I am at a loss to understand how a man who has got along without his sight until he reaches forty years of age becomes much less fit to look after himself after forty. I am sure that the age limit could be reduced without any great added expense to the country. Then the residence requirements should be vastly different. Blindness does not only happen at a young age or at birth. A person may be rendered blind through an accident, and I feel that if the individual needs help he should be eligible for a pension without having to wait for any period of years.

(Translation):

Mr. REAL CAOUETTE (Pontiac): Mr. Speaker, as it is close to eleven o'clock, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. GAUTHIER (Portneuf): There are still ten minutes to go.

Mr. HARTT: There are still five minutes to go. We wish to hear you, you speak so well.

On motion of Mr. Mitchell the house was adjourned.)

On motion of Mr. Mitchell the house adjourned at 10.55 p.m.

Friday, June 20, 1947

The house met at two o'clock.

STANDING ORDERS

Sixth report of the standing committee on standing orders.—Mr. Bertrand (Prescott).

CIVIL SERVICE

USE OF WORD "COLOUR" IN QUESTION ON APPLICATION FORMS—PRESS REPORT OF PROCEEDINGS OF JUNE 19

Hon. COLIN GIBSON (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as a matter of privilege I should like to refer to an article which appeared in the press last night and this morning concerning a question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Stewart). The article states:

State Secretary Gibson said today in the Commons that applicants for civil service positions were asked to state their colour so that the civil service commission could place them in the "proper position."

The words "proper position" are in quotation marks. Those were not the words I used. As will be found in Hansard, what I said was:

. . . the question on the application form as to colour is to enable the commissioners, when an application is received from a member of the negro race, to place the applicant in a position which will be congenial.

WHEAT BOARD

REPORT FOR CROP YEAR ENDING 1946—REFERENCE TO AGRICULTURE COMMITTEE

Hon. J. A. MacKINNON (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I wish to lay on the table the report of the Canadian wheat board for the crop year ending 1946. These two copies are typed. Every effort has been made for days and weeks past to get this report ready as quickly as possible so that it could be presented to the house at the earliest possible day. All I have to present today are the two typewritten copies. Printed copies will be here, I am told, by Monday or Tuesday. I move that this report be referred to the committee on agriculture. The officials of the Canadian wheat board will be here from the middle of the week onwards.

Mr. WRIGHT: Will last year's report be presented at the same time for consideration?

Mr. MacKINNON: Last year's report will be available for discussion before the committee on agriculture at the same time, as well as any reports that have not heretofore been discussed.

Mr. BRACKEN: Can the minister say what the average price was for the wheat sold outside the British wheat agreement?

Mr. MacKINNON: I gave the house the figures for wheat sales for the past two weeks. Does the hon. member refer to the whole period that we have been selling No. II wheat?

Mr. BRACKEN: I was asking for it for the past year.

Mr. MacKINNON: I can get that, Mr. Speaker, but it seems to me that as the matter will be referred to the committee, the leader of the opposition can get the information at that time.

Motion agreed to and report referred to agriculture committee.

[Mr. Gibson.]

APPLES

NOVA SCOTIA—REPORTED CESSATION OF BRITISH PURCHASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I have not had an opportunity to give him notice of it, so I do not expect him to answer it immediately unless he happens to have the information at hand. In view of a recent announcement by the minister of agriculture of Nova Scotia, as reported in the press, to the effect that Canadian apples are likely to be cut from the list of British purchases made in Canada, will the minister make a statement to the house as to what the actual situation is? What may the house expect from the government by way of policy to meet this situation? I do not need to mention the importance of this question to the producers of apples in Nova Scotia.

Hon. J. A. MacKINNON (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I believe this question should properly be dealt with by the Department of Agriculture and possibly the Department of Trade and Commerce. I shall look into it, and if I am not here to answer it immediately, I will see that an answer is given.

Mr. BRACKEN: Will the minister see that it is directed to the proper department?

Mr. MacKINNON: Yes.

FEED GRAINS

DIVERSION FROM BRITISH COLUMBIA TO EASTERN PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I am sorry I did not have time to give him notice of it. In view of the urgency of the matter, I would ask the minister to take particular note of it and give an answer on Monday. Many hon. members from British Columbia, including the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank) and the hon. member for Victoria, B.C., (Mr. Mayhew), this morning received an urgent wire from the minister of agriculture of British Columbia drawing their attention to the fact that feed grains and coarse grains are being diverted from British Columbia and directed to the eastern provinces, as a result of which the dairy industry in British Columbia is facing a shortage of coarse grains.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. REID: I am giving the minister notice of my question.

An hon. MEMBER: Sit down.

Mr. REID: I will sit down for the Speaker, but for no one else.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would ask the hon. member, if he is giving notice of a question, to be brief and to the point.

Mr. REID: I thank you, Mr. Speaker, but I am endeavouring to be brief. I am asking the Minister of Trade and Commerce if he will give an answer on Monday with regard to the diversion of feed grains to the eastern provinces, leaving the dairymen in British Columbia destitute of grain.

Hon. J. A. MacKINNON (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I should like to say a word in reply to the hon. member. I will see that his question receives the attention of the proper department. It is not a matter which comes wholly under the Department of Trade and Commerce.

PORT OF CHURCHILL

ADEQUACY OF LABOUR FORCE DURING SHIPPING SEASON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. KNIGHT (Saskatoon): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fear expressed in British shipping circles, can the minister assure the house that an adequate labour force will be on hand at the port of Churchill during the shipping season to handle grain and goods to the full capacity of the port?

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport): The hon. gentleman's question was directed to me just a short while ago. While I have not a full report, I think I have sufficient information to answer the question. He asks whether there will be sufficient labour at the port of Churchill to look after shipments of grain and goods to the United Kingdom. I must say to him first of all that it is not the responsibility of the national harbours board to look after stevedoring operations. That is the responsibility of the shipping firms and their agents. But in the past the national harbours board has followed the practice of recruiting a labour force in that area. It is willing to do that. I am informed by the port manager that some sixty-five or seventy men will be required to do that work, and we think it will be possible to get that force.

The hon. gentleman in his question goes on to ask if grain and goods to the full capacity of the port can be handed by the labour force. I must say to him that if his question is directed to mixed cargoes of grain and lumber, I do not think there will be a great deal of difficulty. If it is directed to lumber alone, then it will take an additional one hundred men, and I do not think it will be possible to recruit that force. However, the national harbours board will do its utmost to assist if notified of the labour force required. It has all facilities available at Churchill for general cargo. I wanted the hon. gentleman to keep in mind the fact that the responsibility for stevedoring is not that of the board but rather that of the shipping companies.

Mr. ISNOR: If there is any question as to the port of Churchill being able to handle these shipments, I suggest they be handled through the port of Halifax.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

National health branch—

215. Assistance to provinces for control of venereal diseases under regulations approved by the governor in council, $175,000.

Mr. FLEMING: Will the minister give the expenditure under this item? I should like to have the breakdown of grants by provinces.

Hon. PAUL MARTIN (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Estimate for 1946-47, $175,000; expenditure for the same period, $171,850.29; unliquidated commitments, $1,242.05.

Mr. FLEMING: This item provides for assistance to the provinces for the control of venereal diseases under regulations approved by the governor in council. If the same basis of distribution is in effect as was in effect during the previous year, the division is based, thirty per cent on the population, forty per cent on the extent of the venereal disease problem, and thirty per cent on the financial needs of the province. Will the minister give the distribution of the money to the provinces, please?

Mr. MARTIN: The net cash grants were as follows:

Prince Edward Island	$ 4,297.94
Nova Scotia	9,462.28
New Brunswick	7,968.86
Quebec	38,165.64
Ontario	42,491.11
Manitoba	10,585.88
Saskatchewan	11,649.23
Alberta	11,463.74
British Columbia	12,665.32
	$148,750.00

Mr. FLEMING: The balance, I take it, represents that educational reserve?

Mr. MARTIN: That is right.

Mr. FLEMING: And if I understand correctly that work of education, for which the sum of approximately $25,000 was reserved, is carried on directly under the federal Department of National Health and Welfare?

Mr. MARTIN: Yes.

Mr. FLEMING: I think it is appreciated by all hon. members that this work in combating venereal disease is largely within the jurisdiction of the provinces, and that apart from extraordinary times such as existed during the war, when the federal government had an opportunity to render more active assistance in this field, in normal times the field open to the federal government is somewhat limited. But I would like to ask the minister whether, apart from making these grants out of this sum of $175,000 a year, the federal government is doing anything to encourage or assist the provinces in developing more active measures for discovering the sources and extent of venereal disease. The minister is aware, as I hope the entire committee is aware, of an important step taken in recent months in Ontario, for instance, in connection with prenatal tests. I think it is of interest to the house to learn the results of those tests. This information was given to the press by the Ontario department of health, and appeared in various newspapers on May 15 of this year. The newspaper article states:

An average of 3,900 expectant mothers per month have been taking advantage of the Ontario health department's offer of one free prenatal examination by their own physician, it is shown in figures released at Queen's Park yesterday.

While the act authorizing this examination at the expense of the province was passed at the 1946 session, it did not become operative until October 1 last. Since that time and up until April 30 last, 27,332 women in 346 municipalities have been examined on this basis by 1,243 physicians. The province pays $5 for each examination upon which a report is submitted.

Department officials said "screening" of the reports to extract significant data from them is proceeding slowly and it is too early to comment upon this phase of the work. The incidence of "V.D." however, is below that anticipated.

I should like to add this observation, that of course the compilation of information as to the incidence of venereal disease is only one of the purposes of the free prenatal test; but having regard to the results already obtained I do suggest to the minister that if anything can be done within the proper scope and function of his department to encourage other provinces to undertake the provision of free prenatal tests, the advantages accruing not only in connection with combating venereal disease but in connection with combating other very serious inroads on the public health of the nation will be very greatly increased.

Mr. MacINNIS: I should like to ask the minister one question in regard to this item. I have not been paying strict attention, and he may have replied to it already. What supervision does the federal department have in connection with this grant of $175,000 to see that it is properly used for the purpose for which it is made?

Mr. MARTIN: As the hon. gentleman will understand, this is primarily a function of the provinces, but we do help through the distribution of funds, the collection and compilation and analysis of statistical data concerning venereal infection, through the preparation of lay and professional educational material using all appropriate media, and through the provision of consultative professional medical services. We do try to encourage any provinces which may not seem to have done as much as others, by way of suggestions. At annual meetings of the dominion council of health, where all the provincial governments are represented through their deputy ministers, we have an opportunity of bringing to their attention what has been done in particular provinces where advances have been outstanding. The hon. member for Eglinton has just referred to something which is done in one specific province. At the last meeting of the council, about four weeks ago, the representative of Ontario indicated to the others what they had done. This kind of exchange of information is carried on. Then at the end of the fiscal year each provincial government submits a detailed statement of the expenditure of federal funds and the purposes for which those funds were used, including a detailed narrative report indicating the actual accomplishments of the venereal disease control programme in that province, accompanied by substantiating statistical information. Every effort is made to meet this problem.

Mr. MacINNIS: I am aware that this problem falls within provincial jurisdiction and that the federal department helps out. All I had in mind—and I think the minister has satisfactorily answered my question—is that if any province did not make proper use of the grants, in my opinion the grants should not be continued to that province. That was the purpose of my question.

Mr. MARTIN: The grant would not be continued in such case, but I am happy to say there has been no such instance as yet.

Mr. MacINNIS: I am happy to hear it.

Mr. CHURCH: I want to ask the minister a question regarding the statement made last night by Doctor W. E. Gallie, dean of medicine of the university of Toronto, concerning the rural portions of the country outside the cities and towns. At a dinner given in his honour last night—he has been chief surgeon of the Toronto General Hospital for many years—he proposed that zones should be mapped out all over Canada for specialists in surgery, so they could have all the facilities which modern science and medicine have produced in recent years, particularly during the war. My question to the minister follows closely along the lines of what I had to say the other evening in reference to greater medical aid to these universities throughout our land that are doing such great work. After all is said and done, medical science has played a tremendous part in the life of the country, and important discoveries have been made in recent years. We are now on the verge of a great revolution in medicine and surgery; and in order that people in remote places may have the full benefit of scientific developments I believe the government would be well advised, by bonuses, subventions and subsidies, to support the type of federal aid suggested by Doctor Gallie, which people do not now receive. We know that patriotic citizens have helped hospitals, and that they have helped medical science and dental science but, owing to the heavy taxation they cannot carry the whole burden. I wish the minister would study this matter and confer with the authorities of the university of Toronto and other universities, to see if federal aid along the lines I have indicated cannot be provided. Perhaps the minister would make a statement in the matter.

Mr. MARTIN: The hon. member, who is keenly interested in this matter, has spoken to me privately about it on several occasions. I believe he has spoken also to my colleague the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply under whose department the national research council operates. I too have been interested in this problem, and I may say to him that the matter to which he has referred is under active consideration.

As the hon. member knows, one of the eminent scientists of Ontario, Doctor C. H. Best, who by the way is a great friend of the hon. member, is one of the members of the medical research division of the national research council. Doctor Collip, Doctor Simard and several other distinguished scientists also serve on the committee which keeps this problem under constant review. While I am not in a position to make any further statement with regard to future prospects, I can say that the question raised by the hon. member is one of great importance and that, particularly as it affects cancer research, it is under active consideration.

Mr. CHURCH: Our worthy deputy chairman has been closely associated with a hospital in his own constituency, and I understand he has a daughter who is a nurse and a son-in-law who practices as a surgeon at Kamloops—Doctor Verrett, a returned soldier and former student of Doctor Gallie's. I have not had his consent to mention this fact, but I take the liberty of doing so.

Under a zoning system a young doctor who knows something about surgery would be most useful, and the poor people throughout the country would get some relief. Consider the Indians for a moment; they were here two hundred years before the English or the French, but they have not even yet any doctors or nurses to attend to their needs. In fact we have been trying for two years to find out if they are citizens. The fact is that they were citizens long ago, and if that is so they ought to be given this service automatically.

I do hope the minister will consider this matter seriously during the recess. I am hopeful that in the supplementary estimates, before the close of the session, he will announce some kind of grant to men of science like Doctor Best, and many others. There are two or three such men at McGill and at Toronto and other universities, and there are men right across Canada engaged in medical science who could do this work.

In recent years, medical science, the brightest child of all the sciences, has made remarkable strides, with the result that today the life expectancy has been increased to the extent of ten or fifteen years. This has been brought about mainly through the development of preventive medicine, new scientific methods and new methods of surgery. I hope that instead of operating only a skeleton department which used to spend about a half a million dollars before the war, the department will take a more active interest and expand accordingly. Before the war France and Germany operated under a plan whereby, instead of permitting their medical students to work on boats, or as cooks or in other occupations, during the summer months, they were conscripted by the state to help in scientific work. We can take a leaf out of their book in that regard and, instead of permitting these young students to do outside work during the summer and then go to the United States, have them do some work connected with medical science.

Item agreed to.

National health branch—
216. Distribution of drugs under regulations approved by the governor in council, $50,000.

Mr. FLEMING: Was the full amount spent?

Mr. MARTIN: All but $100.

Item agreed to.

National health branch—
217. Health insurance studies, $27,863.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Will the minister make a statement with respect to this item?

Mr. MARTIN: As a result of the action taken in 1941 this matter was given some measure of positive form in the proposals made by the government to the provinces in August 1945. Since that time we have had a director of health services who has just resigned from his post to take up another important task. At the present time the work is being carried on by a number of individuals in our own department who I believe are specially qualified to deal with the matter. They have other functions as well. As a matter of fact only this morning I was hoping to be able to conclude certain arrangements with another department of government to enlist the services of a gentleman who I believe, because of his studies and his own experience, can be said to be exceptionally qualified in the field of health insurance. I am hoping he will be able to come to us to carry on and to supplement some of the work done by Doctor Little, by our own deputy minister and by several research assistants. I hope that within a week or so, in the person of Doctor H. M. Cassidy of the university of Toronto, we shall have the temporary services—I trust they will prove more than temporary—of one of the outstanding persons in this field in Canada. Arrangements have not yet been completed, but we are anxious to have his services to pass upon certain projects which I believe will prove important in the field of health insurance.

I assure the hon. member that this matter is being actively pursued. Apart from cancer and what we hope to do in respect of arthritis, this matter is receiving priority of interest so far as I am concerned.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I consider that a most unsatisfactory statement from the minister. Last year there was an appropriation of $43,555, and this year in the estimates there is a reduction of about $15,000. The sort of project the minister has outlined is not worth even the $27,863 mentioned in the item.

I hold in my hand the report of the advisory committee on health insurance appointed by order in council in 1942. I shall not take the time of the committee to read it, but it does provide some valuable material. The taxpayers of Canada have been at considerable expense in carrying out these surveys. The hopes of our people were raised when the representatives of so many different organizations were brought to Ottawa to give their opinions on the compilation of this information. Included in these were the Canadian Medical Association, the Canadian Nurses Association, the Canadian Hospital Council, the Canadian Dental Association, the Canadian Pharmaceutical Association, and a whole list of other associations I shall not mention. They went to considerable expense to express their views, and I believe the taxpayers of Canada are entitled to know what happened to their ideas. What precisely has the department done this year? Who are devoting full time to this work? What has been done or what may we expect to be done with the $27,863 in the vote? What have we to show for what has been done? The minister should give the committee more information than he has given thus far.

Mr. MARTIN: I regret that the hon. member thinks our active interest in pursuing these studies is not adequate. I do not know what more one can do than constantly engage one's attention on the problem. Instead of confining it as it originally was to one person, the work has been distributed to a number of people in the department who I believe are specially competent. If the hon. gentleman wishes confirmation of that I would ask him to talk to Doctor Mott in Saskatchewan to ascertain if we in the department are not meeting this problem in a whole-hearted and embracing way. The decreases to which the hon. member has referred are in the educational and informational publicity item and other pay list items. That has nothing to do with the importance of the work. I venture to suggest that in the person of the present deputy of welfare we have a gentleman who has had tremendous experience with the only health insurance act ever passed by any government in this country. I have every reason to rely upon his judgment and skill in the matter. As I said a moment ago, I am hoping to have additional services on a temporary basis, because he is now permanently engaged, in the person of Doctor H. M. Cassidy. He was deputy minister in the appropriate department in British Columbia when the health insurance act was passed in that province some years ago.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I am not criticizing any of the personnel. I am simply saying that this sort of report is not good enough. I have the greatest confidence in the deputy minister of the welfare branch, as well as of the health branch and other personnel. However, I submit that if we are spending $27,000 there should be some persons devoting their full time to the work. If the expenditures are being reduced at the rate of $15,000 a year it would indicate that the federal government is going out of the field of health insurance studies. The minister should tell us how many in this department have been working on this, how much was spent last year, and who are the persons employed on a full time basis.

Mr. MARTIN: There are ten in the department working on it.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I think we are entitled to a break-down. How much was spent of the $43,000 which was voted last year? Who were the persons who were engaged on this work, and what were their duties?

Mr. MARTIN: The hon. member will recall that the department had only recently come into being at the time the estimate was prepared, and for the available personnel outside the department it was an overestimate. I can only repeat that we are engaging the full time of at least six persons in the department, with four additional persons who have other duties to perform. When we have the type of conference with the provinces which we envisage we shall be prepared at that conference to submit details in respect to the studies we have been making and are making and to bring about at the earliest possible moment the realization of a health insurance scheme.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Last year the minister's predecessor was open to a great deal of criticism for asking for votes which in the opinion of some hon. members had no relation to the amounts which were to be expended. I have asked the minister a fair question: How much of the $43,000 which was voted for this purpose last year was spent, and how was it spent?

Mr. MARTIN: There was spent $4,763.44.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I should like the minister to explain why, if they estimated they were going to need $43,000 and spent only $4,700, they are now coming to parliament and asking for $27,000?

Mr. MARTIN: The division was created in December 1945, and the estimate was made in November 1945.

Mr. NICHOLSON: If you estimated in November 1945 you were going to spend $43,000, why was only $4,700 spent? How many are on the staff now, and what are the prospects of expending the $27,000 the minister is asking for?

Mr. MARTIN: I can only say that we have ten people now on the staff who are engaged in this work. Some of those people are doing other work as well. To the extent of the available personnel covered by non-filled posts at the moment we will spend this money. My hon. friend, considering the province from which he comes, should be in a special position to know that personnel in this particular field is extremely difficult to obtain. That has been experienced by the government of Saskatchewan, and we have had the same difficulty. The director left for another post, and an acting director was appointed in January. That gentleman has taken on a post which he regards as more important at the moment, that of acting secretary of the National Cancer Institute. But that in no way represents a diminution of the work, because, as I have indicated, the officials in our department, in our research division, the deputy minister and another gentleman whom we hope to have from another department, along with the services of Doctor Cassidy, will all be available.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I do not think the minister is giving the committee the sort of information it should have. The fact that there have been directors who have left for more important work indicates that this branch is not doing anything. In view of the general interest across the country and the representations which were made to the social security committee, I think it can be taken that the taxpayers in Canada consider this department quite seriously. They felt that they are going to get some active leadership in working out plans. I know there is no sure way from where you are to where you want to go, but the federal government should be giving some dynamic leadership across the country and trying to work out ways and means. The minister should tell us who in the department are devoting full time to this work. What are the names and qualifications of those who are directing this important branch?

Mr. MacNICOL: Before the minister answers perhaps I had better say a word or two about this, because I am not going along with my hon. friend to my left in this regard. I have long been interested in health insurance, and anyone who has to do—

Mr. NICHOLSON: Perhaps the minister could be given a chance to answer my question.

Mr. MacNICOL: He will answer when I get through.

Mr. MARTIN: We have the following persons: C. D. Allen, Miss B. J. Stewart,—

Mr. NICHOLSON: Will the minister give their qualifications?

Mr. MARTIN: These are junior assistants who have qualified through civil service examinations. I can only assume that when they passed the tests set by the civil service commission they were fully qualified to do this work. Then there are J. W. Telfer, Doctor J. H. Horowicz, Mrs. F. E. Hurst, whom I think the hon. gentleman knows, and Miss B. A. Patchet.

Mr. NICHOLSON: The minister is asking for $27,000. How many of those people are medical doctors? What is their background in the field of health insurance?

Mr. MARTIN: None of those I have named is a medical doctor.

Mr. NICHOLSON: What is their background?

Mr. MARTIN: They are people who have had training like my hon. friend; they have had training at the university; they are economists, sociologists, and people of that type. Together with the medical experience in the department they make up a fine team with which to approach this subject.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I am not casting any reflection upon any of those people, but the minister is asking for $27,000 to carry on health insurance studies and I submit that there should be at least one medical doctor. There should also be a graduate in dentistry and someone representing the nursing profession. There should be some one experienced in hospital services. The minister should indicate whether there are such persons on the staff. Are there any dentists?

Mr. MARTIN: Yes.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Will the minister give the name of the dentist?

Mr. MARTIN: We use the acting director of our dental division. We use the deputy minister, who is a doctor. Then we have Doctor Little, an eminent physician who has taken up cancer research work.

Mr. NICHOLSON: The minister is not suggesting that the deputy minister is doing nothing else but look after health insurance studies? I am submitting that if $27,000 is to be spent, there should be a full time job for some persons. It is not good enough to say that there are medical people on the staff, that there are dentists on the staff, or that you can call upon the national research council. Here is an important job to be done and there should be persons employed full time with the qualifications I have mentioned. Are there any full-time professional people in this field?

Mr. MARTIN: I do not think I can add anything to what I have already told my hon. friend.

Mr. MacNICOL: I am not going to criticize the minister for not having a large staff in this branch of his department. Several of the provinces have departments of their own, and what kind of top-heavy set-up shall we have across Canada if the provinces and the dominion go into this field? I studied this matter when I was in Great Britain. Their labour department looks after health insurance for 45,000,000 people, with no larger staff than the minister has. This idea of duplicating the work done in every province could only result in a top-heavy organization which the country cannot stand. The minister has already told the committee that his chief officials can take care of what is to be done in this small branch, and I commend him for that. If he is going to staff a health insurance branch for all of Canada we might as well wind up, because we cannot stand such duplication all over the country. Britain has only a small department looking after health insurance for a population five times as large as ours, and it is carrying on the work satisfactorily.

Mr. CASE: I think this matter should be pursued further. Last year $43,555 was voted and only $4,700 was spent. This year the minister is asking for $27,863. This branch seems to be treated as an orphan. Last year there was a director of health insurance studies at $6,600. This year no provision is made for a director, but temporary assistance is being provided for, and it would seem that a director would be required to direct the course of studies of his assistants. Practically the same amount is provided for temporary assistance this year as last. There was also an item of $6,000 last year for professional and special services. Nothing is provided for that this year. There may be some reason why that is not required. I do not think the minister has justified his request for $27,000 this year when only $4,700 was spent last year. The minister talks about ten employees. Mention of their names conveys nothing to me. I should like to know what work they are doing. It would mean something if I were told that they were engaged in medical or dental or actuarial services. A break-down of that kind would be helpful.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Is the minister not going to accede to that request?

Mr. MARTIN: The hon. member for Grey North has made a helpful suggestion which I appreciate.

Mr. NICHOLSON: The minister is not as cooperative today as he usually is. Why is not a salary provided this year for a director of health insurance studies?

Mr. MARTIN: I have told the hon. member that we are providing for temporary assistance. It is usual for people who enter the civil service to come in as temporaries.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Last year the department asked for $3,500 for educational and informational publicity. Nothing is being asked for that this year. Has the department no more ideas or information to give out? Why does it not need somebody for educational and informational publicity?

Mr. MARTIN: Because there are some things you do not need to publicize always. I would rather spend the money in some other way at this stage of the game.

Mr. NICHOLSON: If the minister does not wish to go into the field of health insurance studies the whole item should be dropped. It is not fair to come to parliament and ask for $43,000 last year and spend only $4,700 and then ask this year for $27,000. The minister should be frank and say that he does not plan on doing anything further in the field of health insurance studies, and drop the item. That would meet the requests of my hon. friends to my right who are demanding a reduction in expenditures.

Mr. MARTIN: If the hon. gentleman keeps repeating things for his own political interests I cannot help that, but I shall be glad to take note of what he said if he wishes to help prosecute health insurance studies.

Item agreed to.

National health branch—
218. Dental health, $50,551.

Mr. FLEMING: What is the expenditure?

Mr. MARTIN: The estimate for 1946-47 was $56,785 and the expenditure $12,623.52; unliquidated commitments, 1946-47, $14,003.05.

Item agreed to.

National health branch—
219. Hospital designs, $26,537.

Mr. FLEMING: The same question.

Mr. MARTIN: Estimate for 1946-47 was $72,516; expenditure 1946-47, $14,302.41; unliquidated commitments, 1946-47, $1,848.69.

Mr. FLEMING: I think this item calls for a word of explanation. The expenditure last year was very much below the estimate. Is this because the department did not fill the positions that were contemplated when the estimates were being prepared?

Mr. MARTIN: As I told my hon. friend the other night, this is a new department, and there was no previous experience by which to judge needs. Obviously there have been overestimates as well as underestimates. This was an overestimate.

Mr. FLEMING: Is this particular branch now up to contemplated strength?

Mr. MARTIN: I think it is. There was a suggestion last fall that we might take on additional personnel, but I do not think it is necessary.

Mr. TIMMINS: What work is done under this item?

Mr. MARTIN: The division will advise the provinces in respect to planning and building various types of hospitals, producing particular solutions when necessary. It will prepare schematic plans for various hospital sizes and types and collect and tabulate and make available to the provinces the latest information on hospital construction. The division will also continue to make preliminary drawings for Indian hospitals and to act in liaison with other architects towards the completion of such efforts. Contact is maintained with provincial health departments and various hospital associations, and meetings are attended for the purpose of offering and receiving suggestions and ascertaining the latest developments in the field. No fewer than five provinces have expressed commendation for the assistance which the architect of this division has rendered both to provincial and to municipal hospitals.

Mr. CHARLTON: What is the nature of the temporary assistance required when there is only one permanent employee, a grade 3 stenographer? Yet $15,000 is being asked for temporary assistance. We have also professional and special services, $2,000, below that.

Mr. MARTIN: There is a grade 3 stenographer who is permanent, and who was transferred from another department. The temporaries are made up of a consulting architect, a junior architect, an architectural draughtsman, stenographers grade 3 and grade 2; a clerk grade 2; a medical officer who serves part time, and a typist grade 2.

Mr. TIMMINS: The estimate for 1947-48 is down as compared with 1946-47. What is the explanation of the decrease, and what responsibility is there on the dominion to go into this field? Is the department forced into the field, or is this part of an over-all plan which is contemplated by the government? I take it the matter of health should come under the jurisdiction of the provinces.

Mr. MARTIN: My hon. friend is quite right. Health is a matter for the province, but as I explained the other night, under section 5, subsection (i) of the National Health and Welfare Act, the department, on the invitation of the provincial governments, acts as a cooperating and coordinating body. The request for this division came from nine provinces at one of the meetings of the dominion council of health, which meets twice a year.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Can the minister explain why professional and special services have been reduced from $20,000 to $2,000, and can he tell us the number of professionals who are with that branch?

Mr. MARTIN: As I told the member for Eglinton, the original estimate was a guess. It was a new division, and they estimated beyond what they have found since to be the requirements. The sum of $2,000 is required for consultation services and special reports. The decrease is due to more accurate knowledge of costs of operating the division after functioning for eight months.

Mr. TIMMINS: I should like to refer for a moment to a matter I mentioned a few nights ago in a speech I made then. In the United States, as I think the minister is aware, they have already appropriated in congress a large sum of money for an over-all plan in the future with respect to health insurance. Have we any such plan as that under way?

Mr. MARTIN: We are not on that item now; we have passed health insurance. However, the hon. member may be able to raise it later. This item is with regard to hospital designs.

Mr. TIMMINS: I understood that the money in the United States was spent to provide hospital beds, and I was wondering whether this particular item contemplates a plan of that sort.

Mr. MARTIN: It is purely architectural.

Item agreed to.

National health branch—
220. Mental health, $40,096.

Mr. CASE: What responsibility has the federal Department of National Health and Welfare with regard to mental institutions in Canada?

Mr. MARTIN: We have no responsibility. That is a matter that comes under the provinces, and I must say that in spite of the overtaxed capacity of these institutions in the provinces they are doing, in my opinion, a very good work. The problem is a serious one, but it is one that comes under their authority and one to which, within our constitutional limitations, we are always prepared, by way of supplementary assistance in some form or other, to give help. I repeat, however, that the matter is one within provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. STEPHENSON: With regard to hospital designs, is not this a case where the dominion and the province are overlapping?

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: We have passed that item.

Mr. MARTIN: I will note the question and when I reach the end of the estimates I will deal with it together with a number of loose ends that I shall pick up then.

Mr. FLEMING: What is the expenditure under item 220?

Mr. MARTIN: The estimate for 1946-47 is $32,285, the expenditure $19,180.38 and the unliquidated commitments $155.48.

Mr. BROOKS: In view of the fact that some of the provinces are having great difficulty in looking after their mental institutions, and the federal government gives some help, has the department ever considered giving more practical assistance to the provinces? In my own province of New Brunswick the situation is bad, and I am satisfied that if the federal government were aware of the conditions and gave some assistance the situation would be improved. Has any consideration been given to that question?

Mr. MARTIN: In the dominion-provincial proposals there is a proposed grant of $4 million.

Mr. BROOKS: Thank you.

Mr. HARKNESS: I have been disturbed by different articles I have read in the last two or three years in regard to the increasing number of mental cases in Canada, the large number of hospital beds they occupy, and the inadequate facilities provided for treatment and cure. Can the minister indicate what is being done under this particular vote to the end of bringing about improvement in the conditions which the hon. member for Grey North has pointed out as having formed the subject of articles disparaging to our mental institutions in the eyes of many people throughout the world? Can the minister indicate how this money is being spent to correct the condition complained of?

Mr. MARTIN: This matter is one that comes under the jurisdiction of the provinces. It is one which they jealously guard as being within their own field. We did, however, in 1945 set up this division for the first time, at their request, as a sort of pooling agency to keep the provinces informed of what each was doing and to carry on general inspection work. The mental health field includes preventive work as well as provision for treatment facilities. The matter, of course, is a function of the provinces. The federal division cooperates with them in their efforts to benefit the mental hospital patients by surveying hospitals and setting up standards. We have produced a number of films at the request of the provinces, the cost of which we have borne. For instance, one film deals with the treatment of persons who have been in such institutions, the suggestion being that we should not frown upon such individuals but should try to help them. One film aims at increasing appreciation on the part of the public of the need of early treatment of mental illnesses, while another has reference to mild nervous and mental illness and the instructions of personnel engaged in the treatment of the mentally ill. There is another which deals with the treatment of children. As my hon. friend knows, there are many children in this country, as there are elsewhere, who are incipient patients. We try by educational methods, through films, lectures and the like, at the request of the provinces, to bring home to the people throughout Canada the dangers and ways and means of perhaps avoiding serious mental illnesses. That is the kind of work we are carrying on, and while the division has been in existence only since 1945, a truly remarkable job has been done, to use the words of Doctor Phair, deputy minister of health for Ontario. I look forward, as I am sure the hon. gentleman does, to greatly increased activity in this field, without any interference with the field occupied by the provinces.

Mr. FLEMING: Taking up the phrase just used by the minister, what is the expansion of work contemplated in this department this year? You are asking for an appropriation of $40,000. The amount expended last year was just $19,000. What is the expanded welfare programme which justifies this request for an amount more than double last year's actual expenditures?

Mr. MARTIN: The plans for the next fiscal year are to publish jointly with the division of maternal and child health, and other divisions, some of the following booklets:

1. The Care and Training of the Normal Child from Two to Six Years of Age.
2. The School-Age Child.
3. Helping the Adolescent.
4. The Child in the Classroom.
5. The Home Training of the Mentally Retarded Child.
6. The Home care of the Epileptic.
7. Psychosomatic and Psychoneurotic Illnesses.

We hope to carry on those projects and to complete, with the cooperation of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, the revision of the reporting cards and forms used by the mental institutions in reporting to the dominion bureau. It is hoped that forms and cards can be produced which will be uniform across the country and which will at the same time meet the requirements of the provinces for their own statistical purposes.

Mr. BROOKS: Many of these pamphlets are published; how are they distributed to the people?

Mr. MARTIN: We issue them to the provincial departments of health, and they distribute them to the schools and factories.

Mr. BROOKS: They are distributed in bulk to the provinces?

Mr. MARTIN: Yes.

Mr. FLEMING: I wish to ask two questions arising out of the minister's statement. Were those films requested by one or other of the provinces? The minister was speaking about cards which were of assistance in following statistical information. What is contained in those cards? Is the dominion attempting to go beyond the keeping of general statistics, or is some attempt being made to keep a complete card index system of cases? How far does this statistical research go?

Mr. MARTIN: Both requests come from the provinces. We undertake nothing without their invitation. The films were suggested by them. They also suggested that as an aid to procuring an accurate over-all picture there should be a central bureau to which all provinces would direct information of the benefit to all.

Mr. McKAY: While I quite agree with the minister that provincial mental institutions have been and are now being operated by the provincial governments, he knows, and I think the whole house knows, that practically all provincial governments are having considerable difficulty in operating modern mental institutions with proper facilities with the funds which are available for that sort of service. It seems to me most appropriate at this time that we should bring to the attention of the minister and of the government the great need of a comprehensive preventive and treatment programme for mental disease. I for one do not pose as an expert or an authority on this subject. I wish the minister to know that before I start. Nevertheless I should like to say a few words with regard to the difficulties which the provinces are now having in conducting mental institutions in a satisfactory manner.

I think it is generally recognized that mental disorders, wherein personality and behaviour may be profoundly affected are responsible for more chronic invalidism than any other disability. I believe the public is becoming increasingly aware of this problem. It has been repeatedly stated by those who know the subject well that mental derangements are not diminishing but are on the increase. As an indication of the extent and trend of the mental hygiene problem, according to a report from the bureau of statistics, patients in Canadian mental institutions increased from 25,000 in 1931 to 50,000 in 1946. A good deal of this increase is undoubtedly due to mental illness which comes about by old age and which has shown a considerable increase in the past decade or so because our population is getting older. The capacity of our mental institutions is inadequate to meet the needs of this increasing trend. The normal bed capacity at December 31, 1944, was 42,500 in the Dominion of Canada, according to the "Canada Year Book." During that same year there were 51,776 patients in mental hospitals or out on parole. Many on parole, of course, were less serious cases; but they were only on parole, I am informed, because they could not be accommodated in the institutions which we have. This indicates a serious overcrowded condition. Our mental institutions are inadequate for our needs. Most of them are understaffed and all too few of them are modern in either their construction or the equipment they operate. Mr. D. M. LeBourdais, who was referred to in the house the other day—he is, I believe, a lecturer and author of some note; at any rate, he served for some six years on the national committee for mental hygiene—has stated in no uncertain terms that Canada is failing in its duty toward the folk who are unfortunate enough to be inmates of our mental institutions. I believe this man speaks with some authority, Mr. Chairman, because he has inspected every Canadian institution devoted to the treatment of mental disease or mental ailments, as well as many in the United States. He states that most of our provincial mental institutions are obsolete.

Mr. MARTIN: I do not want to interfere with the hon. gentleman, but I think he will agree that this matter is one which comes under the provinces. He will appreciate the problem. I do not want to curtail his remarks, but I really think we should preserve some order.

Mr. McKAY: I am coming to that. There is a point I wish to raise with regard to it and I think what I am saying is essential at this time. Without this preliminary statement it is quite impossible to get the connection. I think it is necessary to ask the federal government for grants in aid for these institutions; and I think this is the time it should be done.

Mr. MARTIN: The hon. member for Royal asked me the same question. The answer I gave him may not satisfy my hon. friend, but it is the only answer I can give.

Mr. McKAY: Then is it your intention, Mr. Chairman, to stop this debate?

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I would remind the hon. member that speeches in committee must be strictly relevant to the item under discussion. This item has nothing to do with provincial control of mental hospitals, which, as the minister has pointed out, is a provincial matter, to be dealt with by the provinces.

Mr. IRVINE: If federal policies drive people crazy the provinces should have some assistance in looking after them.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: That may be, but we have to deal with these items as they affect this parliament.

Mr. McKAY: This item deals with mental hygiene.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Mental health.

Mr. McKAY: Well, mental health, mental hygiene; I don't think it makes very much difference.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: If the hon. gentleman is permitted to make a long speech—

Mr. McKAY: This is not a long speech.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: —in connection with what is purely a provincial matter, then every other member of the committee should be allowed to do the same thing, and I do not believe my hon. friend would consider that to be in order.

Mr. McKAY: It is quite all right with me, Mr. Chairman. I have not a very long speech; it is a very short one, as a matter of fact, but if the minister desires that I should wait and speak on item 234 I can speak at much greater length then.

Mr. CASE: Have any of the provinces appealed to the federal government for assistance in connection with mental institutions, or has the dominion offered assistance to any of the provinces?

Mr. MARTIN: The answer to the first question is no; the answer to the second question is that we offered it in the dominion-provincial proposals.

Item agreed to.

221. Blindness control, $28,307.

(Translation):

Mr. HEON: Would the minister give us some particulars about the work done by his department as regards blindness control?

Mr. MARTIN: In reply, I must say to the honourable member that it is my intention to make a statement later about this item and in connection with several of its subdivisions. Will the honourable member wait until that time for these explanations?

Mr. HEON: Very well.

(Text):

Mr. FLEMING: Could we have the expenditures last year?

Mr. MARTIN: The estimated expenditure for 1946-47 was $42,566. The expenditure for 1946-47 was $10,393.62, and unliquidated commitments, $21,536.

Mr. MacNICOL: May I ask what is the connection, if any, between the officials of the minister's department and those connected with the Canadian National Institute for the Blind and other similar organizations?

Mr. MARTIN: Close collaboration is maintained with the Canadian National Institute for the Blind and the two other similar organizations. They are non-governmental, non-profit private agencies, but there is close cooperation and a very happy relationship. I am sure the hon. gentleman knows Colonel Eddie Baker very well, and he gives full collaboration.

National health branch—

222. Epidemiology, including the former tuberculosis control division, $16,747.

Mr. BLACKMORE: The minister suggested that under this item I might raise the question of the facilities that exist for examination into possible remedies for cancer. If I might broaden the matter slightly I would mention what is also in the minds of a great many hon. members of the house, the fact that certain remedies have been suggested by men who believe they are of real value, who are having considerable difficulty getting them before the public. One case in point, which I think already has been brought to the attention of the minister, is that of Doctor Holder of Windsor, who fervently and ardently believes he has discovered the cause of cancer and various other serious ills and a method of treatment for those maladies which may mean the saving of thousands of lives in this country.

We have another case in point, which I think probably all hon. members have had brought to their attention; that is Doctor Koch's remedy for various ills. In my constituency there are people who believe they have been cured by Doctor Koch's treatment of ills that have successfully resisted every other kind of treatment. I should like to ask the minister whether he has a committee or some other facility whereby ideas which are new can be examined objectively and thoroughly so those who believe in the ideas will have every opportunity to demonstrate, to their own satisfaction, everything in favour of their cause. Has he any facility whereby all the evidence may be recorded and reports submitted which would be entirely objective and unbiased, reports which could come before the public of Canada and the members of this house so we might have a chance of studying these suggestions with some hope of arriving at a sound conclusion? Would the minister tell us something about such facilities, if we have them?

Mr. MARTIN: The hon. gentleman brought this up the other evening, and I asked him to wait for this item. I thank him for having done so. Mr. Holder of the city of Windsor is well known to me. He is a very estimable gentleman, who has written a text-book as well as several articles on this subject. When I saw him last, which was three or four weeks ago, following certain correspondence, I referred him to the proper agency in Ontario, the commission for investigation of cancer remedies. That commission has investigated a number of proposed treatments for cancer. Since I have been minister two others have come to my attention, and I want to say to the hon. gentleman that I think the proper attitude to take, and this is the attitude I am taking, is that if anyone thinks he has a solution, regardless of what others may think about it is in the absence of an investigation, certainly I should not let any stone remain unturned to give that person an opportunity to have his suggestion investigated. Just to give an example, last week a doctor from a certain town in this province came to see me. I had representations by certain other practitioners in reference to this particular gentleman, representations that could hardly be said to be complimentary to the individual concerned. I was not in a position to pass on the merits of the case, but I did take steps at once to make sure that the commission to investigate cancer remedies was given a chance to do so, and that body is also going to investigate this matter. In other words if a suggestion comes to us we point out that the matter comes under provincial jurisdiction and that the province should have an opportunity first to go into the matter. I assure my hon. friend that no one in this country who has a suggestion to offer will be turned away from my door. I could mention another case. I do not think I had better mention the name of the person, but he is well known in Ontario, and claims to have cured people. I had better not identify him beyond that, because it would not be fair to him. I can say however that he is a gentleman who has been considerably in the public eye. He proposes setting up an institution in this province at his own expense for clinical treatment. I do not know whether he has a cure. I have also seen to it that that gentleman is not being denied the opportunity of a full investigation of his claims. That will be my attitude.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I congratulate the minister upon what he has said. I am positive that many good ideas have been neglected because people in high places have not taken the unbiased view the minister has just expressed. Has the minister taken the precaution to see that reports of investigations are accurately made? I have known cases in which reports have been so garbled as to give an altogether erroneous impression as to what actually took place upon investigation.

Mr. MARTIN: I have designated one official in my department, who after such requests have come in and we have asked the proper agency to look into it, will follow up so as to make sure he is satisfied this has been done. I am satisfied that is being done not only with regard to cancer but in other matters.

May I add that only a short time ago I read in the press that an old classmate of mine, whom I had not seen for a number of years, in collaboration with some other physicians, had developed a pill which he said was a cure for certain types of heart disease. I do not know whether it is or not. However I did know this man. At university I found him sincere and hard working; and if what he had perfected could be the means of giving relief to someone I thought he should be given the opportunity to show its worth. He was complaining that he was not being given a chance to put forward his formula. I wrote to him and went myself to see him in London, just to ascertain whether he had any particular grievance. He told me what the situation was. I got in touch with the minister of health for Ontario and I found he had anticipated anything I was doing in the matter and was giving it his full attention. As it was one which came properly within the provincial field, there was nothing further for me to do except to be satisfied that it was being looked into.

Mr. RINFRET: I cannot resist the invitation given by the minister to offer a suggestion with respect to a matter which would come within his jurisdiction. I am not quite sure whether what I have in mind should come under this item, or might more properly be discussed under the item for grants. It has to do with the control of tuberculosis.

Each year around Christmas time the various tuberculosis associations in Canada issue Christmas seals from the sale of which they are interested in obtaining as much money as possible. I am told the government is interested in having Christmas correspondence, including greeting cards, placed in the mails as early as possible, and that the earlier this is done the greater is the economy effected. I suggest that the minister have a conference with the Postmaster General with a view to setting aside one or two days early in December in which all letters and parcels with Christmas seals as stamps could be passed through the post office. I believe these Christ-
