HOUSE OF COMMONS

DELAY IN DISTRIBUTION OF YESTERDAY'S "HANSARD"

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members will have noticed that their edition of Hansard is not on their desks. I should explain that a combination of factors have contributed to a delay in Hansard this morning, perhaps the most important of which is computer difficulty. It is expected that Hansard will be distributed at about noon today.

PRIVILEGE

MR. WOOLLIAMS—PROCEDURE IN DEALING WITH SUPPLY

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a very important question of privilege affecting parliament and therefore the privileges of every member of parliament. I think all members will agree with me that one of the most important functions of parliament, and therefore the duty and responsibility of a member of parliament, is to scrutinize—question, as it were—and interrogate the government in reference to estimated expenditures of the various departments of government. This responsibility becomes more important to members who are not supporters of the government. I make nothing of that except to point out that the duty and responsibility of opposition members must be to make certain that careful scrutiny of expenditures is carried out.

Every member of parliament has a mandate to make certain that taxpayers' money is spent wisely, correctly, and according to the law. I am well aware that the new rules change the method of considering the estimates, but I do not interpret the rules to mean that the government can bring forward a bill a few seconds before they ask for interim supply as set out in clause 2 of the bill, appropriating certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1976, in the amount of $4,603,596,900.59.

I understand the rule is that once a motion for supply is put—and I shall refer to that in a moment—as it was last evening, and voted upon, the government can then ask for interim supply. I have no argument with that. I am well aware that if the bill is properly presented and is prepared according to the rules of this House, the rules say there can be no debate. However, the Chairman of the committee of supply of the whole House stated that we could ask questions: questions were asked by my colleague, the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), and they were disallowed and no answers were given.

I question very strongly whether—when you read clause 2 of the bill in question and then the details of how the $4,603,596,900 is made up—that the government can ask for three-twelfths of the estimates and then ask for additional sums of money on top of that. What I am saying—and I want to drive home the point, with the greatest respect—is that the government asks for interim supply, as it can, of three-twelfths of the total estimates. I want to emphasize that even when the government does that, none of those estimates are first fully considered by the standing committees. However, they ask for the approval of eight-twelfths of the total amount in several items in schedule A. Let us consider one of these items. They ask for a loan of $135 million for the CNR. If you add three-twelfths to eight-twelfths, you come up with eleven-twelfths. In other words, through the method of interim supply they receive the approval of the House for almost twelve-twelfths of the item in schedule A without the item first being given full consideration by the appropriate standing committee considering the taxpayers' money.

That is why many of us were wrought up last night, and so we should have been. The taxpayers of this nation expect us to be angry.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: I ask, was this done because the government did not want the committee to examine the reasons for that loan? All this was done prior to the estimates being considered by the appropriate standing committee. Surely no rules of the House were devised to mean that the government should be given control of all the money through interim supply without the committees first examining the estimates.

Law is not an exact science: I have stood in every court in this land and I know that that is so. Some people say a rule means this, and others say it means that. The rules that were devised are supposed to be reasonable and workable. I ask, what happened last night? As I said, I believe the government has a right to ask for interim supply, but not by this method of presenting an additional amount such as I pointed out in respect of the item for the CNR, and many other items. I do not want to take up too much time of the House on this. All I will say is that I believe the rules of the House were breached last night, thus affecting my privileges and the privileges of every member of parliament who has a mandate from the taxpayers of Canada.

Standing Order 58(10) reads as follows:

If the motion under consideration at the hour of interruption is a no-confidence motion, the Speaker first shall put forthwith, without further debate or amendment, every question necessary to dispose of that proceeding, and forthwith thereafter put successively, without debate or amendment, every question necessary to dispose of any item of business relating to interim supply—

I find nothing wrong with that rule. The government can ask for interim supply, but surely they cannot ask for 100 per cent of the estimates. That rule has been read very often; maybe it is the only protection for the taxpayers. Standing Order 82(2) reads as follows:

In order to give effect to the purposes and provisions of section 3 of the Canadian Bill of Rights, it is the duty of the Clerk to cause to be delivered to the Minister of Justice two copies of every bill introduced in or presented to the House of Commons, forthwith after the introduction in or presentation to the House of such bill.

They must have had roller-skates on last night to have been able to run with that bill to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang), because it was put to the House two seconds before the debate was allowed. Mr. Speaker, I have never been more sincere in my life than I am now, and if you feel I have a proper question of privilege I ask you to consider a motion to refer this matter to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Speaker: I also have notice of a question of privilege from the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). It is not identical to the one just put forward by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) but it is on the same general subject. In the interest of orderliness it might be appropriate to ask the hon. member for York-Simcoe to develop his question of privilege.

MR. STEVENS—RIGHT OF MEMBERS TO VOTE SUPPLY AND SET CEILING ON GOVERNMENT BORROWINGS

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I also rise on a question of privilege which concerns the most important and fundamental privilege of members of the House. I refer to the exclusive right of hon. members to vote supply and to set a ceiling on the amounts that may be borrowed at any time by the government. On December 11 of the last year I rose on a question of privilege concerning the procedure then adopted which gave the government power to raise a further $2.5 billion in loans. With respect, I would refer to what was said at that time, beginning at page 2143 of Hansard. At that time the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) stated:

—I want to make it clear that I am not defending the procedure that was followed. I hope we can avoid this sort of thing in future.

Subsequently, Your Honour stated:

I would only add that the comments of the President of the Privy Council must be taken, if not as a clear undertaking, at least as very close to an undertaking tantamount to the previous one that the hon. President of the Privy Council was good enough to give to the chamber, that is that the supply procedures would be examined by the procedure committee and furthermore the procedures contained in the actual supply bill, being as it is under a very severe guillotine with regard to amendment and debate, would also be taken under consideration by that committee and certainly that is something for which we would hope.

In last evening's debate there was a further $4 billion in loans authorized by the passage of Bill C-55. Since 1967, total loans or liabilities of the Government of Canada have increased by $24 billion, from a total of $32 billion to $56 billion, yet there has never been any comprehensive review of ceiling limits by any committee of this House; there has never been a debate on these ceiling limits. Instead, this procedure has been used repeatedly.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Last night I attempted to question the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) as to what is the actual, new ceiling limit as far as the lending or borrowing ability of the government is concerned, and I was denied the right to receive an answer to that question. With regard to last evening's debate, the confusion which arises from our current procedure is perhaps shown in the apparent conflict in the rulings of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House. At one point in the questioning of the President of the Treasury Board the Chairman stated that at that stage of committee of the whole proceedings there was no debate and that the committee had to decide upon this. The Chairman indicated that hon. members could ask questions for information, but he did not want to have an exchange from one side of the House to the other. However, later when I rose and asked whether the President of the Treasury Board could indicate what sums remained unborrowed and negotiated in loans authorized by parliament, the Chairman ruled that the rules did not permit debate and that asking questions is debate. Subsequently, the Chairman indicated that I might have a procedural point of order concerning clause 5, but that I could not ask for information as far as the bill was concerned.

Mr. Speaker, this point was dealt with in part by Your Honour and Your Honour indicated that under this procedure the estimates, whether they be main or supplementary estimates such as is the case with respect to these two bills, are examined in the standing committees. Subsequently, Your Honour stated that the rapid passage of these bills in the evening must be predicated upon the previous opportunity of examining the spending estimates, which after all are the substance of debate either in standing committees or on the floor of the House.

The $4 billion loan limit to which I have referred was not included in the estimates; it was not something that will ever come before any committee of this House. I point out that it is, surely, a most unsatisfactory procedure when we are asked to raise a lending ceiling by a further $4 billion. We are not even made aware of the total ceiling which the government now has available to it with respect to lending activities, yet when questions were put on this subject last evening, because of procedural problems we were not given the privilege of obtaining that information.

If the Chair agrees that my question of privilege is well founded, I will move, seconded by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

● (1120)

That the subject matter of this question of privilege be referred to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization to recommend a suitable procedure for the setting of ceilings by parliament on the amount that may be raised by loan by the government.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I begin these brief remarks on the question of privilege by reference to Standing Order 58(10) under which the procedure took place last evening. The relative section is in the middle of that subparagraph and reads as follows:

If the motion under consideration at the hour of interruption is a no-confidence motion, the Speaker first shall put forthwith, without further debate or amendment, every question necessary to dispose of that proceeding, and forthwith thereafter put successively, without debate or amendment, every question necessary to dispose of any item of business relating to interim supply, main estimates, and supplementary or final estimates, the restoration or reinstatement of any item in the estimates, or any opposed item in the estimates, and, notwithstanding the provisions of Standing Order 72, for the passage at all stages of any bill or bills based thereon.

The procedure that was followed last night in which the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole had to intervene to suggest that the questions being asked were in the nature of debate seems to be well founded on the rules. Let me deal particularly with two questions raised in the questions of privilege put forward. The first is the matter of borrowing authority. The House will recall—as a matter of fact, the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) drew attention to this fact—that when the main estimates were being approved during the first part of this session there was an unusual procedure in which a clause dealing with borrowing authority was included in the bill dealing with the Appropriation Act. At that time Your Honour will recall that I said I did not defend the procedure and that I hoped it would not recur.

On this occasion, however, the borrowing authority that was sought was in the bill approving interim supply. I looked at the precedents, and perhaps my hon. friend will be impressed by the fact that this procedure was inaugurated by the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett some 40 years ago and has been followed almost without exception in subsequent appropriation bills, namely, that on interim supply there is usually an extension of the borrowing authority of the government. There was nothing unusual about the procedure. As my colleague the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) said, this is the usual form that has been approved in the past, so he gave the necessary assurance. He also gave the assurance that notwithstanding the fact that interim supply was being asked for and would be approved, there would be an opportunity for the House and standing committees or the committee of the whole to look at the items out of which the interim supply was being extracted.

I say to my hon. friend who raised this question that it would be quite impossible to limit interim supply to exactly three-twelfths of any particular item, because there are occasions when the government finds it necessary to spend the money earlier in the year rather than later.

I do not think, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that there is a valid question of privilege. May I add, as chairman of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, that we have been looking at supply procedures and there is before the House now the report of the standing committee on which I intend to move concurrence early next week. If the hon. gentlemen or anyone else in their party would like to suggest further amendments, they would certainly be welcome to do so, or perhaps one of their spokesmen could raise the same point. So, Mr. Speaker, I suggest there is no question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps it is best to be clear, at first, that there is no serious suggestion of disorder. It seems to me that it was well understood and expressed by both proponents of the alleged questions of privilege that the procedures followed last night and discussed were not out of order. The complaint was not that those procedures were irregular. Those procedures conformed with the practices adopted in this House for many years. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) has pointed that out. Instead of being the end of the problem, it is but the beginning.

The complaint is not that the procedure itself was disorderly, but that important powers are accorded to the treasury benches, without parliament being given an opportunity to scrutinize those powers,to limit and restrict them. The difficulty that poses is very real. I am sure it is clear to hon. members that it involves parliament's most fundamental exercise. The solution, since these procedures conform to existing Standing Orders, is not by way of a question of privilege or point of order; neither is it by way of any remedial action by the Chair. The solution lies in the examination of these procedures in the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, which is basically the motion proposed by both proponents.

I find it difficult to accept the matter as questions of privilege. I prefer to reserve any decision, in the hope that in the discussion which will arise next week on the motion for concurrence in the report of the standing committee—the committee has experimented with ways to improve supply procedures—hon. members will be assured that the committee will examine this difficulty which arises every time the House votes supply. What aggravates hon. members' feelings is the focal point of the procedure, when money must be voted. It must be voted without debate and without amendment. The matter must come to a vote some time. As the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) suggested so clearly last night, hon. members must accept the fact that at some time the House must come to a decision and at that moment it must be done without debate or amendment.

The procedures leading up to that point might be usefully examined by the committee, in the hope that arrangements may be made for seeking legitimate information and that the opportunity for members to examine the ingredients of such important bills might somehow be extended, so that crises may be averted, crises which arise when there is no proper opportunity for hon. members to ask questions, particularly about clauses like clause 5, which surfaces for the first time in the supply bill without there having been an opportunity to ask questions.

It seems to the Chair that that procedure might usefully be improved; but the way to do it is not by way of an order of the Chair. The way to do it, surely, is by way of co-operation among House leaders in arranging further discussions in the standing committee.

PROPOSED REVIEW OF SEASONAL DUTIES ON AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity relating to the signs of spring which are beginning to manifest themselves in the capital despite the blustery winds and equinoxial gales we are experiencing today, signs of spring as evidenced by the fresh daffodils from my riding, Esquimalt-Saanich, which are available in the lobbies to all hon. members and which pages will deliver to all hon. lady members of this House on this first day of spring in International Women's Year.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): In view of the unfair competition under which Canadian agriculturalists and horticulturalists in the west suffer from cheap products from abroad in the form of vegetables, cut flowers, shrubs and fruits, I seek the unanimous consent of this House for the following motion:

That the Minister of Agriculture, in consultation with his colleague the Minister of Finance, undertake a review of the regulations relating to the seasonal imposition of duties on vegetables, cut flowers, shrubs and fruits from outside our borders, in particular recognition of the early maturing stages in British Columbia, so that agriculturalists in the garden riding of Esquimalt-Saanich shall be able to continue their commercial operations and provide their customers in the east and in the west with garden-fresh fruit, vegetables and flowers for many years to come.

Mr. Speaker: The motion being proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent for the debate?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

REQUEST FOR IMPROVED RAILWAY SERVICE FOR NORTHWEST QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on an urgent matter of pressing necessity.

Owing to the fact that railway transport is the principal mode of transport in northwest Quebec for industrial and commercial supplies and that deliveries are terribly delayed, it is not unusual for packages to take two weeks to cover the 45 miles between Senneterre and Val-d'Or, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That this House instruct the Minister of Transport to launch an investigation into the excessive slowness of railways in moving goods in northwest Quebec and to report to this House about the steps he intends to take to remedy this situation and assure merchants, industry and the people of northwest Quebec of better railway services, which I claim on behalf of the economy of this area.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the terms of the motion. It being proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43, it cannot be debated without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore, the motion cannot be put.

CRIMINAL CODE

PROPOSED DEBATE ON RETENTION OR ABOLITION OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 26, I ask leave to move the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration.

This specific and important matter is in respect of the recent increase in the incidence of murder, and to the 1973 amendment to the Criminal Code that abolished capital punishment for murder except for killing policemen and prison guards. This law will continue until December 31, 1977. Of most concern to the Canadian public is the resolution of the question of whether or not to abolish or retain capital punishment. There must be a debate on this matter and on the question of whether to introduce new legislation to abolish or restrict the royal prerogative, exercised on the advice of the cabinet, to commute death sentences when there has been no recommendation for mercy. If my proposal is acceptable, Mr. Speaker, I will move the adjournment of the House, seconded by the member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle).

Mr. Speaker: There is not the slightest question about the importance of the subject matter raised by the hon. member. In conformity with Standing Order 26, the hon. member gave the Chair notice of his intention to move for this emergency debate.

While on some occasions in the past I have had no difficulty in seeing a proper emergency situation requiring the implementation of Standing Order 26, I do not on this occasion have any difficulty in saying that it is not the purpose of the Standing Order to bring about amendments to existing statutes or deal with continuing aggra-vations or problems. The question of capital punishment is certainly that kind of situation and should not be the subject matter for a debate under Standing Order 26.

ENERGY

FAILURE OF ARCTIC GAS PIPELINE TO FILE ALTERNATE ROUTE WITH BERGER COMMISSION—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT INTERVENTION

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the fact that the Berger commission chief counsel, Ian Scott, in repeated criticism has stated that Canadian Arctic Gas Pipeline Limited has failed to produce studies and other documents related to alternate routes for the proposed Arctic natural gas pipeline, and when questioned by a reporter outside the inquiry he stated that the delay in supplying the reports could lead to a delay in the hearings being held by the commission, does the government itself or through the National Energy Board have any plans to communicate with Canadian Arctic Gas Pipeline Limited stating the necessity that they present all the documents the commission requires so that the commission can proceed in an orderly fashion?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I will have to consider the hon. member's suggestion. The government's view is that the Berger commission should continue its activities without interference or interruption by the government. I will have to consider whether this could be construed as some kind of interference on our part.

MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE DECISION TO CONSTRUCT WILL NOT BE MADE PRIOR TO BERGER COMMISSION REPORT

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Surely intervention by the government or the National Energy Board to make certain that the commission can fulfill the responsibilities assigned to it cannot be interpreted in any way as interfering with the logical operation of the commission. I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Can the government now say with absolute certainty that the pipeline will not proceed or a decision will not be made regarding the pipeline before a report is made by the Berger commission?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I can say with absolute certainty that no decision can be made before a report is made by the National Energy Board. My understanding is the Berger commission will have finished its report long before the board will have finished its report.

Mr. Gillies: Do I understand the minister to say that the pipeline decision will not be made before the Berger commission report is finished?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, as I understand the timetable, and Mr. Justice Berger said this himself, that appears to be a reasonable conclusion.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE BOARD NOT INVOLVED IN PLANNING OF NORTHERN PIPELINES

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In light of earlier statements by the minister that the National Energy Board is an independent tribunal set up to look after the public interest, will the minister assure the House that between the years 1970 and 1975 the National Energy Board was not in any way involved in the planning of northern pipelines?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. lady would read the National Energy Board Act, she would find that not only is it a regulatory tribunal, but it has been given the responsibility by parliament to act in an advisory role to government. I would have to check the record, but according to my recollection, representatives of the National Energy Board, including perhaps the former chairman and the present chairman, were indeed involved in advice to the government which established the northern pipeline guidelines which are now being followed.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am not talking about the government's pipeline guidelines, the establishment of the pipeline guidelines or the board acting in an advisory capacity in this way. I am asking the minister if this independent regulatory body, namely the National Energy Board, was in any way involved in the planning of the pipeline during that period.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): If the hon. lady would do a little more research on this matter, she would find that the board is, of course, reactive to applications in this regard. If she is referring to preparation of general government guidelines such as I have referred to, obviously the board was involved. If she is referring to the preparation of an application by any individual applicant, that, of course, would clearly not be the role of the board. I am confident the board would have acted with great discretion in that regard.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT

GOVERNMENT VIEW OF ADEQUACY OF PRESENT LEGISLATION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. The Foreign Investment Review Act was passed by parliament as a result of expressed concerns by Canadians with regard to the problem of foreign ownership in general in Canada and specifically United States ownership. This was indirectly referred to recently by the Minister of Finance when he said that a good part of our problem of trade imbalance with the United States is connected to the situation. In view of the interpretation put upon the Prime Minister's conversations with West German businessmen and the interpretation made of the recent speech in New York by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, is the government still concerned with the problem of foreign ownership? Also, does the Prime Minister consider that existing legislation is adequate to deal with the problem?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question is yes. In answer to the second question, the legislation is adequate in so far as it deals with one problem. However, there are many aspects to foreign ownership and investment control of the Canadian economic environment that the government has followed and will continue to develop, such as taxing approaches, incentives to investment in Canada and so on.

POSSIBLE INTRODUCTION OF NEW LEGISLATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): In view of what the Prime Minister has said, in light of the statement made in the House by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in March, 1973, namely that we turn control of our future over to those who own our industry, and in light of the limitations in the existing legislation to deal with the broader problem, is the government giving consideration to bringing before the House new legislation to deal with not only takeovers but all new investment in the Canadian economy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will recall that under the Foreign Investment Review Act, other investment and takeover is covered in a second part of the legislation still to be proclaimed. The government has indicated it will proclaim this part at a date still to be announced.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER PROVIDE WRITTEN JUSTIFICATION FOR TAKE-OVERS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Since under the terms of the act the government has turned down fewer than one per cent of the applications, that is to say, only nine of all the applications for take-overs, and since a written explanation has been provided in the case of only one of the take-overs as to the degree to which it meets the requirements of the legislation, would the Prime Minister request the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to provide the House with written justification for all the take-overs in the future and for those which have taken place so far?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): As to the preamble to the question, this is a statistical matter; I do not want to contradict the hon. member but I think if he checks the figures he will find the percentage is not what he has indicated. I will check them and I am sure he will, too. My impression is that of some 60 cases which have been considered, eight or nine applications have been rejected. This is a considerably higher proportion than one per cent, if my memory is correct.

As to the second part of the question, we shall continue to apply the policy as set out in the law and in the government's statement. The hon. member is making a representation. I propose to review this subject with my colleagues in the not too distant future and I will consider his representation at that time.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR INCREASED FUNDS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Considering the increase in the unemployment rate in Canada, and more particularly in Quebec, may I ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration whether he will recommend the approval of other LIP projects to create jobs and alleviate the burden now resting on the Unemployment Insurance Commission?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I shall need clarification as to what the hon. member means by "other bills" before I can respond.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary following the minister's answer.

Considering that many LIP projects have not been subsidized, although they are valid, does the minister intend to postpone the date for the approval of projects to allow them to be subsidized and to create more jobs, particularly in areas where the unemployment rate is visibly increasing?

[English]

Mr. Andras: No such decision has yet been taken by the government. The whole matter is under consideration. If there is a decision it will be announced in the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have another supplementary.

Because of the urgency of the problem, would the minister tell the House what the community program comprises which he intends to put forward jointly with the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and tell us also whether this program will be implemented in the near future?

[English]

Mr. Andras: I believe the hon. member is referring to the community employment strategy, now in its developmental phase, which we are negotiating with each of the provinces. This will not be a massive program at its inception; it will in fact be limited to about two projects in each province being selected in consultation with the provincial government concerned. Negotiations are going on very well with my counterparts in the provinces. I believe there will be activity in most places within the next few weeks, but limited to that scope.

POSSIBLE BID-RIGGING IN SALVAGE AND DREDGING INDUSTRIES—INVESTIGATION IN "IRVING WHALE" CASE—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PROTECT PUBLIC INTEREST

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the Minister of Transport has stated outside the House that the government was alerted to the suspicion that bid-rigging might be going on in the salvage and dredging industries as a result of the Irving Whale case in 1971, what steps has he taken to determine what procedures were followed at that time to protect the public interest?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I asked the minister to investigate, which he did.

Mr. McGrath: Could I ask the Prime Minister when he asked the minister to investigate? Did the investigation satisfy the government that the contractual procedures followed in connection with dredging were such as to protect the public interest and that there were in fact no grounds for the suspicion the minister had enunciated?

Mr. Trudeau: As to the moment at which I discussed this matter with the minister, it was as soon as I learned about the possibility of a scandal there. The minister had already carried out an investigation at that time, and he showed me the results of that investigation on which he has commented in this House and outside.

Mr. McGrath: Can the Prime Minister determine for the House the date of the investigation? Was it at the time of the Irving Whale incident in 1971 or was it within relatively recent times when the minister made the statement?

Mr. Trudeau: The latter, Mr. Speaker.

POSSIBLE BID-RIGGING IN SALVAGE AND DREDGING INDUSTRIES—CONSULTATIONS WITH MINISTER OF JUSTICE IN 1971

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether he consulted with his colleague, the Minister of Justice, in 1971 to solicit his advice in assessing the legality of what was going on in dredging tender procedures?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): In 1971 I was not Minister of Transport.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

PROPOSED ELIMINATION OF PATROL VESSELS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General; in his absence may I direct it to the Minister of Justice or to the acting minister? Can the minister inform the House whether it is the intention of the government to eliminate the service provided by the RCMP patrol vessels operating off the coast of the maritime provinces? If not, would he investigate and advise us?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): I will bring that question to the attention of the Solicitor General and ask him to report.

Mr. Muir: May I ask the hon. gentleman if, when he is working on this urgent and important matter, he will keep in mind that these RCMP patrol vessels, along with vessels from the Departments of Fisheries, Transport and other government departments form part of the search and rescue units of the Canadian Coastguard? Obviously, this duty cannot be carried out with 16-foot skiffs.

Mr. Lang: I think the Solicitor General is aware of the facts concerning the service provided.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

MACKENZIE HIGHWAY—INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE CHANGE IN GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It relates to a statement of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in a letter to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior dated May 4, 1972 with respect to the construction of the Mackenzie Highway to ease the building of a pipeline.

In view of the fact that $100 million has already been spent to date on construction of this highway, and bearing in mind recent statements by Canadian Arctic Gas, has the government reviewed its position with regard to this highway and, if so, would the hon. gentleman advise whether there has been any change in policy?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): We are currently reviewing the situation. When the original cost estimates for this highway were being put together we were looking at some $60 million. We are now looking at estimates in excess of a quarter of a billion dollars. So we are currently examining the whole situation.

NATIONAL PARKS

REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF PROPOSAL TO INCREASE ENTRANCE FEE TO PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND PARK

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development? It is in reference to the deplorable proposal to impose a $2 entrance fee to the Prince Edward Island national park. Having had an opportunity to assess the special difficulties such a levy would impose on the people of the Island, is the minister now prepared to add to the good sense of his year's moratorium the deeper wisdom of a full abandonment of this iniquitous and nefarious scheme to keep the people of Prince Edward Island from their own beaches?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): In the final part of his question the hon. member did say I have arrived at an agreement for a year's delay because of the acquisition of buffer lands to which I referred in replying to the hon. member for Calgary North. The residents of the parks are not subject to this fee, nor are people whose work requires that they go through the parks. With those exceptions it is our intention to follow through with the plan.

CAPE BRETON HIGHLAND NATIONAL PARK—REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF INCREASED ENTRANCE FEE

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question with reference to the Cape Breton Highland National Park where these exorbitant fees are also being put into effect. In light of the fact that the only road that can be used goes through the Cape Breton Highland National Park, and there is no other way you can get through unless you go by water, would the minister consider eliminating what the hon. member for Hillsborough has said is an iniquitous tax, because of the fact these people are already paying taxes to the province in the way of sales taxes and licence fees, and only one-third of the highway is involved with the Cape Breton Highland Park?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in reply to a previous question, people who live in the park and people whose work requires them to go into or pass through the park, as is the case in some towns and villages in the Cape Breton Highland Park, will not be subject to the fee, or if it is required that they pass through the park to get to their homes.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REASON FOR PROTECTION FOR MINISTER OF LABOUR—POSSIBILITY OTHER MINISTERS OR PERSONS INVOLVED IN HAMILTON HARBOUR INVESTIGATION BEING PROTECTED

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I intended to direct my question to the Solicitor General, but in his absence I will direct it to the Acting Solicitor General. It concerns the rather surprising and alarming story today that the RCMP are providing police protection to the Minister of Labour. Could the Solicitor General advise whether that protection was requested by the Minister of Labour or provided as a result of investigations of the police into the Hamilton Harbour matter?

[Mr. Buchanan.]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I think I will simply say to the hon. member that certain reports came to the attention of the police and appropriate action was taken.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, would the Acting Solicitor General advise whether any other ministers or any other persons involved in the Hamilton Harbour investigation are being provided with police protection?

Mr. Lang: Not that I know of, Mr. Speaker, but I will have to take a look at the matter.

HOUSING

ALLEGED CHANGE IN UNDERTAKING OF MINISTER TO INVITE MEMBERS TO CMHC FUNCTIONS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the question I want to put to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs is really supplementary to a question of privilege which came up a week ago last Tuesday, but I have not been able to get to the minister as yet. This is a very important matter, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the minister recently stated in a letter—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has already taken some time with a bit of a preamble. I would really think in the interest of other hon. members who want to pose questions that the hon. member should just ask his question.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the minister sent a letter to Liberal members of parliament and not to members of other parties in this House indicating he will invite them to preside in place of him at certain functions where CMHC funding is being provided in their ridings, providing speech notes and ground transportation, and in view of the fact he is asking—

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member put his question to the minister?

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that he is asking those people—

Some hon. Members: Question, question.

Mr. Speaker: Order please. The hon. member for Northwest Territories.

Mr. Dick: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member of Northwest Territories.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Dick: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a question of privilege in view of the fact that I believe this is a very important question and since I have not reached the point of putting it. I was trying to point out this matter by way of a question rather than a question of privilege. I refer to an undertaking or promise made in this House which I, as a member of parliament, and I believe others have taken as an undertaking by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs as a result of his statement on October 24 at page 723 of Hansard. That is an undertaking on which I have relied, and I intend to carry out my function as a member of parliament. The minister suggested that members of parliament, no matter to which party they belong, would attend as the official person representing the CMHC at all functions in their ridings, and I take this right from page 723 of Hansard. The minister has now sent out a letter of invitation to Liberals only to go to those constituencies which are represented by other than government members.

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame.

Mr. Dick: That is my question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Because of the very important nature of the question, and particularly because of its ingredient of political partisanship, I was most anxious to extend every courtesy to the hon. member. My discontinuance of his right to ask a question was not based in any way on the subject matter, but on my repeated request that the hon. member discontinue his long preamble and get to the point of the question. On his second refusal to do so I felt it was in the interest of other members to move on to another question. If the hon. member has a question to put to the minister I would be grateful if he would put it.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I was attempting to put the matter as a question of privilege but I will be glad to change it to a direct question. Will the minister now explain to the House why he has gone back on his undertaking and promise to parliament, which he gave to the members of this House, and why he is no longer inviting members of other parties to official CMHC functions which take place in their ridings, particularly when he expressly stated he wanted them to be there?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is my intention to invite members of parliament in each case to be in attendance and participate where CMHC ceremonies take place. I must say that after the most recent intervention I have my doubts whether this is a wise idea.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: That is a bright remark, Danson.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, perhaps if all the seals over there want to stop barking we can get on with this.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, in spite of the partisan comments of the minister, which I do not think were in order in reply to a question as simple as that, I wonder if the minister can handle a simple question. Perhaps he cannot give a proper answer, but will he send members of parties other than the government party the same letter he sent to Liberal members of parliament?

An hon. Member: Come on Barney, give us an answer.

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact there has been, and I am going to send at the same time another letter, and I assume that those who represent me personally would be representing the supporters of my government.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

REASON FOR REMOVAL OF HEAVY EQUIPMENT FROM FORT SMITH VOCATIONAL TRAINING SCHOOL—POSSIBILITY OF REPLACEMENT

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development of which I gave him notice. The administration of the Northwest Territories and the federal government set up adult vocational training courses in Fort Smith, Northwest Territories, which have met with considerable success, for which the government can be given credit. I would like to ask the minister to explain why it was seen fit to remove the heavy equipment from the Fort Smith school and send it to the "Hire North" site project which is to build the Mackenzie highway, particularly after the mayor and the council of Fort Smith were given assurance by the Northwest Territories government in May 1974, at which time CBC staff members and other press people were present?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, from the information I have been given, it is my understanding that this move was necessary so that instructors could give on-the-job site training to the native people who are being trained to work on the "Hire North" project. In addition I understand there was consultation just a couple of days ago, on the 19th, when Assistant Commissioner Hancock met with the council in Fort Smith to discuss the matter.

Mr. Firth: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the same minister. Now that the federal government has taken this equipment from the Northwest Territories training school at Fort Smith, will that equipment be replaced?

Mr. Buchanan: That is something I will have to look into to obtain a reply for the hon. member.

Oral Questions

GRAIN

ALLEGED INSTRUCTION BY WHEAT BOARD TO FARMERS NOT TO SEED GRAIN—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. On March 13 I asked the minister whether the Wheat Board would be taking on contracts after the strike, and whether it was advisable to seed grain this year in view of the huge backlog. The minister replied that it was advisable to seed grain. However, a report two days later which appeared in the Financial Post indicates that the Canadian Wheat Board has taken the unprecedented step of telling western farmers to cut back on planting because it cannot guarantee it can move the harvested grain. Would the minister care to explain the discrepancy between himself and the Wheat Board, which is in a position to really know?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, there is no discrepancy whatever between the Wheat Board and the statements I have made, but there certainly is in respect of the report. The report to which the hon. member referred is completely false and inaccurate. The chief commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board called me shortly after the report came to his attention. He said there was no truth to it whatever and that the Canadian Wheat Board is fully in agreement that it is in the best interests of Canada at the present time for us to go for fairly full production next year.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, will the minister, then, guarantee that next year's crop will be taken by the board?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the usual letter to the producers has been sent which indicates to them the kind of guarantee of minimum quantities that will be taken by the board, and it is a good assurance of the sales they will want. In addition to that, of course, there is the point that many of the grain bins in the country will be empty and additional production, from the point of view of security of supply, is desirable.

AIRPORTS

PICKERING—ALLEGED PROMISE OF MINISTER TO STOP CONSTRUCTION IF MAJORITY OF PEOPLE OPPOSED

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. On February 21, in answer to my question regarding the Pickering airport project, the minister answered in part:

> If the hon. gentleman can bring some kind of evidence to show that the majority of the population is against the airport, I am ready to revise the whole thing.

Could the minister confirm his statement by assuring the House that, if proof can be produced showing that a majority of the people of Toronto oppose the present project, he in fact will take appropriate steps to scrap all plans in regard to the new airport?

[Mr. Buchanan.]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not see what kind of answer the hon. member is looking for, because I have received no evidence that the population of Toronto does not want an airport.

Mr. Jelinek: I have a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With due respect, I must say that the hon. member is asking a hypothetical question. He is asking the minister what action he would take in the event of something happening.

Mr. Jelinek: I hesitate to rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, but it is well known that the minister has a reputation for changing his mind on many occasions, and I wonder whether he will reverse the stand he took in answer to my question of a couple of weeks ago.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, there are many places in Canada where there are people who never change their minds.

IMMIGRATION

AVAILABILITY OF SOCIAL INSURANCE CARDS TO ALIENS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the present plans being made in respect of the green paper on immigration and my concern that immigrants who come to Canada and conform to the regulations be protected, since I have a very strong feeling that those aliens who misuse immigration bring to bear a certain reaction to immigrants who come in legally, I wonder whether the minister could indicate what steps are being taken by his department to make sure that social insurance cards are not being made available to those who are visitors or aliens of Canada who might be able to obtain employment when they are not entitled to that employment.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, an examination is being made of the social insurance number and therefore the cards. I have to reiterate that it was never intended to be an identification measure or process, although at the same time I might say that de facto it is being used for that purpose and its inefficiency in that respect is causing a great deal of problems, but we are examining this and anticipate introducing some changes in that process before too long.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—REQUEST FOR EARLY STATEMENT ON OBJECTIVE ON SEEKING CONSENSUS AND PROGRESS THEREON

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister who promised me earlier in the week, on Tuesday, that he would consult with the Minister of Finance to see whether he could make a statement, and give us the timing thereof, with regard to the consensus program upon which a report was promised before Christmas and before the end of February. I asked the Prime Minister whether he would make a statement to the House before the Easter recess, which is now very close, concerning what the government is seeking a consensus on and the progress that is being made. Can the Prime Minister give me an assurance he will make a comprehensive statement on this program which is considered to be of such importance to the government before we adjourn for Easter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did raise the matter with the Minister of Finance. The situation is that there will be no position set down before Easter. If there is to be one it would be a repetition of the very thorough and on-going statement the minister made in respect of the taxation measure some weeks ago.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I believe the statement was made when the bill was before the committee. In view of the fact that any statements made by the Minister of Finance or by the Government House Leader have been of a general nature and members of the House and the people of the country are completely in the dark concerning what it is the government is seeking a consensus about, would the Prime Minister tell us when he will be prepared to make a statement which is not a general statement of the sort which has been given which means nothing. When will he be prepared to give a statement to the House concerning the contents of the consensus program?

Mr. Trudeau: I have not yet determined the date, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I want to keep within the rules of the House and keep my temper if I may. In view of the emphasis given this program in the Speech from the Throne, and in view of the repeated postponements and no new information given about it, how does the Prime Minister expect the Leader of the Opposition or anyone in the opposition to sit calmly by and receive nothing but evasive answers from the Prime Minister? The Prime Minister smiles. Is it the intention of the Prime Minister simply to stonewall all questions on this subject and bide time, or is it his intention finally after many, many months to give the government and the country at least a little bit of the leadership which he promised in the last campaign?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, in all sincerity may I say I do not expect the Leader of the Opposition to sit idly by and keep his temper. I fully realize that he is doing his job in trying to get a statement from the government on this particular subject. My smile during the question had nothing to do with his concern but with the big smile I saw on the face of the hon. member opposite when someone yelled "shame". I thought this was part of the rhetoric, part of the game. I smiled, but I still believe that the question asked by the Leader of the Opposition is a very serious one. He will realize that on the government side we are engaged in a very difficult and delicate operation of trying to keep the inflation rate down by seeking a consensus. In our judgment, this is not the time to make any precise statements about the progress that we believe we are making. I respect the Leader of the Opposition for asking the question. I believe there is a certain amount of rhetoric involved in it, as indeed there is in my answer.

INFLATION—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON PROGRESS IN REACHING CONSENSUS BETWEEN MANAGEMENT AND LABOUR

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): My supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. On Monday I asked him if he would report on the progress made toward reaching a consensus between management and labour with the object in mind of controlling inflation, and he replied at the time that he was viewing the matter with cautious optimism. I wonder now if this cautious optimism will enable him in the near future to repeat once again that deathless phrase which he uttered in January of 1970, namely, "we've got inflation licked".

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): This is a good example of what I call a rhetorical question which is not seeking any information, and is quite different from the question of the Leader of the Opposition.

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR IMPROVED RAILWAY SERVICE FOR NORTHWEST QUEBEC—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

Can he tell the House whether he is aware that northwest Quebec merchants have decided to boycott the CN services to protest against the reply the minister gave to a question I put to him on March 10 last about the slowness of CN deliveries in their area and, if so, can he tell us what he intends to do to meet the very legitimate request of the people of that part of Quebec concerning the delays in CN freight services?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have already been in touch with the CN and I trust we will be able to get a better service for the people of northwest Quebec.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

MERCURY POISONING OF NATIVES IN ENGLISH RIVER AREA—GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO RECTIFY—KNOWLEDGE OF JAPANESE STUDY

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and it concerns the English river system in Ontario and in the area of Kenora. Would the minister advise the House what steps he has now taken with regard to the mercury poisoning of the native population in that area since his on-site investigation in terms of the health of the native people in that area, and what steps he has taken to cause mercury pollution in the system to be reduced?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, basically the reduction of the mercury in rivers is the problem of the Department of National Health and Welfare, and the Department of the Environment, but my understanding is that measures have been taken in that direction. It is the durability of the mercury currently in the river system which apparently will endure for 70 or 80 years that is the problem, as we indicated to Chief Andrew Keewatin when we were there. Probably the only sensible solution would be relocation, but the band is not prepared at this point to accept that option. That was the indication given to me.

Mr. Leggatt: Is the minister aware that Japanese scientists are now studying the long term effects of mercury pollution at Minamoto in Japan? Evidence may be given this afternoon to the Department of National Health and Welfare concerning that. Does he have a representative there to study that evidence and to seek action following that testimony?

Mr. Buchanan: I am not certain whether our representatives are there, but I am certain that the Department of National Health and Welfare is involved and we will provide any forthcoming information.

HUMAN SETTLEMENTS

RESPONSIBILITY FOR ARRANGEMENTS FOR CONFERENCE IN VANCOUVER

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and it concerns the United Nations conference on human settlements to be held in June of next year at the University of British Columbia in Vancouver. In view of the fact that thousands of delegates from nations around the world will be in attendance, and in view of the enormous logistic problems in providing housing and security for the delegates, can the Prime Minister say who in Canada is in charge of the conference, Canada being the host country, and what progress has been made on the mammoth task of organizing this conference?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will discuss the matter with the Minister of the Environment and the Minister of State for Housing and Urban Affairs to try to ascertain which group is in the specific control position.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

INQUIRY AS TO OPINION ON LEGALITY OF WITHHOLDING GRANTS TO MARINE INDUSTRIES

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice and it has to do with the request that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has made to him for an opinion regarding the holdback of grants to Marine Industries Ltd. and the government's position with respect to the matter. Has the Minister of Justice had an opportunity to deliver an opinion with respect to the propriety of holdbacks to the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): A number of questions arise in connection with a potential civil liability, and while we have formed certain opinions and had preliminary discussions, we are continuing to look at the specific situation of the different applications for payments which may come forward.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Is the minister in a position to undertake to report to the House on that matter before the Easter recess?

Mr. Lang: It may well be possible to give more precise indications about whether or not a specific type of payment is being proceeded with before that time.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

POSSIBLE DEVELOPMENT OF PORTS IN CONNECTION WITH LOWER CHURCHILL FALLS HYDRO PROJECT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the massive hydropower development taking place in the lower Churchill Falls area, can the minister indicate to the House whether, under the general development agreement with Newfoundland, studies are being made to create ports coincidental with that development and in order to support the development? I refer to the port of Corner Brook.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): In point of fact, yes, Mr. Speaker. I am not certain whether actual details have been settled as yet with the government of Newfoundland, but we have indicated our willingness in principle to help fund a study to determine what development should take place in Corner Brook. Incidentally, there may very well be some implications of that same study for another port in the hon. member's riding, namely, Stephenville.

AGRICULTURE

FERTILIZER—INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE ACTION FOLLOWING COMBINES INVESTIGATION

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture and it arises out of his answer yesterday to the hon. member for Elgin when he informed the House that an investigation had been going on for some time under the Combines Investigation Act into the fertilizer industry. The minister informed the House earlier that extensive investigations had been carried on by his department and that he will be tabling information. May I ask the minister, as a point of clarification, whether any further action is contemplated on behalf of the minister or his department, depending upon the completion of the investigation under the Combines Investigation Act. In other words, will no further action be taken by the minister until the Combines Investigation Act study has been competed?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we are putting the facts together and then we will decide how far we can go with the legislation we have at present. As I said the other day in answer to the question about fertilizer prices, we have legislation before the House that gives us the power to hold the prices, and if we find that unwarranted profits are being made, we have the power to roll back the prices. However, we would be in a better position to act immediately if we had the legislation, but we will use whatever legislation we have in co-operation with the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to do what we can do. We are not at all happy with what they are doing.

Mr. Jarvis: Is it the minister's opinion therefore that the relationship with the fertilizer industry is such at the moment that some legal action may be necessary rather than any persuasive action that the minister might take with the representatives of that industry?

Mr. Whelan: We do know that, for instance, the Alberta pool, if I can use names, did not raise the price of fertilizer that high. We hope for similar action from other companies and co-operatives. I fought hard for co-operatives to receive better tax concessions so that no cosy deals are made.

RAILWAY ACT

AMENDMENT TO GIVE AUTHORITY TO MINISTER TO ACQUIRE CERTAIN COST INFORMATION FROM COMPANIES

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport) moved that Bill C-48, an Act to amend the Railway Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier) moved that the bill be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion.

[English]

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Before this bill passes, Mr. Speaker, there are a few things I would like to say about it. The fact that this bill has been introduced by the government and proceeded with very rapidly is an indication that the opposition has indeed shown its willingness to co-operate with the government in bringing forth any legislation with respect to transportation. Through the good offices of the deputy House leader of our party an arrangement was made whereby the speakers were limited to one from each party on second reading, and the bill passed committee stage after only two committee hearings, so I think it is fair to say that we on this side welcome this piece of legislation as we welcome any legislation with respect to transportation policy.

The major thrust of this bill, which calls for cost disclosure by the railways on a government to government basis, arises from the proceedings of the Western Economic Conference which was held in Calgary July 24 to 26, 1973. I think it is fair to say that the concept of the bill was inspired by the provinces, and the purpose of the request to the provinces was to give them an oppportunity to evaluate cost data and to consider the effect of the freight rate structure as it relates to the growth and potential of economic development in the various regions of Canada. I think it also goes beyond that, in that the provinces wish to obtain information about the impact on various regulations and facilities with respect to our whole approach to national transportation.

I believe it is fair to say that in the initial stages the provinces asked for full public disclosure relating to the costs and freight rate structures of the various modes of transportation. The government, in its wisdom, saw fit not to proceed on that basis, but rather on the basis of disclosure on a government to government basis. I do not believe we find any objection to that because the freight rate structure and the manner in which freight rates are arrived at are a very important element of the over-all transportation policy; they are, indeed, very important to the over-all approach to overcoming the anomalies and discrepancies existing within our freight rate structure. Therefore, I want to point out that on this basis we agree with the bill.

I think the fact that we have this bill will give the provinces a better opportunity to study and assess the full impact of freight rates; they will be able to proceed in a much more knowledgeable fashion. I believe we must look at our freight rate structure in the light that freight rates must not only be fair but they must be seen to be fair. Hopefully, throughout the deliberations which will take place as a result of this mechanism we will be able to deal with the very complicated issue of freight rate structures in a more knowledgeable and open way. The minister, in committee, indicated that this is merely a first step toward a much broader freight rate and transportation disclosure. He indicated, further, that it will be followed by a more comprehensive measure entitled the Information Act which will make it mandatory for all modes of transportation to provide any information the government may require. I think that in all fairness we will have to look at this matter quite carefully and seriously because the act will certainly have much broader implications and will require a great deal of study and consideration.

I note that the president of CNR, in a recent statement quoted in the Globe and Mail of Saturday, March 15, sounded a warning with respect to the requirement of cost disclosure. It would appear that he is somewhat apprehensive about the impact and the implications of disclosures of this type. I do not know just what is bothersome to the president of CNR, but I want to say to him through you, Mr. Speaker, that if the CNR or any railway company has nothing to hide, and if its freight rate structures are fair and based upon cost plus a reasonable return, then it should really have nothing to hide. I also say to him that there need not be any reason to be apprehensive. I think he is concerned about the fact that some of his predecessors, and indeed some people involved in the railway transportation network, have said they do not necessarily base their freight rates on costs but on the basis of what the traffic will bear. If that is the case, the public has the right to know.

I believe the main thrust and the main principle enshrined in the National Transportation Act is competition, and we all know that in areas of Canada where there are strong competitive forces—that is, in trucking, railroads and movement by water—those areas are generally subjected to fair and reasonable freight rates. However, in areas where we do not have that competition—and that is basically the problem existing in western Canada and, I would suspect, in the Atlantic provinces where we do not have that competitive force to keep all modes in line—we find that freight rates are established basically upon what the traffic will bear; that was admitted in committee and indeed publicly. As I have said, freight rates, whether with regard to railways, trucks or ships, must not only be fair but they must be seen to be fair, and therefore they should stand up to public disclosure and public scrutiny.

The minister has indicated that this is the first step toward a much broader Information Act which will be brought forth later. I wonder what the minister proposes to do in respect of trucking. I notice that he indicated the new act would cover all modes of transportation and that it would be broader in terms of information not only with regard to the application and establishment of freight rates but, indeed, other areas as well. I am not sure what authority the federal government will have to deal with the trucking industry, for example, because extra-provincial trucking is not covered by the National Transportation Act; part III of the act has never been implemented. Therefore, when we look at the whole question of the approach to an integrated transportation policy we must not overlook the importance of the trucking industry which plays a major role in the movement of freight in this country.

In an address to the annual convention of the Canadian Trucking Association on November 26, 1974, the Hon. E. J. Benson, president of the CTC, speaking of the year 1972 said that the railways and the off-highway, intercity trucking industry transported, between them, 238 million tons of traffic and of that tonnage 45 per cent was carried by the trucking industry. Almost half of all the freight that moves from city to city in this country is moved by truck. That is a very large amount of traffic when you consider that most of our bulk commodities such as potash, grain, coal, etc., move by rail. Moreover, of the gross revenue, which amounts to $2.3 billion on an intercity basis, the railways' share was $1 billion, or 43 per cent, while the trucking industry's share was $1.3 billion, or 57 per cent of the revenue. The trucking industry certainly cannot be overlooked in the approach to an integrated transportation system.

What bothers me, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that most of us consider that the railways should be more competitive and in a position to provide cheaper transportation than the trucking industry, given the economy in respect of fuel and the fact that they can move goods in much larger quantities, particularly bulky items. I think the fact that this bill will compel the railways to bring forth their facts and figures in order to justify their approach to the formulation of freight rate structures will provide a greater insight to the whole question of how they arrive at specific freight rates. Therein lies the major problem in so far as the impact on regional development is concerned. Surely it is time we took a very firm and positive position and said that transportation in Canada must be utilized as a major instrument for economic development in the regions.

Now, while the government is asking for disclosure from the railways and in the future will be asking for disclosure from other modes of transportation, I want to say something about the failure of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) to disclose precisely what is going on in his department. I think it is fair to say that even before this legislation was drafted the railways had made a commitment to the provinces to provide reasonable cost disclosure on the basis of an exchange of correspondence between the chairman of the two railways and the department. This government is far too secretive in its approach to transportation, Mr. Speaker. If the department and the government were to take the public into their confidence, I think we would have a much more informed and rational discussion of the whole subject than we have had to date.

I should like to point to a couple of examples. The study on the 22 specific freight rate items that was requested at the western economic opportunities conference in July, 1973, has been in the hands of the minister and the provinces for some time, but it was very difficult to extract that information from this government and this minister. It was not until a rather bitter debate took place in committee that the minister saw fit to table the information.

Transportation is a vital economic lifeline to the future of this country, so why does the government want to hide the information and not give us the report? Is it because they are the governing class? Are they saying, "We have the right to rule: we are the masters"? You would almost think they were the only people who had good ideas; but it is obvious, because of their failure to respond to the transportation needs of this country, that they are bankrupt of ideas. They need some help, and we are prepared to give it. It is rather unfortunate that the government found it necessary to hide this document. There is some very good information in it which could be used to deal with discrepancies and anomalies in freight rates as they affect regions. Why, then, the secrecy? I hope the minister will respond to this question.

A series of studies is going on at the present time, but the minister gives various answers to questions. That is why he gets into trouble, of course; but he can also get out of trouble, because one's interpretation of his approach depends on which answer you read. In one case he indicated that all the studies were completed, and in another answer he indicated that maybe one or two had been completed.

Mr. Speaker, three or four basic studies arose out of the deliberations of the western economic opportunities conference. For example, the equitable pricing proposal advanced by the province of Alberta and its system of freight rate structures were put forward for consideration. I believe that study was completed. Why, then, was it not tabled and made public? There was the Manitoba destination principle, another approach to the pricing structure of freight rates. There was the roadbed study which I understand has been completed. Why have these studies not been disclosed? After all, they were paid for by the taxpayers of Canada. Surely, with transportation in the mess that it is, it behooves the government to bring forward information so that we can all look at it and decide what is the best approach to the problem. We have a great deal of concern about this government's failure to bring us up to date on the progress being made.

I was quite amused by the minister's response to some of the questions asked in committee when we were dealing with this very important subject. He indicated that the provinces were opposed to tabling these studies and, frankly, I think that was a rather supercilious answer. The federal government paid for a large portion of these studies; national transportation policy is a federal responsibility, and it seems to me rather ridiculous to suggest that because the provinces are opposed to it we should not have the information. In the final analysis, this parliament will have to judge the legislative mechanisms brought forth to overhaul our national transportation policy.

We have lack of disclosure and lack of action by the government in many areas. For example, what has happened in the rapeseed matter which the CTC has been considering for some time and which has been in the minister's hands since 1970? It was found that, pursuant to section 23 of the National Transportation Act, the freight rate applying to that commodity was prejudicial to the public interest. The CTC brought down an interim decision and the provinces and all applicants appealed that decision. They asked the minister to reconsider it, as they are entitled to do under certain provisions of the National Transportation Act.

I think the matter was referred to the minister in March, 1974, and he has been sitting on it since. Nothing has been done, and ministerial inaction has been holding up the final decision of the CTC: the question is in limbo. If the government adopts as leisurely an attitude in redressing other freight rate anomalies and discrepancies, some freight rates will not be changed much before the year 2000.

Let me now refer to the matter of rail line abandonment. According to the announcement of December 30, the status of almost 6,000 miles of track will remain frozen until December 31, 1975. Almost three months have elapsed since the announcement, but the government has not provided guidelines and terms of reference for the evolution process. It has not told us how these lines will be evaluated or what the study procedures will be with regard to the 6,000 miles of track. What is the reason for the secrecy? Surely the government knows how the matter is to be dealt with.

Mr. Paproski: That's where the hon. member is wrong; it does not know.

Mr. Mazankowski: In the meantime, the status of 6,000 miles of track is left in limbo, as it were. Economic development in certain regions served by these lines is a possibility but that development will not go ahead under present conditions of uncertainty. I do not say that the government should guarantee that the 6,000 miles of track will remain in use until the year 2000. That is not the point. I am merely pointing out that delaying the decision with regard to the 6,000 miles of track until 1975 has created confusion, uncertainty and frustration.

Governments are not short of advice. Advice is provided by provincial committees and technical committees. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) established a study group to look at transportation. In addition, other study groups have been sponsored by the Minister of Transport. We have available the services of all kinds of study groups and technical and advisory committees. Extra technical staff in the minister's office is available for advice. Despite the workings of all these groups, there is a dearth of information. Occasionally we see a press release which is put out for political consumption, but we do not know the hard facts. The minister refuses to answer questions asked in this House; I suspect he does not know the answers.

The minister has failed to inform members of this House where he stands with respect to the over-all transportation policy which the country was promised during the election campaign and again in the Speech from the Throne. So if we sound frustrated and angry, people should not be surprised: we are frustrated and angry because our requests for information are refused. We agree that transportation is in a mess. We want to work with the minister, but the initiative can only come from the government side. The government's inaction is making us angry, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanfield: The government is like a secret society.

Mr. Mazankowski: If the minister is not in a position to bring forward a comprehensive transportation plan, he should at least bring forward guidelines which could apply right across the country. I suggest the minister could establish a national conference on transportation in which all experts in the transportation field could participate, in order to arrive at a consensus because, Mr. Speaker, transportation cannot be dealt with in isolation. It is as vital to our nation as our social security system and our energy resources.

The minister's approach to the problem of transportation is disjointed. He says one thing in one part of the country and another in another part. He speaks out of both sides of his mouth. After saying one thing in the Atlantic provinces, he says something different in central Canada and something different again in western Canada. We cannot develop policy if the minister's approach is so disjointed. A parliamentary committee might be helpful in making suggestions on transportation, but the guidelines and initiatives can only come from the government. During the election campaign the government pretended it had all the answers. We agreed with many of its proposals; many of them were similar to proposals we had advanced during the election campaign.

Mr. Paproski: The government stole our ideas.

Mr. Mazankowski: Matters involving grain handling and grain handlers' strikes come within the purview of transportation; but the government has taken no corrective initiatives in this field. We call on the government to take initiatives and to act. Surely somebody in the government is working on transportation. If members opposite had visited western Canada in the last week or ten days they would have sensed the anger and frustration of western producers—anger and frustration brought about by their inability to move products. What is the point of the kind of stabilization program we discussed last week, and will discuss again soon in connection with grain, if we cannot move products to market? The situation is ludicrous.

The provinces themselves asked for disclosure of certain cost information in order to be in a better position to evaluate freight rate structures, the manner in which they are arrived at and their application. Such disclosure is important for the provinces as they are concerned about the impact of freight rates on regional growth. Transportation policy is an important tool in bringing about regional growth. It has been acknowledged that there are anomalies and discrepancies in this country's freight rates; studies have proved it and the minister himself acknowledged it.

The method provided under section 23 of the National Transportation Act for curing these anomalies and discrepancies is far too complex, as is made evident by the appeal in connection with rapeseed. The procedure must be shortened and changed so that freight rate anomalies which are against the public interest can be redressed in short order. An opportunity for intelligent discussion of this matter and intelligent argument is necessary. That is why we welcome this bill.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

On February 24 of this year the Department of Transport released a communiqué which reads in part as follows:

> Calgary. At a breakthrough meeting at Calgary the federal and four provincial ministers responsible for transportation arrived at accord on five major principles on transportation policy affecting western Canada.

We welcome that statement which has been a long time coming. We want to be sure action is taken. Anomalies in freight rates can only be resolved on the basis of facts. So far, not one freight rate item has been changed, not one anomaly rectified. It has been acknowledged that we suffer from freight rate discrepancies. The railways voluntarily provided cost data almost two years ago. The government had two years to act. Surely that was long enough for it to put right some of these anomalies. The commitments which have been made—I will not go into them—are embodied in this communiqué. We take very seriously indeed the pledge and commitment made in the statement of February 24, 1975. As I said earlier, the principles include rejection of horizontal increases, maximum rate restrictions, long-haul and short-haul, and raw and finished products anomalies. These are all very important to the various regions of Canada.

The Minister of Transport said he was opposed to any further general horizontal percentage increases in rail freight rates. We take these pledges very seriously and we are going to hold this government to them. If the government refuses to bring in corrective measures, we can only assume that these communiqués are nothing more than political rhetoric and that the Speech from the Throne and commitments made during the last election campaign were simply a bill of goods sold to the Canadian people for the purpose of political expediency.

We in this party support this bill. We hope it is the beginning of a number of broader measures which must be brought forward to redress the whole question of transportation in Canada. I think that as a party we have proven that we are prepared to work with the minister and the government in arriving at a realistic, comprehensive and effective transportation policy. However, as I said before, the initiative and leadership must come from the government side. We certainly look forward to that initiative and we will be reminding the government on a day to day basis of the commitments and promises they have made.

[Translation]

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak today on a bill concerning a department involved in my constituency.

We all know that railway companies are experiencing serious problems. It is normal for the provinces to obtain on due time all the information concerning freight rates and it is reasonable for Canadians to expect better services from a company which is theirs and which they own since their taxes assure its existence. It is not reasonable for individuals to be unaware of the costs incurred by a company which belongs to them.

In the transport field, services should be compared to the profits realized by the undertaking. It is not proper to be subjected to the incivilities and sarcastic remarks of a minister whose support is requested.

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-48 will increase the power of the minister to the detriment of the Canadian Transport Commission. It is unfortunate that it should be thought that he does not know what to do with his powers, that he is not interested in his department and that he does not give a darn about the needs of the people.

Mr. Speaker, for years now the government has been promising appropriate measures. This bill does not solve all the problems; it should be more complete to spare us having to study an omnibus bill dealing with all aspects of transport in Canada with a view to finding concrete solutions.

Mr. Speaker, Canada now has a deplorable railway system. The slowness of its services, the outrageous cost of the food served to the passengers, the poor condition of the tracks, to name but a few, must be looked into. Canadians give millions of dollars every year to the railway companies. They have the right to demand adequate services, to know how their money is spent, to find out exactly how much freight transportation costs.

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-48 really changes nothing in what already existed since the governor in council and the Canadian Transport Commission could already use it. Section 331.4(2) states that if a railway company refuses to conform to a request from the minister, the minister may exercise the power available to him under National Transportation Act section 82, as an emergency measure. As I said earlier, the bill increases authority that the minister could not use adequately in the past.

I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, that railways are badly administered. I am also convinced that this could have been rectified without Bill C-48. This is why I say that the bill is only a screen to postpone the study of adequate solutions to transportation problems, a study which we consider vital. This is why, Mr. Speaker, I urge the government to end the study of this bill as soon as possible since it brings no concrete answer to present problems. This is why I say that the minister is not behaving sensibly. I refer to the question which I asked him on March 10. I then asked if it would be possible to investigate railway transportation services in northwestern Quebec, where the situation was deplorable, since a parcel could take up to 15 days to go from Montreal to Val-d'Or. Yesterday, I received a press release from my area which said that a dealer had ordered on January 24 a part which he needed urgently and that he received it only on March 18.

That is why I am saying that the minister does not care for the problems of far away regions like Abitibi, Lac-Saint-Jean and Gaspésie.

RAILWAY ACT

AMENDMENT TO GIVE AUTHORITY TO MINISTER TO ACQUIRE CERTAIN COST INFORMATION FROM COMPANIES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Marchand (Langelier) that Bill C-48, to amend the Railway Act, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should reply briefly to some of the points raised by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) in his contribution to our discussion on third reading of Bill C-48. While the bill does not contain a large number of provisions, its production has already had a positive effect in increasing the supply of information from the railroad companies to the provinces concerned.

As has been pointed out, the bill makes provision for the exchange of information between governments on a confidential basis, but this does not limit its value in dealing with the whole subject of freight rates. It is understandable that the railway companies should not be anxious to see all their confidential data passed on to other competing modes of transportation. The fact is that the railroads have already been providing to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), and through him to the provinces, information on a large number of items and in response to a number of requests submitted to the department following the western economic opportunities conference. The railway companies have also been providing information relative to other inquiries put forward by the prairie provinces as well as in connection with other studies which are under way, including the rail roadbed study.

The hon. member for Vegreville made a very good point in that much of the information derived from these studies should soon be made available on a wider basis. The federal-provincial committee on western transportation was set up between the Minister of Transport and the four western ministers responsible for transportation. The arrangement is that the studies remain confidential. However, I certainly agree with the hon. member that we should seek to expand that particular reference. I am sure the minister and the provinces, too, would agree with this approach as we move further along the road to getting a better understanding of the issue.

We have all heard about the inequities which exist. The difficulty has been to define them specifically. I hope that in the coming months we can make available to the transport committee more of the information which has been gathered in some of the studies to which the hon. member referred.

There is one other point on which I might comment. An inquiries procedure has been announced with respect to the examination of the 6,000 miles of branch lines presently in the "in-between" category, that is, whether or not they will be a permanent part of the system. I can tell the hon. member and the House that further detailed announcements on the matter should be made by the Minister of Transport and the minister responsible for the Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) within the next week. These will set out the nature of the inquiries and the kind of information and answers it is hoped the inquiries will produce. I agree with the hon. member that we will have to move fairly rapidly in dealing with this question.

Let me point out to him that the uncertainty in respect of these rail lines has been with us for a long time, as I am sure he is aware. Abandonments have been frozen, deferred and put off indefinitely, while the grain companies and the people living in the communities affected, as well as others who might be looking at these areas for future industrial development, want to know whether they will have a rail line. These difficulties have been with us for a long time, and the purpose of these inquiries is to try to clarify some of the very matters about which the hon. member for Vegreville is concerned.

I think when the hon. member hears the details of the inquiries process and how they are to be conducted, he will be happy with the approach; and I can assure him of the full co-operation of the minister and the ministry. Certainly, if we are to clarify some of the questions and issues which are of very deep concern to western Canada, we will need to get some of these answers—and that is what the whole inquiries process is all about. These inquiries will be looking into some of the problems of rebuilding and improving branch lines, as well as the whole grain collection system.

The hon. member made reference to a broader type of information bill which will involve modes of transportation other than rail. That will be coming in the future. The hon. member points out, quite rightly, that a good deal of the transportation on the prairies is carried out by truck. If we exclude bulk commodities such as potash, grain and coal, it is pretty well even in distribution as between rail and truck. The over-all information bill will be designed to provide the government with the information on these other modes of transportation needed for the development of the kind of policies which will meet the needs of the various areas of Canada.

As my primary interest is in western Canada, I can assure the hon. member of the co-operation of the government side of the House in trying to obtain some of these answers. Bill C-48 is an auspicious beginning in that regard. This process is now working very well in giving us the kind of information we need to set the stage for the development of policies which will resolve some of the concerns of western Canada and other parts of the country.

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, like the previous speaker, I intend to comment only briefly on Bill C-48, a bill which in my opinion is nothing more than window-dressing. I am sorry that the parliamentary secretary did not more clearly enunciate the reason for bringing this bill before us; he did not justify the purpose of the bill at all. We have known for a long time that something was required to bring out the facts in respect of freight rate issues. I do not know why this has not been done before, in view of the fact that the authority was already in existence either through the governor in council or the Canadian Transport Commission.

I have only been a member of this House for a few years, but in the years before that there were many debates on freight rates, an issue which has been a bone of contention in Canada for many years. While it is fine to agree with the provinces, as happened at the western economic opportunities conference a couple of years ago, that this information is necessary, surely it could have been made public long before now. Surely this information could have been collected for the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) in the past and made a matter of public record. Surely the minister should have reacted by taking the initiative, in view of the demand and the number of requests in respect of this information. The minister has had the authority all along to take this initiative and straighten the matter out. He has claimed many times that these matters are beyond his control. I suggest that the principle, the need and the ability may be beyond his comprehension, but they certainly are not beyond his control.

One of the studies in which I am greatly interested was not mentioned by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). I understand the study has been on the desk of the minister for almost two years and has been upgraded twice because of changing economic conditions. I refer to the study in regard to rail passenger transportation. I realize that this is a deviation from the issue before us, but it is a very current and pressing matter. The suggestions of the two major railways in this country have been kicking around for some time. In answer to a question I asked a few weeks ago, the minister would only say that he had just started to look at the study. If it has been available for a couple of years and he has just started to consider it, I wonder how long we will have to wait before getting satisfaction. Perhaps the parliamentary secretary would undertake to see if he can have this study made public as well, so that some of us can look at it.

We have only had two spokesmen from this party in respect of the bill but they are two of the most knowledgeable men in the House of Commons on rail transportation and freight rates. I refer to the hon. member for Lisgar

(Mr. Murta) and the hon. member for Vegreville. I want to add to their comments by saying that while we agree to the passage of this legislation, we feel very strongly that the delay of the last two years has been nothing more than putting aside something for which the minister is responsible and which should have been taken care of a long time ago.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

CIVIL SERVICE INSURANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS TO PROVISIONS RELATING TO CHILDREN AND UNMARRIED WOMEN

Hon. C. M. Drury (for the Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-26, to amend the Civil Service Insurance Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Drury (for the Minister of Finance) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I think it is worthwhile noting that this bill takes care of some difficulties that have existed in the statute and is administrative only, to a great degree. Let me call the attention of the House to the extension of the meaning of the word "children" to include adopted children. I understand there has been some difficulty experienced from time to time in that regard, and this extension will be a welcome addition to the statute law. In addition, the bill will remove a difference, in terms of status in law, between married and unmarried women, thereby correcting a situation which has existed in respect of the children of unmarried female public servants.

All in all, I think the amendments are sound. I am particularly pleased to see, in clause 12 of the bill, that there has been an attempt by the government and the framer of the bill to bring its language into line so that it corresponds with the uniform insurance act provisions which apply in the provinces. This will limit to as great a degree as possible any misunderstanding that might have arisen. I want the government House leader to know that we support this bill and think it is very good legislation for the purpose of cleaning up the law in this particular respect.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Cultural Property

CULTURAL PROPERTY EXPORT AND IMPORT ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING EXPORT OF CULTURAL PROPERTY AND IMPORT OF CULTURAL PROPERTY ILLEGALLY EXPORTED FROM FOREIGN STATES

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-33, respecting the export from Canada of cultural property and the import into Canada of cultural property illegally exported from foreign states, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State) moved:

That Bill C-33, An Act respecting the export from Canada of cultural property and the import into Canada of cultural property illegally exported from foreign states, be amended by striking out lines 27 to 40 on page 8 thereof and lines 1 to 12 on page 9 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

"Export Review Board, consisting of a chairman and not less than six or more than twelve other members appointed by the governor in council on the recommendation of the minister.

(2) The members of the Review Board other than the chairman shall be chosen in equal numbers

(a) from among officers, members or employees of art galleries, museums, archives, libraries or other similar institutions in Canada; and

(b) from among residents of Canada who are dealers in or collectors of art, antiques or other objects that form part of the national heritage.

(3) The Review Board may authorize one of its members to act as chairman in the event of the absence or incapacity of the chairman or if the office of chairman is vacant.

(4) Three members, at least one of whom is a person described in paragraph (2)(a) and one of whom is a person described in paragraph (2)(b), constitute a quorum of the Review Board."

He said: Mr. Speaker, I might say just a word or two at the report stage of this important piece of legislation. We discussed its philosophy and provisions at second reading stage and also before the committee. Therefore, today I should simply like, first of all, to express my warmest appreciation to hon. members on all sides of the House who were members of the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts for the very thoughtful and expeditious way they dealt with the bill. I would also point out to hon. members who were not members of the committee that there were amendments proposed at the committee stage some of which were adopted and some of which were not.

One amendment would reduce the value limit for archives, under the provisions for the control lists, from $1,000 to $500. This was a recommendation put to us by archivists generally and by the Dominion Archivist. Another important amendment extends the tax relief, in the case of a referral to the review board for an income tax certificate, to include national treasures less than 50 years old and made by a living person but which are not subject to export control. I think these two amendments strengthen the bill.

While expressing my appreciation to hon. members, may I also express appreciation for the very generous co-operation of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) who showed particular sensitivity with respect to the problem we were attempting to tackle in ensuring that we incorporated the delicate balance between constraints and incentives which is necessary to guarantee successful implementation of this legislation. The amendment which is now before the House at the report stage was discussed, and I think favourably endorsed, by members of the committee from all parties. However, we were not able to deal with it at the committee stage because it required a new royal recommendation, which is before us now, plus the amendment.

The purpose of the amendment is simple. It is to increase the number of members of the board, to allow the board to have increased flexibility and also greater administrative efficiency. I thank hon. members on all sides of the House for their co-operation, and commend to the House the amendment and the bill.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to start by saying it is a pleasure to be able to speak on this bill and offer endorsation of what I believe is basically a good piece of legislation. This is really, in essence, what one might call apple pie legislation, but I think it is good apple pie so I believe there will be support for it in the House. There are, however, a number of concerns about the bill, although they are not absolutely devastating, which ought to be aired at this time and perhaps given further consideration as we study the whole complex question in the field of culture and cultural development.

First, as a basis for this discussion, I wish to say that no country really knows the limits of its greatness without taking time to establish what are its roots. Any policy or legislation which assists a nation in preserving its history and protecting its culture is the type of legislation we should all underwrite. I think it is particularly important in a country as young as Canada that we should do all that is important for the preservation of its history. In fact, many people hardly think of Canada as a nation with a historical reference. There are many people in this nation who can almost remember back to the time when this country was started, and on that basis Canadian often conclude that we do not have a historical past, when in fact history is simply human beings in progress. There must be a period in which that progress develops so that we become fully appreciative of that which went before.

So, speaking on this bill, we note there are two principal purposes put forward. The first is to protect us against unwarranted exports of treasures deemed to be of national historic value and, second, to establish a tax advantage for those collectors who assist in developing collections that are in the national interest and which are to be displayed. Having said that, I wish to digress for a few moments in talking about culture and the protection of culture. First of all I wish to underscore something which I think is of tremendous importance. Culture has no rights or wrongs except as judged by other cultures. The sets of values we have across the world are always in conflict when one culture views another. But these conflicts do not exist within the domain of right and wrong at any given point within a culture. So when we take a look at people in certain Mediterranean countries and in Spain, we note that there are people who stand extremely close and yet have different values. Sometimes we even chuckle at that, but the fact is it is the difference between cultures which makes this something we do not fully appreciate or understand.

My point is that culture is not a fixed identity but, rather, a process in motion which is always in a state of change. I wish to underscore the fact that once government enters the field of doing something about culture, it may run into the danger of starting to attempt to underline what is right and wrong in respect of culture, trying to define what it should be and telling its citizens what their values ought to be. I think the role of the government, clearly, should be simply to record and preserve for historical reference, without any determination to attempt to direct or dictate, under those situations, what our values ought to be.

While underlining that this is good legislation, one also recognizes that because the government now has some influence on what pieces of art, artifacts and cultural activities are good in the national interest, it certainly runs the danger of directing its citizens in terms of influencing them as to what values the government thinks it should have.

Another concern I have about this legislation is with regard to the words "in the national interest." It seems to me that when we consider a piece of legislation in regard to art, artifacts and our cultural heritage, we can certainly wonder at what point these things come to be in the national interest. If we could go back in our imagination for a few moments to some of the war pieces which might have been left on the Plains of Abraham immediately following the war, they would not have been of interest to the prairie provinces or British Columbia if for no other reason than the fact that those provinces had not at that time even been named.

What is of regional interest today may well be of national interest 50 or 100 years from now, but the type of legislation being put forth lends itself to emphasizing the national interest. When one really looks at what is happening in museums and archives today, a large part of the whole national development of the protection of culture is the succession of little museums and little archives dotted across Canada, many of them having particular emphasis on regional and local concerns. Many of these museums will have tremendous importance later in history but may not at the present time be appreciated as being of national interest.

I think the point ought to be made that this legislation does not go far enough in protecting the cultural values of Canadians because it means that something must necessarily be classified as being of national interest before it can be fully protected. Associated with that is another concern I have about this legislation, namely, what happens to the bits of information and artifacts which are protected in some regional place when they do come to be of national interest? If something is being preserved in a museum in Nova Scotia, Newfoundland, Quebec, British Columbia or the Northwest Territories and suddenly it is deemed to be of national interest, does this mean the local community will give up some of its own collection so that it may be preserved for the national interest? If that is so, I think it is another serious danger in terms of this legislation and it ought to be reviewed as to its real purposes.

Another concern about the national interest deals with the field of art. We note that if a piece of art reaches such prominence that it is deemed to be of national importance, it will then be retained and held within Canada. I think we must be cognizant of the fact that in many fields of art it is not only important to be recognized within one's own country, but often a part of achieving greatness is being recognized internationally, and obviously it would be difficult to be recognized internationally if the arts, artifacts and writings are deemed of such importance that they are held within this country. While I fully concur with the legislation, I think there should always be concern for those who espouse to greatness if recognition in the international forum will in some way limit them from achieving this.

Another concern that I have is the competition between the regions and the nation. I think it is important that we give all due emphasis to trying to perpetuate this legislation to the maximum degree possible—perhaps there could even be consideration at future dates in this respect—so that there will be the kind of promotion which will protect not just the national interest but will also assist regions and small communities to protect their cultural heritage, because surely it is the collection of all the communities of Canada which constitutes the major national issue and national importance.

I suggest that the minister has proposed two good amendments to the legislation. Both of them are important and I am pleased that they have been introduced. I think they have strengthened the legislation considerably and we appreciate that. There is the question of expropriation in the national interest. It is important to an artist to be recognized throughout the world. Therefore, I think it should be underlined in viewing this legislation that all due consideration ought to be given to any Canadian developing, in a cultural sense, artifacts, writings and paintings for us so that they also have an opportunity to seek international greatness and are not necessarily confined within the Canadian framework, because greatness cannot really be achieved if we hold everything in too tight a fist under the guise of nationalism.

Finally, I must say that I was extraordinarily pleased that the minister did not choose to exercise personal discretion as to the artists but has left that to the independent bodies which he has established within the limits of the legislation. I think it is important that we do not allow government bodies, and particularly ministers of the Crown, to get into the position of establishing for the Canadian people what is or what is not culture. I know there was some discussion in committee that perhaps the minister ought to have exercised more authority in protecting Canadian art.

While I know there are arguments which would certainly permit at least consideration and discussion of that point, I am pleased that in the final analysis the minister resisted because I think that in the long run, while we will lose in a few instances, we will at least avoid the danger, with very tight control, of anybody, for political reasons, being in a position to establish what our values are and what is good culture. I am pleased that it will, instead, be an independent body which will be discussing and determining what Canada's culture is, what our values are and what in the long run is of national interest.

I shall conclude at this point by saying that this is a piece of legislation to which we should find no difficulty in lending our support. I have outlined what I think are a few concerns. For emphasis, I would like to reiterate that I think everything possible ought to be done to make sure that we protect our culture, while at the same time doing as little as possible, as a government, to determine what culture is. While sometimes it may not be appreciated in its historical reference, I think it is always a part of the changing complexity of human beings, and it is simply the role of government to record and register, but not to determine, that which is good value or that which is bad value.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure for me to join my colleague, the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Malone), who has spoken with great perception, brilliance and eloquence on a very important matter. I also congratulate the minister. I think it is the first time I have had an opportunity to address myself to an initiative of his, and I think this is a very worthy one.

This bill has been carefully examined in the committee and at the second reading stage. My colleague, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), who is a very perceptive man, found both a few hooks and a few harpoons in it and I think we will want to watch for these in the future. I know that the amendments have made improvements, as any good amendment should, and I predict that in the future there may be need for a little more redrafting of this bill because, as we all know, this is a forward step, one that was long delayed but should be all the more welcome.

I have long been pleading in the House for a little more attention to our cultural heritage. We have wasted so much and squandered so much, and on many occasions sold so much, that we should have retained and appreciated. I am never content that the residence of our first prime minister is in the possession of another government, or that the long-time residence of our great and first internationalist, Sir Robert Borden, has passed on into destruction. It should be the residence of either the Speaker of the House or the Leader of the Opposition. But that is all in the past, and now I hope that we have learned the lesson. We are at the stage in our development—and I note which bill is coming next—when we have ravaged our natural environment, so now we shudder at the prospects of what might happen unless we take environmental heed. So, also, in our historic and cultural environment we have been far too careless and heedless, and almost any country in the world could teach us lessons in archival and museum matters.

I think that in all of this debate perhaps too little attention has been given to the fact that this measure is a mere buttress to what has been going on in the private sector. I am very much heartened by the various heritage organizations which are functioning in provinces such as Prince Edward Island and on the dominion scene. The government sector cannot do it all alone, nor can the private sector. I like the provisions in this bill whereby the governmental sector may give leadership but not pre-empt the whole field.

On this quiet Friday afternoon, when we are all motivated by the finest of thoughts, at our best behaviour and with the most modest of demeanours, I will follow my usual custom and give the House an example of brevity. I would like to quote someone whom I have quoted many times before, one of the wisest public men we have ever produced. He is a man whose advice has been heeded or is being heeded in part on this day, a man who gave this advice 104 years ago. I refer to the great Joseph Howe, who said:

> A wise nation preserves its records, gathers up its muniments, decorates the tombs of its illustrious dead, repairs its great public structures, and fosters national pride and love of country, by perpetual reference to the sacrifices and glories of the past.

In so far as the minister is helping in that tradition, I wish him well and wish the bill speedy passage.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief because I outlined the opinion of the NDP on Bill C-33 in the second reading debate back on February 7, as well as in committee. I commend the minister for bringing forth the bill, which we accept and support in principle, a bill to protect the export of historic and cultural treasures. The minister knows my criticisms of the bill, the fact that there are loopholes so that in the end there is no way in which there can be an absolute prohibition to export national treasures.

The minister is also aware of our criticism of the granting of tax concessions to the owner of an object that is designated as being of historical or cultural value in order to discourage him from exporting the object. I certainly do not object to the idea of granting tax concessions to those who donate such an object to a recognized museum or art gallery but, as I said to the minister in the debate in committee, I am worried that perhaps some speculators in art objects and historical treasures will be able to take advantage of the tax concession provisions in this bill and do something that the minister does not intend to be done in order to protect our historical treasures.

I am sorry that the minister was unable to accept my arguments in committee in an effort to try to close these loopholes. I have always commended the minister on being so co-operative and for his forward-thinking. We had an honest disagreement on this point. I hope I am not proven correct and that it will not be an avenue open to art speculators to take advantage of the situation under the provisions of this act. If that should occur, I know that the minister is a man who is reasonable enough so that when representations are made he will consider very seriously making appropriate amendments to the bill.

With those reservations, I conclude that the bill is in general a very good one. It is long overdue, but it represents an attempt to protect what we Canadians should be proud of from the point of view of our history and our art work. I hope that the bill will prove to be workable and successful in this area, and I commend the minister for finally introducing it and for his co-operation with the committee in ensuring its speedy passage.

[Mr. Macquarrie.]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my party I want to congratulate the minister for introducing the legislation that all Canadians were probably expecting for some time.

Running through the bill I find the committee did an excellent job, and I hope the provisions contained in this bill will be implemented. It is not good enough, Mr. Speaker, to pass legislation, to introduce a bill; above all, it must be implemented.

Today, with the development of Canada, I think it is very important that we have a group of men, of technicians capable of monitoring the movements of our works of art since the purpose of the legislation is to protect our culture, our national heritage, for historical purposes.

History is the summary of our origins and the image of the ways and customs of our ancestors. So we must avoid, Mr. Speaker—and I think it will be the work of the commissioners—turning our works of art, our museum exhibits, into marketing goods. The lure of profit making is always dangerous. I again congratulate the minister when I see on this cultural property export list the proposed control on various items such as provided at subclause (a) on page 3:

> (a) objects of any value that are of archeological, prehistorical, historical, artistic or scientific interest and that have been recovered from the soil of Canada, the territorial sea—

And at sub-clause (b):

> (b) objects that were made by . . . the aboriginal peoples of Canada—

It is quite important for us Canadians to have souvenirs, works from all areas of this country. Just last week I visited an exhibition of Canadian Innuit and Indian natives works. They are marvelous works. Included also in those categories are:

> (i) glassware, ceramics, textiles, woodenware and works in base metals that have a fair market value in Canada of more than five hundred dollars—

Mr. Speaker, excluded from the control list are all objects less than 50 years old. As long as an artist is intensively producing, and as long as his patrons are still living, a government could hardly meddle with his work. After a 50-year period, however, I feel that the government should keep an eye on the movements of his production, and I hope that the committee will be alert and the experts appointed to check the works of art wholly devoted to their task and careful not to become museum pieces themselves, for it is said that 50 years are necessary to become a museum piece. I hope that the senior experts, termed as "technocrats" by some, will not be around after 50 years to become museum pieces. This commission therefore will be working in the interest of Canadians and to safeguard our Canadian heritage throughout Canada.

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, I can assure you I will be brief, but there are a few things I want to say about this piece of legislation. First of all may I say how fortunate I felt to be able to participate in this particular committee. I think it was an excellent committee in terms of co-operation and sincerity, and I compliment all those involved, particularly those who appeared to give expert testimony. I also complement the minister on the flexibility that he and his colleagues showed in accepting amendments, particularly those from our party which his experts helped draft. I believe these amendments will improve the legislation, as will the amendments now proposed by the minister which I support.

At committee stage there was considerable discussion about funding. I realize the quandry in which the minister finds himself when he deals with the prospect of non-lapsing accounts. I know very well the attitude of the Auditor General and the Treasury Board and I can only hope that those who have responsibility for administering this legislation will not be hindered by the fact that there was good reason, I believe, for not affording them the flexibility they might have preferred in a non-lapsing account.

I am happy to see the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Joyal) in the chamber. I believe he contributed a great deal toward the committee study of this legislation and I think his proposed amendments would have added another dimension to the legislation. Those amendments would have affected that part of the bill which afforded local or regional cultural pieces of property the same importance as property that has a national dimension. The legislation now before us demands that the property have national importance. I thought the proposed amendments of the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont would have offered a good deal more flexibility to the legislation. I hope that just because these amendments are not before us they are not completely out of mind. I think that at some stage in the future of this legislation serious consideration should be given by the minister and his department to inclusion of local and regional artifacts.

I appreciate the conflict in which we all find ourselves with respect to the tax advantage and the financial aspects of that part of the legislation. Speaking personally, however, I found that the hon. member's arguments in support of his proposed amendments were compelling. I reiterate that although they are not in the legislation I hope they will not be completely forgotten.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, may I again compliment the minister and say to those who have the responsibility for discharge of this legislation that I wish them well in their deliberations. I am sure they will bring to it the integrity it demands. I wish them well.

Mr. Serge Joyal (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, my first words are addressed to the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) to express to him the satisfaction I had in working with two of his colleagues, the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) and the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot (Mr. Jarvis). The hon. member for Perth-Wilmot introduced two amendments which I, along with some of my colleagues, supported. I am sure they will significantly improve the objective of the bill.

I would also thank Mr. Ian Clark, a special advisor of the Arts and Culture Branch of the Secretary of State, who attended all the proceedings of the committee, and took a significant part in the debate on this bill, in order that it will round out the cultural policy initiated in 1971 by the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner).

I would also remind the House that during those debates, I myself had the opportunity to move two amendments. I humbly inform the House that one of them had to be withdrawn because it did not come within the requirements of the royal recommendation of that bill, and I withdrew the other one myself following the talks I had with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner).

May I remind hon. members of the objectives of that proposed amendment. I think it is important to do so. The hon. member who spoke before me outlined them, and I believe in a very near future this House will have to reconsider its purposes.

I remind hon. members that the suggestion was to withdraw clause 8 of the bill so that any object that must be submitted to the review board would not necessarily be referred to as meeting the degree of national importance.

As a matter of fact, when the Secretary of State made a statement in 1972 concerning his national museum policy, he put a special emphasis on the promotion and development of private museums. But the development of most private museums throughout our history was made possible through the gifts and generosity of patrons of arts who very frequently were at the origin of their collections. Even the National Gallery of Canada was significantly helped by gifts from the private sector since 1968. According to the report I got from the National Gallery of Canada, during the financial year 1968-69, the gallery was offered art works amounting to a total of $403,550; in 1969-70, the gifts amounted to $30,000; in 1970-71, to $930,000; in 1971-72, to $96,000; in 1972-73, to $45,000, and in 1973-74, to $600,000.

The explanation for the unusually high totals for 1968-69, 1970-71 and 1973-74 lies in three unusually generous gifts involving many works—in 1968-69 the bequest of the Right Hon. Vincent Massey; in 1970-71 gifts from the Douglas M. Duncan collection; and in 1973-74 gifts from the Samuel Bronfman collection.

Mr. Speaker, I believe people are aware of the considerable amounts of money that have been handed over to the National Gallery of Canada and especially the spirit in which these grants have been made.

There is no doubt that the bill, as now written and introduced to the House, will allow and encourage private philanthropists to continue their largess with public institutions.

The bill I introduced, Mr. Speaker, was specifically intended to increase tax exemptions in the case of gifts to private museums.

Indeed, it often happens that works given or sold to private institutions do not meet the national criteria the bill will adopt.

Still, most of those works are of fundamental importance to the completion of those collections, especially to encourage the study of arts and sciences.

Mr. Speaker, after the act has been in effect for one year, it might be well, in the report to be made to the House on the application, to consider whether or not its benefits should not be extended to those institutions.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that the co-operation and mutual aid which hon. members opposite have shown, especially the special welcome given to that measure, surely represent a further step in the development by our government of a stronger national and cultural policy for the benefit of private institutions.

Indeed, I do not have to remind you, Mr. Speaker, that in totalitarian countries where cultural affairs become a service under the exclusive jurisdiction of the government, quite often the cultural activities and the cultural life of those countries have been so much impoverished that their contribution at the international level has significantly been reduced.

In countries of liberal tradition, we have rather realized that the role of government should be to give greater support to private initiative and institutions active in that area.

I believe the cultural policy put forward by the Secretary of State since 1970 tends precisely to encourage and enable private institutions to have as much influence as possible.

The proposed amendment moved was in keeping with this general view. I have no doubt that next year when we shall be in a position to appreciate the results, I shall be able to obtain the support of opposition members for the adoption of the bill by the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Faulkner) agreed to.

Mr. Faulkner moved:

That Bill C-33, an Act respecting the export from Canada of cultural property and the import into Canada of cultural property illegally exported from foreign states, as reported (with an amendment) from the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Film and Assistance to the Arts, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

ENVIRONMENTAL CONTAMINANTS ACT

MEASURES TO PROTECT HUMAN HEALTH AND ENVIRONMENT FROM CONTAMINANTS

The House resumed from Monday, December 16, 1974, consideration of the motion of Mr. Sharp (for the Minister of the Environment) that Bill C-25, to protect human health and the environment, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Fairweather (p. 2251).

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, when debate on this bill concluded on December 16, 1974, the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) was in the middle of an eloquent and effective speech. Today he is in British Columbia serving the needs of his constituents and cannot be here to carry on the debate. He looks forward to contributing actively in committee and on third reading, or on second reading if we do not read the bill the second time today.

As I have been fighting that natural environmental contaminant, the flu, for most of this week, my comments will be more moderate than usual.

An hon. Member: Save your voice and make a short speech.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): The minister generously suggests I should conserve my voice and speak briefly. As she and the House should know, I only address myself to urgent and important matters.

We welcome this opportunity to debate the bill once more and hope it will be referred to committee. As spokesmen of my party have said previously, we welcome and approve the aims of the bill, which has become known as the environmental contaminants bill. I certainly agree with the intention of the bill, which is to prevent harmful contamination, and to prevent problems connected with contamination from arising.

Because we are committed to supporting its aims we deeply regret that the bill as drafted will hinder the attainment of its aims in far too many cases. The key to the legislation, as other speakers on my side made clear earlier, is contained in clause 4(1) of the bill, which reads in part:

> Where the minister and the Minister of National Health and Welfare have reason to believe that a substance is entering or will enter the environment in a quantity or concentration or under conditions that they have reason to believe constitute or will constitute a significant danger to human health or the environment . . .

In other words, the operation of this legislation is contingent upon the minister or ministers having reason to believe, having reason to be suspicious, that something is happening which should cause them to activate the mechanism provided in this piece of legislation. The bill when enacted is to come into force only on the arousing of a suspicion. Only that will bring its provisions into force. Without that the Department of the Environment and the Department of National Health and Welfare will do nothing. In the absence of suspicion or "reason to believe", their role is to be completely passive.

The question we have the right to ask and which I hope the minister will answer later if she speaks this afternoon or in committee is, how is this suspicion to arise? How can we and the people of Canada be sure that the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Sauvé) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) will have adequate cause to know that a danger is arising which will require the provisions of this legislation to be put into force. Are they to rely on divine inspiration or on some sort of extrasensory perception? Are they to rely on little birds flitting around or alighting on their shoulders—

An hon. Member: If they don't die.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): —if they don't die, to be sure—and whispering in the ear, "Madam Minister," or "Mr. Minister, there is something here which you should look at, something which looks suspicious, to correct which you will need to invoke the provisions of the act"? In the absence of ESP and little birds fluttering around and settling on ministers' shoulders, how will the ministers know about dangers arising in this country which require the bringing into force of the act? There is no other way that this bill, the nature of which we applaud, can come into effect.

An hon. Member: Unless we have a disaster.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): That is the other point, the one we have to avoid—unless we have a disaster. The very real danger with this bill, which poses as reform, is that we will only be able to make use of it when it is too late. In other words this bill would only be used as a curative and not as a preventive measure. That not only offends the requirements of Canada to have legislation that is preventive, but it also offends and rebuts the very basis upon which this bill is introduced in the House.

We have been told that the bill is a preventive measure. However, there is no way by which we can be assured that the prevention will in fact occur, or that it will be anything other than a band-aid cure after a disaster has occurred. It may be that with good luck on some occasions either the Minister of the Environment or the Minister of National Health and Welfare will have enough information in advance to cause the mechanism in this bill to move into action. That may happen from time to time, but surely we cannot accept as satisfactory a bill that may only work occasionally. The people of Canada require a much more reliable guarantee, but we do not get that in this bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Other hon. members have pointed out that in this age of invention and modification between 50 and 100 new substances are introduced into the environment each year. How is the minister going to be alerted to the dangers that each of those pose with simply the mechanism in this bill? Is she going to wait for little birds to flutter down or, and this is more dangerous, wait for some disaster to occur to which she has to respond?

The bill has other weaknesses, and I intend to refer to them. The greatest weakness is that the bill, as it stands, may never be used because there is no trigger mechanism. There is no guaranteed way by which a minister of the Crown can become seized of knowledge which will cause the bill to be brought into effect. If the bill, on its face and in its provisions, holds the weakness that it may never be used, it is a pretty bad bill and requires substantial amendment by this House.

The bill is not preventive. I make that emphasis because there have been suggestions by the minister, her parliamentary secretary, and others who have spoken both inside and outside this House that the bill marks a major change, a change from simply a curative approach dealing with disasters or problems after they have arisen toward a preventive approach, trying to foresee these problems and stop them before they occur.

As I pointed out, the fundamental fault with the bill is that there is no reliable early warning to the minister. That means the bill is not preventive. To call it that is to make a sham of the suggestion. By definition this bill begins to work only after the danger exists.

Many of us in this House are acquainted with the use of the word preventive. We have heard it in terms of preventive welfare and preventive police work. The idea of preventive welfare is to stop welfare cases occurring before they do. Preventive police work is to stop crime before it starts.

The bill is based on what I call a complaints desk theory. If the minister were running a police department she would only have a complaints desk. She would not have any requirement that information come to her to show that there was a problem in the works which requires prevention. She would await a complaint. That is not adequate at a time like this, with a bill like this, and on a subject like the Canadian environment. Whatever else the bill might be, it is not preventive legislation.

The hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) suggested a very sensible solution to this fundamental deficiency in the bill before us. The solution would require manufacturers to file information on a regular basis regarding new products or projects being undertaken which may cause the kind of danger that we foresee and for which this bill has been designed. If the suggestion of the hon. member for Vancouver South were accepted, the government would have some cause for suspicion and some evidence which could trigger the mechanism which we are establishing in this legislation.

As the hon. member for Vancouver South and others have pointed out, there is a precedent for this requirement of regular filing. A precedent has been set in the Pest Control Products Act which this House, and the committee studying this bill, should look at very closely so that the bill can live up to its advertising and be in fact preventive and not simply a curative device.

The proposal put forward by the hon. member for Vancouver South would place some hardships on the manufacturers, but I do not think they would be substantial. When dealing with as important a matter as the environment, we in this House should not be deterred from doing what has to be done simply because that necessary action might cause some hardships for some manufacturers. If we allowed that kind of limitation to stop us from performing, we would not be doing anything at all in the environmental field. With this bill I very much fear that we are on the edge of doing nothing, unless we accept a suggestion such as that put forward by the hon. member for Vancouver South.

Let me deal for a moment more with the hardships that might be imposed upon certain manufacturers. In her comments in this debate the minister testified that some manufacturers were already making submissions to her department and keeping her apprised of what they were doing. In other words, they are providing her with information that might trigger the mechanism being established in this bill. However, the fact that some are doing it is no guarantee that all will. The likelihood is that those who are not voluntarily providing this information are the very ones who should be providing it.

The minister's testimony indicates that while there might be a hardship involved for some manufacturers, it is not so substantial that it cannot be overcome. In fact it is being overcome. However, there is no guarantee that it is going to be overcome by those manufacturers against whom the bill should be directed. They should be affected by its provisions if we are serious about protecting the environment from hazards which may be caused by new products or new projects. We very much need that kind of guarantee, but we do not have it.

The major fault in this bill is that there is no means to trigger the mechanism which we are establishing. We must rely on blind luck, a little bird to perch on the minister's shoulder, or some other unlikely intervention to trigger the mechanism. There are other faults. As others have mentioned there is no operative clause in the bill to establish the schedule which the bill refers to throughout its base. I hope the minister, when she speaks later, will indicate her intention to amend the bill in such a way as to introduce an operative clause which will enable the establishment of the schedule, something which is necessary to the whole effectiveness of the machinery we are discussing.

There is another fault, if I may point to it. Again I am referring to Clause 4. Clause 4 is permissive, not mandatory. Thus, whenever the minister is visited by this little bird, this ubiquitous bird, she "may"—though she is not obliged to—take certain steps. I should like to know why the operative word in this clause is not mandatory. What circumstances would prevent the minister from taking action? Why is parliament not told of the circumstances which would prevent the minister from acting? There is no reason for bringing in this legislation if the minister, having been given the power, does not show any inclination to use it. I do not suspect the motives of the present Minister of the Environment; I believe that given the necessary power she would exercise it. But why should the word "may" appear in this context rather than the word "shall"? If the powers we are considering are not to be used, we are wasting time discussing them here, and later, in committee.

There are two other serious restraints in the consultation clause of the bill before us, that is, clause 5. Here, it is worth pointing out, mandatory language is used. When we talk about reference by the minister to the provinces and to other departments we find the word "shall" being used. But we use only the junior word "may" when it comes to ministerial action. The hon. lady may take action or not, but having decided to take action it is mandatory that she should consult with the provinces, and so on. Why should we use permissive language when it comes to putting the law into force, and later mandatory language with regard to processes which may very well limit the effectiveness of action once it has been decided upon?

[Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain).]

The two parties set out in the bill with which the minister is required to consult are first the provinces, and second "any departments or agencies of the government of Canada as may be appropriate". There are obviously difficult questions of jurisdiction involved here vis-à-vis the provinces. In this context it is worth noting that, whenever a difficult question of jurisdiction arises regarding the control of natural resources, the federal government shows no hesitation about moving in; but when a difficult question of jurisdiction arises regarding the environment, hon. gentlemen opposite get bogged down with lawyers and excessive caution. Consultation with the provinces may be necessary in this case, but the language of the bill points to an interesting inconsistency in the approach taken by the federal government.

I should like to quote briefly at this point from a commentary on the bill prepared by the Canadian Environmental Law Association. I ask the indulgence of the House to read into the record two paragraphs from that report:

> Lawyers within the federal Department of Justice seem to have an unreasonable sense of trepidation in allowing that the federal government can make any environmental regulations. The consultative process required with the provinces before any substances are designated to make this act effective is reminiscent of the consultative constraints contained in the Canada Water Act. It is perhaps relevant to note that the Canada Water Act, although enacted in 1970, has been used only once to make any particular contaminant illegal.
> The Justice Department's constitutional "experts" appear again to have written legislation which looks powerful on paper but will be difficult, if not impossible, to put into effective practice (assuming the government really wants to put it into practice, which is another question).

That is the view of the Canadian Environmental Law Association. That is how it regards the approach taken by the federal government toward the admittedly difficult question of federal-provincial jurisdiction.

The other requirement to consult has to do, not with other governments, which have clear rights in law, but instead with departments or agencies of the Government of Canada.

It is easy to understand why there should be consultation with the provinces; it is much less easy to understand why consultation with other departments of government should be considered so important that the unusual step is taken of writing it into the statute. It is fair to say—and I say this as a layman, not as a lawyer, that it is probably justifiable to read the word consultation in this context as synonymous with the word veto. The fear I have—and it is shared by others who have watched the Department of the Environment act in other fields—is that the experience of the past may be repeated in connection with this requirement to consult with other agencies and departments.

We may have to conclude that this mandatory requirement to consult with other agencies and departments is in fact a provision which would allow those other agencies and departments to exercise a veto against actions which the Department of the Environment might be taking in the interests of the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): This mandatory requirement to consult with other departments or agencies in order that they may be in a position in practice to exercise a veto is very alarming to those of us who are interested in environmental questions. Of equal note is the fact that this is a particularly humiliating provision for the Department of the Environment to have to write into its own law. It confirms the fear which many of us have, both in this House and throughout the country, that the Department of the Environment is a second status department within the Government of Canada. This confirms our opinion that this is a department whose views are overridden, and that this is a department which wants to make a presentation before the Berger Inquiry but is persuaded by ministers of stronger departments to back off.

The reason we have this concern is that we have met, on so many other occasions, instances in which the Department of the Environment, instead of undertaking its own assessments of what the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is doing, or what the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is doing, or what the Department of Transport is doing, requires these departments to make their assessments first and then it takes a second look at their work. It does not have the kind of initiating power that a Department of the Environment should have if it is going to be effective in preserving the environment of this country. For that we need a Department of the Environment with teeth.

The reasons we particularly regret this mandatory requirement to consult, which I think it would be sensible to read as creating the capacity for veto in other departments, is that it is so sadly consistent with the relatively second status role that the Department of the Environment has played far too often under this government. Let me make it clear that in saying this I mean no personal criticism of the minister—I think she does as well as she can—but that her colleagues are stacked against her. I think that is a situation which is very sad for those of us who are concerned about the maintenance of the Canadian environment.

If we were to write into the law a requirement regarding consultation on projects which involve the Department of the Environment it would be far preferable to have a provision which required other departments to consult with the Department of the Environment, so that the veto power, if there were to be one, would reside with the Department of the Environment. We have the reverse, and that is a matter which I and others here very much lament.

One suggestion I think might be considered by the minister, and I hope will be, and certainly we propose to pursue it in committee, is that if this humuliating clause, which requires the Department of the Environment to go to other departments before it does anything, stands, there at least should be a time limit written in so the provinces, in their cases, or other departments, in theirs, will have only a fixed and limited period of time in which they can make their objections known to the Department of the Environment. To some degree that would lessen the humiliation of this provision in the bill which is, as I say, humiliating to the department.

Let me turn briefly to the question of the adequacy of the testing of contaminants that are forecast in this particular bill. In the first instance, as this legislation is written, any tests would be undertaken by the manufacturer, and that of course assumes the small bird flies out of the air, or some divine inspiration strikes the minister to let her know there may be a danger. Even if the danger is detected, and that is a big if, and the fact that it has to be raised indicates a very vital flaw in this bill, then the first test is undertaken by the manufacturer, or the people who are in a sense creating the problem.

In most cases, I think we, as reasonable members of the House of Commons, would agree that the test undertaken by the manufacturer would be an adequate test, but I think it would be naive for us to say that, just because the test would be adequate in most cases, it could be relied upon to be adequate in all cases. I would be interested in hearing from the minister just how she intends to ensure the adequacy of testing, to see that the tests are not rigged by the manufacturer, under the legislation that she places before us.

I would be interested also in knowing how, under this provision, there is to be any assurance of uniformity of tests among competing companies, and that the same rigour is pursued by one company involved in introducing a particular new product as is pursued by another company. It is important to ask whether the fact that the Department of the Environment in moving the burden of testing to the producer will work in practice as a prejudice against smaller companies which might not have the capacity to test that some of the giant corporations and manufacturers possess.

If that is the case is there going to be a provision written into this legislation, or will some solid assurance be given the committee in this regard, that will allow the Department of the Environment to undertake these studies in an initiating stage rather than having to wait for a report from the manufacturer whose products are under consideration?

After receiving the report from the company which the minister has reason to believe might be introducing a dangerous contaminant, then the matter, according to this legislation, goes to the Environmental Board of Review which has substantial powers, in fact powers under the Inquiries Act. But the question still remains regarding the Environmental Review Board as to what capacity it has to test. It can adduce evidence, as I read the legislation, but as I read it there is nothing here to suggest that the board has the capacity to undertake tests.

My suspicion that the legislation is thus weakened is added to by what we know of the budget that has been granted to this agency so far. For the year beginning April 1, 1975, only $100,000 is set forth in the estimates to establish the Environmental Board of Review. We understand that is to be a board with three officers, and probably a staff. It could well be that the $100,000 in the first year of operation will be consumed in its entirety by staff expenditures and by advertising.

I mention advertising because all of us are a little apprehensive about the practices of the government in advertising virtues it does not possess. The most recent matter in the minds of most of us is the full-page ad that has appeared in newspapers all across Canada—I refer to it as the three stooges ad—which invites people to rush out and buy an information booklet that has not been published, and will not be published for another two months. I think examples like that, and the advertising program of the former minister of state responsible for multiculturalism, give us cause to be concerned that expenditures of this kind will be diverted foolishly to advertising programs instead of being used to achieve the important purposes with which this legislation deals.

I understand that in the following year the program forecast of the department is for an expenditure by this board of between $600,000 and $700,000 a year. Perhaps that will be adequate to allow some kind of testing, although it may very well not be sufficient. I, for one, would be interested in knowing from the minister whether it is intended that this board of review is to have the capacity to test, or whether it will simply have to rely on the evidence submitted before it by various groups, including the manufacturers whose products are under question.

One other matter of some concern relating to the board is that, as I read the legislation, and it is always possible that my reading is at fault, it is not at all clear what is going to happen to the product involved while the board is sitting in judgment. Is that product prevented from being distributed during the time in which the board sits? Is it prevented from being developed during this time? Or are we in a situation where we have a board, which under the power of the Inquiries Act is required to hear all manner of witnesses, which could be sitting literally interminably during which time, unless there is a prohibition of the distribution and development of such products, manufacturers could be getting themselves and the country locked into a situation where products with dangerous contaminant capacity are being created to a point beyond which we cannot withdraw?

I think the point is clear that if we have a board which can sit interminably hearing evidence, and which does not have the power to stop the development or distribution of the products under consideration, such products could proceed without halt and the board would be in the position of buying time for the manufacturers rather than doing what it is supposed to do, which is to protect the environment and the Canadian people. If this is the case, it is a serious deficiency in this piece of legislation, and one which we would want to have cleared up, Mr. Speaker.

In all these cases where I have suggested there might be abuse by a manufacturer I am speaking not of the normal case but of the worst case. None of us here suspect that there are manufacturers who are sitting around wanting to pollute the environment or the atmosphere. However, there might be some and, if there are some, surely as the Parliament and the Government of Canada we have a responsibility to ensure that such people are limited and stopped by this legislation rather than helped by it. The fear I have enunciated is that we might unconsciously create a provision which would help the people we are trying to limit.

There was one reference by the minister in her speech on November 29, 1974, which alarmed me a little. I shall not deal with this at length. As recorded at page 1815 of

[Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain).]

Hansard for that date the minister said that this new instrument would facilitate the evaluation of those products "and lighten the responsibility of making appropriate recommendations to manufacturers, users, distributors and, if need be, on the methods that could be used to destroy certain chemical substances considered as harmful to the environment."

I hope the minister will elaborate on the specific ways in which this legislation will lighten the present responsibilities of the Department of the Environment, because certainly we on this side of the House do not believe this is a bill which will lighten those responsibilities but rather is one that would increase those responsibilities. If in fact this bill is some disguise for a way to take away from the Department of the Environment power which it is necessary should be exercised, and shunting that off to industry or some other agency of government, we want to know about that. Unless very strong evidence can be adduced before the House this is something we would very strongly oppose.

Finally I wish to deal with the provision for fines under the so-called environmental contaminants legislation. We are dealing here with an attempt to prevent pollution and disruption of the Canadian environment which could have consequences of incalculable cost, not simply in dollar terms but in terms of the health and the well being of our citizens, of future generations, and of other countries.

This is a very serious matter. Offences against the bill would be very serious offences. On summary conviction the fine as set out in the bill would not exceed $10,000. Then there is a provision for imprisonment for six months, or for both the fine and imprisonment. A fine of $10,000 certainly will not scare the trousers off any multinational corporation that is contemplating an act which would cause environmental damage. This is obviously a ludicrously insufficient fine. What is worse is that the $10,000 is a maximum, and there is no minimum stated. The minimum could be a nickel, or simply feed for the little bird that flits around telling the minister when this legislation should be introduced. The system of fines is inadequate and must be reviewed.

I say, and other speakers on this side have made it clear, that we very much share the goal that is evident in this legislation. We believe it is highly important that we turn away from simply reacting to disasters which occur and get into the serious job of bringing in preventive measures to stop those disasters before they occur. Our worry about this bill is precisely that there is nothing here to ensure that we make that turn.

The bill purports to be preventive legislation, but in fact is the same negative type of legislation rather than preventive legislation because of the weaknesses that have been mentioned. So, Mr. Speaker, I support the recommendation of my colleague, the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather), that the subject matter of the bill be referred directly to the standing committee rather than that the bill be given second reading now. I certainly hope this very sensible amendment will commend itself to the House.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Madam Speaker, I was praising hon. members of the House this afternoon for the quick expedition of our business. Three bills have already been considered this afternoon, but I feel we are really stuck now on the bill to control pollution. I think this bill will be difficult to adopt, although I wish it could have been adopted this afternoon. The purpose of this bill is to protect human health and the environment from the release of substances that contaminate the environment and provide for the appointment of an Environmental Contaminants Board of Review consisting of not less than three persons. We have always felt and still feel that this issue is of paramount importance. As evidence of this, the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin) asked the following question on March 20, quote:

In view of the fact that the legislation pertaining to industrial and commercial buildings does not apply to mining, and that those companies are not subject to the environmental protection legislation, can the minister tell us whether he will assume his responsibilities immediately by instructing his department's task force which is considering the matter to look immediately into the Thetford Mines problem . . .

This was about another case of environmental pollution. I wish to congratulate the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp), because for once he has apparently kept the promise he made in reply to the following question by Mr. Fortin;

The Minister of Environment has stated earlier that she was waiting for the House to pass Bill C-25 relating to substances that contaminate the environment. Our party agrees that it be given priority. However, it is the government, not the opposition, which decides the order of business. To elucidate this, would the President of the Privy Council agree to suggest an understanding so that Bill C-25 be given priority as early as tomorrow . . .

The reply of the President of the Privy Council reads in part as follows:

I thank the hon. member for his suggestion. I believe it is the general desire that this bill be disposed of, and I hope it can at least be put through second reading before we break for Easter.

I do not know whether the President of the Privy Council had consulted the Progressive Conservatives when he told us everyone agreed. This afternoon, I think we are late and will muff it as far as referring the bill to the standing committee is concerned. However, I still want to congratulate the Minister of Environment and tell her how happy I am that a lady is in charge of keeping the country clean. I am sure we will have a cleaner country, a healthier environment.

I want to say a word about the environmental contaminants board of review whose establishment this bill authorizes. It will consist of three persons. I trust it will make reports. It will probably serve mainly to put out information, or to help the minister with the complaints she will receive about certain forms of pollution. Our country is not a pretty sight because of pollution. The water, the sea, the air, the highways, the parks, the cities and the countryside are all polluted. Today, one cannot go out without running into the hideousness of pollution.

This is why we wanted this bill to have priority, because it is an urgent need, something demanded by the entire population. For years, we have been wondering what the provincial government intends to do in Quebec, what the federal government plans to do in another province and elsewhere in Canada. The air space and navigable waters are under federal jurisdiction while rivers and small streams are under provincial jurisdiction. It is always the same quarrel, Madam Speaker.

I have made many reports to the federal and provincial governments but without avail. This is why I hope that the board will be effective, that watchful inspectors and analyst will be appointed to act as active members of the board so that we will not merely witness the establishment of a board this afternoon. We are sick and tired of abuses, Madam Speaker. We want action, a committee that works, a minister well informed, who orders investigations into the nature, the quantity and the quality of these pollutants. In my riding, things have reached a point where all water bodies are polluted and the aquatic fauna is declining every day, to such an extent that in some rivers one cannot catch a single fish. Why? This is caused sometimes by a saw mill built on the shore that dumps its sawdust into the river, sometimes it is a paper mill that throws its paper residues into the river, all of which kills fish and pollutes rivers.

I am not sure if there will be an agreement with the provinces, because the bill says there will be consultations. We know that consultations with provinces are necessary. However, if the provinces will not budge the federal government will have to do something about it, push the provinces and force them to clean up. It is fine to say that it will be done. But nothing has been done, everything is destroyed and we live in unparalleled pollution.

Madam Speaker, I hope that the minister will be able to obtain the required publicity for the work that she will have to do. The government makes a lot of needless publicity, often for a lot of nonsense. However, this should receive publicity. We should expose those responsible for polluting the water, the soil and the atmosphere and give them bad publicity if they are industrialists. In my opinion, the best way to control an industrialist and make him come to this senses is to give him bad publicity.

A while ago, fines were mentioned and I heard some say that they were not high enough. In my opinion, the best kind of fine would be to publicly expose those responsible for pollution and, once again, to force the industries to spend money to protect the environment, and then, the order could be issued.

Of course, when the population gets no information about the activities of a department, no order is issued. I am certain that the minister then works in a vacuum and that all the commission members will also work in a vacuum because pollution is not the business of two, three or ten people or a minister, but of the whole population. The department must shake the population so that those responsible may be exposed. If a neighbour witnesses pollution by an industrialist or an individual, he should send a petition to the department. If the department does not act, members of Parliament will then have to expose the department for its inaction.

I have nothing more to add, because I would like the minister to speak for a few minutes so that the bill may be passed in committee since we all wait anxiously for the implementation of this measure.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

[English]

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Will the government House leader be kind enough to confirm for us the government's business on Monday?

Mr. Sharp: Madam Speaker, the House has made very good progress today. We have moved on some bills, but I had hoped that we might have been able to move on Bill C-25. There are only a couple of speeches to be made and I am hoping it might be possible to dispose of this bill before the Easter recess. So I have kept it in my priority items. However, on Monday I have the intention of calling the motion to concur in the report of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization.

● (1600)

Then I would hope to call third reading of the housing act which has now been reported from committee. There is some hope that if we acted on that quickly it might be approved by the Senate and receive royal assent before Easter. We also have a series of amendments from the Senate to the corporations bill, and finally we have Bill C-8, which we would like to proceed with also.

I am sorry that I cannot at this stage go any further as to the order of these items except to say that we will begin with the report of the Committee on Procedure and Organization. The others will, I hope, be considered during the day.

Mr. Prud'homme: Madam Speaker, could we have consent to dispose of this bill on second reading today? It seems that the House is in agreement. If there are only one or two more speeches—

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Four o'clock, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): There being no agreement, and it being four o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions, public bills, private bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

DEPARTMENT OF SPORTS

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW MINISTRY

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should give serious consideration to the establishment of a department of sports.

He said: Madam Speaker, the motion proposed is short and uncomplicated, that in the opinion of this House the government should give serious consideration to the establishment of a department of sports. Why propose such a motion? Obviously I am not satisfied with the manner in which the government discharges its responsibilities to amateur sport. This stems from the fact that the fitness and amateur sport program is lost in the Ministry of National Health and Welfare.

The 1975-1976 estimates for the fitness and amateur sport program total $21,785,000, less than $1 per annum per person. Even that figure is misleading. The minister said in a speech in January of this year that this year his department has spent over $10 million on amateur sport. That is over 40 cents per person. Or am I perhaps being a little bit too cynical? As a percentage of the departmental budget it becomes even more insignificant. It is about one third of 1 per cent, and that is almost the level of importance attached by the department to amateur sport.

Put another way, the total sport budget is approximately 3 per cent of the amount by which the total departmental budget has increased over last year. In other words, the departmental budget increased by $648 million, or $30 for every man, woman and child in this country, while the budget for fitness and amateur sport increased by 21 cents per person for a full year.

That is to be the level of federal participation in amateur sport for the year 1975-76, less than $1 per person for a full year. The budget of just one of the provinces doubles that figure.

Let us look for a moment at the objective of the department. It reads:

To raise the fitness level of Canadians and to improve their participation in physical recreation and amateur sport.

And as sub-objectives:

To increase the appreciation for an understanding of fitness, physical recreation and amateur sport.

To improve the Canadian delivery systems of fitness, physical recreation and amateur sport.

To improve the quality of participation of Canadians in physical recreation and amateur sport.

I would like to put on record the fitness and amateur sport program description, which reads:

Promotion and Communications—Strategies and activities to promote a better understanding and active interest in fitness, physical recreation and amateur sport.

Resources Development—Provision of support for human and physical resources necessary to develop and improve fitness, physical recreation and amateur sport.

Training—Support of events for participants and athletes which foster the improvement of abilities and performance in fitness, physical recreation and amateur sport.

Competition—Assistance to enable individuals or groups of individuals to engage in events for the purpose of measuring their performance against others or according to established standards.

Program Planning and Management—Planning of the Fitness and Amateur Sport Program, management of the activities through Recreation Canada and Sport Canada, and the provision of administrative services in the operation of the program.

This is excellent indeed. What wonderful and inspiring objectives and what excellent programs—and all that for $1 per person, of which 20 cents goes to administrative expenses. It costs $4.5 million to distribute the grants, contributions, and other transfer payments.

Is it any wonder that we have difficulty winning Olympic medals? Of the contributions to encourage, promote and develop fitness, amateur sport and physical recreation for Canadians, a total of $1.8 million is allocated for training. For all my constituents in Vaudreuil that works out to less than $10,000 for the year 1975-76. This is in a constituency where tomorrow just one of the 40 municipalities, the town of Beaconsfield with a population of 21,000, is opening a $1.5 million recreation and sports complex. The town of Vaudreuil, with a population of approximately 4,000, has just built and opened an arena at a cost of $200 per person. These are only two examples of what is being done at the local level, and they illustrate the importance attached to amateur sport at that level.

I can already hear the departmental officials howling that I should not mix federal and provincial responsibilities. My answer to that is that if the federal government cannot show leadership and do a better job, then it should get out of the field entirely and not make a halfhearted token effort.

Our top sportsmen and women should be trained to represent their country in international competition, and the promotion, organization and control should be a federal responsibility with a suitable federal budget to assure success.

The provinces fulfil their responsibilities as can be illustrated by a quotation from the Montreal newspaper La Presse dated December 4, 1968, some seven years ago. It reads:

[Translation]

For the first Quebec Sport Convention to be held in Montreal from December 5 to 8, the High Commissioner for Youth, Leisure and Sports prepared a working paper that will be made available to all participants.

By its importance, the basic principles it defines and the concrete policy it proposes, that paper constitutes somehow the first Quebec Sport Charter.

For many years, international sport organisations and governments in several countries have been seeking to give sport an orientation likely to meet both the many and various aspirations expressed by those who in close or remote connection keep contact with, participate actively in or organize in their environment, social and sport activities.

Quebec also raised many areas of concern in that respect. In the last few years, bodies identified with community leisure organization, promotion of competition sport activities and overall youth education expressed in their most immediate area worthy opinions about the nature and the meaning of continued government intervention in the area of sport.

And further on it continues:

GOVERNMENT

Sport constitutes a general social fact capable of cultural influence of some importance, capable also of playing at both the individual and community levels a recreational role, an educational role, a military role and a role of adaptation to and preparation for active life.

[English]

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) recently attended the official opening of the 1975 Canada Winter Games in Lethbridge, Alberta, where 3,000 young Canadians participated in everything from skiing to table tennis, and from volley ball to judo. Teams from the ten provinces and the two territories marched into the Sportsplex behind their flags. For many of the athletes, particularly those from the two territories, it was the first time for a first-hand look at another part of Canada.

For the people of southern Alberta it was a mammoth effort of more than two years on the part of thousands of volunteers, involving people from the surrounding communities which were the sites of the events.

It will be the same story when the games move to St. John's, Newfoundland, for the summer edition in 1977, and that province's representatives were in Lethbridge picking up all the tips they could. Manitobans were also watching carefully because the next edition of the winter series, in 1979, will be held in their province.

The provinces are certainly doing their part. It would be unjust not to add that the federal government is contributing financially to these activities. However, the question remains, is the assistance just tokenism? Is it really fulfilling the objective of the department, or is it just a small encouragement to the private sector and the provincial and municipal governments to keep up the good work?

I am going to refer for a moment or two to one part of the effort of the department's sport program. On February 1, 1974, the Department of National Health and Welfare issued a news release which stated:

Health and Welfare Minister Marc Lalonde today announced that applications for 1974 grants-in-aid to Canadian student athletes are now being accepted by his department's fitness and amateur sport branch.

The grant-in-aid program, established in 1970, assists Canadian student athletes who wish to pursue their educational programs while continuing to make satisfactory progress in their competitive sports programs.

Excellent! But the same news release says:

The deadline for submission of grants-in-aid applications is February 15, 1974.

I wrote to the minister to ask:

Why did News Release 1974-8 of February 1, 1974, indicate a deadline for submission of February 15, 1974? Is it because the funds are very limited and possibly were already committed?

The minister's reply said in part:

This date is necessary in order that a reasonably complex selection process can be completed preferably by late April. In this way the student athletes will know whether or not they are receiving a grant and can plan their summer programs accordingly.

I suggest simply that any student who was not at the starting gate on February 1 is probably still unaware of the program. Note the six weeks for the departmental officials for their "complex selection process", but only two weeks for the poor student from the date of the news release, for the dissemination of information, consideration, looking for the source of application forms—which is not always an easy task—completing and submitting an application.

In answer to a question on the order paper the minister indicated that the projected expenditure for this program is $1 million per year. That is probably why it is not made easily accessible. In that same answer the minister indicated that total grants for training programs in 1972-73 were $527,000. However, grants for administration for the same year to agencies, organizations, and institutions totalled $1,156,000—more than twice as much as for training. I do not question the necessity to keep alive the national associations, but I do question the priority in the allocation of the very limited funds that are made available.

Incidentally, Madam Speaker, the same answer indicates that 99 organizations are competing for funds, and they include golf, curling, cricket, yachting and some of the more exotic sports, but the word baseball does not appear.

Departmental publicity in regard to its magnanimous grants is not lacking. During the past year news releases have been issued at a rate of more than one a month. Yet another branch of this same department concerned with welfare issues news releases on grants only once every six months. Are we perhaps being given a publicity snow job?

I will conclude my remarks by quoting from a speech made recently by the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) to the Sports Federation of Canada.

Mr. Paproski: Was it a $1,000 speech or a $600 one?

Mr. Herbert: In the course of that speech the minister referred to the:

> . . . great deal of excitement and anticipation among those who work daily for Canada's amateur athletes.
> Much of this excitement is being generated by Game Plan . . .
> One of Game Plan's main objectives is to increase significantly the number of internationally qualified athletes who will be representing Canada.

A lead article in today's Montreal Gazette says in part:

> Some serious questions arise from the approach undertaken in the "Let's Get Together" advertising compaign to raise money for the Canadian Olympic Association (COA) . . .
> Many athletes will continue to live in near penury despite the promise held out in the advertising campaign that they will be assisted by contributions . . .
> The corporations which have allied themselves with COA could make considerable contribution to Canadian athletic well-being through more direct association with the athletes . . .
> It would have been far better to have had the $750,000 outlay on advertising used to assist directly athletes who are not in schools, colleges, or universities and cannot find employers who will permit them the generous time off work required for training, competition, and travel . . .
> It is obvious that there has to be broader support for Canadian athletes than that envisaged by Game Plan. What is needed is a plan which will indeed "help" the athletes.

An article in last October's issue of Legion magazine said:

> The '76 Olympics has given a special urgency to the federal role in sport.

[Mr. Herbert.]

The first step that this government can take to help the athlete is to create a department of sports.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Madam Speaker, at the outset let me compliment the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) for bringing forward a motion which deals with sports in general and more specifically with the creation of a department of sports. I think he must have read the Progressive Conservative party's policy paper put together about a year and a half ago.

It is ironic that the hon. member for Vaudreuil should come up with this motion because one of his colleagues who sits behind him, and who does not seem to be in very good shape, the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. MacFarlane), seems to be the self-proclaimed—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The hon. member for Hamilton Mountain on a point of order.

Mr. MacFarlane: Madam Speaker, I have never once mentioned in this House that the hon. member over there always skated on thin ice. He should not make remarks about my physical appearance as he has enough weaknesses of the mind to deal with in his own case.

● (1620)

Mr. Jelinek: Madam Speaker, we must let backbenchers on the government side have their say, since they are not permitted to say much during regular proceedings. As I was saying, the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain is the self-proclaimed minister of sports on the government side. Recently he produced a sport policy paper which is almost identical to the paper the Conservative party produced one year or so ago. Even the paragraph headings in his paper are similar to the paragraph headings in our proposal.

Let me read some of the hon. member's paragraph headings: Increasing interest and concern; Expanding participation; Growing demand for sports education and facilities; A national new facilities program; Broader use of existing facilities; Expanded teaching and training; Capability for anticipating problems. Those are all subject headings, and are similar to paragraph titles in our policy.

The hon. member for Vaudreuil seemed to be most interested in looking after elite, already established athletes. There is nothing wrong with that. We welcome the support of the Department of National Health and Welfare for this country's elite athletes. Really, our difficulties have little to do with elite athletes, or athletes in this country at the top of their competitive class. We must be concerned with grass roots athletes, and therefore with physical fitness and recreation. Physical fitness is most important for the well-being of our people. Canadians have become increasingly aware of the importance of physical fitness, which affects both body and mind. I should like to see the government encourage people to become more physically fit and participate in recreational programs, which should encompass amateur sports.

I suggest the amateur sports program should involve, first, initiating a federal-provincial conference to study existing physical fitness and sports programs as structured within each individual province, and incorporating the same into an acceptable national policy; second, taking inventory of all existing sports, recreational and fitness facilities and ensuring their maximum utilization under the proposals of this policy; third, encouraging national physical fitness through education, the media, industry and government, and promoting all available facilities and programs on a national basis; fourth, initiating the development of a truly comprehensive coaching program with accompanying accreditation leading to professional status and, fifth, creating new facilities dependent upon regional needs, and determined in addition by the scheduling of national and international sporting events.

While it is impossible for the government to promise support for those who have come to be known as elite athletes, I hope it will continue to offer financial support and assistance to those individuals demonstrating outstanding ability and achievement in sports. I cannot emphasize enough the need to encourage youngsters and adults at the grass roots level to participate in amateur sports and physical fitness programs. From this grass roots base we shall develop our top athletes. Only if our grass roots athletic program is sound will superior athletes emerge, athletes who can do better in international competitions.

The hon. member's motion provides for the establishment of a department of sports. My party made a similar proposal some time ago. But we must be realistic. In these times of economic hardship, of huge government bureaucracy, times when restraint in spending is called for, a department of sports will not be given high priority. The establishment of a ministry of sports might be considered some time in the future, but at the present the establishment of such a ministry will not take precedence over other urgent government business.

The Department of National Health and Welfare which labours under a fantastic workload probably cannot pay too much attention to sports. Unfortunately the minister seems to be more concerned about professional than about amateur sport. I am alluding to his interest in the World Football League, the Canadian Football League, and other professional sporting bodies.

In conclusion I am sure most hon. members and most Canadians will agree that the government will give low priority to the establishment of a ministry of sports, and will give much higher priority to many of the other things it must do in this day and age.

Mr. Gus MacFarlane (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I am disturbed because I want to speak for two hours, but can only speak for some minutes. I know other hon. members wish to make their comments. Allow me to congratulate the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) and the hon. member for Lafontaine (Mr. Lachance), the mover and seconder of the motion, for introducing this subject matter for debate. I do not necessarily support the establishment of a ministry of sport, but I am glad the hon. member for Vaudreuil brought before the House a matter of important national concern.

I remind the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek) that this is a non-partisan issue. That is how I will treat it. For that reason I will ignore his personal remarks and proceed with my own speech.

I concede that the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) first showed his concern in this area when he brought forward a bill. Our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), too, showed his concern by making his relatively well known statement concerning a task force. Let me point out that the minister from Hamilton East brought forward a sports policy, that the present minister from Outremont supported that policy and showed interest in what is happening at the grass roots. I am not embarrassed to speak as a Liberal.

I remind the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley that he was using my notes when he spoke. He used my notes, but alleged they are a copy of a Conservative paper.

Mr. Jelinek: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. MacFarlane) suggested I used his notes when I spoke. Let me point out that he was not even in Ottawa when we established our sports policy. It was our sports policy, our notes, to which I was referring. I had just suggested that the paper he came up with, which was only released a few months ago, was nearly identical to ours.

● (1630)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The hon. member knows that is not a valid point of order.

Mr. MacFarlane: I respect the hon. member. I am very pleased he used his own notes because his sound better coming out of his mouth than his do out of my mouth.

Since this matter is non-partisan I would also like to point out that the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) was one of the top players on the parliamentary team. He indeed shows an interest in sport. I would also like to point out another young man who is hitting the headlines. He is a member of the NDP. He does not represent a constituency, but he would surely like to do that. His name is Bruce Kidd.

We should be looking at sport as a vehicle for national unity. Regardless of whether my constituents decide that someone else should represent them, in the time that I am here we will continue looking at sport as part of the culture of Canadian people. I think it is also important to mention the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). I was hoping he would have stayed. The Leader of the Opposition allowed his name to stand for the first Atlantic football bowl game in Halifax.

There are many important individuals in this parliament. In sports we do not refer to the players as engineers, doctors or lawyers. We do not even refer to them as nuns, priests or ministers. They are called members of the fraternity of athletes. Everyone becomes equal. That is why sport in itself is terribly important in this country.

A little boy from Trois-Rivières who is able to go to Penticton to play thinks it is a fantastic experience. He does not ask whether the people there speak French or English. He wants to go. These are the things we should be talking about here.

We should bring to the attention of this department, this minister, the Prime Minister, and this parliament that we believe sport is an experience which both young and old people can enjoy. If we are indeed going to be faced with the great economic problems of this world, there will still be time for our older gentlemen to sit by the ballpark to watch ordinary softball games. They will not have the money to buy tickets for the great professional sports. Once more they will want to sit at the local diamonds and watch the activity. This is a moment of opportunity for us.

I have been involved in sports over a 30-year period. I ask hon. members to consider this as a last thought. When Handel wrote the Messiah, did he write of the omnipotence of God or did the omnipotence of God show itself through the Messiah which he wrote? When Van Gogh painted the olive trees, did he paint of nature or did nature show itself through his painting? When I coach my football team, do I place the stamp of my name on it or do I give the players the formations, the moment of play, and the system whereby they may express themselves?

This is my plea for sport. It is indeed a cultural experience. It is an experience for those involved and for those who want to have some kind of an aesthetic experience.

What is the praise most often heard in sports? "Wasn't it beautiful?" Beauty has something to do with art, culture and experience. This is what it is all about. We are not asking for some money to be thrown away. We are saying we want our Prime Minister to stand up and say that sport is indeed culture, a part of our life, a ribbon across Canada that ties us together, and a vehicle whereby all multicultural groups can move together and exhibit their national unity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacFarlane: I travelled to Split, Yugoslavia, with our national basketball team. Normally there is not that big a crowd at basketball games. However, there you saw 11,000 on one side and 11,000 on the other. You saw coming against you a centre who was seven foot two. You saw your guard from British Columbia, who was playing beside your guard from Halifax, who was playing beside your centre from Ottawa, who was playing behind your forward from Quebec, who was playing behind your forward from Saskatchewan, who was standing with the referee who came from British Columbia. If you saw this, you would realize what it is like to see a young boy of six foot two come driving in toward the seven foot two player, place the ball behind his back, give it to the boy from Montreal, who put it in, and then hear the crowd suddenly say "Canada, Canada, Canada". There was not one Canadian present. It was because they respected us. They understood that athletics is poetry in motion.

An hon. Member: Who won?

Mr. MacFarlane: That is a good question. As ambassadors, we won every time.

I remember when my football team beat a maritime university 107 to three. It was not a very happy situation. I remember when we lost 86 to six. The other coach wondered whether he won or lost.

In sport you practice five times a week, and not just the day of the game. If the practices were not any fun what would be the point of playing once a week? Do you think it is all in one moment, one Canada Games, or one international competition? It is in a whole lifetime. This is part of our country.

It is terrible when people do not understand the emotional aspect. I hope no one says I am not being objective. However, he would be right. I am not objective. I am emotional. I am sold on it.

I remember one other incident. As a young coach, I violently wanted to win. I took 40 young football players and ran them around the field. At the back of the field I saw one running slow. I looked at him and said, "Why are you running slow? Pick it up." His brother came to me and said, "Can't you see he is crippled? He had infantile paralysis. He is my brother." I felt bad. I thought it over and then called them all together. I looked at this boy and said, "I guess you will have a harder time making the team."

That boy made the team. Sport was the great leveller. He did not want to be regarded as a cripple. He wanted to be regarded like everyone else. He went on to McGill and became a Governor General's scholar. He played football and now holds a good position in this country. Right across this country there are people like this.

Sport is the great leveller. When we started out sport dealt with our problems. The Negro came up in sport. We would shower with him, but would not invite him to our parties. The vehicle was open to him.

While I am in this place I will not tolerate being partisan. I appreciate the expertise in his sport of the hon. member who spoke previously. I have great respect for him. We each had a little fun with each other. I now ask him to join with me. I also ask the hon. member from Edmonton, the hon. member from the Social Credit Party, and the hon. member from the New Democratic Party to join with me. We need to have this hope. This is the moment for backbenchers. Regardless of whether you are a member of the government, you can go back to your town and say, yes, we need that rink and that pool. This is our moment. This is the time we should remind ourselves of the well known words:

Lives of great men all remind us
We can make our lives sublime,
And, departing, leave behind us
Footprints on the sands of time.

The footprints can go up or down, or they can wander around. Mine will go right up there because that is where youth is.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Abbott: On a question of privilege, I apologize to the hon. member who is about to speak, but it occurs to me that, as in this case, day after day and week after week it is a good thing that maintaining a quorum in this House does not depend on the presence of one member of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I almost think that the hon. member's interruption is worthwhile. I want to thank the hon. member for Mississauga

(Mr. Abbott). The spirit of goodwill prevails in this House. We are getting close to the Easter recess and the record will show that today the House made great progress in respect of legislative enactments. So there are times when we can get together and do things in a proper spirit.

I want to say something to the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. MacFarlane). I have heard many speeches with respect to the influence of sport in helping to promote national unity, but I do not think I have ever heard a more passionate plea for understanding of the proper place of sport in the life of this country than I did a few moments ago. I listened carefully to the hon. member's speech. I admire him personally, I admired his career before he came here, and I hope he will so conduct himself while he is here that I will admire his career here as well; I have no reason to think I shall not do so although we may have occasion to disagree from time to time.

The passion with which he spoke of sports, bearing in mind that the subject of this debate is a proposal to create a Department of Sports, was so apparent that since I am by nature a Methodist I was reminded somewhat of a revival meeting at which the hon. member was pushing for a call to that department. Such an appointment might not be a bad thing if he could practice in that department the fervour with which he speaks.

I do not know whether the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain or I could be judged as examples of what participation in active sports can do for one's figure. Perhaps we are walking examples of the necessity for the rethinking of programs in the community. My only concern with respect to the motion is not the motive behind it. I think I have indicated that I support the motion in its general purpose. My hesitation with respect to it is in deciding whether or not it is necessary in 1975, in a period when we are calling upon people for restraint, when governments are paying at least lip service to restraint in the sense that it is being mentioned, when inflation is touching people's pocketbooks, when some people in the country are complaining about the growth of the public service, and when the government itself is saying it is hoping to hold the growth of the public service down to 4 per cent in the fiscal year.

This is not the time for us to talk about opening a new department, with all the new staff it would require, and all the difficulty and expense it would mean. Only in those terms would I say that perhaps we should use this period to think about what a department of this sort might do if it were formed. I hope we are not always going to be running through this economic Gethsemane. I hope the government will come to its senses and realize it has a responsibility to fight inflation. Some of these important recreational and cultural things could perhaps be centred in a new department. That is my only reservation.

If it is important that we do these things, we do not need a new department or a new ministry. What we do need is to use the existing departments, the existing structures, and the tremendous expertise which exists and which is capable of being unleashed in the public service, and to draw in from time to time when necessary, having regard to our requirements for priorities, expertise from elsewhere to zero in on the one part of the sports program which needs emphasizing and re-emphasizing—if I understood at all what the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain was saying—and that is the involvement of the young person growing up in an atmosphere of recreation and sport so that he can participate not only when he is young but all through his life, and at the same time educate a society with respect to recreation.

There is the capability now without setting up a new department. I do not quarrel with the objective, but I think there is the capability already. It will take, perhaps, another minister, or certainly a reawakening of the minister with respect to his interest in amateur sport, and perhaps a review of the programs to see whether there is not too much concentration on the large sporting organizations, the national associations, rather than the community associations, the neighbourhood associations.

I am a parent of two growing boys and a growing girl. The latter has just begun to play in softball and perhaps as she gets a little older she will become interested in girls' hockey; the two boys have both played amateur football in the pre-high school leagues. One boy of mine is now playing football in his high school and hockey in his neighbourhood. One of the things we cannot emphasize too much is the importance of this program in occupying those young minds, not just the young minds of my children but the minds of the children of others in the community, occupying their time, giving them some interest, teaching them to involve themselves early in recreation, giving a vent for their tremendous strength and enthusiasm, allowing them to excel in those fields so that they can excel in other fields.

Sometimes we forget; we as parents, as members of parliament, as parliamentarians generally not just on this level but elsewhere, forget that really the unsung heroes of the community are those men and women who take time out of their own lives day after day, week after week, month after month, and year after year to do things for our young people. We should not forget this. I hope I can speak for every member of this parliament in paying tribute to all the men and women of this country who have given of themselves in a voluntary way to assist the development of young people. They develop not only the body but the mind as well.

I should like to say something else. The hon. member for Hamilton Mountain, in his career before he came here, distinguished himself at another level of athletics and sports and recreation. We owe men like the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain a debt of gratitude for what they have done for our country in developing young men as better citizens, as greater participants and sportsmen, with all the attributes inherent in that name. I think also of the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek). He was a world champion athlete and brought distinction to this country. We in this House are fortunate to have men like him who have brought great honour to their country sitting among us.

Last of all, I think the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain touched on a matter that is very close to me, and that is the importance of the understanding we have to develop between nations and in our own country. I happen to be a resident member of parliament and I am here all summer when my colleagues are at their homes across the country. They drop in from time to time and it is nice to see them no matter where they are from, but I am one of the members who is in this House every day during the summer, and it falls to my lot to receive group after group of young people who come to Ottawa from the far reaches of our country, every province and territory. This occurs throughout the summer months. They come here to have their eyes opened to the greatness of this country which is symbolized in these buildings.

I think there is an opportunity in respect of these programs, many of which are exchange programs funded by the hard work of the young people themselves, and others by the taxpayers, to improve the relationships within our country and with the rest of the world. These programs are among the most important that the government has seen fit to bring about in terms of our country.

More than that, I think we ought to see that there is the same opportunity for the people who participate in amateur sport to develop an understanding of what this country and its various regions mean, while at the same time developing that attribute that is important in any citizen, namely, the attribute of participating in a sportsmanlike way, whether we are talking about a business or a profession, in public or in private life.

Let me say to the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) that the motivation behind his motion is excellent, and I support him. Unfortunately, I think we have other priorities, and given those priorities there are other vehicles now in our hands with which to carry out what the hon. member suggests in respect of the department, as well as those important objectives the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain so eloquently put before us this afternoon. I am very grateful for having had this opportunity to participate in what I think is an important debate, Madam Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Serge Joyal (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Madam Speaker, I am all the happier to take part in this debate on the motion of the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) as this afternoon, after speaking on Bill C-33 to the House, I now have the opportunity to talk to the House on a motion which deals with a matter of significant importance to me, as the representative of the Maisonneuve-Rosemont constituency, since in effect that is where the Olympic Games of 1976 are to take place.

When I was elected a member of the House of Commons last July, one of the first steps I took was to re-read every statement made in this House respecting the Olympic Games, namely the Olympic Act and the speeches which were meant to prepare Canada for that exceptional event.

When I went over some statements by my colleagues from the opposition, I was struck by the fact that they were anxious to make this international sporting event an unprecedented success. I also noticed that they wished the games to take place within modest structures. If some members of the opposition had accepted the invitation by the mayor of Montreal last Sunday, as other members did, and had had the opportunity to visit the olympic facilities, they would have realized to what extent they are progressing according to schedule, and how very optimistic we can be about this international event.

However, our debate this afternoon deals with a specific aspect of that event, namely the preparation of Canadian athletes for the Olympic Games of 1976. The motion we are dealing with this afternoon, Madam Speaker, is not a new one. In fact, in 1937, a member of parliament for a Toronto riding put forward a similar one. He did so as he returned from the Commonwealth Games which had taken place in London, and in which the Canadian hockey team almost won the gold medal in its field. Since hockey is one of the most popular sports in Canada, this hon. member, on his coming back to Canada after those international competitions, thought that one of the first measures the government of the day should pass would be precisely the establishment of a Department of Sports.

The previous speaker has indicated this afternoon in a very precise way why we can be doubtful about the establishment of a Department of Sports having the desired results. Indeed, we are dealing with one of the areas where voluntary efforts and voluntary involvement of the citizens are most important. The policy now advocated or followed by the National Health and Welfare Department is to stimulate the development, the growth and the initiatives which might be taken by all the organizations involved with sports at the professional or amateur levels. Those programs established by National Health and Welfare Department are not intended to serve as a substitute for private initiative. These are programs essentially devised to back up the plans set up by groups of citizens who believe that physical fitness is one of the most important objectives to pursue.

In 1969, Madam Speaker, I had the opportunity to be a spectator at the European Olympic championships in Athens. At that time, I was able to see that the countries which were more successful and had the highest international standing were not necessarily those where sports were managed by a bureaucracy. Quite the opposite, it was those who favoured personal initiative. I am thinking of a French athlete, Colette Besson, who ran the 300 metres and won all the gold medals for track events because she had been able to start practising her sport when bureaucracy had nothing to do with the physical training favoured by her family.

In my opinion, Madam Speaker, if we must call the attention of this House to the preparation of Canadians for the 1976 Olympics during the next few months, we should emphasize these personal initiatives.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The hour provided for consideration of private members' bills has now expired. It being five o'clock, the House stands adjourned until Monday next at 2 p.m.

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PROCEDURE TO BE FOLLOWED IN CONNECTION WITH LEGISLATION TO END STRIKE BY LONGSHOREMEN AT VANCOUVER

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as a result of the strike by longshoremen on the west coast, the government has decided to put forward legislation which it hopes to have expedited by the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: I therefore propose that an order of the House be made which would permit the introduction of the bill now, would permit the bill to be advanced any number of stages at any one sitting, would order the bill for consideration on second reading at four o'clock this afternoon and that the bill be referred, upon second reading, to committee of the whole. After the House has had an opportunity of seeing the bill at four o'clock I may have further requests.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the announcement by the House leader, we are prepared to consent to his request for expedition. I hope that we can have, well in advance of four o'clock, copies of the bill which we are to review, which is in accordance with some discussions that were held this morning.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the representatives of the parties along the lines indicated by the government House leader. I may say that we are prepared to give consent to the introduction and first reading of the bill at this time. We are also prepared to give consent to an order for second reading consideration to start at four o'clock, and for the order to be that the bill be referred to committee of the whole House.

I may say that this consent is on the understanding that a printed copy of the bill in some form will be in our hands within minutes. I see the government House leader nodding his head. We will need time to study the bill. Any further consents, of course, will have to wait until four o'clock.

● (1410)

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I attended the meeting of the House leaders this morning and, on behalf of my party, I agreed that the bill be read a second time as soon as possible and referred to the committee. I trust the House will continue to support the request of the minister.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are two points in respect of the distribution of the bill. For the benefit of hon. members, I am able to confirm that the bill has already been printed in sufficient copies to distribute in English. The French copies are on their way, so it is to be hoped that that request is therefore complied with. There is, however, a minor variance between the consent which has been put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and that put forward at the suggestion of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp). The President of the Privy Council has suggested an order that the bill be advanced more than one stage today, which of course would go beyond committee stage and perhaps to third reading in the same day. I take it that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is extending his consent, and that of his colleagues, only to the point of putting it into committee of the whole this afternoon, or does his consent go on to further stages if that is agreed to?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think I made our position quite clear, and I am sure the government House leader understands it. Our consent is that we are willing to start second reading at four o'clock today, and we are willing that when the second reading debate finishes the bill shall go into a committee of the whole House. We are not at this point giving consent to any further expedition. We reserve that until we have seen the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Since the order must be upon the consent of all hon. members at this time, the order would be up to the point of the committee stage, the bill going into committee of the whole stage as outlined by the President of the Privy Council, and if those terms are agreed to it shall be so ordered. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: In accordance with the order just made, the bill shall be read the second time at four o'clock this afternoon.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON MEASURES TO AID POTATO PRODUCERS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with Standing Order 43, and in view of the disastrous drop in the price of table stock potatoes from Prince Edward Island on the Ontario market by some 74 per cent this week, as advertised by a national food chain, meaning a return for the farmer of much less than half the cost of production, and in light of the continuing failure of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) to announce immediate aid to the potato producers of Eastern Canada or long-term alternatives for effective and fair marketing procedures, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Huron-Middlesex (Mr. McKinley):

That the Minister of Agriculture make a statement on motions within the next 48 hours indicating the action he is prepared to take to rescue the potato industry of Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick from extensive bankruptcy and the collapse of numerous family farm units.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43 and requires the unanimous consent of the House prior to presentation. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

[Mr. Speaker.]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

SUGGESTED ALL-PARTY COMMITTEE TO STUDY MEASURES TO COMBAT INFLATION AND UNEMPLOYMENT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 relating to a crisis situation of the utmost concern to all Canadians. Canada's economic problems have become immense. This situation is too serious to be affected by the pressures of partisan politics. I would, therefore, hope that all members of this House will give careful consideration to the following motion. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan):

That it is the will of this House that the Prime Minister set up an all-party committee to deal with the very serious problems of inflation and unemployment, to draw up guidelines for wage settlements and arbitration rules to decrease the number and frequency of serious and crippling strikes and to study the recommendation of further immediate tax reductions to low and middle income Canadians.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion is proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43 and requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

BILINGUALISM

GOVERNMENT DECISION DESIGNATING ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE BILINGUAL—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise to propose a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43 as a result of numerous representations received from my constituency and elsewhere on the subject of the Royal Military College, Kingston. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

That in the opinion of the House there is no justification or any necessity for the Royal Military College, Kingston, Ontario, becoming a bilingual institution. Since such a move would constitute unwarranted expense of some millions of dollars and not be in accordance with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism, the government should, therefore, rescind immediately its recent decision designating the Royal Military College bilingual.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HISTORIC SITES

PROPOSED RECONSIDERATION OF ADMISSION FEE TO LOWER FORT GARRY—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to propose a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. I do so because in these days when Canadians are being urged to be interested in the heritage that is ours we in Manitoba find it difficult to understand the rather exorbitant fee that is to be levied, starting April 1, for admission to Lower Fort Garry on the Red River, in our province of Manitoba. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

That this House urges the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to cancel the proposal, which has been set to come into effect on April 1, to charge a fee of $2 per person or $5 per family for admission to Lower Fort Garry, a place which should be open to all Canadians who wish to visit it, Lower Fort Garry being part of our western heritage and truly a national historic site.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

EASTER ADJOURNMENT

On the order: Motions

March 21, 1975—The President of the Privy Council:

CODE OF CONDUCT FOR LINER CONFERENCES

Question No. 1,130—Mr. Forrestall:

Has the government established any interdepartmental groups to examine the impact upon Canadian shipbuilding, ship repair and merchant seamen and officers of the possible ratification by Canada and sufficient others of the world community of the proposed Code of Conduct for liner conferences flowing from the UNCTAD meetings in 1974 and (a) if so, what is the membership and what are the terms of reference (b) if not, for what reason?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): (a) Interdepartmental groups have not been established to examine the impact upon Canadian shipbuilding, ship repair and merchant seamen and officers of the possible ratification by Canada and sufficient others of the world community of the proposed Code of Conduct for liner conferences flowing from the UNCTAD meetings in 1974; (b) The Convention on a Code of Conduct for Liner Conferences has many optional provisions. For instance, the 40-40-20 cargo sharing formula would apply only when some other formula is not agreed. Nor need ships participating in a conference on behalf of one country, necessarily be owned or registered in that country. Hence, the effect the convention will have if it is implemented, is still being studied by the international community. Canada is participating in these international consultations. The focus for this participation is in various working groups established under the Interdepartmental Committee on Marine Transportation. Pending greater clarity as to the likely effect of the convention, and the likelihood of its implementation and acceptance by Canada's major trading partners, interdepartmental working groups have not been assigned to the specific subject areas in question.

The amendments to the National Housing Act, currently being considered include proposals to broaden the assistance available to municipalities under the sewage treatment loan program. (b) Grants to reduce interest payments for middle and lower income families, in the form of a reduction of the mortgage interest rate and of subsidies on mortgage payments, are available under the Assisted Home Ownership program. The proposed amendments to the National Housing Act include provision for extenting these subsidy benefits to low and moderate income housing financed through approved lenders under the National Housing Act; (c) Low down-payment mortgage money is directed toward the purchase of moderately priced homes under the existing Assisted Home Ownership Program, and this direction will be extended under the proposed Assisted Home Ownership Program financed through the approved lenders.

Question No. 1,664—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

Is the government giving consideration to authorizing additional funds for the Local Initiatives Programme and extending the expiry date to April 30, 1975?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): At the present time such consideration is not being given. There is no fixed expiry date fot the program. The termination date for any given project varies depending upon the project's starting date. A 1974-75 LIP project may operate for a maximum of 26 weeks, commencing as early as December 1, 1974 and as late as January 31, 1975.

LITERATURE FROM THE CANADIAN GOVERNMENT OFFICE OF TOURISM

Question No. 1,677—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Is the Canadian Government Office of Tourism sending out literature to predominantly English speaking areas in Canada in the French language only and, if so, what are all the reasons for doing this?

2. (a) For what reason did the Canadian Government Office of Tourism send literature in the French language only to Mrs. Ruth MacLeod of Brockville, Ontario in answer to a request received from her written in the English language (b) did the Office receive a second letter from Mrs. MacLeod drawing this situation to their attention and, if so, on what date and what action has been taken?

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. The Canadian Government Office of Tourism services inquiries according to the language of the inquirer.

[Mr. Foster.]

2. (a) Mrs. Ruth MacLeod should have been sent English literature. Unfortunately, however, she was sent French publications due to a clerical error in the coding process. (b) The Canadian Government Office of Tourism receives over 2 million inquiries per year. Due to this volume, serviced inquiries are not kept. In a telephone conversation with Mrs. MacLeod, it was determined that she had not received a second package, possibly because of the current mail strike. A back-up package has been prepared and sent.

*RATIFICATION OF PROPOSED CODE OF CONDUCT FOR LINER CONFERENCE

Question No. 1,678—Mr. Forrestall:

Has the government decided whether or not to ratify the proposed Code of Conduct for Liner Conferences flowing from the UNCTAD meetings of 1973 and 1974 and (a) if not, is the matter being studied (b) if so, what decision has been made?

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): (a) A Canadian international shipping policy is currently under review and will include a study of the implications of the Code of Conduct for Liner Conferences for Canada. (b) No decision has been made as to whether or not the Canadian government will ratify the code. Canada abstained on the voting on the Convention on the Code of Conduct for Liner Conferences in April 1974 on the grounds that certain provisions of this code would enable national shipping lines to secure pooling or sailing agreements with a conference for other than normal commercial considerations. In addition the conciliation provisions appeared costly and perhaps unworkable while other provisions could well reduce the competitive influences in international shipping.

LEAKS OF RADIO-ACTIVE POLLUTANTS AT NUCLEAR FACILITIES

Question No. 1,710—Mr. Francis:

1. Have there been any leaks of radio-active pollutants at nuclear facilities and, if so, what was the nature and extent of such leaks?

2. How much money has been spent by Order in Council or other means to stop such leaks?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Atomic Energy Control Board reports as follows: 1. This inquiry appears to be related to the discovery of leaks in the pressure tubes of unit No. 3 of the Pickering generating station in August, 1974. The leaks in question are best described as internal leaks in that they involved leakage of heavy water from the pressure tubes (in which uranium fuel bundles are located) into a closed annulus formed by the pressure tubes and surrounding calandria tubes. There was no escape of this heavy water outside of reactor systems. Further barriers to the escape of such heavy water exist including the concrete reactor containment building. Extensive investigations by the owner, Ontario Hydro, and by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited have revealed the cause of the leaks and the necessary corrective measures including the replacement of a number of pressure tubes have been completed. It is expected that the unit will be returned to operation shortly.

2. Costs associated with the shutdown of unit No. 3 of the Pickering generating station and replacement of the defective pressure tubes have been borne by Ontario Hydro. Atomic Energy of Canada Limited has carried out fundamental investigations of the pressure tube failure mechanism. An ongoing program will utilize the results of these investigations in connection with the design of currently committed and future CANDU nuclear power stations.

CHALK RIVER—PROTECTED PLACE

Was the nuclear facility in Chalk River declared a protected place in June 1974 and, if so, for what reasons?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Atomic Energy Control Board reports as follows: Chalk River Nuclear Laboratories was declared a protected place by Order of the Atomic Energy Control Board dated July 19, 1947 as amended March 27, 1952. A new designating Order was made in June, 1974 to comply with Section 14 of the Atomic Energy Control Regulations which came into effect on June 4, 1974.

SALE OF PLUTONIUM TO FOREIGN BUYER

Question No. 1,713—Mr. Francis:

Has Canada sold plutonium to any foreign buyer and is it continuing to do so?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Atomic Energy Control Board reports as follows: Yes. Canada has sold spent fuel containing plutonium to France under bilateral safeguards implemented by Canadian safeguards inspectors. Any future sale of nuclear material would be under current safeguards policy as announced by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on December 20, 1974.

PREVENTION OF PROLIFERATION OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS

Question No. 1,714—Mr. Francis:

Is the government convinced that any bilateral agreement with a purchaser of a CANDU reactor will prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons when the controlling international agency, the International Atomic Energy Commission, accepts a difference between "peaceful" and "non-peaceful" explosions and Canada does not accept such a difference?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Atomic Energy Control Board reports as follows: The present policy of the Canadian government is to insist on an international safeguards system implemented by the International Atomic Energy Agency, or other appropriate alternative procedures. The Canadian government will only permit the export of Canadian nuclear material, equipment or technology to countries with whom satisfactory commitments exist to ensure that these exports will not be used for the development or production of any nuclear explosive device.

DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION RELATING TO NUCLEAR WEAPONS

Question No. 1,716—Mr. Francis:

Does the oath of secrecy taken by people working in the nuclear field relate only to information related to nuclear weapons or does it now include information relating to public health?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Atomic Energy Control Board reports as follows: The oath of fidelity and secrecy taken by employees of the Atomic Energy Control Board and Atomic Energy of Canada Limited pursuant to Section 18 of the Atomic Energy Control Act is set out in the schedule to that act. The scope of application of this oath has not been the subject of interpretation. Section 26 of the Atomic Energy Control Regulations prohibits the disclosure of proprietary information obtained by the board except as stated therein, and Section 13 prohibits disclosure by any person including board employees of certain information relating to nuclear weapons.

ATOMIC ENERGY CONTROL REGULATIONS—SUSPENSION OF LICENCES

Has the Atomic Energy Control Board suspended the licence of any licence holder without giving the holder an opportunity to be heard in the interests of health, safety or security and, if so, what were the circumstances that led to such a decision?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Atomic Energy Control Board reports as follows: Since the coming into effect of the revised Atomic Energy Control Regulations on 4 June 1974, the Atomic Energy Control Board suspended the licences of one licensee after having provided a hearing by the Board.

ATOMIC ENERGY CONTROL REGULATIONS—SUSPENSION OF LICENCES

Has any licence issued by the Atomic Energy Control Board been revoked, suspended or amended and, if so, what were the circumstances that led to such a decision?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Atomic Energy Control Board reports as follows: Since the coming into effect of the revised Atomic Energy Control Regulations on June 4, 1974, the Atomic Energy Control Board suspended the licences of one licensee as a result of violations of the Atomic Energy Control Regulations in failing to report an incident involving the malfunction of a radiography camera and the improper shipment of that camera and radioactive source by commercial road transport.

DISPOSAL OF RADIOACTIVE WASTES

Question No. 1,719—Mr. Francis:

Is the solvent used in hospitals to dilute radio-active wastes before pouring them down the sink highly toxic?

Mr. Maurice Foster, (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Atomic Energy

Control Board reports as follows: No. Tap water is the solvent normally used in hospitals to dilute radioactive wastes.

DISPOSAL OF RADIOACTIVE WASTES

Question No. 1,720—Mr. Francis:

Are the radio-active wastes poured down the sinks of some hospitals (a) accumulating in the local water supply and getting into the life cycle (b) cancer producing and, if so, will the Atomic Energy Control Board consider re-institution of the pick-up of such wastes for a safer method of disposal?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Atomic Energy Control Board reports as follows: (a) As radioactive wastes which are permitted to be poured down the sinks of hospitals generally have short radioactive half-lives, they rapidly decay before they can accumulate to detectable levels in the water supply and the life cycle of humans. (b) While most radioactive materials have the potential of producing cancer if ingested at a high enough concentration for a long enough period, disposal in the sewer and at the required high dilution make the possibility of significant intake very remote. The Atomic Energy Control Board has never had a system of pick-up of such wastes. A commercial service is provided by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited for radioactive wastes which require special waste management.

DISPOSAL OF RADIOACTIVE WASTE

Question No. 1,722—Mr. Francis:

1. What procedures are used by hospitals and other licencees of the Atomic Energy Control Board to dispose of their radio-active waste?

2. Is waste on occasion put into public sewers?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Atomic Energy Control Board reports as follows: 1. The procedures to be used for the disposal of radio-active materials are specified in the Radioisotope Licence and are generally one or more of the Following: (a) return to supplier; (b) dilution with water at the point of disposal to the sewer to a level not greater than the maximum permissible concentration of drinking water; (c) storage of short-lived radioisotopes until radioactive decay has occurred; (d) disposal in approved waste management sites after prior arrangements.

2. Aqueous radioactive wastes are put into the sewer after sufficient dilution to meet requirement (b) in the reply to part 1 of this question.

LICENCES TO USERS OF RADIO-ACTIVE MATERIALS

Question No. 1,727—Mr. Francis:

How many licences have been issued by the Atomic Energy Control Board to users of radio-active materials?

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Atomic Energy Control Board reports as follows: The Atomic Energy Control Board has approximately 3,000 licensees.

[Mr. Foster.]

CANDU REACTORS

What is the life expectancy of a CANDU reactor?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Atomic Energy of Canada Limited reports as follows: For amortization purposes the practice of electric power utilities, such as Ontario Hydro, is to assign a 30-year "lifetime", or write-off period, to thermal power stations, both fossil and nuclear (CANDU). The actual lifetime of a CANDU unit is expected to be much longer than 30 years. For so long as it meets the criteria of reliability, safety and economic viability, a nuclear power unit will be kept in operation. If components wear out or become defective, they will be replaced. The technology to do so exists.

NUMBER OF PUBLIC SERVANTS WORKING IN THE CONTINENTAL REGIONS

Question No. 1,760—Mr. Herbert:

In the Department of Manpower and Immigration for the month of April 1975, what is the budgeted number of public servants to work in the continental regions of (a) North America excluding Canada (b) South America (c) Europe (d) Asia (e) Australasia?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): (a) 30; (b) 4; (c) 90; (d) 37; (e) 3.

"IRVING WHALE" SALVAGE OPERATION—REASON FOR DELAY IN INFORMING PRIME MINISTER OF ALLEGED BRIBERY ATTEMPT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister, who indicated to the House that he first learned about possible difficulties connected with Hamilton Harbour following the election of 1972, but that he knew nothing about alleged bribery attempts connected with the Irving Whale salvage operation until recently, perhaps not until after he returned from his recent European trip. Has the Prime Minister inquired why he was not informed about the Irving Whale incident when he discussed the Hamilton Harbour incident with the appropriate minister, particularly as the inquiry into the Irving Whale incident resulted from initiatives taken by Mr. Michael Pitfield.

Mr. Trudeau: What were the hon. member's last words? By whom were the initiatives taken?

Mr. Stanfield: By Mr. Michael Pitfield, by way of letter to the Deputy Minister of Transport.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it appears that Mr. Pitfield acted on my assumed authority, and quite properly so. There is a standing instruction in my office that if there is some allegation of wrongdoing which can be properly referred to the police, it is to be referred in that way. That is exactly what Mr. Pitfield did. I am pleased with the role the Privy Council office played in that matter.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Prime Minister would direct his attention to the question I asked. Why was he not informed of alleged misconduct to do with the Irving Whale incident when he discussed with the appropriate minister the Hamilton Harbour incident, in view of the similarity of patterns.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, they were two completely unrelated questions. In one case, the proceedings, through the police, had gone very well and some people had been brought to trial. In the other case, as I understand the facts of it, the first allegations made by Mr. Kerr were proceeded upon when they were put in writing and the government of Nova Scotia decided there was no ground for taking the matter to court. I expect that the matter rested there at that point and there was no need to inform me about something that had been resolved.

Mr. Stanfield: With respect, Mr. Speaker, I wish to remind the Prime Minister that the Irving Whale case was not resolved until many months after the Prime Minister was first informed of the Hamilton Harbour charges. As far as we know, the government of Nova Scotia did not decide not to prosecute until many months after. In other words, the Irving Whale case was still current at that time. Why was the Prime Minister not informed of this investigation and the charges? I also wish to ask the Prime Minister whether it is usual, within his government, for officials to ignore a charge of bribery made by a lawyer of the distinction of Mr. Donald Kerr of Halifax until after a letter is received from someone in the government service at the level of Mr. Pitfield.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it is not fair to say that the matter brought up by Mr. Kerr was ignored. It is quite apparent from the record that he made some allegations verbally, as he said, when he was mad. At that point the officials asked him to put the allegations in writing. Some weeks or a month or so later, I believe he proceeded to put the allegations in writing. The government acted upon those allegations. Investigation was followed through by the RCMP. Whatever evidence they gathered was given to the attorney general of Nova Scotia. At that point it was no longer in the hands of the federal government. There was no need to inform me of something which had been proceeded with routinely and had proceeded well. In Mr. Kerr's own words, his assessment is as follows: "I have no fault to find whatsoever with the higher echelon of the government in the way they handled this case. There was no suggestion of foot dragging or cover up. They reacted in a very smart and fast way. In fact, they reacted admirably."

ALLEGED BID-RIGGING BY SALVAGE AND DREDGING COMPANIES—GOVERNMENT VIEW OF NEED FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Since there seems to be a pattern of delay—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: I am talking about the delay in both investigations. According to the RCMP report, there is an identical pattern of bid-rigging in both the salvaging and dredging industries. Since the Auditor General has reported irregularities in dredging bids since 1963, in light of this evidence does the Prime Minister not agree that the public interest will be best served by a public inquiry?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. member if he would not agree that in every case which was brought to the government's attention and knowledge, it acted admirably, to quote the gentleman who made the allegations.

SUGGESTED GUIDELINES FOR COMPANIES ELIGIBLE FOR FEDERAL CONTRACTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In light of the government's attempts to get the support of organized labour in dealing with the dual problem of inflation and unemployment now facing this country, is the Prime Minister prepared to indicate that the government will demonstrate its good faith toward labour by establishing a set of guidelines for companies in Canada which the government would expect the companies to follow if they are to be eligible for contracts with the federal government?

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the leader of the New Democratic Party knows the process which is going on now. This has involved consultations between the government and various sectors of the economy. He knows that this matter will be discussed at the federal-provincial conference to be held in a few weeks time. I will tell the hon. member that at this stage the process of seeking consensus would not be advanced by the government unilaterally making any announcement of the kind he suggests.

INDUSTRY

UNITED AIRCRAFT—REASON FOR GOVERNMENT ENTERING INTO NEW CONTRACTS IN VIEW OF STRIKE SITUATION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I would, then, refer to a specific instance and direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. In view of the bad reputation of the United Aircraft Corporation in Longueuil, Quebec, among its employees and having regard to the substantial federal grants made to this company, can the minister explain why in the course of the vicious strike which has been in progress during the last 14 months or so the government has entered into new agreements with that company? I should like the minister in particular to explain to the House the statement he made to representatives of the Canadian Labour Congress this morning to the effect that the government entered into these new contracts by virtue of prior agreements, especially in the light of the fact that the company itself, in explaining the recent contracts, made no such statement.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Let me first correct the hon. gentleman's understanding of what I said this morning. This morning, in response to representations by the President of the Canadian Labour Congress, I explained that payments which had been made to United Aircraft arose from contractual arrangements which had been entered into before the start of the strike. There was no question, in the information I gave, of payments being made to United Aircraft in respect of contracts entered into subsequent to the start of the strike.

Mr. Broadbent: Then I should like to ask the minister if he would explain why the government entered into new contracts, as it has done during the period of the strike, with a company which has transferred a large part of its production from Canada to the United States during the last 14 months in violation of at least the ethics of its agreement, bearing in mind that the same company has refused to accept the Rand formula which has been accepted by the vast majority of good corporate citizens throughout the country?

Mr. Drury: I would not presume to offer a view as to the principles of the industrial relations which should exist between this corporation and its employees; it is a matter which falls under provincial jurisdiction. The federal government has done its best not to interfere with this process. We have been hopeful, however, almost from week to week, that the parties, with the assistance of the government of Quebec, could come to an agreement and that normal business, if I could put it that way, could be resumed. This hope has not been realized as yet but we are still hopeful that normal operations will be resumed, and resumed shortly. In anticipation, we have been holding discussions looking to the future and to future development work, given the long lead-time which is required in these matters. I am told—and this is not first hand knowledge; this does not concern my department—that the production which for some period was exported to the United States has now been brought back to Canada, and that current output in the Montreal plant has reached its previous level.

HOUSING

AVAILABILITY OF $500 GRANT WHEN MORTGAGE MONEY FROM PRIVATE SOURCES—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

Because the $500 grant to first-time buyers of a house offered from November 1, 1974 on has stirred considerable interest, could the minister tell the House whether the fact that a buyer has borrowed from an individual instead of a credit union, a bank or even the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation makes him ineligible for this grant?

[English]

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I do not think the fact that a person has acquired a loan should deprive him of an opportunity; it is when he takes possession of the home that matters in terms of whether he is eligible for a grant.

DREDGING CONTRACTS—POSSIBILITY OF CONSULTATION WITH MINISTER OF JUSTICE IN 1971 CONCERNING DREE GRANT TO MARINE INDUSTRIES LTD.

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): I have a question for the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the hon. gentleman again whether he consulted the Minister of Justice about certain aspects of the dredging industry in 1971, not, as he was so quick to assume, in his capacity as Minister of Transport but rather with specific reference to DREE grants at that time such as the one for $193,860 to Marine Industries, some of which, incidentally, is still to be paid. Can the minister tell us whether he was sufficiently concerned as a minister at that time, as the minister responsible for DREE and as a member of the cabinet, to consult the Minister of Justice on certain aspects of dredging?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): All those consultations were made by the department at that time. I did not personally inquire.

POTATOES—DATE OF GOVERNMENT ACTION TO AID PRODUCERS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Now that Loblaws, the national food chain, has advertized in two full page ads in the last two weeks the fact that Prince Edward Island potatoes are selling at about one quarter the price of last year, reflecting a disastrous situation for the producers in that province, I am wondering when the minister intends to take action, bearing in mind the numerous meetings which have taken place between the hon. gentleman and his officials with regard to this situation in the last few weeks and the desperate need for the provision of interim assistance in order that there may be any kind of viable industry this year.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): As I said last week, Mr. Speaker, we have made several offers to the provincial ministers of agriculture of both Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick. Just this morning I received a call in my office; the ministers are returning to Ottawa late this evening to discuss what action we feel we can work out together to aid these producers and in what manner we shall proceed.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Can the minister tell us, since the nature of the proposal has not been made public, whether there is a proposal for interim assistance, which is urgent now, as well as a proposal that some action be taken with respect to marketing generally? There is a clear indication in the Loblaws advertisements that the price differential as between this year and last year is greater with respect to Prince Edward Island potatoes than for potatoes from anywhere else in the country.

Mr. Whelan: It is safe to say there have been discussions as to what should be done at the present time, to what extent we should aid the potato producers, the degree to which assistance should be retroactive—if it should be retroactive—and the kind of program we should develop, working together with respect to potato marketing in the coming crop year.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Since the House will, presumably, be adjourning this week and will not be resuming until well into April, and since the farmers will have to acquire fertilizers and other necessary materials in preparation for this year's planting, will the minister make a statement before the House adjourns indicating what action the government is prepared to take?

Mr. Whelan: In some manner we shall let these people know what action is to be taken.

Oral Questions

POTATOES—POSSIBLE PROVINCIAL CONTRIBUTION TO PROGRAM TO AID PRODUCERS

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Is it the intention of the government to make the entire payment or will the provinces be asked to contribute a portion of the costs of any program which may be inaugurated?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): We have discussed several ways of finding a proper system to aid these people in the plight in which they now find themselves where they are getting less than cost out of their production because they over-produced by approximately 15 per cent. This has affected the sales of all the potatoes marketed, especially in eastern Canada. It is not altogether easy to say we are going to do one thing or another; we have difficulty in working out a proper program, one which will be satisfactory to them all.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FAILURE OF ISRAEL AND EGYPT TO AGREE ON PEACE TERMS—POSSIBLE WITHDRAWAL OF CANADIAN CONTINGENT FROM UN TRUCE OBSERVANCE FORCE

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In light of Mr. Kissinger's recent failure to secure an agreement between Israel and Egypt, does the minister plan to recommend to his colleague the Minister of National Defence that Canadian troops serving in that area be withdrawn?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, no such recommendation would be undertaken without the full consultation and the advice of the Secretary General of the United Nations.

[Mr. Whelan.]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO CONTINGENCY PLANS FOR WITHDRAWAL OF CANADIAN CONTINGENT FROM MIDDLE EAST TRUCE OBSERVANCE FORCE

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): A supplementary question. I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence whether the Canadian government has contingency plans for withdrawal when circumstances warrant?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

ADEQUACY FOR DEFENCE PURPOSES OF ARMS USED BY CANADIAN CONTINGENT IN UN TRUCE OBSERVANCE FORCE

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I also ask the Minister of National Defence whether Canadian troops in the Middle East are adequately armed to defend themselves in case hostilities do break out, and do their current instructions authorize the use of their arms for this purpose, with or without the specific declaration of an emergency by the UN commander?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the forces that we have in the Middle East and Cyprus have personal arms, sidearms, but they are not armed to defend themselves against an invading army or armed force. That is not the intention of their being there. They would have to evacuate and leave the area if hostilities broke out.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT TO ALLOW GOVERNMENT TO PAY DEMURRAGE INCURRED AS RESULT OF STRIKE

Mr. Jim Balfour (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. In view of the fact that demurrage costs amounting to several million dollars have been imposed on grain producers as a result of strikes in the last two years, will the minister take under serious consideration immediate amendment to the Canadian Wheat Board Act to allow the federal government to underwrite all such demurrage in order to relieve grain producers of the full burden of these costs, incurred through no fault of their own?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, that is by no means a new representation. The government's position, of course, has been that it would be very very difficult indeed to single out one particular person or persons from others who suffer damages as a result of strikes. It is the nature of strikes that it is difficult to tell the extent of the damage, and the government would be in an impossible position if it attempted to assess such damage.

DDH-280 CONTRACT—POSSIBILITY INFORMATION SENT TO SUPPLY AND SERVICES LEADING TO INVESTIGATION OF CONTRACT

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Defence, and I do so in the sense that I should have liked to direct it to the Minister of Supply and Services. It is somewhat further to what I asked earlier last week respecting alleged irregularities and investigations into the DDH-280 contract. Would the minister now indicate to the House whether he or any of his departmental officials in the Department of National Defence were aware of the transmission to the Department of Supply and Services of certain information that would have caused the Department of Supply and Services to carry out further investigations regarding contracts or sub-contracts in connection with the DDH-280 construction project?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I answered that question last week in the negative. Further studies have been undertaken in the department since that time and my answer would still be the same. There was no information passed by the Department of National Defence to the Department of Supply and Services which would have led to further investigative action of the kind suggested by the hon. member.

HEALTH

MERCURY POISONING OF NATIVES AT WHITE DOG AND GRASSY NARROWS RESERVES—DATE OF PUBLICATION OF REPORT—POSSIBLE CONSULTATIONS CONCERNING REED PAPER COMPANY

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It concerns his responsibility for the health of native Indians in Canada. Would the minister advise the House why it is that a report concerning mercury poisoning prepared by his department as related to the Grassy Narrows and White Dog reserves was not to be released for a year and a half until Japanese scientists investigated the situation and forced release of that report?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Once more, the hon. member is at least partially wrong. The information in the report mentioned by the hon. member is contained in the papers already tabled in the House or made public. There has not been any delay in making public the available information.

[English]

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister. The Reed Paper Company is the owner of the Dryden mill which is alleged to be polluting the English River system and thus affecting the natives in the area. Was the minister's department consulted by the Foreign Investment Review Board, which recently approved the Reed Paper Company's takeover, and would he advise whether good corporate citizenship is one of the criteria that is being applied by the Foreign Investment Review Board?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: As far as I know, Mr. Speaker, no consultation had taken place.

[English]

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, I have a final supplementary question which I will address to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Would the minister advise the House whether we are to continue to have Swedish and Japanese scientists called in to protect the health of our native Indian population?

RIDEAU-TRENT CANALS—AUTHORIZATION OF TOLLS—ESTIMATE OF REVENUE

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and arises out of recent action taken by his department which would adversely affect our tourist industry in central and eastern Ontario. Did the minister authorize the recent charges of lock tolls and other fees to be levied on those using the Rideau-Trent canal systems, as recently announced by the bureaucracy, and if so, why?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I did authorize the charges, the reason being to endeavour to get a relatively modest increase in the amount of revenue from the canals. The revenue still represents somewhat less than 15 per cent of the cost of operation.

Mr. Alkenbrack: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since 1975-76 estimates for levies on general taxpayers should be duly adjusted downwards, was allowance made for this in those estimates?

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, as I explained in reply to a question from the hon. member for Hillsborough the other day, the department has recently announced a five year capital program amounting to approximately $400 million. Part of the undertaking was that we would endeavour to secure some additional revenue from the operation of historical sites and national parks.

Mr. Alkenbrack: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. How much revenue has the minister estimated for 1976 from users of the systems?

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, in 1975-76 $11.6 million from the total operation.

TRANSPORT

POSSIBILITY OF REMOVING THE SUNKEN "IRVING WHALE"—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In the light—or perhaps I should say the darkness—of doubts and anxieties concerning the tenders for the raising of the Irving Whale and the possibility of inflated bids, can the minister advise whether he plans to make a serious reassessment of the situation with a view to seeking new and hopefully more realistic estimates, if necessary from abroad, for removing this continued threat to the Atlantic environment, and thereby achieve a real clean-up?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the Prime Minister gave a very clear answer a few minutes ago.

[Later:]

I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think I misunderstood the question put to me. The problem of lifting the Irving Whale is still a technical problem and we are not sure that this is the solution. There is a real danger if we tried it that a spill would take place. This is the only reason we are not doing it.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister whether he has any assurance that if he leaves the ship there there will not be a spill take place that would endanger our environment.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, we have on that matter made all the inquiries that could be made by a government. We asked all the experts and were told everywhere that it would be much more dangerous to try to surface the ship than to leave her there. I think if the hon. member has better technical advice I would be ready to take it but I am not ready to take the risk. This is the only problem. We even sent experts to Europe to find out what kind of danger this constituted and they were told it was very very dangerous and probably the safest thing to do would be to leave her lie.

EFFECT OF ALLEGED OVERSPENDING BY NEWS AND PUBLIC AFFAIRS DIVISION

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. Can the minister confirm that the capacity of the CBC to report important Canadian news and public affairs during the rest of this fiscal year will be substantially hampered because the news and public affairs division has already overspent its annual operating budget by following priorities, which included spending $20,000 last fall to send a free-lance reporter to Cambodia to search, without any success, for the son of Errol Flynn?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I shall have to take that question as notice.

DELAY IN DEMOLITION OF BUILDINGS AT CHURCHILL—SUGGESTION MONEY ALLOCATED SHOULD BE SPENT TO UPGRADE OTHER FACILITIES

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. Since there has been an announcement that the demolition of the buildings at Churchill at a cost of some $600,000 will not take place this year can the minister advise whether the $600,000 will be spent to further upgrade the facilities at Churchill?

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State which is supplementary to my earlier question. REASON MINISTER FELT COMPELLED TO STATE CANADIAN ACTIONS NOT ANTI-AMERICAN

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Could the minister explain why he and the Canadian ambassador to Washington feel so strongly compelled to protest the report that in recent actions Canada was anti-American, especially in view of the minister's speech in Winnipeg in which he suggested that no special relationship now exists between the two countries.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Well, Mr. Speaker, I did not feel I had protested anything that was contradictory to or in clarification of the Winnipeg speech.

ENERGY

CONSULTATION WITH QUEBEC ON ESTABLISHMENT OF ENRICHED URANIUM PLANT

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Would the minister say to the House whether the Quebec government has officially requested the co-operation of the federal government to develop an operational plan for an enriched uranium plant in the province and, if so, what has been his answer or his terms?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we had some talks with Quebec officials concerning the studies on the establishment of such a plant, but there is no request for the support of the federal government on that aspect of research on uranium in Quebec. We are expecting the results of such a study to consider the opportunity of complying with such a request, but for the moment, there is none.

GOVERNMENT VIEW OF PRODUCTION TARGETS—POSSIBILITY OF PENALTIES FOR FAILURE TO COMPLY WITH REDUCTIONS PROPOSED BY CEMA

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that there is now a surplus of beef, eggs and potatoes in Canada, and in view of the fact that it was just two years ago the minister was asking all producers "to produce to beat the band", I wonder whether the minister intends to follow the policy of two years ago or to bring in a new one?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would check what I said he will find that when I was talking about producing to beat the band, I was talking about cereal grains and similar crops. When the hon. member talks about beef, he knows we are not in a surplus position in Canada, but are still affected by the world supply and world trade agreements which we have. In respect of potatoes, we are talking about perishable crops and I have never told any producer of perishable products to produce to beat the band, but rather to produce for the markets so they would have some hope of selling their products.

Mr. Towers: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the minister stated there must be compliance with the reduction proposed by CEMA, is it the intention of the minister to penalize these people if they do not comply?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, it was agreed by the vast majority of the provincial premiers who were here last week that if producers did not adhere to the new suggestions a penalty program would be initiated.

COAL—CONSULTATION WITH BRITISH COLUMBIA ON PROPOSED DEVELOPMENT OF DEPOSITS ON FEDERAL LAND IN SOUTHEAST KOOTENAY

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Has the minister arranged to meet with the Minister of Mines from British Columbia in order to discuss questions arising out of proposals to develop coal deposits on federally-owned blocks of land in the southeast Kootenay area of British Columbia?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I do not have a date at the moment, although there have been exchanges between my officials and the officials of the British Columbia minister with regard to development of the federal property.

COAL—POSSIBILITY OF COMMENCEMENT OF WORK IN SOUTHEAST KOOTENAY PREPARATORY TO ESTABLISHING INVENTORY OF RESOURCE

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, has the federal government commenced work in the area preparatory to establishing an inventory of coal resources in Canada?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, work has not commenced. There has been a financial appropriation for this purpose. Naturally any development we do in there we seek to do in co-operation with the neighbouring land holders and of course the government of British Columbia.

ACCEPTABILITY OF ALLEGED BEHAVIOUR OF TED PATRICK—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON POSSIBLE CRIMINAL RECORD IN THE UNITED STATES

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Last Thursday the minister took as notice a question I asked regarding the activities of an American, Ted Patrick, who was in Canada, particularly as it relates to the case of Miss Debbie Dudgeon of Orangeville, Ontario. I understand the minister has an answer to the question now.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not have full details of his entry into Canada, but I can assure the hon. member and the House that my information is that he is no longer in Canada and has returned to Los Angeles. Furthermore, our ports of entry people have been alerted to any possibility of his re-entry and if he should attempt to do so appropriate action will be taken.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PREVENT LAY-OFFS OR FIND ALTERNATIVE EMPLOYMENT FOR THOSE AFFECTED

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question either to the Minister of Transport or to the Minister of Labour. In view of substantial lay-offs of railway shop employees announced by CP Rail affecting Winnipeg, Toronto, Montreal, Vancouver and a number of other centres, is the government taking any steps to try to prevent these lay-offs or to find alternative employment for those affected?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, there have been no suggested alternatives that I am aware of so far as any initiative on the part of the Department of Labour is concerned, but I would think that action along this line would more appropriately fall within the jurisdiction of my colleague the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister of Manpower and Immigration have anything to add?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I should like the hon. member to repeat the question.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The minister gets marks for his honesty. My question had to do with announced layoffs of railway shop workers by CP Rail. In case these layoffs cannot be prevented, is the government taking any steps to help these employees find alternative employment?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, the manpower adjustment service officials of the department will be discussing these matters with the railway and the unions involved to offer them all possible services exactly along the lines suggested by the hon. member.

MANPOWER

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—PROPOSED CONTROL OF GRANTS ON A CONSTITUENCY BASIS

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Given the fact that the consideration and granting of OFY grants through the use of management area advisory groups is suffering from a lack of information, advice, control, and any indication of managerial competence on the part of his department, is the minister giving consideration to allotment and control of OFY grants on a local constituency basis where the advisory group would at least have some knowledge of the projects being considered?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think that the informal comments and the reception given the hon. member's suggestion indicate some of the difficulties we face in administering this program.

The basic problem, as I have told many hon. members, is that we do not have the sound statistical base in such detail as to be usable for OFY allocations at the constituency level because we are dealing with a much smaller and special segment of the population and of the unemployed as compared with the broad sector with which we deal in connection with Local Initiatives Program. From that stems the problem of having to make allocations in a broader geographical area, such as labour management areas where the consultation process takes place. Also, it was a choice between giving hon. members the opportunity to name people with whom we would consult or to arbitrarily, as in the past, have the people with whom to consult in the community selected by the departmental staff. This was the compromise that had to be made, but we will do our best to satisfy the local communities.

ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE—REASON FOR CONVERTING TO BILINGUAL INSTITUTION

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): My question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it is the government's policy that our military colleges should be bilingual. Our college at Saint Jean is fully bilingual and RMC is in the process of adopting a bilingual program.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF EXTRA COST OF RURAL HOUSING COMPARED WITH URBAN IN APPLICATION OF $500 GRANT

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): My question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Is there any regulation to eliminate the discrimination whereby a housing grant of $500 is granted to purchasers of urban and rural houses, the discrimination arising as a result of the fact that purchasers of rural houses have to consider additional costs of installation of sewers, water wells, electricity and so forth, thereby raising the cost of their houses by about $10,000 in comparison with urban houses. Has that matter been reconsidered?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I believe that is taken into consideration in the valuation. There is a difference, but the urban homes are usually much more expensive for other reasons. In balance, we try to reach a valuation that applies practically in the area where that ceiling limit is in place.

CANADA BUSINESS CORPORATIONS ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR APPOINTMENT OF DIRECTOR, DEPUTY DIRECTOR AND FOR ADMINISTRATION OF MEASURE—CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) moves that amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-29, respecting Canadian business corporations, be now read the second time and concurred in. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, it may have been decided that there is agreement with the proposal that has been put, but may I point out, with the greatest respect, that there was such a hubbub in the House that Your Honour's voice was completely drowned out and there was no way of hearing what you were saying unless one had the earpiece on. I regret that I did not have mine on. My colleagues tell me that they also could not hear Your Honour, and we do not know what you actually said.

Mr. Speaker: The motion that was read was as follows: The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) moves that amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-29, respecting Canadian business corporations, be now read the second time and concurred in. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): No, Mr. Speaker. The reason I want to make some comments on this matter is that the House is faced with 27 amendments as they appear in Votes and Proceedings and in my view one should note that they were made and accepted in the other place. Bill C-29 was debated at some length on second reading in the House. It had extensive hearings and discussions in the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs and was reported back to the House.

Unfortunately, the report stage and third reading were galloped through the House as the result of a last minute change in the order of business. As I recall, this business had been scheduled for a Monday afternoon in the latter part of January. The committee, of which I am a member, was making a trip to Washington at the time so the business of the House was changed. Bill C-29 was then hurriedly brought in on a Monday afternoon, on which day my colleague the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) was not present—he had piloted the bill through committee—so the bill was passed in a great hurry, without any debate. The penalty comes now, and I must say to those who feel the Senate has no place that this is a clear indication that there is nothing quite so foolish or tyrannical as an intemperate majority, and any highly technical and voluminous bill of this kind requires a second look. Thank goodness our colleagues in the other place gave it that second look, because the bill is now much more workable.

Hon. members opposite, frankly, may not have even cracked the covers of this bill. They do not know about the absolute liabilities which are imposed, with absolute penalties for even innocent acts on the part of directors of corporations. Where the act imposed absolute liability, certainly events took, place. Of course, it was readily apparent to anyone who had any idea of corporate law that the penalties were far too strigent, so the appropriate amendments have been put in. I think they are amendments which all reasonable men would accept. Now the penalties will come into play if a person commits an act without reasonable cause. I invite hon. members to look at the series of amendments wherein time and time again the phrase "without reasonable cause" is repeated. We will have an act which is much more flexible. After all, corporate law is the framework within which a great deal of the economic activity in the country must be carried on. It cannot be made so stringent, so rigid and so bureaucratically hounded that corporations will not come to register and operate under the federal act.

This act is in competition with ten provincial acts, and it need not be said that a corporation has to incorporate under the federal Corporations Act in order to carry on business in any or all parts of Canada. Many provincial acts are very eminent and sensible pieces of legislation; they impose the appropriate degree of control to ensure that there is no dishonesty and that there is the required disclosure where necessary but not unnecessary disclosure.

There are many things required under this act in respect of which, as I told the predecessor of the present minister some years ago, neither the director of corporate affairs nor the minister himself were competent to collate the information obtained or even to interpret it. I remember the hosannas of some starry-eyed new members of this House who thought the bill was going to be the salvation of Canadian business and that this was to be a new charter. I am going back a few years. The funniest thing was that they did not know what they were trying to do, and when they tried to get the information they did not know how to interpret it.

There were a few woolly-minded academics who thought they might be able to get the information, but the act did not provide any means for collecting it; no one had the authority to collate it. Certainly the returns were there, as they are under the act as now amended. They may be examined for a fee, but who will go through the register of all the corporate files to collate this information? The director has not the authority, nor has the minister.

I would say that a good deal of what is alleged to be done under this act—that is, the justification for the reporting and the filing of returns—is empty window-dressing because it is done for no useful purpose. If I am interested in a competitor, I can send my solicitor or his clerk to have a look at the file and bring me the information. I can do that with regard to a number of competitors, whether federal or provincial, by having the appropriate searches made; but I cannot review the industry. I suppose I can, if I want to pay the money and if I know what to do with the information I obtain.

Years ago this was just empty window-dressing, and it still is, but the more rigid the requirements under the Canada Corporations Act, the fewer registrations there will be. This act is not a replacement for a national securities commission act. Somehow, in the bureaucracy of the minister's department, there is the idea that under this act the director of corporations can somehow carry out the role, in some unknown fashion, of the chairman of the Securities Commission of the province of Ontario or its counterparts in the other provinces of Canada. Somehow that idea has gotten abroad, but it is patent nonsense. There is no way this can be done, and I warn the minister or his parliamentary secretary who may be piloting this legislation that the more difficult this act is made, the fewer registrations will take place under it.

One does not have to register under the Canada Corporations Act in any way. I suppose it might be said that for some companies this would have to be done. I suppose if we wanted to start a new bank we would proceed under the letters patent provisions of this act rather than go through the gethsemane of having a private bill passed through parliament, the same as with a pipeline company—that is, an interprovincial pipeline company. Those are the only companies which perforce must come under this act, but an ordinary trading or manufacturing corporation can, frankly, cock a snoot at the director of Canadian corporations or the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): As my colleague from Nova Scotia says, they do now, because provincial acts are more flexible and better for corporate activities: all that is required under the corporate act of a province is registration of incorporation, then an application for registry as a foreign company or extraprovincial company in another jurisdiction and one is in business without the nuisance of the Canada Corporations Act. I suggest—I have suggested this time and time again to the minister—that if he had wanted to do something really worth while for the benefit of the Canadian economy and the benefit of Canadian business, he should have those changes in the Canada Corporations Act which would have allowed corporations effectively to work and desire to be incorporated.

I do not know the percentage of Canadian companies operating under the federal act, but I venture to say that it is much less than 20 per cent of the total. It used to be something less. If it is more, it might be 21 per cent. That is wrong, Mr. Speaker; the reverse should apply. It seems to me that the nature of business in Canada today is that 50 per cent or 60 per cent of corporations and businesses could operate under a federal charter. It is easy to put "Ltd." behind a name. That can mean two truck drivers with two or three trucks, or a couple of plasterers. It does not have to be a huge multinational that operates as a corporation, yet an awful lot of nonsense is written about corporations and a good deal more is said about them.

I say to the government House leader that we will agree to these amendments having second reading as they are an improvement to the bill. I find it strange, however, that the minister would schedule the bill for debate today when the record of proceedings in the other place, where these amendments were discussed, has not been published: the good and valuable work that was done by the hon. Senators who proposed the amendments, and the replies of the minister and his officers, are not available to us. For the government House leader to bring in the bill under these circumstances is sloppy practice. My colleagues and I would have appreciated the courtesy of a few hours to peruse the reasons for the amendments and the contribution of the minister. I do not want to carp on this, but it is part of what we should consider to be the intelligent operation of this House. I think the government House leader and his colleagues have blotted their copybook this afternoon.

Notwithstanding that, Mr. Speaker, having studied these amendments in detail I must say they are acceptable to the official opposition and I hope we can give them second reading. They are an improvement to the bill.

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I only want to make a couple of brief comments in response to the statements of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) with respect to rushing Bill C-29 through report stage and third reading in this chamber. I know the hon. member realizes that report stage is not subject to debate unless an amendment has been filed, which was not the case here. It is not the responsibility of the government to file amendments to its own legislation at report stage. As far as third reading is concerned, there was the opportunity for members to debate the bill at that time. Some hon. members may feel aggrieved by the length of notice given, but the action was completely in accordance with the rules and I believe was taken after discussion among all House leaders. I think the hon. member was not in the chamber at that time, for good and legitimate reasons, but his point is valid.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that the amendments put forward in the other place are good, useful and worth-while. I believe they are a further indication of the kind of concern that the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has brought to the consideration of Bill C-29 in response to representations made in this House and in the committee of the other place. As the hon. member for Edmonton West pointed out, this clearly proves that the Senate has a valuable role to play in terms of having a second look at legislation. The government has no objection whatsoever to the amendments put forward by that body.

In response to the more substantive point made by the hon. member for Edmonton West regarding these specific amendments, I should like to deal with that as quickly as I can. Knowing that the bill has been in the public domain for a long time, the Senate committee worked hard and diligently to consider it in as short a time as possible. There was an extremely broad basis of agreement in the business community, and I think in this House, that it was fundamentally a good bill. The Senate analysed the bill very thoroughly and scrutinized the central issues carefully. They asked good questions and suggested amendments only in respect of provisions they felt strongly about, and they gave full reasons for the amendments they put forward. On the whole, the appearance before them was a pleasant and rewarding experience.

The Senate committee clearly approved the central goals of the bill, that is, to rid the law of useless formalities, to simplify administration, to clarify the substantive rules of corporation law and, in general, to achieve a fair balance between management and shareholders that gives managers broad powers but that, at the same time, furnishes remedies to shareholders in order to enable them to check any management abuses.

The specific amendments made by the Senate fall into three broad categories: first, changes of wording to clarify a technical error or ambiguity; second, substantive changes concerning close corporations, resident Canadian directors and investigations; third, amendments to the strict liability penal provisions to permit a defence of reasonable excuse for failure to comply with the law.

The first of the wording changes, which concerns item 6 of the schedule of the bill, is unanimously agreed by all concerned to be an essential technical amendment to clarify a drafting error in the present bill which would limit the National Energy Board's licensing powers to the granting of a licence only to a corporation already holding a licence, precluding a new corporation from obtaining a licence to operate a pipeline.

The other significant wording changes concern clause 4 which is amended to clarify a constitutional uncertainty implied by the present draft, and also clauses 180, 181 and 182 which are amended to make certain that in case of amalgamation or continuance an individual who first becomes a director or officer of a corporation after an amalgamation or continuance is not personally liable for acts of directors and officers of a pertinent corporation before the amalgamation or continuance.

In its second group of amendments, the Senate modified clause 21 to increase the privacy of shareholders in closely-held corporations and amended clauses 110 and 116 to clarify the liability of directors in connection with the delegation of their functions to committees of directors and to officers. The Senate also amended clause 222 to ensure that an ex parte application for an investigation of a corporation must be conducted in private, to preclude any person from using this remedy as a device to secure groundless publicity.

Similarly, the Senate amended clauses 106(1) and 109(3) to empower the remaining directors of a corporation, even without the required Canadian majority, to fill a vacancy caused by the death or resignation of a Canadian director. The stated goal of the amendment is not to change existing policy or to water down the effectiveness of the Canadian director provisions but, rather, to make them work better by simplifying the process of maintaining a majority of Canadian directors on the board.

In the third group, the Senate amended several strict liability penal sanctions to permit an accused to establish that he has reasonable cause for not complying with the law. The department officials and I did not object strongly to these amendments, pointing out that the corporation law is not based on the criminal power, and therefore that the criminal sanctions serve only as a veiled threat to secure compliance, and that the bill relies mainly for its enforcement not on criminal sanctions but, instead, on effective civil and administrative remedies which make the corporation law as self-enforcing as possible.

The Senate committee studied the bill professionally, objectively and fairly, limiting their amendments to what they strongly felt were substantive improvements. We therefore agreed and I agreed on behalf of the government, to the changes recommended by the Senate committee that I have already outlined.

As I mentioned during the second reading debate in this chamber, the development process that has led up to today's debate on the Canada business corporations bill has lasted eight years. Changes were made at the proposals stage, the first bill stage, during House committee hearings and during the Senate committee hearings. I believe all who are familiar with the bill acknowledge that it is a very good bill. We have no illusions about developing a perfect bill that will please everyone and will resolve all problems. We think, therefore, parliament should consider the corporation law revision not as a secular process but, rather, as an annual process, to ensure that federal corporation law will not once again become as outdated as the present Canada Corporations Act.

Indeed, having already given the House committee an undertaking to crystallize at least one regulation as statute law within the next year, and knowing that further technical difficulties will arise as we acquire experience working with the bill, we will introduce a bill next year to deal with those issues. Through this process we compel the department to remain responsive to suggestions and also ensure that the law will be better adapted to changing economic and social conditions. As I said, the Senate committee in making its recommendations acted objectively, fairly and reasonably, arguing clearly and forcefully for each proposed amendment. I found it impossible not to be responsive to their suggestions, which I thought were consistent with the over-all development of this bill.

In conclusion, I repeat that this bill has been a long time in preparation. It is well structured, clearly drafted, comprehensive, imaginative and, above all, practical. I therefore urge all members of this House to support its passage.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I fully agree with one complaint made by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). I think it is unfair to ask us on such short notice to deal with one motion making 27 amendments to this massive bill. These are amendments made by Their Honours in the other place. I was assured through the usual channels that they were just administrative amendments and that we did not need to concern ourselves about them. I confess that I have not done the homework on them that I ought to have done.

Mr. Stanfield: Tut, tut!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I hear my hon. friend from Halifax making little remarks which suggest that it is bad to make that kind of confession.

Mr. Stanfield: But it is good for the soul.

[Mr. Cafik.]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is good for the soul. By referring to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) as the hon. member from Halifax, I was not downgrading him: to me, anybody who comes Nova Scotia is an important person. It was a friendly reference.

I looked at the amendments while the hon. member for Edmonton West and the parliamentary secretary were speaking, and I found that six are so annoying that I must decline the parliamentary secretary's request to support the motion approving them. It strikes me that these are amendments we might expect from the other place. Frankly, I do not like them. I object to six amendments; two on page 136, two on page 137, one on page 139 and one on page 140. In all six cases the Senate wants to change the law so that action, if necessary, can be taken only against a corporation and not against its directors or officers. In every one of the six amendments to which I have referred, the original words "or its directors or officers" have been deleted.

Having listened to the soothing words of the parliamentary secretary, I was puzzled to discover that in two instances those words were actually written in the bill by the committee of this House which considered it. In other words, the inclusion of those words was not accidental; the bill which this House sent to the other place included the provision that in certain instances a conviction could be sought against a corporation or against its officers or directors. Considering the number of officers and directors sitting in the other place, I am not surprised by what has been done. They object to this provision in the law.

I have in mind the fact that in some countries in recent years it has been recognized that when companies break the law, the companies should suffer but so should some of the executives who are responsible for their decisions. Likewise, in this country we face what has been called the dredging scandal. I suggest that perhaps that scandal is not really within the confines of the government; it is a scandal within the confines of certain corporations. I suggest that when bad decisions are made by corporations, they are actually made by officers or directors of the corporations, and those officers or directors should be subject to the penalties of the law. Therefore, I do not like what the Senate did in deleting the references to directors or officers of companies in the six places to which I have referred.

Perhaps I shall find still other of the 27 amendments offensive. I must now say that the assurance I was given earlier, namely, that these amendments are administrative and need not cause us any concern, does not wash as far as I am concerned. So even if all I can do is shout "On division" when the question is put, that is what I shall do to register my opposition to the changes which the Senate made to the bill which the House of Commons sent to it.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to the previous speaker's remarks and note that he has finally learned the facts about the amendments proposed by the Senate. These amendments are significant and I am pleased that the Senate has proposed them, because it appears that the other place has greater insight, if you like, or perhaps is more persuasive than the government, the minister or backbenchers were on the committee which dealt with this bill. The fact is, a proper study was not made of this bill before it was passed by the committee: the entire emphasis was one of rush. When questioning was attempted, time and again the Liberal members of the committee interrupted and said, "Let's get on with passing the bill."

It is true the bill is not one with which we can make headlines. At the same time, however, as responsible members it is unfortunate that the Liberal caucus did not see fit to give this bill adequate study before referring it back at report stage to this House. That is why I am pleased the other place at least caught some of the amendments that were very urgently required when the bill was before the committee.

I was pleased to hear the parliamentary secretary say today that a new bill is being proposed to amend the one we are passing, and that the new bill will be introduced within a year. I am hopeful that some of the amendments that should be made in this bill will be made in the new bill. It is a ridiculous way to deal with legislation by introducing a bill, proposing amendments both in the House and in committee, then the bill is finally reported back to this House, receives third reading, goes to the other place and still more amendments are made to it. As the hon. member who spoke before me indicated, the amendments in the other place reverse some of the amendments proposed by the minister when the bill was at the committee stage. Is this any way to give those who would incorporate companies in this country a feeling of confidence in the administration of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs?

I am surprised the minister is not here today to explain some of these amendments and to point out that in spite of the fact he did not propose them in committee, he is willing to live with them. I say I am surprised; however, on reflection I am not very surprised. I believe that if the minister were here today he would be genuinely humiliated by having to face this House and explain amendments made in the other place as opposed to the bill being properly dealt with in his own caucus. Speaking about clout, this is obviously one minister who has very little clout, certainly on the Senate side of the Liberal caucus.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No. On division.

Motion agreed to, amendments read the second time and concurred in.

Environmental Contaminants Act

ENVIRONMENTAL CONTAMINANTS ACT

MEASURES TO PROTECT HUMAN HEALTH AND ENVIRONMENT FROM CONTAMINANTS

The House resumed from Friday, March 21, 1975, consideration of the motion of Mr. Sharp (for the Minister of the Environment) That Bill C-25, to protect human health and the environment from substances that contaminate the environment; be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Fairweather (p. 2251).

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank hon. members opposite for their very construction criticisms of this bill. I gladly accept these criticisms and I am certain that they will be very useful to me in administering the act when it is passed by the House.

I would have liked to reply point by point to some suggestions and the criticisms that have been made, but instead, I shall take advantage of the study of the bill by the committee on fisheries and forestry to do so. Today, I would simply like to say that when hon. members made suggestions about Bill C-25, they omitted to consider the other acts under which we may act to protect human health or the environment, which include the Hazardous Products Act, the Pest Control Products Act and the Clean Air Act, under which, I might mention, we must prove a real health hazard; all these acts enable us to take measures. However, we needed a new bill in which, as you will note, we ask only for residual powers to fill the gaps of certain federal and provincial acts.

As I have already explained, Bill C-25 concerns suspicious substances of which there might be traces in eco-systems. These are substances which are not biodegradable, and their accumulation may eventually have damaging effects on the environment or create health hazards. Mr. Speaker, we needed this new bill to deal with suspicious substances, which sometimes have minimal or indirect effects on health or the environment.

We had to obtain the authority to make additional studies on these substances which might be traced in the food chain, the life cycle or the atmosphere.

Some of those substances have already been identified. We mentioned freon, SO_2, cadmium and recently we discussed at length the indirect effects of asbestos fibres inhalation on the health of workers.

This measure is not of the same generation as those aimed at eradicating pollution, but it is a preventive measure. We shall identify suspicious substances and then analyze them. We want to check the presence of those substances in all kinds of manufactured products. This is why we are seeking this new authority.

The hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark) feels that under this bill I should request information on every manufactured product. I am not sure whether the hon. member realizes the volume of paperwork that would be involved if I were to request information on each and every manufactured product. I believe their number totals 30,000 a year.

It is absolutely impossible to examine each one of these products within reasonable time. The processing of data would require a very large staff, because I would have to tell manufacturers within a reasonable time frame: You may now go ahead with the manufacturing of such or such a product, because close scrutiny showed that the manufactured products involved contain no suspicious substance that would affect the environment.

Therefore, I am seeking authority to request complete information on substances that we feel may constitute a danger. The hon. member for Rocky Mountain wonders how I will go about identifying such substances, and proposes, or rather he feels that I will rely on messages carried by birds.

Mr. Speaker, I love birds, and if by any chance they perched on my shoulder, as the hon. member suggested, I wish it were only to bring good news. I therefore will not trust birds to bring me information on suspicious substances. He knows very well I would not trust them. At any rate, I wish they kept on carrying good news about the environment.

I will know substances are suspicious from research work carried around the world. I named some of these substances: freon, cadmium, SO_2 and certain other products we feel may indirectly affect the environment or human health. As soon as we suspect one substance may be dangerous, we will endeavour to analyze it and find out which manufactured product uses it in order to know what quantity of this suspicious substance would thus be present in the environment, in eco-systems, in the food chain or in the atmosphere.

Therefore I must limit myself to such suspicious substances. I cannot examine all the chemicals that are manufactured in this country. Therefore, following such scientific research work, following the observations of scientists or medical doctors, we will decide whether the study of a certain substance or of a certain product should be advisable. Then, after we have gathered sufficient information, we will be able to enact regulations to limit their use and prohibit them if they are dangerous. We may also prohibit their export or regulate their use one way or the other.

The hon. member, in the same spirit, would also like me to give in the bill a list of these suspicious substances. I might be able to do it and I will consider his proposal. But here again, I should like to warn him about the danger of claiming without sufficient proof that such a substance is suspicious. After all, one should proceed with some caution in regulating the use of certain products because considerable damage could obviously be caused to industry that could not be justified afterwards. Therefore, I am only asking to be able to proceed with the caution normally shown by governments.

The hon. member says that all I am asking for is a complaints office. If I were, for instance, responsible for the police, I would only have a complaints office, and then, I would be unable to take action. I put this question to him: should I, as a result of complaints, put everyone in jail? That is precisely what I want to avoid. If I get complaints, I want to be able to look into them and then, request the authority to take action.

[Mr. Sauvé.]

I should also like to deal with another aspect of the question. The hon. member claimed to be very concerned about the authority of the Environment Department. He objects to my consulting other departments, other government agencies, at the various stages of the studies I shall have to make of some of those substances. He sees weakness in the obligation I want to assume of consulting departments, agencies and provincial governments. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, that is no indication of weakness. Might I remind the hon. member that the department and the Minister of the Environment hold their authority from the cabinet itself which, on December 20th, 1973, promulgated the policy whereby all government departments and agencies must seek the advice of the Department of the Environment on matters falling within its jurisdiction. Moreover, they must seek the advice of the Department of the Environment before undertaking any major project which might affect or have any bearing whatesoever on the environment.

Mr. Speaker, I believe I have answered briefly and, I am sure, completely the objections of the hon. members on the other side of the House to this bill being given second reading. I believe my explanations should suffice at this point in the study of the bill. Consequently, I suggest and request of the House that it pass the motion and refer Bill C-25 to the standing committee on fisheries and forestry for consideration. May I assure my hon. colleagues that at other stages of this bill I shall welcome any and all amendments or suggestions that conform with the spirit of the bill and can improve it.

WEST COAST PORTS OPERATIONS ACT, 1975

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR RESUMPTION OF LONGSHORING OPERATIONS ON THE WEST COAST

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour) moved that Bill C-56, to provide for the resumption and continuation of longshoring and related operations at ports on the west coast of Canada, be read the second time and referred to committee of the whole.

He said: Mr. Speaker, hon. members will be aware that the bill just introduced for second reading contains the government's legislative proposals respecting longshoring and related operations at ports on the west coast. I shall refer to these proposals in some detail a little later, but first it would be helpful and appropriate to recall some of the pertinent background facts and events which have led to the introduction of these proposals.

The West Coast Ports Operations Act, 1975, has as its principal subject some 4,000 non-supervisory and supervisory longshoremen, represented by the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, and the British Columbia Maritime Employers Association, representing some 61 companies. As hon. members realize, we are contending here with two distinctly separate yet related dispute situations. With respect to the non-supervisory longshoremen, who are represented by seven locals of the ILWU, a legal strike began on March 2 after unsuccessful attempts to negotiate a revision of their collective agreement which expired on December 31, 1974.

It should be pointed out that during negotiations both the union and the employer made firm recommendations that no conciliation board or conciliation commissioner should be appointed in these disputes. In fact, it was suggested by the parties that possibly conciliation board reports were partially to blame for past strikes in the port of Vancouver, as such reports were invariably rejected by one side or the other and a strike ensued. The parties felt confident that, if left to their own devices, settlement could be reached in direct negotiations without resort to strike or lockout. To give the parties full opportunity to work out a mutually arrived at settlement, the conciliation procedures were waived and the parties so notified on December 31, 1974.

The parties resumed direct negotiations early in the new year which reached an impasse, and on January 23 the union membership voted heavily in favour of strike action. Negotiations resumed following the taking of a strike vote on January 23, carried on for some time, and after a final week of very intensive negotiations an impasse was reached on March 1; on March 2 the union called a legal strike affecting dock operations at 11 ports: Vancouver, Victoria, New Westminster, Prince Rupert, Nanaimo, Port Alberni, Chemainus, Harmac, Crofton, Cowichan Bay and Squamish.

Five days later, William Kelly, my department's assistant deputy minister for industrial relations, was appointed as mediator in the dispute and on March 16, following an intensive mediation session, succeeded in bringing the parties to a settlement—a settlement subject to ratification by the union membership. So at this stage there was reason for optimism, and particularly so when a union caucus of 55 delegates subsequently voted 67 per cent in favour of endorsing the terms of the settlement. However, as we now know, this was not the attitude of the union membership, of whom some 55 per cent voted to reject the mediated settlement. Thus, the strike continued and so, too, continued the disruption and damage not only to many sectors of the Canadian economy but also to those foreign countries suffering unfulfilled contracts, particularly grain contracts.

Talking of economic damage, as we know the Canadian Wheat Board has undertaken substantial commitments to many overseas customers, of whom Japan has already had to make alternative arrangements. Not only have our shipments fallen seriously behind—by some 60 million bushels during the current grain year—but our grain transportation facilities, the farmers and other sectors are now facing severe strains which cannot be permitted to continue.

In my opinion, the mediated settlement was a most reasonable settlement and I find it impossible to convince myself of the validity of its final rejection by the union membership. This rejected package provided for a wage increase of $1.95 an hour over two years, $1.15 in the first year and 80 cents in the second.

Members will agree that it is a most difficult decision for a Minister of Labour to conclude that collective bargaining has run its full course, that other measures must be taken to terminate a dispute having a serious effect on the economy of a nation, and in this instance having worldwide effects when starving people are asking for aid.

Mr. Woolliams: That is what I said last week.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): We are stealing your line and find it very applicable in this particular case.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): One might ask, would a further mediation attempt be successful? On past experience I could not offer hope of early resolution of this dispute if this course of action were followed. In the 1969-70 dispute between the same parties, mediated settlements, with the participation of Mr. Kelly, were obtained three times and rejected by the union before a fourth mediated settlement was subsequently ratified. In terms of economic damage already sustained in this particular dispute, we cannot afford the time to go through that type of procedure if only to suffer the same result.

While it is personally repugnant to me to introduce legislation curtailing the collective bargaining process, I am sure hon. members will agree we have reached the stage in this dispute where there is no alternative.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I would now refer to the second dispute situation involving 13 west coast stevedoring companies and the ship and dock foremen of local 514 of the ILWU. This case surrounds, in part, the application of local 514 for certification by the Canada Labour Relations Board and the parties' attempts to negotiate a first contract. Some eight months ago the union was certified by the board as bargaining agent for units of foremen of 12 or 13 companies. The exception at that time involved Pacific Coast Terminals Limited which was subsequently certified in January of this year.

However, these certifications shortly became the subject of proceedings instituted in the Federal Court by the employers against the decisions of the Canada Labour Relations Board. Nonetheless, the parties held separate and joint meetings in direct negotiations which were unsuccessful to the extent that a conciliation officer was appointed to deal with the 13 collective bargaining disputes. Again—and I am still talking about the foremen—a settlement was not to be forthcoming and the union had the right to strike as of January 8. No further conciliation efforts were advanced. Further inability to reach an agreement culminated March 22 in the foremen setting up picket lines at all 13 company locations involved.

I have already briefly referred to the damaging situation which now exists as a result of the first mentioned strike. That this situation cannot be allowed to continue is self-evident. Therefore, the West Coast Ports Operations Act, 1975, orders the immediate resumption of both non-supervisory and supervisory longshoring and related operations.

With respect to the strike of non-supervisory employees, their strike will cease immediately on the coming into force of this legislation and they will return to work under the terms of their collective agreement which expired December 31, 1974. This extended collective agreement will expire on December 31, 1976, or whenever a new agreement or an amended agreement comes into force before that date. No strike or lockout is to be permitted during the entire term of this extended agreement. An arbitrator is to be appointed to whom will be referred all matters relating to the amendment and revision of the collective agreement that are in dispute. The arbitrator's decisions, together with other amendments previously agreed to by the parties, will constitute a new collective agreement that will be in effect from January 1, 1975.

With respect to the dispute involving the supervisory employees of local 514, their right to strike will cease immediately on the coming into force of this legislation and they will also return to work on the same terms and conditions that applied before the work stoppage. No company may alter any term or condition without union agreement. No strike or lockout is to be permitted prior to the establishment of a collective agreement. An arbitrator is to be appointed to whom will be referred all matters that are in dispute between the companies and the union.

That, Mr. Speaker, is in essence my remarks and I would ask for the approval of this House.

● (1610)

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, in beginning may I say as clearly as I can that it is a matter of deep regret that once again parliament is called upon to legislate back to work workers who are legally on strike. I am sure all hon. members would wish it were otherwise, but the fact remains that in the absence of effective procedures to resolve disputes between management and labour that affect the national interest, legislation of this nature is not only necessary, it is inevitable. It is inevitable because there comes a point when the rights of the parties to a dispute—I refer especially to the right of lockout and the right to strike—can no longer be permitted to trespass on that greater right shared by all of the public, that irreparable damage to the national interest cannot be permitted to continue.

I recognize that it is not always easy to resolve the ever present conflict between the two positions. This is a free country and Canadians have recognized that a part of that freedom is the right to strike in furtherance of the demands of working people in this country. But no right is absolute in a civil society. I know this is recognized by the majority of labour leaders. I believe it is recognized by the vast majority of the millions of Canadians who make up the work force of this nation.

[Mr. Munro (Hamilton East).]

What has not been recognized by this government is that it has an obligation to establish a coherent procedure which will result in a fair wage and fair conditions of work without recourse to crippling strikes that deny essential services and drive destructively at the very substance of the national interest. As all members know, a public interest disputes commission has long been advocated by this party. The government response is that it will not work; but to date the government has offered nothing in its place. If the past few years have shown anything, it has been that in the absence of some agreement between management, labour and government whereby all three accept the responsibility to avoid the intolerable effects of certain strikes on the national interest, parliament will be recalled again and again to resolve the difficulty on an ad hoc basis.

This self-evident truth is, in fact, shared by all political parties. The Liberal government has either invoked existing legislation or introduced special legislation four times since August, 1972, to restore grain movements, shipping and transportation. During the debate in 1973 to restore rail movement, the then leader of the New Democratic Party said:

> We, of course, agree that parliament has a duty to the people of Canada and to the public interest, and that there comes a point in a strike such as a national railway strike at which members of parliament must take the responsibility of making certain that rail operations are resumed so that the harm, the difficulties, the hardship caused by the strike are ended.

Recently, in British Columbia, the NDP premier of that province tossed all his former rhetoric to the winds and swiftly introduced legislation ending a strike of municipal firemen. He knew, and everyone knew, that an essential service cannot be withdrawn. It is easy to say it is difficult to determine what is an essential service or what is destructive of the national interest, but this argument is nonsense and is refuted by the practice of all governments, of whatever political stripe, acting by legislation in such cases. The tragedy is that so often so much damage is done when it could be averted before the event. But this will not happen until all of us in Canada face the facts of life and adjust our bargaining procedures accordingly. Real freedom is only enjoyed within civil society. Chaos is not freedom; it is the breakdown of a civil society and it creates a climate where, in desperation, people will cry for order even at the expense of their liberties.

Clearly, in the case before us, the national interest is gravely affected. It is in the national interest that Canada deliver its grain shipments, and on time. It is also in the national interest that the grain producers of Canada obtain the best price for that grain. As hon. members know, the inability to meet our delivery commitments has resulted in the grain producers being caught in a falling price situation, and this loss is borne not by the nation at large but by one segment of the nation.

The demurrage charges, mounting in the millions, are paid for by the grain producers. The hon. member for Skeena (Mrs. Campagnolo) chided us for speaking of grain last Wednesday last. The fact is that last Wednesday we had every expectation that the longshoremen's strike would be settled satisfactorily, and there was no need to talk about the great damage to other sectors of the economy if the ports were closed. That is now the unhappy result; but it was proper that hon. members made clear how unfair it is to allow one group in Canada to suffer the largest portion of economic loss.

I remind all hon. members that no grain has moved since February 17. For several weeks the ports have been closed to all shipping. Ninety-three ships are now waiting for cargoes on the west coast. Since August 1, 1974, over 40 per cent of all ordinary grain loading days have been lost because of work stoppages. Increasingly, other workers—not involved in the dispute are being laid off as a direct result of the strikes. It is not just that there is now a national emergency; the national interest has been disastrously affected for many weeks, and during this long time the government has stood by, mouthing platitudes about the right to strike while the damage to the national interest mounted day by day.

Apart completely from the government's long inability to devise better procedures for settling industrial disputes, the effect of inflation is directly affecting the entire climate of negotiations. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) knows, because he has said it often enough, inflation threatens the very fabric of our society. It is not difficult to understand why workers, especially those at the lower end of the pay scale, are demanding what seem to be absolutely incredible percentage increases. But the reason is plain: they have no confidence in the future.

It is not hard to understand why usually quiescent unions are now militant, and it ought not to be wondered at that a concomitant of lack of confidence is a rank and file refusal to abide by the recommendations of their own negotiating teams. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) said in September:

> Whether we succeed in realizing our great potential depends mainly on ourselves. One way or another a balance is going to be struck in the allocation of shares of the national income between the various sectors of the economy. We can come together and seek to strike a fair and reasonable balance between such elements as wages, prices and profits through a process of consensus which will make possible continued strong growth of national income to the benefit of us all. Alternatively, we can allow the balance to be determined by the process of prolonged and bitter industrial strife, which could leave everyone considerably worse off by substantially reducing the size of the pie that is available to be shared between us.

It ought to be obvious that we are now, in fact, experiencing just what the Minister of Finance predicted. But he made that speech in September. The months have passed. The search for the elusive consensus continues; but incredibly those who are being consulted have no idea whatsoever what the government believes is a "fair and reasonable balance". We have no idea what the government's objectives are. But one thing is so terribly clear: seven months after the Minister of Finance's speech the government is still refusing to show any leadership. Perhaps this is borne from a sense of impotence or an inability to take the tough decisions that are needed. I suggest it is also due to a sense of unwarranted pessimism on the part of the government which reveals a certain lack of faith in Canadians to meet a challenge.

Last year the Prime Minister responded to the crisis of inflation with the warning: You cannot ask for common restraint because people will not co-operate. Certainly some people will cheat on their neighbours, but we have not been, and are not now, a nation of cheaters; and we are not a nation of cowards unable to brace ourselves to accept our responsibilities.

Recently, responding to the deepening crisis in the economy, the Prime Minister complained that it is difficult to do anything because nobody trusts the government any more. Certainly the government has to have the trust of the public, to lead effectively. But its own determined action must be the basis of the trust. This government recently received a majority mandate. The Prime Minister has been treated very generously by the people of Canada and instead of complaining about some undefined meanness in our national spirit he should start employing the good will his government still enjoys before it is wasted on the barren ground of timidity.

Mr. Speaker, there is no question that we are faced with a national emergency. What is required is a national response. Every Canadian is involved in that response. The measure of the civility of our society is very much at stake now and will be in the coming months. Leadership is called for, not just from the government but from the leaders of all parts of our society.

My party supports this bill today because it is necessary to do so. But we also say to the Prime Minister, show us what you wish to accomplish; give us some idea of how you wish us to respond; make it clear to all Canadians that the best is being demanded of us, not the worst. I say to the right hon. gentleman, through you, Mr. Speaker, that we will not be found wanting.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, it is no surprise to anyone in our country to learn that the NDP, whether at the federal level or at the provincial level, has a profound disposition to oppose legislation that forces working men and women back to work under any circumstances. We believe that one of the essential aspects of a free society is the right of men and women to withdraw their services if they feel that the circumstances under which they are working are unsatisfactory to them. It is the basic right of any free society, and it must only be with the greatest degree of reluctance that any person or party committed to this idea would support legislation involving the abridgement of this basic right, because that is exactly what is involved and we in parliament have to face the situation if that course of action is taken.

The only possible circumstance under which, in our view, there would be justification for taking away this fundamental right would be something that would come under the rubric of the national interest. The national interest, like nationalism and a number of other concepts, is used frequently to disguise quite perfidious kinds of actions, so that when you say you are acting in the national interest it seems to me there is a basic obligation to spell out in some detail at least what you have in mind.

I am now saying, on behalf of our party, that we will support this legislation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Therefore, it seems to me that we have an important obligation to say why we are supporting it. The reason, I think, has been outlined by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) and it is a plausible and acceptable case in the immediate circumstance; I say that to the minister.

Tied up on the west coast of Canada are some 93 ships representing various interests of a variety of exporters and affecting many parts of the country, affecting people who are exporting from the heartland of Canada as well as the west coast, but particularly affecting the people responsible for the growing of grain in our prairie provinces. The grain shipments above all—this is not to say the others are not of some importance—affect a major region of Canada in terms of our being able to keep our trading commitments and in terms of other countries' perceptions of our nation as a trader, our sense of reliability in trade matters in general. Therefore, because of the importance of shipping in general, and of grain shipments in particular to people with whom we have entered into important contractual arrangements, we are going to accept this legislation although with great reluctance.

I want to make some comments on the issue of strikes because the spokesman for the Conservative Party who preceded me, as well as the minister and many members in the House and people outside, are rightly concerned about strikes in Canada at this time and there is an increasing number of contracts, particularly this year, with which the federal government will have to deal. This applies also in the private sector.

I would like to make the point, with regard to strikes that we should keep in mind the fact that a strike is not necessarily an evil or a bad thing. A strike is entered into, on the part of people who are in our work force, as a last resort; it is an expression of profound dissatisfaction with their working circumstances. If it leads ultimately to a settlement that has not been reached on the basis of some kind of negotiation—and most settlements are reached independently of the strike—and if the strike is used as a weapon to bring about a settlement, the result in the long run may be much more acceptable to both parties, and therefore the strike is not necessarily a bad thing.

An hon. Member: Both parties?

Mr. Broadbent: Indeed, to both parties. If a strike comes to an end at some time because the two parties decide finally, in the last process of the negotiations, to come to a settlement—

An hon. Member: One side gives in.

Mr. Broadbent: Of course one side gives in, as the hon. member says. That is one of the inevitable results of a successful strike. The point I am making is that this happens as opposed to settlements in some societies.

If I understand part of the proposal advocated by the Conservative Party, if we are going to take away the right to strike of certain sectors we will take away their weapon of last resort. I say to them in all seriousness that one of the consequences of that will most likely be, not a greater sense of harmony in work relationships, not greater acceptance of contractual arrangements, but it will in fact lead to more conflict, more illegal work stoppages and more illegal strikes.

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

Mr. Broadbent: That is what it will mean, not less disharmony in society. I want to make that point as clearly and unequivocally as I can because many people both inside and outside the House tend to regard strikes as an intrinsic evil. I repeat that it is not necessarily an evil. A strike is an aspect of a free society and it has an important social function which, when it leads to an agreement which is ultimately acceptable to the workers involved, could produce more harmony in the long run in our work force than an alternative proposal which would prohibit strikes, which in my judgment could lead to a larger number of outbreaks and a larger number of cessations of work.

● (1630)

In saying that we are accepting this bill at second reading, I want to make it clear that we reserve final judgment on it precisely because we find one major flaw in it, and I want at this point to appeal directly to the Minister of Labour on this issue. It seems to us that while it is in the national interest, for reasons I have already given, to bring this strike to an end, it is equally the case that it is unfair to force the longshoremen on the west coast back to work for wages which they are now receiving and which refer to their previous contract. The minister, I think, agrees with what I am saying.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): What is the answer?

Mr. Broadbent: I would like to suggest an answer. When we get to the committee stage I will urge the government to embody, if it agrees with my answer, my proposal in the form of an amendment. We in the New Democratic Party believe that the floor from which the arbitrators should work should be that reached in agreement by the negotiators in the most recently negotiated settlement rejected by the majority of the workers. That should be the floor beyond which an arbitrated settlement should not go.

An hon. Member: They turned it down.

Mr. Broadbent: The minister indicates that he does not agree with that. We think that if we take away the right to strike and send workers back, the very least we can do is make sure that the wages they will receive under the new settlement are not lower than those which their negotiators most recently found to be acceptable. The minister shakes his head to our proposal. Perhaps at committee stage he will explain why, because earlier he agreed in principle, as I understand it, that there should be some provision in the bill which would make it possible for the workers to go back to work under conditions somewhat improved from those they currently experience in terms of their old contract.

I shall conclude my remarks on precisely that point. We support the bill, reluctantly, on second reading because we must get the ships moving again on the west coast. We will suggest, and we suggest now, that the government act at committee stage to amend the bill to improve the conditions under which the workers will go back, and we reserve our final judgment on the bill depending on the course of action taken at that time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) wishes to ask a question of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent). Will the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby accept a question at this time?

Mr. Broadbent: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Woolliams: I am very pleased that the parliamentary leader of the New Democratic Party takes such a reasonable position. In regard to those unique industries where the national interest is at stake, does he believe, or does his party believe that there is any formula other than the right to strike which would be fair to management and fair to labour? Does he believe there could be devised any other formula?

Mr. Broadbent: Not wanting to enter into a prolonged debate with the hon. member, I will try to answer very briefly, with my present knowledge and from experience gained in Canada and abroad, my quick answer is no. I will make a supplementary point and then conclude. My reason for answering "No" is that the right to strike is a basic right of freedom to work or not to work. If a strike occurs in a sector of the economy where at any time, either at the provincial level or the federal level, it is decided that the national interest is being infringed upon, then we come together as we are here, reluctantly, this afternoon and effect a legislated settlement. I think that is the ultimate solution and it is preferable to the removal of the right to strike.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to state very briefly my position and that of my party on Bill C-26, which deals again with problems in western ports.

Mr. Speaker, a special piece of legislation was adopted by this Parliament in October 1974 to deal with a labour dispute, namely to force striking grain handlers in western ports back to work and extend the term of their collective agreement to November 1975.

At that time, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) made practically the same statement as today. He introduced a measure to deal with a somewhat unusual situation and force workers back to work, claiming that he was acting in the best interests of Canada.

I remember taking part in the debate and supporting the legislation in the interest of all Canadians, while deploring the fact that Parliament had to intervene again in a labour dispute.

Last week, we had a special debate on a labour dispute on the west coast. During this debate, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) stated most emphatically that Parliament had no intention whatever of depriving workers of the right to strike which Parliament itself had granted to them. Speaking about workers he said, for instance, as one can read on page 4276 of Hansard:

● (1640)

MR. CHRÉTIEN: Parliament gave them that right, and I believe in collective bargaining. What has happened in respect of this strike is another example of the fact that if you are patient enough you can resolve problems.

I am also satisfied that it is a good principle. There comes a time when patience fails. Emergencies need remedies and measures have to be taken. I keep on with the quotation:

In addition to that, even if I had settled that strike last week, or at the beginning of this week, it would have done absolutely nothing to change the situation in respect of wheat movement out of the port of Vancouver, because the longshoremen were on strike and I have no responsibility for them.

And he added the following:

In any event, the pressure was not yet that great. Had I waited for the pressure I might have waited until next week.

. . . the minister was speaking about this week. I resume the quotation:

There would certainly be more pressure next week if the longshoremen were no longer on strike.

Therefore "next week" is now and we still have this strike which still goes on, as the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) predicted.

Now it is not out of sheer wantonness, I know, that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) introduces a measure to force the workers, who go on strike legally and are using a right which was granted to them, to go back to work, even if negotiations go on, if they continue to try to find an agreement so that the Vancouver port and western ports may be kept busy, and that our international trade may not suffer too many losses.

Now there is once more evidence of the existence of conflicts throughout Canada. We feel as though we were on a volcano. As soon as a strike is settled in one area, others flare up and the fight goes on, which shows again the uneaseness that exists between the rights recognized by government authorities as to labour capital and money capital. I have the clear impression that the government is braver when it has to pass legislation concerning labour capital than when it deals with financial interests.

For once I would like to go at the bottom of things instead of laying all the blames on workers. As for the indexation formula, we hear little else these days. Driving from my home to Ottawa earlier today, I heard a 90-minute radio program during which reference was made to indexation. I do not at all believe in that formula as an effective solution to our problems. We do not yet have any proof. When salary increases are granted to a group of workers, because prices are continuing to rise, the industries or companies which pay higher salaries boost their prices. It is not the sole cause of price increases, there are also other causes which will have to be analyzed. Salaries are not the only cause of the cost of living increase, of inflation, but it is one of them.

Under the circumstances, workers who are not guaranteed better wages or are not assured that their income tax will be reduced, exert some pressures and use the strike to try and have their rights acknowledged. And you have to do it again after some time. It is always the same story, you have to do it again. Therefore indexing is not an appropriate system.

Now, I ask the Minister of Labour to have his officials make a close examination of the relations between labour capital and money capital in this industry, and to ensure that there be a fair share, so that companies do not grow wealthy at the expense of labour. We should make sure that companies be entitled to a reasonable profit and that the difference to given to labour. We should associate them in some way to the development of their firms. I believe that this would be the best system to ensure peace between labour capital and money capital, because both would work in harmony. Both would have some assurance, because they would find a lot of interest in working together instead of ever being at variance.

Given the circumstances, I think it is necessary that this legislation should pass as soon as possible, so that work and operations may start again. As it has been said before, we should not stop at that. After operations have resumed we should continue to concern ourselves with all these problems, so as to stop the rising of new conflicts within three, six months or a year.

Mr. Speaker, I support and my party will support this bill for the reasons I have just explained. But I do not give any assurance for the future, if nothing is done to create a greater understanding between the two forms of capital which are necessary for Canada. Then, we shall have to take the necessary measures to force the government into facing money capital, if it goes on taking unfair advantage of labour in this country.

[English]

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, recognizing that this measure has to be dealt with quickly I was not going to take part in the debate, but the interjection by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) when the House leader of this party, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), was speaking makes me feel that the government probably has not realized the full implication of the suggestion the hon. member was putting forth.

Let me try very simply to put the situation as we see it. In a democratic society we always walk the tight-rope between two very basic democratic principles. The first is that those who earn their living by selling their labour have a right to bargain collectively regarding the price that they will get for the work they do. Ever since Abraham Lincoln freed the slaves on this continent, no person has been compelled to work against his or her will. People have the right to band themselves together in associations for the purpose of negotiating regarding the wages they will receive, the hours they will work and the conditions under which they will labour. This has been recognized by all parties in this House and by the majority of Canadian people as a basic right of a free people.

Against that we always have to balance the harm which it does to society as a whole if a labour dispute ends in a strike which carries on for a considerable period of time. There seems to have been a mistaken idea in some quarters that workers enjoy going on strike. I walked the picket lines when I was a young printer. Mr. Speaker, it is no fun being on strike. Not only does the employer lose business, not only is society inconvenienced, but the worker is going without wages; he suffers because of the strike. Men and women do not easily go on strike. They do not go on strike because it is a lot of fun; they go on strike because they are convinced that the wages they are receiving and the terms and conditions under which they work are not fair and just.

It is true, as the House leader of this party has said, that there comes a time when a long industrial dispute harms the community as a whole to the point where it must be brought to an end. We agree that this is a situation where a strike has to be ended. We support the idea, under these circumstances, of having legislation passed by this parliament which will bring this strike to an end. But the point which I think the government has not become sufficiently seized of is that when you take from a group of workers in this country the basic right to withhold their services, then you must put in its place the basis for fair and just settlement.

● (1650)

Compulsory arbitration is the court of last resort. Compulsory arbitration means that a group of workers will allow another individual whom they did not select, but who is appointed by the government, to decide what price they will get for their labour for the next two years. That is tremendous authority to place in the hands of an individual. If you take from these workers their right to withhold their labour; if you say, as this legislation does, they must go back to work, surely you must give them some guarantees: you must guarantee that you are not using the excuse of the national interest to deprive them of a fair and just settlement.

In the process of this strike, which has lasted several weeks, the workers made demands and the employers made offers. Finally a partial settlement was reached. The employers made an offer which the bargaining committee for the union accepted but which the union membership repudiated. This legislation says to the workers, "You must go back to work." But on what terms are they to go back? The terms are those of a bargaining agreement 2½ years old which expired on December 31 last. The workers could not get an agreement from their employers which, in the opinion of the workers, offered satisfactory wages and conditions.

I think the least parliament can do is say to the workers, "We are ordering you back to work, but we guarantee that the minimum you will receive is what the employer was willing to pay." According to figures I saw in newspapers—I have no inside information—the employers are willing to pay an additional $1.85 an hour more over a two-year period. If they are willing to pay that, what right have we to order men back to work on the basis of an agreement signed 2½ years ago? An arbitrator could decide that the employees will receive less wages than the employers offered.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): That is highly unlikely.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): How will these workers react? Let no one misunderstand me. I say that the law of this country must be obeyed, and I hope—I will do everything to make that hope reality—that the workers on strike will go back to work once this legislation is passed. Remember, you can lead a horse to water but you cannot make him drink. You can send men back to the job but you cannot always make them work. The best way of ensuring that workers accept this legislation and go back to work is by guaranteeing that they will not get less wages than the employer already agreed would be fair.

I think the Minister of Labour interjected and ruled out this proposal. I remind hon. members that there are precedents for it. When the government of the day introduced a bill in 1966—I do not know the exact date—ordering striking railwaymen back to work, the bill, if my memory is right, guaranteed them a 6 per cent increase and provided for the balance of their demands to be submitted to an arbitrator; but the railways had already offered the workers 18 per cent. We debated the bill for several days and Prime Minister Pearson finally accepted our argument as fair and the bill was amended. The government guaranteed the men a floor of the 18 per cent the railway companies had already offered and ordered the arbitrator to consider any additional amounts to which the employees might be entitled.

I remind the House that not long ago we passed the bill ending the grain handlers' strike. If hon. members look at clause 4(2) of that bill, they will see that we sent the grain handlers back to work, guaranteeing them that no matter what the arbitrator might decide, they would not get less than the amount recommended by the conciliation board. That guarantee assured the workers that they would get something, that there was no prospect of the arbitrator saying, "You must go back to work but you will get practically nothing extra."

When we consider this bill in committee of the whole the government will make a great mistake if it does not amend it, so that when we order these men back to work they will be assured the final settlement will not be smaller than the one already offered. That, it seems to me, is the essence of fairness. If the companies had not made an offer, it would be different. Hon. members may be sure that the additional $1.85 an hour for two years which the companies offered is, in the opinion of the employers, what they can afford to pay.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, may I interrupt the hon. member for a second or two and ask the House if it is willing to suspend private members' hour so that we can continue the present discussion?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The minister's suggestion needs the unanimous consent of the House. Apparently there is not unanimous consent. As it is five o'clock, the House will proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions and public bills.

Mr. Reid: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think the House is prepared to consider notice of motion No. 23 standing in the name of the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The previous four notices of motions stand at the request of the government. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[Translation]

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

SUGGESTION BOTH SPOUSES BE ENTITLED TO PENSION WHEN ONE REACHES PENSIONABLE AGE

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of introducing a measure allowing the spouse of a person receiving a pension by virtue of the Old Age Security Act to be entitled at the same time as his partner to the pension even if his age is lower than the present Act demands.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I take great pleasure in introducing this motion once again, although I should have quite willingly agreed to proceed with the debate already in progress. I had actually given my consent earlier today to the government House leader to the study of an issue which is also very important and which we have been considering since four o'clock. Since there has been no unanimous consent, however, I take great pleasure in launching again the debate this afternoon on the notice of motion under study. Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity to introduce this notice of motion as early as 1966. I had the opportunity to discuss it in 1967 and 1971.

I am all the happier to discuss this matter once again because some results have come into view, since in the speech from the throne the government announced its intention to adopt in part the motion before us this evening. Besides, I had tabled that motion a few days before the opening of the session.

Mr. Speaker, the motion I moved would allow the spouse of a person of retirement age, that is 65 years, to receive the pension also. The Social Credit party claims that the old age pension should be paid at 60 and that the spouse should be eligible at the same time.

The speech from the throne said that the government would introduce in the fall, that is in October, a bill whereby the spouse of a retired person of 65 would also be entitled to the old age security pension at 60.

However, we have approved that part of the Speech from the Throne, but after questioning the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) himself, we have had some disappointment, and were rather deceived I would say, because we have found that in the mind of the government, bringing forward such a legislation means that only a few spouses 60 to 65 years old could be qualified, since the government has set some conditions. Among those conditions, there is one dealing with the revenues of one or both spouses.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that will limit considerably the effect of the law. As recently as January, I have seen inspectors visiting old age retirement homes to question pensioners and inform them about the government's plans to this effect. They were told then that those getting revenues would not be entitled to a pension.

Mr. Speaker, I recommend in the motion that every spouse of persons having reached the pension age under the Old Age Security Act be entitled to one without any investigation. Under the government's present proposal which would become effective in October, only about 10 per cent of the people between 60 and 65 could benefit from such legislation.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it would still be a sham law which we refuse. We want comprehensive legislation applicable to everybody between 60 and 65. When the government will agree to lower the pension age to 60, we will also have to look after the spouses still under the pension age.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in the government's mind this legislation will be applied only to spouses but when one will die, the other will no longer be entitled to the old age pension because he or she will no longer be a spouse.

In most cases, women will be involved and lose the old age security pension they obtained at the age of 60. Because of her husband's death, the woman will lose her rights to that old age security pension.

Now the Minister of National Health and Welfare answers that the provinces have a public assistance act providing for those difficulties.

Mr. Speaker, we know how the province of Quebec, in particular, administers the public assistance act. It dispenses it with a dropper. After numerous inquiries, it forces people who seek help from the Social Affairs Ministry to cringe to get a few dollars to be able to survive. That satisfaction the minister finds in the implementation of provincial public assistance acts makes me laugh and should rather make cry when we see how these acts are implemented by the provinces.

Mr. Speaker, I will perhaps be answered as I have been when I presented those bills in 1971 and 1967: "It will be too expensive, of course!" If the calculations are always done in terms of dollar signs, obviously, that will cost a lot. But if every time the government undertakes to do something it always works in terms of dollar signs it would never do anything, and that goes for any government. Mr. Speaker, it is rather a matter of knowing whether an old age security pension can be paid to spouses of pensioners. I feel women 50, 55 or 60 years of age should no longer have to crawl in offices, businesses, at night or early in the morning doing cleaning jobs to earn a few dollars to make both ends meet. Mr. Speaker, I think we can do without that and give those people a decent retirement.

I remember when the leader of the Social Credit Party of Canada and hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) was asking for a pension of $200 a month for the aged he was ridiculed, called a nut, an idiot. That is nonsense. Yet, now it will be up to $209 effective April—$123.42 in basic pension, and $86.57 in guaranteed income supplement. And a married couple will get $400.42.

Mr. Speaker, that is the way it is. Yet, during the last election campaign, specially within the platform of the Social Credit Party of Canada we asked for pensions for elder citizens from age 60—$3,000, that is $250 a month, and for the spouse under 60, $2,500, that is $5,500 a year for both, for a total of $468 a month.

Mr. Speaker, I think that request was warranted and still is. Today when a person reaches the age of retirement at 65 and the spouse has not yet reached that age one finds that it is practically impossible to live decently on only one pension. That is why the payment of pensions to both spouses is an immediate need. Waiting until October to implement the legislation, to pass that amendment to the Old Age Security Act, will still be much too late. The government could have acted much more quickly and brought a bill forward as soon as the House reconvened last fall.

Mr. Speaker, we know how difficult it is for couples to get along on one pension. Each spouse should get the pension to enable them to live decently. Those people raised a family and worked for a long time, sometimes for as many as 40 or 45 years. We should make it possible for them to retire, not in poverty, but comfortably. That is what the Social Credit Party has been asking for since its inception. We have always been among the first to call for just social legislation, not only for senior citizens, but also for all classes of society, and we shall keep on doing so until the government agrees to do them justice.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that tonight I shall get more attention especially from the government. When the matter was considered on previous occasions, the opposition was much attentive to what I said, but such was not the attitude of the government.

Last fall, on December 3 to be exact, I moved in the House a supply motion seeking to lower the retirement age at 60. The representative of the Liberal party, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Campbell) then answered and I quote: "I speak on behalf of the government against the motion proposed by the hon. member for Abitibi who has advocated that the old age security pension be given to any person who has reached the age of 60, as well as to the spouse even if the spouse has not reached pensionable age."

Mr. Speaker, I hope the Liberal party is now more favourably disposed towards the matter and that it will lend an attentive ear to my motion. I also hope that the government will introduce a bill to meet the wishes of all the aged in Canada by setting retirement age at 60, and entitling the spouse to the pension as soon as either one has reached retirement age.

● (1710)

[English]

Mr. Frank Maine (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, the intent of the motion is clear. The proposal before us calls upon the government to consider the advisability of amending the Old Age Security Act in order to provide benefits to all spouses of old age security pensioners who have not reached the age of 65. The implications of this proposition are evident. Under the terms of the motion, such non-pensioner spouses would become eligible for the basic pension which currently is $123.42 per month. In addition, eligible married couples would become entitled to the guaranteed income supplement if their joint income required support. The present maximum supplement level for a married couple comes to $76.88 each a month.

The ultimate purpose of the motion can be interpreted as the provision of additional income support to a substantial number of Canadians. I might point out that this very end is one which the federal government has actively pursued: the Government of Canada has been firmly committed to the principle of ensuring that all Canadians can live in dignity. Various social security plans have been enacted to support the incomes of those least able to provide for themselves. In some cases, benefits have been granted to everyone in a designated group, on a universal basis. The old age security pension is the best example of this sort of program. In other instances, allowances have been given only to those in need. The Canada Assistance Plan constitutes the major scheme of this type in Canada today.

Despite varied modalities of operation, the objective of these programs has been the alleviation of economic distress across the country. Unfortunately, this situation has tended to be pronounced among the elderly as a group in Canadian society. Therefore, the welfare of senior citizens has been of special concern to the government.

Over the years, the federal government has endeavoured constantly to come to terms with the problems confronting our senior citizens. I need only refer hon. members to the establishment of the old age pension plan in 1927, with the co-operation of the provinces, and the creation of the old age security pension program in 1952. These measures are indicative of the resolute action taken by the Government of Canada to resolve difficulties faced by the elderly at different points in our history.

Today, the old age security pension, the universal entitlement, is the base upon which senior citizens rely for their financial support. This program is the focal point of government effort to assist Canadians in their old age. Aware of the role of this scheme in the lives of our senior citizens, the government has striven to adapt the plan to meet the changing requirements of the elderly.

Undoubtedly, the most important changes in the Old Age Security Act have dealt with eligibility and benefit levels. Originally, the requirement was 20 years of residence in Canada immediately preceding the approval of an application for the pension. It was recognized, however, that there would be people who might have lived in this country for a good many years earlier in their lives and who would return to Canada to spend their remaining years after being away for some time. It was felt that the contributions made to this country by such persons should not be overlooked, and that they should not be deprived of pension rights.

A second method of qualifying was therefore devised, permitting persons who had been present in Canada prior to those 20 years for at least twice the length of their period of absence during the basic 20 years to qualify for the pension, provided they had resided in Canada for one full year immediately preceding the day on which their application was approved. In 1957, the basic period of residence was reduced from 20 to 10 years. It followed that the period of make-up time required was correspondingly reduced. In 1965, a third method of qualifying, on the basis of 40 years of residence after the age of 18, was added.

Residence requirements now enable pensions to be paid to applicants who fulfil one of the following criteria: first, having resided in Canada, after attaining the age of 18, for periods which total at least 40 years; second, having resided in Canada for the ten years immediately preceding the approval of an application; third, having been present in Canada, after reaching age 18 and prior to the ten years mentioned above, for periods which equal, when totalled, at least three times the length of absence during the ten-year period and having resided in Canada for at least one year immediately preceding the approval of an application.

In addition, provision was made to permit the payment of benefits outside of Canada to pensioners who have resided in Canada for a total of 20 years after the age of 18. I should add that pensioners who are absent from Canada for a period of up to six months and do not meet this requirement may still receive their old age security. This provision was introduced to permit pensioners without long histories of residence here to take vacations and to avoid the severe Canadian winters.

Another important change was the reduction of the age of eligibility from 70 to 65. The 1965 amendment to the Old Age Security Act provided for the progressive lowering of the age of entitlement one year at a time. In January, 1970, the age requirement reached 65. Nevertheless, perhaps the most noteworthy innovation regarding the Old Age Security Act in the 1960s was the establishment of the guaranteed income supplement to the old age security pension in 1967. This measure can be attributed to the awareness by the government of the unfavourable financial state in which many of our senior citizens have found themselves in recent years. Because of the harsh realities of the depression and the wars, a substantial proportion of Canadians lacked the opportunity to make adequate provision for their old age. In addition, a large number of pensioners were employed in occupations or businesses not covered by private pension plans or superannuation schemes.

The guaranteed income supplement has been paid to pensioners with no income, or only a limited amount of income, for over eight years. This income support has been based solely on an income test; all that is required is a declaration of income somewhat similar to that required for a tax return. I should emphasize that an incentive plan was built into this scheme to avoid causing prejudice to individuals who have made some financial provision for their old age. Supplements have been paid to pensioners to bring their income to a guaranteed minimum. This level currently comes to $209.99 per month for single pensioners, and $200.30 a month each for a married couple. Total supplements have been reduced by only $1 for each $2 of additional income received. With this method of calculating guaranteed income supplement benefits, Canadians have been encouraged to plan financially for their retirement years.

The government has continued to improve income security programs for the elderly. I need only refer to measures enacted within the past few years. As members of this House no doubt remember, the basic old age security pension was increased from $82.88 to $100 effective April, 1973. Moreover, parliament approved legislation in September, 1973, to make benefits under the Old Age Security Act more responsive to the cost of living by adjusting payments quarterly rather than annually. As a result, pensions are now protected against the effects of inflation. Five increases have brought the basic monthly old age security pension from $100 in October, 1973, to $123.42 effective April, 1975. I should stress that guaranteed income supplement benefits have progressed in a similar proportion.

As far as the future is concerned, I draw the attention of the House to the Speech from the Throne that opened this session of parliament. The government intends to introduce legislation to provide for the payment of allowances, on an income tested basis, to spouses aged 60 to 65 of recipients of the old age security pension. This proposal represents an extension of the government's effort to meet the ever evolving needs of senior citizens. With the cooperation of the House, this proposal will become effective later this year.

In this context, therefore, the motion being deliberated should be examined critically. The most obvious shortcoming of this proposal is the fact that the government has already announced its intention to introduce a spouse's allowance. The intended amendment to the Old Age Security Act is ample proof of the due consideration given by the government to this question.

In proposing this amendment to the Old Age Security Act, the government is aware that not all spouses of old age security pensioners who are under the age of 65 will be covered. However, while appreciating the desire of the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise) to make the old age security pension more comprehensive, I feel obligated to make the following observations. When considering any extension of social security benefits, the government must take into account its financial resources in relation to its priorities. In addition to the difficulties of pensioners and their spouses, the problems of the disabled, the one-parent families, the working poor and other disadvantaged groups also have to be considered. This is the crux of the matter: because the government must look after the interests of all Canadians, it is required to take a global view in dealing with questions relating to social security. While the old age security program is one of the important ingredients in Canada's social security framework, it must be considered in perspective with other essential elements.

Moreover, the rights of the provinces in the area of social security must also be taken into account. I should remind hon. members that a joint federal-provincial review of the entire social security structure is under way at the present time. The federal government has made its position on this crucial issue clear in its "Working paper on social security in Canada", released in April, 1973. As some hon. members may recall, this orange paper represented a framework of 5 strategies and 14 propositions set out within these categories as the federal government's contribution to the present appraisal of social security. The outcome of this federal-provincial review will influence the future of all social security measures. However, as the needs of the elderly change in response to shifting economic and social forces, the federal government will continue to develop measures to meet the evolving requirements of our senior citizens.

Nevertheless, for the short term at least the Government of Canada has reserved the right to introduce interim adjustments to social security programs to come to terms with the more pressing needs of Canadians. It is in this context that the federal government intends to amend the Old Age Security Act to provide allowances to spouses aged 60 to 65 of old age security pensioners. With concrete action such as this, it is indeed evident that this government is ever mindful of the requirements of the aged.

• (1730)

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, in my intervention at this time in this debate I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise) for bringing forward this matter. It is not surprising in these days of increasing inflation that we should turn our attention to the problems of the elderly who are obliged to subsist on marginal income. It therefore is not surprising that this motion should come forward within the restraints imposed on opposition parties.

We may recommend that the government consider the advisability of spending money, but on this side of the House we cannot bring forward a motion which would involve the spending of money. All we can do is urge the government to look into a matter which would involve an expenditure.

In the inflationary spirals in which we are caught up it is important that we should not forget those who have built this country and who have handed it to us. I must say that when the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Maine) stood up I had hoped he would make a contribution to this debate. However, I found that for the most part he devoted his remarks to a long history of the government's action in this and other things, thus killing the clock.

I do not deny that the government has taken action. It has taken action in certain fields concerning social services. It should take action. Any government worth its salt must take action in this area. But the government did not take sufficient action. The promise of action was—perhaps this is the right word—entombed in the speech from the Throne. This is how one might describe promises made in the Speech from the Throne or at election time. They are forgotten in the House. The hon. member eventually got around to that, and spoke about the concrete action of the government. It is set in concrete; it is absolutely immoveable. This is the reason why the hon. member for Abitibi had to come forward with this motion. It is also the reason why many of us must come forward with similar resolutions in order to get the government off its stump and working for those who are in dire need, particularly now in this inflationary period. Let us get on with the job.

This is not a new motion that has been brought forward by the hon. member for Abitibi. I do not think he claims any novelty in respect of it. It is a worthy device and one which should be examined very carefully by the government. It is one I have no hesitation in supporting. I have stood on my feet here and have spoken on behalf of those who are less favoured, those who are older than I, who no longer are in the work force and who have found their income eroded, carried away and washed out due to the reaction of the government and its attitude concerning inflation. We are talking about this matter because the government has done nothing about it.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Carry on. I wish to mention certain elements of this particular subject. I believe a new element should be introduced into this consideration the government is being asked to undertake. I recall that when we were debating the income tax bill I made certain rather sweeping suggestions about eliminating income tax for those who were recipients of the old age pension benefits. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Cullen) at that time kindly put the record straight and I shall put it straight again.

Obviously I was thinking in terms of those in need and not of a general broad sweeping elmination of income tax for all people in this situation. I do suggest here that there should be an age limit in respect of the spouse. This consideration is not directed at the 18-year old, the 19-year old, or the 20-year old who might happen to marry an old age pensioner. It is not the intention that she should benefit from the old age pension. I think there must be a reasonable limitation.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You mentioned "she". It could be a young man.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I said "spouse". I think the word spouse unfortunately is one of the less phonetic words in English. I wish there were something you could replace it with, Mr. Speaker. I feel there should be a limit below which this particular extention of the pension benefit should not be accorded.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If you have two spouses, that would be spice!

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It could very well be spice, nice spice.

I think there is another limiting factor that should be introduced here. I refer to the length of the marriage. It should not relate to a marriage concluded one year before the old age recipient dies. One should not be permitted to enter such a relationship purely for the purpose of obtaining the pension benefit. I think it should involve a marriage of some duration and one which indicates that the couple planned to live together for a number of years. Then we would have a feature which I believe should commend itself to the government.

I have mentioned the need factor. It should not be too difficult to define the subsistence income level. There must be a means of determining the level below which subsistence is difficult. If there is, then we should be able to define it. It might be $4,000 a year, or $6,000 a year for a couple. I am not sure what it should be, but there must be a limit. Family income also should be taken into account. If the wife should be working and is willing to continue, this should be taken into account. In other words, family income should be taken into account in a determination of subsistence income below which this benefit should be accorded to the spouse.

As was also mentioned by the hon. member for Abitibi, one of the great advantages of according the pension to a younger partner in a marriage is that it would be carried on automatically upon the death of the older partner and the problem of reverting to the welfare rolls, as was mentioned, would not be involved. Those people who are now eligible for the old age pension benefits are those who went through the 1930's. They know, as few others can possibly know, what it means to be on welfare. They do not want to be on welfare. There is a distinction. There is a psychological distinction between being on welfare and being a recipient of the old age pension. People earn the old age pension due to maturity. Being on the welfare rolls is quite another matter, particularly for this generation of our society.

There is another matter that we must always bear in mind, and that is the automatic reduction to 50 per cent of the pension benefits. I am thinking particularly of superannuation benefits, but the reduction to 50 per cent applies generally if the husband—and in this case it does apply when the wife is the succeeding partner—as the recipient of the pension should die.

Somehow or other it has been worked out that 50 per cent of the pension benefit will suffice for the surviving spouse. This is hardly fair. It would apply in the reverse if the recipient of the pension happened to be the wife. If she were to die, presumably the pension of the husband would be cut back to 50 per cent. I have mentioned this on earlier occasions, suggesting that somewhere between 66⅔ per cent and 75 per cent should be the proportion of the pension for people on continued pension benefits of this sort. I earnestly commend this notion again to the government for consideration.

As to the expenditures involved, I think the hon. member who proposed this resolution—and I do not wish to speak for him—should at least be ready to consider the notion that some of the wasteful programs in which the government indulges might be cut back for the benefit of those who have built our society and given it to us in its present form. Those of us who are still in the work force will be able to manage. It is those who are no longer able to make their contribution economically to our society for whom we should have the greater concern. Those who are entering the work force can look after themselves, and they will, I have every confidence. It is those who are beyond the strength and the age to make that contribution whom we must consider in this context.

Therefore I suggest that there are many areas within present government expenditures where funds could be found and administered by the Department of National Health and Welfare much more to the benefit of our society than is being done now in other areas.

There is one final matter that I would like to mention and it has to do with the member of the household who, it has been admitted, generally spends most of her time in the household without receiving much recognition. There is no recognition of the contribution of that partner in a marriage to the gross national product, for example. Yet, so help us, that contribution is huge. One should not think in terms of one person working in the work force—it is a family contribution to the product of whichever person happens to be the breadwinner, because the breadwinner is as nothing in a family arrangement if he comes back to find that there is no one helping him and making it worthwhile to win his bread. Therefore I speak for those who do not have the voice to speak for themselves, and it is to those people in particular that this resolution is directed.

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I should like to add a few words of support for the resolution put forward by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise), as do my colleagues in the NDP. It is about time that such a resolution was brought before the House, and we heartily support it. I believe that we are somewhat late in bringing forward such an important topic for debate in the House. The subject of the debate is our grandfathers and grandmothers who are no longer in the work force, and who have made many contributions to this wonderful country of ours.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Firth: I use the terms grandfather and grandmother in the context in which my people, the Indian people in this country, use them. All the people in the Indian, Eskimo and Metis societies after reaching a certain age look at all children as grandchildren, and all the younger generation look to the old people as grandfathers and grandmothers. This is our tradition. We want to make sure that the old people are well looked after. They continue to make their contributions to the community and to the villages in their old age through their teaching of their grandchildren. They are recognized for this, and their grandchildren look up to them and respect them for their wisdom and their knowledge after having lived a long useful life. Therefore I think it is commendable to hear hon. members today speak in support of the resolution of the hon. member for Abitibi.

I will not say much more, Mr. Speaker. I am sure that all hon. members present in the House are aware of the views of my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), on this matter. He has expressed his views in favour of this idea many times before. Not as many of my constituents proportionately are on old age pension as people in other parts of Canada because of the fact that we have a higher death rate in the north. Also my constituents in that age group are having more difficult times than others as a result of the extremely high cost of living in the north.

Therefore I think it is most important that we consider this resolution very seriously, and do what can be done to give these people a certain dignity by showing our appreciation to them for their contribution to all of us. I think this is one area in which we can take some credit for helping these people to enjoy their last years. Certainly there is much that can be done, but I was pleased to hear the good words that have been uttered so far. With that, I thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. C. Douglas (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to echo some of the statements that we have heard and to point out that much of what is contained in the resolution before us has already been proposed by the government for the start of 1975-76.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich).]

Mr. Douglas (Bruce): This matter has been considered by the federal government, and promises in this area have been made in the Speech from the throne.

I should like to add one further comment to what the previous speaker has just said. He mentioned our older people, our senior citizens, our grandmothers and our grandfathers. I think it is only fair to say of them that throughout this country we find in them some of the finest teachers that are available to the young people of Canada today. I hope other schemes can be considered that will put a vast amount of knowledge that has been stored by our senior citizens to a more creative use. I am referring to knowledge about finance, about business, about engineering, and many other aspects of knowledge that we of the younger generation, as well as our children, can use to greatest advantage in the future.

To ensure a balanced debate on the motion under consideration I believe it is necessary to discuss the various measures already developed by the federal government which benefit the elderly. While these programs and policies are by themselves different, they form part of the comprehensive strategy evolved by the government which meets the changing needs of senior citizens.

Perhaps the most important programs relate to ensuring the physical and mental well-being of the aged. Because of the excellent degree of co-operation between the federal government and the provinces in the area of health care, Canada's system of health insurance provides a high level of medical care to senior citizens. Since the establishment of medicare in 1968 with the joint intervention of the federal and provincial levels of government, the elderly in Canada have enjoyed the advantages of comprehensive coverage at little or no cost to them. No longer do senior citizens have to wait to seek care because they cannot afford it. No longer should a serious illness or accident pose a financial catastrophe for either an individual or a family as a whole.

As a consequence of medicare the elderly in Canada have peace of mind which comes from knowing that they enjoy virtually unlimited access to competent medical assistance in times of illness or infirmity. Because senior citizens have a greater tendency than other age groups of Canadians to become afflicted with long-term ailments, they have benefited enormously under medicare.

There are no limits to the number of days of necessary hospital care. There are no ceilings on the frequency of visits to physicians. In addition, no individual Canadian is subject to a personal dollar quota of entitlement to health care.

Another feature of particular concern to the elderly is the involvement of the federal government in the provision of residential care for senior citizens who are ill or infirm. It is a very important type of program being set up by the government in this respect. Under the terms of the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act of 1957, the government of Canada has entered into cost-sharing arrangements with the provinces to establish specialized nursing homes, infirmaries, or similar institutions geared to the requirements of the elderly. This scheme has proved of inestimable value to the chronically ill and infirm across Canada.

In the area of housing great strides have been made to provide decent accommodation for the aged. Under the National Housing Act the federal government has actively promoted the construction of new dwellings and the repair and modernization of existing housing. This is of great importance to many areas of our country, including some areas in my riding, and areas in the far north where housing can now be brought closer to some form of a decent living standard.

Assistance for the construction of subsidized public housing has constituted an essential element of this program as well. On a shared-cost basis with the provinces and municipalities the federal government has financed the construction of public housing units and hostel accommodation which has given proper shelter to disadvantaged senior citizens.

In addition, with the co-operation of provincial and municipal governments as well as private entrepreneurs, the Government of Canada has made accommodation available to Canadians on a rent-to-income basis. Senior citizens who cannot afford open market rentals and who are ineligible for public housing have benefited greatly from this scheme as well.

Moreover, the National Housing Act has provided direct subsidies to low-income homeowners for the rehabilitation of private sub-standard dwellings in areas selected for neighbourhood improvement, which takes in the large cities. Eligible senior citizens have found this provision of value to them as well.

The Canada Assistance Plan represents another essential element in Canada's social security framework of benefit to the aged. This scheme complements aspects of social security measures which are currently not covered by specific federal legislation.

The Canada Assistance Plan is the vehicle by which the federal government shares with the provinces the cost of specified assistance to economically disadvantaged Canadians on a 50-50 basis. The granting of aid is determined by a needs or budget deficit test which takes into consideration a person's requirements in relation to his or her available resources. Through the establishment of national norms the Canada Assistance Plan has enabled recipients to maintain a decent standard of living with the help of programs administered directly by the provinces. As a result of its single administrative infrastructure the Canada Assistance Plan has been able to respond with flexibility to the changing requirements of Canadians.

An important facet of the Canada Assistance Plan relates to supplementary medical benefits. The provinces may provide medical aid excluded under the terms of medicare to eligible Canadians in order to ensure their physical and mental well-being. As we grow older our physical well-being is of prime importance, but our mental well-being is of the utmost importance. Prescription drugs, eyeglasses, hearing aids, and even transportation to and from treatment centres are many of the items relating to medical care covered on a shared-cost basis between the Government of Canada and the provinces.

Moreover, certain forms of residential care which are excluded under the terms of the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act are also subsidized by the Canada Assistance Plan. This is for persons who are deemed by the provincial governments to be in need. The establishments, maintenance and operation of nursing homes and residences for the aged, sponsored by the federal government on a 50 per cent basis, has benefited senior citizens enormously. As a result the elderly have been provided with the means with which to live in dignity.

It should be added that the Canada Assistance Plan permits the provinces to provide income support to senior citizens in addition to benefits available under the current income security programs. With such supplementation the elderly can meet minimum personal budgetary requirements essential to a decent level of living. Perhaps I should call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Order, please. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has expired, and I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

WEST COAST PORTS OPERATIONS ACT, 1975

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR RESUMPTION OF LONGSHORING OPERATIONS ON THE WEST COAST

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Munro (Hamilton East) that Bill C-56, to provide for the resumption and continuation of longshoring and related operations at ports on the west coast of Canada, be read the second time and referred to committee of the whole.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, when the debate was adjourned at five o'clock I was pointing out that the legislation before us asked parliament to give to the government very extraordinary powers—powers to send men back to work and place in the hands of a government appointed arbitrator the whole question of what their income will be for themselves, their wives and their families, for the next two years. Those are very extensive powers. They are powers which we do not exercise with respect to any other group in our society.

We do not tell manufacturers that they have to sell their commodity at a certain price and that they cannot withhold it from the market if they do not get the price they want. We do not tell farmers or any other group in our society that they cannot withhold their product but must sell it at a price set by someone else.

In the case of workers in an emergency situation such as the one we have here, parliament takes upon itself the power to send workers back to the job and asks them to leave to someone appointed by the government the right to determine the wages and conditions under which they will work. I say that that is a very extraordinary power. And yet in this particular circumstance, and there have been other similar circumstances, the effect of a strike is so harmful to the nation as a whole, so detrimental to the national interest that parliament has been justified in taking such a step. In the particular instance before us we in the New Democratic Party feel that parliament is justified in bringing this strike to an end in order that the people who have been adversely affected by it may get some amelioration of their condition.

The plea I have been making is that in wielding this extraordinary power we ought to do it with all the justice and all the fairness of which we are capable. During the supper hour I listened to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) on a television clip saying he was most reluctant to introduce legislation like this. I suppose he is reluctant; I am sure we are all reluctant about having to resort to legislation which imposes compulsory arbitration.

All I am pleading for with the minister is that he accompany his reluctance with a measure which will at least give to the workers who are being sent back to their jobs a feeling that we recognize that they have a measure of justice on their side and that, as a result of this legislation, they will not get less income during the next two years than they would have received if they had stayed out on strike and forced a settlement.

I do not suppose any arbitrator appointed by the government would be so insensitive to the situation that he would bring down a settlement which would give to the workers less than was offered last week by the employers. But we have no guarantee of that, Mr. Speaker. The government has no guarantee of it. Once the government appoints an arbitrator under this legislation the matter is entirely out of its hands. That arbitrator will be able to set wages and conditions of labour that, under this bill, automatically become the collective bargaining agreement for the two years 1975 and 1976.

I cannot imagine any arbitrator being so stupid as to bring down legislation which would give these workers less than they have already been offered and less than they have rejected. But the Minister of Labour has no guarantee of that, I have no guarantee of that, and no other member of the House has any guarantee of it. What we are urging is that when we get into committee of the whole the government should give very serious consideration to stipulating some minimum figure which the workers will get irrespective of the decisions of the government arbitrator.

I want to point out, Mr. Speaker, that when employers and employees begin to bargain on any collective agreement they usually start out with the employees asking for a fairly high increase and the employers offering a very low increase. During the process of negotiation they come closer and closer together. In hundreds upon hundreds of cases throughout this country every year they keep coming closer together, until they get a settlement without any strike.

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

We make a great deal of fuss about strikes. Certainly they are unsettling and none of us like to see them, but we forget that there are hundreds upon hundreds of agreements settled by peaceful negotiation between employer and employee. However, there are times when they get fairly close together but are not able to close the gap. When they cannot close the gap, then we have a strike.

When we force compulsory arbitration it seems to me that what ought to be submitted for arbitration is the gap between what the workers have asked for in their final submission and what the employer has offered in his final submission. It is much easier for an arbitrator to arbitrate the gap between the two competing parties than it is to do what this legislation does, send them back to square one and let them start all over again.

If the government were to accept our proposal and put in this legislation a provision that the arbitrator would start with what the companies offer as a floor, the arbitrator might well decide that the companies have offered all that is fair and reasonable. He may decide the union's bargaining committee were wise in accepting that offer and, therefore, that there is no additional money coming as a result of arbitration. Surely, if he is to decide they are entitled to more, he will decide after an exhaustive examination of the situation. Only then will he decide that workers are entitled to more than was offered. If our proposal is accepted, the workers being forced back to work will know they will not be deprived of gains they made in negotiations.

An hon. Member: But they don't want to go back to work.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): An hon. member opposite me says the workers don't want to go back to work. That is the sort of claptrap you hear from Liberal backbenchers, most of whom never worked, never were on strike, and know nothing about the problems of workers. Only they want to work. They are the only people who want to work.

An hon. Member: Tell us about the strikes you were involved in.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The remarks of members who think workers love to stay off their job and leave wives and children without income show, more clearly than anything that has been said, the anti-labour attitude of the Liberal party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Condon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I suggest to the hon. member that many members of parliament have worked in factories, have been union men, and have gone through hard times. I resent his statement. It is obvious he knows little about the backbenchers on my side of this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is right he had better talk to some Liberal backbenchers who sit opposite my party and who interrupted my remarks by suggesting workers don't want to go back to work. He had better talk to them and ask them whether workers in this country are staying out on strike because—

Mr. Stollery: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Condon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a further point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I do not wish to stop hon. members raising points of order; I know that the hon. member who has the floor is perhaps inviting them. I think it would be better if hon. members would argue their case when they make their own speeches, after the hon. member who has the floor finishes his remarks. Now I shall hear the hon. member's point of order.

Mr. Condon: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would like me to move my seat to my right in this House, that would be all right with me if he could arrange it with the Whip.

Mr. Douglas (Namaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I think the Liberal party has moved to the right far enough, and should not be invited to move any farther to the right.

If hon. members who interrupted me by saying workers don't want to work want to demonstrate the truth of their statement, let them take part in this debate. I doubt if they can demonstrate the correctness of their statement.

The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) a while ago asked if it is possible to devise a technique for eliminating strikes. I am sure everyone would be glad if a technique for eliminating strikes could be devised, particularly strikes in key industries. We, in my party, have never believed that imposing compulsory arbitration on workers is a satisfactory way of preventing strikes. In the final analysis, you can pass laws but you cannot make men and women work unless they feel they are working under fair conditions for fair and reasonable wages.

Many countries have tried to find the solution to industrial disputes, and Sweden has probably come closer to success than any other country. Sweden has not experienced a major strike since the 1930's. I do not suggest we can transplant the Swedish System to Canada; conditions are different. But we can learn important lessons from the Swedes. They have restructured their society, set up labour courts which are acceptable both to employer and employee and, most important, introduced a system of income distribution under which workers know they are getting a fair share of increased productivity and increased national wealth. If this government, this country, makes sure that workers and farmers get a fair share of our wealth production, we will see fewer industrial strikes.

But when workers read in the newspapers about the astronomical increases in profits which have taken place in this country in the last two or three years and then see their real incomes shrinking—the Canadian Labour Congress delegation to the government this morning pointed out that the incomes of many workers in real dollars have actually shrunk in the last three years—it is not surprising they go on strike. We will get rid of strikes only when we improve our system of social justice and bring about more equity in this country.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the minister rising to close the debate?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, the House has not dealt with two aspects of this legislation. There are two parts to this bill. The first part deals with longshoremen and the second with supervisory longshoremen, the members of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, Ship and Dock Foremen, Local 514. I do not suppose hon. members know that the members of the latter union have been on strike for only two or three days. For 14 years the members of that union attempted to obtain collective bargaining rights on the coast; they were within 20 minutes of concluding their first contract when, suddenly, negotiations blew up. The employers decided there was no point in continuing bargaining because of what the other longshoremen had decided. I point out that these foremen were operating under voluntary conditions; they were not working under any collective agreement.

An hon. Member: How much are they getting?

Mr. Leggatt: An hon. member asks how high are their wages. I think they are getting one third more than ordinary longshormen, but less than members of parliament. We must look at one aspect of this bill carefully. My party has never ruled out the necessity for legislation in the proper circumstances.

Please bear in mind that this union has been on strike for only two or three days. It has tried for 12 or 14 years to gain recognition. It settled with its employers all except two minor points in collective bargaining. I hope the government is aware of this, and knows what it is doing to that particular union. The union complained that two foremen who had been fired were not rehired. It felt those two individuals had been fired unjustly. Because this bill has been introduced the chances for having those two people rehired have been completely destroyed.

Before this legislation came in, Alex Cregan, president of the B.C. Maritime Employers Association, said:

> If the government intervenes, it should do so in a sensible way that doesn't leave lasting scars.

That was said by the representative of the employers, not a representative of the longshoremen and not a representative of the foremen. I ask the government to consider whether this kind of legislation will leave lasting scars. Will it make conditions on the docks worse? Will it be more difficult to achieve a settlement on the docks? To ask these men to return without anything in the pot, and without improving their contract one iota, is doing exactly that about which the employer's representative is frightened.

The situation is now being scarred with what is really a brutal bill rather than one that at least goes part way to sweeten the pot. Therefore I hope we will not be faced with difficulties in terms of having these men return to work. They have nothing except the hope that an arbitrator will deal fairly with them. After all of the negotiating that has gone on, there is nothing here to give the men a great deal of confidence that they will be dealt with properly.

An hon. Member: What are they earning now?

Mr. Leggatt: Someone has asked what they are now earning. I suggest that in our society everybody's grass looks a little greener. Therefore we should not be worrying about what they are now earning. That is not the point. The point is that we in this House should be careful to bring forward legislation which will make conditions better, not worse. Therefore I have some reservation about the effect this bill will have in terms of the relationship between the longshoremen and their employers.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before I recognize the hon. minister I must inform hon. members that if the minister speaks at this time he will close the debate.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank all hon. members, particularly those who spoke in this debate, for the speed at which they dealt with this legislation and the general support it has received. I will not prolong the debate by stretching out my remarks. I intend only to comment on some of the observations made by some members of the New Democratic Party.

It is our hope that an arbitrator will be appointed very soon and that he will deal with the matter very quickly. The way the bill is drafted it ensures that any award of the arbitrator will be retroactive to the termination of the last agreement, December 31. Therefore, if retroactivity is assured and if the House is prepared to accept our assurance that a competent arbitrator will be appointed and will render a decision quickly—

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): How quickly?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): As I understand it there may be an amendment coming that will ensure this will be done within a very short period of time. If this is done I do not think we can justify the fear that has been expressed by some in the NDP that the men will not get a fair and reasonable increment as a result of the process, or that they somehow run a real risk of getting less than they could have arrived at by way of agreement a few days ago.

No one can give guarantees in this area. I do not think the system was meant to provide guarantees. Indeed, if it were, parliament would be merely another step in the process. It would be a step that would be constantly referred to by all the parties, and why not, if they can get a guarantee from parliament? The role of the union negotiator as well as that of the negotiator for the employer would be totally undermined. There would be no incentive or inducement toward any settlement the negotiator might be able to work out with an employer, even under the most favourable circumstances. There is no reason why that should be acceptable. Therefore we should consider very carefully what is being suggested by the NDP.

The NDP's suggestion emanates from a fear that an injustice will be created. It emanates from the feeling that the men are being ordered back to work and a right to which they are entitled is being denied them, namely, to withhold their work. For those two reasons they feel a guarantee would be proper.

If we accept their argument, a guarantee would be self-defeating to the whole process of collective bargaining. It would be self-defeating in the future to the role of the union as well in future negotiations. I ask them to accept the assurance that a competent arbitrator will be appointed and he will render a decision quickly. As I say, the bill does provide that any award will be retroactive to the termination of the last agreement.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I know the debate is finished, but I wonder if I could be permitted to ask the minister a question. I am concerned about the retroactivity portion of the bill. I want the minister to show me where it is in the bill. I think it is clause 5(2). Is that the retroactivity part?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I would advise the hon. member that is correct. The January 1, 1975 date in clause 5(1) by virtue of clause 5(2) does bind the arbitrator to make his award retroactive to that date.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Laniel in the chair.

Clauses 2 to 4 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 5—Term of collective agreement extended.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Chairman, I wish to be certain as to the answer given by the Minister of Labour with regard to the possible retroactivity of an award by the arbitrator. I took a quick look through the bill this afternoon. Clause 5 doesn't seem to do that unless there is something in Part V of the Canada Labour Code which has that effect. Clause 5(1) simply provides that the existing collective agreement shall continue until the new collective agreement comes into operation. Unless modified by some other part of the bill the award of the arbitrator would not be retroactive, because under 5(1) the existing collective agreement is extended.

● (2030)

I am not suggesting that the Minister of Labour is not right. I assume he is, since there have been a number of similar bills and the government draftsmen presumably know what they are doing this time. But before the bill is passed I should like to be certain that the arbitrator can in fact make his award retroactive to the expiration of the old agreement, which was December 31, 1974, or at least to January 1, 1975. We would look foolish if, having passed the bill, we were to find that what the minister intended was not set out in the legislation.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I would direct the hon. gentleman's attention to subclause 2 of clause 5, and further to clause 8, where he will find the words "the collective agreements as so amended constitutes a new collective agreement which will have effect on and from January 1, 1975." He will find those words in clause 8(1).

Mr. Alexander: I have a point to raise, Mr. Chairman, in connection with clause 4.

An hon. Member: We are on clause 5.

Mr. Alexander: I just wanted to make one point. I notice that in clause 4(1) the phrase used is "Forthwith upon the coming into force of this Part, each company shall resume longshoring . . ." On the other hand, subclause (4) contains no such construction. It does not say "Forthwith upon the coming into force of this Part . . ." on. I am wondering why the word "Forthwith" and the rest of the phrase is not used in the latter subclause which applies to the employees.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): The explanation, I understand, is that the first act which must be undertaken is the act of the companies in summoning the employees. Once this is done, the rest follows.

The Chairman: Order. I think we should proceed in an orderly way. The committee has already considered clause 4. The Chair will seek the unanimous consent of the committee to allow the hon. member to ask questions on clause 4. If we do not proceed in this way other hon. members may well ask to go back to clauses 2 or 3, in which case we would get nowhere at all.

Has the hon. member consent to ask questions on clause 4?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Alexander: I want to thank the committee. I am seeking information. I am not impressed with the minister's answer although I know he gave it in all sincerity. The words "Forthwith" and so on apply to the company, and I do not agree it carries an implication that the employees will forthwith return.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Let me put it this way. The only explanation we have, and I think it is a reasonable one, is that, immediately the bill passes, the employees cannot all turn up for work until the employer calls them. The employer has to be required to call them as the first step in the process. Thus, we have said that forthwith upon the coming into force of this part each company shall resume longshoring and related operations. The "forthwith" applies to the company. To show that the next step is consequent upon the action of the companies I would refer the hon. member to subclause (4) where it is stated, referring to employees, that they shall, "when so required", return to the duties of their employment.

Mr. Alexander: I did notice those words in there, too, but in my view the word "forthwith" equally applies. It would read that the employee "shall, when so required, forthwith return to the duties of his employment."

Mr. Fairweather: There is a fairly easy solution. If the draftsmen will allow the enumeration (1) to follow the "part", then "forthwith" will clearly apply to each of the succeeding subclauses. In other words move the (1) from where it is and say: "Forthwith upon the coming into force of this part (1) of each of . . . (2) each person . . . (3) each officer . . . In this way we are not differentiating between the company and the employees. It is a simple way out. Why does the minister not adopt it?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I have no objection, except that it would mean making certain other alterations. The word "forthwith" already appears in subclause (2). It is in the fourth line from the bottom.

Mr. Fairweather: It would mean tidier drafting.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): If it makes for tidier drafting, let us do it in the way the hon. member has suggested and leave it to us to make the necessary corrections.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: While the minister is examining this belated correction to clause 4 perhaps we should proceed to consider clause 5. I will recognize the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

Mr. Broadbent: I have an amendment to move to clause 5. I shall explain it later. I move:

That clause 5 be amended, by the addition after line 5 on page 4, of the following subclause:

5(3) Notwithstanding any other provisions of this act, the collective agreement is hereby modified by an increase of $1.15 on the existing base rate for the 12-month period beginning January 1, 1975.

I should like to explain the amendment in the hope that I can persuade the Minister of Labour and his colleagues to accept it. As I said on behalf of my party at the outset of the debate, we feel that if we are to compel workers to go back to work and lose the right to strike in the interests of the country as a whole, some form of immediate compensation should be paid to them. We agree, as our vote just indicated, with the principle involved, that of bringing the strike to an end. That is not in dispute. What makes us unhappy about the bill is that there is no guarantee that the minimum wage settlement agreed to by the negotiating parties will result from the award of the arbitrator. The minister's argument in reply to our general suggestion was that if parliament legislated a base, this would undermine the collective bargaining process. I say that the minister's argument would have force if parliament were legislating a total package.

If the whole range of issues in dispute and negotiated by the two parties were used as a base, then of course it follows that none of the workers in any collective bargaining unit would be willing to accept any agreement negotiated by their own negotiators, because they would rely on the final stamp of parliament which would establish a base rate—this is the logic used by the minister—and therefore the workers would always hope for a better settlement from an arbitration appointed by parliament. The argument is that they could not lose.

The specific proposal which I will be making on behalf of our party does not undermine the collective bargaining process. By referring to the 1975 period only, three months of which have already gone, what it does is provide the assurance to the workers that their wages, which are now related to the cost of living in 1972, will be increased by the rate agreed to by the parties involved. The amendment I propose, of a $1.15 increase for the 12-month period beginning January 1 of this year and ending December 31, 1975, is the sum agreed to by the two parties to the negotiations.

One category of workers the implementation of whose right to strike we are now taking away has been on strike for only two days, as has already been pointed out. Therefore, the very least we can do, since we are going to have a two-year package in the final arbitrated settlement, is to say that for one of these two years we will guarantee the workers a base below which the arbitrator cannot fall. As I say, that is surely the least we can do for these workers who, like everybody else, have been trying to cope with inflation.

We do not know how long it will be before the arbitrator makes his award. It could take a number of months, though I shall be proposing an amendment shortly to another clause—which the minister has indicated he will agree to—restricting the period to three months. As I say, three months of this year have already passed, so we could be six months into 1975 before the arbitrator finishes work, and during this time the families of these men will still be living on wage rates that were negotiated in 1972.

I appeal to the minister to consider the logic of his own argument. If we were proposing a total package which had been accepted by the two negotiating groups but turned down by the workers, then I am with the minister: it would undermine the collective bargaining process. But the proposal I make on behalf of our party does not do that. It is making a recommendation in order to meet the immediate needs of these workers and to provide them with some reasonable compensation for our taking away their right to strike. I hope that the minister and the Conservative Party will see their way clear to accepting what I think is a reasonable proposal.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, it is my desire, as well as the desire of all hon. members on this side, in discussing this particular issue to be as co-operative as possible, and second, to minimize any confrontation on a question of this kind. We are as conscious as the House leader of the New Democratic Party that it is necessary that there be compliance with this legislation once it passes. We are aware that this compliance has to take place after the implementation of a right has been denied, so we will endeavour to try to be as reasonable as possible in the circumstances.

Having said that, there is still an honest difference of opinion between the hon. member and those of us on this side. That honest difference of opinion centres upon the implementation of the first year's agreement in terms of the wage package. If a floor of $1.15 were established for the first year, I say that a good deal of the logic I expressed earlier, and which the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby identified, still applies: it remains to a very large degree unimpaired. If I am correct about that, then I do not think we would want to run the risk of undermining the collective bargaining system, which I still feel is a successful one and the only one we want in a democratic society. If we should impair that system by amendments of this kind to the point where even further resort to parliament might be had in the future, then I cannot think of anything that the enemies of free collective bargaining would resort to more quickly in terms of trying to find a substitute method of resolving disputes. I still feel this is the best way, and I am sure hon. members opposite agree with that.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

Having said that, let me indicate that although we cannot agree with this particular amendment of the NDP regarding $1.15 for the first year, this is not to say that we are not concerned that the men and women employees should be treated fairly in the circumstances. In all sincerity, let me tell the leader of the NDP that the forthcoming amendment that he has indicated he will move, setting a time limit for the arbitrator to render a decision, is still the most satisfactory way of accomplishing this.

I think the leader of the New Democratic Party suggested a period of three months. In view of the fact that we cannot agree to the amendment that the leader of the New Democratic Party has just advanced, in a spirit of co-operation, since we can see the fairness that will be assured by imposing a time limit, let me suggest that we shorten the period. Perhaps it is unreasonable to force these workers back to work at their old rate of pay prior to December 31 and then ask them to wait another three months before the arbitrator brings in his award, so perhaps the hon. member would think in terms of making his amendment two months instead of three. If that were the case, I think we would find that agreeable. Most competent arbitrators who are appointed in a situation such as this like to get underway with their job and deal with it with dispatch, and this is what we want in this particular case.

The Chairman: Before I recognize the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands I did not put the amendment moved by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby since he invited the minister to comment upon it. I would invite the hon. member to make his comments, but perhaps the hon. member would wish me to put the amendment to the committee at this time. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby moved:

That clause 5 be amended by the addition, after line 5 on page 4, of the following subclause.

"5(3) Notwithstanding any other provisions of this act, the collective agreement is hereby modified by an increase of $1.15 on the existing base rate for the 12-month period beginning January 1, 1975."

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, the minister has based his rejection of the amendment on the case that this would interfere with the principle of collective bargaining. I wish to point out to him, however, that this is not a new procedure in so far as the government is concerned. I have before me Bill C-12 which was introduced to deal with the grain handlers' strike. At that time the government, in sending the grain handlers back to work—and we supported the government because we thought it was necessary to bring that strike to an end—introduced legislation which in clause 4 subclause (2) provided:

(2) Upon the coming into force of this act, the terms and conditions of each collective agreement to which this act applies are amended by

(a) increasing each hourly basic rate of wages in effect on November 30, 1973, as established by or pursuant to such agreement, by 87 cents an hour effective December 1, 1973, as recommended in the report of the conciliation commissioner that was received by the Minister of Labour on April 29, 1974; and

(b) incorporating therein, in addition to the increase in each hourly basic rate of wages referred to in paragraph (a), the other amendments recommended thereto and contained in that report.

It is true that the minister will say that in that case there was a conciliation board. Of course there was; but the conciliation board report in that respect had been accepted by the employees and had been rejected by the employers. In the case now before us, the longshoremen's strike, the tentative agreement which was reached had been accepted by the employers but in the case of the union, while the bargaining committee had accepted it, it was rejected by the membership. I can see no reason why the minister should argue in respect of the case made by my colleague the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby that we would be interfering with the process of collective bargaining.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East) I should like to point out to the hon. member that to make his analogy pure he would have to be suggesting that in this particular case $1.15 and, I believe, 80 cents in the second year, be the settlement, not the floor, because in the grain handlers' situation we made the commissioner's report the final settlement; it was not the floor.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, I wish to say just a sentence or two in support of the amendment. It seems to me that if these employees are sent back to work now by parliament, without any immediate improvement at all of wages negotiated by the parties and an agreement arrived at, there is a very grave danger of the whole purpose of this legislation being defeated.

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Chairman, I wish to comment on the minister's concern about this amendment being destructive of the collective bargaining process. In fact, the amendment is not an attempt to impose the rejected package. That is why I submit to the minister it is a reasoned amendment in that it is not destructive but merely attempts to move in a significant direction toward the position of the employees in order to make effective the legislation the minister has placed before us. What we are concerned about is that the legislation, since it does not move in that direction, may not accomplish the purpose. I would point out; by the way, that this was accepted by the employers.

The Chairman: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment (Mr. Broadbent) negatived: Yeas, 11; Nays, 84.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 6 agreed to.

On clause 7—Arbitration.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Chairman, I hope the vote on this one is a little different. I should like to move:

That clause 7 be amended by adding the following subclause (3) after line 35 on page 4.

"(3) Notwithstanding any other provision of this act or of the Canada Labour Code, the arbitrator shall be required to decide all matters referred to him under this part within 60 days of his appointment."

The reason, very briefly—because we covered the ground in the general debate and on the other amendment—is that a 60-day period is the maximum amount of time we could allow an arbitrator to do the work required on the containerization issue. It should be adequate to deal with that, and adequate for the purpose of coming up with an equitable proposal in terms of a wage settlement, particularly so that workers can get a retroactive settlement quickly instead of having to wait an indefinite period into the future. Notwithstanding the minister's assurances that the arbitrator would be requested to act with haste, I think it is better to have it embodied in the bill so that we know that will be done.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): The only comment I have to make on that is that we too—and I understand that this is agreeable to the official opposition—feel that this will ensure a rapid decision from the arbitrator. We also feel, as I indicated earlier, that this is the answer rather than the previous amendment because we feel that the men will be assured, not only of a rapid settlement but of a fair and equitable one, and we are concerned about that. We hope that the NDP will accept our assurance that this will be ensured, also because of the concern that we want compliance in this respect. If it is any consolation, let me say it is not our intention to appoint either a stupid or an insensitive arbitrator in this case.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): It should be pointed out in the committee that while this amendment will, it is true, ensure a fairly speedy decision, there is nothing in it which the government is prepared to accept that will guarantee a fair and equitable settlement, as the minister just said.

Amendment (Mr. Broadbent) agreed to.

Clause 7, as amended agreed to.

Clauses 8 and 9 agreed to.

On clause 10—Longshoring operations to be resumed.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Chairman, you will notice that in clause 10(1) the word "forthwith", as in clause 4(1), is used with respect to the company, whereas in clause 10(3) the same word is used with respect to those who are ordinarily employed in supervisory longshoring or related operations. Perhaps there was a mistake in the drafting.

The Chairman: The point made by the hon. member is well taken, but I do not think that an exchange between the minister and the hon. member will correct the situation, unless the Chair received a copy of the modification to which he is referring.

Mr. Alexander: I understand that the minister has an amendment to clause 4(4) which he will propose a little later. We will be returning to that clause later in order to make clauses 4 and 10 consistent.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Yes, Mr. Chairman, we will come back to that at the end.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 11—Terms of employment.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of clarification. Perhaps there is something to be said for having my comment on the record. In clause 11(2) there is an understanding that "except with the agreement of the union, no company shall . . ." In working arrangements there are reciprocal rights and obligations. Can the minister assure us that the obligations upon the union not to alter conditions are as binding as those upon the company?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Yes, because in fact if there is no collective agreement the union has no rights at all. That is why this applies only to the company.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): This does not quite clarify the matter. There is something, for instance, in clause 6(b) with relation to the definition. I think it is there all right, but I want to be absolutely sure.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): There never was a collective agreement with the foremen, so they had no rights. With the longshoremen there was an existing collective agreement, so they had rights. Earlier on in the bill we refer to longshoremen. In clause 11(2) we refer to foremen. They became certified a few months ago.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 12 Agreed to.

On clause 13—Arbitration.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of clarification. I am sure that the minister or his assistants can explain it to me. The clause states that "An arbitrator appointed under subsection (1) has, with such modifications as the circumstances require . . ." I do not know what that part of the clause means, particularly when reference is made to "all the powers and duties of an arbitrator under section 157 of the Canada Labour Code". What kind of modifications are they and what type of circumstances will allow an arbitrator to bring in the modifications envisaged by the minister?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I can double check this and we could come back to it later, Mr. Chairman, but I think the answer lies somewhere along the following lines. Section 157 gives the arbitrator the power to summon witnesses, and so on, if he decides he wants to resort to those powers, but most arbitrators prefer a much more informal procedure and do not resort to the powers under section 157. Usually those more informal procedures meet the agreement of the parties concerned. So that is what "with such modifications as the circumstances require" means. It means that he can resort to more informal procedures than those set out in section 157.

• (2110)

Mr. Alexander: I take it that the minister has indicated that the arbitrator would have no further powers or no extension of powers as is referred to in Section 157, but he would have, in any event, less powers in case he wanted to modify. He has no further powers but he could have less. Is that what the minister is stating?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I rise to move an amendment the need for which must be obvious. Clause 13 of this bill is the clause in Part II which corresponds to Clause 7 in Part I. In view of the fact that we moved an amendment to Clause 7 providing for a 60-day limit on the work of the arbitrator in the case of the longshoremen, I suggest that we should also apply the same 60-day limit in the case of the arbitrator dealing with the foremen. I therefore move.

That Clause 13 be amended by adding the following subclause (3) after line 2 on page 8:

(3) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act or of the Canada Labour Code, the arbitrator shall be required to decide all matters referred to him under this Part within 60 days of his appointment.

That is precisely the same wording we put into Clause 7. I assume that it will be accepted.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause 13, as amended, agreed to.

Clauses 14 and 15 agreed to.

On Clause 16—Order to comply.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Chairman, there is a drafting improvement I should like to suggest in relation to clause 16(2). I move:

That clause 16(2) of Bill C-56 be amended by striking out the word "person" where it appears therein and substituting therefor the expression "employer or employee organization".

Mr. Stanfield: Why is that an improvement?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Chairman, the previous subclause refers to "employer or employee organization", and in subclause (2) the word "person" is used. It would be more exact to refer once again to employee or employer organization.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause 16, as amended, agreed to.

On Clause 17—Order against employer.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Chairman, I would suggest an amendment to improve the drafting in clause 17(2) as follows:

That Clause 17(2) of Bill C-56 be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"(2) For the purposes of Clause 16 an employee organization shall be deemed to be a person."

It is simply a simplification in the drafting of that clause, and I so move.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the Minister of Justice might clarify this for us. In the definition in Clause 15 employer means a member of the employers association, which, I take it, means an individual. "Employee organization" are the only words used in Clause 16(1), and I am wondering if that is a situation where an individual employer can be punished under the enforcement section, but that no individual employee could be punished. Is that the effect of this clause?

Mr. Lang: I think that it is an exact parallel in that the unions which might be involved or the various employers associations which might be involved are referred to, so that I think it is an exact parallel.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Chairman, I would like the Minister of Justice to consider whether he has not cancelled himself out in these two amendments he has put before us.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Not a bad idea.

Mr. Stanfield: If I thought he was really cancelling himself out I would encourage him, but I think he may just be creating some confusion. As I understand it, he has changed Clause 16(2) to eliminate the word "person". In Clause 16 there was a reference to the word "person", but he has taken it out. The purpose of Clause 17(2) is to define what "person" means under Clause 16. There does not seem any longer to be any reference to "person" in Clause 16.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Chairman, I can understand the apparent confusion. The difficulty with the word "person" in clause 16 was that it might have referred to individuals in that particular context, and there was no intention to have it refer to individuals. Therefore clause 16 is now left referring to the organization as far as the employees are concerned, the employee organization. There is, however, a technical problem which courts might face in dealing with the employee organizations in determining whether they are persons for quite a different purpose, persons known to the law, and the purpose of clause 17(2) is to avoid any technical argument about that matter should it later arise, so it is not in their individual capacities.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the Minister of Justice for his help, but it seems to me that if one considers clause 15—and I don't want to dwell on this point beyond what is the responsible thing to do—"employer" is defined as a member of the employers association. That must surely refer to an individual. Then under the enforcement section nowhere is the word "employee" used except in the context of an employee organization. Are we in a position where an individual person belonging to an employer organization could be prosecuted in his individual capacity but that no individual employee could be prosecuted at all? Is that what we are getting ourselves into? That does not seem to make sense.

Mr. Lang: No, Mr. Chairman. The point is that within the employers association all of the members themselves are companies. The individual companies are involved there as members of the employers' association, just as within the definition of employee organization, all of the organizations are unions within that definition.

Mr. Alexander: I know that the minister gave an answer, but to remove the fears of the hon. member for Vancouver South would it not help if we stated that "employer" means a member association of the employers' association? Or is that confusing the situation rather than clarifying it?

● (2120)

Mr. Lang: I think those fears are removed by the explanation, and I am not sure the additional word "association" would have any definite meaning.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Chairman, to go back to clause 15 and the question that has been raised, surely there is need for an apostrophe somewhere near that "s"—"employers association" in the second and third lines from the end of that clause.

Mr. Lang: I think that is probably right, Mr. Speaker.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Amendment (Mr. Lang) agreed to.

Clause 17, as amended, agreed to.

Clause 18 agreed to.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Chairman, I thought we might agree at this point to revert to clause 4 (4), in which case I would move that subclause (4) of clause 4 of Bill C-56 be amended by adding immediately after the word "return" in the fifth line thereof the word "forthwith". That amendment is designed to take the point of the hon. member for Hamilton West.

The Chairman: Is there unanimous consent to revert to clause 4?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On clause 4—Longshoring operations to be resumed.

The Chairman: Mr. Lang moves:

That subclause (4) of clause 4 of Bill C-56 be amended by adding immediately after the word "return" in the fifth line thereof, the word "forthwith".

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Lang) agreed to.

Clause 4, as amended, agreed to.

Schedule I agreed to.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, did you call clause 18?

The Chairman: I did, unless the hon. member did not hear me. In my mind it was called and adopted, and that is the time when I recognized the hon. Minister of Justice for the purpose of reverting to clause 4.

Schedule II agreed to.

Schedule III agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): When shall the bill be read the third time? Now?

Some hon. Members: By leave.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): By leave, now.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East) moved the third reading of the bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, this may be the first of a number of bills of a similar nature that will have to be moved, and I think we should look closely at some of the problems which were outlined earlier in the day. The question has been asked, with some justification, whether this type of legislation sending people back to work is required because of the commodity involved, the national interest, or the predominance of a particular area? I think the problem is much larger, Mr. Speaker, and I believe if this legislation is successful tonight members will ask the question, why? I do not think that most of the unions or most of the companies in this country want to negotiate by legislation. That, of course, would be an easy way to settle labour disputes.

A number of things are wrong with the legislation we now have, and with the system as well. People in the street are probably saying what a great thing it is that the Post Office strike is over but, Mr. Speaker, the Post Office strike has not started yet, although it probably will in the near future. But the public is so poorly informed that people do not know whether a strike is taking place in one area or another.

I have been concerned, as everyone else has, with Canada's reputation in regard to moving wheat. Problems in this area over the years have been solved by the establishment of a controller. When things have been really bad a controller has been able to settle problems in a matter of a few months because he has had jurisdiction over the whole transportation system as it affects wheat from the country elevator to loading the ship. That has worked in the past.

I think we should look at the whole structure of moving commodities in this country. It is likely that the present grouping is not the correct one. In the last two or three weeks the longshoremen have been on strike, and the government has said, "Let's not settle the public service strike". As long as the longshoremen were negotiating there was no point in settling the strike of the weighers and graders of grain because the grain was not going to move anyway. But there is a relationship between these two fields, Mr. Speaker. I think we should take all steps to prevent having to solve these problems by legislation.

Certainly parliament can force parties to accept the terms of an agreement. But should parliament do that? Should parliament assume the role of an arbitrator in a compulsory arbitration? We have put unions under trusteeship and said we will dissolve the trusteeship when certain conditions are corrected. We can do all these things. But unless our labour laws are changed parliament will continue to be involved in labour settlements. Frankly, I do not think those kinds of settlements satisfy employers, employees, or the requirements of the nation. We need something better. If we ask workers—and this applies equally to Post Office workers and others in the public sector who are now negotiating—to give up certain rights, should we not bend over backwards to see that they are fairly treated? Is that not how we should treat workers whose work is essential for the national economy and public good?

[The Chairman.]

Without question, the worst employer in Canada is the government. It has never learned how to negotiate with employees. For example, consider the recent public utterances of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien). Given what he said, how can government negotiators negotiate in good faith? Before they can offer an extra cent an hour they must consult the minister or a government representative. Or the cabinet may meet and then it instructs the negotiator to offer an extra one or two cents. Such procedure is totally unreasonable. Negotiators ought to deal eyeball to eyeball; one of them should not need to run to the minister for instructions. Such procedure is unsatisfactory. It hampers government negotiators. If we are to see quick settlement we must change the system.

I remember negotiating with the gold mining industry years ago. You negotiated with a manager and he would say, "Yes, I think we can go so far; will you excuse me." He would leave the room and telephone the board of directors in New York or elsewhere and ask if he could raise the company offer by a certain amount. You negotiated with the man on the other side of the table. In the public service, you do not. You do not negotiate with the man sitting across the table; actually you are negotiating, however indirectly, with the cabinet.

An hon. Member: How relevant is all this?

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, the settlement made in the public service the other day was made on the strength of the longshoremen's settlement. I think my remarks are relevant, as they highlight the need for a new negotiating system.

Passing this bill will not solve anything. We need to negotiate a new way, a better way. I expect that the negotiator will consider the memorandum of agreement already submitted and then make an award. I hope the men will accept it and go back to work. Nevertheless, if we are to avoid future trouble we must change the law, change the way we handle labour relations in this country, especially in areas where the public interest is paramount. We should introduce a new system which will satisfy better both the employer and employee.

The federal government does not employ competent negotiators. True, one or two are competent, but the majority, particularly in the Department of Labour, are not. We need better arbitrators and conciliators to work in areas which involve the public interest. We should not allow negotiations to deteriorate to the point at which men go on strike. If ordinary negotiations break down the government should supply competent mediation services. At present it employs people in this role who have not been able to do anything else. Most of them are in that category. I admit that one or two public service mediators are competent but the majority are not.

Government mediators need proper training and exposure in various mediation fields. Some provincial mediation and negotiation services are better than federal services. I suggest that passage of this bill will not resolve the problem. If hon. members think it will, they will be disillusioned. For the sake of members of parliament and the general well-being of the country, I hope both the workers and employers will come to terms. That, really, is the purpose of this bill. Nevertheless, we must do things differently in future. When necessary we must give the parties competent help, particularly when the public interest is involved. Let us provide assistance which will lead to mutually acceptable agreements. Nothing less will do. After all we are asking both sides to make sacrifices for the sake of the public good and national reputation.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to take a few minutes to make a couple of points which I do not believe have been made today, but have been made on several occasions in the last decade. They concern the matter of ports and, more particularly, grain movement.

It has been brought to the attention of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) and two of his predecessors that the longshoremen have offered to have grain excluded in the handling of cargo during labour disputes in the port of Vancouver. I believe this could apply to a number of other ports as well. Grain could be excluded in a similar way as coal at Robert's Bank is excluded. I am sure the Minister of Labour knows the longshoremen have made this offer several times. They are prepared to work for one employer, whether it be the Canadian Wheat Board, the Board of Grain Commissioners, or the National Harbours Board, although maybe I should not dredge that up.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: They are prepared to accept fundamental changes in the system under which they have been working. How many lessons does the government have to learn? We have been through tie-ups caused by grainhandlers, weighers and samplers, as well as railroad strikes and walkouts. I do not know how many times these have occurred over the past eight or ten years.

A proposal has been put forward by the longshoremen on at least three or four occasions. The difficulty we have been faced with on each of these occasions could have been dealt with more adequately and more satisfactorily for the farmers, the general public, and those who work handling grain.

Far be it from me or the Minister of Labour to interfere in the internal workings of the different unions. However, I would not be surprised if there was a willingness on the part of the grainhandlers, weighers, samplers and longshoremen to join forces, if not in one union at least in one bargaining unit. This is an area where the Minister of Labour could provide some leadership and encouragement. The Minister of Labour and the government could assist the parties in putting an end to at least this part of the difficulties we are faced with in connection with the movement of grain.

We have been having difficulties in industrial peace in Vancouver harbour, let alone other harbours, which occur in different ways and to different degrees. The leadership has come from some of the workers on several occasions. It has never been followed up by the government or the employers. I want to know why. To be completely cynical, the union has its little group, the employers have their little group, and whenever there is a strike situation the government moves in with ad hoc legislation. If we have to do this six or eight times a decade, obviously that is not good enough.

After our six or seven experiences in the past ten years, I hope the Minister of Labour will sit down with the longshoremen, the grainhandlers, weighers, railroaders and employers' association. The longshoremen have repeatedly said that grain should be removed from general cargo. The issues of automation, and who will handle, fill, unload and load what containers are entirely separate from bulk cargo. They are not even related except for the fact that they occur in the same geographical location.

I do not understand why the government did not get the message years ago. The longshoremen faced up to this a long time ago. They made a proposal that was never taken up. I cannot understand why. If it had been followed up, we would not be in this mess today. I wish to advise the minister and his colleagues that they will get assistance from members on all sides of the House if they do follow it up.

There is a willingness on all sides in Vancouver harbour, and in most other places in the country, to make some fundamental changes with regard to the way the work is performed, who performs it, under what jurisdiction, and who is the employer. Members of parliament might deal with this once every year or so when there happens to be a strike, but these people are on the job every day. They know whereof they speak. Why has this not been grasped by the minister, or by his predecessor who was supposed to be a big wheel in the labour ranks? He never acted on it.

The Saskatchewan Wheat Pool and the Farmers Union looked at this offer made by the longshoremen. Nothing happened. Now we meet again to legislate people back to work, denying them a fundamental right.

The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) pointed out this afternoon that nobody likes to strike. The first person to get hurt by a strike is the one who goes out on one. This parliament and this government have not yet looked at what causes strikes. Proposals have been made by those who handle grain. There is a willingness to make some fundamental changes, but these have not been followed up. If they are not considered after this fracas, I will lose what little faith I have in the abilities and intentions of the Minister of Labour.

I wanted to make these remarks on third reading of this legislation so that I will not have to do this in a year from now when we are dealing with the grainhandlers, weighers, samplers, railroaders or longshoremen. If the minister wants an independent inquiry, a joint group of employees, employers in government or any other mechanism, the avenues are there. They have been there for years, but they have not been followed up.

An inquiry into grainhandling has been set up. Are we always going to have ad hoc legislation that flies in the face of what members from all parties in this House desire? These pieces of legislation deal with the matter with great reluctance. They do not get at the root causes of these disputes and strikes. Unless this or any other government deals with the root causes of strikes, people will continue to do things they do not want to do. They will feel they have no other choice. They will feel that no one is listening, and no one is trying to bring them together.

The people on both sides of the quarrel are decent, yet we keep compounding the felony. We let it proceed year in and year out. We still use outmoded concepts and methods. This government always attacks in the wrong way, at the wrong time, and for the wrong reasons. Liberals have a majority; they have an opportunity; they have had it before, but they will not use it.

The Minister of Labour and his officials in his department should sit down with those concerned in Vancouver Harbour, Prince Rupert, Thunder Bay or anywhere else. It makes for good sense and for industrial peace to treat those involved in the movement of bulk commodities differently from those involved in the movement of containers or passenger ships in and out of our seaports. People who work there have been suggesting this for years. I repeat the question: why has nothing happened? Surely some assistance could come in this area from the Minister of Labour and his colleagues.

● (2150)

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I intend to make one brief comment, Mr. Speaker. I would draw attention to the fact that Bill C-12, which disposed of the grain handling strike and lock-out, contained no provisions for enforcement procedures, whereas the bill now before us does. It seems to me that a precedent has been set—a departure from the practice followed in the other bills, and it has been duly noted. Here, for the first time, to the best of my knowledge, we are being asked to approve of an enforcement procedure. Perhaps the minister, in the course of any statement he might make, would tell the House what has happened in this regard.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 6(5), I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton East (Mr. Munro):

That the provisions of paragraph (3) of Standing Order 6 be suspended in relation to the daily adjournment to permit the completion of the consideration of Bill C-56, and to provide for Royal Assent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Sharp) agreed to.

Motion (Mr. Munro (Hamilton East)) agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Reid: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that the other place is ready to consider this bill, and I wonder if it would be possible for the House to agree to suspend its sitting until the call of the bell, at which time the other place will have completed its consideration of this legislation and we shall then proceed to royal assent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): The House has heard the suggestion of the parliamentary secretary. Is it agreed?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We will agree to that, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Since we have a minute or two, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the House leader could tell us the order of business for tomorrow.

Mr. Sharp: The first order of business tomorrow will be the completion of the housing bill, Bill C-46, followed by Bill C-13, and perhaps some other bills which I have indicated previously are at report or third reading stage.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What about Bill C-8?

Mr. Sharp: After we have disposed of some of the less important bills, the bills which the House leaders have agreed should be dealt with so as to clear up the order paper, it is our intention to consider Bill C-8. I am doubtful, however, whether we would get to that bill until late tomorrow or until Wednesday.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): In accordance with the order made earlier the House will rise until the call of the bell.

SITTING SUSPENDED

At 10 p.m. the sitting was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 11.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BAKER (GRENVILLE-CARLETON)—METHOD OF DEALING WITH SECURITY PROGRAMS IN ESTIMATES

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, last night in the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates an exchange took place between the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Drury) and some hon. members which has implications for the rights and responsibilities of all hon. members. When the minister was questioned about the communications branch of the National Research Council, he told the committee that this agency, which has security responsibilities, had been transferred to the Department of National Defence. When asked what changes in the estimates this necessitated, the minister said:

MR. DRURY: Under what particular item it appears in the Department of National Defence I do not know.

MR. BEATTY: Could I ask you where the change is this year? Where was it last year in the estimates? What vote was it?

MR. DRURY: I would hope it would have appeared in a number of votes.

MR. BEATTY: You would hope that it would have appeared in a number of votes?

MR. DRURY: As is customary in security matters.

This was later elaborated upon as follows:

MR. DRURY: I would not like to convey the impression that the estimates are inaccurate; that the estimates are dishonest. What I was merely endeavouring to say is that the estimates, the appropriations made for security purposes within the government are recorded in the estimates in a way which would make it difficult for somebody who is hostile or antagonistic to Canada to—

MR. CLARK (ROCKY MOUNTAIN): Such as the opposition.

MR. DRURY: He said that, not me... who are hostile to Canada, through an analysis of the estimates to get some notion of the size, shape and perhaps even the activities of our counter-subversive forces.

Mr. Speaker, the manner in which the government has chosen to deal with secret information is offensive to a democratic system based on the approval of the spending program by an elected assembly. It is insulting to suggest that the choice in a parliamentary system is either to deny and hide the existence of security activities, on the one hand, or to run the risk of exposing totally material which ought to be classified in the national interest. There is a middle ground which is compatible with the parliamentary control of expenditure. The present method is contrary to the Constitution and to the government's own description of the purposes of the estimates. Section 54 of the British North America Act states that the Governor General recommends expenditures to the House for specific purposes. This provision is repeated in Standing Order 62(1) of this House which states:

● (1410)

This House shall not adopt or pass any vote, resolution, address or bill for the appropriation of any part of the public revenue, or of any tax or impost, to any purpose that has not been first recommended to the House by a message from the Governor General in the session in which such vote, resolution, address or bill is proposed.

Standing Order 63 is germane to the point, and says in part:

—it is the undoubted right of the House to direct, limit, and appoint in all such bills, the ends, purposes, considerations, conditions, limitations and qualifications of such grants, which are not alterable by the Senate.

The emphasis is on the right of the House to approve the details of expenditure. These Standing Orders are further developed by Beauchesne, citations 244(3) and 246(3) which stress that amendments to change financial recommendations of the Crown can only be made after further recommendations by the Crown setting out a new proposal. When the government presents its estimates it states categorically that their purpose is to provide to the House the necessary information on which to make a judgment. In the preface to the estimates for 1975-76, paragraph No. 1, we find this statement:

The proposals with respect to voted items are conveyed formally in these estimates in the wording and amount of the votes which, when included in appropriation acts, become the governing conditions under which the expenditures may be made.

Paragraph 4 continues, in describing reasons for changes in the form of estimates:

The decision of the Government of Canada to adopt a system of budgeting by programs, a "planning, programming, budgeting system", with its emphasis on defining program objectives and showing the full costs for each program, was also a determining factor.

In view of the attitude of the Minister of Science and Technology, these two descriptions are untrue and the assurances they are meant to convey to members of parliament are misleading and deceptive.

I have not raised this question of privilege today, and the matter was not pursued by my colleagues on the miscellaneous estimates committee because we believe that the state has no right to be extremely careful in its release of information considered prejudicial to the security of the state. Quite the contrary: members of this party concerned about freedom of information, such as the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), have repeatedly stressed that this is a valid criterion. However, the position which has been taken by the minister represents an unhealthy extreme. Members are to find out about security organizations by accident and then be denied any opportunity to ask questions about the scope and purpose of such activities or the amount of money to be spent on them.

While it would be comforting to be able to accept assurances that everything being done in the name of security and secrecy is fit and proper, recent history is crowded with instances of the abuse of security organizations in countries where these organizations were completely shielded from investigation by democratically elected representatives of the people. My proposition with respect to this is that too much security and secrecy brings its own dangers.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that this practice referred to by the minister rejects the very procedural foundation upon which approval of estimates is based and prevents members of parliament from fulfilling their responsibilities. For this reason, if you find that I have a prima facie question of privilege I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark):

That the practice of hiding security program estimates amongst unrelated headings be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, and that the committee be empowered to recommend a more suitable procedure for presenting and dealing with estimates relating to national security.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, as I am the one who has given rise to this question of privilege, perhaps I might say a word on it. Without question, what the hon. gentleman read in the way of citations and instructions governing the preparation and presentation of estimates was entirely factual and covers generally the fullest and most complete disclosure to a responsible parliament that we can contrive. Indeed, in so far as I have been responsible for the preparation and presentation of estimates, that has been the objective I have sought to achieve. However, matters of national security are somewhat different and the problem is not peculiar to Canada; indeed, this is the universal dilemma of the nation state.

In order for a national security program to be effective, it must be prepared to counter undercover, hidden, clandestine operations of other people, such as the intelligent services which operate against the interests of the national state, or against the interest of Canada. The counter-intelligence movement, or the security apparatus which is countering interests which are inimical to Canada, or countering interests which are pursuing purposes which are inimical to Canada, must, in order to be effective, itself be under cover and not known to an enemy. To take a popular analogy, this is a bit like engaging in a poker game in which one man discloses his hand by putting it on the table and the other keeps his hidden and then proceeds to bet.

This, however, presents those in a democracy with a serious dilemma, namely, how to have an effective counter-subversive organization which, in order to be effective, must not be publicly known and the operational details of which should not be disclosed to persons against whom it is operating.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): And the details of which must not be scrutinized by parliament.

Mr. Drury: I point out to hon. members that the security apparatus of Canada is not directed against Canada; it is directed against those outside Canada whose interests may at times be inimical to our own.

Mr. Peters: That is exactly what Hoover said about the CIA.

[Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton).]

Mr. Drury: In order to secure funds for these operations, we must and should seek the approval of parliament. The matter must, therefore, be included in the estimates. The problem, from the administrative point of view, is how—

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): To hide it.

Mr. Drury: —to seek this parliamentary approval without disclosing in a comprehensible and clear way precisely what is being done, and how. In order to achieve this purpose, an endeavour is made not to include in the estimates, as normally is the case with other programs, a discrete heading showing the entire amount of effort, or the entire number of people and the entire organization and purposes involved in counter-subversive operations: these are not put under one heading as by doing so we would serve the cause to which the organization is opposed. To do so would serve them admirably but it would not help Canadians and our parliamentarians.

To get over this dilemma, when members of the House or the House collectively have felt in the past they must know either the global arrangements or the details of the program, we have, on matters involving national security arrangements, informed parliament in camera rather than on a public basis. Members who participate in such in-camera sessions are under the obligation not to use the information they acquire in a public sense, that is, not to use the information they acquire in public ways or in connection with any other program.

I suggest this with some deference, but if it is the view of the House that it is important at this juncture to have information and a briefing on the security arrangements, I would be quite prepared to recommend to my colleague the House leader that arrangements be made for an in-camera session, on the understanding that those who participate in it accept the responsibility for treating in confidence the information they gather in respect of this national problem. They would be obligated not to disclose this in a way which would harm the interests of Canada.

I think this procedure has always been open. I feel strongly that it would not be in the interests of Canada to tip our hand, so to speak, in a public way merely to satisfy curiosity or the demands of those who would write interesting and perhaps exciting articles.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say only a few words on this matter. I noted with interest the reference made by the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Drury) to in-camera sessions. The last in-camera session of this House of Commons that I can remember took place in 1944. Therefore, we are talking about something that does not happen under normal conditions.

The other point I want to make is this. It is open to the government, certainly under the Regulations Act and maybe in other ways, to provide that certain matters be kept secret. I suggest that it is one thing for the government to act under that authority if it feels justified in doing so. However, it is quite a different matter to distribute expenditure items through a number of estimates, in effect to distort the picture that is being given to parliament of how money is being spent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I gather it is that practice about which the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) is complaining. I believe the complaint is well taken. If the government wants to keep certain information secret, it should do it legally under the appropriate act; it should not distort the estimates it places before parliament.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, in view of the offer that has been made by the minister, I ask that my question of privilege be stood at this time, and perhaps we can discuss the matter further.

Mr. Speaker: I might inform the hon. member that I had that very intention, for two reasons. First, the question of privilege raises the very important point of the right of opposition members to be able to make inquiries in an examination of the estimates and in voting supply, as opposed to the right of the government to retain certain information as secret and confidential and to perhaps go to the length of distributing it throughout the estimates in some unseen way in order to protect that secrecy. The question is extremely important and complex, and I would like to look at it carefully. In addition, there is the offer by the minister that might want to be considered by hon. members before this matter is resolved. Accordingly, it would perhaps be best to ruminate over the Easter break and see what might develop.

AIR CANADA

SUGGESTED INVESTIGATION OF CONDITIONS AT WINNIPEG FINANCE SECTION—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, pursuant to Standing Order 43, concerning current and ever increasing difficulties affecting Air Canada which are seriously impairing the efficiency of the corporation and detracting from its reputation and public image. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski):

That the government forthwith arrange an inquiry under the Inquiries Act to investigate certain aspects of Air Canada and its operations, with particular reference to continuing chaotic conditions in the Winnipeg finance section, also the status of and financial accommodations given to the vice-president of personnel to determine whether this executive has been accorded unique treatment vis-à-vis other Air Canada personnel.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43 and cannot be debated in the absence of unanimous consent. Is there such unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AIRPORTS

PICKERING—ALLEGED PROMISE OF MINISTER TO STOP CONSTRUCTION IF MAJORITY OF PEOPLE OPPOSED—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43 I rise to seek permission to move a motion concerning a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. This urgent and pressing matter is the ongoing process of building the Pickering airport, bearing in mind the recent statement made to the House by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) that he would stop this process if it were proven to him that the majority of the people in Toronto were opposed to it. Yesterday, a poll indicated that 54.4 per cent of the people of that city were against the construction of the Pickering airport as the project now stands. Therefore, on the basis of this and previous polls, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens):

That this House instruct the Minister of Transport that the Pickering project be not proceeded with for at least two years in order to enable a continuation of studies concerning this matter, including studies relating to new technology dealing with the reduction of noise levels as well as the possible development of the Toronto Island airport in regard to short-range STOL routes.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is put forward under the terms of Standing Order 43 and the unanimous consent of the House is required before it can be put. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF PROGRAM TO ASSIST VETERANS IN OBTAINING HOUSING

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the House of the decision reached by the government concerning the provision of housing assistance to veterans. As hon. members will recall, and as reported at page 1072 of Hansard for November 5, 1974, I stated that an urban housing program for veterans retiring from post-war careers would be inconsistent with the Veterans Land Act which was an agriculturally-oriented rehabilitation program designed to assist veterans following their discharge from wartime active service.

I went on to say, however, that it was realized many low or modest income veterans have needs in respect of housing, and that in recognition of such awareness and of the greater relevancy of the provisions of the National Housing Act to their needs, a study was under way to examine whether special arrangements should be made to assist these veterans. My colleague, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson), shares my pleasure in informing the House that the government has decided to provide some special assistance to low or modest income veterans within the context of the provisions of the National Housing Act.

Having regard for the increasing age of veterans, good housing at low rental levels is economically and physically more practical for many than home ownership. Accordingly, to provide further incentive toward increasing the availability of such accommodation it has been decided to provide an additional capital grant of 10 per cent to non-profit organizations which build low-rental projects primarily but not necessarily exclusively for the housing of veterans.

As hon. members are aware, there is provision under section 15.1 of the National Housing Act to provide non-profit organizations with start-up funds of $10,000. A grant or contribution is made of 10 per cent of the capital cost of the building project. Other provisions of the National Housing Act may also be utilized in the development of section 15.1 projects. Loans equivalent to 100 per cent of the net cost are made on a long term, 50-year basis at a preferential rate of interest.

The additional 10 per cent—which will also be available where the land is acquired by CMHC and leased to the non-profit organization—should be of significant help in the level of rental rates which are established and maintained with respect to projects developed primarily but not necessarily exclusively for veterans. Veterans' associations and other non-profit organizations have shown interest in past years in low rental projects. It is hoped that the provision of an additional 10 per cent capital grant will encourage further or fresh initiatives by such groups.

Turning now to the area of home ownership, the government considers it appropriate to provide a cash subsidy of up to $600 annually to veterans as defined in the Veterans Land Act who obtain loans from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation or from approved lenders for the construction or purchase of new houses and who meet the income and child dependency criteria of the Assisted Home Ownership Program.

This subsidy of up to $600 will be additional to that available under the AHOP plan for the purpose of reducing payments of principal, interest and taxes to the range of 22-25 per cent of a veteran's adjusted income. It will provide a basis, accordingly, for enabling additional veterans in the low or modest income levels to acquire home ownership who may not be able to do so today despite the existing favourable provisions of the AHOP plan.

I referred earlier to the advancing years of veterans, and while this does not necessarily have any bearing on their productive capabilities it is only natural that progressively fewer meet the child dependency requirement of the AHOP plan. It is evident, too, that many veterans eligible under AHOP from an income level standpoint would find it more practical and economical—particularly in communities located outside major metropolitan areas—to purchase existing good quality houses rather than build or buy a new one.

In recognition of veterans in these circumstances, an annual interest reduction grant of up to $600 will be made to veterans as defined in the Veterans Land Act who obtain NHA loans from approved lenders, who have not owned a home in the preceding three years and who would be eligible under the AHOP plan except for the child dependency or new house requirements.

I have no intention of suggesting that the special housing assistance measures on behalf of veterans that I have just announced touch on all the needs or circumstances that veterans may have with respect to housing. I would point out, however, that the provisions of the National Housing Act are broad and favourable, and there are a variety of plans in operation in most provinces, many of them in conjunction with the National Housing Act. Even if it were otherwise feasible and possible, therefore, it is not considered that special assistance for veterans would be warranted with respect to each type of requirement they might have and regardless of income level.

It is contemplated that the administration of the measures I have announced will be carried out by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation with support from officials of the Department of Veterans Affairs. Similarly, the additional funding required for subsidy purposes will be disbursed by CMHC from resources provided by Veterans Affairs. Not all of the administrative and financial requirements have yet been completed. However, I hope all necessary arrangements will be concluded soon in order that action to implement the measures may be initiated at the earliest possible date.

Earlier in my statement I referred to the Veterans Land Act. Operations under that statute commenced as early as 1942 and this weekend, after more than 30 years of activity, the authority for the director to accept loan applications for the establishment of qualified veterans will come to an end. This does not mean that the act or the administration will cease to exist. More than 140,000 veterans have received financial assistance totalling more than $1¼ million. Of those veterans, more than 60,000 still have VLA contracts representing a principal indebtedness of $545 million. The contracts for many will not expire until on or about the year 2000, and they will be eligible, of course, to apply for additional loans until March 31, 1977.

The special housing assistance measures for veterans that I have announced do not represent a replacement of the Veterans Land Act because, as I stated previously, it was neither designed nor intended as a housing program but as an agriculturally-oriented, post-war rehabilitation plan. I nevertheless thought it appropriate, Mr. Speaker, to conclude my statement with a brief reference to some of the vital statistics pertaining to VLA operations, to the tremendous contributions the legislation and VLA settlers have made to the growth and well-being of Canada, and to salute the dedicated officials who have administered the act over the years and will continue to do so for many years to come.

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, first of all let me say a word of appreciation to the minister for providing the opposition with a copy of the statement which he just read to the House. Normally it would fall upon the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) to speak for the official opposition on matters related to veterans affairs. However, it may not be known to the House that just this past weekend the hon. member lost his wife who passed away quite suddenly. I know hon. members on all sides of the House will join with me in offering to him and his family our deepest sympathy in their time of bereavement.

I welcome the fact that at long last the minister has seen fit to make a statement regarding housing for veterans. Ever since a few years ago when we saw the Veterans Land Act coming to an end, we on this side of the House, joined by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), have made representations on many occasions and used many devices of procedure in the House of Commons to extend the Veterans Land Act in order to accommodate veterans who have not yet been able to provide themselves with proper housing. We were assured at one point when the government defeated our motion to extend the Veterans Land Act that housing legislation was in the works and would soon be presented.

Since then we have been waiting a long time, and that is why we welcome this announcement today. However, I must say we are deeply disappointed with the contents of the announcement, because we were given to understand that special housing legislation would be introduced into the House designed solely for the benefit of veterans and directed toward those people who have given their all in defence of our country in times of great danger and need. But what do we have in the statement made by the minister? We have an embellishment and enlargement of the National Housing Act, really nothing that is pointed directly at the veterans.

These are men who have pride, Mr. Speaker, They took pride in the service they gave their country, and they like to feel that their government and the Parliament of Canada respect them to the point where they will introduce legislation directed specially at them in recognition of their great sacrifice. We feel that despite the amendments to the National Housing Act which the minister referred to, this is really a token gesture to our veterans that is far, far less than we were given to understand the government was going to make in its proposed legislation.

At least twice in his statement the minister said "primarily but not necessarily exclusively for the veterans". We take exception to this. We think these measures should be primarily for the veterans; the veterans are what the Veterans Land Act is all about. We are given to understand that this replaces the Veterans Land Act. We note, too, that some of the increased grants and assistance to veterans is not being given directly to them but, rather, to non-profit organizations which construct low rental housing projects for people such as veterans but not necessarily for them.

We welcome the fact that the minister has seen fit to propose an amendment that will give a cash subsidy of $600 annually to veterans. This is an important step and it is fitting, proper and right that it should be done. We feel this will help veterans in the low income group. I note that the minister says it is in addition to that available under AHOP, so I presume it is in addition to the $500 already available to people who build or purchase new homes under the National Housing Act or through CMHC. Our principal disappointment with this is that it is not special legislation. I realize the minister has just said that the program does not touch on all the needs or the circumstances veterans may face in respect of housing. This is exactly the fault we find with it; it certainly does not touch on all the needs, and this is again why I say that special legislation should have been introduced.

Much of the work is to be carried out by CMHC with the assistance of the Department of Veterans Affairs. This department has been relegated to second place in the administration of legislation and changes which affect veterans. The department should be in first place because, after all, we are dealing with veterans of our country.

In conclusion, I certainly join with the minister in his salute to the dedicated officials of the department who have over the years administered the Veterans Land Act to the benefit of a great many veterans who chose to settle on the land and become full-time farmers. Too much good cannot be said about the work they have done. However, I register deep disappointment over the fact that we are not seeing today the introduction of a special housing act aimed solely at the needs of our veterans.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I join with my friend, the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand (Mr. Knowles), in saying how deeply sorry my colleagues and I feel for our friend, the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall). He is one of the most distinguished and best respected members of this House and we are indeed sorry that he is experiencing this very sad bereavement.

I also join with the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand in expressing, with the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald), a word of appreciation for what has been done during the past 30 years or more under the Veterans Land Act. The tribute to those who have administered this legislation is well deserved. I think we should also pay tribute to the veterans who have taken advantage of this legislation and have made Canada a better place for what they have done under its provisions.

In the same friendly mood I should like to say that all of us in this House have a great deal of respect for the able and gallant Minister of Veterans Affairs. When he rises to make an announcement or say anything, our instinct is to approve and applaud. I regret that there has to be some qualification in what I say in that respect today. We feel that this announcement, promised last November 5 and 6, is a very real disappointment. May I point out that in the past 30 years or more, veterans in need of housing or with housing problems have been able to go to the veterans land administration, a division of their own Department of Veterans Affairs. From now on they will go to to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation or to the developers who operate under AHOP. There is no longer any special place, a place of their own, for veterans to go, as veterans, to get assistance in connection with their housing needs.

I would also point out that although we have dared to hope during the months that we would be getting legislation respecting veterans housing, there is no suggestion in this announcement that there is to be any legislation at all. By the process of an announcement, veterans are being turned over to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) in this regard. Considering the difficulty that Canadians generally have in getting assistance on their housing problems from that minister, I do not see that this is any great day for veterans—to be told that they must go and see the Minister of State for Urban Affairs or one of the agencies which operate under that minister.

Let me also point out that the statement which, of course, is made today to keep a promise that something would be said before March 31 contains very few details. There was even a comment in the statement to the effect that most of the details have not yet been worked out. All of that leaves open the question of whether there is to be any legislation, and are we going to get any chance of making sure that the provisions which are to be put into play for veterans are really the kind that will be of assistance to them? Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that to us the statement is a disappointment.

In the main, the minister breaks his announcement into two parts; he talks about rental housing for veterans and then about home ownership. Under the heading of rental housing he says that non-profit organizations which can now get grants of a certain size for the construction of rental housing can get an additional 10 per cent if the projects are built primarily, but not necessarily exclusively, for veterans. The most the minister can say in respect of that arrangement is that it should be of significant help in the level of rental rates which are established for such veterans. There is no guarantee at all that there is to be any discernible benefit to veterans. The veteran will just have to go to a non-profit organization, hoping there is one in his area, to try to rent accommodation, daring to hope that the rent will be a little less than it would have been had this announcement not been put into effect. It seems to me to be a very small offer that is being made to veterans so far as rental housing is concerned.

In connection with home ownership, again the veteran is being told he can no longer knock on the door of the Department of Veterans Affairs but must knock on the door of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. He is told there are some additional grants available to help cope with interest, provided he meets all the conditions. First of all he has to be a veteran within the meaning of the definition in the Veterans Land Act, and that in itself is a limitation. Then he has to meet various conditions set down in the National Housing Act or under AHOP. In the final analysis, it means that the veteran who is seeking to buy a home is at the mercy of the developer who operates under AHOP, and it has been made clear that in recent years there have been practically no homes offered under AHOP in the large urban centres in Canada where 75 per cent of Canadian people live. If no homes are available, the extra assistance is of no help.

There is a slight improvement in that there will be there grants of so much money per year to help a few veterans pay the interest on the mortgage, but of what use is that help if the veteran cannot get a home under AHOP in one of our large cities?

The one thing there is in this program that does not seem to be there for non-veterans is that there can be assistance for the purchase of a home that is already in existence. But, of course, then we are under the various ceilings and provisions that are in the legislation. The cost of a home in our cities is such that one wonders whether it will be of any help.

All told, there is no doubt in my mind that the minister's heart is in the right place and that he wants to help the veterans, but I think he has been conned by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs into making a statement that sounds as though it provides something for veterans but that really provides very little.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My hon. friends opposite can boast and applaud their minister and complain about our criticism all they want. They will find out very soon that it really is a disappointment that the Veterans Land Act was allowed to lapse—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): —and that the government did not put something in its place that would be of real help to our veterans.

This is my last sentence, Mr. Speaker. Veterans are now being told that for housing help they must go to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs; considering how unhelpful he is to Canadians in general, that is a pretty poor show for the veterans of this country.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I wish to join the two speakers who preceded me in offering the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) our deepest sympathy in his cruel bereavement.

Mr. Speaker, I listened to the statement of the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald). I listened attentively when he read it and I seriously pondered on the standards of living, the benefits that are granted to veterans in the various countries I had the opportunity of visiting. I thought that Canada, and I am most convinced of this, is one of the countries which have done the most in the last few years to help well deserving veterans.

So, I should like in their name to thank the minister for his statement which will certainly be of assistance to retired veterans. It is obvious that because of their age many of them who would like to own their house are not in a position to keep it as they would like to. To overcome those difficulties, the minister announced that he wants nonetheless to help them provide for themselves decent housing and to this end, an additional capital grant of 10 per cent will be provided to non profit organizations; the program will be under the responsibility of another department.

I would like, and we have to take things as they are, to ask the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson), since he will be in charge of the management of that program, to suggest to his officials as well as to those of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to be considerate to veterans, to be patient enough and give them explanations when they will request information on the advantages of the law and those available from the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. In short, they should not be too harsh with them, rejecting their request on all kinds of pretexts under some regulations which sometimes are not acceptable to the minister or the legislators so as to give further satisfaction and additional advantages to some groups of individuals.

I should also like to ask him, seeing I have had the opportunity of visiting some of the construction done under the supervision of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, whether he is aware that it is not always of the best quality. Veterans have the right to live in comfortable, well-built first quality and solid homes, in which they will be happy to live.

The minister also stated that there will be a cash subsidy of $50 a month. To my mind, that is an excellent idea, a step in the right direction; I am sure that measure will be welcomed by those who will want to take advantage of it.

There is another aspect of the statement of the minister that I consider very important because I live in a rural area. Provision is made to allow veterans to buy old houses that are still in good condition and can be renovated; this means that the price of these houses will correspond to their means. In addition, in some parishes, on the outskirts of Quebec City or Lévis, and the same must surely apply to Montreal and other large cities, several farms have been regrouped, houses have been abandoned which could still be lived in. So, if under the terms of this act veterans are allowed to retire some distance from the cities, in the country, some balance will result between the rural and urban populations; those who live in the country will be able to share the burden of public expenses with a larger number of people. To my mind, because of this, people will be able to say toward the end of their lives: We now live in a healthy environment, where the air is pure, where there is space. That will be the crowning glory of their lives. That way, Canadians will prove their gratitude to them for their devotion and courage in fighting for our freedoms.

Mr. Boulanger: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Mercier (Mr. Boulanger) on a question of privilege.

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Speaker, I thank you for your courtesy. On behalf of the committee on veterans affairs and as chairman of the committee, I would like to take this sad opportunity to offer the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Jack Marshall) our sincere sympathy on the passing of his wife.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SAUDI ARABIA—EFFECT OF DEATH OF KING FAISAL ON OIL IMPORTS

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Given the fact that about 11 per cent of Canada's recent oil imports have been from Saudi Arabia, and the fact that we are getting a large proportion of our oil for eastern Canada from that country, can the minister tell us what communication he has had from Ambassador Shenstone in Jidda about the possible impact of the death of King Faisal of Saudi Arabia this morning on our oil imports?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I regret the untimely death of the king. I have just returned from my office, where I was making inquiries on that very point. As of this moment we have not received an analysis from our ambassador on what possible implications this may have on a number of issues.

● (1500)

Mr. Gillies: Has there as yet been any communication whatsoever from the ambassador?

Mr. MacEachen: I have just told my hon. friend that there has not.

SAUDI ARABIA—SUGGESTED VISIT BY MINISTER OF FINANCE

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Perhaps I could direct my supplementary to the Minister of Finance. Given the fact that the Minister of Finance will be in the Middle East—and I realize this will be in his capacity as chairman of the Group of Twenty—would he give some consideration to extending that trip and visiting the capital of Saudi Arabia to make known Canada's concern about the need for a continuation of a steady supply of crude oil from that country?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that was one of the countries I had intended to visit. I will have to reconsider the situation in view of the events today.

ENERGY

CONFERENCE OF OIL PRODUCING AND CONSUMING NATIONS—CANADIAN VIEW OF FLOOR PRICE FOR OIL AND SUITABLE LEVEL

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. On March 11 he was asked a question by the Leader of the Opposition pertaining to Canada's position in regard to the International Energy Agency talks on a common oil policy, and he indicated that he would reply in the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works, since he had not had an opportunity to provide a complete answer. In view of the fact that the preparatory meeting of the French-sponsored meeting of oil producing and consuming nations and developing states will be held on April 7, would the minister briefly tell the House whether the government supports the idea of an international floor price for oil, and what floor price the government believes would be consistent with Canadian energy development interests?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): In general terms, the government has lent support to the proposal agreed upon by the IEA with regard to an international floor price. It is assumed that the price would be higher than it was in October, 1973, although significantly lower than the current international price. The actual level has not been determined between the members of the IEA and the government is maintaining flexibility of its own position in these discussions.

CONFERENCE OF OIL PRODUCING AND CONSUMING NATIONS—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF "SAFETY-NET CONCEPT" AND STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Apparently the meetings of the International Energy Agency on March 6, 7 and 20 did not reach agreement on the matter of a common international floor price or on the need for a common safeguard mechanism on floor prices to protect certain essential investments and, rather, proposed a series of co-operative measures which summed up to a "safety-net concept" which would not be described in detail until after the March 20 meeting delivered a final verdict on the proposals. Would the minister tell the House what was decided at the March 20 meeting, and precisely what the safety-net concept means?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I think it would be preferable, as I indicated before, to discuss this in the parliamentary committee, if we could find an occasion on which to do so. It is a rather complicated set of proposals.

Mr. Andre: In view of the great importance of this question and the fact that the meeting will be held on April 7, will the minister make a full public statement on the government's position on these matters before that time?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Say tomorrow?

An hon. Member: Before April 7.

[Mr. Turner (Minister of Finance).]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I think it probably makes more sense, as I have said, to have a full meeting in the committee and discuss the matter. Then the questions can be asked there.

EFFECT OF WOMEN IN THE LABOUR MARKET ON UNEMPLOYMENT—VIEW OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Yesterday, during the presentation of the brief of the Canadian Labour Congress, the Minister of Public Works said, in reply to one of the points made, that one of the reasons for the high level of unemployment in Canada is the number of women on the labour market. I ask the minister if he shares the view that it is because women are trying to get jobs that we now have high levels of unemployment in our statistics. If he does share that view, could he tell us what the government is doing specifically about women on the labour market?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I know my colleague with whom I share this bench would know that when we talk about women it should be put in context and we should find out exactly what he said and in what context he said it.

GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO EXPAND GROWTH RATE AND PROVIDE EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES FOR WOMEN

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I would like to ask the minister to explain that, but I will not. Instead, I will just quote another gem from what the Minister of Public Works said yesterday. He said, in the same comments, that the government had every intention of maintaining "the current high rate of growth" in the economy.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I would like to ask the minister if he regards a zero growth rate as a high rate of growth. Second, and related to the first question but more seriously, what does the government plan to do about expanding the growth rate in general, and what does it plan to do about expanding employment opportunities for women in particular?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): My hon. colleague has just returned and I really ought to consult him, but with reference to the question of whatever the growth rate in Canada will be for 1975, the OECD in Paris has again declared that we will have the highest growth rate of any of the 24 industrial nations in the world.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: You never had it so good.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I take some encouragement from the fact that the labour force last year, or 1973-74, grew at the rate of 4.4 per cent, which included many new entries into the labour force of young men and young women and also an increasing percentage of women. As long as our labour force continues to grow more rapidly than that of any other nation in both absolute and relative terms, it will continue to be a policy of this government to stress employment and growth.

Mr. Broadbent: Thank you, Paul Martin.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

LABOUR CONDITIONS

WOMEN IN THE LABOUR MARKET—GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS TO ENSURE EQUAL PAY FOR EQUAL WORK

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I would like now to ask a question of the Minister of Labour. Since today is the thirty-fifth anniversary of the ILO commitment to the principle of equality for men and women in the labour market in terms of pay, and in view of the most recent statistics of pay for men and women in managerial categories in which it is stated that women receive roughly half the pay of men for the same job; that in the service sector they receive roughly half, and in the clerical sector—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Order.

Mr. Broadbent: This is a very important matter. In the clerical sector women receive two-thirds of the rate of pay of men. In view of these statistics, could the Minister of Labour inform the House what specific programs the federal government has to ensure equal pay for equal work?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister may want to make a brief comment, but the subject is much too lengthy to be dealt with in the question period.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): As the hon. member knows, the vast percentage of hiring takes place in the private sector and falls within provincial jurisdiction. I think we have been doing very well, however, under Sylva Gelber in the women's bureau where we have been trying to conduct the most progressive campaign of any industrialized country in the free world to rectify this situation.

DECLINE IN INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTIVITY—GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO STIMULATE

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the shocking decrease in industrial productivity which took place during the past year, which is the worst performance this country has had in this regard in 17 years, the deterioration of which is continuing into the present year, and one of the principle reasons for the steady deterioration of the trade picture being additional unemployment, would the minister advise the House whether he is giving consideration to productivity incentives, based directly on productivity achieved, for introduction into his new budget, which must be introduced in the very near future if the present recession is not to turn into something very much worse?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have recited to the hon. gentleman, but obviously without too much success, the incentives this government has introduced to encourage productivity and performance in the manufacturing and processing industries in this country. As a matter of fact, I can only recall to him what the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States said a week or so ago when he was here, in response to a question by a member of the Canadian press concerning his explanation for the relatively better performance of the Canadian economy in comparison with that of the United States. He said it was because of the incentives to business given by this government two or three years ago.

Mr. Hees: As the incentives which the minister introduced some time ago give business the choice of paying out those incentives in additional dividends, putting the money into reserves or putting it into more productivity—one chance in three—I ask the minister once again, as those incentives have not produced the right results, whether he will consider introducing incentives based directly on increases in productivity, so that the Canadian taxpayer will receive a dollar's worth of benefit for a dollar spent and thus greatly increase productivity in this country.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I will send the hon. gentleman the figures. I do not want to belabour this point at this stage in the question period. In terms of the dividends paid by Canadian business in the last two or three years, they have not, as the hon. gentleman knows, been at an historic high, so profits have not been dedicated to payment of dividends; they have been retained in earnings and they have been reinvested in capital plant and equipment by Canadian business to increase productivity. For that reason, 1973 and 1974 saw the highest percentage increase in capital investment in the history of this country.

AIRPORTS

PICKERING—REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF DECISION TO CONSTRUCT IN VIEW OF MAJORITY VOTE AGAINST PROJECT

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question for the Prime Minister deals with the proposed Pickering airport. On February 21, the Minister of Transport stated in this House:

> If the hon. gentleman can bring some kind of evidence to show that the majority of the population is against the Pickering airport, I am ready to revise the whole thing.

In light of the result of the latest information survey made public last night, which showed that 40 per cent of Malton area residents and 54.4 per cent of metro-wide residents are not in favour of a second international airport at Pickering, and knowing that the Prime Minister stated on one occasion that if the majority of people living in the area—even if only 51 per cent—did not want this airport, the government would not proceed with it, will the Prime Minister take these views of Canadians under serious consideration and bring the nearly $2 billion Pickering issue back to cabinet to revise the government's position?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): These figures certainly will be drawn to the attention of the minister, Mr. Speaker, and I will look at them myself. I would merely remind the hon. member that since this whole issue began, two elections have been held on the government's policy, and that the setting up of an inquiry board and being attentive to its report has been vindicated in the elections which returned this government.

PICKERING—PROPOSED DELAY OF CONSTRUCTION TO PERMIT INDEPENDENT INQUIRY INTO ALTERNATIVES

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): A supplementary question. In view of the negative reactions to Pickering airport by various polls, not just this one but previous ones as well, would the Prime Minister take under consideration the proposal to freeze the Pickering project, at least, and the proceedings for a period of two years in order that studies by independent agencies on the reduction of noise on new and existing aircraft, the development of STOL routes, as well as better utilization of agricultural lands, could be completed by the different organizations?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there already has been a report of the nature that the hon. member suggests, which was made public just a few months ago. As a result of that, the House will recall that the government did not decide to freeze, to use the hon. member's word, but did take a decision which permitted the maximum amount of flexibility. It will permit the expansion required to meet the increased traffic which is certain, but no decision was made on that part of the expansion which had earlier been predicted, to take care of a much larger increase in traffic. This will permit the government the maximum amount of flexibility in the years to come to expand Pickering if necessary, and not expand it if it is not necessary. In the meantime, the commitment made to the people of Malton will remain.

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, in light of the question raised by the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley in respect of the disposition of a majority of people affected by that airport, I think it is essential that I put on the record that a very thorough survey was taken—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

HAMILTON DREDGING CONTRACTS—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF LETTER DATED MARCH 13, 1975 FROM COMMISSIONER NADON TO SOLICITOR GENERAL

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and relates to the Hamilton harbour activities and dredging irregularities. It is noted that over the past few weeks we have been trying to have documents tabled by the minister involved. Will the Prime Minister instruct the Solicitor General to table the letter from RCMP Commissioner Nadon which he read in the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs on March 13, 1975, which was really a chronological account of how the RCMP became involved in the matter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, not having had the benefit of hearing the letter referred to or having seen it, I shall not give those instructions. If it is merely chronological, I am sure the substance of the information can be made known to the hon. member. As to the letter itself, I repeat, I do not know if it is of a privileged character but certainly an a priori communication between the commissioner of the RCMP and the minister would be privileged and would not be tabled in the House.

HAMILTON DREDGING CONTRACTS—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF LETTER DATED JANUARY 16, 1973 FROM MINISTER OF TRANSPORT TO SOLICITOR GENERAL

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): A supplementary. In view of the fact that the minister—and he will correct me if I am wrong—indicated that he was prepared to file that letter provided names were deleted and "Xs" and "Ys" inserted, would the Prime Minister now discuss this matter with the Solicitor General to determine whether that latter at least can be tabled in the House?

I would ask the Prime Minister this second question. Would he now ask the Minister of Transport to table his letter of January 16, 1973, to the Solicitor General on the ordered inquiry into alleged irregularities in the Hamilton harbour activities, keeping in mind that the Minister of Transport in the first instance indicated that he would table that letter and that he subsequently reneged on that promise? Will the Prime Minister now discuss the matter with the Minister of Transport and see to it that the letter will be tabled?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly discuss the matter with both ministers, but I repeat to the hon. gentleman that if the letters are in the nature of communications which happen intradepartmentally, and if they contain information which might be restricted or confidential, I would advise them not to table them.

HAMILTON DREDGING CONTRACTS—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF LETTER FROM MR. CAMPBELL TO SOLICITOR GENERAL

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, a last supplementary to clear up this matter of tabling of documents. Keeping in mind that the Prime Minister has now given an undertaking that he will discuss the matter with the Solicitor General and the Minister of Transport, will he also see to it that the Solicitor General tables Controller Jim Campbell's letter of August 30, 1972, and the report of the Hamilton harbour committee that was attached to that letter? In other words, this is the material that was submitted to the Solicitor General's office by Controller Jim Campbell of the city of Hamilton. Will he now look into this matter with respect to the Hamilton harbour activities, through the Solicitor General, and see whether those documents can be tabled?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am led to understand that Mr. Campbell's letter was marked "Confidential"—

Mr. Hees: After it arrived, Pierre.

Mr. Trudeau: —and therefore it would seem that it would be proper to respect that character of confidentiality unless Mr. Campbell himself wants to take that character away from the letter. I assume the hon. member has some influence around Hamilton; perhaps he could ask Mr. Campbell directly, rather than ask the minister.

Mr. Alexander: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. I have been advised by my colleagues that Controller Campbell indicated on television within the past two or three days that he would give his permission for the release of his letter.

Mr. Trudeau: Why doesn't he make it public?

Mr. Alexander: Would the Prime Minister now discuss this matter with the Solicitor General and see whether this material can be tabled now that the controller has given his permission?

BOOKLET ON INTERROGATION TECHNIQUES OF THE FORCE—INQUIRY WHETHER MINISTER APPROVES

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General regarding the publication today by "The Cadre", a newspaper of the University of Prince Edward Island, of the information that a booklet on interrogation techniques of the RCMP, written by Chief Inspector A. R. Roberts of the Calgary city policy, is being circulated by the training and development branch headquarters, Ottawa. The booklet contains a series of brainwashing techniques, numerous stereotypes of suspects, derogatory descriptions of certain religious leaders, and is exceedingly and excessively sexist in attitude and comment. Is the minister aware of this document, has he approved it for general use by the RCMP, and will he table it so that members of the House may be aware of its contents?

● (1520)

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of this booklet but I will get a copy and report as quickly as possible.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As, according to affidavits, I understand this book to be in general circulation at the moment, will the minister report to the House tomorrow in order that the circulation of the book may be terminated at once?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I will report back as soon as possible.

INDUSTRIAL MILK—REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF NEW POLICY

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of Agriculture. As an industrial milk policy is to be announced by March 31, does the minister intend to make that announcement in the House tomorrow.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I answered that question yesterday. I said I will, if it is at all possible.

Mr. Peters: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister developed the details of the new indexing program which he indicated will be linked to the cost of production? Also, will he say whether a consumer subsidy is being contemplated, in view of the increased price of industrial milk?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will have to be patient and wait and see. If I told him that, there would not be anything to announce later.

PUBLIC WORKS

THE MAINTENANCE OF RETAINING WALLS ALONG ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I want to put a question to the Minister of Public Works.

Since drifting ice on the St. Lawrence river causes a problem every year because of the retaining walls built by the federal government, hundreds of feet of which are in a very bad condition and even under demolition, can the Minister of Public Works tell the House whether he will take the necessary steps to assure the maintenance of these walls which, as I said, were built to protect riverside properties which will be damaged again during the year if nothing is done.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the Department of Public Works assures the maintenance of these walls to prevent the erosion caused first by navigation and second by the buildings of the federal government. The erosion caused by these two factors is a matter of concern to us. I can assure the hon. member that we try to maintain the buildings already in place and to erect new ones where it is necessary.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

In view of the answer made by the Minister of Public Works that he relies on the causes of navigation or on federal government works, can the minister say for how long has the regulation establishing at 2,000 feet from the bank the transportation that could affect it been in existence? In determining federal government assistance for building retaining walls, does the minister take into account the speed and tonnage of ships, which have changed in the last several years and cause considerable damage to riparian properties, in spite of those standards established by the Department of Public Works? Does the minister intend to review that policy?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, we recognize the changes that occurred in the field of navigation and we are reviewing the standards from the engineering point of view. Therefore, we hope to have early confirmation regarding those standards.

HEALTH

FAILURE OF SOME HOSPITALS TO ESTABLISH THERAPEUTIC ABORTION COMMITTEES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. F. A. Philbrook (Halton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Considering the minister's recently stated concern that not all Canadian women are benefiting from the right to have therapeutic abortions, as permitted by Canadian law, and the government's desire to have Canada's abortion laws applied consistently by hospital therapeutic abortion committees, can the minister advise this House why a majority of Canadian hospitals still have not established therapeutic abortion committees to handle public applications, and what governments can do to correct the situation?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, hospitals come under the responsibility of the provincial governments. However, the hospitals are public institutions and in my view should provide those services that are demanded by the public generally in their areas. I spoke recently about the situation in Quebec, but I should also point out that the situation in several other provinces is not much better than that found in Quebec.

INQUIRY WHETHER LONGSHOREMEN ON WEST COAST RECEIVED COPIES OF BILL C-56—REASON FOR DELAY

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. Have representatives of the two workers' groups on the west coast, the longshoremen foremen and the longshoremen, received copies of Bill C-56 and, if so, when did they receive them?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, certified copies of the bill are being flown to them now, and I except they will have them later today.

[Mr. Fortin.]

Mr. Fraser: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As the bill was passed last night, copies of it were available even before that, so why was there this extraordinary delay in the communication of the bill to the people involved? I understand that until they have had a chance to examine the bill they do not intend to say what their action will be.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am fully aware that certain union leaders have said they will not instruct their men to return until they see certified copies of the bill. That is why certified copies are now being flown to them. An earlier flight this morning could have been used to take out these certified copies; unfortunately, it was not used. I am advised, and I want to check this, that a wire was sent outlining the contents of the bill, and they have that. Now, certified copies are on their way.

FINANCE

BALANCE OF PAYMENTS DEFICIT—GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO COUNTERACT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I hope for one of his full, frank and precise responses. In view of our dismal balance of payments outlook and the substantial deficit in our balance of payments which we and the minister anticipate, do the minister and the Bank of Canada intend to offset this deficit in our balance of payments by pursuing policies which will encourage the inflow of capital and offset our balance of payments deficit on current account?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is on current account; the hon. gentleman is quite right. I mentioned a figure in the House last week when I anticipated that our current account deficit would be between $4 billion and $5 billion. In anticipation of balancing that deficit with foreign investment, I indicated two things: first, I indicated to the provinces that the guidelines set by my predecessor, when we were in a surplus position on current account and asking the provinces to restrict their borrowings first to the Canadian capital market and then to foreign markets, have been withdrawn. In other words, the provinces and provincial agencies are free to borrow wherever they feel they are able to get the best interest rate. Second, I extended the exemption from the withholding tax for a further period on governmental obligations, thus indicating that it is the government's intention to encourage investment by way of debt and, subject to the conditions of the foreign investment review legislation, equity, in order to improve the balance of our current account deficit.

As for the Bank of Canada, the bank acts as the government's agent on the foreign exchange account. The bank and the government are allowing the Canadian dollar to float, the value of the dollar to be set by market forces.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Do the minister and the Bank of Canada intend to encourage the inflow of the necessary capital to Canada by maintaining a sufficiently attractive interest rate in Canada which will encourage investment in this country, even though that interest rate may not otherwise be particularly appropriate for the expansion of our economy?

● (1530)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No, Mr. Speaker. As the governor made clear in his annual report which was tabled in this House last week, the interest rate is designed to accommodate and encourage economic expansion in Canada but to avoid rates of monetary expansion that would provoke a resuscitation of inflationary pressures later in the year. The hon. gentleman will have noted the reduction in interest rates in the short, medium and long term throughout the past three months. I think the position is fully set out by the governor in his report.

NATIONAL SECURITY

GROUP RESPONSIBLE FOR SECURITY IN NATIONAL AND INTERNATIONAL FIELDS—RESPONSIBILITY OF RCMP

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister with regard to national security and our security in relation to our involvement internationally. The Minister of Public Works talked about counter-subversive groups and the necessity to manipulate our estimates in order not to tip our hand. Is the RCMP the head of that group? Do they have sole jurisdiction or is there a group working under the direction of the RCMP with regard to national security or international involvement where national security is at stake?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question is rather more involved than I could answer satisfactorily. Security and intelligence operations are essentially under the direction of General Dare who is the deputy commissioner of the RCMP. That is the extent of the information that I can impart to the hon. member.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. I seem to have pried open a can of something. Is the RCMP the head of our national security group? That is a very simple question. Do they operate along the same lines as the CIA in the United States or the British Secret Service?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not know how the CIA or the national security service of Britain operate; therefore, I am not in a position to answer the hon. member.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, this is a very simple question. Is the RCMP responsible for our natonal security? Surely the Prime Minister knows what I mean by that. If not, is it under the security planning group which processes information from the RCMP? That is a direct question. There is nothing secret about it. Surely, Canadians are entitled to that information.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, there is a cabinet committee on security and information which receives reports from the RCMP and looks at various aspects of security in which not only the Solicitor General and the RCMP are involved; National Defence is involved in one aspect, and External Affairs is involved in another. The whole operation of gathering intelligence means that we use whatever methods we can to gather that information.

FERTILIZER—REASON FOR INCREASED COST—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO REDUCE BURDEN ON FARMERS

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. It concerns reports that the cost of fertilizers has risen over the past three years by as much as 400 per cent. Would the minister say whether the government has been able to determine what has caused this phenomenal rise in fertilizer costs?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I hope to table tomorrow the fact-finding sheet that was prepared in the department.

Mr. Scott: In view of the vital role played by fertilizer in our agricultural industry, I ask the minister if the government is planning any measures to ease the pressure on our farmers as a direct result of these high fertilizer costs, especially at this time of year.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PORTUGAL—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO CANADIANS FORCED TO LEAVE WITHOUT THEIR POSSESSIONS—POSSIBLE RECOGNITION OF NEW REGIME

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Since some Canadian tourists were forced to depart in haste and leave possessions behind during recent political troubles in Portugal, will the minister and our Canadian representatives in Portugal do what they can to see that the jettisoned belongings are returned to their owners? May I also ask if the new Portuguese regime is being recognized by Canada?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that our officials will co-operate in ensuring that Canadians are given every assistance in any eventuality that occurs. I am not quite sure of the new regime to which to hon. member is referring. Hopefully, an appropriate regime will be established in Portugal as a result of free elections to be held in that country at an early date. That is an expectation which I am sure the hon. member would support.

DATE OF PUBLICATION OF BAYDA COMMISSION REPORT

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact we have just completed a second legislative enactment to have people in the port of Vancouver return to work, and in view of the fact that two weeks ago I asked the Acting Minister of Labour to report to the House at his earliest convenience on the progress and recommendations of the Bayda commission with regard to labour-management relations, is the minister now in a position to advise the House what the situation is with regard to that commission and when we might expect some recommendations for the long run?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I received a report from Mr. Justice Bayda that he expects his report to be completed in the month of May.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

POSSIBILITY OF ACTION TO PROVIDE MEANS FOR COMPENSATING THOSE WHO SUFFER FINANCIAL LOSS AS RESULT OF STRIKES

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. It concerns the serious financial losses which innocent third parties incur as a result of legal and illegal strikes and lockouts. Is the government giving any recognition to this very serious and ever growing problem? Also, is any thought being given to developing some mechanism whereby innocent parties who are financially victimized by the actions of such labour disputes may have recourse to compensation, be it from management, labour or both? If not, why is this not being actively considered?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, that particular question has been asked in this House in a number of different ways; there is nothing new in it. Naturally, the government is very conscious of the impact of strikes upon many persons, but has no new solutions as to how that impact may properly be borne.

COMMUNICATIONS

B.C. TELEPHONE COMPANY—POSSIBILITY OF MINISTERIAL INTERVENTION IN RATE INCREASE APPLICATION OR DELAY PENDING INQUIRY

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Communications. Has the minister intervened, or does he intend to intervene with the Canadian Transport Commission with regard to the requested 20 per cent rate increase by B.C. Telephone Company?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the British Columbia Telephone Company has applied, through normal channels, to the CTC for rate increases, and the government has certainly no intention to intervene before the commission has fulfilled its duties.

[English]

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, the minister was requested by the British Columbia minister of communications to ask for a delay in the CTC considerations until such time as a study had been conducted into the pricing policies of B.C. Telephone Company, and a study conducted into the amount of money B.C. Telephone Company had sent to its parent company, General Tel and Tel, in New York. Is the minister's department willing to conduct a study into those two aspects which will not be considered by the CTC, so that that kind of information is made available to the public and the CTC before this rate increase is considered?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier (Hochelaga): Mr. Speaker, I have already advised the British Columbia Minister of Communications that this investigation is in progress, that it should be completed within the next three months or so, which means, according to the schedule set by the Canadian Transport Commission, before this agency must decide on the rate increase applications submitted by the British Columbia Telephone Company. My British Columbia counterpart has been advised accordingly.

POST OFFICE

POSSIBILITY OF ACTION AGAINST ILLEGALLY STRIKING LETTER CARRIERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. Can the hon. gentleman advise us whether the condolences of the Canadian people have been sent to King Khaled, and will the Canadian government be represented

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM AND CAMBODIA—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT PROTEST TREATMENT OF REFUGEES AND SEND ASSISTANCE

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. As I remember the situation two or three or even four years ago, the government was making diplomatic protests and in other ways representing its concern in Saigon and Washington over the treatment of North Vietnamese—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): —and the inhabitants of Hanoi in particular. What I should like to know now—

An hon. Member: Orders of the day.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): —is whether there are any plans today to have our ambassadors in Hanoi and Peking, and perhaps also in Moscow, protest against the treatment of the Vietnamese and Cambodian people who are still, be it noted, travelling south to the territory under the control of South Viet Nam or else being besieged in Pnom Penh.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The hon. member has made a representation which will be considered. He must, of course, bear in mind that what is now occurring in South Viet Nam is a total collapse of the armistice which was agreed to, and that the only real solution to the difficulties there is a will on the part of the signatories to uphold the armistice and to seek a peaceful solution.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Surely we can stretch our humanitarianism to the point at which we are capable of responding to the plight of refugees seeking to avoid communist domination, just as we did when communist centres were being attacked. My question is this: are there any plans in train at this moment to send special and massive assistance by way of supplies of food and otherwise to the refugees who are fleeing from the invading communist armies, victims of this sad and apparently endless war?

Mr. MacEachen: As the hon. member knows, the Canadian government has supported humanitarian activities in Indo-China and has done so from time to time in the face of criticism from certain quarters. That humanitarian approach to assist the suffering and the innocent will be continued; this government will continue to respond to these humanitarian feelings.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

AMENDMENTS TO AMOUNT OF INSURED LOANS, TO INCREASE CAPITAL OF CORPORATIONS, ETC.

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-46 to amend the National Housing Act as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion to amend Bill C-46, the National Housing Act, at the report stage as listed on the order paper, refers to the first reading form of the bill. The reprint of the bill as amended by the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs has now been received and is in the hands of all hon. members. The form of the motions, as put by the Chair, will refer to the reprinted version of the bill.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview) moved:

Motion No. 1.

That Bill C-46, An Act to amend the National Housing Act, be amended in clause 5:

"as the corporation may approve and except on the condition that the rental agreement as established between the corporation and the original owner remains in effect for the full term."

(b) by striking out lines 2 to 7 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

(d) the rental housing project shall be maintained at such standards as the corporation may prescribe in respect thereof; and

(e) the corporation shall have the right to terminate the agreement in the event that the owner of the rental housing project commits a breach thereof and in such a case when an agreement is terminated, the ownership of the rental housing project shall be deemed to have been transferred to the Corporation."

(c) by striking out line 10 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"twenty-five years from the date of completion".

He said: Mr. Speaker, the amendment we are proposing is an amendment to clause five of the bill. The amendment which the government has proposed to the National Housing Act as set forth in Bill C-46 is outlined in the explanatory note which reads:

This amendment will enable the corporation to make contributions to owners of rental housing projects who have obtained loans from approved lenders if the owners have entered into agreement with the corporation under which they have agreed to comply with certain conditions relating to the operation of rental housing projects.

This clause refers to limited dividend builders. The purpose the government has in mind is to give subsidies directly to the builders of limited dividend housing. Mr. Speaker, may I go over with you the history of limited dividend housing across the country? For many years very little use was made by builders of the limited dividend housing provision. In recent years, more especially in the last two years, the government, recognizing a shortage of housing, has attempted to use the limited dividend provision of the National Housing Act as a means of persuading builders to build more homes. The amendment it proposes is, in effect, a direct appeal to the builders to build more homes under the limited dividend provision. The attraction offered to the builders is a direct subsidy provided they apply for a loan from an approved lender.

The history of limited dividend building has been a dismal one. In the past, very few houses have been built, and none would be built in the future were it not for the subsidies the minister is prepared to make available. This is the first time I have heard of a minister giving subsidies to builders—one would almost think these builders were living in a welfare state because of their poverty at this time. But, Mr. Speaker, the builders have never had it so good from the point of view of profits. The minister, who has been caught in possession of a very poor record with regard to housing starts, especially in the first three months of this year, is now bringing forward this amendment in order to encourage the contractors to build under this section. However, this is only on the basis that they are given a direct subsidy.

What really hurts is that the people who benefit from the subsidy are not the people who become the tenants in these developments. The people who benefit most are builders. It strikes me that if we are going to attack the problem of housing starts in Canada and try to solve the housing problem of low income people, then we have to take measures to protect this low income group, not only in the number of housing starts but also in the rent to be paid.

This is a very poor approach to solving the housing problem of low income people. The proper approach is to increase the amount of public housing in Canada, as a first step. The second step is to increase the amount of non-profit housing. The approach of the minister, in keeping with the philosophy of his party, is to give most of the benefits to the builders, so that the "haves" then have more.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We are a little confused as to which amendment my good friend is referring at this particular time. Is he referring to the first amendment, motion No. 1?

Mr. Gilbert: Yes.

[Mr. Gilbert.]

Mr. Alexander: I would not have known it from my hon. friend's speech, but I suppose he will get to it eventually. I am not being sarcastic; I just was a little confused.

Mr. Gilbert: For the benefit of the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) I am talking to the first motion. I am talking about the limited dividend developers who are being given a direct subsidy by the government so as to encourage them to build more homes. This is what we are opposing. The reason we oppose it is that builders under limited dividend projects enter into agreements with CMHC in regard to rentals for certain periods, usually 5, 10 or 15 years. I would not have some of the qualms I am now expressing if the agreement were for 15 years, but the practice has been, and I am sure will continue to be, to enter into an agreement for only five years.

Let me just draw a picture of the benefits that the developers get in this regard. First of all, they get direct subsidies on the interest paid on mortgages from approved lenders. This brings down the mortgage rate substantially. I suppose the answer of the minister will be that this is reflected in the rent charged the tenant. If this were the case, I would not feel too badly about it. But according to past experience, after the five-year period expires, the owner, who is the builder or developer, has the right to change the agreement. If he does so, the rents of the people in the complex, the apartment building, are changed. If they do not like it—and this has been the history of developers—the developers sell the building. They carve up the building into condominium apartments and then they sell it.

The builder who has received the subsidy on the mortgage from CMHC then sells these condominium apartments and makes a capital gain. That is the first great advantage that he gets. In the meantime, if he has lost any moneys he can claim capital cost allowance, and this capital cost allowance can be applied against any other income the builder may have. Experience has shown that when the building is vested in the owner, the developer, the building standards diminish substantially. There is no control over the building standards, as is the case when CMHC has control.

In addition to that, this is an inefficient use of scarce capital that the government has for housing construction. My authority for that is not only my party but the Canadian Council on Social Development. All the government need do is to get the Bank of Canada to underwrite a bond issue for $1 billion, pay institutions or private investors interest of, say, 9 per cent, and then use this money directly for the building of homes in the public housing sector, in the co-operative sector and in the non-profit sector. But no, the government would rather give money put up by the taxpayers of Canada to builders who are already making a large amount of money.

You will note, Mr. Speaker, that I said that the agreements that are entered into are usually for a period of five years. I also said as a result of experience we have learned that the building standards imposed by the builders cannot be equated with those imposed by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. The minister has put forward an amendment to try to bring these standards up to the standards of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, but we are still not prepared to accept the measure of control that CMHC is going to impose upon these builders to whom the minister has got down on bended knees and asked to build homes.

We want CMHC to impose standards that will ensure that these homes will be structurally sound for a good length of time. We want CMHC not to enter into a five-year term, giving the full benefit to the owners and developers after that period; we want the term to be 25 years so that a real measure of benefit will be passed on to the tenants, not to the owners.

It is bad enough that the minister is giving a subsidy to the builders. Not only that, but the mortgage insurance on these buildings will not be under the control of CMHC but will be passed over to the private sector. In other words, you have a situation where there is a real rip-off in regard to capital cost allowance. A subsidy is paid to the builder. There is no control over building standards. There is the possibility of a capital gain on the part of the builder after five years when the apartments are turned into condominiums and the people for whom the apartments were intended are driven out. You have inefficient use by the government of scare capital for housing for low and moderate income families. Lastly, mortgage insurance is passed from the public sector, that is CMHC, to the private sector, the insurance companies. Is it any wonder that we in the New Democratic Party feel there should be some guarantees given to tenants in regard to building conditions? Hence the first part of my amendment.

The second part of the amendment provides that CMHC should see to it that such standards as the corporation may prescribe in respect thereof are maintained. In order to put real teeth into this provision, if there is a breach of the conditions on the part of the builders the ownership of the property should pass directly back to CMHC. That is the only effective way of making the builder conform with proper building standards. Giving a builder the right after five years to turn the apartments into condominiums and sell the building at a capital gain is really too much. Rather than five years we say the period of agreement should be 25 years, and then the direct benefit of the subsidy will pass to the tenants.

I should close my argument on this part by pointing out that the limited dividend section has been used by the minister to advance housing primarily for middle income families, and this does little or nothing to provide a solution to the problem in respect of people of low income families.

I remember a speech by the minister to the Toronto Home Builders Association on December 3. At that time he expressed his concern by saying that almost 800,000 Canadian households spent more than 25 per cent of their gross income on shelter. He said what was even more disturbing was the knowledge that 107,000 tenant families with incomes under $3,000 spent over 50 per cent of their incomes for shelter. I am positive that this limited dividend section will do nothing for the 107,000 families who have incomes of under $3,000 and spend 50 per cent of their incomes for shelter.

I am in direct opposition to the philosophy of the minister who wants to pass on the benefits to the builders and developers rather than to encourage and help people in the low income group. It is rather striking that in the brief presented by the Ontario Welfare Council, which has been distributed to all hon. members, it is pointed out that the main target of the limited dividend section is primarily the middle income families. It suggests this is a rental program for middle income families which does nothing for the lower income group.

Surely, at a time when the minister is so concerned about the poor housing record for the first three months of this year, and when his 210,000 target is diminishing every month, he should be directing his attention to the public housing and non-profit sectors. For the minister and this government to give subsidies at this time to builders in order to encourage them to build more homes for middle income families is highly improper. For those reasons we have moved this amendment and have asked for the co-operation of members on both sides. We want the minister to change those aspects in respect of housing standards, and more especially to change the term with regard to the rental agreement from five years to at least 25 years so the benefits in housing may be passed on to the proper persons.

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I understand and share the hon. member's concern about those who are spending a disproportionate share of their income on housing, including those with whom we are dealing and will continue to deal under our non-profit program, our co-operative program, our public housing program, our senior citizens program, and our AHOP program, to which an extension was announced recently.

I do not know whether the hon. member appreciates the purpose of this particular legislation, but it is intended to deal with what is emerging as the most critical single issue in the housing situation in Canada, and which affects people not actually in the poverty group, as we say, but Canadians on low incomes who are finding it impossible to find accommodation without spending a disproportionate amount of their income on rent. The intention is to try to increase the stock of rental accommodation in the country, which is perilously low at this time, running at less than two per cent vacancy across the country and below one per cent in many major urban centres. We want to increase the rental accommodation stock for all Canadians in order, if at all possible, to avoid increasing rents.

The hon. member referred to the inefficient use of funds. Let me suggest that this is a most efficient use of funds. I think it is important that hon. members appreciate the difference between this legislation, which is to use the private sector funding, as opposed to limited dividend funding, which we intend to continue because it has been successful in the past. This is a most efficient use of funds, because with subsidies in the range of $16 million we expect to attract somewhere in the range of $1 billion into the mortgage market for low rental accommodation. In fairness, I should say that the $18 million to attract $1 billion is divided between home ownership and limited dividend rental accommodation.

This seems to the government to be the most efficient way of using the taxpayers' money to get the greatest leverage possible. One should understand that we are dealing with private sector funds, to encourage building in that part of the market where there is an acute shortage and a need to get starts going on rental accommodation for the lower income group as quickly as possible. If one understands that, I think he can understand the balance of the argument.

As hon. members know, when I first assumed this portfolio last fall we experimented with a $50 million limited dividend rental program. We found there was an enormous response. As a result of discussions and studies we are now confident that there is a substantial amount of private funds that could find its way into the rental market, but only for higher income groups. This would not produce rental accommodation which the average Canadian can afford.

The intention here, therefore, is to apply the subsidies so as to encourage rental agreements with the owners who will accept those in lower income groups at lower rents. If the owner does not do that he does not qualify. This will be monitored by CMHC officers across the country so that we know the benefits are passed on to the tenants. If within five years the tenants' incomes increase, as they have continued to increase in Canada, we see little purpose in using taxpayers' money to subsidize their rents. In the meantime, we are increasing the stock of rental accommodation in Canada, which is important in trying to reduce the pressure on rents across the board.

The hon. member suggested that the owner could then sell out. If the hon. member will read clause 5(2)(b) he will see that the project or any part thereof shall not be sold or otherwise disposed of during the term of the agreement, except with the consent of the corporation and on terms and conditions approved by the corporation. By stating it this way we are discouraging those who are in the construction business building apartments from building these for low income people, but we can help that by subsidizing, and we hope that as their incomes increase, as they have constantly under Liberal governments, they will be in a better position to afford higher rents. In the meantime, they are being assisted and the landlord is bound to pass on that assistance.

The hon. member also refers to building standards. I think there is some confusion between building standards and maintenance standards. The building standards will be those of CMHC with regular inspections to make sure that standards are at a level of high quality and safety. In respect of maintenance standards, we require that they maintain adequate standards. The amendment would impose sort of a control over maintenance. Maintenance has not been found to be a major problem in the past as municipalities frequently monitor this aspect. We monitor it through the corporation, and certainly the tenants monitor it. We think it would be a built-in disincentive to provide a large volume of rental accommodation for low income groups whom this legislation is designed to attract.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I must say I am puzzled by most of the things the minister said. Let me begin by reminding members of the House that, despite all the minister's glowing predictions and assumptions, the fact is that every month since the minister took office the housing picture in Canada has become worse. When we were debating this bill several months ago, the minister was still talking about his target of 210,000 housing units to be built in 1975. Since that time, we have the official figures released, not by critics of the government, not by members of the opposition parties and not by organizations such as the Canadian Council for Social Development, but by the minister's department.

Here is a news release issued on March 10 by CMHC—with which the minister seems to have some slight connection although I sometimes wonder if there is any at all—entitled "Preliminary February Housing Starts" and marked "for immediate release". It reads:

> Housing starts during February were at a seasonally-adjusted annual rate of 156,600 for all areas, according to preliminary figures released today by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.
> Actual starts during the month in the urban areas were 5,031, a decline of 44 per cent from the 9,029 recorded for the same month one year ago.
> Starts of single detached dwellings during the month totalled 2,177, a decline of 48 per cent from February, 1974. Starts of multiple dwellings declined 41 per cent to 2,854.

So, while the minister is telling us that his objective is to have 210,000 units built and that his programs will accomplish this, in fact what we see is a startling and continuing decline in the number of housing units being built.

More than that, when you look at what the government is prepared to do, you see that the amount of money which the minister and the government propose for capital expenditures, and which they propose to give to CMHC, is increased for 1975 over 1974 by just 12½ per cent. That is just the amount of the increase in inflation this past year, and it is less than the increase in government expenditures for the coming fiscal year as compared with last year. The increase in government expenditures is 15 per cent, but the minister proposes to allocate only another 12½ per cent to CMHC. So, in fact, we will get less housing units than we did last year.

The minister says that, of course, the government is giving a subsidy of $18 million to builders and that will bring in another $1 billion into the housing industry. That, according to my arithmetic, is a subsidy of 1.8 per cent. Surely, the minister is not telling us that the housing industry, the land developers, the servicing of land, the actual building of houses and of rental units have been operating on such a small margin that $18 million, a subsidy of 1.8 per cent, will suddenly bring into the market $1 billion. The fact is the figures demonstrate that builders are not building individual homes, they are not building condominiums or apartment units, because the cost of a mortgage is such that there is not the demand which is required.

More than that, the minister is following a deliberate policy. The minister and the government have made a political decision. Perhaps in terms of where the votes are, it is a very sound decision. People in Canada have bought the myth, the idea, that everybody should aim to own their own homes. Therefore, people with incomes of $5,000 up to $8,000, $10,000 or $12,000 believe, because we have such ministers as the present minister telling them that it is possible for them to own their own homes, that that is possible. So the minister has deliberately taken more and more money, which in other years was allocated for use in the building of public housing units, to devote to programs such as the Assisted Home Ownership Program. I am not critical of the minister trying to meet the needs of people who qualify under that program because they need housing, but they are people who are not anywhere near the bottom of the economic ladder. They are people who have not been able to own their homes and who have rented their homes. The minister proposes to take money, which in other years was allocated to public housing or to senior citizens housing, and put it into programs such as AHOP and to subsidize limited dividend housing.

What is the result of that? I do not have the figures in front of me, but according to the information which I have been able to obtain, every province has already been told by the government and by CMHC that they will have less money for public housing this coming year than they had last year. I am told, for example, that the province of Ontario and metropolitan Toronto had planned to build 8,000 senior citizens' units and 2,000 family units in 1975-76. As I have already said, the minister has decided that the middle income groups need help more, so now apparently the province of Ontario and metropolitan Toronto will only get enough money from the government—because they are cutting back on public housing money, on the kind of money required to build senior citizens housing developments—to build 2,000 senior citizens units instead of the 8,000 units which they planned to build, and 500 family units instead of the 2,000 which they planned to build. That is the effect which the government's program is having.

Last year, according to the analyses which have been made, 24 per cent of the CMHC budget was aimed at low income groups. This year, because of the increased desire of the government for programs such as AHOP, instead of increasing the percentage of money available for housing for low income groups, the percentage will drop from 24 per cent, which I suggest was much too low, to 22 per cent. This is the kind of decision the minister and the government are making Mr. Speaker. It is not because the need is greatest for programs such as subsidizing limited dividend housing, but because the minister and the government believe that that is politically attractive. Private industry is not interested in public housing or in limited dividend housing. The only time it is interested in that kind of housing is in situations such as we have today when, no matter what they do, the prospective private home owner or purchaser simply is not there. Then, when the regular channels have dried up, when the cost of land is so high that the potential private purchaser cannot afford to buy a house, when the mortgage rate is so high that the prospective purchaser cannot afford to buy a house and when the building industry and the developers are in trouble because the so-called free enterprise system does not permit them to operate profitably, they are interested in building public housing units. Only then are they interested in building limited dividend housing.

The minister has said that the government and CMHC will make sure that the housing units provided under this program will be up to standard. They have never done it up until now—and not just for limited dividend housing. How many ministers in charge of housing have promised legislation which would provide the purchaser of a home financed through Central Mortgage assistance with a warranty so that if he finds in a year or two that there are serious defects in the building he would have recourse? For how many years has that been promised by this minister and ministers before him? This minister said it was just a matter of a month or two, and now we find that there is nothing happening in regard to warranties. If a warranty cannot be provided to guarantee a purchaser under government programs that he is buying a house which is structurally sound, and which will not have major defects, how much more difficult will it be to provide guarantees on housing built by private builders? Private builders do not necessarily want to provide housing under government programs, but when they cannot get into other types of building, they make use of the fact that the minister is providing the money. What guarantees are there that CMHC and the government will do a better job than they have in the past on regular housing? And as my colleague, the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) says, why five years? Why not ten years or fifteen years or longer?

Governments in Germany and in Scandinavian countries are building housing units, and they are saying in advance that their housing units will remain in good shape for 100 years. The minister is saying that, because he cannot get the builders to build for people who cannot afford to pay the market price, we must build limited dividend housing and give subsidies. But the government does not give the subsidies to those people who cannot afford to pay the rent; the subsidies are given to the builders. Moreover, the government does not require the builder to guarantee his work for a period of more than five years. Surely, we have our priorities backwards. I do not suppose we will ever have enough money to put into housing, but surely whatever money there is should be spend for those people who need housing the most; that is, not for people who hope to be covered under AHOP, not for people who will be covered by limited dividend housing, but for people who need housing the most.

It could be a lot better and should be a lot better for people for whom we are supposed to have been providing housing under our various public housing programs. Surely, that is where the money should have been directed. Surely, the minister could have done that, but if he is going to put the money into limited dividend housing, which I and my colleagues think is a mistake, then he ought to ensure that the limited dividend housing which is built will be of a standard of which we will not have to be ashamed as we have up until now. The minister shakes his head. The fact is that a great deal of the limited housing developments built in the past under other ministers were clearly inadequate, and I am sure not planned to stand for 100 years. As the years go by, we can see as we walk or drive along our streets how inadequate those housing units are.

Mr. Danson: Just so that the record is straight, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) said that I shook my head. I should like to record that I nodded my head. I agree that standards must remain high.

Mr. Orlikow: I wish the minister would put his money where his words are. I wish I could believe this minister. I wish he would live up to the assurances he is giving us today in a better way than previous ministers in charge of housing. Liberal governments have been in power for 12 of the 13 years that I have been here, and all of them have been subjected to the same kind of situation and the same criticisms and suggestions. Members of the opposition are here to criticize and attack the government, and members on the government side are here to defend the government. The fact is that these suggestions have been made by members of parliament and by provincial governments regardless of their political stripe, whether it be Conservative in Ontario, Liberal in Nova Scotia, Social Credit in British Columbia or Alberta or NDP in Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

Mr. De Bané: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think that the hon. member will admit that what he is saying now is really not related to the amendment. I am sure that everyone in this House would like to see the bill passed before the recess. We have only 24 hours left. I am sure that everyone wants to make an effort to speed up the process. I think the first step should be that our speeches are related to the amendment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think that the parliamentary secretary's point is well taken. I hate to say that because so many of his points are not well taken. I think it is important that this legislation move forward. I do not suggest that it is everything the minister has painted it to be, but perhaps experience will prove otherwise. Nonetheless, this legislation has been put before us and it has gone through committee. We are now at report stage. I think perhaps it is time we addressed ourselves to the amendments placed on the order paper by the New Democratic Party and stopped this silly filibustering.

● (1630)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre on the same point of order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, will the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton make the same speech when they talk incessantly on Bill C-8?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Order, please. I think the points of order raised are in order and appropriate to the debate. All hon. members will be aware that this is not a general debate on housing; we are specifically paying attention to clause 5 of Bill C-46 and the particular line mentioned in the amendment. It would assist the proceedings immeasurably if remarks were directed to that point.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that if I were out of order during my remarks just now, I may have been out of order earlier when I was talking about the fact that this government is determined to spend money on AHOP rather than public housing. When I was interrupted, however, I was talking about the fact that there is nothing in this legislation and nothing in the record of Central Mortgage and Housing to indicate that they will police the limited dividend housing projects which the minister hopes will be built. That is precisely what I was talking about and I believe I was in order.

The parliamentary secretary was in a hurry when the bill was being debated on second reading; he was in a hurry in committee, and he is in a hurry today. But I want to assure him that we are going to let this bill through before the recess, Mr. Speaker. I wish that he would occasionally show that he means the things he says, and that he would show more concern about the kind of people who are going to live in the limited dividend housing than he does for people here in parliament or those who can afford to build their own homes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): The question is on Motion No. 1 (Mr. Gilbert). All those in favour of the said motion please say, yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): All those opposed please say, nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11) a recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview) moved:

Motion No. 2.

That Bill C-46, an act to amend the National Housing Act, be amended by deleting clause 5.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I tried with all my Irish persuasion to have members of the House accept the first motion which I thought was a reasonable one. It was not accepted, so this is a second attempt to appeal to the reason of hon. members on a very important point. I raised the point in the first motion. I want to delete the entire section which provides subsidies to private builders of rental housing, and I have set forth my reasons. Builders have had a heyday with regard to capital costs and allowances. We are now going to give them subsidies, but we are not going to have any control over construction and maintenance standards. After five years we are going to give them the opportunity to sell these units that they are renting to tenants and they are going to make a capital gain. This is a very inefficient use of the capital available for housing. The government has added insult to injury by passing the mortgage insurance on to the private companies rather than retaining it in the control of CMHC.

Those were the main arguments I used on the first motion, and they are the main arguments I put forward on the second motion. I repeat, we have a problem in Canada with regard to housing. I am glad the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) is here because he is a man of intelligence and compassion and I want to direct my remarks to him.

We have a critical housing situation in Canada. The situation as outlined by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) shows that it is the people in the lower income groups who are affected. The Postmaster General is concerned about these people and we in the New Democratic Party say that the moneys of CMHC as well as private money should be directed to taking care of those people.

The Minister of State for Urban Affairs has said that over 800,000 people pay more than 25 per cent of their income for rent. He said that 107,000 people who earn less than $3,000 a year pay 50 per cent of their income for rent. We say that these moneys should be directed to two sectors—the public housing sector and the non-profit co-op sector. Is anything more reasonable than that?

May I point out what the minister has done, Mr. Speaker? In December he issued a statement to CMHC setting forth that the federal rental housing program had produced 18 projects for family housing. At that time he attempted to use CMHC money to build housing units for family rental, more especially for the lower income groups. I am sure the Postmaster General will be concerned, because he is concerned about low income people in Toronto.

This is what the Minister of State for Urban Affairs did, Mr. Speaker. He had Green Glen Developments build an apartment complex at the northeast corner of Jane and Finch streets in Toronto and gave CMHC $12,278,000 to build 229 one bedroom units, 66 two bedroom units and 132 three bedroom units. He wants to solve the problem of low income people by building a 33 story complex to house them. I am sure the Postmaster General knows how he would feel if he were one of the people living in that 33 storey building with a family. I am sure he can fully appreciate the social problems that will flow from that type of development.

This approach to rental housing only creates social problems and should not be permitted. Loans to the builders are given at 8 per cent for 15 years. If the minister wants to build homes for low income people, he should provide a low interest rate. If the minister wants $1 billion for housing, he can get it. He should say to private institutions like banks, insurance and trust companies, "You have a social responsibility to fulfil to those on low incomes and you should assign a certain percentage of your money to such people at low interest rates." That is what the minister ought to do. But does he do it? Not for a minute, Mr. Speaker. He goes to the builders and developers—

Mr. Benjamin: Cap in hand.

Mr. Gilbert: —cap in hand and says, "Will you please build these limited dividend homes. If you do, we will enter into an agreement with you and, at the end of five years, you can change the rents or sell those apartments and make a capital gain. If you incur any capital losses in the meantime, you can write them off against any profits you might make from this project. Further, we will not ask you to obey the sort of strict CMHC building standards which have prevailed in the past."

I appeal to the sensibilities of the Postmaster General. Surely, he does not support this type of bill which provides for subsidies for five years. After five years, the builders are to be released from almost all of their obligations. Most of their commitments under this legislation will end. If ever the Postmaster General should stand in his place and vote in favour of an amendment like the one we are proposing, it is now. I appeal to him, to other ministers, and to backbenchers of the Liberal and Conservative parties to do the same.

Surely, we can meet our social obligations in Canada. Can we not house our poor on the basis of limiting builders' profits? Can we not erect buildings which conform to adequate building standards and which will last for many years? I shall watch anxiously, when the vote is taken, to see how the Postmaster General and other ministers vote on the amendment.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman had a lot of fun at the Postmaster General's expense, which is quite normal these days, almost as much fun as I had when considering the hon. member's dual policy on industrial relations, a dual policy made evident last evening when he and members of his party voted in favour of ordering striking longshoremen in British Columbia back to work. He and his colleagues were being pragmatic.

The minister is a man of compassion—I say this sincerely—and he is trying to be realistic in housing policies. Ideally, I suppose everyone in this country should live in a nice, self-contained bungalow, on a lot 50 by 100. Many of us bought homes like that after the end of the second world war, when land was reasonable. I myself bought one through Central Mortgage and Housing; even then the mortgage was not easy to pay.

Most of the present ministers' policies are aimed at helping low income families. He has tried to induce private funds into the market, in an effort to see that the private industry assumes its social obligations. I understand the hon. member's point about a 33-storey apartment building. But we must face reality; look at things as they are in the centre of Toronto. Land there is very expensive. I suppose the alternative to the hon. member's scheme is to say that because land is so expensive in the centre of Toronto, because it is so expensive to build anything in the heart of Toronto, poor people in the Toronto area must live 55 miles from the centre of the city.

Mr. Gilbert: I was referring to a project which is already 20 miles from the centre of Toronto.

Mr. Mackasey: Perhaps part of the problem is that the Tory government which has been in power for the last 35 years in the province has not been intelligent enough to take advantage of this government's land banking program, which it has known about many for years. Or, if that government did release land, it did not release it for the right type of housing, as is obvious.

An hon. Member: Filibuster.

Mr. Mackasey: No, Mr. Speaker, there is no filibuster. I will sit down, then vote for the amendment with a clear conscience, particularly as I know the minister intends to direct as much public and private money as possible into the market, so that we can help people who depend on rental housing to acquire suitable accommodation.

The minister knows my views. He knows we should be spending millions of dollars more in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, and on the north shore of New Brunswick. The minister is the one who educated me to these facts during many meetings in cabinet. He, like everybody else, must do the best he can with the money at his disposal. Let me say that, at the present moment, the government's number one priority is to spend money in the housing sector, in order to stimulate the economy. That action is necessary, as I think the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and the conventional wisdom will concede, given the current phase of the business cycle. The government wants to meet its social obligations and a greater proportion than ever of housing money is being directed to people on low income, and particularly to people who, because of circumstances beyond their control, are forced to depend on subsidized housing.

Instead of castigating the minister, we should be thankful that we have a minister of such compassion responsible for a sensitive social portfolio.

Mr. Gilbert: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker; the 33-story complex to which I referred, and about which the Postmaster General talked, is not in the centre of Toronto; it is in the suburbs, at least 20 miles from the centre.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, it makes no difference whether the complex is 20 or 50 miles from the centre. Perhaps, logically, it ought to be 75 miles from the centre. I am sure that there is no room for any sort of housing in the heart of Toronto, no room for poor people's, rich people's or anybody else's housing. Perhaps there is no room because of past poor town planning. The hon. member is asking the parliament of Canada to think for the government of Ontario, which did not have enough intelligence to provide for proper zoning regulations in that community, and make it possible for people to live in the heart of Toronto. That, of course, is one of the problems with big cities in this country.

Our people, unlike people in Europe, no longer live in the hearts of our cities. We should be fighting to bring people back to the centre of our cities, instead of building high-rise and office buildings. At night, after six o'clock, the centres of our cities are like dark canyons. I agree with the philosophy. I think everyone in the House does. But you must face reality.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Order, please. I had assumed we are discussing some sort of point of order. It escapes the Chair exactly what the point of order is.

[Mr. Mackasey.]

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, let me say to the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) that we hoped that, with the appointment of a new minister in charge of housing, we should see a fundamental change from the sort of housing policy the government has followed for the past number of years. We hoped for a change in the direction of the Canadian housing policy, and we do not have it. We are witnessing more of the same. Let us not forget the point of the amendment, the point which the Postmaster General forgot to mention. It is this: we should quit subsidizing those who do not need subsidies. Instead, we should put more of the money we save into low income and limited dividend housing. That should stimulate housing starts in Canada and represent a change in policy. Such change in policy is long overdue.

The Postmaster General is concerned about basic human rights, about which the people in this country and members of the United Nations are also concerned. But is not a basic right the right to decent housing? Apparently that right is not extended to low income people. Under this government the developers have the right to charge all the market will bear and speculators and developers have the right to do their worst. You know, the money changers were driven from the temple 2,000 years ago but they "snuck" in through the back door under this government's housing policies.

A fundamental change is necessary with regard to how we are going to develop housing for low and middle income families sufficient to meet their needs. This will not be accomplished by following the same method we have been using since the end of World War II. It is not going to happen. By following the concept of charging all that the traffic will bear and allowing usurious interest rates to be levied against people with low and middle incomes, we will not succeed. The subsidies now being provided for the industry, the builders, developers and land speculators, should be used to subsidize interest rates for low and middle income families. Those earning less than $8,000, $9,000 or $10,000 a year should get an interest rate on their mortgages of 6 per cent. They would then get their houses built. They would either build them themselves or hire developers to build them.

There should be a freeze on land prices in our cities and the suburbs. We should quit allowing land to change hands two or three times through interlocking companies with a markup each time. We should put an end to the uncivilized and inhuman situation of allowing a 50 by 100 foot lot to sell for $10,000, $15,000, $20,000 or $30,000. That is not free enterprise. That even flies in the face of the principles and concepts of members opposite, but yet they perpetuate policies and legislation that continues along the same line. That is why we are trying to put forward these amendments.

The Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) knows the situation for low and middle income earners. He has worked with those people. In fact, he lived in those circumstances. The red herrings that the minister dragged into his remarks do not help. As one of the leaders in cabinet, I thought he would try to persuade the minister responsible for housing and his other colleagues to make the fundamental change in housing policy that is required so that we can really put up houses for those who need and are able to pay for them.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the minister sponsoring this bill. Within the last few minutes I saw a report in the London Times regarding an announcement that was made by the British government in co-operation with the Greater London Council which was based on their experience. That is a small country with a large population. The city of London has more than ten million people. Governments in that country have traditionally built a much higher percentage of the housing stock for rental than has ever been dreamed of in Canada. They decided they would no longer build high-rise apartments for family dwellings.

I have a question for the minister which I hope he will answer. Has the minister and his officials in his department and CMHC really considered the effects of putting families into 33 storey apartment buildings? I am talking about the social effects on families with two or more children living in three-bedroom apartments in buildings of this size. Has consideration been given to the problems of policing and everything else that will arise as a result of putting hundreds of families with two or more children into 25, 30 or 33 storey apartment buildings? Will the minister assure the House he has given some thought to this and tell us something about the effects of that kind of planning.

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, I believe this amendment is trying to accomplish what the first one tried to accomplish. The other tried to dissect the clause. This tries to eliminate the clause completely. I made my remarks with reference to this previously. They still stand. It is a difference in understanding.

I believe this is a gross misinterpretation of the diversion of government funds. Government funds are going entirely to low income Canadians. Private sector money is coming in as well. A 1.8 per cent or 2 per cent spread in interest rates is very important to anyone building apartment accommodation which we want to have built for all Canadians, especially those with low incomes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): The question is on Motion No. 2 of the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): All those in favour of the said motion will please say, yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): All those opposed will please say, nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Royal Assent

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Pursuant to Standing Order 75, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of the adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard)—Health—Possibility of provinces sharing cost of chronic care hospitals; the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray)—Energy—oil—Request for investigation of possible fraudulent increase in import prices; the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Hurlburt)—Agriculture—Request government not make change in grades of beef purchased for armed forces.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate have passed the following bills: Bill C-54, an act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1975; Bill C-55, an act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1976.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): I have the honour to inform the House that I have received the following communication:

Ottawa, March 25, 1975

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Wishart F. Spence, O.B.E., Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, the 25th day of March, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
André Garneau
Brigadier General
Administrative Secretary to the Governor General

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills, private bills and notices of motions. Shall orders Nos. 167, 3, 4, 10, 17, 21 and 24 be allowed to stand and retain their precedence on the order paper?

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is extremely difficult for members of this House to have any knowledge of what is being discussed in the hour that is allocated for private members' business. The procedure set out is that the order is supposed to be followed. We are continually being asked for unanimous consent to pass over bills. Your Honour has already listed Nos. 3, 4, 10, 17, 21 and 24 which have been on the order paper since October 15, 1974. I do not believe it is in the interest of hon. members to continue this procedure. I think at an early date we must ask the members to proceed in the order in which the order of business appears on the order paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT TO BRING BROADCASTERS WITHIN PROVISIONS RESPECTING OFFENCES THAT TEND TO CORRUPT MORALS

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer) moved that Bill C-230, to amend the Criminal Code (obscene broadcasting), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

● (1700)

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to bring broadcasters, referring specifically to CBC television, within the Criminal Code provisions respecting offences that tend to corrupt morals. This simply means that the general public would be provided with an avenue through which such person or persons could be charged with a criminal offence. There is no intent here to define what is obscene, immoral or indecent—that is the responsibility of the code of law.

At present there is no vehicle available to the Canadian taxpayer to effectively control CBC programs for which they are forced to pay an increasing amount each year. They can only express their opinions to members of parliament or to the CBC but, due to the protection that Crown corporations enjoy through lack of government interference, and under the cloak of the Canadian Radio-Television Commission, their complaints prove to be an exercise in futility. If the CRTC would follow a set of guidelines established by the majority of Canadians, and if the CBC could be held responsible for its actions, this type of legislation would not be necessary.

You will note, Mr. Speaker, that this bill is aimed at the CBC, the expenses of which could be construed as a levy of $15 on every man, woman and child in Canada, or an expenditure of over $350 million this year. When people pay for a product, they have the right to a product they can appreciate and enjoy. Unfortunately, in the minds of taxpayers, during the past five to seven years there has been rapid and continuing depreciation in the value of the CBC. In this age of technology, knowledge should be increasing and improving—there are greater opportunities to learn. Why then should we have vulgar and corrupt programs inflicted upon viewers by this publicly-funded outlet? I cannot accept the two-bit statement of those who ask if there is not a switch on a TV set or, if CBC productions are so objectionable, why is it requested to extend into new areas. Anyone who makes this type of remark is missing the point entirely, as is the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) who merely says he will relay the complaints of MPs to the CBC.

If criticism had any effect at all on the CBC, we would not be required to bring up such matters in this House. Why should anyone in this country have to turn off his TV because of a despicable CBC program for which he is paying? As long as the CBC is a Crown corporation, operated by public funds, it has a responsibility, as does the government, to provide satisfactory programs for residents in every area of our country. If the CBC will not furnish acceptable services out of the millions of dollars it spends, why not sell it to permit a private firm to provide enjoyable entertainment? At least then taxpayers' dollars would not be involved.

Mr. Speaker, it is not necessary for me to take time to give more details to this House, because members of parliament are well aware of the dissatisfaction of constituents, and in some cases of their anger, about CBC shows. Time does not permit me to list the numerous objectionable productions emanating from that corporation, but I do want to focus attention on one in particular—The Ten Lost Years—which was apparently an attempt to depict the hard years of the thirties. While those were difficult years, they were not lost years for those who struggled through them. "Lost" could better be applied to those whose thinking is so badly warped they could not portray what did happen during the depression due to inability to comprehend; instead, they foisted their interpretation of life today on those earlier years.

I would like to read, now, a letter which was addressed to the CBC, a copy of which I received:

Sunday evening productions under the guise of 'Canadiana' (not to be confused with either drama or entertainment) are consistently so bad that I, for one, am asking the Minister of Communications and Transport, and also my local member of parliament to get you off the air. 'Ten Lost Years', your effort of last evening, indicated clearly the group of alleged performers lack both direction and talent; even the minor character parts were terrible.

Mr. Speaker, the most unfortunate aspect of that entire program, other than its vulgarity, was neglect in not portraying the down-to-earth philosophy of our countrymen who brought Canada through those troubled times. The depression of the 'thirties was world-wide; it was not unique to us in Canada, and we have to accept that fact, but added to the woes of western Canadians was the drought which hit the prairies. The only drought revealed in the "Ten Lost Years" was the dearth of facts, and the drought in the minds of its producers.

The producers used the setting of the hard times of the 'thirties to place emphasis on the standards of a sick segment of our society. I want to quote from a letter which reads:

> Today a percentage of our society has a tendency to render the minimum of service for the greatest possible gain. Thoughts of making a contribution are completely lacking, and to say this unfortunate philosophy extends throughout the world of today, or that it is worse in other countries, is really a poor excuse for having it obtained in Canada.

Canadians who lived through the drought and the depression of the thirties did not ask for, expect or receive government handouts which are ordinary procedure today. They faced the difficulties of those years with fortitude and determination; defeat was not part of their make-up.

"Ten Lost Years" did not depict the shipping of carloads of vegetables donated by residents outside the drought area to the needy; it did not depict farmers removing their remaining physical resources in covered wagons several hundred miles to a new land, without complaint, to start again; it did not depict the endless hours of toil, all to no avail because tractors were sitting idle in sheds or fields without fuel to operate. Horsepower had to be relied upon to till the soil. The program did not show the farmers who managed to feed their stock using horses to build roads to work out their taxes; it did not show women, urban and rural, taking picnic baskets to community picnics without cost to anyone to enjoy ball games and other sports at a time when such tremendous value was placed on fellowship. The show did not depict Saturday nights when those fortunate enough to possess radios waited with anticipation to welcome neighbours to hear musical programs of fun, of class and moral fibre; it did not portray crops being blown out by the roots and fences completely buried by topsoil, powder-dry for lack of moisture. No mention was made of the fact that the Canadian Wheat Board came into its own in those years, or that the Bank of Canada was founded for the benefit of Canadians. No, the creators of this falsification did not do so because, even with their expertise at degrading, which was their obvious goal, they could not penetrate either corporation.

Mr. Speaker, the CBC sacrificed a wonderful opportunity to provide entertainment of educational worth and vivid recollection and, either due to lack of initiative or disregard for reality, chose to place emphasis through calculated deception on immorality and obscenity in a complete distortion of the truth. Canadians who know, through experience or otherwise, what actually did happen in the 'thirties are not willing to have their tax dollars spent on programs neither suitable for viewing nor factual. This bill, if passed, could be the basis of control over productions which exceed approved limitations. I trust my proposal will receive the support of all good parliamentarians.

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Madam Speaker, I am quite moved by the warm welcome I am receiving. I am pleased to say a few words on Bill C-230 introduced by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) who has just stated why he introduced this bill.

Its purpose is to amend the Criminal Code to make it perhaps even more illegal than it is already to broadcast obscene representations and matters. I would like first of all to congratulate the hon. member for his courage in introducing such an imaginative bill in this House. I appreciate that he certainly represents the views of the voters in his riding. Having recently sat on the Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts, I know for a act that several members are concerned about having received mail from their voters about dramatic programs that were shown on the national network, and particularly the English network of the CBC.

I know the hon. member certainly received mail from his constituents, and as their view corresponds no doubt to his, he moved in the direction he did today, and I can only commend him for that. However, I am not sure myself I share the same views. The hon. member's purpose is commendable in that it states in this House what seems to be a regional concern. On the other hand, the bill he introduced, if passed, would have a national bearing, and that bothers me somewhat. I also represent people from downtown Montreal, people who never miss an opportunity to let me know, as their member of Parliament and chairman of the Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts of the House of Commons, when they are not satisfied with programs they see on the national network and the private networks.

However, in the case of programs referred to, namely "Ten Lost Years" or other programs recently mentioned at the Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts such as "Baptizing" and other programs whose names I forgot, I did not receive any adverse comment from my constituents. I do not think there was much either in Ontario. It was at both ends of the country, more especially in rural areas of Canada, that those programs disturbed the people.

Now, I already see a weakness. The member is concerned by an apparently regional problem. I do not think that hon. members—after all, they do represent the entire country—will blindly pass such a bill.

For the information of some members who did not have the opportunity to attend the last sittings of the Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts, I repeat some views put forward by the CBC authorities on the lewdness or alleged lewdness of some programs. For instance, Mr. Picard said that it is difficult, in this day and age, if the corporation truly wants to discharge its mandate and depict our Canadian society as it is today, to picture only the bright side of things because, unfortunately, our society also has its dark side.

What is news? As always, more often than otherwise, violence if not obscenity. But some would have the corporation overlook, in its productions, that aspect of Canadian society; still, it is very real; that was one of the points Mr. Picard made.

He made another with regard to the artistic value of some plays broadcast, on request, by the corporation. Some of those plays have undeniable intrinsic value; still, it happens that in the course of the performance sex or violence are displayed.

In my opinion, if the play as a whole is not only an excuse for sex and violence, but tells a story which is logical, which makes sense, and which has an artistic value, I do not see why it should be rejected outright simply because there is a scene here and there of sex, for sex is an integral part of our lives. This does not mean that productions must be filled with sex, but I feel that we should not fall head over heels because we see a breast on the television screen, for these are quite normal things.

Do we want our state-run broadcasting system to waste its time depicting a Victorian style society which no longer exists, which falsely tries to show us a society which is made up of angels and which has nothing in common with reality? We do not expect that from our national broadcasting system, and we do not want it to become something like Molière's Tartuffe,. if you know what I mean.

There is a question I wish to ask all hon. members. Should we censor the media? As a matter of principle, I feel that it is important to stop there. Films are no longer censored in the province of Quebec. Once they have been screened, they are either accepted or rejected in their entirety. Films no longer get clipped as they used to be. A decision is taken as to whether the film is acceptable or not. Those which are deemed acceptable certainly contain scenes which some people can normally be expected to find offensive. Otherwise, if you do not want to offend anyone, you will not show anything daring, and you will probably end up displeasing those who would like to see daring scenes. You cannot make everybody happy. And yet, a middle-of-the-road policy is certainly not impossible bearing in mind that viewers always can exercise a control over what reaches their households through electronic media. The listener who doesn't like a program has ample freedom to turn off his set, watch another program, read his paper or even do at home what he does not like to watch on TV.

I wonder if we should censor media and run the risk of hindering creativity. In all media there are devoted people whose work it is to show people what comes out of their creative minds, to show things with an artistic value. Frequently, the shows which are programmed are based for instance on books, on novels. For example, everybody heard about a film entitled The Carpet Baggers, of course a very bold one. Yet the film was based on a novel which was a best-seller. If everybody rushes to buy that book, how could a film producer be smitten with remorse and regret or ask himself a million questions before he starts shooting his film?

Media may be censored if the matter arises, but whoever does so should wonder what the results may be from a creative point of view. It can be done, but only after it has been thought over.

[Mr. Guilbault.]

Do we want to run the risk of describing an artificial society, I shall refer to it presently, a holy society that does not exist? All kinds of directions can be given to our media. Parliament can even force them, if it so wishes, to show nice things only. We know that in other countries, national television corporations used to show the people nothing but nice things; but of course those nations came to require more freedom, and certainly the intention here is not to restrict the freedom of the media.

Finally, the basic question arises: Are we to take the decisions for the people? The decision to watch or not to watch TV, to turn the radio on or not to do it is a personal decision, a matter of choice very easily exercised by the people. They can be deprived of that choice, but we should first ask listeners and the general public whether such is their wish. I do not believe that such a decision can be taken in the course of this kind of one-hour debate. I am not inferring the decision would be intrinsically bad, if a majority of Canadians were to tell us: Choose what we are going to see. Maybe that decision will be made in the future. But before acting, we should await the order to do so.

I would emphasize at this point that the Criminal Code, contrary to what the hon. member for Red Deer apparently feels, already includes a number of provisions on obscenity. Criminal charges may already be laid in cases of obscene showings on television. Through this bill, the member seeks more specific measures. This is of some concern to me, because creativity could be restricted in the process. Television and radio producers already live under some sort of threat. In addition to the Criminal Code, the Canadian Radio-Television Commission has coercive powers much more effective than amendments to the Criminal Code. The CRTC already established regulations on obscenity, and they can even suspend media licences. That is much more serious than putting an employee of the medium in prison for a month. This sword of Damocles is much more likely to make owners of media think twice than the proposed amendment to the Criminal Code.

Since provisions to that effect already exist in the code, I wonder if the bill is not more an answer to a purely political and regional problem, about which some members are understandably concerned. I am willing to be tolerant and to accept their point of view, but I would also like them to accept the point of view of those who are not concerned, who watch television openmindedly, and who are able, when they are not satisfied, to turn it off without asking the government to do it for them.

Today's debate, Madam Speaker, will certainly be useful. Obviously the CBC is already aware of this debate. Its president and senior officials will certainly read carefully what was said here and will be alerted, above all after the two sittings of the Committee on Braadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts which were devoted almost entirely to this problem. This means that today's debate is very useful, that it will allow the concern of a part of the public to pass through, as it was presented to the House of Commons by its representatives. In my opinion, in the present democratic system, this is a good thing. Those who are concerned about something have the right to express their views. They did here today and the parties interested will certainly benefit from it.

[English]

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Madam Speaker, one almost hesitates to rise on a debate of this nature. One must at the outset offer some words of congratulations to the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) for his courage in presenting this bill to the House, because one knows that if any question is raised about the standard of material shown on television, the person raising the question immediately comes in for the kind of attack that we have just heard from the hon. member opposite. Admittedly his attack was a far more gentle putdown than some of the recent ones directed at members who have chosen to question particularly the programming of the CBC.

We have just heard that this matter is a rural matter, as though there was some quality in rural life that developed a narrowness or myopia of vision, an inability to see things as they are. Having a rural background, I reject the suggestion that the rural life, by its very nature, mitigates against the intellectual examination of problems that face society at the present time.

Mr. Blais: There may have been something lost in the translation, Madam Speaker. I listened very carefully to the remarks of the hon. member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault), and at no time did he make a distinction between rural and urban communities. He was speaking directly of regional things, and in view of the fact that the mover is from Red Deer, perhaps that is what was indicated. I am from a rural area and I do not feel that my area was being slighted.

Mr. Johnston: Madam Speaker, I was listening to the translation and not directly at this distance to the hon. members' remarks but certainly the word "rural" was used, as well as the suggestion that the whole thing was a regional matter. I have received a fair amount of mail in the last three weeks on this issue from points all the way from Truro, Nova Scotia, to Vancouver Island, and a fair portion of it came from the province of Ontario and from the urban metropolis of Toronto. I would suggest that almost all the voices from across that space, from the larger centres as well as the smaller, were saying the same thing to me. I do not accept the idea that the problem is appreciated only by a few people in one particular area of the country.

The problem is nationwide and undoubtedly worldwide. When we read publications from other lands we see that it is not isolated to Canada, in any way, shape or form. The putdowns come in a variety of ways. During a session of the committee I referred to a letter written by John Hirsch, head of t.v. drama, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in Toronto. He sent the letter out to the major newspapers of this country. In this regard there was some particular discussion of programming, and Mr. Hirsch said in his letter:

> It is a matter of determining the role of the CBC in the consideration and formation of public taste; that is, whether the corporation is to follow or to lead in such matters.
> Obviously it is not up to CBC to go wildly off into avant-garde styles and far-out situations and language, but rather to remain just a few steps ahead of the whole viewing public in such matters.

If one looks at the whole picture there seems to be a sort of downward slide rather than a process of elevating or raising the level of the standard of value. When there seems to be a downward slide one is suspicious of any writer that talks about being ahead of the general public in a direction in which one would not wish to see the country or its broadcasting moving. Certainly, if one watched the television production "You'll Be All Right, Jamie Boy" he will know that this was pretty far out both in circumstance and language, and deserving of a fair amount of criticism.

Mr. Hirsch then went on to describe recent years' programming and he described it as a diet of harmless, rather blah material from CBC drama of little significance, programs that were made to be turned off, and he said the vigour and challenge came from American programs. I am not questioning the accuracy of what he describes about CBC programming over recent years, but it seems to me that the answer to that problem is not to go from bad to worse but to make some effort to improve the situation. In talking about American programming Mr. Hirsch says that they have managed to handle such difficult subjects as abortion, homosexuality, gang-rape, wife swapping and other purported untouchables.

One thing that concerns me very much about all of this is the attempt to build an unshockable viewing audience. I would be very much concerned about a nation whose national network, or any network, handled some of the subjects in the list given to us by Mr. Hirsch and it produced no critical response to and through members of parliament. That would concern me, because I think that by that time we would be sunk in apathy a long way, and we would be at a point where we would not react any more to situations that should give us cause to react. I have been concerned about this for a long time.

When I am not in parliament, I teach school. A year ago, browsing along a bookshelf I picked up a book called "Go Ask Alice". I am surprised that it has not made the roster of CBC drama programs. It purports to be the diary of a 14 or 15 year old girl who is a drug addict. It is truly the bottom. The class I had at school used to write tiny book reviews for me and I always told them to write about anything they had read, it did not matter where they read it. I discovered over the course of a few weeks that several people in my class had read "Go Ask Alice" and spoke of it in most glowing terms.

When I asked one day in class how many people had read the book, about five girls put up their hands. I asked then how many of them thought it was a good book, and all five hands went up again. It concerned me that they should see that particular book as a good book. It was truly the bottom in terms of language, in terms of lack of a plot, and in terms of ripping off young people by purporting to be on the level of "The Diary of Anne Frank". The cover purported the books to be similar. So I asked my pupils why they thought it was a good book, and they said to me, "That is the way it is, that is where it's at."

Again I am concerned about the acceptance of an utter lack of standards, the absence of everything one might call traditional morality. I was very concerned about Mr.

Hirsch's defence of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in his letter when he said:

> Now the Canadian viewer suddenly finds himself confronted on our drama programs with an image that is his own. He sees that he is like others.

I would hope that the Canadian viewer was not confronting himself on some of the recent programming on CBC. I would hope we were not at that level yet. I would hope there were still some happy families in this country, some fathers who were respected by their children and beloved by their wives, that there were within the country some normal family relationships because, if there are not, then we are in a bad way indeed.

Finally Mr. Hirsch said:

> In other words, we have to give the viewers not only what they think they want, we have to give them the kind of high quality that the honest, creative artists we are trying to employ know they will want once they try it, and once they get to like it.

I was extremely concerned about the analogy to feeding a small child a variety of vegetables that he does not want to eat but that he should eat. Very often, children are exposed to those vegetables gradually to get used to the taste and eventually find themselves liking it. The argument there is usually that the offending food is nutritious and of value. But I would be very suspicious of the same effort going into conditioning the Canadian public to some of the recent programming that they have had on the CBC. I would be concerned indeed if a public shown "You'll be all right, Jamie Boy" would not be shocked by it, and would not resent in particular the point raised by the hon. member for Red Deer that they were paying for it at the same time.

I do not wish to limit my remarks to the CBC because there is a great deal we should consider seriously about the whole spectrum of television broadcasting in this land. I am one who believes in the abolition of the death penalty, and yet as I watch television occasionally—one does not have to watch it very closely, all you have to be is in the next room listening to the sound effects—I recognize the compendium of crime, violence, torture and rape that is placed before the Canadian public night after night, usually starting early in the day and placed before small children and often babies. Given that it is not much wonder if we seem to be retreating into violence and retreating from our standards and abandoning moral values. That is one thing of which we should be very careful.

There are other programs that would almost qualify for the label of obscene. Here again one moves into matters of opinion, but when you see a "Miss Teenage Canada Pageant," for example, one sees a sort of exploitation of those people. That was not a CBC but a CTV program. I think one wonders about the value and the contribution that will be made to this country by that sort of program.

I am also concerned that those people who question such programs become the recipients of the kind of criticism that was directed at the members of the broadcasting committee in this morning's issue of the Globe and Mail by columnist Geoffrey Stevens. What one says is characterized as a "knee-jerk reaction," and the entire committee is labelled as grossly incompetent and having spent its time on programming rather than on any diligent seeking out of the financing that goes behind the CBC. I do not see much point in digging too deeply into the CBC financing if the question in the minds of the public concerns the product that comes out at the end. That is one of the areas at which we can and should look.

I hope that voices in the House will continue to hold to their critical faculty and not be afraid to express it, because I still feel that across this land there is a great majority who want something better and expect something better from television.

One of the things which worries me about our Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is that I suspect the young writers of Canada, or the honest creative artists of this country, while they may be very honest and very creative, quickly learn what can be sold to the organization and begin to tailor their product accordingly. I think the same is somewhat true of films. One would hope that we could still find a market for a dramatic presentation of a family which triumphs rather than of a family which always fails.

The previous speaker mentioned the CRTC, and it seems to me that as the years have gone by, with the change of name and the change of function, that body has in a sense lost some of the authority and the concern it had when it was known as the Board of Governors of the CBC. In that older name there was the suggestion of some watching over, and some guiding along the lines which are hoped for in the bill presented this afternoon. I am afraid that that control and that concern are now rather lost.

I can appreciate the despair in the letters which come to me from people who feel they are voiceless. They know that something is wrong, and they sense this very deeply. Yet they cannot make any impact at all. They then turn to their member of parliament and hope that a voice will be raised somewhere. I trust that these voices will not be silenced by the kind of criticism which has been handed out to members of the broadcasting committee over these last few days because they have dared to raise questions of real concern to a great many people in this country.

I feel that there is room for the CRTC to be some kind of watchdog. I realize that there are avenues which could be followed at the present time by someone objecting to programming in terms of launching a suit, but I realize as well that for the average citizen, whether he lives in a great city or in a rural area, the problems of effectively launching a suit against the CBC, or against the CRTC, are very great indeed and are not likely to be undertaken.

I do trust that as a result of the debate we have been having in the last three weeks, and as a result of all the letters which have been written, we can have a good look at the kind of programming which is too prevalent and be prepared to do something, not just about what is usually called obscenity or bad language, but particularly about the violence, the bloodshed, the treatment of law enforcement officers—those factors which must play a role in the rising tide of crime facing this country.

Mr. C. Douglas (Bruce): Madam Speaker, I certainly appreciate the concern of the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers), and the concern of many hon. members in this House and of people across the country about the programs which appear not only on our national network but on all networks, and in all facets of the communications industry. They are concerned, whether they are from rural areas or urban areas, about the use of obscenity, profanity and immoral activities by anyone, whether it be in broadcasting, newspapers, or books. No matter where it may be, I feel that close scrutiny of such questionable material must be carried out at all times by those responsible for the activities of all broadcasters, reporters, advertisers, and all those related to the dissemination of information and entertainment, not only on the public broadcasting service, which seems to be the prime thrust of the concern here this evening, but on the private sector of broadcasting as well.

I am concerned that much of the criticism has been directed, whether rightly or wrongly, against the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and members of that broadcasting group. This bill states that everyone commits an offence who, being a broadcaster, or an officer of an employer of a broadcaster, allows to be broadcast an immoral, indecent or obscene performance, entertainment or representation. That takes in the complete segment of broadcasters, from those behind the microphones to the cameramen, script men, writers, producers and directors, no matter where they are in that broadcast segment. I think that perhaps in this respect we must consider where the broadcaster fits in, what he has done, and what regulations he is now concerned with regarding this matter.

Other hon. members will no doubt deal with the legal aspect of this bill, but in the next few minutes I would like to direct the attention of the House to the effect the bill will have on the broadcasters at the grass roots level of broadcasting. I believe that one of the first concerns would be a precise definition of what is obscene or immoral. As we have learned in the recent hearings of the broadcasting committee, of which I am a member—and I agree with much of what the previous speaker has said regarding reports of the broadcasting committee which have appeared in the newspapers recently—there is certainly a wide divergence of opinion even amongst the members, broadcasters and all the segments of our population as to what is immoral or indecent. What I may feel is immoral or indecent other members of this House may not feel is immoral or indecent, and I think that one of the first things we have to define is the common standard of immorality or indecency. It would be terribly difficult, if not impossible at this time, to arrive at that precise definition.

Last fall, for example, all of the networks presented scenes of the slaughter of calves performed publicly, scenes which immediately shocked a response from the general public and from this House as to the problems faced by the members of the agricultural community, and it was a response that was rightfully made at that time. Surely some segments or individuals in our society found those scenes to be distasteful. Some of them have told me that they found them to be very distasteful, but those are scenes which the farmer takes for granted because he sees them every day of the week in slaughter houses and in other situations. If this bill became law the private citizen could say that that was obscene and immoral, and bring a charge under the Criminal Code.

The bill before us now makes no comment with regard to the extreme violence that is seen not only in the public sector of broadcasting but in the private sector as well, and in many cases more so in the private sector. I believe the extreme violence depicted on television is of parallel importance to the matters raised by the hon. member for Red Deer with respect to immorality.

Another matter of great importance is the effect this bill would have on the level of broadcasting. The bill refers to "Every one . . . who, being a broadcaster—" That includes the disc jockey on morning radio, the cameraman, and even those members of the press gallery who are broadcasters. The provisions of this section of the Criminal Code would cover the situation where anything they said was considered obscene. Producers, directors, and even copywriters would be included.

This is a complex business which is regulated not only by the Canadian Radio and Television Corporation but by the Canadian Association of Broadcasters. This association has a code of ethics which member stations follow, and it exercises control every step along the way. As well as being subject to the scrutiny of their profession members are, of course, subject to the provisions of the Criminal Code and the regulations of the CRTC.

At the present time the CRTC has authority to refuse to grant or renew licences in the broadcasting industry. It can also levy fines against a station or an individual broadcaster guilty of obscene, indecent or profane language or pictorial representation. The CRTC takes into consideration at the time of licence renewal any complaints that have been received from the general public about obscene programming. To my knowledge only a few fines have been levied in this respect and I believe they were against the private sector. I do not know of any renewal of licence having been refused by the CRTC on these grounds. I should draw to the attention of the House the self-regulatory—Mr. Speaker, I note the arrival of Black Rod.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

AMENDMENTS TO AMOUNT OF INSURED LOANS, TO INCREASE CAPITAL OF CORPORATIONS, ETC.

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-46, to amend the National Housing Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview) moved motion No. 3:

That Bill C-46, An Act to amend the National Housing Act, be amended in Clause 6 by striking out lines 28 to 38 at page 3 and by substituting the following therefor:

"(2) Subsection 15.1(3) of the said Act is repealed.".

He said: Madam Speaker, the amendment I am moving at this time is very important. The two amendments I moved this afternoon were not very well received by the minister and the Liberal party and, I am sorry to say, the members of the Conservative party.

The substance of the first two amendments was directed at the private sector. We in the New Democratic Party are opposed to giving subsidies to builders and developers. Motion No. 3 is an opportunity for the members of the Liberal party, especially the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson), to redeem themselves and to vote for a particular sector of the housing industry. I refer specifically to the non-profit sector.

The non-profit sector has had a rather short but impressive history with regard to housing in Canada. The reason is because it has embraced a large number of dedicated people who are prepared to work for little or no pay in order to solve the housing problem. They give some assistance to people with low and moderate incomes.

From time to time the government has been kind to the non-profit sector. I remind hon. members that under the present law the non-profit sector, which includes co-ops, was entitled to 100 per cent financing, a $10,000 start-up fund for its projects, and a 10 per cent capital grant. These appeared to be generous provisions, and they were. The members of the non-profit sector appreciated that help from the government.

Originally they did not have that type of help. At the most they had 95 per cent financing. The government saw the need of the non-profit sector and its contribution to lowering housing prices. It gave those provisions and that help to that sector. As a result the government has experienced a great number of dedicated people trying to solve the problem, especially in the large urban areas. But those people experienced rising land costs which made it very difficult for them to operate. The government realized that, and the minister said he would try to make a change. He said he appreciated the high cost of land and the government would step in to allocate moneys so that land could be purchased by CMHC and leased to the non-profit sector.

In his announcement, the minister set forth the objective of CMHC to give further assistance to the non-profit sector by purchasing land and leasing it to that sector. However, when he made his statement he was very ambiguous as to what he was going to do. He, in effect, said that if the government applies moneys to purchase the land, it could not continue some of the other assistance.

I will remind hon. members of those provisions. There was the $10,000 start-up fund, 100 per cent financing, and the 10 per cent capital grant. He said, in a very ambiguous way, that if the government was going to give moneys to purchase lands, and the land is to be leased to them by CMHC, he was going to cut off their 10 per cent capital grant. This was the "either or" proposition that the minister put to the non-profit sector. This is the reason I am moving this amendment.

We had before us in committee a group of dedicated people representing different housing groups across the country, especially the city of Toronto. Their argument was all-persuasive. In fact I never heard so many compliments paid by members of the housing committee to the presentation that was given by the Toronto Non-Profit Housing Federation. I say again that these are young people who have dedicated their time, ability and energy to help solve the problem.

This group pointed out some of the great benefits of non-profit housing. They pointed out that the residents of non-profit and co-operative housing projects enjoy security of tenure, which is a vital ingredient in the healthy social environment that is necessary for both the individual and the community. In other words, there is security of tenure for the residents who occupy the rental units within a project.

They pointed out that the non-profit corporation manages the housing and allows for more control over the administration by the residents than does the private market rental. This means no huge government bureaucracy or tremendous overhead to manage housing, as in the case of public housing projects. They emphasised security of tenure and far more control over the administration. If Your Honour had been in the House this afternoon you would have heard some of the remarks by members of the NDP with regard to the administration of not only public housing projects but also limited dividend projects operated by the private sector.

Thirdly, they pointed out that the non-profit sector is aimed directly at providing accommodation for low and moderate income households. That is more than important, because of the attitude of the minister, and because the legislation favours the private sector and the middle income group rather than the low and moderate income groups.

They pointed out, fourthly, that non-profit housing is a non-inflationary form of housing, unlike other government housing programs. What they mean by that is that the acquisition of an existing unit for rental, or the building of a new project for the non-profit sector both have the object of not making a profit. If there is ever a philosophy that should be enunciated and implemented in regard to housing in Canada, it is the non-profit aspect.

If the profit aspect entered into education, for example, very few of us would ever have even a third or fourth grade education. If it entered into medicare, then we would not have the health care and assistance that we have today. These young people realize that if profit enters into housing and we want to implement the basic principle that people are entitled to decent housing at affordable cost, then we either have to make a profit out of housing itself, or operate on a minimum profit. This means that we do not increase the cost of land or buildings in this sector.

This is in direct contrast to the situation in the private sector, which treats housing as a commodity and tries to make as much money as it can in as short a time as possible. The result is the high land costs and high housing costs so prevalent across the country today. In the city of Toronto alone the average cost of a home is $54,000. With the high interest rates prevailing today it is very difficult for a person living in Toronto to buy a home.

The federation points out that if the minister did not continue the capital cost allowance provision and the subsidy, this would have a marked effect on the non-profit sector. To illustrate this it prepared a table which I should like to draw to the attention of the minister because I think it is of great importance. For a one bedroom apartment with a monthly rent of $216 in a non-profit project, a person would require an annual income of $10,400; with provincial assistance the income would have to be $9,200. This is a very high income for the average low income family to achieve.

In the case of a large family which requires a four bedroom apartment, the total monthly rent would be $416, and this would require an income of between $17,700 and $20,000. These two examples do not include the cost of the land. If you take $25,000 to be the average cost of land for a home in Toronto, you have to add at least $7,000 for the land cost.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Plus the lawyer's fees.

Mr. Gilbert: Yes, plus the lawyer's fee, as the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) points out. If the non-profit sector is to direct its efforts toward assisting the low and moderate income groups, then it cannot serve this part of the market. This means that there has to be a shift from the lower and moderate income groups to the middle and upper income groups before these units can be occupied, and this is not the purpose of the non-profit sector.

As I have said, Madam Speaker, the purpose of the non-profit sector is to take care of the low and moderate income earners. The subsidies have been far outstripped by the land costs that have prevailed across the country, especially in the large cities. Therefore, we are asking the Minister of State for Urban Affairs and all members of the House to retain the 100 per cent financing provision, the $10,000 start-up fund, and the 10 per cent capital cost provision. The minister has made the 10 per cent capital cost provision an alternative and by so doing, when CMHC acquires the land and leases it to the non-profit sector, he makes it impossible for that sector to function. I know that is not the minister's intention.

I cannot believe that the minister, who is concerned about housing, would direct his efforts and the financing of CMHC toward achieving this purpose. Never have I heard a more persuasive argument than the one I heard from the young people representing the Toronto non-profit groups. They pointed out what was going to happen if the minister made the 10 per cent capital grant an alternative. Surely this is the time to help this kind of group. We should take into serious consideration the fact that the minister has said there are thousands of people in Canada who require help to find housing because of their financial position. I cannot believe for one moment that the minister would agree to bring in legislation prohibiting or restricting the non-profit sector.

Therefore I make a special plea to the minister, and also to the former minister of housing, now the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Basford), who was responsible for sponsoring Bill C-133 in 1973, which gave a thrust to the non-profit sector by creating a capital grant of 10 per cent, a start-up fund of $10,000, and mortgage financing to the extent of 100 per cent. I ask the Minister of National Revenue to plead with and persuade the Minister of State for Urban Affairs not to do what he is doing in this clause of the bill. I was rather proud of the Minister of National Revenue when he was minister of housing—

Mr. Basford: You did not say that at the time.

Mr. Gilbert: The reason I did not give him too much credit was that it might have gone to his head. It might have given him a big head, which he is so capable of acquiring from time to time. I thought he had the right idea in regard to the non-profit sector, but this has been stripped down and restricted by the present minister of housing. I would ask the Minister of National Revenue to stand up in his place when my amendment is called and to vote for continuing the $10,000 start-up fund, 100 per cent financing, and the 10 per cent capital grant.

● (2020)

The minister wants the $10,000 start up fund and the 100 per cent financing, but if the land is acquired by CMHC he does not want to give the 10 per cent capital grant. I am rather ashamed of the minister that he should want to do this because he is a man of good feeling, a man who is genuinely concerned about housing, even though he has not reached the right solutions. I hope the minister will change his mind and accept the amendment.

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the remarks of the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) with regard to third sector housing on which I place a high value. This is a new and important initiative taken by my predecessor, and one which I am following with enthusiasm.

As the hon. member said, these projects are eligible for 100 per cent financing of the capital cost, 10 per cent forgiveness to compensate for the cost of land, and up to $10,000 in start-up fees for groups who build, buy, or manage low-cost housing. In addition provincial assistance is often available. If this is still not sufficient to bring rents down to a level tenants can afford, there are the new provisions of section 44(1)(b) of the National Housing Act which have just been applied to non-profit and co-operative housing units—this is a rent supplement whose cost is shared by the provinces and the federal government.

As the hon. member has stated, in some cases even a 10 per cent grant is not sufficient to cover the cost of land, especially in high rent areas such as Toronto. In situations of that sort we give non-profit groups an option; the CMHC will then buy the land and lease it back under an arrangement which will enable tenants to go in at rents low-income people can afford. So we are not proposing to take something away. On the contrary, this constitutes a significant benefit. These rents can be set at levels which low income people can afford. I hope these measures will encourage more non-profit groups to go forward in areas where land costs are unusually high.

The hon. member for Broadview is aware of my interest in this subject, and of the interest taken by members of my family in his constituency who are dedicated to this whole area of third sector housing. It is something in which I believe very deeply, bearing in mind the economic benefit to those involved, the enhancement of the community spirit which is bound to be present, the social benefits to those who are managing their own housing and, not least, the fact that these projects will eventually serve as a real countervailing force in the marketplace.

This is a movement to be encouraged. I encourage labour groups wherever I speak to them, as I did yesterday, to emulate the example of the United Auto Workers in moving into this area. Veterans groups will now be able to do so on a much greater scale as a result of the announcement made today by the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald). Legion branches, which are possessed of valuable property and the services of men who have been dedicated to this organization throughout their lives, will be able to take advantage of these provisions.

I do not know of any other nation in the world which has gone so far in doing something for yet another generation of veterans—not young veterans, as we were when we came back from the war, charging off to raise families in the country—we are a little more tired now, and those days cannot be recaptured—but more mature men and women whose needs are still to be served.

The provision which the hon. member for Broadview would remove is, I suggest, one of the most beneficial which could be included in favour of low income and non-profit groups whose work I should like to see encouraged.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I am puzzled by the comments the minister has made. I would be surprised if he could convince members of this group that he is right. After all, as I said earlier this afternoon, we sit in opposition and we have a different philosophy. What puzzles me is not that the minister cannot convince us, but that he cannot convince the few people, the far too few people, who have involved themselves in co-operative and non-profit housing. If one accepted the rousing comments the minister made a few moments ago one would think that co-operative housing is flourishing in this country, that hundreds of thousands of people are living in co-operative housing, and that an appreciable proportion of our housing needs is being met by co-operative housing. Nothing could be further from the truth. One half of one per cent of the housing accommodation in this country is made up of co-operative housing projects.

One of the largest projects in the country happens to be in Winnipeg, and most of the units are in my constituency. Not a year goes by but I hear complaints from the dozen or more people who spend hundreds of hours a year working to try to promote more co-operatives. They complain about how difficult it is to get anything from the minister, about the bureaucratic way in which the CMHC is conducted, about the time it takes between the initiation of a project and its completion. They say that by the time approval is finally obtained from the minister the people for whom the plan was intended no longer qualify and they have to move up to a higher income bracket.

As I say, what interests me is that the minister has not been able to convince the people who are really interested in co-operative housing that this legislation will really help. Looking through my files I see a report in the Globe and Mail of last August, according to which Mayor Crombie of Toronto, the people involved in the Labour Council, and the representatives of the non-profit housing organizations, are completely dissatisfied with the minister and his program.

An hon. Member: You have picked some authority!

Mr. Orlikow: I am not so concerned about the Mayor of Toronto. I know he is a Tory. But I am concerned about the people in the Labour Council and in the non-profit housing organizations in Toronto. They are saying that the minister's program and the legislation we are considering simply do not meet their needs.

● (2030)

Let me just refresh the minister's memory in case he has forgotten. The news report says:

> The Labour Council of Metro Toronto's cooperative housing program has suffered the latest blow in a program that has endured several since the National Housing Act was amended in June, 1973, to permit 100 per cent mortgage financing for co-operative groups.
> A week ago, Central Mortgage and Housing Corp. officials told the Labour Council that it could not use provincial subsidies to calculate the economic viability of its plan to build and rehabilitate 98 units—

And, they added, without the subsidies the projected rents were too high to consider financing the proposal.

That is precisely what the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) has said. The article then states:

The labour council has supported non-profit housing by community groups, and taken part in the acquisition of housing to be operated by the City of Toronto Non-Profit Housing Corp.

City politicians and officials, as well as people involved in non-profit housing groups, are afraid that if the Labour Council can't get CMHC approval for a non-profit proposal, with all the resources it has at its disposal, then no one can.

The Labour Council has said, as quoted in this article:

"Our hope of attracting community institutions to engage in housing will be seriously upset— "

These organizations have talked to the chairman of CMHC and to the minister, and have indicated that they are caught in the squeeze between rising costs in housing and the regulations set by CMHC. Mr. Teron sent a reply to these people and said:

"We do include any provincial subsidies in assessing the viability of projects.

Similarly, they do include the 100 per cent funding of land in the calculation, and it is this provision that has made it virtually impossible for co-operative housing organizations to expand. The minister is concerned about getting groups into housing, and he knows there has been a very marked drop in the number of housing starts this year. Here we have groups of people who are prepared to do a great deal of work. They are prepared to participate in the planning of the projects, of the units, and in respect of the acquisition and the best use of the land. These people are doing this work without pay, and are not as concerned as private builders with making profits.

In this day of high costs one would think the minister would be interested in helping these groups promote their ideas so that more people will get into co-operative housing. Instead the minister has said, as other ministers so frequently said in the past, that he is not really prepared to help co-operative housing groups in order that they can grow and build houses, setting guidelines in respect of housing so that the private sector cannot simply charge as much or more than the traffic will bear. This is the purpose of the amendment moved by my colleague. It is our hope that the government and parliament will do whatever is possible to encourage co-operative housing groups to become a meaningful factor in the provision of houses for Canadians.

Unfortunately the minister has simply not met any of the arguments put forward by these people, and it is obvious that he has no intention of doing so. We will hear more fine sentiment. As the hon. member for Regina Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) suggests, the minister talks a good game, but when it comes to taking action or doing something for these groups of people who are prepared to do a job to meet some of the problems of housing, all we get from the minister is a flat no.

I must say I am disappointed with the minister. He made many excellent speeches in the early stages of his ministerial responsibility, and I really thought that for once, by choice or by accident, we had a minister who really cared about housing and about the needs of the ordinary and the poor people. To my regret I see that I was wrong, and that what we have is another minister who will agree that this is the right thing to do but will not bring in any legislation, or find the money, to do these things that are required.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The question is on motion No. 3. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): In accordance with section (11) of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. Gilbert moved motion No. 4:

That Bill C-46, an Act to amend the National Housing Act, be amended in Clause 8 by striking out line 22 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"in Council and in no case shall such rentals exceed 4 per cent of the book value to the Corporation of the land".

He said: Madam Speaker, this amendment applies directly to the non-profit sector. I thought we would have had some co-operation from the minister, members of the government party and members of the Conservative party in respect of assisting the non-profit sector to build more homes, but we did not get that co-operation.

The minister in his remarks referred to veterans housing and suggested what a great advantage this would be to veterans in conjunction with the announcement by the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald). Let me just take a few minutes to outline the purpose of this amendment.

The minister has said that if a non-profit group goes into a project in respect of which the land is purchased by CMHC the group is not entitled to the 10 per cent capital grant. We have tried to point out that if that is the case the rents that will have to be charged will be too high to shift the accommodation to the low and middle income groups. In addition, these groups should be given some idea as to what the rent is to be in respect of the land.

When a business acquires a building it sets up a schedule of depreciation for tax purposes that applies over the life of the building. I understand that if a brick building is involved it is set up for 40 years at 2½ per cent. In these cases CMHC will be acquiring the land and there will be a 100 per cent factor to be set up in respect of the purchase of that land.

Part of the non profit sector is saying through me that, if it has to purchase land, it should have some idea with regard to what it will cost over the life of the project, and the amendment says that it should not exceed 4 per cent over the life of the project. I would like the minister to get up and say that this is such a worthwhile program that we should charge them one dollar a year rent. This is a formula which the city of Toronto and other large cities use when they give land to non-profit groups. They say that in order to keep the rents down the cost of the land must be kept down. Being city property the cities give it to them for one dollar a year. I think the minister should do the same, but if he does not go along with the one dollar a year formula, CMHC regulations should not exceed 4 per cent of the cost of the land.

When we were in committee the minister said that he wanted to be more flexible and that he did not want to commit himself with regard to this matter. This means that CMHC regulations will give a discretionary power to the officials in CMHC, and they will indicate that a project really has to pay for itself, but they will not put in the cost of the land. We are saying that the minister and CMHC should indicate that in such worthy projects the rent should be one dollar a year. If that is not possible or feasible, then it should not exceed 4 per cent. If the non-profit project stops its function, then by charging one dollar a year rent there could be a provision in the lease whereby the land, and the building on the land, will revert to the ownership of CMHC. I ask the minister to help the non-profit sector. I have the feeling he wants to, but he is not doing it.

I have received the message from the non-profit sector that they are not the least bit pleased with the alternative method the minister has proposed because they know it will be a burden on their costs when they are trying to keep down rents for people in low income categories. It defeats the very purpose of the non-profit sector when it shifts from the low income group and only is available to the middle and upper income group. It puts the lower income group at the mercy of the only remaining sector with housing for them, and that is the public housing sector.

I hope that the minister will see the strength of this argument and, not only the strength of the 4 per cent, but really the strength of the one dollar per year rent with the provision that the land would revert to CMHC and, if the land reverts, the building thereon also reverts.

Mr. Railton: Oh, no.

Mr. Gilbert: I hear the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Railton) displaying his usual friendly and combative style. I hope that he will get up and tell us where we are wrong. We are saying that the non-profit sector is being terribly restricted by the provisions of the minister, and what we want—

Mr. Railton: Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to interject. I am not too sure that the hon. member knows what he is talking about. He invited me to make an interjection, and I would say that the non-profit idea will be worth about 30 per cent to the people who rent, because the rents will be down about that much from the average rents of other—

[Mr. Gilbert.]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. This is a point for debate. If the hon. member wishes to participate, I will recognize him after the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert).

Mr. Gilbert: I appreciate the comments of the hon. member for Welland, and I hope he will take the opportunity to speak after I finish. I would like to tell the House that the percentage of the total housing stock in Canada under the wing of the non-profit sector is one half of one per cent, and the minister himself wants to increase that. We all want to increase it, and the only way we can increase it is by giving that sector help. The minister has restricted help. He has given the subsidies to the private builders, to the lending institutions like the banks and finance and trust companies, but what he has done to the non-profit sector is restrict its operation.

At the end of the year we will find that this sector's one half of one per cent of the total stock will be reduced even further. It will probably be one quarter of one per cent. This will not give us any pride; it will not give the Minister of State for Urban Affairs any pride, or the hon. member for Wellington. I think all of us should direct our attention and our energies to increasing the stock of non-profit housing. We should encourage it.

The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) has just turned around and looked at me, and I think he said, "John, you are right." I can just feel the vibrations from the hon. member for Hamilton West because he knows that in the city of Hamilton there are dedicated people in the non-profit sector who want to increase the number of units for low income people. I hope that at least he on the Conservative side will stand up and support it with all the strength he displays on other measures.

I hope that the minister will see the wisdom and the common sense of the amendment, agree with me, and undertake that the rents chargeable to the non-profit sector will either be one dollar a year with the reversion feature if the non-profit project ceases to operate or, at the very least, 4 per cent. If he did so, I am sure that the minister would be very proud.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Madam Speaker, I was invited to participate in this debate, and I am quite happy to do so.

An hon. Member: By whom?

Mr. Peters: I was very impressed with the comments made by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert). While I am not familiar with the quotations given a few moments ago from the Globe and Mail concerning the situation in Toronto and the problems there, I have learned over the years that land prices in Toronto are very high. One of the reasons housing has become almost impossible for even the middle income groups in this country is the high cost of land.

In my own area a number of organizations have been established over the years which built low rental units, and in most cases they have had to raise their rents, because of maintenance and other costs, to a point where CMHC and the Ontario Housing Corporation have been invited back into them. I am thinking particularly of one which involves quite a number of veterans and which is one of the first projects of this nature the Legion undertook. I am certainly in agreement that one of the problems with this project is the cost of land.

In the type of housing the Legion was interested in providing there was absolutely no advantage in owning the land. If the federal government wanted to hold the land in title and provide it free of charge, it would have been acceptable. Let me tell you, Madam Speaker, the federal government owns a great deal of land. An inventory was taken a couple of years ago and it turned out it had land it did not even know about. In the province of Quebec the federal government started to sell land, and then when it looked at the situation closely it reconsidered and decided to hold that land. The federal government owns a considerable amount of land in every major city and it is costing money to maintain it. The government has no use for it at the moment and is holding it for future development.

One of the best things the government could do would be to provide federally owned land to organizations that want to provide accommodation for the people they are concerned with, at the lowest possible cost. The minister has said that this bill will assist the veterans, but I doubt that. I was shocked to hear the Minister for Veterans Affairs (Mr. Macdonald) delegate his responsibility to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) today. In doing so he gave the veterans absolutely nothing and took from them a long established program which, in my opinion, could have provided some advantages for them in the area of housing.

It would be easy for the government to provide land to interested organizations that could, as the hon. member for Broadview suggested, either pay the municipal taxes, which may be 4 per cent, or pay the government a dollar for it and let the government pay the taxes. In those cases where agencies or organizations are willing to provide the time, effort and labour, I think we should co-operate to ensure housing at a cost people can afford.

I understand that in the city of Toronto one of the major elements in the cost of housing is the price of land. I discussed this with one of my sons who lives there and was shocked when he indicated that a building lot costs about $25,000. I looked in the Globe and Mail and the Toronto Star and saw that he was right. Not too long ago you could get a house for that price.

There is not much sense in promoting home ownership for people in a low income bracket if it is going to cost them 50 per cent of their wages. They would be better off to move into totally publicly supported housing and go on welfare. Of course many people are doing just that. It is not only the native population that we have neglected in this country. We have also neglected 25 percent of the rest of the population who are in the low wage bracket and are faced with the high cost of housing.

I can see no reason why the Minister of State for Urban Affairs would not be willing to take ownership of the land that rests with the Minister of Public Works in many municipalities, and designate it for low rental housing to be provided by other agencies.

The Legion in Haleybury started a project to provide its members with accommodation at a reasonable price. It worked hard on this but it is now in difficulty because of escalating costs and because we have not been providing the veterans with matching increases. The Legion is now asking the Ontario Housing Corporation to take the project over from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

The minister has not shown any initiative in the field of public housing, but at least he could provide land at cost and so enable organizations to establish non-profit housing for people who are desperately in need.

Members who represent small communities are aware of the goodwill that exists in them and the desire of people to organize their time and efforts to develop non-profit housing for those who need it. I think the hon. member for Broadview is right when he says we could make land available to organizations on a lease basis for 4 per cent, or for a dollar, or even free of charge. Let us not give the kind of advantage that is in this bill to the big contractors, the friends of the minister, who are going to build houses. Because they get 1.8 per cent of the total cost they are going to raise the money to build houses? They have previously never built houses unless they got 15 per cent or 20 per cent.

A community spirit has to be developed in this country, Madam Speaker, and one way to do this is to allow organizations, willing to give their time, and sometimes money, to develop housing that is suitable for people and will provide a better standard of living for those who are not now able to afford decent housing. Anything else will not bring credit to the minister and, worse than that, will not build houses.

Mr. Danson: Madam Speaker, I was most interested to hear the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) and the hon. member for Broadview effectively support the provision which calls for the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to own land and retain title to it; that, of course, means for the people of Canada to own it and retain title to it.

The point that there are times when the consideration should be one dollar or 1 per cent is something I accept. The hon. member for Broadview asked me to stand up and say that. It is something I accept. There are other circumstances where it may not be applicable. It means the option for a non-profit group will be whichever suits them best. If it were limited to 4 per cent and the land was worth $1,000, naturally at $40 per year that is the option they would take. That would not be so bad, and it may be the right way to do it.

If the result is not economic rent, perhaps we are not going about this in the right way. If these people are getting the economic rent anyway, then they are depriving other non-profit groups, other sectors, other low income people of those funds. They might help in a particular development, but it might be unjust to let them take advantage of such programs if there are not sufficient funds for others. The land may be charged at $1 per year, or the rate may be 1 per cent, although I suggest in most cases it will be under 4 per cent. In some situations the interest rate may be 4 per cent, 5 per cent or 6 per cent. I think we must reserve our rights, otherwise we should give an unfair advantage to one group at the expense of another.

The intention is to give the non-profit or co-operative groups the right to the option. That is what we are trying to do in all our programs. We want to give people options which were never available to them before. As I say, we are trying to provide young people and low income people with the sort of option they have not had so far.

If the 10 per cent forgiveness allowance is not enough to cover the cost of the land, we can go further, buy that land and lease it back to these people at a low rent, to make certain that rents are maintained at a low level.

Mr. Peters: Madam Speaker, will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Danson: Certainly.

Mr. Peters: Madam Speaker, although I approve of the minister's remarks I am worried in case we shall continually bring in amendments to our housing legislation. We have done this many times in the last three or four years. Has the minister, in his numerous discussions with municipal and provincial leaders across the country, received any indication that, with respect to land which still belongs to the Crown after buildings are erected on it, municipalities will accept the kinds of grants which the government gives in lieu of taxes and not charge taxes on that land? In other words, if the federal government is willing to make concessions, are these municipalities willing to reciprocate with concessions in their tax structure?

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, I am intrigued by the hon. member's suggestion. I have not had such discussions, but cannot say CMHC officials have not had them. I will inquire. The hon. member for Timiskaming made an interesting suggestion which I intend to pursue because it opens a number of possibilities. The type of land he speaks of may be owned by other private groups, by churches or Legion groups. I wish to pursue this suggestion further. I thank the hon. member for raising this idea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

[Mr. Danson.]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Pursuant to section (11) of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. Gilbert moved motion No. 5:

That Bill C-46, an Act to amend the National Housing Act, be amended in Clause 13:

(a) by striking out lines 41 to 48 at page 6 and substituting the following therefor:

"qualified owner,"

(b) by striking out line 12 at page 7 and substituting the following therefor:

"(1)(b) where the loan was made at a".

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is the last motion I shall move. The hon. member for Winnipeg North suggests that if I can persuade the government to accept this amendment, I shall be as successful as if I had persuaded Paul to change his mind on the road to Damascus.

In 1973 the minister then responsible for housing, who now is the Minister of National Revenue, introduced Bill C-133 providing for the Assisted Home Ownership Program. He was proud of that program and thought great things would come of it. It was to come under the aegis of Central Mortgage and Housing. In 1974 the government acquired 4,000 existing homes under that program and built 16,000 additional homes. Its record was quite good. The program made available 20,000 homes to low and moderate income people at reduced rents.

We thought that was a fair start for the AHOP program. Then the present Minister of State for Urban Affairs came on the scene, and things changed. He said the AHOP program would apply only to new housing. The program was restricted, but the minister was proud of the funds which had been allocated for it. Now, by producing the present amending bill, he is abandoning the AHOP program. The government is not to be involved. It is saying to private builders that if a purchaser is approved by an approved lender for a mortgage under the AHOP program, the government will give that purchaser a subsidy with which to pay the higher interest rate he must pay on the mortgage.

When the government controlled the AHOP program the purchaser paid a rate of interest fixed by the government. Now that approved lenders have entered the picture, interest rates will increase, probably up to 10.5 per cent. In effect the minister says, "I will give the purchaser a subsidy; he may pass it on to the lending institution." In other words the minister says, "I will give a subsidy to the lending institutions; the government will pay it to the purchaser, or mortgagor, who will pass it on to the mortgagee."

We say that is wrong, that the government should control AHOP because the lower interest rate represents an advantage to the buyer. If the government were to assume greater responsibility, it could exercise greater control over the administration, over building standards and over maintenance.

Not content with giving a subsidy directly to financial institutions, the parliamentary secretary moved an amendment in committee which said that private insurance companies should handle the mortgage insurance on these homes. So, what do we have? The government wants to subsidize the financial institutions, and the parliamentary secretary wants private insurance companies to handle the mortgage insurance on these homes. I suggest that when the government was more directly responsible for the AHOP program, CMHC controlled building standards and the matter of mortgage insurance. There are tremendous sums of money in the mortgage insurance fund—I think over $400 million at the moment. Claims against the fund are minimal. I therefore think that it is logical to ask CMHC to handle the mortgage insurance fund.

What does the minister do? What do the financial institutions do? They say they want a subsidy on any AHOP mortgage, as well as mortgage insurance. If that is not getting it two ways, I do not know what is. Unfortunately it fits in with the philosophy the minister has expressed on different occasions. The hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) says it is the trickle down theory, the trickle down to the financial institutions such as the banks, the trust companies, insurance companies and private insurers.

The minister put it in a rather coarse but meaningful way when he said it was more bang for the buck. It is more bang for the buck to the lending institutions, developers and builders. That is really what he is talking about.

If assisted ownership is to apply to low income people, they should have the benefit of any subsidies paid by the government in order to reduce their mortgage interest rates, and they should have the protection with regard to mortgage insurance.

When this program was devised in the first instance in 1973, we told the present Minister of National Revenue that it really applied to the middle income group and not the low income group. They said we were wrong. It is fair to show that it goes to the middle income group.

The best example of this is the city of Toronto. Michael Dennis, housing commissioner for the city of Toronto, wrote a report which was published in February of this year showing what the AHOP program has done for the city of Toronto. What has happened? Not one house was built in the city of Toronto under the AHOP program. In Metro Toronto, which includes the suburbs, only 191 were built. I brought this to the attention of the minister when we were in committee. He replied that there were 1,716 built in Metro Toronto. He said they have gone as far as West Hill. West Hill is half way to Oshawa. I have never heard of it being included in Metro Toronto. This was the feeble answer of the minister and his officials with regard to the AHOP program. The AHOP program should help people in the lower income group.

Mr. Darling: The rural areas too.

Mr. Gilbert: The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) says it should also help people in the rural areas. I agree 100 per cent. It should help people in rural areas, small towns and big cities. We said that. It has helped people in small towns.

The minister has said that in order to qualify for the program you must have a certain income, and the home must be within a certain price range. He pointed out in committee that under the AHOP program the average income of a purchaser is $9,336. May I add that this really only applied to those in the small towns, villages and rural areas. The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka can tell me with a nod that that is a big income for a person in a small town to make in order to qualify under the AHOP program. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) can tell me that the income a person needs to qualify in the city of Toronto must be very large.

Not one house was built under the AHOP program in the city of Toronto. Only 191 houses were built on the metro scene. It is about time the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources stopped looking after the oil companies and started looking after people in the city of Toronto. I have never seen a minister who is so sympathetic to the oil companies and so unsympathetic to the people of his area with regard to public housing and the AHOP scheme.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I was there before you, John, and I will be there after you.

Mr. Gilbert: I would think the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources would direct his attention to the housing problem in the city of Toronto and ensure that the AHOP program applies to it. I thought he would have made sure that the non-profit sector would have been taken care of by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, especially in his area. The minister's area is very much like mine. There are many people on low and moderate income.

An hon. Member: In Rosedale?

Mr. Gilbert: His riding is in two halves, with the rich in the north and the poor in the south.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Living in public housing.

Mr. Gilbert: This is the reason we have brought this amendment to the attention of the House. The subsidies are going to be paid to the financial institutions, by way of giving them to the borrowers, who will pay them to the mortgagees. It does not apply to old housing. If the minister had any generosity about thim he would have applied it to old as well as new housing. His answer is that he has to increase the number of starts, and therefore he is going to direct the moneys only to new housing. The net effect is that he hurts those people who want to buy older houses.

I have never had so much help from my colleagues on any matter. The reason is that they believe in it. They believe we have to help the low income people in all these tricky schemes such as AHOP. So far they have only worked for those with a higher income. We are paying them a subsidy which they pass on to the lending institution. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is proud of that. We in this party are not proud of it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gilbert: My colleagues are giving me full support. Furthermore, we are giving subsidies to the banks and we are giving the owners the opportunity to sell within a short time and make a capital gain. There is something that is morally wrong about this. I thought the minister would have taken that into account and devised a program which would have said we will control the AHOP program under CMHC, it will apply to old and new housing, there will be a lower income interest rate, the mortgage insurance will stay within the body of CMHC, and we will do our best to increase the number of starts. However, that has not happened. He has again yielded to his philosophy with regard to the builders and financial institutions.

The minister has given way to the philosophy that housing is a commodity from which profits should be made, instead of yielding to the sensible philosophy that housing is something that should be enjoyed by all Canadians at an affordable cost. His government is directing him away from that and yielding just to the commodity aspect. I am not proud of the minister with regard to his approach.

● (2120)

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has been kind enough to mention my surpassing interest in public housing. If he intends to take seriously his temporary assignment as housing critic for the NDP he should visit downtown Toronto and familiarize himself with the area, because if he were there he would find that my constituency contains the greatest concentration of public housing in Canada. Under this government, with the St. Lawrence development, we are providing low income housing for people in the downtown area. I would be glad to introduce the hon. member to the problems in the inner city so that he might understand them and take a more sympathetic approach to them than when he talks about putting AHOP out of the suburbs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Orlikow: As a non-resident of Toronto I wonder whether I could ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources a question. He has talked about the public housing in his constituency. I wonder if he is proud of the public housing we see around St. Jamestown.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I would have to say that in the downtown area the public housing available in St. Jamestown is at least better than the private housing that was there before—the boarding houses and the poor accommodation. I am glad it was a Liberal government brought about those programs which led to better housing there.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, as another non-Toronto resident I should like to remind the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) that it was a former minister of national defence and minister for housing, who later sat on the other side of the House, who stopped that scheme.

An hon. Member: He doesn't sit anywhere now.

Mr. Gilbert: He sits in the Press gallery.

[Mr. Gilbert.]

Mr. Benjamin: The amendment also has to do with mortgage insurance. I should like to ask the minister, who has told us how much he is in favour of limited divident housing, to explain how he can reconcile the private handling of mortgage insurance in the face of what he agrees is a fundamental human right—a decent place to live. Suppose a person falls behind in his mortgage payments, or dies. Does the minister feel it is proper that a private mortgage insurance company should make a profit from the misfortunes of others? Does he think this should be part and parcel of public housing? Why can he not go to the credit union association, for example, where insurance on loans and savings can be obtained at cost? Such organizations as these recognize the fundamental human right to housing. Why does the minister not provide for them in his legislation—

Mr. Danson: You have not read our amendment.

Mr. Benjamin: The amendment of the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) has met that point. In any case the minister hands over the mortgage insurance business to private enterprise. If he wished, he could insure mortgages through CMHC.

Mr. Danson: We do.

Mr. Benjamin: After paying lip service to non-profit making organizations the minister brings in legislation which prevents them from becoming effective; he stacks the deck in favour of his private enterprise friends. If the hon. gentleman has concluded that private enterprise is unable to do the job, as his words have indicated, why must he place roadblocks in the way of these non-profit organizations? Will he make a fundamental change in his housing policy by accepting some of our amendments?

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, as the minister has stated, this bill has received careful scrutiny both in the House and in the committee. It has given members on this side of the House an opportunity to stress to the government the great concern we have about the magnitude of the housing crisis which exists in this country.

At second reading the official opposition stated that while we supported the amendments in Bill C-46 in principle we did not feel they were adequate or relevant to the severity of the emergency in the housing field. That emergency is readily documented. Housing starts in recent years have shown a continuous downward trend. Here are the figures: 269,000 in 1973; 222,000 in 1974, and 210,000 predicted by the minister for 1975. And this is at a time when the Economic Council of Canada, in its 11th annual review, has recommended 250,000 housing starts per year in the 1972-76 period. On the basis of the first two months of 1975, CMHC is now forecasting 175,000 starts for the year as a whole but it is doubtful such a figure will be reached. At the same time CMHC predicts that Canadians will form nearly 230,000 new households in 1975. In all likelihood we shall see a shortfall this year of 70,000 as between household formations and housing starts.

In the face of the severity of this shortfall and the consequent social problems the minister consoles himself with a recital of housing completions for last year. That is sorry solace for the thousands of Canadians who will be forced into inadequate housing and cramped quarters before the end of this year, many of them at prices they can ill afford to pay. It is interesting that the minister should talk only about housing completions last year and made no projections of what may be anticipated in this regard in 1975. I can tell him that the completions, like the starts, will see a drastic decline.

● (2130)

The present amendments to the National Housing Act, when considered in the light of the current housing crisis, are impotent to deal with the situation. They are palliatives of a kind maybe, but solutions, never. Recognized as palliatives they can be accepted along with their shortcomings. However, the tragedy is that the minister, in his enthusiastic embrace of these measures, has sought to persuade the House and the public that they offer a cure to the present ills of the housing industry. This is not only misleading but dangerous in that it could induce a false complacency about the present emergency that would deter the government from taking firm action to tackle the root causes of this crisis.

We know that some 220,000 fewer people are employed in the construction field than at the same time last year. We know housing starts and completions are down drastically. We know that the measures the minister has put before us will not suddenly reverse these trends. The minister knows this as well and should be bringing forward other programs, other means of stimulus for an industry that contributes 15 per cent of our gross national product. Nowhere is such a program in sight.

Nowhere is there any government proposal to reallocate some of its massive $28 billion spending program to housing. Nowhere is there any indication that housing will assume a higher priority in the concerns of the government. Nowhere, indeed, is there any sign that the government recognizes the seriousness of the situation—certainly not if the bill we have before us is all that we have to rely on now.

During the committee hearings we had the opportunity to hear representations from the Toronto Non-Profit Housing Association, as was mentioned earlier. We heard about their concerns as to the lack of real government initiatives and commitments toward housing built by co-operative societies and non-profit companies. As well, the lack of emphasis given to rural and native housing was stressed over and over again. The slow pace at which rural and native housing programs are beginning indicates that the government is forgetful or ignorant—

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Benjamin: I did not mean to interrupt the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) but since the point has been raised today on at least two other occasions by members in certain parts of the House I would ask her why she is not speaking to the amendment. I would rather hear her speech on third reading. She has not said one word yet about amendment No. 5. She is making a third reading speech, and that is the time I should like to hear her give it.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would care to listen he would hear what I have to say. As someone has just said, I left off at the word "ignorant". As I was saying, the slow pace at which rural and native housing programs are beginning indicates that the government is forgetful or ignorant of housing needs in the smaller centres and rural areas of this vast country, and indeed this whole bill discriminates in so many ways against those people in the rural areas who need housing. But, most important—and what the bill does not deal with—is the major shift in housing policy that is being imposed by the CMHC capital spending budget. The capital spending budget determines government policy. It allocates the amount of money that will go to cost shared programs with the provinces.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, again I rise on a point of order. I would ask you to rule whether or not the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands is speaking to amendment No. 5.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am speaking to all the amendments, including amendment No. 5.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, I would ask for reinforcement from the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) who this afternoon—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member wishes the Chair to make a ruling, he should at least give the Chair a chance to listen to the point he is trying to make, which I did not get the chance to hear. I did not even get the chance to give him the floor. I invite the hon. member to express his point of view.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I am repeating only what the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton and the parliamentary secretary to the minister of housing said this afternoon in regard to speaking to amendments that we are dealing with on report stage. I am asking Your Honour to rule whether or not the hon. member is speaking to the amendment. I submit that she is not.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my interjection this afternoon was with respect to an irrelevancy that would be obvious even to the blind. I have listened very carefully to the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) and I think her speech is a sound one. If by chance Your Honour finds her out of order, which in view of what she is saying I would very much doubt, Your Honour can rule at that time. But certainly the interjection of the hon. member is premature.

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Speaker, I think every member of the House is committed to seeing this bill pass this evening. Conversations with representatives of every party have been held and it has been agreed that we should all make an effort to refrain from speaking on third reading. Since the representative of the official opposition has refrained from saying one word during report stage, she will be making, on the occasion of the last amendment, some remarks in lieu of speaking on third reading. I understand that is the unanimous agreement of all of us since we are committed to passing the bill tonight, as the Senate is waiting.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I think the point raised by the hon. member is well taken as far as the procedure is concerned, but I think he ought to leave it to the Chair to decide. I feel the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands is making a quite useful contribution to the debate. Of course everything that has been said might not be exactly relevant to the amendment, but I am sure it will be to the benefit of all members of the House as well as to the legislation we are studying at this time.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I was saying, most important—and what this bill does not deal with—is the major shift in federal housing policy that is being imposed by the CMHC capital spending budget. The capital spending budget determines government policy. It allocates the amount of moneys that will go to cost-shared programs with the provinces and those that will go directly to unilateral federal programs.

There is a massive shift away from the socially assisted programs the federal government has developed with the provinces and municipalities over recent years to programs such as AHOP, which is the one being dealt with in this clause, programs which are controlled and operated out of Ottawa primarily for those in the moderate income range. Directly traceable to the capital spending budget of CMHC is the two-pronged shift in government housing policy—first, a cut-back in cost shared programs with the provinces and municipalities in favour of the theory that Ottawa should have control, and second, a move away from the long established role of government to assist with public housing to a new and questionable role of supplying mortgage moneys at privileged rates to those in the moderate income bracket.

One is almost inclined to suspect that these major policy shifts are designed primarily to satisfy the building urge of the president of CMHC. Certainly they are arrived at in isolation from the needs of those most closely related to the housing scene—governments at the municipal and provincial levels.

This shift in housing policy, as I pointed out to the minister the other day, is directly accountable for a shortfall this year of some 4,000 senior citizens units in the province of Ontario alone, and a similar situation is developing in most of the other provinces. My colleagues from Saskatchewan and British Columbia have already mentioned this situation.

Earlier today the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) decided to set the matter straight by pointing to the great involvement of the government in the field of public housing and the shortcoming on the part of the government of Ontario to match it. Obviously he had not been looking at recent figures, or even consulting with his colleague, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson). For the record, Mr. Speaker, the Postmaster General may be interested to know that in 1973 the federal government's allocation to Ontario for socially assisted housing was $130 million, in 1974 it was $78 million, and in 1975 it has been set at a mere $50.4 million whereas Ontario has a take-up capacity of some $400 million, which has been encouraged over the past number of years by programs on which the federal government has now defaulted.

The capital spending budget of CMHC has gone up just 12.4 per cent this year while at the same time Ontario, recognizing the housing emergency, has increased its spending on social housing programs by 50 per cent. I mention these figures so that the Postmaster General and others can be better informed on what is taking place in Ontario.

This situation is very serious, Mr. Speaker. The decrease in funds to Ontario and to other provinces for socially assisted housing as directed by the federal government illustrates the point clearly. The federal government has shifted its priorities in residential construction through manipulation of the CMHC capital spending budget, a budget which heretofore there has been no opportunity to review.

Members of the New Democratic Party have been trying to utilize the present bill to come to grips with the shift in government policy. I do not believe this bill is the vehicle to achieve that goal, Mr. Speaker. The most direct way to ensure this is to let us have the capital spending budget of CMHC for examination in detail. In committee on March 20 the minister assured me this would be done. Tonight I would like further assurance from the minister as to when we will have a reference of the CMHC capital budget from the House to committee. I should like him to tell us when this will come about, because only then can we have a proper examination of the reasons for and objectives of the shifts in government housing policy.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, it is essential that there be much longer forward planning on the part of the federal government to meet the housing needs of the country. Certainly if the government is to honour its commitment to the cost sharing programs it is imperative that that be done. At present the provinces and municipalities are limited in their planning by the way in which they are presented with a year to year allocation of federal funding into which they have had no input, and about which they have not been consulted.

The government must spell out its priorities clearly for longer periods and put an end to the stop-start approach it has had to these programs. There should be some immediate steps to establish a formula for a period of at least three years so that the provinces, municipalities and other groups can undertake and initiate programs with the confidence that they will be able to continue them once they are started, with help from the federal government.

There is no overall, coherent approach to the housing needs of the country. There is no long term planning and no co-ordination with transportation policy, immigration policy, and land use policy. Rather, the minister is content to rely on faith and prayers for a sum he says will be in the vicinity of $1 billion this year from private mortgage lenders, and as well on a multiplicity of restrictive programs such as the one he introduced today for veterans.

I would urge the minister not to resort to further bills of this nature, which are really offered as palliatives, but to face up to the tough job of persuading his colleagues to give housing the priority it should have in the emergency situation that does exist in this country.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, it is our hope that tomorrow evening the House may adjourn for the Easter recess, and it is my understanding that if this bill is approved this evening by the House it will be considered in the other place and might receive royal assent before parliament adjourns for the Easter break. Under those circumstances I would move, seconded by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen):

That the provisions of paragraph (3) of Standing Order 6 be suspended in relation to the daily adjournment to permit the completion of the consideration of Bill C-46.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the minister. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Peters: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Reid: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding of the Standing Order that if fewer than ten members rise then the motion is automatically deemed to have been accepted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps I should read Standing Order 6(5)(b) as follows:

When Mr. Speaker puts the question on such motion, he shall ask those members who object to rise in their places. If ten or more members then rise, the motion shall be deemed to have been withdrawn, otherwise, the motion shall have been adopted.

All those opposed to the motion will please rise.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Ten members not having risen, I declare the motion carried.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I presume that this is not the closure motion, and that all that is being referred to is this stage of the bill. I think it was unnecessary for the House leader to raise the matter, but I would bring to your attention another standing order which requires unanimous consent for third reading, and of course that cannot be covered by this motion.

● (2150)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps I should read the beginning of Standing Order 6 (5) which says:

When Mr. Speaker is in the Chair, a member may propose a motion, without notice, to continue a sitting through a lunch or dinner hour or beyond the ordinary hour of daily adjournment for the purpose of considering a specified item of business or a stage or stages thereof subject to the following conditions:

And it goes on.

My interpretation of this is that the minister expressed the wish that the legislation be passed tonight through all stages. Unless otherwise interpreted by other hon. members, my interpretation, as I said, is that this piece of legislation—as decided by the majority of hon. members because no ten member group stood up to oppose—would have to be completed tonight before the adjournment.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I certainly have no objection to the passing of the motion which the hon. government House leader moved. There is another section, however, which says that when there is a report stage debate, third reading will not be taken, except by unanimous consent, on the same day. That is all I am referring to here.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have tried to be clear. The motion was moved by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp), and reads as follows:

That the provisions of paragraph (3) of Standing Order 6 be suspended in relation to the daily adjournment to permit the completion of the consideration of Bill C-46.

As far as I can interpret the wish of the House, "the completion" of Bill C-46 does not only apply to the report stage, but it would apply to some agreement as to the third reading of the bill so that it can be adopted by the Senate.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, I personally, and hon. members from my party, are quite ready to have all stages of this bill considered tonight, but I am concerned about the procedure, and I just want to be certain that we are doing what is appropriate. It is my understanding that we could not move from the report stage to the third reading of a bill in the same day without leave, and it seems strange to me, with respect, that we should continue to do this before ten o'clock. For example, supposing we finished at nine o'clock, I doubt if we could have gone on to third reading this evening without unanimous consent, and it could hardly have been intended that the motion to extend this sitting could give us permission to do something we could not have done before the sitting was extended. I repeat that I would like to see the bill considered through all stages tonight, but as Leader of the Opposition I do not want to see a precedent established which might be unfortunate.

I therefore ask for serious consideration of the point raised by my hon. friend in the New Democratic Party. I do not agree with his objection to third reading being taken, but I suppose he has not taken that position yet. With respect I question the capacity of the House to consider third reading tonight on the basis of the motion put by the government House leader without unanimous consent.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I just confirm the point referred to by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) which was suggested earlier by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters). Standing Order 75 (13) seems to me quite clear. It says:

When a bill has been amended or debate has taken place thereon at the report stage, the same shall be set down for a third reading and passage at the next sitting of the House.

The motion we have just passed was under Standing Order 6 which says that it must relate to proceedings which are then in progress, and I think that the Leader of the Opposition is quite right in pointing out that it would be going too far to say that that motion gives us the authority sometime after ten o'clock to proceed to third reading without unanimous consent. The hon. member for Timiskaming has not said he would not give that consent.

Half an hour ago things were rolling along and we thought we would finish by ten o'clock. I think the Leader of the Opposition was quite right. No matter what our views are on how far we should go tonight, we should not establish a precedent which some of us think would be a misuse or abuse of the rule. As I say, Standing Order 75 (13) is very clear, and my suggestion is that we proceed under the motion which has been passed to finish the report stage of this bill and take the votes on the report stage amendments. Then if the government wishes to ask for unanimous consent for third reading, it can do so, and we will see what happens.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, I do not wish to quarrel with the hon. member. He has referred to Standing Order 75 (13), but I doubt that this standing order would preclude the possibility of the House making a majority decision under Standing Order 6(5) or otherwise.

Standing Order 75(13) provides for a buffer which, in the normal procedure, prevents the House from going from one stage of the legislative process to another stage, as has generally been accepted within this House, but if the hon. member would take the trouble of looking into Standing Order 6(5), he would agree with me, I hope, that if Standing Order 6(5) had been made to meet the argument he just made, Standing Order 6(5) would only refer to "a stage thereof" instead of saying "a stage or stages thereof."

So it is still my impression that Standing Order 6(5) would be met for some hon. members by putting a motion to the House which expresses the majority of hon. members. But the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) did raise the question of procedure, and I wanted to make this point as a protection for the Chair for later decisions. I will leave it open for hon. members, and I think it would be simpler for hon. members to come to some agreement without committing the Chair to a further interpretation of Standing Order 6(5) as opposed to Standing Order 75(13).

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, with your indulgence I would like to point out that Standing Order 72 requires readings on separate days, and that in the standing order we operated under last Thursday night when we put the estimates through, we came up against this problem, but in that standing order , which is Standing Order 58(10), there is a specific reference to the fact that the provisions of Standing Order 72 do not apply, and I submit that because that phrase does not appear in Standing Order 6(5), it does not set aside any provision such as Standing Order 75(13). I submit that it would really be quite an erroneous decision for this House to make, that under Standing Order 6(5) it is possible to override Standing Order 75(13) when there is nowhere in the rules any suggestion that that can be done.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member knows that the House often depends on his experience and good advice, and I would not want to engage in a procedural debate. I did express an opinion as to the relationship between one Standing Order and another. At the same time, however, the House seemed to be ready to come to some kind of agreement and I would invite members to find an immediate solution to the situation which faces us. If hon. members have a solution I would invite them to express it to the Chair.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I still hold the view on the point of procedure, with respect, that the power to proceed to an additional stage cannot be any greater on extended sittings than it was before ten o'clock. I would suggest that we proceed to pass the motion and, if we get through report stage and the government wants to proceed to third reading and somebody objects, then the Chair would have to make a ruling at that stage.

Mr. Sharp: I understand the difficulty that faces Your Honour. I have read the subparagraph to mean that we can deal with more than one stage because this section seems fairly clear on that point. On the other hand, it is a very difficult point and I do not think we want to settle it tonight. As far as I am concerned, if we can dispose of report stage I would hope that we would have the co-operation of all members to agree to go to third reading tonight as well, even though this motion I have made might not technically cover that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 5 (Mr. Gilbert). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11) the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred with all four other motions.

The House will now proceed to take the deferred recorded divisions. Call in the members.

And the Members having been called in.

The House divided on motion No. 1 (Mr. Gilbert) which was negatived on the following division:

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TRIBUTES TO RIGHT HON. MEMBER FOR PRINCE ALBERT ON THIRTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY AS A MEMBER

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, today is the thirty-fifth anniversary of the election to this House of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). I am sure the right hon. gentleman must be very disappointed not to be able to be in this House today. Certainly we are disappointed he is not here so that we could salute him in person on this occasion.

The right hon. gentleman is unable to be here because of some minor repairs he has undergone, but we certainly look forward to his early return to the House in top form.

His accomplishments in the 35 years of his service in parliament are, of course, legion. His human principles and his talents have always earned him the respect of both allies and adversaries in this House of Commons.

On behalf of my colleagues and myself I wish to congratulate the right hon. gentleman on his anniversary, and extend our best wishes to him and to Mrs. Diefenbaker.

● (1410)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, one of the joys of celebrating this anniversary annually is that we can sit back and listen to the right hon. gentleman respond and tell us of his love for Canada, which is very deep; his belief in parliament, which is very important, and his respect for the monarchy, which is very true. Today we will not have that pleasure, so I will not challenge him to make any speech on these subjects. I reserve that right for his golden anniversary, when we shall both be sitting in this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my parliamentary leader, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), suggested that I might say a few words on behalf of our party. This request has been made of me because I had the honour of coming into the first parliament to which the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) was elected. I might add that my colleague to my left, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), was already here to greet the right hon. member for Prince Albert when he first arrived.

It is indeed an accomplishment for one to have served in parliament for 35 years. We salute the right hon. member not only for his length of service to this House but also for his accomplishments. Although he is not here with us in physical presence, he is always very much with us one way or another. We are as disappointed as he is at his not being here for this important occasion. We wish him an early recovery to full health. I believe the House would also want to express to Mrs. Diefenbaker the hope that her health will soon be fully restored.

On behalf of all my colleagues I extend warmest greetings on this occasion to John and Olive Diefenbaker.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my party, I would like to join the spokesmen for the other parties to congratulate the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker).

When we were elected in this House in 1962, he was the Prime Minister. I remember quite well that he was always a keen champion of parliamentarians' rights. I have always admired him for that and I think that he was one of the best defenders of the rights of the Social Credit Party of Canada and the right of its members to sit in the House.

I wish him a speedy recovery and hope that he will soon return to resume his career, because he is still young. I think that we have much to learn from him and that young parliamentarians should take him as a model.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

REQUEST FOR DETAILS CONCERNING CONSTRUCTION OF SWIMMING POOL AT PRIME MINISTER'S RESIDENCE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to seek permission of the House to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity, particularly as after this day the House will not meet for a while and the information requested in the motion should have been provided, I suggest, long ago. I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

That in view of the failure of the Prime Minister to make public details concerning the $200,000 swimming pool being constructed on public property at 24 Sussex Drive—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cossitt: If the trained seals can contain themselves, Mr. Speaker, I will read my motion. I know this bothers them, but in order to put my motion there must be some semblance of order.

That in view of the failure of the Prime Minister to make public details concerning the $200,000 swimming pool being constructed on public property at 24 Sussex Drive and particularly the names of the 25 donors being permitted to deduct the full amount of donations for income tax purposes, the House requests the Prime Minister to make public all details on this matter immediately and at the same time the House expresses agreement with the front page article on government secrecy in today's Globe and Mail which states in part that the refusal to reveal the names of the 25 persons paying for the swimming pool is "blatantly political".

[Mr. Gauthier (Roberval).]

Mr. Speaker: The subject matter dealt with in the proposed motion is, of course, of importance, and may be blatantly political. Nevertheless, I cannot accept it as a matter of urgent and pressing necessity within the terms of the Standing Order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRANSPORT

SUGGESTED REVIEW FOR SAFETY STANDARDS FOR HERRING SEINERS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that my motion is non-political. I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, pursuant to Standing Order 43. Whereas there has now been a loss of 11 herring seining boats and a tragic waste of 13 lives on the west coast of B.C. in the last ten days in the herring fishery, and whereas there is some evidence that Department of Transport standards with regard to safety as well bulkhead standards are inadequate to protect the lives of the herring fishermen, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes):

That the Minister of Transport and his officials immediately travel to the west coast of British Columbia for a meeting with fishermen as well as an on-site inspection of herring seiners, and that the minister immediately review the Department of Transport standards so that further tragedies can be prevented.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43 and cannot be debated without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The motion cannot be put.

SOCIAL SECURITY

PROPOSED DISTRIBUTION OF PENSION CHEQUES THROUGH BANKS AND CAISSSES POPULAIRES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Considering that family allowance, old age security pension and veteran pension recipients are being victimized by the delay in delivery of their cheques whenever postal employees go on strike, which is greatly detrimental to these recipients, and considering also the large number of cheques which are stolen, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That the House request without debate the Minister of Finance to consider the possibilities and advantages of making use of banks and caisses populaires by depositing the amount in question in a special credit account in the recipient's name, on condition that the recipient be free to choose his or her own bank or caisse populaire.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

LABOUR RELATIONS

PROPOSED COMMITTEE STUDY OF ESTABLISHMENT OF PERMANENT LABOUR RELATIONS COURT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43 to ask unanimous consent of the House to discuss a matter of vital importance to the economy of this country, namely a possible imminent general strike of postal employees.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte):

That a committee of this House be requested to consider immediately the opportunity of appointing a permanent labour court with enforceable power in order to eliminate civil service strikes that may eventually bring the Canadian economy to a standstill.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion being proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43, cannot be debated without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore the motion cannot be put.

TABLING OF BREAKDOWN OF COST OF PRODUCTION OF FERTILIZER

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to paragraph 21(2) of Standing Orders I wish to table in both official languages the breakdown of cost of fertilizer production referred to in my recent address to the Canadian Fertilizer Institute.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, before we leave Motions, I rise on a point of order which certainly affects the operation of one of our standing committees. As the government House leader knows, several of us have asked on a number of occasions that there be a reference of the Hermann Report to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. We have been assured that this will be forthcoming. The committee is now planning to deal with this matter the day after we return from the recess. I wonder whether the House leader could arrange for the motion of reference to be made available later this day so that we might have the report in our hands when we return in April.

Mr. Sharp: I have no objection. I will try to comply with the hon. member's wish.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR APPOINTMENT OF INDUSTRIAL INQUIRY COMMISSION TO SETTLE STRIKES AFFECTING PUBLIC INTEREST

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-386, to amend the Canada Labour Code.

He said: The purpose of the bill, in view of the continuing unrest in the labour scene, is to amend the industrial relations part of the Canada Labour Code to provide that where a strike or lockout is against the national or public interest the government may appoint an industrial inquiry commission to make a final and binding settlement, subject to government variation and adoption.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Question No. 186—Mr. Orlikow:

What was the book profit before taxes, the taxable income of dollars and the percentage of taxable incomes to book profit for all corporations since 1968 as reported to the Department of National Revenue or to Statistics Canada?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): In so far as the Department of National Revenue is concerned: In 1965 under an amendment to the Corporations and Labour Union Returns Act, the Dominion Bureau of Statistics assumed responsibility for extraction, aggregation and publication of statistics concerning corporations. At the same time, the Department of National Revenue, Taxation, terminated the publication of "Taxation Statistics" for corporations and correspondingly, terminated the extraction of the necessary data.

In so far as Statistics Canada is concerned: Information on book profit before taxes and taxable income of corporations in Canada (excluding insurance carriers, co-operatives, Crown corporations and tax exempt corporations) for year 1968 to 1971, the latest year available, as contained in "Corporation Taxation Statistics", is as follows:

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE—DUTIES OF MR. IVAN HEAD

Question No. 531—Mr. Cossitt:

1. (a) What is a complete and detailed description of the work performed by Mr. Ivan Head in the Prime Minister's Office (b) what are all the assignments, duties and connections of any kind whatsoever that he has with foreign affairs?

2. Has the Prime Minister at any time referred to Mr. Ivan Head as Canada's Henry Kissinger or has he ever made a somewhat similar remark and, if so (a) on what date (b) at what place (c) for what reason (d) exactly what were the words used by the Prime Minister?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): 1. See the answer to Question No. 242 answered December 18, 1974, Hansard No. 56, page 2354. See also the answers to Questions No. 409 answered February 7, 1973, Hansard No. 25, page 1039; No. 2,287 (by the Hon. Member for Leeds) answered July 4, 1973, Hansard No. 115, page 5283 and No. 3,260 answered December 12, 1973, Hansard No. 190, page 8664.

2. On several occasions prior to September 22, 1973 the Prime Minister has referred to Mr. Head as "Henry". These and other light-hearted Prime Ministerial references to Mr. Head have not so far been made the subject of an official government record indexed according to date, place or reason.

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE—MR. HEAD CONFERENCES WITH SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Question No. 532—Mr. Cossitt:

1. How many times and on what dates, if any, has Mr. Ivan Head conferred with the Secretary of State for External Affairs since the present Minister took office?

2. What is the working relationship, if any, between Mr. Head and the Secretary of State for External Affairs?

3. In advance of his press interviews and briefings of September 25, 1974 and October 15, 1974 did Mr. Head (a) advise (b) consult (c) receive approval from the Secretary of State for External Affairs in regard to statements subsequently made on those occasions?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): 1. Mr. Head is answerable to the Prime Minister in the discharge of his duties. He does, however, confer frequently with the Secretary of State for External Affairs and has done so since 1968. No cumulative record is kept of these occasions.

2 and 3. See answer to Part 1.

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE—MR. IVAN HEAD

Question No. 533—Mr. Cossitt:

1. On whose instructions did Mr. Ivan Head brief newsmen on October 15, 1974 in regard to the Prime Minister's current European trip and did the Prime Minister approve in advance all statements or announcements made by Mr. Head on that occasion?

2. For what reason was there some sort of requirement that Mr. Head should not be quoted directly on anything he said and (a) what is the identity of all persons responsible for such a requirement (b) what did the Prime Minister have to do with deciding upon or arranging in any way such a requirement?

3. Is one of the functions of Mr. Head to, in any way whatsoever, attempt management of the news or manipulation of the news media on behalf of the Prime Minister?

4. Is one of the functions of Mr. Head to, in any way whatsoever, promote the public image of the Prime Minister?

5. Has Mr. Head had anything whatsoever to do with preparation of any speeches, public utterances or statements made by the Prime Minister since May 1, 1974 and, if so, on what date and what are the specific items involved?

6. What is Mr. Head's exact annual salary in dollars and what is the total of all expenses of any kind paid for by the taxpayers that he has incurred since the date he joined the Prime Minister's staff?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): 1. One of Mr. Head's functions is to respond to inquiries of journalists in respect of those aspects of Canada's foreign relations in which the Prime Minister is involved. For convenience, such inquiries are often dealt with in a briefing context prior to and during official travel undertaken by the Prime Minister. The press briefing held on October 15, 1974 at which Mr. Head replied to questions from newsmen was one such occasion.

2. Responsibility to the parliament and people of Canada for the formulation of Canadian foreign policy lies with the Government, and that policy is implemented principally by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The government does not consider it appropriate, having regard to the parliamentary system as it operates in Canada, for non-elected officials to bear, or appear to bear, such responsibility. For that reason, explanations by officials of government policies and activities in this and in other areas are normally made on a non-attributable basis.

4. No.

5. Yes. There is no record of the dates and items involved.

6. See answer to Question No. 242 answered December 18, 1974, Hansard No. 56, page 2354.

EXPORT SALES TO CUBA

Question No. 989—Mr. Kempling:

1. How many export sales were made to Cuba during each fiscal period 1971-72, 1972-73, 1973-74 and 1974-75 to date?

2. What were the dollar amounts of these export sales?

3. Were these sales financed through the Export Development Corporation?

4. Were any such sales to Cuba financed through any other government agency and, if so (a) through which ones (b) how many sales did each agency handle (c) what were their dollar values?

5. What were the terms of sale of each transaction for the fiscal periods, including length of financing terms and rate of interest charged?

6. Are any of these export sales in default at the present time and, if so, which ones and what is the nature of the default?

7. Have any of the contracts between EDC and Cuba been written off since 1968 and, if so, which ones and what is the dollar amount of each?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): In so far as Statistics Canada is concerned: 1 and 2.

Year	Number of Items	Value ($'000)
1971	209	58,822
1972	195	58,730
1974	246	144,652

In so far as Export Development Corporation is concerned: 3. It has signed agreements to finance two sales to Cuba: (a) on April 25, 1974, up to Canadian $17.91 million, representing 90 p. cent of the sale price on a sale of 30 locomotives, spare parts and tools, by MLW Worthington Limited, Montreal, and of railroad track construction and maintenance equipment, spare parts and services by Canron Limited, Montreal, and (b) on December 13, 1974, up to Canadian, $24 million, representing 80 p. cent of the sale price of a sale of three 10,000 DWT tankers by Marine Industries Limited, Montreal.

4. Not applicable.

5. In the case of the sale described (i) in subparagraph (a) of the answer to Part 3, the terms were 10 p. cent cash and the balance of 90 per cent in 20 semi-annual instalments; and (ii) in subparagraph (b) of the answer to Part 3, the terms were 20 per cent cash and the balance of 80 per cent in 16 semi-annual instalments. With regard to the rate of interest charged in each case, it is not in the public interest to publish information on EDC lending rates. The rates vary according to such factors as the need to match international competition and the credit risks involved. To publish an average rate would be to disclose to certain borrowers that the EDC rate to them is above the average and this would militate against the possibility of repeat business for Canadian exporters.

7. No.

DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY, TRADE AND COMMERCE—TRANSLATION OF DOCUMENTS

Question No. 1,112—Mr. McKenzie:

1. What documents of any and all description (such as any type of form, records, stationery, employee directives, etc.) within the entire Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce have to be translated into the French language?

2. Retroactive to what date will all past records of the Department have to be translated?

3. At what date must all of these translations be completed?

4. What amount of money was spent in the years 1973 and 1974 for translating such documents?

[Mr. Kempling.]

5. What will be the total cost of translating all existing documents, forms, stationery, records, etc. within the Department's entire operation?

6. What is the total additional yearly cost of ordering all new forms, stationery, etc. in two languages compared to the cost in one language?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Secretary of State are concerned: 1. All publications, forms, folders, brochures, trade reviews, booklets, manuals, books, circulars and documents of a general application or of an administrative nature which are intended for employees within the Department at large, other government departments and agencies, or for the Canadian public have to be made available in both official languages.

2. Past records of the Department are not being translated.

3. Not applicable.

4. It is difficult to provide a precise answer to the question in terms of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, since, in order to achieve greater efficiency, the Government of Canada has consolidated all translation, interpretation and terminology services under a single administration, designed to serve all the departments and public bodies which depend on them. Cost are not apportioned according to the types of activities mentioned above. However, the total demand for translation as represented by the number of words is available for the years 1972-1973 and 1973-1974. The production in words for 1972-1973 was 3,120,006; for 1973-1974 it was 3,312,796. On the basis of an analysis of operating costs for the Translation Bureau, the total operating costs are estimated at about ten cents per word for the two years in question.

5. Information no available.

6. Approximately $33,300.

DEMURRAGE CHARGES

Question No. 1,187—Mr. Korchinski:

From the beginning of the crop year to date (a) what was the amount of demurrage charges on grain levied (b) which ports were involved?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Demurrage paid by the Canadian Wheat Board from beginning of 1974/75 crop year to December 17: (a) Wheat (not including durum), $1,967,718; Durum, $9,214; Barley, $1,495,628; total, $3,472,560. (b) West Coast Ports: Wheat (not including durum), $1,859,305; Durum, $9,214; Barley, $1,495,628; total, $3,364,148. East Coast Ports: Wheat (not including durum), $108,412; Durum, $ nil; Barley, $ nil; total $108,412.

RELEASE OF INMATES

Question No. 1,223—Mr. Schumacher:

1. By institution, how many prisoners were released in each month commencing January 1974 to date?

2. In each case, what was (a) the length of sentence given at the time of incarceration (b) the nature of the crime for which sentence was imposed (c) the actual length of sentence served?

3. How many of those released since January 1, 1974 (a) were receiving psychiatric assistance during incarceration (b) continued to receive psychiatric help after release (c) were considered to be of sound mental condition upon release?

4. (a) How many of those released since January 1, 1974 have become repeat offenders and, of these, how many are (i) serving sentences in maximum, medium and minimum security institutions (ii) are on parole (b) in each case, what was the nature of the repeat offence and length of sentence imposed?

5. By institution, how many prisoners were incarcerated for crimes of (a) murder (b) armed violence (c) unarmed violence (d) rape?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5. While the information required to answer the question will be available, unfortunately, the Ministry's Correctional Services are still in the process of catching up and changing from a system of historical statistics, always a year or two out-of-date, to a current data system with information no more than a month after events. Our current estimate is that the required information on 1974 will be available some time in May 1975. The alternative to awaiting completion on the inmates records system is the manual search, by special task force, of some 15,000 parole and penitentiary case files, a large number of which are held at the various regional headquarters locations across Canada, and the Ministry of the Solicitor General does not have available the staff nor the funds to undertake such a project. It is regretted that the information cannot be provided at this time.

DISCUSSIONS RELATING TO SOULANGES CANAL

Question No. 1,343—Mr. Herbert:

Does the government have any interest in or have there been any recent discussions with the Government of Quebec concerning the Soulanges Canal?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): There have been no recent discussions with the Government of Quebec on the Soulanges Canal and Parks Canada has no plans for its development.

AGREEMENT BETWEEN UNITED STATES AND CANADA ON TRANSPORTATION RESEARCH

Question No. 1,603—Mr. Beatty:

With reference to the memorandum of understanding between Canada and the United States signed June 18, 1970, does the agreement give the Americans access to all new developments with respect to transportation policy in the private sector and, if not, what categories of information are exempted from such agreement?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The Memorandum of Understanding between the Department of Transportation of the United States and the Ministry of Transport of Canada dated June 18, 1970, and concerning research and development cooperation in transportation is an inter-agency agreement and as such does not apply to the private sector. The Memorandum was signed in order to promote cooperation between the two agencies in the field of technical transportation research and development. As a result of this agreement, the Canadian Government has been able to obtain very useful information on government transportation research that has been and is taking place in the U.S.A.

*TRAVELLING REGULATIONS FOR PUBLIC SERVICE MEMBERS

Question No. 1,674—Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West):

1. What are the Treasury Board regulations, if any, requiring members of the Public Service, the Canadian Defence Forces or the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to use a Canadian flag carrier when travelling abroad from or returning to Canada?

2. When may exemptions from such regulations be granted and by whom?

3. (a) Is it possible to ascertain or to approximate the number of exemptions so granted in the calendar year 1974 (b) what was the principal reason given to support the exemption?

4. What were the three leading foreign airlines for whom exemptions were granted during the period?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Treasury Board Secretariat and the Department of Supply and Services as follows: 1. The government's policy is stated in the Treasury Board travel directive and reads as follows: "... Except where considered impractical by the employer, travel on official business shall be by Canadian carrier". The Canadian Armed Forces and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, to whom the travel directive does not apply, have similar policies.

2. Exemptions may be granted by departments. There are no formal criteria established. Exemptions are commonly made when: (a) the foreign centre to be visited is not served by a Canadian carrier; (b) the Canadian carriers are fully booked, and advancing or delaying an individual's departure is not acceptable; (c) the timetable of the Canadian carrier would lead to an uneconomic use of an employee's time.

3. (a) No. (b) Not applicable.

4. Not known.

Order Paper Questions

WHITESHELL NUCLEAR RESEARCH ESTABLISHMENT

Question No. 1,723—Mr. Francis:

Was the Whiteshell Nuclear Research Establishment in Manitoba declared a protected place in June, 1974 and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Atomic Energy Control Board reports as follows: The Whiteshell Nuclear Research Establishment in Manitoba was declared a protected place by Order of the Atomic Energy Control Board dated December 18, 1962. A new designating order was made in June, 1974 to comply with Section 14 of the Atomic Energy Control Regulations which came into effect on June 4, 1974. The purpose of a protected place is as stated in subsection 14(1) of the Atomic Energy Control Regulations.

ISSUANCE OF INSURANCE POLICIES TO NUCLEAR POWER STATIONS

Question No. 1,726—Mr. Francis:

Have Canadian insurance companies refused to offer the $75 million insurance policy to licenced nuclear power stations in Canada to cover them for indemnity against nuclear accidents and, if so, will the government cover any claims in the event of such an accident?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Atomic Energy Control Board reports as follows: The Nuclear Insurance Association of Canada is prepared to provide $75 million of insurance to operators of nuclear power stations in Canada. Until the Nuclear Liability Act is proclaimed in force, operators are not obligated to carry this insurance. At present, nuclear power stations not owned by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited are indemnified by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited against liability to third parties arising from a nuclear incident.

PERMISSIBLE LEVELS OF RADIATION EXPOSURE

Question No. 1,728—Mr. Francis:

Did the Director of the Radiation Protection Branch say that the safe level of radiation is a matter of opinion only and not a matter of scientific research and, if so, will the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources tell the Canadian people how permissible levels of radiation exposure were arrived at by the Atomic Energy Control Board?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Atomic Energy Control Board reports as follows: It is generally accepted by international experts that scientific research has been unable to establish a level of radiation below which the risk to health can be said to be zero. Quoting from the Recommendations of the International Commission on Radiological Protection, "Any exposure to radiation is assumed to entail a risk of deleterious effects. However, unless man wishes to dispense with activities involving exposures to ionizing radiations he must recognize that there is a degree of risk and must limit the radiation dose to a level at which the assumed risk is deemed to be acceptable to the individual and to society in view of the benefits derived from such activities". These recommendations have been accepted by the Atomic Energy Control Board in setting permissible levels of radiation exposure.

[Mr. Reid.]

WHARFAGE ACCOUNTS

Question No. 1,744—Mr. Forrestall:

With reference to the answer to Question No. 455, does the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs consider that the annual rate on over-due wharfage accounts due the National Harbours Board of 120 per cent is a good example for government to hold to the private sector in terms of interest rates it should charge consumers on consumer over-due accounts and (a) if so, for what reason (b) if not, for what reason?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): As stated by the Minister of Transport in response to question 455, the wharfage charge in question is a penalty to prevent abuse of a privilege. It is a commercial transaction. Quite different considerations arise in consumer transactions where the seller is frequently trying to encourage rather than discourage, the use of credit.

CANADA COUNCIL AWARD TO STUDY REPORTS OF UNIDENTIFIED FLYING OBJECTS

Question No. 1,756—Mr. Halliday:

1. Did the Canada Council award $6,000 to study Canadian reports of Unidentified Flying Objects and, if so, was the Council aware that the United States Government spent over half a million dollars between 1966 and 1968 to have competent scientists conduct an intensive study of such reports, including Canadian reports, and that their conclusion was that there was no evidence to warrant any further scientific investigation (the Condon Report)?

2. Did the Council consult with officers of the National Research Council about the advisability of funding such study?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canada Council as follows: 1. Yes. Under the Council's Explorations program, Mr. John B. Musgrave has been awarded $6,000 to catalogue old sightings of strange aerial phenomena as reported in Canadian newspapers, journals and local histories, and to interview people who have witnessed such phenomena, especially prior to 1947. The Council's decision was based on an independent appraisal by four scientifically qualified people who were undoubtedly aware of the Condon Report: the Chairman of the Department of Astronomy in an American university, the director of the Mutual U.F.O. Network in the United States, a biologist, and the editor of the Canadian U.F.O. Report.

2. No. This was not felt necessary for the following reasons: (a) the candidate has a solid background in the history of science and particularly of astronomy, having studied these subjects at two major United States universities, and is now involved in scientific work while teaching at Athabaska University, Edmonton; (b) the focus of his project is historical rather than scientific.

COMMUNITY EMPLOYMENT STRATEGY

Question No. 1,767—Mr. Epp:

1. What new programmes are identified as community employment programmes?

3. What areas in each province have been chosen as locations for implementation of the development phase of the community employment programmes?

4. What is the projected cost of the development phase for 1975-76?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. None as such. However, there will be already established government programmes which will participate and form a part of a community employment strategy.

2. Approximately 100 per cent, since C.E.S. is aimed at those people who are continuously unemployed and who rely on welfare or unemployment benefits for income.

3. British Columbia: Nanaimo and Kamloops; Saskatchewan: Target group of about 1,500 people within the province who are considered employable welfare recipients. Agreements with other provinces are still being negotiated.

4. $15 million.

LIST OF CHARITABLE ORGANIZATIONS

Question No. 1,783—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

Is there a list available of the incorporated causes or institutions deemed, for the purposes of the Income Tax Act, to be charitable institutions and, in consequence thereof, authorized to issue receipts for income tax purposes enabling donors or contributors to claim contributions as deductible expenditures and (a) if so, where is it to be found (b) if not, would it be provided?

Hon. Ron. Basford (Minister of National Revenue): Yes. The Department prepares an annual computer listing of all registered Canadian charitable organizations, corporations and trusts, donations to which are deductible for income tax purposes. Listings of additions and deletions are prepared quarterly. (a) These listings which are approximately four inches in thickness are not distributed to the public although they are made available in the District Taxation Offices for public perusal during normal working hours. (b) Not applicable.

Question No. 1,790—Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier):

1. To the knowledge of the government did the British House of Commons have a free vote on the electronic media coverage of their debates?

2. When the resolution to allow some form of electronic media coverage is moved in the Canadian House, will the government allow a free vote on this most important question?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. The proceedings of the British House of Commons do not come within the administrative responsibility of the government of Canada.

2. A decision will be made when the resolution is before the House.

3. Were Mr. L. Picard or Mr. Knowlton Nash on leave of absence or on corporate time while attending the trial?

4. Did Mr. Picard have any other staff or legal counsel present at the trial who were being paid by CBC?

5. Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. No, the trial judge has reserved judgment with respect to the awarding of costs; however, if the amount of costs awarded to Mr. McGall is less than the expenses incurred by him, the Corporation has undertaken to reimburse him.

2. They appeared as witnesses at the request of the plaintiff's solicitor, the formality of the issue of a subpoena having been dispensed with by agreement.

3. They were in the performance of their duties.

4. Yes.

5. No.

ATOMIC ENERGY CONTROL BOARD—RADIATION SAFETY

Question No. 1,721—Mr. Francis:

How many people have been appointed to advise the Atomic Energy Control Board on radiation safety and what are their names?

Return tabled.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I refer the House to question 1,233 which has been on the order paper since the first day of the present session and asks for information concerning the $200,000 swimming pool being constructed at 24 Sussex Drive. Specifically, it asks for the names of the donors, the circumstances surrounding the donations and other details concerning construction. These are matters which could very easily have been answered, yet several months have gone by without an answer being forthcoming.

Surely, it is a simple matter to have the government give this House a list of 25 names. The fact that these names have not been forthcoming can only lead us to the unfortunate assumption, at this stage at any rate, that there is something to hide. If there is no conflict of interest or impropriety involved, I would think that the Prime Minister could today assure the House that he will make public all details concerning the swimming pool immediately, and that failure on his part to do so might well indicate that there must be very good reasons for keeping the truth away from parliament and the public.

Mr. Trudeau: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker. Yes, there are very good reasons for keeping the facts from the House. I understand that those who offered to contribute were told that their names would not be made public.

An hon. Member: What have they to hide?

Mr. Trudeau: For fear that the House would say that I am receiving gifts from certain people and that I would be influenced by those gifts. I think the fact that their names are secret, not only to the House but to myself, certainly makes it very difficult for the House or the country to believe that I am being influenced by any form of gift.

I think the House will have to make up its mind. If the House wants me to be influenced, or to give the appearance of being influenced, by public donors, and the House passes a resolution to this effect, I will have the donors advised of this. If they want to have their names made public, it will be up to them. If they do not, I suspect it would be up to the treasury to foot the bill. This has also been suggested as the proper course.

I will be guided by the House, Mr. Speaker. If hon. members want the funds to come from the public treasury rather than from private and secret donors, that is perfectly acceptable to me except that they will then tell the taxpayers about this added expense that they prefer to see the taxpayers bear rather than have the government accept gifts, as it often does for the benefit of public property.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There appear to be other members who want to pursue the same point of order.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order to which the Prime Minister has just addressed himself. I should like to say on behalf of my colleagues that the line of reasoning the Prime Minister has taken is not one with which we are in agreement. It seems to me there is an important distinction to be made between gifts that are made to a prime minister while he is holding office—

Mr. Sharp: It is public property.

Mr. Broadbent: Perhaps the government House leader will hold on for a moment. There is an important distinction to be made between gifts made to a prime minister while holding office which he will take with him when he leaves office, and the kind of situation we have with a swimming pool being added to the official residence of the prime minister of Canada, and that includes prime ministers in general who will come after the present Prime Minister. There is an important point of public policy, which our party holds, that it is wrong in principle to accept private donations in this kind of situation whether the names are revealed or not. If a pool is required for some purpose, it should be government policy to put it in at public expense.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure that hon. members realize there is a great danger that with very little difficulty we could slip into a debate on this question rather than dealing with a point of order. The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt) has raised a point of order, calling to the attention of the House the fact that his question has been on the order paper for some time and has not been answered. That point of order has now been rather fully discussed and I think we should move on to something else.

Mr. Cossitt: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago the Prime Minister said, if I recall his words correctly, "if you want me influenced by this then I would see that these things are revealed". I should think that, in fact, this is an improper thing to be said to this House, and is in effect threatening this House—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Cossitt:—he should make them public and treat the House with more respect and less arrogance—

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member realizes that he is raising a point of discussion or debate and not a question of privilege.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Motion No. 29—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of the press releases relating to the projects (a) Cadastre program in Morocco (b) National Library for Ivory Coast (c) Educational television for Ivory Coast (d) Automated bakery in Tanzania (e) 11 Twin Otter Stol planes for Indonesia (f) Microwave system for Zaire (g) Uplands Sugar Mill, Barbados (h) Hydro Studies, Salto Grenade, Argentina (i) Electric Power, Electrobras, Northeast Distribution, Brazil (j) Earth Satellite Station, Pakistan (k) Cimmyt, Mexico, International Development Research Centre (l) Cyat, Colombia, International Development Research Centre (m) Derro Tetouan project, Morocco.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, notice of motion for production of papers No. 29 is acceptable in so far as part a, e, i, j, k, l and m are concerned. In so far as parts b, c, d, f, g, and h are concerned, no press releases were issued.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservations and conditions expressed by the parliamentary secretary, is it the pleasure of the House that notice of motion No. 29 is deemed to be adopted?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call notices of motions for production of papers, Nos. 15, 28 and 30?

COPIES OF CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO ABORTION AND/OR SECTION 251, CRIMINAL CODE

Motion No. 15—Mr. Leggatt:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of all correspondence between the Minister of Justice and the Attorneys General and Ministers of Health of the provinces dealing with the subject of abortion and/or Section 251 of the Criminal Code of Canada.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, correspondence between the department or Minister of Justice and the attorneys general of the provinces concerning abortion and/or Section 251 of the Criminal Code contains confidential communications. I would, therefore, ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, may that be transferred for debate?

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

COPY OF CORRESPONDENCE WITH CBC PERTAINING TO PROGRAMME "BAPTIZING"

Motion No. 28—Mr. Dinsdale:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all correspondence with CBC pertaining to the programme "Baptizing", presented on the CBC national TV network on Sunday evening, January 19, 1975.

Mr. Gustave Blouin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am advised by the CBC as follows: The correspondence in question is confidential as between the correspondents and the CBC. The CBC welcomes reactions to programs and the effect of publication of the correspondence would be to create a reluctance on the part of interested parties to comment in writing to the CBC about its programs.

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Blouin: Under the circumstances, the hon. member may wish to withdraw his motion.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

COPIES OF AREA PROGRAMME SUMMARIES FOR 1972-75

Motion No. 30—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of the Area Programme Summaries for the years 1972-73, 1973-74 and 1974-75, covering such areas as Commonwealth Africa, South America, Francophone Africa, and any other area breakdowns for which Area Programmes have been prepared.

[Translation]

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, Motion No. 30 is not acceptable because there is in the documents we are asked to table some parts dealing with international relations the release of which might be detrimental to the future conduct of Canadian foreign relations. I would therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Transferred for debate.

[English]

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the other notices of motions be allowed to stand.

[Translation]

Mr. De Bané: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Matane (Mr. De Bané) on a point of order.

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Speaker, earlier the parliamentary secretary has asked for authorization to be relieved of the obligation to table a document in the two official languages. You have asked if there was unanimous agreement to have the documents tabled in only one of the two official languages. Personally, I objected. I do not want to come back on what has been done but I would like to inform the parliamentary secretary or any minister that from now on I will object to having a document tabled in only one of the two official languages.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I missed the objection of the hon. member because I could not hear it. After the parliamentary secretary made his suggestion to the House I put the question in respect of agreement, and it was so ordered. I did not hear any dissenting voice, and perhaps that is a weakness of my right ear.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—REQUEST FOR EARLY STATEMENT ON OBJECTIVE IN SEEKING CONSENSUS AND PROGRESS THEREON

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, now that we are probably approaching an Easter break, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he can assure us that the House will be informed during the first week of our return after Easter of the specifics of the government's so-called consensus program and any other contingency plans it may have on the shelf to deal with the very serious social and economic stresses in the country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is referring to the kind of statement I will be making publicly to the First Ministers Conference, of course I will be prepared to discuss that in the House and answer questions relating to it. If he is asking for a further statement, I cannot give that assurance.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman must recognize, in view of our pursuit of this information for a number of months, that his answer is totally unsatisfactory. Does the Prime Minister not realize that this attitude is bound to cause a spirit of hostility and non-co-operation to exist in this chamber after we return? If that is the way things are to be, Sir, that is the way they will be.

INFLATION—POSSIBLE DISCUSSION OF CONSENSUS PROGRAM AT FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a couple of questions to the Prime Minister in an attempt to change, this apparent secrecy which seems to permeate the House regarding the consensus program. The Prime Minister told the House last Thursday that the first day of the First Ministers' Conference might well be open. Would he tell the House what items will be discussed on the first day and, specifically, will the consensus program be discussed in the open at that time? I think we are entitled to know what the thinking of the government is in this regard. Will that be an open meeting?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the agenda will be as follows: there will be a statement by the eleven First Ministers, and then there will be two items on the agenda, the first being the question of oil and gas pricing, distribution and so on, and the second being the economic situation. I cannot say for certain how much time will be taken on the first item or whether the second item will be reached on the first day. I would think it fair to guess that it is not too likely the second item will be reached on the first day, and it is possible that the first item will continue into the second day. Whether at that time the First Ministers will or will not want to make any part of their discussions public is something I cannot decide for them.

I have taken a stand, which I have made public in this House, that the federal government will not take any lead in making meetings private, but if the desire of the committee of First Ministers is that they be private we will respect that desire and support them.

Oral Questions

INFLATION—GOVERNMENT VIEW OF LEVEL WHICH MIGHT BE ACHIEVED THROUGH CO-OPERATION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Prime Minister would indicate then to the First Ministers that this matter is of some prime concern and the meeting should be open to determine perhaps what role the Canadian people can play in that regard. On March 12 the Minister of Finance said:

> What is dangerous is that current settlements are anticipating rates of inflation which project the rate effective in 1974, and if this continues to happen, it will become a self-fulfilling prophesy . . .

I am sure the Prime Minister must be very concerned at least with the prediction of the Canadian Labour Congress that inflation in fact will run around 12 per cent in 1975. Would the Prime Minister tell the House whether during the consensus talks the government has argued that a substantially reduced inflation rate is possible for this year, and if that is the case I am sure the Prime Minister would now be most anxious to tell the House what reduced level a program of co-operation could achieve?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I take the first part of the question as a representation and will convey the feeling of the hon. member for Hamilton West to the first ministers, his feeling about how important it is for the public to assist in the debates on the second day or whatever his expression was. On the latter part of the question, I think this is a good illustration of the inadvisability of the government making a complete statement on what it is doing in the consensus process at this time because the hon. gentleman chose as an example the labour movement. I feel it is very important to not ask any sacrifice by the labour movement if that sacrifice is not met by other sectors of the economy. It would be very unwise for me to answer, even in part, the kind of question put by the hon. member for Hamilton West.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, surely the Prime Minister must know that so long as there is no indication from the government concerning what the inflationary rate will be, labour will have no leadership in this regard and will continue to make statements about what wage levels should be and wage settlements will be geared accordingly. Surely, the Prime Minister knows there should be leadership in this regard. Will he not give this leadership and indicate what this co-operation will do in terms of reducing the rate of inflation?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, there is no question that leadership is required, but what the hon. member seems to be arguing is that every stage of our consultation must be made public in order to prove our leadership to the hon. member. I say, Mr. Speaker, that our leadership can be made evident without that.

COMBINES

POSSIBLE TAKE-OVER OF ARGUS CORPORATION BY POWER CORPORATION—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PREVENT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Considering that the Royal Bank has made it known to the Power Corporation that if it should succeed with a take-over bid in respect of the Argus Corporation it, the Royal Bank, would put up the almost $150 million in capital that would be necessary, I should like to ask the Prime Minister, considering that such a take-over and the investment associated with it would not represent an investment that would lead to increased productivity in the economy, whether the government in this particular case would take steps to ensure that this is not proceeded with and, second, would the government take the necessary steps to ensure that it would have the authority over investment patterns of this scale in the economy as a whole in the future.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot, of course, comment on the preamble to the question. The hon. member seems to know more about what is going on in respect of the Royal Bank and the Power Corporation than I do.

Mr. Broadbent: I have my doubts about the Power Corporation.

Mr. Trudeau: Obviously, he has access to information I do not have. The concern he seems to imply by his question certainly is one I have expressed. I am looking into this matter. I do not think it would necessarily follow for the reasons alleged by the hon. member, but there is a question of the degree to which competition in Canada might be reduced by such a take-over and I am having the matter looked at. I might mention that if the House would co-operate with regard to the passage of Part I of the competition bill, then perhaps we could get on with Part II and perhaps deal with the matter raised by the hon. member.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I should like to follow up the answer given by the Prime Minister and ask him, if in the course of investigations the government reaches the conclusion that some of the benefits that come from the alleged competition which now takes place would be removed by such a take-over, whether he would assure the House that the government would take the necessary steps to stop it?

Mr. Trudeau: Well, the question is hypothetical in its form, but it would seem to me if the hon. member would look at the first part of my answer he would understand that that, indeed, is part of my concern. My reference to stage two of the competition bill is that in the government's mind further steps would be taken beyond those which now exist in our law to give the government power to look into this kind of thing.

NATIONAL SECURITY

PRESUMED CONNECTION BETWEEN INTERPOL AND SOME NAZIS—REQUEST FOR AN INQUIRY

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Solicitor General, I shall put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

As today is Easter's eve for the Jewish community and also because the Solicitor General has received over 30 telegrams from them with regard to an Interpol inquiry as well as a brief proving ties between the Nazis and Interpol, does he consider that the time has come to order an in-depth inquiry into the connections between the Nazis, Interpol and the Jews?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know absolutely nothing about the telegrams mentioned by the hon. member; in addition, I doubt that Interpol, the Nazis or the Jews fall under the jurisdiction of the department of the minister concerned. As for the Jewish community, which might be interested in this matter, I take this opportunity to say to it, "Shalom".

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Prime Minister.

Because Canada is a member of Interpol, and because Jews have on many occasions complained about Nazi control over Interpol, would the right hon. Prime Minister look into this matter in depth, in view of the absence of the Solicitor General of Canada.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I will take note of the question; if the hon. member gets in touch with the minister, he will get information on which to launch his study.

COMBINES

POSSIBLE TAKE-OVER OF ARGUS CORPORATION BY POWER CORPORATION—APPLICABILITY OF PROVISIONS OF BILL C-2—EFFECT ON COMMUNICATIONS

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. First of all, would the Prime Minister assure me that he will re-read Bill C-2 about which he is so proud and agree that the provisions of that bill in no way would touch the Power Corporation-Argus Company so far as the existing clauses of the bill are concerned? Would the Prime Minister agree to do that for us at least?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that would appear to be a rhetorical question. The only reason for it is that the hon. member did not listen to my reply. I was talking about step two of the competition bill which we would reach only if stage one is accepted by the House with some expedition.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes, Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister and this country would be prepared to accept Bill C-2. But in any event, I wonder whether the Prime Minister has asked the Secretary of State and the Minister of Communications to look into particular aspects with regard to communications and the effect there might be if this takeover bid was successful.

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker, I did not refer to the Secretary of State, but this is one of the aspects which did catch my attention and that is why I drew it to the attention of my officials and asked them to look into the matter in consultation with other departments.

ESTIMATES

METHOD OF DEALING WITH ITEMS RELATED TO SECURITY—POSSIBILITY OF PUTTING ITEMS IN MISCELLANEOUS VOTES

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the disclosure by the Minister of State for Science and Technology that a number of security items are listed under unrelated headings in the annual estimates, will the minister tell the House which of the estimates are not accurate?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Science and Technology and of Public Works offered hon. members of the opposition to meet them and give them some explanations. I think they should benefit from this opportunity.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am prepared to see the hon. member for Calgary Centre on a supplementary question. However, questions about the estimates and their content really ought to be directed to ministers in the standing committees when the estimates are being examined.

Mr. Andre: I certainly do not want to challenge the judgment of the Chair, but I feel that this goes beyond the usual interrogation conducted in committees into the details of the estimates, in that in committee we were informed that certain votes in the estimates could, in fact, include items dealing with security matters and therefore the accuracy of the estimates could be questioned. This opened the question of whether, in fact, the House can be asked to judge. Would the minister consider including such security items in the annual estimates if they could be isolated from the main estimates as, for example, miscellaneous votes.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the minister gave an explanation that I think is very good. It would not be in the interest of Canada to give any more details than we are giving now.

Oral Questions

[English]

NATIONAL SECURITY

RESPONSIBILITY OF COMMUNICATIONS BRANCH OF NRC—ACCEPTABILITY OF MINISTER'S ROLE

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister, and it arises from the statement of the Minister of State for Science and Technology that he is kept informed as to the activities of the communications branch of the NRC, and I quote, "to the extent that they think I could be useful". Quite apart from the question of parliamentary scrutiny of the nation's security apparatus, I ask the Prime Minister whether the minister's position that it is proper for him to leave the matter strictly in the hands of the communications branch with respect to whether he is made aware of their activities is in his opinion acceptable procedure for the overseeing of the country's security machinery?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it seems to be a matter of administrative convenience. Cabinet ministers, and certainly I, myself, do not ask their officials to report to them on every possible subject which comes before them. They rely on the judgment of their immediate advisors and deputy ministers or directors, and if on some occasions they do not have confidence in or doubt the judgment of those advisors, of course, they will look beyond the advice given, but as a matter of practice I am sure no minister wants to know every detail of everything which happens under his jurisdiction.

Mr. Beatty: Of course, I was not asking that the Minister of State for Science and Technology be informed of every detail of their activities, but is the Prime Minister saying that it is acceptable procedure for a minister of the Crown responsible for one important part of our security apparatus to simply rely upon the judgment of the people involved in the machinery as to whether he should be kept informed of their activities, or does the Prime Minister feel that experiences in other jurisdictions with respect to this matter would justify ministers responsible for the security apparatus taking an active part in overseeing the activities of groups responsible to them?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, there is no contradiction between the two postures. I am sure every minister oversees every aspect coming under his jurisdiction, but he does not ask his officials to report on every detail of it. He relies on their judgment to bring to his attention matters which are of importance.

[Later:]

POSSIBILITY COMMUNICATIONS BRANCH OF NRC MONITORING LONG DISTANCE TELEPHONE CALLS

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Prime Minister who, I presume, is sporting a Pick Nick button because he could not find anyone in Alberta to wear it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Chrétien.]

Mr. Clark: I want to return to the security matter and refer again to the testimony of the Minister of State for Science and Technology who said that the communications branch of the NRC, and I quote, "do monitor Hertzian waves emanations." Since that phrase could include microwave communications, including long distance telephone calls, will the Prime Minister tell the House whether the agency is monitoring long distance telephone calls placed in Canada to points in Canada or outside Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know, but I will refer the question to the Minister of Communications or the Minister of State for Science and Technology to see if either of them can give the answer in the public interest.

REASON FOR TRANSFER OF COMMUNICATIONS BRANCH FROM NRC TO NATIONAL DEFENCE—MINISTER TO WHOM BRANCH REPORTS

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): I trust that a simple answer as to whether such an activity is being conducted can be divulged to the House of Commons. My supplementary to the Prime Minister deals with whether the transfer of the communications branch of the National Research Council to the Department of National Defence was part of a general transfer of security responsibilities. If not, will the Prime Minister tell us why the communications branch of the NRC was transferred and whether it is the plan of the government to concentrate all security agencies in one ministry so that one minister can exercise the kind of supervision of which my hon. colleague spoke earlier and which, according to the Prime Minister's colleague who is absent today, is necessary in the case of the communications branch.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): My understanding of the reason for the transfer is that the Department of National Defence is the main user of the kind of intelligence which might be gathered by this unit. The Department of National Defence is, of course, interested in intelligence relating to military operations of foreign powers, and that is why it is the main user. As to the other suggestion, the answer is no. The over-all supervision for matters of security and intelligence comes under the cabinet and, more particularly, under the cabinet committee on security and intelligence.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Will the Prime Minister advise the House whether the communications branch, now of the Department of National Defence, will report to the Minister of National Defence, or will it report to someone else? If it is someone else, who is that other person, and where is that person located in the government?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of internal function of the government apparatus. If answers can be given along these lines, they will be given by one minister designated by me. If the answers cannot be given, they will not be given by any minister.

NATIONAL PARKS

TOLLS ON RIDEAU-TRENT-SEVERN WATERWAY—POSSIBLE CONSULTATION WITH CORTS COMMITTEE BEFORE IMPOSITION

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The minister stated in reply to a question asked by the hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington concerning the authorization of the first ever tolls on the Rideau-Trent-Severn waterway that he accepted full responsibility. In view of the fact that the CORTS Committee of the Rideau-Trent-Severn waterway made a very strong point of the fact that this is a unique waterway, the only one without usage fees, I would like to ask the minister whether he consulted this committee before taking this action.

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the committee was not consulted before taking this action because when the matter was discussed and approved by the Treasury Board, the CORTS Committee was not in existence. This is just a relatively recent development. I think it is three weeks since the committee was formed, so in fact this matter was a fait accompli before the CORTS agreement was signed and before the committee came into existence. I should mention that these fees only represent seven per cent of the operating costs of the canal system. This question was asked by an hon. member the other day.

Mr. Rynard: I would like to ask the minister if it was not on the suggestion of the federal government that the CORTS Committee was set up just for this advice. I think it has been set up longer than the minister suggests.

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, the submission and approval of the fee structure antedates the establishment of the CORTS Committee, and the mandate of the CORTS Committee is far broader than simply this narrow aspect as far as its interest in dealing with the operation of the canals involved.

TOLLS ON RIDEAU-TRENT-SEVERN WATERWAY—PERCENTAGE OF TOLLS EXPENDED ON ADMINISTRATION

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): I would like to ask the minister what percentage of the 15 per cent will be spent in administration and for hiring the necessary people to look after the collection of the fee?

● (1500)

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I presume the hon. member means what portion of the 7 per cent of operating costs? In other words, the revenues collected will represent 7 per cent of the operating costs of the canal system. I am sorry that I cannot give that information right now.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi on a point of order.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, my point of order arises from the last supplementary of the hon. member for Rocky Mountain. May members on this side of the House ask questions without recognition from the Chair as well?

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REQUEST FOR HIGHER MINIMUM WAGE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jacques Olivier (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, I notice you looked in our direction. There are also some questions which should be asked by hon. members on this side of the House.

I have a question for the Minister of Labour.

Could he inform the House if and when he intends to raise the minimum wage because the people covered by the legislation on minimum wages need an increase?

[English]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the cabinet has approved an increase in the minimum wage from $2.20 as it is now, to $2.60 effective July 23, 1975.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): It was published in the paper yesterday.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): This is a 40 cent increase, and will put it ahead of that of any other jurisdiction.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

POSSIBILITY OF NEW BUDGET IN VIEW OF HIGH UNEMPLOYMENT—SUGGESTED INCREASE IN PROCESSING RAW MATERIALS TO CREATE EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I would personally invite the Prime Minister back to his seat. In the absence of the Minister of Finance, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the Conference Board has predicted that Canada's unemployment rate will reach 8.5 per cent by the end of this year with very little growth in the economy, may I ask the Prime Minister whether, in view of that, the government is considering bringing a new budget into the House immediately?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance is in Washington for the IMF meetings. I will relay the question of the hon. member to him when he returns.

Mr. Nystrom: A supplementary question. Is the Prime Minister now ready to instruct the Minister of Finance to bring in a new budget in view of the fact that the unemployment rate will be nearly 9 per cent by the end of this year?

Mr. Trudeau: I am sure the hon. member knows that I respect the judgment of the Minister of Finance and that he makes his own decisions.

Mr. Nystrom: A final supplementary. In view of the projected high unemployment rate and the massive deficit we have in manufactured goods in this country, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the government intends to get tough and require firms to do more processing and manufacturing of raw materials in this country prior to export in order to create more jobs for Canadians?

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member is restating his question. The policy of the government has already been announced.

TRADE

SUGGESTION MINISTER VISIT OTHER COUNTRIES TO LEARN SUCCESSFUL TRADING PATTERNS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, obviously the tame seals are getting restless for a dive in the new pool at Sussex Drive. My question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the volume of exports of fully manufactured products, which are the ones which produce the jobs, has been declining steadily in the past 18 months and imports of the same products have been rising rapidly, showing that our chief trading partners are more adept exporters of products to Canada than we are at selling abroad and this has had an adverse effect on our employment, would the Prime Minister give serious consideration immediately after the Easter recess to having the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce visit the capitals of some of our more successful trading partners—

An hon. Member: And stay there.

Mr. Hees: —to study their trading patterns and bring them back to Canada which would have a tremendous effect on production and employment?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is agreement between the hon. member and the government view of these things or indeed the view of most responsible economists. If our exports are falling, it is because so many of the economies of our traditional markets, like the United States, are weakening and they are not in as strong a position to buy our goods as before. If imports are increasing, it is because Canadian society and the economy is very strong.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question arising from that very interesting answer. In view of the fact that imports from other countries of fully manufactured products are every day displacing a very large volume of Canadian products offered in the Canadian market, how does the Prime Minister conceive that our economy is so much more adept in producing goods at a reasonable price than other economies?

[Mr. Nystrom.]

Mr. Trudeau: Will the hon. member give me some examples, please?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest the Prime Minister take the time and trouble to look at the figures produced by Statistics Canada. Mr. Speaker, when one receives an answer like this it shows no regard for the employment and welfare of the Canadian people. Is it any wonder that the Prime Minister has found it necessary to have both of his limousines bullet-proofed?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I say to the hon. member that I do have high regard for the prosperity of the Canadian people and for the welfare of the hon. member. For that reason I suggest that he remove his head from the buttonhole of his shirt that he put it in this morning.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is a very entertaining exchange. There are other members, however, who should be called upon.

Mr. Hees: A question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. As a result of this last answer which I got from the Prime Minister, I should like to ask him if he is suffering severely from headaches from having his head in the sand so much of the time?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder if I might just borrow a moment from the question period which I will add on at the end. I want to remind hon. members that regardless of when we rise for the Easter break, there is an order of the House which will change the form of the question period. It will take effect upon the first Monday on our return after Easter. That order will have the effect, on an experimental basis, of having the question period begin forthwith after any motions pursuant to Standing Order 43. Question period will begin not later than 2.15 p.m. or earlier if there are no motions, or just a few, pursuant to Standing Order 43 and regardless of interruptions, points of order and questions of privilege, will terminate at three o'clock. Accordingly, one of the effects of the order covering the experiment will be that the question period will become a sort of self-policing thing in regard to interventions.

I wanted to make that known to hon. members now and to add that on the first Monday after our return at the end of the question period that day, at three o'clock, I would propose to put to the House the views I have collected from an examination of the precedents and the collective wisdom on the question period as a point of departure from which we might begin to come to an understanding about those guiding principles which should govern the question period. I hope to do it in such a way as to invite comment from hon. members, whether that comes through meetings of House leaders or of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, which I am always happy to attend, or discussion in the House. It would seem that introduction of that new experimental order would be an opportunity to begin with a most comprehensive statement about the question period, to invite discussion and take it from there.

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister which pertains to questions that are unanswered on the order paper. Can the Prime Minister or whoever is in charge of administering the funds for the construction of the swimming pool at his official residence assure the House that no donations were received from dredging companies or officials connected with dredging companies?

PICKERING—REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF DECISION TO CONSTRUCT IN VIEW OF MAJORITY VOTE AGAINST PROJECT

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport and is with regard to the controversial Pickering airport. Because the minister made a commitment to revise the proposed airport plans if it could be shown that the people of Toronto are opposed to it, and as a recent survey conducted by a reliable market research firm shows that the majority of the people of that city do oppose a second airport, can the minister assure the House that he will now consider the wishes of the people of Toronto and keep his own word, by taking immediate steps to stop any further planning or construction of the project and bring the whole issue back to cabinet and perhaps the House for revision, as promised.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the details of the inquiry referred to by the hon. member. He speaks of metro Toronto; what is metro Toronto, exactly? He speaks of 40 per cent of the people of Toronto being opposed; does that mean that 60 per cent support the airport? I have no details. Surely, he does not expect me to answer a simple question like this, which hides much more than it shows.

Mr. Jelinek: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The poll to which I referred has been made public and shows that not 40 per cent but 54.4 per cent of the people were opposed to the proposed Pickering airport. When I refer to metro Toronto, I am referring to the city of Toronto, as the minister well knows. The minister made a commitment to this House, which is on record.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Jelinek: May I ask my supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In order to avoid the embarrassment of the accusation that he is deliberately trying to mislead the House, could the minister tell us what other information would satisfy him and induce him to revise this white elephant project.

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I have absolutely no idea of the value of the statistics given. I know we have made our own investigations. I came back from Toronto this morning, where I met the Minister of Transport. There is nobody in all Toronto who complained about the construction of the Pickering airport, and I met several persons.

DREDGING CONTRACT FOR GOLDEN EAGLE REFINERY IN QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR DETAILS

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport and concerns certain St. Lawrence Seaway dredging contracts. Is the minister, or are his officials, aware of the dredging contract entered into in the Quebec city area, allegedly for the Golden Eagle refinery? It was entered into even though informed and knowledgeable river and port interests were consulted and advised against such dredging contract. That contract proceeded on the basis of a $10 million bid. When tenders came in, the price was $20 million and already $36 million has been spent on it. Does the minister know anything about that particular contract?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the details of that contract, but will inquire. I do not think I was Minister of Transport at that time.

Mr. Benjamin: Are you now?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I will look into the matter and see if there is anything to report.

Mr. Nowlan: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As this took place in 1971 or 1972, I concede that the minister was not in charge, although his departmental officials were informed. While looking into the matter—I know he cannot report to the House until after Easter—could he determine what prominent Liberals were in favour of the contract, as I understand that one of them is a colleague of his who is now a member of the cabinet but who was not in the cabinet when he made strong representations for this contract to be proceeded with.

CABLEVISION—DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN QUEBEC AND FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I want to put a question to the Minister of Communications.

Can the minister tell the House what is the state of the negotiation with the Quebec government as regards the control of cable distribution and whether the respective positions of the federal and the Quebec governments remain relentlessly opposed?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, on the request of the Quebec government itself, it is not a bilateral, but a multilateral consultation between the federal Minister of Communications on the one hand, and on the other hand the ten provincial Ministers of Communications. It would be too long to explain in detail what point we have reached. Therefore, I shall try to be short and say that a letter is being sent today to the president of the Commission of the provincial Ministers of Communications, Mr. Rhodes, the Ontario Minister of Communications. The letter says that the federal Department of Communications is willing to call a conference on an agenda mentioned in the letter, and that the date which would be most suitable for us and which we hope would suit the provinces would be around the middle of May.

REQUEST FOR CLEMENCY FOR DR. MORGANTALER—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Justice. Dr. Morgantaler was acquitted by a jury, but the Supreme Court of Canada has upheld the decision reversing the acquittal; three judges, three members of the highest judicial authority in Canada, including the Chief Justice held, however, that the conviction ought to have been quashed. In view of this will the minister look into the case and recommend to the cabinet that it should exercise powers conferred on it on grounds of clemency, as it is obvious that the offence was committed for humanitarian motives.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, there will be no such recommendation. I will, of course, as a matter of interest, examine the judgments of the court in this case. I am rather astonished by the hon. member's suggestion that, in some fashion, the minority of the court overrides the majority.

Mr. Brewin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister not know that even though a majority of the court has convicted a person, it is the duty of the Governor in Council to consider whether clemency should be exercised. Why is the minister not ready to perform that duty?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the law requires that various powers conferred on the executive shall be exercised only in most exceptional circumstances, indeed, only if there is some indication of the failure of the legal process. In this case, on the contrary, the legal process was carefully pursued to the Supreme Court and, without doubt, with great care in the Supreme Court itself.

SALE OF CHAPMAN TRANSPORT TO DIRECT WINTERS TRANSPORT—ALLEGED ATTEMPT TO GAIN MONOPOLY IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport and requires consideration. It has been reported that Chapman Transport Ltd., a wholly owned subsidiary of Canadian National Railways, has been sold to Direct Winters Transport Ltd. of Toronto, a wholly owned subsidiary of Fuqua Industries Incorporated of Atlanta, Georgia. Can the minister advise the House if this sale met with his approval and did it receive the approval of the Governor in Council administering the Foreign Investment Review Act.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have no memory of that deal. I shall inquire. If it has been made, it was surely without my knowing it and I would be surprised if the Canadian National had that authority. However, I shall inquire and report to the hon. member.

[English]

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Acting Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Is the minister aware that Direct Winters Limited has bought Miller Brown Limited, as reported to me yesterday, Chapman Transport Limited, and has approached other provincial carriers in the province of British Columbia in an attempt to create a monopoly of provincial interior carriers that will be wholly-owned by their United States holding company, Fuqua Industries Incorporated?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

DATE OF ANNOUNCEMENT OF SUBSIDY ON INDUSTRIAL MILK AND GOVERNMENT INTENTION WITH REGARD TO FLUID MILK SUBSIDY

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Agriculture when he proposes to make his announcement with regard to subsidies on industrial milk which was promised before the end of March. Second, does the minister intend to reinstate the milk subsidy on fluid milk? If not, does he intend to consult with his colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, to find some new method of bringing relief to hard pressed Canadian consumers?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I made several statements in the House on behalf of the government on the consumer milk subsidy and as to our intentions. The spending of the government has been criticized by members of the opposition and by the public, but over half of our increased spending is to take care of people whose incomes do not allow them to look after themselves in the fashion we want. Therefore, we increased the social benefits. The dairy policy will be announced before the first of April.

ENERGY

POLICY ADOPTED BY GOVERNMENT CONCERNING ADVERTISING—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister.

Considering that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has decided that his department will no longer pay for any advertisement in the newspaper Le Jour, and that the Minister of National Health and Welfare said yesterday that the cabinet had not yet been informed of this matter but that other departments may act in a similar fashion, I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister if the government plans to apply to all its departments the policy now followed by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, each department's advertisement is left entirely at the discretion of the department concerned. The minister has stated publicly that he has made a personal decision and I would like to add that I congratulated him personally.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Joliette on a question of privilege.

Mr. La Salle: Since the decision of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources creates a precedent as concerns advertising and since 25,000 Quebecers buy this newspaper and probably from 50,000 to 75,000 people read it, I am wondering if the government does not plan to take the same attitude as concerns certain projects of the Opportunities for Youth Program, of which the sponsors are often not necessarily the greatest of federalists, even though these projects benefit Quebecers.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member may ask just another supplementary question, but unfortunately, in spite of the importance of this issue, the oral question period is nearly over and I would like to recognize three or four other members.

AIR CANADA

EFFECT OF BILL 22 ON HEADQUARTERS EMPLOYEES AT MONTREAL

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Will Air Canada headquarters at Place Ville Marie at Montreal come under the jurisdiction of bill 22—The minister is having difficulty hearing because of the noise on the other side. Will Air Canada headquarters at Place Ville Marie at Montreal come under the jurisdiction of bill 22, making the working language at Air Canada headquarters French?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think both languages are used at Air Canada in Montreal and were used before Bill 22 applied.

Mr. McKenzie: My question to the minister was—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

TOLLS ON ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY—POSSIBILITY OF INCREASE

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, I have an urgent question for the Minister of Transport. I hope his answer will not be kept a secret from the Canadian people. Pursuant to the opening of navigation on the St. Lawrence Seaway, and in the interest of our Canadian trade and the economic industrial production of the heartland of Canada, can the minister assure the House there will be no further increase in tolls and shipping fees on this waterway now or in the foreseeable future?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I stated that we are revising the whole transportation policy. The seaway is part of this. There is the problem of refinancing with regard to the seaway. As the hon. member knows, the present debt of the seaway is approximately $800 million. Therefore, the cabinet will have to address itself to this question. I cannot indicate now what will be the decision of the cabinet.

DECLINE IN EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO COUNTERACT

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Given the fact that Canada's agricultural trade with the United States dropped by some $39 million last year over the previous year, and having regard to the fact that only a mere doubling of wheat sales avoided an overall decline in the exports of Canadian agricultural products, can the minister say whether any new initiatives are being considered by the government with regard to a more aggressive and effective marketing policy for Canada's agricultural products?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member will want me to put on record that our exports of agricultural products is one reason we did not have a deficit in our trade balance. Our trade with the United States is important. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce spent some time in Cuba and is in Venezuela at the present time. The Prime Minister recently returned from Europe. Agricultural trade was discussed at all these meetings. We gained concessions in our cheddar cheese program with the common market. We are doing all that the hon. member has asked.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, the minister cannot get away with a frivolous answer like that.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hesitate to interrupt at this time, but I did direct a specific question to the Minister of Agriculture concerning our trade with the United States and a $39 million decline in our overall trade. I asked the minister specifically what steps he has taken in order to restore that trade with the United States, particularly in the beef industry. The minister avoided that question completely.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I thought I should ask permission to return to motions later today in order to deal with the adjournment motion.

Mr. Speaker: With that indication, and anticipating what may take place in that regard if discussions are fruitful and some agreement develops out of those discussions, it will be my pleasure, as has been the customary practice on occasions of this sort, to receive hon. members later this day in Room 16.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we agree to this request. At the same time, I hope the minister will bring forward the motion to refer the Hermann report to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs.

Mr. Sharp: That is my intention, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): That is agreeable to us as well, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

NORTHERN CANADA POWER COMMISSION ACT

AMENDMENTS TO CONSTITUTION AND POWERS OF COMMISSION

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-13, to amend the Northern Canada Power Commission Act as reported from the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Mr. Speaker: Motions Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 5 appear to be acceptable on procedural grounds. Motion No. 4 would appear to introduce a new and substantive provision, not into the amending statute but into the legislation itself. Perhaps when the time arrives further discussion might take place as to its admissibility. In the meantime the Chair will proceed to put motion No. 1 standing in the name of the hon. member for the Yukon.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon) moved motion No. 1:

That Bill C-13, an Act to amend the Northern Canada Power Commission Act, be amended in Clause 1 by striking out lines 19 and 20 on page 1 and substituting the following therefor:

(2) Subsection 3(7) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

(7) A quorum shall not be properly constituted and shall not conduct business unless four days clear notice of the meeting has been given to each member of the Commission at his ordinary place of residence.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I hope this amendment will find acceptance. Perhaps upon reflection the minister might agree with me that consideration of the question of a quorum was omitted as a result of an oversight when the bill was drafted. Under the existing legislation the commission consists of three members and a quorum is two. The bill before us increases the number serving on the commission from three to five and omits the clause in the present act with respect to a quorum. We must therefore rely on a provision in the Interpretation Act which leaves us with a quorum of three.

When this bill passes the Board will consist of five members of whom two will be appointed, one from each of the territories, that is, from the Yukon and from the Northwest Territories. The other three will be government members. The practice could develop—I am not suggesting for a moment that it will be followed—of holding a meeting without any notice being given to either of the two territorial representatives on the commission. It would be a simple matter for the chairman to call the other two government members together and make decisions in the absence of the territorial members.

An hon. Member: In the absence of a quorum?

Mr. Nielsen: No. The quorum, under the terms of the Interpretation Act, is three. Once this bill goes through, the quorum being three out of five, there is a possibility that the commission could meet and reach decisions and that the members from the Yukon and the Northwest Territories would be left out entirely. My amendment proposes that—

A quorum shall not be properly constituted and shall not conduct business unless four days clear notice of the meeting has been given to each member of the Commission at his ordinary place of residence.

I have said "four days" in the amendment but I am certainly not wedded to four days. In the Yukon there is no problem. However, in the Northwest Territories, as I am sure the hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth) will agree if he is following the debate, an appointed member could live so far away from the place at which a meeting is to be held that it might take four days for a communication to reach him. As I say, I am not suggesting for a moment that the practice will develop under which these meetings will be confined to government members. However, the fact that the door is wide open for such an abuse adds weight to the argument in favour of the amendment I propose.

It might be asserted—and I say this in anticipation of what the minister might tell us in his reply—that there are really three territorial members on the board now because he has recently appointed the Commissioner of the Yukon as Chairman of the Board. But with all due respect to the Commissioner of the Yukon Territory, for some six years now he has been an employee of the government and, again with all due respect to the Commissioner, I might say he has learned very well how to take his instructions from time to time from the minister, and I am certain that this loyalty will follow him into his new position as Chairman of the Power Commission.

Again, with no disrespect to the Commissioner, I say he does have a civil servant's loyalty to the minister, as he should have; he will take instructions from the minister, as he should do, just as if he had been a career civil servant for the last 30 years. So I classify him as a government member of the commission, simon-pure. He, together with the two government members, will leave the territories in a minority position.

All I ask is an assurance that all the members of the commission, when its numbers have been extended to five, will be given notice of all the meetings to be held by the commission—a guarantee that the appointed members from each of the territories will attend and take part in the decision-making process. After all, it would be an empty gesture to expand the commission, purporting to include territorial input, and then be able so easily to subvert that laudable intention by having the commission hold its meetings with a quorum of three, as would be allowed under the Interpretation Act, without notifying the other two members of the Commission. This practice could be followed, and it is in order to avert such a danger that I am putting forward this amendment.

The minister could cut debate very short if he would indicate at the outset his intention to accept the amendment. It is one which would entail no expenditure from the public purse. It would cost the government nothing in the way of administrative expenditures, and it would endorse the stated intention of the government to involve the two territories in a meaningful way in the decision-making process. If the minister is about to arise to accept the amendment I will stop right now.

Mrs. Campagnolo: No way.

Mr. Nielsen: I do not see the hon. gentleman rising, and the parliamentary secretary to the minister says "no way". I find this rather a pity, because it means in essence that what I fear is exactly the case. The minister and his parliamentary secretary, who appear to be of a single mind, are in effect saying that this business of adding additional members from the Yukon and the Northwest Territories is mere window dressing.

● (1540)

If this amendment does not pass we are not going to destroy the feature of enabling the three government members to hold meetings by themselves and make decisions on their own without there being any input from the two appointed members. It is sheer hypocrisy and sham for the government to be taking such a posture and rejecting a reasonable amendment like this which would ensure that at least the opportunity is given to the two territorial appointees to participate in all commission decisions.

The amendment is not asking for a change in the quorum; it is not asking that the quorum be increased beyond three. It is not asking that the two territorial representatives must be present. All the amendment is asking is that the two territorial representatives, as well as the other members of the commission, be given notice of a meeting, and I cannot for the life of me see what the government finds unreasonable about this kind of amendment.

I see the minister is conferring with a colleague, and perhaps after a second, careful reading of the amendment he will find this reasonableness in its content. Perhaps it will commend itself to the government and it will adopt it. Perhaps this conference has produced some fruitful result.

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, might I make a couple of comments. There are two or three thoughts here. First, it seems to me that we would be imposing upon the commission what is basically a housekeeping matter that the commision should deal with itself. It seems to me—this is why I was checking with those individuals among our colleagues who possess more legal expertise than I—that there could not be a lawfully constituted meeting unless all members of the commission or board were notified. We are endeavouring to check that point.

The reason I have some apprehension about this is because of the suggestion from my colleague who has had some experience with Ontario Hydro, indicating that often when emergencies arise it would be impossible to give four days' clear notice in advance. For example, you might want to get the group together on a conference telephone in order to try to deal with an immediate problem and you do not want to be tied to a four day mandatory period.

There might be some other way of accomplishing the hon. member's objective by making it mandatory to notify all commission members of all meetings, which would seem to me the logical and natural thing to do. The only question is, what do you do in an emergency if you are locked into a four day time frame and, secondly, are we getting into a housekeeping matter that the commission itself should decide?

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, a careful reading of the amendment will assure the minister and all hon. members that I am not at all tampering with the number of the quorum or the lawful constitution of any meeting. All I am suggesting in my amendment is that notice be given of any meeting to all commission members. I also said that I was not wedded to the four days. I only put four days in the amendment because my colleague from the Northwest Territories has a greater communications problem than we have in the Yukon. As far as the Yukon is concerned, 24 hours' notice means our man can get to Edmonton next day; but the situation is different in the Northwest Territories which has vastly greater communications problems than does the Yukon.

In the case of an emergency where a meeting has to be held in a hurry—the example cited by the minister—I am sure that as long as the territorial members were notified of a meeting that was about to be held, then at least the opportunity would be given to each individual member, if for some reason or other he was unable to get to the place of the meeting, which presumably would be in Edmonton, to give his views by telephone. There are some communities in the Northwest Territories without normal telephone services, but even they are able to communicate by means of Anik. In the Yukon territory there is no such problem: we have instant communication with the outside at all times.

I notice my colleague from the Northwest Territories is in his seat. As I say, I am not wedded to the four days; this is really a question of timing for him and the minister. We would be quite happy with 24 hours. Perhaps the hon. member for Northwest Territories might state his views and the minister could adopt what I feel is a very reasonable request of the government. This amendment including one member from each territory is not mere window dressing. It will ensure that they become meaningfully involved in the decision making process.

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, while we are on the two northerners, I did omit to say something in my earlier comments. I feel that the hon. member for Yukon has not given adequate credit. He mentioned we have now moved from the situation that has existed up until recently where the Deputy Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development was also the Chairman of the Northern Canada Power Commission. We have moved away from this situation, and the chairman is now the Commissioner of the Yukon Territory. This is in line with trying to give northerners a more meaningful and significant say in matters bearing directly upon them and upon their well-being.

Coincidentally, I might mention at the same time that the position of Director of Panarctic Oils was also filled by the deputy minister. The Commissioner of the Northwest Territories now fills that post, again with the idea of giving northerners a more significant say, which is something to which I am committed. The commissioner is interested in the well-being of the north—

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, forgive me for interrupting the minister, but I merely resumed my seat in order to permit him to make an interjection and perhaps to accede to my amendment. I do not want it thought for a moment that I am giving up my right to my full time in this debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): The Chair might point out to hon. members that we are not in committee of the whole. It is not the practice, at this stage of debate on a bill, when members are speaking to allow ministers to rise and interject. There is a proper way to proceed, which is for a member to make his speech and then for the minister to reply. In the interests of advancing the bill the Chair has been lenient, but I think the proper procedure should be recognized and followed.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, it has long been the practice of the House for a member who has the floor to take his seat in order to permit an interjection or question. This is what I was doing by way of courtesy to the minister, and if he wishes to continue to do so I would be happy to take my seat so long as it is understood that I can continue.

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether some compromise could be reached here. As I was saying, I am concerned about an emergency situation. I do not think the four days is that crucial. We do not want to lock the commission into a situation where it is obligated to wait four days when it has a crisis on its hands. The hon. member might want to address his mind to that point and see whether he can insert a phrase into his amendment to cover that situation. I really do not have that much difficulty with the amendment.

Mr. Nielsen: I do have a suggestion in that regard. Again I do not know what my colleague, the hon. member for the Northwest Territories, would consider as a reasonable time, but the four days was inserted on his behalf and not on behalf of my party.

• (1550)

The suggestion I would make to the minister in connection with a crisis or an emergency, as he describes it, is that when such a situation does arise which requires a meeting to be held without notice to the members of the commission, then a subsequent meeting should be held to ratify the decisions made by the commission at the meeting of which notice was not given. That is the simple answer to that matter, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, I think the 24 hours or something of that order would qualify in the manner suggested by the hon. member. If he would like to direct his mind to that perhaps we could stand this and move to the following motion.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, subject to what my colleague from the Northwest Territories has to say, I am quite happy to have my amendment amended, and I cannot do it myself but perhaps my colleague might, by deleting the words "four days" and substituting therefor "24 hours".

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments on this amendment now before us. The power commission bill has been before the committee almost all winter and a lot of time has been spent on it, with a great deal of representation being made. Generally the idea, or the intent of the amendment put forward by the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielson) is good, but, like some aspects of the bill itself, I do not believe it goes far enough.

Keeping that in mind, I would not like to add any more restrictions or make the procedure more cumbersome by putting in regulations such as contained in this amendment. I think it would all depend on the individuals who are members of the commission. I can assure you that the people of the north who may be appointed would not stand for meetings being held without them being present, and you would hear their complaints loud and clear.

Mr. Nielsen: Supposing they were not notified?

Mr. Firth: I think this difficulty can be overcome by setting regular dates for meetings, perhaps the first Monday of every month, so that the date for meetings will be known. The regular meetings could be held at regular places. In addition, I think the amendment would be restrictive in the case of an emergency. Therefore I do not really believe we need this provision. I think it is just plain common sense and good practice to have members notified in time, and certainly the time of meetings would be known if they were held on a regular basis. With improved communications in the north you can get in touch with people within 24 hours. Personally I would not like to see too many restrictions, and for that reason I am not in favour of the amendment.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might speak to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), and my remarks are in response to what the hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth) has said.

As some members of the House may know, my family connections with the Yukon go back over 70 years, and I do have some awareness of the feelings of the people up there in respect of this type of sensitive issue. The sensitivity exists in that no matter what you do in respect of appointing a commission to represent the federal government in the territories, the people there still look at the members as hired men of the minister and of the government here. Whenever you have a situation in which it is possible that they are not invited they will assume they were not invited because they did not belong to that inner group the commission wanted attending the meeting. I think the minister would be well advised to give favourable consideration, as I know he has done, to this amendment proposed by the hon. member for the Yukon. This involves not only the matter of being above suspicion, but also of appearing to be above suspicion.

Knowing the sensitivity of northerners in respect of anything we do down here, there is always the assumption that it is a diminution or restriction by the federal government of their desire to have provincial status, I would not like to see more fuel added to the fire. I think we should avoid that. We can do so by a simple amendment that repeats what was in the original act, that a quorum should be so and so. I think we should put in what a quorum should consist of, and that there should be 24 hours notice. I do not think this would delay the calling of any emergency meeting.

I would conclude by stating that the election in Alberta today is being fought on a very similar issue. It goes back to the time the parliament of Canada in 1905 ratified the decision to establish the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan without giving the people there control over their resources. As a result we have alienation in these two provinces to this day. This would not have been the case if the parliament in 1905 had considered the people who lived in Alberta and Saskatchewan. The situation then is somewhat comparable to the situation that exists today in the north.

I just remind hon. members of this political fact when suggesting that we should not add fuel to the situation that already exists. These people have spent many years in the north waiting for development and the opportunity to form their own provincial government so they can administer their own resources, and the minister must be very careful. I would suggest that any amendment that takes away the suspicion in the minds of northerners that they are being dominated by the government here in Ottawa, or by the minister, would be a helpful amendment. Even though parliament can come back 25 or 30 years later and correct its mistakes, let us not make the mistakes in the first place if we can avoid doing so by a simple amendment now.

I think the minister's response to the hon. member is the correct one. I do not quarrel with the views of the hon. member for the Northwest Territories if you have the ordinary situation, but we are not dealing with the ordinary situation in the north. These people are as sensitive as cats at a certain season of the year, and you have to keep this fact in mind. I think the minister would save a lot of trouble for himself if he took measures now to prevent an inflamatory situation arising, or a situation that I know is always ready to be inflamed.

Northern Power Commission Act

Mr. Ross Milne (Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to move:

That the motion be amended by deleting the words "four days" and that the words "twenty-four hours" be substituted therefor.

The amendment is being seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mrs. Campagnolo).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): If the hon. member will direct the motion to the Chair in writing it will be put. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Milne) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion as amended?

Motion No. 1 (Mr. Nielsen), as amended, agreed to.

● (1600)

Mr. Nielsen moved motion No. 2:

That Bill C-13, an act to amend the Northern Canada Power Commission Act, be amended by striking out Clause 3, lines 10 and 11 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

3. Subsection 6(2) of the said Act is repealed.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid this motion will be more controversial than the last one. The existing legislation limits the power of the commission with regard to entering into any contract, undertaking, or project for maintenance of repairs, construction and so on, to $50,000. If the commission should wish to enter into a project exceeding that sum then it must have the approval of the cabinet or the Governor in Council. By the amendment of the government—and I am speaking now of existing subsection 3 of section 6—subsection 2 with which I have no quarrel is removed, but subsection 3 is also removed and not replaced by anything.

This means in essence that the commission will not be required to seek and obtain approval of the Governor in Council in respect of any project, any construction, or anything it should decide to do. In other words, if this amendment should pass in its present form as contained in the bill, the commission could decide to embark in the Northwest Territories on the development of any hydro-electric scheme it so desired without the approval of anyone.

Having regard to the position taken by my colleague, the hon. member for the Northwest Territories, it would seem to me that this would be in opposition to the wishes of all the people in the Northwest Territories, and not merely the native organizations in that area. It would be in opposition to the wishes of the whole population, who are upset enough as it is now concerning the operations of the commission, particularly in the Mackenzie area. But that is what the amendment would do.

The amendment would give the commission carte blanche if it should proceed with the development of the Tulsequa Taku scheme which was investigated in the early 1950's by Montreal Engineering Ventures Limited and Quebec Metallurgical, a scheme which would envisage the expenditure of some $3 billion, and which would be comparable in terms of hydro-electric power generation to twice the existing production of the St. Lawrence Seaway project. What this amendment in the bill means is that the commission could, on its own, make a decision to go ahead with a project of this magnitude without a by-your-leave.

I would have liked to have seen parliamentary control at some level over the commission in respect of expenditures. However, not being able to anticipate that kind of control of expenditure, at least I would have liked to have seen that kind of control exercised by the cabinet. That, however, is not to be. The deletion of subsection 3 from the existing legislation removes any control whatsoever from the commission with regard to any project it wishes to undertake.

I realize the argument will be made immediately that it can operate only within its existing resources and that it would not have sufficient funds to embark upon this kind of scheme painted by way of example by me just now. But the fact is that the power is there. In reading this bill I wonder whether the cabinet committee that was responsible for considering the legislation even had in mind that this extensive power would be given to the commission. I think not. Dealing as the amendment does with such mundane items as maintenance, repairs, construction, excavation and so on, I believe these words perhaps lulled into a sense of false security the cabinet committee which had the responsibility to consider this legislation.

It may be that my reading of the amendment and its effect is incorrect, but subsection 3 of the existing legislation sets forth quite clearly that the commission shall not, with respect to any project, undertake or enter into any contract, other than for maintenance or repairs, for the construction, making, erection purchase or installation of any works, excavations undertakings, equipment or facilities, involving a total estimated expenditure exceeding $50,000 unless the undertaking of the project by the commission has been approved by the Governor in Council.

That is the way the section now reads. It was put in there, as explained in the debates of 1948 and 1956 when the act was originally passed and amended for the first time, for the specific purpose of cabinet having some kind of control over the activities of the commission. Now the government, by this amendment, wants to say in effect that the commission shall have, with respect to any project, the power to enter into any contract, the power to enter into any construction, and the power of making, erecting, purchasing or installing any work, any excavation, or any undertaking or any equipment or facility. That is the effect of the amendment in the bill. I do not think for a moment that any responsible cabinet, let alone parliament, would want to transfer that kind of wide and sweeping power to any agency of government without any parliamentary control.

It may be that parliamentary control exists in the fact that the commission must report to parliament through the minister. But what sort of control is that, because the financial operations of the commission are so altered by other amendments to this act that they permit it to compete actively on the money markets and raise any capital required in order to embark on any project?

It seems to me that we go far in excess of the limitations in respect of the parliament of Canada when we provide, by legislation such as this, for an agency of government, this commission, to be treated in the same fashion as any Crown corporation by giving such wide and sweeping powers to it without any control.

● (1610)

It would be different if parliament had to be asked to approve estimates to keep this kind of commission operating, but even that is not the case. We do not exercise any control in the estimates because once the commission has the powers which will be extended to it—if the government's bill goes through as it stands now—there will be no need to make provisions for estimates for the operation of this commission. The decision making process is complete in the commission in whatever it wishes to do.

Speaking as a member interested in the welfare of Canada as a whole, that is not the kind of power parliament would want to pass to an agency of the government, but speaking now as a Yukoner I find it even more offensive because that clause opens the door wide to an agency of the government here in Ottawa to do exactly what it pleases. Apart from the input of the member from the Yukon on the commission there is no legislative control whatsoever. That control does not reside in the cabinet, unless of course this provision is revoked at some time, and if the commission gets out of line it is not required to refer any such project to either of the commissioners in council of the territories. I think such reference would be a very desirable control to impose upon the activities of the commission. It would also be a very desirable step toward meaningful consultation with the people of each of the territories.

Even if this amendment were to say that the commission shall not undertake this specified list of things which it is authorized to undertake in subsection 3 of section 6 now, and even if it were to say that it is not authorized to do that until it has consulted with the respective commissioners in council of the two territories—not again making their approval mandatory—it would perhaps mean something. But here we are not only abolishing the requirement of the commission to account to cabinet, and through cabinet to parliament; we are abolishing the requirement of the commission to account at all except by way of an annual return.

That to me, as a Yukoner, is an extremely undesirable state of affairs. It would appear that the hon. member for Northwest Territories takes an entirely different view of things. He does not seem to believe that people in the Northwest Territories have any interest in being involved in the decision making process. But then, of course, he has aligned himself with the socialist group in this House, and perhaps this degree of state control to him is desirable. It certainly is not desirable in my western neck of the woods.

I am sure that upon a closer analysis the minister will see the dangers which are inherent. Perhaps he will not. He used to see all sorts of dangers when he was a member of parliament, but now that he is a minister perhaps he has blinkers on, and perhaps with his new responsibilities he cannot see the dangers any longer. He certainly saw the reasonableness of the last amendment, and perhaps after hearing what I have to say he will see some scintilla of a danger in what this amendment in the bill proposes. Even though he is new at his duties, perhaps he is so fed up with the idea that he should have any responsibility for the Northern Canada Power Commission that this is a very easy and quick way to get rid of it. His first step in that direction has been a laudable one.

For quite some time we on this side of the House have been saying that the idea of having his deputy minister as the chairman of the commission was extremely repugnant and should be abandoned. He has done that now, but I must say that he has not moved very far away from the position which existed when his deputy was the commission chairman, because he substituted for his deputy in that position an individual who is not qua individual but a person whose position is such that he might as well still be the deputy minister.

The real solution will not be found until the commission is separated from the department entirely and becomes truly a Crown Corporation. Then perhaps there might be some justification for an amendment such as the one we now have before us. If the commission were a separate entity, such as Air Canada, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, or the one which has been lost in limbo somewhere, Polymer Corporation, neither fish nor fowl, not really a part of CDC, or at least not at the moment—maybe the government will be getting around to curing that situation one of these days—one might be able to see some justification in this amendment, but here where the commission theoretically is still responsible to parliament through the minister, it ill behooves the government to wipe out any responsibility of the commission to report to parliament through the minister with respect to its fiscal operations.

The cabinet should at least retain some control over decisions which would involve not only northerners but all Canadians, and which could involve them substantially in terms of expenditure of public funds. After all, that is what they are—when the commission incurs an indebtedness, it is in the long run the Canadian government which is responsible for it.

As it now stands the amendment would permit the commission to embark upon a James Bay project if it so desired, with no power in the cabinet to veto it, if this bill goes through in its present form.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): You wouldn't want that, Judd.

Mr. Nielsen: Of course the minister could say that if the chairman of the commission and the two government appointed members did that, they would be fired. There is control there, but I do not believe that that is the kind of control parliament is entitled to, Mr. Speaker. Parliament is entitled to have the government, through the cabinet, account to the people of Canada for the activities of its agencies. This amendment would wipe all that out. The purpose of my amendment is to retain it.

It is my view that this $50,000 figure in the existing legislation is perhaps too small. Certainly in today's atmosphere of inflation not very much can be accomplished with $50,000. I would be quite amenable to having that figure raised substantially, to a quarter of a million dollars or even half a million dollars, to permit sufficient fiscal flexibility in the commission and to enable it to accomplish the task parliament expects it to do under the legislation. But I do not believe it was the serious intention to wipe out any limitation. I will be extremely surprised if it is so. I cannot agree with wiping out any accountability or any control by government, or by cabinet, over the economic decisions of the commission.

As a responsible parliamentarian in the opposition I would have to oppose this vigorously. I am not usually one to argue that power should reside in the cabinet, but I am doing so now because I am frightened of the decisions that could be made by the commission on its own if the cabinet does not retain the control it now has under section 6(3). I would have to vote against the deletion of subsection (3) from the legislation for that reason. I hope that the minister would consider that feature of the bill in the light of the remarks I have made, and perhaps give favourable consideration to the retention of subsection (3). That is all that my amendment in motion No. 2 seeks to accomplish, to retain cabinet control over the financial decisions of the commission.

I am not wedded to the $50,000 figure. That could be increased in keeping with the desire to enable the commission to make decisions in today's economic over-all fabric without stultifying the responsibilities imposed on it under the legislation. I would urge that upon the minister for favourable consideration.

Mr. Firth: Mr. Speaker, the remarks just made by the hon. member for Yukon sound like a speech in favour of colonialism.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Firth: I am sure the Northwest Territories would not be in favour of his motion. We are asking for more autonomy, not more restrictions. I should therefore like to address my few remarks to this motion and say that I do not like it. I think the commission should have the right to generate and distribute electrical power for the people of the Northwest Territories, and I do not think the bill goes far enough. The hon. member for Yukon is correct in saying that I am in favour of a Crown corporation to perform this public service. I am therefore not in favour of his amendment, Mr. Speaker, as it is too cumbersome and places too much restriction on the commission.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few remarks in rebutal of the remarks of the hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth), who accuses the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) of supporting colonialism. I am afraid his memory is somewhat faulty.

When this bill was before committee there was discussion on the question of autonomy for the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. It was pointed out to the minister and his officials that we would propose to increase the size of the commission to seven members, four of them to come from the northern territories. I suggest that the hon. member for the Northwest Territories was not at that meeting. The reluctance of the minister to allow us to make changes that would place the burden of responsibility for this important service in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon in the hands of northerners has given rise to suspicion. I want to defend my colleague from the Yukon.

Mrs. Campagnolo: He can defend himself.

Mr. Oberle: No, I want to say something in his favour, if you will allow me. He is under a lot of pressure on this matter and has had to take a lonely stand. He represents a constituency of some 207,000 square miles, and it is natural for him to be suspicious because the government and the Canadian people have not previously worried too much about those frozen plains up there. At times, and particularly during committee discussion of this subject, he did not receive much support from the other northern territory.

The hon. member said that he wanted four days for the transmission of telegrams and telephone calls and for travel when the two people from the north came down to meet with the commission. An interesting situation came up in committee and I should like to refer to it. I may be a little sarcastic, but it shows why northerners are suspicious.

There was one person who represented municipalities in the Yukon and the northern territories, and there were others who represented chambers of commerce and other concerned citizens. At one time a telex was presented to the committee which stated that Yukon municipalities were upset by a certain clause in the bill. At the next meeting of the committee one of the members in the party opposite asked an official of the power commission if he had confirmed the validity of the telex. Mr. Speaker, I want you to listen to this carefully. We had a telegram from someone in the Yukon stating that he represented municipalities in that territory and, because a member of the government requested it, it was necessary to confirm the validity of the telegram by phoning the people he claimed to represent.

Mrs. Campagnolo: What did he say?

Mr. Oberle: If the hon. member wants me to I will gladly read into the record what she said. However, I am a gentleman and I will not do it.

It is for the reason that I have just outlined that northerners are suspicious, Mr. Speaker. If northerners were as suspicious as southerners, then as soon as a member of the power commission received a telegram or a phone call, he would have to find out if the document or call was valid. Not until he had done this could he make an arrangement to travel to the head office in Edmonton. It is not a foregone conclusion that such person would live in Whitehorse or Dawson City, where there are air connections.

Of course northerners are suspicious. They know that if the minister wanted to create an emergency situation—this has been done but I know the present minister would not do it—but if he wanted to he could call the commission together and the northern members could not get to the meeting. Decisions could then be made in their absence, and the northerners would have even less control than they have now.

I agree with my colleague on another point. We discussed the $50,000 limit in committee and agreed that it is too low. The replacement of a few telephone poles, or a machinery bearing in a power unit, could easily eat up that $50,000. As my colleague said, we do not oppose increasing that amount.

Although we want the commission to be given adequate powers, we are concerned because, apparently, neither parliament nor the cabinet will be empowered to keep a close eye on the commission, which is not a Crown corporation. I think the situation is unique and this departure represents a colonial type of administrative policy. My colleague was quite right. The people of the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories exercise little enough power as it is over their own affairs. Parliament is the only tribunal in which the elected representatives of the people of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon can be heard. Is it not strange that only one member represents the Yukon, an area encompassing 207,000 square miles and containing a population of 20,000, and another hon. member represents the Northwest Territories, an area ten times larger?

These northern parts are the resource storehouse of our country. The people of the north are involved too little in governing their own part of this country. We do not serve the interests of Canadians if we take from the people of the north some of their already limited powers, some of their remaining rights. One hears talk about development in the Mackenzie Valley, about the development of northern resources. The north is our storehouse. Resource development in the Yukon and Northwest Territories will increase in the future. We must protect the rights of the people of the area and their interests. We are not doing this adequately.

Personally, I should prefer to see the number of commission members increased to seven, although we are prepared to accept the number suggested. We think more northerners should serve on the commission and be involved in the government of the north.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, we insist that parliament, or the cabinet, should exercise control over the actions of civil servants or appointees, in some cases political appointees, who will make serious, far-reaching and all encompassing decisions about the provision of energy and power to the peoples of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I intend to make some brief remarks on the motion before the House. I had the opportunity of attending the committee meetings when Northern Canada Power Commission representatives appeared before the committee with representatives of the government. The committee was told that the purposes of the bill were twofold. First, the number of commission members is to be increased from three to five. We agreed with this proposal, although we would have preferred the number of commissioners to be increased to seven. Second, there is to be a change in the rate zones. We agreed with this proposal, although we have some reservations about how the rate zone changes will be administered. We understood that the balance of the amendments were simple, house-keeping amendments. However, having examined the particular clause with which we are now dealing, it strikes me that we were taken.

The limit of $50,000 included in the original legislation is to be removed and the commission is to be given unlimited power to incur expenditures for maintenance and capital projects. I suggest that this is wrong. There must be some control. At present, good people are serving on the commission. All the same, there must be some limitation to their powers. The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) said he would be agreeable to increasing the amount from $50,000 to $250,000. I agree. In this day and age, $50,000 will buy little enough. It is only fair to increase the amount, provided there is some limitation. Also, the commission should be responsible to the Governor in Council or to parliament.

I urge the minister to consider amending subsection 6(3). I want the limitation contained in the subsection to remain, but I want the amount of $50,000 mentioned to be increased to some higher figure. That would be only fair and would leave control vested in the Governor in Council. We, on my side of the House, cannot move such an amendment, for technical reasons. Our previous attempts in this regard were outflanked. For that reason I urge the minister to consider moving an amendment of which most members on my side of the House approve.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I find myself in an unusual position, opposing the motion of the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). I oppose suggested amendments to the bill before us, on two grounds. They relate to our reasons for representing our people as members of parliament. We must ask two questions. First, how much control should parliament maintain over the running of the affairs of this country? Second, how can we expedite the transfer of powers by which people of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon can control their own affairs?

In my view the amendments proposed by the hon. member for Yukon avoid the economic issue. Apparently the hon. member prefers to let the Governor in Council retain economic control over the affairs of the Northern Canada Power Commission. I say that in considering this we should consider fundamentals.

The first question we must consider is the extent to which this House, or this government, controls Crown agencies. Federal governments of the day have established 59 Crown agencies and Crown corporations. These agencies and corporations are given delegated powers and are empowered to carry out certain functions. These bodies have been established in such a way that parliament finds it difficult to control the powers, delegated and otherwise, given to them. The result is that when ministers have attempted to tell the truth in this House, they have been destroyed. I cite what has happened to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand).

Despite warnings by members on my side of the House, parliament in 1967 delegated complete powers over transportation to an independent commission known as the Canadian Transport Commission.

Mr. Nielsen: Of which Jack Pickersgill was the first chairman.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): When the minister said in this House last year that he had no control over the Canadian Transport Commission, he was telling the truth. When he said there was a mess, he was telling the truth. Over the past year I sat in this House and watched my colleagues on this side attack the minister because he had no power. That is the fault. Parliament took away the power of the minister to control transportation in the National Transportation Act of 1967. Here we are doing the same thing. We have a new minister whom we are putting up on the wall, ready to pluck, because he will have no power when he is finished.

● (1640)

This is a matter of great seriousness. This whole tendency to turn the power of the legislative body over to independent boards does not have to be stopped. That is not the way to do it. It has to be made more sophisticated so that we can give them the authority we want them to have without interfering with their efficiency and, at the same time, maintain our democratic control as representatives of the people over the actions of those independent boards.

There are sophisticated ways of doing this. We have the precedents of the province of Saskatchewan and the government of Australia. All governments have this problem. In 1967 a motion was moved by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), seconded by myself, pleading with the government of that day to not take away the control of parliament over the Canadian Transport Commission. The government, with the support of the NDP, turned down our amendment. The acting leader of the NDP at that time was a man called David Lewis. He held the view that parliament was not competent to deal with the details of transportation and that we should turn the power over to an independent board, leaving it completely independent of Parliament. That was the way to get efficiency in the modern state.

The point is that we do not have Superman or God to head these boards and agencies. We have ordinary mortals. We have had Mr. Pickersgill and Mr. Benson. The others will be the same. These men make mistakes. They know as much about transportation as most of us, which is as about as close to zero as you can get.

When this power is turned over to them with no way of checking by parliament, parliament gets the blast from the people when the failures and the mess occur. All parliament can do is throw the mess back at the minister, who is condemned in this House because he says there is a mess. He is an honest minister. He says there is nothing he can do about it because of the power of the Canadian Transport Commission.

I am not here to defend the Minister of Transport. I use this only as an example. I could say the same about the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, the minister who reports for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, or the minister who reports on northern transportation. I could do it for every one of the 59 agencies and boards to which we have turned over this power. We have destroyed a little more of the democratic power that should rest with the people.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

There is a democratic and sophisticated way to maintain the correct amount of power needed to touch base and control these delegated powers. It is not yet the law of this land, but please God it will be before too long. I say to the minister that the minute you set up these amendments, you turn over the power of running the power operations of the north to an independent body. No matter how much you respect the chairman and the members of that power commission who will be appointed, the fact is that they are not God. There has to be a check by some democratic body over their actions or we will continue the mistakes we have making for the past 25 years.

On the broad general principle of the control of independent boards and commissions by a representative body, I think that this amendment moved by the government striking out 6(2) and (3) is completely undemocratic. It is completely against the interest of the people of the Yukon and Northwest Territories. It is certainly repeating the same mistake that has been made for the past 25 years.

I now come to my second point. This is what I am appalled by with respect to the hon. member for Yukon. For all the years I have known him he has fought, as a tiger has fought, to try to get more control into the hands of the legislatures of the Yukon and Northwest Territories. Yet here he is asking us to retain power in the hands of the Governor in Council, in the hands of the cabinet. I cannot understand that. What he is really trying to do is head off the dangers of one thing to get us back into the dangers of another.

I suggest to the minister a very simple amendment that will solve most of my problems and, I am sure, the problems of the hon. member for Yukon and the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth). I simply suggest that we leave in subsection 6(3) and change one phrase. That phrase is that the Governor in Council is the executive of the territorial legislature. That is all. In this way we would at least have some people with some democratic control over this independent board.

We know from practice that this is not going to put a great economic load on the Government of Canada. We know as a fact that the operations of this power commission are paid for by the people who pay the rates, and why shouldn't they? Through their elected representatives, and appointed representatives in the legislatures in the territories, they have the right to make this independent board touch base with them. This would meet the proposition of trying to get the authority out of the hands of politicians and into the hands of an independent board to make bigger decisions, but leaving a sophisticated way for them to touch base with the democratically elected authorities. I believe that would meet the position of the hon. member for Yukon.

Mr. Nielsen: We'll never get it.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): The hon. member says we will never get it. We have a new Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Buchanan). He wants to avoid the mistakes of other ministers who turned over their powers to independent boards and then had to accept all the blame for their actions.

I suggest we can do two things with one stroke. I suggest that we leave subsection (3) in the act and simply put in the words "the executive council of the respective legislatures of the territories". If we did that, we would have economic control. You just have to touch base with the executive committees of the legislatures. You would keep your hand on them to that degree without interfering with their efficiency. I do not apologize for taking the time of the House because this is a very important question of principle.

I now want to discuss subsection 6(2). Once again I am horrified at the thought that this should be taken out. With all the publicity, squealing, yelling and uproar we have had over James Bay, the MacKenzie Valley pipeline, and the development of the Churchill River in Manitoba, where in each case independent bodies have moved without considering the whole picture, I thought the government would have started to learn. What am I talking about? Subsection 6(2) is one of the great defences the people have over the use of water in Canada. It ensures that water is not abused, spoiled or misused by anybody. I am referring to the powers of the Dominion Water Power Act.

Every province has a water act. We would not expect the British Columbia Hydro Corporation, an independent Crown corporation in B.C., to dam a river as it saw fit just to generate power. It has to go before a water licensing board in the province and get the authority, and this means considering the interests of all the people who use the water of that river.

Here we are dealing with one of the oldest rights in the history of man. The history of the law concerning water use goes back beyond 2,000 years. These ancient riparian laws never fail to provide for the protection of all those who live on the banks of a river. Yet here is an infringement of one of the oldest laws in history, a law going back more than 2,000 years before Christ, observed in the Middle East, brought to Europe and codified first in Roman law and then in Frankish law. Yet today parliament is being asked to throw out water legislation and transfer authority to those who are interested only in the power which can be generated from river flows.

One does not abandon these controls simply to make one aspect of our lives more efficient. After all, they are designed to protect the public interest. Until this parliament can put a territorial water act in place which makes it necessary for every commercial enterprise, whether owned by a private company or a Crown corporation, to go before a board and ask for a licence to use water, I think we should hang on to every shred of control we have over power corporations.

Power corporations in every province over and over again have forgotten the interests of the people on the banks of the rivers they utilize. A power man tends to think only in terms of power while ignoring all the other uses—recreation, flood control, timber production, the whole ecology of the region—as well as less material aspects. Such considerations do not enter the mind of a power man. He only wants to know how cheaply he can build a dam to get the amount of power out of a river that he requires. After all, that is all he is supposed to do. I wonder how many hon. members have seen the logs floating on Lake Bennett.

I think every member of the House should be ashamed to support this type of amendment, an amendment which asks parliament to get rid of one of the control mechanisms used to safeguard the rivers of the Northwest Territories and of the Yukon.

I hope the minister will reconsider the clause in this bill which says that these subsections (2) and (3) of the act should be repealed. I suggest we leave them as they are until the territorial governments can enact their own legislation to protect water rights in the territories. I suggest that in 6(3) the minister simply put in the words "executive committee of the respective territorial governments" by way of amendment. This would achieve what the hon. member for the Yukon and what the hon. member for the Northwest Territories are seeking to do. At the same time such a decision would be in harmony with a principle which I believe every hon. member supports, namely, that parliament should not be reduced to nothing, that we should possess some means of controlling these corporations while, at the same time, giving a little more authority to the people who live in the territories concerned.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the eloquence and the wisdom of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton). If I can do anything in the time available to me now I should like to support the suggestion he made with respect to where the residual influence ought to lie in the area covered by this amendment, namely, that it should rest with territorial governments.

I share the concern expressed by my hon. friend. It is one which is felt by a great many members of parliament, as well as by those who are observers of the parliamentary process with respect to a process which is taking place to a greater and greater extent. To anyone who shares the conviction that there is an innate wisdom in our parliamentary system, the proliferation of commissions, boards and agencies which are independent of parliament must be a matter for great regret. I do not speak this afternoon in any partisan way; I do not think this aspect of the bill is a partisan matter. It is a parliamentary matter.

The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), and the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) whose anniversary we celebrate today, have devoted a great part of their lives to the preservation and enhancement of parliament. If there is anything which is unique with respect to the parliamentary system, apart from the whole issue of responsible government, it is the authority parliament ought to exercise over decisions affecting the people of the country.

Every time the House moves to satisfy the appetite of efficiency, every time it sets aside its rights to control, the parliamentary system suffers. A few moments ago the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain drew attention to the difficulty this can create for ministers. One of those ministers is in the House today.

Every time a minister has to get up and say parliament saw fit to give this responsibility to such and such a committee or commission he is confessing that he, as a minister, as a member of the cabinet, who is supposed to be responsible to parliament and hence to the people, has in fact no such control or authority. Each time this occurs the parliamentary process suffers. We saw an instance of this today, following another example yesterday of the problem parliament encounters in terms of control over public funds—control over the estimates. There was an admission by a minister of the Crown that the estimates which come before parliament may not be true, at least in terms of dealing with the objectives of different expenditures. Yet this is all part of the process of examining estimates, the process of examining the programs which are undertaken.

● (1700)

For the first time a minister of the Crown yesterday indicated that some of the estimates are wrong. This was done in the interests of national security, and I think that is a legitimate interest for this parliament to be concerned with, Mr. Speaker.

However, the system suffers as a result of failure to disclose, and I am happy that at least some movement has been made by the Minister of Science and Technology (Mr. Drury) to afford an opportunity of some kind—not perhaps the kind he spoke of on the floor of the House, but at least of some kind—to review those estimates. I think there was in that the recognition that albeit national security is important there must be weighed against that the importance of parliament knowing, parliament disclosing, and parliament dealing with the affairs of people, rather than have such matters hived off somewhere where no one could reach them even through the estimates.

The amendment we are dealing with expresses more than anything else the concern of many members of this institution, regardless from what party they come, that gradually and surely our powers as members of parliament are being eroded, and that parliament itself is suffering.

The present House leader of the government deserves a tremendous amount of credit for taking up the cudgels in regard to the return to this chamber of consideration of the estimates. This has been argued for by many parliamentarians over the years. Just recently we have approved a system that will give this parliament for the first time a new kind of look into the estimates. This is a temporary arrangement, but I hope it will be the beginning of some new procedure.

I think it is in that direction that all statute law ought to turn. It is in the direction of the strengthening of parliament that the attention of the government ought to be turned so as to make the institution of parliament truly representative of the people. Then members of parliament, as representatives of the people, will have the opportunity to deal in this place with the operations of government in every department.

I think the proposal of the government in regard to this particular bill does not do this, and basically that is the concern of the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) as well as of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain. It should be the concern of all of us that when we are tempted from time to time to answer problems in a sophisticated society by forming another board or commission, instead of leaving them within the parliamentary process, we should resist that temptation. This is an opportunity for this chamber to resist a similar temptation.

[Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton).]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, earlier this day I undertook to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) to introduce a motion to refer the Hermann commission report to the committee on veterans affairs. I therefore ask permission of the House to revert to motions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that the House revert to motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

EASTER RECESS

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council) moved:

That when the House adjourns on Wednesday, March 26, 1975, it shall stand adjourned until Monday, April 7, 1975, provided that at any time prior to that date, if it appears to the satisfaction of Mr. Speaker, after consultation with the Government, that the public interest requires that the House should meet at an earlier time during the adjournment, Mr. Speaker may give notice that he is so satisfied, and thereupon the House shall meet at the time stated in such notice, and shall transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time; and

That, in the event of Mr. Speaker's being unable to act owing to illness or other cause, the Deputy Speaker or the Deputy Chairman of Committees shall act in his stead for all purposes of this order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the House agree to adopt the motion?

[English]

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that I would not be on my feet for this debate, which is normally one that all members hope will be relatively brief. Indeed, I hope it will not be a debate, but I feel it necessary to speak on this proposition to adjourn because I think the members of this House are owed an explanation by the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) regarding a matter that I raised yesterday afternoon and which he indicated at that time he would reply to, in his own words, as quickly as possible.

Instead of the appearance of the minister this afternoon in response to the document that I had asked to be tabled and to explain the interrogation techniques of the RCMP, we had a press release from the RCMP. The minister did not even come to the House or arrange through another minister, one acting in his stead, to offer an explanation for the highly derogatory, superficial, and I would say silly document presently in use by the RCMP.

This is not the first time that there has been, instead of a statement or some clarification by the minister in the House, the issuance, in this case late this afternoon, of a press release by the RCMP, which is an attempt to make some kind of self-serving explanation of the exact nature of the document about which I raised a question in the House yesterday, and to which I asked the minister to respond today.

In the explanation the RCMP does not try to deny the existence of this document. Indeed, it would be foolish in the extreme to deny that it exists. As I indicated yesterday, I already have coming to Ottawa a copy of an affidavit indicating the existence of this document and its current use by the RCMP. It is shocking that the minister should feel, for reasons that have not yet been explained by any government representative, that he should not come clean with this House and with the general public.

I know, from the reaction that I have had during the last 24 hours, that there is a considerable amount of shock among people generally not only at the techniques I mentioned yesterday in just a descriptive sense which are being practised, but also at the fact that they are included in a document issued by the RCMP entitled "Interrogation Techniques", by Chief Inspector A. R. Roberts of the Calgary City Police. This document is presently in use and is authorized, according to the frontispiece, for use in the training and development branch, headquarters, Ottawa.

It might be interesting for members of the House to hear some parts of this document so as to give members an idea of the current level of instruction which, according to the press release made late this afternoon by the RCMP, is part of a course that is offered senior investigators with between five and 15 years of experience.

This is not a document that is used in some introductory sense for students who are training at the main RCMP training centre in Regina but, as confirmed by the RCMP themselves late this afternoon, a document in use by senior investigators. We are not talking here about some peripheral document of which some individuals may be aware; we are talking about a document that is accepted in current practice by the more important investigators in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

If that be the case, then it is absolutely unacceptable that this House should be asked to adjourn this afternoon for a period of some 10 days to two weeks without being given a proper explanation by the Solicitor General of the basis on which this kind of document has been authorized and accepted for use.

● (1710)

I hope that before we come to the hour of adjournment either the government House leader or the minister who responds on behalf of the Solicitor General will be able to offer a satisfactory explanation to this House and the Canadian people. If that does not happen I for one will be most reluctant to see this House adjourn today. I would want to have an opportunity for the minister to come to this House tomorrow, or at the earliest possible moment, to indicate, first of all, how any justification can be given for this most illiberal document to be used as a regular training manual for the RCMP, and whether he in fact is aware of it. It would seem clear from his short answer yesterday that he was not aware of it, and I would hope that during the time that has elapsed he has had an opportunity to study it and is now taking action to withdraw it and replace it with one that is acceptable to the Canadian people as being just and fair.

Members may wonder at the kind of document this is, and I am going to take a few minutes to give hon. members an idea of what is in the context of it, and I am sure the House will be most tolerant and interested to know . . .

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I would hope the hon. member will not open a full debate on the subject matter he is raising. Actually what is before the House at this time is a motion to adjourn for a definite period of time, and I do not think I can really allow the hon. member to take this opportunity to debate the basis of the point he is trying to make, or points relating to his complaint about answers or the fact that he did not receive answers from the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) or the government.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, this is not, as I hope to clarify, just a question of asking for information. This is a question that involves the basic protection of civil rights in this country and the methods being participated in at the moment by the national police force of this country, the RCMP. If in fact any individual member could feel that it is fair or is justified to his constituents that we press for an early adjournment before we have this matter sensibly resolved and settled, I for one would be most willing to hear from him.

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, if hon. members want to interrupt it will just take me longer to get through the material I want to present to the House as an argument against adjourning until such time as either the government House leader or the Solicitor General, or a spokesman on their behalf, clarifies this situation.

I do not like to stand during this period which is normally the pro forma ritual of adjourning the House. Knowing the Solicitor General and respecting him as I do, I had felt from the outset that he would be more than willing to resolve this matter immediately. Since the document is available, and not in some far outpost but here in the city of Ottawa, in present use by N Division, this is not a matter that will take some days to resolve, but in fact a matter that could have been resolved in hours yesterday.

Instead of the appearance in the House this afternoon by the minister we have had, as I said, a self-serving press release a few minutes ago by the RCMP. It not only does not explain this remarkable document, it in fact makes it more urgent that a government spokesman clarify and remove what I can only describe as a basic infringement on the basic civil liberties of the population of this country.

As I said a moment ago, there are two or three examples I want to give because I think members on all sides of the House would be most anxious to know just what kind of document is presently being used as a training manual for senior officers in the RCMP. Let me quote first from page 2. It states:

The techniques outlined hereunder do employ a battery of "hsi nao" (brainwashing) techniques to influence the emotional attitudes of the subject or suspect—

That is one word that I have never run into before. The document then goes on to say, and I will read the whole quotation because I want it in context:

Certainly, to begin with, in any interrogation we are going to do everything that is legal and right. We will attempt to get a confession that is free and voluntary and that may be admissible in court and will stand the test of cross-examination. We will employ no tricks which could be considered as illegal tactics.

But, there is a point which is reached in every interrogation when you still may not have that statement and you know if you go any further in the specific technique that you are employing that your statement will be ruled inadmissible. It is at this point that the interrogator must make a decision: does he now leave the interrogation room without the statement or does he now proceed with other techniques which he knows will not allow the statement in, but may give him information which will lead to the securing of other evidence which, he thinks, may be admissible. I suggest that, at this point, the Marquis of Queensbury Rules go out the window and the interrogator must open up his bag of tricks and go for the recovery of the weapon or the stolen property or the names of accomplices or any evidence which may be placed in court, regardless of the method employed to secure that evidence.

If any member of this House can justify that as acceptable and authorized police procedure in this country, I do hope he will stand and indicate that position.

I want to go on and quote two or three sections that refer to interrogation in respect of sexual offences or suspected sex offenders. The interrogator is urged to say as follows:

Don't think for one moment that you are the only one that has had these thoughts. We just simply haven't the guts to do anything about it. Girls are the same way. You don't mean to tell me that they are not thinking of it when they see a good looking fellow on the street. It is just human nature, that's all, and anyway, this broad was probably asking for it.

That is one kind of questioning that is recommended. Another kind which is headed "Technique No. V: Blame the Victim or Employer Technique" includes this suggested wording for the interrogator:

They are just asking for it, and in your case with your old lady hot on your neck, you can't get anything at home. I don't blame you. Hell, when I spoke to this girl, she even sort of looked like a prostitute to me. You just can't tell nowadays about these women . . .

Hell, even I had ideas when I was talking to her. She's just that type that would give anybody ideas.

[Mr. MacDonald (Egmont).]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is that a quotation?

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): That is a quotation from technique No. V. I thought my hon. friend might—

An hon. Member: It is gross.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): It is gross, and it gets more gross. Let me refer to technique No. IX which is headed "Face-Saving or Justification Technique". It states:

There is no doubt in my mind that she was asking for it though. Nine times out of ten, they are to blame.

Again I would ask, Mr. Speaker, if this is the kind of acceptable procedure we are permitting and expecting to be used by the RCMP in interrogations across this country? Not only is it filled with that kind of sexist slander, the document is full of stereotyping as well. Let me give you an example of the stereotyping in this document. It states:

Short and fat physique: These people are usually the happy type. Eat, drink and be merry. When interrogating this type, humour them . . .

Tall and slender: These types are usually withdrawn and introverted. They are the thinkers, poets and writers. They may be withdrawn and the interrogator must attempt to pull them out by appealing to their intellect. The interrogator must train himself to take advantage of every facet of human nature.

If the Solicitor General had been here I would have asked him about this next quotation, because I think he himself may be in jeopardy if he is ever interrogated by the RCMP. The quotation is as follows:

If we think for a moment how many small men have become dictators: Napoleon, Mussolini, Hitler, Stalin. All were men of relatively small stature. Think back to your days on the beat. It was always the little guy who caused the trouble and started the fight.

I should think the Solicitor General should look at that part very seriously because he certainly would not be in very good order if he were interrogated by one of these officers trained with the use of this manual.

I would like to have thought that some professions had been excluded in terms of stereotyping, but let me quote from technique No. XI under the heading "Suggestibility Technique":

● (1720)

Ministers and politicians have long used the power of suggestions to their audiences. John Wesley, the great evangelist, used the power of suggestions to convert people to your faith. Adolf Hitler used the power of suggestions, accompanied by music and crowds, to gain popular support. Today, the great evangelist, Billy Graham, uses props, one of them being the Bible in his right hand, as he speaks in a great emotional voice to you, his audience, and suggests that they come to Christ and be forgiven.

Then it goes on to say:

This technique is adapted from the brain-washing or religious technique.

Here we have an elaborate description of what is known as "The Heaven and Hell Technique." I continue the quotation:

In this approach, we let the subject have a look at hell, but also offer him heaven in exchange or as an alternative . . .

Certainly, a man who is guilty of the crime will grab at the alternative, which of course, is heaven. In the brainwashing technique, the subject is interrogated at all hours, day or night, he has been kept in isolation and has had most of his clothes taken away from him. He is dressed in a sloppy pair of coveralls. He does not use his own shoes but instead is given a pair of shoes too large for him so that they slop about. There are no shoe laces in the shoe. He has no belt to hold up his pants. In the brainwashing technique, this is an assault on his dignity. By the very fact of his being stripped of his own clothing, it is an assault upon his own identity. He now feels forsaken and forgotten due to the lack of familiar surroundings, and the refusal by his custodians to allow him any contact with his loved ones or friends.

The author, I believe for a third time, repeats:

He feels completely forsaken and forgotten and is at the lowest depths of despair. It is at this state the interrogator offers him a glimpse of heaven or a reward in the way of a cigarette, coffee, more comfortable quarters and an offer to speak to his loved ones or friends, or at least another prisoner. The isolation is taken away. As one can readily see, in this technique, the subject has something to gain on the one hand, and everything to lose on the other.

There are many quotations here which make this such an outstanding and disturbing document. If it were possible, and I know this is not possible for a private member to do, I would table the document so that it would be available to all hon. members to read so that they would become aware of its contents. Then I think members would begin to obtain some glimpse of the attitudes, concepts and methods that are being taught, as the RCMP said this afternoon, to senior investigators who have between five and 15 years of services.

We are not dealing with something to which students are exposed simply on a first-time basis but rather with a training document in the RCMP to be used by people who are providing leadership in investigations and a whole host of interrogation procedures across the country. We are not dealing with an isolated instance or something that is on the periphery, as I hoped the minister would have been able to tell us this afternoon. I hope members realize that this document definitely is harmful to the respect normally held for the RCMP in this country.

It would seem to me that if hon. members on any side of this House were to willingly allow this House to adjourn and allow the substance of this document to stand without refutation by the Solicitor General, this would be doing very great harm to the country and the importance of the RCMP in this country. I believe, because I have many friends presently serving as RCMP officers, that members of the RCMP also would not want the House to adjourn without some kind of clarifying statement being made on this subject. Certainly the statement by the RCMP this afternoon is no clarification in this regard.

I think perhaps the most reprehensible part of the document is the attitude it displays toward women. It is perhaps a cruel irony that in 1975, when there are so many gestures, symbolic or otherwise, toward the equality of women in this country, the RCMP should use a document which does much to degrade the status of women in this country. I should like to read one more example. I cannot interpret the Roman numerals, but it appears on page 33 and is headed "Interrogation of Families". It states:

Find out whether the woman has children. After this has been discovered, praise the child. Tell her how good looking the child is. Tell her it looks like her. Speak of her love for the child. Reiterate that the prime function in life is to reproduce; that is what God placed her on earth for. It makes no difference whether or not the women we are speaking to are prostitutes or ordinary thieves employed by a bank. Women are emotional and an emotional approach is the best approach to use on women. We use the emotion of love, jealously and fear. Love for her child, love for her parents. Jealously of the husband or boyfriend. How he will be enjoying himself if she goes to jail. Fear of jail. The cotton dresses that they wear in jail made out of jute cloth, and sloppy shoes. She is no longer an individual, but is classed as a unit. We then slip into the 'Heaven and Hell' technique.

The irony of ironies is that not only is this document sick and shabby, it is also ultimately contradictory because in the final four lines of this document the author writes as follows:

We, as police officers, must constantly remind ourselves that we are servants of the public and not its minister, and we must never overstep the boundaries pertaining to the human dignity of man.

How anyone in his right mind could accept that document would have to be explained to me over a very long period of time. As I said a few moments ago, it would be impossible for me to consider accepting the adjournment motion of the government House leader unless we have some explanation. I sat here dutifully today because I had been informed that the minister would make a statement and that there would be some remarks from him clarifying, removing and, if necessary, applying discipline to those who could have given such misdirection to the training of senior officers in the RCMP. Instead we are faced with the absence of the Solicitor General without explanation, in addition to which late this afternoon, and I think in defiance not only of the rights of parliament which are important but of the rights of the people to have a clear exoneration of the RCMP in this regard, there is no action on the part of the government to deal with this matter in the House. All we have is this press release by the RCMP.

If hon. members have any idea that this clarifies the situation in respect of the RCMP and its training procedures and interrogation techniques, let me quote a part of this press release so that members will know that the RCMP has in no way solved this problem but has exacerbated it.

The following is a United Press press release under the byline of Claude Henault:

The Royal Canadian Mounted Police said Wednesday only senior officers are taught from a manual of interrogation techniques which has been criticized as a sexist document on the use of brainwashing, lies and deceit.

A 39-page manual used in an Ottawa RCMP course for five to fifteen-year veterans from across the country states that interrogations should start off 'Legal and right' but suggests that if normal methods fail it is time to resort to a 'Bag of Tricks'.

A spokesman for the RCMP—

Unfortunately the spokesman is not identified.

—said in an official statement—

This is about the only official statement we have had on this matter and is apparently some kind of attempt to explain away what to us must be definitely unexplainable, at least to my mind. It states that a spokesman for the RCMP said in an official statement:

● (1730)

As one aid to an investigation there is a duty upon our members to seek relevant information by interview and our investigators do not necessarily terminate a conversation because a suspect or witness denies a crime or knowledge of a crime.

I do not know what document this anonymous spokesman in the RCMP is replying to, but he is obviously not replying to or describing the document which I read from this afternoon, or questioned the Solicitor General about yesterday afternoon. That was not a document which simply said that in the course of investigation one does not terminate a conversation because other information may be forthcoming. This is a suggested list of something like fifty different techniques, many of which are described by the author himself as brainwashing, techniques which, as indicated in the quotation, are in many ways a complete distortion of people, and certainly the labelling of people by their size or their shapes to me is so degrading as to be almost nonsensical.

This anonymous spokesman then went on to say, and I quote:

> ... the manual is used as part of a course offered at RCMP N Division in Ottawa's Rockcliffe area but does not represent official policy.

That will have to be explained to me, Mr. Speaker. I do not know how there can be a course offered at one of the main training divisions here in Ottawa, "N" Division, which does not represent official policy. It has already been referred to by a spokesman on behalf of the force. The cover page of this document very clearly shows the crest of the RCMP, and underneath it is written "Maintains le Droit" so there is no doubt. The fact that this document came into my possession, not here in Ottawa but as far afield as Prince Edward Island, would be the clearest indication possible that it is in wide circulation, and if this anonymous spokesman has indicated that it is used for training officers not just locally, but from all across the country, I just do not understand how it can be that this is not, to use the spokesman's language, official policy.

Obviously the minister may not be able to explain it either. If he were able to explain it, I assume he would have been in his place this afternoon. He would have been prepared either to speak to the matter on motions or at least to answer questions which hon. members on this side would have put to him. Neither took place, and we are faced with this most unhappy situation of leaving a considerable cloud over the functioning and procedures of the RCMP.

We already have had a fair bit of discussion in this House in the past couple of days about secrecy in government. There has been a certain amount of willingness on the part of the ministry to try to overcome the structural problems with regard to undue secrecy, but this is not just a question of secrecy. This is a question of recommended practice for the force all across the country, and in that light I think there is very great need for the fullest possible explanation.

I will go on to quote from this unnamed spokesman:

> "It is used by the RCMP in a course offered to senior investigators with between five and fifteen years of service and does not represent RCMP policy," the spokesman said.

Again he emphasizes that it does nor represent policy even though this is used as a manual in the training of senior investigators all across the country. In the official statement the RCMP said of the document—and I am not quoting this exactly because I think there may be something missing from the reprint of it from the wire service—that there was a lecture which usually accompanied the document. I hope that we will not only get the full tabling of this document and an explanation of it by the minister, but some explanation as to the kind of lecture which accompanied this document. If there is a lecture which accompanies it, I shudder to think of the kind of training, the kind of suggestions, the kind of methods used by the RCMP above and beyond this shocking document we have before us this afternoon.

Mr. Peters: Maybe we should have a display of the artifacts used.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I think that may be quite useful. There is no reference to it having been mentioned, but it is interesting that the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) should raise it because there is mention made of some of the more ghastly—if I can use that word—torture methods adopted by other countries and other police forces, but it does mention the fact that it does not recommend these. I cannot say what kind of suggestions or instructions are being given by the lecturer himself. The RCMP spokesman said, however, and I quote:

> "It is part of the broader body of literature on the subject of interrogation techniques which is only one segment of the entire course which includes other topics ..."

And the other topics are apparently human behaviour, the Canada Evidence Act—I wonder how seriously they grapple with the Canada Evidence Act in light of the manual we have before us—conspiracy, sexually motivated crime and crime scene investigations.

Certainly, if they are dealing in other ways with sexually motivated crime, given the kind of attitudes, stereotypes and concepts in this document about those who have either been victims of or possible suspects with regard to sex offences, I shudder to think of the attitudes and the understanding being conveyed in this advanced course to senior investigators here in 'N' division, Ottawa.

It may well be that we have really just taken the lid off Pandora's box, and I do not mean to make a pun by that because I think we are looking at a very serious situation with respect to the just and sensible training procedures being used for senior investigators in this country.

Mr. Peters: I didn't know that was attached to the RCMP.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I will go on:

> "For this course as in many other courses offered by the RCMP, resource people from various fields such as lawyers, psychiatrists, judges and social scientists in the role of instructor present a variety of views."

That is the concluding part of this particular document. The press release goes on to say:

> The RCMP spokesman said copies of the manual were handed out to students as "this was easier than taking notes of a lecture." He said he did not know how many investigators had taken the course.

We have apparently something which has grown up without much serious questioning of a document which may have started innocently enough, and I do not know whether I should use the word "innocent" to describe this document. It has found itself consolidated into a booklet entitled "Interrogation Techniques" by Chief Inspector A. R. Roberts of the Calgary city police, and it is issued and authorized by the training and development branch of the RCMP here in Ottawa.

It is incredible to think that all of this could have happened in light of the growing concern and awareness we have in this country. One thinks, for instance, of the investigations going on in the city of Toronto at the present time with respect to the methods by which the police obtain evidence for use in possible prosecutions. In light of that fact I was flabbergasted to discover that not only could a document such as this be obtained, but that the professor in question and his students at the University of Prince Edward Island were able to obtain from the RCMP in Prince Edward Island documentation to the effect that this particular booklet is still in common usage.

I had hoped to have by this afternoon—but unfortunately the mail service is not operating quite as efficiently as it might—an actual copy of the affidavit sworn by Professor Frederick P. Von Dreeger of the political science department of the University of Prince Edward Island.

In that affidavit Professor Von Dreeger says that on March 20 he had several conferences with Inspector M. R. De Kouchay of 'La' division, Charlottetown. On that date he was informed by Inspector De Kouchay that he had been in conference with Superintendent Moffatt of the training and development branch of headquarters, Ottawa, and he was advised that the said document was published for the use of the RCMP and, he said that document is used as a training manual in the subject area of interrogation procedures, and it was duly notarized. The affidavit to that effect is now in the hands of Mr. Alan Borowy of the Canadian Civil Liberties Union in Toronto.

This is not a situation where just one individual or a few police officers from time to time resort to techniques that would not be acceptable to the general public and would not stand up in a court of law.

Some people have suggested that in raising this matter yesterday I should not be surprised that these sort of techniques are advocated or practised and that, after all, sometimes unusual and rather bizarre methods must be resorted to in order to gain evidence for prosecution and conviction. I am quick to reply to such people that a basic principle of English law is that individuals are considered innocent until proven guilty, not the reverse. The latter seems to be an attitude taken with respect not only to the authorization and writing of this document but to its general approval and use by senior officers.

The minister has not appeared so I am not sure that he has a legitimate explanation for what has taken place. I do not think it is just or right that this House should adjourn until April 6 or 7 not knowing whether, even at that time, the minister will be present. In the next ten days or two weeks hundreds of people will be interrogated or questioned. This is the normal and daily procedure of our national police forces. When any individual in this country now hears a knock at the door, or is stopped on the highway, or questioned on the street corner, or invited by telephone to come to the police station for a discussion or, even more sinister perhaps, an interrogation, will he go with the apprehension that the kind of techniques and attitudes outlined in this booklet are going to be used? That is a situation which many Canadians will face unless there is a complete clarification of the issue.

I would hope that it is not possible for us to accept the adjournment of this House at this time until either the minister or the government House leader—

An hon. Member: Speak for yourself.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I hope I am not just speaking for myself. If the hon. member feels that way, I feel sorry for him. It seems to me that means he is happy to throw away many of the basic civil liberties we have come to cherish in this country, and for which we fought two world wars in this century. If the hon. member is one who takes the attitude that this is justifiable and that the public is prepared to accept it, I hope he will stand and debate the matter. I hope he will read the document and come into this House, later today or tomorrow, and tell us that this is the kind of procedure he would expect the RCMP to exercise in their interrogation techniques. I would think that the hon. member, and others who share his view, would be more than surprised by the reaction of Canadians generally who do not expect from the RCMP the kind of intimidation, manipulation and brainwashing that are spelled out very clearly in this document.

I do not apologize for raising this issue because I think it is a fundamental and crucial one, and without a full explanation from the Solicitor General or the government House leader I do not think the Canadian people would find it acceptable that we should go home for an Easter break when a matter of such great consequence is before us. This affects the civil liberties of every individual in the country, and more especially those who in the course of the next week or two may find themselves being interrogated not only by the RCMP but also, since they often set standards for the rest of the country, by other police forces as well. The implication of acceptance of this document by the government would open the door to all kinds of mischief to be directed toward a person's civil, political and legal rights.

I think it is the responsibility of the government House leader, or someone representing the Solicitor General, to give clarification and an assurance to this House that this document will be withdrawn forthwith. There should also be an assurance that there will be an investigation of the training program used with regard to interrogation techniques. As was stated in the press release issued by the RCMP this afternoon, this document is merely part of a course. There is apparently an accompanying lecture. The document is bad enough, but one can imagine the lecture! I would hope we would not adjourn until the government House leader is able to give some kind of clarifying statement.

I think it is also important to remember that an undertaking was given to this House by the Solicitor General. Members may recall this, but I will repeat the exchange that took place between the minister and myself in this House yesterday afternoon. I asked the Solicitor General the following question:

. . . regarding the publication today by "The Cadre", a newspaper of the University of Prince Edward Island, of the information that a booklet on interrogation techniques of the RCMP, written by Chief Inspector A. R. Roberts—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time alloted to him has expired. Before I call upon the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp), I would remind hon. members that if he speaks at this time he will be closing the debate.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I listened with very great interest to the hon. member who has raised this very serious question. I want to assure him that the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) is not absent because he did not want to deal with these matters but because he was attending to other business. I can express on his behalf his regret that he is unable to be here.

I believe that in order for this matter to be settled satisfactorily it would be necessary for the Solicitor General to be interrogated at some length—

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Not by the RCMP! He will be in great trouble if that happens.

Mr. Sharp: —before a committee of the House. I can certainly undertake on his behalf that when we resume, after what I hope will be an Easter break beginning this evening, he will be ready to deal with the very serious questions that have been raised. In saying this, I do not say this is not a serious matter; it is, and I agree with the hon. gentleman and can understand why he raised it on this occasion, but I can assure him that we take it seriously and that the Solicitor General will deal with it at an appropriate time.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): No. On division.

Motion agreed to on division.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order relating to the business of the House. Earlier this afternoon there were some discussions about the possibility of dealing with Bill C-34 and disposing of it today. Did these discussions get anywhere?

● (1750)

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I regret to say that they did not.

SUGGESTED REPRIMAND OF MINISTER FOR MAKING ANNOUNCEMENTS OUTSIDE HOUSE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I rise to propose a motion regarding statements made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) outside this House, statements such as concern the revised beef premium subsidy, the cow stabilization program and, in particular, the recent dairy announcement.

Noting that the minister promised the dairy farmers of Canada a comprehensive statement on dairy policy before the new dairy year began on April 1, and that despite questioning for many months, in particular, on March 20, 24, 25 and 26, the minister purposely chose to wait until March 27, the first day of the Easter recess, to announce portions of the dairy policy; and further noting that the announcement was deceptive in terms of the return to the farmers in that it encouraged premature price escalation to the consumer and prompted hoarding by those financially capable of doing so; and, again, noting the announced intention of the minister to reveal the full policy details outside the House on April 18—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member wishes to propose a motion pursuant to the standing order, I would ask him to put it forthwith.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, I will propose the motion immediately. I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That this House severely reprimands the Minister of Agriculture and instructs that in the future all statements on matters of substance to Canadian farmers be made in this House, excepting only in cases of extreme urgency and extenuating circumstances.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Being proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43, it cannot be presented without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

HISTORIC SITES

PROPOSED REVIEW OF ADMISSION FEES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to present a motion under Standing Order 43. I do so in the hope that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Buchanan) has had an opportunity to give this matter consideration during the recess. I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin):

That this House urges the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to review the recently established scale of fees for admission to national historic sites, it being the view of this House that Canadians should be encouraged to visit a site such as Lower Fort Garry in Manitoba and should not be discouraged from doing so by a fee of $2 per person or $5 per family.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43 cannot be presented without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

ALLEGED EXCESSIVE COVERAGE BY CBC OF CARIBBEAN TRIP—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise to seek permission to move a motion under Standing Order 43. It arises from the release of a list from the Prime Minister's office showing that 22 members of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation will travel to the Caribbean at public expense in connection with the news coverage of the Prime Minister's forthcoming trip to that area. I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark):

That in view of the fact that the CBC should not be used as a public relations vehicle by the government or for the promotion of the Prime Minister's image, the House requests the Prime Minister for a detailed explanation of the lavish and excessive coverage planned for his forthcoming Caribbean travels by approximately 22 CBC staff personnel at public expense and further the House requests curtailment of such plans to an extent in keeping with the actual news value of the event.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion is proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43. It cannot be presented without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Before calling oral questions, may I make one brief comment. I had assured the House that upon resumption of the sitting after the Easter break I would make a full statement concerning the guidelines which I believe ought to govern the question period. Upon reflection it seems appropriate that, rather than doing that today, I should do it perhaps next Thursday or Friday, and I will do so.

At this time we are entering an experimental stage and operating under a new rule under which the question period is to begin forthwith and stop promptly at three o'clock. I would, therefore, admonish all hon. members to bear in mind three things.

First, as there is to be a fixed cut-off time, oral questions and answers to them ought to be as brief as possible. I refer particularly to preambles. I might say that I am fascinated by the suggestion of a provincial colleague who says that when supplementary questions are allowed they ought not to be preceded by any preamble whatsoever. That suggestion could perhaps be a guideline for us in the future.

Second, points of order and questions of privilege which might be raised during the question period ought to be deferred until after the question period, in order to make sure that the question period, which terminates at three o'clock, is not interrupted in any way, unless it is absolutely necessary.

Finally, motions presented under Standing Order 43 which now precede the question period, and the presentation of which is to stop in any event at 2.15, ought to have connected to them only a brief explanation establishing the urgency and pressing necessity of the matter and not debating the point.

I leave those points on the record for the moment and reiterate that I will make a more complete statement later in the week which, I hope, will form the basis of discussion, perhaps at an early meeting of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, in order to make sure that members on both sides have an opportunity to provide input into what ought to be the guidelines governing the question period.

Mr. Baldwin: And answers should be truthful, too.

INFLATION—GOVERNMENT INTENTION IN SEEKING CONSENSUS—POSSIBILITY OF REACHING GENERAL UNDERSTANDING BY END OF MAY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. It arises out of the statement made last week by the Minister of Finance that he hoped by the end of May to have reached a consensus with various interest groups on how to deal with the economic troubles in the country. As the Prime Minister is in general charge of this program, will he advise whether it is the intention of the government to reach a general understanding by the end of May or is it the intention to have ready by that time a precise and comprehensive inflationary restraint program to be put into effect immediately?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The former of the two, Mr. Speaker.

INFLATION—POSSIBILITY OF PROPOSALS REGARDING RESTRAINT TO MEETING WITH PROVINCIAL MINISTERS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): At the ministers of finance meeting on Friday, following the meeting of first ministers, is it the intention of the government to put before them any specific proposals with regard to restraint for their consideraton?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance intends being specific, but not too specific. He has to face the general dilemma of informing not only the House, but the provincial premiers of our course of action. At the same time, he will not want to announce the precise directions we want to follow until we are assured the various sectors of the economy are prepared to follow them. That is why he assumed the government will take until about the end of May to hopefully have general agreement on the general guidelines he wants to follow. With reference to the previous question, the more specific we can be by the end of May, the better it will be. However, at this time, the discussions with the various economic groups within the society are along general terms. They are not of an exploratory nature. They are of a suggestive nature.

INFLATION—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF FIRST PHASE IN PROGRAM SEEKING CONSENSUS ON RESTRAINT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): As the government House leader said a couple of weeks ago that the government was near the end of the first phase of these discussions, I presume the first phase is now finished. Perhaps the Prime Minister, without giving too much away, can tell us in general terms what was the first phase.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the first phase was one of exploration to try to ascertain from the various groups in the economy what they would be prepared to consider as modes of restraint on condition that other people were also prepared to consider restraint. There was no attempt to have anybody give anything away during the exploratory phase, but to know their conditional position. With regard to the present phase, knowing what each party is prepared to do, the various ministers and myself are attempting to reconcile these positions and state a general course which can be followed by others.

ENERGY

OIL AND GAS PRICES—RELATIONSHIP OF INCREASES TO GENERAL CONSENSUS ON APPROPRIATE PRICE INCREASES

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the fact that this week there will be considerable discussion about price changes for oil and gas, has the position being put forth by the government as to the appropriate pricing for these two natural resources been made in relation to some general consensus as to what price increases are appropriate for the economy at this time?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in the preparation of the government's approach to this conference, the Minister of Finance has, of course, been fully involved. The concern about the impact on Canadian consumers of any very substantial price increase has been at the forefront of our discussions.

Mr. Gillies: Perhaps the minister misunderstood my question. It is precisely this. Was the position that the federal government will be putting forward at this conference arrived at in relation to a general program of consensus with respect to price increases in the economy?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the general program was certainly taken into account.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—AMOUNT AND KIND OF AID OFFERED AND AGENCIES THROUGH WHICH IT IS CHANNELLED

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In light of recent events in South Viet Nam, will the minister advise the House what kind of aid the government of Canada is now providing to both South and North Viet Nam, the dollar value of that aid and the agencies through which it is being channelled?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Up to the present time, Mr. Speaker, we have committed in excess of $6 million for humanitarian assistance in Indo-China. That is the first phase. We are watching developments and will respond to further needs as defined by the Secretary-General of the United Nations or the United Nations Commissioner for Refugees. We have allocated these funds through three international organizations; the Red Cross, the U.N. Commission for Refugees and UNICEF.

Mr. Broadbent: There is one part of my question with which the minister has not dealt; I am sure the omission was unintentional. Can he give the House a breakdown as between North and South Viet Nam?

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot provide that information because it is expected or hoped that our primary thrust will be in the direction of helping the civilian populations which have been so tragically affected by the offensive now taking place. That will be the primary target of our assistance. I cannot provide the hon. member with a breakdown, but I will be happy to try to find out whether any approximation is possible.

DATE OF ADOPTION OF CHILDREN COMING FROM VIET NAM

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I will address my final supplementary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. It concerns adopted children who are being brought from Viet Nam to Canada. Can he inform the House whether these children were adopted at some time in the past, for instance, some months ago, or whether these adoptions are being carried out more or less on the spur of the moment?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The children we are seeking to bring out of Viet Nam in the circumstances are, in the main, children with respect to whom adoption proceedings were either completed or under way with the sanction of the South Viet Nam government and approval of provincial agencies in Canada. We are concentrating on these categories. It may happen that some children, in respect of whom formal adoption procedures have not been followed, might find their way aboard aircraft and be brought to Canada. If such were the case, we would regard them as having reached a temporary safe haven on humanitarian grounds. We are not, however, embarking upon the removal of children from Viet Nam without the sanction of a recognized government; we are fully aware of a possible aftermath in the sense that some of these children might have living parents and that they are Vietnamese citizens. We are being extremely careful about this aspect, as I sought to make clear in the public statements I have made during the last few days.

HUMAN RIGHTS

FREEDOM OF PRESS—CANCELLATION OF ADVERTISING IN "LE JOUR"

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

A few days ago the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources cancelled a series of ads which had been published up till then in the Montreal daily Le Jour. Well, the hurt, frustrated and embittered press council is reported to have made representations to the Prime Minister in the name of the so-called freedom of the press. Has the Prime Minister in fact received representations from these crybabies of the press council and, if so, what has been his reply?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): As far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, I have received no direct representations from the press council. They may have written to me, and I am of course aware of this, to the extent where you will allow me to answer a hypothetical question, Mr. Speaker, this is what I would have replied.

To my mind, the freedom of the press is not really in jeopardy in this instance since in no country of the world is any press freer. In Montreal alone there are half dozen dailies, many weeklies, four television networks, seven or eight radio networks: that is certainly freedom of the press. Whether the government should help commercial undertakings through a commercial advertising is an entirely different matter, Mr. Speaker. I feel that the answer to that is based on notions of marketing, amongst others, and many other considerations.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. Is the Prime Minister of the opinion that the government departments should pay for advertisements in Le Jour to prove to them that anywhere else in the world those people would not be allowed to strive towards the destruction of their country, Canada?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I would certainly not suggest that idea to my colleagues of the cabinet. It may be that some of them feel that way but I would point out to the leader of the Social Crediters that Le Jour itself published, in its first editions, a code of ethics on publicity reserving itself the right to refuse some publicity. It may do so; that, I do not know, but as the question is hypothetical I have no intention of suggesting that recourse.

INQUIRY WHETHER ATTITUDE OF GOVERNMENT TOWARDS STRIKING ASBESTOS WORKERS APPLIES TO ALL COLLECTIVE BARGAINING NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Considering that the Prime Minister and certain of his cabinet colleagues have expressed solidarity with the cause of the striking asbestos workers in Quebec, referred to by the Prime Minister as "comrades", can the Prime Minister tell the House whether his support of these workers is indicative of the government's attitude today toward all collective bargaining negotiations throughout Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I hope it is indicative of the feeling of all Liberals toward people who are engaged in difficult conflicts, particularly on questions like this when there is a matter of health involved.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister assure the House that all of his cabinet colleagues whose names were attached to the message of solidarity were aware, at the time the message was sent, that their support had been given to the cause of the striking workers?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I did not, of course, mail the telegram myself, but it was made in co-operation with two other ministers, or two other of my comrades, who were associated with me not only in the telegram that was sent by my office but in the telegram received by me.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

EFFECT OF ATTITUDE OF GOVERNMENT TOWARDS STRIKING ASBESTOS WORKERS ON EFFORTS TO ACHIEVE CONSENSUS ON RESTRAINT

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister indicate to the House in what way he feels that this telegram sent by himself and his two comrades complements the efforts that he says he is making to arrive at a consensus with respect to our general economic condition at the present time?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this seems like an argumentative question. Perhaps I should tell the hon. member that it is very important, at least for people sitting on this side of the House, that feelings of humanity are expressed from time to time by the leaders of the country.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Fundy-Royal.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, I shall defer to a comrade.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The experimental rules under which we are operating provide no procedure for recognizing a minister at this point. Specifically, there was a recommendation from the committee that we try to eliminate interventions by way of points of order or in other ways. Unless the minister can indicate to me that there is some pressing necessity to recognize him at this time, I would have to go on to the next question.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): It is because my name was mentioned in the question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Fundy-Royal.

PUBLIC SERVICE

RIGHT OF EMPLOYEES TO TESTIFY BEFORE BERGER COMMISSION

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I would hope that the minister is prepared to say for the record that it is the policy of the government that employees are free to testify at the Mackenzie pipeline inquiry being conducted by Mr. Justice Berger without any prior permission or conditions, and that this is a right these employees have as citizens of this country.

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): That is the policy of the government, Mr. Speaker.

AIR TRANSPORT

SUGGESTED SEPARATE MINISTRY FOR CIVIL AIR TRANSPORT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a brief question for the Minister of Transport. In view of Air Canada's continuing problems including the resignation of the vice-president of marketing, and questions raised concerning the status of the vice-president of personnel, as well as other well known difficulties which continue to plague Air Canada, has the minister considered, in the context of his long-promised reorganization of transport policies, a separate ministry for aviation to focus more clearly on the needs and priorities of Canadian civil air transport?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, up to now the only aspect which has been of interest is the formation of a separate corporation in respect of Air Canada rather than it being operated as a subsidiary of the CNR, but we have never entertained the other formula that is proposed.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, in view of the rapid growth in civil air transport and the rapidly increasing complexity of transportation generally, will the minister undertake to have an in depth study made on the advantages and disadvantages that are obvious under such an arrangement of a separate ministry of air transport, which is the case in Britain and some other countries?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, this is one of the aspects which is now under consideration.

INDUSTRY

PROPOSED AID FOR FURTHER PROCESSING OF ASBESTOS IN QUEBEC

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister.

With regard to the conflict in Thetford Mines, and in a much more serious mood, could the Prime Minister tell the House whether he is prepared to give his government's technical or financial aid to any initiative from the Quebec's government with a view to processing asbestos on its own territory, and so to the development of this secondary sector?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am very pleased, Mr. Speaker, to see at least one hon. member opposite being serious about the matter. The answer generally is yes, Mr. Speaker, since there is already very intensive cooperation between the Department of the Environment and the governments of every province with regard to environment matters and production of raw materials. The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce has already stated the government's policy, which is to encourage the processing of Canadian raw materials before exporting them.

INFORMATION

REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF REPORT RECOMMENDING THAT MORE INFORMATION BE MADE PUBLIC

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, in light of the very important discussions now going on in respect of freedom of information, I should like to ask the President of the Privy Council whether the government is prepared to release the report made in the Privy Council, which is alleged to propose that more information be made public, but a report which is now being held confidential?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is anything being held confidential. The government has accepted that principle and does intend, as I have said when appearing before the standing committee, to reveal all the information that can be revealed without danger to the security or the economic health of the country.

Mr. Stanfield: Let it all hang out.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that in his excitement the hon. gentleman forgot to answer the major part of my question, that is whether the government is prepared to release that very interesting report?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure there is such a report. Perhaps the hon. gentleman knows more about these secret reports than I. All I can say is that my predecessor advised his colleagues, and I support that advice which is expressed in the guidelines which begin by stating that all information should be given to the House of Commons, except in certain specific categories.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

INQUEST INTO CRASH OF PANARCTIC PLANE—ALLEGED REFUSAL OF WITNESSES TO APPEAR—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It relates to an inquiry into a PanArctic plane crash which happened at Rae Point in the Northwest Territories in October 1974 and involved the loss of 32 human lives. This inquest is being held up because some of the witnesses have refused to appear. Can the minister explain to the House why the employees of PanArctic Oil Limited are refusing to appear before the inquest? Does the minister plan to intervene to ensure that the witnesses will appear so that the jury can come to a satisfactory and just conclusion on this disaster?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that at no time did PanArctic instruct its employees not to attend this inquiry. I have indicated to the president that it would be my wish that they would appear, but certainly this is a decision that has been taken by them and not by me.

Oral Questions

NATIONAL DEFENCE

POSSIBLE PURCHASE OF LAND NEAR CHILLIWACK—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. Is the minister considering the purchase of some 700 acres of prime agricultural land near the Canadian forces base at Chilliwack at a cost of some $1,600 per acre?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I shall make inquiries. I have not heard that the department is looking at that kind of property at that price.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—POSSIBILITY OF PROTEST TO NORTH VIET NAM ON RECENT HOSTILITIES

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the ongoing attempt to assist the civilian population of South Viet Nam, in particular orphan children, could the minister advise this House whether or not Canada has sent any recent formal or informal protest to North Viet Nam concerning these further recent outbreaks of hostility in Viet Nam which are affecting the civilian populace of that country?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, last week I issued a statement which contained the views of the Government of Canada with regard to this unfortunate human tragedy that is unfolding in South Viet Nam. I have not made a protest or denounced the situation as such, but have made the comment that a major military offensive is under way and that the Government of Canada deplores this fact and particularly the effect the offensive is having on so many innocent civilians in the area.

IMMIGRATION

ORPHANS FROM SOUTH VIET NAM—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO SPEED UP IMMIGRATION PROCESS

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. It is further to the minister's earlier statement in the House. I wonder whether he could tell us what steps if any have been taken to speed up the immigration process in respect of South Viet Nam's orphaned children in light of the fact that individuals seeking to adopt these children are receiving vague and conflicting statements from immigration offices on this matter?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think my earlier comment in reply to the Leader of the New Democratic Party went a long way towards clarifying that, as indeed I would hope my public statements over the last few days have, but we most certainly, if I may reiterate, have been expediting the removal from Viet Nam of orphan children for whom there has been authority from the South Vietnamese government for exit and for whom adoption proceedings in Canada were completed or under way. Clearly, that is the category we have been expediting. Some 62 children arrived yesterday at Vancouver, most of whom were then transported to Montreal and placed in the hands of the families who have been waiting to receive these children, in some cases for several months and in other cases for several weeks. Our best estimate in a confusing situation is that there may not be more than another 50, 100 or 150 children left in Viet Nam who were in that process at the time this special tragedy began to unfold the other day. So, we do not anticipate great numbers.

I might say again in respect of the Canadian families who have recently offered in a great way to adopt children that very few of them will receive children because, as I indicated earlier, it is the group that was in process before this emergency developed which we are bringing forward as rapidly as we can under the circumstances.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON ASSISTING ADULT REFUGEES FROM VIET NAM

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is a supplementary in respect of Viet Nam and is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In the event of further deterioration of the situation in Saigon to the point where the functioning of the government would be seriously impaired, does the Canadin Government have any policy to independently assist adult refugees as well as orphans to come to Canada?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I intimated in an earlier answer, upon which my colleague elaborated, the Government of Canada would listen to any requirements or recommendations made by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and would consider any international effort in that direction. That situation has not yet arisen. We are presently dealing with orphans and nominated and sponsored relatives. That is the situation up to the present. My colleague may wish to elaborate further.

Mr. Speaker: One supplementary by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

IMMIGRATION

CANADIAN POSITION ON ADMISSION OF ADULT REFUGEES FROM VIET NAM

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Has the minister communicated with the UN High Commissioner for Refugees to indicate Canada's willingness to accept adult refugees as well as orphans?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we have communicated with the United Nations Commissioner for Refugees, as my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, has said, and have indicated that we will support and assist any international movement to alleviate the human misery that is unfolding in Viet Nam. There is not a specific refugee declaration now. We are expediting, to the degree we can, the sponsored and nominated relatives of Canadians and landed immigrants in Canada who have been coming to our Canadian immigration centres these past few days to give us the information and the names which we have been sending to Saigon. I have to say, however, that there are extreme difficulties in locating them in Viet Nam.

As of this moment there have been about 5,500 names sent over which were given to us during the last week, and to locate them in Viet Nam is difficult. Secondly, the Vietnamese government is making quite clear it will not casually consider giving exit visas to adults between the ages of 16 and 43. So, we are inhibited in relation to what we can do under the circumstances, and have indicated our willingness to consider support for any international action the United Nations Commissioner for Refugees might wish to discuss with us.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SOUTH VIET NAM—POSSIBILITY OF PROTEST TO UNITED NATIONS ON MILITARY OFFENSIVE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs and relates to his answer to the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley with regard to the position of the Canadian Government in respect of the major military offensive which has caused this undue suffering of orphans in South Viet Nam in particular. Has the government made a formal protest in respect of the position that was set out by the minister through the proper formal channels of the United Nations and if not, why not?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have made no formal protest. We certainly support the analysis of the situation in respect of the human aspect recently made by the Secretary General, but we have not proceeded through the United Nations.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister would be prepared to tell us why not?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I believe what we are seeking to do at the present time is to take a constructive role in the humanitarian field and come to the assistance, where possible, of the innocent civilians involved. That appears to be the proper role for Canada which at the present time has no effective political role which it can play in the situation, except to urge the parties to cease hostilities which has been done already and which we will continue to do.

QUOTAS ON BEEF CATTLE FROM UNITED STATES—POSSIBILITY OF REMOVAL

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Can the minister inform the House if the cattle quotas will be lifted or will be allowed to lapse after they have run their year and whether he can raise any hopes after his visit to Washington that Canadian feeders may again have access to the United States market?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in respect of the first question, I am not sure what the hon. member means about the cattle quotas being lifted. Perhaps he might explain that further. In answer to the second part of the question the meeting between myself, our officials and the American officials and my counterpart, the United States Secretary of Agriculture, was a very productive meeting.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Speaker, the first part of the question had to do with the application of the cattle quotas on United States cattle presently entering Canada.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, that all depends on how productive the meetings are which we hope will follow the very productive meeting we had last Wednesday in Washington. These matters have to be discussed and proper programs have to be worked out. I believe they feel the same way.

RAIL LINE ABANDONMENT—DATE OF ANNOUNCEMENT OF REVIEW AND EVALUATION PROCEEDINGS

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): My question is directed to the Minister of Transport. On March 11 the minister stated that within a week an announcement would be made outlining the form and the procedure in which the review and the evaluation proceedings would take place with respect to the 6,000 miles of rail line trackage which is secured for a period of one year to the end of 1975. I wonder if the minister has as yet formulated or concluded the process under which this review will take place, and can he say when an announcement can be expected?

EFFECT OF LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE ON SUPPLY OF FEED GRAIN—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture, who is responsible for the Canadian Livestock Feed Board.

Following the longshoremen's strike in the ports of Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec, and in view of the impossibility of unloading grain in those ports, has the minister been informed that the millers no longer have any grain to manufacture feed stuff, and if so, does he intend to get in touch with the authorities concerned to supply eastern producers with grain economically?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, according to the report that I had just before coming to the House, there are still some supplies and we are doing everything we can to make sure that those who are in the most direct need of extra supplies will be looked after. I am awaiting a further report later on this afternoon on just what the present situation is.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture, a question which is supplementary to that of my colleague from Laval (Mr. Roy).

In view of the numerous telegrams received from the millers of the province of Quebec to the effect that the supplies in livestock feed grains are excessively limited, and since it is said that the reserves will last only a few days, can the minister tell the House whether he intends to take drastic measures to make possible at least the delivery of the livestock feed grains which are in the warehouses, in the elevators of the province of Quebec, in order to prevent speculation, the rise of prices or the massive slaughtering of animals?

[English]

Mr. Whelan: We intend to do what is within our jurisdiction to make sure that proper feed supplies, which are usually provided in this part of Canada, are provided to the livestock and poultry feeders and to make sure that there are no exorbitant rip-offs or extra charges.

REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF PROPOSALS TO LESSEN NOISE AT VANCOUVER IN DECIDING ON CONSTRUCTION AT PICKERING

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): My question is addressed to the Minister of Transport. In the light of the fact that the Ministry of Transport has published material relating to the proposed airport at Vancouver indicating that it is feasible to lessen appreciably the noise impact of aircraft, will the minister take this into account in considering whether there is any necessity to proceed with the Pickering airport as the Malton airport could be expanded without appreciably increasing the noice factor there?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I regret but I see no relationship between the two. The government has decided to proceed with Pickering and we will proceed with it along the lines stated.

PICKERING—REQUEST FOR PLEBISCITE BEFORE CONSTRUCTION

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Would the minister, consistent with what he and the Prime Minister have said, provide for a plebiscite in the whole area affected, which includes the city of Toronto, before proceeding with the airport?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the Prime Minister said; he can speak for himself. But I know that I never promised any plebiscite. The only thing I said is that if ever the whole population of metro Toronto did not want an airport, we would not build one against their will.

APPOINTMENT OF DRUG PROSECUTORS IN KITCHENER-WATERLOO—REASON FOR APPOINTMENT OF LIBERALS AND FAILURE TO CONSULT MEMBER

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. Would he explain, perhaps today or later this week on motions, the circumstances leading up to his appointment of three federal drug prosecutors in Kitchener-Waterloo who are all directors of the local Liberal Association, and particularly why local opposition members of parliament were not consulted about these appointments when the minister felt it necessary to consult the local government member to obtain his suggestions.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I can refer the hon. member to a couple of answers to order paper questions in the past years explaining in careful detail the manner in which the Minister of Justice takes his responsibility for appointing agents across the country. I find that hon. members opposite frequently notice that there seem to be more qualified Liberal lawyers than others, but that may simply be a part of the process.

LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE IN QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO SETTLE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): My question is directed to the Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Labour. Can the Prime Minister tell us what initiatives, if any, his government is taking to achieve a settlement of the stevedoring strikes in Montreal, Three Rivers and Quebec in view of the mediator having thrown in the towel, so to speak?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am afraid I cannot enlighten the hon. member on that, and I have not had a chance to speak to the Minister of Labour this morning.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REASON FOR LARGE CREW TO COVER COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): My question is directed to the Secretary of State who is responsible for the CBC. At a time when the leaders of our land are asking for restraint among Canadians, can the minister check with the new executive vice president of the CBC, who allegedly has some experience in cost control, to find out why it is necessary for the CBC to send more people to the Commonwealth conference in Jamaica than there will be in the Prime Minister's delegation?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I will find out, but I take it it is because the CBC and a lot of people in this country attach a great deal of importance to the Commonwealth.

Mr. Nowlan: Since CTV reportedly will cover this important conference with one cameraman and one reporter, could not a bilingual reporter with unilingual units adequately do it justice, and, if not, has Keith Spicer been consulted?

HEALTH

BACTERIAL VIRUS RESEARCH BY UNITED STATES—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE SUCH RESEARCH NOT BEING CONDUCTED NEAR CANADIAN BORDER

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the minister aware of research presently being conducted in the United States involving the cloning of bacterial viruses?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Darling: Can the minister assure the House that such research is not being carried on in close proximity or indeed within Canadian borders by either U.S. or Canadian research organizations?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I cannot control research performed in the United States even when it is done near the Canadian border.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

MANNER IN WHICH REPORT OF COMMISSIONER WRITTEN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): I should like to direct this question to the right hon. Prime Minister and ask him whether the government considers it acceptable that the Commissioner of Official Languages, in writing his annual report, chose to write it in such a flippant manner as to make this government's major program obscure and difficult to decipher in an analytical and critical way?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I could ask the same question of the hon. member. He will realize, of course, that the Commissioner of Official Languages was appointed by parliament under the act, and that he is not responsible directly to the government.

Mr. Malone: Inasmuch as it is important for parliamentarians to be able to analyse these matters carefully, will the Prime Minister consider directing department people to write their annual reports in such a manner as to make it possible to analyse them in the way that the reports of the various departments must be analysed?

Mr. Trudeau: I must retort with the explanation that Mr. Spicer is not a departmental person. He is an officer of this parliament, not of the government. Personally, I do not quite agree with the views expressed by the hon. member. I think I can analyse Mr. Spicer's report rather more easily than he can.

THE CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

CONDITIONS IMPOSED BY QUEBEC FOR REPATRIATION

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Some ten days ago the Quebec premier stated in Nicolet that he was willing to reopen the file on the constitutional review. He indicated that Quebec, before agreeing to the repatriation of the constitution, wanted to make sure that the amendment formula would be drawn up to enable that province to obtain a special status. Under the circumstances, is the Prime Minister also in position to tell us whether he is ready to reopen that file, taking into consideration the condition set by the Quebec premier?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the member was kind enough to send me the press cutting which he quotes. I did not have the opportunity to check the matter. I did not speak recently to Mr. Bourassa to see if indeed the newspaper quotation was accurate. I very much doubt it.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—GOVERNMENT PLANS TO ASSURE LEVEL SUGGESTED BY CANADIAN LABOUR CONGRESS NOT REACHED

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, a question for the Prime Minister. The Canadian Labour Congress has indicated that the inflation rate this year will be some 12 per cent. I wonder if the Prime Minister can advise the House whether he will be attending the first ministers' conference with some contingency plan or ideas to show that this government is not bankrupt in order to see to it that this level of inflation is not reached?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member wishes to recall, I did indicate that the second item on the agenda would be the state of the economy. Of course, the problem of inflation will be discussed. I hope it will be an occasion to show to an audience more open-minded than my usual one that the government has indeed done a great deal.

Mr. Alexander: A supplementary question. We are all waiting with bated breath to see the leadership given by the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: Now, now, behave. Let me ask the Prime Minister this question. Does he agree with the statement made by the Canadian Labour Congress that inflation will reach 12 per cent this year?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I hope that the inflation rate will be below 12 per cent, but of course I am not a prophet.

An hon. Member: Oh, really?

Mr. Trudeau: I was going to say, if the hon. member would continue waiting with bated breath perhaps he will—

Mr. Sharp: Die.

An hon. Member: Suffocate.

Mr. Trudeau: —see that he should not wait too long.

UNEMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT PLANS TO ASSURE LEVEL SUGGESTED BY CANADIAN LABOUR CONGRESS NOT REACHED

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): The Prime Minister is still cheerful, but he has not answered my question. He has said nothing whatsoever. It has been further suggested by the Canadian Labour Congress that the unemployment rate will reach 8 per cent. Does the Prime Minister agree with that or, on the other hand, is he going to the first ministers' conference with some program in order to see to it that this rate is not reached?

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the unemployment figures for March will be published tomorrow. I do not know what they are.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: It is tomorrow or the next day, I am not sure, but I hope they will not be reaching that figure at all.

HISTORIC SITES

REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF ADMISSION FEE

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the concern expressed in various parts of Canada about the recently established scale of fees for admission to national historic sites, will the minister review this policy, and in particular will he take another look at the fee being charged for admission to Lower Fort Garry?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, we are looking at the situation of Lower Fort Garry and thinking of some sort of annual family type pass which might meet the need that is concerning the hon. member.

NATIONAL PARKS

REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF TOLLS ON RIDEAU CANAL

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Would the minister reconsider the announcement made by his department in regard to tolls on the Rideau Canal which is going to cause severe hardship for the tourist industry, which is the prime source of revenue for that area of Leeds county in the summer?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to another hon. member a couple of days ago in regard to canals, the revenue which we will receive represents approximately 7 per cent of the operating costs. It seems to me it is difficult to justify lowering that figure.

CANADA-UNITED STATES QUOTAS ON BEEF CATTLE—POSSIBILITY OF REMOVAL

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture following his recent visit during the Easter break to the United States where there was an exchange of goose eggs between him and his United States counterpart. May I ask the minister whether he was pressing for a removal of the import/export restrictions between the two countries, and what was the hesitation on the part of Secretary Butz of the United States or on the part of the minister himself?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say to the hon. member that any eggs, as long as they are good eggs, are all right by me. We did discuss many aspects of agricultural trade between our two countries.

Mr. Speaker: One supplementary, the hon. member for Mackenzie.

Mr. Korchinski: A supplementary question. Since it appears that officials have to correct any impression which may have been left there at the moment, may I ask the minister how long he expects these negotiations will take in order to come out with another policy or a change in the present policy?

Mr. Whelan: Soon, Mr. Speaker.

STRIKE AT THETFORD MINES—REQUEST OF THE WORKERS FOR AID—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Considering that the strike in the asbestos industry at Thetford Mines has been lasting for a long time, and the importance that the Prime Minister formerly attached to the asbestos strike, in company with the present Ministers of Transport and Communications, could the Prime Minister tell the House whether he has received any protests on behalf of the Thetford Mines workers who are asking help from the central government, and further, since it is a matter of national health involving, not only provincial but also federal authorities, could he tell the House whether the government has been in touch with the employers there and whether he has given an answer to the workers who are asking for federal help to settle the dispute that has already lasted too long?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier in one of my answers, some aspects are under federal responsibility. For example, the federal Department of the Environment is responsible for environmental matters. But I understand that the present conflict is not directly under federal jurisdiction. The question asked by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe on the processing of raw materials can fall under federal responsibility, as well as environmental matters but I repeat for the hon. member what I told the comrades of Thetford, this matter is not directly under federal jurisdiction.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I want to put a supplementary question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Would the minister consider it advisable to present a pilot project in that region to implement the principle of the guaranteed annual income, which would settle the present dispute at least in part?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the hon. member's proposal would help settle the conflict at the present time.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources reports as follows: (a) The full page advertisement entitled "Why Canadians should start saving energy in 1975" has appeared in all daily newspapers across Canada as well as the Financial Times and the Financial Post. (b) The total cost of the advertisement is $87,000. (c) Vickers and Benson Limited. Since the advertisement was prepared largely within the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, it was not handled by an advertising agency in the usual manner. The agency will not get a commission but a fee based on work done and overhead. (d) No. (i) Not applicable. (ii) Proposals from competitive advertising agencies are assessed on the basis of which presentation exhibits a feel for content and creativity that will obtain maximum results. In this case, content and creativity was prepared largely within the department's information branch. Therefore, in normal advertising terms there was no basis for proposals and a Canadian agency considered well structured to handle placement of a national program was selected.

ENERGY CONSERVATION ADVERTISEMENT

Question No. 1,770—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the full page advertisement appearing recently in various publications entitled "Why Canadians Should Start Saving Energy in 1975", what was the reason for the appearance in the advertisement of pictures of, and messages from, the Honourable Donald Macdonald, the Honourable John Turner and Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau (a) does this illustrate a new system of Troika leadership as practiced by the Soviet Union (b) was it designed primarily to portray the present Prime Minister with designated or expectant successors?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources reports as follows: In the advertisement entitled "Why Canadians should start saving energy in 1975" the messages of Hon. D. S. Macdonald, Hon. John Turner and Prime Minister Trudeau were used because each of them had made a significant statement about the need for Canada to conserve energy. Their pictures were used as it is a proven readership device to use the picture of a well-known person or persons to attract more attention to a message. (a) No. (b) As indicated the quotations and pictures were intended to convey the conservation message to all Canadians.

In the recent press release from the Treasury Board dated February 19, 1975, will the additional $414 million for other equalization payments be broken down by province as was the $1,986,000,000?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): The $414 million expenditure mentioned in the Treasury Board news release accompanying the 1975-76 Estimates refers to the expenditures itemized on page 8-18 of those Estimates. The expenditures consist of the following: Adjustments to prior years' equalization, $60,000,000; Part V payment, provincial share of tax paid, under Part IX of the Income Tax Act, $14,000,000; Part IV Payment, revenue guarantee, $340,000,000; Total, $414,000,000. SEIZURE OF SHIPMENT MANUFACTURED BY SEAGOING UNIFORM COMPANY

Question No. 1,826—Mr. Schumacher:

1. Did the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs recently seize a shipment of pants manufactured by Seagoing Uniform Company of New York en route for the firm of Fred Asher Ltd., in Vancouver, B.C.?

2. Was the reason for the seizure improper labelling and (a) if so, what was the nature of the impropriety (b) if not, what was the reason for the seizure?

3. (a) How many pairs of pants were seized (b) was this the entire shipment and, if not, what became of the balance of the shipment?

4. Were the pants disposed of and, if so (a) on whose authority (b) in what manner (c) at what location (d) by whom?

5. How many pairs of pants were actually destroyed and what was the value of such items?

6. Who bore the costs of (a) the items (b) the shipping (c) the disposal and in what amounts in each case?

7. Was any consideration given to turning the items over to (a) the needy (b) welfare services (c) Salvation Army (d) underprivileged countries and (i) if not, for what reason (ii) if so, for what reason were the items not so distributed?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. Yes the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs did seize a shipment of pants which were manufactured for Seagoing Uniform Company of New York in Mexico. They were not enroute. They were being sold by a subsidiary of Fred Asher Ltd. in Vancouver, British Columbia. The subsidiary was called Bootlegger and they were operating a warehouse-type outlet.

2. The reason for the seizure was improper labelling. They either had a non-permanent disclosure lable or an incomplete disclosure label. There was no address or identification of the manufacturer or importer. This is in violation of the Textile Labelling and Advertising Regulations, Sections 5 and 15 (b).

3. (a) A total of 2,120 pairs of navy cotton jeans were seized. (b) This was not the entire shipment. There were also a further 5,867 pairs which were destroyed along with the ones that were seized in order to recover the import duty that had been paid. It is believed that the original shipment was of approximately 10,000 pairs of jeans and that some 2,000 jeans were sold in the warehouse operation by Bootlegger stores before Consumer and Corporate Affairs enforcement action was taken.

4. (a) The pants were disposed of after the Fred Asher organization, through their customs brokers, requested a refund of the customs and excise duty. The authority to dispose of the goods was given by the Department of National Revenue, Customs and Excise. (b) The jeans were buried in the ground. (c) At Delta City Dump. (d) Presumably by municipal employees under customs supervision.

5. The total number of pants actually destroyed was 7,987 at a declared value of $5 each, totally $39,935.00 U.S.

6. (a) The items were shipped on consignement to the Fred Asher organization and not actually paid for. They were still owned by Seagoing Uniform Company of New York. (b) Fred Asher Ltd. paid the cost of the shipping not knowing what the shipment consisted of because they were not on order. Fred Asher Ltd. does quite a large amount of business with Seagoing Uniform Company, and had no reason to query the shipment until it was received. (c) The cost of the disposal was borne by Fred Asher Ltd. and this company is now in the process of reclaiming these shipping and disposal costs from Seagoing Uniform Company. At this time it is impossible to state the costs of disposal and how these were apportioned.

7. (i)(a), (b), (c), (d). Yes. Officers of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs did suggest to Seagoing Uniform Company that the items be released to charity. (ii) The owners, the Seagoing Uniform Company, refused to release the items for such disposal, and insisted on their destruction. However, other pants (2,980 pairs) which were seized on the same date but which were part of another shipment and which were owned by the Fred Asher organization, were donated by Fred Asher Ltd. to the X-Kalay Foundation Society in Vancouver, a society for ex-convicts and families.

NANISIVIK MINES

Question No. 1,850—Mr. Towers:

1. Did the government provide funds for Nanisivik Mines on Baffin Island and, if so (a) how much money was involved (b) was this a grant or a loan (c) if a loan, what was (i) the rate of interest stipulated and what security was furnished (ii) the term of the loan?

2. Is Nanisivik Mines still indebted to the government and, if so (a) what amount has been paid (b) what is the balance owing?

3. Who are the (a) owners (b) directors of the mine?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. The government is not providing funds for the development of the mine itself. However, funds will be provided for infrastructure facilities such as roads, airport and wharf and the townsite. (a) An estimated $18,335 million, of which $10,620 million will be recovered in the form of (i) user charges (wharf); (ii) ratepayers (townsite); and (iii) townsite development and housing loans (CMHC). The difference—$7,715 million is non-recoverable outlays will cover roads and the airport to serve Strathcona Sound as well as Arctic Bay, a nursing station and school at Strathcona Sound. In return for funds expended in infrastructure facilities the government of Canada will receive an 18 per cent equity interest in Nanisivik Mines Limited. (b) With the exception of CMHC townsite development and housing loans (estimated at $6,131 million and not yet approved) the government funding is neither a loan nor a grant. (c) (i) the rate of interest for CMHC loans will be the rates applicable at the time the application is approved and the security that will be furnished will be that of the real estate. (ii) Details on the terms of the CMHC loans have not yet been worked out.

2. No funds have yet been expended or provided to Nanisivik Mines Limited by the Government.

3. (a) The owners are Mineral Resources International Limited of Calgary, a public company, with 59.5 per cent, and Metallgesellschaft A.G. of Germany and Billiton B.V. of Holland, each with 11.25 per cent, and the Federal Government with 18 per cent. (b) The board of directors will be made up as follows: Representing, Mineral Resources International Ltd., 7; Government of Canada, 2; Metallgesellschaft A.G., 1; Billiton B.V., 1. The nominees for government directors are Mr. A. B. Yates, Director, Northern Policy and Program Planning Branch and Mr. Percy Pikoyak, Arctic Bay, N.W.T.

TESTS FOR BILINGUAL POSITIONS

Question No. 1,856—Mr. Herbert:

1. When a unilingual public servant wins a competition for a bilingual position, what standard is expected in written tests when such tests are deemed necessary?

2. Are examples of these tests available for the information of interested public servants and, if so, is the necessary standard or pass-mark also available?

3. Does this standard or pass-mark in written examinations vary according to the position to be filled by the person taking the test?

4. (a) How long can a unilingual person who has won a competition for a bilingual position and who fills that bilingual position while awaiting a second language instruction course, continue to work in a unilingual capacity in that position (b) is regular advancement applicable during this period?

5. Does a bilingual person who has passed a competition for a bilingual position and, who has received a letter that they are on the eligibility list, automatically exclude themself from subsequent promotion to unilingual positions while they are awaiting a bilingual opening and, if so, how many such persons are presently prevented from accepting unilingual positions?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows: 1. The language knowledge examination is administered to successful candidates of competitions for bilingual positions. To be appointed to a bilingual position, a candidate must meet the language requirements of the position at the level of language knowledge required for that position. If the successful candidate does not pass the language knowledge examination, he/she is conditionally appointed and sent on language training for a maximum period of twelve months or until able to pass the test at the required level for all factors evaluated, (i.e.) reading, writing, listening and speaking.

2. A Candidate's Guide is available to persons taking the language knowledge examination. This guide contains samples of questions similar to those contained in the examination. Candidates are informed of the standard required for the position in question, prior to taking the language knowledge examination.

3. Yes, the language standards for bilingual positions may vary from position to position. The level of language knowledge for each position is determined by the manager and approved by the Public Service Commission. The candidate must pass the language knowledge examination at the level approved for that position.

4. (a) When a unilingual candidate wins a competition for a bilingual position, he/she is appointed conditionally to the position and sent on continuous language training immediately upon appointment. The selected candidate does not perform the duties of the position prior to successful competition of language training. (b) The person is entitled to all statutory increases which would normally be received as if he/she were performing the duties of the position.

5. No, a bilingual person on an eligible list for appointment to a bilingual position is not excluded from subsequent promotion to unilingual positions. However this person must be qualified and be able to perform the duties of the position in the language required by the position.

3. Does the Department have any contracts with Consolidated Maintenance Services Limited and, if so (a) what is the value of such contracts (b) on what date did they come into effect (c) on what date do they expire?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. (a) None. (b), (c), and (d) not applicable.

2. No. (a), (b), (c) not applicable.

3. The Department of Transport has five contracts with Consolidated Maintenance Services Limited. (a) (i) $421,-778.38, (ii) $30,000.00; (iii) $152,688.15, (iv) $156,089.13, (v) $1,389,622.00; (b) (i) February 1, 1975, (ii) November 21, 1974, (iii) December 1, 1974, (iv) December 1, 1974, (v) March 1, 1975; (c) (i) January 31, 1977, (ii) June 30, 1975, (iii) November 30, 1977, (iv) November 30, 1977, (v) February 28, 1977.

AIR CANADA CALGARY ROUTE

Question No. 1,865—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. On what basis was Air Canada awarded the Calgary direct to San Francisco air route?

2. Has Air Canada made a profit or a loss on this route and what has been the size of this profit or loss?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The Ministry of Transport and Air Canada advise as follows: 1. The Foothills to California routes, of which Edmonton/Calgary-San Francisco is a part, were introduced into the Canadian route proposals to the United States in 1970 on the initiative of Air Canada and because of the considerable support shown by the municipalities concerned and the Alberta Government. By and large Alberta traffic to and from California had been controlled by United States airlines. It was believed that Air Canada would be in a strong position to recapture some of that market. The carrier's existing route network in the Canadian midwest would provide that Prairie provinces with convenient connecting flights and hence improved service to San Francisco. Finally assigning the route to Air Canada was intended to dispel the image of the carrier being principally an eastern Canada oriented airline.

2. This new route became operational only on December 15, 1974. It is still too early to fairly evaluate whether the route is making a profit or a loss, but it will continue to be monitored to ensure it is making a positive contribution to Air Canada's financial results.

AIR CANADA—CONTRACTS WITH SUNSET CREST LTD.

Question No. 1,866—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. What are the details of the various contracts entered into by Air Canada with Sunset Crest Ltd. of the Barbados?

2. Who approved the contracts and what is the length of each?

Order Paper Questions

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advises as follows: 1 and 2. The information requested is of a proprietary nature and Air Canada believes it should not be made public for competitive reasons.

AIR CANADA—OPERATION OF HOTELS OUTSIDE CANADA

Question No. 1,871—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Since Subsection (j) of Section 13 of the Air Canada Act only allows Air Canada to own and operate hotels in Canada, under what authority is Air Canada negotiating with Hilton, Trizec and CNR to become part of a consortium which would own and operate hotels outside of Canada?

2. If Air Canada becomes part of this consortium, what safeguards are there that Air Canada will receive sufficient prime booking dates in Hilton's overseas hotels in the high season, especially in light of the fact that Hilton is owned by Trans-World Airways?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advises as follows: 1. The airline hopes that certain of the constraints imposed by the Air Canada Act will one day be removed to give the national carrier the means to be competitive with state-owned carriers such as British Airways and Air France, and such privately-owned carriers as Canadian Pacific Air, particularly with respect to the ownership and operation of hotels. Air Canada is an interested party in the present discussions between Canadian National, Hilton and Trizec; but its participation in any consortium would be subject to government approval.

2. Should Air Canada become part of any such consortium, the airline would expect the same considerations and safeguards as normally prevail between other airlines and their subsidiary or associated hotel companies.

AIR CANADA—Mr. YVES MÉNARD, VICE-PRESIDENT OF MARKETING

Question No. 1,873—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. On what basis was Mr. Yves Ménard selected as a Vice-President in charge of marketing of Air Canada?

2. For what reason was it necessary to go outside of Air Canada employees to obtain a Vice-President, especially one who had no previous airline experience?

3. Is this an indication that there are no people qualified within Air Canada ranks to assure such a position?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advises as follows: 1. Mr. Ménard was a well known authority in the field of marketing when he joined Air Canada in 1970. His experience and qualities in that specialized industry were recognized throughout Canada and North America.

2. Marketing, as opposed to the sales function, is a relatively new discipline in the airline industry and in 1970 Air Canada searched both inside and outside the corporation to find an individual with the best possible qualifications. A thorough analysis of marketing executive managers then available led the airline to acquire the services of Mr. Ménard.

3. As a general policy, Air Canada endeavours to staff the majority of its key positions by promotion from within.

[Mr. Mazankowski.]

TRANSPORT—CONTRACT WITH CONSOLIDATED PLANT AIRPORT AND BUILDING HOLDING LIMITED (OR CORPORATION)

Question No. 1,886—Mr. Reynolds:

Does the Department of Transport have any contracts with Consolidated Plant Airport and Building Holding Limited (or Corporation) and, if so (a) what is the value of such contracts (b) on what date did they come into effect (c) on what date do they expire?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): No. (a) not applicable; (b) not applicable; (c) not applicable.

"GREENPEACE III"—ASSISTANCE TO MR. DAVID McTAGGART

Question No. 1,887—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. What assistance is being given or will be provided for Mr. David McTaggart in his case before French courts in reference to the seizing of the ship Green-peace III?

2. What compensation has been provided Mr. McTaggart as a result of damage to his ship and expenses incurred in dealings with the Government of France consequent upon the seizure of the Green-peace III?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. The Canadian Government, through the Canadian Embassy in Paris, has been and will continue actively to press the French Government for an acceptable out-of-court settlement. From the very beginning, the Canadian Government has taken the view that it could intervene directly with the French on Mr. McTaggart's behalf. Nevertheless, we have always considered that the normal course for him to follow, under international law, would be first to pursue the local legal remedies open to him under French law. In that context, the forthcoming hearing follows logically from Mr. McTaggart's earlier filing of action last summer to protect his prescriptive rights. We are keeping in close consultation with Mr. McTaggart and, further to his request, the Canadian Embassy is providing him with limited assistance of an essentially consular nature in connection with the presentation of his case before the courts.

2. The Canadian Government has not paid any compensation to Mr. McTaggart for any direct loss or damages or for any expenses incurred in dealings with the Government of France consequent upon the seizure of the Green-peace III. The Canadian Government did, however, on December 5, 1973, grant him an ex gratia payment of $12,000 which enabled him to retrieve his vessel from French Polynesia and to bring it to Vancouver.

LAND-BASED ELECTRONIC OR RADAR CONTROLS TO CONTROL SHIP TRAFFIC

Question No. 1,896—Mr. McKinnon:

1. What land-based electronic or radar controls are in place to control ship traffic in the (a) Straits of Juan de Fuca (b) Gulf of Georgia?

2. (a) In what location do incoming tankers or other deep-sea vessels pick up their pilots inbound from Cape Flattery (b) how far is this in nautical miles inbound from the entrance to the Straits of Juan de Fuca?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. (a) VHF and MF radio communication equipment are in place at the Vancouver Traffic Management Centre to control ship traffic in the Straits of Juan de Fuca; (b) VHF and MF radio communication equipment are in place at the Vancouver Traffic Management Centre to control ship traffic in the Gulf of Georgia. This Centre is also equipped to conduct radar surveillance of vessel movements in the approaches to Vancouver Harbour and in the Harbour itself.

2. (a) Vessels in-bound from Cape Flattery destined for Canadian ports pick up their pilots at the Fairway Buoy off Brotchie Ledge near Victoria. (b) The Fairway Buoy is about 60 miles from the entrance to the Strait of Juan de Fuca.

Question No. 1,899—Mr. Forrestall:

2. Is the instrument a public or secret document?

3. Is such a move contemplated for the Port of Halifax and, if so, on what date?

4. Has the same authority been given to the Port Authority of the Port of Halifax and, if not, for what reason?

5. Does the granting of powers to the Port Authority in Montreal and not given to the Ports of Halifax, Nova Scotia or Saint John, New Brunswick, tend to equalize the ports east of the Ottawa River and, if so, to what extent?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The National Harbours Board advises as follows: 1. The National Harbours Board has delegated some authority at the Port of Montreal to an Executive Committee. (a) With respect to day-to-day operations to a suitable degree considering the size of the port and its level of activity. (b) January 30, 1975. (c) Board Minute.

2. Internal and not a public document.

3. It is expected that the same principle will be extended to other large ports according to their size and level of activity. No definite date has been established for specific ports such as the Port of Halifax.

4. Implementation of the plan has not taken place at Halifax. Implementation will be in similar order to the dates on which the Port Authorities were originally established.

5. There has been no apparent disparity between any ports east of the Ottawa River in the short period since implementation of the plan commenced.

With reference to the Thousand Islands Bridge between Canada and the United States located on the Canadian side of the border in the Township of the Front of Leeds and Lansdowne County of Leeds, has the Secretary of State for External Affairs received a letter dated March 7, 1975 from Mr. Arnold Hamilton, Reeve of the Township of the Front of Leeds and Lansdowne, containing a motion of the Municipal Council requesting the government to agree to extension of the life of the Thousand Islands Bridge Authority to March, 1981 and, if so, will the government give this matter immediate attention and take into account the expressed opinions of the residents of the area as represented by their Municipal Council?

2. On what date will a decision be announced in regard to this matter?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. (a) Yes, (b) yes.

2. The government is not in a position to form a conclusion on this matter until the financial and engineering examinations of the Authority are completed. It is hoped, however, that the necessary information on which to base a decision will be available in the near future.

1. By year since 1970, how much money has been paid by the government or its agencies to Interpol and what are the component costs involved?

2. What are the projected Canadian payments for the 1975-76 fiscal year and under what item or items in the estimates do the costs appear?

3. Is classified information relating to national security made available to Interpol?

Order Paper Questions

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—AUDIT REPORTS

Question No. 1,936—Mr. Reynolds:

Has Mr. Tevlin, Secretary of Supply Administration in the Department of Supply and Services refused a request for post contract for performance reviews and operational audit reports, as requested in a letter of January 15, 1975, and, if so, will the Minister provide the information?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Yes. In response to a letter of January 15, 1975 from Mr. Malcom Thorne for Mr. John Reynolds, M.P., Mr. Tevlin indicated that his request for past contract for performance reviews and operational audit reports would not be met. It is the current practice in industry as in government to restrict internal operational or management audit reports to management directly involved. Any break of this confidence would most certainly impair the efficiency of any audit.

CONTRACT AWARDED TO JLJ EXPLORATION CONSULTANT LTD., CALGARY

Question No. 1,957—Mr. Reynolds:

1. Was a contract awarded to JLJ Exploration Consultant Ltd., Calgary, Alberta for the provision of a study on oil and gas potential deposit in the West?

2. What are the terms of the contract to the degree of outlining what use this study is to have to the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources?

3. Was such information already available from the Petroleum Industry in Canada?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): 1. Yes.

2. A study of the various exploration plays present in the plains area of Alberta, British Columbia, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, to assist in determination of the quantities of oil and gas present, both as proven reserves and as undiscovered potential. The objective of the study is to provide basic geologic data necessary for an assessment of oil and gas resources on a probabilistic-play basis and to investigate gas deliverability from proven connected and unconnected gas reserves.

3. No.

STUDY OF HARBOUR DEVELOPMENT, STEPHENVILLE, NFLD.

Question No. 2,037—Mr. Marshall:

Did the Department of Transport undertake a study of harbour development at Stephenville, Newfoundland and, if so (a) did consultation take place with the municipal authorities (b) has the report been made public?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The Ministry of Transport authorized in 1973 an engineering study for the construction of wood unloading facilities to be provided for Labrador Linerboard Limited. This study was completed in March, 1974, and resulted in the construction and completion by Labrador Linerboard Limited of a steel sheet pile cell dolphin wharf on the south side of Stephenville Harbour. The Ministry has not undertaken a comprehensive study of harbour development at Stephenville but at the request of the Province of Newfoundland and Labrador Linerboard Limited is contemplating a study of an extension of the present public wharf, and has had extensive consultation with the Province and the Company, but not with the municipality on this matter.

2. On what date will a decision be announced in regard to this matter?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. (a) Yes; (b) yes.

2. The government is not in a position to form a conclusion on this matter until the financial and engineering examinations of the Authority are completed. It is hoped, however, that the necessary information on which to base a decision will be available in the near future.

Mr. Speaker: Before leaving the subject of questions on the order paper, may I suggest to the House that the proposed change in providing for the daily presentation of replies to questions on the order paper will entail an alteration in the printing of the order paper. Presently, notice of questions as received is printed daily on the notice paper and a consolidation of all questions is printed on Mondays, with a listing of question numbers on Wednesdays. In order to cut down or to eliminate what may be considered as superfluous printing, I suggest that in future the notice of written questions be printed daily as received, and that the consolidated notice of written questions be printed but once a week, on Mondays. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PETRO-CANADA ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH CROWN CORPORATION

The House resumed, from Wednesday, March 19, consideration of the motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) that Bill C-8, to establish a national petroleum company, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Petro-Canada

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, this is my first opportunity to make a few remarks on Bill C-8 to establish a national petroleum company. The short title of the act is to be the Petro-Canada Act. The government, under this act, will seek authority to establish a Crown corporation to be known as Petro-Canada.

I hope the first ministers' conference this week will do great things for our resource industries. I hope the first ministers will arrive at important decisions to the benefit of all Canadians. I think this conference will become a highlight of our system of confederation and I hope we shall see consultation, instead of confrontation, involving federal and provincial constitutional rights.

In considering Bill C-8 I have talked to personnel of the oil companies—of the majors, as it were. What is their position? Although they do not endorse a national corporation for oil in Canada, they are not opposed to it. Why not, Mr. Speaker? They contend it will not interfere with their business; it will not do much in the field of exploration; it will not do much except soak up taxpayers' money: it will become, as some have described it, a tax sink offering no competition in the field of exploration. The consensus as I understand it is that the corporation will be another operation costing taxpayers many millions of dollars.

Let me point out that in no part of the world, so far as I am aware, has a Crown corporation of the type we are setting up been successful in bringing about the sort of development we envisage. Why should they be successful? After all, they do not use their own high-risk capital in exploring for oil and gas, and Crown corporations are not subject to the discipline of private corporations. I therefore wish to deal with this subject strictly from the taxpayer's, the Canadian's point of view.

Why should I, or for that matter why should anyone oppose the setting up of a Crown corporation in respect of oil? The hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) and the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Balfour) have set out clearly the weaknesses of the bill we are debating and the weaknesses of the arguments promoting the formation of a Crown corporation for oil to be known as Petro-Canada. I am opposed to the establishment of a Crown corporation for oil for the following reasons, but before I give the details let me make one thing clear: there is a place for Crown corporations in our system but it is not in the high-risk capital business.

The record will show, I think, that the proposed Crown corporation, like others, will be highly inefficient. Let us consider some other Crown corporations. The government has agreed to erase a $3.5 billion debt incurred by CNR, Air Canada and the St. Lawrence Seaway. That $3.5 billion is taxpayers' money which has not earned interest. It could have earned interest had it been invested in the private sector. The seaway is a different cup of tea, of course. But if the private sector had run up such an enormous debt, would it have been able to write it off? The private sector would not be able to write off $3.5 billion of taxes owed. Such a large debt could only be created by inefficiency, lack of knowledge and lack of drive.

When the government backs an enterprise, what incentive does it provide to make the enterprise pay? You cannot fire the employees or change the president without cabinet consent. In my opinion, the proposed corporation will become nothing but a cesspool of political influence and involvement, all at the taxpayers' expense. So one can see what happens when Crown corporations enter high-risk businesses; they run up $3.5 billion in debts. If they were companies in the private sector they would have to file for bankruptcy or the directors would be asked to account for the $3.5 billion debt. But when Crown corporations incur debt, the government writes it off. As I say, what incentive is there to make Crown corporations paying propositions? You cannot fire employees and you cannot fire the president without cabinet consent. I repeat, the proposed corporation will become nothing but a cesspool of political influence and involvement. It will not provide the answer: that is, cheap oil for the consumer wherever he may live in Canada.

What is so sacred about Crown corporations? They always cost the taxpayer money. In the question period an hon. member mentioned the CBC. There were more CBC personnel covering the Olympic Games in Mexico than Canadian athletes participating. Also, many CBC personnel are to cover the Prime Minister's forthcoming tour.

The proposed company is to be given wide borrowing powers. Clause 22(1) provides:

> Subject to section 23 and upon the recommendation of the minister and the Minister of Finance, the governor in council may, when so requested by the corporation, from time to time authorize the Minister of Finance to advance to the corporation, out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, amounts
> (a) by way of loans on such terms and conditions as the governor in council may determine; or
> (b) by way of purchases of preferred shares to which may be attached such rights, restrictions, conditions or limitations as the governor in council may determine.

Clearly, the corporation is to be given wide borrowing powers. Presumably, its debts will be added to the $3.5 billion owed by the Crown corporations I have mentioned. Corporate mistakes which will be made in exploration, development, processing and refining, buying and selling, will all be charged to the poor taxpayer. The unfortunate taxpayer has not the say nor the power of the shareholders of a private corporation. The taxpayer is kept in the dark and therefore has no direct interest in the matter: he has no say with regard to his money going into the corporation. The government, through the budget or some other means, increases taxes. The moneys from those taxes are loaned to the corporation even though it may make mistakes in exploration, development or processing. Compare that to the corporate structure of the private sector. Therefore, I say the taxpayer is kept in the dark and has no direct interest in the matter. He wonders quietly, to himself, why his taxes are so high and why the budget of Canada has increased sixfold since 1963 under Liberal governments.

Petro-Canada will become a haven for political appointments. In the private sector, when directors are appointed in multinational or other corporations or companies, they are generally appointed because of their ability to operate the corporations efficiently. Presidents and directors of corporations are chosen by the shareholders for their knowledge, experience and ability to operate the corporations. They are appointed to deal with the whole, broad spectrum of responsibilities in what is called, sometimes not too politely, big business. The only people they are responsible to are the shareholders. In private enterprise, a corporation must operate for a profit; therefore, efficiency is the criterion, not political hanky-panky.

If this corporation is a failure because it fails to explore and process, makes mistakes and uses bad judgment, what happens? The shareholders cannot call the directors together at an annual meeting and say to the president that they want him and the directors to go and they want the company put on an efficient basis. As I have said, you cannot fire the president or the directors. We have seen that tried in this House.

When financial mistakes are made, bad judgments follow and no dividends are payable. The shareholders, in accordance with the laws governing and regulating public or private corporations, may fire the president and directors. However, we know from experience it is impossible to fire appointees of the cabinet to these lofty positions, people who earn high salaries which are not disclosed to our standing committees under the excuse that it would be against public policy.

In the standing committee we tried to find out about the industrial bank which was set up by an act of parliament with borrowed money. We wanted to know the salaries, and we were told this was against public policy. In the private sector the salaries of the presidents and directors of corporations are public. The shareholders can get that information at the annual meeting or upon writing for it. It is disclosed to the public. When it is said this is against public policy or might hurt the corporation in the competitive commercial world, I say that is nonsense. Politics prevents the necessary disclosures that provide for success and efficiency in industry.

I want to emphasize that this is a high-risk industry. Corporations take years to build up the expertise necessary to comprehend the great risks involved in the field of exploration. What seismographs, in terms of knowledge and expertise, will newcomers to this Crown corporation have? What data bank will they have? Compare this to the expertise and experience of personnel working for the big five companies in Canada and elsewhere. One is a Canadian company, Home Oil. This Crown corporation will be an experimentation very costly to the Canadian people. Five hundred million dollars is a spot of water in the ocean when dealing with the promotion of and the high-risk investment and capital necessary for exploration and development in the oil and gas field.

For example, Imperial Oil drilled 133 consecutive dry holes in Saskatchewan and Alberta before Leduc No. 1 was struck. As I said in another speech, it is a great story, and I might repeat it here. Imperial Oil was about to build a processing plant to make synthetic gasoline out of natural gas. The company's geologists convinced the company to put up capital for one more well. After 133 consecutive dry holes, Leduc No. 1 was struck. With that kind of experience, how far will $500 million go?

This oil company will be subject to politics. Clause 7(2) on page 7 of the bill reads as follows:

The corporation shall comply with any directions from time to time given to it in writing by the governor in council or the minister with respect to the exercise of its powers.

In other words, the president and directors will have to dance to the tune of the cabinet. Since I have been in this House—and even before that—I have not had that much faith in cabinets having the kind of expertise to tell an oil company how to invest money, how to explore, develop and process efficiently. After Imperial Leduc No. 1 was found, our whole outlook changed. Other fields were developed and we became a self-sufficient nation with regard to energy. This part of economic history can be called Canada's economic confederation. Our energy supplies and pipelines hold this country together just as effectively as culture and other forms of nationalism, and will continue to do so if leaders change their ways. The media, too, must shape future opinion, which is the only weapon which will motivate short-sighted leaders into far-sighted ones.

The system of taxation developed in the last federal budget, and those of some provincial governments, discouraged exploration and development. We only have to read the Financial Post and other periodicals to see that the drilling rigs have left western Canada. All this has happened because of the sheer cussedness and short-sightedness of this government.

Today, Canada stands at another crossroads that again affects not only the outlook for its petroleum industry but our entire economy. Again the question is one of supply. Can we continue to produce enough oil from Canadian sources to meet Canadian demands, or will we have to depend increasingly on foreign oil supplies? This time the crossroads are not technological. The situation is not one where decisions depend on geological data. Large amounts of oil and natural gas have already been discovered in the Arctic and the industry is confident more can be found. The technology to mine the surface deposits of the tar sands and convert the high viscosity crude into synthetic oil is available. This time the crossroads are political and affect the industry's ability to finance the tremendous job that lies ahead. The president of Imperial Oil stated that its budget has been cut by one-quarter, and I would not be surprised if other major companies are doing the same.

The ultimate loser in this situation is the Canadian citizen. He will not benefit from the tax and royalty revenues that would otherwise accrue to his governments from development of his petroleum resources. He could well find his way of life affected by mounting balance of payment deficits and increased dependence on unpredictable foreign supplies—unpredictable both as to price and availability. As a taxpayer, consumer and worker he will be affected by a slowdown in one of our most vital industries.

The purpose of this company is, I suppose, to guarantee self-sufficiency of supply, since once it is established the government could direct it to carry out exploration at the expense of the taxpayers. We have heard a lot of speeches about an energy crisis and shortage of supply. In this light, it is interesting to examine an article which appeared in The Economist of March 8, 1975. It reads in part:

History is being swayed by the increasing capability of important groups to cod each other and themselves that they are observing the precise reverse of exactly what is happening. In oil, what is happening is that the world is now trying to produce about 20 per cent more than people are willing to buy while the price of oil is around $10 a barrel—

According to this article there is no shortage of crude petroleum in the world; the so-called shortage has only been a reflection of political hanky-panky at government level with the formation of OPEC, hanky-panky involving large corporations, and stories by journalists all over the world selling propaganda to the effect that there is a shortage. This is the situation dealt with in the article from which I have just quoted. It continues:

Some glut at present productive capacity would probably persist even if the price dropped to $3-$4 a barrel. Medium-term energy policies all over the world are now geared to making the present glut enormously greater with every year that passes.

The article goes on to predict a growing surplus of energy in the world.

The world's governments may—as a diplomatic ploy, perhaps rightly—sign Mr. Henry Kissinger's piece of paper pretending that all this generation's successors in business and government will promise to pay through the 1980s perhaps $7 per barrel, maybe index-linked, for a commodity which costs 10 cents a barrel to produce in much of the Middle East and whose marginal operating costs (once rigs are in place, and it costs money to stop pipelines) are sometimes barely over 2 cents a barrel. If there is an index-linked floor price of $7 a barrel, then it is probable that more than half the productive capacity of primary energy either already existing or now planned for the early 1980s will have to be held or edged out of production; indeed, Mr. Kissinger's objective in talking about $7 a barrel is precisely to create such a glut.

People can believe if they wish that the capacity declared redundant will not then be the expensive (and rising marginal-cost) capacity like Alaska and the North Sea plus the high-wage coal mines of Britain and America. People can believe if they wish that countries like Japan will be bound by a piece of paper saying they must buy oil at $7 a barrel when marginal producers will be offering it at a price based on costs less than one seventieth of that figure, and that Japan's competitors will then allow their own energy costs to stay up to 70 times more expensive than hers. People will believe what they want to believe, including dear delusions.

The article goes on to say:

The breakdown led initially to a widely unsustainable attempt at more extravagant market rigging (OPEC, Smithsonian agreement) so that ordinary market forces swung into reaction. While they were thus in swing, governments who always believe they can repeal the laws of supply and demand, were holding consecutive meetings in lush hotels (OPEC summits, finance ministers' conferences) and journalists always wrote as if something important was happening there. But anybody who stayed home and based his guesses on any reasonable calculation of elasticities of substitution and supply could see that exchange rates would float again and could guess correctly what would happen first to demand for oil, then to stocks, then to supply and next to prices.

The writer of this article found a simple way of checking the amount of oil being shipped out of the Middle East: he checked the insurance coverage at Lloyd's of London relating to oil shipments from the Gulf and turned up information to confirm his contention that the world is experiencing a glut of oil at the present time. The idea that oil would become steadily scarcer and more expensive for the rest of our lives is entirely false. In fact, if I could sum up the article in a few words, the world is not short of petroleum.

I should like to ask the minister this question. What will happen if the price of oil in Canada is set, for example, at $8.50 a barrel and the world price drops to $4 a barrel? Is eastern Canada prepared to pay the higher price? Then I should like to put the same question in reverse. Should the world price be $10 a barrel, how much lower can the federal government set the price in Canada while guaranteeing development and exploration at the rate necessary to maintain security of supply for this nation in the future? These are the questions we have to put to the government. There is nothing which answers them in the bill now before us, only a proposal to set up a monstrosity, a sink down which taxpayers' dollars will flow. Tax money will go down the sink because there is plenty of evidence that in this particular field, one which involves high risk, there is no substitute for know-how, expertise and management ability.

I cannot believe that a corporation along the lines of Air Canada or the CBC—I am not criticizing those two institutions at the moment, but merely making an analogy—could succeed in such a highly competitive field as the oil industry, or accomplish anything there except increase the taxes paid by the average Canadian. And while this new Crown corporation is pouring more taxpayers' money down the sink, the price of gasoline will be going up at the pumps.

Mr. Speaker, it can be said of many of the bills we question as an opposition that they contain at least some good mixed with the bad. Having been in this House since 1958, I have no hesitation in saying that in my opinion there is nothing good in the measure presently before us. It will likely cost the taxpayers money out of all proportion to the services to be provided.

Mr. Dionne: Rubbish!

Mr. Woolliams: The hon. member says, "Rubbish!" He always makes remarks of that kind; it is the only contribution he ever makes. He will find out that I am right when this corporation is established. If he can name one Crown corporation which is really as efficient as the private sector, particularly in this high-risk capital sector, I wish he would stand in his place and do so, because I would be prepared to listen to him.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, here we are again, wasting the valuable time of this House debating a bill which should not even have been introduced. While the country is being held to ransom by one dissident labour group after another, we are debating whether we should pass legislation allowing the government to go into competition with the oil companies in our country. We could use our time better by debating how we should get people back to work, or how we should tackle the serious problem of runaway inflation.

However, the bill has been introduced and it is a foregone conclusion that it will receive approval, considering the fact that the government has a majority. It is no good hoping that members on the other side of the House will vote as their consciences dictate when the bill comes to a final vote. They will vote as they always do; they will vote as the boss dictates. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, what we say here will probably have little influence on the final result. In any case, I fully intend to make my feelings known on the bill before us and to expose the real intent of the government with respect to this so-called national petroleum company.

Members on this side of the House, those in the official opposition in particular, have been pressing the government for a number of years to develop some kind of national energy policy and to let us know what it is, if and when they have one. We have waited in vain for this to be done, as we have waited in vain for results on other important matters. Hansard is full of speeches in which we in the official opposition have used every opportunity to bring this question before the House and to the notice of the government.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) should know by now that we would support the government right down the line if they were to table something in the way of a national energy policy. But, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-8 is a long way from being a national energy policy or even a step in the direction of such a policy. It is simply another ploy, another attempt at power grabbing and another attempt at building another wing onto the already top-heavy bureaucracy.

It has been suggested that Bill C-8 is just another attempt on the part of the government to create a snug haven for defeated Liberal candidates and for loyal party faithful. There is good reason for such suggestions to take root in view of some of the other agencies that have been created by this government during my time in this House. Some pretty good jobs have been created in the past few years for the Liberal Party faithful, and they are good paying jobs. When you consider the power that some of these people have in the bargain, it is understandable that those of us on this side of the House look with suspicion on bills which seek to create still more of these unnecessary new agencies.

I am a little puzzled and concerned over some of the statements made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on March 12 when he tried to sell Bill C-8 to us. Anyone in the House who heard his speech would have wondered if he had the wrong speech, or the wrong audience. The minister was hardly into his speech when he said that this bill "is a most important element in the government's long-term planning to secure adequate supplies of energy to meet our national needs". Now, there is a nice little bit of double-talk, Mr. Speaker. What the minister said is what I might say if I were trying to say that I had worked out a national energy policy. So I might be forgiven if I interpret this to mean that the minister has in fact worked out a national energy policy. Well, just what is the policy? When is the minister going to let us in on his new energy policy?

I think I can speak for my colleagues when I say that I have been waiting a long time to hear the government's plan in the way of an energy policy; and if they have one now I want to see it, I want to hear about it and I want it brought into the House so that we can debate it. All I have seen so far is this bill, a bill to allow the government to establish a petroleum company to go into competition with private industry, to compete with free enterprise.

I cannot accept the minister's claim that this bill is, in effect, the cornerstone of some fanciful national energy policy. What I think, and what I am sure will be borne out next month, is that this bill will allow the government to create a company that it can use as a club in the upcoming energy talks later this week. I think the energy minister wants this new company so he can tell Premier Lougheed that his company is bigger than the premier's. The energy conference is already expected to be a confrontation rather than a conference, and that expectation is being nurtured and fed by the energy minister and his colleagues.

It is no good the energy minister's complaining that Alberta has involved itself in energy exploitation and exploration. Alberta has been forced into that situation to protect itself, to protect the people of the province from federal government bungling and the heavy-handed treatment of the corporate sector. It is no secret to anyone that the federal government has followed a policy, or possibly a non-policy, of keeping the large energy corporations off balance with its day-to-day changes in taxation policies, especially with regard to exploration and other types of risk ventures.

It has always been a practice of governments of our type, and with good reason, that high-risk ventures are left to the private sector. The money raised by taxes and other means by the government is a trust; money and other valuables held in trust cannot be subjected to risks, and it is in fact incumbent upon those who do hold such money in trust to ensure that it is not subjected to risk without the consent of the owner. What I am saying is that the minister talks of the $1.5 billion of public money with which the national petroleum company will be funded as though it were his own money. I would like to clear that up with just a few well chosen words. It is not his money; it belongs to the Canadian taxpayers, and we are its trustees.

In addition to the half billion dollars in direct financing for the proposed company, the minister proposes to allow the company to raise a further $1 billion by what he calls debt raising. He followed this up with the statement that the federal government would stand behind the company when it seeks to raise further amounts of debt capital. There is nothing like encouraging a new bureaucracy to grow like Topsy even before it is created, Mr. Speaker.

The minister talked in glowing terms of how the Canadian people would be the stockholders in the new company. Does that mean that the minister will call annual stockholders' meetings? Does that mean that Canada will have the world's largest conference hall, one capable of handling 22 million people at one sitting? Perhaps the new hall will be called "Con-Can", to accommodate the stockholders of "Oil-Can". No, Mr. Speaker, the minister does not plan to call annual stockholders' meetings for the new company. He should have called this company "Con-Can" because in my view, in light of the fact that we do not yet have a socialist system of government, this bill is the biggest "con" job the minister has pulled on the Canadian people.

The minister went on to say that Petro-Can would provide, among other things, a social function, adding that Petro-Can would pay special attention to educating and training native peoples in the petroleum sector. If the minister is stretching and straining in an effort to justify Petro-Can, then he has missed the mark again. My colleagues and I on this side of the House have long been under the impression that we already have quite adequate education and training institutions and facilities in this country. Taken as a whole, I would suggest that our educational system and our technical and trades training institutions are pretty good. So I cannot justify Petro-Can on these grounds.

That is not all of the stretching that the minister did in his speech on March 12. He suggested that the private sector has done an admirable job in the past in seeking out and developing supplies of oil and gas. However, he did say that the government cannot be assured that the private sector can be relied upon in the future. As a case in point, he said that they might be encouraged to pull out of Canada and go to places where investment opportunities are more attractive.

Well, the minister certainly had a point there, but he managed very skilfully to express it in reverse and completely out of context. What he really meant was that this government has done all in its power to make investment of risk capital in Canada about as unattractive as possible. I have to confess that I now believe the harassment of the private sector in the past two or three years by the federal government has been a calculated thing, designed to pave the way for this very bill. When the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources states in his speech in support of Bill C-8 that the private sector cannot any longer be counted on to raise the enormous amounts of capital required for future exploration for oil and gas, then he means the government is satisfied that its campaign against the private sector has been working pretty well.

The minister's statement that he believes the majority of the Canadian people desire a company like Petro-Can is based on his own fond wish and nothing more. Neither he nor anyone else had held a national referendum to find out if the Canadian people want their money put in the hands of another bureaucracy, with carte blanche to do with it as they like. Just putting taxpayers' money in the hands of this government is risky enough, judging from the way the national budget has skyrocketed in the past ten years. To take billions more and place it in the hands of people to risk in resource exploration and development is carrying this risk just a little too far. High-risk ventures in resource exploration and development have been a traditional aspect of the private sector, and over and over again it has been proven that governments cannot do it as cheaply or as well.

I simply cannot approve Bill C-8 for a number of very good reasons. In the first place, while the minister talked at length about what the new company planned to do, or what it might do, he did not make any attempt to justify the establishment of the company. Neither the minister nor anyone else has demonstrated the need for a government company to duplicate what is being done in the private sector or to go into competition with long-established oil and gas companies in the private sector.

If this government wants to get involved, I suggest it should get involved in solving some of the serious problems which are getting progressively worse as the government looks around for new worlds to conquer. What we should be doing is seeking ways to keep on the job people who have jobs, and finding jobs for all those who want to work but cannot find suitable employment. We also face inflation, which this government seems to feel will just go away if we ignore it.

Let us leave the high-risk ventures to the private sector. Let the oil companies do what they can do best, and for goodness sake let us stop putting artificial barriers in the way of companies that want to risk their capital to find new sources of oil and gas. We have plenty to occupy us, without spending a tremendous amount of money looking for petroleum products.

Mr. Frank Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take part in this debate as a member representing an oil producing area in southwestern Saskatchewan. I am well aware of the desperate straits in which the industry finds itself in that area.

Canada was created in the face of difficulty and adversity. This was a remarkable achievement, only possible as a result of the spirit and dedication of the people who accomplished it. This country is still ready to respond with vigour and hope, if it can get leadership from this government and if the people are aware what the rules of the game are to be.

Bill C-8 does not mean the government now thinks that Canada has not been well served by private enterprise in the petroleum industry, because private companies, whether Canadian or foreign-owned, have worked vigorously to develop our oil and gas resources, to create transportation systems for them and to refine and distribute our oil products efficiently. The privately-owned Canadian oil industry has a good record of technical and managerial innovation. We should not be swayed by the fact that every one of the dozen countries from which we import significant quantities of crude oil has its own state oil company. A good look at these countries would soon show us that most of their rulers value the licence of unfettered sovereignty and anti-westernism more than they value food for their own people.

It is only natural to wonder when this proposed national oil company will get under way. The best estimates would indicate that it will be 15 or 20 years, perhaps even longer, and certainly there is no indication that the company will produce even one extra barrel of oil for the Canadian people. One thing is sure, and that is that it will use even more of the taxpayers' money and mean an even greater expansion of government into the private sector. So it would seem that our government will be standing passive for a good number of years and we will be living on the efforts and assets of the past for some time to come. If it is to take 15 or 20 years to get production under way, it is interesting to note that this bill proposes five-year appointments for the president and chairman, and three-year appointments for the directors. This does not seem to provide much security of tenure in a company that will be 15 or 20 years developing.

I suppose the crucial question is whether there is a real need for this bill to create a national oil company. Let me quote from the March 27 edition of the Swift Current Sun. Under the heading "April production less than 5 per cent" and "100 per cent shutdown of local pipeline", we find the following:

[Mr. Darling.]

South Saskatchewan Pipe Line Company, with offices in Swift Current, suspended its crude oil gathering operations effective this morning.

Another paragraph in the same article reads:

The shutdown has caused Mobil Oil Canada Ltd. of this area to also shut down production and water flood injection facilities in southwest Saskatchewan.

Further on in the article it is stated:

In April, 1974, there was the capability of producing 37,000 barrels a day, which is not the case now.

On the same page of this newspaper there is an article in respect of Texaco, which reads in part:

Texaco Canada Ltd. estimates there will be a surplus of domestic crude oil until at least 1994.

That is the situation in my area. This bill is so broad that it is clear the government is taking the position that the private sector can no longer be counted on to develop the natural resources of this country. I think that Canadians basically believe we should have an economy operated by the initiative of its citizens and not of its government. This bill asks us to incorporate a new government entity called Petro-Canada. In fact, it is setting up a national petroleum industry to be operated by the Government of Canada. This will certainly be another step in eroding parliamentary control of the expenditure of tax money—expenditures that must be covered by revenue. Expressed as a percentage of our gross national product, these revenues rose from 16 per cent in 1926 to 30 per cent in 1946, the last of the war years. In 1958 that figure dropped to 25 per cent, but today 38 per cent of the total GNP accrues to the government in the form of revenue. This trend is placing an unbearable load on the private sector of our economy. We now have one federal government employee for each 50 Canadian men, women and children in our country. In 1967, after 100 years, the federal budget was approximately $10 billion, and today it is almost triple that amount.

Presumably, the creation of this company is an indication that the government believes there is inadequate exploration by the oil industry today. The majority of informed people involved in natural resource development in Canada would agree. However, we must point out that the reason there has been a decline in exploration activity in this country is precisely the result of this government's interference. This government has evolved policies which make it almost impossible for the private sector to operate and to explore in the way it has in the past. The oil and petroleum industry has never had to live with such uncertainty as it has experienced within the last three years, or with a hodge-podge of tax legislation and confrontation that makes it impossible for the industry to operate in a normal way. The government has formulated no rules or regulations regarding exploration for oil in the vast northern areas of the country which have still to be explored.

It seems peculiar that at the very time we are concerned about supply, exploration and getting more oil on stream, there is a whole series of activities on the part of the government which makes it impossible for exploration to go ahead. We should take a good look around the world, as I am sure the evidence will demonstrate that countries with the highest standards of living are basically those countries which depend upon the private sector to produce and distribute their resources.

By this bill, the government clearly demonstrates that it no longer has confidence in the private sector operating effectively in this country. This bill could socialize our oil industry right down to the retail service station level. Does anyone really believe that there is a need for establishing a corporation to distribute refined petroleum products in this country? A look at any of our towns, cities, villages or crossroads would indicate that the last thing the government needs to invest money in at this time is the establishment of a distribution system for petroleum products. It is obvious to everyone that the distribution system that we have is working effectively.

Surely the government does not need to take taxpayers' money to become involved in this kind of operation. It should give us cause to ponder when we think back a year to the time the Department of Supply and Services made what was probably the highest priced purchase of oil of all time, certainly in the history of this country. Surely, Mr. Speaker, before we get into this sort of nationalizing effort, the first thing to do would be to work out a set of regulations and laws making it possible for the industry to operate and to give us time to determine whether there is any need for this sort of direct government intervention.

In setting up Petro-Canada, I cannot help comparing the involvement of the federal government in the grain industry in the form of the Canadian government elevator system. This system, which costs the taxpayers millions and millions of dollars, has to all intents and purposes been unused through the years and a continual drain on the hard pressed taxpayers of this country. I cannot help wondering whether the proposed investment can be justified. You have to ask, will the exploration required from this corporation go over the same ground on which private corporations have carried out their exploration? Surely, if those private companies found nothing, what is the point in returning to look in the same place?

In Clause 22 of the statute, Petro-Canada is given what amounts to a blank cheque in the form of virtually unlimited ability to receive advances from the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada. This can be done either by way of loan or purchase. It is difficult to understand how the new corporation can ensure lower energy prices for Canadians. Provincial power corporations have been unable to keep their rates down, even with 100 per cent ownership of the industry. It is equally difficult to understand how this government corporation can equalize oil prices in all regions of Canada. It is generally estimated that the cost to the Canadian taxpayers of creating this national corporation, if it is to be a significant force in the industry, will be up to $6 billion and, as I said before, the task can take anywhere from 15 to 20 years to accomplish even assuming a high degree of exploration success.

It seems that in a period in our economic history when Canada is experiencing a horrendous rate of inflation, it is really inappropriate for the government to preoccupy itself with an empire-building oil exploration venture which will increase rather than lessen the inflationary pressures that work in our economy, and which will render more scarce already scarce materials, personnel and hardware which otherwise would be deployed in the private sector.

I have been in this business of government long enough to know that we do not have a group of wise men and women making altogether sensible decisions in the society's greater interests. I have found, instead, waste, bias, stupidity, arrogance, a concentration of trivia and, worst of all, arbitrary and often uncontrolled power. The agencies enforcing federal and provincial regulations are increasing and the administrative cost of this army of enforcers represents but the tip of the iceberg: it is the cost imposed on the private sector that is really large.

The major cost resulting from the operations of this growing force of federal inspectors and regulators shows up in the added expenses of business firms who must comply with their directives, and who inevitably have to pass on these costs to their consumers; therefore, a substantial inflationary multiplier must be applied to direct outlays in respect of federal controls. It is easy to imagine the number of superintendents and foremen across this country who spend thousands of man-hours a year guiding inspectors through their plants. This need for government inspectors also has siphoned off experienced supervisory personnel.

A direct private cost resulting from the expansion of government controls is the growing paperwork burden imposed on business firms through the expensive and time-consuming process of submitting reports, making applications, filling out questionnaires, replying to orders and directives and appealing to the courts from rulings and regulatory opinions. There are literally thousands of different types of approved government forms.

Another hidden cost of government regulation is the reduced rate of innovation. The longer it takes for some change to be approved by a government regulatory agency for a new or improved product or a more efficient production process, the less likely it is that the change will ever be made. I would like to see the Government of Canada put its efforts into developing alternate sources of energy along the lines of our good friends in the United States. Certainly, I believe atomic energy is an appropriate role for government but I am satisfied that private enterprise can continue to do a good job in our oil industry.

We are one of few nations in the world which should have surplus resources for the next 100 years, and I hope that the opportunity this gives us will not be lost by the fumbling of a politically oriented government. The real issue before us right now is how to take the best course of action to bring to the people of Canada the opportunities our resources give them at a time when the world so desperately needs them. As we have said many times in the House, the simplest, easiest and best alternative is to let Canadians as individuals own this country. This can be done by providing a tax incentive to Canadians as individuals to increase their ownership of the five major companies, for instance, which control our oil industry. This could be done in a very few years. I have great difficulty in believing that the oil companies operating in this country are our enemies.

Another clause in the bill that gives me cause to ponder is clause 7, subparagraph (2) which reads:

The corporation shall comply with any directions from time to time given to it in writing by the governor-in-council or the minister with respect to the exercise of its powers.

This means, very definitely, that final control reverts to the minister or, ultimately, to the cabinet. All the other clauses should be read with clause 7 in mind, for the minister or the cabinet may alter or interfere with the operation of this company at any time; and we all know what sort of control parliament has over a Cown corporation such as the CNR or Air Canada.

During the last three years we have seen changes in relation to government and the private sector that none of us could have predicted. Who would have thought, even three years ago, that we would hear a minister of the Crown suggest in this House that we nationalize the CPR, or within the last few months hear a minister of the Crown suggest that we nationalize our grain handling business? Now, in effect, we have a bill before us to nationalize our petroleum industry.

I have said many times that our civil service mandarins, the advisers to the government, are disdainful of trade; they like to deal in the smooth, professional manner in the theoretical arena. The immediate need, surely, is for some plain common sense, for some meaningful consultation between government and industry. The National Energy Board calls for an economically healthy petroleum industry. I suggest the only way to get it is to return to our traditional way of consulting with our partners in the private sector.

In the period 1947 to 1973, total government take in respect of the exploration-production phase of the oil industry's operations amounted to about $6.5 billion, or almost 30 per cent of gross revenues. These numbers include taxes, royalties, lease rentals and bonus payments made for leases. In 1974, with the introduction of higher royalties, government will take directly some $2.5 billion, or 48 per cent of the industry's gross revenue. Surely this shows that private industry is carrying its share of the tax load.

As I said before, Mr. Speaker, it appears to me that the government deliberately attempted to destroy a necessary industry. In 1970 the federal government revoked, without prior consultation or notice, the federal oil and gas land order of 1961. For four years the petroleum industry has been left without any basis for establishing the royalties and terms under which half of the exploratory permits of the Arctic are operated, so most of the activity is confined to commitments made years ago. Now we have double royalty rates on gas and oil in the western provinces.

● (1600)

The idea that a national oil company will buy more efficiently than a private company will need some explanation. Our oil industry in Canada has, in a few short years, brought this country from a position of complete dependence on imported oil and gas to its place today, where it is the only developed country in the world which can claim self-sufficiency in energy. The government plans to replace all this with an oil company which will not simply search for reserves and increase Canada's present output, but it will be a tool of the government which will be motivated by political expediency.

[Mr. Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek).]

This bill hits at one industry upon which so many others are based and are dependent on in our energy-geared economy. If the energy situation is to be analysed, I do not expect the government to stop there. I repeat, most countries which enjoy the highest standards of living basically depend upon the private sector to produce and distribute their resources.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, in the many years that I have been in this House, and as a result of viewing the trends in government, I have been in a quandary sometimes in reaching a definite conclusion regarding the motivation and the political philosophy of the party now occupying the treasury benches. It says it is a political party, and it says it is a middle-of-the-road free enterprise party, but I have seen over the years a very heavy intrusion of the hand of the state in the economy.

There is no question today that this administration is deeply imbued with the spirit of socialism. It has participated in a number of industries. As a matter of fact, with the development of the Canada Development Corporation the government seeks to enter into many facets of industry, not only in this country, but through the Canada Development Corporation it seeks to spend Canadian money in participation in industries abroad. Isn't that something?

Now we come to what I consider to be an act which quietly seeks to establish a national petroleum corporation, namely, Petro-Canada. The only thing is that the government has not disclosed, either to its membership or to the people of this country, the full scope of this bill. I am sure not ten members opposite have read the objects and powers of this bill. For instance, they do not know that the bill will authorize the government to enter into the business of generation, distribution and sale of electric power beyond the power of the Northwest Territories Power Commission and the Yukon Power Commission which they have already set up. To appreciate this, hon. members have only to read clause 3 and clause 6(d). The latter subclause reads, "to produce, distribute, transport and market other fuels and energy". This is what parliament will authorize Petro-Can to do. Mr. Speaker, some time, somewhere down the road recourse will be had to this particular provision and we will all wonder what has happened. The answer will be that in 1975 parliament passed an act which permitted the government to do this.

Parliament and the people of Canada are being asked to approve the creation of a national petroleum corporation. But what is its purpose? Is it to swell the ranks of the public service of Canada? That is bound to be the first conclusion. Just watch the salary scales of the executives of a corporation of this kind. Will they fight inflation? No, they will set inflation. Has anyone looked at the salary scales of executives of Canada Development Corporation? I invite members of the NDP, who were such strong advocates of the CDC, to look at the salary scales of the executive officers. Of the 14 highest salaries, not one last year was under $27,000. The chairman and the deputy chairman made $40,000 plus, and earn more than the minister.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The way in which the government sets up these corporations is ridiculous. It staffs them with people with good connections and pays them extraordinarily good salaries. What is the return to the Crown? In many instances it is less than nothing, particularly in those areas where they are competing with private enterprise. I am not saying that private enterprise is necessarily 100 per cent correct. It has many faults. But compared with state corporations and many of our Crown corporations they are paragons of efficiency and virtue. One would expect that in order to justify the establishment of this new Crown organization, this new infant Frankenstein, it would be indicated by the government—and they have failed to do so—that the Canadian populace would benefit by lower prices of petroleum products: that does not mean only stove oil, but also gasoline at the pumps and lubricating oils—the whole panopoly of petroleum products. One would expect there would be a more efficient operation of the oil and gas industry in this country. I am not saying the oil industry is 100 per cent efficient, for I dare say in areas such as marketing it could be improved. Mistakes are made in the private sector, so God only knows what blunders will be made in the public sector, and there are many classic examples already in this country and other countries.

● (1610)

We should have, as a third objective, a more efficient and more intensive search for oil and gas in this country, and perhaps even offshore. There has been not the slightest indication by the minister or any of his supporters that we would pay less, that the administration would be more efficient or that there would be an increase in reserves of petroleum resources as a result of this bill. Why, then, should we go through this exercise, Mr. Speaker? We must start exploring the minds of this administration. I was going to say "mind" of this administration, but I cannot discern one. We can discern the minds of people who have put together this potential industrial—I was going to say "Frankenstein", but I do not know if it would even come to life, to be capitalized out of the pockets of Canadians in competition with the demands of industry.

The schizophrenia of this administration with regard to Canadian investment is fantastic. On the one hand they exhort Canadians to invest in Canadian business and industry, but by the Income Tax Act discourage them from doing so. They give advantages to foreigners who invest in Canada, and then wonder at the results. They pass the Foreign Investment Review Act with a hypocrisy and a piety that is unbecoming in public life in Canada. Advocates of the Foreign Investment Review Act and its extension want to see Canadians invest in Canadian industry, particularly resources.

This administration set up the Canada Development Corporation, lent it money and predicted a great future for it. But what has it done, Mr. Speaker? It took the money from the public treasury, money that Canadians were taxed to provide, or from the government bonds which they bought. It entered the resource development field by buying control of Texas Gulf and Sulphur and participated in the production of copper and related minerals in northern Ontario. You might say that is participating in Canadian development, but when it bought Connaught Laboratories that was not participating in Canadian development, nor are several of the other purchases CDC made. Then it bought some companies operating offshore.

If this government wanted to participate in and encourage development of Canadian resources, why did it set up Petro-Can? It merely had to indicate to the Canada Development Corporation that, along with private industry, it could participate in the development of the tar sands, or it could have set up parallel participation in the exploration and development of Arctic petroleum resources with Panarctic and its associates. That is a classic example, Mr. Speaker.

Why set up this corporate bloodsucker—that is all I can call it. As the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Hamilton) pointed out, it will just mean hiring more stooges to carry out government directives. Who is going to be president and chief executive officer of this corporation? The minister. Who is going to be vice-president and assistant to the chief executive officer? The deputy minister. Who will be on the board of directors? Members of the cabinet.

As my colleague pointed out, clause 7 is all too clear when we see all the powers the corporation will have. Those powers should be inscribed in Hansard, Mr. Speaker, and every newspaper should publish them to show what this so-called saviour of Canada would be able to do at the time of an energy crisis. It would show that the government's gesture in presenting this bill is a mockery and that it cannot achieve its objectives. A company such as this requires more knowledge than many people have of the oil industry. It seems to many people, that if they have hooked up to a gas pump more than three times, they consider themselves experts on the oil industry. Have they gone out into the field and seen what is required to put together a lease, or what financing is required? Have they seen what is required to undertake exploration and development.

What do the government know about the training of people involved in the oil industry? What do they know about what it takes to bring oil into production and bring it to market and sell it when it has been processed further? They have not the slightest idea. What do they know of how the industry was built up, of the camps which were established and housed the men and women who participated in the search for and development of oil properties?

What do they know about the type of industry which is needed to maintain all the mechanical equipment connected with the oil industry, equipment ranging from servicing rigs to trucks? What do they know of the expertise needed for the oil industry? I dare say that when oil was discovered at Leduc No. 1 in February, 1947, not more than five welders in Canada could put together a piece of pipeline. I do not suppose there was a steel manufacturer in Canada who knew how to provide pipe for the pipeline. People in the industry had to be trained. Now we have thousands upon thousands of specialists who have come from all walks of life in Canada and who went out to the oil fields of Alberta and Saskatchewan. Of course, Saskatchewan, because of the doctrinaire nonsense which continued during the 1940s and 1950s, threw away its great opportunity; but that is the province's problem. The people of Saskatchewan moved to Alberta in hundreds of thousands.

This government, by the introduction of two successive budgets and some pigheaded thinking, has tried to master that industry. Why? It should not have anything to do with the industry, in any way. The setting up of the proposed corporation is a further attempt by the present administration to interfere with the development and distribution of natural resources by the provinces. Frankly, I am amazed that most provinces have not risen up in arms, although some have voiced their objections. Most of them, because they do not possess oil and gas, do not find at the moment that this question is of particular concern to them. But the provisions of the May and November budgets having to do with resource royalties affect all resource development. I am astounded by the pusillanimous and supine attitude of a number of provincial administrations to the interference by the federal government in fields in which that government has no business.

We hear people talking of more Canadian participation in Canadian enterprise. Everybody wants more Canadian participation. I was going to say that the idea is in the same category as motherhood. Unfortunately, a lot of people have downgraded motherhood. A much more acceptable idea has to do with Canadian participation in Canadian industry and in Canadian resource development. That is to be the objective, the Holy Grail of all of us in Canada. That is the government's objective. How does it propose to reach it? How does the government propose to finance the corporation?

Some important talks are scheduled to take place this week. I have heard many hypotheses as to the results and I think one can foretell some of the consequences. I will not do so at this time; I will simply say that Canadians have been exhorted to participate more in Canadian business. I should like to see much more Canadian participation in the ownership of Canadian businesses. But how can Canadians do this in the face of an Income Tax Act that overtaxes? Somehow there has developed a philosophy in Canada which says that we are to show ever greater concern for certain social services and hand-outs, all of which are provided from an extremely narrow economic base.

Certainly, we like to see the less fortunate get a helping hand when they need it; we like to see the development of good, sound health services—but not at fantastically over-inflated costs. We like to see good medical services but, again, not at wildly inflated costs. We want to see less injustice and more criminals rehabilitated through a much better parole system than we have now, so that we will not have the present high concentration of Canadians in our penal institutions. We want to see programs under which we can devote appropriate sums of money to our native population. We should give them a strong base and let them achieve what they want, which is not necessarily what the white man wants. Our trouble all along has been that all the thinking on behalf of native peoples has been done by the white man, who has tried to mould them to his image. That will not be the solution in future.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

Under this bill, the government is trying to mould the public mind. Canadian resources shall be developed as the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) and his colleagues see fit. I spoke about the president and chief executive officer of the corporation. Let me refer to clause 7(2) of this bill. It says that the corporation shall accept all written instructions from the governor in council. Did any member on the government side look at clause 7(3)? It says that the budget of Petro-Canada shall be approved annually by the cabinet. Why set up a board, Mr. Speaker? Why set up a group of executive officers? The corporation might as well be run as another section of a department, with a director in charge.

● (1630)

I mentioned that one of the objectives of this corporation should be lower prices. The corporation is supposed to engage in the marketing, distribution and sale of petroleum products. However, it will be much like the various liquor commissions in this country which respond to pressure from cabinet, the attorney general or some other officer. Without any justification, they hike the prices of their products merely because the government requires more money—hidden taxation without representation. I do not know why in various provinces they have not blown the whistle on the way their liquor boards operate. I notice some people in this province are getting concerned about how they operate with regard to their pricing policies.

We see interference in interprovincial trade by setting up direct tariffs against products from other provinces or engaging in indirect Customs tariff barriers. We saw an example of that this past summer between Quebec and Ontario with regard to their wines and apple ciders. This happens within Canada, but it is all done without any control. The ugly monster that is being created, Petro-Canada, could behave in precisely the same way with regard to oil and gas products. It will be responsible directly to the minister and the government, but to no one else.

If one goes through this bill page by page he will find more reasons why it should not be supported by the House. Do hon. members think this corporation is required for the participation by the Government of Canada in Syncrude? Not at all. That would be something worth while and proper for the Canada Development Corporation, namely, the development of Canadian resources.

We are told this corporation is required to purchase petroleum products from abroad. We have already in existence the Canadian Commercial Corporation. It has been in existence for many years. That corporation is engaged in the purchase of petroleum products. With the allocation of a few personnel if necessary, it would respond to whatever is required—although at the moment there has been no demonstrated need for that particular characteristic or quality by the Canadian Commercial Corporation.

Nor does Canada require to purchase petroleum products through any state organization. It would be interesting to know what happened to the last and most spectacular purchase of petroleum products on behalf of this government by the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer), on the advice of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. What happened to the millions of barrels of oil that were purchased, while afloat, at about $30 a barrel and then never used? Where is that oil? Maybe the minister can tell us. Was it consumed? If not, what were the storage charges to be added to the cost of acquisition? If it was disposed of, what was the price of disposition? What was the sale price? What was the total loss or cost to Canadian taxpayers? What organization bore that loss, or is that some hidden expenditure well cushioned behind some fuzzy figures and vague descriptions that may appear either in an estimate or supplementary estimate? These are answers we want with regard to the operations and the background of this organization.

Notwithstanding what the House may think about this bill, if this organization should become a fact where will it get its trained personnel? Who will put that team together? With regard to what operations will they be trained? Where will they acquire the experience to bring them up to the peak of efficiency that is supposed to be their lot? How long will this take? What will be the investment in the training and development of this corporation before it becomes a reality and starts to produce for the benefit of the Canadian people?

Yesterday, over television, I heard the Premier of Saskatchewan, an old friend of mine, talk about Sask Oil, something they put together quite some time ago in their doctrinaire approach to the development of natural resources in that province. I am surprised that the people of Saskatchewan tolerate it. In the late forties or early fifties they had the classic example of a previous administration under the direction of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas).

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Careful!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Saskatchewan lost a golden opportunity to have the first foot in the door with regard to Interprovincial Pipe Line and the disposal of its petroleum products in an eastern Canadian market that was hungry for those products and able to absorb them. How they worked at it! One had only to be there to see the blind foolishness. I agree that some profit was made by certain people, but it was not the oil industry. They now have this outfit called Sask Oil. Premier Blakeney says they are drilling the odd hole. It will be interesting to see just what they will get, and how far the people of Saskatchewan will get with that outfit in comparison with the Canadian independents that were operating in Saskatchewan. Remember, it is the Canadian independents who were chased out of Canada. Although it may be the international conglomerates which are sitting on top of the developments, the actual drilling was being done by the independent drilling companies, or at least 80 per cent of it was. All this, including the servicing and everything that went with it, has been knocked on the head.

● (1640)

I am suggesting to you, Mr. Speaker, that it will be a decade at least, maybe 15 years, before the company we are being asked to establish, Petro-Canada, ever returns a penny by way of benefit to this country. In the interval, it will cost us thousands of jobs and millions of dollars as taxpayers. It will raise false hopes among certain people, and its presence will serve to discourage those who want to get on with the business. After all, the government has much more clout in the financial markets than have the independent companies. Talk about conflict of interest, or vested interest! Here is the Government of Canada actively engaging in competition with private firms, whether Canadian or international, and deciding what the tax structure is to be. Not a penny would be paid by Petro-Canada. In any case, that company would have no income. But what about the tax penalties imposed upon the private sector?

Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will vote against this bill and kill the ignominious corporation we are being asked to set up.

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) has described to us in glowing terms how the introduction of Bill C-8 will "ensure for Canadians adequate and reliable supplies of energy at reasonable prices". I am not sure what the minister considers to be a reasonable price. It is a matter of relativity, I suppose, but I find it difficult to believe that $1 billion is a reasonable price. The reasonableness of this amount is even more questionable when one realizes that it will be spent to buy a service which we already possess, and a bargain at any price, even at $1 billion, is no bargain if it is something one already has.

What the bill before us will do is establish yet another Crown corporation and, worse still, an unnecessary one. The means of assuring Canada's fair share from her natural resources is available right now. The minister says the new Crown corporation will be able to "mobilize capital on an important scale." What he is really saying is that more tax dollars will be mobilized right out of our pockets. I would point out that the government, just a short time ago, invested over $300 million for a 15 per cent share in Syncrude, which was an investment into our resource development. The ability to make future investments is already an actuality. Why should the Canadian taxpayer be asked to pay $500 million to $1 billion for something he already has? I doubt that the taxpayer will be asked, though, and I doubt very much if the government would really want to hear the answer.

We are reminded that we already hold nearly a half interest in an oil company, Panarctic Oils Limited, and that for eight years this company has carried out extensive exploration operations in the north. Yet one of the reasons we are given for the creation of Petro-Canada is that we will be able to assist in oil exploration. Why does the government not concentrate on assisting the companies already in existence? Why does it not encourage private enterprise and initiative, rather than establish joint operations? Surely, companies which have been operating within the framework of government, or working jointly with government, or even in competition with government, know all too well to whose advantage such arrangements work.

The minister said that the directors "from time to time . . . may judge that short-term profit maximization is not in the interest of the shareholders." The shareholders are, of course, you and I—the Canadian people. In the next breath he tells us that the capital resources will be so substantial that we should be able to expect a significant role in the petroleum investment picture at a relatively early stage in its life. Do these statements not seem somewhat contradictory, Mr. Speaker? It seems the government has ensured itself of being an accurate forecaster no matter which turn events may take.

The minister speaks of those countries from which we import crude oil, and says each one has its own state oil company. I wonder how many private companies are now allowed to operate in competition with them. Also, I wonder how significantly the people in those countries have benefited from state ownership of the industry. Why should we buy with our tax dollars, even at the minister's so-called reasonable price tag of $1 billion, something we already have in our possession? I do not understand this logic and I would be grateful if the minister could explain it to me. Am I the only member in this House to whom this kind of logic is completely illogical?

An hon. Member: Yes.

Mr. Elzinga: Is there any logic in paying out three times the value of a service one already enjoys? Is there any logic in establishing an unnecessary Crown corporation? Is there any logic in creating yet more bureaucracy? Are tax dollars so abundant that we have one billion of them to waste? I think not.

The minister went on to say that his "emphasis on long-term planning is deliberate and necessary". What a lovely ring that phrase "long-term planning" has to it. Nevertheless, the ring sounds rather hollow when the hon. gentleman goes on to assure us that the petroleum venture will be undertaken in the "full realization that hazards and uncertainties await us". Does the government really plan, in the long term, to embark on a venture which is fraught with risk and uncertainty? It sounds very much as though this is the case, bearing in mind that these are the words of the minister himself, presumably the most knowledgeable person in the field of energy, mines and resources. When I hear about long-term planning filled with hazards and uncertainty, I am not very confident about the outcome of that planning. It seems reasonable to assume that long-term planning should have a much more solid base than risk and uncertainty.

I must say I was impressed by the candour of the minister when he warned us that the establishment of a national petroleum company would not likely lead to early and spectacular results in terms of energy development and financial success. It occurs to me that for a billion dollars or more we might have been allowed a few such illusions. After telling us why the change in domestic and international energy affairs made it necessary for the federal government to get into the act, the minister went on to laud private companies. It did not mean, he said, that the government finds that Canada has not been well served by private enterprise in the petroleum industry. To use his words, private companies "have generally worked vigorously to develop our oil and gas resources, to create transportation systems for them and to refine and distribute oil products efficiently." The privately-owned Canadian oil industry, he added, has a good record of technical and managerial innovation.

If the minister truly believes that private industry has done such a first rate job, why does he feel it necessary now for the government to step in and create another Crown company? Does he really feel that such a corporation can improve on this good record of technical and managerial innovation? The minister says that the government does not feel assured that the private sector can be relied upon to mobilize all the enormous amounts of capital which will be required to secure energy development for long-term Canadian needs. May I ask why he feels that private enterprise cannot be relied upon to do so, especially having given us his glowing account of its past achievements?

When the minister tells us that he believes the majority of Canadians will derive a great sense of pride, satisfaction and confidence in owning a portion of this Canadian industry, is he saying that Canadians prefer to have their industry owned by the government rather than by private enterprise? Is he saying that the Canadian people prefer public ownership? I think he is taking an awful lot for granted if that is how he interprets the preference of the citizens of this country.

The minister should ask the people of Saskatchewan how much pride and confidence they felt when the provincial government took over so much of the industry, with such disastrous results. The losses ran to millions and millions of dollars and these industries either had to be abandoned or turned back to private enterprise in order to make them viable. In the meantime, new industries bypassed Saskatchewan and established themselves elsewhere, unemployment increased and taxes were raised. An exodus of residents of the province then ensued. I would doubt that the people of Saskatchewan felt much satisfaction in that debacle.

If the government wants to get into the role of businessman, it should look closely at its record, past and present. I suggest it is less than efficient in that role. A number of instances of that inefficiency have been pointed out by other members, and if one needed some pretty concrete evidence of the government's success as an employer, one would only have to listen to some of the many hundreds of government employees who have been striking, who are striking and who will be striking. We need only look in our own front yard during the last few weeks to see some concrete evidence of the discontent of many thousands of government employees. They have been right outside the House telling us in a most visible way that their wages did not compare to those being paid to employees in similar job situations in the private sector of the business world.

Of course we want as high an employment rate as possible, with stable prices and little regional disparity in income and living conditions. However, when the government does take a direct stand in the production and distribution of goods and services, the track record is not very glowing. All we need do is take a look at the postal department today. How can the government explain away facts like Air Canada suffering heavy losses while CP Air makes a profit and provides better service on a more restricted budget? Government-operated enterprises have not been renowned for their efficiency, either by way of profits or by way of services. Is it the intention of the government to destroy personal initiative? If so, it is certainly going about it in a most effective way.

Let us not forget that this country was built on personal initiative and enterprise, hand in hand with imagination and hard work. The minister himself says that this is no time to be short-sighted or timid. There is nothing short-sighted or timid about our ancestors who pioneered this country. If we discourage the spirit of adventure and sap the imagination of our people, what will we be left with? A lethargic, indolent public sitting around waiting for the hand-outs from Big Daddy on the Hill. Does this government want to become involved in every aspect of Canadian life? Is this the kind of society that we really want to create? I do not believe it is, but this Liberal administration is attempting to create such a society.

An hon. Member: A lot of people in this country do not think so.

Mr. Elzinga: That is because they were somewhat deceived by people on the other side of this House running around the country.

An hon. Member: Where were you running?

Mr. Elzinga: Just in my own riding. There seems to be increasing government interference in the area of private industry, private enterprise, and indeed in the private lives of individuals in this country. It is becoming increasingly clear that the direction this government is taking is toward massive central control. Canadians have the right to know of the erosion of their personal freedoms in business and in their private lives. If it is the intention of the present government to take away the self-determination of the individual and small businessman, then let it so declare this intention and stop sneaking its socialism in through the back door.

May I call it five o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay)—Administration of Justice—Dredging contracts at Hamilton—Possible consultations with minister pursuant to sections 4 and 5 of justice act; the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche)—External Affairs—Government policy on assisting adult refugees from Viet Nam; the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes)—Environmental Affairs—Alberta decision to allow increased emissions of sulphur dioxide from Syncrude plant.

It being five o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business, as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions, public bills.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I think there will be some agreement to proceeding to notice of motion No. 31 standing in he name of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the House agree to proceed with notice of motion No. 31, appearing in the name of the hon. member for Edmonton West, and to stand all other notices of motions preceding motion No. 31 on the notice paper?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[Translation]

PENSIONS

SUGGESTED REMOVAL OF LIMITATIONS TO ENTITLEMENT OF CERTAIN CATEGORIES OF PERSONS IN FEDERAL SERVICE

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of removing all limitations and restrictions whatsoever on the entitlement and payment of pensions, superannuation or retirement allowances of whatever kind to retired members of the Canadian Defence Forces, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, Senators and Members of Parliament when any such person so entitled enters into the service of the government, whether by way of the Public Service Commission, or by appointment by the federal authority to any Commission, Board or other body or to the Judiciary of Canada or in any other manner.

[English]

He said: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank hon. members for their unanimous consent. I merely intend to raise this matter and to speak very briefly. I think it is understood that by agreement a reply will be given by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Reid) and that the motion will then be withdrawn.

I might say it gives me a great deal of satisfaction at this moment to see incorporated the pith and substance of my motion in a bill which is now on the order paper. I refer to Bill C-52. Of course, we all hope and pray that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp), as government House leader, will see to it that the bill is referred to this House for second reading and then sent to the appropriate committee for consideration.

● (1700)

This involves many more important aspects than just the subject matter of my motion, and I am sure hon. members will readily agree when they consider the amendments to the Public Service Superannuation Act, the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act, and a number of provisions of other superannuation acts which deal with equality as between male and female employees. I am sure they will readily agree as well that this will restore some sanity and a more equitable level to the positions of people who have been drawing pensions having served in the armed forces, the RCMP, as well as in the House of Commons or in the Senate, particularly as this relates to future service in the employment of the government of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I would have a question to ask him with his permission.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Once I have concluded my remarks which will be very short.

[English]

Let me say for the record that this motion has been considered on a number of occasions in the House. The subject matter was considered by the Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates which made recommendations to this House in a unanimous report that was accepted in principle by the government.

Let me refer hon. members to Bill C-52 in so far as it concerns this House. If they will look at clause 91 at page 77, where sections 31 and 33 of the Senate and House of Commons Act are withdrawn, they will note that this will generally cover the problem I have spoken of as it affects this House.

There are only one or two additional things I should like to say about this motion. What the motion proposes is that individuals who have served as members of this House will be able to continue their contributions to the service of Canada without their retirement pensions being impaired in any way. I might add that this will work in the opposite direction in so far as former members of the public service serving in this House are concerned.

Pension matters are very important in today's social context, and it seems to me totally unjust that a member of the public service of Canada, the armed forces, the RCMP, or the public service of a province or perhaps even a municipality, having served 10 or 15 years during which time he acquired a vested pension interest, should not be able to enter this House and merge his pensionable service and entitlement with any entitlement he may earn in this House.

We know that under the pension scheme regulations in this House one has to participate in at least two election campaigns and serve a minimum of six years. What happens to an individual who goes out at the end of four years? All that would happen if we adopted the principle of this motion is that his service, for example, in a provincial government, of 15 years would be combined with his four years in this House so that he could retire with a pension based on the total 19 years. After all, that individual had served in the public service for a total of 19 years so why not give him a pension entitlement based on that length of service? The same thing would apply in respect of service in the armed forces.

I do not see why a man who has served for 20 years in the public service cannot bring that service and his pension entitlement to the House of Commons. The same should apply to an individual who is elected to this House and either voluntarily or involuntarily retires from this place and takes up pensionable employment in the public service of Canada. He should be entitled to add his service years here in the House to his years of public service whether in the service of the government of Canada or of a province. I do not see any difficulty in that regard.

A member of the armed forces can join the public service of Canada and have his armed forces service added to his pensionable service time providing he makes an appropriate election and certain adjustments to contributions are carried out. That individual can then carry on with his pension scheme as though he had always been employed in the public service of Canada.

We saw a breakthrough some years ago which allowed individuals in the public service of Canada to carry their pension entitlements to provincial public service, and vice-versa, providing special adjustments were effected. Why should those at the elective level not be allowed to participate in this portability of pension entitlement? These people have earned the entitlement and should not be placed in a second class category.

What I have outlined in respect of my motion and Bill C-52 should apply to persons in the House of Commons and the Senate who might move back and forth between various public service areas with portable pension entitlements. On the basis of what I have said, and subject to the remarks of the hon. parliamentary secretary, I would be prepared to withdraw my motion.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, in view of the remarks of the hon. member I should like to direct a question to him, and I relate my question specifically to his comments during the debate on Bill C-8. At that time he referred to the fees contemplated for directors of that company as exorbitant. In the event that he was appointed to that Crown corporation would he be ready to accept the exorbitant fee and the pension from this place to which he would be entitled?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I was not referring specifically to directors' fees. I said that they would be executive officers comparable to those levels in the public service of Canada with very generous salaries. The parliamentary secretary should not try to distort my words. His memory may be faulty—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reid: He is a private member.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): In view of the game of musical chairs that takes place over there, Mr. Speaker, perhaps I thought that the hon. member was about to be deposited on the floor, or had been deposited there. The way this government operates there would be much more likelihood of the hon. member being appointed to the positions in question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am sure he would want to be in the position to take with him whatever pension entitlement he may have earned here. If the hon. member should happen to be named to the bench, as hon. members have been from both sides of the House, there is no reason why he should not take with him whatever pension entitlement he has contributed to and earned here. At the moment his estate can collect a contribution, and that is about all. I think this is total nonsense.

• (1710)

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I just want to say that a motion in similar terms was put forward by the hon. member last year and, as a result of it or of the discussion in the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, that motion having been passed by House and sent to the committee, the government has brought forward Bill C-52 which will be discussed in due course. I think some of the problems and suggestions raised by the hon. member will be discussed in further detail, and perhaps even within a legislative framework which might see this matter come forward in law at a later date.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, may I now seek consent of the House to withdraw the motion?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) have unanimous consent to withdraw his motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Usually at this point the suggestion is made that we call it six o'clock and I suspect that suggestion will be forthcoming and will probably be agreed to once more. I simply make the point that we have done this three or four times during this session by agreement, but one thing that happens is we find ourselves using up the 40 hours we are allowed on Mondays and Tuesdays for private members' business. I would suggest, since we may now be rising at 5.15 p.m., that this day not count as the 29th hour under the rule under which we have these private members' hours on Mondays and Tuesdays. There has been some discussion about this and I believe, Mr. Speaker, you will find there is agreement.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Hon. members have heard the suggestion just made. Is it agreed by unanimous consent that this hour not be counted in the 40 hours allotted to private members?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Reid: Six o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it also agreed that we call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired, in part, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock p.m.

At 5.15 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

PETRO-CANADA ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH CROWN CORPORATION

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) that Bill C-8, to establish a national petroleum company, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, probably one of the most difficult tasks that I have undertaken since coming to the House of Commons is the one that faces me at present when I say that the Minister of Energy Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) has been a disaster and is leading all Canadians on a disastrous course. This is a great misfortune.

We are not making these statements so that some time in the future we can say "we told you so," because by then it will be too late. What we are doing now is telling the Canadian people exactly what is happening, so that instead of saying "we told you so" we can say "we are telling you now".

The problem started some time ago. There is no necessity for the confrontation that has taken place between the industry—when I say industry I mean all segments of the oil and petroleum industry—the producing provinces—and when I say producing provinces, I mean British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan—and the federal government. It would not be so bad if it were kept at that level, but it is not. It has now infiltrated down to a great many people in Canada. It is a great misfortune that there has not been a spirit of consultation rather than the confrontation that has taken place. If there had been more consultation we would not necessarily now be debating the bill that is before us.

I lay the whole blame at the feet of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources because he is the one who is in a position to do something about it. I should like to put on record a question and answer as recorded in Hansard of September 21, 1973, at page 6794. This is a question that I put to the minister with regard to his dealings with the province of Alberta. I said:

> Mr. Speaker, I have a related question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the letter to Premier Lougheed of Alberta which was tabled in the House on March 10, 1972, by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources stating in part that "it is of paramount importance that the relationship of the Government of Canada to the government of Alberta in energy policy matters be one of co-operation and collaboration", I should like to ask the minister why that assurance was not honoured?

The minister replied:

> Mr. Speaker, I would respond to the hon. gentleman that, given the time constraint in which this decision has to be made, it was honoured to the best of our ability. In particular, with regard to the decision of the National Energy Board on September 12 concerning export of oil to the United States, we had really only a period of overnight to make that decision. We discussed it with the Alberta minister, who was present in Ottawa the following day, just as soon as the cabinet decision had been made.

The order had been given to the Alberta minister, I understand, 20 minutes before the end of the meeting. I asked the minister another question:

Did the minister attempt to meet with the Premier of Alberta on his recent visit to Alberta?

The minister replied:

Mr. Speaker, I did see a report on the morning that I flew to Calgary to see the industry that the premier expected to see me. That report in the Globe and Mail turned out to be a mistake.

I suggest that the only mistake made is in having this minister as Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in a crucial period of time. There has not been one instance since he has taken office in which action has been taken in the best interests of Canada.

We all remember the situation, some 18 months ago, when the minister was making preparation and exciting all Canadians with the prediction that there was going to be an energy crisis. Just six months later the minister realized that the energy crisis which he had predicted had not come about. Last spring a year ago there was more oil in the pipelines in Canada than there had been for some time, and the ships then at sea were travelling a slow pace because there was no place for them to unload their oil.

In view of what I said I suggest that the minister has made a series of mistakes and is continuing to make them primarily by trying to establish another Crown corporation. The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) pointed out to the minister in no unequivocal terms that Crown corporations have not worked for the best interests of Canadians to any marked degree. Consider, for instance, CBC which had a deficit of $200 million in 1972, whereas, as the hon. member for York-Simcoe stated, at the same time three national networks in the United States accumulated profits amounting to the same figure. Let us consider also Air Canada as against CP Air. It was Air Canada that wanted a 10 per cent increase in rates, not CP Air. In view of these facts we cannot agree that Crown corporations are the answer to our problems because it has been proven, time and time again, that this is not the case.

I would like to quote from the 1973 Canada Year Book as follows:

Alberta is Canada's major oil producer—

Incidentally, in case some hon. members do not realize that, let me point out that the reason why we from Alberta are very concerned about Petro-Canada is that the oil industry in Alberta is of the utmost importance to our economic well-being.

—as reflected in the steady increase of its share of the national output which has climbed from 69 per cent in 1967 to 75 per cent in 1971. Production could be even greater since the developed fields are now being operated below capacity. At present production rates, proven economic reserves of oil total about 20 years' supply. Current exploration in Alberta is at a moderate level with new field exploration awaiting the outcome of economic and environmental studies on new sources of oil above the Arctic Circle.

Alberta's total minerals output in 1971 was valued at $1,640 million of which fuels accounted for $1,575 million; one third of the remainder was fuel by-product sulphur and two thirds was structural materials—

In a report by the president of Imperial Oil in March of this year the following statement is to be found:

Because of reduced cash flow, the petroleum industry generally is having to cut back on its program and will not be able to meet Canada's petroleum requirements. Canada is approaching a position where it will import more oil than it produces; with a negative effect on the country's balance of payments of several billion dollars a year. To be self-sufficient in the late 1980s will require expenditures of some $50 billion in the next ten years.

● (2010)

The point is that within two years we find ourselves facing a potential shortage, and perhaps by 1980 we will even be a net importer of oil because of the action of the federal government. The government should not get into areas where it has no business, and where it has neither the technical knowledge nor the ability to make the best use of the reserves.

I should like to read from Nickle's Daily Oil Bulletin for March 19, 1975, which has this to say:

Nabors Drilling Ltd., Calgary-based oilwell drilling contractor, reported that it has a rig moving out of southern Alberta. Like numerous other firms operating drilling equipment in Canada, this company is closely watching developments on both sides of the 49th parallel and will make ensuing decisions on the basis of forthcoming events. Nabors has now plans to move additional rigs out of Canada.

In view of the fact that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) said that his new budget was going to prevent this, it would seem that either he or the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will have to reconsider his plans in order to maintain or increase exploration for oil in Canada. This is where the problem is, Mr. Speaker.

When the report to which I referred in the Canada Year Book of 1973 was made there was no doubt that at that time it was contemplated that exploration would continue. Under the policies of this government and this disaster minister, however, the situation has changed and we find that supplies will be inadequate in the foreseeable future. It is not difficult to see what will happen to Canada when this comes about. At the present time we are the only country in the industrial world that is self-sufficient in energy, but still our balance of payments is approximately $4 billion in deficit. What will be the position if we find that we have to import several billion dollars worth of oil every year? This is the course on which this disaster minister is leading us.

A bill to establish an oil company is not going to increase proven reserves. The oil is all there now and what is needed is a government that will allow exploration to take place and will ensure that supplies are available when they are needed.

I should like to quote from a brief which was presented to the National Energy Board by the Canadian Petroleum Association on February 6 this year. This brief states in part:

The underpricing of natural gas in relation to other fuel has been basically responsible for the disproportionate growth in demand for this fuel over the past half dozen years, compared with other types of energy.

Underpricing and an excessively high government share of the take have a depressing effect on exploration and development activity and thus lead to shortages. Increased supplies of gas may be needed in a year or two, because at current rates of growth in Canadian demand, shortages could develop that quickly. The CPA recommended that when the National Energy Board attempts to predict how much natural gas will be available to Canadians, the board should allow for the fact that higher prices will encourage oil companies to find and develop more gas and to produce more from fields already discovered. Conversely, at current price levels, large volumes of gas may remain undiscovered and some of the reserves now known may remain in the ground, since they are beyond economic reach at present low net-back prices to the producer.

This development has not taken place, Mr. Speaker. Canada could do a great deal more to help in the exploration and development of this natural resource which is so vital to us now.

Today I asked the minister the cost of the government's publicity program to encourage the conservation of this natural resource in the last month, and he replied that it ran something over $700,000. I am still not sure what the government intended. I certainly would like to know why we spend $700,000 to tell people to conserve this natural resource when the price continues to rise. They do not need to be told. Would it not be better to spend the $700,000 on research facilities and try to make better use of the gas and oil that we have? I do not know the purpose behind this publicity campaign which ran in 44 Ontario papers and 14 papers in Quebec. I understand that approximately six million people live in Quebec and seven and a half million in Ontario—perhaps it is harder to get through to people in Ontario. The minister should explain what he expects to accomplish by this campaign. People are already conserving energy and the government is not using this money to the best advantage.

One of the departments of government has a "Why Not" campaign running at the present time, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources should run a "Why?" campaign. Why do we need Petro-Can? Why not get into those areas that call for research and development? The manager of Syncrude has stated that the basic problem is that we do not have the technical ability to develop Syncrude. Surely the government could get involved here and assist in the training of people in the required skills.

What does the minister know about going out and getting leases in order to be able to drill for gas or oil? Will he have a large group of individuals moving about the country trying to get leases that have already been taken up by oil companies? Is he going to try to get seismic crews to go out and search for oil? Is he going to get oil rigs to drill in the areas to which the seismic crews point? Is he going to hire crews to develop sites for drilling, and is he going to have crews go in afterwards to level them off when they are dry holes? The minister should realize what he is getting into in establishing Petro-Can. I think he is making a great mistake in contemplating this because there are so many other areas where the government could serve a useful purpose, such as researching methods of extracting the conventional and non-conventional oil that we have.

Certainly, we are encountering problems in the extraction of oil from the tar sands. Syncrude faces difficulties. We possess tremendous amounts of oil in the tar sands and must devise an adequate technology for extracting it. The same is true of conventional oil. I am told that in some instances only 30 per cent of available oil has been redeemed. So, Mr. Speaker, the government can play a useful role in many ways. It can devise new methods of developing Canada's oil resources. I suggest it is a national disgrace when the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources leads us on a crash course which will have disastrous consequences for all Canadians.

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I have great difficulty in understanding Bill C-8. In no way can I support it. I rise tonight to express my deep concern about it.

When incentives cannot induce private industry to do the sort of job we want done in this field then I agree the state must move in and create a Crown corporation which will do the job. But this is not the case in Canada, particularly not in the industry we are discussing. The minister himself admitted that the industry has shown great ingenuity and ability in exploration and development. The government itself, by passing a series of taxation measures, has removed the decision-making base from private industry and interfered with incentives which make for a healthy industry and which were responsible for our resource development and energy reserves.

Considering the way the government has behaved since 1968, what can you expect but chaos, especially as free enterprise is hampered in its decision-making processes? This, of course, is the true cause of Canada's energy crisis. Federal confrontation with resource provinces, the imposition of socialist dogmas on our taxation laws and base, the changing of rules in mid-stream, and the removal of incentives from the private sector have made it all but impossible for private industry to meet the exploration and resource development needs of this great country. In addition, the government's refusal to act responsibly in the face of inflation in Canada has had this effect: it has confiscated private savings and capital to the point where there is no investor confidence. This applies to domestic as well as to foreign capital markets.

The government has made it all but impossible for our people to generate capital with which Canadians can develop and own a fair share of their own resource industry. Mr. Speaker, the government in Canada receives some 55 per cent of all after expense revenue, before a Canadian corporation can generate one dollar of new capital. I doubt if there is any other country in which capital is as expensive to develop as in Canada.

When a Canadian industry wants to sell its goods in Canada we protect it with tariffs. At the same time the government makes the creation of a dollar of new capital in Canada a very expensive process. So expensive is new capital that industries which need risk capital for resource exploration and development find it difficult to get Canadian capital. The government has discouraged taxpayers from risking these precious, expensive, new dollars of capital generated in Canada.

I ask the minister to compare the cost of drilling a hole in Canada when the capital used in the process is owned in the United States with the cost of drilling a similar hole, undertaken at a similar risk, when the capital used in the process is owned in Canada. No wonder 90 per cent of energy resources in Canada are owned by foreigners. Where is the sense in present government policies, considering that between now and the end of the century we must develop our potential for energy self-sufficiency?

Mr. Woolliams: That is absolutely correct.

Mr. Huntington: I will ask the minister to look at the cost of creating a dollar of capital in Canada, then compare that cost with the cost of creating a dollar of new capital in the United States, in Switzerland, in Hong Kong and the Caribbean where, as the government knows, there is a tax shelter.

We protect our eastern Canadian industries with tariffs, but do not protect our home grown capital from lower cost capital generated abroad. It is small wonder that we have such a high percentage of foreign ownership in our resource industries.

The government knows the cost of generating capital in the areas I mentioned. It knows about tax shelters in the Caribbean. The Canadian Development Corporation, which took over Texas Gulf, knows about them as well. Once the CDC acquired a controlling interest in Texas Gulf, a foreign company, what did it do? It transferred ownership off-shore, to a Dutch holding company operating in a tax haven in the Caribbean. The government knows how the international capital creation mechanism works. It knows how capital, at reduced cost, can be created. Why does it not apply its knowledge to our tax laws in Canada so that we can reduce the cost of creating new capital and thus enable Canadians to participate more fully in the ownership of this country's industries?

I point to what Polymer Corporation, another CDC-owned corporation, has done. Working through an off-shore trading company it transfers profits made in Canada off-shore; it pays a tax rate of between 7 per cent and 8 per cent in Switzerland, as opposed to the rate of 55 per cent it would need to pay in Canada. The company knows, of course, that if it did not pay the tax in Canada, the debt would be deferred.

I conclude that, as the government is possessed of this knowledge, its interference with the decision-making process of Canadian industry is deliberate. Therefore Bill C-8 is but one more step along the way to state capitalism in Canada.

Do we really understand what is a dollar of new capital? It is the residual of income, after you have paid all expenses and taxes. The government has access to a revenue trough slopping over with dollars. If it needs more, the printing presses print more. How can the private sector compete with that kind of resource money? It is impossible.

What does a dollar of after tax profit cost a taxpaying corporation in Canada? May I remind you that the Government of Canada has first call on the net income of any taxpaying private corporation in Canada. How can private industry compete with Petro-Can? How can it compete with the type of buck the Canadian government has for the development of resources?

One hears much talk of public ownership and public equity in an enterprise. Perhaps one could justify such equity in a company like Petro-Canada or the CDC if the equity capital were created from federal budgetary surpluses. If the government created capital that way it would have to budget for its expenditures; in addition, it would need to budget for a surplus. It would need, above all, to be honest with Canadian taxpayers, but I guess that is too much to ask.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

If the government had to acquire its capital from budgetary surpluses it would need to show some respect for its tax dollars and for the tax burden it has placed on the shoulders of the work force of Canada. The ministers and their mandarins would have to be frugal enough to protect their budgetary surpluses in order to be able to invest in a capital project such as Petro-Can. There would then be an incentive for the government sector to create capital, to budget for surpluses, to be careful with tax money, and to be careful with the purchasing power of it, instead of the sickening situation we have at present. There would be an incentive for the departments of government to be productive, creative, and to participate in private capital programs with the incentive sector of the country. Most important, there would be an incentive for the government to have some respect for the taxpayer.

● (2030)

Foreign ownership, with all its emotional problems and excuses for more and more confusing legislation, could be corrected if we amended our tax laws and started once again to encourage Canadians to save and invest in their own resources and industries. All this confusion over foreign industry is caused by our lack of understanding as to what a dollar of capital truly is, how important it is, the risk nature of it, its creation, and the fact that it has to be competitive with other industrialized nations of the world where it is also being generated.

The most mixed up, disastrous, social dogma to be imposed on Canada yet is the syndrome that a buck is a buck is a buck. Only people who have never earned or saved a dollar of after tax income could agree with such nonsense. The fact is that a buck is a buck is not a buck when you are dealing in dollars of capital. A buck of capital is too hard to get and too precious to risk in Canada without offsetting incentives.

Since 1968 we have somehow or other removed from the Canadian scene those offsetting incentives and created the dilemma in which we find ourselves today. With a realistic knowledge of the facts that motivate men, this bill, along with many others, would not be necessary. In fact I categorically say it is not necessary.

I wish to reply to some of the reasons the minister gave for this infamous Petro-Can bill. In his speech at second reading the minister admitted that the privately owned oil industry has a good record of technical and management innovation. The incentive system has a habit of creating good records. Why has it been removed? Why has a climate been created where only something with state money can survive? I cannot foresee this solving the needs from now to the year 2000. I cannot see it solving the needs of the energy crisis we will have in the next eight years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Huntington: The minister said he was concerned about the future. He believes that a significant degree of federal public enterprise is needed. I again ask, why is it needed? It is needed because the tax legislation has destroyed the decision-making bases of the country. It has created complete confusion in the private sector. It has removed the incentives that make a man tick, make him innovative and make him take risks. There is no longer any motivation.

Dealing with federal public enterprise may I take a few minutes to enumerate how this drift to state capital has worked so well for the government. At the opening of this debate the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) drew to the attention of the House the national finance report of 1974-75 which lists the performance of all the Crown corporations of Canada. At the end of 1974, they had borrowed some $13.8 billion from the public trough.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Huntington: I will not bore you with too much of it. You are the only one over there who has read it.

They will have returned, but not to the public trough, on balance sheets some $1 billion in earnings by the end of 1975. The deficit list grows and grows because there is no incentive for those corporations to perform. If they make a mistake, there is more in the trough. They roll over their borrowings. They do not pay them back. They work at the government cost of money, not the cost of money with which free enterprise has to work. They do not return taxes to the federal treasury as they say they do. They just defer tax. Look at the hundreds of millions of dollars deferred.

The crowning one is this beautiful portfolio, Air Canada. Air Canada people cry and complain about the cost of their capital, and they borrow money that they never pay back. They just roll it over. They buy it at the cost to the Canadian government. The cost goes down to 3.9 per cent. The highest they paid on a little bit was 7.6 per cent, yet they cry about this interest burden on their operation.

Air Canada came out with a statement that I thought showed it would be $9 million in the hole. In actual fact, by the end of this year they will have reduced their retained earnings by $9 million. In addition, another $9 million will be lost by reducing their deferred income tax. They will have lost $18 million even though they have a monopoly with the cheapest sources of capital in the world. They cannot even perform at a profit or compete with anybody else in the incentive sector of this so-called industrialized nation. We are creating something that will be bigger than Air Canada. It will be more wasteful.

What we are doing with this Petro-Can bill is building political bases with performance disasters. No one in this House can believe that Petro-Can will be any different. I wonder who the new mandarin heading it will be?

I will move on to the minister's next point. He is worried about dealing with overseas states. He thinks we now have to deal on a state to state basis. What are the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Department of External Affairs for, Mr. Speaker? Why do we have trade commissioners offshore? We used to have, and probably still have a service that is respected by trading nations all over the world. Now we need something else. Why? The minister worries about security of supply. He feels this Petro-Can bill will ensure our supply from offshore nations. Just remember the last oil purchase in which the government got involved.

What really got me is the minister's statement that the majority of Canadians want a broadening of Canadian ownership and thus this Petro-Can bill. When I look at the performance of Canadian ownership and all these other Crown corporations alongside ownership where the capital was expensive, tax paid and the performance by incentive, I cannot understand how the Canadian people got into this opiate state. Canadian people want tax laws that give them an incentive to save, own, compete and have something worthwhile that they have done on their own for their old age. That is how we should be legislating.

Also in Petro-Can I notice we have got a new school opening. He finds it very exciting that we are going to be training the native people for the industry in the north. Mr. Speaker, may I ask you where the Department of Manpower has been with all its training programs? Where has the Department of Indian Affairs been with its knowledge of this problem and its so-called inter-ministerial relationship with the Department of Manpower? More duplication. Do we really need it? Why do not the departments which were first created for these purposes function properly?

The minister also advises us that there is to be a corporate business framework subject to basic disciplines, with an operating statement and a balance sheet. I will show you another one, Mr. Speaker, and I bet you Petro-Can will not even duplicate this one. The minister cannot stand short term profit maximizing. He says short term profit maximizing under the petroleum industry is not in the best interests of this country. I am not a great admirer of large capital organizations because I think some of them are as bad as state run organizations, if not worse. However, I have taken account of the billions of dollars which the oil industry in Canada, even granted the extent of its foreign ownership, has invested for the future in exploration and in attempts to expand the known reserves of energy in this country. This work stopped as a result of legislation given to this country by the government across the way.

The minister also stated he wanted a vehicle to mobilize capital. The initial capital is to be $500 million. Where is it to come from? It is to come from the Consolidated Revenue Fund, that great trough. But it is this $500 million which will provide the vehicle for borrowing a billion dollars. From whom, for what? The money press? Tax reform would make all this unnecessary if there was any understanding of how the incentive sector works and the motivation that any system needs if it is to solve the problems and crises we shall be facing tomorrow.

Another suggestion I would like to put forward to the minister is in the area of the capital needs we shall be facing between now and the end of the century. I am sure this suggestion has been made to him by some of the members in this party before now. It is to increase the velocity of the use of capital in this expensive northern development, as has been done in the case of the North Sea development. I might say that countries almost as socialized as this one have seen fit to allow 170 per cent return of original capital before taxation and have seen fit to give further blocks of the resource to extractive organizations so that they, with their knowledge and technology, and their people and men, can go ahead and perform these expensive risk projects with some sanity and with a minimum of waste.

Why are we not moving in these proven areas of known business technique instead of this circus of Petro-Can? The minister points out that the investment required is large and beyond the capability of any single corporation to provide. That can be resolved by increasing the velocity of use of capital and giving incentives to Canadians to save and create capital for our needs. All we are going to get from a state capital organization is inefficiency. There is no motivation for success within it. A buck is not a buck when it comes to this type of need and activity in Canada.

If the government were to move in harmony and partnership with the incentive sector, if it would combine its cheap buck of capital with the talent and initiative of those who react to incentives. Then we would start to make progress in this country, then we would start to own our own resources. The government itself, through the defects inherent in its own organization, is doomed to failure as the performance of these 131-odd Crown corporations shows.

The minister says he wants to participate in exploration, development and research. I agree. But do we not already possess in-depth organizations capable of this? Why should there be more duplication?

He claims that the public company can import at lower cost than can a private concern. We have seen no example of this to date and I doubt very much that we shall encounter one in the future. The track record of Crown corporations and government bureaucracy just does not support the minister's dream.

He worries about the extent of foreign ownership of our resource industries, now standing at 90 per cent. No wonder this is the case. We have never in Canada had tax laws which allowed us to generate capital competitively with other countries. And here is the greatest sin against the Canadian people. Let us give incentives to Canadians, not to foreigners. We continue to allow the import of low-cost capital from Hong Kong, Switzerland and the Arab countries. How can we ever compete when it costs about 50 cents out of every dollar to create a private dollar of capital in Canada?

The Petro-Can bill before us, Mr. Speaker, is just another move by the government toward state capitalism. The powers in this bill are too broad. With some people you just have to tell them what you are going to say and then as you are closing you have to remind them again of what you said. The powers in the bill are too broad to be justified by the reasons given by the minister. The track record of state-owned Crown corporations working without incentives give us no hope that Petro-Can can be anything but just another Liberal barrel. Not an oil barrel, Mr. Speaker—a big pork barrel.

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): The basic objection one has to take to Bill C-8 is that it is a fraud, Mr. Speaker. It does not do what it purports to do. It does not achieve the goals which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald), when introducing the bill, suggested would take a long time to become evident. It does not do those things, but it does do a number of things which are not listed among its purposes and which have, indeed, been denied from time to time by spokesmen on the government side.

It is clearly going to change, without any cause, the relationship between the private and the public sector in the country; it is going to change the climate which exists in the petroleum exploration industry, and it is going to change this relationship for the worse. So, Mr. Speaker, it is a bill which fails to do those things which it is purported to do and, indeed, is a cover for smuggling in an influence which has the potential of doing serious harm to the Canadian economy and to Canadian society.

When the minister was introducing this bill on March 12 he went through an extensive effort to explain to us all why it was necessary for Canada now to approve this new bill to set up the Petro-Canada Corporation. At one point he said, and I quote him in the direct language he used:

> The government does not feel assured that the private sector can be relied upon to mobilize all the enormous amounts of capital which will be required to secure energy development consonant with Canadian needs over the longer term.

In other words, he thinks that over time the private sector is going to turn out to be money short. So what does he do about that? He sets up a corporation to be funded at $500 million. I remind the House that this sum is roughly half of what the government spent last year, and proposes to spend, on consultant fees. Proposing to compete with a money-short private sector, the minister intends to set up a Crown corporation which is to have operating capital amounting to only half of what the government now spends on supplementing its own public service by employing consultant services.

The minister went on, trying to find a second reason he could offer us. He raised a further concern, and again I quote him:

> Nor can it be certain that faced with attractive investment opportunities and geological opportunities abroad the private oil industry will be able to concentrate as much effort on our own petroleum prospective areas over the next decade as our needs require.

Now that raises two kinds of spectre, Mr. Speaker. One, of course, is that it creates the implication that Petro-Can, which we are funding and which the Government of Canada will be required to fund from now on into the future, will keep looking for oil and will keep spending Canadian money in the search for oil after it is no longer profitable to do so. Perhaps we could spend that money better by procuring supplies from elsewhere in the world. Clearly this implication is in the justification offered by the minister, and it causes concern for everyone, whatever be their view as to private sector involvement, that public money should not be spent foolishly.

● (2050)

The other aspect that is alarming here is the reference of the minister to the possibility that the private sector will have to pull out of the search for oil and production of energy. The fear expressed by many members here, one that is enhanced by and continued on the back of this particular bill, is that the private sector will not pull out voluntarily but instead will be forced out.

It is clear to anyone who has watched the events in this country unfold relative to the energy question in the last few years, and particularly within the last two years, that a great climate of uncertainty has been created, first by the failure to reform the tax laws and build in incentives, secondly by the invasion of previously held provincial jurisdictions by the federal government through its export tax, and finally by the continuing conflict over jurisdiction and energy related matters between governments. It is that, as much as anything, that raises some questions as to the capacity of the private sector to carry on in this field.

We also now have the personification of an interventionist philosophy in the Petro-Canada bill. This is one more piece of evidence causing fear and uncertainty in the private sector, one that causes people and companies that have spent a great deal of time and money developing Canada's energy potential to look elsewhere. In addition to that, whenever a Crown corporation in this country is established the prospect of unfair competition is raised, and this must be considered and gauged by the private sector.

The minister also indicated that this new Crown corporation was necessary in order to purchase from abroad. As several members on this side of the House and elsewhere have pointed out, the government does not need this Crown corporation, this fraud of an act, to achieve that capacity because it already has it in the Department of Supply and Services, that great department that is so expert at buying expensive oil and recruiting Koreans. It might not be very intelligently applied, but nevertheless that capacity is there. It is simply unnecessary duplication to use this requirement of capacity as an attempt to justify this fraud of an act.

Then the minister said this:

> The national petroleum company may also be able to play an important role in regional development.

I suppose that means that in future Petro-Can will be drilling by the DREE principle. In other words, perhaps it will abandon geological considerations in determining where to drill, and will go into areas of high unemployment or where there are a lot of Liberals. The fear that most of us have when we look at the prospect of drilling by the DREE principle is that most of the activity will be in Montreal or Rosedale.

Another of the major justifications that the minister offered for Canada having a national petroleum company, and for passing this bill, is this: the minister said, as reported at page 4038 of Hansard:

> It is a striking fact—

It appears that even the facts in this country are striking, Mr. Speaker.

> —that every one of the dozen countries from which we import significant quantities of crude oil has its own state oil company and is progressively increasing the role of that company in relation to international transactions.

Many of those other countries also have vast expanses of sand or tropical forest. Is that any reason for Canada suddenly to create a Crown corporation to become engaged in the creation of vast expanses of sand, or in any way to duplicate corporations in other countries? It is simply a silly proposition for the minister to suggest that Canada has to have a state petroleum corporation because other countries have one. That is the height of silliness, yet it is clearly one of the justifications offered by the minister in his opening remarks.

A final justification offered by the minister, as well as by some of his colleagues, is that we have a mixed economy. We have a tradition of public and private corporations, and public and private participation. Of course we have. That is a tradition of which I am personally proud, and which distinguishes this country. But I do not believe that the reason we have a mixed economy now is any justification to mix it up some more simply for the limited purpose of mixing it up.

We need a Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, a state corporation. The justification for the creation of the CBC was not that we had a mixed economy situation; the justification was that we needed a state broadcasting agency. There is no such need here. It is fatuous for the minister and his supporters to suggest that simply because the state has acted in areas where it is necessary for it to be active, it also has to be active in fields where there is no requirement at all for it to be active—a field such as this.

In all of his justifications—and perhaps we will hear some more tonight—the minister has been unable to explain the basic question that is posed about this bill, which is: why do we need it? Why do we need Petro-Can? Either he cannot explain it or he will not explain it.

In my view, the real reason for this bill being put before us is the same as the reason for the raid on Alberta's jurisdiction regarding energy matters. It is the same reason that the minister's colleague is holding up the development of cable communications across this country. Quite simply, the reason is that the government wants power. If the government sees something moving in the country, it wants to get into the act, not as a mediator, not as a regulator or in the traditional way that the federal government and governments as a whole have operated, but as a controller. It wants power. It is prepared to extend its influence and its activities by intruding upon the jurisdiction of the provinces, by moving into the private sector whatever the consequences. It is preoccupied with extending its own power and influence whatever the cost. That is the real reason why we have this piece of legislation before us tonight.

In reviewing the powers that are set out for Petro-Canada in this legislation it occurred to me that the people of Canada surely do not realize how extensive a carte blanche they are giving this Crown corporation in the bill before the House. It is a fact that most Canadians do not read clause by clause the majority of the bills that are put before the House. In introducing the bill the minister said it was quite straightforward and simple, that the language was not particularly technical. That is true. But as well as being straightforward it is horrendously alarming in view of the kind of power being vested in this particular Crown corporation. It is a corporation that is not simply answerable to the cabinet; it is more complicated than that. The fact that it is to be told by the cabinet from time to time what to do makes it even more dangerous than its not having to report back to or be controlled by this House.

I want to review some of the powers that are set forward for this Crown corporation, or agency of the Liberal government, that wants to extend its powers simply for the purpose of extending them. For one thing, clause 7 goes right through the alphabet from 7(1)(a) to (z), and it makes it absolutely clear that the powers of this corporation are not limited. It can do almost anything. Let me point out that 7(1)(a) states that the corporation can:

(a) carry on any other business that may seem to the Corporation capable of being conveniently carried on in connection with its business or calculated directly or indirectly to enhance the value of or render profitable any of the property or rights of the Corporation;

There is no limit at all in that. This corporation could get into the building of rickshaws, or it could operate laundries or anything at all in the country, once we embark upon the ambit of that particular piece of legislation or provision. Indeed, not only could it get into anything in this country, by another provision it could get into anything in any other country, if any other country would be so foolish as to let it do so.

There is also clause 7(1)(d) which provides that the corporation can enter into partnership or into any other arrangement for the sharing of profits, etc. I think that holds out a very alarming prospect for a kind of coercion or leverage which can be brought to bear on various private sector companies already operating in the petroleum field or, indeed, in the rickshaw field, because when a Crown corporation, with the amplitude of powers this corporation has, comes up to you and suggests that you should go into partnership, and you live or die by their regulations, you are going to be inclined to go into that partnership although it may not be the thing you want to do.

This is the kind of power which, in the hands of a board of directors or of a government that was malevolent toward the private sector, or toward any individual, could be used in a very seriously harmful way.

In clause 7(1)(l) there is provision for the corporation to lend money to persons having dealings with this corporation or dealings with any other corporation. Later on in (n) there is provision for the corporation to sell anything at all, from the land to the trucks that run on it, to the plush chairs and leather couches in the executive suite. It can sell anything.

The bill goes on to say that this power does not simply rest with the directors. The power to activate this broad sphere of powers set forward here, or this capacity, can be overrun by clause 7(2) which says that the corporation shall comply, and I emphasize that word "shall", with any directions given the corporation from time to time by the Governor in Council or by the minister. So this wide range of powers is not simply to be exercised by whatever group of lucky Liberals the minister appoints to the board of directors. These powers can also be exercised by the government, or by the minister whose tact in these matters is well known. These powers can be exercised by this person unilaterally without the country knowing anything about it. This is a tremendously wide range of powers capable of the most direct political interference, and by statute.

[Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain).]

I note that the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) shakes his head, and well he should in view of this wide range of powers outlined in this bill. These are powers that are not simply to be used by the board of directors appointed by this Liberal government for the purpose of the Liberal party, but are powers that can be interfered with by the government directly because it has the power to order compliance on the part of the board of directors in respect of anything which the government, from time to time, chooses to have done.

As far as I can see, the budget of this Crown corporation can be approved virtually without reference to parliament. All of the directors are appointed by the cabinet and are themselves empowered to delegate certain of their wide powers to various anonymities or nephews across the country.

There is the possibility under the provisions of this bill of the government making loans on special terms to Petro-Can. I understand these specific matters are to be dealt with later, but it is important to the people of Canada and the members of this House to understand the wide range of powers we are giving this group of 15 Liberals to be appointed by the minister. These powers are also being given to the minister in view of the fact that he can move in and force the board of directors to comply with any particular whim he wants complied with at any time.

The point has been made many times, apparently without effect on the minds of members opposite, and has been made even by the minister, that it is going to take a very long time for this Crown corporation to have any appreciable impact on prices, supply, or individual concerns in Canada in relation to energy. You cannot start a major petroleum company overnight, and this one will not be started overnight. Its impact will not be felt for a long time, perhaps never, and there is the danger that, given the long start up time involved and the suddenness with which alternate energy supplies can come into being, we will be setting up a $500 million per annum white elephant, because it may be that before this thing gets to the stage that it is useful to the Canadian people the particular function it is supposed to perform will no longer be there to be performed, or no longer be profitable to be performed, and at that time it may well have to get into the production of rickshaws.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Maybe it could go into dredging.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): As the hon. member suggests, perhaps the corporation could go into dredging. There is a very real danger here to which I should like to refer briefly, namely, that Petro-Can will become subject to special treatment by the government. The government is in the unusual situation of establishing regulations and rules by which it and other players must play, but it is the only player in the field which has that capacity. There is bound to be some suspicion that Petro-Can will enjoy an unfair access to information. There is bound to be the suspicion, or the probability in reality, as there is in respect of Panarctic, that the virtually unlimited budget of Petro-Can will allow it to interfere with the hiring practices of other companies with which it is presumably in competition.

What we are establishing here is not just another oil company, it is an oil company with virtually an unlimited budget behind it, and playing as the only player in the field who is also the referee That is the very dangerous aspect of any intervention of this kind.

There are a number of other options available to the government in achieving the goals it says it wants to achieve by establishing this Crown corporation. It could have extended the powers, the activities and the budget of Panarctic. It could, as the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) and others have said, put incentives into the Canadian tax law to encourage Canadians to invest in the energy field, and encourage foreigners to divest themselves of Canadian interests, thereby increasing the Canadian percentage of control in this field.

There is also, as has frequently been mentioned before, the option insofar as imports are concerned for purchases by the Department of Supply and Services. It already has the power we are vesting in Petro-Can. If there is a genuine concern on the part of the government about the private sector, and a genuine appreciation of the capacity of the private sector to do the job, there is the option for the government to go ahead now and enact regulations regarding exploration in the north which would give the private sector a fair chance to prove what it can do in the frontier areas where the minister says this Crown corporation will concentrate its activities.

There were a variety of other things that could have been done instead of establishing this particular Crown corporation. But they were not done, not for reasons related to energy or even for reasons related to a philosophy about a mixed economy. The reason those other options were not taken was that they would have interfered with the basic goal of the government in this bill, as in so many other actions, simply to extend its own power. That is the only general over-all policy the government has. It is a policy to extend its own power, to get into more things whether they are traditionally things which belong to the private sector or traditionally powers which belong to the provinces. It is the only philosophy the government has, and it has been the motivating policy in the establishment of Petro-Can here. We have it clearly demonstrated in the question of the intrusion upon the jurisdictions of the provinces, the intervention into the provincial jurisdiction relating to energy matters and petroleum.

This is not, as the apologists might suggest, for the purpose of protecting any part of Canada against any other part of Canada because negotiations as to price have been conducted, as this one is being conducted this week, by first ministers sitting down together and reaching an agreement. There was no need to have an invasion of a provincial field in order to accomplish that purpose. It would have been accomplished in any event. The motive of the government in that particular intervention was not price but power. It was an attempt to enlarge its own sphere of power, not with any particular purpose in mind but simply so that it could have and exercise more power.

I regret that the Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier) has left the House. Again we have seen a similar determination, or a similar willingness by the government to frustrate completely the development of cable communications in this country because of jurisdictional questions. The people in my constituency and in your constituency, Madam Speaker, as well as in every constituency in this country, perhaps with the exception of a few major cities, are suffering because jurisdiction over cable is unclear. The capacity of whatever government will have that jurisdiction is unsettled. That has directly to do with a determination to aggrandize power, which is the single motivating philosophy of the government. It is a philosophy perhaps which involves fouling up anything and intervening anywhere, in the private sector or in the provincial sphere, simply to extend the government's powers.

There is no demonstrated need for Petro-Can. The reason we have this legislation simply is that the government wants another Crown corporation to do what does not need to be done, and to duplicate what is already being done in other aspects of government. That is insufficient reason to ask for the approval of this House to obtain $500 million, and perhaps more, each year. It is for that reason I, and other members on this side of the House, intend to vote against this particular fraud of a bill at this stage, again in the committee, and again if it comes back to the House for third reading.

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): I realize, Madam Speaker, that there have been a number of speeches on this particular piece of legislation. I wish to say there have been a number of excellent speeches this afternoon and this evening. It is unfortunate that members opposite just close their ears and tend to ignore the very good points raised by members on this side of the House. Many of those points are very legitimate. I think if members were objective in their assessment of the deliberations they would find that the speeches have been very thought provoking, sensible and reasoned.

The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), this afternoon in his comments during a very well reasoned speech, referred to this piece of legislation as merely a gesture toward fulfilment of Canada's energy requirements. While it may be a gesture insofar as fulfilling that purpose is concerned, I want to say that in my opinion it is a horrendous gesture, and perhaps nothing more than an octopus which is unwieldy and which we could do without. In a society which is already saturated by the complexities of large central bureaucracies and dominated by them when, in my view, society could be more effectively served by the private sector, I find it startling that so many members opposite blindly find comfort in supporting this measure.

This having been conceived during the days of unions I would have thought the government in consideration of the NDP might have seen fit to drop this measure which, in my view, we do not need. There is no need to create an empire such as this. I believe experience tells us that such enterprises become unwieldy and out of control. We have only to look at the operations of the CBC. The hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan) today mentioned the fact that the CBC requires some 22 odd people to cover the Commonwealth Conference in the Carribbean while its counterpart, CTV, will be covering that same operation with one cameraman and one reporter.

I think the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) very accurately defined the operations of Air Canada vis-à-vis the private sector, notwithstanding the fact that CP Air is confined to limited access in respect of domestic routes in this country. When we look at the performance and efficiency of any Crown corporation we find that it does not stack up with its private enterprise counterpart, except in losing money as my colleague from Central Nova pointed out.

I have listened to a number of speeches in this debate, and have read others. It has seemed to me that many members opposite presume that this Crown corporation will in fact solve the bulk of the fossil fuel problems we have in this country and give the federal government a firmer hand in dealing with the producing provinces and the multinational corporations.

We hear in effect from members opposite that the corporation will provide the major impact in respect of self-sufficiency and advanced technology. One member, I believe the hon. member for Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Milne), indicated that this corporation will be the major supplier and holder of a great new amount of technology under its licence. We note as well that they contend this corporation will become a major instrument for providing cheap energy.

They go further to say that the measure is necessary for the government to move in with a petroleum corporation in order to check rising prices. In my view this argument is fallacious as well as simplistic, for we have only to look at any Crown corporation to see that it does not provide services more effectively or efficiently than a private corporation. In most cases, because the Crown corporation is the recipient of generous public subsidies it is even more inefficient and ineffective. The best that can be said for these arguments is that they are nothing but rhetoric.

I am disheartened by the superficial analysis some members have made in respect of their approach to energy problems. It seems there is a greater desire to protect a political doctrine than to deal with energy problems. If we are honest with ourselves in dealing with prices we know that our prices should not and cannot vary too much from the world price. That is one of the reasons why we are having a national energy conference starting in Ottawa this week. So far as self-sufficiency is concerned, it is closely related to our exploration ability and activity which at present are at a very low ebb. Unless the political and economic climate changes, we will experience a continuation of this dearth of exploration activity. We are told that no less than 50 drilling rigs left Canada this past year because of the political climate and because of the confusion of the federal government. The count continues to decrease in 1975, and 75 per cent of the rigs have left for more profitable off-shore markets, leaving us in short supply.

Security of supply is indeed the most important element in our efforts to meet our energy needs and requirements. In my view, if this bill ensured in some way a security to supply, perhaps it would merit some support. However, I contend that this bill will not do that, and I think that we have to address ourselves to the problem of exploration. The choice is ours, either to explore or not to explore, and I do not believe that this bill will provide any initiative, incentive or new direction in exploration and development.

Surely one of the major elements in our effort to resolve the energy problem is for the federal government to take a more positive role in defining an effective, realistic and comprehensive national energy policy. We must have a climate which is conducive to exploration and development, and that is something that we have not had in the past 12 to 18 months.

As I said in my opening remarks, a number of excellent speeches on this bill have been made such as, for instance, by the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies), the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Balfour), and the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton). I should like to refer to the comments made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Foster). I found some of his comments to be rather amusing because it seemed to me they might more appropriately have come from a member of the NDP rather than a member of the Liberal party. He suggested that private enterprise could no longer meet the demands imposed upon it. I do not know what intrepretation to place on that comment, but if he is suggesting that we are now living in such a complicated technical era that only government enterprise can meet the challenges of the day, then I say to you, Madam Speaker, that there is very little hope for this country.

I believe that the hon. member is wrong in his assessment. I believe that his assessment is nonsensical and illogical, because if we look at the past and into the future we will realize that the major breakthroughs in our scientific and technological achievements have not come from government enterprise but indeed from the resourcefulness, initiative and dynamism of the private sector. All this can be achieved, provided the climate is conducive and that there is no undue government interference, in other words, that the shackles of government do not unduly inhibit the process.

I submit that, given the right climate, private enterprise can continue to provide major breakthroughs in our scientific and technological achievements. Governments have tended to restrict and interfere too much—particularly this government—rather than to promote the initiative to which I referred.

The parliamentary secretary indicated also that there was lack of substance in the contributions to this debate by opposition members. The parliamentary secretary has not been listening carefully, and I suggest to him that he read some of the speeches that have been made because some very constructive suggestions have been made and important warnings have been advanced, for instance by the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark).

As has been pointed out by other speakers, the bill before us gives to Petro-Can broad terms of reference. First, it gives Petro-Can the authority to explore, develop and exploit oil and gas deposits within and without Canada. In my view this ignores several facts.

The Canadian government, as we all know, is already involved in exploration and development under the aegis of Panarctic and through Syncrude. Petro-Can will only duplicate these efforts and, as many speakers have pointed out, will only increase the bureaucratic employment opportunities for many Liberal friends who, I know, will find a very happy home within the directorship of this organization. It has been suggested that the minister himself may be vying for the position of the president of this new corporation. Furthermore, most of the lands expected to yield substantial new oil and gas reserves are already under lease. Further, the minister said that because of attractive investment opportunities and geological opportunities abroad, private industry will not concentrate as much effort in Canada. I submit that if he truly believes this, then why does he give Petro-Can the authority to operate outside Canada?

Second, Petro-Can has the authority to carry out research and development projects on all types of fuel. In my view this is a crucial area because we are told that oil and gas reserves are not limitless. However, can this area really be given much priority by Petro-Can when there are so many other duties and responsibilities to be performed? I think not, because historical facts have shown all too often that in the order of priorities research quite frequently fails to come anywhere near the top of the list. Perhaps it might be more advisable for these funds to be allocated to the National Energy Board which would conduct the type of research referred to.

Third, Petro-Can has the authority to engage in exploration, production, distribution, refining and marketing of all fuels. This places Petro-Can in direct competition with existing enterprises. It is rather difficult to envisage Petro-Can successfully competing against these large enterprises without spending huge sums of taxpayers' money in areas which are now adequately and effectively served by the private sector. Such a scheme is questionable, and furthermore there is no proof that Petro-Can can provide Canada with energy, either gas or oil, cheaper than is presently being provided by the private sector. One only has to look at other Crown corporations, such as CNR and Air Canada, to see that we are paying the going rate and we are not getting a break in our fares. As a matter of fact, if you look at ABC charters you will find that foreign carriers must file a tariff not less than that tariff which is provided by the Canadian flying concerns. So in no way can we envisage cheaper prices under the terms of this bill.

Fourth, Petro-Can has the authority to negotiate for and to acquire petroleum products from abroad. The experience of the Department of Supply and Services in this area speaks for itself.

The bill states that Petro-Can will be given an authorized capital of $500 million. However, I think that we all realize that in order to set up an effective national petroleum corporation something in the order of $3 billion to $5 billion would be needed, and the task would take 15 to 20 years.

According to this bill, Petro-Can has the authority to lend money to virtually anyone. It can borrow and issue debentures at will, and if it asks for government assistance there need only be the approval of the governor in council. Despite the fact that it would be set up and operated with public moneys, the public through parliament would have no control over it. What bears a great deal of consideration is the fact that Crown corporations at present are not subject to adequate scrutiny by parliament.

● (2130)

The terms of reference that we have under our present Standing Orders with respect to standing committees do not allow members of this House to scrutinize effectively and thoroughly the activities of the officials of Crown corporations. If the number of Crown corporations is to increase, we must find a better way to scrutinize their activities. These organizations operate under a veil of secrecy endorsed by the government and I can give you an example of this, Madam Speaker. On February 19, in a motion for the production of papers, I asked as reported at page 3362 of Hansard:

> That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the Air Canada contract and all additions, revisions and amendments thereto.

The papers were not produced and the reply of the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council was:

> The Air Canada contract contains considerable confidential information relating to the organization, operation and maintenance of the Air Canada lines. Air Canada's competitors are not obliged to provide such information or expose their contractual arrangements to similar scrutiny. To place Air Canada in such a disadvantageous position would not be in the public interest. Under these circumstances would the hon. member agree to withdraw the motion?

Unfortunately I was not in the House at that time, but the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) asked:

> How can a monopoly be at a disadvantage?

The item was transferred for debate. I followed the matter up and found that the document, along with all original documents dating back to 1946, and all amendments provided by order in council up to and including the contract year ending 1976, were available at the Public Archives.

If we are to have a proliferation of this type of public enterprise surely the public has a right to know how they operate. The government should grant greater authority to the standing committees, or to some instrument of parliament, to examine a detailed analysis of their operations and activities.

In the last parliament when consideration was being given to the CNR financing bill, members of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications were frustrated in their efforts to extract information from the officials of that Crown corporation. Their stock answer to questions was that it would not be in their competitive interest to provide the information and that the competitive company which is a private corporation is not obligated to provide the information. This sort of nonsense must stop, Madam Speaker. We must get back a greater degree of control and scrutiny so that the public will know what is happening.

In a document entitled "Policies for Social Conservatives" released on March 1, 1975, Mr. R. C. Quittenton made a statement with which I whole-heartedly agree, when he said:

> It is an ironic fact that the owners of the socialized enterprises, the voters, have far, far less access to the officers of the socialized enterprise than do the shareholders of the capitalistic enterprise. Yet socialist theory makes much of the image that the enterprise belongs to the "people". When does the President of Air Canada face the taxpayers and account for his stewardship? Indeed the more dogmatic the socialist theory becomes . . . the less access the "people" have to the operation of the socialized enterprises. Irony becomes tragedy.

If we are to have socialized enterprises, established for the benefit of the people, then clearly they should be operated for the people and not for the government of the day. Only in this way can the productivity of such enterprises be raised to the point where they are making their full potential contribution to the standard of living of the people. Fortunately the solution is simple and the means are at hand. Accountability must be increased and the involvement of the civil service network must be decreased. These ends can be met by having the people elect a board of directors for each socialized enterprise, with an annual report and annual public meeting and by having the government elect one-quarter of the directors.

I think that statement has a lot of merit, Madam Speaker. This bill will pass and we will continue to have Crown corporations, but it seems to me that a much improved system of checks and balances is needed to ensure that there is parliamentary control of objectives, general direction and financing, without unduly impairing the day to day operations of the corporation.

One method of improving the present state of affairs would be the adoption of certain principles followed in the United Kingdom such as the establishment of a select committee on nationalized industries. Such a committee would have wide powers, highly expert assistance and a permanent membership. Evidence would be heard in secret, but it would be published later along with a report. Officials of the Crown corporation would be informed in advance of the questions to be asked so that there would not be any possibility of witnesses being pilloried. The report would be unanimous and would be prospective as well as retrospective beyond parliamentary control and secrecy. All committee members would be bound by secrecy regarding the report and evidence, and all politics would be confined to the floor of the House. The committee could tackle one corporation or industry at a time. It could also examine the relations of those corporations with the public.

The advantages are obvious, Madam Speaker. For the public and parliament, the Crown corporations would come under effective scrutiny. The managers of these corporations would be relieved of undue ministerial interference and would have an opportunity to put forth their own point of view knowing that the committee was dealing with their operations in an objective fashion in the interests of the public, in the interests of parliament, and in the interests of true accountability.

If we are to continue to have a proliferation of Crown corporations in this country it is, I repeat, imperative that we also have the mechanism for parliament and its institutions to explore adequately and examine their activities.

As I have indicated, this bill will undoubtedly pass. But I do not believe that the bill is needed, Madam Speaker. It is difficult to understand why we have to establish another Crown corporation in our so-called free enterprise society. If the idea is to have a greater degree of Canadian ownership in this industry I have no argument against that. I think it would be better, however, to change the tax laws to make it more attractive for Canadians to invest, and more attractive for oil companies to divest themselves of their shares and sell to Canadians.

The government seems determined to go full steam ahead with the bill as it stands, however, ignoring its built in dangers. Surely a more effective method of scrutiny should be considered. Many Canadians would find a greater degree of comfort if there were greater public scrutiny and, indeed, a better system involving parliamentary examination of the operations and objectives of this bill. If we fail to influence the government of the soundness of our reasons, the result will be nothing but increased debt for the taxpayers of Canada.

● (2140)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The minister wishes to speak. I remind the House that, if he speaks, he will close the debate.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, before I commence my remarks may I ask the House to agree to something which I gather has been discussed by those responsible for House business, namely, that in view of the wish of the official opposition for a recorded vote on this matter, the vote shall not be taken this evening but shall be postponed until orders of the day are called tomorrow afternoon? If I have correctly interpreted the agreement, perhaps it could be made an order of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is it agreed that the recorded vote shall be taken tomorrow?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, the prolonged speeches we have heard on this bill from the official opposition probably involve two essential points. The one which can be briefly stated is that, according to the official opposition, no responsible government, no responsible first minister, and no responsible minister of energy, mines and resources would bring forward a bill to propose the creation of an energy company under government auspices which would use public funds in order to supply energy in Canada. Repeated speeches made by those opposite condemned the government for proposing to go ahead, by the creation of this bill, and provide for further energy security for Canadians.

I am sure that other members, as I have, found it amusing to hear the Progressive Conservative party condemn the kind of proposition which has been adopted by the Premier of Alberta with the formation of the Alberta Energy Company, and by the Premier of Ontario by the creation of the Ontario Energy Company. Apparently those two gentlemen, for whom I have the highest respect and whom I look forward to meeting this week, are condemned by the official opposition for being horrendous and irresponsible.

Mr. Baldwin: Not at all. The government is condemned, not the premiers.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said, it is clear both these gentlemen are socialists. Perhaps the hon. gentleman's party in this House is out of step with this new and potentially socialist leadership which may make itself felt in this House.

The second point made by the official opposition was that federal Crown corporations such as Air Canada and the CBC are inefficient in their operations and should be condemned for the manner in which they are carried on. However, not one member of the official opposition, in any condemnation, referred to the existing Crown corporations in the field of energy which have been among the most efficient and effective energy companies either in the private or public sector of Canada. I refer, of course, to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited which, over the past 25 years and working in combination with provincial hydro utilities, including Ontario Hydro, developed the CANDU nuclear reactor, which is the single most imaginative and successful energy and engineering achievement of this country. That achievement was carried out by public servants upon whom the official opposition heaped such scorn and abuse.

I think the best answer to hon. gentlemen opposite is that none of the claims put forward for the private sector, that is to say, not one of the companies referred to in the private sector in Canada, has equalled the achievement of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited.

In the same way I wish to refer to Eldorado Nuclear Limited, which has become competitive in the processing of uranium ores in Canada. It is competitive with the private sector in terms of developing Canadian energy resources.

It was suggested in this debate that no capable persons from the private sector would work for the Canadian government in the energy field. Let me point out that that company was capable of hiring, in the person of its chief executive officer, one of the leading chief executive officers working for a competitive energy company in this country. In other words, there are some people, contrary to the suggestions put forward by hon. members opposite, who are prepared to work for their country and make such corporations successful in the energy field.

I also refer to the achievement of PanArctic Petroleum, a corporation 45 per cent owned by the people of Canada through the investment of the government of Canada. It has achieved significant exploration successes in the Arctic islands and holds out one of the best prospects for future energy supplies in Canada.

It seems to me that the underlying theme raised by some hon. members opposite, some of whom I see sitting in the chamber, is that no capable, able people would come forward to work for the corporation being established, that it would be impossible to constitute an able and qualified management to forward the petroleum interests of Canadians generally.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): But can you defend the bill?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I certainly can and will be glad to do so. I am dealing with the kind of abuse which has been heaped on the bill by hon. members like the hon. member who just spoke. It is rather strange that hon. members, like the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark), think that although able people will work for the British government in Canada, in BP Canada; for the French government, in Elf and Aquitaine; and for the Italian government, in Agip; that no qualified Canadian would work for his own country in the national petroleum corporation.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is the hon. member rising to ask a question?

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): No, Madam Speaker, I wish to raise a point of order. It is this: the minister, to no one's surprise—this being his tactic—has attributed to me suggestions that I at no time made, as the record will show. The minister's only strength—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) has the floor.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Rocky Mountain has indeed confirmed that I hit a sensitive point. I would say this: there can be no greater defamation of able Canadians than the suggestion made by members of the official opposition that no capable, experienced Canadian in the petroleum field would go to work for his country. I deny that categorically, and deny that it is true of Canadians in the petroleum field either in this country or outside.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): But can you defend the bill?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): People working for international companies and Canadian independents, good and able people, have come to me and said they would like to work for their country, work for the national petroleum company.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): But can you defend the bill?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): When the bill has been enacted I am confident that it will provide a lasting and complete condemnation of members of the opposition who have said that there is no good Canadian petroleum man who is prepared to work for his country. I think there are good ones. I look forward to presenting over-all details and filling in fine points when the bill is in committee.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): The minister cannot defend the bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

● (2150)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Pursuant to order made earlier, the recorded vote will take place tomorrow after Government Orders are called. There is no indication of further business.

Some hon. Members: Ten o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is it agreed that we call it ten o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been adopted.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE—DREDGING CONTRACTS AT HAMILTON—POSSIBLE CONSULTATIONS WITH MINISTER PURSUANT TO SECTIONS 4 AND 5 OF JUSTICE ACT

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, on March 19, as recorded at page 4243 of Hansard, I asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) the following question:

In his capacity both as minister and as Attorney General of Canada, has he been consulted in any respect regarding the Hamilton Harbour and dredging matters pursuant to sections 4 and 5 of the Department of Justice Act and if so, when was this done?

The minister went into a defensive crouch and, in my opinion, did not answer the import of the question.

As this whole matter involving dredging contracts unfolds, it becomes increasingly evident that the Minister of Justice and his predecessors ought to have been more alert and provided more guidance and direction than apparently was the case.

As this House well knows, the Minister of Justice has, under Section 5 of the Department of Justice Act, powers and duties as Attorney General to Canada to, among other things, advise the heads of the several departments of the government upon all matters of law connected with those departments.

In addition, as minister, under section 4 of the said act, he is obliged, among other things, to be "the official legal adviser of the Governor General and the legal member of Her Majesty's Privy Council for Canada;" and he shall "see that the administration of public affairs is in accordance with law;" and have the superintendence of all matters connected with the administration of justice, in Canada, not within the jurisdiction of the governments of the provinces.

[The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin).]

The Minister of Justice and his cabinet colleagues have been less than frank when opposition members have tried to find out why the government has allowed this whole unfortunate matter involving possible fraud and millions of dollars to develop. Make no mistake, this type of situation did not develop overnight.

Let us look back a few years to see what has happened to the Ministry of Justice. When Prime Minister Pearson decided to split off from the Ministry of Justice in 1965 the present portfolio involving the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand), knowledgeable people expressed concern that there would be a severe diminution of the effectiveness of this portfolio which, up to that time, had been a portfolio pre-eminent among cabinet ministries and second only to the Prime Minister's position in terms of political power and prestige.

A succession of Ministers of Justice, which include the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), have, since then, obviously failed to halt the erosion that the establishment of the Solicitor General's department has caused. In a December issue of the Toronto Star for 1965 which reported a press conference held by the then Prime Minister, Mr. Pearson, it was stated, and I quote:

At his press conference last Friday, Mr. Pearson spoke rather vaguely of the need for a more vigorous fight against organized crime. It is probable that the poor showing the department made in the Rivard affair contributed to the decision that a change was necessary.

But here again the remedy may only aggravate the disease. As former Justice Minister Davie Fulton put it this week, "It would be far more likely under the new setup that an RCMP report would never get to the Department of Justice."

What the department needs, in fact, is not a hasty amputation but a careful reorganization to improve co-ordination between its various branches.

In view of the subsequent events, Mr. Justice Fulton, as he now is, was a very good prophet.

It is obvious, looking back over the warning signals extending back to the 1960's, that the ministers of Justice were either out of touch or did not pay sufficient attention to their primary role or else we would not have before us the spectacle of ministers of the Crown hastily passing the buck to their executive assistants and piously denying they had any reason to suspect anything out of the ordinary or wrong with dredging or other related matters.

I am quoting from a December 14, 1971, article in the Hamilton Spectator dealing with a news story involving the National Harbours Board and Hamilton Harbour in relation to whether it was proper for a man named Earl Perkins to be both Hamilton's port director and part owner of a firm that handled cargo at the harbour. The mayor of Hamilton at the time also said that the board of control would meet with the harbour commissioners to discuss a waterfront land exchange between the commission and Stelco and Dofasco, something which is now very relevant and current in view of the revelations of what has been going on in recent years. The interesting part is that the newspaper article goes on to say:

Federal Health and Welfare Minister John Munro, Liberal MP for Hamilton East, said he will talk with members of the commission later this week about the situation. "I want to find out what it's all about," he said.

That was a long time ago. There is no indication the government has yet found out what it is all about. The foregoing is to illustrate that neither the Solicitor General nor the Minister of Justice, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), nor, apparently, anyone else in government, had enough perspicacity or initiative to look into these matters as they developed to provide sound advice, to take proper action and exhibit responsible leadership.

We must remember that the federal appointees to the Hamilton Harbour Commission constituted a majority of two out of three, which is not a bad majority, and anything that has been done in the Hamilton Harbour affair, I suggest, would have been very difficult to achieve without the agreement of at least one of the federally appointed commissioners. Here one must ask, where was the guiding hand and the advice from the Minister of Justice?

There has been a strange lack of frankness from the government ministers which goes far beyond the need for the normal reticence which could be justified by having the mantle of sub judice thrown over some of the matters at issue.

I believe that there are many things yet to be explained and I hope that the Minister of Justice will very soon tell us exactly what he and his predecessors have been doing in discharging their responsibilities, whether there is any truth in reports that the preliminary hearings with regard to dredging will not begin until next fall at the earliest, and whether the Minister of Justice has any input into this state of affairs.

Perhaps the Prime Minister would have been as well advised when he was Minister of Justice, in addition to worrying about the state having no place in the bedrooms of the nation, to have concerned himself with the relationship of the government in boardrooms of certain corporations.

I presume that as matters unfold we will also learn why the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) made such a clear and unequivocal answer to a question on February 25 when he said no to a question asked by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) as to whether he had any indication or believed that he would be called as a witness in respect to the Hamilton Harbour affair. We now find that he will be a witness and has in fact testified before the Grand Jury.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret I have to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I would rather answer the question put by the hon. member on March 19. As for his comments this evening, I presume the minister will answer in due course.

[English]

As hon. members will appreciate, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) and his departmental legal officers are consulted in any particular matter which may involve legal issues at various stages during the examination or investigation of the matter and by various parts of the government as well. Some of the consultations are of a very informal and tentative nature; others involve requests for formal advice or action by the Attorney General. Consequently, it is very difficult, if not impossible, to pinpoint with precision an exact time at which the Minister of Justice as Attorney General was first consulted on or asked for advice in relation to a particular matter.

● (2200)

In respect of the criminal charges arising out of the Hamilton Harbour investigation, hon. members will appreciate that those laid under the Criminal Code were at the initiative of the Attorney General of Ontario pursuant to section 2 of the Code. The income tax charges which were laid against several of the parties connected with this matter on March 11, 1975, were of course initiated by the federal authorities, and officers of the Department of Justice were consulted by other agencies of the federal government during several months preceding the date on which charges were preferred.

On the question of withholding payments which may be due to the several contractors who have been charged in connection with the dredging contracts, advice was again sought from the Department of Justice by other parts of the federal government during the past several months on the legal position to be taken in this regard. As hon. members will be aware, several of the dredging companies commenced an action in the Federal Court against the Crown, challenging the right of the Crown to withhold moneys claimed as owing to them under contracts with the Crown.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—GOVERNMENT POLICY ON ASSISTING ADULT REFUGEES FROM VIET NAM

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, all Canadians are deeply concerned about the collapse of Viet Nam and are taking considerable comfort in operation baby-lift which has so far brought 1,400 orphans to the western world, 61 of whom have been brought to Canada. However, tonight I wish to make a strong plea for taking a sober second look at the implications of operation baby-lift as a way of helping the beleaguered people of South Viet Nam. I want to urge that we calm down our emotional reaction and that the Canadian government appoint a co-ordinator with respect to all aspects of Canadian aid to Viet Nam, both north and south.

I begin by reflecting that the urge to save these children springs from a deep human desire to rescue those who are least capable of defending themselves against the unfolding horror. The individuals who have given their energy, spirit and in some cases their lives to the cause of these suffering children are worthy of our deepest respect—I include all those Canadians who wish to offer their assistance by opening their homes to orphans. I also wish to take note of what has been done by both the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) and the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Andras), and commend them for the part they have placed in these humanitarian efforts.

I wish to begin by saying that the publicity surrounding operation baby-lift both in Canada and in the United States has been most inappropriate and suggests an attempt on the part of some to look good in the midst of very bad times. Today there is a flood of articles by commentators, journalists and political leaders in various parts of the world questioning the efficacy of bringing out large numbers of orphans from Viet Nam and transplanting them in another culture as if this were the kind of response required by the situation. Mr. W. A. Wilson, a journalist in the Ottawa press gallery, has this to say today, that the process of moving babies in such huge numbers is "a do-gooder's ego-tripping carried to insanity". Then he goes on to say:

—no one has the right to pull children out of their own culture and leave them rootless. Everything about it is unattractive: the personal egotism, the white arrogance, the selfishness.

Then I notice that Mr. Charles Lynch in his column over the week end had this to say:

Communists may be cruel to their enemies, but in every Communist country I have visited, children are treated with tender loving care, impartially administered.

Then in today's New York Times Mr. Anthony Lewis said that it is an illusion if we think we can overcome the nightmare of Viet Nam and salve our own consciences by a procedure to bring out its babies.

The minister for overseas development in the British government, Judith Hart, had this to say:

One has to consider what is best for the children. In Southeast Asia there is an extended family system, she said. If such a child could go back to a village to be looked after by members of its family, that is obviously best for it.

I have recounted some of these opinions so as to suggest that the attempt to expiate the guilt that is felt in the western world will not be so easily routed. Here in Canada we cannot ever forget that we have been a silent but none the less partner in the destruction that has taken place in Viet Nam for so many years. I want to quote one or two sentences from a book by Charles Taylor entitled "Snow Job", which is one of the most complete analyses of the relationship of Canada to the Viet Nam war. He says:

Despite Ottawa's brave words about our Vietnam role, Canada was neither impartial nor objective. Whatever our initial intentions we soon became little more than American surrogates on both the ICC and the ICCS, carefully tending the interests of Washington and Saigon as well as dabbling in dubious intelligence work and selling the Americans part of the arms and ammunition with which they wrought such unparalleled destruction.

I just want to say tonight that I hope that the Canadian government will carry out the program announced by the external affairs minister, and that it will be administered in such a way, with the infusion of money and required personnel, that it will be seen by the world to be a truly humanitarian effort to respond to the chaos that is Viet Nam.

With regard to the adults I spoke about earlier today, I hope the adults of South Viet Nam who may want to emigrate under the classification of refugees will be permitted to do so. But what is to become of them? Certainly Canada should open its doors to the adult refugees of South Viet Nam; but here, as in the case of the babies, we should not consider it to be our total response just to have a refugee program.

[Mr. Roche.]

I doubt very much whether many adults will be permitted to leave Viet Nam. In any event I should like the Canadian government to put itself under the advice of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in respect to any program for adult refugees. I hope our Canadian program will be administered in such a way that the world will see it as an offer of truly humanitarian assistance to both sides to the conflict in Viet Nam. I trust we will move on, as the external affairs minister has said, to a new basis of international relations for Canada in which we will help to reorder the policies and priorities of nations around the world that are developing and that wish to participate in the economic and social systems to which they have the right. Otherwise, Mr. Speaker, I fear that we will see more cases like Viet Nam in the years ahead.

● (2210)

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this is perhaps one of those more rare occasions during the late show, or in this House, when members on this side and on that side find themselves in so much agreement, except to the extent that the hon. member may have implied some misinterpretation in respect of what we are actually doing in this very tragic situation.

I find myself very much in agreement with some of the comments made about the movement of children. I would refer the hon. member to every statement I have made on this aspect which falls within my responsibility because it involves immigration. In respect of the movement of orphan children from Viet Nam I have tried my best to be very precise in pointing out that we are in fact limiting the movement of these children to those in respect of whom the adoptive process had begun or was completed, at least to the extent that the authority of the Vietnamese government was given, for exit and adoption and where required, with the knowledge of any relative that may be in Viet Nam associated with these children.

This movement has been limited also to those in respect of which the provincial procedures have been followed, since there is provincial jurisdiction in this matter of adoption, and the children who have been brought out to date, with one or two extraordinary exceptions, for reasons which I think are obvious in the drama and confusion of the situation, have all been in that adoptive stream, in some cases for many many months prior to this more recent emergency that has unfolded in Viet Nam. We have tended to hold to that provision.

We are not subscribing to the idea that we or any other country should charge into Viet Nam with aircraft to abduct or coerce children out of Viet Nam without the proper contact with and authority of the existing government, and, wherever families are involved, without their knowledge and concurrence. We are not doing that and in regard to the extraordinary suggestion in Mr. Wilson's column today in the Ottawa Journal to the effect that we as the Canadian government are subscribing to the kind of operation he described, when the facts are absolutely different, well I can only say it is not helpful in creating a clear picture of what is inevitably a confused situation under these very tragic circumstances in Viet Nam.

I deplore some of the publicity about the so-called operation "baby lift". We have not been a party to it, other than to respond to questions of the press, many of them legitimate and some perhaps sensation seeking. We have tried to make it absolutely clear that this is the approach we have been taking.

I might say that I was talking to Mrs. Bronstein last night, and I should like to praise her publicly for her extraordinary heroism and compassion in the efforts she and some of her immediate associates in Viet Nam and Cambodia have made during these terrible weeks, during the tragic crash of the aircraft the other day, and in flying with these 62 children from Saigon to Hong Kong, looking after them overnight and flying with them to Vancouver, and then on the same day travelling with them from Vancouver to Montreal, seeing these children right into the arms of the families who received them for adoptions. I do not think it is a gratuitous comment when I say what an admirable thing she has done. She as well totally agrees with us in deploring some of the publicity about the situation, or the recent fashionable approach being taken to this situation.

I think the proper approach lies somewhere in the middle. Thousands of fine Canadians have come forward in an emotional response, and I would not question their motives for wanting to help and wanting to adopt Vietnamese children. The fact is that very few of those people, as fine an effort as this offer is, are going to have a Vietnamese child to adopt. I do not think there are more than 100 or 150 youngsters left in Viet Nam for whom the adoptive process was in progress, or that we can locate to take out. We are trying our best and in fact there is a flight en route to Saigon now, but I do not know what the manifest of that flight will be when it comes back.

I assure the hon. member we are not doing this in the way that some of the publicity is implying, and to the best of my ability I am trying to make absolutely clear in each statement I have made, or is being made by other representatives of the government, that this is in fact the case.

We have said in respect of any adults who get out of Viet Nam to another country and apply under the refugee program of the Canadian immigration procedures and laws, that they can expect to be treated as such. Again, we cannot charge into Viet Nam with a mass refugee program because one does not exist in that sense.

We have been in consultation with the United Nations High Commissioner on Refugees, indicating to him that we will join in any international effort to alleviate the human misery we are seeing unfold in Viet Nam. That, of course, would include consideration of an acceptance of that kind of movement to the degree past patterns have indicated we are prepared to do it. So, it would be under the advice of the United Nations High Commissioner, but in our communications with him and his office they have not yet come to the conclusion that that is the appropriate action to take. I think the reasons are fairly obvious in a situation which is a day-by-day unfolding of change in Indo-China. I think the hon. member and I are in agreement as to the proper approach in this area, and I believe the only conflict perhaps is a misinterpretation of what is said, by the press.

Adjournment Debate

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—ALBERTA DECISION TO ALLOW INCREASED EMISSIONS OF SULPHUR DIOXIDE FROM SYNCRUDE PLANT

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, on March 11 I raised a question with the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Sauvé) on why the minister was supporting the decision of the Alberta Department of the Environment to allow Syncrude to double its sulphur dioxide emission from 140 long tons to 287 long tons a day. The Syncrude operation in the Athabasca oil sands has a potential for massive environmental damage in terms of air, land and water pollution over some 800 square miles.

On the issue of environment I should like to quote from a letter the federal Minister of the Environment wrote to her counterpart in the Alberta government. The federal minister stated:

> It does appear however, from an examination of the available information, that Syncrude has failed to appreciate the real scope of environmental concerns and has also failed to address the question of environmental protection in either a realistic or an adequate manner.

Then further in the letter we find this:

> To reiterate, Syncrude's documentation is deficient in detailed information in many areas of environmental concern and we believe that there is a likelihood for major environmental damage.

I would have thought the minister, having written that letter, would be following the environmental development in the oil sands very closely. On the issue of sulphur dioxide emissions we now know and have learned from a federal study, from which I shall quote later, that sulphur dioxide combined with water vapour and mists common to oil sands can produce a killer fog similar to the great London fog of 1952 which killed 3,500 people. Air inversions which trap pollutants close to the ground occur on 90 per cent of winter days in the Syncrude lease area. SO_2 could also combine with surface waters to produce an acid which kills vegetation in a drainage system which reaches as far away as Saskatchewan. In January, 1973, the Alberta Department of the Environment instructed Syncrude to limit maximum release of SO_2 to 140 long tons a day.

Pressure by the oil companies caused the Alberta government to back down in July, 1973, and the maximum rate was increased not to exceed 287 long tons a day. The Federal Department of the Environment task force report of August 19, 1974, on Syncrude environmental issue states:

● (2220)

> Through the application of best practicable technology, total SO_2 emissions could be reduced from 287 long tons a day to an estimated 40 long tons a day.

The report disputes Syncrude's claim regarding environmental damage being negligible and it says that the Syncrude study was done under ideal conditions. It states:

> Under normal plant operating conditions, it appears that the ground level concentrations of SO_2 will exceed the provincial standard and the federal objective several fold during more restrictive meteorological conditions.

In the light of major environmental damage from SO_2 emissions at Syncrude, as admitted by the minister's own department, and in view of the fact that there exists technology to reduce emissions from 287 to 40 long tons a day, what action does the federal government, a partner in Syncrude and responsible for setting national emission standards, plan to take?

Is the minister serious about protecting the environment? Will she press the Alberta government to lower its emission levels? Will she introduce national air quality standards, or can we expect only pious statements and token legislation?

Mr. Len Marchand (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker I thank the hon. member for his persistence in bringing this most important question back to the House of Commons. My answer will be relatively short.

The Alberta decision to permit emissions of 287 long tons per day of sulphur dioxide referred to by the hon. member is not a recent one. It was in fact made in July of 1973. Environment Canada's view on this matter was contained in the document tabled in the House by the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Sauvé) to which the hon. member referred as the environmental impact study of August, 1974. As the hon. member pointed out, Environment Canada's recommendation was to limit sulphur dioxide emissions from the Syncrude plant to 40 tons a day. It is not intended at the present time to introduce any new federal anti-air pollution standards for this purpose.

The government has not by any means exhausted its efforts to have its views adopted by Alberta and by Syncrude. The federal government has recently become even more closely involved in this matter through our financial participation in the Syncrude project, and this can only help us in our efforts to ensure that the environment is protected.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.24 p.m.

SUGGESTED PROTEST TO NORTH VIET NAM AGAINST AGGRESSION IN SOUTH VIET NAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to propose a motion regarding North Viet Nam's active participation in the brutal assaults now taking place on life and on property in South Viet Nam.

I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro):

That this House urge the Secretary of State for External Affairs to instruct Canada's diplomatic representative in North Viet Nam, John Small, to lodge a formal protest with the North Vietnamese government against its active aggression in South Viet Nam and its failure to respect the cease-fire and other agreements aimed at reconciling the differences in Southeast Asia.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. It being proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43, it cannot be debated without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

PROPOSAL THAT PRIME MINISTER CHARGE FOR USE OF SWIMMING POOL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask the consent of the House to move the following motion:

In view of the recent government announcement to establish a scale of fees for admission to national historic sites and to establish a scale of tolls for canals, in line with apparent government policy that those who use the facility should pay for such use, the House requests the Prime Minister to make a statement as to whether operating costs will be defrayed by charging an entrance fee to users of the lavish, luxurious and opulent $200,000 swimming pool at 24 Sussex Drive.

Mr. Speaker: Fortunately, I have the gravest reservations as to the urgency and pressing necessity of that motion.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION TO SETTLE LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE IN QUEBEC—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, under the terms of Standing Order 43, I request unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on an urgent matter.

Because work stoppages in the ports of Montreal, Quebec City and Trois-Rivières are placing Quebec producers in an unacceptable situation, and because grain stocks will be used up within 48 hours, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner):

That this House invite unanimously the responsible minister to present to the House a solution, if need be a legislative measure, within 24 hours, to bring the situation back to normal in that field.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the terms of Standing Order 43, the motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: As there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

AMOUNT OF REDUCTION IN FORECAST OF RATE OF GROWTH AND DATE OF ANNOUNCEMENT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance who said in the House on February 11 that his forecasts for growth for the year 1975 have been shaded down. Can the minister now tell us how much the rate of growth for the gross national product of 4 per cent, given in the November 1974 budget, has been shaded down?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will be able to give that to the House on an appropriate occasion, but not at the moment.

Mr. Stanfield: Can the Minister of Finance indicate what he might consider to be an appropriate occasion to give this House the information which he thought it was important for the House to have last November?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I think an appropriate time will be when I bring down a budget, which I intend to bring down as early as I can, hopefully before the end of May. Before I can come to a final decision on the nature of the budget, I will have to weigh certain key factors which it has not yet been possible to assess with the precision I would like. It is easy to outline the factors to the House. In brief order, they are as follows: First, the continuing character and extent of the mix of American tax and energy policy; second, the developments as they may be agreed upon in some form or another by the Prime Minister and first ministers at this week's conference relating to pricing for oil and gas; third, the effect we may be able to have on prices and incomes in Canada by working together in a common effort to moderate the claims of the various groups in the economy.

I might say as well that I will be making a further assessment of the international situation as it relates to the oil exporting countries. On my trip to the Middle East I shall be calling upon the Chancellor of the Exchequer of the United Kingdom and the Minister of Finance of France. With this information, and with these assessments, I hope to be back before the House with a precise estimate, as we have it at that time in forecasting terms, of the growth—

● (1410)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: Don't forget Celsius!

INFLATION—DATE WHEN PRECISE INFORMATION AVAILABLE ON NATURE OF CONSENSUS ON RESTRAINT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): With regard to the consensus. Since the minister is bringing out a budget before the end of May, and since the consensus will be one of the factors involved, will he undertake to give us precise information as to the nature of this consensus when he brings down a budget or will this continue to be a secret even after the budget secrets have all been disclosed?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I will have to deal with that consensus in one form or another in the budget statement, as the hon. gentleman has surmised, but I hope to be able, through my parliamentary secretary, to table in the House a statement or progress report to the country, to the first ministers and to the Prime Minister during the forthcoming conference.

INQUIRY WHETHER BUDGET WILL BE DESIGNED TO COUNTERACT INFLATION OR DEAL WITH UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question, too, is directed to the Minister of Finance. Since the hon. gentleman will now be introducing a budget before the end of May, and in view of the fact that seasonally adjusted employment is down by 19,000 since November and there has been virtually no increase in employment since August, while unemployment—

Some hon. Members: Question!

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Mr. Stevens: —seasonally adjusted has jumped 190,000 since August, will the minister indicate whether his budget will be designed to stimulate the economy so as to arrest this unsatisfactory unemployment situation or will it be more designed to counteract the inflation which is still prevalent?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Obviously the budget will have to deal with both those problems. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby is showing disarming perception.

An hon. Member: Unusual!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I might say in response to the preamble to the question asked by the hon. member for York-Simcoe that the year over year increase in employment in March in Canada was up by 2.5 per cent and that the year over year increase in the labour force in March on an unadjusted basis of 4.9 per cent was 450,000. So his figures are completely off the mark.

REASON FOR DELAY IN SETTING WAGE GUIDELINES

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Further to my original question I should like to put a supplementary to the Minister of Finance. With time lost due to work stoppages in January up 64 per cent as compared with January of last year when Canada had one of the worst strike records in the industrialized world, would the minister tell us why it is only after May that he seriously intends to set guidelines for future wage settlements, bearing in mind that 1975 is a very heavy bargaining year during which just under three-quarters of all employees covered by major union contracts will be negotiating?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I will deal with that statement at the appropriate time.

Mr. Stevens: A final supplementary. Surely, we get a little tired of always this evasion that statements will be made at an appropriate time.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

UNEMPLOYMENT—POSSIBLE GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS TO CREATE MORE JOBS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I should like to address a further question to the highly disarming Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that unemployment in percentage terms now exceeds even the high level of unemployment which was achieved during the application of the government's deflationary program between 1969 and 1971, can the minister inform the House whether, between now and the date upon which he proposes to bring in a budget, the government has any plans to initiate action which will lead to more jobs in the economy?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the budget being the relevant parliamentary response in fiscal and monetary terms to the problems of the country, I would think that the response will be given on budget night.

Mr. Broadbent: A supplementary question just to be perfectly clear on what the minister is saying. Is it the government's intention to do nothing to create jobs, in addition to whatever programs they may now have, before the minister brings in a budget some time in the month of May?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman would have to wait for the budget. In the meantime, he ought to review the stimulus already in the economy as a result of the November 18 budget.

Mr. Speaker: A final supplementary, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

POSSIBLE MEASURES TO INCREASE SUPPLY OF HOUSING PRIOR TO BUDGET—SUGGESTED REDUCTION IN MORTGAGE INTEREST RATE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, the one sector of the economy that does create a lot of jobs and meets a human need is housing but there has been a decline in starts of some 49 per cent in January, a decline of 44 per cent in February and when the figures are available for March I am sure there will be an equivalent decline. May I ask the minister if the government intends to do anything about increasing the supply of housing prior to introduction of the budget?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, obviously a budget will have to bear in mind the priority that the hon. gentleman suggests, both in economic and social terms. He should not overlook the fact, however, that pursuant to recent amendments in the National Housing Act passed by this parliament new measures are already contemporaneously being introduced by my colleague the Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

Mr. Broadbent: A final supplementary for the Minister of Finance. In view of the changes that have just been made in NHA regulations which will now permit Canadians to borrow up to $50,000 if they are buying a house, which with existing interest rates will put people in debt perhaps to the tune of over $100,000 over a period of time, does the minister have any plans to take action on mortgage rates so that the cost of living on a monthly basis for those who will be buying houses will be substantially reduced?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): In general terms, no, Mr. Speaker, but the hon. gentleman again ought not to overlook the Assisted Home Ownership Program which in effect subsidizes interest rates on lower priced houses.

EFFECT OF LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE ON SUPPLY OF FEED GRAIN—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

Since Quebec millers no longer have access to port facilities to get some feed grain and as they continue to send us telegrams of distress, being unable to provide feed grain to their customers, as is the case for example of the Meunerie coopérative of Parisville, I would like to ask the minister whether he will make a statement in the House this afternoon to announce what contingency measures he intends to take to provide feed grain to Quebec mills, in accordance with the assurance he gave in the House yesterday?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, according to information I have received today most people still have some stocks of grain and there is no real loss of feed stocks. That is, no livestock or poultry are going without feed. We are watching the situation very closely and moving as much as we possibly can by all means, as I have said. I will not be making a statement later today.

[Translation]

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

By his reply, does the Minister of Agriculture suggest that he will wait to act till some livestock losses are incurred as a result of shortage of feed grain in eastern Canada, since stocks are now barely sufficient for three days in the Quebec City area?

[English]

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, there will be no loss if we can make sure deliveries are made. We have stocks for several days—in some cases for three or four days and in some cases much longer—so we are watching the situation very closely to make sure there is no loss of livestock or poultry.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a last supplementary.

I understand the Minister of Agriculture means that there is enough feed grain in the Quebec area. I agree with him. This grain must be forwarded to mills. What measures does the minister intend to take to ensure the grain will reach mills, then producers?

● (1420)

[English]

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I am fully aware of the grains that are available in the elevators, in the feed mills, and at the sources which are supplying feeds to the farmers. As I said, we are watching the situation and keeping on top of it as well as we can.

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Agriculture.

Considering that this morning we heard from very reliabe sources that producers are already shipping their animals for slaughter, considering the lack of grain and the fact that producers anxious to get grains cannot obtain them because of protests that are now paralyzing the system, can the minister assure the House that he will check this information or at least make a statement and, finally, whether he will find solutions to answer the claims of producers?

[English]

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, making statements will not help in finding solutions to the situation. We had a meeting earlier in the day just before coming into the House concerning this particular problem. We are aware of the conditions that exist, but we have no control over those people who want to ship their livestock. As far as I know there has been no evidence presented as yet that anyone is actually without feed.

RELATIONSHIP OF CANADIAN AND UNITED STATES DOLLAR—DATE OF PUBLICATION OF ECONOMIC REVIEW

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that Canada's current deficit on the international account is running at the rate of $4 billion to $5 billion a year, and the Canadian dollar seems to be maintaining relative parity with United States and other currencies, will the Minister of Finance advise the House on the extent to which the Bank of Canada has entered the international market in order to maintain that relative parity, and what has caused the government to abandon what the minister euphemistically called a relatively clean float? Will the minister also give us those reasons, and indicate when the economic review of his department, the publication of which is overdue now, will be brought down?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I can reassure the hon. gentleman that the float remains clean and free, as evidenced by the fact that the reserves in the exchange account have varied very little over the past two or three months. As to the value of the dollar throughout the year, of course this will depend on the effect of two conflicting forces; first, the factor the hon. member has mentioned, the large current account deficit we anticipate for the year, and secondly, the attractiveness of the Canadian economy to investment from abroad. As to the economic review, I apologize to the House that it is not quite ready. I went over it finally this weekend and we expect to have it published and tabled very shortly.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

SUGGESTED USE OF DREE PROGRAMS TO COUNTERACT UNEMPLOYMENT IN ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, in view of the serious unemployment problems continuing to plague Atlantic Canada, is the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion taking advantage of the presence of the premiers in Ottawa this week to discuss new initiative and thrust for DREE in addition to the selective aid for the Halifax-Dartmouth and Strait of Canso areas of Nova Scotia, which, while very welcome, is obviously inadequate to help the general economic picture in eastern Canada at a time of very high unemployment?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, of course I will be talking to the premiers while they are here. As the hon. member knows, I was speaking with Premier Regan at length yesterday in Halifax, and also ministers of the government of Newfoundland. I think the fact that we signed this agreement yesterday is indicative of the fact that we are anxious to do whatever we can to alleviate unemployment in Nova Scotia and in other Atlantic provinces.

POSSIBILITY OF NEW DREE PROGRAMS TO COUNTERACT UNEMPLOYMENT IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion is prompted by the very serious and alarming rate of unemployment in Newfoundland, which now stands at 18.8 per cent. What new federal initiatives does the minister intend to take in view of this alarming and frightening rate of unemployment in the province of Newfoundland?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Well, Mr. Speaker, I am not sure I can give all the details in the time permitted in the question period. We have a number of supplementary agreements already in operation. I mentioned, in answer to the previous question, that there were consultations with the Government of Newfoundland yesterday which will lead to at least three others, one having to do with the fishing industry. There will also be considerable work undertaken in and around the city of St. John's, which I know will be of special interest to the hon. member. I might say that the figures for last month,—I have not had an opportunity to examine them in detail—while recognizing that they are annually high at this time of the year, probably were to some extent affected by the fisheries strike which now happily is over.

REASON FOR ALLOCATING FUNDS FOR THE FURTHER STUDY OF CONTAINER FACILITIES AT HALIFAX

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a related question. I wonder whether the minister could explain to the House the reasoning or the thought behind the inclusion of an item of $1 million in the agreement entered into yesterday with the province of Nova Scotia with regard to further studies surrounding the expansion of the container facility at Halifax as opposed to some more concrete action which might have produced jobs for the hard pressed Atlantic region. Could he explain the purpose of this further research?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Yes, I think so, Mr. Speaker. The position is that the additional money was provided for studies because these studies were determined to be necessary on a precise basis. There had been quite a bit of feasibility work, and I think there is general acceptance of the necesssity to have an expansion or if you want a second terminal for containers in the Halifax-Dartmouth area.

There are still questions to be settled concerning the site, the design and things of this nature. That is the purpose for which the money was provided. The premier of Nova Scotia yesterday indicated that he hoped the work which will be financed by this $1 million will be completed in short order.

Mr. Speaker: One supplementary by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East.

WILLINGNESS OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT TO AID EXPANSION OF CONTAINER FACILITIES AT HALIFAX

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if the minister could then indicate to us whether or not it is the position of the government at the present time that it is not prepared to enter into a financial arrangement with the province of Nova Scotia or Haltern or any other interested and capable groups to expand the present container facilities at this point in time and whether, as would be the common assumption today, if the province of Nova Scotia indeed wants the expansion of that facility so as to broaden work concepts and protect jobs it will have to go at it alone financially at least at the outset.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, on the specifics of the last part of the question the answer is no. As I indicated yesterday, and have indicated on previous occasions, we would be quite prepared to enter into a special supplementary agreement with a view to expanding the facilities along the lines mentioned by the hon. member. Whether or not it would be an expansion of what exists at present or whether it would be in a different location are issues which still must be resolved among the parties of which DREE is really not a direct member. But when the project has been firmed up in respect of the ideas and concepts of those who are promoting it at the present time, then as I have said we are prepared to make a DREE contribution.

SUGGESTED PRIORITY FOR FUNDY TIDAL POWER PROJECT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Since the total amount of DREE grants since the inception of the program do not look too impressive when compared to the costs of massive projects such as the Mirabel airport or Syncrude, is the minister prepared to press for a greater priority for Fundy tidal power development?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): I think I answered the hon. member in the committee on this matter. Again in principle the answer is yes. I had discussion on this yesterday again with Premier Regan. I do not believe I am disclosing anything he would not say personally when I say he mentioned the necessity for the construction of the Atlantic grid, the electricity grid, and this work has the full support of myself and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I believe it is Mr. Regan's view as well as that of certain other authorities on the subject that the grid is a key element in the development of tidal power.

REPRESENTATIONS ON SINKING OF FISHING VESSELS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

Has he received a telegram from Pacific coast fishermen about the recent losses in lives and fishing vessels which so tragically afflict this industry and the families in this area?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have received representations following the shipwrecks of a number of small vessels, which have also resulted in fatalities. I am waiting for the report from the investigators we have dispatched to the Pacific coast. We shall certainly do the utmost to find out the cause of this tragedy which appears to me to be quite abnormal.

EFFECT OF LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE ON SUPPLY OF FEED GRAIN—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Yves Caron (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Agriculture another question concerning the feed grain supply problems resulting from the longshoremen's strikes in the Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec City harbours.

A while ago, a number of questions were asked. Following inquiry, there is no more feed grain in the Quebec City harbour. Can the minister advise the House of any new developments, so that farm producers in the Quebec area may not be victimized by this situation?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the situation is not any different. As I said before, I am waiting for an up to date report from my officials and officials of the feed board. As soon as I have that, I shall let hon. members interested know.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ALLEGED AGREEMENT CANADA WOULD NOT RETALIATE FOR BOARDING OF "GREENPEACE III" BY FRENCH AUTHORITIES

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. A report this morning indicated that the French admiral in charge of the operations of a nuclear test in the Pacific was given the assurance that in the event of the boarding of the Canadian vessel Greenpeace III there would be no retaliation by Canadian authorities. Would the minister advise the House whether he is conducting an inquiry into this very serious allegation of connivance?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I heard the same report and I have asked for information on this point.

Mr. Leggatt: Is the minister in a position, as a result of this inquiry, to advise this House that Canadian authorities have not in any way conspired or connived in this act of piracy by the French government?

Mr. MacEachen: I will be happy to give the hon. member the information once I receive it and will make any statements that are justified in the circumstances.

REPORT ON IMPROVEMENT OF NAVIGATION ON OTTAWA RIVER FOR PLEASURE CRAFT—DATE OF COMPLETION AND TABLING

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): My question is for the Minister of Public Works and it is one of which I have given him notice. In view of the fact on July 13, 1973, the Department of Public Works awarded to Pluritec, consulting engineers, a contract to evaluate the costs of enhancing pleasure craft navigation on the Ottawa river west of Ottawa, can the minister now report whether or not that report has been completed, whether he can table it, and whether the government has made any decisions based on that report?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the report, and not having seen the report, I do not yet know whether or not it would be customary to table it. I will be glad to look into it and advise the hon. gentleman.

GRANT TO COMMUNITY MUSIC SCHOOL IN VANCOUVER—REASON FOR CHANGE IN GOVERNMENT ATTITUDE

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the announcement last week in Vancouver by the minister and the other member of the cabinet from British Columbia of a federal government grant of one third of a million dollars to the community music school in Vancouver, and in view of the announcement two months ago by the Secretary of State that the school did not fit the criteria for grants, in spite of efforts to assist by members on both sides of the House, can the minister tell the House what special influence the two cabinet ministers from British Columbia were able to exert in order to reverse the cabinet decision—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Beautiful!

Mr. Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): —announced by the Secretary of State, and why he and his cabinet colleague from British Columbia did not display their influence sooner?

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM AND SUMMER EMPLOYMENT FOR STUDENTS—POSSIBLE DECREASE IN FUNDS

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, and it is really supplementary to a number of questions which were asked earlier. In light of the fact that unemployment in March of this year among Canadians under 25 is already 4 per cent higher than that at this time last year and promises to worsen before the summer, does the government intend to reconsider its decision to freeze its budget for student summer employment and decrease the money allocated for this year's Opportunity for Youth Program?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I expect to make an announcement very shortly.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT PROTESTED AGGRESSION BY NORTH VIET NAM

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Could he tell the House whether his government advised the Canadian diplomatic representative in North Viet Nam, John Small, to launch a formal protest with the North Vietnamese government against its active aggression in South Viet Nam and its failure to respect the cease-fire?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Reynolds: I have a supplementary question for the minister. Can he advise the House whether this is under consideration by the cabinet or if this has not been done under direct instructions from the Prime Minister?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, all such questions are under continuing review. The general attitude of the government toward this particular situation was made clear yesterday in a series of questions asked in the House.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

POSSIBILITY OF FURTHER AGREEMENTS FOR BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): My question is addressed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the pleasure at the extension of DREE grants in Kootenay West until the end of this year, and in view of the fact that there is a continuing expression of concern about the DREE programs in B.C., can the minister advise if any sub-agreements have now been signed or are proposed with the province of British Columbia with reference to the DREE program?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): I was very happy to be able to extend the designation in the area to which the hon. member refers. At the same time I held discussions with the appropriate minister in the government of British Columbia. There are three and perhaps four sub-agreements which are now being negotiated, but they have not yet been signed. I can tell the hon. member in a general way that one of them has to do with forestry development and another has to do with a number of activities in northwestern B.C. and in the whole general northern area of that province.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR RESOLUTION CONDEMNING AGGRESSION BY NORTH VIET NAM—POSSIBILITY OF PROTEST THROUGH UNITED NATIONS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): My question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In light of his answers today and in particular his answers on January 4 and 5, 1973 at the opening of parliament when parliament approved a government resolution condemning the U.S. bombing in North Viet Nam, can the minister say—in view of the killing of women and children and the great inhumanity being perpetrated at present—if he would reconsider his position and put forward a government resolution condemning the Communist aggression that is going on now?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I recall the resolution to which the hon. member refers. It consisted of a series of propositions, including the wish of the House to deplore the bombing of Hanoi by the United States. It seems to me that no analogy exists in this particular situation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. MacEachen: If the hon. member has in mind the attempt to draw a strict analogy between the two situations, let me tell him that they are not precisely the same. I say to the hon. member that I have already deplored the major offensive which is taking place in South Viet Nam, and particularly the effect that it is having on innocent civilians in that country. If the hon. member would look at that resolution he would find that my words with respect to this offensive are precisely the words that were used in the resolution to which he refers.

Mr. Woolliams: I would ask the minister now to reconsider what he has just said regarding the conditions being different. There are women and children being killed by bombs and Communist aggression. The minister has said that he deplores the situation. Is he prepared to formally protest, through the proper channels of the United Nations or to the Communist countries which are backing the North Vietnamese, this military aggression which is going on and which is causing this inhumanity?

● (1440)

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, in deciding what one ought to do in a situation of this kind, one ought to understand clearly the purpose, the effect and the worthwhileness of any particular action. I am quite satisfied that outright denunciation such as is suggested by my hon. friend would do nothing to relieve the human suffering which is at the present time the main Canadian concern. We have moved very quickly to alleviate that human suffering in South Viet Nam.

I would make this second comment to the hon. member, that another obligation which must be discharged by the Canadian government concerns the welfare of Canadian citizens now in territories controlled by the PRG, and that is a real obligation which we hope to discharge in time and which would not be helped by the kind of inflammatory approach the hon. member is suggesting.

ESTABLISHMENT OF ABORTION COMMITTEES BY HOSPITALS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the very important medical, social and moral facts put forward by members of the Canadian Physicians for Life in their open letter of April 4, for the sake of the women and unborn children of Canada, for the sake of the doctors and other concerned medical personnel of Canada, will the minister please withdraw his proposal that the hospitals of Canada be forced to establish abortion committees?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have never said that hospitals should be forced to establish abortion committees. This is certainly not a matter which I can force upon the provinces. But I still believe that the hospitals are semi-public institutions and should provide those services needed by the people of this country.

LOCAL INITIATIVES AND OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAMS—POSSIBILITY FOR INCREASED AID

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration a question.

Given the very recent figures on unemployment which were just published and which show once more that Quebec ranks second when it comes to the unemployed in Canada, could the minister responsible for LIP and Opportunities for Youth tell the House what is his department's intention with regard to the extension of local initiative projects and, second, has the minister considered the possibility of increasing the Opportunities for Youth budget to help us especially in Quebec to check the startling unemployment rate among young workers?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I answered an earlier question by saying that I would be making announcements with regard to summer employment for students. In connection with the Local Initiatives Program I would not make any comment now. My colleague the Minister of Finance has indicated that we are constantly reviewing the situation with regard to unemployment, the effect of the budget of last November, and any other measures which he deems are necessary within the framework of economic policy. We are discussing these matters and at the appropriate time announcements will be made.

Now, these young people, when they go to the centres, are being answered: "We do not have jobs at the present time." Why are these young people invited to ask for employment when the department is unable to provide it?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I hope the hon. member is not suggesting that we abandon all efforts to place young people. This program is part of that operation. If there is a specific instance in a local manpower centre where such an answer was given which was not to his satisfaction, I would be prepared to look into it.

OIL—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON FLOOR PRICE

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I would like to ask the minister if at the conference which is taking place this week he will discuss with the ministers from the provinces the question of a floor price for oil as has been proposed by various countries in the International Energy Association.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it may well arise, although it is not specifically the purpose for which we are meeting. It has been discussed in general terms with the provincial officials at the time federal officials briefed them on the I.E.A. discussions.

Mr. Gillies: Has the government put forth any specific proposal as to what the floor price ought to be?

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

ADVERTISING CONTRACT AWARDED PRICE, RUBIN AND PARTNERS—AMOUNT OF PAYMENT RECEIVED BY FIRM—INQUIRY AS TO TREASURY BOARD APPROVAL

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. On December 20 at page 2438 of Hansard I asked the minister certain questions with respect to a $250,000 advertising contract awarded to Price, Rubin and Partners. The minister stated on that day that the advertising agency was paid 17 per cent by the media, in this case ethnic newspapers. Since giving his answer on that date has the minister looked into this matter more closely, and if so can he confirm that this company, Price, Rubin and Partners, received payment limited to 17 per cent of the $250,000 advertising contract?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I advise the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton that when I said 17 per cent I was not specifically referring to this particular company. It was my understanding that advertising contracts—government placements with advertising agencies—meet the long term understanding with the franchise advertising agencies. The media pay the commission, if you like, and this is along the line of professional services. This is the understanding between all advertising agencies and the media. I can check that figure of 17 per cent which applies generally, and whatever it is, I am sure it applies to Price, Rubin and Partners.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I thank the minister, and I look forward to an answer to that question. I wonder if the minister could at the same time inform himself, and perhaps advise the House whether there was Treasury Board approval for this contract in the terms and conditions on which it was let.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I believe the hon. member will recall that when he asked the question, the President of the Treasury Board did answer.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): No, he did not. You can check it, John.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I will check it.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting President of the Treasury Board and or for the Minister of National Defence. It arises from the recent bluecollar strike. Would the government reconsider its decision not to pay certain non-striking bluecollar employees of the same union at Willow Park, Halifax, where the armed forces supply base is located, because they were advised by their superiors not to challenge picket lines and so avoid violence? Some lost up to four days pay though they were willing to work.

NATIONAL SECURITY

POSSIBILITY COMMUNICATIONS BRANCH OF NRC MONITORING LONG DISTANCE TELEPHONE CALLS

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question, which is directed either to the Minister of Communications or to the Minister of State for Science and Technology, concerns an answer given by the Prime Minister last March 26 to a question I had asked, and also the statement in committee made by the Minister of State for Science and Technology, to the effect that the communications branch of NRC, as it was then, "do monitor Hertzian wave emanations." Since that phrase could include microwave emanations, including long distance telephone calls, will the minister, or whichever minister can answer, tell the House whether that agency was or is monitoring long distance telephone calls placed in Canada to points in Canada or elsewhere.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I think that my statement that Hertzian waves were alone being monitored covers the case of most telephone calls and excludes them by definition.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. I think I will have to tap that answer to understand it. I should like to know from the minister whether it has been the practice of the communications branch of NRC, and now of DND, to monitor in any way whatsoever long distance telephone calls placed in Canada to points in Canada or abroad. A simple yes or no would be fine, and I would prefer not to have both.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I would make that, on choice, a simple no.

REFERENCE TO PREVIOUS ANSWER BY PRIME MINISTER ON MONITORING LONG DISTANCE TELEPHONE CALLS

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

An hon. Member: Wait until after the question period.

Mr. Nielsen: May I ask a supplementary question, in that case, and direct it to the Prime Minister. In view of the answer given just now by his colleague, is he now prepared to expand on his answer given to me in the last parliament—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: How long have you been here?

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I have been asking similar questions in several of the nine parliaments in which I have served. I have asked precisely the sort of question put by my hon. friend from Rocky Mountain. As the Prime Minister answered, when I asked my question, that it was not in the national interest to answer such a question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Nielsen: —is the Prime Minister prepared now to answer the question more fully and more accurately than he did last year.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would have to look up the record, for the exact question. According to my recollection, it was not in as precise a form as the question asked by the hon. member for Rocky Mountain. He asked a precise question about calls within Canada.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

PRICE OF OIL USED BY MINISTER IN FORECASTING GROWTH IN 1975

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance, who seems to be most forthcoming today. When he prepared his forecast of growth for 1975 in November, he must have foreseen the termination of the one-price agreement on oil applying across Canada. I want to ask him what new price he used in November, which would be effective following the termination of his old agreement when he prepared his forecast?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman puts that question to me with a smile and I know why. It is a purely academic question, in view of the decision which must be taken by the Prime Minister and premiers this week.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Presenting reports from standing and special committees.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege concerning conflicting answers given by two ministers on the treasury benches. A question directed to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) by the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark) was similar to a series of 29 questions I have placed on the order paper. Actually, the one just asked by my hon. friend was included among them. When I asked my question on this subject, namely, as to whether the monitoring of telephone calls was being contemplated—I believe that was my question at the time—by government facilities, the Prime Minister's answer, in effect, was that it was not in the national interest to answer the question. The Prime Minister's colleague on the treasury benches has answered an emphatic "No" to my hon. friend from Rocky Mountain House.

Mr. MacEachen: Where did you get the "House"?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I thought that place had closed down.

Mr. Nielsen: I think this place should close down.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member well knows that whether the conflict be real or imaginary, it does not constitute a question of privilege.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I must insist—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark).

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of personal privilege, if I must.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Rocky Mountain has the floor.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of personal privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) raised a question of privilege which has been dealt with. I believe the hon. member for Rocky Mountain also wishes to raise a question of privilege which has at least equal standing. He now has the floor.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Nielsen: I have a question of personal privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yukon raised a question of privilege which has been dealt with. I have recognized the hon. member for Rocky Mountain. If the hon. member for Yukon has a second question of privilege he will be recognized in due course.

Mr. Nielsen: My question of personal privilege is that I was not allowed to complete my question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Rocky Mountain.

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Despite its simplicity, it is important. In replying to the question asked by my friend from Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) a moment ago, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) indicated that in the Minister's earlier reply to my question he had dealt exclusively with the question of monitoring telephone calls placed in Canada to points in Canada. That was not my question. My question had to do with monitoring, by any means, long-distance calls placed in Canada to points in Canada or abroad. It is important that the record shows whether the answer of the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Drury) was to the question I asked or to the question the Prime Minister wished I had asked. I would like an answer from the Minister of State for Science and Technology.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 1,226, 1,248, 1,359, 1,517, 1,725 and 1,860.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that questions Nos. 48 and 152 be made orders for return and also ask the consent of the House to table immediately the information which has already been submitted. The balance of the information will follow as soon as it is submitted to me.

Order Paper Questions

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary be deemed to have been made orders for return and that the returns be tabled in the manner described by the parliamentary secretary?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Reid: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

INCREASE IN LAND RENTAL FEES TO COTTAGE OWNERS ALONG RIDEAU CANAL

Question No. 1,248—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What are all the reasons the government has commenced the increased land rental fees to owners of cottages on government property along the Rideau Canal by as much as 800 per cent?

2. What is the name and job designation of the highest official taking part in such a decision?

3. Taking as an example rental license number 60048 where an 800 per cent increase has been requested in return for a five year rental (a) what are the name or names, qualifications and addresses of appraisors who assessed the situation resulting (i) in such an increase (ii) in the rental established five years ago (b) what are all the factors uncovered that could possibly justify the government to contend that land value has increased 800 per cent in this area since 1969 to 1970?

4. How are gigantic rental increases by the government consistent with the fight against inflation?

5. Will the Minister personally review this matter with a view to seeing that only reasonable and sensible rental increases along the Rideau Canal are charged?

[Mr. Reid.]

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. For many years, the rentals set for Canal lands did not reflect the land's true market value, and therefore many people had the use, benefit and enjoyment of this land but paid only a nominal rent. Following the Glassco Report, the government instituted a program of rental review to establish more realistic rates. While the percentage increases may seem substantial in comparison to the token amounts paid in the past, the rents being charged today are still reasonable compared to the prevailing rates in the private sector or those charged by other levels of government.

2. The Prime Minister and members of the government in Parliament.

3. (a) (i) The appraisal was carried out by qualified, certified appraisors of the Department of Public Works. (ii) The previous rents were nominal and were set by the Real Estate Branch of the Ministry of Transport. They were not set on the basis of land value. (b) The land value has not increased by 800 per cent. Previous rentals were nominal and bore no relationship whatsoever to land values. The present rates represent 8 per cent of the appraised value of the land.

4. The government believes that inflation must be fought on all fronts. One way is by ensuring that, through sound management principles, the public receives fair return on its holdings. This reduces the amount of money necessary for public programs which must be collected through direct taxation. There is no justification for some people to enjoy a substantial economic advantage over their neighbours because they are occupying public land.

5. No. Reasonable and sensible rental increases are presently being charged along the Rideau Canal. A return to the unrealistic rental rates that were formerly applied cannot be justified. It is intended to continue the policy of periodic rental review to ensure that rentals of public lands reflect the realistic value of that land as determined by today's market.

RADIO ADVERTISING

Question No. 1,359—Mr. Herbert:

1. What was the estimated percentage of listeners at peak radio listening time to those CBC radio stations in Montreal and Toronto that will soon be prevented by regulation from accepting advertising?

2. Have any soundings been taken to ascertain whether the advertisers on CBC Radio will continue to spend their radio budgets in the same media for the benefit of the privately-owned stations?

3. Were any representations made to CRTC by the private sector of the broadcasting system alleging that CBC was engaging in unfair competition?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and the Canadian Radio-Television Commission as follows: 1. At peak listening time in Toronto (7:30—8:15 a.m. on weekdays) station CBL has an approximate 7 per cent share of the total listening audience. In Montreal, the corresponding figure for station CBM is approximately 2 per cent and for station CBF approximately 8 per cent. (In both cities, the 100 per cent base includes all listeners, whatever their linguistic abilities.)

2. The CRTC advises that no soundings as such have been taken concerning the likelihood of advertisers on CBC radio continuing to use the radio medium through private stations. It is considered that, in those areas affected by the removal of advertising on CBC radio, there will be opportunity for interested advertisers to use private stations. It might be pointed out that potential benefit to private stations was not a consideration in reaching the decision that CBC radio should withdraw from advertising.

3. No representations were made to the CRTC by the private sector of the broadcasting system alleging that CBC was engaging in unfair competition in the case of radio.

ATOMIC ENERGY CONTROL REGULATIONS—INSPECTION OF LICENSEES

Question No. 1,725—Mr. Francis:

How many licences issued by the Atomic Energy Control Board were reviewed for breaches of the regulations in that particular licence and what action, if any, was taken as the result of such a review?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Atomic Energy Control Board reports as follows: There are currently approximately 3000 Atomic Energy Control Board licensees of which total 2900 are for radioisotope users and the remainder for other prescribed substances users and nuclear facility operators. The regulatory compliance performance of each of these licensees is reviewed continuously through a system which includes some or all of the following elements, depending upon the nature of the licensed use or operation. 1. Inspections. AECB-appointed inspectors make periodic and unannounced inspections of the premises of all licensed users and operators to determine that the terms and conditions of the licence and the requirements of the Atomic Energy Control Regulations are being complied with. In the case of nuclear power plants being constructed, tested, commissioned and in the early stages of operation, resident AECB inspectors are stationed at the plant.

2. Film Badge Monitoring. Licensees are normally required, as a condition of licence, to use a film badge service to provide a record of individual radiation exposures. Film badge results are reviewed and overexposure and chronically-high exposure cases are monitored.

3. Mandatory Reporting by Licensee. All licensees are required by the Atomic Energy Control Regulations to report unusual occurrences which did or could have resulted in a breach of regulatory requirements. These reports are investigated by AECB staff and/or advisers. Prescribed substance supplier and user licensees are required to submit periodic material inventory reports for review. Nuclear facility licensees are required to submit periodic safety performance reports for review.

4. Licence Renewal Reviews. All licences are issued for a limited term after a full review and evaluation of the detailed information submitted in support of a licence application. Similarly all applications for licence renewals are reviewed with particular attention being given to the past safety compliance performance of the licensee.

[Mr. Sharp.]

5. Monitoring and Review of Radioactive Effluents. All licensees are required to monitor and report releases of radioactive effluents. In some cases, these reports are audited by an independent survey conducted co-operatively by the federal and provincial departments of environment and health. In all cases, reports are made to the AECB for appropriate follow-up action. Actions taken as a result of such review procedures may take a number of different forms depending on the nature of the licensed use or operation and the nature of the regulatory breach. Such actions may include one or more of: (a) determination and ordering of corrective action (b) removal of over-exposed person from work areas involving significant exposure risk (c) amendment, suspension or revocation of licence.

BRANKO MILOSIC

Question No. 1,860—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did Branko Milosic enter Canada during 1962 and, if not, on what date did he enter Canada?

2. Has the RCMP ever conducted an investigation in regard to this person and, if so (a) on what dates (b) for what reasons (c) what were the details of the investigation?

3. What are the names of all persons who at any time made representations to the government on behalf of this person for purposes of his admission to Canada or for any other purpose and, in each case, what are the details of such representations?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Manpower and Immigration and the Solicitor General (Royal Canadian Mounted Police) as follows: 1. Branko Milosic arrived in Canada on August 30, 1962.

2. No.

3. In accordance with the schedule for the destruction of files, the file concerning Branko Milosic has been destroyed. It is therefore not possible to respond to this part of the question.

THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT, THE SALARIES ACT AND THE PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARIES ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING SALARIES AND ALLOWANCES

The House resumed, from Thursday, December 19, 1974, consideration of the motion of Mr. Sharp that Bill C-44, to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act, the Salaries Act and the Parliamentary Secretaries Act, be read a second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-44 was the subject of numerous comments in the newspapers and other media throughout the country. It is unfortunate to find that in 1975 we are still obliged to introduce a bill forcing us to vote ourselves a raise in members' salaries.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that future increments for members of the Commons and the Senate be decided by an independent board. I said earlier that the bill raised many comments, rebukes and criticisms. However, reasonable people supported the raise in principle, since members of Parliament are going through an inflation period just as are all other Canadian taxpayers.

When this bill was first introduced in 1974, my colleague for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) said to the House, in a masterful speech, why he supported an increase in parliamentary salaries. On December 19, he reminded the press, the journalists who are here in the press gallery, what ridiculous concept they have of the serious role of federal members in this House.

Mr. Speaker, that is so true that I have never seen the press protest so vehemently and scathingly against an increase in the MPs' salaries, while they agree with salary increases right and left to just about anybody. But an increase to the MPs, that makes no sense!

For instance, one evening, I heard my friend Jean-Marc Poliquin tell us over the French CBC television network and in all seriousness: "The members of parliament gave (se taper) themselves a raise here, gave themselves another raise there, then gave themselves something extra for expenses." According to Jean-Marc Poliquin, of the CBC's French network, we were a gang of "tapés".

An hon. Member: "Tapettes" (gays)?

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Not "tapettes". I do not think he said "tapettes" but "tapés". The following evening, it was Mr. Larin's turn, again on CBC!

An hon. Member: He is being paid by the government!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): He is of course a state employee. Well, these people earn as much as any federal MP—

An hon. Member: More!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Out of public funds! We are those who vote their pay increases in the budget and permit them to get adequate pay cheques. That is quite normal in their cases, but in the cases of hon. members, it is a shame!

Mr. Speaker, we can establish well-founded parallels. When CBC employees go on strike at the expense of Canadian taxpayers to obtain pay raises, do we hear them say anything against strikes? Of course not! The poor chaps need more to make ends meet and live a decent living. However, they do not find anything vile enough to say against hon. members, they ridicule them as much as they possibly can, as my colleague from Lotbinière was saying on December 19, 1974.

The day after the speech of the hon. member for Lotbinière, no one reported one word of what that member had said in the House.

I personally made a survey in my riding, as some of my colleagues did in their own, asking flatly to the electors what they thought about it. For instance, in the riding of Villeneuve, 571 of the 600 survey-letters received favoured a rise in members' salaries, while only 20 were opposed to it. Those are on the side of the press, the others on the side of common sense.

Mr. Speaker, the union leaders, Pépin, Laberge, Charbonneau and—

An hon. Member: $50,000 a year!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): —the others, the thieves of the James Bay, who earn salaries higher than any member's salary.

● (1540)

Do you hear the reports on television or do you read them in the newspapers? Do they object against Pépin, Laberge, Charbonneau, Chartrand and all their confederates, Mr. Speaker, do they denounce them? Such individuals as Pépin, Laberge, Charbonneau and Chartrand are better paid than the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau)!

The Quebec provincial members also granted themselves a raise. They were criticized a day or two, but you no longer hear about it today. Those people are better paid than any federal member! The Quebec premier draws a higher salary than the Prime Minister of Canada yet with fewer responsibilities. What are the responsibilities of the union leaders? Pépin and Laberge say: We represent 300,000 workers! It is incredible how those individuals entirely devote themselves to the working class. We, the federal members, are responsible for 22 million Canadians and not merely 300,000! So it is scandalous for members of Parliament to be paid! That there are members who do not deserve an increase, I agree, just like there are journalists who would not deserve to be journalists. Yet they still are. Mr. Speaker, let us compare other people with responsibilities. I read recently in the airline companies' expenditure budgets that B-747, DC-9 or DC-8 pilots are being paid $50,000 to $75,000 a year, and we agree that those people deserve their salaries.

Mr. Speaker, why do we accept to pay those people such large, substantial salaries? Because we recognize that they are responsible for 300 or 200 passengers behind them, that they pilot aircraft all across the world. Mr. Speaker, we have no objection to those people being well paid but we, federal members of parliament, the government, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), pilot 22 million people, and because we talk of a salary increase, it is scandalous! It is scandalous that we should give ourselves increases!

Mr. Speaker, I wonder here where is that famous mental, professional or intellectual honesty in those people? And they are the ones who never stop crying in the name of freedom of the press. We allow them to say anything against us but the moment we answer back we are attacking the freedom of the press. They have the right to come down on us as much as they can. If we told them anything or tried to stop them from talking, then they would be crying murder.

That is why I said to the Prime Minister yesterday: "Why don't you send them on a trip to Europe!" Some do go. Recently, I saw on television my friend Larin who was in Viet Nam or some southern or eastern country. Paid by whom? By CBC. Financed by whom? By the federal government. Larin did not seem to find that ridiculous. It was not scandalous. He was basking in the sun, and that was normal. Another day, Jean-Marc was in Paris. Mr. Speaker, that does not mean that I have anything against Jean-Marc. No. He is a sympathetic fellow, but he should get off our backs.

I have just talked about airline pilots and the freedom of the press. During the Easter break, I had the opportunity to make a trip around the Mediterranean, not at the expense of the CBC or the government, but at my own expense. I visited eight countries around the Mediterranean including Israel, Egypt, Greece, Lebanon and Turkey. I looked at the behaviour of people, politicians and the press. And, as the right hon. Prime Minister said yesterday, and I agree with him completely on this point, I have not yet seen anywhere in the whole world a country where the people of the press, the reporters, have as much freedom as here, in Canada.

I would advise them to visit Cuba, for instance; it is not far and their expenses would be paid by the CBC. They would see what would happen if they wrote against that regime, like they write against our system. How long would this be tolerated? Let them go and do the same thing in France! Let them go and speak against the French president or write against him and they will see what happens! Let them go in Russia to try and fight against the regime, or in Czechoslovakia! No. Here in Canada, we smile when they attack us, but there is a difference between that and tolerating the ridicule which they try to put on the federal members of parliament who have to assume responsibilities much greater than those of reporters. I am only asking them to be honest. I do not beg them to give us their blessing. No. They should bring us to order if we deserve it. But if we work honestly, sincerely, they should recognize it and stop laughing at the ideal democratic institution. The hon. member for Lotbinière was solid on December 19, but the press lacked the courage to mention this.

A while ago, I spoke about airline pilots. I would now like to talk about Crown corporations, the CN for instance. The chairman of this corporation earns about twice as much as the Prime Minister of Canada. The chairman and vice-chairman of Air Canada both earn more money than the Prime Minister. Several deputy ministers are better paid than their minister. In all Crown corporations, the situation is the same.

Mr. Speaker, we do not object to the deputy ministers and secretaries being paid decently. I endorse the claims of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) when he contends that the Public Service employees should be well treated. Would the hon. member object to the members' salaries being increased? Mr. Speaker, let us be logical and stop acting like hypocrites!

I have been told that the New Democratic Party would oppose the legislation raising members' salaries. If the New Democrats are logical here, they were not in British Columbia, in Saskatchewan and in Manitoba. The first thing the socialist government of British Columbia did was to increase the members' salaries, and with Mr. Barrett, I think the salaries were raised a hundred per cent. In Saskatchewan, when my hon. friend from Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) was head of a New Democratic government, salaries were increased. Maybe not while my hon. friend was premier, but after he had left, they were pretty quick in passing their salary increase. Our friend, Mr. Schreyer, sat next to me in this House when he was a New Democratic federal member. The first thing he did after being elected premier in Manitoba was to increase the provincial members' salaries.

An hon. Member: For each session!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Yes, for each session, on top of that. Why should we then in Ottawa, under pretence of pleasing part of the electorate, why should we oppose the increase in members' salaries for purely political reasons? Mr. Speaker, I believe this would be fraught with inconsistency and, frankly, hypocrisy!

Mr. Speaker, Crown corporations and provincial legislatures managed to get reasonable salaries. I suggest responsible members doing an honest job should have adequate salary. We owe it to them, and to this country's future. This morning I heard over the radio that young people show a total lack of interest in politics, in the wake of the hearings of the Cliche enquiry in Quebec and the Hamilton and Quebec harbours scandals.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that if the young were interested in playing a role as members of parliament, in representing the people—and this will not happen if the members' role is defiled, diminished or decried as is now done in the press—if the function was enhanced to its fullest value and earnestness, there would now be a greater number of young people interested in public affairs, and the basic political matters in Canada—not partisan politics but the real political problems in the deepest sense of the term, this could be conducive to pursuit by the young a public career of some form or other. But it would require that the press discharge their responsibilities, that they promote interest in politics among the young people, that they induce a greater number of serious people to take an active part in all levels of Canadian political life.

Mr. Speaker, I have here other comparisons. In the field of sports for example, we have today players receiving $200,000 a year for a six or seven months' season. One baseball player, a Mr. Hunter, recently signed a $3,700,000 contract to play baseball, to throw a ball at somebody holding a bat! That is baseball. In football, players are well paid, and I do not object to that—

An hon. Member: They kick off—

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): The Prime Minister knows that well, because he was asked to kick off three of four times in the last four or five years. Football players are well paid, I do not object to that. As I said a moment ago, reporters do not object either. It is a sign of great quality, of sanctifying grace when a hockey, football or baseball player gets a big salary. Reporters say: "What a good player, he earns that much!" Why do they not say the same for members of parliament who, I repeat, do not spend their time entertaining only three or four hundred thousand people, but are responsible before 22 million Canadians! That is a real responsibility! Seriously, Mr. Speaker, I said we had to attract young people. I am making comparisons. I do not want to compare members of parliament to sports players, but if we accept to see sports players get such salaries, why do we not accept that members of parliament, who have duties, also have rights? Once duties are duly accepted and understood, they deserve adequate payment. Which does not mean they should roll in money. Besides, newspapermen convey the impression in their articles that when we get a higher pension or allowance the money gets directly into our pockets, and we do not have to pay anything out of it. Mr. Speaker, why do those journalists up in the gallery not say that most members of parliament have to maintain two residences, one in Ottawa and one in their own riding, and incur twice the expenses while they pay income tax like anybody else?

Last year my pension plan cost me $3,000 or more and I paid about $7,000 in taxes; in other words I had to pay close to $11,000 out of my $24,000. How much is left? $13,000. That is less than any journalist sitting in the gallery earns! But that does not count. We get everything free. People tell us: "You'll get a large pension". But we pay accordingly. Tell me of any industry or business whose employees have to pay $3,000 a year for their pension plan! That is what we in this House have to pay for our "big" pension plan.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You pay only $1,440 a year.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): I have some back tax to pay, and you know that. I am rich; I can pay. Perhaps you are too poor to have the big plan so you have the smaller one.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Does the hon. member think that it is fair arithmetic to count what he pays for back years against income in the current year?

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): I do not know, but I have to pay for it anyway. Whether it is for 1946, 1967 or 1976, I do not care; but I know I pay for it.

[Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue).]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Not $3,000 a year.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Not far from it. And the income tax we pay, do you agree with that? The difference that is left to us is less than the amount left to the newspapermen in the press gallery.

An hon. Member: They pay the same income tax.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): We pay as much as they do.

An hon. Member: We make more money.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): And we pay for it; that is the point. They think that members of parliament do not pay a dime out of their income. The reporters present the whole thing as if we were paid 100 per cent and we did not have to disburse anything.

An hon. Member: When did you start listening to reporters?

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): I am starting now.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, other Canadian citizens have huge revenues, but newspapermen have no objection to that. I spoke of union leaders earlier. Let us now turn to doctors and lawyers. Some doctors in Ontario earn $200,000 a year, according to data compiled and published by the provincial NDP member in Toronto, himself a doctor. Mr. Speaker, journalists do not object to that. Neither do we. But when it comes to members of parliament, people say: members of parliament do not deserve that much, they are not responsible people.

I maintain that we are responsible for a whole nation. Whether we belong to the Liberal, Progressive Conservative, New Democratic or Social Credit party, we have a number of rights and duties with respect to Canada as a whole. We work to preserve the rights of our fellow citizens and we remind them of their duties as Canadian citizens. And I will say to journalists that they too have rights and duties with respect to their fellow citizens. Let them respect their duties and we shall respect their rights.

[English]

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I suppose no member of parliament is likely to earn the undying favour of the public by speaking in favour of this bill, but the fact is that the bill as it is now before us, and with possible future modifications, is not only one which would provide justice to hon. members of this House and the other place but it is also a bill which would safeguard the public interest. I do not even need to speak about the public interest in ensuring that those who serve the public on a full-time basis in parliament are paid justly, the same as everyone else in society should be, but I speak primarily of the fact that there is a public interest in helping hon. members to resolve the conflict of interest situation with respect to their own remuneration in which they have found themselves since the beginning of our country. This conflict of interest situation is not one which is easily eliminated, but it is one which I believe would be eliminated by the proposals which are before the House.

Before I get into that question, I think I should very briefly review the events leading up to this bill. The bill before us is a government bill like all other government bills, but it is worth noting that there were consultations among backbench members of the various parties which prodded the government into bringing forth such legislation. These were not official consultations with any party; indeed, they cannot really even be dignified by the title of an ad hoc commission or committee. They were general consultations with members of all parties, consultations which proceeded normally on a bilateral basis, that is, between two members at a time, one member of one party and one of another party, backbench members of all the parties being involved. On one occasion there was a slightly more formal meeting at which members of all parties but one, the NDP were represented, but the NDP backbenchers with whom consultation was taking place were informed of the results of the meeting and gave it their blessing.

So there is considerable support by members of all parties in this House for a proposal with terms very similar to those in the bill before us today. The result was, as I have said, a measure for which the government and hon. members on this side must take the responsibility, but which I am confident will also find support from members of all parties in the House.

I have spoken about the question of conflict of interest. This is a very serious problem and one which has greatly exercised members of parliament, especially in the last year, perhaps because of events in other countries where we saw the dire consequences which can result from lack of sufficient concern in public life about this matter. We have passed new election expenses legislation which we believe goes a long way toward solving the problems in that area, and we have before a parliamentary committee a government paper with respect to other forms of conflict of interest in respect of members of parliament.

The question of the proper remuneration for members of parliament is perhaps the most subtle of all the forms of conflict of interest which could be before us, because essentially in a parliamentary democracy there is no one else who can ultimately deal with this problem. For instance, it is often said that members of parliament are elected on the understanding that they will not increase their salaries during their term of office. However, the fact is that from the very beginning of our country members of parliament have always exercised that right. It has therefore come to be assumed that members of parliament are elected with the knowledge that they can at any time increase their remuneration, yet they have exercised this power with some restraint in the past and I have no doubt will continue to do so in the future.

I and most hon. members of this House think it is important that we arrive at some formula which will enable us to establish a method which puts this decision at arm's length from us. One possibility would be to link increases in salary and expenses for members of parliament to those of members of the public service or members of some groups in the private sector. It has been suggested, for instance, that we should be linked to annual increases for people in professional occupations, to people in executive posts or simply to people in higher posts in the public service. But quite apart from the difficulty of deciding which group members of parliament are like—and I think we all feel that we in this House have a unique occupation which is not easily categorized with any other—it seems to me that there are very fundamental difficulties in making this kind of correlation, difficulties which I think we would not find very satisfactorily resolved in the long run.

In their ad hoc consultations, most members of parliament tended not to look on this option with very great favour even though it would have brought them undoubtedly—as any comparison with the public service would indicate—both a higher salary now and a higher salary in the future. In other words, I think that the principal aim of members of parliament in supporting a bill such as this is not simply to increase their own remuneration: it is also to establish an objective reference for the kind of remuneration which will be as fair to the public as it is to themselves.

Another possibility is to have an outside commission make recommendations. This possibility is one which obviously has to be considered very seriously. We have already had the Beaupré commission. The front bench of the NDP is recommending that we should again have an outside commission which would make recommendations to parliament as to what is an adequate scale of salary. But we had an outside commission; we had the Beaupré commission which recommended that the salary level should be $25,000 in the twenty-ninth parliament. Applying the industrial composite index to that would have brought us a salary in the present parliament of $29,115. That would be the result of the recommendations of one commission which was, I think, a commission as objective as any which could be found.

The objection which members of parliament have to referring this matter to an outside commission is not that we would be afraid that it would not make a recommendation which would do us justice. Indeed, the commission I have referred to made a recommendation of $29,000 for the present parliament, which is larger than the amount the government has come forward with in this bill or which the members of parliament who consulted each other recommended to the government. Rather, the objection lies in fact that there is, then, the added difficulty that we are still in the embarrassing position of having to vote the increase ourselves. We would still have to exercise our own judgment in a matter of self-interest. This is precisely the position from which we set out to remove ourselves.

I believe that if we were to refer the question to an outside commission, it would have to be a kind of arbitration commission. It would have to be a commission from whom we would accept, without question and without the need for further legislation, the proposals it would make. It is possible that this question will receive further consideration by hon. members. However, as they proceeded last fall, the people who consulted informally on this question felt that the question should be phrased in terms of an outside standard and the two outside standards to which they made reference were the consumer price index (CPI) and the industrial composite index (IPI). I want to discuss those two together because I think much of the argument about which outside reference we should use has been centred around the difference between these two indices.

The frontbench members of the NDP have said that we should simply use the consumer price index, and that the increase we should have, should only be on the salary portion and not on the expense portion of our remuneration. It is rather strange to me that the front bench of the NDP has failed to appreciate the symbolism of such a limitation on the part of members of parliament. After all, things which we do here have some significance elsewhere in the country. In fact, much of the discussion of this bill has been based on that very fact.

Not long ago the Ontario government made a proposal for a 5 per cent cut in salary. I would like to draw the attention of the House to the comment which Mr. Stephen Lewis, the leader of the New Democratic Party in Ontario, made regarding that proposal: he referred to it as a crock of hypocritical nonsense. He saw the implications of the argument; it meant that labour should cut its wages.

● (1610)

Mr. Broadbent: Who is talking about a cut here?

Mr. MacGuigan: No one is talking about a cut here. We are talking about the connection between what happens inside and what happens outside this House. The front benches of the NDP refuse to recognize that connection. If we should accept only the cost of living increase, it would mean that is all the workers of ths country should get and that no productivity increases should be paid to our labour force. That would be the meaning of such action. It is nice to know that some New Democrats who hold office in the provinces appreciate the distinction; it is also nice to know that some who are out of office in the provinces appreciate it. It is a shame that the same cannot be said of the front benches of the NDP in this House.

It would be difficult to tie our increases solely to the CPI. Let me say, frankly, that sometimes the consumer price index is higher than the industrial composite index and there are times when the ICI is above the CPI. If we tied our increases directly to the CPI we would be tying ourselves directly to the inflation factor, and that would not do. Nothing else would need to be considered; we would be effectively insulated against inflation. Many of us do not think that members of parliament should put themselves in the position in which they have such a direct interest in inflation. Many do not think that as inflation increases as measured by Statistics Canada, members should be given a similar kind of increase.

Moreover, to be fair to members of parliament, there would then be no explicit allowance for the productivity increase which all members of the labour force receive each year. Obviously, this is a disadvantage which would apply to members. Of course, one newspaper has suggested that increases should be limited to productivity increases.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): What is their productivity increase?

Mr. Fairweather: The Globe and Mail just put its price up by 66 per cent.

[Mr. MacGuigan.]

Mr. MacGuigan: The newspaper which made that proposal for members of parliament did not follow it either with respect to the wages it pays its reporters or the price it charges for its product.

The industrial composite index is perhaps the broadest base to consider. The records kept by Statistics Canada in this field are the best available indication of the trend of weekly Canadian wages and salaries. If we tied ourselves to this index we should say that we are prepared to abide by the results of negotiations which take place across the country, no matter on what basis they are negotiated. We would say that we are prepared to take only the kind of increase which the average constituent receives. It is clear, if one examines the period 1970 to 1974, that we have proposed receiving considerably less than our constituents received in that period.

I shall now refer to the appropriate figures and show how the industrial composite index applies to the indemnity of members of parliament and to allowances of members of parliament. The increase in the ICI between 1963 and July last year was 114.52 per cent. Let us apply that percentage to the 1963 figures. In 1963 members received $12,000 indemnity and $6,000 allowance. Applying the stated figures, in July, 1974, members would have received an indemnity of $25,742.40 and an allowance of $12,871.20, making a total of $38,613.60. This is almost exactly the figure suggested initially.

If one considers only the increased percentage from the period of the last increase in October, 1970, to July last year it is 37.17 per cent. Applying that figure would lead to an indemnity in July, 1974, of $24,690.60 and an allowance of $11,065.60, making a total of $35,756.20. This, again, is considerably more than was proposed in the second instance by the House leader, and accepted by Her Majesty's Official Opposition when we discussed the previous bill in December.

Some may feel that applying these formulas too rigidly in future might be unfair either to members of parliament or to the public; that is to say, it might not be possible to increase members' salaries and allowances at an adequate pace or, putting it the other way, the formula might lead to increases which are too large. I do not think anyone on this side is unreasonable. I do not think it would be impossible to review this procedure and possibly change the application of these formulas in future. But it seems to me that this is the best standard on which one can begin. It is the most objective standard to adopt at present. I suggest that modifications can be introduced to this basic system if they then appear necessary.

I spoke first about the general formulas to be used because I think these influences present levels of remuneration and allowance. I now want to turn to that subject and consider what could be fair to members, acceptable to the public and in the public interest. The proposals which have been made—especially the most recent proposal—are considerably below what would be derived from the application of the formulas referred to. For example, the proposal for a 33⅓ per cent increase is some 4 per cent below the 37-odd per cent which would accrue to members of parliament if the ICI had been strictly applied since the last increase. I think this shows the public that members of parliament are taking their responsibilities seriously, that their attitude is not one of wringing the last cent out of the public treasury but one of trying to arrive at a solution which is fair to everyone concerned, both members of parliament and the public.

In this context I think it is important for us to discuss expenses. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) made some unfortunate references to expenses, which I believe should be discussed in this House. His argument in objecting to any increase at all in the expense allowance is based on the fact that certain improvements have accrued to members of parliament since the last increase in 1970. He said, as recorded at page 2338 of Hansard for December 17, 1974:

> First, there are the constituency newsletters; second, there are the constituency offices; third, the constituency secretaries; fourth, the weekly flight and/or car expenses; fifth, the caucus research staffs; sixth, expanded office facilities in Ottawa—

He spoke of expenses under those headings as being justifiable expenses, but then suggested that the very fact these items had been introduced had relieved members of parliament of the burden of expenses which they had previously incurred. I did not know that many members of parliament in 1970 were supporting a caucus research staff, had expanded their office facilities here in Ottawa or had rented extra rooms here, and so on. It is true that in Britain, labour unions provide these facilities for certain members of the British House. Perhaps this is also done here, but I do not know of many members who on their own supported such outside offices.

The weekly flight provisions and the expansion of members' rights to fly back and forth give members the right to fly to other parts of the country. However, the fact is that most members of parliament simply did not accept invitations which require them to travel at their own expense to Vancouver, or to some other place which is expensive by reason of its distance from Ottawa, in order to perform public functions. Therefore, there would be very few cases in which this provision would result in a saving for the individual member.

● (1620)

It is true that some members sent out constituency newsletters. I did not at that time; I could not afford it. I know most members of this House did not, but there may have been some who did. Perhaps they will be somewhat in pocket in this regard. There may have been some who operated constituency offices. I did for approximately a year before this privilege was granted by the House. The total cost was not very great when you were merely renting small premises. I am not aware of any body of members of parliament who supported constituency secretaries on their own allowances. Some received support from the riding associations to do something of that kind on a part-time basis. I am not personally aware of any members who did this out of their own expense allowance.

This tends to be a rather fraudulent argument against an increase in the remuneration which members of parliament would receive on the expense side. In fact, I wonder if we might even apply to it the description "a crock of hypocritical nonsense".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacGuigan: On what does the member of parliament spend his expense money? I would like to give a list of the kind of expenses I have personally. I believe they are fairly typical of the type of expenses a member of parliament has. The largest of these expenses is that of housing in Ottawa. This varies greatly, depending on how much of the time the member lives in Ottawa and whether his principal residence and his family are here. I think this fact indicates how difficult it would be to submit stubs with a voucher system.

This is one of the basic decisions a member of parliament has to make. He has to decide how he can best serve his constituents. Could we possibly have a public servant who would decide that a member of parliament has no right to move his family and make his principal residence in Ottawa, as opposed to the constituency? Could we possibly subject this matter to some kind of judgment by someone outside the political process entirely? This is the kind of decision a member has to make and for which he is fundamentally responsible to his constituents on election day.

In addition to housing expenses in Ottawa there are the additional expenses of living. There is the cost of buying meals out if, as mine is, his family is in a different city. The cost of entertainment for constituents who come to Ottawa is one of the expenses of a member. How much this amounts to depends on the distance of the member's constituency from Ottawa. The closer it is, the more visitors he will have in a year. Even with the modest subsidy given in the parliamentary restaurant this can be a very considerable expense for members of parliament.

I find it necessary to have a car in Ottawa and a car in my constituency. Other members may prefer to use taxis. If they feel they can get taxis in Ottawa when they need them: they may be able to rely on that source of locomotion. Whether it is the expense of operating two cars or the cost of hiring taxis, it is very considerable, running into several thousand dollars. Unless a member literally carries everything back and forth every week, there is the necessity for a double wardrobe. There is also the net cost of making contributions to causes and events which one would not make if he were not a member of parliament. That is difficult to measure; it has to be left to the member's discretion. It could not validly be judged by a public servant, but it is still a genuine cost of this kind of life. There is also the cost of additional publications, newspapers, magazines and extra copies of official documents, sometimes for constituents who impose on you in this respect and sometimes for yourself.

The extra cost of the constituency office is one which I hope may be remedied in the not too distant future. The fact is this is also at present an expense for most members of parliament. There is the cost of telegrams and extra telephone calls. There is the additional expense of child-sitting and the additional expense of household operation in one's constituency by reason of our job, which we would not have otherwise. There is also the cost, for many members, of Christmas cards which they send to their constituents. This is a list of the kind of expenses which I have. Last year, by the best estimate that I can make, they came to more than $12,000—considerably more than the allowance provided by parliament for these purposes.

I suppose the answer really depends on the individual member, but one can ask whether there is a certain degree of hidden income in the member's allowance. Obviously, this is an impossible question to answer. All the data that was submitted to the Beaupré commission and which has been presented to the public press by members would suggest not; in any event, it is surely unconscionable for members of the front bench of the New Democratic Party to so distort parliamentary life as to suggest that all this expense money is hidden income, added to a member's salary over and above the normal salary, which he does not spend on expenses. Yet that is the effect of the kind of arguments they make. For example, on December 19, 1974, as recorded at page 2398 of Hansard, the NDP House leader said:

> In 1972, members of parliament were in the top 1.5 per cent of all income tax payers. Stated differently, this means that 98.5 per cent of all the working people in Canada who pay taxes and who have living expenses as well, earn less than members of parliament . . .
> It want to stress, for the benefit of all members, that it seems to me we must keep in mind that we are among the very affluent in our country. As I have said, if this bill should pass, that position vis-à-vis the rest of society will be heightened for members of parliament. We will move from being among the top 1.5 per cent to being among the top .5 per cent.

That, Mr. Speaker, is totally false.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacGuigan: The latest figures that I have are for the tax year 1973. If you take this in terms of families—and, of course, this was at a lower income level than we now have, which means the percentage would now be higher—and bear in mind that our annual salary is $18,000, 12.7 per cent of Canadian families had incomes of more than $20,000. The figure is not given for $18,000; obviously, it would be something like 15 per cent. At present-day figures it would probably be more like 20 per cent. Therefore, we are far from being in the top income bracket. We do well to be in the top 15 or 20 per cent. Taking individuals and families combined, the percentage is slightly less; the figure at that point was 9.6 per cent. Again, that percentage applied to $20,000 incomes. It is hard to compute what the percentage would be for the breaking point of $18,000, but it would be between 12 and 15 per cent.

Those are more exact statements of the position in which members of parliament find themselves in terms of the income earners of this country: it is not in the top 1.5 per cent or .5 per cent, but in the top 15 or 20 per cent.

A newspaper story that appeared in the December 20 edition of the Montreal Gazette written by Mr. Radwanski, makes the point that 7,500 federal civil servants then earned more than $20,000 a year. Undoubtedly, if you applied the figure of $18,000 it would be more like 10,000 civil servants who earned more than $18,000 a year, and these are people whom we employ.

● (1630)

We do not necessarily have to be at the top of the pinnacle in the public service to the extent that we can be assimilated to the public service—but whether or not we are at the very top we can hardly continue to be in the position where some 10,000 of the people we employ and who often are co-operatively working with us should be paid at a higher rate than we are.

An hon. Member: With their 37 hours a week.

Mr. MacGuigan: Yes, with their 37-hour week, as contrasted with the 90-hour to 100-hour week that a member of parliament puts in, including his travelling time. As I have mentioned, a commission was set up to look into this question. The Beaupré commission recommended that members of parliament should receive $25,000 in the twenty-ninth parliament. This would put us in the $29,000 bracket now. We have not asked for that amount. Our demands have been more modest because we have been concerned not only that our demands should be just but that they should be seen to be just, so that Canadians would realize that we were not out for the last dollar but for a kind of minimal justice for ourselves and that we are attempting to protect the public interest by removing this conflict of interest.

It seems to me that what we face in this bill is a question of fundamental honesty for members of parliament. It may be that some members would be content with a crock of hypocritical nonsense. But I believe that if most members speak and vote as they really think about this bill, there is no doubt that they will support this very enlightened, very moderate legislation which is not only just to members in a rather minimal sense but is also highly protective of the public interest.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, nothing more demonstrates the nature of this debate than the speech we have just heard. What are the issues here? The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) was saying to us: My own government has been unable to control inflation in the economy. My own government has been unable to control all kinds of unfairness which has taken place in the economy. Therefore, we have to get on the bandwagon and grab everything we can.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Saltsman: That is exactly what he said. We are considering a statement by a member of a government which has abdicated every kind of leadership in this nation. That, more than the money itself, is what is at issue. What is at issue is that the so-called free market economy is just riddled with all kinds of people grabbing things for themselves, and the hon. member is suggesting to us that we should not be left out of the race. There is no leadership from that side of the House as far as controlling inflation is concerned, and he is therefore saying: Let's go with it.

The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville should be very careful before lecturing this House and my leader, in particular, on honesty. That was one of the most dishonest speeches I have heard for a long time. It was comparing apples with oranges. It is quite clear, even from the section of Hansard from which he read, that my hon. friend for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) was referring to individual incomes. And what did we hear as a comparison? Family incomes, which obviously are much higher and entirely different. If you want to compare family incomes, then compare them. But it was grossly wrong to inject figures of that kind into a speech in which the hon. member lectured the House about honesty.

Mr. MacGuigan: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, if it is true, as the hon. member has said, that his leader's comparison was restricted to individual incomes, I do not have the exact figures in front of me because I have just given them to the Hansard reporter, but the same point has to be made: the difference between what the New Democratic Party House leader said and the facts are remains as wide.

Mr. Saltsman: I do not see that that really changes the situation much. The figure we were referring to was the total amount with both salary and expenses included. We are not the only people in the world who have expenses. I get a little tired of hearing people sounding off around here about how badly treated MPs are. We are not the richest people in the world, but neither are we the most oppressed section of our society.

I see that on this auspicious occasion members of the official opposition are coming to the defence of the government. It is a nice change. Usually, during the question period, we hear them asking the government what it intends to do about the terrible inflation which is taking place in Canada, what it intends to do about the various increases that are taking place, what it intends to do about this, that and the other. But when it comes to the salaries of MPs, the question of inflation doesn't seem to arise. I wonder what the members of the official opposition would say if people in some other segment of our economy gave themselves a 50 per cent increase. Would they refrain from asking about the matter during the question period?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): After nine years, come on!

Mr. Saltsman: It depends on the kind of case you are trying to make. When we received the last increase it was broadly understood that it was not only for that time; it was for catch-up and it was for the years ahead.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Nonsense. It was only your own leader who made that suggestion in argument.

Mr. Saltsman: This is a difficult debate for all hon. members. It is as difficult for me as it is for members who are taking a different position. I want to make it clear that it is not a question of having a superior morality; it is not a question of being holier than thou.

Mr. Cafik: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Saltsman: I would be glad to entertain any questions at the end of my speech. I am sorry that what I am saying is causing this kind of reaction. I see the hon. member appears to be very anxious to ask his question, so I will accept it now.

Mr. Cafik: I appreciate that a great deal. I am certainly not trying to have a run at any member of this House. I understand the concern of the hon. member. He expresses a difficulty he shares with others in dealing with this subject. I wonder whether he would find any difficulty about supporting the amendment which I am putting forward, an amendment which would make this permissive legislation—members who do not want an increase would not have to take it. Would the hon. member be agreeable to supporting an approach of that kind?

• (1640)

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, that sounds like an excellent suggestion and I am really glad it is being put forward, because we should be extending a principle of the Liberals and Conservatives on that basis. Members of the Liberal Party voted against the old age pension for years, and are still voting against any amendments we bring in for an increase in those pensions so they themselves will not get increased old age pensions. The Conservative Party, which took such a vicious stand against it, would be deprived of the Canada Pension Plan; and those who do not like the family allowance program could, on a conscience basis, refuse that allowance.

Mr. Speaker, all this is nonsense and the hon. member knows it. I am just sorry that I gave him the chance to come in with that ridiculous kind of statement. Over and over again we have voted against things that we know we cannot even refuse. We know that, but are we going to curtail a very important debate in this House because of that kind of spurious suggestion? I think the debate deserves better than that.

Let me get back to the subject of this debate and its significance for members of this House. Despite the fact that the NDP appear to be on the side of the angels, what is significant is that no member of this House will come out of the debate covered with glory. All of us will suffer, Mr. Speaker. Every party in this House, every member of this House, and in the long run this parliament, will be discredited. It is important to remember that. At a time when most of us are going around talking about the evils of inflation and the need for restraint, and denouncing various greedy elements in our society, we ourselves set an example of greed. That is what is wrong with the whole thing. This party has taken a position and it looks as though we are on the side of the angels in this debate. Just look at the Gallup polls. We have not received any credit for the position we have taken. Parliament is being run down in this country.

It is all very well to take the position that the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) took, and to receive laughter and applause. I wish we could train other people as well as he has trained his members. He took off on the press, Mr. Speaker. Just this morning an editorial suggested that we should get absolutely nothing until we lick the problem of inflation. Obviously, we are not going to solve the total problem of inflation in this or any other parliament. Obviously, members of parliament are entitled to some increase. That is not what we are debating. But to take off on the press and say it has no right to criticize us is not realistic. Other countries have been known to step on the press when they get out of line, but that is not our way. While I may not like what the press has to say about us, I must confess that it is not entirely undeserved.

Had it not been for the NDP digging in its heels at Christmas time and perhaps being a little outrageous, the increase would have gone through in a snap. That is what the government was hoping for. By taking the stand we have, that the increase is too much and something different and better should be worked out, I think we have done a service to this country. It is not that the press alone did it, or that the press picked it up and inflamed the country with editorials: press editorials tried to inflame the country to vote Conservative in the last election, and look what happened! The public is angry, and whatever influence the press may have on public opinion is beside the point. It would be a mistake to think this is a fight between parliament and the press because it is more than that; it has become a fight between parliament and the people of this country for credibility.

As the leader of this party has said, and indeed all members of this party say, some kind of increase for MPs is necessary. What sort of increase should it be, and how should it be arrived at? It is not important whether it is tied to the industrial index, to the cost of living index or the consumer price index. What is important is the indexing itself and the basic unfairness of it. If you add 10 per cent to an old age pension, it represents something worth while to the pensioner although it may be only a dollar and some change. Add 10 per cent to an MPs salary and the increase represents more than the entire old age pension.

That is what is wrong with indexing, Mr. Speaker. It is regressive, whether it be the industrial index or the cost of living index, because it either maintains the gap between those who are well off and those who are not, or enlarges it. It makes the inequality of the situation worse than it was. If this parliament were concerned about removing the distance between those who have and those who do not have in this society, the award would have to be substantially less than the industrial index or the cost of living index.

That is the kind of decision this parliament should be taking, Mr. Speaker. I am surprised that the Conservative Party missed the opportunity of saying, "Now is the time to look at an incomes policy. Let us start with the incomes of members of parliament and establish some kind of guideline for our society about how incomes should be arranged". You remove the gap between the rich and the poor by giving more to those at the bottom and less to those at the top. For all the Conservative Party's talk about an incomes policy, there is not a word about it when it comes to their own salaries. If you are going to bring in an incomes policy—and I think sooner or later this country will come to that—whether it is a guidelines policy or a direct control policy, surely the place to start is with MPs salaries. It is not done by saying that everybody is getting outrageous salaries in our society, or some people are, and that MPs salaries have to match. That is not showing any kind of leadership.

While we concede that there is some substantial ground for increasing the present salary of MPs, what ground is there for increasing the expense allowance? The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville criticized the statement made by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby at considerable length, saying that the benefits we now receive really should not be included. I will speak for myself on this matter, Mr. Speaker, but I do not think I am too different from many other members. Until a few years ago I paid for my own newsletters; admittedly not the full price, but I paid for them. I also paid for printing questionnaires, for extra help, for a telephone in my riding. The riding association paid the bulk of the constituency office expenses. I know many other members paid the same type of expenses from their salaries before we were given the expense allowance. But we did it because we thought it was an important way to serve our constituents.

The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville also overlooked the fact that most of the contributions we make to a political party are now deductible for income tax purposes. In our party, that amounts to a substantial part of our income, Mr. Speaker. Personally, it saves me about $1,000 a year and that is a substantial benefit. It may be that Liberals and Conservatives do not give anything to their parties or riding associations: perhaps they are paid. Members of the New Democratic Party, however, have always made contributions toward the work of the riding associations because it is of benefit to us. There are other benefits which I could indicate.

● (1650)

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member indicated he has a method of saving $1,000 a year through income tax credits. I would love to know about this before he goes any further.

Mr. Saltsman: I appreciate the suggested correction, Mr. Speaker. It is not $1,000; it is $500 odd. It is, nevertheless, a very substantial saving.

Mr. Gilbert: It is $500 for himself and $500 for his wife.

Mr. Saltsman: There is one other matter I should like to deal with in the few minutes at my disposal, and that is the suggestion that if we do not pay large sums of money we will not get good men and women running for parliament. Surely that is a most self-evident piece of nonsense. This parliament is composed of many good men and women, but I do not think they are any better than those we had before when the salary was $3,000, $4,000 or $5,000 a year. I am sure that if any of us wished to abdicate, or felt we could not possibly stand the onerous responsibility of continuing to be a member of parliament and retired from this place, there would be a great rush for our jobs even at the present salary. I am sure you could get somebody with my qualities, or someone perhaps better or worse, but the point is that there are many good men and women in the Parliament of Canada.

This job cannot be equated with other types of occupations. It is a very specialized kind of job and it must be obvious that in a nation of 22 million people, the 264 men and women are here to legislate on behalf of the people of this country. If any one of us wanted to get rich, there are many better ways than by becoming a member of parliament. If we wanted to live longer or have a better family life, there are much better ways than by being a member of parliament. When we accept the responsibility of a member of parliament, we know there will be certain associated problems. For example, we know we will not get rich; but we are entitled to a decent salary enabling us to live in a responsible sort of way.

I think we should get a little more than we are getting now, but we are not entitled to the moon and we should not make outrageous demands on society, using all kinds of padding from time to time to support our suggestions. That is what I am saying to members of this House: we should look at the situation realistically. I know that members will say I am being hypocritical and that I will take the money. I do not want to get back into the argument that took place before about conscience clauses, and that sort of thing, but I would ask hon. members to really look at what has been happening. The proposal put forward by the government will not be as beneficial to hon. members as the one initially suggested and all of us in this House, over the next couple of years, will be receiving less. There is some argument that over the entire period it will amount to the same thing, but from what I can understand we will be getting substantially less in the next couple of years than we would have received under the proposal originally brought forward by the government.

Let us not talk about hypocrisy. The stand and the fight we are conducting in this party will in fact reduce our opportunity of getting that increase in income. It will cost us money to put up this fight; I think that must be clear. If you want a test of sincerity, surely that is the test. We are going to continue this fight, and if it costs us money to do so in the sense that we get something less than the proposed salary increase, we will just have to live with the responsibility of taking that position. We will also have to learn to live with the catcalls from both sides of this House.

Let me conclude by saying that this House has a tremendous responsibility. I can appreciate how hon. members feel when they look around and see that people with perhaps less skill, who do not work as hard and make fewer sacrifices, are receiving more money. Surely that is not a good argument for us to follow but is, rather, a good argument for us to do something about what is wrong in our society in that some are getting more than their fair share. That is really the point of the whole debate.

If we continue to be seen as we are, unfortunately, seen by the people of this country, being no different and having no more conscience than anyone else—and everybody else is demanding more—it will be a sad time for this country.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, may I call it five o'clock?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of the adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray)—Energy—Oil—Request for investigation of possible fraudulent increase in import prices; the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie)—Air Transport—Crash of DC3 at Rimouski—Report alleging non-compliance with regulations; the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie)—Airports—Request for decision to construct.

It being five o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, private bills, and notices of motions.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I think there is some agreement to proceed with Order No. 34, Bill C-234, standing in the name of the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I do not wish to question the suggestion made by the parliamentary secretary regarding the agreement, but I have some reservation about the bill that is proposed for study by the House this afternoon.

Let me refer hon. members to a statement by Mr. Speaker on October 13, 1974, regarding the presentation of a mass of private members' bills. At that time he suggested it was impossible for the Chair to review the contents of each of these bills, and suggested that the bills be read the first time and leave it for the Chair to make a later decision regarding the procedural acceptability of individual proposals.

At the same time I feel it is unfair to come in on a day like this when there has been some general agreement as to the debate on a particular bill, and taking most of the time on a debate on the procedural acceptability of the proposal. I would be tempted to suggest to the House that there might be an agreement to debate the subject matter of the bill, but to go that far would not be following our normal procedures. I would enter a caveat in respect of our proceeding with an examination of the bill proposed by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen).

● (1700)

This is a caveat which would at least provide for the regularization of the bill in respect of its present weaknesses concerning the lack of a royal recommendation which would be necessary in order for it to comply with the procedures of this House. I must refer hon. members generally, although I am sure I do not have to bring it to the attention of the hon. member who is proposing the bill, or of the parliamentary secretary, to Standing Order 62(1), which is quite clear. It provides:

> This House shall not adopt or pass any vote, resolution, address or bill for the appropriation of any part of the public revenue, or of any tax or impost, to any purpose that has not been first recommended to the House by a message from the Governor General in the session in which such vote, resolution, address or bill is proposed.

So, because of the provisions of the standing order, and also because of the fact that another such bill was proposed in the previous parliament, Bill C-11, an act to amend the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1965, which was meant to achieve about the same purpose, which was proposed by the government, and to which was attached a royal recommendation which complied with Standing Order 62(1), I would not want the House to proceed with the consideration of Bill C-234 without giving a warning to hon. members or without suggesting to the House that, over and above the unanimous consent to proceed with Bill C-234 at this time, although it is not first in the list on the order paper, there should be an understanding that if it should come to a vote the Chair would reserve and delay such vote until there was a royal recommendation which would meet the obligations and requests of Standing Order 62, or make a definite decision at that time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, if you are asking for agreement on two counts I should like to say a word first concerning the request that Bill C-234 be considered in this hour despite the fact that that would mean jumping it over several others. We certainly are prepared to go along with that.

On the question of whether or not the bill is in order, I do not know whether I am about to refer to something to which Your Honour referred a moment ago when I was looking up something else, but I should like to point out that there is on the order paper, in the name of the government, Bill C-3 which would do the same thing that is proposed by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). Of course Bill C-3, in the name of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp), does have attached to it the royal recommendation.

It would seem to me that, if the royal recommendation is required for the government to propose senators for the Yukon and Northwest Territories, the same obligation should rest on a private member. However, although I am opposed to senators I am not opposed to the House spending the hour debating this bill if that should be the wish, but it would be on the understanding that if the debate were to end, and a vote called, at that point there would have to be a ruling from the Chair as to whether or not the bill is in order.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to speak on the procedural point raised by the Chair at this time. I believe we are prepared to go along with the suggestion that the debate proceed and, should the debate come to an end, that sufficient opportunity be given to members at that time to make their submissions on the procedural point raised by the Chair before any ruling is made concerning the bill. In this way we could save time by not becoming involved in the procedural matter.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, the arrangements are satisfactory to us. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) pointed out, there is on the order paper in the name of the President of the Privy Council Bill C-3 which deals effectively with the same thing. I believe it would be the will of the government, if the House should show a disposition to come to a decision in respect of Bill C-234, to provide the royal recommendation if it should be necessary, in order to allow it to come to a decision. From the point of view of the government I should point out that it really does not matter whether this end is accomplished by way of a private member's bill or by way of a government bill. It is the end that the government devoutly desires.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As there seems to be complete understanding and agreement, the Chair will call the order and we will proceed with the debate. Perhaps I should say this is the second time the present occupant of the Chair has been faced with the same situation where there has been agreement to debate a bill in respect of which there was some procedural reservation. Again today, the Chair felt that it was unfair to take away from the time provided for such an important debate. It might be that the Chair and its advisers should look at the problem of making decisions upon the procedural acceptability of bills a longer time in advance, so that we do not lose time in reaching procedural decisions on bills on which there has already been agreement for debate. Is it agreed that we proceed to the consideration of Bill C-234?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE SENATE REPRESENTATION FOR YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon) moved that Bill C-234, to amend the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1965 (Yukon and Northwest Territories Senate Representation), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief in view of the position taken by the government. I might, on behalf not only of the people of the Yukon Territory but of the Northwest Territories as well, express my gratitude to the government, a thing I very seldom do, for its farsightedness in this case. I would hope I could do the same thing in respect to the party to my left which is represented in this House by the hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth) concerning matters in the north.

This is a bicameral system we have in our country. Whether or not my hon. friend for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) agrees that there should be Senators, and we all know his position in that regard, surely it is unfair that all parts of Canada except the two northern territories should be fully represented in the bicameral parliament of this country. It is unfair to leave out the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories, and by opposing this bill that is precisely what we would be doing.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Perhaps that would be the fairest thing we could do for the north.

Mr. Nielsen: No, it is not. We want full representation. The Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories want Senate representation. It may well be that when the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) brings forward his bill to abolish the Senate he may find me on his side, because I share a great many of his views in respect of the other place. However, while we have this system we, as Canadian citizens in the north, are just as entitled to be represented in parliament as is any other province. That is all this bill seeks to do, and it is all that Bill C-3, the government bill, seeks to do.

• (1710)

I have had this private member's bill on the order paper for many years now, and I am thankful that the government is prepared to go to the extent of providing the royal recommendation—which I do not think is necessary and which I will argue if the need arises. However, the government is prepared to provide that, so that the last possible objection of any member, including the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), should be disposed of by it. I hope, Madam Speaker, that we can give second reading to the bill and move it to the committee. In the meantime the government could provide the royal recommendation that may or may not be essential, and then the bill would be acceptable even despite that possible procedural objection.

Having said that, I urge the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre not to stand in the way of Canadian citizens in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories being represented as fully as any other Canadian citizens in parliament by permitting representation in the Senate.

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, it is a rare occasion when I can rise to commend the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), as many in this chamber are aware from previous debates, especially for his presentation of his Bill, C-234. It is a unique opportunity for the voice of the north to be heard, and as a northerner myself I have noted the very dense concentration of Senate representation from the heavily populated south. We on this side of the House have no objection to this bill proceeding.

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, we do have a procedural problem at this point. I understand that the debate is coming to a close, and I really do not know how to resolve the problem in the sense that we have to find some way of getting a royal recommendation to apply to a bill not presented by the cabinet, although the cabinet has presented Bill C-3 to the House for which it has obtained a royal recommendation.

I wonder if we could agree to suspend proceedings at this point, if no one else wishes to speak, and once we have had an opportunity to resolve the dilemma perhaps an order could be made so that we could have a vote on it, if necessary, when we have solved the procedural problem of a royal recommendation.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I believe that the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Reid) has raised an interesting point which obviously may take some time to resolve, that is, just how the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), who is not a member of the Privy Council, can obtain a royal recommendation from the Governor General for his bill.

Mr. Nielsen: Pull, drag.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Pull? I have not yet found the word pull or the word drag in the British North America Act or in the Standing Orders. But no doubt that matter will be resolved if that is the will of the House.

However, I wish to state my opposition to the bill, and let not the hon. member for Yukon or the hon. member for Skeena (Mrs. Campagnolo) suggest that this is a case of speaking against the north. I am opposed to this bill precisely because I do not want to insult the north. I do not want to insult the people of the Yukon or the people of the Northwest Territories by proposing to them that somehow they will be brought into the mainstream of Canadian life because a couple of Liberals are appointed to sit in the Senate on their behalf.

I think that this House did the right thing not many weeks ago when it made provision to increase the representation of the north in this House of Commons so that we will have, in the next parliament, one member for Yukon and two members for the Northwest Territories. This is where representation really counts, this is where the action is. I do not think it is worth anything to the Yukon or to the Northwest Territories to have representation in the other place.

With regard to the argument of the hon. member for Yukon that he might support my proposal to abolish the Senate but in the meantime let us have someone in it from the north, there are lots of thing to which I might be opposed in society, but that does not give me the moral right to patronize them while they exist, does it? You can fill in the blank, if you want.

I suggest that the arguments in favour of this bill add up to zero. If it is the will of the House that it be approved either in the name of the hon. member for Yukon or in the name of a cabinet minister, that is the will of the House. But in defense of the dignity and the real rights of the people of the north I say that it is an insult to try to fob off on them the idea that they are brought into the mainstream of Canadian life if they have a couple of Liberals sitting in their name in the other place.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is it agreed that the bill stand until further consultation?

Mr. Nielsen: It is agreed, provided that if the royal recommendation is not obtained we will have the opportunity to submit arguments on the procedural point involved.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is it agreed that the bill will hold its order of precedence?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Reid: Six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock tonight.

At 5.20 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Members' Salaries

THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT, THE SALARIES ACT AND THE PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARIES ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING SALARIES AND ALLOWANCES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Sharp that Bill C-44, to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act, the Salaries Act and the Parliamentary Secretaries Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, there was not time for research into how, during the past 100 years or so, salary increases for members of parliament were brought about, but I would not be surprised to learn that there have been in the past instances similar to ours when uproars on the part of an alienated public were heard to reach as far as Parliament Hill.

In 1971 at least some of us here went through a similar experience, and at that time I made a mental note asking myself whether there was not a better way to provide elected representatives with salary increases when needed, which would be more adequate and more acceptable than the way we have proceeded so far in recent years.

It will take me only a few minutes to explain why I will be voting against this all-party bill. I disagree with the present bill on two counts—the approach, and the timing. Let me explain the problem of the approach. This bill was produced here internally with very little if any consultation with the outside world, and it was brought out into the open rather suddenly. It is no surprise that the public was rather dismayed and that a certain degree of resentment developed, but that does not mean that there are not many Canadians across the country who want to see their elected representatives well remunerated in order to enable them to do an adequate job.

As a result of that one wonders whether there is not a way to develop a bill with the support and understanding of Canadians. The obvious solution is the formation of a commission, and this is not a novel idea. It was a good idea when it was tried in 1970-71. Perhaps a larger and more representative group would be needed. This commission would serve at least two purposes. It would prepare public opinion because of its work, and it would provide a number of recommendations which it would be up to parliament to adopt subsequently in the form of a bill if they were acceptable. It may produce, for instance, one measure which I would very much welcome, namely, the removal of the tax exempt portion of elected representatives' salaries as a step which would be quite consistent with the measures introduced in 1972 by the then minister of finance through tax reform. The Beaupré Commission was a good idea, and it is one on which we could improve in the years to come.

The other reason for my voting against the bill is in relation to timing. It seems to me that any bill like this, or bills in future years for future parliaments, would be acceptable if it or they were to come into effect as of the date of the following election. It is true that in this case three years is a long time to wait, and it is true that it would mean a tightening of belts, but it would be an approach which would indicate our intentions, prepare the public, and develop greater public support for a measure of this kind.

[The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin).]

If we consider this evening not only this bill but subsequent bills for, say, the next 50 years, if we were to have these two basic elements—the commission first to supply the data and the recommendations, and a bill which would come into effect as of the date of the following election—then it seems to me that we will have done a good job in considerably improving our present method.

I hope that hon. members will consider these two steps for this parliament and for future parliaments. I do not know whether I have convinced many or only a few—

An hon. Member: None.

Mr. Caccia: —that by adopting the procedure I have described tonight, we will have saved ourselves and the public much unnecessary grief. I have tried hard, Mr. Speaker, both in caucus and here, to convince hon. members, and there is at least full agreement on one point—our job is a rather unique job. We are legislators. At the same time we are the link between the people and the government, and we are those in whom the public has confidence and high respect. There are great satisfactions which can be derived from this kind of work and by playing these different roles.

I do not think we need to go through such experiences as we have between December and now if we were to adopt a procedure which will make the public part of the process rather than partially alienating the very same people who, in the end, would want to see members of parliament well remunerated.

Perhaps hon. members may see merits in these ideas. They are not really original. They are based on just plain common sense and motivated by the desire for searching for an approach which will spare elected representatives something which they do not deserve, namely, the criticism of the people they endeavour to represent in this House every day.

● (2010)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Olivier (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, I should like to know whether the previous speaker would be willing to answer a few questions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It could be done with the consent of the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia).

Would the hon. member accept a question?

Mr. Caccia: Certainly.

Mr. Olivier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. member what he will be doing with the raise. Does he intend to give it to charitable institutions in his constituency. I would like him to tell us.

[English]

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, as I said, I tried hard in this House and in caucus to put forward an alternative approach; but I suggest that with this measure, as with any other, the will of the majority of the House will prevail.

Mr. Olivier: You have not answered my question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question? I see the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) rising. Is he rising on a point of order?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No, Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Chair is in a technical difficulty inasmuch as I am under the impression the hon. member has already spoken. Perhaps I am mistaken. If so, perhaps the hon. member can confirm my mistake.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I think Your Honour will find that I spoke on a point of order. I know that my name appears in the index of Hansard for the Thursday of the week before Christmas. I myself wondered why my name appeared, but I assure Your Honour that I spoke only to a point of order and that I have not spoken on the second reading of the bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sure the House will accept the word of the hon. member. I thought the hon. member spoke when his leader had moved an amendment. In any event, I will recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like in my opening words to congratulate the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) on the brief but constructive speech he just made. It was obvious that, sitting where he does in this House, it was not easy for him to speak against this bill. I think all of us should pay him our respect for the stand he took.

The hon. member referred to his having been through this experience in 1971 and, since he is being obliged to go through it again, he feels strongly that a better way should be found to deal with this matter. I can say to the hon. member that this is the fifth time I have been through this experience and I thoroughly agree that we should find a better way—

An hon. Member: You have been here a long time; why couldn't you suggest something better?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: But you guys are the government.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We have tried, Mr. Speaker, and I want to say that I approve of the two main points that I gather the hon. member for Davenport was trying to make. They were, one, that there should be some kind of outside body which should make the judgment as to what the remuneration of members of parliament ought to be; two, that any decision made by a parliament regarding the remuneration of members of parliament should come into effect at the beginning of the next ensuing parliament.

I congratulate the hon. member on the statement he made. I was glad to hear him say that he fought for his view in the caucus of which he is a member. I wish that his fellow members had listened to him more intently.

An hon. Member: But he is not the government.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is evident from the interruptions and the catcalls coming from across the way that feelings tend to run high in this kind of debate.

An hon. Member: That's right. This is unpleasant.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It can become quite an unpleasant experience. Some of us may feel that we are on the right side of the issue and that outside this House there is support for our position; nevertheless, it is not pleasant to stand in this House and feel that most members are critical of what one is saying.

Perhaps I might be allowed to lighten the atmosphere of this House a bit by recounting an incident which took place in January on a bus, south of London, England. The Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, of which I have the honour to be a member, spent about ten days in London, in the middle of January, studying the procedures at Westminster and giving thought to our own. When we finished our deliberations we were driven one dark Sunday night from London by bus down to a town near Gatwick Airport, where we were to spend the night so that we could get our aircraft from Gatwick the next morning.

We had a fine driver, but he had never been to the hotel where we were to spend the night. After he drove around for some time in different directions it became obvious we were lost. Actually he stopped a couple of times and went into one place or another to find out where we were and how to get to the hotel. Our only concern was that it was getting late. But the concern we felt as we sat in that bus gave way to a sensation of delightful relief when, out of the silence, came the poetic voice of the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. MacFarlane), who said something like this, "Well, there is one thing that is good. If we are lost, it means that Stanley won't get back to Ottawa in time to stop the pay bill."

An hon. Member: But here you are.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I made some remark to the effect that I would get here somehow; and here I am. And, if possible, I should like to see Bill C-44 stopped. I say that categorically.

An hon. Member: Because that is in your interest.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I say to my hon. friends opposite that I do not have many notes in front of me and if they interrupt me, they will help me. I will be able to speak for the full 40 minutes.

I say to this House candidly that I wish, with all my heart, that this parliament had what it takes to say no to this bill. If this House could send this bill back to where it came from it could well be one of our finest hours.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Don't be absurd.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I suggest to hon. members opposite that by their childish interruptions they are only underlining the indecent attitude they are taking on this question. As far as my colleagues and I are concerned, and this goes also for some members on the other side and some members of the Conservative party, this is a very serious issue.

My reason for saying that this House's opposition to this bill could be a high point in the life of this institution must surely be clear. Sir, Canada's economy is in trouble. Inflation may not yet be of the runaway variety, but it is awfully close to it. On every hand it is being said that we need restraint. We get it every day from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner). We get it frequently from the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). In one of his memorable contributions during the question period one day just before the Easter recess he was pleading for action from the government following the recess. He said quite clearly, "We, the Conservative party, are prepared to go along with restraint."

Neither the Minister of Finance nor the Leader of the Opposition has said that he would apply that restraint to this question of the pay and allowances of members of parliament. However, I suggest it is true that what this country needs at the present time is the practice of some restraint. The place for that practice to begin is with ourselves.

I believe quite firmly that even the announcement in December that parliament was going to increase its pay and allowances by 50 per cent did damage to the economy of the country. That damage has already been done. Since then, there have been many instances of demands for higher wages that are in percentage brackets much higher than they were in 1974. The reason groups of all kinds feel free to make very high demands is because they feel they were given a lead in that direction by the parliament of Canada through the announcement in December that this place was going for a 50 per cent increase.

Precisely because of the damage that was done by that announcement, I suggest we now have to lean over backwards. We have to go for even less now than might have been reasonable then, as a means of giving a lead to the people of the country. There are talks going on between the government and various economic sectors of the country in an effort to reach some kind of consensus. When workers are out on strike, we say they are asking for too much. In some cases we even legislate them back to work at lower rates than they want. If it is the general view that there should be some restraint, we are the ones who ought to be practising it right here.

I go along with the views that have been expressed in other parts of the House, and with a view that is held by my own party, that there may be a case for some increase in the remuneration of members of parliament. I think there was a better case before December than there is now. However, the fact that we have asked for such an outlandish increase has done the kind of damage to our economy that I think we ought now to repair.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

I plead with this House, even if there are only a few of our voices that are doing it, that we not rush headlong into approving this bill. I have to say that I am disturbed by what is happening today. I thought this debate was starting afresh and we were going to hear from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Leader of the Opposition. In fact, yesterday I was told that was going to happen, but I was told today they were not going to speak. Today all we get from the government side of the House in support of the bill is one speech by the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan). We have heard no comment not a word, from the official opposition. There was one speech by the leader of the Social Credit party.

It is obvious from the calls for "question" that members are hoping this can be got out of the way before the country realizes what is happening. I do not think that is a responsible way for this parliament to act.

An hon. Member: It has been in the papers for months.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The hon. member says it has been in the papers for months. A lot of things have been in the papers for months. There have been a lot of letters from people across Canada for months expressing concern about what this place is doing.

I make my appeal even to those who can make a case on the basis of expenses, family costs, and the increased workload. I appeal to those who think an increase is justified to face the fact that our primary responsibility in this place, in this House of Commons, in this parliament of Canada, is to give leadership to this country.

What this country needs now in terms of economic leadership is some voice that will say restraint is necessary, and that we are prepared to practice it ourselves. Maybe it is a voice crying in the wilderness of this place. There is at least one ear across the way that I take it is sympathetic.

I would regard it as the height of irresponsibility and a cynical approach to our responsibilities if members, simply by sitting quiet and trying to howl down some of the rest of us, allowed this bill in just one day to get second reading and go to committee.

What is at stake in this bill is not just the alleged financial difficulties of members of parliament, the desire to have a little more, or the differences between us. What is at stake is the question of whether we, the members of the House of Commons of Canada, are prepared to give leadership to a country which is in trouble.

I deplore as strongly as I can the silence from the government side. I deplore equally the silence from the official opposition. I point out, however, that the Conservative party as a party is not silent on the question. There came into my hands a short while ago a copy of a document which is headed "National President's Newsletter". It is on the letterhead of the Progressive Conservative Association of Canada. It is from Michael A. Meighen, the national president, and is dated March, 1975. The first two or three paragraphs give a general rundown on the sins and omissions of the Liberal government. Then he says, and I quote:

Despite the doubletalk, total government spending has increased by 33 per cent or over $8 billion. In addition, a government which is in the middle of a business-labour wage war created in part by its non-existent anti-inflation policy, has the audacity to propose 50 per cent salary increases which have made a farce of its voluntary restraint program and public service negotiations. This government seems unable to comprehend its responsibility as the ultimate arbitrator and pace-setter in fighting inflation.

If that is the position of the Progressive Conservative Association of Canada, as stated by its national president, Mr. Michael Meighen, I suggest that position ought to be stated in this House by the Leader of the Opposition, by the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies), by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) and others who purport to speak for the Progressive Conservatives of this country with regard to economic matters. I agree with Mr. Meighen that it is an audacious act for the government, in this time of economic trouble and crisis, to come in with this kind of proposal.

I deplore the fact we are not hearing from the Prime Minister. I am equally disturbed that we are not hearing from the Leader of the Opposition or other spokesmen for the Progressive Conservative party. It is not only the Progressive Conservative party that has taken this view through its national president. The Minister of Finance is running around the country preaching restraint. The government is constantly telling labour groups that they are asking for too much. Only a few days ago we put one group back to work by legislation.

There may be a good case for all of this, but the case would be a lot stronger if we showed we were paying some attention to the preachments that are uttered in this House of Commons. Therefore I urge that any thought of this bill being put through tonight be forgotten. Surely that is the least I can urge.

● (2030)

An hon. Member: Okay, baby!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If the hon. member over there would like to make a speech I hope he will do so. This is an important debate. The least the House should do is allow this issue to be under debate for a few days, not just for one day so that it slips out of the news before the people have heard about it. Debate should continue until the people of the country are persuaded that the House of Commons is treating this issue as the serious one some of us believe it to be.

Having said these things about the general nature of the proposition before us I want to express misgivings about some of the details in the bill as it is now presented. Incidentally, the general impression, as a result of what the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) said on the Wednesday of the week before Christmas, is that when the bill gets to committee certain amendments will be made to it. The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville, although he is not in a position to speak for the government, confirmed that understanding this afternoon. Nevertheless, what is before us as far as any vote is concerned is not an amended bill—it is the bill which was introduced last December, one which provides for a 50 per cent increase in both the indemnity and the expense allowance, and declares that such an increase is to be retroactive to July 8, 1974. This leads me to say immediately that I do not think there is any justification for making whatever increase parliament decides on to be retroactive to the date of the last election.

The hon. member for Davenport has just argued that any increase voted by parliament should not come into effect until after the next election. Yet here we are being asked to make it law that we should get a substantial increase retroactive to the date of the 1974 election.

There is a point concerning which feelings are so strong and arguments are so sharp that maybe we will never be able to settle it. That is the question as to how long a period the increase voted in 1971 was intended to cover. I know there is nothing in Hansard about what was understood at that time. However, I have been here for five of these battles and it was certainly my understanding, my grasp of the situation, that the reason the boost was so high in 1971 was that it would be several years before there would be another. Some hon. members do not accept that argument, but as far as I am concerned, it is a valid point. Even if hon. members do not accept it I still do not see how anyone can justify asking for an increase to be retroactive to the day on which members of this House were elected.

When we ran in the election which culminated on July 8, 1974, we knew what the pay and allowances attached to this job would be. We knew that if we were fortunate enough to get here it would be $18,000 taxable plus $8,000 by way of a tax-free allowance. I submit that if there is a case for an increase now because of the higher cost of living since July 8, 1974, any such increase should come into effect only now, and not be made retroactive to July 8, 1974. A retroactive payment of the kind suggested would mean we would each get a cheque for a retroactive amount which would be greater than the amount most people make in an entire year. I submit this is not justified in all conscience, and I urge that, if this bill does get second reading and move into committee, the effective date be changed.

Another point which bothers me has to do with the indexing which is now proposed. I said a few moments ago that all we are voting upon is Bill C-44 in the form in which it is before us. But we do know, from what was said by the President of the Privy Council on the Wednesday before Christmas, and from what the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville said this afternoon, that there are proposals to provide for an escalation of the salary and allowance, starting in 1976, which would be based on the industrial composite index or, as the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville called it, the ICI, as opposed to the CPI, or the consumer price index. I find this proposal as offensive as any I have seen brought before the House of Commons.

Some of us have for years fought hard for the principle that pensions should be escalated not just by the rise in the cost of living, which only keeps people where they were upon retirement, but that they should be indexed in accordance with the rise in the standard of living. We have suggested that the gross national product should be used as a base; we have suggested that the wage index be used as a base. We have never been able to get the government to accept this principle. This point was made very clearly in a report issued a few months ago by the National Council on Welfare, a body which operates under the aegis of the government and which produces some very good reports—hon. members will recollect its recent report, "Poor Kids."

I am now referring to the report issued in 1974 entitled "Prices and the Poor." In that report a plea was made that pensions across the board should be indexed, not with reference to the cost of living, which always leaves pensioners behind and gives them no share in rising living standards, but according to wage index or the gross national product. However, even though this recommendation came from the National Council on Welfare, we got nowhere with it.

I cite another example. Some time ago we won an amendment to the Pension Act, the legislation under which war disability pensions are paid. It was a victory which took 40 or 50 years to win. What we achieved was a requirement that war disability pensions would be related to the wage levels of five groups in the public service. The recommendation was made that the 100 per cent disability pension be the average income of five such groups. This was put into legislation because a very high level committee had worked on the matter—a tri-partite committee consisting of representatives of the Department of Veterans Affairs, the Canadian Pension Commission, and the veterans organizations of Canada. Please note that two of these three elements were under the government—the Department of Veterans Affairs and the Canadian Pension Commission.

When that committee recommended the rate of a 100 per cent disability pension be related to the wage levels of the public service, it recommended as strongly as it could that any future indexing of that basic pension should be geared to the wage increases of those same five groups. Despite the fact that it had the support of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, the government refused to do it.

There is the picture, Mr. Speaker. That is why I find this proposal so offensive, why I find it so indecent. We cannot get the pensions of senior citizens geared to the industrial composite index, and we cannot get the disability pensions of our war veterans geared to the industrial composite index—they must settle for the consumer price index which, over the long run, is behind the other. They must settle for the lesser formula, but when it comes to our pay and allowances we demand the best formula there is, the industrial composite.

As I say, Mr. Speaker, I think this is offensive and indecent and I hope, if there is to be in this bill any provision for escalation, we will not ask for ourselves something that we have been unwilling to give to the public generally, and in particular that the government has been unwilling to give to the veterans of this country.

This afternoon the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville made some remarks about productivity. He thought we should get not only the increase equal to the cost of living but we should get some increase for productivity. Mr. Speaker, I do not know how you would measure the productivity of this place. I was interested when the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) talked this afternoon about the high salaries that certain athletes get because they amuse a few thousand people. One of my friends to the right said, "But in this place we amuse 20 million people." Mr. Speaker, the point I am trying to make is that productivity is something that one has the right to look at and claim some benefit for, but it really depends on where you start.

We had some trouble today about figures as between the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville and the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby. I have some figures too, Mr. Speaker. I find on the basis of 1961 being 100—and that is the formula being used today under CPI—that the CPI for 1953 was 89.4. I mention that year because it is one of the years in which the pay and allowances of members of parliament were increased. In 1953 we were brought up to $8,000 salary and $2,000 expense allowance. Today the CPI is crowding 180—it has gone up 100 per cent since 1953. Un that basis, Mr. Speaker, we should be getting $16,000 salary and $4,000 for expense allowance. We are already getting $18,000 plus $8,000, so I suggest that there has already been an allowance for productivity; yet the bill before us asks for $26,000 and $13,000, or a total of $39,000. Even the amendments that have been proposed, while they would provide for less at the beginning would, by the end of this parliament, provide just as much.

I suggest that all of these arguments about figures can be used in any direction, Mr. Speaker, but surely there is no case on any basis of statistics for the amounts that are being asked for in this bill.

Another point was brought out this afternoon where there seems to be some difference between the views of the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville and the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby. I think they were not speaking about the same thing, but let me get into that same area with a different document. I have in my hand a copy of the excellent address entitled "Income Distribution: A Question of Community Ethics", which was delivered in Toronto on Thursday, October 31, 1974, by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde). In this speech he condemned our society for the inequality of income that exists, and called for a serious effort to overcome these inequalities. He gave some statistics, and pointed out that according to the latest figures he had there were five million families in Canada and that, of those five million families, 190,000, or 3.8 per cent, were receiving incomes of more than $25,000 a year. I contend, Mr. Speaker, that as members of Parliament we and our families are in that category. Some will argue that we are getting $18,000 a year salary and $8,000 a year expense allowance. That is $26,000 before you figure any tax. Mr. Speaker, we are in that 190,000.

If my friend across the way does not like the percentage that my leader gave the other day, even that figure of 190,000 is 3.8 per cent of the five million families in Canada. Raise that 3.8 per cent to 5 per cent, or even more if you want, in terms of what we are now receiving, and if you add to that the proposed increase in this bill, we certainly will be in the top 5 per cent so far as family income in this country is concerned.

I do not think we can give proper representation to the people of this country if everyone of us in this place has income greater than 95 per cent of the people we represent. I call upon members not just to talk about our needs, our costs and expenses, but to face the responsibility of leadership. You do not give leadership by having people who are in the elite position of having more income than 95 per cent of the people we are supposed to represent.

One of the reasons why some of us have come to this place is precisely because of the gross inequalities of income in Canada. It is not the first time I have referred to the speech of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It was a good speech, and the points he made about the need to ameliorate these inequalities are exceedingly well taken. Maybe it takes time. I do not like saying that, because I do not think it should take the decades it does to make changes. Surely until we have brought some of these others up, we who are already in the top 5 per cent of families in Canada should not, by this bill, be putting ourselves in a still smaller group, up into 3 per cent or 2 per cent category.

In my book an egalitarian society is a goal to aim at—and not just a goal for the year 2000 or 2100, but is a goal to aim at now. One of the troubles, and it is well pointed out in the speech of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, is that even though there have been increases for those at the bottom as well as those at the top, the differences still persist. I insist that a society that has inequalities of that sort will not survive as a strong, healthy society worth the effort that it takes to maintain.

I plead, Mr. Speaker, that we not waste our time talking about how much it costs us to maintain two homes or put children through school, or the cost of sending out Christmas cards. Let us not have anyone else raise the argument that we need an increase in pay so that we can send out Christmas cards. A person cannot get much smaller than that. I say let us not worry about our position as individuals, let us get our eye on the ball and think of the thing that is important, namely, that we in this place are here to give leadership to the country. We will not be giving leadership by taking steps to increase that inequality by putting ourselves in a still higher bracket so far as the incomes of the families of Canada are concerned.

We had this bill before the House before Christmas and the government wanted to get it through at that time, but it did not succeed. Now that it has been brought back again I suppose the government has a stake in the matter and it has to get it through to save its face. Surely debates in this place are not in vain, and surely if some of us, like the hon. member for Davenport, have points that we feel are valid, they should be listened to and considered. If some of us, even though we are only 16 down in this corner, feel that this matter is so serious it should be looked at more thoroughly, we should take the time to do so.

I referred to us in this corner as being 16. I am aware of the fact, and not ashamed at all of it, that two or three of my colleagues may not be with the rest of us in voting against the bill when the vote comes. I am aware that even those who may accept the bill are very much opposed to some features of it. Even if it is only a handful of us who feel as strongly as we do about the ethics and morality of this question, and as strongly as we do about our responsibility in providing leadership, we urge that some attention be paid to the remarks we are trying to make.

One of the other arguments that continues to be advanced around here is that we need higher pay in order to attract better people to this House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I believe there was an interjection which I did not catch. I imagine it was delightful, but I will not worry about it. I have heard that argument certainly during every one of the five pay battles I have been through, and I do not see that the members of the House of Commons today are that much better than King, Ralston, Ilsley, Woodsworth, Bennett, Graydon, Coldwell and others who were here when the pay was $4,000 a year for members, with no expense allowances! I do not see that much of a difference, and I think we would actually be better members if we had a little more awareness of the economic problems facing the people of this country. We certainly will not have that awareness if we give ourselves the massive increase suggested in this bill.

I see you are about to get to the edge of your chair, Mr. Speaker, and I know what that means. I shall not force you to get up, but rather I shall sit down in less than a minute. I would plead with this House that it give more thought to this measure, and that it give the leadership the country wants at this time but which it is not getting from this place if parliament rushes through this bill.

To give the House a little more time to think the matter over, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow):

That Bill C-44 be not now read the second time but that it be read the second time this day six months hence.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I support Bill C-44.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gilbert: I hope that the amended form is that version set forth by the parliamentary secretary and the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp).

I think the people of Canada should be very proud of the NDP. On December 10 when this bill was introduced there were certain unfavourable feelings regarding its contents. Many felt that its terms were unconscionable. The NDP has made us look at the bill a second time, and this has given the public an opportunity to scrutinize it, analyze it, and comment on it.

Out of the clash of ideas comes a certain wisdom, and what has come forward in the spirit of compromise is a fair and reasonable increase, with an escalation clause that should effectively stop pay bills from coming into the House on a regular basis.

The NDP, as a socialist party, is not confined to a welfare party. Its members believe in individual dignity and justice, and that every person in Canada is entitled to a decent living, which includes the right of employment at a fair and reasonable salary or wage, the right to housing, the right to medicare, the right to education, and the right to a clean environment.

What are the parameters of a reasonable salary for a member of parliament? I thought the Beaupré committee set forth these parameters very well. I should like to read them to hon. members as I think we should all be familiar with them. This is a summary of what the Beaupré committee said in respect of six basic principles.

An hon. Member: What year?

Mr. Gilbert: This was in 1970, and it sets forth the basic guides or principles we should follow in respect of any pay increase. They are as follows:

(1) The future of Canada depends largely upon the ability of the public to secure the services of the best possible people as parliamentarians.

(2) Salaries should be high enough to attract persons of proven ability at a time when their earning potential may be at its highest.

(3) The position of the parliamentarian is essentially a full-time occupation; his working day in the House of Commons is usually much longer than the industrial average.

(4) The tenure of office of a member of the House of Commons is uncertain; 292 members have been defeated in the past 12 years.

(5) The nature of the position is becoming increasingly more time consuming, more complicated, more sensitive and requiring considerable moral courage.

(6) A member of parliament must meet many expenses that are not common to other salary earners and that are not deductible for income tax purposes as is the practice in many other countries.

I agree completely with those basic principles set forth by the Beaupré committee. We must have the best possible people as parliamentarians in this country, and they must be men of proven ability.

Mrs. Campagnolo: Men?

Mr. Gilbert: Men and women of proven ability. They have to consider this as a full-time job. There certainly is an uncertainty of tenure, and the job at times requires the moral courage to speak out in respect of certain problems. There is no doubt in my mind that there are certain extra expenditures involved in the job. After 10 years as a member of parliament in this House I have found this to be a very tough job, but a very exciting, satisfactory and worth-while job. I have found that it takes my full time, my full talent, my full dedication, and my full sacrifice. If I had known when I was first elected what I know now, I would have demanded a higher salary to cover my job, my work, my hours, and my family separation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gilbert: What worries me as a Canadian is the cookie jar mentality of so many groups in our society. I refer to the doctors, lawyers, dentists, teachers, businessmen, trade unionists and parliamentarians. These appear to be groups in our society which have their hands in the cookie jar trying to take out as much as possible. The result is that we do not have the type of economy of which we could be proud. This situation has created an inflationary condition which is hitting the fixed and low income groups. It reflects itself in unemployment, lack of housing, and an improper distribution of income.

Gone are the days when a man dedicated his talents and his time to serving his fellowmen. When I think of the school teachers, the social workers, the lawyers who have developed a cookie jar mentality in an attempt to protect themselves to the limit, I realize we are not heading in the right direction. I should like to see a redistribution of income which would be fair and reasonable in respect of all Canadians, and a deep sense of concern for our fellow Canadians.

Specifically in respect of the salary increase I feel it is fair and reasonable when compared with the incomes of business officers, professional people, and trade unionists. I asked in 1971 why it should be morally acceptable for people in business and the professions to obtain increases, yet be morally reprehensible for parliamentarians to demand the same treatment. I feel the same way today. I believe it is morally acceptable for parliamentarians to demand a fair and reasonable wage for the work they are doing. What I would demand myself, and what I would prefer, is a salary of about $30,000 adjusted to the cost of living. I would want my expenses to be on a voucher basis for rent, meals, reasonable entertainment of constituents, and donations to worthy causes. The voucher system in respect of expenses was recommended by the Beaupré commission. I think we have made a serious mistake in not accepting that recommendation.

I think that because of our present expense account system we find ourselves in very difficult situations. If we had a decent salary of about $30,000, as I mentioned earlier, I think we should be in the same position as salesmen and professional people who are held accountable for their expenses whether it be in respect of rent here in Ottawa, meals, entertainment, donations to worthy causes, or travel. I think this would eliminate a great deal of the criticism we receive.

I have set forth my ideas in respect of this bill. I said I would support it. I hope the bill will pass quickly so that we might direct our attention and our time to problems such as unemployment, inflation, housing, and a fair tax system, as well as a fair and reasonable distribution of income. If we were to do so I do not think the Canadian people would object for one moment to a generous salary being paid parliamentarians.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles-Eugène Dionne (Kamouraska): Madam Speaker, I know that at this point most hon. members would like to end the debate. However, I feel it quite in order for me to express my views on the present situation. We have long since noticed the results of the methods used to steer those negotiations, and that in various fields, with the generally recognized objective of improving the living conditions of those who are concerned in the negotiations. Everyone will admit that there are failures and even strikes.

By observing the situation seriously, it is easy to realize that most negotiators insist on obtaining increases in salaries from those who pay rather than exerting the required pressures on those who deprive them.

One readily recognizes amongst those, the people who control money and credit, who at will create upheavals in the whole economy of the country, forcing most of our political puppets to flounder about in both inflation and recession. Just think of all they can invent in the topsy-turvy system we are afflicted with.

The adjustment of members' salaries would cause no problem if the people enjoyed a decent standard of living. It would be a matter of setting up in this new economic era a true cost of living adjustment mechanism called indexation. This adjustment mechanism should take into account variations, either downward or upward, and crisis and prosperity periods. That would be a way of keeping awake legislators who have a tendency to fall asleep when unemployment becomes the nightmare of too many Canadians and strikes proliferate, with the known consequences, due to a financial system continuously divorced from the economic realities of the day.

I have good reason to believe that the Canadian people in general would be prepared to pay good salaries to legislators who would devise an economic system allowing each and every one of them to live decently. However, they are reluctant to pay large salaries to administrators who maintain a system of taxes, debts, strikes, increasing crime rate and all the difficulties we know.

My colleague from Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) made a practical suggestion to the House of Commons on November 25, 1974, during the budget debate, when he read excerpts from the bill put before American representatives on August 22, 1935. He also pointed out the importance of Bill C-201 introduced in the House by the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette), which would have made it possible to improve appreciably the defective system with which we are plagued.

● (2110)

I have here an article from the January 29, 1969 edition of Le Droit entitled:

Reasonable guaranteed income a social right for all Canadians.

I quote, because it is short:

A program designed to ensure a reasonable guaranteed annual income, program which the Canadian Welfare Council regards as a social right for all Canadians, should be implemented "as soon as possible", the Council says in its statement.

Considering the economic difficulties encountered by the unemployed in receiving the benefits they are entitled to when they have no income because of the loss of their job and considering also the thousands of others who meagerly subsist on welfare, all of which are paralysed by a burdensome bureaucracy, which is too often more provocating than beneficent, it is well time that we establish a guaranteed income plan, not only for members of parliament, ministers, senators, judges and other officials of varied categories, but for each and every Canadian. This does not mean, as some simplistically suggest, that we must turn everything upside down or set up a printing press.

We have the institutions in place. It is a matter of adjusting values, a matter of accounting whereby the financial mechanism can reflect the real wealth taking into consideration the dignity of the human being, the value of things that can be produced in sufficient quantities to feed, lodge and clothe the population.

That is the solution—assuring each and every one of a guaranteed income. It is a social right of all Canadians. This natural right to live derived from birth must pass well ahead of regulations set by those handling money and credit.

Note that it is impossible to establish a just society on borrowed money, and it is in that whirl of concerns, of fear of tomorrow for most Canadians that we witnessed in the month of December 1974, a little before the Christmas and New Year recess, a debate on Bill C-44, an act to increase the salaries of members of the House of Commons and senators, and by some strange coincidence, those who most contributed to tying up the negotiations are those members who benefited at the right time from contributions from labour unions whose main role is to obtain salary increases for their membership.

Inevitably, in a climate of this kind, adding to that the strategic errors of the outset, the negotiations were bound to abort even if most participants seemed anxious to get the proposed increase.

Fortunately the strike could be avoided and replaced by a one month holiday at the same salary as before, a period of study and reflection on the validity of the claims.

During the same period, another group of politicians in Quebec were fighting as best as they could—and more often not so good at that—to get salary increases using arguments of all kinds and not always appropriate.

It is unfortunate to see that often uncontrolled pride, greed, political ambitions contribute to so many mistakes being made. In their determination to hold down to the end, they got a backpay retroactive to April 1, 1974, and a complete change of furniture at a total cost of $179,000 without taking too much in consideration a rarely practiced slogan—buy at home.

Some of our separatists will be able to muse sprawling comfortably in a lazy-boy made outside Quebec. Considering the good side of the deal, one could find for that team excellent cause for inspiration.

It would also be very interesting to see the various reactions of the participants if such debates took place during an election campaign. It would be really fascinating to hear a candidate promise his audience that, should he be elected, one of his main concerns would be to take every possible means to provide for himself a good salary increase. I often heard political organizers complain about the difficulty of getting their electors to attend meetings during an election campaign. I am surprised that nobody thought of putting on the "Trudeau Express" a pennant of an appropriate colour showing the desired salary: $45,000 per year. That would have aroused the people's curiosity and prompted many questions. Of course, a politician's behaviour is not the same before and after an election. According to the January 16, 1975 issue of Le Droit, Ontario ministers were considering a 5 per cent token reduction in salary, explaining in all seriousness that «the fight against inflation should begin somewhere». That is a fine example of the variety of reactions.

Let us return to the negotiations here in Ottawa. It should be pointed out that we did not have the benefit of a favourable publicity. The press itself has its quota of dreamers, ideologists and false-minded people. Those three ingredients, mixed in variable proportions, give a product which could hardly be called honest. One should not however come to rash conclusions, because a good number of editorials and other interesting newspaper items are written by people with a sense of duty and responsibility. It is unfortunate that there are not more of them.

I have here an article published in the newspaper Montréal Matin of October 4, 1974, under the very topical heading "Big Salaries".

I feel I should quote from it:

We often hear complaints about high salaries paid to company executives, judges and public figures. People are amazed at salaries paid company presidents, premiers, members of Parliament, but they accept quite naturally that huge amounts are paid to sports figures or performers.

Also union leaders are paid on a different scale than union members. We find that in some unions, the president earns $75,000 a year, the secretary-treasurer $55,000, and directors $35,000. I am thinking of the Steel Workers of America.

It is often seen that a good number of people are not always consistent in their ideas. They criticize salary increases for members of parliament, but they accept that millions of dollars go to the world of sports, such as hockey, boxing and wrestling. In some instances, people pay from $10 to $100 for a reserved seat.

A well-written article in the Vancouver Sun of January 18, 1975 summarized the situation with valid comparisons between salaries paid newspapermen, plumbers, teachers, including pay increases given members of the British Columbia legislature under an NDP administration. Our hon. friends from the New Democratic Party could no doubt take heed. The author concludes as follows, and I quote:

I have never read in an editorial "We newspapermen received a salary increase. What we got for ourselves we want for the others, and we urge the government to recommend to Parliament similar increases for our elected representatives".

Looking at doctors' and lawyers' incomes, we find variations pointing to strong tendencies to higher incomes. In our present society, too many people seem to be striving for the highest possible return for a minimum of effort, with the result that contestation creeps in.

I had the advantage to read in Le Droit of August 20, 1974 an interesting article concerning members' salaries by Mr. Normand Messier. After pointing out that many men of merit refuse to accept all the annoyances which more often than not members of parliament are facing daily for $26,000 a year, when they can get much more in another area, safe from any popular criticism, he continues and I quote these two paragraphs of his article as they contain very practical suggestions:

Members of Parliament should not vote themselves a salary increase just for the sake of it. They should be consistent with themselves and adopt inflexible guidelines concerning for instance conflicts of interest, abuse of power and any other tampering. Of course, not everyone does such things, but everyone can be occasionally tempted by «l'herbe tendre", as La Fontaine put it in his fable.

The best would be that members of parliament get salaries high enough so that they would be absolutely forbidden to have any other paid activities during their office. Offenders should be should be automatically dismissed.

I found these suggestions very practical. I already voted twice here in this House in 1963 and 1971 against salary increases for ministers, members, senators and judges. I recognize that there were few of us against it, but I was not the only one. You just have to check the official report of July 29, 1963, the result of the vote was 200 yeas and 10 nays.

In 1971 we got the report of the Beaupré Commission that seemed to be based on six basic principles: the representation, the qualification and the aleatory nature of the office due to the risk of lost elections. I noted particularly the fifth point as it pointed out that the office of a member of parliament was becoming more and more an all absorbing, difficult and ticklish occupation and it is true in some cases. It was also mentioned that it required tremendous moral strength and it is also true. Obviously, a member conscious of his responsibility is likely to exhaust his moral strength in trying to make Canadians accept the inflationary system we now have. The Canadian people are noting the various reactions of their representatives and we should not be surprised if some who used to be moderates begin to protest after losing patience.

At the present time, I realize that we have been through the conciliation stage, we are now discussing the reduction of the raise in terms of percentages. I hope that the best decision will be taken. Some Canadians already know that several hundred dollars will be distributed as gifts to athletic or philantropic organizations and some pitiful poverty cases. The surplus could always be used to advantage.

For example, I have in hand an article published in a Montreal paper some ten years ago. It deals with an important issue, since it shows how salary increases for policians are justified. It is quite pertinent. At that time, the author of that article was a reporter who wrote freely. A few will undoubtedly recognize him. I acknowledge his ability since he was a gifted writer. It is especially appropriate under the circumstances to quote a few excerpts of his article entitled: The cost of political life.

After having referred to the causes of ageing, according to the general belief, such as obesity, baldness, rhumatism, the condition of arteries, he concludes that a quadragenarian becomes conscious of his age when he reflects on the cost of living and I quote the following excerpt of his article:

● (2120)

Today, boys, it is fantastic how everything is going up.

Just imagine, this was written 10 years ago!

In some departments, it is quite understandable. The price increase is often justified by a better quality or by some degree of improvement in the item provided. Today's provincial minister, for instance, shows a real improvement over the comparable item in use around 1936. A Carrier Fortin clearly out-classes a William Tremblay.

Further on the author, after rferring to the changes that have taken place since then, mentioned:

In days of old, when a buyer was handing out a large sum of money (which would seem ludicrously low today) to purchase a Taschereau or a Duplessis, he was almost exclusively concerned with getting two qualities: colour and ability to withstand wear and tear. The colour was blue or red, according to individual taste, but the product had to last at least fifteen or twenty years. You see how things are changing. In recent years, we have not been so keen anymore about colour or even stalwartness. Provided the article is in good shape it does not matter whether you have to change it within two or five years;

Here, the author deals with something up-to-date honourable senators! And here is what he writes:

"However, there is a point on which I completely disagree, and it is when people insist on maintaining on the market products which are completely outmoded, which I suspect have never been useful, which, in any case, is not in the least justified, and which still benefits from the general increase; for example, the senator has just experienced a raise, is it not extraordinary? How possibly can such a measure be justified? Do they want us to believe that in 1963 the "do nothing" is worth more than the uselessness of 1935 and that idleness must cost more for the only reason that political life in general is on the increase? It is hard to believe.

"All the more that the purchase of senators is forced upon us. If we were still free to acquire them, if they were put on sale as remnants, as discount items, the senator might become fashionable as any old piece of Canadian furniture. The increasing price could then be justified. The decorative or antique aspect of things is well paid for.

It is a well known fact that nobody would consider spending a whole evening in an old chair of the French régime. It is too uncomfortable. But it is kept as an object of art, or for a sentimental reason. Likewise, the presence of the senator in politics has become out-of-date.

This is an article from a minister now sitting in the House of Commons. I thought he was staying longer in his seat because at that time he could write freely. Mr. Gérard Pelletier has signed the article I just quoted.

This is why I consider that circumstances lent themselves well to quote this article written many years ago but which fit in nicely tonight.

Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have had the opportunity to say what I thought of the situation.

Mr. Jacques Olivier (Longueuil): Madam Speaker, I had really no intention of participating in the debate on second reading of Bill C-44. However, after listening carefully to what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) had to say, I feel I must. Tomorrow, we shall read what he said. He tried to cast the blame on hon. members of this House who are in favour of an increase in their salaries by odiously pitting them against the poor.

Madam Speaker, I feel that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was hypocritical and unfair to other hon. members in his approach. The increase in salaries we are fighting for now, that we are claiming now, he will take it like every other member. He has just confessed to having already accepted five increases in salary since becoming a member of this House. Is that not hypocrisy? I wonder.

Madam Speaker, it is easy to play politics by hacking at the members of the House of Commons. It is much more difficult to speak in favour of the pay increase. It is easy to go back to one's riding and say: "I was against the salary increase". It is easy to say so, but members will go and cash their cheques notwithstanding. If instead of putting forward a motion to defer that increase by six months, the member had moved that those who do not want it should not be compelled to take it, I would have respected him. But he did not—

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), Madam Speaker, has not told us what his revenues are. He has not made us aware of his apprehensions when the increase in Old Age Security Pensions was forthcoming. He does not talk about such things of course. I believe somebody who has been a member of the House of Commons for 30 years is not honest in trying to depict other members of parliament, whether they are progressive conservatives, creditists or liberal members as twits.

Madam Speaker, I believe we are here to uphold the interests of 22 million Canadians. We are not here to indulge in partisanship. That member wants to show that we are trying to get richer at the expense of poor people. That is untrue, Madam Speaker. Let that member no longer be considered as a lamb. He will be the first to pocket the money.

Once that increase has been passed, I ask journalists to follow him and see if he will refuse it. He will not. He will be the first one to cash the check at his bank. Let us not worry about that. I think an end should be put to that hypocrisy. If we want to deal in politics, let us do so, but not at the expense of poor people, people who live on a pension, people who have to eke out a living. He does not know what poverty is.

If that man has ever represented unions, he did not represent them well, Madam Speaker, for when he says that at the outset the allowance was known, I can tell him that when I represented union members, whenever they were hired by a company, they accepted the salary which was paid to them, but six months later, if they were union members, they came to see us in order that we have an increase negotiated. If he did not do so, he was dishonest with the unions and the union members. He was dishonest with the workers if he did that, Madam Speaker.

I believe there are limits to picking on people, trying to influence the people's minds to please the press. Those people are playing politics at the expense of ordinary Canadians when they criticize salary increases. If he wants to be respected, let him introduce a motion to the effect that the increase will be paid on request only. If he turns it down, he will deserve respect. This is what I have to say.

In conclusion, in order that the problem be solved once and for all, I move, under Standing Order 6(5) (a) and (b), that the debate on second reading be concluded this evening beyond the ordinary hour of daily adjournment.

• (2130)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The Chair wishes to advise the hon. member that any motion must be in writing. If therefore the hon. member will put his motion in writing, the Chair will consider it.

I recognize the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt).

Mr. Olivier: I am sorry, Madam Speaker, I had put the question to the previous person in the Chair whether the motion had to be in writing. The answer, I do not question it, was no, since Standing Orders are involved. But I will comply with your requirements and put it in writing in a few moments.

[English]

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Madam Speaker, I will try to be brief. The hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) has already said most of the things I have to say.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please.

[Translation]

Order, please. I would remind the hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Olivier) that, pursuant to Standing Order 45, all motions shall be in writing.

[English]

Mr. Leggatt: Madam Speaker, my position on significant pay increases for members of parliament, a position which I have put forward on previous occasions, in the present parliament, both inside and outside this House, is that a significant increase in the salary and allowance paid to members of parliament is long overdue and well justified. In saying that, however, I disagree most vigorously with the hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Olivier) who challenged the honesty of a certain member of this chamber. Let me say that no member of this chamber is more honest and sincere than the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Leggatt: His views, which do not correspond to mine on this issue, are sincerely and honestly held, and the suggestion, in any way, shape or form, that his position is hypocritical, is most improper. His position is not hypocritical. I happen to disagree with him, but on good socialist grounds. Nevertheless, his opinions are honestly held.

Paying the members of this chamber properly and adequately is the government's responsibility. It has failed to discharge it. It is not good enough to say that we can resolve this question with ad hoc consultations carried on behind curtains, and then make this decision. The responsibility lies with the treasury benches of this House, and that responsibility has never been properly shouldered in terms of providing proper and adequate pay for the members of this House.

There is always a wrong time to bring this question forward; God knows, the government could not have picked a worse time than Christmas for bringing forward the initial bill. Its actions almost defy belief. Nevertheless, this debate has been useful and my party's position has been useful, because it has allowed us to explore the subject and debate the issue in this House. I think that is good. I repeat the position I have made known inside and outside the House. The significant pay increase is well merited and long overdue. I understand that my party will propose amendments in committee which will suggest appropriate levels of remuneration, considering our present inflation.

I object to being told that the salary of a member of this House is $18,000, plus $8,000, or a total of $26,000. That is nonsense. I receive a salary of $18,000, period.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Leggatt: Let us be perfectly clear. If a member does not spend his tax-free allowance for purposes for which it is intended, he should refund it to the treasury. If we had heeded the Beaupré commission's recommendations on providing vouchers for our expenses and on how our salaries should be determined, we should not now need to go through the present unnecessary and abrasive debate.

[The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin).]

You know, one cannot include a member's tax-free allowance as part of one's income. A member is not like a commission salesman, who can add his tax-free allowance to his other pay and classify it all as income. We make $18,000 per year, and raising our pay to $24,000 is long overdue. There is nothing improper in paying a member of parliament of this country $24,000 a year. Such a salary is appropriate, even in socialist terms. The socialist democratic parties of Europe were the first to provide substantial pay increases for members of parliament, so that being a member would no longer be a silver spoon job. It would no longer be a job for those with an independent income who could come to parliament when it suited them, and at other times play the part of the squire of the village. Such people held their seat in parliament with little effort. That sort of system is not democratic, and is not consistent with socialism.

We want a system in which all kinds of men can become members of parliament. It is the member's job to provide leadership, and his salary should be commensurate with his responsibilities. Unless we pay members adequately, we shall not evolve an egalitarian system. It has been said that members should not be the highest paid people in this country. I agree. Surely the figures which have been quoted show that the proposed increase for members is reasonable. We are not trying to make great jumps in the amount of salary we receive. And we do not support the philosophy of silver spoon members of parliament. For that reason we want members of parliament to be paid properly and adequately.

There is no point in comparing members' incomes with the incomes of members of professions, or of members of trade unions. The fact is that everybody else's grass always looks greener. It is natural for members of the public to think that members' salaries are being increased to high levels. It is natural for people to say, "That sounds like a lot of money." But consider the member's responsibilities and the time he spends on the job. If we convert to an hourly rate, at $24,000 we are probably being underpaid. However, by accepting $24,000, I think we do display leadership to the community in terms of the inflationary problems that we now face.

● (2140)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Leggatt: I think the position taken by the NDP has been useful. It has kept a full debate going in terms of this most important issue. We have seen changes up to this point from the original proposal of 50 per cent, the same 50 per cent that was recommended in 1971.

People sometimes forget that in 1971 this parliament voted for a 50 per cent increase, raising the previous allowance by 50 per cent. The proposal that again came forward at 50 per cent had a pretty good precedent. That is exactly what was voted for and passed by parliament in 1971. Nevertheless it is important that we have a full debate now.

I am hopeful that in committee there will be useful amendments. Frankly, I cannot quite understand why we should tie the allowance, if we are going to get it, to the industrial composite. Surely it should be a cost of living relationship and not an industrial wage relationship. However, those are details.

The fact is that the principle behind the bill, even without the suggested amendments, is for a substantial increase in the allowances for members of parliament not out of line with the industrial composite or the cost of living. Therefore the principle of the bill respecting a significant increase for members of parliament is proper. It is on the principle of the bill that we vote on second reading. I must say that, on principle, I intend to support this bill on second reading.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Olivier (Longueuil): Madam Speaker, may I ask whether you have received the written version of my motion?

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Olivier) has put a motion under Standing Order 6(5)(a). All those opposed to the motion will please rise.

An hon. Member: What is the motion?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): It is in French.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Olivier (Longueuil) moved, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 6(5)(a):

That the House continue sitting beyond the ordinary hour of daily adjournment in order to complete the second reading stage of Bill C-44, to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act, the Salaries Act and the Parliamentary Secretaries Act.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): All those opposed to the motion will please rise.

And more than ten members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): I declare the motion withdrawn.

Motion (Mr. Olivier) withdrawn.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Madam Speaker, I make no apology for rising at this late hour because I do not think this legislation should be hurried through with indecent haste. As a matter of fact I am surprised that a matter of such widespread importance should heve been dealt with in such a hurried manner today. The government has put up only one speaker in support of the measure, the Social Credit party two, and the Conservative party none at all.

The desire seems to be to hurry this legislation through as quickly as possible. If this were a bill to increase the salaries of postal workers by 50 per cent, there would be no end of speakers hurrying to get on the list to take part in the debate. Here we are trying to hurry through in one day a bill which, if not changed, will increase the salaries and expense allowances of members of parliament by some 50 per cent.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I suggest to those members who are anxious to express their views by frequent interruptions that the best way to do that would be to get into the debate. I agree with the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) who said a while ago that this is a matter which ought to be debated. It affects every member of parliament and all of our constituents who have to pay the shot. There ought to be a widespread discussion.

We are not going to agree. We do not agree in every party. There will be differences of opinion within every party. However, we ought to be able to discuss this in a mature and grown-up manner without hurling back and forth the rather childish accusations such as were made by the hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Olivier) just a few minutes ago.

Every one of us who has sat in this parliament or any other elected body has had to go through this periodic ritual dance of deciding what we are going to do about our own salaries. This is a very embarrassing position to be in, and I think all of us feel that it is a very sensitive question.

The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) quite correctly said this afternoon that this matter has to be dealt with by members of parliament because there is no one else who has the power to deal with it. However, I suggest we must find some better way to deal with this matter of how much we are going to be paid out of the public treasury.

I have watched this same situation arise periodically. You can almost write the senario. Those who are in favour of increasing members' salaries point out the large amount of work they have to do, the long hours they put in, and the interference with their family life, all of which is quite true. They point out that many professional people earn much higher salaries than do members of parliament.

On the other hand, those who question the advisability of raising the indemnities of elected members call attention to the fact that there are many groups in our society which are not as favourably placed as those of us who sit in the House of Commons. And there is always a tendency for this debate to end up in recriminations—those who support the measure to increase the indemnities are accused of having a hand in the cookie jar, of thinking only of themselves, and those who question the advisability of raising members' salaries are told they are being self-righteous, that they are really going to take the money but just want to make political hay by opposing a measure which may be politically unpopular. I think that is descending to a pretty low scale of debate.

I am prepared to recognize that members of parliament are sincere in the positions they take. I think there is a great deal of logic on both sides. One of the things we ought to have done long ago was to find some better way of deciding what should be the remuneration of elected members. Every time this debate comes up we say we shall find some better way next time. Of course we never do, and periodically another bill comes in raising members' salaries and we go through the same ritual dance again. We now have an opportunity to settle this question. I was hoping the government would address itself to the matter. After all, in all probability it will be three and a half years before another parliament takes over and this is a suitable time at which to set up alternative machinery.

A number of provinces have set up committees headed by their Chief Justices and these committees have brought back recommendations to the legislatures concerned, recommendations which have been adopted. We made a start in this House when the government appointed the Beaupré commission. That commission made some useful recommendations. The government disregarded some of the best of them, though, and so we are back to the old system with members finding themselves in the embarrassing and humiliating position of having to decide how much they are worth—having to set their own salaries and expense allowances.

I submit we ought now to address ourselves to the question of finding a better way. This is why I believe the NDP served a useful purpose in December by asking that this matter be held over, and why I believe we are serving a useful purpose now in not allowing this legislation to be hurried through today. I do not believe the government has addressed itself to the primary problem, namely, what type of mechanism can be established so that in the future we shall not have this task of deciding what remuneration members should get.

The proposals in this bill are far in excess of what we have a right to vote ourselves at this time.

An hon. Member: You are not worth any more.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The hon. member across the way says I am not worth any more. I would say this to him: he could not live on what he is worth if that is all they paid him!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): When we ran for office on July 8 last, every candidate who offered herself or himself for election knew exactly what the remuneration was, and none of us was forced to run. All of us were anxious to enter this chamber as members of parliament. We undertook to do this job, and we knew what we were to be paid for doing it. It is surely unbecoming that one of the first things we do when we get to the House is to boost our own salaries.

It is true that what we did not know on July 8, 1974, was what the cost of living was going to be during the thirtieth parliament. I think members would be perfectly justified in attaching a cost of living index to the indemnity which is paid to them. But I do not think it has to be attached to the expense allowances. As has been pointed out, our expenses have in some respects gone down because the government has assumed responsibility for many of the expenditures which formerly had to be met out of our own pockets. Our constituency offices, telephone privileges, extended travel benefits, have all helped to ease the burden of meeting the expenses of being a member of parliament. Nevertheless, I think members are justified in saying that with the cost of living rising year after year, as a result of the government's failure to cope with inflation, we are entitled to some increase each year to compensate for the rise in the cost of living.

The measure before us goes much farther. As it stands now, it proposes to raise the indemnity to some $27,000 a year, and to raise the expense allowance to some $12,000, making a total of $39,000. The statement made by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) before Christmas indicated that the government would in all probability, when the bill was in committee, recommend changes which would cut the increased salary to $24,000 with $10,600 for expenses. Attached to this would be an escalator clause which would carry on from there.

I submit it is going to be very difficult, not only for the government but for members of parliament to go up and down this country asking people to restrain their demands for increased salaries to keep pace with the rising cost of living when we ourselves have given ourselves an increase of 33-1/3 per cent and tied that income to the industrial composite index. It will be extremely difficult for the government to explain to old age pensioners, veterans allowance recipients, retired civil servants, and those who have retired from the armed forces or the RCMP how we can afford to be so generous with ourselves and why we are so niggardly with those for whom we are responsible.

I call it ten o'clock, Madam Speaker.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

ENERGY—OIL—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF POSSIBLE FRAUDULENT INCREASE IN IMPORT PRICES

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Madam Speaker, on Wednesday, March 19, I asked the following question:

Because of recent reports that authorities in the United States are investigating what may have been widespread actions by certain companies there to improperly and fraudulently increase the prices at which they imported oil into that country, will the minister cause investigations to be carried out here, to see whether there may have been similar improper schemes carried out in connection with the importation of oil into Canada?

In his reply the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) made reference to an examination of the books of the importing companies by departmental auditors, outside auditing firms and the Auditor General. In view of what press reports suggest was the scope of alleged improper pricing schemes for importing oil into the United States which are being investigated in that country, I thought the Canadian public would want to have more complete information than this from the government about what it has done, and is doing, to ensure that similar schemes have not been in existence here.

The federal government established a policy that there would be a single national price, one lower than the world price, for petroleum products everywhere in Canada. This included the eastern part of the country which is still dependent on imported oil. To do this the government has been paying hundreds of millions of dollars in public funds to the oil importing companies to compensate them, in effect, for the difference between the price they say they are paying to the oil importing countries and the lower national price they are allowed to charge here.

Madam Speaker, the oil industry all over the world is organized on a multinational basis. Those multinational companies that dominate the oil industry in the United States are the same ones that dominate the industry here, or at least they control the firms that dominate our oil industry.

In light of these two factors, whatever auditing program the government had been carrying out prior to the disclosure of the American investigations, once their existence had become public one would have thought that the government would have wanted to contact the American authorities to see if any information they had obtained so far might be of significance in Canada. One would have thought the government would have taken a close look at its own auditing program to make certain it was adequate in light of the American investigations. Has the government done this? Has it been in touch with the American authorities to see if any information they have obtained might be relevant to the Canadian situation? The press reports of the American investigation indicate hundreds of customs inspectors are checking over customs invoices in dozens of American ports. How many personnel in comparison have been carrying out a Canadian program? I understand the numbers involved here are relatively few.

How complete, how thorough, how frequent has this Canadian government audit been? Have government auditors looked only at a small sample of the customs invoices of importing companies and their other books and records, or has it been a very complete and thorough investigation similar to that now apparently being carried out in the United States?

The press recently reported that because of a loophole in the legislation authorizing our oil compensation program, companies importing oil from the Middle East are entitled to compensation which is not only higher than that paid for imports from Venezuela but is even higher than the difference in price between Venezuelan and Middle Eastern oil. In other words, even though Middle Eastern oil costs only 35 cents per barrel more to import to Montreal than Venezuelan oil, the government pays importers of Middle Eastern crude $1.35 per barrel more than importers of Venezuelan crude.

According to a report in the Globe and Mail, during the past year the proportion of oil reported as being imported from Venezuela has dropped from 60 per cent to 40 per cent and the proportion reported as being imported from the Middle East has risen from 40 per cent to 60 per cent. Is all this oil supposedly imported from the Middle East actually from there? What assurance can the government give that there are no unscrupulous importers bringing in oil which is actually from Venezuela but who are claiming the higher $1.35 per barrel compensation on the basis that the oil is from the Middle East?

I raised my question during the question period and I am raising it again during this adjournment debate so the government will have the opportunity to give the Canadian people the full assurances I think they want, that their interests are being fully protected and that there are no unscrupulous elements in the oil industry, and in particular, in the oil importing community who are unjustly profiting at their expense in this matter through being in receipt of public funds to which they are not properly entitled.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): In replying to the question by the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), Madam Speaker, I want to assure him that the government has a very extensive system of auditing the records of companies receiving funds under the compensation program which provides a one-price system for crude oil in this country. This system of auditing the books, records and invoices of the companies has been approved by the Auditor General.

Each Canadian claimant of compensation has to declare that his books are subject to examination and that he will repay any amount to which he is not entitled. The auditing program involves an examination of the documentation which includes customs B-3 and M-1 invoices, ships manifests, bills of lading and suppliers' invoices. There is also a check of voyage times, comparative quality of loading and discharged crude, the amounts requested and discharged. All of these examinations are performed first by the shareholders' auditors, by the Energy Supplies Allocation Board which now operates the compensation program, by the Audit Services Bureau, and by the Auditor General's office.

This procedure, as I mentioned earlier, was approved by the Auditor General in his 1974 report at pages 71 and 72. I believe we do have an effective system for auditing and checking the records of those receiving compensation under this program.

AIR TRANSPORT—CRASH OF DC3 AT RIMOUSKI—REPORT ALLEGING NON-COMPLIANCE WITH REGULATIONS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Madam Speaker, with regard to the MOT Report on an aircraft accident involving a DC3 at Rimouski, Quebec, on May 24, 1973, the MOT just recently released this document covering the fatal crash which took four lives. This report is a matter of grave concern and is certainly very damaging in so far as the Ministry of Transport is concerned. In its findings it is stated:

> The pilot-in-command did not follow the approved company procedures during the operation.
> The pilot-in-command descended below the authorized instrument approach minimum altitude at Rimouski.
>
> The supernumerary pilot (third pilot, occupying the copilot's seat), was not qualified on the aircraft type.
>
> The carrier did not comply with the Ministry of Transport standards in pilot training, dispatch, flight watch, and operational control as specified in Air Navigation Order VII, No. 2.

It goes on to state:

The Ministry of Transport had been aware of the carrier's non-compliance for some time but had not effectively enforced the provisions of ANO VII, No. 2.

I wonder how many other carriers in Canada are being allowed to operate in this manner? I hope the parliamentary secretary can inform the House what corrective measures the Ministry of Transport has taken since this report was released. The document goes on to state:

The carrier's main base is at Gaspé, Quebec, where it has facilities for dispatch and flight watch. These facilities include weather teletype, telex, telephone and a company radio communications system. The company has an operations manual which had recently been updated and met most of the requirements listed in ANO VII, No. 2. The company procedures in the manual are in French only, and not all company employees, including the pilot of the accident flight, were conversant with that language.

● (2210)

I am sure this aircraft did not come from the Douglas Aircraft Company with technical documents in the French language. The universal language for control towers and so on is the English language. The document states further that in areas of crew training, checking and flight dispatch, the carrier did not operate in accordance with MOT standards. It goes on to state:

Ministry of Transport air carrier base inspection reports, in June 1972 and October 1972, revealed similar operational deficiencies. Flight crew training was irregular and records were scattered, contradictory or non-existent.

In respect of the crew it states that the pilot had not received proper training and checking, before he was assigned as captain, in the following: ground training on the aircraft and on company procedures; flight training on the DC aircraft, and proficiency check. The report then states that the pilot had received his last medical on April 27, 1973, and had failed the colour plate test. It was shown that he was unfit for a commercial licence. I do not understand how this man was able to retain his licence. I hope the parliamentary secretary can explain that this evening. From my preliminary studies I find that MOT inspectors had no authority in the field and that Ottawa must make decisions. This causes long delays. Perhaps this is part of the trouble in respect of this accident.

I also raised the matter of the operation of the control tower and other difficulties before the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence on March 18. At that time Deputy Chief of the Defence Staff, Lieutenant General W. K. Carr, informed me that there are many pilots in northern Quebec who are unilingual French. I find this somewhat amazing. If such a pilot had to make an emergency landing in the United States or in Ontario, where there are no bilingual control tower operators, I do not know what would happen to that plane or that pilot if trouble arose.

Recently Bill C-226 presented by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax (Mr. Forrestall) passed second reading in the House and is to be referred to the committee. This bill should be brought up in the committee as soon as possible. The purpose of the bill is to establish a permanent and impartial commission of inquiry to investigate transport accidents within federal jurisdiction. It is suggested that many of these transport accidents which perhaps result in loss of life are investigated by the federal body. In other words MOT investigates itself, and this is not proper. In other words the accident is investigated by those responsible for making and enforcing the rules under which the transport operated when the accident occurred. There is an obvious conflict of interest in each case. Therefore it is important that this bill be discussed in the committee as soon as possible and that an independent commission be instituted. I believe it was mentioned in the Speech from the Throne at the opening of parliament that such a group would be formed.

[Mr. McKenzie.]

A different angle to this matter is brought up in the "Guidelines for Implementation of Air Canada's Corporate Policy on Bilingualism". We find the following statement in this document:

Except in operating and technical communication areas, such as air/ground communications, maintenance flight operations, interline reservations, and other areas where use of languages other than English is prohibited by regulatory authority, the languages of work within the company to be English and French.

So what they are saying here is that for pilots the main language should be English, and that in the control towers only English should be spoken. Here we have a situation where pilots speaking only one language, namely, French, are obtaining licences. There is a great area of conflict here and I hope the parliamentary secretary can give us some explanation of the situation and can tell us what corrective measures will be taken.

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am sure the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) recognizes full well that the Department of Transport considers investigations of air accidents to be a very serious matter and it has a very competent group of experts working in that general area. I think that the report we are debating here now is a pretty good indication of that fact.

The report of the crash referred to by the hon. member did state that the ministry had not effectively enforced the regulations, and in essence this is an accurate statement. However, by the same token, it does not really indicate the extent to which the ministry had gone in attempting to have the operator comply with the regulations.

In the fall of 1972 our Quebec regional office became aware of irregularities in the operating procedures of Air Gaspé and, as a result, arranged a series of on-site inspections by inspectors from that office. Subsequently it was determined that there had been numerous changes of key operating personnel without notification to the ministry, which was in contravention of the company's operating certificates. As well as frequent inspections of Air Gaspé's operations by the ministry, there were numerous exchanges of correspondence in an attempt to improve what was considered to be a borderline operation.

Improvements were made and operations did improve. However, at the same time unfortunately there was also considerable back-sliding. An alternative to the action taken by the Quebec regional office would have been to suspend operations. Unfortunately, events overtook the efforts of the Quebec inspection staff in that respect, and Air Gaspé was involved in a fatal accident with their DC3 aircraft on May 24, 1974.

Following the accident, through stronger intervention in the affairs of Air Gaspé, as the hon. member is probably aware, the company was sold and taken over by Quebec Air. There were problems initially in the takeover and following it, but they were eventually resolved.

With respect to the technical documents on board this aircraft, the hon. member said they were all in French and the crew could only speak English. The actual fact is that flight operation documents were in English and the crew, of course, was also English speaking. The documents referred to are documents not related to flying.

In closing I should like to speak briefly on another comment made by the hon. member. I do not think he meant to leave the wrong impression, but he stated on March 17, and again today, that the report had just been released. It is my understanding from facts given to me by the staff of the MOT that the accident report was released at the end of July, 1974, which is some months ago.

AIRPORTS—REQUEST FOR DECISION TO CONSTRUCT

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, on the day I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) my question regarding the long delayed up-grading of the Charlottetown airport, the House had heard expressions of disapproval with regard to proceeding with the controversial Pickering airport. I then asked the minister if he would turn his attention to Prince Edward Island where a new airport is both required and desired. This is by no means the first time that I have raised with the present minister, and indeed with his predecessors, the urgency of the situation in Charlottetown, the cradle of confederation.

On April 28 Air Canada will inaugurate the service between Charlottetown and Ottawa and next to Toronto, and I trust that my fellow islander will be on that inaugural flight, just as I am looking forward to being on it.

For a good many years we have had Eastern Provincial Airways giving us a fast direct service to Montreal, and of course to cities in Atlantic Canada. EPA, of course, is very highly regarded in PEI for its leadership in this field.

● (2220)

The airlines are doing their part, and EPA especially deserves commendation for its leadership in bringing us into the jet age. But the facilities at the airport are not keeping abreast of advances made by the airlines and are not keeping pace with increases in the numbers of people travelling to Prince Edward Island. Indeed the number of tourists coming to Prince Edward Island is far in excess of the total population of the province, and in the summertime about ten to one. Needless to say, we welcome these tourists and congratulate them for their perception in choosing our province as a place for recreation and vacation.

But where I depart from this feeling of content and satisfaction, and where I feel grave concern, is in reference to the continuing inadequacy of the airport facilities, especially the passenger terminal building. We do not have sufficient seating space for passengers, and it is quite deplorable to have people forced to stand in cramped quarters at the arrival and departure of our crowded jet aircraft from various parts of the nation, and indeed from the United States. One does not have to be an engineer, an architect or an expert to know that any terminal which has fewer seats than any one of the aircraft servicing that terminal is obviously inadequate, and because tourism is a major interest and economic factor in Prince Edward Island it is of great importance to have people enter and depart from our province in reasonable comfort.

What is needed is a swift upgrading of the plans and priorities for the Charlottetown airport. I have learned that yet another temporary addition is to be erected for this summer. What we need is not another little leanto but a permanent structure of ample size, and with facilities and furnishings to keep abreast of our growing travel flow. We need more runway space and upgraded equipment in other ways so that the whole of the airport will be brought into the jet age.

The minister's colleague, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson), is seeking to inaugurate and strengthen policies to aid the Atlantic region. Here is an opportunity to help the Atlantic provinces to help themselves. To buttress our island tourist industry and to provide our island people with decent transportation services is a proper leadership role for the Dominion government, and I invite the government, through the minister, to take on such a role. I look forward with the greatest pleasure to hearing the parliamentary secretary announce in glowing terms what we are going to get in the weeks and months ahead.

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) is always a very eloquent spokesman on behalf of the needs of his province, and certainly tonight is no exception. I think the hon. member will be pleased to hear what I have to say although he may not be pleased with the rate at which some of these things will take place.

I think he will certainly admit that the Ministry of Transport officials and the federal government have been as interested as he is in providing the best possible airport facilities for all airports across the country, and certainly Charlottetown is one of those centres. As the hon. member points out, there have undoubtedly been very increased demands made on the airport space in Prince Edward Island with the growth and development of the tourist trade. The tourist season particularly creates real pressure on those facilities. For this very reason consultations with provincial authorities, air carriers and other users of the Charlottetown airport have been going on for several years with a view to improving as quickly as possible the air entrance into Prince Edward Island. I think a good and a very close relationship and exchange of information have gone on in that respect and have resulted in the decision to improve or replace the present facilities rather than relocate the airport at another site.

Our Atlantic regional officials at Moncton established a master planning project team which was charged with developing immediate and long-term-future requirements to meet aircraft movement and passenger traffic forecasts. The project team was to identify requirements for air terminal facilities, cargo facilities, aprons, runways, taxiways, maintenance facilities, and so on.

The completed master plan was recently reviewed at the headquarters level and the technical recommendations arising from this plan have been generally agreed. It is expected that an announcement of a detailed development plan will be possible in the very near future. Until such a detailed announcement is made I can only state that our present intentions are for the resurfacing of the existing runway, the erection of a new terminal building at a new location on the present airport grounds, the replacement of the present temporary air traffic control tower, and the eventual construction of a cross-wind runway. Perhaps the improvement or replacement of other related facilities, the nature of which I do not know, will follow in time. In essence the hon. member will be pleased to know of the planned developments under way for Charlottetown airport.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.28 p.m.

SUGGESTION MINISTER REPORT ON MEASURES TO DEAL WITH STRIKES AND WORK STOPPAGES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I request the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on an urgent matter, namely the production lost to Canada due to strikes and work stoppages.

The Prime Minister himself stated at the first ministers conference this morning that Canada has the second worst record in the world for production days lost due to work stoppages and strikes.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale):

That the Minister of Labour be instructed to report back to the House within a week what steps his department is taking to rectify this serious situation which is crippling the economy, especially at a time when the country is plagued with rising unemployment and low economic production.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is put forward under the terms of Standing Order 43 and cannot be presented without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NATIONAL SECURITY

PROPOSAL TO ESTABLISH PARLIAMENTARY SCRUTINY AND CONTROL OF EXPENDITURES ON SECURITY PROGRAMS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to propose a motion which is self-explanatory. I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo:

That this House direct the various House leaders to proceed immediately to establish procedures which will introduce an adequate form of parliamentary scrutiny and control of government expenditures on security programs conducted by Canada or to which Canada is a party in this country or abroad.

Mr. Baldwin: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The motion is presented under the terms of Standing Order 43; there must be unanimous consent before it can be put. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

MULTICULTURALISM

APPEAL FOR FUNDS BY PORTUGUESE ORGANIZATION USING UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ENVELOPES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I request leave to propose a motion under the terms of Standing Order 43 arising from the recent circulation of a four-page appeal for funds in the Portuguese language on behalf of a presumably reputable charitable organization in envelopes of the Unemployment Insurance Commission Canada and requesting a reply in similar envelopes furnished to the recipients. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka:

That the House request the Minister of Manpower and Immigration to make a statement outlining whether the government is prepared to extend such benevolent assistance to other ethnic groups and whether this indicates a new government venture in the field of multiculturalism.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is presented under Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent to its being put?

Some hon. Members: No.

AGRICULTURE

EFFECT OF STRIKE OF LONGSHOREMEN ON FEED GRAIN SUPPLIES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister.

In view of the difficulties now being inflicted upon Quebec producers by the protracted strike, especially in the ports of Trois-Rivières and Quebec City, can the Acting Prime Minister tell us what measures the government intends to take to restore normal traffic in those ports so that the producers can get the feed they need for their cattle?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): This matter is under very active consideration by the government. There was a meeting this morning directed particularly to this very serious issue. At the present time, however, the government thinks it would be inadvisable to take immediate action though I can assure the hon. member that we understand the seriousness of the problem.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

I should also like to ask the Acting Prime Minister if he intends to comply with the recommendation made by the producers to the effect that, costs having increased considerably, the government should grant a subsidy to compensate them for the increase in costs they will have to assume under the circumstances?

[English]

Mr. Sharp: I am not quite sure of the relationship between this supplementary and the original question. If it relates to the possibility that there may be extra costs arising out of interference with the movement of the commodity, that is one question, but if its scope is of a more general nature I should like to have it amplified so that I could give a more satisfactory answer.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I have another supplementary.

Because of the importance of the matter, can the minister assure the House that, at the latest tomorrow, he will be able to make a statement which, I trust, will bring a solution to Quebec producers' problem?

[English]

Mr. Sharp: I cannot give that undertaking, though I can give an assurance that the matter is under the most active consideration.

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO IMPROVE SHIPPING CONDITIONS

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the fact there is a desperate shortage of feed grain on Quebec farms and that approximately only one third of the crop year remains while some areas in Western Canada are still on a three-bushel quota, and the Minister of Agriculture failed to answer my question yesterday—

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Towers: —concerning mismanagement of grain shipments to Bangla Desh, would the government instruct the Standing Committee on Agriculture to make recommendations to parliament to resolve the continuing disastrous dilemma relating to the movement of grain?

● (1410)

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that would be the most effective way of dealing with the problem.

Mr. Towers: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The government does not seem to realize the dilemma in which the farmers find themselves. In view of the fact that the western grain producers have lost $50 million this crop year owing to the inaction of this government, what proposal does the government intend to make if they are not going to accept the proposal that I have made?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, when the government has something to announce in this regard it will do so. I do not think it would be appropriate or would help very much to follow the suggestion of the hon. member.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

SUGGESTED MEASURES TO AID JOB CREATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the effects of a budget that is brought in some time during the month of May—which means it will probably be nearer to June than April—will take some time to work their way through the economy, particularly in terms of job creation, could the minister inform the House whether the government has any intention of taking action in the budget that is brought in with regard to any of the four programs that I will specifically name to the Acting Prime Minister, namely the summer student employment program, the winter capital projects fund, the federal-provincial employment loans program and the railway relocation program, all of which could be implemented before the budget in May? Does the government plan to take any kind of action in these areas?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that these questions should be directed to the respective ministers. I know that my hon. friend the Minister of Manpower and Immigration may want to deal with the first of these questions. The Minister of Transport is not here today, but perhaps the question could be taken as notice.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in response to the first part of the question, a decision has been taken to augment the student summer employment funding for this year to the extent of $13.4 million. The details of the allocation of this $13.4 million within the various programs will be very shortly announced to all members of the House and will include a substantial amount for the Opportunities for Youth program.

CONTINGENCY PLANS TO INCREASE HOUSING STARTS—DATE OF IMPLEMENTATION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In the absence of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs who is responsible for housing may I put this question to the Acting Prime Minister. Considering that just before Christmas the director of CMHC, Mr. Teron, said that there were certain contingency plans that the government would implement should housing starts fall below the anticipated rate of 200,000 a year, and in view of the fact that the current rate, according to figures released yesterday, stands at only 138,000 units, would the Acting Prime Minister inform the House whether the government intends to put forward these contingency plans that Mr. Teron referred to?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take notice of this question and give an adequate answer.

MANPOWER

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF NAMES OF MEMBERS OF ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Since the minister has decided that advisory committees in the various sectors of work have been instructed to give priority to projects submitted by youths within the Opportunity for Youth Program, and since it is impossible to get from the officials of the minister's office the names of those committee members, can I ask him whether he is prepared to authorize his employees to provide the list of the members of a committee for a given region, upon request from an MP?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Very definitely, Mr. Speaker; I see no reason at all. In fact, I think each member of the House should have a list of the members of management area advisory committees, which are appointed in the main by the members themselves. If there is any question about this I will issue instructions forthwith to make the information available.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

In view of the favourable attitude and the positive answer of the minister, can I ask him to give immediate instruction to the employees of his office so that they effectively respond along the lines of the answer he has just given?

[English]

Mr. Andras: I think that is exactly what I have just said, Mr. Speaker.

HOUSING

POSSIBILITY OF MAINTAINING GOVERNMENT OBJECTIVE FOR STARTS—SUGGESTED DEDUCTIBILITY OF MORTGAGE PAYMENTS AND PROPERTY TAXES FROM INCOME TAX

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer again to the drastic decline in housing starts in the first quarter of 1975, down 54 per cent for the month of March alone. Will the Acting Prime Minister say if the government is still confident it can reach its minimum target of 210,000 starts, and will that objective be maintained in the preparation of the new budget?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the House will have noticed that yesterday when the Minister of Finance announced he was bringing in a budget this was one of the problems to which he referred, and which seemed to make it necessary to take additional measures.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, now that the Minister of Finance has recognized the severity of the economic situation with his promise to bring in a budget, is the government actively considering a budgetary measure that would make a proportion of mortgage payments and property taxes deductible for income tax purposes?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, as a former Minister of Finance I never did forecast what would be in a budget. I always looked upon such matters as confidential, but I will pass the suggestion along to the Minister of Finance.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST THAT MINISTER ATTEND LAW OF THE SEA CONFERENCE AND STRENGTHEN NEGOTIATING TEAM

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, in view of the possibility that the 200-mile economic zone concept may not be translated into agreed treaty language at the Law of the Sea Conference, while conversely the conference cannot succeed on any basis other than a convention founded on a concept of the economic zone being managed by the coastal state, I should like to ask whether it is the intention of the Secretary of State for External Affairs to go to the conference along with the Minister of State for Fisheries and the Minister of the Environment, for the balance of the conference in order to strengthen the hardworking Canadian team presently negotiating there on our behalf?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the hon. member back from the Law of the Sea Conference. I propose to address that conference later on. In the meantime my colleague, the Minister of the Environment, will be present, as will the Minister of State for Fisheries at a later point, so the delegation will be supported ministerially in the way I have described.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the minister for his remarks in welcoming me back to the House from the conference. I would point out that at the conference the USSR—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a supplementary question will he put it directly, please.

Mr. Crouse: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the strength of the negotiating teams of the USSR, the United States and other world powers at the conference, will the minister consider sending the Deputy Minister of External Affairs or a Deputy Minister of Fisheries or the Environment in order to equalize in strength the debating teams which other countries have placed in charge of their affairs at the conference?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to consider any worthwhile suggestion, but I am sure that my hon. friend would agree that the deputy head of our delegation, Ambassador Beasley, is one of the most competent personalities in the field of the law of the sea, and probably there is no other person at that level in the federal service of Canada with the same competence and experience. I have full confidence in his ability to represent Canada at the conference, but I will take into account the views of the hon. member in respect of any steps that can be taken to support his work.

AGRICULTURE

POTATOES—POSSIBILITY OF ALTERATIONS IN SUPPORT PAYMENT PROGRAM

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture, but in his absence perhaps I might address it to the acting minister who might take it as notice, if he so wishes. Is the minister in a position to state what alterations, if any, are being made to the program of support payments to potato growers in the Atlantic provinces? I am especially concerned, as are the growers, about the limitation of two carloads per grower. I am also concerned about the situation in respect of the growers, especially certified seed growers, who have sold all of their potatoes before April 1.

● (1420)

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Acting Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture today is meeting with the ministers of agriculture from all across Canada. The topic is the stabilization of agricultural prices. This meeting includes all the ministers of agriculture, with the exception of the minister from Newfoundland, who could not get here because of a snow storm. I should say it may be of interest to the hon. member to know that the Minister of Agriculture for Prince Edward Island appointed a man by the name of Mr. Faulkner to be the co-ordinator with the federal Department of Agriculture. I shall take the member's other question as notice.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

TRANSFER OF PERSONNEL FROM WINNIPEG BASE—LOCATION OF AIR COMMAND HEADQUARTERS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. Over the past few months up to 125 servicemen have been transferred from the Canadian Forces base at Winnipeg to other bases in Canada. Is it the intention of the minister to reduce the Winnipeg base to a token force?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, it is four months since the minister announced the new air command would be located in western Canada. Will the minister be placing the air command in Winnipeg to partially make up for the transfer of these 125 men which has had an adverse effect on the economy of Manitoba?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, I have already advised the House that I will be receiving a recommendation from the chief of the defence staff and when I have that I will make an announcement.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

POSSIBILITY OF FURTHER GRAIN HANDLERS' STRIKE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that it will be six months tomorrow since Bill C-12, the grain handlers strike bill, was passed by this House ordering grain handlers back to work, is the minister fully aware of the imminent possibility of a further grain handlers strike because neither the union nor management have signed an agreement pursuant to that order.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): No, I am not aware and I hope that can be avoided, Mr. Speaker.

REQUEST FOR EXPEDITING OF BAYDA COMMISSION REPORT

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Before the Easter recess the minister corrected an answer he gave while I was in the House but the correction was made after I left the House. He said that the Bayda commission report would not be received until possibly this summer. In view of the unfortunate circumstances which have developed on the west coast again, will the minister and the government now take steps to give all the necessary assistance to this commission to ensure that the report and recommendation will come forward much before next summer and in fact within the next few weeks.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member will appreciate that it is a very complex question Mr. Justice Bayda is looking into. This is the time frame he has set. We are giving him all the back-up he requests and are prepared to continue to do that. However, I will be in contact with him and indicate to him that if he can shorten the time frame with additional assistance from us we will be prepared to offer it.

Mr. Speaker: A final supplementary by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that Mr. Justice Bayda was quoted in the press when appointed as saying that he anticipated the study would take not more than six months, possibly only three months, will the government take all the steps possible to make sure that he has all the support necessary in order to get this report and recommendation in immediately.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I think I have already indicated to the hon. member that we are giving all the support he requests and will continue to do that. We cannot do more than that. If he wants additional help he has merely to ask for it.

IMMIGRATION

ASSISTANCE TO COLOMBIANS TO BECOME LANDED IMMIGRANTS—REQUEST FOR SIMILAR TREATMENT OF OTHER GROUPS

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of his fine decision the other day—

An hon. Member: No propaganda.

Mr. Caccia: —to have Colombian textile workers presently in Canada leave the country so that they may apply for permanent residence in Canada through our immigration office in Bogota where apparently their applications would be dealt with promptly and where assisted passage loans would be provided for their return, would the minister inform the House whether workers from other countries presently in Canada under circumstances which are similar to those of the Colombian workers will be granted an equal opportunity?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I guess my answer briefly is yes, with the emphasis on the provision that the circumstances of other such workers would be in fact similar to those of the Colombians because persons in Canada with employment visas who are here as visitors have to go outside the country to apply for landed immigrant status, as the hon. member knows. Their applications would be dealt with as promptly as possible, again if the circumstances are similar to those of the Colombians.

An hon. Member: If that is your short answer, what would be a long one?

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

INQUEST INTO CRASH OF PANARCTIC PLANE—ALLEGED INSTRUCTIONS BY COMPANY TO EMPLOYEES NOT TO TESTIFY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. On Monday, April 7 I asked a question concerning the PanArctic plane crash at Rae Point, Northwest Territories, involving the loss of 32 lives, to which the minister answered that the company had at no time instructed its employees not to attend and testify at the inquest. A statement in this morning's Globe and Mail, attributed to the Minister of Transport, indicates that the company has in fact restricted its employees from appearing before the inquiry. In view of this, can the minister clarify the existing contradiction, and will his department support the Department of Transport should it decide to change the inquest into a public inquiry?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker I, too, noticed the article this morning, followed it up and made further inquiries. It is my understanding that my original statement was correct, that the management of PanArctic had not suggested or urged any employees not to appear. However, they did make available outside counsel to the employees. I gather that the employees have spoken to counsel, have taken their advice, whatever it may have been, and acted upon it. However, so far as the inquiry is concerned, that is the decision of my colleague, the Minister of Transport. Certainly, I would support any action he might wish to take.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

CORPORATION'S VIEW OF ITS OBLIGATION IN PRODUCING PROGRAMS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): I have a question for the Secretary of State who answers for the CBC. In replying to all those who have written to the CBC protesting against the offensiveness of some of their drama presentations, the CBC in their "hurt" letter state that they are obliged to produce programs for all ages, all tastes and all interests. Does this obligation include dispensing material that is of interest to pornographers, the foul mouthed and other hooligans in our society?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Moose Jaw.

An hon. Member: The answer was yes.

Oral Questions

INDUSTRY

SHIPBUILDING SUBSIDIES—SUGGESTED HOLDBACK OF GRANTS TO MARINE INDUSTRIES

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. In light of the statement by the Minister of Justice on March 21, 1975 in the House, is the Acting Prime Minister prepared to announce to the House the government's position with respect to the holdback of grants authorized to Marine Industries Ltd. under the shipbuilding program?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to make a statement at this time. The general problem remains the same, that we must get the dredging done. There is a very serious problem involved, since practically all the companies that do dredging in this country are under charge. I think the hon. member would agree with me that we should not hold up dredging for that reason. We must find a way of getting the necessary work done.

FISHERIES

DATE OF ANNOUNCEMENT OF ASSISTANCE PROGRAM FOR EAST COAST FISHERMEN

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Fisheries. In view of serious problems facing the east coast fishing industry, and in view of the fact that the government promised certain programs of assistance in the throne speech, would the minister tell the House when we can expect an announcement from him as to what long term and mid-term assistance would be available?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, I assume the hon. member is referring to the income supplement program. I would tell him that we are still working on this. I believe we are now in a position to put firm proposals to my colleagues in the next couple of months. I would like to say, however, that the consultation meetings we have had with the ministers of fisheries of the Atlantic area, including one which took place yesterday, leads me to believe that there was wisdom in delaying until such time as we have an idea of the exact condition of the fishery in the years to come.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON MEASURES TO MAINTAIN PRESENT LEVEL OF FORCE IN VIEW OF EROSION OF VALUE OF DOLLAR

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. In light of responses to written questions dealing with the value of the dollar now being placed in the hands of his department for national defence purposes, and in light of the clear indication of the erosion of the value of the dollars which he has available to him and the clear indication that his department is slipping very substantially behind in terms of its purchasing power in relation to past years, I would ask if he can advise the House whether he has any plans, and if so, what his plans are, to upgrade this purchasing power in order to restore his department to a level comparable with past years, and more important, what plans he specifically has to maintain the force at its present level.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member will agree, the purchasing power of all departments has been reduced by the erosion in the value of the dollar, but in the case of National Defence the best answer is that this year the budget is up by more than 11 per cent and next year, 1975-76, it will be up by approximately the same amount.

Mr. Forrestall: What the minister is indicating is, of course, a non-answer. I wonder if he would indicate to the House in some clear and precise terms whether the Department of National Defence is going behind at a rate of some 6 per cent to 8 per cent annually, and in light of that, where does he plan to take this cutback, from personnel or from capital programs?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, the personnel force has been reduced to approximately 78,500, down from the 83,000 of a short time ago, and that has effected a saving which has enabled us to maintain the operational expenditures and also to maintain and to increase our expenditures for capital equipment.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ALLEGED REDUCTION IN CAPITAL SPENDING BY UNITED STATES AFFILIATES

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Acting Prime Minister. Is he aware that Canadian affiliates of United States owned companies are making dramatic cutbacks in their capital spending programs for 1975 and that William Chung of the United States commerce department's international division has confirmed in a press interview that in constant dollars Canadian affiliate investment spending is on a decline, in sharp contrast to that stated in Statistics Canada?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, but I will check the accuracy of the report.

MANPOWER

ALLEGED REDUCTION IN CAPITAL SPENDING BY UNITED STATES AFFILIATES BECAUSE OF HIGH LABOUR COSTS

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Would he indicate if he has had any indication from affiliates of American concerns in Canada that they may have to lessen their capital expenditures in the current year in Canada due to high labour costs relative to world labour costs in this country?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, to the best of my knowledge, no, I have not had such specific representations.

Will the amendments to the Criminal Code with regard to rape incorporate suggestions of the advisory council on the status of women about relevancy of evidence and protection for the complainant, and when can we expect these amendments which the minister promised some time last summer?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the proposed amendments in regard to rape, which I think are designed to accomplish a good number of things which the advisory council was asking for and was interested in will be in the Criminal Code amendments which I expect to present for first reading before the end of June.

PUBLIC SERVICE

CONCILIATION BOARD REPORT ON LETTER CARRIERS—REQUEST FOR ACCEPTANCE BY GOVERNMENT

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister in the absence of the President of the Treasury Board. Now that the conciliation board has brought down wage recommendations which appear to be a reasonable compromise in connection with the negotiations between the Letter Carriers' Union of Canada and the government, will the Acting Prime Minister give assurance that the government will indicate its approval of these terms with sufficient speed in order to avoid a crippling strike in this important area of communications?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Acting President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the findings of the conciliation board were far from unanimous. In fact, there were three separate recommendations, so we do not have, in a sense, the common acceptance of the board to report. The report has been forwarded to the union and to the Treasury Board, and there is an agreement between the union and the Treasury Board that no comment will be made during the next 48 hours.

POSTAL WORKERS—DATE OF GOVERNMENT REPLY TO UNION PROPOSALS

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): On the same subject and in connection with the negotiations under way between the Canadian Union of Postal Workers and the Treasury Board, could the Acting President of the Treasury Board indicate how soon the government will be making its reply to proposals which were put forward by the union some two weeks ago?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Acting President of Treasury Board): I cannot give a definitive answer to that, but I will inquire and inform the hon. member.

NATIONAL SECURITY

BUGGING OF FOREIGN EMBASSIES IN CANADA—ESPIONAGE ACTIVITIES ABROAD—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister, and it arises from a recently published report that the Canadian government has bugged the embassies and consulates of foreign governments in Canada, and particularly that our government has bugged the embassy of a major western European country. I ask whether this country has in recent years bugged the embassy in Canada of a western European country.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is one of those questions which is very delicate. I would hesitate to give an answer at this time. I believe that my colleague has indicated that he would like to have some sort of procedure established whereby we could look at security matters, and I do not think it would be advisable to discuss them on the floor of the House of Commons in this way.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I was amazed by the refusal of the Acting Prime Minister to accept the motion of my colleague under Standing Order 43. Arising from the statement by the Prime Minister last January that, "We have never ... engaged in any espionage abroad in the sense that we have not been looking for information in an undercover way in any other country," and in light of the fact that a report in this week's "Time" magazine directly contradicts the Prime Minister's statement, I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the Prime Minister's statement that we do not engage in espionage activities abroad still applies and whether it is accurate.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, certainly in my experience I have heard of no spying activities by Canadians abroad. We do not have any foreign espionage organization of any kind, so I would say that the statement of the Prime Minister is accurate.

EFFECT OF LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE ON FEED GRAIN SUPPLIES—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO SETTLE STRIKE

Mr. Charles Lapointe (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture, I shall direct my question to his parliamentary secretary (Mr. Corriveau).

About the strike in the ports of Quebec City, Montreal and Trois-Rivières, which seriously affects Quebec millers and producers in their supply of feed grains, could the parliamentary secretary tell the House if there are any new developments and whether, at this moment, Quebec millers and producers have any way of supplying themselves with feed grains?

Mr. Léopold Corriveau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the House that the Minister of Agriculture and the government are constantly keeping abreast of what is going on in the ports.

We know it is very difficult for millers to get supplies from the Quebec City and Trois-Rivières ports. On the other hand, the port of Montreal is open to millers who can get their supplies of feed grains. Moreover, talks are now under way between millers and unions to have the ports of Trois-Rivières and Quebec City reopen in the next few days so that millers can get their supplies.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

STUDY OF RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN VIOLENCE ON TELEVISION AND VIOLENCE IN CITIES IN UNITED STATES—POSSIBILITY OF CANADIAN STUDY

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General based on the findings of the United States Surgeon General which establishes a casual relationship between violence on television and the increase in violence in our cities. May I ask if such a study is under way in the Department of the Attorney General and if so will he release its findings to this House?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Certain studies are being undertaken by my department, Mr. Speaker. I understand that some are being undertaken as well by the CRTC.

COMMUNICATIONS

POSSIBILITY OF PUBLIC HEARINGS ON VIOLENCE ON TELEVISION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question for the Minister of Communications. Does the CRTC intend to hold public hearings on the subject of violence in television and if so, when will these hearings commence?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that they intend to do so but I could not give the precise date of the proposed hearing to the hon. member. I will inquire about it.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REASON FOR EARLY RETURN OF DESTROYERS PARTICIPATING IN TRAINING EXERCISE IN WESTERN PACIFIC

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. Can the minister inform the House why the three Canadian destroyers of the Second Canadian Destroyer Squadron participating in training exercises with the navies of the United States and the Philippines in the western Pacific were withdrawn rather suddenly from the exercises and are now returning home?

An hon. Member: They ran out of gas!

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, these Canadian ships were on training exercises with the United States navy. The Americans wished to terminate the training exercises, and our ships are returning home.

Mr. McKinnon: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Are we to understand from the minister's reply that his department sent a squadron of destroyers 6,000 miles to participate in an exercise with no assurance that it would be carried out? Does he think this is the way to engender support for the increased budget he will so desperately need?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, the training exercise was substantially completed by the Canadian ships.

CRIMINAL CODE

POSSIBILITY OF STUDY AND CHANGE IN PROVISION RESPECTING FIREARMS

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Justice is prompted by the report yesterday that the Metro Toronto Council is seeking substantial changes in the Criminal Code with regard to firearms. Can the minister advise if there are any specific studies under way in his department with respect to such changes and if so, could he advise when he expects a report or when the House may expect to see some changes in the Criminal Code with respect to firearms?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, in one sense the question of firearms and their control is under constant study, and from time to time orders in council are adopted to classify new weapons or different weapons as either restricted or prohibited. This happens at regular intervals, as these weapons come to our attention or the attention of the police. There has also been a decision to make a fairly small change in the existing provisions with regard to prohibited and restricted weapons in order to give more flexibility in classifying them in one or other categories. The government does not intend at the present time to proceed with any registration system or to control those weapons which are excepted in the Criminal Code from such systems because they are principally used for hunting.

Mr. Leggatt: A supplementary question for the Solicitor General, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister advise the House if there is a specific study group dealing with the question of firearms and whether it has made any report to him? If so, does he intend to recommend changes in the Criminal Code, to the cabinet through the Minister of Justice that would deal with firearms?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Yes, Mr. Speaker, a group of officials in my department is studying the effectiveness of our present gun laws and is looking at gun laws in other countries. We have not yet had a report on that.

COWANSVILLE—REQUEST FOR ENFORCEMENT OF LAW FOR MURDER OF INSTRUCTOR

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish also to direct a question to the Solicitor General.

A few days ago a murder was committed at the federal prison in Cowansville when a young instructor aged 34 was savagely killed with a hammer. Has the Solicitor General been advised of the circumstances surrounding this murder, and does he intend to recommend the application of the legislation as approved by Parliament?

[English]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I would agree with the hon. member that this was a most horrible crime and we extend our condolences to the family of the killed instructor. At the present time a suspect is under arrest by the Quebec provincial police and an investigation is being made into this matter. In addition, the regional director for the penitentiary service in Quebec is to have an administrative inquiry. With respect to the latter part of the question, I cannot make any recommendation on this case since it has not yet gone to trial.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

POSSIBLE EXTENSION OF ARDA PROGRAM IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—WILLINGNESS OF PROVINCE TO ENTER INTO OTHER AGREEMENTS

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In response to a question put by one of my colleagues yesterday the minister neglected to report whether or not it was possible for him to negotiate an extension to the ARDA program which has helped the native community of British Columbia and which was due to expire at the end of March. May I ask the minister also if during his deliberations in British Columbia the 15 per cent to 16 per cent unemployment rate in central and northern British Columbia, which is a result of the declining lumber market, was discussed and if the British Columbia government declared itself ready to enter into agreements with his department which serves other parts of Canada so well?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could make a slight correction in the preamble to the hon. member's question. What I was referring to yesterday was an extension of the regional development incentives program. This does not mean that ARDA will not be extended. I was making that statement yesterday because preliminary arrangements have still to be completed. On the question of the area to which the hon. member alludes where the lumber industry is in trouble, I proposed to the government of British Columbia, and I think it was accepted, that we should explore the possibility of establishing some form of incentives program which would apply to the forest industries or some aspects of them in British Columbia. I assigned officials to the negotiations when I was there two weeks ago, and I am hopeful that we will be able to sign an agreement in the feneral context I have just outlined within a few weeks at the outside.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ALLEGED AGREEMENT CANADA WOULD NOT RETALIATE FOR BOARDING OF "GREENPEACE III" BY FRENCH AUTHORITIES

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs is a followup to the question that the hon. member for New Westminster put to him yesterday. In view of a statement made by General Christian, officer in charge of the French air force in Tahiti and other members of the French government that the Canadian government gave them assurances that there would not be any interference from the Canadian government when they boarded Mr. McTaggart's boat, can the minister advise the House if he has been able to confirm that story? If so, who was the minister in charge at the time who gave the assurance to the French government?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I cannot confirm the story because no such conversation took place between officials of this department and the French authorities.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF DOCUMENTS EXCHANGED BETWEEN FRANCE AND CANADA CONCERNING "GREENPEACE III"

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question for the Acting Prime Minister. Would he be prepared, on behalf of the government, to table all documents exchanged between the government and any department of the French government that had anything to do at all with the Greenpeace III?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): I will take that under consideration, Mr. Speaker, but I should like to reaffirm what my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has said, that I did not nor did any of the officials at that time have any correspondence or conversations with the French government along the lines suggested.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. The purpose of our arrangement is to promote the building of new houses.

● (1450)

Mr. Darling: Will the Acting Prime Minister make recommendations to have the Minister of Finance reconsider the funding of those housing programs already underway in the provinces and for which the federal government had earlier reduced the amount of money in which they were going to share?

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF ALLEGATIONS CONCERNING CHENG HON-KUEN

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. I bring to the attention of the minister an article in the International Herald Tribune in Paris dated March 6, 1975, page 5. Will he look into the allegations indicated where one who offered a bribe, Cheng Hon-kuen, had charges brought against him in return for his testimony along with a full pension and leave, back pay, a gratuity and help in emigration to Canada. I do not know whether the minister knows about this. However, will he look into this matter in order to determine whether there is any truth in this peculiar way of doing business with regard to immigration?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I was not aware of this, Mr. Speaker. I will certainly look into it. Perhaps the hon. member can save me some time by sending over a copy of the article and I will have it investigated.

Mr. Alexander: In light of those circumstances and in view of the fact the judge in question expressed concern at the generosity of these amnesty deals, will the minister at the same time look at his records, which indicate he has given the stamp of approval to some 18,000, in order to determine whether in fact this particular individual is on his list. Knowing that this government can move very quickly when necessary, will he also do that when I send this article to him?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad to review it. NATIONAL SECURITY

POSSIBILITY COMMUNICATIONS BRANCH OF NRC MONITORING LONG DISTANCE TELEPHONE CALLS

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Science and Technology. It arises out of the confusion that was engendered into our exchange yesterday by an apparent misunderstanding in the mind of the Prime Minister. I wish to ask for the third time a question arising out of the minister's admission that the communications branch of the National Research Council monitors Hertzian waves. Can the minister tell us if the communications branch was or is monitoring long distance telephone calls placed in Canada to points in Canada or, and I emphasize that word, points outside Canada?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I see no reason to change the answer I gave yesterday.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Which one?

Mr. Drury: If the hon. member will read Hansard, he will find the answer.

INQUIRY WHETHER ANY SECURITY AGENCY MONITORING LONG DISTANCE TELEPHONE CALLS

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I will not subject the House to the acrobatics performed by the minister yesterday. I wish to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether there is any other security agency operating under Canadian authority or under the authority of an agreement to which Canada is a party which is monitoring long distance telephone calls placed in Canada to points in Canada or abroad.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Perhaps I should have retained my seat. In reply to the question that was asked, I must repeat what I said before. I do not think that the House of Commons in open session is the proper place to discuss security.

In view of the fact that amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act in 1971 have precluded inmates of provincial and federal penal institutions from receiving unemployment insurance benefits upon discharge, which previously they could claim if they had two years of employment built up prior to incarceration, can the minister inform the House if he has any plans to amend the act so that such persons would again be eligible for unemployment insurance benefits?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, that particular anomaly in the act, which is associated also with people on workman's compensation, is a matter that is under serious review. I cannot indicate to the House whether a decision has or has not been made. It is an area about which I feel strongly. I think it should be looked at very carefully.

LOSS OF GRAINS THROUGH PROCESS OF HANDLING

Question No. 758—Mr. Malone:

1. At the Port of Thunder Bay, Ontario, have boxcars of grain ever been derailed and submerged in the Port during the process of loading grain from boxcars to ships and, if so, what was the total number of bushels of grain lost (a) during the present calendar year (b) during the past five years?

2. Are grain handlers accountable for any grains that are lost due to negligence during the process of handling?

3. Is there any insurance policy to cover losses of grain during the process of handling and, if so (a) what is the extent of the coverage (b) who is responsible for the payment of the premiums?

4. Is the loss of any grains that occur through the process of handling deductible from the farmers' final payment?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): 1. Yes. (a) In 1974, a total of 7,963 bushels were involved in three mishaps involving four cars. (b) It has not been possible to readily obtain information from sources up to five years old. There have been approximately nine or ten such occurrences in the past five years.

2. Negligence must be established in every instance before liability is assumed. Grain losses, while in the possession of the railways, are investigated by them to establish the limits of their liability, if any.

3. Railways are self-insured. (a) Their liability is limited by the terms and conditions of carriage. (b) Self-insurance premiums are in operating expense of the railways.

4. Railway claims covering losses on Wheat Board grains, through the shipping companies involved, are for the full export value of the grain. Such losses do not affect the level of the Board's final payment.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): 1. No.

2. Such additions to the guidelines applicable to the Ministers of the Crown are unnecessary.

Order Paper Questions

TAX EXEMPTION TO SMALL BUSINESSES

Question No. 1,347—Mr. Robinson:

Is it the intention of the government to consider the advisability of giving a tax exemption in the first $10,000 of earned income by small business in order to give small business added incentive to retain funds in the business for expansion or increased working capital?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): It is not at this time the intention of the government to consider the giving of a tax exemption to the first $10,000 of income earned by a small business. The small business deduction as recently amended by Bill C-49 presently allows a small Canadian-controlled corporation to pay a low rate of tax on the first $100,000 of active business income earned by it in a year. This low rate is generally available to such a corporation until it has accumulated $500,000 of active business income after 1971.

TEXTILE MARKET

Question No. 1,773—Mr. Howie:

What measures are being taken to protect existing markets and restore production and develop badly needed markets to counteract the loss of Canada's textile markets reflected in closed mills, 8,000 unemployed workers and underemployed Canadians?

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The reports of the Textile and Clothing Board on its concurrent inquiries into the impact of imports on Canadian production of a number of textile products, conducted at the request of the Minister, were tabled on March 6, 1975. Each of the products had been identified by the Labour/Management Committee of the Canadian Textile Industry as a priority problem area. As announced when the Board reports were tabled, the Government is taking appropriate action to implement the thrust of the Board's recommendations, including the maintenance and extension of export restraints on specific products with certain countries and the placing of these and other products on the Import Control List. It is considered that these measures will assist in restoring a reasonable degree of stability in the markets involved while enabling Canada to continue to fulfill its international obligations under the G.A.A.T. The Department has been encouraging Canadian textile producers to expand their export markets by assisting them to participate in international fairs, to identify and adjust to new foreign markets, and to bring foreign buyers to Canada. A number of general industrial assistance programs of the Department are available to help the textile industry restructure its operations and to develop new products with a view to improving its competitive position in the domestic and international markets. These programs include the Program to Enhance Productivity, the Program for the Advancement of Industrial Technology and the General Adjustment Assistance Program.

2. What was the purpose and subject discussed at each such meeting?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): 1. (a) It is not government policy to disclose names of people interviewed for recruitment in the Public Service of Canada, nor would it be desirable to do so since such information might jeopardize the current employment status of an individual, reflect on his competence or otherwise encroach upon his rights. (b) Local officials visited were met for the purpose of exchanging views for use in advice to be given the Government. Under long established Parliamentary practice, advice from officials to Ministers of the Crown, or the source thereof, is privileged information. (c) See (a) and (b) above.

2. See 1(b) above.

(b) Time spent on official business was spent at places mutually convenient to the respective parties. 2. For each institution (a) approximatively how many inmates would be expected to be housed in it (b) on what date does the government plan to begin construction (c) on what date is construction expected to be completed?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): The answer is as follows: 1. MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

[Translation]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REQUEST FOR DEBATE ON LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 26, I request that an emergency debate be held on the feed grain supply in eastern Canada, and more particularly in Quebec.

This matter is vital, Mr. Speaker, and this is why:

(1) The longshoremen's labour conflict cuts off access to grain elevators. The longshoremen use this as a means to bring pressure to bear and, by doing so, they are endangering the life of the cattle because of a lack of food.

(2) Consequently, since the millers can no longer obtain feed grain as they cannot cross the longshoremen's picket lines, they cannot meet the demands of their customers for more than 24 hours.

(3) Yesterday, the minister stated that he knew that there was feed grain available, for instance in elevators and mills, as well as at the farmers' suppliers.

(4) The minister is ill-informed or misleads the House. I have here a telegram which clearly contradicts the statements made today by the minister and his parliamentary secretary, even though these statements might be true as concerns the port of Montreal, but this still increases production costs. The telegram, dated April 9 and received this morning, reads as follows:

Feed grain situation now tragic. Impossible to meet cattle feeding requirements.

Cannot conceive the irresponsibility regarding this issue. Unacceptable tolerance given to union leaders who perturb the economy with such irresponsibility. Urgent need for immediate action to deliver grain today to elevators.

Signed: Montmagny Farming Cooperative, A. Lamonde, Secretary.

And another letter says:

A lack of grain can be very harmful for our cattle and we are all aware of what could follow.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to the terms of Standing Order 26, the hon. member must understand that he is simply required to give a brief explanation of the urgency of the issue. I now invite him to propose his motion.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, to conclude, I would like to say that when similar labour troubles paralyzed the western ports in March, the Chair allowed a special debate even though that conflict was settled. Moreover, the government introduced emergency legislation for settling that conflict. I hope that the Chair will equally welcome today my motion dealing with eastern problems and urging the government to introduce a bill so as to settle this problem without delay. I therefore ask, in accordance with the rules, that a special debate be held under Standing Order 26(10), since today is Wednesday, on the longshoremen's conflict in Quebec.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Under Standing Order 26, the hon. member has given to the Chair the prescribed notice. I have studied very carefully his letter as well as the telegram to which he referred a moment ago. It surely deals with a very serious and important matter. It is also impossible to ignore that situation which is quickly changing from day to day.

Of course, in answer to some questions that have been asked, today's situation is different from that of yesterday, and it is changing quickly. I recall that the last time we had an urgent debate under Standing Order 26 on account of a strike in western Canada, I accepted the motion at three o'clock in the afternoon and at eight o'clock in the evening, the strike had been settled. Given the quick changes that occur every day, I would prefer to reject the motion to have an urgent debate this evening, but that does not mean that I do not consider the situation as a serious one. I invite the hon. member, and I am quite sure he will do so, to follow the situation very closely and reserve his decision for a few more days in order to consider it very prudently. If such a situation persists, it might be possible perhaps later for the hon. member to raise this question a second time.

The House resumed, from Tuesday, April 8, consideration of the motion of Mr. Sharp that Bill C-44, to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act, the Salaries Act and the Parliamentary Secretaries Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) (p. 4623).

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, when the debate on Bill C-44 was adjourned at ten o'clock last evening I was pointing out that passing the bill, which grants very substantial increases to members of parliament and senators, will make it very difficult, if not impossible, for the government successfully to appeal to various segments of the Canadian population to restrain their demands for increased wages and salaries.

It is true that the members of the House and of the other place have not had an increase since 1971, although my recollection is that at that time the increase was substantial on the ground that it was to cover some years into the future. Be that as it may, the fact remains that the government has had ample opportunity since 1971 to set up some type of mechanism to deal with this matter, but has neglected to do so, with the result that we now have a piece of legislation proposing very substantial increases.

An increase of 50 per cent is a very large increase in one's income. While the government has intimated that it may reduce this amount to 33 per cent when the bill is in committee, it is also true that it intends to put in the indexing feature, on the basis of the industrial composite index, to begin in this parliament rather than the next parliament. So that by the end of the thirtieth parliament members will be getting virtually what the government suggested in the legislation that was presented last December.

The government will find it very difficult to carry on its discussions with business, professional and labour groups, asking them for restraint in the matter of wages, if the House adopts the measure that is before it. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) is quoted as having said the other day that he is alarmed at the very substantial increases which in recent months have been granted workers in this country. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is quoted as having said at the first ministers' conference this morning that Canada has one of the worst records of any country in terms of days lost because of strike action. Everyone deplores loss of time due to strike action, but the fact remains that workers in this country have found that the cost of living in many cases has risen more rapidly than the real income which they receive.

The Prime Minister and Minister of Finance have been meeting, and intend to continue meeting, with various groups in the economy in order to persuade them to exercise some restraint in their wage demands. I submit it will be increasingly difficult to do that when at the same time those who are being asked to be less demanding know perfectly well that the Prime Minister, cabinet ministers and members of this House, as well as members of the other place, have all voted themselves very hefty increases in their remuneration.

How do we answer the longshoremen who only a few days ago were sent back to work by order of this parliament? I voted for that legislation because I thought it was absolutely necessary to get the ports in western Canada operating and to get grain moving to world markets. But how do I explain to longshoremen in British Columbia that we sent them back to work, leaving their future income to the tender mercies of an arbitrator, while we in this parliament are so generous with regard to our own incomes?

How do I answer old age pensioners and recipients of veterans' pensions in my constituency and all across this country? These groups find themselves in very difficult circumstances. The incomes they are receiving are not adequate to meet even the barest of living requirements. The best proof of this is that several of the provincial governments have had to step in and enlarge the incomes of old age pensioners. Many provincial governments are now providing a guaranteed income up to as high as $240 a month for old age pensioners because they cannot live on the present old age security pension even though it has a cost of living bonus attached to it. The provincial governments have had to subsidize out of their meagre revenues a payment to old age pensioners, the responsibility for whom lies primarily with the federal government.

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

This parliament could long ago have substantially increased pensions paid to senior citizens and to veterans of this country. When we press the government with respect to this matter, the answer is always the same: the government cannot afford it. How will we explain to the old age pensioners and veterans that we cannot afford to give them more money but that we can afford to increase our own indemnities and travelling expenses?

I am afraid that as the government meets with the various segments of our economy and pleads with them to exercise restraint, the public is going to be very cynical. It is going to look upon members of parliament as taking the position: Don't do as I do, do as I tell you. It is going to remember the words of Emerson, who said, "What you are speaks so loudly, I cannot hear what you say".

I agree with my good friend and colleague, the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt), when he says that we should never put members of parliament in the position where the only persons who can run for office are those with a private income. That is true. There was a time, particularly in British history, when the only persons who could sit in the House of Commons were those who were wealthy and therefore they became a special group.

It is equally true that members of parliament ought not to become, on the other hand, an elitist group forming part of the upper 5 per cent of the income earners of this country. We do not want members of parliament who have to be dependent upon private a income: we want to make it possible for any citizen of this country to run for office and, if elected, to sit in this House of Commons. But we must be careful, at the same time, that those of us who sit in this House do not get out of touch with the people whom we represent; and that is a real danger. When you remember that in 1973 the average income of a family in Canada was $6,358, you will see that the increase alone being proposed in this legislation will be more than the entire income upon which some families in this country had to live for a whole year.

I submit that the government had a real opportunity, an opportunity which it has missed, to give some leadership in this country when it started to ask people to exercise a measure of restraint. It seems to me that was a good time to have said, when requesting the people of Canada to tighten their belts, that we would begin with ourselves. We could have given leadership in this regard. But we are not giving it in the bill which is now before us—a bill which will make it virtually impossible for the government to make such a request of the people of Canada without being laughed out of court.

I sometimes wonder whether members of parliament realize the extent to which the public is becoming increasingly cynical about politics and politicians. This is particularly true of young people. I have occasion to address many groups of young people in universities and high schools, and their attitude today is that all those in politics are there for what they can get. I submit that is not true. I have said repeatedly to groups of young people that in the many years I have associated with politicians, I can honestly say that the great bulk of them are honest men and women who are sincere and conscientious in their desire to serve the public good.

Of course, there are exceptions; but there are exceptions in any group or any profession that you care to name. I think that on the whole this country has been well served by its public men and women. The fact remains that there is public skepticism about politics and politicians and I think we ought to be concerned about it. In a free society it is only natural that some people will disagree with particular politicians and will be disillusioned about some politicians and some political parties. That is what one can expect in a democratic society. But when the public becomes disillusioned about politics and politicians generally, then the basis upon which a free society is built is in real danger. If the public loses confidence and respect for parliamentary institutions, then I submit that our democratic system will not long survive.

I suggest that this cynicism and skepticism will not be dissipated by spurious arguments. The general public will tend to think like that homespun philosopher Josh Billings, who once said that when a fellow says it is not the money but the principle of the thing, it is the money! That is how I think the public will feel about some of the arguments to which we have been listening.

The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) went to great lengths yesterday to say that we need to raise members' indemnities because this would prevent conflict of interest. I cannot imagine a more ridiculous argument, namely, that if we pay people more money, they are more likely to be honest. Some of the most dishonest transactions we have seen in this country and in other countries were committed by people who had the most wealth. There is no guarantee that you make people honest by giving them more money. People are honest because they have convictions and belief in their responsibilities in the public service.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) was dredging hard for that one.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): We also hear the argument that if we raise the indemnity substantially we will get a better class of member. First of all, I do not agree with that. Over the years we have had some very good members in this House and in other elected bodies across the country. I do not agree that by raising members' indemnities you can guarantee a better class of member. Even if one accepted that thesis, raising the indemnity will not change the class of members of this parliament. If it would improve the quality of the members we get, we should raise indemnities for the next parliament and see whether we get a better group than we have now—and I doubt very much whether that would be the case.

The government would be well advised to accept the motion moved yesterday by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) for a six months' hoist. I think a six months' hoist would give the government ample time to set up some mechanism similar to the Beaupré committee, or a committee headed by the Chief Justice, that is, an unbiased and unprejudiced committee to look into the matter of proper and adequate remuneration for members of parliament, senators, cabinet ministers and the Prime Minister. Then the whole question of what should be paid for our services would be placed in the hands of some other body rather than being left to us. Nothing could be more embarrassing than for members to have to decide on their own what they think they are worth. No other group in the economy has that privilege: other groups have to bargain for the wage return they will get. In some cases—as in the case of the longshoremen—when they cannot agree, parliament sends them back to work and allows an arbitrator to make the decision.

It would be a good idea to have an arbitrator in this instance. There is no hurry about this matter. This parliament will probably run for another 3½ years, so there is plenty of time to set up some mechanism for taking this whole question out of the hands of members of the House of Commons, letting somebody look into it, make recommendations and have those recommendations considered by the House as having been prepared and computed by an independent group. If the government is not going to do that and insists on proceeding with this legislation, then it seems to me that at the very least those who took on the job of being members in this thirtieth parliament ought to be prepared to work for the indemnity we knew was in effect when we were elected, and we should add to the indemnity—and to the indemnity alone—a cost of livng index computed from July 8, 1974. That would mean we would receive the the salary that we contracted to work for, plus an increase to compensate us for the rising cost of living.

I think if we did that we would be setting an example for the rest of the people of Canada. I am sure no one need tell the government there are a great many collective agreements coming up for negotiation this year. Unless there is some measure of restraint, we will have a great deal of industrial unrest in this country. I can understand the government's concern. I can understand the concern of the Minister of Finance about what will happen, not only in terms of the days lost because of strikes but also because of the effect on our economy if exorbitant demands are made and accepted. I plead with the government: if it really wants to give leadership to the people at this time and to exercise restraint with regard to wage and salary demands, it should begin here. Sacrifices, like charity, should begin at home.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak at this time for two reasons: first, to clarify the government's intention in respect of amendments to the bill in committee and, second, to urge that the bill be referred to the committee without delay so that the necessary amendments may be made and the House will be in a position to consider the bill in its amended form rather than in the version that is now formally before us.

The House will recall—it is hardly necessary for me to go over the history of this legislation—that in its original form the legislation provided for a flat 50 per cent increase in indemnity and allowances, without any escalation. It was a percentage that was to be flat and not to be changed during the course of the parliament. There was, however, some misunderstanding, perhaps accompanied by some misrepresentation, in respect of the purpose of that increase: it was equated with the kind of increases that come annually between employers and employees, as if we were to receive 50 per cent a year or something of that kind.

In order to deal with that particular kind of criticism, after discussions among the representatives of the parties, I indicated on December 19, 1974—my remarks appear at page 2385 of Hansard—that the government would be prepared to support amendments to the bill which would change the form of the increase. I proposed at that time that the increase should be 33⅓ per cent in respect of the indemnity and allowances, and that there should be a formula for adjustment which would come into effect on January 1, 1976, after a period of 18 months during which there would be no adjustment in either the indemnity or allowances. As from January 1, 1976, salaries and allowances would become adjustable on the basis of the increase that had taken place in the industrial composite index between the average of the two previous calendar years. In other words, on January 1, 1976, there would be an adjustment to reflect the percentage increase that had occurred in the industrial composite index between 1974 and 1975, and in each subsequent year a similar adjustment would take place.

Incidentally, I should like to comment on the statement of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) who suggested that the increase that had taken place in 1971 was supposed to reflect the future as well as the past. I have very carefully examined the record and have spoken to my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen). He affirms what I read in Hansard, which is that the adjusted payment at that time reflected only the increase in the relevant index that had taken place in the past, and there was nothing contained in that adjustment which took into account any changes which might take place in the future. So I think we are quite justified in going back to 1970 to reflect, in the present proposals, the changes in the industrial index which have taken place in that four-year period.

The House will also recall that we did not reflect, in the adjustment proposed on December 19, the full increase that had taken place in the general level of salaries and wages during the previous four years. If, in fact, we had done that, we would have proposed an increase of 37 per cent rather than 33⅓ per cent. However, as I said at that time in the course of my remarks, there seemed to be a disposition on the part of those consulted to recommend somewhat less. That was the basis for the amendments I proposed on December 19 last year. At that time, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) gave general support to the amendments although he had some reservations about the salaries of ministers and other officials of the House and of the government.

In the meantime, the government has been giving further consideration to the formula for adjustment of the indemnity and expense allowance in future years. It had been our purpose, one which was shared by the Leader of the Opposition, that the adjustment should run somewhat behind the increase in the industrial composite index. I should like to quote what the Leader of the Opposition said at that time, because I think it reflected what we all had in mind in making those proposals. As recorded at page 2386 of Hansard for December 19, 1974, this is what he said:

> I am also pleased that the escalation factor in the future is delayed by a year and will therefore run somewhat behind the general increase in the index. That provides, and I am pleased to see it, I think some general incentive to members of the House to fight inflation.

● (1540)

That was the view he expressed at that time and it was certainly one that we on the government side shared. On further reflection, and in light of the comments of those in favour of an increase in remuneration but who are somewhat concerned about the appearance of the adjustment formula—even though, as I have said, it is fair and defensible—the government is prepared to consider amendments which would modify the rate of escalation. In recent days discussions along these lines have taken place among representatives of the parties and I personally believe that a formula can be worked out in committee that would help to reduce the concern of some who are prepared in principle to support the legislation.

There are several ways of making the adjustment, of doing what we all have in mind. There are merits and drawbacks to all of these, as anyone who has taken the trouble to look at the problem will discover for himself. I suggest, however, that it would be extremely difficult to resolve the issue or to decide which is the preferable method during this debate on second reading. The question before us at this stage in our proceedings is one of principle, which is that the remuneration of members of parliament should be increased to bring it more into line with present circumstances, and to provide for an adjustment that would keep it in line with future circumstances, even though the bill before us requires substantial modification along the lines I indicated on December 19 and perhaps in other particulars which may be decided by the committee itself.

Therefore, I urge the House to express itself on the principle of this bill, which is to increase the indemnity and allowances of members of parliament and to provide for periodic adjustment, and to refer the bill to the standing committee where it can be examined in detail, amended and reported back for further consideration. It seems to me that in this way we can have a more meaningful and conclusive debate.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I rise merely to respond very briefly to what has been said by the government House leader, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp). He indicated, on the part of the government, a willingness that this matter should go to committee where the bill can receive the kind of examination, amendments and changes that the committee might see fit to make or to propose. I begin by pointing out to the House that this, of course, is the most appropriate function of a standing committee. It does not fall within the regulations of this hallowed chamber to permit amendments to be brought forward in detail on second reading of a bill.

We are dealing with a bill concerning salaries of members of parliament and other elected officers of the government and of the House, and as such there is a question of whether or not consideration should be given to there being such increases. We can and have considered the question of what should be the amount of the salary increases, what should be the expense allowance, what should be the position with regard to retroactivity, with regard to ministers' salaries, and so on.

We have had an excellent debate in the House: it has been a hard debate and some very firm positions have been taken. In some cases there is a great gap separating certain members of the House, but it seems to me that the substantial majority of the members who have spoken, no matter what increases they are inclined to favour, approve the principle that certain adjustments should be made. That being the case, I certainly go along with the President of the Privy Council and say: Let us dispatch this matter to the committee. Let the committee, in light of what has been said in the debate and in light of instructions which the representatives may receive from their respective parties, make such amendments and proposals as they feel they should, following which the matter should come back to the House.

I urge the House to let the matter go to committee as soon as possible so that we can get on with other business. In saying that, I would point out that we have expressed some reservations inside and outside the House regarding some of the issues involved. We want to feel free in the committee to consider changes, for example, with regard to ministerial salaries, whether or not the amount of remuneration should be brought in line with the 33⅓ percent basis and similar proposals. There may well be some question as to retroactivity and other issues.

Certainly, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) spoke for the party when he indicated outside the House that somehow there should be incorporated into the bill a measure which would constitute an incentive in parliament to reduce the rate of inflation. I say that with full knowledge of the fact that for 4½ years this parliament has set a very good example to the rest of the country on the question of inflation by not asking for an increase in remuneration. Unfortunately, that example was not followed by other sectors of the economy, including governments federal, provincial and municipal, industry and labour—even including those guardians of public morality, the media. However, that is beside the point.

Despite the fact that the example we strove to set in the last 4½ years has not had much success, I still think we have an obligation to try to work out a formula—even if that formula were in the form of a ceiling—so that there would be an obvious desire, as members of the House and representatives of the people of Canada, within the limits of our ability as a parliament, as contrasted with the government, to do something about inflation. Such a ceiling might well be worked out in the committee as a result of motions, amendments and discussions which will take place there.

For that reason, and to that extent, I go along with what has been said by the President of the Privy Council and hope we will dispatch the matter to the committee so that it may come to a decision, bearing in mind what has been said in the House, and bring its views back to the House. We will then examine the results and deal with the question at that time.

● (1550)

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I listened to the House leader for the Conservative Party with amusement when early in his comments he said this debate has been lively, interesting and informative, or words to that effect.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): "Excellent."

Mr. Broadbent: "Excellent" is one specific adjective he used. If those terms are appropriate, he must have been using them to describe the contribution made by members of other political parties, because during the course of the debate yesterday, today and before Christmas no other Conservative contributed to it. Either his kind words were intended only for other political parties or he was patting himself on the back; I am not sure which.

In more serious vein, I would like to have heard a serious contribution from the Conservative Party as to where it stands on the principle of the bill and whether it is in accord with its own approach to the problems of the national economy. That party campaigned in last year's election on fiscal responsibility, on a reasonable incomes policy and on the need for restraint in the House of Commons. I would have thought we would have heard many sophisticated arguments justifying the bill—which still amounts to granting a 50 per cent increase—in terms of that framework, but we did not. We did not hear from the Conservative Party, nor did we hear from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) or the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), both of whom in recent months, since the election, have sounded like Conservative Party members in their statements about the need for restraint and reasonableness in terms of incomes policy.

I would have thought the least we could have expected from the government was a major speech in terms of the kind of leadership we in the House of Commons are supposed to be showing the rest of the country in these very difficult financial times. But we did not hear that either. Instead, we witnessed the low-key performance of the government House leader, which lasted almost three minutes, in order to justify the position of the government.

I want to go back, briefly, over the three stages of this bill. The bill was brought forward before Christmas on the assumption by the government that, with members desiring a Christmas break and some increase in pay, they could slip their iniquitous 50 per cent increase bill through the House of Commons very quickly. They learned that they could not do that. Two days later, after considerable thought and concentrated effort directed toward coming up with what the government described as a compromise measure, they introduced to the House, by way of a statement on motions, the set of amendments which was just referred to.

The ultimate intent of those amendments was to substantially reduce the 50 per cent increase, it was said. We, of course—myself and other members of my party—pointed out that it did not take the most brilliant mathematical mind in the country to conclude quickly from the amendments the government was going to introduce to Bill C-44, that by 1978 the cumulative income of members of parliament under the so-called compromise amendments would be greater than under the original 50 per cent increase proposal.

An hon. Member: What is your proposal?

Mr. Broadbent: My hon. friend wants to know our proposal. If he had taken part in the debate before Christmas, he might have learned it. He might even have contributed his own thoughts on the matter. Then we had phase three of the government's handling of this measure, which we witnessed yesterday and today. Today, the government House leader discussed the third set of amendments or, if I understand him correctly, really one basic change which the government is willing to consider in addition to the amendments he himself referred to before Christmas; that is, they are going to change the basis of escalation from the original amendments based on the average industrial composite index to some part thereof.

For the reasons which were referred to by the House leader of my party, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), and by myself and others before Christmas, we find these proposals—there are really only two, the 50 per cent increase and the 33⅓ per cent plus escalation—unacceptable. I want to stress that we do not find them unacceptable by our criteria. I hope that the government backbenchers who were indulging in some rather irresponsible heckling yesterday will consider the arguments made, not on this bill but some four years ago by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) which I, on behalf of my party, when speaking on this measure before Christmas accepted. The argument the Secretary of State for External Affairs made with reference to members' salaries contained two points. First, he said that salaries for members of parliament should be sufficient to provide them with the necessary resources to discharge their task. He was talking about having enough income at our disposal to have a constituency office, to conduct mailings, and so forth.

An hon. Member: That's not what he said.

Mr. Broadbent: The hon. member says that is not what the Secretary of State for External Affairs said. I quoted his words. The hon. member can check Hansard and find them. The minister was talking about our capacity to discharge our responsibilities, on the one hand, and he added another important criterion—and I say in all seriousness that this is a criterion we accept—namely, that incomes must be sufficient for members to maintain a decent and reasonable standard of living for themselves and their families.

The members of my party accept that criterion without qualification. We say that a man or woman elected to the House of Commons should not be expected to suffer a significant decline in his or her standard of living. The average person coming here should be able to cope, in a society which is basically as affluent as ours, in terms of living reasonably. We take that view. We do not believe that a member of parliament should be indulging in self-denial, just as we do not believe that any worker in a economy as affluent and productive as ours should have to experience self-denial.

We have applied this criterion to members' salaries and have said that if we consider our last increase, we have experienced a real decline in our standard of living. We acknowledge that. Many members from all sides of the House have experienced hardship. We believe the majority of members of all parties want to change that situation, as we do. That point is beyond debate as far as we are concerned. But when we look at the level of income proposed by the government, and accepted in principle by the Conservative Party, we say that in our judgment it is too high. It does not meet the criteria so ably stated by the Secretary of State for External Affairs when he was government House leader. It goes well beyond that, Mr. Speaker, and that is why we object to it.

● (1600)

Before Christmas I tried to explain why we think it goes too far. Since 1970, members of parliament have seen a whole series of improvements in terms of facilities provided for them. Remember, Mr. Speaker, that was the first test which the minister applied when he was government House leader. Since 1970, public expense has paid for four newsletters per year, provided a constituency office and a secretary for that office, plane trip provisions have been extended and, in short, a lot of necessary—and I stress "necessary"—services have been provided to members of parliament. We support each of these. We think it is a good idea for the people of Canada to pay for services that enable members of parliament to do a good job. Anyone who quibbles with that idea has a mixed-up sense of priorities.

We say we cannot have it both ways, however. If, on the one hand, needed and improved services are provided to us, then we cannot simultaneously argue that the $8,000 expense allowance should be improved. If the people of Canada have already paid for expanding our service to the community, as they have, how can we go back to them and ask for something more? I repeat, Mr. Speaker, we cannot have it both ways. If the needed services have been provided since the last increase, then in the judgment of the New Democratic Party there can be no justification for increasing the tax exempt allowance. In the context of this debate, we in this party say there should be no increase to the $8,000 allowance because in the last four years the government has provided the facilities which many of us used to pay for out of our own pockets.

I want to make a personal reference to the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) because he made a personal reference to me in the debate yesterday, saying that the argument I used before Christmas was hypocritical. He "snuck it in" at the end of his speech, saying something to the effect that one might say that kind of sophistry was a hypocritical argument. He did not want to say specifically that he thought it was hypocritical, but I must infer that is what he had in mind.

He said that in his view members of parliament had not formerly provided these services, and therefore it was hypocritical to use the argument that they were being provided. I say to him that I did provide such services. Out of my own pocket I paid for mailings to my constituents, for a constituency office and for help in that office. I do not say that in any boastful sense because I know that certain members of all parties did the same thing. I was not being hypocritical. Many members took their obligations seriously and paid a substantial portion of their income to ensure that those facilities were made available in their constituencies.

We have said there is no justification for increasing the $8,000 portion of our income, but there is a desire and a need to meet the criteria set by the former government House leader, to provide sufficient income so that we can have a decent and reasonable standard of living for ourselves and our families. There is unquestionably a need to improve the $18,000 salary, but we say the increase should be equivalent to the increase in the cost of living since 1970. The conclusion of the vast majority of members of my caucus is that members should receive that kind of increase, which is now in the 28 per cent to 30 per cent range. What we regard as necessary expenditures for servicing our constituencies have been met by the government since 1970 so there would be no need for an increase to the $8,000. We believe that members of parliament should have basically the same standard of living as they had in 1970 or 1971, and in our view anything beyond that is unjustified.

The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville said yesterday that a cost of living increase alone was not sufficient because it did not take into account increased productivity. He acknowledged that it is a little difficult to assess the productivity of members of parliament.

Mr. Baldwin: How about speeches?

Mr. Broadbent: We have had no problem with the Conservatives in that regard in this debate. There has been zero productivity—no, zero plus one.

Mr. Railton: Do you accept the ICI?

Mr. Broadbent: No, the consumer price index is our criteria. The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville said that we should receive an increase that is not only based on the cost of living but also on productivity. We reject that argument, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Jamieson: You are afraid your productivity is too low.

Mr. Broadbent: The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) says our productivity is too low, but I contend it is the cabinet's productivity that is too low. We reject the argument of the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville because we believe that those of us who are in the top 5 per cent—or, depending on your criteria, the top 1½ per cent—of the income level of Canada should call a halt to increases in our income beyond that which is necessary to keep us at the standard of living to which we have been accustomed. We say that anything more than that is unjust until the average income earner and the poor catch up.

It is as simple as that, Mr. Speaker. If there is anything that I feel deeply about, that is it. In this country we do not have a narrowing of the gap between rich and poor, but a widening. Every bit of statistical evidence, whether from government or other sources, documents that fact. In this country one-quarter of the children live in poverty and one-fifth or one-sixth of the total families live in poverty. We have the working poor and the poor who are not working. Not only members of parliament, but all Canadians whose incomes are in the top 5 per cent should not be looking for increases in their salaries. But, I say, improve their cost of living position.

● (1610)

An hon. Member: Motherhood!

Mr. Broadbent: That is a typical Liberal comment. It seems to be the history of the Liberal Party in Canada; I say that seriously. The Liberal Party in Canada, particularly since Mackenzie King, has said that we need progressive income tax measures. They say: Let us have that. Let us permit trade unions to exist, and let us do a number of things along these lines; then we can really overcome inequality. However, it has not worked. It did not work in Mackenzie King's time and it has not worked since.

I repeat, we have almost one million children in this, one of the richest countries in the world, who live in poverty. Yet when we get up and talk about narrowing the gap in incomes, a Liberal sniggers and says "motherhood". That shows how seriously they take the problem of inequality. I know there are a number of Liberals who believe in the notion of equality, but I think most of them philosophically do not. We in this party do.

I say to all members who believe we have to do something about inequality in this country that the only way to move in that direction is for those with high incomes, whether they be in the top 5 per cent or the top 20 per cent, to say we must stop, we must hold the line in terms of our income position until the rest of the people in this country catch up. There is no better example members of parliament can set than holding the line with their own incomes. We believe in cost of living increases, but not one cent more until we have rid this land of poverty. We must take steps to get the average and lower income people into a more preferable position.

I want to make one last point in defence of the reasonable position we are arguing, namely, a non-inflationary kind of policy. Quite apart from the issue of equity or fairness of distribution of income in Canada, the point so forcibly made by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands bears repetition by myself just by way of summary. If we want to set an example for other groups in terms of what is a fair income demand, we cannot do it by bringing in a measure to increase our own incomes by 50 per cent immediately, or by a series of amendments that would give us a minimum 33⅓ per cent increase but, by means of an escalator, very rapidly an effective 50 per cent increase. In my view, that would deeply undermine any serious effort by the government to get operational in Canada some kind of voluntary restraint on incomes policy. This is a very serious abdication of economic leadership on the part of the government.

For these reasons, we as a party will vote against this bill. We will try at the committee stage to have some amendments accepted. We hope by that time the voices of reason and justice in all parties will prevail and we will get the kind of changes to the bill which that kind of attitude would reflect.

Members' Salaries

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, may I say just a few words about what the leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) has just told us. Talk about double-talk!

For the increase, against the increase: one does not know where to stand. What a series of contradictions considering the way they act with regard to other groups in our society.

Yes, the NDP are the self-appointed champions of the working class, time and time again asking that working class income be indexed. That we agree with too. But when it comes to making comparisons between the role of Parliament, that of hon. members and that of other Canadians, I feel the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby resorts strictly to demagogy.

When it is a matter of increasing the salaries of union leaders, the NDP leader tells the House: Those poor people, we must help them.

And it is so true that they are there to come to the defence of everybody and in saying that only they can play politics—

An hon. Member: That is it.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): That is the point. They think they can draw public attention that way. It is so true, Mr. Speaker, that yesterday my colleague from Kamouraska (Mr. Dionne) made a good speech on Bill C-44. I spoke also, as did others. And this morning, let us check in the newspapers, in Le Jour, Le Devoir, Le Journal de Montréal or others, all report that the member for Oshawa-Whitby promised to oppose Bill C-44.

That is the news we read this morning, that is the freedom of the press: to forget to say the truth when some members spoke in favour of Bill C-44 and to give attention to those who want to practice demagogy in Canada.

An hon. Member: That is true.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I say that there is no comparison between a representative of the people, which the member for Oshawa-Whitby is, and other people. There is no comparison because nobody, union leader, corporation manager or what have you, must face the responsibilities of a federal—or provincial for that matter—member of Parliament.

The New Democrats of the socialist provinces of Canada, British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, have understood this in their assemblies, because they are in power. Here, they hanker for power and therefore they do not understand anything.

An hon. Member: They will never understand.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): So much so, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member says he agrees with the parliamentary allowance, but is against higher non taxable expenses. By how much should the allowance proper be increased, he is not quite sure, but he agrees with that. Expenses, no, we are like all the rest of the members in that respect.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

Mr. Speaker, I mentioned yesterday that a member who comes from a distant riding for instance—some come from this area and have no additional expenses—but those who come from another province, those who like ourselves come from northwest or northeast Quebec and have to maintain—

An hon. Member: Northern Ontario!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): —Northern Ontario, those who have to maintain one residence in Ottawa and another in their hometown, who have to take care of their wife and their children at home, have no family life. You will tell me that they could have refrained from being candidates, but nevertheless we felt the urge to offer people our services and I do not think the population objects to their members of parliament living decently and working freely on behalf of the people.

Mr. Speaker, renting in an apartment building here in Ottawa cost $300 or $350 a month. And you have to provide for the food expenses of your family in your riding, everybody knows that. NDP members know that too. When a wedding takes place, we are invited. When it is a wedding anniversary, we are invited again. If there is a funeral somewhere, we have to send flowers. That does not mean we have to, of course not, but if we do not want to be called tightwads, we have no choice, we feel committed toward our constituents. Mr. Speaker, there is no comparing our expenses and those of other Canadians. We are not in the same situation. Whenever there is some kind of demonstration, some collection in aid of a charity, whenever a sporting club, hockey, baseball or any other kind of club starts a fund, the first one asked to contribute is the federal or provincial member of Parliament. What do we do? A small cheque for $25, $50, $100, and so forth. Someone might say we are not forced to, and of course we are not. But if we did not do it, we would be labelled misers. So we do our large share in the community life of our constituencies.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Someone just yawned. If he does not care about people, if it does not affect him—

Some hon. Members: He is looking after publicity!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Well, maybe, but to play politics again, as I said before.

Since the New Democrats have been in favour of the escalation clause for a number of years, and since they have been attacking inflation also for a number of years, how can they reconcile their anti-inflation stand with their opposition to indexation to the cost of living? If we were to believe them, the federal government accounts alone for increases in the cost of living, governments and members of Parliament. I believe union leaders should also be concerned with inflation. They are responsible, as everyone else is for inflation and poverty among riches. We know there are poor people. But every time we introduce bills, as we have been doing for these last 35 years, to improve the taxpayers' and consumers' purchasing power, without increasing prices, the New Democrat members are the first to vote against us. In so doing, they take a hypocritical stand, and they do not mind it. Because they look after the poor people, inasmuch as this gets them votes. They do not have any other use for them.

The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) urges that we refer Bill C-44 to committee, where New Democrat members may propose in amendment everything they care for. This is not asking for the impossible. In their amendment, they propose a six-month hoist.

● (1620)

The funniest thing about it is that I am convinced that they are all eager to get their raise. They are reluctant to say so. They know that members of Parliament are no millionaires. There may be some millionaires in private enterprise, but one does not become a millionaire on a parliamentary salary, that's for sure.

Mr. Speaker, a Liberal candidate in my constituency—the NDP members are not the only ones to object to salary raises—said recently on television that he was dead set against a raise for MPs. He had sent a telegram to the Prime Minister, his leader—

An hon. Member: He was defeated.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Yes, he was defeated, and I am the one who did it. He sent a telegram to the Prime Minister who certainly received it. I think he did not act upon it, that he did not reply to his candidate. I say those things to show the inconsistency and the inconsequence of such people.

I was talking recently to a minister, the one who presides at the conventions where he is chosen as candidate. I have made him lose his deposit twice already, and he still comes back.

Recently, I spoke to the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey). I told him: Your candidate in my constituency is against a salary increase. He said: "Oh, it is not serious, it is only because he was not elected. Had he been elected, he would have been for the increase, like all the others." This is the answer of the Postmaster General, who presides at the Liberal convention in his constituency.

Mr. Speaker, it all depends on whether the increase is to your advantage or not. Some are afraid to take position because they are afraid to be criticized.

Yesterday, I said that the press in general was responsible for criticism among the population because the people have not been told the truth. They have not been told in detail what the increase provided by Bill C-44 entails. Yesterday, I talked about the constituency of Villeneuve; in my constituency, I also made an investigation and 90 per cent of the people replied: "Of course, we do not object to paying you adequately, because you give us the services that we expect."

Mr. Speaker, I am not afraid to support Bill C-44. I said yesterday and I repeat today that some people get more money than the members of Parliament and, if they do not get what they want, they even go on strike. People who earn $40,000, $35,000 or $30,000 a year go on strike to get salary increases and the New Democrats are the first to stand up and defend those people by asking the government to give in and accept the increases or indexations requested. Mr. Speaker, we are not opposed to civil servants getting an adequate salary. However, I object, and my colleagues also object to people, like the New Democrats, trying to rouse the population against the members of Parliament simply to attract votes during the next election. They did the same thing before the election of July 8 and, just before the election, I had told the then leader in the House—I was sitting on the other side at the time: Because of your attitude, half of your members will be returned on July 8, and you will not be one of them. On election night, he was the one who was not returned and about half the members of the New Democratic Party were reelected. Why? Because they tried cunning tricks and told the government: You will do as we tell you or you will be defeated. When people are in a minority, when they have the balance of power, those things are possible. I told them: You now have a strength you may never have again in your life. I say it again today. If they want to play politics with that, Mr. Speaker, they are 16, after the next election, in two, three, four or five years, half of their present number of members, not more than eight, will be reelected.

Mr. Speaker, electors are fed up with being told stories by people who cannot be more serious than they have been this afternoon. We hear them talk, they sound like offended virgins. I say they are not offended virgins, but whited sepulchres, in the eyes of public opinion. If they vote against Bill C-44, that is their business, but if they do so for purely political, electoral purposes, I say they are not serious, and if they are not first honest with themselves, they are not honest with Parliament, with the people of Canada. If there are poor people in Canada, let us work to help them. It is not by begging or by being without money that we will improve the lot of the Canadian people. Hon. Members should not spend two weeks studying this bill, for they must keep on working in the best interests of the Canadian people.

[English]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, may I begin by saying to the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) that if we oppose this bill, as the majority of the members of this party do, we are not taking that position in expectation of any political gain being made by our opposition.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Orlikow: I have never believed that the hullabaloo about this issue created by the press reflected a tremendous interest on the part of thousands of Canadians. The number of letters I received in my office and the number of telephone calls to my home and my constituency office did not total more than two dozen altogether. I have had more letters and communications on other issues than I have on this one. Therefore, I do not believe the public is very excited about this question. I sent a questionnaire to every household in my constituency last January, and according to the replies that came back, substantially more than 50 per cent of the people receiving the questionnaire—which included a question on MPs salaries—indicated they supported an increase in the indemnities paid to members of parliament.

So if my party or I oppose this bill, it is not because a substantial number of people will take my opposition to it to be such that they are going to run to support me in the next election. I do not believe that for a moment. By the time the next election comes around, this question, in my view, will have been long forgotten. I oppose this bill not because I think members of parliament are not entitled to an increase to their indemnity, but because I think we have not really thought through what the increase should be or in what form we should receive it.

Members of parliament are faced with the same problems as every other Canadian citizen as a result of the sharp increases we have experienced in the cost of living during the last couple of years. I believe, therefore, as I have said, that some increase is justified. But we should keep in mind that members of parliament are already among the top 5 per cent income earners in this country. A look at the daily newspaper in any city of Canada very quickly reveals that all of the traditional income relationships between the various groups in Canadian society, such as the blue collar workers, the white collar workers, professional people, teachers, lawyers, doctors, are under attack. These income relationships are disappearing. We see groups in Canadian society who a few years ago would have recoiled in horror had anyone suggested that they were part of the labour force of this country.

Groups of nurses in my city two weeks ago set a deadline for a strike unless they received a pay increase of about 50 per cent. Doctors in the province of Manitoba working in psychiatric hospitals and other institutions have set a strike deadline; they may have gone on strike today. High school teachers in Ottawa have been on strike for more than four weeks. Why is all this happening, Mr. Speaker? Are these groups asking for too much? I do not know, because I have no way of judging; but I believe they are simply reacting to the free enterprise system under which we live, which teaches every one of these groups in the country: Look out for yourself because nobody else will protect you.

In the three years between 1972 and 1975 we have witnessed extraordinary increases in the profit margins of the corporations of this country. I should like to quote a few examples taken from the Globe and Mail, which nobody would accuse of being a very radical organ of public opinion. According to its issue for November 19, 1974, for the first nine months of 1974 profits of all industries increased by 36.2 per cent over the same period in 1973. Profits in 1973 were as much ahead of 1972 as the profits in 1974 were ahead of the profits of 1973. So if all companies had increased profits of 36.2 per cent, is it any wonder that teachers, postmen, letter carriers, nurses and firemen are asking for a 40 per cent increase? They are taking an example from people who have made substantially more than them.

Then on December 24, 1974, the Globe and Mail followed up its article by giving some examples of profit margins of different groups. Oil company profits for the first nine months of 1974 were up by 103 per cent over the same nine months of 1973. Chemical companies' profits were up 118 per cent in 1974 over 1973. Paper and forest companies' profits were up 78 per cent in the first nine months of 1974 over the same period of 1973. Imperial Oil, a corporation which I assume will be getting a $2 or $3 increase this week in the price of a barrel of oil, showed a profit in the first nine months of 1974 of $252 million, almost $100 million over the profit for the first nine months of 1973 when it made only $154 million!

As I say, Mr. Speaker, is it any wonder that these groups are asking for increases in their wages and salaries? I am surprised they have not asked for more. Last year the cost of living rose by over 12 per cent. Thus we have a situation where we have very large wage and salary demands in both the private and public sectors of the Canadian economy, since workers are trying very hard to catch up or perhaps get a little ahead. That is a fact with which we have to live.

Let us look at what is happening to the people employed by the federal government. I am struck by the vast difference in the way in which the government deals with employees in the upper levels compared with those in the lower levels. At the top of the range, the maximum salary for a deputy minister was recently raised from $50,000 to $60,000. At the top, I find that more than 4,000 public servants receive a salary of $25,500 or more a year. There were 2,000 public servants who in 1974 earned $18,000 a year and more and were permitted to earn overtime pay, some of them as much as $5,000 in the year. The number of SX employees grew from about 350 in 1968 to almost 900 in 1973. That shows the way the government has created employees at the top—generously.

So far as lower levels of employees are concerned, the low and middle income earners, the government has been tough. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) was quoted as saying one evening on television that there would never be a Chrétien formula like the St. Lawrence Seaway formula, that he was going to protect the people of Canada against excessive wage and salary settlements. He stuck to his guns, and the federal public servants who belong to the Public Service Alliance of Canada went on strike and stayed on strike for weeks. They eventually got an agreement which gave them an increase in the neighbourhood of 29 per cent over the next 26 months. This is not much more than the increase in the cost of living and is probably not much more than the increase will be next year.

I believe there is a very fundamental, completely unfair and unwarranted difference in the way the government deals with senior public servants and those at the lower levels, just as there is a vast difference in the way the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) permits corporations to make excessively large profits and then appeals to the average Canadian to exercise restraint in wage and salary demands.

The proposal in reference to this increase for members of parliament is in the same vein as those that have been made for senior public servants. I agree that an increase is warranted and I say parenthetically, if we get an increase, I will spend it. However, is the size of the proposed increase warranted? I do not believe it is warranted, any more than the increases given to senior public servants and members of the private sector, senior executives and shareholders, were warranted. The proposed increase should have been of a more modest nature. I go along with the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) who suggested that the increase should be calculated from the time of the last election.

It is my belief now, as it has been since I came here, that there can be no justification for any tax-free allowance for members of parliament. To my knowledge, no other citizen is permitted an allowance for which he does not have to account. This proposal is wrong for that reason, and it is wrong because it is unfair as between members of parliament. Let me explain what I mean by that. There is a vast difference in the amount of my expenses, coming from an urban riding, and the expenses of the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Smith), for example, whose constituency encompasses more than 50 per cent of the province of Manitoba. The expense of a chartered aircraft, which is the only way he can get into isolated communities, is prohibitive. His expenses are probably small when compared to the expenses of my colleague, the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth).

I have always believed that the tax-free allowance ought to be wiped out and that members of parliament should perhaps have an allowance for which they must account through vouchers, or they should be permitted to deduct legitimate expenses in calculating their income tax, just as in the case of self-employed persons.

I am opposed to percentage increases across the board, and I know in that regard I am in disagreement with friends and colleagues in the labour movement with whom I have worked for many years. A percentage increase across the board works simply to widen the gap between citizens in this country. As an illustration of what I mean, I refer to the circular which members of parliament received some weeks ago outlining increases in the wages and salaries of people working for the House of Commons. I do not have the document before me, but I remember the broad outline. As I remember it, all members of the House of Commons staff received an increase of between 10 per cent and 11 per cent. That means that the people who work in the cafeteria or the restaurant received an increase of probably $500 or $600 a year, whereas some of the senior people got an increase of between $3,000 and $4,000, or perhaps even higher.

It is this kind of proposal which I believe is fundamentally wrong, in that all it does is widen the income gap between people at the lower levels and those at the top. For the same reason, I do not believe that members of parliament, who are in fact among the top 3 per cent or 4 per cent of income earners in this country, should get a full cost of living increase. If we are seriously trying to respond to the inflationary spiral in which we find ourselves, surely we should be worrying about the people at the lower end of the income scale. If anybody should get a full cost of living increase, they should. If people at the upper levels of the income scale get a cost of living increase, it should not be the full increase in the cost of living. The people of Canada want this country to move toward greater equity than we have seen in recent years, and what we are doing with this increase for members of parliament, as well as increases for people in the public and private sectors, is widening the income gap.

I should like to make one more point before sitting down. It seems to me ridiculous, to say the least, to be discussing the proposal before us today at a time when the Minister of Finance tells us, as members of the radio, television and news media have told us, he is meeting with leaders in industry and agriculture as well as provincial premiers and labour leaders in an attempt to obtain a consensus in respect of a policy of restraint to deal with inflation. I have never believed that a voluntary or a legislated policy of wage and price controls could work. You cannot deal with inflation, which is a worldwide phenomenon, through a system of wage and price controls. That is what the official opposition advocated during the last election campaign, and apparently that is the line the Minister of Finance is trying to adopt today.

It is ridiculous for the Minister of Finance to be preaching a policy of restraint and urging labour leaders to convince their members to show restraint, when at the same time members of parliament are engaged in a debate regarding an increase in their indemnity far higher than the increase any group of workers has been able to get through negotiation or strike. This is particularly ridiculous at a time when our labour leaders have been having a difficult time getting their rank and file members to ratify some of the best offers or agreements they have ever been able to negotiate, because they felt they were not enough and they have been on the short end of the stick for too long.

I do not believe the consensus the minister is looking for can be achieved. I do not believe he can obtain that consensus from labour, from industry, from the agricultural community and from the provincial governments. In other words, I do not believe that consensus can be fully implemented. Having said that, it seems to me that for parliament to agree to such a large increase as that proposed would make a mockery of the whole appeal for restraint. I believe we ought to be looking toward greater, rather than less, equity. Therefore, I simply cannot vote for the proposal before us.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, when I talk to people about parliament and its function, one of the things that immediately comes up in the conversation is the matter of governing the country. Inherent in this is the provision of some kind of leadership. We hear from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) that inflation is getting out of hand and he is attempting to arrive at a consensus between workers, business and other groups in order to restrain the runaway demands which various sectors of the economy are making. At the same time the minister is doing this, the 264 members of this House, who are supposed to be governing and providing some kind of leadership, are asking for a wage increase that can only be interpreted by the people as highly inflationary.

I fear that the result of the passage of this bill,—and it will pass because of the Liberal majority—will be that the workers, unionized and non-unionized, will say that if members of parliament can do it, so can they. In other words, if those who are supposed to provide some kind of leadership in this country originally asked for 50 per cent and settled for a compromise of 33⅓ per cent and the yearly escalation, which by the end of this parliament will give us more than the original 50 per cent, how can we expect, in all honesty, that the workers of this country will accept any kind of consensus proposal by the Minister of Finance?

I think that this bill and the response of the Liberal, and indeed the Conservative, members is an indication that there is a belief on their part that there is no chance of beating inflation in this country; that things are out of hand and it is a case of every man and woman for himself or herself. It would seem that the idea is to make as high a demand as possible, stick to it and gain a salary or wage increase that will insulate one from a worsening inflationary situation because this government has abdicated its responsibility to halt inflation.

Having in mind the debate on the legislation to send the railway workers back to work during the twenty-ninth parliament, and also having in mind some of the comments one hears from members of parliament in this House during the question period and other debates, it would seem that some members are outraged by the demands the working people make and point the finger at them as contributing to inflation. I find that on the whole, up until now the workers primarily are asking for one of two things, either a catch-up settlement because they are behind other workers in society, or a cost of living increase to make up for the loss in real wages because of inflation, as well as an insulator for projected inflation; because we hear projections that even though the cost of living went up 12 per cent last year, there will still be two-digit inflation in the year ahead. So it is logical, if the buying power of wages declined 12 per cent last year and there is a prediction of another 12 per cent this year, that the workers should ask for a cost of living increase.

When I ask my constituents what they think about a wage increase for members of parliament and mention that the last increase was in 1970, they agree that we should not have to fall behind. That is why the New Democratic Party has put forward a proposal that we should receive a salary increase based on the increase in the cost of living since our last wage adjustment in 1970. It is also the reason that back in December we so vigorously opposed the government's attempt to bring in a 50 per cent wage increase. Our opposition in the House, plus general public outrage, forced the government to back down.

Now, however, when we look at the so-called compromise, or backing down, we find that the 33⅓ per cent will be on the full amount of $26,000 which represents the basic wage of $18,000 plus another $8,000 for expenses. We also hear that the government will propose amendments to cover a yearly increase in our salaries based on the industrial composite wage index. As I said earlier in my remarks, we will in the long run receive more under that formula than under the original formula. The position of the New Democratic Party is that just as workers should legitimately demand a cost of living increase, so should members of parliament. That is why we propose a salary adjustment from 1970 based on the cost of living increase, which is somewhat less than 30 per cent; but we say the increase should be on the basic salary of $18,000 and not on the amount of $26,000 as proposed by the government.

[Mr. Symes.]

One might ask why there should not be an increase in the $8,000 expense allowance. Other members of my party outlined this very clearly, but I wish to mention briefly that so many of the services we previously paid for are now provided by the government while at the same time we still have the tax-free amount of $8,000. We now have a constituency office which is paid for. We have a constituency secretary whose wages are paid by the government. We also have free newsletter mailing four times a year. This is a privilege we did not have in earlier parliaments. Also, our plane fare once a week to our riding is paid by the government. So we say the tax-free $8,000 is sufficient to take care of the legitimate expenses of a member of parliament in serving his constituents.

The point that the government makes is—and I listened to the arguments put forward by government members—that our expenses have gone up and therefore the expense allowance should increase. The point is also made that we need higher salaries in order to attract well qualified people to political office. I find that a rather condescending attitude. The suggestion would seem to be that the best kind of people for the Parliament of Canada, representing 22 million Canadians, are those in the upper-income professions such as businessmen, lawyers, doctors, and so on.

It is suggested that these people sometimes have better political know-how and common sense than ordinary working people who may be making a wage of $10,000 or less. I have listened to debates in the House in which professionals such as lawyers, doctors, businessmen and academics have taken part, and I have often concluded that if we had more ordinary working people in the House, we would have more common sense in our debates than we have had so far this session.

So I reject totally the argument that we must have high salaries to attract a certain kind of person to run for political office. By running for office, we as members of parliament accept, I should hope, the principle of sacrifice for public office from the point of view of the demand that is made on our time, the demand that is made on our family life and the demand on our income. I think we must realize that this is a service and is not something that should have attached to it the remuneration for some other type of work. How can you measure what an MP should be worth compared with members of other professions? I think we would be remiss if we forgot the idea of dedication to public life and what that entails.

I think that this bill also points out a larger issue, that is, the issue that concerns members of my party: it is not, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) said, that we expect any political advantage, come election time, from our stand; it will be forgotten by the electorate by 1978. But the fact is that there is an important principle at stake in this whole issue of salary increases for members of parliament. We in this party believe that it is the responsibility of a democratically elected government, a government representing the rich, the middle-income people and the poor in this country, to try to narrow the gap, to reduce the inequality between the wealthy and the poor, and to try to provide a better life for those less fortunate who are in this situation often through no fault of their own.

The average worker in 1974 was making only $8,677 a year, yet I hear my colleagues saying that they need an increase which will bring their salary to $39,000 a year. Many of the arguments are legitimate because our lifestyles are different, but I still think that we are failing if we concentrate on the income of members of parliament and ignore narrowing the gap between the rich and the poor in this country. Our tax system has not narrowed the gap; and despite all the claims of the Liberal government that they are bringing in tax relief, it has not happened. We have five million Canadians living below the poverty line, and I think we have a responsibility to them as well as to ourselves to set some kind of example and to institute some kind of reform in our tax system. In 1970, 46 per cent of Canadian families earned less than $8,000 a year, 61 per cent of Canadian families earned less than $10,000 a year, and 86 per cent earned less than $15,000 a year. I think we have a responsibility to them and not just to ourselves with regard to our salaries.

The failure of the government to redistribute wealth through our tax system places an additional burden on people in low income groups, as does the failure of this government to control inflation. Here we are saying, well, we are suffering from inflation but the difference is that we can do something about it for ourselves. We could do something about it for these people as well if the government had the courage to reform our tax system and the way in which wealth is distributed in this country. It does not do that, but it says that members of parliament must be protected. This is really following the philosophy of the capitalist system, that everybody is out for himself and the strong survive; the strong make claims, but the weak perish; that once in a while a token gesture can be made to keep the poor and disadvantaged quiet, and that is all that is necessary.

Corporations in this country can raise prices without justification. Don't tell me that there is a free market economy and competition to keep prices down, when we are into the stage of monopoly control. So corporations can increase prices without justification; but workers, when they want increased wages, have to justify it and bargain for it, both union and non-union workers—especially non-union workers, who are in a very weak position. Yet members of parliament who want a salary increase are not like the majority of Canadians. With whom do we bargain? We bargain with ourselves. Like the professional groups of doctors, lawyers and businessmen, we set our own prices, our own salaries, our own fees.

I say that is wrong, that no one should have that kind of unlimited power. That is why, if we are following the principle of bargaining which most people have to accept, one of the functions of the opposition is to stand up and make members justify a wage increase. We in the opposition are asking the government to bargain, to make their point as to why members need the kind of increase that the government is proposing. When we examine their arguments, we find them inadequate.

My parliamentary leader and other speakers from our caucus have outlined why we think it is unreasonable and inappropriate at this time to have a 50 per cent increase or a 33⅓ per cent increase based on $26,000. We have asked the government to justify this increase. Their arguments fall far short. We are in a period of almost runaway inflation; the government has failed to control it. We are at a time in our history when we have to show some leadership, some restraint so that we can expect others in our society to co-operate and restrain what I think are legitimate demands because of the failure of this government to control inflation.

I say that we are setting a very bad example and a dangerous one. More contracts are coming up for renegotiation in this year than in many previous years, and every worker in this country will say, "Members of parliament received a large increase. What makes them so much better than me? I will demand it as well". I predict that we will have a problem in the House a few months hence, and that we will be in the odious position of limiting the legitimate demands of workers while at the same time accepting this outrageous proposal by the government. A cost of living increase is justified, but we cannot accept or justify the proposal in this bill.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baldwin: Before Your Honour sees the clock approaching six, I should like to ask the government House leader what he proposes to put before us tomorrow.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put as the first order of business tomorrow the amendments to the Farm Credit Act, Bill C-34. If we dispose of that we might get back to Bill C-13.

At 5.54 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

PROPOSAL TO ASCERTAIN REASON FOR REDUCTION IN CAPITAL SPENDING IN CANADA BY UNITED STATES AFFILIATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. The matter arises from a United States commerce department survey indicating that Canadian affiliates of U.S. controlled corporations will be reducing the real level of their capital investment spending in 1975 to a level far below that which would be indicated by the latest Statistics Canada survey. In view of the great importance of capital investment by U.S. affiliates to the Canadian economy as a whole, and, in particular, to the finance minister's supply increase strategy, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies):

That this House instruct the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to ascertain forthwith whether U.S. affiliates plan to reduce capital investment in Canada and to enquire amongst his counterparts in the United States why such a reduction would occur; and further, that this House instruct the Secretary of State for External Affairs to discover any changes that may have been made in the policy of the United States government towards the investment intentions of U.S. affiliates in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is present pursuant to Standing Order 43 and cannot be debated without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AGRICULTURE

SUGGESTED FEDERAL SUPPORT OF CANADIAN EGG MARKETING AGENCY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisons of Standing Order 43 to propose a motion regarding the announcement of the agreement reached between the federal Minister of Agriculture and his provincial counterparts on measures to give the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency greater control over production and marketing of eggs. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

That this House instruct the Minister of Agriculture to provide all the necessary support and assistance to the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency to ensure that it will carry out its new powers with greater efficiency and render the destruction of eggs as a thing of the past.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion is proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43 and requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED PUBLIC INQUIRY INTO STATEMENTS BY FRENCH MILITARY AUTHORITIES CONCERNING BOARDING OF "GREENPEACE III"—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I also would move a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the statement by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) yesterday that no conversations took place between Canadian and French authorities on the question of Canadian retaliation, or lack of it, in the illegal boarding of the Greenpeace III by French authorities, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That a public inquiry be held into these most serious allegations made by French military authorities in this matter, and that that inquiry be conducted pursuant to the Inquiries Act.

Mr. Speaker: This motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

STRIKE OF LONGSHOREMEN IN QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO SETTLE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Labour. I wish to ask about the strike of stevedores which is tying up the ports of Montreal, Three Rivers and Quebec. Can the Acting Prime Minister now tell the House, following a series of very vague responses to questions in the last few days, whether any initiatives are being taken to promote a settlement of the dispute which has been leading to the tie-up, and what are those steps?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the steps that can be taken under the existing legislative authority are being taken. We have not reached any decision to go beyond that at the present time. Steps are also being taken to see what can be done to reduce the interference that is taking place in the movement of grain out of these terminals in areas that are not related to the dispute itself. I cannot describe as yet what the success of those measures will be because they are just getting underway.

● (1410)

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry the Minister of Labour is not here as he presumably has more direct knowledge of these things than the government House leader. Am I correct in interpreting the minister's answer as an indication that the government is considering certain courses but is actually taking no initiative with regard to promoting a settlement of this dispute at the present time?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the government is taking the measures it ordinarily takes under the law in order to promote a settlement, but it is not proposing to ask parliament to take extraordinary action at the present time. However, there are two aspects to this dispute, as the Leader of the Opposition probably knows. One aspect relates not to the movement of grain into the ships that would be under the control of the longshoremen, which is affected by the dispute, but to the movement of trucks to the elevators to pick up feed grain for the farmers in the area. We are examining this now to see what steps can be taken which would enable that movement to continue.

STRIKE OF LONGSHOREMEN IN QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON RECOMMENDATIONS OF JUDGE GOULD

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that when the grain handlers' dispute arose last year the government moved right in, endorsing and urging acceptance of the Perry recommendations, even while negotiations were going on, is the government proposing to engage in the same kind of intervention now by endorsing the Gould recommendations and, if not, what is the difference between the two situations?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be advisable to continue with the mediation efforts which are now underway.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

GRAIN

INQUIRY WHETHER DIVERSION OF SHIPMENTS FROM WEST COAST TO EAST COAST PART OF CATCH-UP CONTINGENCY PLAN

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. On February 26 the minister announced he was looking at "a number of plans" to move grain "with an attempt to catch up as quickly as possible" after the strike ends, and that reference was to the strike on the west coast. In view of the announcement by the Wheat Board a few days ago to cut grain shipments destined through the Port of Vancouver by 10 million bushels a month and redirecting this amount through the St. Lawrence and the Maritimes, would the minister advise the House whether this is part of the contingency plans to which he referred on February 26?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to check the exact proposition to which the hon. member refers as it has not come to my attention. The fact of the matter is that the contingency plan for the period after the strike was one involving a maximum effort on the part of the railways to put as many cars into the west coast as possible, and a maximum effort on the part of the terminals there to unload for more hours than usual and to clean on an around the clock basis. These efforts have been putting a record volume of grain particularly through the Port of Vancouver, and very remarkably reducing the number of ships waiting there in quick order.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Wheat Board announced on April 3 that because of labour problems at the Port of Vancouver shipments would be diminished by 10 million bushels a month. I would ask, first, if the minister is aware of this and whether this is now the policy of the Wheat Board, because the answer the minister has just given the House would appear to indicate that the Wheat Board is making announcements of which the minister is not aware?

Mr. Lang: That is right, Mr. Speaker. That can happen quite frequently, of course, because the Canadian Wheat Board is in fact a very independent organization, which hon. members opposite seem to forget whenever it is to their advantage to do so.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: I do not, nor did my predecessors as ministers, try to run the operations of the Wheat Board or interfere with its management, and that has certainly been the very firm practice of this government. I would suggest that the statement that somehow labour difficulties could lead to the diminution of the throughput out of the west coast is a very strange one in view of the fact that the reports which have been sent to me in the last three or four days show an increase in unloadings to the neighbourhood of 650 to 690 carloads a day, which is a near record performance.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the minister whether he will undertake an investigation to determine whether there is to be a diminution of 10 million bushels a month through the Port of Vancouver and report back to the House as soon as he has found out what the situation really is?

Mr. Lang: That is one service I am always very glad to perform. I will check into the matter with the Canadian Wheat Board and report back as soon as possible.

PUBLIC SERVICE

DISPUTE WITH LETTER CARRIERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON CONCILIATION BOARD REPORT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the President of the Treasury Board I should like to direct my question to the Postmaster General or the acting Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the conciliation board appointed to deal with the dispute between the letter carriers union and the government has now made a report, has the government reached a decision about whether to accept the recommendation contained in the majority report of the conciliation board?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Well, Mr. Speaker, I think upon reflection the hon. gentleman would appreciate the fact there is no indication as yet that the union has accepted the conciliation chairman's report as it is written.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the letter carriers union will be in a legal position to strike on Monday next week, and in view of the tremendous difficulty such a strike would create, would the minister consider making public the response of the government by the weekend so that the union can be encouraged to give sympathetic consideration to that majority report?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I must emphasize that there is no majority report. There is the chairman's report which the union accepted with an addendum which changes basically the union's position beyond that of the chairman. Between now and Monday I am sure the talks will continue between the union and the bargaining team of the government, or Treasury Board or the Post Office or whatever, and when it is appropriate to make a public statement then I am sure one will be made.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North on a final supplementary.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that when conciliation board reports of a similar nature have been made the government has accepted the recommendations when it suited it, I appeal again to the minister to indicate publicly if the government is prepared to accept as a basis for settlement the recommendation of the chairman or if not what guidelines the government is prepared to accept in order to avoid, not just this strike, but any other strikes which have had and will have some serious effect upon the people of Canada as a whole?

Mr. Mackasey: Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to appear obstinate—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You are doing a pretty good job.

Mr. Mackasey: —but there is bargaining. There has been continuous bargaining with this particular union since January and we have established a very good relationship with it. We have no intention of jeopardizing this by making a revelation in the House of Commons. I think the union should be the first to know if and when we are ready to declare our final position.

POSTAL WORKERS—DATE OF GOVERNMENT REPLY TO UNION PROPOSALS

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary which relates to the question I asked the Acting President of the Treasury Board yesterday. Could he now indicate when the Treasury Board will be making a response to the representation of the CUPW union with regard to negotiations taking place in this important area of postal services?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Acting President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the plan is to endeavour to speed up negotiations in respect of this particular contract which have not been progressing perhaps as rapidly as they should. It is our intention to endeavour to make these move more rapidly.

COMMUNICATIONS

CABLEVISION—ALLEGED FAILURE TO KEEP PROMISE TO PROVINCES OF CONSULTATION

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Communications.

Last month, the CRTC announced hearings would be held in the spring on the legislation which the federal government intends to pass on teledistribution and cablevision. This has prompted the Ontario Minister of Communications, supported by the Quebec and Manitoba ministers, to denounce this step as being an undue and exasperating intrusion into provincial affairs, especially since the federal government had promised preliminary consultations with the provinces. My question is as follows. Since there seems to be some inconsistency between the proposed consultation and the CRTC statement, can the Minister of Communications make a report on the matter and tell the House the position of his department in this regard and if there is any new development?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I can try to enlighten the hon. member as briefly as possible on a matter which, I admit, has rather complex aspects. But first of all, I think the hon. member is not well informed. The CRTC will not hold any hearing on legislation. The CRTC holds hearings on certain matters regarding cable diffusion under powers the Broadcasting Act gave to it. Those hearings will be held in June.

I have stated in the House the other day that I had offered the provinces, under certain circumstances and according to a certain agenda, to hold a federal-provincial conference with provincial ministers of communications. I am pleased to be able to announce that the provincial ministers of communications have endorsed the agenda. We have reached an agreement, and the conference will be held on May 13. To conclude, a third point, Mr. Speaker: there is no conflict between the Broadcasting Act and the hearings the CRTC wants to hold. Indeed, it is under the Broadcasting Act and on its own right that the CRTC has planned those hearings. It is because the Broadcasting Act takes into account the exclusive federal jurisdiction over broadcasting in general and on cable diffusion in particular. As for the negotiations or discussions we must have with provinces, they will not deal with jurisdictional transfers, but could lead to agreements under which the provinces' point of view on communications problems could be better respected.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ALLEGED FAILURE OF CORPORATION TO INCLUDE ALL FRENCH CANADIANS IN ST-JEAN-BAPTISTE CELEBRATIONS

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Communications.

The minister has just stated that there will be meetings and consultations in June concerning radio broadcasting. Also in June, French Canadians in Quebec will honour their patron saint, Saint-Jean-Baptiste. We have just received a leaflet entitled Québec Fête and signed by Mrs. Lise Payette. Is the minister aware that Mrs. Payette is announcing now that, to really make something out of the June 24 celebrations, she will invite sport and TV stars, as well as political personalities both at the municipal and provincial levels, to take the first turn. Time will show. However, Mr. Speaker, my question is this: Will the minister allow a small organization which claims that there are French Canadians in Quebec and nowhere else in Canada, to use the CBC broadcasting facilities? Mr. Speaker, it is about time the minister take a stand and state here and now, as I hope he will, that the federal government will not let this Montreal gang dictate its actions.

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the only reply I can make to the hon. member is that it is about time he realized, after some two and a half years, that I am no longer the Secretary of State.

FINANCE

SUGGESTED EARLIER DATE THAN END OF MAY FOR BUDGET

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. Given the fact that in the discussions that are taking place currently between the first ministers and the Prime Minister about the price of oil and gas it is clear that one of the major stumbling blocks is the tax regime that was created and the budget brought down by the federal government last fall, is the government prepared to revise its timetable and introduce the federal budget earlier than on the proposed end of May date that has been put forward so far?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): I have no reason to think that my colleague would wish to change that date. I believe that it is important that the budget be well prepared and take into account a thorough review of economic conditions and prospects. I see no reason to change that date on the basis of the suggestion made by my hon. friend.

Mr. Gillies: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Acting Prime Minister—

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Témiscamingue seeks to rise on a question of privilege or on a point of order. The rules adopted by the House and which came into effect this week require that questions of privilege and points of order be postponed till three o'clock. I shall recognize him for his question of privilege or point of order at three o'clock this afternoon.

ALLEGED INABILITY OF PROVINCES TO AGREE ON NEW OIL PRICE UNTIL BUDGET INTRODUCED

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Given the fact that several first ministers, and particularly the premier of the province of Alberta, have already stated that it would be very difficult for that province to come to any kind of satisfactory agreement with respect to prices until the new budget is down, is the Acting Prime Minister therefore saying today that the federal government is taking the position that no agreement is necessary until after the end of May?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think it would greatly facilitate a decision in this matter if the House could proceed as quickly as possible with the Petroleum Administration Act which would give the government the necessary authority to deal with prices of oil and gas.

Mr. Gillies: Is the Acting Prime Minister therefore saying that the federal government has given up any hopes of arriving at an agreement without going to the bill to which he is now referring?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker, but I think the hon. member will recall that the premier of Ontario felt that it might be desirable to have that bill passed as quickly as possible and urged upon this House, and particularly upon his own party, the desirability of such action.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—INQUIRY WHETHER PROVISIONAL REVOLUTIONARY GOVERNMENT ADVISED CANADA WILL CONTINUE TO EXTEND HUMANITARIAN AID

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): My question, Mr. Speaker, is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the Canadian government indicated to the provisional revolutionary government in Viet Nam that Canada will extend humanitarian aid to the victims of the war irrespective of where they live in Viet Nam so that the airlift of orphans and children can cease to be regarded as a principal instrument of our help? If this communication took place, what was the response of the PRG?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, we have not made any such approach to the PRG. We have no diplomatic or other relations with the PRG. We are operating through the recognized international agencies, and through these agencies it is impossible to have humanitarian assistance directed to the areas in need in that troubled country. I do not think the approach suggested, in the circumstances, is necessary.

VIET NAM—POSSIBILITY OF APPOINTING CO-ORDINATOR OF ASSISTANCE AND INCREASING AMOUNT

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Recognizing the willingness of the Canadian government to work through international agencies, specifically the U.N., has the Canadian government appointed a co-ordinator of Viet Nam humanitarian assistance so that the government of Viet Nam, whoever controls it, will be aware of our willingness to spend that $6.25 million announced previously for the good of people in Viet Nam, and will that aid be increased?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): With regard to the second part of the question, I indicated when the initial announcement was made with respect to the $6 million plus assistance that we were assessing the need and future needs, and it may well be that we will be required to increase that assistance.

With regard to the first part of the question, I do not see the need at the present time of appointing a particular co-ordinator to administer this aid. We are in touch with the international agencies, and if the time comes when a different approach is necessary, we will consider it, but in the meantime we are getting our aid distributed in the most effective possible way.

VIET NAM—OFFER OF AID BY CANADIAN FRIENDS OF CHILDREN OF VIET NAM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I am wondering if the minister has been made aware, either by his department or directly by an organization called the Canadian Friends of Children of Viet Nam, that they now have undertaken by agencies to supply 100 tons of dehydrated food which can be shipped by commercial lines to Hong Kong and then by military charter flights into Viet Nam. Has he been made aware of that, and has he turned down that suggestion by that organization in Toronto?

● (1430)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would have to check on the specific organization but in these circumstances it is usually better to provide assistance in the form of cash. We generally urge interested citizens to provide cash, because it is certainly a more mobile form of aid and meets the situation more readily. In some cases, we find it difficult to provide economical transportation and it sometimes happens that transportation costs equal or exceed the amount of the physical aid that is being offered. In this particular case, I will examine the details and see whether there is anything that can be done.

Mr. Woolliams: One further question, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the minister's answer. When he is investigating this I wonder if he would look very carefully at the suggestion of this organization which came up with three commercial airlines ready and willing to fly this food to Hong Kong from where it could be taken into Viet Nam by military charter planes. Has there been objection to this by his department because the Americans are working with the military charter planes?

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Speaker, that would not enter into the picture at all. The hon. member has made a suggestion and I can assure him that it will be considered very carefully.

FLOODS

RECOMMENDATIONS OF INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION CONCERNING RICHELIEU RIVER AND LAKE CHAMPLAIN—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON IMPLEMENTATION

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Following the report of the International Joint Commission pressing the governments of those two countries to act rapidly and put a stop to the damages along the Richelieu river and the shores of Lake Champlain, has the minister approached the cabinet or any of the departments concerned, to take action, and are steps being taken jointly with Quebec which suffered losses amounting to $1.5 million in 1972?

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I know that the International Joint Commission has completed its studies with respect to the Richelieu river which involves considerations for both countries. In order to give a more authoritative answer I should like to consider the second part of the question more carefully.

[Translation]

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, I want to put a supplementary question to the Minister of the Environment.

During her recent stay in Washington, did the minister raise the question of the floods along the Richelieu river and on the shores of Lake Champlain, and can she tell us today, in view of the report, whether the government is in favour of building a regulating system and of dredging a channel, or whether it would rather, according to the second option, make an intensive joint study on the environment, to determine the implications of the regulating of the Richelieu river in both countries?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, during my stay in Washington, I did raise the matter concerning the Richelieu river and Lake Champlain.

I discussed the report of the International Joint Commission. That report suggests that we make an intensive study of the effects such protection works would have on the environment. For our part, we consider that previous studies have already established that these effects would be minimal. However, we would be prepared to conduct a study on a smaller scale on the specific questions the Americans have raised.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

POSSIBILITY OF NEW LABOUR RELATIONS MEASURES CONTAINING PROVISION FOR INNOCENT THIRD PARTY PARTICIPATION IN NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the comment of the Prime Minister yesterday that collective bargaining will not remain free if it cannot be made less destructive to Canada than it is today, is the government taking any measures to correct this situation in negotiation with labour-management organizations in order to bring about a new style in labour relations?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the general subject has been under review recently. As yet the government has no specific proposals to make but is hopeful that the studies under way will produce results which are better than the processes now going on.

Mr. Malone: I appreciate that answer, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the Acting Prime Minister could give an assurance that the government will bring in an innocent third party to such negotiations or studies especially in light of the fact that ten contracts are due in the grain industry this year? This is an industry which cannot in any way protect itself from the danger of strikes.

Mr. Sharp: The public interest is often involved in disputes of this kind, Mr. Speaker. I doubt very much, however, if it would help in the resolution of disputes if we were to bring in third parties. Perhaps the hon. gentleman has some ideas he would like to submit to the relevant committee.

AGRICULTURE

EFFECT OF LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE ON SUPPLY OF FEED GRAIN—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Charles Lapointe (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

The parliamentary assistant, in reply to a question yesterday, advised me that the Minister of Agriculture and the government are informed hourly of the situation regarding the movement of grain in Quebec, following the closing of some ports on the St. Lawrence. Is the minister in a position to say today what is the exact situation, because I kept receiving this morning urgent appeals from farmers telling me it is getting increasingly difficult for them to get supplies from mills?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the condition is rapidly deteriorating and unless injunctions are obtained to disallow the picketing at the elevators in Quebec City and Trois-Rivières, there will be some loss of poultry and livestock. We know people are being asked to share the feed that is in the area and feed is being trucked in from Montreal and Prescott. We do not think, however, that this will be sufficient to look after the needs that will be there in the next day or two.

FOOD PRICES REVIEW BOARD

ALLEGED REFUSAL OF BOARD TO GIVE INFORMATION ON MEAT OPERATIONS OF CANADA SAFEWAY TO MANITOBA LIVESTOCK AND MEAT COMMISSION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In his absence perhaps I might have the attention of the Acting Prime Minister or the Acting Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs who, I believe, is the Postmaster General. My question relates to the fact that the Food Prices Review Board has refused to give certain information concerning the meat operations of Canada Safeway in Manitoba to the Manitoba Livestock and Meat Commission. In view of the fact that Canada Safeway specifically authorized the Food Prices Review Board to convey this information to the commission in Manitoba, and in order to avoid duplication of hearings and to facilitate this investigation, will the minister take up this matter with the Food Prices Review Board in the hope that the issue will be resolved?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): The hon. member had his opportunity to make his representations on his question very clear. I will take the matter up with the appropriate minister at the first opportunity.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT REACTION TO PROPOSAL OF MANITOBA PREMIER CONCERNING PRICE CONTROLS

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): My question for the Acting Prime Minister concerns a very important conference that is going on this afternoon with regard to the economy. Could the minister indicate what the government's reaction will be to the proposals being advanced by the premier of Manitoba with regard to the necessity of price controls being imposed to deal with the problems of the economy?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance made a statement in the conference today in which he pointed out that price controls had not been accepted by the Canadian people as appropriate under present circumstances. He said that as far as this government is concerned it felt this was a much less desirable method than the procedure he favoured, namely, to try to bring about co-operation amongst various groups in the community toward certain stated objectives. These were set out in his statement to the conference.

Mr. Baldwin: I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister if he is able to advise the House of the position of the Premier of British Columbia and the Premier of Saskatchewan with respect to this very interesting suggestion by the Premier of Manitoba?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I was not one of those privileged to be present during these discussions. I understand that one of the private members on the other side managed to sneak in but I was otherwise engaged. I shall make an inquiry and I am sure the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister will report on the conference.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

INQUIRY WHETHER YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES REPRESENTED BY ELECTED REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Since Canadian citizens of the provinces are represented at the conference of first ministers by their elected representatives, can he inform me who is representing the people of the northern territories, of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, who are as vitally interested in the price of oil and in their economy as anybody else.

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry; I did know the names a couple of days ago. I can get the information and give it to the hon. member.

Mr. Nielsen: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Are those two territories of Canada represented by elected representatives from the territories?

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, no, I do not believe so.

Mr. Nielsen: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In that event, since the two territories come under the jurisdiction of the federal government and considering the views of the Prime Minister on the pricing of oil, can the minister say who is to express the views of the citizens of both northern territories in opposition to any increase in the price of oil?

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, this matter falls, in this case, within the purview of the federal government.

PENITENTIARIES

COWANSVILLE—CLASSIFICATION OF MURDERER OF INSTRUCTOR—SUGGESTED REVISION OF CLASSIFICATION PROCEDURES

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, my question has to do with the fatal beating of a penitentiaries commission official at Cowansville, Quebec, and is directed to the Solicitor General. I would ask—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, I will ask you—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if you, Sir, as the chief commoner in the House, would, when I put a question of serious nature, protect the right of an individual member and demand courtesy from the minions opposite.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is always possible for the chairman to intervene and demand silence. Generally speaking, this is much more effectively achieved by the putting of a precise question, which elicits an answer.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, I will reply. In the last six times—

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Grafftey: I am going to handle this right now, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has been recognized and has the floor for the purpose of putting a question. Perhaps he would do so, because there are several other hon. members who would like to put their questions.

Mr. Grafftey: Sir, I have tried to put my question, but it has been impossible, because of all the noise.

My question to the Solicitor General has to do with the fatal beating of a penitentiaries commission official at Cowansville, Quebec. Was the inmate suspected of being involved in this murder ever classified as a maximum security risk, and why was he transferred from a maximum security institution in Montreal to the medium security institution at Cowansville.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, these questions are presently under investigation by an administrative inquiry, as I mentioned yesterday in the House when answering a question asked by the hon. member for Témiscamingue.

An hon. Member: Too late, too late.

Mr. Alexander: Oh, shut up.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, may I direct this supplementary question to the Solicitor General: What classification procedures, if any, were followed before this inmate was transferred from the maximum security institution to the medium security institution at Cowansville. Since the Solicitor General has been told time and again that his classification procedures are in disarray, when will he review this matter and act on it?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the classification procedures have been reviewed and changed on several occasions. As I just told the hon. member, this particular case is being investigated by an administrative inquiry. I shall be willing to report to the House when that inquiry is completed.

HEALTH

ALCOHOLISM—CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES ON PREVENTIVE AND EDUCATIONAL MEASURES

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the alarming increase in alcoholism and its sequela, which a federal health minister has acknowledged to be a widespread dependence on drugs, and as alcoholism costs us over $1.5 billion a year and plays a significant part in 50 per cent of all automobile accidents and in suicides and homicides, what steps are being taken, with the provinces, in prevention and education?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question. At the last federal-provincial conference of health ministers held in February, 1974, a special work group dealing with alcohol problems was set up to co-ordinate planning and activities in the field of alcoholism with regard to treatment, rehabilitation, counselling and public education. We feel, as ministers, that this represents a major step taken by the two levels of government. I expect a report from this working group as soon as it has arrived at its conclusions. I will be pleased to give further details to the hon. member and his colleagues when my estimates are considered in committee next week.

[Mr. Grafftey.]

Mr. Rynard: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister consider prohibiting the advertising of alcoholic beverages, in conjunction with the provinces.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, this matter is being discussed at present at various levels between the provinces and the federal government. It has been discussed, particularly with representatives of the provinces and of the CRTC, in relation to broadcasting, but I am not aware of the conclusions of these discussions.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST OF UNITED KINGDOM FOR EARLY MEETING OF NATO—POSSIBILITY OF DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Privy Council in his capacity as Acting Prime Minister. As the United Kingdom has called for an urgent summit meeting of NATO in May, because of the concern throughout Europe about the spread of Communism in Portugal, Italy, France, all NATO countries, and the problems faced by Greece and Turkey, two NATO allies, has this matter been discussed with our NATO partner, the United States, and what action will Canada take in response to the request of the U.K.?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, discussed the idea of such a conference with the Secretary of State of the United States, Dr. Kissinger. We are giving consideration to it. Of course, if a meeting were called, and if it were agreeable to others, we would be there. However, the issue is this: is this the right time to call such a meeting. In general, I think this government would believe that a high level meeting on NATO affairs is desirable; but whether the timing of this meeting is the right one is the question before us.

EUROPEAN SECURITY CONFERENCE—RELATIONSHIP TO CALL FOR EARLY MEETING OF NATO—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is he, or the Acting Prime Minister, in a position to inform the House of the position Canada would adopt relative to the European Security Conference and does he see any relationship between the call by Britain for a summit meeting of NATO leaders and the European Security Conference.

● (1450)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): There is not the necessary relationship between a NATO summit meeting and a security conference. It is not possible for the security conference to conclude its work and be associated with a NATO summit meeting at the end of May. If the conference were to conclude its work this summer, it is conceivable that a NATO summit could be associated with that conference in the fall. But at the moment they are not connected.

Mr. Forrestall: The minister now appears to be telling the House that in the opinion of the government a meeting of the senior leaders of the NATO countries should not be held until there has been some disposition of the work of the security conference. Is that what he is saying?

Mr. MacEachen: No. That is not a firm policy. We are, as a government, concerned about further progress at the European Security Conference and we want to hang in there for a further period in order to improve this particular aspect of our international relations. The question of a NATO summit meeting at the present time has been dealt with by the Acting Prime Minister. While in principle we would favour a summit meeting, a question could be raised whether the timing—at the end of May—is appropriate.

HEALTH

POSTING OF PRICES OF PRESCRIPTION DRUGS—REQUEST GOVERNMENT TAKE NO ACTION AGAINST PHARMACISTS

Mr. Rod Blaker (Lachine-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that two Montreal drug store chains this morning challenged the Quebec College of Pharmacists by posting price comparisons of brand name and generic drugs, thus, in effect, finally giving Quebecers an opportunity to do their pharmaceutical shopping on the basis of price information, will the minister assure the House and the Quebec pharmacists that his department and the government will not participate in any legal actions which would or might result in consumers of pharmaceutical products being deprived of this kind of price comparison and consumer protection services?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, again this matter was discussed at the meeting of federal-provincial ministers of health in February, 1974. The federal government proposed the authorization of price posting of prescription drugs but the provinces were not unanimous on this proposal. However, it was agreed that we would pursue the matter further. We are not persuaded by the argument that price posting will increase drug abuse. It is my intention to see that the food and drug regulations are amended so as to permit price-posting. The new arrangement will, however, not extend to the advertizing of narcotic and controlled drugs which have a potential danger for abuse. I therefore do not intend to institute proceedings against drug stores which post prices in the current circumstances.

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT CONVEYED TO EGYPT ITS APPROVAL OF OPENING OF SUEZ CANAL—CANADIAN REPRESENTATION AT CEREMONIES

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the honourable and learned Secretary of State for External Affairs, coupled with my good wishes for the success of his African trip commencing tomorrow. Can he advise the House whether Canada has conveyed to the government of Egypt its approval of that country's contribution to the diminution of international hostility and economic hardship through the re-opening of the Suez Canal, and can he tell us whether the Canadian government is to be represented at the ceremonies marking the re-opening of this historic waterway? If so, would he like to take a political descendant of the great Benjamin Disraeli with him?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I thank the hon. member for his good wishes and his penetrating question which I should like to take as notice.

HEALTH

ACCESS TO THERAPEUTIC ABORTION COMMITTEES IN HOSPITALS—POSSIBILITY OF AMENDMENT TO CRIMINAL CODE

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I admit it has been asked before in different forms by the hon. members for Halton and for York South, but I am trying to reconcile differing views within the cabinet. How does the government intend to overcome the inequities perceived by the minister in relation to access to therapeutic abortion committees in hospitals, and is an amendment to the Criminal Code contemplated so that there might be equality of access to what the minister in his statement termed semi-public institutions?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, there are no differences of opinion among cabinet members on that matter. I said that the provisions of the act now in force are known. Unfortunately the benefits of the act are not equally available throughout the country; the provinces are responsible for administrating health services, especially hospitals, and there is very little the government can do to force an institution to take measures in that regard.

[English]

Mr. Fairweather: Does the minister not agree that a simple solution to this difficulty would be an amendment to the Criminal Code?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: I do not believe so because the Criminal Code as it is now constituted allows the creation of therapeutic abortion committees. The Criminal Code is purely permissive and it is up to the individual to make use of this permission.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REVERSAL OF JURY VERDICT BY COURT OF APPEAL—POSSIBILITY OF AMENDMENT TO CRIMINAL CODE

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. In the light of the decision by the Quebec Court of Appeal to superimpose its ruling over that reached at the jury trial in the Morgentaler case, and the recent confirmation of that decision by the Supreme Court of Canada, and taking account of the demoralizing effect this could have on the whole of the jury system, would the minister advise us whether consideration is being given to amendments to the Criminal Code so that appeal courts reversing jury decisions would be obliged to refer the trial back to the jury?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): We have already given some consideration to the implication of the decision whereby a court of appeal, uphelp by the Supreme Court, substituted a verdict for a jury verdict, with a view to determining whether any change in section 613 was required. It is our conclusion at this point that the very words of the Supreme Court in upholding the decision by the Quebec Court of Appeal set out sufficiently carefully the unlikelihood of this happening, the fact that this is a very rare occurrence and that there should be no fear at all of an adverse effect on the jury system. It was noted by the Supreme Court that this may have been the first time this has been done in Canada and that it may be a very long time before the exact circumstances arise again, where a similar course would be possible. As I read the Supreme Court decision, I think there is very little to fear in terms of this becoming a very common occurrence.

REQUEST FOR PARDON FOR DR. MORGENTALER

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): In the light of the minister's answer that this is a rare occasion and it is unlikely to be repeated, would the hon. gentleman now give consideration to those provisions of the Criminal Code in the Morgentaler case relating to a free pardon. Will the minister advise us that the cabinet will, at least, give consideration to the question of a free pardon in the Morgentaler case?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): The very court which said it was a very rare occasion said this was precisely one of the kinds of occasions where it could properly be seen to be used.

The hon. member should recognize that any action on the part of the executive with regard to clemency or an alteration of sentence is very rare indeed.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lang: We ought not to confuse this with the question of the commutation of death sentences which is specifically placed upon the cabinet as a burden. I suggest that what the hon. member is really doing is voicing the opinions of some who do not like the law as it now applies and who therefore want an amendment to the law to take place. To do so in the way he suggests would be highly reprehensible on the part of the executive.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of interest and order. Since we are now on the new procedure, I should like to try this out for size as being the right time to ask the government House leader about the business of the House for the ensuing week. In my humble view, this is probably a better time than waiting until all the routine proceedings are completed.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I think it is an appropriate time, but I have sent a message to my hon. friend to which I have not yet received a reply. Perhaps I should wait until I have had a reply and then I can announce the business.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I can say that the answer is in the negative, so that might enable my hon. friend to proceed.

Mr. Sharp: Then may I suggest the following bills for consideration tomorrow: S-9, S-20, C-30 and C-19.

Mr. Baldwin: And for today?

Mr. Sharp: Today we will discuss Bill C-34, the Farm Credit Act. I announced that last evening. If we deal with the amendments, we will turn to Bill C-13.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): My question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, as well as that of French-speaking members of this House is as follows: Awhile ago I asked a question of the Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier), who said that he was no longer the Secretary of State. This is true, but I would like him to refer the matter to the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner). Here is my question of privilege. Mr. Speaker, hon. members have received a leaflet entitled Québec Fête, signed by Lise Payette and sponsored by the City of Montreal and the CBC. I would like to establish clearly and remind the Secretary of State at the same time that Saint-Jean-Baptiste Day does not belong only to the Province of Quebec, but to all French Canadians. When we celebrate St. Patrick's Day, in honour of the Irish people, it is not only for the Irish people of Quebec, Ontario, or British Columbia, but for the Irish people of all Canada. The same thing is true for French Canadians. However, Mr. Speaker, if the people want to make this a separatist issue by saying that Quebec alone is concerned—and this is the meaning of the leaflet—I do not want the CBC to give five cents to finance separatists like Mrs. Lise Payette, or wooden-faced François-Albert Angers of Montreal, or people like that. Mr. Speaker, I believe that the CBC is now financing the destruction of Canada rather than its unification.

Mr. Speaker: This is certainly an important matter, not only for French Canadians, but also for all the members of this House. Perhaps fortunately for the Chair, the hon. member did not ask, through the Chair, that any action be taken to rectify the situation, therefore, the question remains as stated.

[English]

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. In response to the recent question that I asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang), the minister attempted to impute motives to the questioner, myself, and I submit that this is a violation of the privileges of this House. The answer given by the Minister of Justice, imputing motives in the question, in effect deprived the questioner of the right to be seen and to ask an objective question. When the Minister of Justice suggests that it is a narrow group of people who are asking that question about juries, let me assure Your Honour and the members of this House that many members of the legal profession are vitally concerned that the jury system should survive in this country and the question of the survival of the jury system is a serious one indeed.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member may have mistaken the reference to the number of people who had a certain view; that was with reference to the question whether clemency should be granted, not with reference to the question about juries. In my earlier answer I think I made it quite clear that I, too, was concerned about the integrity of the jury system but that I was satisfied, from the discussion in the Supreme Court on the matter, that there was no difficulty. I think it is also clear that I did not impute any motives. However, I did say that a certain view was being expressed and put forward, and I think that is very fair comment indeed.

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-387, to amend the Criminal Code (cruelty to animals).

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to state that the purpose of this bill is to prevent the use of steel leg traps for the trapping of animals.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 352, 1,182, 1,337, 1,350, 1,351, 1,595, 1,599, 1,672, 1,758, 1,766, 1,777, 1,814, 1,861, 1,892, 1,922, 2,117 and 2,127.

Mr. Speaker, if questions No. 53, 615, 1,285 and 1,372 could be made orders for return, these returns would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that questions No. 401 and 769 be made orders for return and also ask the consent of the House to table immediately the information which has already been submitted. The balance of the information will follow as soon as it is submitted to me.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary be deemed to have been made orders for return in the manner described by the parliamentary secretary?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Reid: Would you be so good as to call starred question No. 1,609?

I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

INVESTIGATION—CLAIMS RELATING TO THEFTS AND LOSSES—CNR AND AIR CANADA

The management of Air Canada advises as follows: 1. To classify a missing shipment as a theft or as stolen, satisfactory proof must first be established. Frequently, the securing of proof is not possible or evidence is not obtained until long after a claim is concluded. Thus Air Canada has a claim classification under the heading "Non Delivery", which includes: (i) A loss. (ii) Failure of a piece or pieces of a shipment to reach destination for reasons related to such things as misrouting and poor packaging. (iii) Possible theft.

Following are statistics for the year 1974: Percentage of air freight claims for all causes, including Non Delivery, Pilferage, Damage and Delay, to the total 814,884 shipments carried was .65 per cent. (a) Total number of Non Delivery and Pilferage claims: 2,325 or .29 per cent of total shipments carried. (b) Total Non Delivery and Pilferage claims costs: $483,765 or .74 per cent of total air freight revenues totalling $66,533,647. Air Canada's position in relation to Non Delivery claims is below the average of major United States carriers.

2. (a) Air Canada maintains four Security Representatives located at Montreal, Toronto, Vancouver and Los Angeles airports who call on the services of outside police forces, as required. (b) Not applicable.

*TREATMENT OF NARCOTIC ADDICTS WITH METHADONE

Question No. 1,609—Mrs. Holt:

1. (a) Is the government aware methadone, an addictive drug is being used as an alleged cure for heroin addiction as was heroin used as a cure for opium addiction (b) is this new drug being abused in British Columbia and the rest of Canada?

2. (a) How many legal methadone clinics are there in Canada (b) where are they located?

3. By area, how many people are on methadone maintenance and what are their ages?

4. For each of the past ten years, what amount was dispensed by the clinics?

5. After considerable use and experience with methadone, has any study been made or is being made of the side effects and general medical condition of users, especially those who were on extended treatment and, if not, will a programme of such research be established?

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in view of the length of the reply to question 1,609, I ask permission of this House to have it printed as if read.

Mr. Speaker: Does the House agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The answer referred to above is as follows:]

Miss Campbell: 1. (a) and (b) Methadone has been in use for many years as a potent narcotic analgesic and as such is subject to the controls that apply to all narcotic drugs. Since 1963, interest has centered around the controlled use of methadone as a treatment aid in programs aimed at social and economic rehabilitation of heroin addicts. As a consequence, consumption of the drug increased considerably and reports of misuse and abuse of methadone came to the attention of the Department of Health and Welfare. In view of the serious concern over this development, a Special Joint Committee of the Department's former Food and Drug Directorate and the Canadian Medical Association was established in 1970 with the purpose of reviewing the use of methadone in the treatment of narcotic addiction. As a result of the recommendations of this Committee and those made by other experts in this area, new regulations were implemented on June 1, 1972 bringing methadone under even more strict controls and permitting its use only by practitioners specially authorized for that purpose. These regulations have resulted in a marked decrease of consumption of this drug and brought its use under proper control.

2. (a) Number of clinics with protocols allowing the use of methadone for the management of narcotic addiction: 33. (b) British Columbia, 14; Alberta, 2; Saskatchewan, 2; Manitoba, 2; Ontario, 5; Quebec, 7; Nova Scotia, 1.

3. Narcotic addicts treated with methadone: October and November, 1974: British Columbia, 837; Alberta, 45; Saskatchewan, 34; Manitoba, 51; Ontario, 201; Quebec, 43; Nova Scotia, 1. Information on ages of narcotic addicts treated with methadone is not available.

4. Canadian imports of methadone: 1966, 3.29 Kg; 1967, 5.71 Kg; 1968, 10.4 Kg; 1969, 13.4 Kg; 1970, 30.19 Kg; 1971, 40.59 Kg; 1972, 40.680 Kg; 1973, 0.001 Kg; 1974, 22.5 Kg. These numbers indicate a fall in consumption after the introduction of additional controls in 1972 and the importation of almost no drug in 1973 is due to the consumption of leftover stock from the previous year.

5. There is a limited amount of literature on the effects of methadone and the results of treatment programs for narcotic addicts which include the use of methadone. The report of The Special Joint Committee of the Department of National Health and Welfare—Canadian Medical Association which was set up to study the use of methadone in the treatment of narcotic addiction was published in 1971. The LeDain Commission of Inquiry Into the Non-Medical Use of Drugs has also reviewed this matter. The Health Protection Branch is continuing to assess this modality of treatment.

INDUSTRY, TRADE AND COMMERCE—PUBLIC SERVANTS WORKING IN CONTINENTAL REGIONS

Question No. 1,758—Mr. Herbert:

In the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce for the month of April 1975, what is the budgeted number of public servants to work in the continental regions of (a) North America excluding Canada (b) South America (c) Europe (d) Asia (e) Australasia?

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): (a) North America (excluding Canada) 104, (b) South America 34, (c) Europe 91, (d) Asia 26, (e) Australasia 21.

EYE CARE FOR NATIVE POPULATION OF NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Question No. 1,766—Mr. Firth:

Is there, at this time, a government arrangement whereby optometrists are hired to provide eye care to the Native population of the Northwest Territories and (a) if not, is the government planning on instituting such a medical service (b) if so, when did eye care for Natives become available?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No. (a) No. (b) The government, through the Department of National Health and Welfare, believes that the simple checking of visual acuity and the prescription of corrective lenses is not an adequate service to the native people. Instead, service is provided in three zones (Northwest Territories) by contract through the universities with consultant ophthalmologists who regularly visit the settlements to provide both diagnostic and refractive eye care. For example, in the MacKenzie zone, ophthalmic services are provided under the supervision of a qualified ophthalmologist who is resident in Yellowknife. The alternative suggested of utilising optometrists to do all the necessary refractions, would leave uncovered the other numerically much smaller but potentially much more serious group with actual eye pathology who would then all have to be evacuated to the south for an ophthalmologic opinion. This would at one time increase the cost and defeat the aims of National Health and Welfare to provide care and diagnostic services to the greatest extent possible in the home community.

PURPOSE OF 1975 POST OFFICE CALENDAR

Question No. 1,777—Mr. Towers:

1. For what purpose is the Post Office calendar published each year?

2. Since the information printed on the reverse pages is posted in all post offices and elsewhere, is advertising the basic reason for publishing the calendar and, if not, for what reason is it published?

3. For what reason was a calendar printed this year when there is supposed to be a cut-back in government spending?

4. (a) On what basis is the calendar distributed (b) if on request only, how are taxpayers informed of its availability?

5. (a) On the 1974 and 1975 calendars, on whose authority was Victoria Day replaced by Fête de Dollard in the French version (b) what has Dollard to do with Victoria Day which was proclaimed by Parliament as a statutory holiday (c) for what reason was not the same rule applied on June 24 where the calendar shows St. Jean Baptiste Day without an English replacement?

6. For what reason was July 1 left blank instead of showing its correct name Dominion Day?

7. (a) Is the contract for printing the calendar granted by tender based on cost and efficiency and, if not, for what reason (b) what firm or firms were assigned the contract for the years 1973, 1974 and 1975?

8. Will a 1976 calendar be produced and, if so, at what cost?

Mr. Raynald Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): 1. To inform mail users of Post Office services and products available and to explain how they can best take advantage of these services and products. It is a useful vehicle in mail rooms of large and small businesses, used in classrooms for educational purposes and is handy in homes for easy and ready reference to mailing deadlines and other postal information required on a day-to-day basis.

2. The reasons are the same as above. Calendars are available in limited quantities. As the demand for the calendar far exceeds the supply, other means of information are required.

3. There is a continuing need for such vital postal information. The calendar is in great demand and our surveys have indicated that it helps Canadians to better understand our complex operations and thereby make better and proper use of our services.

4. (a) Through major post offices across the country. Some are delivered by marketing representatives to the business community and others are mailed on request. (b) Through posters at distribution points and through free, unsolicited publicity in the media.

5. (a) One does not replace the other. They are both celebrated on the same date. (b) Dollard Day, and Victoria Day, are identified as holidays in most collective agreements in Quebec. (c) There is no English equivalent known.

6. It was deemed appropriate to esthetically identify this special holiday with a group illustration of our Canadian emblem, the maple leaf.

7. (a) Yes. (b) 1973, Metropole Litho Inc., Montreal; 1974, Ashton-Potter Ltd., Toronto; 1975, Lawson Graphics, Toronto.

8. Yes. The cost will be approximately $200,000.

MAGAZINE INDUSTRY SURVEYS CONCERNING ADVERTISING REVENUE

Question No. 1,814—Mr. Herbert:

1. Did the government conduct a survey to determine the extent of the transfer of advertising revenue to those magazines that it seeks to help, which will result from the legislation it proposes to bring forward and (a) if so, what are the results of the survey (b) if not, is a survey under consideration?

2. Have any magazine industry surveys concerning advertising revenue been conducted recently and, if so, have the results of the surveys been communicated to the responsible Minister?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): 1. The government has conducted no survey to study a transfer of advertising revenue to Canadian periodicals as a result of its proposed amendments to Section 19 of the Income Tax Act. However, the Secretary of State's Department did conduct a computer search to determine whether Canadian advertisers could reach the same audiences through Canadian media as they now reach through "Time" and "Reader's Digest". Results indicated that they could.

2. In 1973 the Magazine Association of Canada reported that Canadian advertisers spent $35 million for space in 13 major consumer magazines. About one half of this amount was spent on space in "Time", and the two editions of "Reader's Digest"—"Time" earning $9.2 million, and "Reader's Digest" $7.2 million. These figures have been communicated to the Secretary of State. The Secretary of State has also received a privately commissioned survey completed by Canadian Facts Co. Ltd. entitled "Advertiser Executives' Attitudes Towards one Aspect of the Special Senate Committee Report on Mass Media November, 1974."

2. Has the RCMP ever conducted an investigation in regard to this person and, if so (a) on what dates (b) for what reasons (c) what were the details of the investigation?

3. What are the names of all persons who at any time made representations to the government on behalf of this person for purposes of his admission to Canada or for any other purpose and, in each case, what are the details of such representations?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Manpower and Immigration and the Solicitor General as follows: 1. Salvatore Taormina arrived in Canada on June 5, 1968.

2. No.

3. In accordance with the schedule for the destruction of files, the file concerning Salvatore Taormina has been destroyed. It is therefore not possible to respond to this part of the question.

1. How much money was spent by CBC on laboratory equipment used in production of the series The Collaborators?

Order Paper Questions

LANGUAGE TRAINING FOR WIVES OF SENIOR OFFICIALS APPROACHING RETIREMENT AGE

Question No. 1,922—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to Question No. 24 listing a number of wives of senior public servants who are not themselves members of the Public Service and who have received language training at public expense, how many husbands of such persons (a) are within five years of possible retirement (b) have already retired as of this date (c) in each case, what is the husband's (i) name, (ii) position in government service (iii) earliest possible retirement date?

2. What are all the justifications for giving language training to wives of Public Service employees approaching retirement age?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows: 1. It is the policy of the Public Service Commission not to establish arbitrary age limits as a factor in selections for appointments or for training courses, unless there are compelling reasons to do so. An amendment to the Public Service Employment Act to extend the prohibitions against discrimination contained therein to age and marital status has in fact received second reading in the House of Commons and is now before the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs (Bill C-16).

With regard to language training, the President of Treasury Board announced in the House of Commons on November 21, 1974 a Cabinet decision that, on economic grounds, unilingual public servants over 60 years of age who occupy or are appointed to bilingual positions would be exempted from the requirement to undertake language training.

Records are not kept in such a way that the specific information requested in this question can be readily supplied. A reply would require the review of the personal files of every public servant involved and the necessary staff is not available to undertake such a review.

2. See first paragraph of one above and the answer given to Question No. 1,446, March 12, 1975.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): No.

ELECTRIFYING THE RAILWAY SYSTEM OF CANADA

Question No. 2,127—Mr. Robinson:

Will the government consider the advisability of electrifying the railway system of Canada?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The benefits of the electrification of a railway line are a function of the traffic density over that particular line. Enough savings have to be made on fuel, maintenance and locomotive capital costs to pay for the construction of the catenary and electric power distribution systems. In Canada many studies have been conducted by railways to determine whether electrification was economical. So far these studies have revealed that electrification could be marginally profitable but only on very few sections of the line. In the context of more restrictive fuel policies, electrification could be advisable.

FARM CREDIT ACT

MEASURE TO INCREASE CAPITAL OF CORPORATION AND PRESCRIBE REGULATIONS FOR LOANS

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-34, to amend the Farm Credit Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary) moved:

That Bill C-34, an act to amend the Farm Credit Act, be amended by deleting the words "thirty-five" in lines 42 and 48 at page 2, lines 3 and 12 at page 3, line 38 at page 7 and line 22 at page 8, and substituting therefor the word "forty".

● (1510)

He said: Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak to this bill I should like to say at the outset that I believe these amendments are good, particularly the one which will increase to $150,000 the amount a young farmer can borrow, and allowing him to declare that he will go into farming but remain in another profession or occupation up to five years. The proposal embodied in this amendment was in our policy paper during the last election campaign. It has been taken directly from that policy paper and, as I say, I think it is a good amendment.

My amendment to the bill will raise the eligible age of a young farmer, for the purpose of taking advantage of the Farm Credit Act, from 35 to 40 years of age. I think this will be an improvement because it is a well known fact that life begins at 40. Apparently, age 35 was chosen because the officials of the department felt that these 30-year loans should be paid back at age 65. There are many good reasons for raising the eligibility age to 40. We are trying to get young people back into farming. Sons and daughters of farmers very often have to leave the farm because the farming operation cannot support more than one family. These people, therefore, go into other fields or professions. By the time their parents are ready to retire, giving them the opportunity to go back into farming on the parents' land, they are over 35 years of age. On most occasions these people have to borrow under the Farm Credit Act.

Very often the young people who want to go back into farming have worked for a number of years in another career, and before they can retire with a pension they must put in a certain amount of time. It is not a bad idea for people who retire from another career to go back into farming. Many of them have experience in associated agricultural professions, which does not hurt them one little bit in their farming endeavours.

It has been stated that the purpose of this legislation is not to assist people who have had professional careers as horticulturalists or school teachers, for example. I do not believe that when we are passing legislation we should state who, or who cannot, take advantage of the legislation in that way. Certainly, I do not think you could find a better farmer than the individual who has been educated and has practised as a horticulturalist or a professional in some other agricultural field. I, personally, know a young man who had a teaching degree and a degree in agriculture. Following a career as a horticulturalist, he went back to farming his father's farm. He had a difficult time starting up, as he had to quit his job in order to qualify for farm credit, but he went ahead and is today an excellent farmer.

We know that over the years farmers have lived poor and died rich. I do not think any young man going into farming today can get very excited about that prospect. These people do not want to live the same type of life as their parents or the individuals from whom they have taken over the farm: they want to enjoy life, just as everyone else does.

The trend in the past few years has been for people to leave the farm. Statistics indicate that a few years ago 30 per cent of the children of farmers stayed on the land, but the number has now decreased to 10 per cent. If we are to attract these young people to farming, we cannot do it by just making more money available: we must make it possible for them to enjoy the standard of living that is enjoyed by people living in urban areas. There is nothing wrong with a young person going into another profession to earn money he intends to use in farming in later years, because in many cases the amount an individual can borrow under the Farm Credit Act is not sufficient and he will need the equity that is built up while in another profession.

Many occupations have pension plans and similar benefits, but it takes a number of years before one can qualify for such benefits. I do not think people who follow this course should be left out of this legislation, and for this reason, as well as others, I think the age should be raised from 35 to 40. I cannot understand why this government or the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) would not accept this amendment, particularly if we are really concerned about getting young people back into farming. I urge the government to accept this amendment to raise the eligible age from 35 to 40 years of age.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments in connection with this bill and the amendment moved by the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker). We had a very detailed and excellent discussion on this bill when it was before the committee, and I think all hon. members are anxious that it be proceeded with and passed. The people in the west, particularly with spring coming, are very anxious to see this bill passed in order that the young people can take advantage of these amendments.

I support the amendment of the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary. The bill brought in by the minister describes a young farmer as someone under 35 years of age, and the amendment of the hon. member would raise the age limit to 40. This matter was discussed in the committee. There was a suggestion that perhaps it would not be actuarially sound to lend $150,000 to a person 40 years of age. However, in reading the Minutes and Proceedings of Evidence of the agricultural committee for Thursday, March 20, I note that Dr. Kristjanson said, as reported at page 25:5:

So, we looked at that, and there is nothing wrong actuarially with it; there is no problem. In other words, there is no reason that a man 40 years of age is not as good a risk as a man of 35.

A great many young people who have been born and raised on a farm are anxious to become involved in farming, possibly by taking over a farm of their father or uncle. In such cases they need a large amount of money. I understand this is the reason the limit has been increased from $100,000 to $150,000. In the course of the committee hearings I suggested that the young farmer clause, which permits a young farmer to phase into full-time farming over a period of five years, be altered to provide, on a sliding scale, that people up to 50 years of age be allowed to phase into full-time farming.

There are many people in the province of Saskatchewan, young and middle-aged, who have been born and raised on a farm, who are working full-time but also have perhaps half or three-quarters of a section of land which they are working in the hope that one day they will be able to become full-time farmers. At the present time, because of the way this legislation reads, one must be a full-time farmer in order to qualify for a loan under the Farm Credit Act. If these people were given the opportunity to phase into farming over a period of three, two or one years by borrowing money, it would enable them to take up farming as a full-time occupation. These people are not hobby farmers: they are honest, sincere farmers who have been born and raised on a farm. They see farming as a way of life they wish to follow.

I note that Dr. Kristjanson, at the same meeting of the committee on agriculture, indicated he would consider the suggestion of allowing phasing in over a period of, say, four, three, two or one years. I hoped the minister would today come forward with an amendment to provide for this. On the other hand, if the flexibility exists as suggested by Mr. Kristjanson, perhaps after a year's operation under the new amendments the minister will see fit to bring in further amendments in that regard. This is a matter I intend to bring to his attention in about a year's time after this new section of the act has been operative, and if he should feel that he can bring in the necessary amendments at that time, I would welcome that. I would be prepared in the near future to bring in such a recommendation if it has not been done otherwise.

I do not think I have anything more to say on the subject except that the amendments contained in this legislation are certainly welcomed by members on this side of the House. However, I should like to see the change in respect to young farmer, and I urge the minister and members on the government side to support the amendment of the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary.

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I support the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker). I wish to amplify his comments for a moment and draw the attention of the minister to some of the remarks of my colleague from Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil), because I believe the problems involved in phasing into farming are particularly acute in areas where there is homesteading activity or the possibility of earning a considerable amount of money in other occupations, such as in the oil fields of Alberta. A great number of my constituents work in the oil fields and try to become involved in farming on a part-time basis. These people have been caught up in regulations which have been established, for very good reasons, in respect of hobby farmers. Because of this, in very many cases some people are ineligible for a program when there is no real reason for their being ineligible.

In many cases, the people involved have an unusual degree of initiative and ability which should be rewarded by the government when they desire to become involved in agriculture. As it now stands, in areas near oil-producing fields and similar activities it is difficult for individuals of this kind to become eligible for assistance either under this legislation or that which is available from other jurisdictions. I support the contribution of my colleague from Moose Jaw and urge the minister to very seriously consider the hon. member's recommendation, with particular attention to easing the difficulty facing people who wish to phase into farming in areas where a similar problem exists.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I shall also be brief. Our group finds this amendment acceptable and worth while. I believe it should be accepted by the government and I hope the minister will agree to raising the age limit to 40. It is not only very young persons but those who are young, up to age 40, who wish to become involved in farming. All the minister need do is stand up and say he approves of the amendment. I ask the minister to agree, and in that way we can deal with this bill very quickly.

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Whittaker) negatived.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture) moved that Bill C-34, to amend the Farm Credit Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Agriculture, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): When shall the bill be read the third time?

Some hon. Members: By leave, now.

● (1530)

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, we would be glad to give our consent to third reading of the bill at this time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Is it agreed, by unanimous consent, that the bill be read the third time now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Whelan moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

NORTHERN CANADA POWER COMMISSION ACT

AMENDMENTS TO CONSTITUTION AND POWERS OF COMMISSION

The House resumed, from Wednesday, March 26, consideration of Bill C-13, to amend the Northern Canada Power Commission Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and motion No. 2 of Mr. Nielsen.

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, let me refresh the memory of hon. members on the nature of the amendment before us by saying that the bill that has been introduced in the name of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Buchanan) would delete subsections (1) and (2) of section 6 of the present act. Subsection (2) of the act presently in force requires the Northern Canada Power Commission to account to the governor in council for certain expenditures over the limit of $50,000. The proposal by the minister and the governor in council is to remove that requirement of accountability and in effect to allow the commission to act on its own, to make expenditures on its own, and to act in every other way without the requirement of being accountable to the governor in council or to the House.

The amendment by my colleague, the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), representing as he does the interests of the people of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, would reinstate the requirement of accountability on behalf of the Northern Canada Power Commission. In view of inflation and for other reasons it might be advisable to change the dollar limit and perhaps to require accountability for expenditures of a higher range than is now the case. That is a matter which we on this side of the House would be prepared seriously to consider. But that is an entirely different question from removing accountability altogether, and it is the total removal of accountability which the minister is now proposing.

As members on this side have made clear on several occasions in questioning in committee and in the House, we would prefer the accountability of the commission to be to the councils of the territories and, preferably to the elected members of those councils. But that is not something we could achieve here today, so we will have to settle for a lesser kind of accountability. Again I emphasize that even a lesser kind of accountability is far prefered to no accountability at all. What the minister is proposing is to establish for that commission the capacity to act without any kind of accountability except as may trickle back through the public service appointments to the board of that corporation.

I simply wish to draw to the attention of the House two very dangerous aspects of the proposal of the government. First is the question of the principle that the Parliament of Canada should be able to exercise some control over the activities of agencies acting in the public name and spending public money, such as the Northern Canada Power Commission. They should not be allowed, particularly a commission of this sort with its special functions, to operate totally freely. That is the principle, and it is a matter which is of particular concern to us here, now, because the capacity of parliament to oversee and to control the activities of various agencies to whose existence we give approval has been eroded over time. So it is important to us as an institution, and to my colleagues and myself, not to allow one more instance of erosion in this case.

The matter of the accountability of public institutions to publicly elected officials is far too important to let it lapse in a case such as this, which might not command the interest of many members of this House, particularly members on the government side, because perhaps they are not interested in what goes on in northern Canada. However, we on this side are interested in what goes on in northern Canada and in the principle that parliament should have the power, not only to spend public funds but also to set public policy in matters which affect the national destiny and to require from public agencies accountability to this institution if it is not possible for them to be held accountable directly to the elected representatives of the people of the Yukon or the Northwest Territories. So the first objection I have to the proposal by the minister to create this unaccountable corporation is one of principle.

My second objection is to the fact that the Northern Canada Power Commission would have the capacity to undertake ventures, to issue regulations and to act in other ways which could cause serious harm to the environment of northern Canada, and which could involve us in major projects undertaken solely at the discretion of the commission without giving us a chance of review or veto, apart from whatever mechanisms may exist and apply as a result of existing federal laws or regulations.

The Northern Canada Power Commission is not a tiny agency without powers: it is, in fact, an agency which has substantial powers and could make decisions which could have serious and harmful effects upon matters of interest to the House and, indeed, to the country. In my view, it would be possible for the commission, acting on its own, to start another project of the dimensions of the James Bay project. It could become involved in any other kind of project, perhaps of smaller dimensions but nonetheless involving, as all hydro projects do, the possibility of very serious danger to the environment of the area affected. It could become involved in matters relating to the export of power, raising questions of great importance to the whole country and not simply to the select group of people who might sit on the commission. We are dealing here with important matters. The commission would be dealing with important matters. What the minister proposes to do is to allow the commission to deal with matters of great importance to the whole country without having to be responsible or accountable to the whole country through the cabinet, through parliament or through the elected representatives of the two territories concerned.

I want to deal for a moment with the environmental aspects of the power that is being granted to the commission. We all know that whenever major hydro developments are undertaken—and they fall within the ambit of concern of this commission—there is the possibility of environmental damage. This situation may have more severe consequences in northern Canada, the ecology of which is more susceptible to damage than other parts of our country. As is known to members of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development who accepted the invitation of my colleague, the hon. member for Yukon, to visit Whitehorse last year, there is a great deal of controversy about surveying and about areas in which hydro development should or should not proceed. These are important public questions, but the minister is proposing to allow such questions to be decided in private by a commission which is not accountable to the governor in council and, consequently, indirectly through the minister to the House. To me that is a very dangerous principle involving specific harm to an important part of this country, and I, as one member of parliament who has taken the opportunity—as have several of my colleagues on this side of the House—to visit northern Canada and listen to the concerns of people who live there, feel it is not a capacity we would like to see built into a commission without a great deal of care and deliberation.

I am not sure why the minister wants to attack the principle of accountability. I am not sure why he wants to destroy the present requirement in the law that the commission must be accountable to himself and to his colleagues in a formal, legal way. I do not know why he wants to establish, in this commission, a capacity to do things which might have an effect upon longer range public policy and which might have an important effect on the future of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, in effect, without accountability. It is a very dangerous principle, and I hope that when the minister comments on the very sensible amendment of my hon. colleague from Yukon he will tell us why he wants to do away with accountability to the governor in council and, consequently, to this parliament, and why he wants to establish this agency with an extraordinary capacity to affect the future of the north.

I assume that the minister will try to answer these questions and justify his insistence upon doing away with the accountability of the Northern Canada Power Commission when he speaks in response to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Yukon. I simply want to make the point that the onus is very clearly on the government to prove its case, because it is the government which is changing the existing situation. The existing situation has a requirement of accountability. This party is not trying to initiate a major change; it is the government which is initiating a major change—and we want to stop that particular change because it is dangerous to the principle of accountability to parliament. More particularly, it is very dangerous to the future development of the northern territories and its people.

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, this amendment and comparable ones have been discussed in previous incarnations of this bill, as well as on this one, on several occasions. I find it rather interesting that hon. members opposite, who usually make great protestations and express great concern about government bureaucracy, government red tape and redundancy, should urge that the government maintain what is basically a redundant feature in the legislation. We feel strongly that this feature is redundant because the governor in council approves all projects. The funds for the projects are included in the main or supplementary estimates, and therefore they are approved by this House. In addition, all individual contracts are submitted to and must be approved by Treasury Board in accordance with the Financial Administration Act.

Therefore, we feel that this is a redundant piece of legislation which unnecessarily complicates the situation, and that the question of accountability which was raised so vigorously by the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark), is covered. It is covered by the fact that the funds which go to the Northern Canada Power Commission must go through the normal procedures of this House, and then the individual projects are subjected to the scrutiny, and must receive the approval, of Treasury Board, as I indicated, under the terms of the Financial Administration Act. So, basically, we feel that this matter is properly covered as it now exists, and that this deletion is simply in respect of a provision which is no longer necessary.

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I, too, would like to make a few comments regarding the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and reiterate a point I made some weeks ago. I was somewhat surprised to hear the comments of the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark). He also knows that the people in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories are asking for more autonomy and that they would like to be able to make more decisions about matters which concern them. To put a restriction like this on a corporation which works in the north is working against autonomy, in my estimation, and is restricting a corporation which is willing to move up there. So far there have been some very small moves, but not half as many as the people in the Yukon or the Northwest Territories would like to see. We would like very much to have the corporation controlled by the people of the two territories through their elected councils, and to hear their comments regarding restriction of the corporation. We should not put the people of the north again in a position where they have to come down to Ottawa, cap in hand, begging for money for projects to keep the power commission operating. I would therefore like to indicate, for the record, that I am strictly against this amendment as it is too restrictive on the corporation.

The minister mentioned that there are certain restrictions inasmuch as the estimates have to pass through the normal procedures of the standing committee, and so forth. This amendment would add a further restriction. Therefore, I would like to register my protest to this amendment on behalf of the people of the Northwest Territories.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11), the recorded division on the motion stands deferred.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon) moved:

Motion No. 3.

That Bill C-13, an act to amend the Northern Canada Power Commission Act, be amended in clause 4 by striking out the word "Governor" where the same appears in line 23 at page 2 and lines 4 and 5 at page 3 and substituting therefor in each case the word "Commissioner".

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is either because the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth) has chosen not to understand, or he really has an honest lack of understanding for what we are trying to do, that he takes the position he does. The hon. member, in interpreting the view of my colleague from Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark) and other members of this party who have spoken on these amendments, has distorted—I will not say deliberately but through either an innocent or honest lack of understanding—what we are trying to do here. But I challenge him and his loud-mouthed colleague beside him to try to distort this amendment, calling clearly, as it does, for the decisions to be made by the people of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. The bill of the government calls for the setting of rates with the approval of the governor in council. For the edification of my friend from the Northwest Territories, that means the cabinet of this House of Commons; it does not mean the council of the Northwest Territories and it does not mean the people represented through their elected members on that council.

Mr. Firth: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). Which amendment is he referring to, the one we just deferred or the one we are dealing with now?

Mr. Nielsen: Again that illustrates the innocence, the lack of understanding of my friend from the Northwest Territories. We are debating motion No. 3. The government seeks to amend section 10 of the act through clause 4 of this bill. This amendment seeks to wipe out the approval of the governor in council and substitute therefor the approval of the people of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories through their elected representatives on the respective territorial councils. If the hon. member has any further questions, I will be glad to hear them.

Mr. Firth: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Yukon seems to be getting a little excited about a matter that is also of importance to me. He does not seem to realize that I am supporting the amendment.

Mr. Nielsen: I am very glad to hear that, Mr. Speaker. We have finally got through to the hon. member for Northwest Territories. If he supports the amendment we are discussing now, then he certainly should have supported the last amendment which calls for exactly the same thing. I want to explain, in the hope of getting through to the minister, the reason why we in the opposition are advancing this amendment.

Mr. Benjamin: Wally is away ahead there.

Mr. Nielsen: Wally will have to get up pretty early in the morning to be ahead of anybody in this party.

Mr. Speaker, what has the governor in council got to do with setting rates for the consumption of electrical energy in the Yukon and Northwest Territories? Why should the governor in council be bothered with setting the rate for the consumption of electrical energy in my home? What sort of national priority does this have? I did not hear the comments of the minister with respect to the previous amendment, but the amendment before us in this bill seeks to have the rates established by the commission, subject to the approval of the governor in council. Surely, in this day and age of a national government being confronted with things much more important than setting my electric light rates, there should be some understanding of the priorities and the legitimate desire of the people of the Yukon and Northwest Territories to have this housekeeping task performed at home.

Where else in this country does the federal government decide on the light bills of consumers? Where else does the federal government, in the form of the governor in council, debate whether the commercial rate for hydro should be .0145 or .0175? In the provinces this task is, quite properly, conducted by electric utilities boards or public utilities commissions, and it should be done in that fashion in the north.

The amendment before the House would put the responsibility for approval of rates in the hands of the commissioner in council in each of the territorial councils of the northern territories. Because the Chair, on March 26, raised some doubt as to motion No. 4 standing in my name on the order paper, it very much comes into the debate at this stage because if we pass over this amendment—I hope the hon. member for Northwest Territories is listening—and lose it, and if the Chair rules motion No. 4 out of order, there is no backtracking in an effort to make the setting of rates under this clause of the bill subject to the regulation of the local public utilities boards in the Yukon and Northwest Territories.

For that reason, there will be an amendment to this amendment standing in my name, which will be moved by one of my colleagues. In effect, it would make the setting of rates under this clause of the bill subject to the approval of the Yukon and Northwest Territories public utilities boards. If that amendment to this motion fails, then we are left with the choice of substituting the commissioner in council for the governor in council. Of course, if my amendment fails, we are back where we on this side do not want to be, that is, having the rates set subject to the approval of the governor in council. This choice should at least be put to the House and made available to the people of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. For those who are unfamiliar with the motion that will be debated in a moment or two—that is, motion No. 4 standing in my name—it calls for the whole of the activities of the commission to be subject to the regulatory control of the Northwest Territories or the Yukon public utilities board, as the case may be.

I want to put things in perspective for a moment, Mr. Speaker. When the legislation was passed in 1948 there was no question that the NCPC was going to be a power monopoly in the north. There was no question that they were going to be the sole generators and distributors of electrical energy in the two northern territories. The principle put forward at that time upon which basis the bill received passage was that the commission was to assist the development of industry in the north by making available a source of electrical energy. According to the minister of the day, a Mr. MacKinnon, the object was to supply electrical power at as low a cost as possible, subject to the plants being self-sustaining.

That was the assurance given by a minister of the Crown when this commission was created. We seem to have departed from that principle and the present minister in particular seems to have departed from it. I will come to that in a moment. In the debate on this matter on June 14, 1948, as reported at page 5171 of Hansard Mr. MacKinnon said:

> With the approval of the governor in council—

This bears directly on what we are discussing.

> —the commission shall establish schedules or ranges of rates for the power it supplies on the basis of not less than cost, which will include interest on the principal amount made or deemed to have been made to the commission in respect of the plant supplying the power, and all costs of operation and maintenance of the plant lines and other structures, together with costs of administration and salaries. Charges will also cover the establishment and maintenance of a contingency reserve fund. Rates are to be reviewed annually by the commission.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

These matters are reviewed in the provinces by bodies directly responsible to the elected representatives of the people of those provinces. This is not the case with respect to the territories and clause 4 of the bill, which we seek to amend, at present does not provide for such review. We seek to amend clause 4 and to provide for one of two alternatives. We want the setting of rates, as was suggested in the debate of 1948, to be subject to the regulations of our own public utilities boards or, failing that, we want to make the setting of these rates by the commission subject to the decision of the commissioner in council of each of the territories, and in that way give some input power, some responsibility to the elected representatives of the people of the two northern territories, or to agencies responsible to them, rather than to the minister or the governor in council.

A prime example of this government's colonial approach, if I may use that phrase, was made manifest by the answer which the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Buchanan) gave me when I asked who was representing the people of the northern territories with respect to the pricing of oil at the first ministers' conference now being held here. I was not surprised to hear him say that the people of the two northern territories were not represented by any elected representative. I am used to hearing that kind of answer from the treasury benches. All the same, I was astonished to hear the minister admit that he does not even know the names of his own bureaucrats who are listening at the conference and ostensibly protecting the interests of the people of the north.

I suppose the government's view is that we of the north do not know enough to run our own affairs and that the people in Ottawa, 4,000 miles away, know better how to set our electric power rates. If the government thinks that we do not know what electrical power rates should be charged for two, three or four-bedroom houses, and if the government in its schedule of national priorities puts such matters ahead of inflation and unemployment, I suggest that its priorities are distorted.

Allow me, Mr. Speaker, to refer again to the 1948 debate, particularly to remarks recorded at page 5173 of Hansard for June 14. An hon. member participating said that the Yukon Consolidated Gold Corporation, a private corporation which was dredging for gold, was supplying power to the citizens of Dawson city at exorbitant rates. Mr. Archibald said:

> The company there had its own electric plants to operate the dredges, but it is taking the citizens of Dawson city to the cleaners through the high rates it is charging.

Some 26 years later, the people of the area are still complaining that the Northern Canada Power Commission is taking them to the cleaners. The commission held a public meeting, the first of its kind, in the Yukon. I do not know whether the same has been done in the Northwest Territories. The meeting took place in the last part of February, and about all it received were complaints about the high rates being charged for electrical energy. Officials of the commission responded by saying that increased costs in the last year, particularly of diesel fuel which run the diesel generators, were responsible for the increased charges.

The citizens of Dawson city, of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, are isolated. They depend on diesel fuel, the cost of which has been going up. The price of oil, a matter of vital interest to the people of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, is being dealt with at the conference across the way; yet the people of the territories are not given any input through elected representatives with respect to the setting of oil prices, including diesel oil prices. There is not a damned thing we can do. I think it is sad when citizens of Canada who live in our two northern territories are denied privileges which are accorded other Canadians through the electoral process. This is a sad state of affairs.

Members taking part in the 1948 debate were concerned in case the body being created by the government became a monopoly. The right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), who was active in that debate, said as recorded at page 5174 of Hansard:

> I did not quite understand the minister. Did he say that when this commission takes over it will enjoy a monopoly privilege in the production and distribution of power within the territories? Is that the general plan in view?

The minister, Mr. MacKinnon, replied, "It is not a monopoly of power." As reported at page 5175 of Hansard, the right hon. member for Prince Albert said:

> Thank you, sir. I come back to this matter because the minister takes so many words to answer a simple question. Is it the intention of the Northwest Territories power commission to be the exclusive producer and distributor of power within the Northwest Territories, subject to the existence of one company which at the present time generates power there?

The right hon. member was referring to the Yellowknife Consolidated Gold Corporation. Mr. MacKinnon, the minister, again replied at considerable length but did not quite answer the question and the right hon. member for Prince Albert had to ask the question again, to which the minister replied as follows, as recorded at page 5175:

> I think it is essential at times to add something to the answer rather than to say merely yes or no. But in this particular case, answering briefly, I would say that it is not the intention of the government or the commission to do what is suggested by the hon. member.

The right hon. member had asked whether there was to be a monopoly in the production and distribution of power. Hansard then records the following exchange:

> MR. DIEFENBAKER: To have a monopoly?
> MR. MACKINNON: Yes.

The minister agreed that it was not intended to provide a monopoly power. Clearly, when Northern Canada Power Corporation was created it was not intended to give it a monopoly in the production and distribution of power. Last January 20 a meeting was held, presumably in the minister's office or close to it. Several people took part in this meeting, representing the industry and the department, including the minister. It is my information that he was there with his deputy and his special assistant—I believe Mr. Robinson is the name. The meeting got under way at 9.30 in the morning and the minister, according to my information, made the statement that the Northern Canada Power Commission had been granted the exclusive right to produce and distribute power within the territories, local distribution to be decided by the local government.

● (1610)

Mr. Speaker, I take exception to the statement by the minister, if he made it, and I have no reason to believe he did not. He said the Northern Canada Power Commission had been granted the exclusive right to produce and transmit power within the territories. Nothing of the kind! Nowhere in the present act is there any statement that the commission has an exclusive right to produce or distribute power within the two territories, and nowhere in this bill do we find such a provision. So it ill behooves the minister to attempt to leave the belief among his listeners that somehow legislation is in existence, or is about to come into existence, which gives the commission the exclusive right to produce and distribute power within the Yukon and the Northwest Territories.

The amendment to the act of 1948 which was brought forward in 1956 again raised this question, and the minister of northern affairs of that day who was sponsoring the bill was asked whether some kind of monopoly would be created with respect to the production and distribution of electrical power in the Yukon. The minister, Mr. Lesage, gave the same kind of assurance. Reports of the debates will be found in Hansard of February 27, 1956, April 25, 1956, and July 30, 1956. To sum up briefly, the minister of that day, Mr. Lesage, gave the same kind of assurance as was given by Mr. MacKinnon.

I suggest to the House and to the minister that the only reason those bills were passed in those days was this assurance, and that it is an act of deception to come before the House now and take a position different from that which obtained at the time of the passage of the act of 1948 and the amendment of 1956. It is an act of deception, perhaps unintentional, on the part of the minister to suggest there is some kind of legal exclusiveness in the right of the NCPC to produce and distribute power in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. It is simply not true in law. If the minister wants to create a policy outside the powers contained in the act, that is another matter. It is not unusual to find ministers in this government exceeding the powers given to them by legislation. If any hon. members are skeptical in this regard, I have no doubt I shall be able to convince them. The hon. member for Northwest Territories will be particularly interested since I believe there are one or two profitable power generation plants in his constituency.

The existing legislation permits any revenues generated by any one plant in the system to be used for the purpose of improving that plant or for distribution by way of rate reductions to consumers of the power generated by that plant. That is what the act says and that is what the existing legislation permits the commission to do. But when we ask in committee or, on occasion, in the House whether the commission has been complying or not, they say, "Of course we have been complying. We are not breaking the law." I then point out that they have been tabling a financial statement on a plant by plant basis since 1948, yet all of a sudden this practice stopped—three years ago, to be precise. I ask why, and they say, "There is no particular reason, except that continuance of the old practice might give our competitors the edge over us."

Mr. Speaker, the rates of competitors are fully exposed through the public utilities boards of each of the territories. What the commission has in fact been doing contravenes what the law requires, namely that profits should be used to improve plant or reduce rates to the consumers. The commission has been taking revenue derived from plants which are making money and lending it to plants which are losing money. They say, of course, that the money is being lent at appropriate rates of interest, that it realizes a proper return. But the practice is still not justified in light of the prohibition contained in the act. What the commission is doing is a breach of the law, and it should not be permitted.

While, as a citizen of the Yukon, I do not mind revenues from the plant at Whitehorse being used to lend money to the losing plant at Dawson city or at Mayo, I do object to revenues earned at Whitehorse being lent to a losing plant in Field, British Columbia, or in Moose Factory, Ontario. This is why I say there should be control not only over the rates set by the commission but also over the manner in which the moneys are spent. The cabinet has certainly acquiesced in this illegal practice on the part of the commission—and while the minister was appointed to office only recently, I must include him in the cabinet for the purpose of condemning him and the cabinet.

Instead of lending these moneys to Moose Factory, Ontario, Field, B.C., and other losing plants in the system, the commission should have been giving us, as consumers in the north, the benefit of either plant improvement or rate reductions, and these have been denied us. That is what the act of 1948 and the amendment of 1956 contemplated. In direct contravention of the law, the commission has denied us this benefit and instead has applied those revenues in an unlawful fashion to make loans to plants which were losing money.

Again I remind hon. members that my hon. friend who will be following me in the debate will be moving an amendment to my amendment, so the House will be left with a choice of placing the rates in the hands of the public utilities boards or, failing that, in the hands of the commissioner in council. I hope one of these two amendments will be adopted. Failing that, I suppose we must go along with the idea that according to the cabinet's system of priorities, the setting of rates for consumers in the territories is far more important than dealing with inflation, unemployment and all the serious and urgent problems which confront this country.

● (1620)

I would think that the minister would want to get out of the rate setting business. If he is going to pay more than lip service to the idea of giving the people of the north more say in their affairs, I would think he would be eager to say to the members of this House, "Yes, indeed, any rate set by the commission should go to your public utilities board; I will accept your amendment". Or if he did not like that, at least he ought to say, "Yes, indeed, let the commissioner in council be the body that approves the rates, and not the governor in council; we do not want to be bothered setting rates for the households in Whitehorse, Frobisher Bay and Innuvik".

I hope the minister will do this and get rid of this headache of his. Having said that, and in the hope that the minister might consider these matters favourably, I have nothing further to add.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, in following my colleague from Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) to speak in support of motion No. 3 to amend the bill now before the House, I cannot help but express some sympathy for the minister so early in his career having to defend a measure that has been portrayed during this debate and in committee as such an unpopular and colonial step so far as the people of the Yukon and Northwest Territories are concerned. I know the minister personally, of course, and I sympathize with him. It is not his nature to do the kind of things that are contained in this bill. Unless I am a very poor judge of character, I do not assess the minister's integrity in the way it is portrayed in this bill. He shakes his head; he agrees with me.

I wonder why, after all these years with the Northern Canada Power Commission, we are now giving the commission a total monopoly. It was argued in committee by some of the officials that the provinces have established Crown corporations for the purpose of assuring their citizens an adequate supply and efficient distribution of power. The fact is that the Yukon and Northwest Territories are not provinces. There is no political tribunal for the people of the territories; they must come to Ottawa if they have questions to ask about the conduct of this very important utility.

It was very apparent in committee that the officials of the northern power commission took every effort and went to great pains—I know this is a very strong statement to make—to undermine the integrity and discredit the conduct of the private companies that are now operating in the Yukon. Here is what happened, Madam Speaker: officials examined the transfer of funds by these private companies from the Yukon to other parts of Canada and, indeed, to places outside Canada and evidence was put before the committee of the exact amount that these companies transferred from the Yukon—money that was identified as profits that the companies made—to other areas where these private companies operated.

Let me examine for a moment the word "profit". To a private company, the participation of its shareholders is a cost of doing business, as is the distribution of dividends. It should also be interesting to examine the transfer of funds from the northern power commission to Edmonton, where its head office is now, and also to Ottawa. This examination was not carried out by these same officials; however, it was said in committee that the profits being made in the Yukon and Northwest Territories are being transferred to other parts of the world.

The reason we have to establish a monopoly for the northern power commission in the Yukon and Northwest Territories, in my opinion, is that the commission has become embarrassed by these private companies. These private companies have traditionally shown a better record in regard to the production of cheap power, the efficient production, distribution and transmission of power, and have traditionally displayed better corporate citizenship. The committee heard evidence that some of these private companies have helped with community affairs which the government and the power commission have not been able to do. It was established that the northwest power commission has sold power to one of the private companies in excess of the price at which it is selling power to its own customers, yet this private company has been able to satisfy its own customers.

The cost of doing business in the Yukon is very high, as it is in the Northwest Territories. We agree that the establishment of rate zones, as is the case with other Crown corporations operating in the provinces, is likely to be a good thing; but why did it have to be done in this manner? Why were we not given the financial statements for the last three years which show the profit made by some of the plants operating in these territories and might embarrass us in regard to how these funds should be applied? Why cannot we be honest with each other and say that there are areas in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon which have extreme difficulty in maintaining some kind of rate that would enable a private citizen to use electricity in his home and to have some of the essential services? If we had seen these financial statements we would have been able to compare them with the operations of the private companies, to the embarrassment of the government.

The motion before the House asks that the rate be set by someone other than the cabinet here in Ottawa. Surely there must be some local autonomy in a vital question like this. Let us recall the fact that in some provinces, owing to the lack of rural electrification, it became necessary for the government to assume the responsibility of taking over private enterprise in order to assure the proper distribution of power. Since everything is shaped in that way, surely we must also take the final step, once equal distribution is achieved, of insisting that the setting of the rates remains with an authority in the area where the power is to be generated, transmitted and distributed.

Surely the minister will want to rise before this debate is completed and lend his support to that idea. I have had occasion to travel to the Yukon with the minister and I have enjoyed a number of private discussions with him when he has expressed his desire and willingness to pass on as much autonomy as possible to the Yukon and Northwest Territories. Surely, in an area as vital as this, the minister will want to assure adequate representation on the part of those elected to protect the interests of these territories, particularly in relation to the matter under discussion.

We must remember that in the Yukon and Northwest Territories 40 per cent of all the jobs are held by civil servants. It is much easier to understand the speeches and remarks of hon. members from these territories, who are constantly expressing their suspicion about the activities and dealings between Ottawa and the territorial councils, when we realize how many civil servants there are in the territories administering the business of the people there who are spread over such a vast area.

We are not talking about an area that is poor, or one that needs subsidization. We are talking about territories that are carrying on activities such as gold mining, the harvesting of asbestos and tungsten, as well as fur trapping, commercial fishing in the Yukon, and territories with a significant number of oil discoveries. Our eager eyes are looking at these territories as the storehouse of our future; they have sawmills and many other important industries which contribute to the well-being of this country as a whole. All kinds of funds are being transferred from the Yukon and Northwest Territories to Ottawa.

What the people in the territories are really asking for is a place at the table where vital decisions are made. The hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth) has already said he will support this motion, and my colleague who will speak after me intends to propose an amendment to motion No. 3 in the name of the hon. member for Yukon. I hope the minister will insist on a time slot during this debate in order to express his own desire to adhere to the wishes of the people of the territories and to respond to this very significant amendment in a positive way.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, my remarks will be relatively brief, as the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) have spoken at length on motion No. 3 and the proposed amendment. During the Easter break I had the opportunity of reading some of the history of Saskatchewan and Alberta and their aspirations and hopes prior to becoming provinces of Canada. A somewhat similar situation exists today in respect of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories in that there is hope that before long these areas will become provinces of Canada.

It was interesting to note that a number of the briefs presented by organizations that appeared before the committee expressed this hope. Also, the minister appeared before the committee and indicated he was looking forward to the day when each of the territories became a province. The officials of the NCPC said they were looking forward to the day when the commission was divided in two, one part being in the Northwest Territories to handle power production and distribution there and the other in the Yukon to do the same thing in that area. This is what will happen when each of the territories becomes a province. We have to be fair to the people in the territories. I do not think these areas will become provinces within the next year or two, but we must plan gradually for the day when they do. It seems to me this can be done by giving the territorial councils and the elected representatives of the territories more power.

The motion as it stands, and I intend to propose an amendment to it, has this idea as its purpose. Motion No. 3 provides for the substitution of "commissioner in council" for "governor in council". This would mean that representatives of the people of the Yukon and Northwest Territories would have more input and more control over the setting of rates. It seems to me this would be one step toward self-government by the people in these territories. I propose to read my amendment to motion No. 3 first, and then discuss it, Madam Speaker. I move:

That motion No. 3 to amend Bill C-13, an act to amend the Northern Canada Power Commission Act, be amended by deleting all of the words after the word "case" in line 6 of the said motion No. 3, and substituting therefor the following:

"the Public Utilities Board of the Yukon Territory or the Northwest Territories as the case may be".

What we are proposing by this amendment is the substitution of the public utilities board in each of the territories for the commissioner in council. This will mean that the boards responsible in each of the territories will have the opportunity of considering and deciding on the rates that will be charged by the commission. It is important that we give the territories more and more responsibility as the days and years go by, because the people there are now or will ultimately be entitled to self-government. I think all of us on this side of the House—in fact, on all sides—are looking forward to that day. I urge the minister to seriously consider supporting this amendment to motion No. 3.

● (1640)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The Chair would like to study further the amendment of the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil), and perhaps with the agreement of the House the debate could continue and a decision might be rendered later.

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Madam Speaker, I do not intend to speak at great length on this matter. I gather that it would be inappropriate for me at this stage to speak to the amendment under consideration. I think the principle is the same in either case; it is the principle of having decisions which affect the localities of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon decided in those localities rather than by the cabinet or the governor in council. I would hope and expect, from what the minister said in speaking on the previous amendment, that this is a change which would recommend itself to the minister and the government precisely because it helps avoid the kind of red tape about which he was speaking with respect to the earlier amendment.

What we have in the bill the minister has introduced—which has come through the change that we are now considering—is really a quite remarkable proposal to anyone acquainted with the situation in the colonial parts of Canada, the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. It is a situation where utility rates in those areas must come to the federal cabinet for decision. As a representative in this House of the national parks, I am acquainted with that kind of situation because in the townsites of Banff and Jasper questions concerning the licensing of dogs must be decided by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. As a result of the minister following the initiative of the committee of which he was a distinguished chairman, that situation is likely soon to change: at least, I understand that changes are in the works.

Unfortunately, there has not been as much movement toward bringing a kind of real democracy to the northern territories as there has been in respect of bringing a greater degree of democracy to local governments in townsites within the national parks. I think it is a quite remarkable fact that in this bill the government again appears to be attempting to confirm the unhappy colonial status of residents of the two great territories of the north, the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, by making them, in effect, come to the cabinet of Canada for approval for setting rates relating to the Northern Canada Power Commission.

Both proposals, the original motion of my colleague the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and the amendment introduced by my colleague the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil), would allow that matter—which surely is a local matter, because if anything is a local matter, utility rates are—to be decided in the territories either by the commissioner and the council or more directly, as proposed by my friend from Moose Jaw, by the public utility boards of the respective territories.

It is very tempting to consider the kind of arrangement the cabinet would have to establish to deal with its heavy responsibility of adjudicating rates in respect of turning on or off the lights in the Northwest Territories or the Yukon. We do not know much about what goes on in cabinet, but one thing we do know is that it has a very active committee system; various ministers are assigned special responsibilities concerning committees of cabinet. If this bill should pass without the amendment, I presume this would mean that a special subcommittee would be established to deal with turning off and on the lights in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon.

Mr. Nielsen: Let there be light.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): This is an indication of the absurdity of a responsibility, which is essentially a local responsibility related to essentially a local matter, being held by the cabinet of Canada. What alarms us here is not simply the absurdity of it, because I confess we have become rather accustomed to absurdity from that side of the House, but rather that this is one more instance of clinging colonialism which unfortunately has been the hallmark of the attitude of this government toward the people, including the elected representatives of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon.

Unless there is some compelling reason which is not evident to us as to why this must be a matter for the attention of the Prime Minister of Canada—that is, the turning on and off of the lights in the territories—and unless we can be shown that there is some compelling requirement for this matter to occupy the attention of these people, it would seem to be absurd that this power should not be vested where it belongs, that is, with the people and institutions of the parts of Canada which exclusively it affects.

My colleague suggested that perhaps there is some kind of association with the biblical phrase "Let there be light," and that a responsibility which has to do with such authority could not be delegated to mere colonials in the territories. I think that if there is a justification for this absurd action, it is a justification of similar absurdity. What we propose here, if these amendments are approved and come before the House for final consideration, is a change which would be simple to accomplish and which in fact would have limited significance to the role of the House of Commons, but would clear away from the cabinet—which we hope is occupied with other things—the heavy responsibility for turning on and off the lights in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. It would also clear away the impression symbolized by this act that there has been an attitude of colonialism perhaps evidenced by the cabinet toward the people of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon.

Our amendments are very simple and the principle is clear. When the matter is local, and surely the turning on and off of lights is local, the responsibility should be local. Yet the bill says otherwise. We have in the amendment of my colleague from Yukon, and the further amendment of my colleague from Moose Jaw, introduced a simple mechanism to return to the local officials responsibility for what is in practice and in fact purely a local matter. Prior to his ascension to those greater heights, the minister in his earlier incarnation demonstrated a certain reasonableness from time to time. I hope that virtue has not entirely departed from him and that he will be reasonable in dealing with this simple amendment to make a slight dint in the unhappy legacy of the colonialism of his predecessors toward the north.

● (1650)

I hope the minister will accept the simple mechanism we are providing and allow the people of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories at least the responsibility to decide when, how and at what cost their lights will be turned on.

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, this matter of the territorial public utilities board was discussed by us at some length, not only in the debate on the bill before us in its present incarnation but in the debates on previous measures. In the discussion in the standing committee I made the following remarks:

> It has been suggested repeatedly that the Northern Canada Power Commission be answerable to the respective territorial public utilities boards. There are two questions, in my opinion, of practicability involved here.
> From a jurisdictional viewpoint, we find that it has not been the practice to require federal agencies to report to boards appointed by a junior level of government, such as a province or a territory.
>
> The second problem derives from the very purpose of the public utilities boards. These are normally established to control private enterprise utility operations in order to ensure that the rates charged produce no more than reasonable rates of return on capital invested. Since the commission is prohibited by law from making a profit, this form of control is not required.
> This is recognized in all provinces, where none of the provincial hydro corporations is answerable to the provincial utilities boards. In view of the doubts that have been expressed to the committee, the commission has sought, and to date has obtained, written confirmation of this point from the following: the British Columbia Hydro and Power Authority; the Saskatchewan Power Corporation; Manitoba Hydro; Ontario Hydro; the New Brunswick Electric Power Commission; and the Nova Scotia Power Commission. Quebec Hydro has indicated verbally that it does not make itself accountable either. We have not yet received written confirmation, therefore they were not included in this list.
> Notwithstanding provincial practice, the commission, wishing to take the fullest possible account of the views of the territorial utilities boards, has initiated the practice of seeking counsel and advice on pending rate changes and on the extent of equalization within the proposed rate zones.

Madam Speaker, as I indicated, I find the position of hon. members opposite inconsistent. In the previous amendment they argued for increased involvement and intervention of the governor in council to approve contracts of over $60,000 in value. Now there is an about-face and they are suggesting it is wrong to have the involvement of the governor in council and that it should not be done at that level. I would just like to say that I share the desire of northerners to run their own affairs. This bill responds to that desire by increasing the size of the Northern Canada Power Commission by two members, from three to five members. These two members are to come from each of the territories.

In addition, as I have indicated before, recently the commissioner of the Northwest Territories was named chairman of the Northern Canada Power Commission, so that now northerners on that board will outnumber the others three to two. So we are optimistic that they will have a significant role to play in the operation of the Northern Canada Power Commission. As I say, we look forward to the day when the commission will have a majority of northerners sitting on the board.

I also indicated in the committee that I look forward to the day when we will be in a position to split the Northern Canada Power Commission and to have one power commission resident in the Yukon and the other power commission resident in the Northwest Territories. I am sure that desire is shared by the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth) and the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen).

The amendment of the hon. member for Yukon would seek to substitute the commissioner in council for the governor in council for the approval of rate zones and for the establishment of a contingency reserve fund. In our view, since the Northern Canada Power Commission is responsible to the Parliament of Canada through the minister, it should not also have to seek authority from the commissioner in council. This would require formal council debate on motion and approval for any rate zone and schedule to be changed and also for the contingency fund to be built up. With respect to the latter, territorial councils provide no part of the funds spent by the commission and therefore should have no say in the contingency fund that the commission feels it needs to carry. In any event, with Commissioner Smith as chairman, and two northerners appointed as commissioners, there will be full input by northern representatives in any of these decisions.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I cannot let some of these statements by the minister go unanswered. I hope he does not get into a rut. He is pulling the same stunt that was pulled by his predecessor in speaking about the separate entity of the territorial governments in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories when it suits him, and when it does not suit him he forgets all about this entity of the territorial governments. He has done that by saying, on the one hand, that the government wants to see as much input as possible by the people of the north into the decision-making process in their own affairs, and so on. Yet when it comes to comparing the procedures that are followed with respect to the setting of the rate by public utilities in the provinces, he makes an argument saying that in none of the provinces which he mentioned is the procedure followed where the utility has to submit its rate to a public utilities commission, that the province does its own policing of the rates, not the federal government.

By adopting that argument, what the minister is in effect saying is that there is no such thing as a territorial entity, that the government will make the decisions here. I put it to him that his argument, if it has any strength at all, has strength in the existence of a territorial entity capable of dealing with the setting and reviewing of rates in the same fashion as the provincial government. If he uses the argument in the sense that he is urging upon members of the House his view that there is no such thing as the territorial government because the function of rate setting and reviewing will be done here and not at the territorial level, even if his argument is correct, and I will go along with it, then surely the review and the approval should be at the territorial level and not at the federal level.

The minister says that great strides have been made within the act for the purpose of injecting territorial input into the decision-making process, and he cites in support of that the fact that the council will be increased to five members and there will be one member from each of the territories. But that still leaves a majority of three—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but before going on to other business I would like to inform the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) that there is some doubt as to the acceptability of his amendment. However, a decision will be rendered later.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

LETTER FROM MINISTER OF JUSTICE TO SECRETARY OF STATE RESPECTING GRANT TO WOMEN'S GROUP

The House resumed, from Thursday February 27, consideration of the motion of Mr. Fairweather:

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of a letter written by the Minister of Justice to the Secretary of State, dated October 21, 1974, about a grant to a women's group in Saskatoon.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Madam Speaker, I lend my support to this very worthwhile application by my hon. friend from Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather). I think he is doing this House and the country a great service by being one who persists in presenting to the House and the country the need for a more open system of government in Canada. We must have more candour and more honesty. We have had inflicted on us by ministers, parliamentary secretaries, senior mandarins, junior mandarins and civil servants who have a craving to prepare a great many documents for the purposes of show and tell only, a paper blizzard, documents which say much but inform little. This is the problem we face. There cannot be an informed and intelligent electorate, with a government which is responsive to the needs of the people and which will provide policies to deal with those needs, unless there is a system by which the government is compelled to provide information which is needed.

I have spoken on this subject in this House many times before and I intend to speak about it as often as I can. I see my hon. friend sitting across the floor today who was at the committee where I spoke the other day. I hope that he was persuaded to some extent by what I had to say and that he might be persuaded to agree with me on the views I am about to express.

I do not suggest that the government does not tell us all we want to know because it is a matter of corrupt, evil or bad actions on their part. It is a desire to conceal mistakes; it is a desire to erect a paper curtain behind which the government can operate free from inspection by this House or by the public so that it can make mistakes, be guilty of bad judgment and yet preserve that passion for perfection and the need to appear impeccable, which is the trademark of all mandarins and many of the people in government.

The other day in the committee before which I appeared, I quoted—and I am going to take the time to quote them in this House—some very interesting observations by people and by commissions which amply support the proposition which my hon. friend from Fundy-Royal has brought forward. In 1964, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau)—not yet having jumped into the Parliamentary waters but obviously thinking of it, because it was just a few months before he was elected—said this:

Democratic progress requires the ready availability of true and complete information. In this way, people can objectively evaluate their government's policies. To act otherwise is to give way to despotic secrecy—

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: I think my hon. friend is applauding because he agrees with me. I hope he will agree with me when the opportunity comes to put into effect provisions in this House which will make the Prime Minister's words before he came into the House conform with the rules of the House. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), then the minister of justice, in an address made at the annual meeting of the Canadian Bar Association in September, 1969, made a very strong statement. I will not read it all but just a couple of sentences as follows:

> Government secrecy is sometimes legitimated as the state's right to privacy, but may well be a denial of the public right to know. If individual privacy is a foundation of democracy, the citizen's right to know is fundamental to any participatory democracy.

The final sentences uttered by the then minister of justice in discussing whether, in the case of trials where the government is a litigant, the executive should have the right to deny the court information which is part of the essential evidence, were as follows:

> —I should perhaps add that I personally favour the view that the judiciary rather than the executive should, to the greatest possible extent, be left to determine whether documents should be produced and to balance the various conflicting public interests that may be involved—

At a later date the then minister of justice, at the conference on computers in May of 1970, said the following:

> In other words, government secrecy is sometimes legitimated as the need for a government's right to privacy but which may well be a denial of the public right to know—

He was repeating what he had said earlier. He ended with the following statement:

> —what is necessary, then, is a freedom of information act entitling the individual to information which the government authority has arbitrarily seen fit to withhold—

I will quote very briefly from the recommendations of the task force on government information. Several prominent members of the public service today were involved in that: Mr. Bernard Ostry, Mr. Tom Ford and Mr. D'Iberville Fortier. Their final recommendation in this task force, which was surveying the entire question of information, the need of the public to know and the compulsion on the government to inform, was in the following terms:

> The right of Canadians to full, objective and timely information and the obligation of the state to provide such information about its programs and policies be publicly declared and stand as the foundation for the development of new government policies in this field. This right and obligation might be comprehended within a new constitution in the context of freedom of expression.

In another paragraph, which I think is extremely pertinent and bears out what I said before, that the feeling that people in government must appear to the public always to be right, rather than any deep-seated, instinctive compulsion for corruption, the following appears—and this was a task force which travelled through this country and spoke to many people:

> Many felt that the government information services aim primarily to please the ministers and to gild departmental escutcheons; that the public on occasion had to force information out of them; that the information was given in scraps and driblets and, often, only when its release suited someone's idea of political expediency. Certain departments were said to deliberately withhold information of public interest if there was a chance it might tarnish the departmental image. It was argued that the failure of departments to reveal the flaws in their programs could conceivably have the unfortunate effect of hiding from the government itself important changes in the very conditions under which such programs were taking place. One group insisted there were cases in which departments had suppressed research because the results might have discredited previously enunciated departmental theories.

I could go on in detail but I will not. I will simply refer to a report made by the Economic Council of Canada in its eighth annual review in September of 1971 which, in its final paragraph, made a comparable recommendation. In June, 1971, the Science Council of Canada which was undertaking a special study dealing with fishery and wildlife resources, surveyed people in this field all across the country and made similar observations.

I deduce from all this that people in government—and I think it is probably more true of people in government service than of elected people in government—have this fear of being caught in an error. They are anxious to avoid the appearance that the propositions and the advice they give to their minister or department may, in the light of future events, turn out to be incorrect. This is the main cause of so much of the secrecy in government, and I do not see why it should be so. We all make mistakes. Even Mr. Speaker makes mistakes occasionally. The problem there, however, is that we are not allowed to challenge him in this House. I think the distinguished occupant of the chair at the moment is prepared to admit that some of the decisions he has made during the course of his career in the chair might, upon reflection, have been changed. I see a smile which I take to mean assent.

I make mistakes. Amiable and distinguished members of the government party opposite make mistakes. Why in the name of heaven should people in government service and the government ministers feel that they are different? The public would have a great deal more respect for the processes of government and those engaged in it if occupants of the seats of the mighty would admit from time to time that they were wrong. There would then be a greater measure of candor, less cynicism and much more respect—and today this government needs the respect of the people it governs, the people for whom it legislates. Instead, people in this House, people in government in particular and people in the public service are reluctant to admit they have ever been wrong.

Some months ago the Minister of Finance brought down a budget in which there were errors and miscalculations. They were probably quite honestly based on information given to him by his public servants. I think he would have greater respect from the people of the country today if he would stand up and say, "I was wrong. I made a mistake and because of errors and misjudgments, many of which were the result of advice tendered by people in my department, and economists. We have got into a mess; I admit that, and now we are going to try to come up with some new ideas." I suggest that if any minister of finance had the courage to do that, he would gain a greater degree of respect and admiration from the people of the country. In this House we need the support and respect of the people, and we do not have it today.

I am not concerned about Gallup polls, Mr. Speaker. When you cross this country from the east coast to the west coast and talk to people, it does not take more than half a dozen sentences before it becomes apparent what little respect and how much cynicism and distrust exist. I put it down to the fact that people have reached the stage that they do not believe a word that this government or its supporters has to say—not only this government but provincial governments and municipal governments, and not only in Canada but in the United States as well.

The trouble in Indo-China that the United States faced for many years came about as a result of the lies and deceptions practised by the Johnson administration in the Gulf of Tonkin incident when the armed forces presented a fictitious scenario, a plan which led congress to put certain economic power to declare war into the hands of the president. We see the tragic consequences of that today, and it was disclosed in the Pentagon papers. There is not very much respect for government in the United States today.

We have not reached that stage yet, Mr. Speaker, and I plead, particularly with members on the government side, that we should bear that in mind. The government should make sure that there is a greater flow of honest factual information to the people of Canada.

Mr. S. Victor Railton (Welland): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) made a very fine speech. He knows a great deal about this subject as he is an old parliamentarian. I enter this debate as a layman, not an expert. I know the hon. member once referred to me as having a certain amount of political virginity—

Mr. Baldwin: No, intellectual virginity.

Mr. Railton: I hope he still thinks so.

Mr. Baldwin: I think you have lost it since then.

Mr. Railton: To get to the case in point, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) has moved for the production of papers on a certain matter involving the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang). From what I can make out, the hon. member for Fundy-Royal wishes to have made public some advice which was asked of the Minister of Justice by the Secretary of State.

Mr. Fairweather: No; the other way around.

Mr. Railton: I am sorry; it was the other way around. The reply was considered by the minister as a legal letter of advice which, of course, is exactly the same as a solicitor's written advice to a client. I think it is well understood that information of this kind is protected in civilian life and, similarly, it is protected in a governmental exchange. Advice of the type given, let us all admit, is confidential; it is restricted and can only be released with the consent of the party asking or receiving, or both. In addition, there is frequently a third party.

I am not too sure why the papers were asked for, but I think it was about some group in Saskatchewan that was requesting a grant. I am not certain of the purpose of the grant. Of course, the third party in this case might very well have wished to have the correspondence made public. In a different case, however, the third party might take the opposite view and expressly instruct that the information be kept confidential.

The case referred to concerns a confidential legal opinion and is somewhat parallel to the advice that a doctor gives to a patient, which is strictly confidential. When a doctor obtains his licence he accepts the premise that his advice regarding a patient is privileged, confidential and secret. His case records should not be released without the consent of the patient or his legal adviser. The doctor can give a confidential opinion, if the patient agrees. He could, I suppose, give a non-technical, off-the-cuff report or opinion on the patient; but if it is inaccurate, untrue or given without consent, he could be sued.

This, then, is the situation we are discussing today. We are talking about the confidentiality and implicit restrictiveness of a paper which expresses a legal opinion which could involve two ministers of the Crown. Why should we have to argue the point? Surely it is clear. In private life, restricted information or legal opinions could, if made public, be used against the individual in question either through malice, sharp business or just gossip. So in government practice the making public of secret information could harm either one of the two ministers or even the group or agency which may have been the subject of the discussion in the first place. I submit that the government has taken the correct course in refusing to make public confidential information. Surely no one would deny this fact.

I have heard this subject and similar subjects discussed many times in private members' hour. This is but one of several similar occasions I have witnessed since my election to this House. If I remember correctly, the government House leader of the twenty-ninth parliament tabled as appendix B to Hansard of March 15, 1973, under the heading "Notices of motions for the production of papers", general principles outlining the government's position on this subject. The guidelines were covered by 16 points which all seemed reasonable. They related to internal departmental memoranda, interdepartmental confidential memos, secret information, communication with foreign powers, certain national defence information, research into future policies, preparation of government bills, and so on. Apart from dealing with national secrets which might be conveyed to an alien power, they placed emphasis on confidentiality. Surely it is obvious that when the government or a government official asks for an opinion from a private person, group or agency, that opinion or good advice might not be forthcoming unless there were an understanding that the opinion or advice was to be strictly confidential and protected.

The other day I read my own comments as recorded in Hansard to do with a certain notice of motion for the production of papers. I also read what I had said in the Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments. I refer hon. members to page 1384 of Hansard for April 11, 1974. The debate in question arose from the request for the production of papers to do with cabinet discussions on the Veterans Land Act. The motion was moved by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) and seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). The debate itself centred on the Veterans Land Act; the notice of motion for the production of papers was merely a ploy to obtain a debate.

I am sure that both the mover and seconder of the motion knew that their request for the production of papers was not acceptable. They were asking for details of internal cabinet discussions and no doubt expected to be unsuccessful. We heard a certain amount of humbug. There was talk about democracy and some suggestion that it is the people's right to have these papers made public. Surely it is an important tenet of democracy that we shall protect officers of the Crown and their confidential advisers. I contended in that debate that the notes and memos of a minister running a department should be confidential as he may be discussing a program that might be retired, changed or initiated.

On January 23, 1975, I once more participated in a debate on the production of papers. I refer particularly to page 2551 of Hansard for that day. On that occasion the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) asked for a long list showing the salaries of civil servants and also for the confidential report of the advisory committee. Such information fell under the category of "Consultant Studies" as set out in appendix B on page 2288 of Hansard for March 15, 1973. Naturally, when the consulting or advisory group was asked to make its report, it was determined that it was confidential. Also, naturally, it was implied that the resulting government decision would be made public.

Not only has this subject been discussed in the House; it has also been discussed on three occasions in the Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments. The main witness appearing before the committee on February 25, 1975, was Professor Rowat who was, as one would expect, in favour of loosening the guidelines, to give, in his captivating phraseology, more information to the citizens of Canada. He contended that far more information could be made public than the government is at present making public. He suggested that almost all conversations, letters, reports of meetings and government research in many fields should and could be opened widely to public gaze.

The principal witness appearing before the committee on March 4, 1975, was Dr. Dunton, formerly president of Carleton University. He contended, in the main, that a great deal of the knowledge gained by lower government circles when they explore new concepts and policies involving, for instance, pipelines, transportation, fiscal policies or possible projected changes should immediately be made available to lower echelons in parliament, to both government and opposition members. I point out that the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) appeared as a witness before the committee when it met on March 11 this year.

My reaction to all this is that premature release of information may be as bad as late release. Surely it is necessary and reasonable for the government, for the Prime Minister and the cabinet to hold discussions for some time before announcing an impending or possible new policy thrust. They must be given an opportunity to be in possession of most of the facts before other people possess them, because they are responsible for showing leadership in ensuing debates. I am of the opinion that this government, as its record will show, has been generous in producing background information.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Even you can't keep a straight face.

Mr. Railton: If one reviews the record of the past few years to do with taxation, agriculture, inflation, rising food prices, natural resources, law of the sea, the international monetary fund, world oil prices, Syncrude, pipelines and immigration, one will see that this government has made available a great deal of information for the benefit of members of parliament and the public. The standing committee discussed procedures in other countries. Sweden, in particular, was represented as the ideal socialist state and was said to have advanced liberal laws allowing more public acquisition of confidential material. On close scrutiny it turns out that this is not quite correct. Members who have been there report that this ideal state of affairs is mythical. True, the laws are there, but in practice those members think more information can be dug out in Canada than in Sweden.

In conclusion, I say that we come out well in any comparison. The present government's policies and guidelines in divulging restrictive information are, in reality, better than those of most other countries. Of course, I expect opposition members to attempt to discover hidden facts, and as often as possible. That is their job. I also hope—I think members expect this—that the government will continually review its guidelines, accept criticism and attempt to liberalize, wherever possible, its treatment of restricted information.

● (1730)

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by referring briefly to the remarks just made by the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Railton) and to say that I noted, though I was not particularly impressed by, the idea that the public is the patient in its relationship with the Government of Canada. I think the analogy the hon. member used was inapt in that particular, and I do not think it an apt analogy for another reason, that is to say, the reason for which this debate was generated being exactly opposite the case of someone, say, the Secretary of State, going to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) and seeking a legal opinion.

What happened in this case was that the Minister of Justice sought to impose upon his colleague a legal opinion which was not requested. That surely changes any client relationship, even if the client relationship were a valid analogy for keeping from the people and the Parliament of Canada important exchanges of which this is only one symbol. The point was made by my distinguished hon. friend from Fundy-Royal earlier when opening this discussion, that what is at issue here is not the content of this particular letter but, instead, the practice which has unfortunately become deeply ingrained in the government of keeping information from parliament and from the people of Canada.

I am following in this debate, and I am honoured to do so, two hon. members, for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather), and for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), who have won the respect of parliament and of observers of parliament for their knowledge of the rules and procedures here. I participate as a junior member of parliament who has been surprised in my short time in this House at how often I am told that public business has to be kept from me, that I cannot be told about this or that, that I cannot be trusted with certain information. I am told this often, as we all are as newcomers to this House. As members of the House of Commons of Canada we are in the category of restricted people who cannot be trusted with information. Surely that is a situation which should not be allowed to continue.

The problem with respect to the insistence on secrecy does not apply simply to the failure of the government to produce papers. I spoke recently to an assistant deputy minister, someone who, incidentally, is earning more than any of us here, and he told me that he didn't wish to be quoted but that if he followed the habit around here he would have to stamp "secret" on the toilet paper because that particular classification was so much in use.

Mr. Beatty: Probably because it was bought from a Liberal without tender.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): There are a number of other instances of secrecy here. I want to deal quickly with some of them. The point was made earlier about consultants' reports. We now contract out a great deal of the responsibility for decision-making to consultants. Nearly a billion dollars is being spent on consultants' fees. Yet very many of the reports which are received, reports which should be public information, are hidden from us. They are hidden from members in this House. We are not to be trusted. We are not to be trusted with these reports which are provided by consultants, at an annual fee of a billion dollars, to advise the government. That is one instance.

I want to go back to something my hon. friend from Peace River mentioned when he talked about the report which inspired the development of Information Canada. There was heavy emphasis in that report on a sort of ombudsman role, a role which would not simply involve a big machine spewing out propaganda year after year from Ottawa to the country, but which would somehow go out and try to gather opinions from the country and feed them back to Ottawa.

The report envisaged that someone would go out and try to find grievances and make sure they were corrected. But that part of the report was ignored. The part which was acted upon was the part dealing with propaganda. So we have a very serious situation now in which Information Canada only sends out the approved version of information which, in many cases, and I say this with regret, cannot be trusted to reflect the facts.

As well, Information Canada has led to an immense duplication of information facilities. For every member of the press gallery there are ten or 15 information officers dumping stuff on their desks, sending out the approved versions, elbowing up to them at the bar of the Press Club to make sure that the approved version is communicated to the country. That is a very sophisticated and large propaganda machine, something which should be of concern to everyone in this House who is worried about the right of Canadians to know what is going on in the country.

Another developing practice has been that of making important announcements outside the House instead of inside the Commons. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) today, for example, announced his new economic policy, which I remind hon. members on the other side is an incomes policy. He did not make his announcement here in the House but outside the House.

Again, we have witnessed the frequent practice of answers to serious questions being given flippantly in the House so that another means of access to information is cut down. We even get from our distinguished and well-respected Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), now that there is a fixed time limit to questions in the period, answers given by him to every question very, very, slowly so as to consume as much time as he possibly can. This cuts into our capacity to elicit information through the question period.

During the last few weeks a very surprising experience relating to questions of national security happened to be discovered by chance. We were putting questions to an unprepared minister in a standing committee and it came to light that it was the practice to fudge the estimates, not to be honest with the House of Commons and the people of Canada in the estimates which were brought forward because the government hides votes for security services in a range of departments.

When that matter was raised in the House the minister, the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Drury), announced the government's preparedness to set up some kind of arrangement by which members could be briefed on questions of security. Yesterday I sought leave to introduce a motion to urge the House leaders to go ahead with that arrangement. But it was voted down by members of the other side. They did that at the beginning of the question period and then, a few minutes later, talking out of the other side of their mouths, they refused to answer questions on security matters on the grounds that such things should not be discussed in the House. They said under the standing order they should not be discussed anywhere; they said in the question period that they should not be discussed in the House of Commons. It is unfortunately the position of the Government of Canada that important questions relating to security as well as to other matters should not be discussed anywhere. Mr. Speaker, that is not a position which anyone interested in a democracy can accept without a great deal of fear.

A degree of confidentiality has, of course, to apply, perhaps in all matters and certainly in security matters. But that is a quite different principle from the principle which is enunciated and illustrated by the government, which says you cannot trust parliament and you cannot trust the people with anything except the approved versions sent out under the imprimatur of Information Canada.

I recall in 1968, Mr. Speaker, in the election campaign of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the heavy emphasis that was placed upon the phrase "participatory democracy". There was a heavy emphasis placed on getting people involved. Well, we all know that the basic essential element to participation is information. You cannot have participatory democracy, both words, unless the people are informed. If you are going to have the people receive only approved versions, you are going to have participatory something else. It won't be participatory democracy. The danger is that it will be neither.

I make the point—I emphasize it—that it is not just members of this House who suffer from the prejudice which is illustrated in the refusal to publish the letter which gave rise to this debate, it is also the people of Canada generally, and our very system, because as my colleague from Peace River said earlier, the system of democratic and parliamentary government is suffering seriously from the cynicism which has been engendered across this land in part by the feeling that you cannot trust politicians to tell the truth. They will give a partial truth, or if there is some information which is important for them to keep they will stamp "secret" on it and refuse to let you have it. That is a very serious, cancerous cynicism and it has directly to do, among other causes, with the insistence on secrecy of the government we have today.

As a member of parliament who comes from outside central Canada, as one who comes from a rural constituency not particularly well represented in the public service, with views, attitudes and even prejudices which are perhaps not replicated in the senior public service or treasury benches, I want to talk for a moment about the danger of basing decisions upon wrong information. What we have here is not simply a refusal to publish information and to let members of parliament know. What we have here is a situation that ensures that decisions are taken by a tight little group whose practices of secrecy allow no ventilation. There is no certainty that they are acting on premises that are shared in northern Quebec or western Alberta, or in any other part of Canada that is some distance, be it in miles, ideas or views, from the cabinet or senior public service.

That, in a country of such diversity and fragility as ours, is a highly dangerous situation, one that I hope my colleagues on the other side, who I believe are worried about unity and the future of this country, will seriously consider, because this insistence on secrecy leads to decisions that do not reflect the needs and requirements of this country, and it can serve to disunify us, perhaps drastically.

My colleague from Welland, and the parliamentary secretary who spoke before him earlier in this debate, referred to this letter as being a legal opinion. That happens to be the dodge, or the excuse, in this case. In other cases when there are legitimate demands for information that should be in the public domain other excuses are given for not making the information available. There is always some reason why the practice is not to make the information available to the public.

I think the question that we should face is not: is it the practice? Because of course it is. The government has set the practice. It is a practice designed to keep as much information as confidential as possible. Rather the question here is: why are we slaves to that practice? Why do we have it? Clearly it is wrong to keep information from the people of Canada, from the democratically elected representatives of the people. As a general principle I think we would all agree it is wrong. Yet it is the practice. And so the members on the government side of the House allow themselves to be lulled to sleep by the incantation that the wrong that we are committing is a wrong that it is the practice to commit. I say that that is not good enough.

Clearly we need a society—certainly we need a parliament—where as much information as possible is known. I think others want to participate in this debate, Madam Speaker, so I will stop now by asking the representatives of the government here today: why fear an informed parliament? Why do they fear an informed public? Why insist on a practice of holding back information that would allow the public and parliament to be informed about the facts on which decisions are based?

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Toronto-Lakeshore): Madam Speaker, may I first congratulate that last speaker, the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark), and the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) who preceded, him, for their eloquent speeches. Much of what they said made a great deal of sense. Hopefully in the not too distant future some changes will take place which will mean more information will be made available.

However, on the particular issue before us today it is with reluctance that I oppose the motion of the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather). I am sure all members would like to see as much information made available as could be made available. We on this side of the House are faced with the same limitations in this regard as those across the way and, as our duties and obligations to those we represent are similar, we share the same frustrations when unable to obtain a certain document or piece of information which we may deem pertinent in carrying out these duties. However, representatives from all parties in past debate on this subject have agreed that free and unlimited access to all information and documents was impossible, or certainly unwise.

In order to clarify the situation, guidelines were established indicating several categories of restrictions for the production of government papers or documents. I think we are all aware of what these guidelines are; they were made public and consist of some 16 different items. The purpose of the guidelines is to ensure required confidentiality for the effective functioning of government while at the same time guaranteeing access to all government papers not meeting the specific restrictions. However, many opposition members feel that the application of these guidelines leaves too much power of discretion in the hands of the government, and obviously this motion is a case in point. The motion of the hon. member was refused because it was classified "legal opinion or advice provided for the use of the government", the very first restriction listed in the guidelines for exempting documents from publication.

This motion is quite unique in that the hon. member is requesting a document, most of which he admits has been made available by the media, and the minister has refused to release a copy of the letter in question although he, too, knows that its unauthorized release took place months ago. Therefore the actual production of this particular letter is irrelevant; the question is simply should or should not this document, or more broadly this type of document, be made available to members, and therefore to the public?

To someone who is unfamiliar with the workings of parliament, it must seem redundant and somewhat suspect for members to be debating the disclosure of a certain document that has already been disclosed. However, I do not feel it is redundant, nor do I suspect the motives of either the hon. member for Fundy-Royal, who served with distinction as joint chairman of the Standing Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments which first examined the guidelines, or those of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang), for the question before us is of fundamental importance. It deals with rights of members to have access to information; the well-established practice of including the opinion of law officers of the Crown on a question of government policy in the class of confidential documents; and the possibility of establishing a precedent in the compulsory disclosure of certain information, the effects of which on the performance of the government, to say the least, would be uncertain.

It is this latter point about which I am most concerned. My hon. friend, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Marceau), has pointed out that, just because in the case before us some or all of the documents containing the legal opinion may have become available to the media, this is no reason why we should abandon the tradition that such confidential documents should not be disclosed. It has been shown where this tradition has been withheld in a number of rulings.

Even if it could be demonstrated that the disclosure of the particular letters in question does not create any of the negative effects which the guidelines were established to prevent, it would still be unwise to produce the document. For this document clearly is a legal advice provided for the use of the government and, as such, falls into the first criterion for exempting government papers from production. To produce this document would be to reject that particular criterion and the long-established and accepted practice on this point.

Nor can it be argued that because the disclosure of the letter really did not disrupt the functioning of the government, then the category under which it was restricted should be abolished. This would be like someone saying Russian roulette is a safe pastime because they once struck upon an empty chamber while playing it. It is not possible to allow for the disclosure of some legal opinion and withholding other such opinion. It is an all or nothing proposition, or may as well be. If a person giving legal advice has to worry about whether this advice will be made public, then the value of the advice will be questionable at best.

The important point at question is not the contents of a document as such, but rather the nature of those contents. I have said that the motion for the production of papers before us is unique in that we know the contents of the particular letter in question. This information actually acts as more of a hindrance than help in that it distracts us from the real point. In other motions of this kind we do not know the actual contents of the government information requested, and must debate them solely on the nature of the contents of the requested information.

[Mr. Robinson.]

If the guidelines were based only on the contents of government papers or documents as opposed to the nature of the contents, then they would be much less restrictive and permit far greater access to governmental information. This is because much of what is considered confidential could be released, and by itself would not cause too much disruption to the operation of government. The document which the member is requesting is an example, as are a number of other leaks of different kinds which have taken place in recent years. However, if these leaks were to occur on a large scale, or compulsory disclosure of documents were based on their individual content, then I feel the cumulative effect on the effective functioning of government would be disastrous.

● (1750)

This debate reflects the growing concern about public access to governmental information and the complications and contradictions that have arisen in this regard in the past number of years. From the earliest times governments of all types have been anxious to preserve secrecy for matters affecting the safety or tactical advantages of the state. However, dangers to the state have changed in character and become more complex, and have come to seem internal as well as external.

The activities of government increasingly affect all the affairs of the citizen. Its economic discussions have come to be considered no less vital to the basis of the life of the community than decisions on defence. Advances in science have both peacetime and military applications. Rapid changes in society, and the increased influence of centralized institutions further complicate the issue. More and more information about the private affairs of citizens comes into the possession of the government, and there is a feeling that the government should safeguard the confidences of the citizen almost as strictly as it guards information of use to the enemy.

On the other hand, these developments have increased the need for more effective, democratic control. This means more information to enable citizens to make rational decisions about matters affecting their lives. Progress in education and in technology has increased the possibility of circulating information on a wide scale and in considerable detail.

A report presented to the British parliament by a committee chaired by Lord Franks stated that:

> We are faced... with an increased area in which consideration of secrecy may arise, and at the same time with an increased need for the diffusion of information together with the technical capacity to supply this need.

Similarly, Professor Donald C. Rowat, of Carleton University, tells us:

> There will always be the problem of drawing the line between the government's need to deliberate confidentially and the public's need of information. It is simply a question of emphasis.

It is exactly this question of emphasis, and the problem of drawing the line between what documents should be disclosed and which should not, that we are discussing today. The hon. member for Fundy-Royal stated clearly that the issue was not abortion and that the motion had really little to do with the copy of a letter, but rather the issue was greater accessibility to governmental information or, more pointedly, secrecy in government.

I stated at the outset that I was somewhat reluctant to oppose the motion because I was sympathetic to the objective of greater accessibility to information and less secrecy in government. However, we must proceed carefully in this direction. It would not do simply to throw away the guidelines governing the production of papers and open the flood gates to free access to information.

I believe that most members would agree that the positive benefits accrued by such action would be heavily outweighed by the damage done to the effective operation of our democratic government. Furthermore, whatever weaknesses and criticisms members may see in the guidelines, they serve an important role; first of underlining the acceptance of the principle that government has to justify its withholding of facts, and second, of providing a focus where constructive criticisms and suggestions for a greater flow of information can take place. Even those members who have been strong critics of the scope and application of the guidelines have conceded that their introduction was a very considerable step forward in that it indicated a realization that there was a need to deal with public access to governmental information.

The Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments, of which the hon. member for Fundy-Royal was former joint chairman, and of which I am now a member, is indeed dealing with this subject at the present time. I am grateful to the hon. member for having initiated this debate which will be helpful to me in those deliberations, as I am sure it will be to other members of the committee.

However, I am unable to accept the motion, for to do so would be to render useless the very first criterion for exempting government papers from production, and would seriously undermine the guidelines as a whole. I am not arguing that the guidelines are perfect, for I feel many of the criticisms against them are valid and means must be found to open up much more information to the public. However, until these means are found and other alternatives put forward, the guidelines must remain. At the present time, for better or for worse, they are all we have.

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes there are left I should like to make a few brief comments and to associate myself completely with my colleague, the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather), in his request that the government be more forthcoming with information that should properly be in the public domain.

It is one of the facts of life that many people who have been watching governments have noticed that they are very quick to classify information which can be potentially embarrassing to government. Having heard the speech of the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Railton), I can only say that if the government is anxious to classify information which could be potentially embarrassing to it, it should first have considered the hon. member's speech.

The particular case before us graphically illustrates the tendency of government to treat information about the activities of public officials, in their public responsibility in respect of the dispensation of public funds, as its private property. It is interesting to note that the document it is classifying as secret has already in fact been released to the press and is public property. This says something about a government that would take this attitude toward information which is already public and should properly be public. Governments by their very nature tend to be more protective in respect of information in the public sector and more contemptuous of the right to privacy of information in the private sector.

I was interested, when doing some research for the debate today, to read the following from an excellent book by David Wise, entitled "The Politics of Lying";

> ... when information which properly belongs to the public is systematically withheld by those in power, the people soon become ignorant of their own affairs, distrustful of those who manage them, and—eventually—incapable of determining their own destinies.

The irony of that statement is that the author was former President Nixon of the United States. This is one of the facts of life, and the speech of the hon. member for Welland has made former President Nixon look extremely progressive in his viewpoint.

We had an experience just yesterday of the government House leader, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp), specifically refusing a motion proposed by my colleague, the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark), seconded by myself, which would have given parliament the opportunity to have some parliamentary overview of information which is classified as secret by the government. The government refused to have the House leaders get together to consider a mechanism for parliamentary over-view. Later in the day the Acting Prime Minister, the same man, had the gall to tell the House of Commons that it was improper then for the House of Commons to debate matters like this in a public forum. In other words, it could not be debated in private because the government refused to set up the mechanism to consider this, and it could not be debated in public because the government felt this information should not be made public. Certainly from my point of view that graphically illustrates the attitude of the government toward secrecy. Mr. Speaker, I see that it is six o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

NORTHERN CANADA POWER COMMISSION ACT

AMENDMENTS TO CONSTITUTION AND POWERS OF COMMISSION

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-13, to amend the Northern Canada Power Commission Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development and Motion No. 3 (Mr. Nielsen) and the amendment (Mr. Neil) thereto.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. When the House proceeded to the consideration of private members' hour the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) had the floor on an amendment upon which the Chair had some reservations and some doubts in relation to its procedural acceptability. Of course I do not wish to prevent the hon. member from completing his remarks on the doubtful amendment, so I wonder whether he is seeking the floor to continue his speech, in which event I will rule afterward. The hon. member for Yukon.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, to carry on in respect of the doubtful question or doubtful amendment, the minister told us how we had made this great step toward, providing an input by the citizens of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory into the decisions of the commission by touting the two additional members who will be sitting on the commission of five. I was making the point that this still gives the government a majority of three.

The minister makes much of the fact that when this bill was first introduced he appointed the Commissioner for the Yukon Territory as chairman of the commission. That is no different from the unsatisfactory state of affairs that existed for so many years heretofore when his deputy minister and the previous deputy minister were chairmen of the commission, and so we go back all the way to 1948.

● (2010)

Having the Commissioner for the Yukon as chairman of the Northern Canada Power Commission is no different than having the deputy minister as chairman because he is a government servant, he will take his instructions from the minister, and he will do precisely what he is told to do by the minister as he does now. So there is no difference at all in the change. I am sure the minister is aware of the fact that brief after brief was presented to the standing committee calling for a commission of seven, the majority of whom would be people outside government service. Then we would have a meaningful majority and a meaningful input into the decisions of the commission—something that we do not have now.

The last point the minister made in response to our plea to him to have rate approvals and reviews subject to the decision of the people in the two territories, either through the regulatory vehicle of the public utilities board or through the commissioner in council, was that this would be far too cumbersome and that all we would really be doing would be substituting one body for the other. I suggest to him that it is far better to have these decisions made by the people whom they concern most, rather than having the rates for public utilities in the Yukon be a matter for consideration by the cabinet. It seems to me to be a misplacement of priorities for the government to place that as an urgent matter over other matters before the House.

The minister spoke of the future when the Northern Canada Power Commission might be divided into two bodies, one functioning in the Yukon and the other in the Northwest Territories. That is no bar at present to having the rate structure set, reviewed and approved by the elected representatives of the people in the north at this time. It ill serves the minister to suggest that by giving this kind of power to the bodies in the north, parliament will somehow lose control. That is not the case because he knows that the commissioner in each territory takes his instructions from him, and he knows that if he does not approve of a rate that has been set by the commission, or of a rate zone that is established by the commission, he can inform the respective commissioner in whichever territory it involves of his views and instruct him accordingly. So really the minister has ultimate control. That is the state of affairs. It would not detract one iota from his responsibilities and powers.

Having said that, I will take no more time on the amendment of my colleague, the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil), in the hope that before making any ruling on the acceptability of the amendment hon. members will be given the opportunity to reply to Your Honour's doubts, which I hope will be expressed by you before calling for those views.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Before we proceed further, and upon the invitation of the hon. member for Yukon, let me say at this time that I will soon make a ruling on the acceptability of the proposed amendment moved by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil), upon which the Chair had some reservations before we stopped our proceedings for private member's hour this afternoon. This gave the opportunity to the hon. member to contribute further to the debate, which I do not question.

Let me say, for the better understanding of hon. members and because I wish to invite them to put forward their point of view on the acceptability of the amendment, that although the hon. member for Yukon might be speaking for the third time when he rises to speak again, he will be speaking on the procedural point.

I do not think I should say any more at this time. Let me only bring to the attention of hon. members a couple of points of reference. First I should like to refer to the first few lines of a citation at page 381 of May's eighteenth edition, which read as follows:

> The fundamental rule that debate must be relevant to a question necessarily involves the rule that every amendment must be relevant to the question on which the amendment is proposed.

In the view of the Chair the question before the House now is not the bill but the motion of the hon. member for Yukon.

Let me also refer to citation 203(1) of Beauchesne's fourth edition at page 171, which reads:

> It is an imperative rule that every amendment must be relevant to the question on which the amendment is proposed.

Paragraph (3) reads:

> An amendment setting forth a proposition dealing with a matter which is foreign to the proposition involved in the main motion is not relevant and cannot be moved.

The ruling that I am ready to make will be mainly based on these two citations, and also on Standing Order 75(5) which obliges hon. members to give notice if they want to put forward at the report stage, an amendment to a piece of legislation before the House.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, permit me first to make a submission with respect to the applicability of Standing Order 75(5). In my respectful submisson that rule does not apply to anything other than a notice of an amendment to a bill, and contains a further refinement requiring that that notice make reference to the appearance thereof on the notice paper. I do not believe that that rule was ever intended to preclude members from moving amendments at the report stage. If that intrepretation were to be placed on Standing Order 75(5), it would mean that all other members of the House would be precluded from moving any amendment to any of the motions now standing in my name on the order paper. In my respectful submission that standing order was never intended to be applied in that restrictive sense. It follows consequently that all hon. members are free to move an amendment to a motion which appears properly on the order paper at the report stage of any bill.

Dealing with the other two points raised by the Chair, I take it that both deal with the question of relevancy. The authority quoted by you, Sir, cites a long standing rule of the House that not only debate must be relevant but any amendment must also be relevant. I can only assume that the Chair has doubts with respect to the substance of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Moose Jaw, perhaps by virtue of a failure to appreciate the intricacies and the finer points involved in the legislation and the structure within which that legislation operates in the territorial scheme of things in this federal structure of ours.

Clause 4 of the bill purports to make any rates which are set by the Northern Canada Power Commission subject to the approval of the governor in council. To say that the amendment moved by the hon. member for Moose Jaw is out of order on the ground that his amendment, calling as it does for that power to reside in the hands of a public utilities board rather than the governor in council, is to suggest that any amendment which would substitute any body other than the governor in council for the purpose of performing the function called for in a government bill would be irrelevant, and it would therefore follow that the motion on the order paper would also be irrelevant and therefore out of order, which I submit is certainly not the intention of the rule as to relevancy.

I would suggest that the relevance rule cited by Your Honour would catch any amendment moved which attempted to do away in its entirety with the function which is to be performed by the governor in council under the government bill, and by the commissioner in council under motion No. 3 standing in my name. The rule as to relevance, in my submission, does not apply to the function of the governor in council under clause 4 of the bill. If I, by my motion, or if the hon. member for Moose Jaw, by his motion, had suggested that the approval of the fire department or of the dogcatcher of the city of Whitehorse would perform that function, I might find myself in some agreement with the Chair, but in my respectful submission the suggestion in my motion No. 3 on the order paper, that the approval of the commissioner in council rather than that of the governor in council should be sought, does not make that motion out of order on the grounds of irrelevancy.

If Your Honour accepts that, then the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Moose Jaw attempting to substitute for Commissioner in Council the public utilities board of the Yukon and Northwest Territories must also be a proper amendment. In order for an amendment to be caught by the relevancy rule with respect to this section, the amendment would have to introduce a subject matter which could not in any way be relevant or connected to clause 4(3) of the bill, but the mere substitution of one agency for that which is called for under the terms of the proposed subsection (3) of section 10 in clause 4 of the bill does not make the matter irrelevant.

In the event that the preliminary statement made by Your Honour did not encompass the inventory of possible objections the Chair might have, I might anticipate that it could be said by the Chair that substituting anything for the phrase "governor in council" would somehow be objectionable by reason of the fact that we were eliminating the omnipotent powers of the governor in council under our constitution, but here I simply point to the government's action in the amendment to section 6 of the act where it abolished in its entirety the control of the governor in council over the activities of the commission.

In brief summary, Standing Order 75(5) simply was never intended to prohibit members from moving amendments to motions standing on the order paper which have been moved in the proper way under Standing Order 75(5). Second, the rule as to relevancy, in my respectful submission, was never intended to prohibit a member from seeking, as in this instance, to substitute a different vehicle for the purpose of approving rates set by the commission.

All motion No. 3 seeks to do is substitute the commissioner in council for governor in council, and all the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Moose Jaw seeks to do is replace that amendment with another one which would make the approval of the public utilities board necessary rather than either the commissioner in council or the governor in council. Thank you for hearing me, Sir.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If there is no other hon. member who wishes to express his point of view on this amendment proposed by the hon. member for Moose Jaw, I shall try to be as explicit as possible and make my decision in the light of the comments made by the hon. member, but at the same time in the light of my convictions and on the basis of the practices and the rules of this House. I wish to remind hon. members that this applies to any kind of ruling or decision rendered by the Chair.

The Chair is not here to judge the value of an amendment nor to support an amendment as to its substance. The hon. member for Yukon in his remarks addressed himself to whether the Chair was capable of seeing the substance of the amendment because of the complicated nature of the legislation before the House at this time and the implications of the amendments. He was actually asking the Chair to make a judgment on the legislation proposed, and more or less make a decision on a proposal moved at the report stage by the hon. member which does only one thing, and upon which he has given notice.

The hon. member's motion No. 3 seeks to replace the word governor with the word commissioner and, by my interpretation of Standing Oder 75(5), the fact that the hon. member did propose such a limited and a restricted amendment he also precluded other members from moving amendments to his motion. But the Chair cannot get into this question because I know that on some occasions the hon. member himself, and other hon. members, might prepare amendments or motions for the purpose of preventing other members from moving amendments or subamendments to them.

I do not feel that Standing Order 75(5) is restrictive. It is up to the initiative and the will of hon. members to try to attach in their own way amendments to motions, or subamendments to amendments, but they have to do it within the confines of the rules. The rules under which we proceed at this time are quite explicit, and they require hon. members to give notice.

● (2030)

Returning to my first point, the one that the hon. member seemed to agree with generally as to the question of relevancy, he will have to admit that, his proposal being so limited, providing for a change from the word governor to the word commissioner, then the proposal made as an amendment by the hon. member for Moose Jaw is completely outside that proposition. Of course the Chair also has to ask himself whether the hon. member for Yukon would have the same opinion if the hon. member for Moose Jaw had proposed the words "the House of Commons" instead of a public utilities board. The Chair is not here to judge whether the hon. member for Yukon is satisfied with the amendment which is proposed.

To my mind the amendment which has been moved by the hon. member for Moose Jaw is completely foreign to the motion that is before the House at this time. Of course it is not foreign to the bill, and the hon. member for Moose Jaw had all the latitude and all the time that any hon. member had to put his proposal forward under Standing Order 75(5) by giving 24 hours' notice. His proposition would thus be before the House, and the House would make a decision. But to try to force the Chair into creating a precedent by the use of an amendment to a motion, thus bringing in a completely new matter which is no less than a substitute proposition to delete the basic proposition, and the only proposition which is included in the motion would, I think, create a bad precedent. At the same time I wonder if the motion proposed by the hon. member for Moose Jaw is not also in anticipation of motion No. 4 which will be coming before the House later.

Because of all these considerations I find it very difficult to follow the points raised by the hon. member for Yukon. I can refer him to many precedents, the latest being a decision by the hon. member for Beauharnois-Salaberry (Mr. Laniel) who was occupying the chair in the House of Commons on December 17, 1973. I am sure if the hon. member takes the trouble to read most of the decisions made by the Chair in regard to proceedings at report stage he will find this decision to be the right one.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

For all these reasons I cannot accept the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Moose Jaw. The House is now considering motion No. 3 which appears in the name of the hon. member for Yukon. Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Neil: I would therefore have a further amendment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I have to preclude the hon. member who has already spoken when he moved his amendment. I am ready to allow a few seconds for hon. members if they wish to participate.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, in light of the ruling you have just made I should like to move the following amendment:

That motion No. 3 to amend Bill C-13, an act to amend the Northern Canada Power Commission Act, be amended by deleting all of the words after the words "out" in line 3 of the said motion No. 3 and substituting therefor the words "with the approval of the Governor in Council" where the same appear in lines 22 and 23 at page 2 and the words "on such basis as may be approved by the Governor in Council" where the same appear in lines 3, 4 and 5 on page 3 and by adding to clause 4 next after lines 5 on page 3 the following:

(e) All schedules or ranges of rates for public utilities supplied by the commission under this act and the rates to be charged within those schedules or ranges established pursuant to this section shall be subject to approval by the Yukon Public Utilities Board or the Northwest Territories Public Utilities Board as the case may be.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I hope the hon. member will not mind if the Chair takes time to read this proposal, which is quite complicated. Are there any other hon. members who have not already spoken who wish to participate while I consider this proposition?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I just thought I would say that there is a phrase in the Book of Revelation that says "There was silence in Heaven for the space of half an hour". Maybe we can enjoy a little bit of Heaven right here.

Mr. Nielsen: I might also say that there was something in one of the books somewhere that says "Let there be light". That is what we are debating.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that, if you repeated the ruling you have just given, that would be more than adequate to deal with this new amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I finally found my way through the proposed amendment of the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale). I have to say that this amendment has to be ruled out of order completely at the outset because, to repeat what I have said about relevancy, the rule of giving 24 hours' notice for a new proposition applies even more to this one. The hon. member for Brandon-Souris, or any other hon. members whether they have participated in the debate or not, will see in comparing motion No. 3 to the amendment just moved by the hon. member that the amendment takes out all of the proposition. It takes out the meat of the point that was put forward in the change that was proposed by the hon. member for the Yukon. Without repeating myself I must say I cannot accept the amendment. If hon. members will look at the amendment, they will find that it does not meet the requirements of the standing orders, practices and rules of this House. Therefore I cannot accept it.

● (2040)

Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Because the House spent quite a few minutes on the procedural debate, I wonder if hon. members would agree to consider motion No. 5 now. The Chair has already given notice about its position regarding the acceptability of motion No. 4, and after the House has disposed of motion No. 5 perhaps hon. members will express their views on the procedural acceptability of motion No. 4. We will now consider motion No. 5.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon) moved:

That Bill C-13, an act to amend the Northern Canada Power Commission Act, be amended in Clause 5 by striking out lines 8 to 16 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

13. The Commission may investigate a project and advise the Minister or the Commissioner in Council of the Northwest Territories or the Commissioner in Council of the Yukon Territory, as the case may be, of the areas that might be served, the estimated amount of capital required, and the proposed rates that in the opinion of the Commission would produce revenue equal to the costs specified in section 10.

He said: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Benjamin: This had better be good.

Mr. Nielsen: I am sure if the hon. member who just interjected would read the act and then read the amendment, he would concede there is merit to the amendment. In case others in this House do not appreciate the refinements of the proposed amendment, I will take a few moments to explain it—with the hon. member's approval, of course.

The bill we are discussing seeks to repeal section 13 of the existing act in its entirety, and replace it with proposed clause 5. I quarrel with the thought behind the repeal of section 13. Not only has the government deleted sections 6(2) and 6(3) of the act, but now it intends to delete those all-important words in the existing section which would require the commission, with respect to any investigation it might undertake, to confine the costs of such investigation to an amount equal to the revenue generated, as specified in section 10. This important provision was written into the act in 1948 as a piece of insurance, to prevent the commission from embarking on the investigation of a project when costs might exceed any contemplated revenues which might be realized if the project were undertaken. I think that safeguard, that insurance, should remain in the act.

I do not think projects should be undertaken with a reckless disregard for revenues which might be derived from those projects. I think a project should only be undertaken if revenues generated will pay for the costs of the project; otherwise the project should not go ahead. If we allow that provision to remain in the act we shall keep the self-sustaining theory alive, the theory on which the act was based in the initial instance.

I have a further objection to the clause as it exists and as it has been carried over into this bill. According to the language of the bill the commission may investigate a project and advise the minister, or the Commissioner of the Northwest Territories or the Commissioner of the Yukon Territory, as the case may be, and so on. That, Sir, is as fine a piece of gobbledygook as I have run across in a long time.

Sir, the commissioner of each territory is an employee of the minister, and the requirement for the Northern Canada Power Commission, which is responsible to the minister, to report to his employee is sheer nonsense. If that reporting provision is to mean anything, surely there should be a requirement to report to the commissioner in council of each of the territories. Asking the commission, which is controlled by the minister, to report to his employee, and his employee alone, makes no sense at all. If the concept that the council of either of the territories is involved in the decision-making process means anything, the reporting provision I have referred to makes no sense. My suggested amendment, as contained in motion No. 5, would change that section of the bill. I would require the commission with respect to the investigation of any project to report to the minister on the one hand, or on the other hand to the commissioner in council of the Northwest Territories or the commissioner in council of the Yukon Territory.

I was very careful in drawing up the wording of the proposed amendment in the hope that it might find favour with the government, because it leaves the commission the alternative of reporting either to the minister or to the commissioner in council. The choice is left open. On the other hand if the minister were to tell the commission, "You are to report to me, under the section, and to no one else," he would completely nullify the effect of the words "commissioner in council". My amendment, if accepted, would at least leave the semblance of a line of communication to the elected representatives of the people in both territories.

My proposed amendment also seeks to change that part of clause 5 of the bill in which the government would simply like to confine the report to the estimated amount of capital required and the effect on the schedules or ranges of rates established under section 10. The existing provision of the act requires the commission to report on the basis that any such project would produce revenues equal to the cost of installing it. If this feature is retained it is my submission that consumers in the north will not be saddled with the expense of uneconomic projects, as they will be if the commission is allowed to have an unfettered sphere of action in investing in projects regardless of the relationship between revenue and cost.

● (2050)

As the bill now reads they could decide on any project they chose and simply calculate the cost of that project and its effect on the rates to be charged, as opposed to the present situation where the commission is obliged to act in a responsible fashion and relate the costs of such projects to the revenue to be generated from them. If my view the latter is a sound principle to follow, and my own amendment would restore it.

The type of provision we have been asked to endorse would open the door wide to saddling consumers of electrical energy in the north, at the whim of the commission, with rates calculated to pay for the project which might be unrealistic or far more costly than they should be. For this reason, and in order to give the elected representatives of the people of the north on the two councils some opportunity of making an input, I put this amendment forward in the hope it will find favour with the government.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I wish to support the amendment put forward by my colleague, the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), and I do so for two basic reasons. The proposal now in the bill violates two fundamental principles which were put forward in the recommendation which resulted in the legislation we are now considering. That recommendation stated the amendments were being made to provide for changes in financial management. I think we would all agree that in making changes affecting financial management of the power commission the object would necessarily be to improve the situation. The hon. member for Yukon has told us that his further amendment arises from the fact that the proposal in the bill as it stands is a retrograde step which removes some of the safeguards which existed in the unamended act. On this basis alone motion No. 5 should receive enthusiastic support from all quarters of the House.

My second reason for supporting the amendment is that the bill as proposed violates what I believe to be the real purpose of the government in bringing forward amendments to the Northern Canada Power Commission Act. I am sure the minister would agree that when the number of members of the Commission was increased from three to five and provision was made for their expenses, the whole intent was to bring about more effective control on the part of the residents of the two territories over the activities of the Northern Canada Power Commission. However, as has been pointed out during the course of the debate today, this idea of closer control by the residents of the territories is an expression of tokenism rather than of fact.

The bill as it now stands is just another example of tokenism. For example, it states that the commission may investigate a project and advise the minister, or the Commissioner of the Northwest Territories or the Commissioner of the Yukon Territory—and so on. Actually, and the hon. member for Yukon has already made this point, it is a case of the minister advising himself. As has been pointed out by several members, the commissioner of the territories is really a creature of the minister of the Crown responsible for administering those two territorial regions. Why do I assert this to be the case?

Over the past 15 years promises have been made to the territories which were supposed to ensure greater local autonomy. The first important gesture in this regard was made in the early 1960's when, for the first time, the commissioner for the Yukon Territory was appointed from within the Yukon population—I refer to Mr. Gordon Cameron who served with distinction for some five years. Mr. Cameron refused reappointment because, as he said, he was just a figurehead of the minister in carrying out his responsibilities. He discovered, after five years in office, that he had no power, that there was really no local autonomy; he took his orders directly from the Ministry of Northern Affairs in Ottawa. I recall the phrase he used at the time of his resignation. He said that the reins directing policy in the Yukon were held at some 5,000 miles distance in Ottawa. And he refused to function any further as a flunkey.

Gordon Cameron, the first from within the territory to hold this responsible position, was succeeded by Jack Smith, who is still the Commissioner of the Yukon Territory. During the intervening years the status of the Commissioner has not changed one iota in terms of his powers. As a former minister of northern affairs I can say this is one of the things we hoped to change, and we looked forward to the granting of local autonomy to both territories as one of the major forward steps in the development of Canada's northern regions by our centenniary year, 1967. Very little progress has been made in this regard. The Commissioner of the Northwest Territories, who now has been in office a considerable number of years, is in precisely the same position as the present incumbent in the Yukon Territory. In light of these observations, I would challenge anyone to dispute that that is the situation.

I think the hon. member for Yukon has put forward a very important amendment which would place in the hands of the commissioner in council some control over the activities of the Northern Canada Power Commission. There has been a subtle change in the past few years that would more than justify this change in wording from "Commissioner" to "commissioner in council", because now members of the councils both of the Yukon territory and the Northwest Territories have been given some limited executive responsibility.

It would appear to me that, as a logical concomitant of that change in the status of the members of the territorial councils, the wording proposed by the hon. member for Yukon is a proper designation of the relationship with respect to clause 13. Certainly it would be much closer to realizing the recommendations that caused the government to bring in the amendments we have been considering in the debate today so as to give closer control over the power commission in the territories to the elected representatives of the people of the territories themselves. I hope all hon. members will give their support to this necessary amendment.

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my two colleagues from the Yukon and from Brandon-Souris speak with authority. One of them represents one of the territories whose future we are discussing tonight; the other has served as minister responsible for those territories during a period which the residents there look back on as a welcome change in attitude on the part of the federal government toward developing some degree of local self-government in the territories, a change that unfortunately was undone in the years following 1963.

In effect this amendment contains two elements. The first has to do with the provision that the advice must be not simply to the commissioner who, as has been pointed out, and as is well known in the north, is too often an extension of officialdom in Ottawa, but instead to the elected councils of the Yukon and Northwest Territories. These are people whose mandate is not simply given by a minister in Ottawa; theirs is a mixed mandate, partly from Ottawa now but also partly from the people whose lives, whose ability to turn off and on lights, and whose requirement to pay the bill, are most particularly affected.

As the bill introduced by the minister stands, the requirement is simply to report to the commissioner after an investigation. Further as is well known, the Commissioner of the Yukon or the Northwest Territories is really the minister in disguise. He is the arm of the minister, appointed by the minister and answerable to the minister. He is the creature of the minister and, as a matter of practice, he acts in much closer liaison with the minister and anonymous officials in Ottawa than he does with the people whose lives he in effect controls as commissioner of those territories. In effect there is only an option on paper now, not an option in fact. The option on paper is either to report directly to the minister or to report to him in other clothes.

The bill as it stands is even more absurd than that. Under the amendments to the Northern Canada Power Commission Act the chairman of the Northern Canada Power Commission is also the Commissioner of the Yukon Territory. So what the minister would have us do is have the chairman report to himself. It reminds one, as someone standing behind me said a moment ago, of the old song "I'm my own grandma".

While many of us on this side of the House are aware that the actions of the government frequently leave people talking to themselves, this must surely be the first time that it has been written into a statute. It seems to be clearly an oversight, an absurdity, in order to give the appearance of creating an option, to require that the Commissioner of the Yukon Territory, in his capacity as chairman of the Northern Canada Power Commission, report to himself; to require that he report not to the minister, but to the minister in disguise in the territories—the commissioner.

What the amendment does is to give status to the elected council as well as eradicate an absurdity now in the law. It is primarily a democratic amendment, what I might call a symbolic amendment, indicating that the Parliament of Canada recognizes the importance of the councils of the Yukon and Northwest Territories, and that it is not content simply to leave a reference to the governing body of that council to the commissioner acting alone.

Perhaps not many members on the government side of the House had, or have taken, the opportunity that many of us on this side have had to visit northern Canada and speak directly with the people there, people who have lived for too long with what, in effect, is a colonial regime where all important decisions are taken at a great distance from them. Those who have visited those territories, many of them in the Progressive Conservative party, and have listened to the concerns of the people there, not allowing themselves to be misled by the emanations of the bureaucracy, know the concern of the people there about self-government, about having the ability to control their own destiny. We also know that progress toward some degree of self-government in the Yukon and Northwest Territories has been glacially slow. Although progress was made during the period when my colleague from Brandon-Souris was minister responsible for the territories, since that time progress has, as I say, been glacially slow.

While there is not much that we can do now in amending this particular bill to add substantial powers, or give added status to the councils of the Northwest Territories and Yukon territory, we can at least make the symbolic act of passing this democratic amendment which requires that there be a reporting not simply to an official named by Ottawa but instead to the whole council, which is comprised of directly elected people of the Yukon and Northwest Territories.

That is the first of the two elements of the amendment proposed by my colleague from Yukon. I repeat that it would remove the absurdity of having the chairman of the Northern Canada Power Commission report to himself because he wears both hats, that of the chairman of the commission, and that of the Commissioner of the Yukon Territory. The amendment would also have the symbolic and democratic effect of offering some satisfaction to the people of the Yukon and Northwest Territories that there are members of the House of Commons who, even with the limited capacity before them tonight, are prepared to make a stand regarding the right of these people at least to be consulted.

The second element of this amendment has to do with the apparent wish of the minister to remove from the Northern Canada Power Commission the requirement that was placed upon it some years ago—more than 20 years ago when the commission was established—that the rates produce a revenue equal to the specified cost of projects proposed by the commission. As my colleague, the hon. member for Yukon has indicated, it is insurance that there will be enough revenues from the rates to pay for the projects.

● (2110)

As the House may be aware, the original theory here was that this should be a self-sustaining commission. That theory endured until this minister, or whoever drafted the bill, and we cannot be sure that we should blame him, introduced this legislation which would take away the insurance that the rates would meet the costs of the projects.

We have to bear in mind that already today we have weakened the restraints on the Northern Canada Power Commission by removing the requirement to report to the cabinet on major expenditures of over $50,000. This is one more restraint that is removed. It is not so much the removal of the restraint that should be reviewed. I suggest to the House that what should be reviewed is the direct invitation to over-spend. Once there was the insurance, or the requirement, that costs should not exceed revenues, relating specifically to projected projects. Now there is not that insurance, so there is a clear invitation to over-spend. There is no guarantee that members of the Northern Canada Power Commission will accept that invitation to over-spend, but there is the invitation and the possibility.

If the Minister is going to oppose this very progressive and sensible amendment by the hon. member for Yukon he should make it clear why he is inviting the Northern Canada Power Commission to over-spend. He will have to justify that invitation to over-spend in order properly to convince the House that the insurance clause which has been in the act since the commission began should now be removed.

I spoke earlier during this debate, when the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Sauvé) was in the House, about the dangers that could be involved for the whole of Canada, particularly for those of us who are concerned about environmental consequences, if there are too few restraints placed upon the Northern Canada Power Commission. As it stands, there is in this bill the capacity of the commission to undertake literally any kind of hydro project. As we have learned in parts of Canada where ecology is perhaps more impervious than it is in parts of the territory we are talking about, hydro electric projects can be dangerous and can have consequences beyond those that we can foresee. That is a factor we must bear in mind when we are considering the wisdom of removing from the Northern Canada Power Commission the restraint that has, to this point, required it to generate, by its rates, revenues which are equal to the costs the commission incurs.

For those two reasons, first, the democratic reason of requiring a reference to the elected council and not simply to an appointed commissioner and, second, the insurance element that will require rates equal to the costs involved in projects, I earnestly hope that the minister and others on the government side will accept the wisdom of the amendment proposed by my colleague.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, after some discussion with the minister we have arrived at a compromise in respect of Motion No. 5. At this time I should like to move the following amendment:

That Motion No. 5 to amend Bill C-13, an act to amend the Northern Canada Power Commission Act, be amended by deleting the words "the proposed rates that in the opinion of the Commission would produce revenue equal to the costs specified in Section 10" and the following substituted therefor:

"the effect on the schedule or ranges of rates established for a rate zone under Section 10."

As I said, this is a compromise that has been reached. It is not exactly what we wanted but it is satisfactory to us and the minister, and I trust it will be approved and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The question is on the amendment by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said amendment?

[Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain).]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: No.

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I should simply like to indicate that we have discussed this compromise and it is acceptable to us.

Mr. Nielsen: You should speak to your backbenchers over there.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Neil) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Shall the motion as amended carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 5 (Mr. Nielsen), as amended, agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): We will now return to Motion No. 4 in the name of the hon. member for Yukon.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon) moved:

That Bill C-13, an act to amend the Northern Canada Power Commission Act, be amended by adding to Clause 4, next after line 5 on page 3 thereof, the following:

10A. The Commission shall be deemed to be a public utility within the meaning and for the purposes of any ordinance of the Yukon Territory or the Northwest Territories that provides for the regulation of the operation of any system, works, plant or equipment for the production, transmission, delivery or furnishing of electricity and the provisions of any such ordinance shall apply mutatis mutandis to the commission.

He said: Madam Speaker, it should be clear even to the government whip that the purpose of all our efforts, here and in the committee, has been to take the Parliament of Canada out of the business of setting rates for my electric light bill in the Yukon and putting that power where it belongs, in the hands of the public utilities commission.

An hon. Member: Then the power is going to go off out there.

Mr. Nielsen: We have been turned off by the government in Ottawa many times before. Surely it makes sense that the Government of Canada should not be in the business of setting rates for my electric light bill in the Yukon, or anybody's electric light bill in the Northwest Territories. Surely the proper body to be doing that, as is the case everywhere else, is a public utilities board.

The minister has made the argument in the past that this situation does not prevail in the provinces enumerated by him this afternoon. Those are provinces which have machinery set up to look after this sort of thing. We are denied that kind of machinery by virtue of the strictures placed upon us in having this controlled by Ottawa. All this amendment would seek to do in this one small sphere is take the headache away from the governor in council or from the cabinet, and give it to the public utility boards in each of the Yukon and Northwest Territories, which would look after the setting of their own rates for their own electric energy.

I hope the Chair has had time to reflect favourably on the doubt that was expressed when this motion was first moved. I hope there is not a procedural problem here and that the motion can be put to the House. Even before that happens I hope this amendment would commend itself to the minister. The minister, by virtue of the direction of his own department—and that in effect means not his direction but that of his predecessor—has directed that legislation be placed on the books of ordinance of each of the territories to establish a public utilities board. What would be the purpose of doing this unless it were so that we could look after this kind of housekeeping problem ourselves, rather than clutter the already cluttered agenda of the cabinet and, I might add, of a cabinet that is cluttered up itself. Let us take this housekeeping problem away from the over-burdened cabinet and put it where it belongs, in the hands of the agency that was created by the minister to do this very job.

I hope the minister will rise right now and cut short the debate by telling us this will be done, and then we can consider the discussion on the bill at an end. If the minister goes along with this amendment, so far as we are concerned all the others will go by the board and we need not vote on anything tonight. This really is the only thing the people of the north are seeking.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I want to refer to Mr. Speaker's decision of March 26 on this particular amendment, motion No. 4. It would appear that it is introducing a new and substantive provision into the bill. It is suggested that a new clause cannot be received if it is beyond the scope of the bill.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I wonder whether we might speak to the procedural point before a decision is made?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. If the hon. member would look at May's eighteenth edition, he would find it is stated that a new clause is out of order for many of the same reasons as an amendment and, in particular, will not be entertained if it is beyond the scope of the bill.

Further on page 508 of May's eighteenth edition it is stated that an amendment is out of order if it is irrelevant to the subject matter or beyond the scope of the bill. Again I wish to cite Beauchesne's fourth edition at page 285 where it is stated that amendments are out of order if they are irrelevant to the bill, or beyond its scope. For all these reasons the amendment cannot be accepted.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I say what I am about to say without any intention whatsoever of impugning the Chair and without any intention whatsoever of questioning the ruling that has been made by the Chair, but I regret very much that I and other members who may have wished to contribute to the debate on the procedural point were not invited to do so before the ruling was made. In making that statement I hasten to add that in all probability Your Honour overlooked the usual long standing procedure of the House.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Nielsen: I am trying to be as courteous as I can in making the point, Madam Speaker; but as I say, it has been a long standing procedure and practice in this House that members be called upon to make submissions on procedural points before decisions are taken by the Chair. I regret that was not done in this case, but I accept the ruling.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The hon. member had a chance to make his procedural comments before the Chair entered the decision.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of personal privilege. I notice that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mrs. Campagnolo) applauded that statement. There have been changes in the occupancy of the chair since this debate arose. I had carved out for myself a reservation that I would want to make a submission on this procedural point before the decision was made by the Chair. I accept the ruling. I regret only that I was prevented from making that submission before the ruling was made.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The House will now proceed to the deferred division on motions Nos. 2 and 3.

Call in the members.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

SOCIAL SECURITY—PROPOSED ELIGIBILITY FOR OLD AGE PENSION AT SIXTY

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, on Monday, February 3, as reported in Hansard at page 2836, I put this question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde):

In view of the increasing difficulties being faced by elderly people as they try to cope with today's cost of living, will the minister consider recasting the proposed legislation regarding pensions at 60 so that those pensions will be made available not only to spouses but to all persons over 60 who are out of the labour market? Will the government also consider providing in 1975 a substantial increase in the basic amount of old age security?

● (2210)

The reply of the Minister of National Health and Welfare was to the effect that the government had already expressed its plans in this connection in the Speech from the Throne and he hoped it would be possible to bring in these plans in the form of proper measures as soon as possible. I suppose there are few phrases that are used more often around here than the phrase "as soon as possible". We are now into the month of April and nothing has happened with respect to this matter.

Accordingly, I am taking part in this late show tonight for the purpose of pressing upon the minister once again, whether for the tenth time or the hundredth time, the urgency of reconsidering the question of the age at which old age security is available. Before the minister brings in the measure that was mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, namely, the proposal to provide on a needs test basis pensions to spouses between 60 and 65 where one spouse is already 65 years of age or over, I plead with him to recast the legislation and to make pensions available to any person at age 60 who is out of the labour market.

The arguments for this proposal, Madam Speaker, have been made so often, and the unsatisfactory reply of the minister has been given so frequently, that I do not think one needs to take the full seven minutes allotted tonight to go into it. I simply press the point that in our society today, making a living having become what it is, there are thousands of people who find it difficult to keep on in the rat race until the age of 65.

I am not proposing a pension for everyone at age 60 the way it is available to everyone now at age 65, nor am I proposing compulsory retirement, but I am contending that those at age 60 who are out of the labour market for whatever reason should be given the opportunity to obtain old age security and also any benefits to which they are entitled under the Canada Pension Plan.

May I point out to my good friend, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, that he is having a rather sterile session. In the minority parliament he was a busy minister; he brought in all kinds of legislation and we made pretty good progress. But what is his record so far in this session? So far in this session he has got parliament to pass Bill C-22, a very important bill amending the Canada Pension Plan, which by the way was a piece of legislation left over from the minority parliament and which was almost passed before the last election, but that is literally all that has been passed since the last election in the name of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. And what has he got on the order paper?

An hon. Member: Nothing.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Someone to my right says nothing, and that someone is almost correct. He has only two items on the order paper. One of them is a measure in his name that came from the Senate and which we are going to deal with tomorrow, Bill S-9, to repeal the Proprietary or Patent Medicine Act, and that is actually the only item on the order paper in the name of the minister as Minister of National Health and Welfare. The other item in his name is in his name as minister responsible for the status of women, and that is Bill C-16 having to do with equality of status. It is an important measure and I hope it will not be long before it is brought forward.

But, Madam Speaker, there is nothing at all on the order paper in the whole area of pensions. I looked through my files today and I came across the orange paper. I remember how excited I was when that paper was brought down. I felt we had a minister who was interested in these matters, but what is his record? This minister has held conferences with his counterparts in the provinces, and he has talked about a guaranteed annual income. I gather that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) has overruled him in cabinet on that.

I do not like to see my hon. friend having such a poor session. I am giving him the opportunity tonight to make up for this sterility and bring in a measure that would be warmly accepted and welcomed on his side of the House. Indeed, it would be warmly welcomed in all parts of the House and it would make a real contribution to the social security structure of this country. I call upon the minister to forget that record he has played so often and to tell us tonight that he is prepared to consider introducing at this stage a measure providing pensions on a voluntary basis at age 60.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I am always interested in listening to the hon. member, but I was particularly struck by the comments he made regarding the lack of legislation before the House. I was struck even more by the comment from the Tory party to the effect that there was nothing. The hon. member referred to the bill amending the Proprietary or Patent Medicine Act. I was interested to hear once more that on the part of the Tory party the status of women is nothing. Members of that party have shown plenty of evidence to this effect by their comments in this House in the past, but it is nice to see it again on the record tonight. I certainly hope that the women of this country will note that particular comment from the Tory benches.

As far as the comments made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) are concerned, I am sure he will be happy to know that there will be substantial amendments to several aspects of the Old Age Security Act brought before this House. The government was committed in the Speech from the Throne to introduce a measure that will come into effect by October 1, 1975. That measure will be brought before the House and I hope, with the co-operation of the House, it will be passed in plenty of time to come into effect by that date.

As the hon. member has also stated, we passed the most important amendment to the Canada Pension Plan last fall that has ever been brought forward since the inception of the plan. That signified a substantial increase in the benefits to those contributing to the plan.

There are other amendments to other legislation that will also be introduced before the end of the session. I hope it will be possible to debate them in due course, providing the opposition allows enough time for the consideration of all the bills now before this House or to come before it. As far as the issue raised by the hon. member is concerned, it has been debated so often I do not think I need add anything.

ABORTION—SUGGESTED INVESTIGATION OF REASON FOR HIGH RATE IN BRITISH COLUMBIA, ONTARIO AND ALBERTA

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, the Federal Advisory Council on the Status of Women has committed an absurd error in urging the government to grant full pardon to the convicted abortionist, Henry Morgentaler.

The 30-member council, set up by the government, is supposed to advise the government on steps to improve the role and status of women in our society. How is the cause of women's rights furthered by giving such a blessing to a man who, by his own admission, has destroyed the lives of thousands of unborn children?

Truly it would be a travesty of justice to permit Dr. Morgentaler to go free. I recognize that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has made him into a modern martyr through continued adulation of him, but the excessive pro-abortion sentiments of the CBC and the Council of Women have destroyed their judgment on the profound significance of the Morgentaler case.

The Morgentaler case must be seen against the background of what is going on in Canada. Section 251 of the Criminal Code permits a therapeutic abortion committee to allow an abortion when continuation of the pregnacy of a mother "would be likely to endanger her life or health".

● (2220)

Since the law went into effect, abortions quadrupled from 1970 to 1973 to 43,201, and they are now 12.6 per cent of live births in Canada. This alarming rate of increase is most noticeable in the three wealthiest provinces of British Columbia, where the abortion rate is 26.7 per cent of live births, Ontario where the rate is 18.3 per cent, and Alberta where the rate is 18.3 per cent, and Alberta where the rate is 13.8 per cent. These figures support the argument that abortions are being permitted for reasons far beyond health; to argue otherwise is to suggest that it is more dangerous to a mother's health to be pregnant in a rich, instead of a poor, province. But at least through these past few years many have thought that the government was unhappy at the rapid growth and might move to tighten the law.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) is on record as having warned provincial attorneys-general, who administer the Criminal Code, that social and economic considerations are not to be taken into account in determining the permissibility of abortion. The President of the Canadian Medical Association, and a number of leading lights in the communication world have attacked the minister for being too strict. They have argued that the World Health Organization definition of health "as a state of complete physical, mental and social well-being" should be the criterion. This is regarded by many others, myself included, as a ridiculous definition. Who among us is ever in a state of "complete physical, mental and social well-being?"

The pressure is building, and the CMA has turned to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for support. It looks like the Prime Minister is encouraging the wide definition of health, for he told the CMA in a letter that hospital abortion committees should have "sufficient latitude". He backed up his view with a statement in the House of Commons that "the Criminal Code refers to health as involving many considerations apart from purely physical ones". This is highly misleading, to say the least.

When I asked the Minister of Justice to clarify the matter he said it is up to the provincial attorneys-general to carry out the law. He did not differ from the Prime Minister's interpretation, nor did he respond when I asked him point blank: "What is the minister doing to reduce this needless escalation of abortion which is a continuing violation of the civil rights of the unborn child?". I find it shocking that there is so little governmental concern at the rising abortion figures.

The law needs to be tightened to make it more explicit that abortions would be permitted only when the life of a mother is "seriously endangered". One of my colleagues, a physician, tells me that if this phrase were in the law there would be practically no legal abortions since modern health methods have reduced the danger of pregnancy to almost nil. But instead we have this erosion to abortion on demand because we are gradually accepting the wide definition—and the government is getting away with it.

Now the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) has begun promoting more therapeutic abortion committees. I agree with the open letter to the minister from the Canadian Physicians for Life that the minister ought to adopt "a policy aimed, not at encouraging but at eliminating the practice of non-medical, social abortion". To claim that the absence of abortion committees invites "a breaking of the law" is ridiculous. Dr. Morgentaler operated in Montreal where there are at least five abortion committees, and his trial made clear that his client knew about, and had access to, abortion committees.

The federal government, the CBC and the Council of Women notwithstanding, there is a very strong anti-abortion opinion in this country which will soon be dramatized by the presentation to parliament of one million signatures collected by the Alliance for Life. What I find especially sad is that the Council of Women, which has so much positive work to promote, has become so entangled with pro-abortion that it has made such an outrageous proposal to free a notorious criminal abortionist.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, I would say to my hon. friend, the member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche), that I entirely agree with him and I am now expressing my personal opinion when I also deplore the increasing number of abortions.

Whatever our religious beliefs, whether we are Catholics or not, some basic principles must remain among which the conservation and preservation of life.

I am indeed giving my personal opinion and it is not proper for me to condemn those who do not share that view, but I wanted to express it publicly as I have already done so in previous years.

I now want to answer the question of my hon. friend when he asked on December 12, 1974 that an investigation be held on the reasons for the high rate of abortions in British Columbia, Ontario and Alberta.

There is no doubt that the great difference in statistics concerning the number of abortions performed in various parts of Canada would lead to the conclusion that in some areas, the clauses of the Criminal Code on abortion are too freely interpreted. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) has, on various occasions, expressed his concern about the matter, and made known the intentions of the legislator. Still, one must understand that the federal government, though it edicts the regulations concerning penal law, does not implement nor apply them. The governments of the ten provinces apply all the provisions of the Criminal Code, including those on abortion. Consequently, the implementation of penal law in the provinces depends on their respective attorneys general.

As for us, it is clear that the justification for abortion Parliament inserted in the act rests on life and health, and I feel it would be better to rely on the judgment of experts in the matter. If medical committees accept that responsibility and endeavour seriously to determine whether the motives authorized by Parliament are present in a given case, then, to my mind, the act will achieve its purpose. I thank my hon. friend for having brought up that matter; I can assure him that to my mind, and I repeat this, we agree totally with the efforts we have made to stir in the public an awareness of the fact that the problem of abortion may be a determining factor for the society of tomorrow.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS—REASON FOR REMOVAL OF HEAVY EQUIPMENT FROM FORT SMITH VOCATIONAL TRAINING SCHOOL

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Madam Speaker, prior to raising the question on March 21, 1975, with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Buchanan) regarding the removal of some heavy equipment from the vocational school at Fort Smith in the Northwest Territories to a site higher up north, I gave the minister notice that I would raise it, as I also did after his reply, with which I was not very satisfied, when I gave plenty of notice that it would be transferred to the adjournment debate. I believe that the minister has now had sufficient time to look at this matter in detail and, I hope, to provide an answer that will be satisfactory to the people in the Northwest Territories.

The question involves two pieces of heavy equipment, two scrapers, which were removed and sent to the Mackenzie highway construction project. My comments on this matter will be brief and I hope that the minister now has an answer.

The general principle of having on the job training on a construction site is not a bad idea, but I do not think this should be done at the expense of a government school that is well run and is paid for by the taxpayers, a school for which the government can take a certain amount of credit.

A number of vocational courses were started in the vocational centre at Fort Smith which have met with a certain amount of success, for which the government can rightly take credit. However, I do not think that move to take the equipment away was very wise. It was to the detriment of the training centre at Fort Smith. I would much rather have seen another plan put into operation which I believe would have been more fruitful and less costly. That plan would have been to move the students, after reaching a certain level of training at the vocational school, to jobs at such places as the Hire North project.

Those are the main points I wanted to raise, and I hope that the minister now has a satisfactory answer.

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, in response to the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth) I would point out that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Buchanan) stated in the House that Assistant Commissioner Hancock met with the Fort Smith council to discuss the matter of the two pieces of machinery. To add further to the reply of the minister, the function of the school at Fort Smith is that of a training centre, and it is planned as a place where native peoples may learn to use implements and equipment which would be regularly found on reserves.

In regard to the two scrapers which have been taken with the permission of the school at Fort Smith to the area of Willowlake River and the Hire North training section, the salient fact is that these are very large pieces of equipment and only required for advanced training. A scraper is generally used with a bulldozer, front and back, and it is a machine which takes up the overburden preparatory to road building. I would add that this machine combined with two D-8 bulldozers is only used below the permafrost line. These are very sophisticated pieces of equipment used only for advanced training.

The hon. member has asked if these machines will be replaced at Fort Smith vocational school. The fact is that once a student has completed training on equipment normally used in settlements, if that student indicates a desire to move into commercial or industrial heavy machinery then the training is completed in the Hire North program, and the equipment is returned to Fort Smith until it is needed again for advanced training.

I emphasize that the equipment was removed with the concurrence of Fort Smith officials, that its use by Hire North is properly undertaken, and that it will be returned to Fort Smith following its use.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 o'clock a.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.35 p.m.

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF SHORTAGE OF MASON JAR LIDS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to propose a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity following an answer given Wednesday in reply to a question directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs regarding the shortage of Mason jar lids in British Columbia. At that time the minister said "products are available in sufficient quantities". A quick check of four stores in the Okanagan Valley indicated that not one lid was available in any of them. A call to Smithers received the same answer in respect of that area, and word from the Fraser Valley indicates there are none available there. I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Patterson):

That this House direct the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to launch an immediate investigation of the situation before the shortage become critical and irreparable.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. It being proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43 it cannot be debated without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—DEGREE OF STIMULATION IN BUDGET DEPENDANT ON CONSENSUS ON RESTRAINT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance indicated to the first ministers yesterday that the present phase of the consensus program will continue for a few weeks at least, but once again no commitments are being sought at this stage. Could the minister indicate when he will be in a position, or how he plans to be in a position to reach a sufficient judgment of the outcome of these consensus talks in order to decide how much stimulation is going to be put in the budget which he says he will be presenting to this House before the end of May, particularly in view of his statement to the press yesterday to the effect that the degree of stimulus would depend upon the success of the consensus talks?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I said that was one of the factors against which the stimulus would have to be calculated, and there are others, as the hon. gentleman knows, some of which I outlined in response to his question on Tuesday when I announced that I will be bringing a budget down before the end of May. Consultations with various segments of the economy are now continuing with more precision, and I would hope that we will know whether we have the possibility of a consensus by the end of May.

INFLATION—UNWILLINGNESS OF ONE SECTOR TO EXERCISE RESTRAINT UNLESS OTHER SECTORS ACT IN SIMILAR MANNER—MECHANISM FOR ENFORCEMENT OF GUIDELINES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I noticed that the minister said in his statement yesterday, and I guess we would all have to concur in this, that he found that no group was willing to exercise restraint unless it was absolutely certain that others were going to accept a similar or corresponding degree of restraint at the same time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister how he proposes to meet this essential precondition when he and his colleagues unilaterally rule out all mechanisms that could in fact enforce that kind of certainty, which certainly cannot be provided by the resurrection of the Prices and Incomes Commission or anything of that sort?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the government is relying on the facts and the evidence of the potential danger facing this country if there is not moderation in every aspect of the economy. When you look at the inflation rate, although some moderation was announced in today's figures, you will see it is still running at an annual rate, April over April, of 11.2 per cent, although the first three months of this year show it has been reducing to a rate of 7 per cent. That is not a satisfactory situation. The unemployment rate is at 7.2 per cent seasonally adjusted and our costs are rising in productive terms at roughly twice the rate of that in the United States. These facts are not only evident to everybody in the House, but as well to the leaders of every segment of our economy. On the basis of that fact, I feel confident that we can come to some sort of understanding.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, these facts were, of course, apparent to everybody about a year ago, and the minister has been fooling around with these talks in a great shroud of secrecy for some five months. In view of the minister's statement that he found that everyone was strongly expressing the need for leadership by the federal government, and I understand this was his expression although I was not present and did not see any TV clip, I should like to know whether the minister was able to say these things to the first ministers with a straight face?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, although the conference had its lighter moments that was not one of them. The premiers all feel that the situation is very serious, and they were interested in my proposition. I was encouraged by their response and we have their undertaking to co-operate in an effort to bring this consensus to fruition by the end of May.

INFLATION—INCREASE IN MONEY SUPPLY BY BANK OF CANADA AS AN EXAMPLE OF RESTRAINT

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the minister's statement once again yesterday about the consequences of unchecked inflation and his recommendation that a program of restraint be adopted, would the minister indicate in what way it is an example of restraint for the Bank of Canada, which is responsible to the minister, to have increased the money supply since December at an amortized rate of 33 per cent, an increase which is perhaps the greatest three-month jump in Canadian history?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman likes to look at these figures on a monthly basis and draw conclusions from the money supply. Last year in terms of the narrowly defined money supply expanded well under the rate of growth of the economy. The Governor of the bank stated in his annual report that the money supply will expand sufficiently to allow some expansion in the economy, particularly in the current cycle, but not so quickly as to provoke inflationary thrusts 12 to 18 months from now. I think the hon. gentleman would be fairer to the statistics if he would look at them over a longer trend.

Mr. Speaker: A final supplementary by the hon. member for York-Simcoe.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, this question again is addressed to the Minister of Finance in view of his answer. Would the minister simply indicate whether he disputes the figures of the Bank of Canada which indicate that the currency and demand deposits have increased by over $1.2 billion, from $14.8 billion to $16 billion between December 1974 and March 1975?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): If those are the figures published by the bank I do not dispute them, Mr. Speaker.
