Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, now that the minister has tended to agree with what has been forecast by other economists and groups for several months that the real growth in the country will be virtually zero in this year, would the minister not speed up the introduction of his May budget beyond the time reference he has already indicated?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman, of course, is now becoming inconsistent again. He wants stimulus and about 30 seconds ago he wanted some restraint on the growth of the money supply.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I ought to recall to the House that the motion which the hon. gentleman brought forward about six weeks ago calling for tax reductions did not have as its purpose stimulus but controlling expenditures, so that although he may retroactively—

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Government expenditures.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Government expenditures. But what I am saying to the hon. gentleman from Grenville-Carleton is that the burden of his party's motion was not to stimulate the economy at that time but was to control government expenditures. I am not arguing the philosophy; I am just saying it is a little late in the day for the hon. gentleman to get on the bandwagon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INFLATION—GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO PROVIDE JOBS IN THE IMMEDIATE FUTURE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the minister's admission yesterday that the economy is not performing as well as he had anticipated, and in view of the fact that he concentrated on inflation during the statements he made at the conference, I should like to ask the minister whether he can say now what specific proposals he has to get the economy rolling and provide jobs now for the average Canadian?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I said to the hon. member's parliamentary leader a few days ago that he ought not overlook the stimulus already injected into the economy as a result of the November 18 budget. Further measures, if necessary, will be announced when I bring down the next budget.

Mr. Nystrom: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. In view of the minister's expectations, again at the conference, that it will take about four years to bring inflation down to an acceptable level through the program he has outlined, are we to assume that no significant measures will be taken during that period to stimulate the economy and provide more jobs for the unemployed?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No; the hon. gentleman should not assume that. He should take into consideration when we are attempting to achieve the growth we need for our labour force that a good deal of our problems stem from slack economies in the United States, in Japan, and in Europe, which affect our exports. The Leader of the Opposition may smile, but the Premier of Nova Scotia was particularly concerned about falling exports from Nova Scotia which affect that particular economy. Mr. Speaker, the reason I said it would take two, three or four years to get inflation back to acceptable rates, whatever that might be, is, first, that it was severely imbedded into the Canadian, American and world economies and, second, that the only way to get it down in a shorter term would be by a fiscal and monetary policy which I do not think would be acceptable to the country or to this House in that it would provoke massive unemployment in Canada.

INFLATION—INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT PROPOSALS TO LIMIT WAGE INCREASES WILL APPLY TO OTHER FORMS OF INCOME

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): I have a final supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the minister's proposal, a fairly specific one, that wage increases in general should be limited to the targeted increase in the CPI, can the minister inform us what specific limitations he proposes on such other forms of income and on corporations, and how he will enforce those limitations on other forms of income and on corporations, and also whether he proposes that on wages and salaries?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): That is not exactly how the statement reads. In any event, I said to the conference and to the press afterward that what I presented at this stage was a sketch, not a blueprint. Details of the blueprint are now being evolved by the government in co-operation with the provinces and with those segments of the economy whose consent is necessary.

LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PROGRESS OF NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour.

Considering that the strike by longshoremen in the Quebec City, Trois-Rivières and Montreal ports is continuing in a distressing way, can the minister advise the House whether there are bargainings in progress and whether this dispute will be settled within the next few days?

[English]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, let me answer the last part of the hon. member's question first by saying, yes, I hope that it will be settled. The parties are aware of the fact that we have a mediator on the scene, Mr. Charles Poirier, who is recognized as one of the outstanding authorities on the whole industry of the ports in this area. He is meeting with the parties, and the parties are aware that he is available to meet them again to try to achieve a settlement as soon as possible.

POSSIBILITY OF SECURING SUPPLY OF FEED GRAIN IN VIEW OF LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, there is a supplementary question I wish to direct to the Minister of Agriculture.

Taking into account the answer given by the Minister of Labour, can the Minister of Agriculture formally advise the House whether Quebec City area millers still have access to the Quebec City and Trois-Rivières port terminals and, if not, what steps he will take to assure that these millers will get adequate supply, pending the settlement of the strike?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I understand there have been injunctions granted for elevators in Quebec, but still picketing is going on there. The employees refuse to cross the picket line. Yesterday in Quebec City over 400,000 bushels of corn were unloaded at the elevator. Other boats are moving into the area with grain, and we are still hopeful that some amiable agreement will be reached so that grain can move through those areas which are in desperate need of grain for livestock and poultry feed.

INFLATION—POWER OF PROPOSED BOARDS TO FORCE PEOPLE TO JUSTIFY WAGE AND PRICE INCREASES

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. Now that after a long period of gestation the minister has laboured and produced this paper tiger referred to as consultation on inflation, can the hon. member say if the board or boards which he contemplates as being established under his proposals will be given adequate authority to compel various people from different sectors of the economy to appear before the boards and justify increases in prices or wages?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I said in my statement yesterday that reference to the board or boards was part of the consultative process itself. We are asking the various sectors of the economy if they feel that a board or boards would be appropriate, and what the terms of reference of those boards should be. The hon. member should recognize that the process we are undertaking is a consultative one and that consultation is an essential part of it. The hon. member might think of ways of reaching more simplistic solutions, but in a free society I believe human involvement should make this possible.

SUGGESTED REARRANGEMENT OF SPENDING PRIORITIES TO STIMULATE HOUSE CONSTRUCTION AND RELIEVE INFLATIONARY PRESSURE

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Given the fact that there is excess capacity in the residential housing industry, and given the fact that the shortage of accommodation is in itself highly inflationary, will the minister indicate if he is prepared to rearrange the spending priorities of the government at this time to alleviate the critical housing situation and thus reduce inflationary pressures?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the priority to which the hon. member refers is the priority of the government. The National Housing Act has recently been amended by this parliament, and the Minister of State for Urban Affairs introduced his new programs. The hon. lady's concern was echoed yesterday by the ministers of finance who met after the premiers adjourned. They expressed that same priority, and I took note of it.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Given the fact that both the budgetary measures and the measures of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs have been in effect for some time now and we have seen a further decline in the housing situation in Canada, will the minister say what he is prepared to do immediately, particularly in view of his comment on April 8 in this House where he said that housing is an area which should receive immediate priority?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, there will be an appropriate time to respond to that question in more detail.

POTATOES—POSSIBLE ALTERATION OF ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. It relates to the government's assistance plan for potato producers announced by the minister the day after the House adjourned for the Easter recess. Since there were a number of elements which were not included in the original announcement which have since come into play, particularly the limitation of two carloads, which has created not only confusion among potato growers but obviously considerably depressed the prices in Montreal and Toronto, can the minister undertake—or would he respond today—to indicate whether there will be any limitation with respect to diversion of potatoes for livestock feed programs, something which is very important both in terms of livestock feed needs at this time of the year as well as the price of the remaining potatoes to be sold for table stock?

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, a further meeting took place this week with the ministers from New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, the provinces most concerned, and also with the ministers from Quebec and Ontario who also have this problem to some extent. A full announcement on the program has been made this morning—hon. members should have it either in their post office boxes or in their offices by this time—outlining in some detail what the program really does or what it tries to do. It amounts to the fact that there should be payments to people with 10,000 hundredweight of potatoes. We are concerned about some of the producers who we feel are speculating in the market and so on, but we are more concerned about those potato growers who have not sold any potatoes and are depending on that as their sole source of income. It is difficult to work out a proper program for the marketing of this commodity at this late date. We were not asked to do so until several weeks ago, and then it required consultation between the ministers concerned for at least three weeks before they obtained a consensus from their producers and processors, and we are hopeful this will alleviate some of the concern that they will not be looked after. The total expenditure we estimated will be somewhere between $12 million and $15 million.

POTATOES—POSSIBILITY OF ESTABLISHING NEW MARKETING PROCEDURES

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Earlier when the minister was requested by provincial ministers from New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island to respond with an emergency program now, the minister indicated very clearly that there would have to be a related agreement with respect to changes in marketing procedures. I wonder whether this matter has been covered in the press release—unfortunately, the press release is not available to hon. members at this moment—or whether the minister will be making a statement. I think it is rather unfortunate that such an important question has been relegated to press releases when the House was not in session and now, apparently, press releases when the House is in session without any appropriate statement on motions from the minister.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the agreement we were able to come to with the provinces was one which was demanded. Proper regulations concerning marketing could not be worked out because they wanted it announced by April 1. That is why we made the announcement without the regulations.

In regard to the other part of the question about a new system for marketing potatoes, we are working toward that end, but how quickly we will be able to come to that I do not know. They are desirous of having a new system. We are also, because we have helped them in the last number of years, I think, twelve times out of the predicament in which they found themselves. If they are not desirous of that kind of program, neither are we.

SOCIAL SECURITY

EXCLUSION OF ORPHANS FROM ELIGIBILITY FOR FAMILY ALLOWANCES—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION TO REINSTATE

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, a year ago last March I raised a question with the Minister of National Health and Welfare about the regulations in the Family Allowances Act taking orphans off the family allowances list. At that time the minister promised to do something about it. I have raised the matter three or four times since then, and I should like to ask the minister now how long he feels it will take him to persuade the civil servants that the view of parliament should prevail and that all children under 16 should receive the universal family allowance?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the problem is not how long it takes to give instructions to civil servants. I have to act according to the law and the regulations which have been passed under that law. What is required is an amendment to the regulations and there are also substantial financial implications in such a change that are being considered by the cabinet.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Do I understand the minister to say that even though he promised to make these changes in the regulations a year ago it has taken this long to persuade the cabinet to make such a simple moral type of alteration?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, it is not a question of time. It is a question of the finances involved.

PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE ACT

REQUEST FOR DELAY IN REPEAL OF ACT UNTIL INVESTIGATION INTO ALLEGED IRREGULARITIES COMPLETED

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the government House leader. In view of the fact that four months have passed since the Minister of Agriculture was questioned about reported irregularities in the operation of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act during his term of office and that the House leader has said Bill C-30 which would repeal the said act will go before the House today, and in view of the fact that the RCMP investigation might not be completed for some time, would the government House leader agree to withhold Bill C-30 at least until the report on the investigation has been submitted?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is much connection between the two. I think it is desirable to repeal the act. The other inquiries can go ahead when the minister's estimates are before the committee and, of course, on the debate on the repeal the various points of view can be expressed.

SUGGESTED INCREASE IN OLD AGE PENSIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the minister considering a substantial increase in the old age pension in order to stimulate the purchasing power of senior citizens and enable them to overcome the crushing financial burden that inflation has brought upon them?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, Mr. Speaker.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REQUEST FOR DELAY OF MEASURE TO INCREASE MEMBERS' SALARIES UNTIL AFTER DECISION ON RESTRAINT TARGETS FOR WAGE INCREASES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance and is based on his statement to my colleague the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville a few moments ago. He said that thus far he has given only a series of sketches and that the details of the blueprint are still being evolved. In view of the fact that the restraint targets with respect to wage and salary increases have yet to be arrived at, or are yet to be agreed upon, will the minister take whatever steps he can to urge the Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates to delay consideration of Bill C-44, to increase members' pay and allowances, until these targets have been achieved?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, when the proposed increased figures are prorated over a period of years the question of the targets would be satisfactory within the discussions already contemplated by the various areas of the economy. In any event, the hon. gentleman will undoubtedly have his own view to present.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that we do not yet know what the targets will be, does the minister not think that this parliament and the government should give leadership on this issue by waiting for those targets?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): We are giving leadership right across the country, Mr. Speaker. It is up to parliament to decide the immediate problem before us.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): How can the minister say that with a straight face?

INFLATION—COURSE OF ACTION OF MINISTER IF ATTEMPT TO ACHIEVE CONSENSUS ON RESTRAINT FAILS

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance and I should like to say to him that perhaps yesterday was a bad day for him. I can understand that because really his optimism is lying in shambles at his feet. When, a few moments ago, he expressed his confidence in the consensus program on which he embarked, or on which he is to embark, was he serving notice to this parliament and his colleagues in the government that if that program does not work he will leave the ministry which he occupies at this time?

● (1130)

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it seems that the hon. gentleman is having a rather bad day today. I hope he will consult with his own leader who said yesterday that, although he might have some doubts about the procedure, he would give whatever support he could to a sincere effort to cope with the inflationary difficulties of this country. I recommend that to the hon. member.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister use his memory and recall that the leader of my party said that we will support any sincere effort by the government with respect to the consensus.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DAMAGE CAUSED BY SPRUCE BUD WORMS—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ASSIST

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Environment.

Because of the ravages caused by the spruce bud worm in New Brunswick, Maine and Quebec in the last few years, can the minister tell us whether the federal government has reached a decision on the amount of financial assistance it will be able to give that province this year?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the funds earmarked for spraying trees infested with the spruce bud worm had been cancelled. Because efforts are being made this year to convince me that the epidemic may be more serious than in years past, that it could become even worse, I am in the process of looking into what steps I could take to alleviate somewhat the gravity of the situation.

GRAIN

ALLEGED DIVERSION OF SHIPMENTS FROM WEST COAST TO EAST COAST—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. Yesterday I asked the minister to report to the House on the diminution by 10 million bushels a month in the amount of grain moving out of the port of Vancouver. Admittedly, although I raised the question only yesterday, the Wheat Board had announced on April 3 that there has been considerable discussion of this subject, especially on the west coast. Can the minister give the House any information.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have talked with the commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board about the reported statement to which the hon. member alludes. The matter to which he made reference had actually occurred long before April 3. The statement in no way indicates any lack of performance at this time. As I indicated to hon. members yesterday, performance on the west coast is very good. The comment made during the course of the labour dispute was merely to the effect that such problems on the coast might indeed lead to a change in the attitude as to how much can be accommodated at any one time; but that would be subject to review and I have no doubt that the port will continue to perform at high levels.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for looking into this matter immediately and reporting. May I ask a supplementary question. Was the minister saying that there is not a policy for reducing by 10 million bushels a month shipments from the port of Vancouver, because this suggestion has appeared in the press.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I think I can say to hon. members that the Canadian Wheat Board will look at the capacity of the port, and at sales opportunities. In balancing sales opportunities from the east and west, it will make as full use of the port as seems feasible. As sales opportunities present themselves, we foresee that the west coast will be handling record volumes again.

BEEF STABILIZATION PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR EARLY ANNOUNCEMENT OF NEW PRICE SUPPORT LEVEL

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of current indications that cattle feeders are now planning to sell most of their fat cattle just before August 11, the final day of the minister's first year support policy, will the minister give serious consideration to announcing immediately the new price support level for the second year, to reinforce his previous policy announcement, namely, that the beef stabilization program is to be continued after August 11.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that we have ample time to make the announcement so that cattlemen can plan their marketings in proper fashion.

Mr. Hargrave: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister intend to make the announcement before the end of the first year's support program?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, yes, we do, to give the cattlemen ample time, because we do not want to see a rush of cattle to the market in the last month before August 11. We want proper and orderly marketing and we realize that we will need to make the announcement some time ahead of that date.

INFLATION—REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S VIEW OF ACCEPTABLE LEVEL

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance which arises from a phrase he used when answering the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville. Unless I am misquoting him, he referred to bringing inflation down to an acceptable level, whatever it may be. Can he tell the House and country what he considers to be an acceptable level of inflation, so that, when trying to reach this elusive consensus, he can define what he is trying to achieve in this regard?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman will have a better idea of that when we bring the blueprint before the House in due course.

INFLATION—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION HOW GOVERNMENT ADOPTING A MODERATING STANCE TO COPE WITH PROBLEM

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Since federal government spending has increased by over 28 per cent, as measured by the estimates of last year and the estimates of this year, and as the money supply is increasing at an annual rate of 33 per cent, can the Prime Minister explain how the government is adopting a moderating stance, to cope with the problem of inflation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, not in answer to a question.

INFLATION—SUGGESTION ATTEMPT TO ACHIEVE CONSENSUS ON RESTRAINT IS SUBSTITUTE FOR LEADERSHIP

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. A little while ago there was an election, during which the Prime Minister said that we had made some progress and that the problem of inflation was world-wide. Statements made this week suggest we have made progress, to the extent that we have reduced the problem of inflation to three factors, namely, the use of consensus, the energy conference and the result therefore, and what happens in the United States, and there has been little progress there. As the ministers of finance are not even meeting today, although they are supposed to, which takes care of the elusive consensus, and as the energy conference did not produce any concrete results—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I indicated briefly on Monday the desirability of keeping preambles to questions to a minimum, particularly to supplementary questions, to which, if possible, there should be none. In view of that admonition, and as the hon. member has perhaps continued for long enough, could he ask his supplementary.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, what I said was not a preamble to my question. It was part of the body of the question. I was asking about the three factors which the Minister of Finance said this week related to the budget and when the government will finally come to grips with inflation. I dealt with the first two factors, the consensus and the energy conference. As for the U.S. problems, anyone looking at television last night would have seen how unsettled conditions there are. In view of all this, will the Prime Minister be as realistic and factual as he was when he was a writer and finally admit that the whole consensus search is just a charade and a cop-out from leadership on the question of inflation.

INFLATION—SUGGESTED EXISTENCE OF CONTINGENCY PLAN FOR PRICE AND WAGE CONTROLS—POSSIBILITY OF IMPLEMENTATION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In a newsletter to his constituents, the Minister of Labour, after saying that the government had found it necessary to establish a prices review board, went on to say, and I quote:

> The government also has a contingency plan if for some reason this board fails in its effort to control prices. The contingency plan would involve the establishment of a form of wage and price control, which you have shown your concern for in the last questionnaire which was returned to me.

Some 62 per cent of the minister's constituents agreed with this form of contingency plan. Can the Prime Minister now say if this form of contingency plan is still on the shelf, and what does it take to make this government implement it.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We established earlier this week that unless the question of privilege or point of order raised during the question period is of immediate urgency, it must wait until twelve o'clock.

● (1140)

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member raised that same point several months prior to the last election. On each occasion he has failed to indicate the date when that letter was sent out, which leads to all sorts of misunderstanding and misrepresentation. This letter was sent out at a time when the government was considering contingency plans and inflation was due to many different factors than it is today.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has evaded the question. In light of the fact the prices review board has not been any great success, and in light of the fact the consensus seems to be mythical and elusive, notwithstanding what the Minister of Labour is talking about, can the Prime Minister now advise whether the government has a contingency plan involving a form of wage and price controls such as they had in June of 1973 and what it takes in order for the government to face reality and bring in the same?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the hon. member that I was not evading the question by allowing the Minister of Labour to stand up. I knew that, if given a chance, he would point out the shabby practice in which members of the opposition indulge.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, this matter is too important for me to be playing games with the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister now answer my question or are we to conclude that he and his government are bankrupt in terms of presenting any type of plan in order to deal with inflation?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I have the impression that the hon. member is playing games by reading a quotation without indicating the date of it. It is something which goes back a considerable amount of time.

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT PROPOSED REGIONAL WAGE RATES FOR AIRPORT FIREFIGHTERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON FAIRNESS OF REGIONAL WAGE RATE SYSTEM

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board. Has the government proposed regional wage rates in the collective bargaining that is now going on with firefighters who are employed by Transport Canada airports across the country? I will ask my supplementary at the same time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fairweather: I can sit down and get up again as everybody else does or save time. It does not really matter to me. Is there any evidence where the regional rates are paid that the cost of living is any higher than in the rest of the country? Where is the fairness in the regional wage system?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, with regard to those negotiations, I believe the problem was this: the union chose to go to arbitration and the matter is now before an arbitrator, if I am not mistaken. As for the policy on regional rates, there are pros and cons. The government favours a policy of regional rates for federal employees in general.

ENERGY

OIL—AMOUNT BY WHICH GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO INCREASE PRICE AND JUSTIFICATION THEREFOR

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. It arises out of his statement at his press conference yesterday to the effect that if no agreement can be reached with the provinces, the federal government intends to raise the price of crude oil unilaterally under Part II of the Petroleum Administration Act. I have two brief questions. First, by how much per barrel does the government intend to increase the price of crude oil? Second, what justification is there for any increase in price in view of the exorbitant profits which the oil companies have made out of the present price of $6.50 a barrel?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, what I indicated at the conference and at the press conference following was that we were still hoping a consensus would be reached. However, since it is impossible tp predict that with certainty, I indicated that we would be proceeding with the Petroleum Administration Act. This would put the government in a position where it would be able to exercise its constitutional powers, if and when this consensus could not be reached, and if and when some provinces unilaterally envisage or contemplate a raise in price which we felt was not in the public interest.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Since the Prime Minister has said the government has decided reluctantly that an increase in price is warranted, will he now advise what justification there is for an increase in price in view of the substantial profits which have been made on the basis of the present price and if the reason for an increase in price, as the Prime Minister indicated to the conference, is the need for increased exploration? What steps does the government intend to take to ensure that any increased revenue to the oil companies will be used for exploration when they have not used their present profits to bring about increased exploration in this country?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, every premier and myself, at the conference and publicly over television, gave reasons why the price would have to go up. Some said at this time and some said subject to various conditions. I do not see any possibility in the space of the question period of summing up all those arguments which were made publicly. I will send the hon. member a copy of my speech if he has not had an opportunity of reading it.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have read the Prime Minister's speech several times. The House is entitled to some information. If the government is convinced that an increase in price is required in order to supply a cash flow to the oil companies, and they have not used the very large cash flow they have for exploration, in fact exploration has declined, surely the government has some program in mind to ensure that any increase in price does result in increased exploration for oil in this country.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, not only do we have some program in mind, but many steps have already been taken. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, over television the day before yesterday and at the press conference yesterday, indicated some $2 billion had been committed by the federal government since January 1974 to ensure further exploration and development of energy in Canada.

OIL—CONDITIONS UNDER WHICH FEDERAL GOVERNMENT MIGHT SET PRICE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Understandably, he would like to see a general agreement among all the provinces and his own government with regard to the price of oil and natural gas. However, when the Prime Minister contemplates fixing a price unilaterally by the federal government in the absence of an accord, is he thinking in terms of an accord with all provinces, including the consuming provinces, or is he thinking in terms of the necessity of an agreement between the federal government and the producing provinces to avoid the government of Canada having to set a price unilaterally?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, at this stage I still hope that, like last year, we will be able to reach an agreement between all provinces, the consuming as well as the producing. If that does not happen, we are in the area of a hypothetical question and I do not know how to answer at this time.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to be argumentative with the Prime Minister. However, it is important that the House know the policy of the government and whether a price would be set unilaterally, according to the policy of the government. If an agreement could be reached between the government of Canada and the producing provinces, would that obviate the necessity of the government fixing a price or prices unilaterally?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I understand the concern of the Leader of the Opposition, but I wish him to understand that it is the government's preference that there be no unilateral action. If I were to indicate what course I would adopt in the absence of an agreement, surely the provinces would lose their incentive toward an agreement. I would very much prefer all provinces, both consuming and producing, to work toward that agreement and not give them the excuse of saying that the federal government has already decided to act unilaterally.

INQUIRY WHEN YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES WILL BE REPRESENTED BY ELECTED REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Since all other Canadians were represented at these talks on the pricing of oil by their elected representatives, and since his minister of northern affairs, in response yesterday to a question of mine, indicated that in the case of the Yukon and Northwest Territories this representation was the responsibility of the federal government, was the Prime Minister, in stating his views on the pricing of oil at this conference, purporting to express the views of the citizens of the Yukon and Northwest Territories? If not, when is provision going to be made for the people of those two territories to have a voice in conferences such as this through their elected representatives?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would have to check the arrangements that were made, but the instructions that I gave were that we follow the usual practice, and that is that as members of the federal delegation there be some representatives from the Yukon and Northwest Territories.

AGRICULTURE

POTATOES—POSSIBILITY OF EXTENSION OF SUPPORT PROGRAM FOR EASTERN PRODUCERS TO WESTERN PRODUCERS

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Has his department received submissions and, in effect, made any decision to extend the potato stabilization program that was applied to eastern Canada and the maritimes to Manitoba and other areas of western Canada, or is he introducing a new program for western Canada to alleviate the problems that the producers of potatoes are having in western Canada?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we have received representations from Manitoba and from Alberta concerning the problem they are confronted with, and we are considering these representations at the present time. Although they have some problems in those provinces, they are not nearly as large as those in the maritimes, Quebec and Ontario.

Mr. Murta: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the minister's answer, which seems to indicate that there will not be any assistance for the producers of western Canada, if I read what he has said correctly, how can the government or his department justify coming out with a stabilization program for one part of the country that is affected by the problem and not applying the program equally across the country to assist other affected producers in much the same manner?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, at the time the request was made for aid for the maritime provinces, prices in Alberta were averaging $4 a hundredweight, $3 a hundredweight bulk delivery from Manitoba. Since that time one of the delivery points for Manitoba in the United States has gone bankrupt. However, I will consider the hon. member's representation, and if there is need we will come up with a plan to assist those producers who are in financial difficulty as a result.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY OF REASSESSMENT OF DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS WITH PORTUGAL—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON REQUEST FOR EARLY MEETING OF NATO

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the present trend toward the militant Communist-led left in our NATO ally Portugal, has the minister any plan for reassessing Canada's diplomatic role with this country, and will the minister be giving leadership to western democratic countries by supporting the United Kingdom's request for an urgent summit meeting of NATO countries in May?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the latter part of the question, the answer was given yesterday, both by the Acting Prime Minister and myself. We are certainly in agreement in principle with the concept of a NATO summit. We are asking some questions about the timing, but we have expressed a willingness, if the meeting is to take place, to be present.

With respect to Portugal, I believe the situation is not sufficiently clear at the moment to undertake the type of action that the hon. member suggests. An election is to be held in that country and we hope this will provide the people of that country with an opportunity to elect in a free way a government. Following that election would seem to me the appropriate time to assess the situation. I would assure the hon. member that the matter is under very close study, and following that election it may be possible to make a clearer judgment.

Mr. Crouse: A brief supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister has stated that there will be freely held elections in Portugal. I would ask him to explain how this can be possible when one party has been ruled out of entering the list in that particular country.

Mr. MacEachen: As a matter of fact, I did not state that freely held elections would take place. Certainly, it is my view—and this has been urged upon the Portuguese authorities—that the greatest possible opportunity should be afforded the people to select their representatives in a freely conducted election.

FISHERIES

UNITED STATES BAN ON CANADIAN SWORDFISH—REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address my question to the Prime Minister since it involves at least four departments, fisheries, environment, industry, trade and commerce, external affairs, and possibly national health and welfare. Since American fishermen are laughing all the way to the banks—the fishing banks and the financial banks—over their country's ban on Canadian caught swordfish, though their own state swordfish markets are big, would the right hon. gentleman cause this whole matter to be looked at again with determination to correct what has become an injustice against Canadian fishermen?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I realize the matter does concern several departments and that it is an important one. I will undertake to seek an answer and advice regarding the question asked by the hon. member.

THE ARTS

CRITERIA FOR ALLOCATION OF CANADA COUNCIL GRANTS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. On Wednesday I asked the minister whether his department has established any criteria to define what is pornography when allocating Canada Council grants for the arts. His answer, as recorded at page 4644 of Hansard, was "Of course not". Does the minister not make a distinction between the right of free expression of an artist who is self-supporting and the artist's responsibility when living on the largesse of taxpayers' contributions?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

POSSIBLE PURCHASE OF LAND NEAR CHILLIWACK—REQUEST FOR MEETING WITH RESIDENTS OF AREA

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the rather amazing answer the minister gave my colleague from Victoria the other day, could I ask the minister whether he would advise the House if it is the irrevocable decision of his department to proceed with the acquisition of approximately 700 acres of land in the Columbia valley region of British Columbia for the purpose of extending CFB Chilliwack?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, we do have options to purchase a little over 400 acres in the Chilliwack area, and we are negotiating the possible purchase of an additional 200 acres.

Mr. Patterson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the alleged unethical procedures used in seeking options on some of the properties involved and the effects upon the whole valley of the establishment of a project such as is contemplated, would the minister assure the residents that his officials will be present to discuss with them on a mutually satisfactory date the total program?

Mr. Richardson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. No purchase has been made and I would be pleased to make the arrangements to have officials meet with any citizens who are interested in this land transaction.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, on Monday we will be calling Bill C-32, the Petroleum Administration Act.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order simply to ask you, as Speaker, in preparing your comments and directions regarding the experimental question period, to give consideration to the deliberate practice of the Secretary of State for External Affairs when answering questions to speak as slowly as possible in order to consume time during the question period.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I welcome the opportunity to indicate to the House that it will be my pleasure to give a statement to the House on Monday. It will not include any comments on the quality or word rate of any members of the House of Commons.

TABLING OF REPORT OF CANADIAN FOOD ALLOCATION PROGRAMS

BROADCASTING, FILMS AND ASSISTANCE TO THE ARTS

Second report of Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts—Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey).

Order Paper Questions

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order which might come close to being a question of privilege. It concerns the tabling just a moment ago by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) of a report in respect of food allocations for 1975-76.

In view of the importance of this matter in terms of Canada's role last fall at the food conference, and the importance of continuing dialogue in this regard, I rise on a point of order in that the minister had tabled what I hope is an important document on the eve of his departure: he will be out of the country for I do not know how long, thus making it impossible for members to question or examine him on this document either in the House or in the committee. I hope it will not become the standard practice of ministers to table important documents and then disappear for a considerable time, thereby not allowing the House to deal with these matters of importance.

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 1,532, 1,602, 1,883, 1,906.

Mr. Speaker, if starred question No. 1,789 could be made an order for return this return would be tabled immediately.

I would ask that question No. 637 be made an order for return, and also ask the consent of the House to tabling immediately the information which has already been submitted, and the balance of the information will follow as soon as it is submitted to me.

I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

LETTERS FROM MEMBER FOR LEEDS TO SECRETARY OF STATE

Question No. 1,532—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the Secretary of State receive a letter dated December 3, 1974 from the Member for Leeds asking for certain information requested by the Brockville and District Branch of the Canadian Federation of University Women and, if so, has it been answered and on what date and, if not answered, on what date will it be answered?

2. Did the Secretary of State receive a follow up letter of January 30, 1975 on the same subject and, if so, has it been answered and on what date and, if not answered, for what reason?

3. Is it usual practice for the Secretary of State to allow over two months to elapse without acknowledging his mail and, if so, for what reason?

4. Will the Secretary of State take steps to have his mail from Members of Parliament and the public answered in less than two months?

Order Paper Questions

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): 1. Yes, the letter in question was answered on March 5, 1975.

2. Yes (See answer to part I).

3. It is the practice of the Secretary of State to acknowledge correspondence within ten days of receipt. However, under certain circumstances, when the substance depends on events or decisions beyond the jurisdiction of the Secretary of State, replies must be delayed.

4. Not applicable.

CANADIAN TRADE

Question No. 1,602—Mr. Railton:

1. Is it the policy of the government to diversify trade and to direct it towards the EEC, Iran, Japan and other areas of the world?

2. Have Canadians been penetrating businesses in the USA and, if so, how does the government intend to assist Canadian businesses to increase their export trade?

3. (a) Does the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce encourage business to attend trade fairs in these foreign countries (b) does the Department financially assist companies wishing to visit distant countries for the purpose of increasing their trade?

4. (a) How effective is the trade diversification programme of the Department (b) what is its future to be regarding a percentile re-direction of exports to these countries from the USA?

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. Yes, the policy of the government is to encourage the further diversification of Canadian trade to a number of important foreign markets while at the same time maintaining and enhancing our trade and economic relations with our traditional trading partners.

2. Yes, Canadian firms are increasingly active in the U.S. market. Many of these firms receive assistance in their marketing efforts through a variety of programs of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In addition, the services of Canadian Government Trade Commissioners and qualified trade staffs are available in 14 major U.S. business centers.

3. (a) Yes, the Department of Industry Trade and Commerce actively encourages and assists businesses to attend, and participate in, important trade fairs throughout the world. (b) Yes, the Department financially assists companies to visit foreign countries for the purpose of increasing their trade. This is mainly accomplished through the Trade Fairs and Missions Program as well as the Program for Export Market Development (PEMD).

4. (a) Canada's exports have increased to a number of important markets such as the EEC, Iran and Japan where the department has undertaken a considerable number of trade promotional activities. (b) No particular percentile goal has been set for this diversification program.

PROMOTION OF BILINGUALISM IN EDUCATION

Question No. 1,883—Mr. Neil:

For the fiscal years 1970-71, 1971-72, 1972-73 and 1973-74, what was the total grant paid to each province under the Federal-Provincial Programme for bilingualism in education to promote (a) English (b) French?

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CIVIL ACTION BY CAPTAIN OF "GREENPEACE III" AGAINST FRENCH GOVERNMENT—ASSISTANCE BY CANADIAN GOVERNMENT

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 26, I ask leave to move a motion for the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration. I have given you a lengthy document with my reasons and I will not go through that document now. My only point is asking for this debate on the Greenpeace III is that the trial of Captain McTaggart will begin on May 12.

There is urgency in considering the matter now because this government has stated it will give him assistance, but he is not getting the assistance required. Also, we have the statement by French officials that there was collusion between the French government and the Canadian government in the boarding of the Greenpeace III. I think we should have an opportunity to debate this matter in the House before the trial of Captain McTaggart takes place, in order that he will have the weight of the support of the Canadian government at his trial against the French government.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As the hon. member has indicated, he has given the Chair notice of his intention to move the adjournment of the House pursuant to Standing Order 26. While it is customary to indicate that notice has been received, in this case there is some problem with the notice. However, were there not I should point out to the hon. member that I would have no difficulty in ruling that this is not a proper subject for debate under Standing Order 26.

In so saying, may I indicate that notwithstanding the importance of the subject—and, quite frankly, hon. members rarely raise a subject under this rule that is not important and worthy of consideration, and this is certainly no exception; it is a very important question—debate on a matter under Standing Order 26 is reserved for matters that present an emergency and an hon. member moves that the House do adjourn because of the emergency nature of the matter.

The matter raised by the hon. member is, by its very nature—supported by the context of the hon. member's remarks—some two years old. The trial which is to take place is a civil trial and is not scheduled for another month. Under these circumstances, it would be stretching the provisions of Standing Order 26 and its interpretation beyond the limits if I were to find that the motion came within the order. I therefore have no hesitation in not accepting the hon. member's proposal.

PROPRIETARY OR PATENT MEDICINE AND TRADE MARKS ACTS

MEASURE TO REPEAL THE PROPRIETARY OR PATENT MEDICINE ACT AND AMEND TRADE MARKS ACT

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that Bill S-9, to repeal the Proprietary or Patent Medicine Act and to amend the Trade Marks Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order which relates to the question of where we send this bill after it is given second reading. Since it is a very simple bill and likely to occasion little debate, and since the committee to which it is referred is overloaded with work, I wonder if there might be an agreement to deal with the bill, after second reading, in committee of the whole.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, as far as we on this side of the House are concerned, we would accept that suggestion.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, that is perfectly satisfactory.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the House, then, in respect of the suggestion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), if there is unanimous consent that the motion be amended at this time so that the reference would be to a committee of the whole rather than to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is so amended.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Laniel in the chair.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I was not listening carefully, but having spoken with the hon. member for Athabasca, who is in charge of this matter on behalf of our party, I find that while we agreed that the matter should be referred to committee of the whole rather than to the standing committee, we were under the impression that there would be at least limited debate on second reading. If, in fact, the order made was to the effect that second reading be eliminated, that was not the understanding of this party.

I felt I should bring this matter to Your Honours' attention of the House. It was not our understanding that this bill would be sent to committee of the whole without at least some debate on second reading. If that was the order, it was not our understanding or belief.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As the one who made the suggestion, Mr. Chairman, let me say that I was not proposing that there be no debate on second reading. I thought there would be a short debate on second reading and little or no debate at committee of the whole stage. I suggest that the second reading stage having taken place so quickly, and this was no doubt an oversight, perhaps the situation could be corrected simply by allowing the so-called second reading speeches to be made now.

The Chairman: Order, please. I suggest there is an alternative; either to ask the Chairman to occupy the Speaker's chair and have a second reading debate, or to allow general debate on the first item of the bill within the confines of the committee of the whole. I am sure hon. members can express their views in the same way, unless they are looking forward to a type of proceeding of the House other than second reading stage.

● (1210)

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, under those circumstances, and to facilitate the proceedings, I think we agree that we should have what would be the equivalent of a second reading debate on the first item. However, I urge Your Honour, when paying attention to the quality and direction of the debate, to lean lightly on members so that to all intents and purposes we have the same situation as in a second reading debate, except that speeches would be limited to 20 minutes but the same member might be allowed two 20-minute periods instead of one 40-minute period.

The Chairman: The Chair does not have any difficulty in respect of the suggestion of the hon. member for Peace River. We will proceed to the consideration of clause 1.

On clause 1.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Chairman, I did not think the consideration of this bill would move so quickly, but I thank you for your interpretation of the rules in allowing us to have some debate, at least, at this stage that is similar to debate at second reading stage.

I should like to take a few minutes to put before the House the purpose of this legislation which is amending an act that has been part of Canadian legislation for quite a long time and which has had a consequential effect upon Canadians. The introduction of this bill to repeal the Proprietary or Patent Medicine Act marks a significant advance in the continuing development of Canadian drug legislation. So that the House may gain a better appreciation of the government's proposal and policies concerning proprietary medicines, I will briefly outline the history and development of the act, its relationship to the Food and Drugs Act and Regulations, and the future of proprietary medicines.

The origin of the term "patent medicine" dates back to the late 18th century, in England, when a royal "patent", or exclusive right, could be obtained for the formula of a medicinal preparation which was claimed to help the sick in some way. Such a preparation was distinguished from the other recognized medicines of the day in that the formulae of the latter were published in pharmacopoeias and, therefore, their compositions were generally known to anyone who cared to consult the appropriate text book. In other words, the compositions of "patent" medicines were kept secret, while the compositions of pharmacopoeial medicines were public knowledge. The word "proprietary" as in the Proprietary or Patent Medicine Act, originally indicated that someone "owned" a formula which was, therefore, in effect, a trade secret. Today, however, the term "proprietary medicine" is associated with products which are available to the general public for self-medication.

Early Canadian legislation did not concern proprietary or patent medicines. There were no controls over manufacturers of such medicines and hucksters peddled fraudulent, worthless, even hazardous, products. Some of these cure-all concoctions contained dangerous substances, such as cocaine, strychnine or arsenic, and high concentrations of alcohol. Indeed, one famous preparation, promoted for the relief all old kinds of dreadful disorders grouped under the euphemism of female problems, probably owed most or all of its activity to the 18% of alcohol it contained—added—so the label said—solely as a solvent and preservative.

[English]

Some of the most romantic and colourful aspects of the early days of patent medicines in this country were the names of the products themselves and the claims made for them. Our grandfathers and grandmothers guzzled, smeared or otherwise employed such exotic concoctions as Lydia Pinkhams' Compound; Green Mountain Vegetable Ointment for piles, sore throats and swelled breasts; No-To-Bac, "to be used faithfully by those who desired to free themselves from the bondage of the tobacco habit"; Pratts' Healing Ointment, for Man and Beast; Munyon Pills—ads for which trumpeted the advice of, "Doctor yourself; there's a Munyon Pill for Every Ill"; and last but not least, Dr. Pierce who offered $500 to women who could not be cured of female weakness by taking his medication. I suppose one might regretfully infer from the latter that in Dr. Pierce's day, as in our own, "female" and "weak" tended to be synonymous all too often.

One famous product was even named Razma. Mr. Speaker, I would not wish to suggest that some hon. members may not know their Razma from a hole in the ground, to paraphrase the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings, but I hope this brief resumé of the romantic past may at least have begun their enlightenment.

Responding to the demands of physicians, pharmacists and the general public, the government passed the Proprietary or Patent Medicine Act in 1908 to protect consumers from the hazards of such nostrums or cure-alls. The act was amended in 1919 and has continued in force essentially unchanged since that time. Meanwhile, the number of products registered under the act has decreased. In 1935, for example, there were some 5,600 proprietary medicines; today there are about 2,000.

Mr. Speaker, without delving into the technical details, I would like first to indicate the positive aspects of the present Proprietary or Patent Medicine Act. This act, which has served the Canadian public well, recognizes that there should be a class of products that can be used, without undue risk, by the general public, for self-medication. Such products are intended for the relief of symptoms associated with minor ailments, such as headache or indigestion, and they are intended for use without medical supervision. The government believes that such self-medication has an important place in the total health care system and serves to ease the pressure for services on health care professionals.

I want to stress that the provincial governments also recognize that such products should be available to the general public. At the present time, most provinces, through their provincial pharmacy acts, enable the sale of proprietary medicines outside pharmacies. To reiterate, we intend to ensure that future federal legislation will provide for a class of products which can be used for self-medication, and we have every reason to believe that the provinces concur in our actions and our policy. So much for the positive aspects of the present Proprietary or Patent Medicine Act which we want to preserve.

On the negative side, there is the so-called secrecy aspect of the act, which really has no place in today's modern, consumer-oriented society. The Proprietary or Patent Medicine Act permits the manufacturer of a proprietary medicine to keep the medicinal formula a secret from the public, although the Department of National Health and Welfare must, of course, be given access to it. With certain specified exceptions, ingredients are not required to be listed on the label of proprietary or patent medicine products. As already stated, this secrecy provision is no longer appropriate nor is it in the best interests of the general public.

The most logical course, once the secrecy provisions of the Proprietary or Patent Medicine Act are removed, is to bring the control of proprietary medicines intended for self-medication under the primary federal drug legislation, the Food and Drugs Act. Indeed, it is the opinion of our legal advisers that removal of the secrecy aspects of the Proprietary or Patent Medicine Act obviates the need for its further existence. Therefore, it is my intention to introduce a new division for proprietary medicines in the regulations under the Food and Drugs Act. Authority to do so is provided by that statute and no amendment to the Food and Drugs Act will be required. Because proprietary medicines will then be subject to the Food and Drugs regulations, a quantitative list of all medicinal ingredients will be required on the labels.

The new regulations concerning proprietary medicines will contain provisions enabling my Department to respond rapidly to the changing scientific and technological developments in the pharmaceutical field. There will be sections enabling a continuous scientific review of data pertaining to the manufacture, quality control, safety, and effectiveness of proprietary medicines.

For example, where additional information on the safety or effectiveness of a proprietary medicine is considered necessary, the manufacturer will have to supply that information upon request. It will be mandatory for the manufacturer to notify my Department whenever changes are made in the composition of the product since these may affect its safety or effectiveness. Once the manufacturer meets the requirements of the regulations, a certificate of registration will be issued for his product, permitting him to sell the product. However, if in the light of subsequent experience the information submitted is found to be insufficient, the certificate of registration could be revoked. If this occurred, it would no longer be permissible to sell the product as a proprietary medicine.

As I said before, proprietary medicines are intended for self-medication with minimal, or no, medical supervision. Therefore, as with the present Proprietary or Patent Medicine Act, certain drugs considered dangerous will not be permitted at all in proprietary medicines. Other, less hazardous drugs will be permitted only within specified limits. To that end, the new regulations will contain a schedule listing both types of drugs. This schedule will, of course, include all those drugs not now permitted in medicines registered under the Proprietary or Patent Medicine Act such as prescription, controlled and narcotic drugs as well as others.

Permit me to summarize: the new Regulations under the Food and Drugs Act will provide for,

(1) review on initial registration of the medicine,

(2) review as the need arises during the currency of the registration of the proprietary medicine,

(3) review of information submitted by the manufacturer regarding changes in his product which might affect its safety and effectiveness,

(4) scheduling drugs prohibited or permitted in only limited amounts in proprietary medicines, and

(5) more readily applying the Food and Drug Regulations to proprietary medicines.

[English]

Now I would like to outline briefly the conditions under which various drug products can be sold, and to indicate the concern of my department that we do not disrupt this established pattern unnecessarily. As hon. members know, prescription drugs can be sold on the authorization of a prescription issued by a practitioner. Non-prescription drugs can be sold without such authorization. By virtue of provincial legislation, prescription drugs and those non-prescription drugs not presently registered under the Proprietary or Patent Medicine Act can be sold only in drug stores or pharmacies. In general, also by virtue of provincial laws, only proprietary medicines presently registered under the Proprietary or Patent Medicine Act are available outside pharmacies. Thus, in a pharmacy one can obtain all types of drugs, while in a non-pharmacy outlet one may obtain only proprietary medicines.

Finally, I would like to consider some of the timing involved in this legislation. The bill before us proposes that the effective date of repeal of the Proprietary or Patent Medicine Act be July 1, 1976. The majority of provincial pharmacy acts contain references to the Proprietary or Patent Medicine Act. As I have indicated, such references exempt drugs registered under the Proprietary or Patent Medicine Act from the general prohibition of sale of drugs outside pharmacies. The repeal of the Proprietary or Patent Medicine Act and the transfer of proprietary medicines to a separate division of the Food and Drugs Act regulations will therefore require changes in the provincial acts. I understand that the necessary changes in the various pieces of provincial legislation are considered to be minimal, consisting essentially of the deletion of references to the Proprietary or Patent Medicine Act and insertion of appropriate references to the new regulations concerning proprietary medicines under the Food and Drugs Act.

As I indicated in reply to a question put by the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert)—who has shown great interest in this issue, for which I congratulate him—I have had contacts with my provincial colleagues in connection with this bill. At the federal-provincial conference of health ministers in February, 1974, my colleagues agreed that the federal government could repeal the Proprietary or Patent Medicine Act and substitute other regulations providing for greater disclosure. Further, the provincial registrars of pharmacy met with officials of my department on October 3 and 4, 1974, and due consideration was given to the changes that would be required in provincial pharmacy legislation. Moreover, there have been extensive consultations with representatives of the industry on this subject. Prompt passage of this bill will enable the provinces to have sufficient time to pass the necessary legislation to ensure a smooth transitional period; I wish to thank the House for its co-operation to date in ensuring prompt consideration of the bill.

In concluding, Mr. Chairman, I am confident that if the House passes this bill, we will have removed the secrecy aspect inherent in the Proprietary or Patent Medicine Act and will, thereby, make available to the general public essential information by requiring that medicinal ingredients be listed on the labels of proprietary medicines, without interfering with the availability of such products for self-medication. Indeed, as I indicated in reply to another question of the hon. member for Vaudreuil, this bill is intended to protect consumers and to improve access by consumers to information on drugs sold over the counter.

Mr. Holmes: Mr. Chairman, I assume that while we are in committee of the whole we have an opportunity to make comments and perhaps to intersperse them with questions. If that is the case, that may well be my format. Let me say at the outset that I welcome the opportunity to participate in this debate. Although the bill before us is rather short, I think it is an important piece of legislation, as has been indicated by the minister. I want to tell him at the outset that we agree in principle with the repeal of the Proprietary or Patent Medicine Act and its inclusion under the Food and Drugs Act. I was interested to hear the minister make at least brief reference to the regulations. His comments were not detailed and I will have some specific questions related to that. I wish to take issue with the practice of the government, when introducing legislation in which reference is made to regulations which are obviously the important, operative component of a bill, to refuse to include the regulations. I want to stress the fact that while agreeing with the intent of the bill it is impossible for me to comment upon the ultimate effect or success of the legislation without knowledge of the proposed regulations and of the specific details included under the Food and Drugs Act.

I recognize that there is a need in many instances to pass regulations to fulfil the intent of proposed or existing legislation. However, I believe that when such regulations exist or are contemplated, if we are to have a meaningful debate and meaningful input by all those interested in the legislation it is essential for the government clearly to define the regulations either preceding the introduction of the bill, during the debate or certainly when the legislation is before the standing committee. Let me give a couple of examples which have come to my attention in the short time I have been in this House. The first one is Bill C-28 which is on the order paper and is an act to amend the Animal Contagious Diseases Act. I think it is important. Several provisions of the bill are to clarify provisions of the act for which regulations exist, and the Department of Justice has, rightly, raised questions as to whether there is adequate authority under the act to evaluate and incorporate the regulations under which they are operating. A significant number of the provisions of the bill basically are to clarify these purposes. The point I wish to make is that that bill clearly demonstrates that regulations previously passed by governor in council now form a substantial part of the bill before the House.

In the same bill there is a new feature which gives authority to regulate the care and treatment of animals while in transit, for the purpose of reducing the incidence of sickness and disease. It is an attempt to eliminate losses during transportation and provides for the implementation of regulations affecting the movement of livestock by all forms of transportation. No one questions the intent of the legislation, but I suggest very seriously that a valid judgment cannot be made on the safe and humane transportation of animals or the maximum efficiency and speed in the movement of livestock without a thorough understanding of the proposed regulations.

I strongly urge the government and the minister to establish a mechanism whereby regulations can be thoroughly assessed so that affected parties have a substantive input in the development of these regulations. I find it inexcusable that a government would introduce legislation in which regulations form the important, operative part of the bill yet the House is not privileged to assess these regulations, many of which must be in existence or formulated at the time the bill is drafted. I want to remind hon. members that regulations or proposed regulations are the spawning ground for future legislation, and as such should be part of the debate.

Another bill is the environmental contaminants bill which was recently given second reading in this House. Again I want to stress the fact that extensive reference was made to a schedule and regulations, the details of which are not included in the bill and were not adequately discussed by the minister. This practice has, again, preempted members of this House from assessing the ultimate success of the bill, and perhaps more important, the government's intentions in respect of dealing with environmental health problems.

I am certain that all hon. members can provide additional examples and enlarge on the difficulties they have in assessing the full impact of proposed legislation because of inadequate details with respect to the regulations presented to this House. I would strongly urge the minister, preferably before the completion of the debate, to provide details of the regulations under this legislation to hon. members and interested parties.

I have no hesitation in indicating that the Proprietary or Patent Medicine Act has outlived its usefulness—the minister has indicated this—but I also wish to stress that it has served a useful purpose in our over-all approach to drug therapeutics and I hope some of the positive features of the act will be retained. The minister has also made reference to this question.

Those involved in the delivery of health care have long recognized that medication for minor ailments should be available to the general public without the necessity of having to obtain a prescription. Let me give two examples of the importance of this modality of treatment. If one reviews the World Health Organization estimates, one will find that 63 per cent of drug treatment is self-medication. I refer to "View from Ottawa" of March 3, 1975, "Report on Use of Non-Prescription Drugs Released" and quote as follows:

> A preliminary government report on the use of non-prescription drugs by Canadians showed that about half of those surveyed used at least one drug daily. Vitamins accounted for the largest proportion: about 37 per cent of respondents reported daily use. Another 7 per cent said they used cold medicines daily, while another 10 per cent used cough medicines daily. Over the year preceding the survey, 96 per cent of those sampled said that they used at least one remedy-type drug, and two-thirds reported using three or more.

I think these two examples will be some indication of the importance of self-medication. I want to say that with minor restrictions I believe this feature should be preserved. To do otherwise would place an unrealistic burden on the health care system, add substantially to the over-all cost of delivery of health care services and, most important, remove a form of treatment which has benefited thousands of Canadians, with the support of the majority responsible for the delivery of health care. On the surface, the most important feature of the bill—the minister has referred to this matter—is that it removes the secrecy provisions which exist at the present time. As hon. members know, the present situation does not require a quantitative list of ingredients on the labels of drug products which come under the Food and Drugs Act. At the present time, the ingredients are secret, known only to the manufacturer and the health protection branch of the Department of National Health and Welfare. Citizens have become more conscious about the quality of products and the associated environmental health hazards and are seeking full disclosure and information on available products.

The minister indicated previously, and again during the debate, that the regulations controlling proprietary medicines will contain provisions enabling the regulatory authorities to respond rapidly to changing scientific and technological advances in the drug field. This implies that the regulations will contain sections enabling a continuous monitoring program and scientific analysis of data pertaining to the manufacture, quality, safety and effectiveness of proprietary medicines.

As I indicated at the outset, it is impossible to assess the effectiveness of the bill unless more substantial information is applied. I would like to ask some questions on this point: the minister may wish to make note of them and respond at a later time. Who makes the regulations under the Food and Drugs Act? Is it the minister? Is it the governor in council? What input do these bodies affected by the legislation have? The minister has made reference to the provinces. How extensive has consultation been with the provinces with respect to their pharmacy acts? As I recall, the minister said there seems to be some agreement, and I am sure he recognizes that we must have some indication as to their agreement with the whole principle of self-medication as enunciated by the minister in including this present bill under the food and drugs regulations.

Have the various provinces amended their present pharmacy acts so that we can be certain that this new format will be included in that for which the provinces will be responsible? Since this is under a new division—I think the minister mentioned this—of the Food and Drugs Act, does this imply that proprietary medicines are subject to all the regulations existing under the food and drugs regulations? Will there be other, separate regulations with respect to proprietary medicines? I think this is most important because there are some differences. The minister indicated that there will be a schedule, and he mentioned some of them; but will there simply be a list of drugs which can be included as proprietary medicines? Will there be a list of thousands of proprietary medicines in the form of a schedule? I am not quite clear on that and I hope the minister can enlarge on it.

I think the minister is also aware that at the present time there are hundreds, probably thousands, of proprietary medicines in existence. I will comment in a moment or two on the quality assurance of drug program; but does the minister visualize a similar type of program in terms of the safety and efficacy of these various drugs under the proprietary medicines bill? Another matter is, Mr. Speaker, that it is not unusual to see rapid changes in proprietary medicines. The minister made some reference to that question but did not say how he plans to monitor them. Will there be consultation with the industry to ensure such monitoring?

I want to ask the minister about drug identification numbers. I am sure he is well aware of the controversy which arose when that particular regulation was introduced. I have received a good deal of correspondence about it and have talked to many people involved in pharmacy. A lot of people felt that the program was costly and the results of questionable value. I should like to ask the minister whether anything will be done about the drug identification numbers program as it presently exists. I am sure there are many other questions that will be raised. As I indicated previously, if we are to have input of value with respect to this type of legislation, I think it is most important that the regulations be made available to interested parties.

The minister has not made reference to the safeguards he plans to ensure the quality, safety and effectiveness of drugs if we are to provide the Canadian public with safe and effective proprietary medicines. I now want to say something about the QUAD program. I know the minister is aware that I have not been too happy with the government's performance in managing the quality of drugs in Canada. I spoke on this matter on April 3, 1973, in the House. I believe the Canadian public has been misled and that those people involved in the health care delivery systems in the industry, and even in this House, have been misled.

I want to remind this House that when the present government first embarked upon a program of quality drug control it was introduced as the quality assurance of drug program. When the program was introduced, the Canadian people were informed that quality would be guaranteed, and this has been a permanent impression with the majority of Canadians. I want to bring to the attention of hon. members, however, that shortly thereafter the government reversed its decision and introduced the drug quality assessment program. I am certain the minister recalls his difficulties with that particular program. The minister has yet to tell the Canadian people that there is no guarantee of the quality of drugs. At this time the health protection branch is simply testing drugs at random and has not fulfilled its commitment to the Canadian people to guarantee the quality of all drugs.

I have referred to the secrecy aspects of the existing legislation and the necessity of abolishing this archaic approach. I have also stressed the importance of the quality of drugs. There is a third area that has received little of no government attention, however, and that is the problem of drug reactions. Let me put the question in its proper perspective. I should like to quote from the summary of an article entitled "Drug Reaction Control" which was written by Campbell and Napke, the latter person being chief of poison control and adverse reaction programs of the Department of National Health and Welfare. This article which was published in June, 1974, begins with these words:

> The incidence of drug adverse reactions (DAR) in hospital patients varies according to the intensity of monitoring from a low of 5 per cent to a high of 35 per cent. As many as 5 per cent of monitored patients may suffer DAR on admission to hospital, while more than 3.5 per cent of in-hospital deaths have been drug-attributed.

From this, the direct and indirect costs due to this problem are readily apparent. As I indicated, the government's initiative in this area is essentially zero, despite the introduction of this bill and the implication that by listing the ingredients the problem will vanish. I want to emphasize that there are two principal bodies which have called for this legislation, in my view. The first is the health care delivery system because of the growing awareness of drug adverse reactions and interactions, thereby creating a demand for more information on the individual ingredients in medical formulation; the second is a more enlightened public which is demanding to know more about the medication it is receiving.

These observations lead me into the broad problems of drug advertising and marketing practices, both of which play an important part in the problems of drug misuse and drug reliance. It is essential to reassess the general practices and techniques as applied to the marketing of drugs for medical utilization. In my view, if one assesses the present techniques of advertising as evidenced in journals and direct mail to physicians, one may conclude that these contribute in a negative manner to the prescribing habits of physicians and to patient risk. There is need for a thorough re-evaluation of the Food and Drugs Act in this area. We must recognize that the advertising of all drugs, including non-prescription drugs, is potentially harmful and because of the visual impact, particularly on children, we must reassess the advertising of drugs on television.

There is an obvious need to emphasize the educative component regarding the use and misuse of drugs. There is a need to emphasize the positive by informing people about the problems of side effects and the dangers of over-reliance on drugs. I am not suggesting tight and inflexible regulations to govern the safety of existing or new drugs, since this could promote therapeutic isolationism. What I am suggesting is that a new attitude is required, one which would alter the present mentality of "above all, do no harm" to "above all, do good". I think if the minister and the government were to adopt this philosophy, then meaningful legislation might be possible.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I would ask, what is the ideal we should strive for in drug legislation? Is it assurance of the safety and efficacy of the prescription drugs available for the use of professionals in the health care system and the safety and efficacy of non-prescription drugs available to the public? If this is combined with instructions for use that are correct and understandable, and if drugs are advertised and marketed in a positive manner, then I believe our drug laws will be immeasurably improved.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I have just a few words to say. It is our view that the minister has made a case for this bill which in effect calls for the repeal of the Proprietary or Patent Medicine Act, that repeal to be effective July 1, 1976. The arguments for it are, of course, that the act itself has outlived its usefulness and that there are other ways to deal with the matters that were covered by it.

The other important point, of course, is that the element of secrecy which is involved in the old act should be done away with. I think we will all agree that the hon. member for Lambton-Kent has made a useful contribution in the remarks he has just made, and we look forward to the answers the minister will give to the important questions that have been placed before him.

The only other comment I want to make is that when the question of drugs comes up, a concern that many of us have is for the cost of those drugs so far as older people are concerned. I was quite disappointed earlier this week when I put a question to the minister concerning pharmacare, hoping that he would show some interest in it. But the minister's answer in this parliament—I can hardly believe this is the same minister that we had in the last parliament—was "No".

Mr. Lalonde: Not at this time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Sometimes his answer is just "No", and sometimes "Not at this time." This morning, when the hon. member for York-Sunbury asked a question about old age pensioners, I think the answer was just plain "No." The minister did not even enlarge the answer to "not at this time."

This is an area of real concern, Mr. Chairman. It seems to me that if the government is not prepared to come through with a pharmacare program for all the people of Canada, it should at least start it for old age pensioners and other special groups. I realize that this matter is beyond the confines of this particular piece of legislation, but I hope the minister will say a word on the subject. Generally speaking, although we want to hear the answers to the questions which have been put, we are prepared to support this bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a few words at the third reading stage, which in fact is a second reading of Bill S-9, an Act to repeal the Proprietary or Patent Medicine Act of 1908, which was amended ten years later, and also the Trade Marks Act had the Labelling Act. As far as the Proprietary or Patent Medicines Act is concerned, I believe it has lapsed with the enactment of the Food and Drugs Act.

At the outset, it was better than nothing and even if some concoctions seem a bit childish today, still there was confidence with which to build up patient morale. It is still said that good morale accounts for 50 per cent of the cure.

The minister referred a few moments ago to the somewhat comical names of certain remedies with doubtful virtues. But he said nothing of their psychosomatic effect in those days. I shall remind him that even today, there is for instance the so-called Indian remedies. Although they might be laughed at by a good number of learned pharmacists, they nevertheless have proven curative values. But of course what is involved here today is not the art of medication but the marketing and quality control of drugs offered for sale to the public.

Is quality ensured today? That is the question raised by many people. When people today go to a drugstore or licensed retail outlet, do they really get the drugs they need? Wn my opinion, the reply is much more serious, because even in some drugstores, people often try out new remedies: "Try this pill, if it does not work, you can try another one." This pill often has the opposite effect to that hoped for. The old act is critized, but I believe that today the department must seriously examine these pill pushers and especially formulas, because certain products have been found in drugstores which have now been discontinued and which were sold to cure liver troubles and were ineffective. But these products are still being sold, Mr. Chairman. Things should not remain as they are; the department must continue its work to clean up and steer the country in the right direction.

As for distribution, as I said a while ago, today there is an increasing tendency . . . I remember when I started in business I had a grocery store. I no longer have it since I transformed it. We sold several patent medicines. They were much less expensive than in drugstores. As soon as they were transferred to drugstores, about 50 per cent of the drugs that we were allowed to sell were taken away from us, and their price doubled immediately. This was not a victory for the population. I agree that all drugs, especially prescription drugs, must be sold in drugstores. All the drugs which must be rigidly controlled and sold by a specialist must be sold in drugstores. However, we should continue to sell patent medicines in stores, in groceries, to help the population, the ordinary worker, who has a low income.

Mr. Chairman, the policy announced by the minister is a good one since he talked about the possibility of retailers continuing to sell patent medicines provided that they are well labelled, that their ingredients are listed and that the poopulation stops being deceived as it has been in the past and still is today. I hope this bill will open the door to the department so that the health of the population can be protected through the Food and Drugs Act.

[English]

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I could call it one o'clock.

The Chairman: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Chairman, this is a very small bill; therefore, it is going through the House without too much discussion. But even though it is a small bill it may have very wide-ranging effects on certain aspects of our society. It suggests the repeal of the Proprietary or Patent Medicine Act and some changes in the Trade Marks Act in order to clear the way for institution of regulations to govern patent medicines. At the present time, patent medicines are kept secret from the public in so far as their ingredients are concerned. The only ones who know the ingredients are the Minister of National Health and Welfare or his disciples, and the manufacturer.

With regard to the secrecy aspect being outdated and indeed dangerous, we agree with the principle of this bill, namely, that this secrecy aspect of patent medicines should be removed. However, we wonder why the minister chose to be so secretive about the regulations which are going to be brought in to replace those acts which are being repealed and changed. We disagree with this kind of government secrecy; it makes it almost impossible properly and thoroughly to debate the pros and cons of the long-term outcome of this legislation.

[Mr. Gauthier (Roberval).]

I would like to know why the minister seems to be carrying on the tradition established by this administration of this passion for secrecy, especially when there does not appear to be anything to hide. There is no reason why these regulations should not have been given to us. I made several attempts, by telephoning the minister's office in the past month or so, to obtain a copy of the regulations. Without providing any reason, each time I was refused. We are not the only ones concerned: the industry involved in the production of patent medicines is concerned. The minister said—I think I quote him correctly—that the secrecy aspect has no place in today's modern society. However, in presenting this bill he is selling the House another patent medicine under the old rules. We still do not know the constituents of it, since the new rules are still secret. Only the minister and maybe some disciples in his department know, but we do not know what they are. That is a rather strange approach to take. There is no obvious reason for it, yet it is being done.

The stated purpose of the bill as it appeared in Debates of the Senate and the minister's speech reminds me of the television advertising of a patent medicine where certain claims are made, but there is no way we can verify whether the medicine will do what is claimed for it because we do not know the ingredients. In this case we have a bill presented as a patent medicine. We do not know what it will achieve in the long run, other than being told that in the future some regulations will be brought in, making a few corrections for improvement. The minister should rise in the House, if he returns to the chamber, or his parliamentary secretary should—who is also capable of doing it—and explain why the regulations have not been presented.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Yewchuk: I thought I would be nice to her, since this is the first time she is piloting a bill through the House. Perhaps she can give a sensible explanation as to why we were not provided with the regulations in advance. As I mentioned before, the intent of the bill sounds all right. For example, it will be a great help, not just to people in treating themselves and knowing what they are getting but to the medical profession in dealing with patients who have used patent medicines. There may be some side-effects from a patent medicine for which a patient presents himself to his doctor. However, the doctor does not know what was in the patent medicine and it may be difficult for him to interpret why the side effects occurred or what is the best treatment. The same applies to allergic reactions. If you do not know the cause of allergy, it is more difficult to treat it in a reasonable way. Therefore, it is important that the ingredients of patent medicines be known.

It is also important for the public to be able to scientifically verify claims that are made for patent medicines. This leads me into the subject of advertising. We have a situation where manufacturers or distributors of patent medicines can make virtually any claim they please. The public has no way of verifying whether the claim is scientifically true. The only way the public can judge is by taking the medicine and subjectively trying to determine whether they are getting better. That is an extremely unscientific way of assessing the usefulness of a medication. There are all sorts of examples of what I would say is misleading or dishonest advertising of some of these preparations. One of the most obvious examples is various preparations of aspirin, or acetylsalicylic acid. It may be presented in the same quantity, in the same constitution, with a different name as a new treatment for arthritis or even an old treatment for arthritis. Take the situation where a patient will treat himself without medical advice. He will go to the drugstore or to a distributor and ask for something for his arthritis. He may be given two or three different items, all of which claim to be for arthritis but which in fact are the same chemically. In other words, he may get four times as large a dose of the same medicine that any one of the tablets themselves would provide. In other words, I think it is a step in the right direction to state what the actual medications are.

Television advertising of some of these patent medicines might also be worth mentioning. I am irritated sometimes when watching them. For example, you see a picture of a beautiful girl with a headache swallowing a pill, and within seconds a smile comes over her face and she feels just great. I do not think we can describe this kind of advertising in any way other than to say it is extremely deceptive. There is absolutely no physical way in which a headache tablet can relieve pain in a matter of seconds, as the advertisement portrays.

In the regulations to be published, I think we should consider the possibility of a regulation dealing with advertising of this kind. I appreciate you cannot sit and wait for 45 minutes to elapse before the girl in the ad feels better, but some indication should be given in the advertisement that for reasons of time and cost the whole thing is condensed into 60 seconds. Otherwise, I think a false impression is created. We all know that any medication taken by mouth does not reach its maximum effect until the passage of at least 45 minutes or an hour, and possibly even longer. That is why I think this kind of advertising should be corrected.

The most important thing to remember is that further information must be made available regarding the effectiveness of these various medications. There must be made available to anyone who requests it scientific information confirming any claims that may be made for the effectiveness of any drug. Information should also be given as to any side-effects or possible harm that may result. As a matter of fact, this information should be on the label so that people do not unknowingly use a preparation that may have harmful side-effects for them. This is particularly the case with people who may be allergic to certain constituents and who may have other adverse reactions to that medication.

Another situation where patent medicine advertising is rather misleading concerns the various potions, ointments and rubs on the market. An athlete may have a sore shoulder from pitching a baseball too vigorously, so he rubs some lotion on his shoulder. Immediately the pain goes away; or that is the impression created by television ads. We all know this is absolute nonsense. I, for one, have not been able to find any scientific evidence to substantiate beyond a shadow of doubt that the various compounds that are rubbed into the skin to relieve pain from arthritis, rheumatism or whatever have the slightest pain relieving effect, speaking from the pharmacological point of view.

Where such claims are made, the manufacturer should explain to the satisfaction of the scientific community the mechanism of action involved in producing the claimed effect, and this must be proven by clinical studies, rather than the evidence of someone who may have improved for one of two reasons, either because there was a psychological feeling that there was improvement because some treatment had been administered, or because there was improvement as a result of the effects of nature itself. For example, a painful muscle caused by the excessive exertion of that muscle will get better by itself within three or four days. Some patent medicines may say on the label that if they are rubbed in, within three or four days any pain will be cured. This sort of thing occurs with advertisements for rubs, lotions, and so on. We should inform the public, when this sort of thing happens, that they are victims of a snow job. The public should be informed on the label on the bottle that the medicine contained therein will or may improve the pain condition within three or four days, but that the pain will also go away by itself within the same period of time. Certainly that would be more honest and accurate as far as the public is concerned.

While I agree that the public is entitled to self-medication if that is what it wants—and I am not objecting to that—at the same time there must be accurate and honest information given about these products for self-medication. This is not the case now, and the minister gave us no assurance in his speech that it will be the case after the bill is passed and new regulations are brought in. We have been given no assurance that the public will not continue to be exposed to what in some cases amounts to a sham. I suggest we look seriously at this matter and take steps to correct the situation.

Perhaps I appear to be dwelling a little too much on drug advertising, but there is another aspect that I think is related here. We all know that prescription drugs are not advertised on the public media; such advertising is restricted to patent medicines. It seems to me that in due course these advertisements will have some kind of influence on the psychological attitudes of our young people, people of middle age and, indeed, the elderly, in regard to the value of nature itself in remedying minor ailments compared with the value of some pill or potion. It seems to me that the kind of virtually uncontrolled advertising that we see today is creating the attitude on the part of the public that there must be a pill or a potion for everything.

This sort of thing is destroying the idea that people used to have, that nature will take care of most of the minor ailments, that we do not need a pill or a crutch to lean on every time we have a little headache or a sore muscle from too much exertion, or every time we become a little worried about something. The net effect of advertising patent medicines year after year and decade after decade is to create a drug dependent society, a feeling in society that a drug must be administered immediately if there is some minor thing wrong with us that we do not like. This does a disservice to society and in the long run is harmful. I suggest we must consider the long-term effects of this sort of thing on our children and on society as a whole.

One other aspect, that I have already touched on, is this new attitude on the part of consumers in general. They are no longer satisfied, generally speaking, because of their greater awareness today of what is going on around them, to be given information that is not provable. They are no longer satisfied to be provided with a product with a claim attached to it which is not provable. So far as this aspect is concerned, the bill is useful.

I should like to conclude on this note. The minister indicated that a certificate of registration was to be given the manufacturers of certain patent medicines so that in some way the Food and Drug Directorate can monitor the effectiveness of their preparations in order to see whether they achieve what they claim to achieve. He did not provide any information whatsoever as to whether the Food and Drug Directorate would be involved in testing the effectiveness of these medicines before they are marketed, while they are being marketed or after marketing. He did say there will be some monitoring. I should like to know what testing procedure the department will follow to make sure the public is adequately protected, not only from adverse reactions which may occur but also from false claims that may be made.

It seems to me we should be provided with this kind of information in order that we can be reassured, particularly in view of the fact we do not have the regulations: we should have some assurance that the department will be carrying out thorough testing of these various medicines to ensure that the public is not abused.

Miss Campbell: Mr. Chairman, perhaps at this time I might answer some of the questions raised by hon. members this morning. The hon. member for Lambton-Kent and the hon. member for Athabasca made reference to the secrecy of regulations. As hon. members will appreciate, it would be somewhat strange if the regulations were published before the bill was passed. It would be almost contempt of parliament to have the regulations before there was an act. I am sure that hon. members will have the opportunity to examine these regulations in detail at a future time in the committee studying the estimates.

The hon. member for Lambton-Kent also asked who would be responsible for making these regulations. Regulations are made by the governor in council, and I can assure the hon. member that they will go through all the usual and proper channels before that point. The hon. member also asked whether there had been any discussions with the provinces in this regard. Last February, during the federal-provincial health ministers' conference, the question of the intention to repeal the Proprietary or Patent Medicine Act was discussed. There have been discussions with the provincial registrars in respect of the new regulations, and I think the minister clarified this in his opening statement to the House. The government's intention is to create a new division under the Food and Drugs Act regulations dealing specifically and only with proprietary medicines, but the general regulations under that act will also continue to apply to that new division. There will also be a schedule that will include a list of chemicals or drug entities not allowed in proprietary medicines.

[Mr. Yewchuk.]

The hon. member for Athabasca asked who would be conducting the monitoring. I can tell thim that this will be done by the health protection branch. The regulations will also provide for an initial review by the health protection branch of the department and an additional review of the products' safety and efficacy should the need arise within the current term of the registration. There will also be a review of the data submitted for a product should the manufacturer change the formula of the medicine, as well as a schedule of drugs not permitted in proprietary medicines. I think that gives hon. members a clear picture of what will be provided for under the regulations.

Hon. members also asked questions in respect of advertising. It has been brought to the attention of the House that this matter was again raised for discussion at the last federal-provincial meeting of the health ministers concerned. There was general reference to advertising in respect of drugs. I should point out that the health protection branch already reviews all Canadian TV advertisements regarding proprietary medicine. Any new claim in respect of a proprietary medicine would not be allowed unless the manufacturer submitted data to the department to substantiate that claim. The medicine would then be considered a new drug and would consequently be subject to the new regulations.

The hon. member for Lambton-Kent also referred to the drug identification number. Under the new regulations, these medicines will be required to have an identification number. Perhaps this will be a different type of number, but it will allow the pharmacists and physicians to identify a proprietary medicine with that number. One must remember that the whole purpose of repealing this act is to allow full disclosure to the public. In other words, they will have knowledge in respect of over the counter drugs; people will be able to recognize the components of the proprietary medicines they are taking and will be able to know if they have had previous allergy reactions in the past. They will know exactly what are the contents.

There was also reference this morning by the hon. member for Lambton-Kent to the quality assurance program. During the first three years of this program, of the drugs examined the failure rate was reduced from 7 per cent, initially, to 4.9 per cent in the following year, and to 3 per cent last year.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I should like to thank the parliamentary secretary for her complete answer in respect of some of the questions raised. We will be examining them in great detail to check their accuracy, but I am satisfied that she has done everything she can in this regard. I should like to compliment her. I understand this is her first opportunity to pilot a bill through committee of the whole. Let me say, on behalf of my colleagues, on this Friday afternoon that she has done a commendable job.

Let me now make a suggestion about something she said regarding the practice of this House. The hon. lady said she felt it would be almost contempt of parliament if the regulations were produced before the bill had received the sanction of parliament—and in that sense I refer to both Houses. I cannot believe that some consideration has not been given to the regulations that will be promulgated under this statute. While I understand why the regulations are not here at this stage, it would be very helpful to parliament if the regulations which are so vital to the operation of the bill were produced at the same time as the bill, so that members of parliament, and not just opposition members, could study them. This is particularly so when we are dealing with a bill of this nature which is really dependent upon the regulations for its operation.

The parliamentary secretary suggested that at a future time these regulations will be available to members of the House or the members of the standing committee which will deal with the bill. However, they will only be available some considerable time after the bill has become law and perhaps after the regulations have come into effect.

It may well be that members of the committee from all sides of the House interested in this matter would find the legislative process to be assisted if they were given an opportunity to examine the regulations. This is just one bill among many which fall into that category. If members of parliament are to attempt to make a really useful contribution to the understanding by the public of important pieces of legislation, then I would ask the parliamentary secretary to convey that message to the government House leader so that he might consider the matter.

I realize the difficulty which exists in respect of committee of the whole, but not all legislation goes to committee of the whole. It is sort of a legislative accident in this case that the legislation is being considered in committee of the whole. There are bills which on second reading are referred to the standing committees, and at those standing committees it might be very helpful to the legislative process if the regulations were there. While the regulations might not be in final form and could be in draft form, the bill has been on the order paper and has been involved in the parliamentary process for some time. It was introduced first in the Senate, as I read the number. There has been considerable opportunity, in terms of time, for the consideration of these regulations.

I wish to emphasize to the parliamentary secretary that this is not intended as a criticism of the hon. lady or of the government, but I am putting forward the possibility that this might be a way in which the parliamentary procedure could be assisted at a particular time when the government seems to be indicating great interest in changes to the parliamentary procedure.

Miss Campbell: Mr. Chairman, the reason I made the statement I did is that if the regulations were promulgated it would be anticipating a decision of the House prior to its being made. I went on that assumption. However, I would point out that a portion of the regulations which would also apply to proprietary medicines are already in existence under the Food and Drugs Act and regulations.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I have been through the experience so often of trying to get regulations before they are published that I know how difficult that matter is, and therefore I do not intend to drag it out at this point. However, it seems to me there is one point the parliamentary secretary is missing which I think my friend the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton also missed. They both spoke about regulations being passed under this statute. Bill S-9 does not give anyone authority to pass anything. When Bill S-9 is passed, the Proprietary or Patent Medicine Act will be gone. I suggest that the authority for regulations is contained in the Food and Drugs Act and that authority already exists. If the government wished to level with us and show us the new regulations, it could do so without any contempt of parliament at all.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the hon. lady whether the regulations in total are now ready, or whether there is still a good deal of work to be done in finalizing them.

Miss Campbell: Mr. Chairman, I am told they are still in the process of preparation.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Chairman, during my earlier remarks I asked a question concerning the testing procedures used by the new division set up in the Food and Drug Directorate. The hon. lady said that if any new claims are made, they will have to be substantiated by the manufacturer. However, I am of the impression that some information is not necessarily accurate.

I should like to know specifically what testing procedures will be used by the Food and Drug Directorate, because it seems to me that simple reliance on the manufacturer to provide information about the efficacy of a new drug is an unreliable way to obtain information. It is possible, for example, for the manufacturer of a new drug to conduct 100 different tests, and 95 of those 100 tests might show an undesirable result and five of them the desired result. The manufacturer may choose to provide information by saying that it tested five cases which showed the desirable result, perhaps neglecting to mention the others which showed an undesirable result. I think this happens not only in respect of patent medicines but also in respect of prescription medicines. I want reassurance from the parliamentary secretary that action is being taken to correct this type of situation.

Miss Campbell: The minister in his speech already referred to the nature of the regulations respecting this point that will be promulgated out in the future.

Mr. Yewchuk: Tell me what the testing procedure is.

Miss Campbell: I do not think we have at any time said we would test proprietary medicines for safety and efficacy. Rather, we require that the manufacturer, when registering a proprietary medicine with the health protection branch, submit a protocol for testing, and conform with it before he is allowed to put that patent medicine on the market. I would think the manufacturing industry should accept the onus for satisfying the requirements of the health protection branch concerning the safety and efficacy of their products.

Mr. Yewchuk: I must say, Mr. Chairman, I am disappointed with that answer. Do I take it to mean that the Food and Drug Directorate simply says that it is not interested in verifying a claim made by a manufacturer, and that in fact it refuses to do the testing and must rely on the information provided by a manufacturer who is in business primarily for profit? I have outlined a possible example. I am not suggesting that it happens in all cases in which information is provided the government on the efficacy of a drug, but if there is no testing procedure carried on by the directorate, there is a great likelihood that information provided to the government on the understanding that the government will not do any testing on its own, could very well contain some misinformation.

Miss Campbell: In answer to the hon. member for Athabasca, the department does review very carefully the research material with a view to verifying claims made by the manufacturer. I have already stated that the health protection branch will set out the criteria which must be followed by the manufacturer before it can place a product on the market. The criteria set out by the health protection branch must be followed. If there is any doubt concerning safety and efficacy of the product, the department would immediately require additional information if the product is to continue to be marketed. I think the hon. member is playing with words, because no manufacturer would want someone else to do the testing of his product. Surely the manufacturer must be required to bring additional information to the department and have it approved.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Chairman, I did not want the parliamentary secretary to misunderstand my comments. I did not say the department should do the primary testing. Of course the manufacturer must do his own testing. However, I think the Food and Drug Directorate must take steps to ensure that the results from this testing are indeed accurate. There must be some way of verifying the efficacy of these products. However, I will leave this matter for the time being because I do not think any further answers will be forthcoming.

I would like to ask one more question dealing with advertising. The parliamentary secretary indicated that this matter had been discussed at the federal-provincial conference but she neglected to say, or I did not hear her, what the conclusion of these discussions may have been and what corrective action was taken regarding the inordinate amount of drug advertising in this country.

Miss Campbell: I will deal with the hon. member's last point first and then return to the first point he made. A study is presently being made of advertising and its effect on sales, and it is anticipated that this study will continue for some time.

Mr. Yewchuk: In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask whether any study is being carried out to determine the effect of drug advertising via the mass media on the attitude of Canadians toward the need for self-medication or on the use of drugs in general. For example, in the past decade or so we have witnessed in this country a fairly large increase in the non-medical use of drugs of various types. It seems to me that it would be useful to know whether the massive drug advertising to which we have been exposed has in any way contributed to the non-medical use of drugs, on the basis that a phychological attitude is created in people when they are constantly exposed to advertising which tells them there is a drug for every ill. This might induce people to use drugs which do them no good.

[Mr. Yewchuk.]

Miss Campbell: I would like to expand on the previous answer I gave to the hon. member. The study to which I referred examines the role of advertising and other factors in relation to the use of proprietary or patent medicines only.

Mr. Yewchuk: What about other drugs such as marijuana, and so on?

Miss Campbell: I think that is probably another area of discussion. I would like to clarify the answer that was given earlier by saying that the onus will be on the manufacturer to provide a safe and effective product. The required data must be generated by the manufacturer which would then be studied by the department and conditions attached to the product to the extent necessary before it could be put on the market.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary whether this study into the effects of advertising on the sale of proprietary drugs is a limited study, or whether it includes other products which are sold over drugstore counters, such as hair preparations to make you the loveliest person in town, body deodorants, oral preparations to give you the freshest mouth in town or pellets which will guarantee that he will kiss you again, and such other products as bathroom tissue which will give your prestige in our modern society. Are such products included in this study?

Miss Campbell: In answer to the hon. member's question, the study applies to over the counter drugs and proprietary medicines. It is certainly up to the individual to decide on hair sprays and similar products.

Mr. Yewchuk: I wonder whether the parliamentary secretary would care to indicate when it is expected the study will be completed, and whether a report will be made to parliament on it?

Miss Campbell: The minister has already made public the first phase of the study, and it should be well over a year before the follow-up phase of the study has been completed.

Mr. Yewchuk: Will it be tabled?

Miss Campbell: Eventually.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Am I correct in assuming that the reason the act will not come into force for over a year is to give the provinces time to make the necessary adjustments?

Miss Campbell: The hon. member is correct. The reason is also to allow manufacturers the necessary time to adjust to the changes.

Mr. Nielsen: And the territories.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): I must apologize to the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. LeBlanc). I indicated to him previously that he could make a motion from another place in the House. That is so in committee of the whole. However, with Mr. Speaker in the chair, he must be in his assigned place.

● (1450)

When shall the said bill be read the third time?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): By leave, now.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (for the Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

TERRITORIAL LANDS ACT

CORPORATIONS IN WHICH GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES PROHIBITED FROM ACQUIRING INTEREST

Hon. C. M. Drury (for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved that Bill S-20, to amend the Territorial Lands Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Nielsen: Surely we will have an explanation by the parliamentary secretary, Mr. Speaker?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, my colleague the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Campbell) has amply shown that example is the best form of demonstrating a point, and I am pleased to follow the hon. member in presenting a bill for the first time on behalf of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Buchanan).

I should like to explain briefly the purpose of Bill S-20, to amend the Territorial Lands Act. I should state at the outset that this amendment relates exclusively to one particular section of the act and does not alter the original purpose and intent of the legislation. It is intended to remove an unreasonably stringent requirement and the attendant excessive and arbitrary penalty which may be imposed on an employee of the Crown for non-compliance.

I refer to section 24 of the act which prohibits employees of the Government of Canada from holding any interest whatsoever, either direct or indirect, in territorial land except under the authority of an order of the governor in council. This restriction was present in the Dominion Lands Act, the predecessor of the current act, where it was intended to assure the integrity of transactions between employees of the then department of the interior and private industry. In 1923, the prohibition which covered mining rights as well as land interest was extended to apply to officials of all departments of the Government of Canada.

On repeal of the Dominion Lands Act and the coming into force of the Territorial Lands Act in 1950, the seriousness with which the government viewed its employees maintaining the confidentiality of information entrusted to them on mineral potential in northern Canada was expressed in section 24 which is under review. This section went further than the original in that it extended the original injunction to prohibit shareholding or any other pecuniary interest in any company or corporation which might have an interest in territorial lands.

Over the years, it has been the practice for Crown employees to request approval by order in council to acquire or lease territorial land for personal use as a cottage site. This form of direct interest in territorial lands can be readily controlled and regulated within the machinery established to administer the lands in question. Over the 24-year period between 1950 and 1973, inclusive, 632 such orders in council were made. On the other hand, there has not been a single instance of an employee requesting a similar order in council to purchase shares in a company or corporation having any manner of land interest in northern Canada. Short of voluntary or accidental disclosure of any such interest by the employee concerned, there is no practicable way of monitoring whether a Crown employee is in contravention of a shareholding restriction.

This leads to a further consideration which turns on the ability of a person who invests in a company to maintain the overview on its operations necessary to satisfy himself that that company has no interest, either direct or indirect, in territorial lands. Recent extensive exploration activity in the north has seen many multinational companies, insurance companies, mutual investment funds and other financial institutions directly or indirectly having acquired permits and leases on territorial lands. Rights and interests in these lands are often assigned and transferred between holding and operating companies without public knowledge or notice to shareholders. Moreover, only a very small minority of Crown employees are in a position to have access to privileged information from which they might benefit by investing in companies operating in the north. It is patently unfair to deny the majority from investment opportunities which would be made on the same basis of financial risk accepted by any member of the public.

With the promulgation of the conflict of interest guidelines, employees having any interests which could place them in a potential situation of conflict of interest are expected to make the appropriate disclosures. This eliminates the necessity for individual orders in council relating to shareholders—a requirement never practised and, in fact, administratively very difficult, if not impossible, to enforce—while at the same time ensuring the integrity of transactions between Crown employees and the corporate sector. These guidelines could be made to have the effect also of limiting the indiscriminate generality of coverage of the current section 24 of the Territorial Lands Act to the pertinent group of Crown employees who might stand to benefit from privileged information available to them by virtue of their position in government service.

The amendment before us is intended to accomplish this purpose. It will see retained the requirement to have individual acquisitions of land sanctioned by orders in council. It will make more realistic the application of prohibitions on Crown employees in respect of any interests in territorial lands. Finally, but perhaps most important, it will remove from employees the threat of summary dismissal for an innocent contravention of an excessively restrictive and impractical requirement.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I cannot quite bring myself to refer to the parliamentary secretary as the hon. woman, so I shall have to continue my practice of referring to such persons as "the hon. lady."

Mrs. Campagnolo: How about the hon. member?

Mr. Nielsen: The explanation given by the hon. lady horrifies me in my belief that the minister is unaware of the precise nature of what is being attempted here. It is my understanding that the minister holds the belief that the restrictions prohibiting government employees from acquiring such interests as share interests in companies holding lands, or an interest in lands in the north, should be eased. This is not the case at all. The change is accomplishing the easing of any penalties associated with employees who contravene the prohibition set forth in the act, and that is all it does. It seems to me that it is an unduly harsh restriction which is placed on government employees.

I can understand, for instance, a mining recorder being prohibited from acquiring an interest in mineral claims which are contiguous to an area under active exploration. I can understand a mining recorder being prohibited from acquiring shares in a company which is active in the exploration field and which has produced results which are privy to that government employee and not to the general public. These conflicts are readily understandable, but for the life of me I cannot understand why we must impose a prohibition on a government worker in the department of travel and publicity to prevent him from acquiring shares in a mining corporation. Someone in travel and publicity is not likely to know any more about that than a member of the general public. The broadening of the sections by the bill before us now enlarges the prohibition to prevent any such employee from acquiring any interest in his own name, or through any other person, in any corporation that purchases, or acquires, or holds such lands. It seems to me this places the government employee in the position of a second class citizen and the section should not be extended so broadly.

In her comments on the bill the parliamentary secretary to the minister assured us that the bill does not alter the original intent or purpose of the legislation as it now stands in the Territorial Lands Act. I suggest to her that this simply is not true. It does alter the intent and the purpose of the section because there is no prohibition in the section as it now stands which would prevent a government employee from acquiring an interest, by way of shares, in a corporation that purchases, acquires, or holds lands or any interest therein. It does indeed alter the intent of the section to that extent.

[Mrs. Campagnolo.]

The hon. parliamentary secretary touched on what is a sore point in the Yukon, and I am sure in the Northwest Territories as well, when she said that the acquisition of land by government employees is readily controlled by the administrative structures in place now. I am sure she is completely unaware of the impossibility—I was going to say "next to impossibility" but I think I can use the term absolute impossibility—of the ordinary citizen acquiring lands in the north at all. For years it has been difficult to do so.

A few years back when I wanted to buy a piece of land I had to have a reference from this House before the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections because of some over-bearing bureaucratic decision that by buying a piece of land from the federal Crown I was somehow interested in a contract with the Crown. That was very quickly cleared away, but that is the kind of approach that the bureaucrats have in the administration of Crown lands in the north which come under the jurisdiction of this act. They feel that they own the land and that in no way is the ordinary citizen going to get a look in, so to speak.

It is simply impossible for a person to acquire any lands in the Yukon and I can cite example after example after example. A press release recently issued by the minister said that all applications for agricultural lands are now cancelled and there will be no more disposition of agricultural lands in either of the two northern territories for two to three years. That is a great agricultural policy, Mr. Speaker.

The bureaucratic mind, 4,000 miles from the site, concluded that there is no possibility of a viable agricultural industry in the north and that therefore no lands will be allotted for that purpose. Recent press reports in Yellowknife told of a family who had gone to live in the Northwest Territories from Quebec and were running cattle on slightly over 40 acres of land. Then the minister's press release was issued, the lease was cancelled and the family has to get off the land—right now. I am sure my colleague from the Northwest Territories will know the case I refer to, and there are even sharper injustices that I could cite all afternoon.

People who have been in possession of agricultural leases in the Yukon for well over a quarter of a century have found that the leases have been cancelled and there is no opportunity to have a new application considered. I know of one person, born and raised in the Yukon, whose grandfather was a member of the Northwest Mounted Police there. This man had an application for agricultural acreage approved by the branch, approved by the commissioner on behalf of the minister, and now has been told that he must get off the land, and further, that if he does not move his ten head of registered Appaloosa horses off the land they will be confiscated because they are trespassing. He was told that he should go back to Alberta where he came from and homestead there. That is the attitude of this most far seeing, thoughtful and innovative government in its agricultural land policy in the Yukon Territory.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): That is the just society.

Mr. Nielsen: I believe the hon. parliamentary secretary when she says that ordinary administrative structures control the acquisition of land by government employees in the north. You had better believe it. And they apply not only to government employees but to any other citizen in the north who wants to pursue agriculture as a way of life.

I can understand a certain amount of hesitation on the part of government structures which have been erected to protect all of us with respect to the disposition of our resources in the light of possible speculation. But where you have an individual who wants to invest several thousands of dollars in the bona fide acquisition of a piece of land, he should be allowed to purchase the land and develop it without direction from the government.

A few moments ago I referred to a constituent who was having difficulty in obtaining land for agricultural development. He went to the trouble of sending soil samples to Beaver Lodge, the federal government experimental farm in the Yukon, in order to have them analysed to prove that something could be grown. He received a favourable report and took it to the federal government officer in Whitehorse who is in charge of lands. It was placed on file there but he was told, "I am sorry, we do not accept soil analyses from our experimental farm. We go to the province of Alberta for them."

So he sent a sample out to the federal department of agriculture office in Alberta, and took that result in to the office in Whitehorse. He had been told that without soil samples he would have no hope of getting the land. He now had two favourable reports but was told, "I am sorry, you cannot get the land until you get your stock." Then he spent some $10,000—farmers know more about these things—on what I am told was registered, pure bred Andalusian stock.

He went back to the authorities and said, "I have my soil samples and I have my stock. It cost me $10,000—true, I had to sell my home to get it, but here it is. May I now have the land?" What do you suppose the reply was? He was told, "Well, we would love to give you land but, we are sorry, the minister last February announced that all applications for agricutural pursuits in the Yukon have been cancelled. We are sorry that you incurred these expenses in the past, but you will not be able to get the land."

That is just one small example of circumstances in the Yukon which have given rise to complaints like the one raised by my constituent. People up there are saying there will be violence in the Yukon before lands are handed back to the government. They have said, through organizations set up to convince others that agriculture is possible in the Yukon, that they will burn their barns and buildings before giving their land back to the government. I hope that, when they consider this legislation, departmental officials will take my remarks into consideration.

The parliamentary secretary made much of the fact that all sorts of multinational companies now are getting lands in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. That may be so, but the ordinary Canadian, the northerner who lives there, is not accorded the same kinds of favours which the government appears to be giving to multinational corporations acquiring lands in the north.

Let me comment on the parliamentary secretary's statement to the effect that employees are expected to make appropriate disclosure. I have some information for her. I wonder if she knows that government employees in the north have been told they must make full disclosure of land holdings and interests in lands which they hold, and of all other assets and holdings, on pain of dismissal if they refuse. That general directive has been given to federal government employees in the Yukon, and I have no reason to suspect that it does not apply to government employees in the Northwest Territories. They must list all assets; if they do not, they are told they are dismissed.

That was the sort of attitude adopted by Commissioner Hodgson, presumably with the acquiescence, if not with the instruction, of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Buchanan). The commissioner told employees in the service of the territorial government of the Northwest Territories that, when Mr. Justice Berger was holding commission hearings in Inuvik, they were not to talk, not to give evidence before the commission. That shows the government's attitude and how it treats its employees. It is no doggone wonder we face labour problems in the civil service of the country.

Mr. Dinsdale: The minister instructs the commissioner.

Mr. Nielsen: Everything the commissioner does is either with the acquiescence of the minister or by his direct instruction. How high handed can the government be? Imagine telling a government employee that his ordinary freedom of speech is abridged by virtue of his employment!

I say this bill goes too far. It puts the government employee in the position of a second-class Canadian citizen. Certainly safeguards are required to prevent government employees, who acquire information by virtue of their employment, from making an unjust and dishonest profit. But the bill in its present form constitutes an umbrella-type of prohibition. No government employee can acquire any interest whatsoever in any corporation or venture in the north if, in acquiring that interest, he will acquire lands or an interest in lands. This, to my way of thinking, is too broad a prohibition and ought to be ameliorated. I am willing to see the bill referred to committee after second reading, in the hope that the government will bring forward appropriate amendments.

While I am speaking of amendments which I anticipate the government might introduce, may I ask for the relevant section to be simplified. The language at present is much too complex. I ask for another section couched in simpler language to be introduced, a section containing merely the elements which it is desirable to prohibit, and no more. It ought to say merely that a government employee should not be permitted to acquire an interest in lands when, because he has come into possession or may come into possession of knowledge by virtue of his employment, the information so obtained may enable him to make an undue or dishonest profit.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, listening a while ago to the parliamentary secretary while glancing through the bill, I was convinced that it exclusively concerned government employees and officials in the Northwest Territories. I thought that if the bill merely concerned public servants and officials in the Northwest Territories, it had a very limited scope. The bill merely provides that the employees cannot become shareholders of a company dealing for example with read estate and mines to purchase such real estate.

For my part, Mr. Speaker, I was thinking about Quebec. I will say a word in a while about the comments of the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). If the bill is not altered as far as public servants are concerned—and when I refer to civil servants I do not include owners and residents—I think that it should also prevent them from belonging to a company trading in the Northwest Territories.

Hon. members probably heard of the current investigation in northern Quebec, the investigation by the Quebec government. I suggest this will not get very far, because it is a question of defrauders investigating other defrauders in the same party. All this is caused by conflicts of interest at the public service level. Some public servants get rich at the expense of the provincial or federal governments. And everything is so well schemed that they have their spokesmen here in Ottawa, in Quebec, in our area. There is no way this could be undone. Everything is schemed, as the saying goes. Money goes into pockets all year long. People believe moneys voted go to Indians, Eskimos, Inuits. But the main part is pocketed by public servants.

An hon. Member: What!

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Somebody said: What! Why should he show surprise? He knows full well.

This is why I say that the first part of the bill does not go far enough. It should include provisions for public servants who hold equity shares in marketing companies, snowscooter companies, arms companies. They triple their salaries with what they get from their involvement with those companies.

The bill is restricted to Yukon public servants. The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), who spoke this afternoon, advised us of a good many things. I did not know people in Yukon could not own their own tract of land. This is fantastic. It is just as amazing as what happened in our area during land reform, where a third of farmlands were eliminated by people who did not even know what farmland is, people who said those lands were not good farmland. Second generation farms were said to be uncultivable.

I feel the problem in Yukon is much more serious than commonly believed and this is why I say the hon. member for Yukon is right when he talks about Yukon owners, people living in the Yukon, because, here, I would like to make a distinction among public servants: In the Yukon, some public servants come from the area and some do not. It is obvious that those who do not should not be entitled to buy shares in these companies or to take part in transactions. But it is another matter when we are talking about a Yukon resident, Mr. Speaker. I believe that those who live in the Yukon should be entitled to ownership just like people in other parts of Canada.

I am not saying that they should take control of the mines, for instance, and be the main shareholders, but I believe that they should have certain rights. And I believe that the act is too restrictive because it considers on an equal basis all the civil servants who live in the Yukon, those who live here in Ottawa, and then went to the Yukon or to another province in the name of the government to earn their living. Mr. Speaker, I am simply saying that this bill will be referred to the standing committee of this House, but that it is essential to amend it. It is not at all advantageous for the Yukon and does not protect the public servants, wherever they may be.

[English]

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, it is already obvious from the discussion that is taking place here today that there are a lot of anomalies in land use north of the sixtieth parallel.

Remarkably enough, even though the theme of developing Canada's last frontier, and the theme of northern development seem to be espoused by all Canadians today, the government still has the viewpoint that with respect to land use it must keep a strong, monopolistic control over the policy to the ridiculous extent that was outlined by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) with respect to total prohibition of agricultural development in both the Yukon and the Northwest Territories.

I remember that when I was the minister of the department, to make things a little more human and humane in interdepartmental communications, of which the flow never ceased, we used to have a caption at the top of the memorandum that went something like this, "Woe unto them who sit on their frozen assets." This seems to be the policy that is being re-endorsed by the bill before us this afternoon. It does not do anything to resolve the restricted land use problems. It certainly does not do anything to deal with the bureaucratic bungling that has been typical of land use pronouncements since Canada finally became interested in the development of its great northern heritage.

When the Department of Northern Affairs was first set up, the late Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent said that Canada had been exercising for far too long its responsibilities for development of its northern frontier in a state of absentmindedness. I am sure that is the only description that can be used in reviewing Bill S-20 that is before us this afternoon.

I wish to expand on some of the points made by the hon. member for Yukon with respect to the unbelievably bureaucratic approach to agricultural development in northern Canada. There is absolutely no policy on farming north of the sixtieth parallel. What has happened as a result of the decree that came from Caesar Augustus on January 10 last to the effect that there was to be a total suspension of the disposition of federal Crown land for agricultural use in both the Yukon and Northwest Territories? I think it has brought the foolishness of the situation into clear perspective.

Mr. Nielsen: And the cancellation of existing land leases.

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes. I will deal with that in a moment. The decree that came from the minister on January 10 was for prohibition of any further alienation. It also included the cancellation of existing leaseholds. The problem has been brought into focus by the Northwest Territories Farmers' Association. It is true that there is sufficient interest in farming in the Northwest Territories to have an association.

Mr. Nielsen: And in the Yukon.

Mr. Dinsdale: I agree with the hon. member for Yukon that this is developing on parallel lines in both the territories. As a result of the negative policy that was forthcoming, the Northwest Territories Farmers' Association gathered together to discuss the dilemma. They were particularly concerned about the Benoit family who had moved into the area near Fort Providence and were operating at the Horn River in the Northwest Territories. They had invested in their farm four years of their time and all their savings. The project had received encouragement from the government of the Northwest Territories. Indeed, it was the government of the Northwest Territories that encouraged the Benoits and other enterprising Canadian citizens like them to venture into the northern part of Canada and pioneer in establishing a viable agricultural industry.

It was a tip-off from a member of the territorial government that first brought this problem to my attention. I have been able to research the matter further in some of the colourful newspapers that are published in the Northwest Territories. I shall be dealing later with some of the interesting comments in the newspaper published at Fort Smith under the name The Pilot.

I should like to refer to another strange anomaly to be found within the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Under the decree to which I have referred, the department ordered the Benoits off the land within 90 days—this, Madam Speaker, notwithstanding the fact that they had invested considerable sums of money, that they had had the encouragement and support of the territorial government of the Northwest Territories, and that in attempting to assist this family in their worthwhile efforts to establish a herd of cattle, the government of the Northwest Territories had been supplying them with feed. Yet in the face of these concrete realities we have a decree suspending this activity, that forces them off the land, and which says they have to wait two or three years until an agricultural policy can be formulated.

Mr. Nielsen: They were told to get off.

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes, I said they were ordered off the land. No decision apparently can be made for a period of two or three years. This must be bureaucratic bungling gone mad.

Mr. Nielsen: It is not bungling; it is intentional policy.

Mr. Dinsdale: Well, whatever it is, I trust that the parliamentary secretary will convey the message to his minister, who I am sorry is not here today to hear some of these comments. He is the kind of man who, if he were aware of the implications in terms of human privation, would not have anything to do with policy enunciations of this kind. I wonder whether there was any consultation with the Department of Agriculture. When you are dealing with agricultural policy in a part of Canada one would think the Department of Agriculture would be consulted.

Mr. Nielsen: That would make things worse.

Mr. Dinsdale: I do not think it could be any worse, and I hope it would be better. I also wonder what has happened to the excellent experiment that had been going on for a period of 20 years at Fort Simpson. I read with some degree of concern that this experimental station, which I had the opportunity to view when I was minister, had been phased out, and at the time it seemed to me that this was a retrograde step. However, I was not at all aware that the situation had deteriorated to the level indicated by the problem that was outlined here today.

Let me deal with the matter in terms of the colourful writing that comes out of the Northwest Territories and Yukon by the people who are actually grappling with the real problems of human and resource development north of 60. In its issue for February 20, 1975, The Pilot carries this headline: "There's an awful smell of bull manure and it's not from the farmers' feet." The article goes on to report the meeting of the Northwest Territories Farmers' Association which tried to get some justice and to find a sensible solution to the problems facing the farmers in the Northwest Territories. More to the point, Madam Speaker, in the editorial column the subject is dealt with under the heading "Is democracy dead in NWT?" The editorial stated:

> The plight of the farmer in the Northwest Territories, as reported on page 1, only goes on to prove even more conclusively the need for immediate provincial status for the north.
> The fact that one department of government can control everything in the north from development of land to the development of non-renewable resources, almost without reference to other government departments, and most certainly without reference to the people who are most directly involved—us—is nothing less than a complete and utter waiving of our rights as Canadian citizens.

If I may interpolate, how many times have we heard that complaint as we have travelled, for example, into the north as representatives of the Indian affairs committee? Then further along in the editorial:

> Again it is a case of the civil servant sitting behind his Ottawa desk, who has probably never been further north than his television set, dictating what we can and cannot do north of the 60th parallel.
> The whole of Canada was built by people with a little imagination, a little money and a hellofa lot of hard work—a term which most of the Ottawa oafs think means bending paper clips into grotesque shapes. The west would still be buffalo range if there were not a few adventurous souls willing to "take a chance" on making a living outside the boundaries of civilization at that time. Today, the north is no different. It is still going to take people with a little imagination—

They mean people like the Benoits, who are being persecuted because of their initiative.

> —a little money and a hellofa lot of hard work to make a viable living in the north if they want to retain any semblance of independence.

Prairie Farm Assistance Act

At the recent "Focus North Conference" in Edmonton, the delegates sent a strongly worded telegram to Judd Buchanan, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in support of territorial farmers.

Perhaps Mr. Buchanan would like to live up here and pay $1.17 for a dozen eggs, or $2 for a loaf of bread as is common in many northern communities. If he had to survive in the north as an independent businessman he would soon find out that there is precious little heat or food in the bureaucratic bullshit that his department continuously serves the north.

I trust that having referred this bill to the committee on Indian affairs we might be able to bring in some amendments and also get some answers regarding the negative attitude toward agricultural policy, so as at long last to make it possible for any Canadian to live in the parts of Canada north of 60 with the same opportunities, rights and privileges as Canadians who live in other parts of Canada.

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Madam Speaker, I will be very brief. This is an important bill to amend the Territorial Lands Act. I think it is imperative that people from the north be given the opportunity to express their views on it. It is an extremely important measure in view of the many happenings that have taken place in the north in regard to land claims of native organizations and in view of the fact that a large number of civils servants, both federal and territorial, are presently in the north. I think it is important that the bill move on to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development and that that committee ensure that there be some representation from the north, particularly from the councils of both territories. That is all I have to say at this time.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE ACT

MEASURE TO REPEAL ACT

Hon. André Ouellet (for the Minister of Agriculture) moved that Bill C-30, to repeal the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Madam Speaker, ordinarily the business of repealing an act that has been on the statute books of Canada for nearly 40 years would be a regular matter of housecleaning or housekeeping, but this particular act has some things which I think will cause us to ask that this bill be delayed. Let me make my reasons clear.

In all fairness I think I should say that this act was placed on the statute books as a result of the efforts of the Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner before the war, and many people look on it as his monument. When a man has moved on he likes to look back at something he has done as his own. I should think that the Right Hon. Mr. Gardiner, who sat for 20 years on the government side of this House and one year in the opposition, had the right to consider the PFAA as a very worthwhile piece of legislation. We are now meeting here some years later to dismantle this monument to that long time minister of agriculture.

The act itself seems irrelevant today because the maximum payment under the act was $800. The act was the result of 10 years of depression and drought on the prairies, and its purpose was to give farm families enough money in case of a crop failure to pay their taxes, to buy their groceries for the winter, and have enough to seed their crop the following year. It should be said loudly and clearly that this act was a lifesaver for the many families that survived the 10 worst years in the history of agriculture in western Canada.

In addition the act gave those of us who were interested in policy precise crop figures for every quarter section in the west, and on the basis of that information we were able to do many things. We were able eventually to set up crop insurance legislation and to decide which areas would be good for community pastures and which would be good for other purposes. It was one of the first steps in a sort of land use policy which has slowly taken hold among governments in the western world. The PFAA should be given the credit it deserves.

It is true that the machinery of the act was awkward in the beginning and it was necessary to reform it. To get crop insurance in the event of a crop failure you had to be farming within a block of land where the crop yield was below a certain number of bushels. These blocks were too large in many cases and there could be several families with terrible crops, no income, and facing a difficult winter because the average for their block was higher than the minimum allowed under the act.

In this reform to the legislation we made these blocks smaller and we changed their size to allow for different types of land with different types of crops because of different weather, and I think that in the last years of its operation it was working reasonably well.

There are other things I wish to say about this act. It required inspectors to visit each farm where the crops had failed. Unfortunately for the history of Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba, some of the inspectors, if not all of them, began to relate their duties in inspecting crops and the yield to the political persuasions of the farmers involved. This became what the political scientists describe today as "the Gardiner machine". This political machine set up on the prairies matched in efficiency, interest, and detail Tammany Hall of New York City, which is over 100 years old.

It fell to the lot of the Diefenbaker administration to clean up this legislation, and this was done without the dismissal of a single inspector, supervisor or senior employee under that legislation. All we did was ask them as fieldmen to refrain from political activity at the time of an election. In fact we went further and instructed the supervisors to hire the best men in each district, regardless of political persuasion, and we set an example, which I think will be admitted freely by the farmers in the west was good, by trying to pick reeves or councillors, men who had been elected in local areas and who were highly regarded for their integrity and ability. As a result, the farmer whose farm was being inspected would know he had a fair inspector and did not have to pass the test of belonging to or working for the Liberal party. So the PFAA, administered fairly, became a very useful act.

I mention these things because no party suffered greater complaints than did we at the time. It was only natural and human that after 22 years with one administration all the available jobs went to supporters of that one party, and the people felt that when a different party formed the government it should take over this operation. We were criticized by members of our own party for following this practice of not dismissing those who had been appointed by the previous administration, and for going out of our way to see that the very best men of all parties were selected to be field inspectors.

One of the men who was appointed to head up the PFAA as a director was Mr. Howard Riddell, known over the province for his honesty and integrity as municipal secretary. His instructions by the minister involved only one thing, and that was to run the PFAA honestly and well.

I remember a quarrel that developed in this House in 1962 over the appointment of an individual to investigate charges that certain farmers were abusing the PFAA. The matter was sent to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. At that time I was the minister. I appeared before that committee, threw away all my rights as a minister, and said that my records and communications between myself and the PFAA were available for the examination of the committee. There was no hiding of documents.

What I am saying is contained in the records of that standing committee. When members of parliament from all parties on the committee heard the evidence and saw the record, they immediately dismissed the charges. One member was not satisfied. I hear an objection. This was in the period of 1964 when the charges finally came up in the House. There was no Liberal majority of members on that committee. It was a minority parliament. Members from all parties agreed that the PFAA had been run well. There was one exception. One member said that politicians were scratching each other's backs and suggested that the charges should be brought before a court. They were. Once again, this time as the ex-minister, I threw all my records and personal communications into the hands of the courts. All the officials gave evidence.

The judge in his ruling threw out the charges on the basis that there was no evidence of malfeasance and that, on the contrary, all the evidence was clear that the instructions always had been that this act was to be administered honestly and fairly. That particular member of parliament sat on this side of the House. I refer to the member who made the request that the matter be taken before a judge. He received his pay-off by being called to the cabinet on the other side of the House where he became Minister of Agriculture. When the people caught up with him in 1972 he went back to the farm where he is today. I give this history because this particular bill to repeal this legislation is a matter of some interest to many farmers.

We now face a situation in the west where the political machine that we hoped we had destroyed in the years between 1957 and 1963 is being built up again. This time, however, there are new ministers. This situation started when the government decided to believe, in 1969 and 1970, that the information it was receiving from the experts, Statistics Canada and Statistics Washington, showing that there was too much grain. The government decided to take the farmers out of production. It said to them that if they did not go out of production they would lose their right to sell wheat, but that if they did as they were told and summerfallowed they would be paid $6 an acre, or if their land was put into grass they would be given so much per acre.

One can see the possibilities for corruption creeping up again. The power of this parliament was being used to take away the right of a man to sell his grain unless he did what he was told. If he did what he was told then he might be paid these sums of money. Once you start a system of telling farmers what they have to do, you must have a force of field inspectors to see how much land is in grass and how much is in summerfallow. Planes flew over the prairies photographing every square inch with cameras which could even see a golf ball.

After time had passed and all the money had been paid out for the grass program and the summerfallow program, it was discovered that there were overpayments. The government announced that it would take back the money. So, once again an army of inspectors had to be organized to go out and collect the overpayments that were made to the farmers. To add to the confusion of having all these inspectors going out, elections were being fought and funny instructions were given to inspectors. They were told that if an argument developed they were to juggle the figures for the benefit of the farmer. This type of thing does not pass unnoticed in western Canada.

On December 9 last year I asked a question of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). I asked it with the knowledge of the quick action the government took in responding to a request for an inquiry in the province of Quebec when trouble developed there. I asked:

> Would the minister take personal note of the disturbing events in the administration of Prairie Farm Assistance Act in the west? I am referring specifically to unauthorized payments for field men during the election period, information about which the hon. member for Red Deer has in his possession. In view of these disturbing developments, would the minister consider asking Mr. Howard Riddell, who was for 14 years the head of PFAA and who is now working for the Department of Municipal Affairs in Saskatchewan and who has the confidence of the farmers, and who is well known for his honesty and integrity, to come back and check out this very smelly situation?

I made no charges and named no names. I simply asked the Minister of Agriculture last December to check out this smelly situation. The minister replied:

> I do not know what the situation is, but I will certainly check on it and ascertain what the facts are.

Then I went on and suggested that he might consider asking Mr. Williams, the then Deputy Minister of Agriculture in Ottawa, to do the checking. I suggested that he let someone who is impartial, and known for his honesty and integrity, check on these facts. Later on in the week the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) asked the minister about the possibility of asking the RCMP fraud squad to take this matter under investigation.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. It being four o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on the order paper, namely, public bills, notices of motions, and private bills.

Mr. Reid: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. I believe you will find there is agreement to take up Bill C-221 standing in the name of the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Reynolds).

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, before we do that I might mention that a bill standing in my name is first up today. I would be prepared to move the adjournment of the debate on Bill C-234 standing in my name on the order paper if we could have unanimous consent for Bill C-3 to come before the House now so that we might get it into committee.

● (1600)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I admire the hon. member's persistence, but that unanimous consent is not forthcoming.

NATIONAL YOUTH APPRECIATION WEEK

MEASURE TO PROMOTE ENCOURAGEMENT OF YOUNG PEOPLE'S ACCOMPLISHMENTS

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta) moved that Bill C-221, respecting National Youth Appreciation Week, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

He said: Madam Speaker, I have spoken to the House leaders of the various parties and I believe there is agreement to my withdrawing Bill C-221 respecting National Youth Appreciation Week. I believe I also have agreement to put the following motion:

That this House request the government to give consideration to continuing their practice of designating one week a year as National Youth Appreciation Week.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is there unanimous agreement to Bill C-221 being withdrawn?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I rise this time to say there is consent.

Order discharged and bill withdrawn.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is there unanimous consent for the hon. member's motion to be put?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): It is so moved.

[Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain).]

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane): Madam Speaker, I thought perhaps the mover of the motion would introduce it with a few words, but since he has not done so I should like to address myself to the matter for a few minutes.

I commend the admirable sentiments of the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Reynolds) in presenting this motion. In calling for a national youth appreciation week the hon. member is expressing his respect and concern for this country's youth which, I am sure, all hon. members share. I am glad that he has chosen to change his bill to a motion because otherwise I would perhaps have had to question the usefulness of such proposed legislation. When a subject becomes law, it is a serious matter that goes onto the statutes of our country, and this would open the door to all kinds of groups wishing to have a law passed in order to back their favourite cause, whether it be a week for senior citizens, a week for young farmers, or a week for another group in our society.

It is of course impossible to argue against the sentiments that underlie this motion. However, I would like to see a little more detail, something more concrete, and a better explanation of what lies behind the motion. What effect would this motion have on the different segments of our youth? For example, what specifically will a child of 12 or a senior high school student derive from this motion? I believe that there is always the danger of negativism.

Not very long ago students on a great many campuses, in this country and elsewhere, were exceedingly vocal in their criticism of the establishment's so-called mindless rhetoric. The criticisms may be less vocal now but I believe they persist, and with some reason. I would not like to see this kind of idea, which we all support, being placed in the category of what is sometimes called mindless rhetoric. It has become platitudinous to associate youth with cynicism, but platitudes are often platitudes simply because they are true.

Surely we must take care not to excite youthful cynicism by needlessly indulging in empty rhetoric. I am afraid there is always this danger when we provoke motherhood type resolutions in the House. Therefore, I would like to see something more specific suggested in this respect. The sentiment, of course, as I said before, is shared by all members of the House, and is certainly shared by the government. Indeed, it is the underlying motivation of several of the government's programs that are oriented toward the youth of Canada. So perhaps, rather than a week being dedicated to our youth, in practice perhaps all the year round is so dedicated so far as many of us are concerned.

This year the government's Summer '75 program involves 12 government departments, with an expenditure of over $67 million. The summer program is expected to provide direct and indirect employment and activities for almost half a million students. This certainly shows the feelings that the government has in trying to encourage our young people and to show our appreciation of them.

The Department of the Solicitor General will employ a number of students in connection with its participation at the 5th U.N. Congress on the Prevention of Crime and Treatment of Offenders. This will take place in Canada later this year. Other federal departments are involved in providing student employment and activities for the coming year.

We are all familiar, of course, with the OFY program which started a few years ago and went through many birth pangs. Many people criticized it when it first began, myself included, but it is something that has had many of the wrinkles ironed out of it, and it has given an opportunity to many young people to develop their own kinds of projects. It has allowed them to express themselves. I think this in itself is a great show of appreciation on the part of the government for our young people. Of course, Opportunities for the Youth is again the major component of the government's summer program this year. The OFY program has an estimated budget of $27.5 million, and it should provide some employment and useful activity for about 20,000 of our young people.

The Department of the Secretary of State is also sponsoring other summer programs this year. The student community services program is designed to support and encourage the activities of voluntary organizations serving the community by enabling these organizations to employ young people. That program has a budget of $5.7 million and will employ over 2,000 students. It will also involve several thousand volunteers. The department is also responsible for organizing a youth hostel program and a travel and exchange program. This travel and exchange program, in my view, is something that should be expanded much more. I feel that it is one of the greatest boons to Canadian unity. It permits the young people to travel about in our country, to get to know and understand people from other parts of Canada, and certainly understanding is what is needed to foster national unity.

LIP, although it is not directed primarily at young people, is a significant improvement over traditional winter works programs, and it is the kind of innovative community-oriented concept that would have been a welcome suggestion had it come from any party. I take pride in the fact that it has come from the government side of the House. Of course it has received much support from all sides of the House.

Apart from these important programs for summer employment I believe there exists a need and an opportunity for greater direct involvement of federal departments and agencies in the lives of young people, especially in the areas of education and the arts.

In light of the rather depressing results of recent surveys undertaken by the Committee for an Independent Canada with regard to students' awareness of their country, I believe that the government should give consideration to expanding the programs of the various cultural agencies as they affect young people. The very successful museumobile is a concept which deserves to be explored and expanded more fully.

The principles of democracy and decentralization which are the professed aims of government policy in the areas of museums, the performing arts and visual arts, are yet to be adequately acted upon, Madam Speaker. The need for greater activity in this area is acute, especially as it affects the lives of our children. We have a responsibility to promote participation among our youth in the affairs and activities of the community which surrounds and often dwarfs them. Their considerable energy and imagination needs to be harnessed, for their sake and for ours, and put to good use. We need, further, to encourage that element of our youth that at present is not organized in the way youth groups are. There is a crying need to respond in very concrete and realistic ways to that wasted youthful energy which devotes itself to outward destructive, and ultimately self-destructive, pursuits. The euphemism we often use is delinquent, but they are our children, and they are troubled. We have an important responsibility to them.

There exists in the east end of Montreal a huge project taking shape, a grand sporting complex intended to accommodate the Olympics. It is ironic that it should be located in that particular part of Montreal where children play in the streets. It would be a travesty if those magnificent facilities were to lay dormant after the Olympic flame is extinguished, and that is the fear of many people in this country. They say that in Munich the facilities which were made available for the Olympics there have not been used nearly to capacity, and I hope that this will not be the case in Canada.

I do not know if this is the proper time to mention it, but since we are talking about appreciation of our youth, and since we are talking about sports and other things which are good for our youth—because we know the old saying, which is perhaps a cliché, that a healthy mind exists only in a healthy body—we should be concerned about the future use of the Olympic area in Montreal, and I would suggest that perhaps it could become an ongoing national sporting centre for our young people from all over Canada and kept in good use for the benefit of our young people.

In closing I simply want to repeat that I admire the sentiments being brought forth in this motion. I simply wanted to put a few words on the record in order to show my support for that kind of sentiment, and also to underline the fact that we must be more specific when we suggest this kind of thing, whether it be for young people or for other elements of our society.

Mr. Reynolds: Madam Speaker, I had not intended to say very much because I think I spoke about this motion in the last parliament. I have certainly done much work on it. I think most hon. members have received letters from Optimist International, and I want to make sure that all hon. members realize that great job Optimist International did for the members of this House when we played the members of the press gallery at our annual hockey game. They are the ones who sponsored it and treated us very well and did an excellent job, and we would like to thank them for that assistance.

An hon. Member: Who won?

Mr. Reynolds: Of course the members of parliament beat the press gallery, and I think we are all in better shape.

I would like to read one thing into the record. The Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) has organized national youth appreciation week every year, and he puts out a very nice press release, as does the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I think many members of parliament participate. I know that in my riding I present trophies to boys and girls who are recognized for their achievements within the community.

Of all the letters I have read I thought the letter from our Governor General was very apropos to read into the record, especially at a time when it is to be hoped, this motion will pass. It reads as follows:

GOVERNMENT HOUSE
OTTAWA

It gives me great pleasure to join hands with the members of Optimist International to pay tribute to the Canadian youth during this Youth Appreciation Week.

In view of the growing complexities of the problems that assail us, it is encouraging to see more and more young people involving themselves in community activities, thereby sharing heavy responsibilities in many fields. Moreover, it is only by your skills and initiative that you can attain your rightful place, that of co-builders of a new society.

In the mid seventies we are faced with the uncertainties of a new era brought about by many recent changes in our social structure. Our hope for the future is that the young people of today will involve themselves in the search for the answer to our problems.

Every year in November, the Youth Appreciation Week offers us an excellent opportunity to observe and appreciate those young Canadians who have accepted the challenge of a new Canada.

I offer my warmest congratulations to all those whose merits will duly be recognized this week.

Jules Léger

I think that letter says it better than anything anyone can say in this House. I will take my seat and hope that the House will let this motion pass.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, in just a very few words I should like to commend the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Reynolds) for bringing this matter before the House at this time. I am also pleased that he has withdrawn his bill and given us a resolution instead. I say that, if for no other reason than because the resolution has a chance of being passed, and I think it is better for the House to say yes this afternoon than for it just to talk a matter out and leave it at that.

I want also to underline the view expressed by the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart) when he said that it is important that we do more than indulge in rhetoric. If we want to show appreciation of the youth of Canada we must be very specific. I will put it in as tight a nutshell as I can. I believe that if we want to show appreciation of our youth we must see to it that the Canada in which they are living and the Canada of the future will be one in which there is full employment, along with equal educational and cultural opportunities for all. It must be a place in which the housing needs of young people and their families, now and in the decades to come, are met. It must be a country in which there is full and complete health care and security down the road. It must also be a country and a world in which the air and the water are clean and where there is a secure peace. These are the kinds of things we ought to work very hard for if we really want to show appreciation of our Canadian youth.

Mr. Roger Young (Niagara Falls): Madam Speaker, my remarks will be brief. As a young man who, some years ago in my early teens, happened to play organized hockey in leagues and clubs supported and sponsored by Optimist International, and also as one who, from this side of the House, was very fortunate and enjoyed participating in the game between the members of parliament and the press corps, I want on behalf of my colleagues on this side of the House who participated in that game to second the remarks of the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond Delta (Mr. Reynolds) in our gratitude to the Optimist club for its sponsorship and for inviting us to participate. It was with a great deal of pleasure that each of us received from that club a very beautiful scroll and the presentation of a medallion. Certainly my gratitude is very deep.

I think it may be trite to say that the disappointing or sad things that a few of our young people get involved in sometimes receive a great deal of attention in the press, and it may also be trite to say that more good publicity on their behalf is needed and deserved. While these things might be trite to say, I do not think the truth of any of them is diminished in any way. With these few remarks I add my support for the hon. member's motion.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Madam Speaker, I want to congratulate the mover and tell him that we fully support his motion. I think Canadian youth well deserves to have its own week, and the government must take concrete action to show the interest attached to sports since youth sport is somehow the preparation of the future, the preparation of our athletes.

We are always proud to see a Canadian team able to face other competitors in true sportsmanship. I do not want to delay at all the passage of this motion, and I simply want to say that we are very proud that it was introduced before the House. We support it.

[English]

Mr. Gus MacFarlane (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I am extremely pleased to associate myself with the remarks of the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Reynolds) and other hon. members, particularly the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). It is good to see that he has reached his second childhood and is with us once more.

I think that I may be more appreciative of this becoming a motion rather than a bill than some hon. members. A bill is something like building for the future, and the young people today do not think that way. Some of them are saying, "I have seen the future and it will not work". That is not a bad thought because it means they are going to do something here and now about the future. They are not going to have five, ten or twenty year plans, but are setting about changing their world now and in a very successful way.

We should not forget, Madam Speaker, that boys and girls are just men and women in the cocoon. Any of us here may one day face one of them as a banker and try to borrow money from that banker, or may face one of them as a lawyer. One of the girls may be the person who comes into the room to put a large white funnel over my head, or indeed she may even be the surgeon. We have to face the fact that they are the future.

I like the idea of saying each year that we recognize the youth of the country—because each year it is a different youth. Youth passes very quickly and they should not be classified as one group. As the poet, John Oxenham, said:

For every man there openeth a way
A high way and a low
And every man decideth
The way his soul shall go
Some souls choose the high way
And some souls choose the low
And all the rest on misty flats
Drift to and fro
But every man and woman decideth
The way their souls shall go.

I am pleased that the hon. member brought the motion forward, and pleased too that he is so anxious that all of us should agree. I am most pleased to associate myself with the motion worded in this way. I think we should remember that what we do or say is of little importance because we are really in their hands, the hands of the generation called youth; the future is theirs, not ours.

Youth Appreciation Week

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): I declare the motion carried.

Motion (Mr. Reynolds) agreed to.

Mr. Reynolds: I should like to thank all hon. members for speedy passage of this motion and suggest we toast the youth of this nation in Room 431S after the House adjourns this afternoon.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is it the pleasure of the House to call it five o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): It being five o'clock this House stands adjourned until Monday next at two p.m.

At 4:28 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

SUGGESTED RESOLUTION OF PROBLEM OF CASUAL WORKERS TO AVOID STRIKE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. The request I make is so reasonable it will require no debate and I hope the House will agree to it. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

That this House urges the Postmaster General to arrange for renewed discussions between management and the Canadian Union of Postal Workers for the purpose of making a serious effort to resolve the differences respecting casual workers, in the hope that by doing so a strike by the CUPW can be avoided.

Mr. Speaker: This motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 cannot be put without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO MAINTAIN PRICE OF HEATING OIL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a very urgent motion demanding the application of immediate steps.

Considering that the price of oil and oil products will probably increase during the next months and that some oil products are more important than others for all Canadian consumers such as fuel, since all Canadians must heat their house, according to the changes of temperature, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise):

That this House consider the steps to be taken so that the prices of some essential oil products such as fuel will not be increased, in order to enable all Canadians to heat their home at a reasonable price.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such a consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent, therefore the motion cannot be put.

REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO MAINTAIN PRICE OF FARM MACHINERY PARTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to propose a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Since the price of farming equipment is rising at an alarming rhythm, that spare parts are getting hard to obtain, and that prices are inflated because agents have to pay usurious interest rates to maintain required stocks, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That this House consider the means to be taken to help spare parts agents maintain stocks at reasonable prices, so as to avoid constant rise in production costs, thereby helping combat inflation.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. It being proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43 it cannot be put without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: As there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—MINISTER'S VIEW OF SEGMENT OF BUSINESS WHOSE APPROVAL NECESSARY IN SEEKING CONSENSUS ON RESTRAINT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance who said on Friday that details of a consensus blueprint are now being evolved with that segment of the economy whose consensus is necessary in respect of the business community for example. Could the minister clarify what segments of the business community must be part of the consensus understanding insofar as he is concerned or in his view. Would the approval, for example, of certain business associations be sufficient in order to constitute an agreement so far as he is concerned?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, obviously one wants to get as wide a range as possible. There are three task forces or technical committees now working, one with labour through the Canadian Labour Congress, another with business in three main areas, primarily responsible for resource, manufacturing and service industries, and a third now will be by way of liaison with provincial governments as a result of the conference of last week.

INFLATION—NECESSITY FOR UNANIMITY OF ALL SEGMENTS OF ECONOMY IN SEEKING CONSENSUS ON RESTRAINT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, is the position of the minister that he will have to have unanimity from those being consulted with regard to business, and unanimity also with regard to those being consulted on the part of labour before he has something on which he can move forward?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I said to the hon. gentleman on a couple of occasions that in the arrangements being worked out mutually obviously one wants a general feeling that the targets specifically set are those which in general receive the approval of the various aspects of the economy. One could hardly hope of course for unanimity in a free parliamentary democracy but one would hope that the general view of the various areas of the economy would support what is announced by the government.

INFLATION—TERMS OF AGREEMENT WITH FARM SECTOR IN SEEKING CONSENSUS ON RESTRAINT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I have one final supplementary, Mr. Speaker. If the minister does not have unanimity then he will have some who do not go along with his proposal. Would the minister tell the House what terms of agreement the government is seeking from the farm sector, having indicated that prices in general terms would not go up unless costs go up. What terms of agreement would the government be seeking with regard to the farm community in pricing?

● (1410)

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, at the meeting the Minister of Agriculture and I and other ministers held with representatives of the National Farmers Union and the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, we were concerned primarily, as they were, in the stabilization of prices of major farm products. In that respect, that would be the objective we would be trying to achieve with regard to farmers. Obviously, there is no attempt to try to limit the price of farm produce at the farm gate because of the necessity in this country to stabilize food prices by encouraging farm production, and also as a country contributing toward relief of hunger in the world.

INFLATION—PURPOSE OF PRIME MINISTER IN FORMING GROUP OF SEVEN ECONOMIC ADVISERS

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): My question is for the Prime Minister. Would he indicate whether the formation of the group of seven economic advisers was partly to advise the Prime Minister in relation to the consensus talks that have been going on and, more generally, could the Prime Minister explain the purpose of assembling the group of seven advisory economists since the group only met three times in the two years of its existence?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is no, and to the second part my answer is that I take advice when and where I can get it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

INFLATION—REQUEST FOR VERIFICATION OF MR. BRETON'S STATEMENT GROUP OF SEVEN ECONOMIC ADVISERS DOOMED FROM START

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): In view of Mr. Albert Breton's reported statement to the CBC, Mr. Albert Breton being the chairman of the group of seven, that the committee was doomed from the start because of opposition among senior civil servants in Ottawa and the Minister of Finance, would the Prime Minister indicate whether in fact Mr. Breton was right in his observation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot even confirm that he said what he is quoted as having said.

INFLATION—POSSIBILITY OF STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER ON DISBANDING OF GROUP OF SEVEN ECONOMIC ADVISERS

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): My supplementary question is again to the Prime Minister. In view of another committee member's statement to the CBC that the Prime Minister will be making a formal statement concerning the disbanding of the group of seven and that he hopes the Prime Minister would put the whole business on the record—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member put his question, please.

Mr. Stevens: —would the Prime Minister indicate whether in fact he would be making a statement to the House concerning the function and disbanding of the group of seven?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I will not be making a statement about the group of seven, except on certain occasions when I make reference to those great painters who honoured Canada with their great talent.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO COUNTERACT DEFICIT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. According to recently released figures which show that Canada has experienced a $1.3 billion deficit in its trade in automobile parts in 1974, the largest deficit in the history of the Canada-U.S. automotive agreement, what specific steps has the government taken to reverse this highly unacceptable situation?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is well aware of the reason for the deficit, that is the fact that there is a strong Canadian market and a very, very soft U.S. market. As I have indicated to the House on previous occasions, there is not likely to be any short term solution, but surely the point is that the Canadian industry is doing comparatively better than the U.S. industry at present.

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT—INVESTMENT PLANS OF MANUFACTURERS FOR NEXT YEAR

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Considering that one of the major reasons for the deficit is that during the last five years the United States has received proportionately much more of the new capital investment in the industry than has Canada, and considering that the major automotive companies now are restructuring their production for 1976 with a view to producing smaller and more energy-efficient vehicles, can the minister inform the House as to whether or not he has obtained specific commitments from the big three auto manufacturers concerning their investment plans for Canada for the next year?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I expect the automobile manufacturers, in making new investment, to maintain the relativity of their participation in the North American market.

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT—REQUEST FOR PRICE PARITY WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): A final supplementary, noting that the minister has provided no assurances at all on the first two points. Considering that we also have a record deficit in automotive trade with countries other than the United States for 1974 reaching a level of $484 million, and considering that one of the major reasons for that deficit, particularly as it pertains to imports from Japan, is the excessively high price charged for North American cars produced in Canada, could the minister inform the House whether he has obtained assurances that we will get price parity in terms of the prices charged to Canadians for Canadian produced cars compared with the prices charged to Americans for the same vehicles.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): On an earlier occasion the hon. member made some statements about the price differential. He chose to make them on the basis of retail prices rather than on wholesale prices. I have invited him to provide information on wholesale prices which he said had shown a widening of the gap. Every piece of advice and information I have received indicated that the price differential between Canadian automobiles sold in Canada and Canadian automobiles sold in the United States is narrowing.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I remind the hon. member that that was his final supplementary. The hon. member for Rimouski.

ENERGY

REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO MAINTAIN PRICE OF HEATING OIL

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

As the price of oil products will likely increase, has the minister taken or will he take steps to maintain the price of heating oil at its current level, since the whims of our climate and the well-being of Canadians is not a luxury? Does the minister intend to take what steps are necessary to keep the price of heating oil at its present level, since the cost of oil products will probably increase in the near future?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I must point out to the hon. member that no decision has yet been taken with regard to the price of oil, oil products or crude oil in Canada.

Last week, during the first ministers' conference, we proposed setting up a formula to allow the discussion of those matters. The idea was at first rejected by the premiers. Now, there is talk of bilateral discussions on the possibility of fixing limits on the price of crude oil and natural gas.

At this point, no decision has yet been taken on oil prices; the question of the hon. member is therefore hypothetical.

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

If prices were to increase, would the minister consider protecting Canadian consumers with regard to heating oil prices?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, to my mind that question is even more hypothetical.

POST OFFICE

REQUEST NEGOTIATIONS WITH LETTER CARRIERS BE CONCLUDED WITHOUT STRIKE

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. I trust that he is in a genial mood following his turkey dinner this weekend.

Now that the contract negotiations between the letter carriers' union and the Post Office Department have arrived at a stage of negotiation based on the conciliation board report, can the minister assure us that these negotiations will be consummated without resort to the strike route?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I wish I could, but it would be very presumptuous on my part to say what role or what future action the union may want to take. They are certainly in a position to resort to strike if they wish to do so. On the positive side, and more important, the letter carriers' union and the negotiating team made up of representatives of the Post Office and the Treasury Board are scheduled to meet later today.

REASON POSTAL SORTERS NOT GIVEN OPPORTUNITY TO WORK OVERTIME BEFORE CASUAL WORKERS EMPLOYED

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In light of continuing sensitivity in the negotiations with the post office workers, would the minister explain to the House why postal sorters and clerks were not given an opportunity to opt for overtime work to alleviate the backlog of mail in Montreal before casual workers were employed?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, might I take a few seconds longer and perhaps avoid other questions. On Saturday there was a blanket invitation to all regular postal workers to work overtime Saturday. Of the 2,000 regular workers, over 600 accepted the invitation and were at work. In addition to that there were 300 regular and part-time workers who normally work on Saturday. It was then, and only then, that casual workers numbering 150 were hired. There could have been up to 2,000 regular workers working overtime on Saturday if they wished to take advantage of the occasion to earn extra supplementary income at time and a half. There are over 10 million pieces of mail lying in post offices in Montreal belonging to the public of Canada, and I intend to see that the public gets that mail with or without the co-operation of a handful of people who are intent on contravening regulations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dinsdale: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In light of the Postmaster General's remarks, I take it he is intending to work toward a negotiated settlement of contract disputes with the postal union, rather than incite mail sorters and clerks to strike in anticipation of a legal walkout by the letter carriers? The president of the union has charged that the minister is attempting to do the latter.

Mr. Mackasey: I thank the hon. gentleman for his question. Under the collective agreement there is no obligation on the part of the Postmaster General to consult with the unions in the event of need for casuals. I felt, however, that it would be appropriate and only logical to consult with the unions. For the last several weeks there has been a series of meetings and consultations with the unions about the problem of reducing the backlog of mail. At midnight on Thursday we informed the union, since we still had not arrived at a satisfactory solution to the problem, that we would be obliged to use casuals this particular Saturday, but that we intended to continue to consult in order to obtain a solution that was satisfactory to the union.

Despite this, the casual workers were evicted forcibly from the premises, and as a result of that the people who felt that this was the proper way of acting in a democracy were all suspended, including 11 who have been suspended indefinitely, which I hope is proper terminology for being fired.

REQUEST FOR RESUMPTION OF DISCUSSIONS ON PROBLEM OF CASUAL WORKERS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I address a supplementary question to the Postmaster General with regard to the difficulty in Montreal with the inside workers. In view of the fact that officials of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers have declared that they want to continue to discuss and consult over the question of the casual workers, would the Postmaster General arrange for renewed discussions so that this issue can be resolved on that kind of a basis?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I did better than that. Consultations were resumed yesterday, the effect of which, however, was that I have had to suspend more people again today. I wonder just where is the good faith of the union.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of his reference to good faith, may I ask the Postmaster General whether he regards it as conducive to good labour relations for employees of the Post Office to have their doors knocked on at three o'clock in the morning and to be told of their dismissal.

Mr. Mackasey: No, Mr. Speaker. I will look into that matter and will see that a proper apology goes out to those people who no longer work for the Post Office. I suppose I am guilty of believing that the role of the employer is to run the Post Office according to the collective agreement that was agreed to by the unions under proper negotiations two years ago.

POSSIBILITY OF MEASURES TO IMPROVE DELIVERY OF WEEKLY NEWSPAPERS

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, may I address my question to the Postmaster General.

What steps does the minister intend to take to improve the quality of postal delivery and thereby protect the efforts of Canadian weekly newspapers to dispense news quickly and efficiently to readers across the country, and I might say not to the immediate area—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I can only say that if the newspapers would reflect news with the same efficiency as postmen deliver mail, we would have better news services in this country.

Mr. Darling: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. With all due respect for the Postmaster General's reply, I can agree with him so far as daily newspapers are concerned, but not in the case of weekly newspapers. Therefore, I wonder what he will do to help them.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

AIRPORTS

REPLACEMENT OF CORPS OF COMMISSIONAIRES BY RCMP SECURITY GUARDS—POSSIBILITY OF ALTERNATIVE EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Transport. What action is the minister taking to curtail the phase-out of the Corps of Commissionaires members who are performing security duties at national airports and who are to be replaced by members of the RCMP. Hopefully, the minister will find alternative jobs for these people.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of this matter but will inquire and see if I can report to the hon. gentleman tomorrow.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, may I address a supplementary question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Will the minister determine not only the capabilities of veterans, for the performance of such duties as I mentioned at national airports, but also make sure that veterans are given enough time to find alternative employment which may come within the scope of the endeavours of the Corps of Commissionaires and of the Department of Manpower and Immigration.

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad to work with my colleagues, the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, and look into this question.

HARBOURS

HALIFAX—ALLEGED COMMITMENT CONCERNING SHED RENTAL POLICY—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In light of the very serious action taken by the chairman of the National Harbours Board in denying an undertaking given by the board's vice-chairman to the mayor of Halifax, to the effect that no change in shed rental policy will take place without the concurrence of the Halifax port authority, and in light of the mayor of Halifax's position to the effect that the board should adhere to that undertaking, is the minister now prepared to give this House an undertaking honouring the commitment given by the vice-chairman of that board.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I will have to get in touch with the representative of the National Harbours Board, to know exactly what commitment was given to the mayor of Halifax.

Mr. Forrestall: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I thank the minister for undertaking to advise himself of the situation. I wonder, because of the serious deterioration of relations involved in this matter whether, once he has advised himself, he will consider meeting with the port of Halifax people and other interested people, labour, and so on, with a view to resolving this serious impasse.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I think that is a good suggestion.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REASON FOR FAILURE TO DONATE JEANS SEIZED BY DEPARTMENT TO CHARITABLE ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs relates to the question on the order paper answered on April 7. Can the minister explain to the House why 7,987 pairs of jeans, worth approximately $40,000, which were seized by his department were recently buried instead of being donated to charitable institutions.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I think I gave the answer, Mr. Speaker. This has been suggested to the company. Unfortunately, it has not followed our suggestion.

[English]

Mr. Fraser: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister tell the House if the policy is to seize clothing that does not comply with labelling regulations there is no discretion as to what can be done with the objects which are seized, or is the minister telling the House that the policy of the department is to give these articles back to the owner? If the owner does not destroy them, what happens to them?

● (1430)

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I think the answer I gave in writing was rather complete and demonstrated that the company is keeping the option of doing what it wants with its clothes. On the first occasion, some of these clothes were indeed given to charitable organizations. In the other case, the company did not want to do that. I think this is unfortunate because these clothes could have been used for charitable purposes. Unfortunately, this has not been the case; they had to be destroyed.

[English]

REASON JEANS WERE INCORRECTLY LABELLED AND BY WHOM

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Can the minister advise whether his department or the government is taking any steps to investigate the reason why these jeans were incorrectly labelled and whether they were incorrectly labelled by foreign manufacturers outside Canada?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can check this and I shall report to the hon. member as soon as possible.

STATISTICS CANADA

DATE OF TREASURY BOARD APPROVED OF CONTRACT TO HEAL, SHAW AND WALDEN FOR SURVEY—REASON FOR USE OF OUTSIDE FIRM

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the President of the Treasury Board. Given the extensive operations of Statistics Canada in the field of survey research, will the minister tell the House when Treasury Board approved a $50,000 contract to the Toronto public relations firm of Heal, Shaw and Walden to survey attitudes of the general public toward Statistics Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am not cognizant of a question as precise as this one. I shall inquire and report to the hon. member.

[English]

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Will the minister advise whether the contract was tendered and why it was considered necessary to award this survey to an outside firm, given the extensive resources that Statistics Canada has to handle such a study.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I cannot provide details on the contract, but I have been given the reason that Statistics Canada entered into this agreement. It was that this particular firm has expertise in sampling public attitudes which Statistics Canada does not have.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED NATO SUMMIT MEETING—POSSIBILITY OF DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES AND BRITAIN CONCERNING AGENDA

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister or any member of his cabinet been in touch with the Americans or the British to ascertain their views on the topics to be discussed at a NATO summit meeting in Brussels on May 29 and 30? Since NATO is a cultural, military and economic alliance, has Canada prepared a position which it will take at the summit meeting which will not only strengthen the NATO military alliance, but also hopefully strengthen our economy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe the answer given by the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs the other day to the effect that the summit is still being discussed is the proper answer at this time.

Mr. Baldwin: Maybe it will find your link there.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I hear people in the galleries laughing. They are laughing at their own show. There is no need for that. They laughed enough Saturday night.

An hon. Member: You stage-managed it.

Mr. Trudeau: I gave the substance of the subject. I know that the meeting has not been set in a firm way. As to the topics to be discussed, I will check whether the minister has had any conversations with the Americans. Certainly, it is a subject that I discussed with the United Kingdom government last month when I was in London. We talked about possible dates and possible subjects. At this stage, I think it is too early to answer in any firm way about the date or the agenda.

REQUEST FOR DETERMINATION OF LEGALITY OF OPERATIONS OF FALCONBRIDGE NICKEL MINES IN NAMIBIA

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs. At the recent annual meeting of the shareholders of Falconbridge Nickel Mines, the president made it clear that that company proposed, through a subsidiary, to continue to operate in Namibia without the consent of the council for Namibia which was given full authority over that territory by the United Nations Security Council, and that Falconbridge was going to continue to seek to make profits out of the illegal maintenance of the apartheid system in that country. Will the minister seek legal advice as to whether these operations are illegal and whether action can be taken to restrain the continued defiance by the company of the United Nations and its resolutions?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for having given my office notice of this question. I immediately conveyed it to the department which is now making inquiries as to the factual situation. After that has been done, I hope to be able to answer the question.

AIR TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR MAINTENANCE OF SERVICE TO FORT GEORGE, QUEBEC

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

Can the minister advise the House whether he has received a letter signed by a number of residents from Fort George, Quebec, to the effect that Nordair Airlines have decided to discontinue their services to Fort George? Can the minister also advise the House whether he has contacted Nordair Airlines, and whether he can assure Fort George residents that general services, including the delivery of mail, as well as medical, and fresh food supply, will not be cancelled to this northern community?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will verify whether I have received this letter, for I do not remember receiving it. However, I suggest that such an application for cancellation of service would not have been sent to the Minister of Transport, but to the Canadian Transport Commission, of which Mr. Benson is the president.

This is the body which is responsible for this decision. It is the CTC which decides whether to maintain the service or not. However, I am going to find out whether I have received the letter referred to by the hon. member.

STATEMENTS BY FRENCH MILITARY AUTHORITIES CONCERNING BOARDING OF "GREENPEACE III"—SUGGESTION GOVERNMENT ASK FOR DENIAL

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister regarding the Greenpeace incident. In view of statements made by officials high in the French government and denials by two ministers of the Crown, has this government asked the government of France to refute statements made by members of their armed forces regarding collusion between the French government and the government of Canada before the boarding of the Greenpeace in order to clear the air on this matter for the Canadian public?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it should be cleared by the fact that we deny having made those statements.

BOARDING OF "GREENPEACE III" BY FRENCH AUTHORITIES—SUGGESTION GOVERNMENT PROVIDE COUNSEL FOR MR. McTAGGART AT TRIAL

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Can the Prime Minister assure the House that the Canadian government will have counsel at Mr. McTaggart's side when his case comes to trial on May 12?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, the government will not have counsel at Mr. McTaggart's side. If you have a supplementary, I will answer it.

POWERS OF BOARDS PROPOSED FOR MONITORING CONSENSUS PROGRAM—POSSIBILITY OF PRICES AND INCOMES CONTROLS

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. It is with regard to the board or boards the minister has proposed to set up to monitor the mystical consensus program. Will this board or boards be the authority which the government intends to use in the event the consensus process reveals the necessity for the implementation of a contingency plan, under which controls on further increases in prices and incomes will be legislated?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Oberle: What will be the functions of these boards? Will they just be another review board that will convey tidings of bad news, of the smell of rotten eggs, or will they have any authority?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I explained to the hon. gentleman's leader on Friday that the need for the existence of the boards and the terms of reference of those boards were part of the consensus process. We are currently talking about that with representatives of business, labour and other segments of the economy.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of National Revenue): No. Mr. Speaker, but I will inquire into it.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REASON FOR ALLEGED INQUIRY BY PRIME MINISTER CONCERNING MEMBER OF STAFF OF MEMBER FOR LEEDS

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Has he, or anyone acting on his behalf, instructed a person or persons in his office or in the Privy Council office to make investigations or inquiries concerning any members of the staff of the office of the member for Leeds and, if so, why?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I did ask someone on my staff to make sure that the hon. member for Leeds could outswim a shark.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cossitt: What are the reasons for someone announcing himself as J. G. Richard of the Privy Council Office making such inquiries as recently as last Thursday, including a strange telephone call to the National Parole Board?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cossitt: Does this represent a new government policy in dealing with the right of democratic dissent?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I never could take a question by the hon. member for Leeds seriously and I do not take this one seriously.

PRICE OF CRUDE OIL ON WHICH MAY BUDGET BASED—REASON FOR CALLING PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE IF GOVERNMENT TO SET OIL PRICE BY LEGISLATION

Mr. Peter Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the price of oil is a vital ingredient in the preparation of a budget, will the minister say whether his proposed May budget will be based on an increase in the price of crude oil, and if so what price is to be used?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): If, before a budget is brought down, there is no agreement or action with regard to setting the price of oil or the related price of gas, either the budget would have to be delayed or I would have to make some assumptions.

[Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich).]

Mr. Bawden: My supplementary question is to the Prime Minister. Since the government is pressing on with Bill C-32, under the terms of which a price can be imposed upon the provinces, will the right hon. gentleman tell us why it was necessary to go to the trouble and expense of calling a further meeting of first ministers if he and his ministers have already reached a decision on the price of crude oil and used that price in the budget?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The hon. member may have noticed that we did not press on with this bill in the House until we realized it was impossible for the ten provincial premiers to agree amongst themselves. It was only in the face of the failure of negotiations the other day to reach an agreement that we are now availing ourselves of the legislative powers which the constitution entitles us to have in the area of interprovincial and international trade so that we can exercise those powers should further efforts to reach a consensus be unsuccessful.

Mr. Bawden: My final supplementary is directed to the Minister of Finance. Was the Minister of Finance saying, in response to my question, that the government might wait until after the first ministers have agreed upon a price for crude oil before bringing down a budget?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I was saying that as time elapses I shall have to make a judgment as to the best way to proceed.

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN EMPLOYMENT IN AGRICULTURE EXEMPTION

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and arises from the hon. gentleman's announcement that he intends to bring down a budget soon. Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I will consider the hon. member's question as a representation, Mr. Speaker.

REASON FOR FAILURE OF MINISTER TO VISIT EGYPT AND ISRAEL DURING TRIP—INQUIRY WHETHER MINISTER OF FINANCE WILL VISIT EGYPT AND ISRAEL

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Having regard to the growing tension in the Middle East and the presence of Canadian peacekeeping forces in the area, could the right hon. gentleman explain to the House why the Secretary of State for External Affairs did not include Egypt or Egypt and Israel in his current tour?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The current tour was organized with a different purpose in mind than trying to reconcile Egypt and Israel.

Mr. McKinnon: My supplementary is for the Minister of Finance who will be touring the Middle East in the near future, looking into the oil situation. As confrontation between Israel and Egypt was the main stimulus to the Arab oil embargo, is the minister planning to visit Egypt and Israel on his tour, and if not why not?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): The answer is, no. The purpose of the trip is to visit members of the OPEC countries in order to ascertain their intentions as we move toward a maturing monetary system and attempt to digest the problem of world surpluses and deficits arising from oil transactions.

ENERGY

REASON FOR WITHDRAWAL OF FEDERAL FINANCIAL SUPPORT FROM MANITOBA HYDRO

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Can he tell the House whether the withdrawal of financial assistance from Manitoba Hydro was wholly consequent upon the choice made by that utility to purchase Swiss equipment rather than equipment manufactured by Canadian firms, or whether other considerations were involved?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): One of the prime conditions which was set out as governing the availability of financing from the federal government had to do with the degree of Canadian content such as the Canadian government itself would have followed in such circumstances. The proposal which the Manitoba government accepted would involve only 30 per cent of Canadian employment as opposed to approximately 80 per cent which would have been involved in the other bid. At the same time, the other bid would have meant the development here of the technology related to long distance high voltage transmission while the Swiss bid only involved the financing of development in the hands of other countries. For these reasons we felt we should not use funds of the Canadian government to finance what amounts to a benefit to offshore suppliers.

Mr. Ritchie: Did the original agreement allow for the opting out of the federal government in certain circumstances?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): We set out the conditions in advance and they were well known to Manitoba.

BEEF CATTLE—DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES CONCERNING RESUMPTION OF TRADE

Mr. Ken Hurlburt (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. It arises from astronomical losses experienced by Canadian cattlemen in the last 18 months. In view of the fact that a large percentage of these losses can be attributed to confrontation with our United States counterparts, will the minister inform the House whether discussions are still taking place with Secretary Butz to ensure the movement of our surplus beef into the United States?

● (1450)

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, while not agreeing at all with the preamble to the hon. member's question, if we had not taken any action we would have had thousands of cattle from the United States dumped on our market depressing our prices to that of theirs. Canadian cattlemen are better off by $100 million by our action. Discussions are taking place with our U.S. counterparts.

Mr. Hurlburt: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that in the last 18 months we have had tariffs on and tariffs off, surcharges on and surcharges off, subsidy programs and the diethystilbestrol issue, I should like to ask the minister if he feels this will be a deciding factor as far as Washington is concerned?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has mentioned many of the programs we have initiated to help the cattle producers, and I may say that this was at the insistence of the cattle producers of Canada practically at all times. These things have been discussed with the United States, and these are some of the laws of our land that we have to abide by.

INDUSTRY

TEXTILES—POSSIBLE LAY-OFFS—MEASURES TO SAVE INDUSTRY

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I want to put a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Since the government has agreed to accept some of the proposals made by the special commission on textile products and since information from that industry leads me to believe that the number of its employees will decline by 50 per cent within the next six months, considering the clearly inadequate decisions taken by the government, could the minister say whether he intends to take new measures, which would be much more drastic than those it has taken, to save the textile industry in Canada, rather than letting it go in jeopardy, as it now is?

[Mr. Whelan.]

[English]

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the figure of 50 per cent reduction in the employment levels of that industry. I think that is a gross exaggeration, and, worse than that, I think it is an alarmist suggestion. The information I have received from the industry and from the clothing and textile board indicates that while we may have difficulties as a result of a slowdown in Canada and as a result of some imports into Canada, the long term future of this industry is good. Indeed, the government accepted all of the recommendations of the clothing and textile board in respect of its substantial report with one exception, which had to do with polyester yarn. We put that on the import control list and we have it under a very close monitoring process at the present time.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a supplementary question which will bring at the same time supporting evidence to my previous question, since in my region two textile companies informed me last weekend, one, that it may have to close down within three months, and the other, that it will reduce its personnel by 50 per cent. And to this information it was added—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member must ask his question.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—NATURE OF AGREEMENT MINISTER DESIRES FROM FISHING INDUSTRY IN SEEKING CONSENSUS ON RESTRAINT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, having regard to the consensus program, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance what kind of agreement he is seeking from the fishing industry? Does he expect the industry to hold its prices, or what proposal is he making?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, at the moment we are exploring with the agricultural and fishing industries how best they can fit into this program of monitoring of our economy, but roughly the same answer would apply to the fishing industry that I gave earlier in respect of agriculture. One wants to encourage the production of the fishing industry.

INFLATION—SEEKING OF CONSENSUS ON RESTRAINT FROM MINING COMPANIES—POSSIBILITY OF TWO-PRICE SYSTEM FOR MINERALS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I take it there would be no request to the fishing industry to hold its prices, but with regard to minerals mined in Canada, will the Minister of Finance indicate what is being asked of the mining companies? Are they being asked to hold their prices except in cases where their costs go up, and particularly when the minerals are supplied to Canada? If this is so, is there to be a two-price system in respect of these kinds of industries?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if, as and when the program performs successfully the mineral industry will hopefully be a part of it. The hon. gentleman has put his finger on one of the difficulties involving the export price of primary products, particularly mineral resources. I would be rather reluctant to contemplate a two-price system for a number of reasons, not the least of which is that this might be open to retaliation from some of our trading partners. That is one of the difficult questions that has occurred in these discussions.

POWERS OF BOARDS PROPOSED FOR MONITORING CONSENSUS PROGRAM TO ENFORCE GUIDELINES

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, with your patience I should like to direct two questions, the first to the Minister of Finance and the second to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Having regard to the terms of reference of the board or boards which will be set up under the consensus talks, will the Minister of Finance advise whether the government is now going beyond the areas of monitoring and interpretation of the principles raised in his statement and is now prepared to consider terms of reference that might include the authority to enforce key aspects of whatever guidelines are established?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): No, Sir.

ALLEGED CONTINGENCY PLAN FOR COMPULSORY INCOME AND PRICE CONTROLS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, my second question is addressed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and is similar to one asked of the Prime Minister last Thursday regarding the continual updating of a contingency plan for compulsory income and price controls. That question was not answered by the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance. It certainly has been reported that there is a plan in existence that is continually being updated. I refer to a contingency plan for compulsory income and price controls. Can the minister confirm that report?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I believe it already has been said that the government has studied these possibilities in order to consider them if necessary. The fact that we have studied the matter and checked the possibility of using this solution does not mean necessarily that we agree with this doctrine. However, it is clear that the government has studied what it would imply and neglected no details in developing a plan that could be used if necessary.

[English]

Mr. Alexander: Notwithstanding that long preamble which gave me no information whatsoever, Mr. Speaker, will the minister answer the question I really want him to answer, and that is whether this plan in continually being updated?

HOUSE OF COMMONS

STATEMENT BY MR. SPEAKER ON PROCEDURE DURING ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. On Monday last the House began an experiment with a change in procedure relating to the question period, Standing Order 43, supply and ministerial statements. I indicated earlier that I would make a statement today in respect of the changes. This statement concerns itself with the question period only and, as I indicated before the Easter break, ought to be taken as a reference point for discussion and consideration by members of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, where I will be happy to appear if members wish. It is therefore not so much a decision as an explanation of my understanding of how our question period should operate.

The question period is a unique feature of the Canadian House of Commons where the ministry is required to be accountable to the House on a daily basis without advance notice. It is an excellent feature of our parliament, and while we have much to learn from other governmental systems, the question period is one area in which we are in the forefront of responsible government, and every effort must be made to preserve the excellence of this practice.

The opportunity of members to put questions has developed in a rather haphazard way, but is now enshrined in Standing Order 39 and if it ever was considered to be a privilege of members, it certain now enjoys the status of a right. Much has been said in the precedents about restrictions and disqualifications or interferences with the right of members to put questions. This is not the approach I prefer to take in attempting to establish a rational approach and understanding concerning how the question period should operate. I much prefer to take the positive approach of attempting to arrive at a statement of principle within which questions can be put, and to reduce to an absolute minimum the negative disqualifications that may limit or restrict a member's right so to do.

In so doing, I should say that there seems to be no question that the Speaker enjoys discretion in allowing a question and certainly in allowing a supplementary. I think it is also important to begin with the rather wide latitude of discretion that is given ministers to whom questions are put. The fact is that ministers are able to make an answer, of course. They may also defer a question for further consideration or take it as notice. Ministers are able to make an explanation if for some reason they are unable to make an answer at that moment; or, finally, they may say nothing.

It therefore seems to me that any basic principle governing the question period ought to be such that it will enable members to put questions with a minimum of interference. In examining the many precedents, I feel that the principle can best be stated as follows: a brief question seeking information about an important matter of some urgency which falls within the administrative responsibility of the government or of the specific minister to whom it is addressed is in order. This statement bears some explanation. First, it must be a question. That seems to be too self-evident to be worth consideration. However, the fact of the matter is that that statement is put right at the beginning because it opposes such things as expressions of opinion, representations, argumentation or debate.

Second, the question must be brief. There can be no doubt that the greatest enemy of the question period is the member who offends this most important principle. In putting the original question on any subject, a member may require an explanatory remark, but there is no reason for such a preamble to exceed one carefully drawn sentence. It is my proposal to ask all hon. members to pay close attention to this admonition and to bring them to order if they fail to do so. It bears repeating that the long preamble or long question takes an unfair share of the time, and invariably, in provoking the same kind of response, only compounds the difficulty.

Replies ought to be subject to precisely the same admonition. On the subject of supplementaries, I again suggest to hon. members the adoption of a practice which recently was suggested by one of our provincial colleagues which is, if and when supplementary questions are allowed, there ought to be no need whatsoever for any preamble. The supplementary question is a follow-up device flowing from the response, and ought to be a precise question put directly and immediately to the minister, without any further statement.

Third, the question ought to seek information, and therefore cannot be based upon a hypothesis, it cannot seek an opinion either legal or otherwise, and must not suggest its own answer, be argumentative or make a representation.

Fourth, it ought to be on an important matter which, again, is self-evident but it is stressed here in order to rule out frivolous questions.

Fifth, the matter ought to be of some urgency. This is not included to intend in any way to be similar to those questions of urgency which are included within the Standing Orders surrounding special debates. It is here only to stress the fact that there must be some present value in seeking the information during the question period, as opposed to seeking it through the order paper or through correspondence with the minister or the department.

The fact that questions on the order paper also have been changed in the experimental order to daily responses, I am sure, is to all hon. members an indication of the good will and good intentions of the government in making more prompt answers to the questions on the order paper. If the government will do so, undoubtedly this will have a beneficial effect on the conduct of the oral question period.

At the same time, it goes without saying that the vexatious or frivolous use of the right of putting questions on the order paper by way of putting questions which do not seek the kind of information which can be available within a reasonable time, reasonable effort and expense, seems to me to be only a waste of the time of the House and to invite the government to use the excuse that it would take too long or cost too much money to make replies. In other words, a serious and conscientious attitude on both sides about the use of the order paper for information will certainly go a long way toward improving the oral question period.

Sixth, a question must be within the administrative responsibility of the government or the minister. Obviously, the government in general cannot be responsible for those areas which are beyond its own administrative responsibility. Furthermore, the minister to whom the question is directed is responsible to the House for his ministry; that is, his present ministry. He is responsible to the limits of that ministry, but not beyond that. In this regard I find no reason to change the earlier decision I made in respect of the capacities which ministers enjoyed in previously-held portfolios.

It seems to me that a question which conforms with this basic principle ought not to be interfered with without clear reason. One or two are well known. Obviously, the question must adhere to the proprieties of the House in respect of inference, imputing motives or casting aspersions upon persons within the House, or out of it for that matter, but this is no more a rule of decorum in the question period than it is out of it. The same rules surround polite language and things of that nature.

There is a clear precedent that if a question has previously been answered, it ought not to be asked again. A question cannot deal with a matter that is before a court. Those are clear restrictions. There are three others which seems to me lend themselves to some confusion. I may be able to clarify them, but I am not sure. The first deals with statements made by ministers outside the House. This, it seems to me, is a matter of form rather than one of substance, for indeed if a question otherwise conforms with the principles I have set out, then it ought not to be disqualified simply because in its preamble some reference is made to a minister or a statement made by a minister somewhere other than here.

For the life of me, I cannot understand why in the case of a valid question a member would want to tie it to a statement made outside the House and therefore risk having it disqualified, when in fact the simple device is to put the question directly without any reference to the statement. Second is the question which seeks an opinion about government policy. The whole area of government policy seems to be one of general confusion.

An hon. Member: Right on.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: What I failed to say was, the whole area of questions about government policy. There have been restrictions related to questions about government policy. It seems to me that a question which seeks an opinion about government policy probably is out of order because it seeks an opinion rather than information. A question which seeks a general statement of government policy may be out of order because it requires the kind of long answer that ought to be given on statements during motions or in debate. But this is the kind of qualification which is referred to in the statement of principle. Otherwise, it seems to me that every question that is asked and answered and which has been held in order for as long as the question period goes back, has in one way or another a connection with government policy.

The third area of confusion is in respect of anticipating orders of the day. It is a restriction that is not well understood. If I might express it in my own terms, it simply means that if the subject of debate for today concerns, for example, housing policy, then questions on housing policy ought not to be taken during the question period. That simply, it seems to me, has obvious reference to the currency or importance of the question being taken at that time rather than at some other time.

Similarly, if a special debate has been ordered for later in the day because obviously the topic is very important and very topical, the proper course would be for the Chair to defer questions until that debate is on, rather than to permit them during the question period.

Beyond that, I think a word should be said about points of order and questions of privilege. One of the most significant features of our experimental order is the suggestion to the Chair that points of order and questions of privilege be deferred until three o'clock. I say this is most significant because it is obvious by an expression of the consensus of hon. members that those who prolong their share of the question period by arguing points of order and questions of privilege are really doing nothing more than extending the time that has already been granted to them to put questions. There is no need for a full exposé of questions of privilege and points of order.

Suffice it to say that for the purpose of the question period all hon. members know, and know well, that complaints about the failure of a minister to give an answer, about the quality of the answer that any minister has given, or about discrepancies in answers given by different ministers or by the same minister on different occasions may be valid comments for debate at the appropriate time, but do not by any stretch of the rules constitute a question of privilege or a point of order. Even in handling these matters when they are deferred until three o'clock, it seems to me to be in the best interests of the House, unless a member is able to establish at the beginning when addressing himself to these points that he has a point of order or question of privilege that has some basis in procedure other than a mere complaint of that sort, to discourage members from raising such complaints at the start.

Finally, I should like to add, in respect of hon. members' rights about questions which they feel have not been adequately dealt with during the question period, that there is provision for an adjournment debate. Consideration may be given by the committee to expanding that; certainly it has been recently considered. In any case, it is an excellent way for members who feel that the answer has been too brief or that they have not had the opportunity to fully develop a question, to seek to raise it again in the "late show."

After six sitting days under the experimental order, there can be no doubt that it has been successful, but in my view the success is attributable, as it always is, not so much to the rules themselves or to the power or discretion of the Chair but, rather, to the attitude of members of the House. It is not possible to say too much about the importance of this, because when members in their questions and ministers in their replies choose to abide by these principles that I have tried to set out here, the question period runs smoothly, with maximum participation. On the other hand, when members or ministers choose to disregard these principles, they can be called to order by the Chair but the question period cannot be saved from the damage that has been done to it.

In the first six days it has been obvious that members have looked upon this experiment with a positive and conscientious attitude which, if it continues, will assure that this very worth-while experiment will become a permanent Standing Order. My authority is simply an expression of the desire of members that the proceedings run well and have maximum value, but I am sure members understand very clearly that the less the Chair is called upon to interfere in the proceedings, the better.

With those remarks, I can only conclude that again this is a point of discussion and I would be more than pleased to appear before the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization and discuss these points with hon. members, who may be interested in doing so at the earliest opportunity.

THE LATE THOMAS ALEXANDER CRERAR

TRIBUTES TO DECEASED SENATOR AND FORMER MINISTER

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, particularly after your statement on the rules I do not wish to abuse the time of the House or the rules themselves, but I would ask for the indulgence of the House to pay tribute to the senior member of Canada's Privy Council, namely, Thomas Alexander Crerar, who passed away on the weekend at the age of 98. He was a giant figure in the political development of Canada during the initial, turbulent decades of this century. In him, western Canada enjoyed one of its most dedicated spokesman and one who always used the language of unity rather than of divisiveness or alienation.

[Translation]

Senator Crerar was an essentially progressive spirit and our country owes much to the generosity with which he served the political scene in general and his government in particular. I am certain that all hon. members will join me in expressing our sincere condolences to his family.

[English]

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to associate myself and the members of my party with the warm tribute that the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has paid to the hon. Senator Crerar. He had a very long and distinguished career in the public life of this country. Clearly, he was a man with strong convictions, a man of high principle, a man who regarded his own principles and his duty to the country as going beyond party loyalties, a man who associated himself with a union government under a Conservative prime minister at the time of the First World War, a man who associated himself with the progressive movement in the 1920s and a man who later served with distinction as a minister in the Liberal government under the Right Hon. Mackenzie King.

Obviously, he was a man with a great sense of public duty, a man who lived a long life and who maintained through that long life a very active interest in public questions, and strong views which he expressed with great force and conviction.

I should like to join the Prime Minister in extending our sympathy to the members of Senator Crerar's family.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the New Democratic Party I should like to join the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) in paying respect to the memory of the late Senator Thomas A. Crerar. As the Prime Minister has so well put it, he was one of those to whom we must refer as a giant in the political history of this country. There are three of us in this House—the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), and I—who remember him in the House as a cabinet minister during the Second World War. We know from our history that he was also a cabinet minister in the House during the First World War, when none of the three of us was here.

To have a career that included entering parliament in 1917 at the age of 41, and to be in the Senate until 1966 at the age of 90—a total of 49 years, with only five of them spent out of parliament—is indeed a distinguished career.

There were times when some of us felt that the late Senator Crerar was not as progressive or as liberal as we wanted him to be, certainly in economic terms, but his adherence to the defence of civil liberties and his devotion to the principles in which he believed were very clear.

We join in paying respect to his memory and in expressing our sympathy to Mrs. Naylor, his daughter, and to all those who were close to him.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the members of my party, I join my colleagues to give homage to hon. Senator Crerar. I did not have the honour or the privilege to know personally this important Canadian, but I had the opportunity to follow his activities when he was a minister in the King cabinet.

I believe that Senator Crerar served his country according to the dictates of his conscience. On behalf of my party, I offer our most sincere condolences to his family.

AUDITOR GENERAL

TABLING OF REPORT OF INDEPENDENT REVIEW COMMITTEE

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I should like to lay on the table a copy of the report in both official languages, of the Independent Review committee on the office of the Auditor General of Canada, dated March, 1975.

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 1,243, 1,272, 1,352, 1,857, 1,862, 1,932, 1,946, 1,951, 1,964, 1,966, 1,972, 1,990, 1,997, 2,002 and 2,172.

If questions Nos. 883, 1,199 and 2,018 could be made orders for return, these returns would be tabled immediately.

I ask that question No. 722 be made an order for return and also seek the consent of the House to table immediately the information which has already been submitted. The balance of the information will follow as soon as it is submitted to me.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

UIC—PERCENTAGE OF CLAIMANTS DISCHARGED FROM JOBS

Question No. 1,243—Mr. Herbert:

Of those registering for unemployment insurance benefits (a) what percentage have been fired from their employment for cause (b) what is the average period that such persons draw benefits?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): (a) For the year 1974, the percentage of those who were disqualified for being discharged for misconduct (i.e. fired from their job) of all claims established in that time period was 1.6 per cent. (b) Information not available.

From the most recent statistics, what percentage of those drawing unemployment insurance benefits voluntarily left their employment and, of this group (a) what is the average period during which payments are made (b) what percentage have their payments terminated, for any reason, before the expiration of the maximum term during which they would have been eligible for benefits?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): For the year 1974 those who received a disqualification for voluntarily leaving their employment was approximately 13 per cent of all those establishing a claim in that year. (a) Information not available. (b) Information not available.

AGRICULTURE—EXOTIC BREEDS OF CATTLE

Question No. 1,857—Mr. Herbert:

Does the Department of Agriculture keep records of the exotic breeds of cattle exported by (a) individuals (b) partnerships (c) cooperatives or corporations and, if so, what are (i) the names and addresses of the individuals, partnerships, cooperatives or corporations who received permits in 1974 (ii) the number of permits in each instance (iii) how many permits did each receive in the previous years 1970-73 inclusive?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): The Department of Agriculture does not maintain lists of the cattle of the exotic breeds which have been exported. Purebred cattle that have been imported into Canada through a Canadian or Canadian controlled quarantine station are under export control. Excepted from this control are cattle of the following breeds: Ayrshire, Aberdeen Angus, Gallway, Guernsey, Hereford, Highland, Holstein-Friesian, Jersey, Lincoln Red, Shorthorn, South Devon, Red Poll, Welsh Blacks. These controls are affected under the authority of the Export and Import Permits Act which is administered by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Those classes of animals subject to these controls must be accompanied by an export permit issued by that department. While the applications for these permits are referred to the Department of Agriculture for advice as to the eligibility of the animals listed, the exports permits are issued by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the records of such permits are maintained by them. Any records of the export of the "exotic" breeds which are not subject to control are maintained by the breed association concerned.

SILVESTRO CAROLLO

Question No. 1,862—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did Silvestro Carollo enter Canada on or about February 14, 1970 and, if not, on what date did he enter Canada?

2. Has the RCMP ever conducted an investigation in regard to this person and, if so (a) on what dates (b) for what reasons (c) what were the details of the investigation?

3. What are the names of all persons who at any time made representations to the government on behalf of this person for purposes of his admission to Canada or for any other purpose and, in each case, what are the details of such representations?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Manpower and Immigration and the Solicitor General as follows: 1. Silvestro Carollo, also known as Sylvestro Carollo, arrived in Canada on February 14, 1970.

2. An investigation was conducted on one Sylvestro Carollo (born June 17, 1896). (a) 1970. (b) News reports indicated he had illegally entered the United States through Canada. (c) A person by the same name arrived in Montreal on February 14, 1970. On February 15, 1970, he flew from Montreal to Windsor, Ontario. When or how he entered the United States has not been determined.

3. The Department of Manpower and Immigration has no record of any representations made to the government on behalf of Silvestro Carollo.

AGRICULTURE—SHORTAGE OF VETERINARY DOCTORS

Question No. 1,932—Mr. Mitges:

1. Is there a shortage of veterinary doctors in the Health of Animals Branch of the Department of Agriculture?

2. What is the length of the course leading to the degree of D.V.M.?

3. What is the starting salary for a veterinarian employed by the Health of Animals Branch?

4. What is the maximum salary a veterinarian could aspire to in the Department, excluding the positions of Veterinary Director General, Director of the Meat Inspection Division and Director of the Infectious and Contagious Disease Division?

5. How many years of service would it take a veterinarian in the Health of Animals Branch to reach this salary, providing his work has been satisfactory?

6. What are the requirements, academic or otherwise, for a person to be employed as a primary products inspector in the Department?

7. What is the (a) starting salary (b) maximum salary for a primary products inspector as of April 1, 1975?

8. How many years of service would it take a primary products inspector to reach his maximum, providing his work has been satisfactory?

9. (a) What are the requirements of the Capital Assistance Programme for students taking veterinary science (b) is this Programme to be expanded?

10. Are there plans for the establishment of a new veterinary college in Canada and, if so, in what location?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): 1. Yes.

2. Six years, after senior matriculation or the equivalent.

3. $14,251.

4. $30,041.

5. Variable, depending upon opportunities, mobility and performance.

6. Grade 12 (Ontario) completion or its equivalent.

7. (a) $10,041. (b) $19,113.

8. Variable, depending upon opportunities, mobility and performance.

9. (a) There is no capital assistance programme for students per se. There has been a capital assistance to the three veterinary schools which has allowed the enrollment to be increased from 45 to 90 students at the Western College of Veterinary Medicine from 60 to 120 students at the Ontario Veterinary College, and from 35 to 70 students at St-Hyacinthe. This measure has provided more opportunities for students to take veterinary science. (b) There is no student assistance program for expansion.

10. There are no definite plans for th establishment of a new veterinary college in Canada. The matter is under review and it is possible that a forth veterinary college could be established, possibly in the Maritimes.

PRESS RELEASE—SECURITY OF PRESENT SYSTEM FOR TENDERS

Question No. 1,946—Mr. Reynolds:

Did the Minister of Supply and Services issue a press release dated December 1973, in which it was stated the "high security" of the present system for tenders under $10,000 will be maintained and, if so (a) what are the terms of reference inferred in the remark (b) what is the "high security"?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): The following excerpt is from a statement made by the Minister of Supply and Services in the House of Commons on December 19, 1973: "In any event, for tenders whose anticipated value is likely to be under $10,000, the present highly secure system which has stood the test of time for upwards of 30 years will continue with as many improvements as we can make to it." The statement in the House of Commons was summarized in a press release dated the same day. That release read as follows: "For tenders under $10,000," said Mr. Goyer, "the high security of the present system had stood the test of some 30 years and, with some improvements, will continue." The "highly secure system" referred to in these statements sets out precise procedures to be followed to ensure that the confidential nature of individual suppliers' tenders is preserved and that all suppliers are treated fairly, regardless of the type or value of the particular requirement.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—CONTRACT WITH AIR CANADA FOR PASSENGER RESERVATION SERVICES

Question No. 1,951—Mr. Reynolds:

1. Has the Department of National Defence signed a contract with Air Canada for passenger reservation services on the Air Canada computer at a cost of $1,866,662 and, if so, how many passengers travelled on Armed Services aircraft in 1974?

2. What percentage of the capacity of the aircraft seats available is this amount?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. Yes. The number of passengers who travelled on Armed Services aircraft in 1974 was 260,000.

2. 77 per cent.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—CONTRACT TO FAIRVIEW INDUSTRIAL ENGINEERING

Question No. 1,964—Mr. Reynolds:

1. Was a contract awarded to Fairview Industrial Engineering, Armdale, Nova Scotia for $160,315 on November 29, 1974?

2. What was the purpose of the contract?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): In so far as the Department of Supply and Services is concerned: 1. Yes, however the contract was issued October 17, 1974. The news release of award of contract was dated November 29, 1974.

2. To furnish all plant labour, materials and equipment required to supply and install a casting platform, and to perform all work connected with the removal of machine shop equipments from existing locations and for its installation in a centralized location in building D108, HMC Dockyard, CFB Halifax, Nova Scotia, in strict accordance with DND specifications and drawings.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—PURCHASE OF AIR MATTRESSES

Question No. 1,966—Mr. Reynolds:

1. Does the government purchase top quality air mattresses at a price of $44.20 and, if so (a) are such mattresses available at lower prices (b) what benefit makes such expenditure justifiable?

2. Does the Department of Supply and Services rely on a single supplier or do they request tenders for the item?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): In so far as DSS is concerned: 1. The price for the most recent purchase was $48.66 each, f.o.b. manufacturer's plant. (a) No. (b) This is a highly specialized, lightweight air mattress carried in arctic kits. The mattress has special features such as special valves, vulcanized joints, and an integral inflating device that excludes moisture. Failure of the mattress to operate effectively could result in the user freezing to death.

2. A great deal of effort was made to interest potential suppliers to manufacture this special mattress but without success. Only one response was received to a number of invitations to tender. Tenders will be requested for subsequent purchases and attempts will continue to interest other qualified manufacturers to bid.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—CONTRACT FOR FIRE EXTINGUISHING FOAM

Question No. 1,972—Mr. Reynolds:

1. Was a contract awarded by the Department of Supply and Services on June 18, 1974 to Laurentian Concentrates Ltd., Ottawa, Ontario for 118,570 gallons of liquid concentrate fire extinguishing foam at a cost of $513,498?

2. Was the contract put to tender?

3. What were the names of other companies tendering and what were the bids received?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): In so far as DSS is concerned: 1. Yes, except the date of contract was June 3, 1974; the news release was dated June 18, 1974.

2. No. The foam is a "qualified product" and manufactured in accordance with Canadian Government Specification Board Specification 28-GP-28. Laurentian Concentrates Limited is the only Canadian manufacturer for this particular type of foam and holds qualification approval to the governing specification. The contract was negotiated following a cost analysis by DSS of the company's pricing structure.

3. Not applicable.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—CONTRACT FOR HAY

Question No. 1,990—Mr. Reynolds:

1. Was a contract awarded by the Department of Supply and Services in September 1973 to Lynn Reid, Alberta for a quantity of hay?

2. For what department was this purchase made and for what reason?

3. What was the cost?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. Yes.

2. Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Feed for horses, deer and buffalo in the Banff National Park.

3. $10,900.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—COST OF MATERIALS HANDLING

Question No. 1,997—Mr. Reynolds:

1. How many dollars were spent by the Department of Supply and Services in the last fiscal year for employees responsible for materials handling?

2. What is the approximate number of persons working in this area?

3. What is the dollar value of inventory items in the Department's warehouses?

4. How many dollars in stock were issued in the last fiscal year?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): In so far as DSS is concerned: 1. $2,316,000 in fiscal year 1973-74. This covers the whole range of material handling functions within the stocked item supply activity.

2. 270 man-years was expended in support of the stocked item supply activity in fiscal year 1973-74.

3. $7,521,000 as of March 31, 1974.

4. $29 million for fiscal year 1973-74.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—CONTRACT FOR TURBINE FUEL

Question No. 2,002—Mr. Reynolds:

1. Was a contract awarded to Imperial Oil, Ottawa, Ontario for the supply of approximately 17,500,000 gallons of turbine fuel at a cost of $5,584,032 during the third week of May 1974?

2. For that same week was a contract awarded to British Petroleum Montreal for the supply of approximately 13,000,000 gallons of turbine fuel valued at $5,559,100?

3. Was the fuel (a) under Part 1 to be delivered to British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba (b) under Part 2 to be shipped solely to CFB Bagotville?

4. For what reason was Imperial Oil not contracted at the same per gallon price for fuels to be shipped to CFB Bagotville?

[Mr. Reynolds.]

5. In co-ordinating the purchase effort, can the Minister of Supply and Services explain his policy vis-à-vis the attainment of aviation fuel?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): In so far as DSS is concerned: 1. A contract in the amount of $5,584,832 was issued to Imperial Oil Limited on May 3, 1974 for the supply of an estimated 15,663,375 gallons of turbine fuel, and 1,700,000 gallons of grade 115/145 aviation gasoline. The news release covering the award of this contract was dated May 16, 1974.

2. The contract to British Petroleum Canada for 13 million gallons of aviation turbine fuel was issued May 3, 1974 in the amount of $5,599,100. The value of the contract as shown in the English language version of the news release is in error. The correct figure appears in the French language version.

3. (a) Yes; (b) Yes.

4. Imperial Oil Limited was invited to tender for the supply of aviation turbine fuel for CFB Bagotville but declined because they were not in a position to quote on this requirement. The price per gallon of fuel varies with the destination and depends on such factors as transportation costs and method of delivery.

5. Competitive tenders are invited by geographical areas from all firms considered to be in a position to supply. On any annual requirements in excess of 500,000 gallons bids are invited on an f.o.b. refinery and f.o.b. destination basis in order that the transportation cost may be assessed. National Defence requirements usually require delivery of fuel to on-base bulk storage facilities on a call-up basis. Ministry of Transport requirements are for delivery on an into-plane basis. Tenders are invited and competitive bids obtained. Air crews present a company credit card to obtain delivery of fuel at the contracted price. A similar arrangement applies for RCMP and National Research Council aircraft.

RIDEAU CANAL

Question No. 2,172—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Does the government have plans to proceed with further mechanization of lock facilities on the Rideau Canal and, if so, what are such plans including (a) estimated costs involved (b) locations where work will be done (c) dates on which such work will commence?

2. Will the government take steps to see that the historic nature of the Rideau Canal is not destroyed in any way and, if so, what are all such steps?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. No.

2. Yes, by preservation and restoration of existing structures.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

PETROLEUM ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING THE ADMINISTRATION OF INTERPROVINCIAL, EXPORT AND IMPORT TRADE IN PETROLEUM AND PETROLEUM PRODUCTS

[Translation]

The House resumed, from Monday, December 9, consideration in committee of Bill C-32, to impose a charge on the export of crude oil and certain petroleum products, to provide compensation for certain petroleum costs and to regulate the price of Canadian crude oil and natural gas in interprovincial and export trade—Mr. Laniel in the chair.

[English]

On clause 2—Definitions.

The Chairman: When the committee rose on Monday, December 9, clause 2 of the bill was under consideration. Shall clause 2 carry?

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, we have some slight reservations and there are a few remarks we want to make, but I wonder if the minister is prepared at this time to bring us up to date on what has happened with regard to the other issues dealt with in this bill.

Members of the committee will recall that as a result of an arrangement worked out, it was agreed that discussion on the bill would be postponed subject to certain arrangements which were then entered into with regard to the continued imposition of the export tax and the right of the government to make compensation in parts of the country to bring about general equalization. Since then we have had a federal-provincial conference and there have been some changes in the world; much oil and gas has flowed through the pipelines and some gas has been found elsewhere. I wonder if the minister would like to make a preliminary statement to bring us up to date, so far as he is able, on the conference, he views and what is likely to happen in the government's opinion.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, as the committee may recall, the purposes of the bill are really three fold. It is to provide a legislative base for the export charge which has been used for the purpose of funding the compensation program. The compensation program paid in a relatively small amount to users in British Columbia and a more substantial amount to users in Quebec and the east in order to keep the international price at about $5 below the world price and, in effect, to carry out the government's undertaking to establish a single national price, subject only to differences for transportation costs, at a figure substantially below the world price. The bill does that by providing for the export charge, if I may say so, not just in relation to the current period but also for the several forms that charge took from back into 1974 as the charge was increased with the increase in international oil prices.

The second aspect of the bill is to authorize the payment of compensation. Under that particular heading it sets up an administration whereby the government, and particularly the energy supplies allocation board, might engage in monitoring the compensation system to make sure that indeed the claims being made by the importers are based on actual payments they have to make, and to make certain also that they in turn are honouring the lower price in wholesale transactions. Third, the bill is to provide a mechanism for setting the price in Canada initially for oil and subsequently for natural gas.

The bill, or the predecessor to the bill, was first introduced in the spring of 1974. It was reintroduced after the election campaign and after the gas arbitration hearings had been started in the province of Alberta, when it became clear that in order to establish an effective national price it was desirable to take jurisdiction over both natural gas and oil and therefore the subject matter was changed to include gas as well.

With regard to the meeting of first ministers which took place last week and to which the hon. gentleman made reference, as he knows, the government was unable to reach a consensus at the meeting of first ministers on the appropriate level for either the price of oil or the price of natural gas. Therefore, we will have to continue seeking a consensus on this question outside that meeting, of course, and more particularly by way of bilateral discussions with the producing provinces and with the consuming provinces which will, of course, be affected by this legislation.

In terms of timing, I could set out a relatively specific agenda, at least in terms of the order of priorities to be considered. The first of the questions to which we will be giving our attention is with respect to gas export prices. The House will recall that on the basis of a report given by the National Energy Board last year pursuant to regulation 11A of the National Energy Board regulations, the government established the export price of Canadian gas going from Canada into the United States at a $1 level across the board, that is, from the west to the easternmost point of export.

At the same time, it indicated that the board would have under scrutiny the next steps in this regard and that Canada's export customers could expect price increases in due course. The board has indeed scrutinized this question again and has delivered to myself the second report pursuant to regulation 11A. That report will be going before my colleagues within the next several days for their consideration and action. I am anticipating that the government will be making a decision in that regard and that the probable effective day of the decision in that respect will be around August 1.

In the case of the province of Alberta, the decision on gas export prices imposes a certain complication. One of the objectives we will have, through the meetings of my officials within the next several days or a week with Alberta officials, will be to discuss some procedure whereby the proceeds from the increase in export gas prices may be passed back in the first place to the exporters themselves, back to the producing industry, and if possible to achieve an even balance throughout the producing industry so that there can be a cash flow registered to them so they may engage in further exploration and development. In other words, the purpose would be to try to flow the proceeds back to the producing industry on an even basis so that there could be a general incentive to the industry in Alberta. As I say, that is a matter which is of some complexity and it will require fairly extensive technical discussion with the Alberta officials in particular.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

On the second of the issues, in terms of discussions—that of dealing with domestic gas prices—this comes second in time because, as opposed to oil prices, there is now a time constraint with regard to natural gas pricing in Canada. Proceedings under the Alberta arbitration law are now under way that will lead to a possible increase in the price of natural gas to Canadian users on November 1, 1975.

As a result of the discussions at the meetings last week, and in particular as a result of the action of Premier Lougheed and his officials, action has been taken to delay these arbitration proceedings in Alberta so that the further discussions we have referred to between the producing and consuming provinces can take place, in the hope that some agreement might be obtained as to the level of natural gas pricing in Canada both for this year and for years to come. As I said, the premier intervened in that regard with respect to the arbitration proceedings, but, I put it on the record, specifically on the understanding that the November 1 date for a price change would not be altered, and that this will be recognized.

One of the difficult questions to be discussed with the province of Alberta in this regard is the problem of regulatory delay. Unless the purchasing companies, both TransCanada PipeLine and the companies purchasing from it such as Northern and Central Gas, Consumers' Gas and Union Gas, have a certain period of time in which they can be advised in advance of the price increase, then they in turn will have difficulty making application to the appropriate regulatory tribunal, the National Energy Board in the case of TransCanada PipeLines and the Ontario Energy Board in the case of the three distribution companies. So we could be in a situation where the companies are put in serious jeopardy by having a price increase going into effect on November 1 and not being able to recover this increase in the price of gas immediately the price increase is introduced.

While a certain amount of time has been agreed between the federal government and the provincial government, there are active time constraints in operation and it is important that we arrive, if possible, at an early agreement on the appropriate pricing of natural gas in Canada.

There are really two questions involved here in the domestic natural gas situation. The first is the level of natural gas pricing. Certainly for this year—that is, commencing November 1—and also, if possible, as was suggested at the conference, not only for this year but for subsequent years we are trying to determine a procedure to increase the price of natural gas in relation to the price of crude oil.

The second question that we have to deal with is with regard to freeing up additional supplies of gas. The Alberta Energy Resources Conservation Board some two years ago issued to TransCanada PipeLines permits that would allow it to remove from the province of Alberta additional quantities of natural gas to supply the demands of its customers in the consuming provinces, namely, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario and Quebec. The government of Alberta, by a policy decision, has chosen not to issue the orders in council authorizing those additional supplies of natural gas until it is satisfied that Alberta gas generally is being sold at satisfactory prices.

Up to the present time, that has not been a major constraint on the gas companies or users in Canada, but there is some anticipation, particularly on the part of TransCanada, that unless further gas supplies are authorized in the relatively near future, there will indeed be a constraint on meeting further Canadian demand for gas during the coming winter. Therefore, we are faced with the risk of shortages this coming winter, not for any practical reasons in the reservoir but because of a political decision taken by the Alberta government.

The position of the government of Canada is that if we can agree on an appropriate level of domestic gas pricing in Canada, then we would be entitled to look to the government of Alberta at the same time to lift its embargo on gas for its traditional customers in the other parts of Canada. The discussions that are going to take place between federal representatives and the provinces will cover both the question of pricing formula and making additional supplies available.

The third of the major questions in regard to domestic oil pricing is one that has a national impact beyond the area in which Canadian oil is used in that it affects all ten provinces. Therefore, any discussions of this kind would not be confined, as the natural gas discussion would be, to the producing province and its four principal customers but would relate to all provinces. There is really no time constraint involved here. For example, there is no fixed date, unlike the November 1 date with respect to natural gas, by which or in advance of which a government decision has to be reached. Indeed, Premier Lougheed has indicated, and he repeated again in a television broadcast this past weekend, that he sees no need from his standpoint for any increase in the oil price while meaningful discussions are taking place in this regard.

Therefore, we will seek to undertake such discussions both with the producers and with the consumers to see whether we can arrive at some agreement that all will find acceptable within the current state of the economy. The Prime Minister has indicated that our effort would be toward continuing to get a consensus, as we attempted to do so at the meeting just past and as we achieved last year. This will be our first objective.

On the other hand, Mr. Chairman, I noticed that Premier Blakeney of Saskatchewan has indicated that he will be seeking a price increase per barrel of $2.50, although in the press report that I saw there was no indication as to the time constraint he was seeking. My hope is that he will withhold action of this kind until we can arrive at some agreement; but under the present state of the law, of course, if he chooses to increase the price there is no action that the federal government can take to prevent it from coming about.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, may I ask a question at this point? Did the ministers agree at the conference last week that the agreement that was reached on May 27 last year regarding $6.50 per barrel would hold until the end of June? Do I take it that no producing province is likely to alter the price prior to the termination date of the voluntary agreement entered into last year?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I cannot be sure of that, Mr. Chairman. The question really was not narrowed down in this regard. I am not sure what the intention of Saskatchewan is, but I hope it will not be to take any action either prior to the determination of a national consensus or, conversely, until it is certain that no agreement can be arrived at between the consuming and the producing provinces.

The Prime Minister indicated to the premiers, and he repeated again for the public media, that while under this particular bill we are seeking authority from parliament for, in effect, setting a ceiling on prices, a ceiling, in my estimation, somewhat below the increase of $2.50 per barrel that Premier Blakeney referred to, we will not take that authority unless there is a breakdown in the kind of consensus we have arrived at. While we will be seeking the authority under this particular bill to have that right after proclamation, we will not be proclaiming the parts of the bill dealing with the setting of prices of oil and natural gas without agreement until there is failure to come to an agreement by the consensus procedure to which I have referred.

To sum up, in response to the request for the hon. member for Peace River, the discussion will proceed to deal with the export price of gas in regard to which there is perhaps less interprovincial or federal-provincial disagreement than a technical problem to be overcome in redistributing the proceeds. From there we will proceed to the question of natural gas pricing, in regard to which there is a rather sharp difference of opinion between the producing and consuming provinces. We will then move on to the question of oil pricing as the third matter in time, with regard to which there has been rather less insistence on a strict timetable than there has been with the other two questions.

The government, through my officials, through the National Energy Board and, in due course, with the participation of our provincial counterparts, will seek to achieve the kind of agreement to which the Prime Minister referred. If it cannot be achieved, if there is a breakdown in discussions and we find we cannot reach a general agreement which meets the general economic interest and the interest of the producing provinces, then the federal government, as Premier Davis indicated we should, will implement the authority provided by this bill and seek to determine a price for the Canadian market at levels which will be acceptable from the standpoint of the Canadian economy without being unduly unfair to the interests of producing provinces.

Mr. Stanfield: Without being unduly unfair?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The Leader of the Opposition takes exception to my phrase. I ought to have said that we will take action which will not be unfair to the producing provinces. We hope that the agreement will not break down. If it does, then, as Premier Davis indicated, the ultimate responsibility for action rests on the federal government. For that reason we seek passage of this bill.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, the minister's statement was informative and useful. I am sure that as debate proceeds we shall be given enough information to enable other people in the country who are deeply involved in this matter to be made fully aware of what is happening in this House. I am not one to write off federal-provincial conferences, but it might be better if some had never been held. However, the most recent conference will, I think, prove useful to the first ministers, the people of Canada and, I believe, to this House. Such conferences provide opportunities for heads of government who have just come through elections to be statesmanlike, and for others who may face the electorate in the near future to be political. This is to be expected, and I do not take exception to it.

Mr. Stanfield: But what about those who have just been elected but are political?

Mr. Baldwin: I come now to the gist of our complaints about this bill. We made it plain when this bill was debated last October and November that we agreed with certain parts of it. The settlement, so to speak, which allowed this bill to be put aside temporarily was made in circumstances which indicated my party's approval of certain aspects of the measure. The present bill, like so many others, contains parts which give rise to concern. We shall indicate our concern and suggest amendments we may feel constrained to move in order to give effect to our objections.

When the bill was debated previously, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain put on record several suggested amendments which we may move in the present debate. Because of what the minister just said we may alter some of our amendments, delete some and perhaps add some fresh ones. We will try to make this a better and more effective bill, on behalf of the people of Canada. Governments propose legislation from mixed motives. They keep one eye on politics, another on the economy and sometimes overlook the legality of legislation. I do not say this disparagingly. Legislating, after all, is the responsibility of this House, of this parliament; it is not the responsibility of the government.

In general, the federal government should be the custodian of the aspirations of people of all parts of Canada. To some extent it has retreated from that attitude and tended to ignore minority rights except when the minority is large enough to wield considerable political power. The government has abandoned itself to the pursuit of power, as this bill shows. Here it seeks to gather into the hands of the monolithic Ottawa bureaucracy a massive concentration of authority.

To attain its ends the government sometimes uses methods of excessive secrecy, of delegated authority, or methods which ignore the constitution. I do not think the constitution is deliberately flouted, although I think that the present measure, in part at least, ignores the constitution of this country. People who should know better accept this situation casually. They think it is all right for the government to pull off a little bit of the constitution here and chip a little bit away somewhere else. I suggest that the present measure seeks to give the government more authority than those who drafted the constitution intended it should have. I suggest it is the kind of measure which the courts have said do not fall within the four corners of the competence of the Government of Canada to enact.

I can understand the wish of the government to deal with tough, difficult and contentious problems such as the one it faces. I can understand the minister's wish to take a short-cut, to short-circuit the constitution, as it were, for purposes of expediency. Certainly, the government is in a difficult position. I suggest to members of this committee that our duty is larger than that. This is not a court of law, although in many respects this House is the highest court in the country. This House does not decide alone on the basis of legal argument. We do not expect arguments regarding the constitutional validity of government measures to be decided as if they are being raised in a court of law. We know better. What are made in this House are political decisions. Although a government may realize that a proposal lies outside the constitution, it can force the proposal through the House by virtue of its majority and allow others to challenge its validity in the courts.

That may be the government's position, but it is not a position which I support. That position should not recommend itself to members of this House who, after all, are not only members of parliament but people who represent the rights, privileges and responsibilities of the regions and provinces from which they come. They have that responsibility to carry out in this House.

Under these circumstances it is not good enough for a government ruthlessly to bulldoze legislation through if it contains clauses which offend the constitution of this country. This is not just an academic issue. I strongly believe that federalism in this country has been brought to a higher degree of perfection than in most countries which have the federal system. This particular issue of energy, energy prices and supply and the discussions which have taken place is a good indication of that. There have been some effective and useful discussions which probably could not have taken place in any other federal system than the one we have in Canada.

I suggest that true federalism can only endure when the sovereignty of the several parts is maintained. It is clear from the debates on confederation that our parliament was designed with a view to giving the people of the provinces a realistic opportunity to give voice to their attitudes. The voice of the federal parliament must be that of the whole country, yet consistent with the opportunity to reflect and represent regional positions within the terms of the constitution. If we cannot do that, there is no true federalism.

What we have is a social contract, in the form of a constitution, between the people of the various provinces and the country as a whole, a contract which permits the provincial populations to emphasize their distinctiveness with regard to matters under their jurisdiction, their own peculiar requirements and their potential and need to proceed in the way which they think is most appropriate, socially and economically, while at the same time yielding for the common good of the nation an adequate share of their resources, skills and commitments.

I think the capacity for diversity and uniqueness which we have had in this country and which has been reflected in the positions taken in this House and in provincial legislatures has made Canada a good place in which to live. I am not prepared to sit idly by while measures are proposed by the government which to some extent and purpose contain good proposals, yet contain other things which in my opinion and in the opinion of a lot of other people fall squarely outside the right of this parliament to enact. That is what I propose to deal with in particular at this time.

We take exception to certain clauses, and I do not intend to debate them seriatim at this time, which purport to give the federal government power to unilaterally establish maximum prices. For example, it states in clause 36:

—establish maximum prices for the various qualities and kinds of crude oil to which this part applies that are produced, extracted or recovered in that province—

Clause 51 gives a similar right with regard to natural gas. I would point out that you cannot read clause 36 without also reading clauses 40 to 43. I feel that I must make reference to those. Without that, it is difficult to lay before the committee the reason why we intend, at the appropriate place, to move an amendment and to explain at this time the reasoning behind that proposal. I realize the amendment cannot be moved until we get to the clause. However, I think it would be useful for the government to know our position now. I quote from the bill:

40. No person shall engage in any transaction that involves

(a) the selling of any crude oil to a person for consumption elsewhere than in the exporting province, . . .

(d) the collecting, gathering, accumulation, mixing or blending of any crude oil for any of the purposes mentioned in paragraphs (a) to (c), or . . .

41. No person shall purchase any crude oil from any person in an exporting province who is not a licensee except when the crude oil is being purchased within that province for consumption therein.

42. No person other than a licensee shall sell any crude oil in an exporting province except when the crude oil is being sold within that province for consumption therein.

That is squarely in conflict with the existing jurisprudence with regard to the rights of the federal parliament. When we were involved in this debate last December I had just received a copy of the decision by Mr. Justice Hughes on a case involving the province of Saskatchewan and an oil company. I had not then had time to peruse the full detail of the reasons for judgment, but I have since had that opportunity. I understand the case is now before the appeal court of that province.

No one can read that case without coming to the conclusion that the very valid and intelligent reasons given by Mr. Justice Hughes, with which I am in complete accord, are squarely in conflict with the powers the federal government is attempting to have this parliament give it by the clauses to which I have referred. Without going into the details of the Saskatchewan case at this time—

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): What is the citation, please?

Mr. Baldwin: It is Canadian Industrial Gas and Oil Limited v. the Government of Saskatchewan and the Attorney General for the province of Saskatchewan. I regret I am unable to give the full citation. I imagine the minister's officials have studied it with some care. It is a very lengthy judgment. The learned trial judge, in 161 pages, went into considerable detail. He dealt with all the existing constitutional authorities on this, I admit, very difficult and confusing problem of the rights of the federal government with regard to the regulation of trade and commerce.

The case was decided on a statement of facts which included a statement that of the oil recovered in the province of Saskatchewan, approximately 98 per cent was exported. In part the case dealt with the question of whether the royalties and taxes referred to in the regulations were direct or indirect taxes. We have no concern about that. A considerable amount of attention was paid to the fact that what the province proposed to do in fact constituted an imposition of a price mechanism and the fixing of prices of crude petroleum of which 98 per cent was being exported from the province. Mr. Justice Hughes referred to a number of judgments, one of which I shall give to my hon. friend: it was Carnation Company Limited v. the Quebec Agricultural Marketing Board et al. I think it is to be found in RSC, chapter 238, 1968.

In the latter case, the province of Quebec had enacted legislation which permitted the establishment of boards to provide for the sale of milk to plants for processing. The facts in that case established that the board had set up a pricing mechanism; it fixed the price at which products were purchased. It was shown that the greatest amount of the milk sold and processed would be exported from the province.

Mr. Justice Hughes, in the Saskatchewan case, referred to that case as well as to others and said it might well happen that because a province enacted statutes affecting the price at which a commodity was sold in the province, interprovincial or international dealings in that commodity would be affected. Nevertheless, if there was no direct intent to exercise some sort of direct control over interprovincial or international trade, the provincial action was valid. It was on the basis of the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in the Carnation case and some other cases that the learned judge reached his decision. As has been pointed out, the decision has been appealed and it will probably go to the Supreme Court of Canada.

The Chairman: Order, please. I have allowed the hon. member to continue somewhat beyond his time because of the complexity of his argument. Perhaps he would now recognize that his time has expired or else seek the unanimous consent of the committee to continue. Is it agreed that the hon. member may continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Baldwin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will try to wind up these remarks within a reasonable length of time. I suggest that if the reasons for the judgment of Mr. Justice Hughes, based on the decision of the Supreme Court in the Quebec case are valid, then the provinces have the right to fix prices in respect of commodities which they export even though the fixing of those prices affects interprovincial and international trade. The fact that a province has established a price is bound to have an impact, one which will make itself felt when the product comes out at the other end of the pipeline.

Let us see what the situation might be in other important natural resources; for example, in the lumber industry. If the federal parliament has the right to enact legislation such as is proposed in the clauses of Bill C-32 which I have read, and others, what is to prevent the federal government from proposing to parliament that it be allowed to move into British Columbia and say, "We intend to establish a mechanism to set the price of lumber delivered to sawmills, pulpmills, or plywood plants"?

As hon. members are aware, a large proportion of the lumber produced in British Columbia is exported in one form or another. I do not know what the exact percentage is, but it may be as high as 80 per cent. Some of my hon. friends may be able to tell us the figure. But the federal government could say the matter fell squarely within its jurisdiction because it involved the regulation of trade and commerce.

The same attitude could be taken with respect to electrical energy. The government could go to the province of Quebec and say, "You are producing energy, and though you are using a certain amount within the limits of the province, it is your intention, we understand, to export a considerable quantity to the state of New York or elsewhere, and since we are dealing here with a commodity which enters into interprovincial and international trade, we are able to exercise our prerogative and fix the price at which it is delivered in the province."

The minister might, of course, invite me to consider what my own government did when in office—I see he is nodding his head—particularly in connection with the establishment of the National Energy Board. He will no doubt ask, "What about the Export and Import Permits Act, and so on?" Of course, Mr. Chairman, in the crazy-quilt of our constitutional practice these things are possible because of the supremacy of the federal government in the area of trade across interprovincial and, in particular, international boundaries. The jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board is another example.

There are many ways by which the federal government, attaching conditions to the transport or export of commodities interprovincially or internationally, may have a perfect legal right to do things which end up in the event as price fixing or price restraint when the commodity concerned reaches the other end of the pipeline. But what the government is attempting to do here is something entirely different. It is saying, "We can come right into a province and fix the price of a commodity such as crude oil at the source at whatever figure we think to be proper." It is for the people of the province concerned to accept that price, as it is for the people in the rest of Canada to accept it: that is the position the government is taking, as I see it, on the basis of the clauses I have read.

I do not know what is the precise amount of crude oil produced in Alberta which is refined in that province; it may be between 15 and 20 per cent. But certainly, if the federal government is given the unrestricted power referred to in clause 36 and in clauses 40 to 44, the central government will be entitled to move in and fix the price despite the fact that a considerable percentage of the crude is not to be exported. There is no doubt that the right will be given automatically if this bill is passed in its present form. I will not continue with this point as we will have further opportunity for exchanges with the minister later and he will probably want to meet my arguments. I indicate to him that it is our intention to move amendments in this connection at the appropriate time.

As a precedent, I would refer the minister to section 11 of the Energy Supplies Emergency Act which indicates that this government recognized, in 1973, its limitations in respect of the question of petroleum supplies, because the government inserted in that act the provision that only when the governor in council was of the opinion that a national emergency existed by reason of actual or anticipated shortages of petroleum, or disturbances in the petroleum market that affected or would affect the economic stability of Canada, and that it was necessary in the national interest to conserve the supplies of petroleum products within Canada, the governor in council could, by order, so declare, and then it went on to give the right to allocate supplies. That is a pretty good indication that the government is probably in some doubt as to whether it can go as far as some of these clauses in Bill C-32 would give it the right to go.

Let me conclude at this time on this note. I hope the Prime Minister will in fact be successful in his discussions with the provincial governments in working out this very difficult and controversial matter of arriving at a consensus on price. This happened about a year ago and it could happen again. Perhaps it will not take place right away because of some political factors involved at this time which make it difficult. I have confidence that the Prime Minister will make the attempt, and I hope he will be successful. If he is not, there is an interesting position to be adopted by the federal government, namely, bilateral discussions with the producing provinces through which the federal government will, hopefully, work out an agreement as to price. This will be the subject of an agreement and probably the subject of an order in council.

We have amendments to propose that will make it quite plain that the provincial government in question must in fact be a participant before such an arrangement becomes valid. If that cannot be done because of the difficulties of the problems, it does not fall within the right of parliament to give this authority to the federal government merely because it looks good or is the easy way. Parliament cannot give the Government of Canada a right which parliament does not have the right to give.

I know the minister, the Prime Minister and others have said they will try to work out an agreement, but if they cannot do so then obviously someone must intervene and take the authority to change or establish the price. But that alone is not a good enough authority. In spite of what problems there may be, merely because there is a disagreement which cannot be solved does not permit this government to overlook the positive terms of the constitution by saying that because there has been failure to reach an agreement, as the supreme government it will fix the price, but unless it can precede such an act by a declaration of the kind of emergency the government saw fit to cover in section 11 of the Energy Supplies Emergency Act, it smacks of constitutional violation.

As long as we have a federal state or a system such as the one we have now, problems of this kind will arise and pose serious questions. It is not good enough, in my view, and I believe in the view of many members of this House, that for that reason alone the Government of Canada can be given the authority which this parliament has not the right to give it, and this is the precise situation we see and will be reflected in the amendments we will be bringing before the House in due course.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, I will undertake to the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands to be very brief if I can put my reply on the constitutional question back to back with the hon. gentleman's argument.

The bill being put forward in this respect carries with it the judgment of the Department of Justice that it is, indeed, within the legislative power of the Parliament of Canada to pass this particular enactment. The hon. gentleman raised a question which I suppose is the critical one, and that is whether the Government of Canada can reach into a province and fix a particular price for petroleum. Our response is, as the hon. gentleman indicated, in this particular bill we are not seeking to do so in regard to the use within the province of Alberta, but when the commodity is, or is to be introduced into interprovincial trade, at that point the federal jurisdiction over interprovincial trade takes over and that jurisdiction applies.

Indeed, the hon. gentleman referred to the CIGOL case which is apparently now before the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal. It being sub judice, perhaps I should not comment on it. I really need not do so, in view of the fact the Supreme Court of Canada has decided, in relation to the jurisdiction of the National Energy Board, that the Government of Canada does have jurisdiction to set the price of oil and oil products within a particular province.

In that case it was the national oil policy of the Government of Canada to keep up prices to the consumers of oil in Ontario west of the Ottawa Valley line to a higher level than would otherwise have been the case if competing products from the Montreal refining and marketing area were allowed to be sold west of the Ottawa Valley line. In the CalOil case the Supreme Court of Canada held that it was within the jurisdiction of the Government of Canada to set the price, through the agency adopted there, of oil within the province. This is, of course, a matter of constitutional debate, but I suppose in every one of these cases the Department of Justice obviously feels that on the basis of the CalOil case there is authority to go ahead, as in this particular case.

I should also like to make one other point which I neglected to make earlier. As a result of an examination of the bill by interested governments and a number of interested citizens, amendments have been proposed to the federal government. Copies of these were distributed to members of the House last December. I have additional copies here, if anyone is interested. I have given copies to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain, to the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, and to the hon. member for Abitibi. Copies are available, and I would be glad to pass them out.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, the consideration of Bill C-32 regarding a petroleum administration act was set aside for the purpose of waiting until the first ministers' conference had taken place, in order that we might see what measure of agreement was reached by the heads of the various governments in Canada. It appears now that no consensus was reached. The Prime Minister is quoted as having said during his press conference following the first ministers' conference that it was the intention of the Government of Canada to proceed with the passage of this legislation so that under part II of the petroleum administration act the federal government could set the prices of crude oil and natural gas.

When this measure was before the House for second reading, my colleagues supported it because we felt then, as we do now, that if no agreement could be reached between the producing provinces and the Government of Canada, then the federal government must have the authority to set the price, as that is the only way we could have a two-price system in Canada. It is also the only way we can exert some restraint to prevent the prices of oil and gas escalating to unnecessarily high levels.

This does not mean that we necessarily support an increase in the price of crude oil or natural gas. Any decision by the government to raise these prices could well depend upon a number of factors, the major one being who would receive the benefit of such increases in price. But on the question of whether the government should have the legislative authority to exercise this power, which we feel constitutionally it is entitled to have on all commodities which enter into interprovincial or international trade, there can be no doubt.

On the matter of whether the government should raise the price, and if so, by how much, and who would receive the benefit of any increase, is something which we will of course discuss now and on future occasions when a decision is made. I should like to say to the government, however, that I am not sure bilateral discussions with the provinces, now that the first ministers' conference has failed to reach an agreement, can be very useful if the minister is able to lay a loaded gun on the bargaining table and say, in effect, that he has the power to set the price and now they had better agree to an increase in price. I am not sure that is the best way to carry on negotiations or that it will receive the best response from the producing provinces.

I am not pressing the matter, but I suggest to the minister that there might be some value in either holding this bill at third reading until he is convinced there is no possibility whatever of reaching a consensus with the producing provinces and the provinces generally or, as an alternative, that the legislation be passed, if the minister wants it passed quickly, without the mandatory clauses such as clauses 36 and 52 being included. Then he could bring in a separate bill that would amend this legislation later if he should find he is unable to reach a consensus.

I do not know how quickly the minister wants the other powers under this legislation. I imagine he needs them, for instance, in respect of compensation payments. However, he might give some thought to either of the alternatives I have suggested. He could take out the mandatory provisions, pass this legislation quickly and then later introduce a bill some time early in June. If the minister should find he cannot obtain any consensus, this might be a more efficient way to expedite the matter than by putting this bill through in its present form.

If the government has decided to raise the price, then I think there are some points which ought to be clarified. I do not think they were clarified by the minister's opening statement. There is no doubt concerning the government's intentions. The Prime Minister's opening statement to the first ministers' conference contained this comment:

> So my colleagues in the government and I have come reluctantly to believe that the price of oil in Canada must go up—up towards the world price. It need not go all the way up. We should watch what happens to the world price and decide from year to year what we should do. But the price for the year beginning in July will have to be higher than it is now. How much higher we should discuss.

So, the government has made it perfectly clear that it thinks the price should rise. I was a little confused by the statement attributed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, although the press report may not be accurate, in which he said that it might not be necessary for the federal government unilaterally to set a price if he were convinced that the provinces would not unilaterally set a price. I was not clear about that.

I take it that the government has now committed itself to raising the price of crude oil at the end of June. I take it for granted that between now and the end of June the producing provinces will keep the commitment they made to adhere to the price of $6.50 a barrel until June 30 this year, but we need to know now what will happen at the end of June in the event that the federal government and the producing provinces, or indeed all the provinces, are not able to reach a consensus. If the federal government is committed to raising the price, I think the federal government ought to give to the committee and to the Canadian people generally some idea of what increase it has in mind.

Much is made of Premier Blakeney having talked about an increase of $2.50 a barrel. The minister said he thought it should be something less than that, so I make a guess that the minister probably has in mind $2 a barrel. I think it would be helpful to the general discussion if we were dealing with something reasonably specific. The government does not make clear to the committee whether it endorses the suggestion of Saskatchewan in respect of $2.50 or intends to satisfy Ontario by suggesting $1.50. I realize there must be compromise, and I think the government should give us the target figure it has in mind.

However, from the point of view of this party, whatever the figure is, I hope there will be some explanation from the minister concerning the justification for reaching such a price at the end of June. Certainly, it cannot be on the basis of increased cost of operation. Certainly, it is not because the oil companies are hard up: the profits they have made during the last two years exceed the profits made by any other segment of our economy. In his television broadcast the other night, the minister stressed the fact that there was a need for an increase in price because the oil industry needs more money for exploration.

I agree we would be justified in saying to the people of Canada that they will have to pay more for gasoline, for home heating fuel and for fuel to operate their farm machinery and fishing boats because the extra money they are being charged is to guarantee that they will have the wherewithal to heat their homes and run their cars, tractors and fishing boats ten years from now. However, I am not as optimistic as the minister when, according to press reports, he says he has received the assurance of the oil industry that any extra money it receives will be used for oil exploration. It certainly has not done so in the last few years. The price of oil has increased by about 120 per cent. Profits are at an all-time high, while exploration has gone down. In the last 12 months, 93 drilling rigs have left this country. What assurance do we have that any extra funds given to the oil industry will be used to find oil? It will go to finding oil, but will it go to finding oil in Canada? The multinational corporations will use their cash flow to look for oil in the North Sea, in the Middle East, in Brazil, in Venezuela or anywhere else where they have good opportunities.

If the Canadian people will pay $2 or $2.50 a barrel more than they are paying now—an increase which is totally unnecessary in order to meet operating costs—what assurance will they have that that money will be used in Canada to find oil supplies and additional gas reserves which will be used by the Canadian people? That is the question that the government must make clear to this committee and to the House. There can be no argument at all about any necessity for raising the price of crude oil in this country on any other basis than the fact that we need to find additional supplies for the years ahead.

The only way the Canadian people can be assured that the extra consumer price they pay will result in security of supply in the future is for the government and the producing provinces to control that extra amount of money and to see that it is used for exploration, rather than leaving it to the good intentions and tender mercies of the oil industry.

One of the ways in which the government could make it easier to work out some arrangement with the provinces to reach a consensus—which is what we are all hoping will happen—is for it to be prepared to review the measures with respect to resource taxation which it brought down in the last budget. It may be that the Minister of Finance, when he brings down his budget in the latter part of May, will be prepared to either drop the non-deductibility provision or at least to allow that 50 per cent of the royalties which an oil company or a resource company pays will be deductible for income tax purposes. Certainly, this is one of the areas which would help to bring about the consensus which is so badly needed.

I want to say a few words about the question of natural gas. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, in his opening remarks to the first ministers' conference said the following:

> The National Energy Board has recently completed its hearings and until we have its definitive view it is not possible to speak precisely.

However, there was ample evidence given the board that deliverability from conventional reserves is declining.

That is a matter for considerable concern, and I understand that in the discussions in the first ministers' conference the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources expressed his concern. I would ask the minister if some time in our discussions he can give us an assurance that this report on the availability of natural gas supplies will be made available to members of the House at an early date. The minister has already stated that the work of the board has been completed. How soon the board will be prepared to release the report, I do not know. I want to ask the minister if he can tell us how soon he expects it to be released, and if we will get copies at the earliest possible date, because I find it increasingly difficult to reconcile some of the estimates made by the National Energy Board with respect to marketable reserves of oil and gas.

For instance, in March of 1973 the joint venture of Dow Chemical and Dome Petroleum asked the National Energy Board for a permit to export some 500 billion cubic feet of ethane per day to the United States, and the board, in granting them permission for this export, pointed out that as of June 30, 1973, our marketable reserves had gone up by 13.8 per cent. In fact, they have gone up from 56.4 trillion cubic feet to 64.2 trillion cubic feet. There have been a number of finds since that time, particularly in northwestern and northeastern Alberta.

I always find it difficult to reconcile the fact that when the National Energy Board is looking at our marketable reserves where an application for a permit to export is concerned, they have a rosy picture of how much marketable reserves are available, but when it comes to making a general survey they seem to be much less optimistic. I for one do not want to see us stampeded, by any fictitious figures with respect to our gas reserves, into policies which in the long run could be harmful for this country.

The other thing I would like to ask the minister concerns prices for the export of natural gas. He pointed out the need for trying to work out a consensus between the producing and consuming provinces regarding the price of natural gas. I can appreciate that, but surely that does not apply to the export price, and it is no secret that we have been exporting natural gas to the United States at prices which are ridiculously low. In some instances we have been exporting natural gas to the United States at prices which are lower than the prices at which we are selling our gas to the consumers of the province of Ontario.

While I know the minister will point out that there are long-term contracts between the Canadian producers and the American gas distributing firms, the fact remains that under section 17 of the National Energy Board Act, that body has the power to amend, alter or rescind any of these export agreements. I have been disturbed for a long time at the tardiness with which the National Energy Board has applied itself to this problem. I do not think we need to wait for a consensus between the various provinces of Canada with respect to an export price, and I would ask the minister if he is urging the National Energy Board to review these export prices; and if they have reviewed them, what action do they intend to take, and how soon can we expect that action to bear fruit?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands has made a number of points to which I will be glad to respond. The first one concerns the reference that we have laid down a loaded pistol in this bill as a threat for the provinces in question. I suppose I could turn it around and point to statements made by Premier Blakeney such as when he says he is seeking a $2 or a $2.50 increase in price if his energy security fund is not accepted, a proposal which has been rejected by Premier Lougheed.

The power the province has at the moment to set the prices of natural gas and oil is really a loaded gun laid down for the consuming provinces and Canadians generally. I suppose it is really a matter of in whose hands that loaded gun ultimately should be, and I go back to the rather persuasive argument he made, that on the whole, while there should be every effort to balance the regional interests, ultimately it should be the federal government exercising responsibility and, for good or ill, being held responsible.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Time for a disarmament conference.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It was your colleague's metaphor, not mine, in the first place.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I do not think, however, that the Saskatchewan premier has asked his legislature to give him this kind of power at this particular time. This is a very sensitive time.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I do not think he has to ask! I think he has it now. He put the assertion that I was necessarily committed to an increase between now and the end of June, and that certainly is not my position. Indeed, I think that in the negotiation of oil prices, in particular, it probably will take longer than that. One of the ultimate possibilities in arriving at prices is that we will not just be talking about a 12-month period. We might be talking about a longer period of time. In order to get the acceptance of the producing provinces, we may talk about price increases a year or two years from now, perhaps on some kind of schedule to deal with the concerns expressed at the conference by consuming provinces that we might not have any price agreement at all in 1975.

The point the Prime Minister made and that I sought to make in my remarks is that over a period of time a price increase is inevitable in this country, both from the standpoint of generating additional funds for exploration and, of course, even more so from the standpoint of equity for the producing provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan who say that it is not fair that their commodity should be price-controlled when all other commodities being offered for sale are being sold on a wider market. The federal government arrived at this conclusion really because of these arguments of regional equity which have so often been put in this House and outside, and for a non-renewable resource, as pointed out by the hon. member for Peace River, once it goes down the pipe you have no chance at a later date of recovering that price. In that sense and in terms of regional equity, some price increase is indicated.

I couple my response with the comment the hon. member made, that I should name a target figure. It seems to me that would be the quickest way to turn off finally any negotiations if I put a price up there which everyone can shoot at. It seems to me that a far better mode of operation in these negotiations is to talk to them about a variety of figures for this year and subsequent years and some kind of scale of price increases which would at one time meet the objectives of the producing provinces like Saskatchewan and Alberta, and on the other hand taking account of the concerns of all the other provinces which are basically consumers whether from those two provinces or from foreign imports.

I am advised—and this is a matter upon which I would like to have further examination—that an assertion has been put forward in the conference as well as here that there has been a reduction in exploration. That is not correct. Tentative exploration figures for 1974 indicate it has gone up by some $90 million, and it is anticipated that in dollar terms it will go up again. I go on the assumption of the operation of the present tax laws and the impact on a particular corporation. If it moves out from under the tax shelter provided by the last budget, for example, and increases its dividend, this of course would be a disincentive; but as I said at the conference, if we find that there has been movement away from Canadian exploration in favour of exploration elsewhere or applying to other uses outside Canada, then we will indeed seek legislative means to deal with that.

With regard to the natural gas report, I indicated during the course of my remarks that the government had taken the initiative with the board under regulation 11A to seek a report in this regard. The report was made available last year with regard to the price increase, and then on the lion's share of gas for export we put the price up from—I am talking about the TransCanada contract—a border price of 38 cents per 1,000 cubic feet to $1 effective as of January 1 this year. We have a new regulation 11A report which we will also make public in due course—I am now putting it before cabinet—which, as I indicated, will see a further significant increase in price, so that in less than a year we will have seen a very substantial increase in price to our export customers.

The argument put forward by the hon. gentleman and sometimes by others is that with regard to our own countrymen we have to look to a certain phasing and we have an obligation to be reasonable, but with regard to export contracts we do not. Perhaps I am not being fair to the argument of the hon. gentleman, but let me say that this is the argument sometimes put forward, that we have to be careful what we do to our own countrymen but we can really "sock it" to the export consumer by any price increase we want. While we can reasonably expect to put prices up over a period of time, I would argue that it would not be wise to—

Mr. Symes: You are doing it with oil.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, we are doing it with oil. Those are commodities which were bought on a month to month basis and the customer has to take the market as he finds it from month to month, as opposed to the gas contracts which are long term and where it had been accepted that there would be extensive regulatory hearings before any further price increase would take place. I am suggesting that it is politic, from the standpoint of the federal government and from the standpoint of the people of Canada, to get a fair return from our export customer but in a way which will not cause him excessive hardship. While in this particular situation we may have the advantage over our American customers, we should remain conscious at the same time that at some future time the situation may well be reversed and we may be seeking a similar type of accommodation from them, and an application of the golden rule in this case is perhaps not only sound ethics but also has pretty sound practical application.

With regard to the natural gas report as opposed to the 11A report, the report on supply availability, as the hon. member knows the hearings were only completed a few weeks ago; the board is in the process of writing that report and completing its tables. It will, of course, be translated and I will be making it public, as I made the oil availability report public, just as soon as it is in a form which can be tabled in the House.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I would like to ask the minister a question before he sits down. I want to be clear about his statement. I understood the minister to say that he is not committed to raising the price of crude oil at the end of June. Is the minister saying that if no agreement is reached between the provinces and the federal government, the federal government may not exercise its powers under clause 2 of the petroleum administration act to fix the price at that time and may leave the matter in abeyance? Are we simply to assume that the price of $6.50 would continue?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, we would assume it would continue. If the province of Alberta and the province of Saskatchewan are not taking action at that time to force the price up, then the Government of Canada certainly would not take action to do so, particularly not if the discussions are continuing at that time leading to the possibility of some phased introduction over a longer period of time. It would seem to me that I should seek to remove the notion that we are committed willy-nilly to increasing the price on July 1 if in fact discussions are going to a point where we might reach this kind of agreement. Obviously, it would be unwise, merely because of the passing of that date, to put the price up. I think one of the best options for trying to reach some agreement in this regard is perhaps talking about a price increase over a period of years and perhaps some extension through 1975 at the existing price level. What the price will be, and what the outcome of those discussions will be, I cannot at this point say.

● (1650)

Mr. Symes: Madam Chairman, may I ask the minister a question arising out of his earlier comments? He was saying that if the price of oil went up and the government found that the oil companies were not using a portion of the increase for purposes of exploration, the government would take the necessary legislative action to see that this was done. Is the minister now stating government policy, and will this be a condition placed on any price increase, namely, that the oil companies will have to spend a certain percentage of such price increase on exploration and development? If so, what would the percentage be?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Madam Chairman, I repeat what I said at the conference, that indeed that would be the objective. If the companies fail to do this, the government would seek measures, fiscal or otherwise, to make certain that the lion's share went back into exploration and development in Canada.

Mr. Balfour: Madam Chairman, I have previously expressed reservations I have held regarding Bill C-32 and its predecessor, reservations that were in no way reduced by the minister's choice of language in his introductory remarks today. He said, if I may quote him as accurately as I can, that in his view it was desirable to take jurisdiction over natural gas as well as oil. The remark was made in the context of the unilateral pricing mechanism that it is intended to apply to natural gas.

I think that by his choice of words the minister has, either intentionally or possibly unintentionally, identified what is the fundamental question that is at issue, to my mind at any rate, in considering Bill C-32, and in particular in considering the unilateral price fixing mechanism contained in clause 36 and clause 52. This fundamental question is the jurisdictional conflict that arises over the ownership and control over oil and natural gas vis-à-vis the federal government and the governments of the producing provinces.

This question arises squarely and directly as a result of the sweeping powers which the minister intends to vest in the federal government under parts II and III of this bill. So far as I am concerned, to cast a vote in the House of Commons in favour of this bill in its present form would be tantamount to becoming an accessory to an attempted act of constitutional encroachment by the federal government over well established constitutional prerogatives of the provinces, an encroachment that is without parallel, I suggest, in the history of our country.

Surely our constitutional body of law makes clear that the ownership and control over natural resources situated within provincial boundaries is the exclusive prerogative of the provinces. Actually, until the so-called energy crisis of 1973 occurred, this jurisdiction was never seriously questioned so far as the ownership and control of oil and natural gas from western Canada was concerned. I suggest that the provincial jurisdiction to establish wellhead prices is included within the context of the statement I have just made, notwithstanding the CalOil case previously referred to by the minister. The CalOil case decided certain questions, but it decided questions with respect to pricing arrangements beyond provincial borders. Under the authority of the CalOil case, to indirectly fix wellhead prices in a province is, I suggest, to strain the authority of that particular jurisprudence far beyond reason.

I do not, by that statement, challenge the collateral jurisdiction of the federal National Energy Board or the federal government to control exports of oil and gas, to assert jurisdiction over oil and gas rights contained within federal lands, or the federal government's jurisdiction to regulate interprovincial trade and commerce and extraterritorial trade and commerce. I also wish to make clear that the issue is not whether the price of western crude oil or natural gas should rise, or the price fall or remain the same, or by what amount the price should alter. The issue is whether the Government of Canada should take unto itself the legislative power and authority unilaterally to impose on the producing provinces the price at which they are obliged to market their natural resources, in this case crude oil and natural gas.

There was concluded just last week a so-called first ministers' conference, the principal purpose of which was said to be to deal with this question of price. I should like to offer an observation or two with respect to that historical meeting; but since it is almost five o'clock, may I call it five o'clock?

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that we call it five o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: So the House might proceed to the consideration of private members' business pursuant to section (3) of Standing Order 15, it is my duty to leave the chair.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie)—National Parks—Request for reconsideration of proposal to increase entrance fee to Prince Edward Island Park; the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Reynolds)—External Affairs—Alleged agreement Canada would not retaliate for boarding of Greenpeace III by French authorities; the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall)—Regional Economic Expansion—Reason for allocating funds for the further study of container facilities at Halifax.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions, public bills.

Mr. Lefebvre: Would you call motion No. 32, Madam Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is it agreed that motions Nos. 2, 15, 19, 20, 24, 28 and 29 be allowed to stand and retain their position on the order paper?

Mr. Herbert: Madam Speaker, on a point of order, as I have said on a couple of previous occasions I object to the proceeding by which we pass over these items. There are eight items before No. 32. I think we should have an explanation why we are passing them over. I understand why in a couple of cases, but with regard to item No. 29, for example, we should either debate it or take it off the order paper; I see no reason at all for leaving it there. If the hon. member is not prepared to proceed with the item, I suggest that it be dropped.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): It looks as though an agreement has been reached not to drop these items, but perhaps this rule could be looked at again, if there is agreement, the next time.

Mr. Herbert: There is no unanimous agreement to leave item No. 29 on the order paper.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I do not take umbrage at the suggestion being made by the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) that these agreements be looked at. But I suggest as strongly as I can that it is unfair to pick out one of seven which are being passed over and say that it must be dropped, especially when its sponsor is not here. If we are to drop any ahead of No. 32, let us drop all seven. If we are to let some stand, let us let all seven stand. I suggest the hon. member for Vaudreuil has a good point. He should press it in the appropriate place, through the appropriate channels. But I make the point that if we let six out of seven notices of motion stand, we should do the same for all seven.

● (1700)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): I thank the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

[Translation]

But I would like to remind the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) that Standing Order 19 is very clear on this, and I quote:

Questions put by members and notices of motions, not taken up when called may (upon the request of the government) be allowed to stand and retain their precedence; otherwise they will disappear from the Order Paper. They may, however, be renewed.

[English]

Is it agreed that they shall stand for the time being?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

SUGGESTED REVISION TO REMOVE PROVISIONS BASED UPON PRINCIPLE OF SOCIAL WELFARE

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider revising the Unemployment Insurance Act to remove those provisions which discourage the incentive to work and, as well, those provisions which are based upon the principle of social welfare and not upon the principle of social insurance.

He said: Madam Speaker, I was advised by the parliamentary secretary to the government House leader that motion No. 32 standing in my name would be called today. That is why I am ready to speak. I understand it was agreed that my motion would be called. The House is aware of my motion and I will not read it. I have discussed this matter in the House on previous occasions. My interventions have not resulted in changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act or to the regulations, and I am here again to argue my case for the removal of disincentives which apply to certain people who have dealings with the Unemployment Insurance Commission in the area I represent.

I will focus my remarks on what happens with regard to seasonal agricultural workers in my area particularly, although the same holds true for many other areas of the country. Seasonal agricultural workers are employed in harvesting the tobacco crop in my area, as well as in harvesting apples, small fruits and market garden crops. Such harvesting utilizes a great deal of intensive hand labour. Despite our best efforts at mechanization, we have not been able to supplant the human hand in harvesting. Consequently, there is a heavy demand for short-term workers.

There are several main sources from which we can obtain such short-term labour. First, of course, our Canadian workers make up the great bulk of these harvest workers. Usually they are local or neighbourhood people who at harvest time give up their household duties and work in the fields. Or they might be students at school; they leave the classroom or the home and help the local farmer harvest his crop. Students do not only come from nearby areas; they come from all across Canada: the Manpower people bring them in to help in this operation.

As well, we employ migrant workers, the least dependable of all. Usually they are people least able to find a job. They go to Manpower offices and try to find employment, but find it difficult to make a living for themselves and hold on to a job. Often they are drifters, given to drunkenness or to drug use and they create all sorts of problems. The third category is offshore labor. I am referring, of course, to the European university student exchange program and to foreign workers who come to this country to work. My remarks in the main do not concern them.

Specifically, I want to talk about the effect of the Unemployment Insurance Act on seasonal agricultural workers. I am not alone in my opinion. Others hold views similar to mine in connection with unemployment insurance problems. Allow me to refer to page 4857 of Hansard for June 18, 1973. The House on that day was debating the private member's motion standing in my name, dealing with the subject matter dealt with by the present motion. I had been talking about the defects of the unemployment insurance system and read into the record part of a brief prepared by members of the Norfolk county council. The brief dealt with unemployment insurance and with the difficulty of obtaining workers, and said in part:

—there are serious faults with the system. The first is the short qualifying period of eight weeks. In our interviews we found time after time that workers would only put in eight weeks of labour at any one place, to satisfy the qualification required by the Unemployment Insurance Act, after which they seem to have no difficulty in obtaining their unemployment insurance allotments.

Therefore we find it absolutely expedient to increase this qualification period to as much as 30 weeks. Labour in the agricultural community generally starts in mid-April and continues until the end of November. Any able bodied worker would have no problem in accumulating the required number of work weeks to qualify for unemployment insurance, to which we feel an agricultural worker has a right, just like any other worker, but it should only be a right, not a way of life.

The county council was dealing precisely with what I am complaining about this afternoon, and my experience bears out the truth of its contentions. Since the beginning of January of this year I have received more than 200 complaints from the sort of people I am speaking about. Some workers have found it very difficult to collect unemployment insurance benefits to which they became qualified after working for eight weeks, although many worked for much longer. These people become very frustrated when, after complying with the provisions of the act, they are unable to collect benefits. Their experience does not provide them with an incentive to return to work in the fields. They should receive benefits to which they are entitled. They complain of restrictions; we must not put roadblocks in the way of their getting legitimate benefits.

Let me be specific, Madam Speaker. First, let me deal with the eight-week minimum work period referred to in the brief prepared by members of the Norfolk county council. Farmers have complained about the short qualifying period. It seems that certain unreliable workers take advantage of this provision; they work for the minimum of eight weeks, then refuse to work. If a farmer were to complain to the Unemployment Insurance Commission, the worker would not get his benefits. Nobody likes to complain, to be an informer or a stool-pigeon. Farmers think that the act should be designed so that it does not put them in the unenviable position. Of course, a few wrongdoers have been caught and the Unemployment Insurance Commission has taken drastic action to correct the situation. It has increased the number of benefit control officers, and some malingerers and cheaters have been found and disqualified. For people like that, I have no sympathy.

Let me give a concrete example of what I mean. Yesterday I talked with a farmer in my area who employed an immigrant family in preparing his tobacco crop for market. The family worked for eight weeks, just long enough to qualify for unemployment insurance benefits, and then quit. The farmer went to the neighbouring town of Tillsonburg and from time to time asked if any of the family had a job; there were plenty of employment opportunities at the tobacco auction exchange. He was told that these people were in no hurry because they were collecting unemployment insurance. Here a man was wanted for work, was available, but did not want to work and had not been cut off from unemployment insurance benefits. Situations like this frustrate farmers and rob other workers of the incentive to work. Why should they work if benefits can be obtained so easily?

I think that the Unemployment Insurance Act and regulations made thereunder ought to be improved. There should be a change in the level of benefits payable under the act. At present, there is not enough difference between what a man earns in his regular, daily work and what he can obtain by way of unemployment insurance benefits. No matter whether wages are high or low in different areas, the differential remains the same. The benefits are a certain percentage of what the man earns. If he is willing to accept a lower standard of living and feels that it is not worth "X" number of dollars to drive his car to work, buy work clothes, and so on, he will go on unemployment insurance. Under these conditions the benefits are too generous; they take away the incentive to find a paying job.

I would like to draw attention to local workers who help out at harvest time. They live in the community where the agricultural harvesting is being carried out. They work more than eight weeks. In fact, they work until the crop is harvested. These people are tobacco workers; this is all they know. They are not permanent members of Canada's work force by any stretch of the imagination. However, because they work more than 25 days and earn more than $250, they are required to contribute to the unemployment insurance program. The philosophy of these people is that if they contribute, they will demand benefits when they are out of work. Apparently they are qualified and it is within their right to do that. Unemployment insurance was not designed with that end in view. It is not like an annuity or a pension where you pay in and get something back. It is an insurance program. Most people understand this, but a lot of people do not.

The Unemployment Insurance Commission has told some people in my area that because they work in tobacco they do not qualify for unemployment insurance benefits. However, that is not the way these people understand it. That is not the way the act is explained to the worker in the pamphlets sent out by the commission. When the next harvest season comes around, because unemployment insurance deductions were made from their pay, they will not do this kind of work. This seriously aggravates the labour situation and casts a bad reflection on the Unemployment Insurance Commission and the act.

Your Honour may think I am straying a little, but this is the way many claimants are being treated. It results in frustration and, therefore, in disincentive to work. To make my point regarding sick benefits I wish to read from a letter which I sent to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) who has responsibility for administering the Unemployment Insurance Act. This letter sets out my experience in four or five cases with regard to sick benefits. The letter is dated March 15, 1974. I quote:

Dear Mr. Minister:

I refer to my letter of December 10, 1973, drawing attention to two claimants for sick benefits under the unemployment insurance program. In that letter I pointed out how unfair it was to these claimants to have the sick benefit continue to run even though they did not draw the same. Then when the second illness or accident occurred they were unable to secure the remainder of the sick benefit payments to which they would normally be entitled.

Mr. Cousineau, the chairman of the Unemployment Insurance Commission, replied to that letter on your behalf and explained the regulations as they stand.

The purpose of this letter is to draw attention to yet another claimant who finds himself in a very similar position. His name is Mr. Elmer Propper of R.R. No. 2, St. Williams, Ontario. Mr. Propper drew benefits back in July of 1973. Then on January 1, 1974 he was injured in an accident which results in having a cast on his ankle and his inability to work and also, of course, being hospitalized.

On making application for sick benefits he was only able to draw benefits for a three-week period because the entitlement which began back in July, 1973 had continued to run and had expired now in 1974 after the three weeks of benefits which I just mentioned. I have talked with Mr. Propper personally and can attest as to this man's condition and to his need for benefit.

I draw this case to your attention as yet further evidence of the need to, in some manner, amend the regulations of the unemployment insurance program to take care of instances such as these.

I received a reply from a Mr. Lambert, on behalf of Mr. Girard, departmental assistant, dated March 29, 1974. I quote from the reply:

I might point out, however, that the commission has been examining the feasibility of allowing claimants to cancel an existing claim once the initial benefit period has expired, and setting up a new claim on the strength of labour force attachment acquired since the previous claim was established. This proposed change would facilitate a claimant requalifying for benefits at an earlier date, and thus permit cases such as Mr. Propper's to be dealt with more equitably in the future.

In other words, the Unemployment Insurance Commission sees the need for that cure. In order to be fair to the commission and those who draw benefits from it, an amendment or proposed change in the regulations should be seriously considered. At present, this is resulting in frustration for these people. They are fed up and angry with the Unemployment Insurance Commission and this is reducing their incentive to work.

My next point is with regard to the student worker. One of the largest sources of seasonal workers in agriculture is the student labour pool. Without it, farmers would be in great difficulty at harvest time. The incentive for these people to work is weakened by deductions for unemployment insurance for which they rarely or never legitimately qualify. Because they have to pay this, they feel they are being discriminated against. To support my point I wish to quote from a letter from someone who recognizes this situation—Mrs. Joy Lefler of RR No. 3, Waterford, Ontario. I quote from her letter:

As you know, the regulation as it stands now, concerning unemployment insurance deductions; once an employee has earned $250, regardless of his age, he must have unemployment insurance deducted from his wage. Can you tell me, sir, do you honestly see justification in deducting unemployment insurance from, say, a 14 or 15 year old employee? We have had plenty of workers in our employ at that age, and good workers, I must add, who fall into this category. Would a 15 year old who earned money and had the required deductions taken from his wage be able to collect unemployment insurance benefits? Impossible!

This is one regulation that needs some house-cleaning or at least some investigation. I don't believe I speak only for myself, but thousands of employers not only in our business but others as well.

The Canada pension regulation is that a person must reach 18 years of age before being eligible for deduction. I sincerely feel the unemployment insurance benefit should fall under the same regulation, or it should at least be revised so that he must reach a wage equal to that of his personal exemption or which is subject to income tax deduction.

I think that supports the argument that there must be some provision for student workers who make up a large part of our labour force. I have been rather negative and critical of the Unemployment Insurance Commission. However, I have some positive suggestions to make which I feel will improve it. They will restore in some measure the incentive to work in the labour force which is so essential to the harvesting of agricultural crops.

First, as I have already stated, the qualifying period should be lengthened. I see no earthly reason why it should not be extended well beyond eight weeks, perhaps to six months or, as suggested in the brief by the county council from which I read, 30 weeks. Second, seasonal agricultural workers should be exempted. Let us forget about them. Don't bother with them with regard to deductions for income tax, pension plans, and so on. Let us eliminate the red tape. There will then be a real incentive for persons all over the country to go into the fields at harvest time and provide the labour which is so necessary. Some people might say, "Look at the amount of money that would be lost to the revenue." But as far as income tax is concerned, the treasury would catch up with these people at the end of the year when they paid their tax.

My third recommendation would be to raise the $250 ceiling on earnings or extend the qualifying period so that the seasonal worker would not be subject to deductions with respect to unemployment insurance. Finally, I suggest that the Unemployment Insurance Commission reinstitute the form which at one time permitted an agricultural worker to opt out of the unemployment insurance scheme of his own volition. The worker signed such a form and turned it over to his employer, who did not then have to make deductions in respect of unemployment insurance. This would have two important effects. First, it would help accomplish what I have been advocating throughout my speech and, in addition, it would simplify the administrative work which farmers are now compelled to undertake.

I hope that what I have said will help make the commission aware of the difficulties in the act as it now stands, and I trust the government will implement some of the proposals I have put forward.

Mr. Ross Milne (Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I should like to take part in this debate for s short time; I am aware there are a number of other hon. members who wish to speak. I found the remarks of the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand (Mr. Knowles) very interesting. The hon. member may be exaggerating somewhat when he suggests there has been no desire on the part of members on this side of the House to make some of the changes he believes to be necessary. I understand that in the last parliament there were to be amendments moved to the Unemployment Insurance Act, but that the party to which he belongs would not support them. For this reason they did not go forward.

I may say that I, like the hon. member, am constantly being besieged by people who say that unemployment insurance benefits are too high or too easy to get, or that there is too much abuse. But it really depends upon whose is being gored. When they themselves, or members of their immediate families, find it necessary to resort to unemployment insurance, they tend to take an opposite point of view: benefits are too hard to get, payments are not high enough, and conditions are too restricted.

Two years ago, I was among those who were critical of the structure. At that time benefits were being increased, new administrative procedures were being put into place, and rising unemployment was leading to a flood of new claims. In the past year or so the situation has changed. I do not think there is a member in the House who can honestly say that at the present time administration of the unemployment insurance program is lax.

There are those in my constituency, particularly from some of the smaller towns in the northern end, who have taken a very aggressive stand toward unemployment insurance. They say, for example, that all kinds of people are drawing benefits when they should not be entitled to do so. According to them, some people are getting more money from unemployment insurance than they would be getting if they worked for a living. Where, they ask, is the incentive to work?

Well, Madam Speaker, I have personally looked into the cases of more than 200 people who were reported to be drawing benefits to which they were not entitled. Of those 200, I found that only five had even applied for benefits; one person was receiving benefits quite legitimately during her pregnancy and another was in the process of being disqualified for failure actively to seek work. When, out of 200 cases, one finds that only one person was receiving benefits which were questionable, and that even he had been detected and was being disqualified, I cannot believe there are many commissions which are better administered than this one.

Farming operations in my riding vary widely, and I am well aware of the problems raised by the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand. It is true some farmers ask why it is justifiable to pay unemployment benefits to people at a time when farmers cannot get sufficient labour to meet their needs. Surely, they feel, there should be some meeting ground, some possible compromise. There are those who suggest that applicants for benefits should be forced to pick fruit or tobacco. But when one discusses the issue with farmers in some depth, it is apparent that the farmers themselves are not all on one side of the argument. They cannot blame workers accustomed to getting between $3 and $6 an hour, as is the case with many employed in the automobile industry, quitting temporary work in the fields to go back to their old jobs when the recall comes.

After all, the main and most reliable source of help in farming areas comes from the people who work regularly in the fields and orchards at harvest time. If it were not for them and for the help made available through the offshore employment program, the situation today would be a great deal worse than it is.

I do not know what to think about the hon. member's suggestion that those who work intermittently as farm labourers should be exempt from the provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act. A good many farmers will argue that if it were not for unemployment insurance payments enabling workers to live between jobs, it might be even more difficult to get help since they, the farmers, could not afford to hire men on a year-round basis. I would want to look at this proposition in depth before I could agree with it.

At the same time, I am all in favour of seeing a more simple method adopted to handle the bookkeeping, and the paperwork so as to relieve the farmer of these tasks as much as possible. It is the mechanics of administration that the majority of farmers find so irksome—the paperwork—rather than the actual deductions which must be made from the pay of employees. I rather doubt that the hon. member found legitimate arguments in support of some of the points he raised. The vast majority of these people in my riding have worked long and well. These people do not come to make a claim voluntarily. They come forward because they have some financial difficulty and they need these benefits. I have the greatest sympathy in the world for the person who has been employed for 20 years and finds, on a Friday, that he is out of work and has to make a claim. This is a very traumatic period in his life.

When we are talking about tightening up unemployment insurance, decreasing benefits and increasing qualifying periods, we must be very sensitive to this situation. This is particularly true when we are talking about the principal wage earner of a household, male or female. Such an individual is not likely to be at the higher level of income but usually is at the lower level, and is forced to live from pay cheque to pay cheque. All of a sudden, that individual finds there is no pay cheque coming, and as a result, there ensues a very traumatic and emotional period of time in that person's life.

If we set the qualifying period at eight or at 30 weeks I would then ask how the commission will handle this situation. This will cause emotional stress and will place a great load on municipal welfare schemes. One county council suggested that the qualifying period for unemployment insurance should be set at 30 weeks, if I recall correctly. I think that county council should be asked whether it would be prepared to share the costs of these joint programs with the provinces in order to fund these people for that length of time. Perhaps when they look at the size of the financial commitment they would be taking on, they will alter their view.

There are a couple of other points I want to make. I am not terribly satisfied with the basis for our unemployment statistics. Perhaps this is not germane to the topic of the resolution but, as I understand it now, during each period some 30,000 households are solicited to find out if people are unemployed and actively looking for work. That is how our unemployment figures are determined on a percentage basis. These statistics should be more definitive, and if the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) were here, I would suggest to him that he ask Statistics Canada to see if there is any better way of determining them.

I would like to know, for instance, the number of households where the principal wage earner is unemployed. I think that might be different than the number of unemployed second or third persons contributing to the economy of that household. Perhaps consideration might be given to a more sensitive benefit structure, with increased benefits to the principal wage earner in a household as opposed to someone who is casually attached to the working force.

Let me also comment on a problem that seems to be at the crux of unemployment insurance difficulties at the present time. This involves the sorting out of claims and cheques that are justifiably issued to the claimants. The people in the Unemployment Insurance Commission and in the unions, as well as those representing non-union people, will have to work even harder than they are at the present time in helping people to establish their initial claims. If it were not for the tremendous cost and bureaucracy that would be generated, I think a good argument could be made for the idea that when a person enters the work force, a claim should be established so it is available in case of a need arising.

The greatest problem in this area seems to be in regard to the person who is not a member of a union and is laid off on a recall basis. That person expects to be recalled in the near future and perhaps does not actively seek other employment. It may well be that he would be throwing away his entire career if he accepted other work. It seems to me that that individual should be told what are his obligations and rights.

In my area, we have both the UAW and the UEW looking after the concerns of employees. I should like to compliment the union people associated with those unions for the job they have done in helping to establish initial claims when there have been major layoffs in the area. Along with people from the Unemployment Insurance Commission, they go right out to the plants and work on this matter. They work with the employees in an attempt to solve their problems and, failing that, they direct employees to their member of parliament who can have one more try at remedying the situation.

I am most anxious to see these programs carried out in close co-operation with manpower offices. People are always asking me how we can have so many employment opportunities available and a large number of people drawing benefits at the same time. The answer very simply seems to be that skills are not matched with the available jobs. The people who are unemployed do not have the skills which the marketplace is looking for or, if they do have them, they do not know about the opportunities.

I would hope we can take a long look at some of the things we could be doing under our manpower programs. For instance, if it were determined and accepted that there is no work available for a given period of time, particularly in areas where there is only one major employer who has had a layoff, it may well be to the benefit of the individuals that, rather than being confronted with a series of rejections in terms of employment, they have the opportunity of spending their time in manpower training to upgrade their skills. That way, when employment is again available, they are better qualified for the job they had, or, for an even better one.

Let me conclude on this note, as I know I have talked longer than I should. One of the most difficult things to deal with as a member of parliament is the individual who comes to the constituency office with an emotional problem brought on by some personal situation, resulting from stress on the job or because of a recent layoff resulting from a change in technology. This may involve an individual who is no longer able to cope with the situation, or who has suffered an accident or a major disability. These people go on unemployment insurance and, when the benefits begin to run out, they come to us. The real question is determining how you can get these people back into the work force. They can no longer cope with the noise or the speed of the situation, and there is a real reluctance on the part of an employer to hire this type of person. That is why I feel these pilot projects, in terms of community programs in the country, are of real value. These programs can deal with some of these real employment problems. It is a downhill slide for such people unless someone takes a real interest in their cases.

I have been strongly aware of Unemployment Insurance Commission problems, having been involved particularly in handling the problems of a number of individuals. Rather than take up the traditional argument that we should lengthen the qualification period, decrease the benefits, do away with maternity leave and things of that sort, we should all work and offer constructive suggestions to help the Unemployment Insurance Commission do the best possible job of administering the act. If that does not satisfy the need, we should amend the act so that people who are trying very hard at this stage can do the job.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I believe a number of members are anxious to speak during this hour so I shall be very brief. Although I do not agree with all the points made today by the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand (Mr. Knowles),—we Knowleses often agree but there are times when we do not—I welcome the fact that he has put this motion before the House calling for a revision of the Unemployment Insurance Act.

The types of complaints made against the administration of the Unemployment Insurance Act are mainly two. First, there are those who complain because there is abuse, and because there are people getting benefits to which they are not entitled. Such practices are not to be condoned, but frankly I do not worry very much about that whole aspect. There are plenty of others concerned in that way and, as the hon. member for Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Milne) has just said, the administration has tightened up in that respect.

The other type of complaint about unemployment insurance—and this is the sort of thing which comes to my attention all the time—is that too many people do not seem to be able to get the benefits to which they believe they are entitled, and far too many people are called on to repay benefits they have already received. I hope this aspect of the matter can be dealt with very soon.

I think I have to take half a minute to defend my friends in the Conservative Party against a statement made by the hon. member for Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe. It was not the Tories who blocked a certain unemployment insurance amending bill in the last parliament. It was the New Democratic Party, because the bill was directed to the first of the points to which I have referred, namely, abuses and so on. If that bill had contained some improvements in respect of benefits, as suggested so well by the hon. member for Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe, I am certain it would have been passed.

I shall keep my promise to be brief. I am glad we are having this discussion and I hope that sometime soon there will be some work done on improving the Unemployment Insurance Act and eliminating its weaknesses in respect of the needs of those who rely on it. The only other sentiment I want to stress is that I welcome the concern of my hon. friend from Norfolk-Haldimand that there be an incentive to work. That leads me to say that I hope the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) will soon give a green light to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) and let that minister proceed with his plans for a guaranteed annual income. Most of those who advocate such a program think in terms of providing an incentive to those who are working to stay on the job by having some kind of a guarantee that makes it worth while for them to do so. It would take time to go into the details of that, and I shall not take that time now.

It seems to me that a good many people who are trying to get protection under the Unemployment Insurance Act would get better protection and would have more incentive under the kind of guaranteed income program which I believe that the Minister of National Health and Welfare would bring in if only he could get the green light from that ogre who sits on the front bench, the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Madam Speaker, it is my duty to rise today to discuss unemployment insurance which affects not only my constituents but all Canadian people.

Madam Speaker, the unemployment rate in Canada is high and and constantly worsening in several fields, especially in forestry, fisheries, etc. The rate is alarming and the people are facing all kinds of problems most of which are resulting from this legislation now under consideration.

At various periods of the year, several industries for a reason or another temporarily close their doors; hundreds of employees are dismissed and must draw unemployment insurance benefits. They are then subjected to a waiting period which could also be called a two-week penalty for having involuntarily lost their job. Those persons must then wait three or four other weeks to draw their first cheque or their first benefit.

Madam Speaker, the fact that at a given time those people have to turn to that famous Unemployment Insurance Act to survive is really detrimental to them. Because they are unemployed does not mean that they are lazy: far from it. Often they are laid off for reasons over which they have no control, such as a shortage of work amongst others.

The Unemployment Insurance Act inflicts difficulties upon some people. I know people who feel shy about going to the unemployment insurance office, who would certainly prefer not having to do it. After a given time, taking into account the experience of the individual, he must look for a job to prove to the commission that he is still willing to work. That is not always easy. After having applied for many jobs, without success, in his former field of work, the beneficiary of unemployment insurance must apply for jobs in a related field and give the commission proof of his efforts. Interpretation of the word "related" is left to the discretion of the civil servants with the result that, in some cases, nursing assistants have been penalized for refusing to work as waitresses in restaurants or hotels. The same thing goes when it comes to interpreting the word area.

Madam Speaker, after mistakes by commission employees a great many people find themselves in the obligation of paying back amounts of money paid to them. Is it logical that people should be penalized for mistakes made by others? Is that not prejudicial to those people?

Madam Speaker, it is most important that the Unemployment Insurance Act be revised as well as its regulations that are now stricter than the act itself. Everything must be done to make that act fair and available; information concerning that act and its regulations must be made available to people in the same way it was and is still being done with the conversion of our measure system so people can understand that act and know exactly what is expected of them. We must stop hiding from them information that is later used to disqualify them.

We suggest, Madam Speaker, that the waiting period be abolished, that first payment be made within two weeks following the claim in order to allow people who file a sickness claim to get benefits notwithstanding the stage reached by their claim and the number of insurable weeks of employment accumulated. We also call for the abolition of the reimbursement of overpayments due to mistakes by the commission. We would also agree to have the number of insurable weeks of employment required to qualify for unemployment insurance increased from 8 to 12, which would avoid the possibility of fraud and would give justice to workers all year long, in addition to allowing people to prove their love for work.

I am convinced, Madam Speaker, that an improvement of the Unemployment Insurance Act is called for and that it will in no way be prejudicial to our economy and our development, and while implementing at the same time the guaranteed minimum income plan that my hon. friend from the New Democratic Party talked about so well earlier. However, I would remind him that the guaranteed minimum income has been advocated for many years by the Social Credit Party of Canada. We like to believe that the implementation of those measures would represent an improvement that would rather help give our society the assurance of becoming better.

[English]

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Madam Speaker, the resolution that the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand (Mr. Knowles) put forward speaks for itself. If I were given the next 50 or 60 minutes, I could probably do justice in support of it. In the very few minutes that we have left, however, I would like merely to make a few points which might help to clear up some of the misconceptions that the hon. member for Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Milne) has in mind. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) cleared up one with regard to the group that blocked the bill which was brought in early in the last parliament. At that time I think it is fair to say that the term commonly used about my colleagues to the left and members of the Liberal Party was that they were bed mates. Nevertheless, that bill was blocked, although we would have liked to have seen it and other legislation come into force.

As a matter of fact, to my recollection there have been at least three promises of amendments to be made to the Unemployment Insurance Act, but none of them has been brought in as yet. In the interim period, many things have happened. Some time ago I documented almost $1 billion defrauded from the Unemployment Insurance Commission. I could document those cases now from memory, but I do not think it is necessary. It is interesting to note that just recently the special investigative branch of the Unemployment Insurance Commission has been closed. I would be very curious to know whether or not the administration feels that all the various abuses have now been curtailed, or whether my colleagues and I have not spent enough time criticising the administration of the UIC and, as a result, members on the other side feel that since the heat is off they do not need to worry about it.

Mr. Rompkey: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order to set the record straight. The matter of abuses has certainly not been dropped. We have been carrying out checks, and I might say that since January a thousand cases have come to light where illegalities have taken place with regard to claims for unemployment insurance. We are using a computer for the checks, and not only are we checking claimants but also employers with regard to any activities which might be not above board. Certainly checks have not been stopped.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. This is far from being a point of order.

An hon. Member: Nevertheless it is true.

Mr. Ellis: Not only is this not a valid point of order but I would do some very serious checking because my sources of information, which are usually impeccable, tell me that this branch has been closed for all practical purposes.

The hon. member for Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe asked about statistical information. This administration is extremely good at doing one thing if nothing else, that is, hiding the statistics that we could all use to judge better the efficiency of this over $2 billion a year "industry" that is dispensing funds within the administration. The document that I have here is called The Statistical Report on the Operation of the Unemployment Insurance Act. The earliest you can get this document is three to four months after it has been issued. I know that the statistics contained in it are only one-quarter of the statistics available, and I also know that these statistics are available immediately after the end of the month. One thing that a computer does do well, if it does not do anything else, is to provide that type of information quickly. I suggest to the hon. member that he ask some of his colleagues to look back and they will find that, for example, in 1973 the prediction of UIC computers regarding unemployment in the country at that time were accurate within one decimal point. That information is available; it is just the case that we who could use it cannot get our hands on it.

Another point that the hon. member made has to do with the forms that are being filled by the various people who apply for unemployment insurance. These forms are probably the worst designed forms I have seen, the most ill-conceived, the least decipherable, and the most ambiguous pieces of paper that the bureaucracy has ever produced. We, as members, do not have to make unemployment insurance payments and I hope I will never have to claim benefit because I do not know whether I could fill out those forms properly.

I have claimants who come to me frequently. If the hon. member opposite has only 200 claimants coming to him, then I can only conclude that he has not been around here too long, because those who are involved have many more than that coming to them for advice. I certainly have one person on my staff looking after them because, not only are they difficult cases, they are difficult to the point of frustration.

Admittedly the administration of the local offices has improved. Let me take a moment to compliment those in the local offices in the Belleville area. They have improved their public relations and their service. Yet the over-all administration has not changed, and the over-all need for strong amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act has not lessened at all. Consideration should be given to the possibility of someone who has worked all his life perhaps receiving a bonus for not having drawn unemployment insurance, and to a penalty being imposed on habitual users. There is also the matter of making it a load on the welfare branches in the municipalities if it is a welfare program, and sometimes it is just that. Let us not call this an actuarially sound unemployment insurance program.

Since we want to draw this debate to a close let me conclude by saying that if the hon. member wants to see these amendments brought in, let him impress on his own caucus the importance of having these amendments brought forward, and he can be sure that this party will consider them favourably as quickly as possible.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. Perhaps the House will be agreeable to going back into committee of the whole before the Chair calls it six o'clock. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

PETROLEUM ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE INTERPROVINCIAL, EXPORT AND IMPORT TRADE IN PETROLEUM AND PETROLEUM PRODUCTS

The House resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-32, to impose a charge on the export of crude oil and certain petroleum products, to provide compensation for certain petroleum costs and to regulate the price of Canadian crude oil and natural gas in interprovincial and export trade—Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale)—Mrs. Morin in the chair.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock tonight.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Chairman: When the committee rose at five o'clock we were considering clause 2 of Bill C-32, and the hon. member for Regina East had the floor.

Mr. Balfour: Before rising for the supper adjournment, Mr. Chairman, I had embarked on a few comments respecting the meeting of first ministers held in Ottawa last week. It was perfectly obvious to me, and I suspect to the entire House of Commons, that the outcome of that first ministers' meeting was a foregone conclusion, given the format in which it took place. It is also my belief that this is precisely the result the federal government anticipated and desired. How could it be otherwise? How could the premiers of oil consuming provinces, in that goldfish bowl atmosphere and in the full glare of national television, be expected to enter into meaningful negotiations and discussions on so complex an issue as the future price of their energy supplies? That question is interrelated with collateral questions involving domestic inflation, regional industrial development and, most important of all, long term security of domestic supply.

The format of the meeting was inappropriate, the time frame of the meeting was unrealistic, the whole affair was nothing more or less than an exercise in public relations, and I hope and trust the people of Canada will so perceive it.

There are important questions to be settled if Canada is to evolve a sensible, workable and realistic national energy policy. A strategy must be developed whereby Canada's long term self-reliance in energy will be achieved, and achieved in time, before the existing proven marketable reserves of oil and gas are depleted. There must be agreement with respect to the appropriate sharing of resource revenues between federal and provincial governments and with the industry itself. There must also be an agreement with respect to the appropriate level of the domestic price for both oil and gas.

About the only thing the provincial premiers achieved at the meeting was a free lunch, and even that slight benefit might prove to be a cruel illusion if the impasse between the Government of Canada and the producing provinces continues unresolved.

The minister says that he needs Bill C-32, and in particular he needs the legislative clout provided by clauses 36 and 52 in order to arrive at a satisfactory pricing arrangement. I suggest to him that this is a short sighted view of what will actually result should he have his way, should this bill become law in its present form, and should he purport to implement the unilateral price fixing mechanism contained in the bill.

What will certainly result will be a constitutional challenge by the provinces in the courts, a challenge which, whatever the outcome—and it is by no means certain the outcome would favour the federal position—would bring about a jurisdictional process which will only escalate the increasingly bitter, ongoing confrontation between the western provinces and the government. This confrontation will contribute further to western regional alienation from central Canada, and will further exacerbate the difficulties now being experienced in sustaining a level of resource exploration. This exploration is necessary to develop new sources of supply, which in a few short years will be so desperately needed.

The minister should not discount the depth of feeling on the part of his provincial counterparts with respect to what they perceive to be a jurisdictional power grab.

The attorney general for the province of Alberta in discussing the predecessor bill before the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works on May 7, 1974, had this to say:

> Mr. Chairman, I wish to conclude by commenting on part 3, the part to which our most fundamental objections are directed. Far from embodying a term of the first ministers' agreement it stands as a direct negation of the principles upon which that agreement was based. It permits the executive council to terminate an existing agreement between a producer province and the federal government or to decline to negotiate a renewal agreement and to impose by unilateral action maximum prices on a natural resource owned by a province.
> The inequities of part 3 are plain as well as subtle. If one of the negotiating parties reserves unto itself a right to cancel the bargain or the right not to bargain at all, then the consultative or negotiating process becomes meaningless. The concept, the grand scheme, the sensible formula, for resolving federal-provincial differences loses its very foundation.

He went on to say:

> If one of the negotiating parties by legislation purports to reserve unto itself powers of the most dubious constitutional validity, it invites the other party to embark upon a course of judicial confrontation which to date all sides have attempted to avoid in the interests of the Canadian nation. In the last analysis and when viewed in practical terms part 3 amounts to an assertion by the federal government of a right to regulate the price, the flow, the production, and the sale of a provincial natural resource.
> It embodies a concept which, I am sure no provincial government after measuring the consequences of its extension to other natural resources such as lumber, hydro power, potash, iron ore, asbestos, nickel, copper and coal, could accept without impliedly acknowledging that in today's economic circumstances the federal government has taken complete charge of the provinces' capacities to determine their future economic development.

Mr. Leitch concluded by saying:

> Mr. Chairman, in our view there is no need for the legislation contained in part 3 which provides for the substitution of the federal will for the negotiated agreements referred to in part 2. The first ministers' conferences demonstrated the presence, strength and vitality of the national concept in a way perhaps unparalleled in our history. I trust that concept will not be impaired by the enactment of legislation which is unnecessary and susceptible to constitutional challenge.

● (2010)

That statement deserves to be carefully weighed, Mr. Chairman. Mr. Crowley, the minister of mineral resources for the province of Saskatchewan, in a letter to the federal minister dated December 2, 1974, said this:

> Part II has two divisions—one providing for agreements with producer provinces on prices and one giving the governor in council discretionary powers to set prices in the absence of, or the breakdown of, an agreement. With the absolute powers provided for in the second division, the question must be asked how meaningful would the negotiations be as provided for in the first division?
> This question may not have arisen had it not been for the series of events already referred to in this letter. An alternative would be to remove from the bill Division II of Part II. The federal government will have considerable powers under Division I. If agreements cannot be reached under Division I and action is required, then surely this becomes a matter that deserves the attention of parliament in the form of special legislation.

The government of Saskatchewan has concluded that it must object to Bill C-32 as long as division II of Part II remains in the bill.

That is a clear indication of the response that will come from the two producing provinces in the event that Bill C-32 in its present form becomes the law of this country. The minister may argue that we are confronted with a situation so serious and so far-reaching in its implications in the matter of energy supply, and the necessity to fix a new domestic price for oil and gas, that these sweeping, unprecedented powers are essential in the national interest.

If this is in fact his position, then the appropriate course in our constitutional framework is clear. He should legislate the price fixing mechanism under the peace, order and good government clauses of the British North America Act, and then stand ready to defend that clear and unequivocal position in the Supreme Court of Canada if called upon to do so.

But, Mr. Chairman, what is urgently required at this point in time with respect to Canada's energy policy is a clear eyed recognition that it is neither prices, nor jurisdictional prerogatives and conflicts that constitute our basic problem. Our basic challenge is the need to put in place a policy which will ensure for Canadians future self-sufficiency of energy supplies, be its origin oil, natural gas, nuclear power or renewable energy forms, and that can only come about if there prevails in Canada a stable economic environment in which consumers, governments—be they provincial or federal—and private industry can operate in harmony, and with confidence in each other.

That situation will not prevail so long as we continue this process of conflict, and confrontation, and devil take the hindmost, with respect to relationships which in former years were seen to work effectively and which resulted in creating, in the preceding two decades, the potential capacity for that very self-sufficiency to which I refer.

At a later stage I will be introducing an amendment to the bill which I will not attempt to go into at this time but which will have the effect of replacing the unilateral price fixing mechanism with what I submit is a more democratic technique to arrive at the result desired by the minister, namely, a legislative technique to achieve finality with respect to pricing of oil and gas.

I hope that, between now and the time when we undertake detailed consideration of clause 36, the minister and his officials will reflect on the proposed amendment which is in their possession, and I hope that after reflection they will see their way clear in a spirit of compromise to give it their support.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Chairman, if I may speak for a few moments on this matter before the committee I might refer to the statement of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on October 31, 1974, as reported at page 916 of Hansard. In the fifth paragraph of the page the minister is reported as saying this:

In short, the House should look on this provision as an instrument complementary to the powers under the Energy Supplies Emergency Act and to the steps being taken in relation to the international energy program. The intention is to safeguard Canadian oil and energy supplies in an emergency, without impairing continued implementation, in those circumstances, of the essential principle of a single oil price across the country.

That statement was made by the minister in introducing the petroleum administration legislation which is the subject of our debate tonight. I think it is of some interest to all members of the House to go over those lines in which the minister says:

In short, the House should look on this provision as an instrument complementary to the powers under the Energy Supplies Emergency Act—

What is meant by that? The act to which the minister says this legislation ought to be considered complementary is an act which, for its very basis, depended upon an emergency. It depended upon an estimation that, under certain circumstances, it was now necessary to call upon the full powers of the federal government under the constitution to meet a need which was deemed to be a national emergency.

I should like to refer to that particular act, which came before the House as Bill C-236. It is significant that in section 11 of that act it is stated as follows:

When the Governor in Council is of the opinion that a national emergency exists by reason of actual or anticipated shortages of petroleum or disturbances in the petroleum markets that affect or will affect the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada, and that it is necessary in the national interest to conserve the supplies of petroleum products within Canada, the Governor in Council may, by order, so declare and by that order authorize the establishment of a program for the mandatory allocation of petroleum products within Canada in accordance with this act.

As all of us in this House at the time the bill was passed will remember, most members agreed that if the government felt that it had to call upon its extraordinary powers to pass emergency legislation in a situation of emergency, or apprehended emergency, then clearly the Government of Canada has such right. That is why it is curious that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources made the statement on October 31 that the House should look upon this provision, Bill C-32, as an instrument complementary to the powers under the Energy Supplies Emergency Act. It might have been better, or accurate, had the minister said at that time that what is being attempted here in Bill C-32 is just about the same as what was being proposed in the emergency bill, with one significant exception—that there is no attempt to declare a situation of emergency in the national sense.

Clause 36 of Bill C-32 is significant because it refers to the situation which will prevail if no agreement is reached between the federal government and a province. It says in part:

Where no agreement is entered into pursuant to section 22 with the government of a producer-province, or any such agreement is terminated by the declaration of the parties, or, in the opinion of the Governor in Council, is not effective or is not capable of being effective, the Governor in Council may, by regulation, establish maximum prices for the various qualities and kinds of crude oil to which this Part applies . . .

Clause 22 is interesting. It provides for the minister, with the approval of the governor in council, to enter into an agreement with the government of a producer-province for the purpose of establishing mutually acceptable prices for crude oil. Clause 23 is particularly interesting. It says in part:

When an agreement is entered into with a producer-province under section 22, the Governor in Council may, by regulation, establish maximum prices . . .

Clearly, Bill C-32 seeks to encroach on provincial property and civil rights, an area coming under the authority of provincial legislatures. Hon. members should not disagree on this—the ownership of petroleum lies in the province in which the petroleum is found.

This afternoon the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources suggested that before this legislation was brought before the House the Justice Department had been consulted as to its constitutional validity. Although it is not incumbent on the minister to file an opinion with the committee, he assisted us by referring to the Caloil Inc. case. I assumed the minister was referring to Caloil Inc v. the Attorney-General of Canada, 1970 Exchequer Court Reports, page 535. I am sure the minister, and the law officers advising him know that that decision was based on extremely limited facts. It was based on a regulation of the National Energy Board concerning oil imported from outside Canada. I am sure the minister and his law officers also know that an earlier, similar case had been decided. That was Caloil Inc. v. Attorney-General of Canada, reported in 1970 Exchequer Court Reports at page 512. Significantly, this is the case on which the minister bases his argument in favour of the constitutionality of Bill C-32, which represents an extraordinary encroachment into the field of provincial responsibility and jurisdiction.

The court found, in the Caloil Inc. No. 1 case, that the regulation as drafted was ultra vires the federal government because it purported to determine the activities of a company dealing with oil which had its origin in Canada. The regulation was changed, and there arose the second law case, known as the No. 2 case, and reported at page 551 of 1970 Exchequer Court reports. I shall read part of the judgment handed down in the No. 2 case because I think all hon. members ought to consider how tenuous is the authority put forward by the minister for the extraordinary encroachment into provincial government jurisdiction. I begin quoting from page 551 of the judgment, which says in part:

Regulation 20, before amendment, indiscriminately included "any motor gasoline in the hands of the licensee even if it is produced in Canada" . . . an extensive clause which, going beyond the boundaries of interprovincial trade, trenched on the free exercise of civil rights in the provinces . . .

The judge then asked himself the following question:

Was this shortcoming not rectified in the recent text which provides instructions on the quantities imported, the time of importations, the region of Canada where such oil would be consumed?

The judge went on to say:

It goes without saying that everyone is in agreement on the commercial nature of such major transactions and recognizes the right vested in the federal authority to prohibit any product, when necessary, from entering the country. As the venerable philosophical adage observes, "He who can do more can do less". In the present case, for purposes that the board had to provide for, the regulation of this vital trade must be exercised where it takes place, namely, in all points of the ten provinces, and of the two territories of Canada. Then, the amendment decreed by the Order in Council of August 12 empowers the board to specify in what quantities, at what times and to which regions gasoline can be imported, from its place of origin to its area of consumption; it brands it to some extent—

I ask the minister to note the following words:

—and prevents its confusion with oil extracted in Canada. It may be that this is a subtle distinction; however it appears sufficient to me.

The judgment goes on to deal with a matter of great importance if we are to consider where the line between federal jurisdiction and provincial jurisdiction is to be drawn. I continue quoting the judgment:

According to jurisprudence, which has been consistent, there should be a dividing line in such matters to indicate whether provincial civil rights are being encroached upon or whether the federal authority is exercising its responsibility for regulating both international and interprovincial trade. This was the opinion expressed by Mr. Justice Rand in Murphy v. C.P.R. when he wrote, at page 641:—

The judge quoted from that case, as follows:

This diversity in structure and the scope and character of power over interstate trade and commerce, although illuminating in its disclosure of variant constitutional arrangements, suffices to require an independent approach to and appraised of the question before us. Section 91(2) of the act of 1867 confides to parliament, "Notwithstanding anything in this act", the exclusive legislative authority to make laws in relation to "The Regulation of Trade and Commerce". By what has been considered the necessary corollary of the scheme of the act as a whole, apart from general regulations, applicable equally to all trade, and from incidental requirements, this authority has been curtailed so far but only so far as necessary to avoid "the infringement, if not the virtual extinction" of provincial jurisdiction over local and private matters including intraprovincial trade—

If the federal government uses the authority of the Caloil decision to support its argument that Bill C-32 is constitutionally valid, I suggest that all hon. members ought to look at the judgment for themselves, and I contend that the second Caloil case would lead one to a conclusion different from the one the minister suggested to us this afternoon.

The federal government, under clause 36 of the bill, is asking for extraordinary powers with which to control the market of a product which belongs to a province. If this is allowed to happen, if the government is allowed to control a market without showing that there is some overriding national interest for bringing a product, the control of which is vested in the province, under federal authority, then the government will be given the power without needing to declare any emergency to control the price of any product in any province, merely because that product will cross a provincial boundary. Surely the constitution of Canada never envisaged that power being given to the federal government under the trade and commerce provisions of the BNA Act. This is very interesting because there has never been an attempt to impose an extraordinary power such as that couched in clause 36 on a provincial resource outside of a national emergency such as a war. The reason is obvious. Clearly it is not the intent and the purpose of the federal powers in the constitution to do so.

If this bill goes through in this way, the precedent is set. While it may not necessarily be right in law and it may some day be challenged, there will be a clear precedent of a federal government deciding to use one part of Section 91 as a means to control completely the price of a product produced in a province of this country. I suggest it is a sweeping power which, barring some evidence that there is in some way or another a national emergency either in existence or apprehended, was never intended to be given to the federal government under our constitution.

I am addressing my remarks to the constitutionality phase of this question because this is not a matter which pits one province against another. It is a matter of far greater importance than the issue which has been giving us so much concern in the House of Commons over the past number of months, and perhaps will for some time to come.

If this sort of power can be taken by the federal government under the guise of trade and commerce, there is literally no limit to how far the federal government can go in controlling the commerce and aspirations of any province. I am not just referring to an oil province in Canada, but also a province that produces hydro electric power, as does the province of Quebec, a province that produces pulp and paper and minerals as does my province of British Columbia, or the province of Ontario which produces so much of the industrialized merchandise which is vital to the trade of this country and so much of which is domestic.

This is a matter which needs a most extraordinary and careful consideration because clause 36 goes far beyond what is needed unless, as I say, the minister is prepared to state that we have a national emergency. If the minister is prepared to say that, let him come before the House and say that we are faced with a national emergency and must ask for very extraordinary powers. If that is necessary let the minister do that, keeping in mind the spirit of the constitution which gives the Government of Canada that power on the basis that it proves to the satisfaction of the House of Commons that there is a national emergency and national need that require this extraordinary legislation.

However, we ought not quietly accept a piece of legislation which, in its real effect, circumvents the constitution and arrogates unto the central government powers far beyond what Section 91 of the constitution and the decided cases in the courts since confederation would ever have allowed to a federal government. I ask all hon. members to give this very serious thought before passing this bill.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, to support his argument the hon. member for Vancouver South purported to quote me from page 916 of Hansard for October 31. He quoted me out of context in that particular regard.

The remarks made at that point were not about Parts II and III of this bill, which are the parts to which the hon. member directed his argument and put so much substance. They are with regard to Part IV, Division II, which is a narrow application for the financing of transportation costs in the event of the kind of international effects that we had last year. The use of this very narrow reference in support of his particular argument is without foundation.

I was interested to hear the hon. member say that all provinces would be concerned about this. He made particular reference to the province of Ontario in this regard, saying this bill would perhaps put into challenge the right of that province to price from time to time its own manufactured products. I suppose the best answer, apart from the legal answer, is the fact that the premier of that province, the provincial treasurer of that province and the Ontario government have specifically besought the federal government to seek and to exercise the powers created by this particular bill. From the standpoint of that particular province, as a consumer in Canada, they regard this as an appropriate exercise of federal power. Indeed, I think one can say they are grateful that this parliament has not sought to—

Mr. Baldwin: What does Quebec say?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): They agree the same way.

Mr. Fraser: The minister stated I took his quotation from page 917 of Hansard for October 31 in too narrow a context. If the minister would now say there is no analogy between Bill C-32 and the emergency bill which was passed at that time, I would be very interested in that comment. I say to the minister, through you, Mr. Chairman, that the thrust of my remarks this evening were that nobody is saying the central government does not have this power if it says the emergency calls for it. However, we are saying there is no indication here that these extraordinary powers ought to be called for unless an emergency is established.

When I referred to the provinces I did that for a very real reason. The minister will recall that I said the issue which is being debated, especially with regard to clause 36 of this bill, will be around for a long time after the present problems we face with regard to oil and gas in this country are resolved, or have somehow ceased to have as important a consequence to the country as they now have.

The principle to be upheld is whether we act in these matters within the constitution or whether we circumvent it. I am sure the minister would be the first to say that just because we have asked for these extraordinary powers with regard to petroleum does not mean for a minute we would do this with respect to pulp and paper in British Columbia. That is all very well. Ministers have said that sort of thing in the past. However, as all hon. members know, once you set a precedent it gets easier and easier to do something that somebody should have got up and said could not be done under the constitution of Canada. That is my point. I am sure the minister realizes full well my concern.

I say to the minister that if this legislation is essential, if it has to be done in the interests of Canada, if it is to solve an emergency problem or an apprehended problem, that is one thing. However, the legislation should be drafted in that form. To try to circumvent that aspect of the constitution by coming in under trade and commerce is a very dangerous precedent.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I repeat, Mr. Chairman, the citation again made by the hon. member does not support his argument. It is rather unfair for him to try to put those words in my mouth. Second, of course we have the power in an emergency under the constitution, to exercise any of the powers conferred on the provinces under Section 92. We do not have to seek that in the case of regulation of interprovincial trade. That is so well established that no further citation should be required.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Chairman, I wish to join with my colleague, the hon. member for Peace River, in congratulating and thanking the minister for giving the outline he did this afternoon when opening the debate on the re-introduction of Bill C-32. The minister mentioned that the objectives of the government were a single price across Canada, which all parties believe in, and the bill would provide for compensation to the eastern provinces to the extent that they had to buy their oil from offshore to achieve that single price.

The minister went on to mention that the price setting referred not only to the price of oil but also to natural gas and synthetic oil, and compared the old bill C-18 and Bill C-32 and told us the reason for the changes. He confessed quite frankly that the conference held last week was not able to find a consensus and now the government is engaged in bilateral discussions. Most important, Mr. Chairman, he gave to this House an order of priority which I think in all fairness was clearly put and frankly stated.

The first priority has to be gas export prices for the reasons the minister mentioned. Second, the domestic gas prices are next in importance. These are both crucial to the running of our industries in Canada. And away down the bottom of the list of priorities was the question of domestic oil prices.

All the heat which has been going into the debate across Canada these last 18 months has been focussed on this so-called energy crisis relating to the so-called shortage of oil in the world. No person today in his right mind would say for one second that there is anything like a shortage of oil in the world. What the complaint is all about is that the western world was caught stealing in the last 50 years the oil from the Arabs, and when this stealing stopped—

Mr. Benjamin: The same companies stole it from us.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I don't care whether the Arabs live in the Middle East, Alberta or Saskatchewan. My point, Mr. Chairman, is that what we are dealing with here, the so-called difficulty, is trying to arrive at the single price which the minister described this afternoon. And surely price setting is not a national emergency. I just emphasize this because the minister set out his priorities very clearly and he brings the question to a point. But what is the issue all about if all we are discussing is a single price? And I have to say, Mr. Chairman, that the issue about which we are really quarrelling in Canada has no relationship at all to this bill.

The key question which is causing the difficulty to the minister, the same key question which is causing difficulty in arriving at a consensus, is that we have a budget in place which is a declaration of open war on every provincial government in Canada. The budget of last May, repeated again on November 18, which included even those minor modifications on exploration, is an open declaration of war by the federal government on each provincial government. Until that issue becomes clear there will be no solution to the problems faced by the minister in trying to get a consensus among 11 governments on the question of price.

The province of Ontario's case at the conference last Wednesday was devastating on one point—that the price granted by the governments of the west voluntarily in 1974, raising the price to $6.50 as their contribution to national unity, resulted in very little of that increase going to find new sources of oil. Everyone knows the figures.

In Saskatchewan, if the price goes up, all the increase is taken by the provincial government. So today we have a situation in Saskatchewan that every time a company produces a barrel of oil it loses between 11 cents and 35 cents a barrel. Many of the figures I am quoting are based on the unaudited figures for 1974, but they are close enough.

In Alberta the case is slightly different. After two budgets the oil companies averaged, I think, about 11 or 13 cents a barrel in profit. Then the provincial government gave way a little and returned part of the federal taxes to the oil companies of that province, and now the oil companies in Alberta receive over a dollar a barrel. Their own figures are quoted at $1.18. By contrast, in Saskatchewan the average oil company loses a few cents a barrel.

Ontario's case was pretty devastating. What is the use of granting an increase if it is all going to be taken by the provincial government of the producing province and by the federal government?

I'm looking at a chart of the Alberta government and the figures are a little different from those in Saskatchewan. But after the two budgets of last year the cost of bringing the oil to the surface—let us call this operating costs—was 50 cents a barrel. The cost of drilling and exploration, spread over an average in the last 25 years, amounts to $1.35 a barrel. The thing that annoys me, as a Canadian who comes from western producing areas, is that the bulk of that $1.35 is not cost at all; the bulk of that $1.35 is the cost of borrowing money; it is interest charges. The provincial governments, in my view, are not only indifferent to how the wealth of the provinces is being stolen by those who lend money, but they show no intention of changing things.

When you go above the line, industry in Alberta after two budgets, got 13 cents a barrel. The provincial government in Alberta got $3.34 a barrel compared to the industry's 13 cents. The federal government jumped up its take to $1.18. Talking about Saskatchewan, where the Saskatchewan government gives the same information it shows that the federal government not only gets $1.18 but gets an extra $5.20 to boot. So we have the federal government getting $6 a barrel out of each barrel.

That's where all the federal money comes from to try to do all the things it wants to do—to compensate the people in the east and to help run the country. But that money is being taken from the people of the producing provinces in the form of the export tax and in the form of corporation taxes.

I am simply pointing out that one key factor in the conference last week which made it impossible to reach a consensus was that the price increase which was agreed to by consensus in 1974—in March—did not produce one extra barrel because it all went to greedy governments, provincial and federal. These are the records as quoted by the province of Saskatchewan, as quoted by the province of Alberta, and as quoted by the oil industry.

So I come back to this one conclusion, Mr. Chairman, that the minister's problem in getting the consensus he wants is that he must put the finger on the Minister of Finance and look to him to get out and end this quarrel over resource taxation, a quarrel which is patently irrational when the two levels of taxation, of the provincial governments in B.C., Alberta and Saskatchewan and Manitoba, added to the federal taxation, are greater than 100 per cent. That, of course, applies to mining as well as to the oil and gas industry. In respect of mining I include potash, which represents an average of some 87 per cent tax liability.

It is a frightening thought that two levels of government can get themselves into a quarrel over resource taxation and impose a tax liability on private companies of greater than 100 per cent. I suggest this means only one thing, and that is that private enterprise has to go in the four western provinces. Private enterprise has a tax liability in British Columbia that is going up to 185 per cent in respect of some types of mining. That is why five companies have closed down, with hundreds of men being put out of work in B.C.

In Saskatchewan we are pretty small potatoes with only 18 oil fields in my district, and probably as many in the district of the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek. In southwestern Saskatchewan they have probably closed down entirely. They are still working in my area in the hope that rational men in this House and rational men in the provincial legislature of Saskatchewan will force their governments to get together as Canadians and find some sort of resolution to the situation of tax liabilities greater than 100 per cent.

I am not entirely lacking in constructive ideas about what should be done. Let me remind the committee that we will have another conference. I have made this suggestion before, and I make it again. If any government, at the provincial or the federal level, is serious about making this federal system work then there must be a position paper or two before a conference assembles, and these position papers should contain alternative proposals.

The only province that came to this last conference with a clear-cut alternative proposal was the government of Saskatchewan. The federal government should come to these conferences with these proposals. If it does not have such proposals it should inform the various provincial governments ahead of time. I do not see how these governments can make agreements before the television cameras. You cannot have meaningful negotiations and settlement of national issues unless you have working papers beforehand, on which there is general agreement as to the facts and figures.

What we saw at the conference last week was not a meeting of minds, with people prepared to make conclusions on a common basis of fact. What we saw was a deliberate confrontation, with the federal government on one side taking a position right off the bat in the opening speech. I heard the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands put it very succinctly this afternoon. The federal government came off the starting block with the words of the Prime Minister who said the government had looked the situation over, had examined all the facts, and had concluded that the price had to go up. When you have a federal government taking this position it is obvious that there is going to be a confrontation, particularly when the government knows full well in advance the position to be taken by Ontario. In this case we had the federal government standing for high prices and the provincial government of Ontario standing for low prices.

[Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain).]

This reminds me of the circumstances we faced the last time we discussed this matter. Since we last discussed Bill C-32 we have seen the government switch directions three times. At first the minister told us we had to accept the Montreal price, or the world price. Then we entered the so-called anti-Arab period when you might have thought that every Liberal in this country stood for low prices. They were then zigging instead of zagging. The last change came during this recent period that I call the post-election period. Now the government is for high prices. The government was first for high prices, then for low prices, and is now for high prices again. It has been zigging and zagging in every direction, and I know why it has been doing so.

First we had the Syncrude deal which tied the country to high prices. We have the National Energy Board pressing for higher prices, we have the Economic Council of Canada pressing for higher prices, and we have the experts in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources pressing for higher prices. I can understand why the government has changed its stand. It now has the election over and we are seeing a high-price type of zagging.

Let me repeat again what I said earlier when the budget was presented to us in May. That budget was just a bargaining position. The government was throwing its tough stand out. I paraphrase the Minister of Justice from Saskatchewan. He said that we have to teach these provinces that they cannot steal as much as they are stealing. The bargaining position that was set in the budget of May was not changed in the budget of October. All we have seen since the big declaration of that time is the government's position that it is going to make provincial taxes and royalties non-deductible, but if the provincial tax return is over 50 per cent then the government will bring in a federal tax of 50 per cent and we will then have a tax level of over 100 per cent. This means the end to private enterprise.

The NDP members to my left will shout hurrah to that suggestion, and the record of what they have said will indicate that. Why should a party calling itself Liberal also shout hurrah, and that is the question to be answered. They are not using this bargaining position. The Minister of Finance has been asked to go out and approach all these people, and lay down some positions which they might be willing to accept.

I suggested in my speech in response to the budget that the government should go out and suggest that the provinces were wrong in putting their taxes and royalties up so high. This government should tell the provinces that it wants them to bring the taxes down. It should present a figure in respect of which it will make taxes deductible, up to that figure and no more, and thereby get something on paper so that the provinces will know what they have to bargain against when making their case.

It is not for me to say what that figure should be. I am simply saying that the federal government has to discuss the matter with its opposite numbers in a federal state before it can get agreement. In support of that statement I intended to quote the position of the government of Saskatchewan as made by its minister of resources, the hon. Mr. Cowley, and I was going to quote from the statement of the attorney general for Alberta. On the basis of what we know at this moment I do not think the position of Saskatchewan and Alberta can change very much in regard to this constitutional issue.

The minister is making a lot of waves tonight by saying that Ontario is asking for this type of legislation. I wonder what Ontario's attitude will be next week when it has had time to think through the statement of the Prime Minister. I am not going to quote what has been said by the provinces of Alberta or Saskatchewan because my colleagues, who are much more learned than I, have discussed this better than I could.

I should like to ask the minister this very simple rhetorical question. What kind of Canada do we want? I have the suspicion that the great majority of the members in this House, Liberal, Conservative, NDP and Creditiste, are secretively proud of the fact that of the half a dozen countries with a federal system in the world today, in spite of our constant difficulties, ours is the one that is working fairly well, and I am sure most would like to see this federal system continue.

Let me warn the minister and the government again of that party's own history. Every time the Liberal party has tried to centralize power here in Canada it has got itself into serious trouble with the people of Canada. I do not have to remind them that the people of this country, instinctively in setting up their constitution in the beginning, tried to get a balanced set-up to give the main thrust and power position to the central government, but they did not fully trust the giving of the power to the central government so they kept power over civil rights, property and resources, and that was placed clearly in the hands of the provinces. This was to be the counterbalance against all the power given to the central government to give strong leadership, in contradistinction to the American type of federal system.

I think the majority of the people of Canada believe this is still a good system but they are suspicious when the central government, which has in time of emergency to take on great powers, begins to expand its emergency power into peacetime. I know some people believe a theory that the people of this country are not bright enough, and that members of parliament are not bright enough to make laws, so we must turn the power over to what they call the technocrats, the public servants.

I am simply warning the members on the government side tonight that we cannot maintain this federal system by centralizing power in peacetime without causing serious trouble. The minister has heard of the proposed amendment that is based on the allocation bill. I should like to ask him whether he would object if we placed a time limit on the emergency power so that the emergency power would have attached to it, say, a three-year time limitation.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not follow the hon. gentleman. This is not in any sense based on an emergency position but is founded, as I pointed out a few minutes ago and as I said earlier, on the constitution and the fact that the regulation of interprovincial commerce falls under the responsibility of the federal government as a sensible tool under a federal system. So the introduction of a time limit in respect of an emergency power is irrelevant. The basic question is whether we are to have a national market in Canada and, if we are, then the responsibility for that should be with the federal government. In respect of oil and natural gas this is an extension of the powers exercised for many years.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I think that clarifies the issue for many of us because Bill C-32 really is to put into effect the consensus agreement reached on March 27 between the 11 governments. But what we object to are clauses 36 and 52 which say that, if there is not agreement between the government, the government in the form of the minister has unilateral power to decide what will be the price. When you give the minister unilateral power over what the price will be obviously this power is given to a government only in an emergency, because the constitutional power over civil rights and property and resources lies purely in the provincial field. The spokesman for our party, the hon. member for Peace River, made clear that we would support this legislation if it will be used only when the government declares there is an emergency. This was the position of the hon. member for Vancouver South. What we are trying to say is that we want to help the government retain the power to make decisions when it cannot obtain agreement, but that this must be done in harmony with the constitution.

We have the precedent of the allocation bill which simply says that if an emergency is declared we can use the power given by this bill. I am asking a simple question to test the sincerity of the minister and the government. We are willing to go along with this on the basis that it is in harmony with the constitution before these powers are declared. It must be within the constitutional framework of government price-setting.

All the legal jurisprudence is against the government. We have the case quoted by the hon. member for Peace River this afternoon, the Hughes case, the most recent case. I am not a lawyer, Mr. Chairman, but I have read the case which appeared before Mr. Justice Hughes. The arguments used by the lawyers in this case for the company, CIGOL, were exactly the same as the federal government is using in this bill. After long consideration this very able judge at the Queen's Court level looked at all the precedents and came out flatly and said that there is only one level of government which, by law, can steal. This case in Saskatchewan is reported in layman's English. It says that a provincial government which owns these resources can steal all it wants because they belong to it. What is wrong is when someone else also steals. You cannot have two thieves operating in the same chicken yard at the same time. But that is what is happening.

Here we have a government which is hungry for money and jealous of the provincial government because it is getting so much, jumping in and saying that it wants as much. The result is that the sum total of the thievery is greater than the number of chickens in the chicken yard. I am not a lawyer so I am putting this in terms that the public will understand. We have this silly story of resource taxation. Until it is resolved there will not be an agreement between the governments on this question of price which the minister wants. We must have this law in order to carry out the function of having a fair price across Canada and in order to compensate the people in the east. Of course I have in mind 13 other things I should like to see in this bill.

Essentially we are told that the villain in the piece is the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, but the Minister of Finance has got booby-trapped into an irrational position. That is why his friends want him to leave the country for the next four or five years so that another minister can make the retreat from Moscow in his place.

I suggest the issue comes back to the government. I have a suspicion that even though the minister is indeed a lawyer he is no more an authority than I am on this legal jurisprudence, and that the two of us should keep pretty quiet. I believe the question we must answer in respect of this bill before we can get peace with the provinces is the question of the budgetary provisions on resource taxation.

Just to repeat what must be an old gramophone record, there are two types of proposals which can be made on this very issue which I think will bring peace. One of them is to suggest that on existing mines, and oil and gas fields, the federal government state the level at which it will accept provincial royalties and taxes, and make them deductible. Once the federal government states its position, the provincial governments will know they have to come down here, bargain, and come close to that position, or there will be no agreement. That is the first thing. Secondly, if the federal and provincial governments are sincere, they will know that both have a mutual problem to extract more oil and gas either from the traditional fields or from the new synthetic fields.

I have suggested what many people consider to be a radical or revolutionary proposal, namely, that we accept the fact that these new ventures are beyond the financial competence of any of the big oil companies because they cost so much. If the House wants the figures, here they are.

The average cost of finding a barrel of oil a day from 1946 to 1972 was $400. Now the average cost of finding a barrel of oil a day in the frontier areas is approximately $10,000. The average cost of finding a barrel a day in the tar sands on the basis of a $2 billion plant is $16,000 a barrel. That is certainly different from the $400 of a few years ago, and the provincial governments cannot generate enough dollars to finance such ventures.

I am suggesting that the governments and the industry together do a very simple thing, namely, that they enter into a contractual agreement, or a joint venture, under which the governments will simply agree to stay off the back of the industry until it can pay off the debt. If the money that comes in from the oil and gas goes to pay off the debt, instead of a 15 to 25 years pay out, with 50 per cent of the value of the product going to pay interest, the debt can be paid off in four years and the money lender shaken off your back. Then there will be several times more money for the provinces. In fact the provinces, as the owners of the resource, will be the ones to profit most. The federal government will get much more today, and the industry will get all its money back with a big fat bonus of 20 per cent or 25 per cent for having taken the risk.

What is wrong with the concept of getting more money out of the resources? The only thing against it, as stated by the Minister of Finance, is that this is not the way such ventures are financed. He sounds like a banker. They say they have never done that before, so it must be wrong. I am simply pointing out to the committee that the government of Great Britain, which at present is socialist, has accepted such a proposal. What they do is to say to these big expensive ventures in the North Sea, "We will only charge you a small royalty, the traditional one-eighth or 12½ per cent, but when you repay that debt, we will take approximately 45 per cent."

What they do in Great Britain is to give to a company, as a quick write-off procedure, 175 per cent of the value of the investment, which means that they get their investment back, they get their interest back, and they get a big chunk extra to pay for the loss on other wells as well. Because of the value of oil on the world's market, they pay off the debt on these $2 billion and $3 billion oil field ventures in four years. Then the people of the United Kingdom collect 50 per cent or 55 per cent of the total value of the product, and they get the value of the high oil price. This is not what happens in our country. In the United States and in Canada we worship at the shrine of paying interest all our blooming lives.

Mr. Gilbert: How true!

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): When a person today buys a home for $50,000 it takes him 30 years to pay off the mortgage, and he pays $150,000 in interest on top of the $50,000. We love paying interest, and that is what we are forcing the companies to do.

Mr. Benjamin: How right you are!

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): That is what we are forcing ourselves to pay. The whole value of the resources of our country goes into paying the interest because the provinces want the money today and they say, "To heck with the dollars tomorrow, we will take the pennies today."

That is the proposal I made in the committee a year ago and again last fall. I spoke 18 times on the budget. I will keep talking about it because it is obvious that this proposal is fundamentally sound. Certainly many people comment on it, but in general there is agreement. If you do not have the capital in place, and if you have to wait for 25 years to save it dollar by dollar, you can achieve the same by accelerating the flow of the capital. Using the capital three or four times in 20 years is the same as having four times the amount of capital. The only thing wrong with the proposal I made is that it reduces the power of those who look after our money. Their place in the social spectrum disappears.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: The NDP are approving what you are saying. You better watch it!

Mr. Gilbert: Sinclair Stevens will really like this.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I plead with the Minister of Finance to listen to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources whose statutory responsibility and right it is to ask the Minister of Finance to protect the mining and resource industry. Let him speak up for the mining people and for the oil people.

I ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to put pressure on the provincial governments with regard to new mines and oil fields and tell them, "If you all stop being greedy, you will all get more money." Even a provincial premier or a provincial minister will respond to that. I ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to press the Minister of Finance to amend the tax laws, to encourage the people to save increasingly and to invest. The one way to make money is to invest in the shares of the resource industries in Canada. The best way to ensure a good return on these investments is to make certain the senior capital is paid off fast, and not only will the provincial and federal governments be better off but so will the shareholders. Let the people of Canada as individuals own this country, not the provinces or the federal government.

I do not believe that the great majority of the members of the NDP want any form of socialism. I know them.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): There are only a few aberrations that got into the House.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Tell us what the Tories want.

Mr. Gilbert: Tell us what Sinclair Stevens wants.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): In winding up my remarks I am pointing out that the great majority of members of the NDP across this country, the labour people, do not want socialism, do not want technocrats ruling this country, and they will go for a program whereby individuals own this country. Therefore I suggest that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources take into account the debate he has heard today and the comments made by some pretty good Canadians, such as the hon. member for Peace River, who proposed a compromise and took this out of the House in December.

We do have some constructive proposals whereby the minister can retain his power if he does it within the framework of the constitution. I hope that he will not only be flexible in looking at these amendments to improve the bill but will try to achieve that consensus, if possible without having to use the bill, by getting the Minister of Finance to change his position. As Bonaparte could retreat from Moscow, so can the Minister of Finance retreat from his irrational and silly budget.

Mr. Stanfield: Madam Chairman, perhaps as I have been described as a socialist conservative, I can make a constructive contribution.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Just like Saturday night.

Mr. Stanfield: I am surprised to find that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is spending his time in such a frivolous way.

I would like to emphasize something the minister himself has made pretty clear today. Following the failure of the recent conference of first ministers to reach a consensus on the price of crude oil in Canada—leaving natural gas alone for a moment—the premiers, the Prime Minister, the minister to some extent, the government establishment and the functionaries who talk to the press immediately gave the impression to the Canadian people that in the absence of a consensus involving all of the provinces and the federal government, the federal government would have no alternative but to seek these powers under Bill C-32, and to use them.

The minister was frank enough to say today that what is really involved ultimately would be a consensus between the federal government, representing the views of all the Canadian people, and the producing provinces. It would be very helpful, of course. Everyone would like to see a consensus involving not only the federal government and the producing provinces, but the federal government and all the provinces, including the producing and consuming provinces. But I do not think the spokesmen for the federal government should try to give the Canadian public the impression that, failing a consensus involving all the provinces, the federal government has no recourse but to invoke legislation of this sort, whereas I think the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has stated quite clearly that these powers he is seeking would, in his judgment, not be necessary if the federal government could achieve a consensus with the producing provinces.

I think the country as a whole should understand that this consensus in the last analysis is necessary for the federal government to see, in effect, a level of petroleum prices which is satisfactory to the country, much as the desire, no doubt, to see a consensus which included the consuming provinces. It is not necessary for me to labour that point but—

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: I know I am not in the same class as the hon. member for St. Boniface, and I frequently thank my maker for that.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): On a point of order, Madam Chairman, I just wanted to make sure that the Leader of the Opposition knew that nowhere was he close to the manner in which the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain brought this matter to the attention of the House a while ago. He does not have the same enthusiasm or the same phraseology, and I thought I would bring that to his attention.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. This is far from a point of order.

Mr. Stanfield: I would like to express very earnestly one or two concerns to the minister, even if my expression of these views lacks the fervour and the authority the hon. member for St. Boniface would like to see. I say without reservation that I recognize there could be a movement in oil prices within our country which would cause such a dislocation in our economy and such problems for the Canadian people that, with the authority of this parliament, the government would certainly be justified in intervening to prevent that from happening. I want to make it very clear at the outset that in no circumstances would the federal parliament be unjustified in moving into this situation, but I want to say that I have a great deal of difficulty with the minister's argument that constitutionally this parliament can authorize the government to fix the price of petroleum in this country whether there is any urgency or not, and can base such legislative action simply on the trade and commerce clause in the BNA Act.

I find it very difficult to accept, constitutionally, that in the absence of any urgency or emergency the federal parliament has this power to fix the price of something indefinitely, simply because it moves in the commerce of the provinces. That, it seems to me, is a very far reaching constitutional argument to make.

Second, quite apart from the constitutional argument, I feel very uncomfortable being asked to vote in favour of legislation whereby this parliament gives to the Government of Canada the right and the power indefinitely in the future to fix the price of petroleum products, to fix the price of crude oil and the price of natural gas, with no time limit, no anything. We are being asked to give this power to the government indefinitely in the future. I think this is a very unwise request to make. I do not have such confidence in—well, I will not get into that. I will not say it in a light that would seem to be argumentative, reflecting in any way on my judgment or on the judgment of the government.

I just say that I am deeply bothered at being asked to vote in favour of the Government of Canada being given this power indefinitely, a power which would continue, having no relation to any sense of urgency, indefinitely in the future. I think that is a very questionable power for the Government of Canada to ask for, quite apart from the constitutional arguments which have been made. I think that those who have objected to this legislation on constitutional grounds are correct but, even if they were wrong, I do not think the Government of Canada should seek this power on an indefinite basis, and I do not think I should be asked to vote this power in the government on an indefinite basis in the future. There are many reasons for this.

I do not think one has to be cynical or skeptical to recognize that the power of the government to fix the price of petroleum indefinitely into the future could very quickly and readily become what is generally called a political football. There could be enormous political pressures develop in connection with the judgment that the government would exercise from time to time as to what this price should be. It is always going to affect a lot of people. There will be no possibilities of any market influences in this connection.

One can argue, I know, that there is no market influences at work now, that at the moment everything is rigged by the OPEC countries. This may continue indefinitely, or it may not. But once the Government of Canada has this power, and this statute stays on the statute books with these provisions in it giving the government the power to fix the price of petroleum and natural gas in Canada, then the Government of Canada, whatever its political complexion may be through the years, will have in its hot little hands something that will continue to bring enormous political pressure upon it to do not necessarily what is in the interest of the country but what may seem from time to time to be politically expedient.

Normally powers like this are not exercised directly by government. Public utilities, telephone companies—

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Heavy water plants.

Mr. Stanfield: Well, the hon. member can be funny if he likes, but this is a serious matter.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): It is a very serious matter.

Mr. Stanfield: The price of heavy water is fixed by contract. As I was saying, normally pricing is regulated by some independent commission, such as a public utilities board, the Canadian Transport Commission, or something of that sort. In this case the government is taking directly into its own hands the power to fix prices, and it is going to be subjected directly to all the pressures that this involves.

I am not suggesting that, if it is necessary for the Government of Canada in the year 1975 to fix the price of crude petroleum, in this country, this should be delegated to a board. In the circumstances, if there is such urgency it is a responsibility that should be accepted directly by the government. But I think this House should think for quite a long time before placing in the hands of the government—this government and governments that may succeed it—the responsibility and power to fix the price of petroleum products in this country, at least at the crude oil and natural gas stage.

That is all I want to say, Madam Chairman. There is the constitutional difficulty that I see. And quite apart from the constitutional difficulty there is the wisdom of this House voting this responsibility and power to the government on an indefinite basis.

Having said that, I repeat that I and, I am sure, my colleagues are quite prepared to recognize that the need may exist for the Government of Canada to act on behalf of the people of Canada. It may exist in the year 1975; it may arise from time to time in years to come. But this power should be hedged around in a manner that indicates it is used only in cases of urgency. It is not a power that the government should have or should be given on a routine basis.

Even if the minister refuses to agree with and rejects the constitutional arguments which I think are valid, if he will recognize the danger involved in the government and its successors having, without limitation or restriction, without any ordinary procedural safeguards, the power to fix the price of petroleum products through the years, there can be a meeting of minds across the floor of the House that will provide the government with the powers it needs to safeguard the interests of Canadians in a situation of urgency. As I have said, if such a situation does exist in this country in the year 1975, or exists from time to time in the future, the government will have no difficulty getting this authority. But it will have a great deal of difficulty getting agreement from me at least to having this very large and unrestricted power to be exercised according to its whims indefinitely into the future, whether there be urgency or anything else to call upon its use.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Madam Chairman, I must say that the intervention of the Leader of the Opposition is an interesting one because it reflects certain aspects of his thinking with regard to the current petroleum and natural gas pricing situation in Canada. It also gives some indication of his concept of the kind of market that we have for petroleum and hydrocarbons, not only in Canada but throughout the world.

The Leader of the Opposition says that there may be an emergency situation, that there may be urgency in the year 1975. He is not convinced that there is. Obviously he does not think there is at the present time. Substantial opinion has been expressed—it is not just a case of my views against his—to the effect that even the slightest increase in this year, given the current circumstances surrounding the economy, would be against the interests of Canadians. This particular opinion was very prominently displayed last week at the conference.

When you really analyse the opinions in both directions in this regard, the final opinion that comes out is certainly that represented by the premier of Ontario, who said that this was the kind of situation not only in which we should keep the maximum price at the level of $6.50 but, as well, that we should proceed by this specific bill to exercise the jurisdiction that the premier obviously thought rested with the Government of Canada to maintain these maximum prices in Canada for both oil and natural gas. So it is an interesting concept that the Leader of the Opposition has. First, he does not share the opinion that there is the least urgency to the situation; and he has rejected the viewpoint that was put forward at the conference.

The second comment that I should like to make concerns the argument of the quality of indefiniteness of the time limit. No member now sitting on that side had the responsibility for introducing the legislation in 1959—the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain was here a moment ago—that established the National Energy Board and, at the same time, established a national oil policy that fixed prices in Canada. Incidentally, they were prices that were above the international price of oil, and which in part of the Canadian market required consumers to pay more than would otherwise have been the case had market forces applied. So I find it strange to hear the Leader of the Opposition say that there is some inherent evil in the quality of indefiniteness in this bill.

He suggested there is some inherent evil in provisions for fixing the price of petroleum. After all, it was done for 12 years, without the horrors the hon. gentleman sought to conjure up in his statement, and without the adverse influences he mentioned. On the whole, I must say that although I resided in that part of Canada which, through those years, had to pay higher prices for petroleum as fixed by the legislation passed by the government of which the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain was a member, it was an effective exercise in jurisdiction. That legislation was undoubtedly the source of the present prosperity of the Canadian petroleum industry. Although Ontario had to pay more in the long run, the country prospered. I suggest that the indefiniteness of the powers sought by the Diefenbaker government for fixing the price of petroleum, powers which were invoked by that government and by successive Liberal governments for close to 12 years, did not involve any of the horrors which the Leader of the Opposition tried to conjure up tonight.

I suppose one of the most meaningful commentaries on the thinking of the Leader of the Opposition is his notion with regard to a return to market influences governing the price of petroleum. One wonders what the Leader of the Opposition thinks will happen in the international petroleum market. Certainly, no matter whether market forces had any bearing in the past on the price of petroleum, and this has been a matter of great debate, it is clear that, given the continued involvement of producing countries' governments in the exploration, development and marketing of petroleum, markets and market prices as we knew them in the past are things of the past. There will be a distinct political influence in this field and it is important for the Government of Canada, not just this government, but succeeding governments, to be given the ability to take action in order to protect citizens of Canada with regard to the price of commodities as fundamental as petroleum and natural gas.

There are distinct differences in our opinions, Madam Chairman. Indeed, we do not say that, under our constitution, only an emergency will permit the federal government to act. Such powers were available over the years under the National Energy Board Act, under which the price was maintained at a level higher than it would have attained under market forces.

As the Prime Minister said, we, in my party, want to balance supply, and the inevitable impact of price increases on supply, with the inflationary effect of the increased price of these commodities and the fiscal and economic drag which these increases could impose on the economy at this time.

Mr. Bawden: Why not change your tax levels?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): We have received a clear indication from consuming provinces, from the hon. gentleman's native province, from my own and from others, that they regard the situation as so serious that we should not take action to allow prices to go up at this time and that we should, indeed, exercise our powers under this bill.

I think the Leader of the Opposition stated the issues clearly. There is a difference between his viewpoint and his party's viewpoint and that of certain of the provinces and of the federal government. We, on our part, are concerned to exercise control over market prices. We will make every attempt to get the agreement not just of producing provinces but of all provinces to the appropriate price level for these commodities. We will do our best, with the producing provinces, to arrive at a fair level of price.

Under our constitution some level of government must have responsibility. We suggest that if any level of government should be responsible for deciding what the price level ought to be, surely it should be that level which is responsible to all the people of Canada, and which has the support of and is elected by all the people of Canada. That level of government should be given responsibility rather than one particular province. As the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands said this afternoon, on that basis this power should ultimately reside in the federal government.

This afternoon I alluded to a matrix of discussions which will take place on these difficult and technical questions. We are under pressure, particularly with regard to natural gas, because if no action is taken, under Alberta law that price will be forced up for consumers in other parts of the country who depend on Alberta natural gas. We hope to work out a compromise on that. We recognize that the ultimate responsibility is ours, and that is why we seek the powers under this bill.

Mr. Baldwin: Madam Chairman, will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Certainly.

Mr. Baldwin: The minister mentioned the National Energy Board Act on which, obviously, many of his legal conclusions are based. Did that act not make clear the constitutional right of producing provinces to fix the wellhead price? Conflicting claims about the right to fix prices have arisen in Canada from time to time. Some contend that the provinces alone have the right to fix the wellhead price, and some contend that the federal government, by virtue of the National Energy Board Act, is given certain rights in this regard. For instance, the federal government has authority over the transport and/or export of natural gas and oil and petroleum products and, by that means, can indirectly fix prices. The federal government has always had that right. It has always exercised authority with regard to price fixing. The Diefenbaker government recognized the situation and provided for provincial rights to be left with the provinces.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Madam Chairman, the hon. gentleman referred to the wish, to the desirability, to give producing provinces the right to keep prices up. He seems to acknowledge the power for prices to be kept up under federal law. He wants the provinces not only to keep up the price of petroleum, but to impose a higher price on certain consuming provinces, a price much higher than they would have had to pay during the particular years we discussed. Let me point out that the price was kept up at a time when the international price was low, and the legislation to which he alludes was a protective device for the assistance of the hon. gentleman's province. If it was within the jurisdiction and competence of the federal government to legislate at that time, to keep prices up, because it was in the interests of the Canadian economy as a whole, surely, by the same reasoning, it is within the jurisdiction and competence of the federal government to do what is proposed in this bill, and to keep prices down when international prices have increased by a multiple of five over what they were previously.

Mr. Stanfield: Madam Chairman, I want to make a few comments on the comments the minister made on my modest intervention. He asked me what I thought the outlook was for the restoration of market conditions for oil, assuming normal market conditions ever existed. I do not know the answer. I have no crystal ball. I do not think anyone knows what will happen in future to international oil prices.

On the other hand I do not think that we should assume that present uncertainty ought to be the basis for passing legislation which is to be of indefinite duration. We should not be asked to assume that conditions will remain substantially as they are.

The minister suggested there was nothing wrong with the National Energy Board in 1959 being given powers of indefinite duration. I suggest conditions were different. Parliament adopted for Canada a well-defined oil policy involving the so-called Ottawa Valley line. The government decided that the market west of the Ottawa Valley line was to be preserved for western Canadian oil. That was a well-defined policy and was to endure, naturally, for an unlimited period in the future. This government is asking for something altogether different. The minister is not bringing forward any reasonably well-defined marketing policy. He is seeking power to enable the Government of Canada for all time in future to fix the market, that is, to fix the price of oil and of natural gas, without regard to any criterion. He is asking for powers far larger and more indefinite in scope than were granted in 1959, in the legislation about which he talked.

The minister talks about the wish of the consuming provinces that the price of oil, for example, will remain stable. Of course they express that view. I am not quoting his exact words, but I heard the minister's leader say that after July 1 the price of crude oil ought to be increased.

I do not know what kind of agreement the minister will be able to negotiate with the producing provinces. I hope in his negotiations he is a little more conciliatory and persuasive than he is in his discussions with me across the floor tonight where he seeks to make points, enlarge differences, and create differences that do not exist. I must say that I noticed this somewhat from a distance in watching his dealings with the oil producing provinces in the past year or so.

There is a very serious condition in our country this year in terms of inflation and the problems faced by our consumers. It runs right through the economy, although until recently there was some suggestion that it was not all that serious.

I recognize that there is a serious problem confronting the people and the government of this country this year. I realize there will be an urgent situation if the federal government cannot reach an agreement with the producing provinces on the prices of oil and natural gas. I am prepared to face that problem. I am prepared to provide the minister with authority to face that problem. I do not want him to twist my words and say that I am in favour of increases and he is not, when he is the one who said publicly, or through the Prime Minister, that they favour an increase. Now he is trying to skate around and get himself on the side of the premier of Ontario and the premier of Nova Scotia.

An hon. Member: It is you who is skating.

Mr. Stanfield: I am not skating at all. I am trying to be perfectly frank with the minister. He smiles. Members opposite can laugh. I am saying there may well be an urgent situation. The minister will agree that there will not be an urgent situation with regard to pricing if he can reach an agreement. Of course there will be an urgent situation if he cannot do that. However, the minister should not use the possibility of an urgent situation in 1975 to arrogate to himself and his successors large undefined powers of undefined scope and duration at this time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, when the Leader of the Opposition starts pounding his desk he may be conceding that he is not too strong in the substance of his argument. The National Energy Board had a national oil policy to maintain prices for over 12 years. The Leader of the Opposition cannot escape that. The power was there and exercised by this parliament without any of the imagined horrors the Leader of the Opposition tried to trot out before us. The fact is that under that particular policy the price was maintained for the purpose of that particular national interest. Now that oil prices have gone four and five times higher than that particular price, we are seeking at this time to exercise the same jurisdiction to make sure it does not have this impact on Canadians.

The Leader of the Opposition made a lot of references to the twisting of words. However, the words are in the statute. They talk about setting maximum prices. On this basis the fact remains that this government is taking the responsibility which it has to keep the Canadian price down. It has through the legislative plan proposed here, largely by consensus because of the difficulty in getting this bill through parliament, acted to keep the price down. We propose to continue to do so. We now seek legislative sanction for the kind of program which was put before the Canadian people and was accepted by them as being in their interest.

The Leader of the Opposition talked about indefinite power. However, he has to confess he does not know what is going to happen to the international oil price. He does not know what the future will be. He would pick a specific date in the future beyond which everything will be all right.

The national oil policy was changed by this government from the earlier policy that existed for a period of 12 years. Indeed, with the change in external facts, the policy set out in this document may again be changed. However, at the moment we do not know at what particular time the international price may, if ever, come down. In the meantime we, and a lot of other people in this country, think we should have the power to carry out our responsibility of ensuring by agreement that Canadians do not pay very high prices. That is what the bill says. The hon. member says this is without criteria. I invite him to examine the criteria in clause 37.

Mr. Stanfield: I have, many times.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The Leader of the Opposition gives no evidence of having done that or trying to understand it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

NATIONAL PARKS—REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF PROPOSAL TO INCREASE ENTRANCE FEE TO PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND PARK

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, on March 21 I asked the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Buchanan) if he would add to the good sense of his year's moratorium the deeper wisdom of a full abandonment of the iniquitous and nefarious scheme to keep the people of Prince Edward Island away from their own beaches.

I must confess the minister's reply was disappointing and not indicative of the sense and sensitivity which he has revealed on some other matters facing him since he assumed his important portfolio.

In this issue we must rely on the sense and sensitivity of the minister. The people of Prince Edward Island are of one mind on the question. They do not welcome the notion that they should be fenced off by a $2 admission barrier from the beaches and waters of their own province.

Island people are not known for being unreasonable. Indeed, as residents of the birthplace of confederation we have learned to endure many economic disadvantages. We can understand increases in fees for camp grounds, trailer parks, golf courses and the like, but to be charged to enter the park to bathe in the glorious waters of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, to pay $2 to enter or bring a visitor in to look at the coastline, Dalvay House or the famed Green Gables, this is an imposition devoutly to be condemned.

Someone in the minister's advisory Sanhedrin is not aware of the fact that the Prince Edward Island park in relation to the people thereby is a park unlike all the others. The park is basically a long narrow strip embracing a good portion of the northern coast of the province. It has brought pleasure to countless numbers of tourists ever since its establishment over a generation ago. Its charm is the beauty of sea, sky and sand. It is not a high-powered pleasure palace or a vast natural park replete with exotic wild life.

We are happy that people from other parts of the world are given an opportunity to relish the riches which nature has bestowed upon our little province. But Prince Edward Islanders also love their heritage. Thousands of people live within a short distance of a park entrance. They have long enjoyed a rendezvous with our scenic beauty at day's end or week's end.

You can imagine their reaction to being told that to take a refreshing swim in the Gulf of St. Lawrence or to gaze at the sand dunes at dusk they must pay an entry fee. Wordsworth said:

What is this life if full of care
We have no time to stand and stare?

I don't want the minister to plagiarize Wordsworth and declare:

What care I what cares have you
If you have not a buck or two?

I regard this matter as one of very great significance. I know intimately every part of the park. I have delighted to show it to visitors from abroad, enjoyed the unexcelled mackerel fishing at Covehead Harbour, visited my friends, the fishermen of Rustico Harbour. I know the park in season and out of season and I know how unnecessary is the imposition of a $2 entrance fee. The people of Prince Edward Island are not disrupting the traffic nor desecrating the environment. Indeed, Island people know the area so well that they use the swimming spots less crowded by tourists and generally are able to maximize the full use of the park, whereas the visitor often assumes that there is no place in the park except the locale of Green Gables.

I am pleased that the minister has provided for a moratorium of one year. I ask him to reflect upon the situation, to visit our park and not to hesitate to regard this as a special case. In no province is the park area such a substantial portion of the total area of the province. In no province is the sole park so accessible to so many local citizens. Let the minister not be disturbed by those who, without rhyme, reason, imagination, or that rarest of qualities, common sense, affirm we cannot make exceptions. Such a brittle line would have prevented us from establishing Confederation. The BNA Act itself is replete with special arrangements re subsidies, Senate representation, and many other things. We, like Newfoundland, are unique in that we are the only provinces which require you to pay upon entry and departure—this special status we could do without.

I close with an appeal to the minister to harken to me, to the premier of government of Prince Edward Island, to the people of the province and, I am sure, to the millions of our fellow Canadians who have learned to love our province. Make the moratorium a permanent one, not merely one of 12 months' duration. To take liberties, with Shakespeare, I say to him regarding this nefarious entry fee—kill it, not scotch it.

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Thank you, Madam Speaker.

[Mr. Macquarrie.]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What? No Shakespeare!

Mr. Buchanan: The appeals of my hon. friend opposite are always extremely difficult to resist. Indeed, I must say I shall accept part of them; I shall accept his kind offer to visit the park. I shall be down there on Saturday of this week and I shall be meeting with the tourist association which, as the hon. member is aware, I am sure, also has some concern to express.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Will you have to pay to get in?

Mr. Buchanan: Well, I had to pay last week to get into Banff and I am sure I can pay in Prince Edward Island as well. As the hon. member has stated, we have allowed a moratorium. The maritime provinces have been unique in that there has been no fee charged whatsoever, whereas the others have had fees which have been causing distress for many years. I admit we might have introduced it on a more gradual basis. However, this will now put the Prince Edward Island Park and the parks in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick on the same footing as those in the rest of Canada.

As I indicated earlier in reply to questions, we still anticipate realizing only a very small proportion of our operating costs in total revenue this year of roughly $12 million as opposed to approximately $66 million.

As the hon. member knows, the annual fee is $10. Canada has an outstanding national parks system with 50,000 square miles of unique topography. For a fee of $10 one is allowed to enter each and every one of those parks throughout Canada, and I really feel that represents outstanding value.

We have made some exceptions. Those who live in the parks, and I am not sure of the details of the park in Prince Edward Island, but perhaps some folks actually live there, are exempt from the fee. Those who must go into the parks because of their work are also exempt, and those who must pass through in order to reach their homes, where that is the only access road, and that has some application to the Cape Breton Highlands Park, are exempt. People can walk in the parks free. Those people who live in an area that abuts the parks can walk, ride bicycles or ride horses, and as long as they travel by these modes they are exempt from the fee.

I share the concern of the hon. member, but I really do not see how in justice and equity to the other parks in Canada I can go beyond the special situation which exists in respect of the deferral position for one year.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—ALLEGED AGREEMENT CANADA WOULD NOT RETALIATE FOR BOARDING OF "GREENPEACE III" BY FRENCH AUTHORITIES

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, my topic tonight is the Greenpeace III, which has been referred to in the House not only today and a few times in the last couple of weeks, but also was referred to by this member and, I think, by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) in 1973.

The Greenpeace III was the ship that sailed from British Columbia to protest French nuclear testing. It left with a letter from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) wishing it a safe voyage, and it left partially financed by the government of British Columbia. As we all know, that trip ended in disaster with the boarding of the ship by French government troops, with some severe damage being done not only to the ship but as well to Captain McTaggart.

Captain McTaggart is now over in France on his case, which has been accepted by the French courts, in which he is suing the French government. A few days ago it came to our attention that the French government was not being harassed in any manner whatsoever by the Canadian government and we wondered why. We know the government condemned the French government in this House after the incident. We also know the government helped Captain McTaggart get his ship back and we wonder why this assistance has all of a sudden ended.

I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) and the Acting Prime Minister, the former Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), if there had been any collusion between the two governments before the boarding of that Greenpeace III. They both denied that there was any collusion, and I have to accept their word on that.

Let me read from a story by Leo Ryan, dateline Paris, April 11, under the heading "Greenpeace skipper critical of Canada". It states:

> Greenpeace skipper Dave McTaggart today accused the Canadian Government of implicity allowing a French naval vessel to board his protest yacht in a Pacific nuclear testing area in the summer of 1973.
> He charged that a Canadian government denial on Tuesday of a secret agreement between the Ottawa and Paris authorities was couched in "weak and ambiguous terms".
> To back up his accusation, Mr. McTaggart cited a "confidential report" addressed on Aug. 23, 1973 by Vice-Admiral Christian Claverie, commander in charge of the French nuclear testing operational group, to an air force general directing the nuclear testing centre.
> Mr. McTaggart's lawyer, Hierry Garby-Lacrouts, submitted the lengthy report to a Paris court earlier this week as part of the evidence in the proceedings opened against the French Navy.
> In a statement released here, Mr. McTaggart points out that "the first paragraph of this long text indicates that after being assured by the general that no retaliatory measures were to be feared from the Canadian government on the occasion of Air France and Cotam (military transport planes) stopovers in Montreal, the admiral ordered the boarding of Greenpeace III.
> "It would appear from this statement that the French authorities, in some way or other, made contact with the Canadian government and obtained, explicitly or implicitly, the agreement of the Ottawa Government.
> "In a statement to the press on April 8, 1975, the Department of External Affairs denies this claim in particularly weak and ambiguous terms. The Canadian government denies that there was an official consultation concerning the boarding but does not deny that there were communications in another form. Following these communications, it was up to the Canadian government to threaten the French government with retaliatory measures.

● (2210)

> "By not doing so, the Canadian government implicity allowed the boarding to take place" Mr. McTaggart alleged.
> New Zealand and Australia, besides bringing a protest against the tests to the International Court in The Hague took the retaliatory measures including barring Air France planes from landing in their countries.

If what Mr. McTaggard alleged is true we have a situation of a Canadian citizen who has been sent on a protest mission by a number of people from British Columbia, who left here with a letter from our Prime Minister wishing him a safe voyage, who left financed by one of our provincial governments, and who was sold out by his government to the French government, and was beaten on his boat and lost an eye. I implore the government to live up to the commitment made to Mr. McTaggart and to many Canadians after the 1973 incident, to go to France with the best legal aid the government can provide and make sure that Mr. McTaggart can at least get some restitution for the great job he did in telling the French nation that Canada no longer likes to see nuclear testing take place in Pacific waters.

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the question of possible subsequent retaliatory action to be taken by the Canadian government was never the subject of discussions between officials of the Department of External Affairs and of the French Government. It would appear from the CP press report regarding this matter that such assurances as may have been given regarding possible Canadian government retaliatory action were made by one French naval officer to another, without any consultation with officials of the Canadian government.

Those exchanges which did take place between French and Canadian government officials, immediately prior to the 1973 boarding of the Greenpeace III, expressed the Canadian government's concern for the safety of those Canadians, including Mr. McTaggart, who had declared their intention to enter, and were reported to be in, the French nuclear testing area around Mururoa, in protest against the summer of 1973 French series of nuclear tests.

The Canadian government, through the Canadian embassy in Paris, has been and will continue actively to press the French government for an acceptable out of court settlement. From the very beginning, the Canadian government has taken the view that it could intervene directly with the French on Mr. McTaggart's behalf. Nevertheless, we have always considered that the normal course for him to follow, under international law, would be first to pursue the local legal remedies open to him under French law. In that context the forthcoming hearing follows logically from Mr. McTaggart's earlier filing of action last summer to protect his prescriptive rights. We are keeping in close consultation with Mr. McTaggart and, further to his request, the Canadian embassy is providing him with assistance of an essentially consular nature in connection with the presentation of his case before the courts.

The original commitment that Canada would espouse Mr. McTaggart's claims has not altered. However, the time of espousal still remains open to him. We are seeking the views of Mr. McTaggart and his lawyers regarding any possible adverse effects under French law that espousal might have on his action before the French courts since we would not wish to prejudice his case if we were to espouse at this time.

Whether or not we could espouse his claims after the court hearings would, of course, depend on the outcome of the case. If Mr. McTaggart were to lose on the merits and thus not be denied justice, then the Canadian government would be precluded from espousing his claims under international law. Similarly, were we to espouse now and if Mr. McTaggart were subsequently to lose his case on the merits in the French courts, we would then have to abandon our espousal of his claims.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION—REASON FOR ALLOCATING FUNDS FOR THE FURTHER STUDY OF CONTAINER FACILITIES AT HALIFAX

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, I come here tonight to have a conversation with my friend from St. Boniface about the port of Halifax. Very specifically I am here to seek some elaboration on the matter of the inclusion of $1.5 million designated for, to quote from page ten of the actual contract addendum:

"Feasibility and conceptual design studies of additional container facilities in the port of Halifax including detailed financial and cost-benefit analysis of alternate sites, conceptual design and block layout design, required off and on site supporting infrastructure requirements such as back up storage, transportation and distribution facilities and an environmental impact assessment.

What does all this mean? I ask that, particularly in light of the statement of the minister last Tuesday as reported at page 4595 of Hansard, when he said:

The premier of Nova Scotia yesterday indicated that he hoped the work which will be financed by this $1 million will be completed in short order.

It has been reliably estimated by those in the trade that studies of this extent will take three or more years to complete. Others in the trade have suggested that in fact the bulk of this work has been done. I ask if this work has already been done, and what time perimeters, if the work has not been done, has the federal department set on these studies, if in fact any at all?

The present facility is one of the most modern in Canada, and certainly the most efficient. Even so, it became obvious in the early 1970s that it would require expansion to handle the traffic which was even then recognizing the economies of shipping through the Port of Halifax, economies of time and price and, perhaps of vastly greater importance, the fact that the Port of Halifax is virtually free of labour disruptions and has been so for many years.

This matter has been studied and studied again. We have seen the spectacle of the Nova Scotia government promising action by certain deadlines, then promising action upon extensions of those deadlines, and promising action upon the conclusion of extensions of extensions. The feasibility studies have been carried out exhaustively and expertly by officials of the Nova Scotia department of development, by outside consultants, and by Canadian National Railways. In simple terms, there is no excuse for any further feasibility studies whatsoever, and we wonder why we are bogged down in that sense.

The terms of the agreement call for three parts to these studies. I just have one. The second relates to so-called inland container terminal studies, and $150,000 has been committed for these studies. Of the entire $1.5 million, this study alone needs to be carried out yet.

[Mr. Breau.]

The third part of the proposal is for the land reclamation feasibility study. The agreement calls for the expenditure of $350,000 for this, and yet it is well known that this study was completed to the specifications outlined in the agreement almost one month ago. In other words, it is done.

The matter of the land reclamation study brings us to a further point. It has been suggested in the Halifax and Dartmouth Port community that, on the basis of the preliminary results of this study, the province of Nova Scotia approached the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) and sought agreement to share costs for a $3 million landfill operation at the Wright's Cove, navy island site on the Dartmouth side of the harbour. The suggestion is that in fact DREE agreed with the proposal but that the National Harbours Board, the landlord of the port, and unfortunately known to Liberals and Tories alike as a pathetically poor landlord, stepped in outraged, and said to the province and to DREE: "In no way are you going to interfere here. This is our jurisdiction. We have plans to frustrate that port at every turn in the road, and there will be no DREE assistance so long as we have legislative authority to act."

There were some comments in general along these lines, comments made with the full knowledge that, for example, there has been massive DREE involvement in and around the port of Quebec on the St. Lawrence River. The National Harbours Board approved dredging and landfill operations, as we all know, at the Beaufort Flats within the port of Quebec, and yet it refused the same type of project funded by the same department in the port of Halifax. One has to wonder why.

Last week we heard the announcement that a study would take place on land reclamation, a study that has been completed and upon the recommendation of which the present agreement, except for the intervention of the National Harbours Board, would have included the sum of $3 million to start a second container facility in this very calendar year. Instead of that we have another study. It is my contention that the people in the community of Halifax and Dartmouth deserve something better than this.

I want to know why there are to be more studies. I seek to be assured that the whole matter is not, as many are already suggesting, another in a series of comic frauds played upon our port community, the perpetual carrot dangled in our faces trotted out at each election, and trotted back after each election.

I would like to hear from the parliamentary secretary tonight either a confirmation or a denial of the allegation that the National Harbours Board intervened destructively to halt proposed land reclamation efforts agreed upon by the government of the province of Nova Scotia and the Department of Regional Economic Expansion.

The reasoning is simple:

The present facilities will reach their capacity before 1975 passes. Thought and planning must turn towards either expansion of the present facility or relocation to another site, and it must be done now; otherwise, the container ports' hard earned reputation will be eroded as ships sit in the stream losing money while awaiting a berth.

That is a direct quote from page 10 of the addendum of the general agreement between DREE and the province of Nova Scotia. That reasoning is reached because there is recognition on the part of the province of Nova Scotia and DREE that something has to be done. Given the present situation all that can be done is for the province of Nova Scotia to proceed without the assistance of the federal authority, and that, while it is possible, would be a regrettable state of affairs.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I listened with considerable interest last Tuesday, April 8, when the hon. member and his colleague from Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) asked the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) a number of important questions concerning the development agreements signed with the province of Nova Scotia. I speak here of hundreds of millions of dollars, over $142 million, I would suggest.

As hon. members will know, the minister has been signing subsidiary agreements over the past months with the various provinces under the authority of the general development agreement. Last Monday he signed two important agreements with the province of Nova Scotia. These agreements are included in the $142 million I mentioned. They related to development plans for the Strait of Canso area and the metropolitan Halifax-Dartmouth area. I know that copies of these agreements have been provided to the hon. member's office.

Over the past four years there has been tremendous growth in shipping and port related activities on the east coast. All major east coast ports have benefitted from this expansion, including the port of Halifax. It is expected that the container terminal in Halifax will operate at capacity this year. There is as well a general acceptance of the need either to expand existing facilities in that port or build a second terminal. The minister explained in his reply to the hon. member that there was a real need to determine in a precise way questions relating to design and site location factors. Because of the important economic impact this will have, not only on Halifax but on the rest of the east coast, further studies were felt to be warranted. The agreement itself spells this out more fully, and I quote:

> This research will include detailed financial and cost benefit analysis of alternative sites, conceptual design and block layout design, required off and on site support, infrastructure requirements such as backup storage, transportation and distribution facilities, and an environmental impact assessment.

I believe the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) will agree at this time that the minister replied to him as fully as is possible. Part of the reply, I think, should be repeated because it states his position clearly, and I quote:

> We would be quite prepared to enter into a special supplementary agreement with a view to expanding the facilities along the lines mentioned by the hon. member. Whether or not it would be an expansion of what exists at present or whether it would be in a different location are issues which still must be resolved among the parties of which DREE is really not a direct member. But when the project has been firmed up in respect of the ideas and concepts of those who are promoting it at the present time, then as I have said we are prepared to make a DREE contribution.

I realize this matter is most important to the Dartmouth area. The hon. member has raised additional points concerning the matter, and I wish to assure him that these will be brought to the minister's attention as well.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.27 p.m.

ALLEGED INADEQUACY OF X-RAY AND METAL DETECTING DEVICES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43 to propose a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

It has come to my attention that people have carried weapons, such as holstered hand guns and long bladed knives onto commercial airliners, both on their person and in their hand luggage. While these were not people of bad intent, these occurrences do show that x-ray and metal detecting devices at Canadian airports are not completely thorough or effective, resulting in possible danger to innocent passengers.

I would move, seconded by the member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke):

That this House direct the Minister of Transport to launch an immediate investigation into this matter and conduct extensive tests on these apparatus at Canadian airports.

Mr. Speaker: The motion proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43 cannot be presented without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—METHOD OF MAINTAINING COMPLIANCE WITH GUIDELINES ON WHICH THERE IS CONSENSUS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance who indicated yesterday in response to a question that he did not expect to achieve unanimity in any particular sector of the economy. I would like to ask, therefore, whether he expects to be able to maintain compliance with the targets about which there is to be consensus over a period of three or four years in the absence of unanimity within the particular sectors.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is assuming that we are successful in achieving a consensus or mutual agreement. Obviously any mutual agreement would have to allow for a certain flexibility in those areas of the work force that have fallen behind in terms of their ability to maintain that pace of the rise in the cost of living over the last 18 months.

On the other side, certain businesses and even industries have been in a loss position over the last few months or in a position where the competitive forces have put them in exceptional circumstances. So that in envisaging the operation of any consensus program, one would have to allow not only for a lack of complete unanimity but for some flexibility in the appraisal of the success or failure of the program.

Mr. Stanfield: I am happy to have the information, but I would be happier if the minister would answer my question.

Is it the intention of the minister to rely entirely upon voluntary compliance with his targets, flexible or rigid as the case may be, or does he propose to resort to other sanctions such as taxation sanctions, having said yesterday that he does not intend the monitoring board to have any power to impose its will?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): One of the difficulties with sanctions is the rigidity they impose. What one has to try to achieve in mobilizing the program is a balance between moderation in the claims upon the economy in terms of prices on the one hand and costs on the other with the necessity to retain enough incentives in the system to provide for the expansion, both in agriculture and industry, necessary to provide the jobs we will need until the end of the decade and provide the production that will ensure stability in prices over the medium and long terms.

Mr. Stanfield: I have a supplementary question. I wish the minister would answer directly how he intends to achieve support for his program if he cannot achieve unanimity within each sector, and how he can expect to achieve compliance over a period of three or four years. In particular, since he indicated yesterday that with respect to mineral prices, for example, the world price would be the domestic price, and that we would not resort to a two price system, how can he expect manufacturers to accept that kind of standard for mining companies if they are going to be restricted to price increases based only upon increased costs?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The hon. gentleman of course still has in the back of his mind the feeling that the voluntary system will not work—

Mr. Stanfield: I want to know your system.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): —in a free society, and he has relied in the past on a compulsory system. We rejected that because of the rigidities built into it and because of the fact that it places constraints on the expansionary potential of the economy. My hope is that the facts, as they are presented to Canadians in terms of our current unemployment rate, the current rate of inflation and the comparative escalation of costs in Canada compared with those in the United States, our closest competitor, and those in Europe, will be such that if we can mobilize a general climate of opinion in favour of this program, it has a good chance of succeeding.

INFLATION—MINISTER'S VIEW OF ORIENTATION OF ECONOMY IN RELATION TO OTHER INDUSTRIALIZED NATIONS

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): My question is also to the Minister of Finance. Relating the domestic consensus talks to the international scene, is it the position of the minister that the Canadian economy should be oriented in a counterveiling position to that of other countries to avoid a new synchronization of expansionary policy among industrialized nations, which the minister stated last evening had provoked Canadian and worldwide inflation over the past few years?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): No, sir.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR NAME OF ACTING MINISTER

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Considering the delicate stage of the consensus guidelines and the fragile state of the Canadian economy, would the Prime Minister tell the House what minister will be taking over the duties of the finance minister as acting finance minister, particularly that of talking the economy back to health, while the current Minister of Finance is visiting other countries?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): It will be the Acting Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Stevens: May we know the name of the Acting Minister of Finance?

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member for Westmount.

TRANSPORT

FREIGHT RATES—APPLICATION FOR 20 PER CENT INCREASE—POSSIBILITY OF INTERVENTION BY MINISTER TO PREVENT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that the Canadian Railway Freight Association has filed a tariff application for a 20 per cent increase in class freight rates effective May 5, and in view of the commitment of the minister in February, at the meeting of transport ministers in Calgary, to prevent further horizontal percentage increases in rail freight rates, can the minister inform the House whether he approves of this new 20 per cent increase in class rates, and if not, whether he intends to intervene to prevent the increase?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): I think I have stated my position on this across the board increase proposed by the railways. My answer was quite clear, and I am still opposed to what they are trying to achieve.

Mr. Benjamin: In view of the fact that these class rates are ceiling rates for the railways and set the pattern for all the other rates, that some commodity rates are tied directly to class rates and will automatically increase, and in view of the predictions that the increase in class rates will inevitably lead to further increases in other categories, can the minister give his assurance that, in accordance with his Calgary undertaking, no across the board increases in other categories will be permitted?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Under the authority given to me by law I will surely get in touch with the CTC and see to it that what I said is really accepted by the railways.

Mr. Benjamin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister clarify how he intends to carry out this commitment? Precisely what kinds of increases, in what categories is he pledged to prevent? For instance, what freight rates? The only one that he can prevent, possibly, is the rate on walrus tusks from Inuvik to Frobisher Bay. What is he going to do?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure the question period would be the appropriate place for the minister to attempt an exhaustive review of all the categories in which there might be intervention.

EFFECT OF LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE ON FEED GRAIN SUPPLIES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture.

Has he received a telegram from the Quebec poultry producers association stating their concern about the situation resulting from the strike of longshoremen at the Montreal, Quebec City and Trois-Rivières harbours, for producers now have poultry feed for 24 hours only, and, if yes, what does he intend to do?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we have received many telegrams but I am not sure if I have seen that one concerning the possible shortage of feed grains. The grain elevator in Quebec City has been opened for two or three days now and grain is moving out of that area. Other ships are moving into the area with feed grains. We are not moving grain out of Montreal or out of Three Rivers, but we are hopeful the grain supply situation will improve—not that there will be a sustained supply but sufficient that there will be no loss of poultry or livestock. We are doing everything possible to make sure that the grain moves.

Mr. Stanfield: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition on a point of order.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if by accident you have overlooked the tradition of calling on a member of the Social Credit Party in the first round?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I might say I have not done that by accident. It was done because at the moment the NDP member finished questioning no member of the Social Credit Party was standing.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE IN QUEBEC—INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT WILL TAKE LEGISLATIVE ACTION TO SETTLE

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, to calm the fears of the Leader of the Opposition, may I tell him that this afternoon I take it upon myself to be the spokesman for the Social Credit Party of Canada on this subject. I should have liked to put my supplementary to the Minister of Labour, but in his absence I shall address it to the Prime Minister.

Does the government intend to settle the strike of the longshoremen in the port of Montreal the way it did in the port of Vancouver?

Hon. André Ouellet (Acting Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry but I was not listening when the question was put. Would the hon. member be kind enough to ask it again?

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Speaker, I shall be pleased to do so.

I asked the Minister of Labour, or in his absence, his parliamentary secretary, or the Prime Minister, whether the government intends to take legislative measures identical to those Parliament passed to settle the longshoremen's strike in the port of Vancouver to settle the strike now paralyzing the ports of Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec City?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, there always comes a time in a strike when the public interest must be weighed against the right to strike. The government and the cabinet are now in the process of looking into this matter. For the time being we have no statement to make, but one thing is sure: the Minister of Labour and the government are watching the situation very closely.

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Leader of the Official Opposition for his kindness to us and also to tell the House that we did not elect the member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Béchard) to speak on our behalf. However, when our turn came, I was busy talking with a member on the government's side. So, my question—

An hon. Member: They were talking about patronage!

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): —and we were not talking about patronage, but about management.

In the absence of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, I want to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

In view of the unfortunate strike of longshoremen in the ports of Quebec City, Montreal and Trois-Rivières, which worries a lot of people and disturbs our economy, can the Prime Minister assure the House that the negotiations now taking place to settle this strike are conducted with diligence and not only for form's sake, and secondly can the Prime Minister reassure us on the results of these negotiations and tell us that the strike will soon be over?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, of course, I cannot give any guarantee regarding the outcome of the negotiations, but the answer I gave to the excellent question of the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Béchard) indicates rather clearly that the government follows this matter very closely.

EFFECT OF LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE ON FEED GRAIN SUPPLIES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture.

Considering that for the past 10 days several members from both sides of the House are rightly concerned about conditions in Quebec, can the minister tell us how long the government is ready to wait to settle this embarrassing matter and can he at last tell when producers will have sufficient supplies?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, many statements have been made concerning the shortage of grain and the loss of poultry livestock, but no evidence has been presented to me or to the provincial minister of agriculture in Quebec to show that this is actually taking place. Grain is moving out of the Quebec elevator. Grain is being moved to the area by ship from the Lakehead and by truck, and we are optimistic because those who are picketing the grain elevators in Montreal are not elevator workers. None of them work in the elevators. We hope, and are optimistic, that an arrangement can be made for the union to withdraw their pickets from that area, because there is an injunction; there is to be peaceful picketing, and truckers refuse to cross the picket lines when pickets are there. They are on public property, on the street, and we are optimistic enough to think that the union may be encouraged to withdraw their picket lines from that elevator in that area. Also, some trucks moved out of Montreal early this morning, before 6 a.m.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

Since the producers' association has already applied to the minister responsible for a subsidy to offset additional costs incurred as a result of that dispute, is the minister in a position to assure the House that he would be willing to discharge the additional costs which producers are now compelled to pay to obtain supplies?

[English]

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, we have always looked after them in the past in a responsible and reasonable fashion and accepted their requests in the same fashion.

HARBOURS

HALIFAX—ALLEGED COMMITMENT CONCERNING SHED RENTAL POLICY—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport and has to do with a question I asked him yesterday concerning the denial of an undertaking given by the vice-chairman of the National Harbours Board to the mayor of the city of Halifax and other interested people who came to Ottawa to discuss shed rentals in that particular port. Has he had an opportunity to advise himself of the nature of this serious confrontation between the mayor of the city of Halifax and others, and the chairman of the National Harbours Board concerning the denial of the undertaking given by Mr. Guy Beaudet, vice-chairman of the National Harbours Board.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is extremely difficult for me. I have taken the matter very seriously, and I got in touch with the National Harbours Board. I did not receive the exact confirmation of what the hon. member reports. I am not saying he does not tell the truth, but I think I have taken a faster way. Tomorrow, the chairman of the National Harbours Board, Mr. Taylor, will be in Halifax to meet the mayor to clarify the situation.

[English]

Mr. Forrestall: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I must say I am surprised that there has not been some reaction from the chairman of the National Harbours Board. Would the minister take a personal interest in this matter, because it is quite likely, if the impasse continues tomorrow, that the resignation of the vice-chairman of the National Harbours Board will be called for, a position which I cannot help but support, because somebody has been playing games with the port of Halifax. Would the minister intervene personally in this matter and use his authority to suggest in the strongest possible terms to Mr. Beaudet and Mr. Taylor that, when they go to Halifax, they should go prepared to talk straight and not with a crooked tongue.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, as soon as Mr. Taylor is back from Halifax and there have been discussions with the mayor, I will be happy to give a more precise answer.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR REFERENCE OF REPORT OF INDEPENDENT REVIEW COMMISSION TO COMMITTEE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the government House leader a question about the report of the Independent Review Commission which was tabled yesterday. Will the government House leader consult with the other House leaders with regard to submitting this report to a committee of this House in connection with proposing the kind of legislation suggested in the first recommendation of the report? I make that proposition because parliament must be vitally concerned with regard to the position of the Auditor General who is the servant of parliament.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the House leader of the opposition will recall that it has been government policy to propose a bill that gives statutory form to the responsibilities of the Auditor General. Therefore, this does accord with government policy. I am not quite sure whether it would be more expeditious to refer this report to a committee or have the government present legislation based on this report for the consideration of the House. In either event, we are in favour of introducing such legislation.

IMMIGRATION

GRANTING OF LANDED IMMIGRANT STATUS BY ORDER IN COUNCIL—REQUEST FOR NAMES OF PERSONS SO TREATED

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact that 18,884 aliens became landed immigrants last year through orders in council, and in view of the fact that regulations imposed by the government now clearly indicate that a prospective immigrant must apply from outside Canada, can the minister indicate whether a practice in which approval of such large numbers is being given only worsens Canada's problems with illegal immigration since illegal immigrants can always hope for an order in council from this government?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that is the case. I respect the hon. member's question and concern. I will be glad to discuss it with him in detail, either privately or when I am before a committee. There is nothing hidden in this practice. It is a discretionary authority vested in the minister. I think in every case there is a situation and justification which the hon. member would share if he had the responsibility to look at it. I will be glad to go over that in as much detail as the hon. member wishes, perhaps before a committee.

Mr. Epp: In view of the fact that orders in council now cover approximately 10 per cent of the total number of immigrants landed, will the minister give an undertaking that the names of the people and the auspices or conditions under which they were given the ministerial order in council will be published for members of this House so that suspicions concerning this practice can be aired and clarified?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, the only prohibition about giving that detailed information would be that respecting the privacy of the individual in certain cases for reasons which I think the hon. member would share. Generally speaking, yes, in terms of category. There is no attempt whatsoever to hide or withhold the information. I will be glad to convey all the details, with that reservation.

TOURISM

DISCREPANCY IN MAP OF BRITISH COLUMBIA—REQUEST FOR CORRECTION

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Will the minister advise the Canadian government office of tourism that there is a riding of Kootenay West and within its confines are three major cities, Nelson, Castlegar and Trail, in view of the fact that a recent map depicting British Columbia ignores these cities while at the same time recognizing much smaller communities, including Blaine, Washington, which is shown on the map as being a part of British Columbia? I refer to a tourism advertisement inserted in the National Geographic magazine, which is not known for its errors. Can I have some assurance from the minister that a change will be made?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I will draw those representations to the attention of CGOT.

TRANSPORT

NEED FOR ICEBREAKERS IN NORTHWESTERN ATLANTIC—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Would the minister advise the House what action is being taken with regard to the persistence of ice conditions in the northwestern Atlantic, particularly near Newfoundland, which are interfering with the execution of the fisheries? My question arises from the need of further ice-breaking capability in that area. Has he been made aware of the conditions which exist? What action is being taken?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): This is the first time I have been made aware of the situation. I intend to inquire immediately.

Mr. Marshall: Is the minister aware that I have already brought this matter to the attention of his officials? Since these conditions are in evidence every year, and have been persisting, would the minister tell us what attitude the government is taking toward increasing the capability of ice-breaker services which up to this time have been lacking?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): As the hon. member already knows, the government has decided to increase our capability in this field. Two ice breakers are to be built in the near future and much bigger ones later on when we have enough money to pay the bill.

POST OFFICE

MONTREAL—SUGGESTED MEETING BETWEEN MINISTER AND POSTAL WORKER'S UNION REPRESENTATIVES TO RESOLVE DIFFICULTIES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Postmaster General. In view of the difficulties which have been experienced in the last few days in the Montreal Post Office I should like to ask him whether meetings have been arranged between himself and representatives of the Union of Postal Workers and, if so, whether he can report any progress.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, we are still encountering difficulties in the Montreal Post Office and, reluctantly, I found it necessary last evening to suspend indefinitely a postal worker for pushing or attacking a supervisor and to suspend 183 other workers for the rest of their shift. Apart from those minor problems, I think things are running well in the Post Office. Discussions are going on at the local level between the appropriate officials and the various supervisors. As far as discussions at the national level are concerned it would be, I think, in everybody's best interests—if they are held—that not only the contents of such conversations be private but the fact that there is such a meeting being held should also be considered as private.

Mr. Orlikow: I am not for a moment trying to judge where the fault lies, but surely the suspension of such a large number of employees is a serious matter. Again, would the minister not consider the advisability of meeting formally with the national representatives of the Union of Postal Workers so that there might be a frank discussion of the issues in the hope that the difficulties, whatever they are, may be resolved as quickly as possible, in which case several hundred more employees would not need to be suspended or dismissed or whatever the minister says is being done with them?

Mr. Mackasey: I find myself in a dilemma here. I do not want to leave the impression that such a course has not been considered. I simply stated the conditions under which I would prefer the discussion to take place—possibly the conditions which someone else would prefer. I wish to make it clear that these suspensions are not because management is necessarily right; it is simply that the solution lies in applying the collective agreement and the grievance procedure rather than settling the matter through what I consider to be a violent way of acting and one which is not in the best interests of the labour movement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Orlikow: In view of the fact there obviously exists a difference of opinion between the minister and the President of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers about the way in which a collective bargaining agreement is applied, may I suggest to the minister for the last time that the way to settle this difference of opinion is through a meeting between the minister and the president of the union so that each may know precisely what the other is thinking?

Mr. Mackasey: Theoretically, it is possible that such a meeting has already taken place.

FERTILIZER—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ASSURE SUPPLY AT ECONOMIC PRICES

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture what progress he and his colleague the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs are making toward the government's objective of assuring adequate stocks of chemical fertilizer available to the agriculture industry this year at economic prices?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): I am assured that there will be adequate supplies. If the information given to me is correct, some farmers are cutting back their purchases of fertilizer because of the uneconomic price—the high price that is involved. We have seen some slight evidence of price decrease in our analyses of fertilizer sales but nothing like we would wish to see—nothing like the reduction we think should take place. I am working very closely with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs with regard to what action we can take.

Mr. MacLean: What action has the minister taken to make sure that farmers generally are aware of the fact that there should be adequate supplies available, whether the price is right or not?

Mr. Whelan: We have contacted all the provincial departments of agriculture and our surveys show, as they have in the past, that there will be adequate supplies. In some areas there may even be an oversupply of some varieties of fertilizer.

[Mr. Mackasey.]

METHOD OF DETERMINING WHICH COUNTRIES RECEIVE AID THROUGH CIDA

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question. I would have directed it to the Secretary of State for External Affairs but he is absent on business. Having regard to the haphazard efforts of CIDA in the past, how will the new guidelines affecting CIDA with respect to foreign aid be applied when it comes to determining which countries are to receive such aid, especially in the light of the statement by the Secretary of State for External Affairs that fewer countries will receive Canadian assistance?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): I think it would be appropriate for these guidelines to be discussed in a forum other than the question period at which time full satisfaction could be given to the hon. member. Perhaps he has a more specific question to follow up with.

VIET NAM—INQUIRY WHETHER ASSISTANCE CHANNELLED THROUGH CIDA

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have. Will the assistance which will be going to Viet Nam be channelled through CIDA, and will it be assistance directed to the relief of misery, inhumanity and suffering in the form of cash?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): As the Secretary of State for External Affairs stated, our help to Viet Nam is being channelled through international agencies.

Mr. Woolliams: Maybe the minister left the wrong impression. I was asking about the sole Canadian agency, namely CIDA, possibly working through other agencies. Would this help, given to Viet Nam, be in the form of cash and is the hon. gentleman waiting until the North Vietnamese take over all of Viet Nam to deliver that cash?

Mr. Sharp: The assistance which is being provided by Canada is, of course, being provided through CIDA. It is being provided in cash to international agencies which are now on the spot doing what they can to help.

VIET NAM—POSSIBILITY OF PROTEST TO HANOI OVER BREACH OF INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENT—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF EVACUATION OF CANADIANS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question also for the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that the situation in that area has deteriorated even more, is the government considering notes of protest to be delivered in Hanoi or elsewhere against the breaches of international agreements, with such cost in terms of misery and tragedy for the local population?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the attitude of the government has been expressed already by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who has pointed out that our principal purpose in making protests like this is to be helpful to Canadians and to others whose lives might otherwise be in jeopardy. I am sure that the hon. member, who has experience of these matters, would not want to say anything that would harm Canadians or anybody else.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister assure the House and the country that all Canadian personnel in the disaster areas will be evacuated before they become personally endangered?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, evacuation plans are being updated daily. However, so far it has been decided that it is not necessary to evacuate Canadians from Saigon. They are safe at the moment, but plans are ready to evacuate them if the situation gets to that point.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PROPOSAL RETIRED MEMBERS OF ARMED FORCES AND RCMP ENTITLED TO COUNT SERVICE FOR LEAVE PURPOSES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the statement of the Minister of National Defence on October 24, 1974 that the President of the Treasury Board was giving serious consideration to the proposition that retired members of the Canadian Armed Forces and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police should be entitled to count their period of service for leave purposes when they enter the public service of Canada, would the minister please inform the House whether this serious consideration is continuing and, if so, would he advise the House and the country when there might be an announcement made with respect to a change of policy?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to tell the hon. member whether or when we will have an announcement on that matter. While I have the floor, Mr. Speaker, may I answer a question from the member for Kingston and the Islands, who asked me yesterday when a contract was given by Statistics Canada. The contract was approved by Treasury Board on January 30, 1975.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the minister could tell me when he will be in a position to answer the question that I first asked?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Soon, Mr. Speaker.

OFFER OF SETTLEMENT OF NATIVE LAND CLAIMS IN CONNECTION WITH JAMES BAY PROJECT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Could the minister tell us if the Indians and Innuits of James Bay in Quebec have really accepted the latest offers of the Bourassa government concerning compensation for the hydro-electric project in that area and, if not, if his department will continue to give them financial help to assert their rights and privileges?

[English]

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, all that has been achieved in Quebec is the signing of an agreement in principle in November of last year. We left a period of a year, to November of this year, for ongoing negotiations and discussions to be held to try to iron out the details, so that the final agreement pertaining to James Bay would not be signed, we expect, until November.

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that security procedures for inspecting passengers and hand baggage at international airports were implemented for the safety of passengers, and in view of the enormous cost and considerable inconvenience to passengers, would the minister call for an immediate investigation into the failure during the past 24 hours of x-ray machines at Vancouver and Toronto international airports to detect the presence in hand baggage of four razor sharp kitchen knives, one of which was over 14 inches in length?

CANADIAN EGG MARKETING AGENCY—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT FROM MINISTER—ADEQUACY OF FEDERAL AUTHORITY

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture and arises out of the meetings held last week with his provincial counterparts. I wonder whether the minister would make a statement on motions regarding the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency and, if so, will the statement be made this week?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I see no real urgency about making a statement.

The findings reached at these meetings were made public. We are still discussing the proposals with some of the provincial governments and provincial egg marketing boards, and I do not think these will be finalized until late this Friday. At least, I am hopeful that they will be finalized this Friday.

Mr. Jarvis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. For some time the minister has been seeking additional federal authority over egg marketing. Would the minister tell the House whether he is satisfied that he has received sufficient federal authority within CEMA, or is the minister also seeking additional authority over the Food Products Marketing Council?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I am seeking orderly marketing for eggs. We have asked the provinces for and been given more federal authority by the majority to enable CEMA to operate in this way. There is also a commitment to reorganize the National Farm Products Marketing Council.

IMMIGRATION

LEGALITY OF ADOPTION OF VIET NAM ORPHANS—SUGGESTED CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES TO ESTABLISH CO-ORDINATING AGENCY

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and concerns a matter of great moment to many adoptive parents in Canada. Has the government investigated the claim by the International Red Cross that adoption of Vietnamese children contravenes the Geneva convention governing the protection of civilian populations; and can the minister assure us that these adoptions are in fact legal and that there will not be any questions asked later as to the legality of the adoptions of children already adopted?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have made several statements in this regard, many of them in this House. The children that are being brought forward are children for whom the adoption process, in terms of complying with the legal requirements of the government of South Viet Nam and in terms of complying with the legal requirements for adoption by provincial jurisdictions in Canada, has been completed or is arranged.

As I have indicated, there could be one or two exceptions to this as a result of the confusion and the urgency of the situation in Saigon at the time. A responsible agency might present to our officials there a child as an orphan that they would like removed from Saigon, but such a child would only be accepted if the approval of the South Vietnamese government had been given, and in all cases I am aware of that has been the case. One or two of these children, however, may not have proceeded through the adoption process in Canada, in which case we will have to be very careful—there is one such case—in our contacts with the provincial authorities in order to ensure that the adoption process, which is a provincial matter, does not proceed until all questions are clarified and settled in terms of the legality of the adoptions in Viet Nam and here.

Mr. Beatty: A brief supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, which I should like to address to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I gave him some indication a few weeks ago that I would be interested in this matter. In light of the fact that the adoption of orphans from overseas requires the participation of perhaps some five different government departments or agencies, would the minister tell the House what progress is being made, in co-operation with the provincial governments, in establishing some sort of federal co-ordinating agency to facilitate the adoption of orphans from overseas where these adoptions can legally be made?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to report to the hon. member that during the conference of welfare ministers in November 1974, it was agreed, that the Department of National Health and Welfare would establish an adoption desk to deal with international adoptions and to co-ordinate these activities with the provinces. This desk has been created and we are now working very closely with the provinces as well as with the Department of Manpower and Immigration to simplify all negotiations required.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the fact that the Fares language school for public servants recently summarily dismissed 22 teachers for asking for better working conditions and wage parity with similar teachers employed by the federal government, and in view of the fact that the Public Service Commission has instituted an inquiry into the awarding of language training contracts, would the minister ensure that the Fares contract, which is up for renewal at the end of May, will not be renewed until the PSC inquiry is completed and recommendations are brought forward?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I shall examine the matter and report to the hon. member.

ALLEGED FAILURE OF MINISTER TO DEAL WITH GRIEVANCES OF TREATY SEVEN CHIEFS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, this question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Since Treaty 7 Chiefs after their last meeting with the minister said, "We've used every peaceful method and gotten no place", will the minister go back to Alberta this month with direct answers to the Treaty 7 Chiefs to help ensure that the Indian people are not driven to abandon peaceful methods.

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I felt that the replies which were given were direct answers.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, will the minister tell the House why, in the sealed envelopes handed to the chiefs without opportunity for debate, the minister did not respond to a single major suggestion or request put forward by the Treaty 7 bands and whether he will continue to ignore their legitimate grievances and concerns or go back and deal with them directly.

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, the statement is absolutely incorrect.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON RESULTS OF MEETING WITH NATIVE INDIAN BROTHERHOOD

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister. Can the minister inform the House what progress if any was made at yesterday's meeting between representatives of the NIB and the relevant cabinet committee? If he cannot inform us as to the progress made at this meeting perhaps he can tell the House when a statement will be forthcoming concerning the outcome of that meeting.

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, it would take a fairly lengthy period of time to give a full report on the meeting. The basic things that were agreed to were the establishment of committees to look into and try to come to agreement on the broad question of what are native rights and second to set up a body to look into the proposed revision of the Indian Act.

Can the minister advise if he is aware of this situation and if so what his department is prepared to do about it.

Can the minister advise whether these discussions have continued and if so whether the United States officials have put forward any proposals in this regard?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, no specific proposal has been put forward by the United States officials with regard to an oil pipeline through Canada, more probably up the Mackenzie Valley. There have been extensive discussions between Canadian and United States officials about a general pipeline treaty which would govern the construction of any pipeline either in Canada or the United States.

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON SEAL HUNT

Mr. Gus MacFarlane (Hamilton Mountain): My question, Mr. Speaker, is for the Minister of Fisheries. I should like to know if we can expect any forthcoming reports concerning the seal hunts which have occurred in relation to the experience that was brought to our attention by previous television films and could we expect any report concerning what has happened in relation to the minister's efforts in this area.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, I would inform the hon. member that in the gulf the hunt was not very successful because of ice conditions. On the front, the quota has almost been reached now, but the seal hunt will be coming to an end in a matter of hours or days.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PROPOSAL FOR ESCALATION OF PENSIONS OF RETIRED PERSONNEL BEFORE AGE 60—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. When we were dealing in the latter part of 1974 with the estimates of the minister's department he said he would look into the matter of the unfairness created by the fact that retired armed services personnel have to wait until age 60 before their pensions are escalated. Is he now in a position to report on this matter?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker, I have no further report.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, will the minister continue the study in the hope that he will have a report soon?

Mr. Richardson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to do so.

HARBOURS

HALIFAX—DATE OF IMPLEMENTATION OF SHED RENTAL POLICY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport with regard to the shed rental policy for the port of Halifax.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

An hon. Member: Now, we are getting down to the nitty-gritty.

Mr. Stanfield: Since the Minister of Finance will not get down to the nitty-gritty, it is just as well that I do. Is it now the situation that the shed rental policy may be implemented for the Port of Halifax soon, despite many indications to the contrary given by the Board in the past.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think I will have to give about the same answer I gave a few minutes ago to the representative of Dartmouth. Mr. Taylor will meet with the mayor of Halifax and I will want to have a full report on this in order to have clear information. The port of Halifax is prospering this year. I do not regret it, but I think it will be much more prosperous than the port of Montreal. It is going very well. This is a good thing. As soon as I have an answer from Mr. Taylor I will be happy to give a precise answer.

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 1,256, 1,312, 1,571, 1,692, 1,694, 1,697, 1,736, 1,891, 1,901, 2,084 and 2,123.

If question No. 47 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

I ask that questions No. 606 and 1,099 be made orders for return and also ask the consent of the House to table immediately the information which has already been submitted. The balance of the information will follow as soon as it is submitted to me.

Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call starred question No. 1,920?

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

GRANTS TO GROUP ACTIVITIES SPONSORED IN SUPPORT OF INTERNATIONAL WOMEN'S YEAR, 1975

Question No. 1,256—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Which departments are involved in granting money to group activities sponsored in support of International Women's Year for 1975?

2. For each department, what is the (a) total 1975 budget available for such groups (b) projected percentage of the budget that will go for (i) administrative costs (ii) actual money to participating groups directly?

3. For each department, what is the amount of money (a) available by region (b) allocated to metropolitan Dartmouth-Halifax, Nova Scotia?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): In so far as the Department of National Health and Welfare is concerned: 1. The Department of National Health and Welfare.

2. (a) International Women's Year Grants 1974 and 1975, $75,000; 1975 and 1976, $100,000. Other granting areas of the department may grant money to women's groups that are involved with a particular area of interest i.e. New Horizons, Family Planning, Non-medical Use of Drugs etc. (b)(i) Administrative costs are absorbed within the department's budget. (ii) See 2 (a).

3. (a) and (b) There are no specific regional allocations under International Women's Year Grants.

In so far as the Department of the Secretary of State is concerned: 1. The Women's Programme of the Department of the Secretary of State has been given additonal money for group activities for International Women's year in 1975. In addition to the amount in the Women's Programme, all other programmes in the department will place a priority on women's projects which meet their objectives and criteria.

2. The funds allocated to the Women's Programme, Department of the Secretary of State for 1974-75 and 1975-76 for the International Women's Year activities, which will take place in the calendar year 1975, are budgeted as follows: (a) and (b) (i) and (ii) Money for group activities, $1,745,000, 75 per cent; Community Education/ Promotion, $202,000, 9 per cent; Seminar Series, $160,000, 7 per cent; Administrative Costs, $220,144, 9 per cent; Total Budget, $2,327,144, 100 per cent.

3. (a) There is no specific allocation of funds by region or urban area. However, certain guidelines for regional distribution of funds have been established according to the activities and needs of women's organizations across the country; these figures are therefore subject to changes in the course of the year. Atlantic, $204,000; Quebec, $246,-000; Ontario, $312,000; Prairies, $280,000; Pacific, $270,000; National, $433,000; Total $1,745,000. (b) Not applicable. See 3 (a).

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT PERSONNEL

Question No. 1,312—Mr. Paproski:

1. How many full-time employees were under salary in the Post Office Department on (a) January 1, 1974 (b) January 1, 1975?

2. How many people in each of these years received salaries of (a) under $10,000 (b) between $10,000 and $20,000 (c) between $20,000 and $30,000 (d) over $30,000?

Mr. Raynald Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): 1. (a) 42,830; (b) 46,310.

2. January 1974: (a) 36,917; (b) 5,755; (c) 145; (d) 13. January 1975: (a) 39,163; (b) 6,823; (c) 298; (d) 26.

STATISTICS ON SUBJECTS GRANTED CERTIFICATES OF CANADIAN CITIZENSHIP

Question No. 1,571—Mr. Herbert:

1. With reference to the answer to Question No. 907, what is the reason Statistics Canada does not collect statistics on the official language or languages spoken by new citizens?

2. Has any difficulty been experienced in assessing the regional effect of immigration and in establishing an immigration policy because of the lack of this information?

3. Is country of birth, country of former allegiance, marital status and citizenship of spouse considered more important or more useful statistics?

4. Is it possible to assess the impact of immigration on this country's language groups when no language information is recorded for new citizens?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by Statistics Canada and the Department of Manpower and Immigration as follows: 1. Statistics Canada reports that annual data on the official language or languages spoken by new citizens is not collected. However, users with a more specialized interest than the general public could request Statistics Canada to generate unpublished data from the 1971 census on the number of Canadian citizens cross-tabulated by period of immigration, mother tongue and official language. Such data was collected from all Canadians in 1971.

2. Language capabilities of new immigrants are recorded by the immigration division of the Department of Manpower and Immigration, and therefore no lack of information exists which would create the difficulty indicated in the question.

3. The Department of Manpower and Immigration considers each category of statistics gathered is equally valuable for the purpose for which it is gathered.

4. Since the immigration division of the Department of Manpower and Immigration has this information for new immigrants, the problem referred to does not exist for that group.

PLACE DU PORTAGE, PHASE III, HULL, QUEBEC—CONTRACTS TO DATE

Question No. 1,692—Mr. Ellis:

1. What is the total amount of contracts awarded, to date, for the Department of Public Works project, Place du Portage, Phase III, Hull, Quebec?

2. What is the present estimated cost of completion for this project?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): 1. $29,476,901.

2. $98,500,000.

URBAN AFFAIRS BUILDING (LaSALLE ACADEMY)—CONTRACTS TO DATE

Question No. 1,694—Mr. Ellis:

1. What is the total amount of contracts awarded, to date, for the Department of Public Works project, Urban Affairs Building (LaSalle Academy), Ottawa, Ontario?

2. What is the present estimated cost of completion for this project?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): 1. $4,780,821.

2. $8,003,200.

MAJOR POSTAL PROCESSING PLANT, MONTREAL, QUEBEC

Question No. 1,697—Mr. Ellis:

1. What is the total amount of contracts awarded, to date, for the Department of Public Works project, Major Postal Processing Plant, Montreal, Quebec?

2. What is the present estimated cost of completion for this project?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): 1. $31,405,750.

2. $212,108,000.

SHARES ACQUIRED BY THE CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

Question No. 1,736—Mr. Howie:

1. When were shares in the capital stock of other companies acquired by the Canada Development Corporation?

2. How much per share was paid and how many shares were acquired?

3. What is the market value of such shares today?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): The information sought is not available in the exact form of the questions. All the shares of Polysar Limited were purchased in 1972 for $62 million, provisions being made for an additional $10 million payment to be made under certain circumstances. Connlab Holdings Limited was established by the CDC in 1973 at a cost of $35 million. In turn Connlab owns 100 per cent of Connaught Laboratories Limited, 75 per cent of A/S Dumex, 70 per cent of Omnimedic Inc. and 70 per cent of Roylo Chemicals Limited. Since Polysar and Connlab are wholly owned by the CDC there is no market determined value for their shares. In 1972 the CDC purchased 35 per cent of the shares of Venturetec International Limited for about $4.5 million. In 1973 it purchased 49 per cent of the shares of Ventures West Capital Ltd. for $2.2 million and 40 per cent of the shares of Innocan Investments Ltd. for $3.7 million. These three venture capital companies are owned by a very limited number of investors and since their share do not trade publicly there is no market determined value for such shares. Through a tender offer the CDC acquired in 1973 about 30.4 per cent of the shares of Texasgulf Inc. The tender offer was at $29 per share at a time when these shares were trading at around $22-23, the difference representing the normal premium for acquiring a controlling interest in the company. The shares of Texasgulf are now trading at about $27.

[Mr. Drury.]

Question No. 1,891—Mr. Herbert:

1. Was it intended to make a correction to that part of the Report of the Food Prices Review Board "Sugar Prices and Policies" that appears on page 14 in the English version where it states "it is unlikely that these islands will become a major supplier to Canada within the next few years, since the industry there has been declining as a result of social, economic and other problems" and, if so, what is the reason for the delay?

2. Has the supply of sugar from the West Indies been pre-empted by the United Kingdom?

3. Has a massive change in traditional trade patterns taken place since the UK entered the Common Market?

4. Has the government initiated or is it contemplating discussions with the UK and the West Indies with a view to making long term contracts that could stabilize prices and assist the West Indies?

5. Is it the intention of the government to request that the subject of sugar be included on the agenda at the April Commonwealth Conference to be presided over by the Prime Minister of Jamaica in order to give consideration to the realignment of the pattern of Canadian sugar trade?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Food Prices Review Board and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce as follows: 1. No, as the sentence quoted in the question from the board's report "Sugar Prices and Policies" represented the board's opinion as of the date of publication of that report (July 1974).

2. The supply of sugar from the West Indies has not been pre-empted. However, bilateral arrangements between the West Indies and the U.S. and U.K. have made these countries more attractive markets in which to sell sugar.

3. There has been no massive change to date, but some changes are anticipated. It is not possible to estimate their extent at this time.

4. There has been no initiative taken to date, but the entire sugar policy is now under review.

5. Although the government does not intend to place this subject on the agenda, it may be raised by other countries.

DETERMINING REDUCTION OF CRIMES DUE TO FURTHER INCARCERATION OF SECOND OFFENDER

Question No. 1,901—Mr. Kaplan:

1. Had each offender convicted of a second or subsequent indictable offence since 1968 been imprisoned for 3 years, what would the estimated reduction have been in the number of prosecutions and convictions owing to the incarceration of the offender?

2. What percentage of the total would this reduction represent for each year covered?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Justice and the Solicitor General and Statistics Canada as follows: the information is not available.

*WOOD BUFFALO NATIONAL PARK—GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS

Question No. 1,920—Mr. Elzinga:

1. Is it the intention of the government to hold hearings at the federal level only or in conjunction with the Province of Alberta in regard to the removal of parkland in Wood Buffalo National Park?

2. Is it the intention of the government to hold public hearings prior to the removal of any land from a National Park?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is no. The answer to the second part is that each case will be judged on its merit, and the call for a public hearing will be met in the forum of this House and in the committee for inquiry.

CLASSIFICATION GRADES USED BY DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Question No. 2,084—Mr. Orlikow:

1. What are the grades of classification used by the Department of External Affairs above Foreign Service Officer 5?

2. (a) How many officers are employed in each such grade (b) what is the (i) minimum (ii) maximum salary for each such grade?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. None.

2. Not applicable.

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT—TOTAL AMOUNT GOVERNOR IN COUNCIL MAY RAISE

Question No. 2,123—Mr. Stevens:

After given effect to the power granted in Clause 5 of Bill C-55, as passed by the House of Commons on March 20, 1975, what is the total amount the Governor in Council may raise by way of loan, under the Financial Administration Act, for public works and general purposes and what was the comparable ceiling as of March 31, 1964, 1967, 1970 and 1973?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): 1. $4 billion.

2. March 31, 1964, $1.750 billion; 1967, $1.750 billion; 1970, $3.0 billion; 1973, $3.0 billion.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

BILINGUALISM IN THE PUBLIC SERVICE

Question No. 47—Mr. Coates:

1. How many additional employees have been hired by the Public Service Commission, Crown corporations and government boards that have assumed positions that are directly related to the Official Languages Act within government service?

2. Of the total number of open competitions advertised by the Public Service Commission in 1973-74, how many (a) specified bilingualism as an essential for the position (b) listed it as an advantage to appointment (c) were unilingual in either English or French and what was the percentage breakdown between the two languages?

Return tabled.

LIST OF ALL CONFERENCES, NATIONAL OR INTERNATIONAL TO BE HELD IN 1975

Question No. 606—Mr. Fairweather:

1. Will the government make public a list of all conferences, national or international, to be held during 1975 to which the government has been invited to send delegations?

2. Will interested groups be given an opportunity to recommend qualified women to serve Canada on such delegations?

3. Is consideration being given to nominating a number of informed and expert private citizens to be part of Canadian delegations where appropriate?

Return tabled.

GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES IN CONSTITUENCY OF MONCTON

Question No. 1,099—Mr. Jones:

1. How many (a) public servants (b) employees of Crown corporations or agencies are employed in the constituency of Moncton?

2. (a) How many of the positions are (i) supervisory (ii) non-supervisory (b) to what departments, corporations or agencies are they attached (c) what are the salaries and positions of each?

3. What positions (a) are not or will not be (b) are or are to be classified or designated as bilingual and as of what date?

4. What positions (a) classified bilingual (b) not classified bilingual are held by bilingual persons?

5. How many of the positions in Part 1 are held by (a) unilingual English persons (b) unilingual French persons (c) bilingual persons?

Return tabled.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE RESPECTING THE ADMINISTRATION OF INTERPROVINCIAL, EXPORT AND IMPORT TRADE IN PETROLEUM AND PETROLEUM PRODUCTS

The House resumed, from Monday, April 14, consideration in committee of Bill C-32, to impose a charge on the export of crude oil and certain petroleum products, to provide compensation for certain petroleum costs and to regulate the price of Canadian crude oil and natural gas in interprovincial and export trade—Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale)—Mr. Laniel in the chair.

On clause 2—Definitions.

The Chairman: When the committee rose last night, clause 2 was under consideration.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Chairman, again we are discussing this bill which has been around here since December. Obviously, the reason we are still discussing it is the recent failure of the various governments involved, both provincial and federal, to reach some sort of agreement or consensus between the oil producers and consumers and the federal government as to what the price of oil should be, so that it can be of benefit to the industry and to the oil producing provinces and so that the industry may continue to expand and to supply the needs of our country. In reaching a decision as to what should be a reasonable price for oil, account should also be taken of the fact that Canadian consumers should be sheltered from some of the worst effects of the world petroleum situation. We should rejoice in our good fortune that our consumers are not exposed to the full world price and do not have to make the adjustments that would be necessary if the world price were adopted in this country.

The recent federal-provincial conference ended without a national price being set and with disagreement between the producing provinces, the consuming provinces and the federal government. One might consider federal-provincial conferences as a means of solving problems which exist between the federal authority—which presumably functions for the over-all good of Canadians in all regions, and for the good of the provinces which put forward views reflecting their regional situations—and the provinces. This method of producing binding and often far reaching legislation which will affect the country as a whole is assuming greater importance because governments are becoming increasingly involved in various programs in light of the various economic situations which necessitate government action.

In this case there was an outward attempt by the governments to set the price of oil at the wellhead. Federal-provincial conferences will certainly become more and more frequent and more and more involved in economic matters such as price fixing if we keep on moving away from a market economy to a rigid form of government controlled and government directed economy. It is doubtful whether this type of conference is the best forum in which to settle problems such as this, and certainly it seems to make the role of the elected representative irrelevant, whether he be a member of the provincial or federal legislature or whether he be a member of the government or of the opposition. As I said, the recent federal-provincial conference was not successful. Perhaps it was doomed to failure because of the failure of the governments concerned to reach a preliminary agreement in the matter of setting a reasonable oil price before the conference was held.

It seems to me that a number of issues are involved in the bill before us. They affect regional interests, regional needs and regional welfare. In considering this bill, all too often regional interests override the national interest. We must consider—I believe this has been overlooked in our debate until now—what will be the international effect of our action in setting the price for oil in Canada.

This bill is breaking new ground in that the federal government is intruding into provincial jurisdiction by setting the price of a natural resource at a time when it is doubtful that a national emergency exists. By and large, there have been many cases, except in wartime, when the federal government has felt constrained to override provincial jurisdictions and to set prices on a national level. For instance, just recently in the matter of the two-price system for wheat, the Government of Canada set the price of wheat for Canadian consumption at approximately $4.75 a bushel when the world price had been for some months previously nearly $6 a bushel, as a result of which wheat producers were selling at a loss of approximately $1 a bushel. I do not think anyone could construe the situation at that time as being a national emergency. The federal government's decision in that case was supported by enabling legislation whereby provinces delegated power to the Wheat Board to assume control over wheat production.

I doubt whether the present situation with regard to oil can be considered to be a national emergency as defined in section 92(10)(c) of the British North America Act. In my opinion, such an emergency would only arise in the event of hostilities involving this country in a war, or having the effect of cutting off offshore imports such as if there were an outbreak of hostilities in the Middle East. No such emergency has arisen as yet. Indeed, we have a reasonable supply of oil to meet our own needs, at a price greatly below the world level. What we are discussing is how much our price should rise, if at all, and in what manner will the moneys accruing from this price increase serve to secure our supplies for the future. We are certainly not involved in any emergency situation at present.

This bill is of fundamental importance to our nation. Through it, the federal government is attempting to set the price of a resource which is found mainly in one or two provinces. If the government is successful in doing this, it is obvious that provincial jurisdictions will be reduced to asking for hand-outs from the federal government. Another point to be considered is that if the price of oil can be set unilaterally by the federal government, then obviously the price of other resources such as copper, nickel and coal could similarly be set by the government. Furthermore, a good case could be made for setting the price of newsprint, lumber and agricultural products in this country.

This bill assumes even greater importance when we realize that at a time when there is no real emergency, the federal government is attempting to set the price of a resource at whatever level it considers appropriate. Mr. Chairman, this legislation represents a far reaching intrusion into provincial jurisdiction and an extension into the market economy of this country. Before it is used to set a price, real bargaining and real consultation should take place between the federal government, representing the interests of the country as a whole—but, in effect, largely central Canada—and the producing provinces which are mainly Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia.

I think we are agreed that we should not insulate ourselves from the world economy unless it is very disadvantageous. In the finance committee today, the Minister of Finance, in answering a question, suggested that two-price systems for products held open a very real possibility that they would be looked upon as trade barriers similar to tariffs and that retaliatory action would be taken.

Certainly, if an American company or any other foreign company were meeting competition from a Canadian company in its own market, and if the advantage to the Canadian company were dependent on a reduced price for oil or gas used in the manufacture of that product, then the foreign company would be quite justified in urging its government to erect a tariff barrier against the Canadian product. We ourselves witness the example of our textile industry always complaining bitterly about the low wage structure of Far Eastern countries undermining the industry, and seeking appropriate protection. Similar charges could be levelled at our exports which were dependent on low level oil and gas prices. Obviously, the price of oil and gas should rise to world levels, but we in Canada can be fortunate enough to take some time to reach this level. If the price is to be set below the world level, it must certainly be high enough and the industry must receive enough of it so that exploration will be carried on and security of supply will be furthered as much as possible.

But what has happened to the situation in Canada? There was an increase in the price of oil to $6.50 a barrel. But has this increased exploration activity? Of course not. The November budget of the Minister of Finance scuppered this possibility. There is no point in raising the price of oil unless exploration and development is carried on. Surely the main culprit is the federal government. In his budget, the Minister of Finance, in attempting to prevent the provinces from having accrue to them the benefits the increase in the world price of oil and gas would have brought them, has put in place a punitive federal tax. I think it has to be realized that until recently we have really had to pay money to have people explore for oil and gas. It has been suggested by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain that there is only one time for one jurisdiction to steal, but I think we have to recognize that the provinces were there first. The BNA Act gave the right to have this revenue accrue to the provincial jurisdictions, and if the federal government is going to become involved it certainly should be done by negotiation.

There are some figures in a bar graph of where the oil dollar goes. It shows that at $3.80 a barrel the oil industry received 50 cents for lifting, $1.35 for exploration and drilling costs, and 53 cents for industry retention, with the provincial government receiving $1.15 and the federal government 27 cents. After the increase in April to $6.50, the industry's share went to $1.17, whereas the provincial government received $2.97 and the federal government 51 cents. After the November 18 budget the industry retention figure went down to 13 cents. This is the situation in Alberta. The provincial government received $3.34 and the federal government $1.18. In other words, the increase in the federal tax has had the effect of leaving the industry with considerably less than it received when the price was $3.80.

At the recent energy conference Mr. Blakeney, the Premier of Saskatchewan, said that if we just have a flat rate of increase, the big winner will be the federal government; it will receive the lion's share. In other words, without changes this act in itself will not in any way get at the real problem, which is to allow the industry to function better and to produce more supplies and more reserves of gas and oil by the two governments, leaving more money in the industry.

The real problem with this bill and the whole oil pricing system, if we are to have the price set well below the world price, is the failure of the provincial and federal governments to reach common ground. Surely, under the BNA Act and by all historic patterns of tradition, the provincial governments were first in the field of taxation of resources, and if in the national interest of the federal government must take more revenue from resource industries, it should not be done high-handedly and unilaterally. The problem affecting resource industries is not just confined to a vendetta with Alberta; it affects every province in Canada because almost all the provinces have sizeable resource industries.

I spoke to a respected member of the other place, who has been here a long time and is well aware of the structure under which our government operates, about the fact that the provinces were vested under the BNA Act with ownership of resources. He aptly said that while ownership remained with the provinces, federal taxing power over the last 20 or 25 years had effectively reduced the control of the resource industries by the provinces and subverted it largely to the federal field. In effect, the federal government, through the taxation system, has been muscling in on the provincial field.

I think many of our problems as a nation are getting worse and reaching more and more Canadians, especially western Canadians who are becoming extremely skeptical about the advantages of confederation. The federal government is attempting to take over taxation in the resource field and in other fields. At the same time, it has been attempting to slough off many of the shared-cost programs which are so expensive and to divest itself of the responsibility in this field by giving a few taxation points to the provinces. The actions of the federal government in the field of resource taxation have been disastrous for industry and for the country. In today's Globe and Mail there is a suggestion that the Ontario mining industry is in a bad way. Mr. O'Brien, quoted in the Globe and Mail, states:

> "There is a danger" ... "that Canadian mining companies, which are among the most productive and efficient in the world, are clearly being discouraged from maintaining that position."

So it is not just the oil industry levelling this charge at the federal government; it is the suggestion of many Albertans that the oil industry has been sold out by the federal government. This bill does not in any way solve the fundamental problem that confronts us, which is, how much of the oil dollar should go to the government, and how much to the oil industry? One cannot help agreeing to a considerable extent with the Premier of Ontario who asked, what is the point of increasing the cost of oil and gas unless enough of it goes to the oil industry to make it productive and increase exploration?

Yesterday, the Minister of Finance agreed in the finance committee that the reduction of oil exports to the United States would greatly increase our difficulties in balance of payments problems with that country. Many Canadians have clamoured loud and long for the cessation of exports of oil and gas to the United States. This year alone this would cost us perhaps a billion dollars in lost export trade. Are these same Canadians now prepared to face the consequences of this enormous loss in export trade?

The Minister of Finance has said we expect capital inflows to cover this balance of payments deficit, but if capital comes into the country it further increases foreign ownership of our mines, factories and resources. For instance, in the finance committee a report was given that a certain type of Saskatchewan crude is being forced out of the United States market because of the export tax. Apparently this type of crude at the present time can only be refined in Minneapolis. There is no use for the crude in Canada, yet the export tax has diminished its use in the United States. This is a clear example of what will happen when we apply government rules indiscriminately.

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that this bill will solve the problem of how to set the price for oil and gas. The government has given no indication of what it regards as a reasonable increase, if any, in the price. We should have a better definition of what is a true price for oil in this country.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I will not detain the committee long, although I have other comments to make on a future occasion during the debate. I want to deal with some misstatements by the minister yesterday while they are fresh in my mind and in the minds of hon. members. I am not reluctant to do this because I feel under a certain obligation, following the statement of the hon. member for Vancouver South, to try to supplement the lectures on law which the minister must have received in college and to help him in his knowledge of the law. It is always a pleasure to help promising young lawyers, and I feel an obligation to do so now.

I understand some of the minister's problems, because he has said his advice was received from the Minister of Justice. No wonder he has misconceived the law. When I was a young, freshly-minded barrister and went to the Peace River country to practice, there was there a fine old judge whose knowledge of the law was not very good, nor was his comprehension of the facts. At every assizes, however, he made sure that a lawyer won at least one case. He was known throughout the profession as "Old Judge Necessity". Your Honour will understand that, knowing the motto "Necessity knows no law". I suggest that when the minister gets his legal opinions from the Minister of Justice, this motto should be applied.

I know that the minister has a responsibility to take advice from the Minister of Justice, as the first law officer of the Crown, and his officials. But that does not mean his opinion is always right. The law books of this country are replete with cases where the federal government and the provincial governments, acting on the advice of counsel attached to their departments of justice or solicitors general, have legislated accordingly and have seen the legislation struck down. Because the Minister of Justice and his officials have given this minister some advice does not mean that that advice is necessarily correct. Speaking directly to the point, Mr. Chairman, yesterday the minister referred to the CalOil case as being an indication of the position he had taken, when he said as reported at page 4775 of Hansard:

> I really need not do so—

He was referring to the case I had raised.

> —in view of the fact that the Supreme Court of Canada has decided, in relation to the jurisdiction of the National Energy Board, that the Government of Canada does have jurisdiction to set the price of oil and oil products—

[Mr. Ritchie.]

That was the CalOil case. There may be a recent citation, and if I am wrong I hope the minister will correct me and I will accept it. As I understand the situation, however, the Supreme Court of Canada did not sit on that case and did not hear the appeal. I have searched for the citation, unsuccessfully. Perhaps the minister will give it to me.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It is in the Dominion Law Reports, volume 20, third series, page 472 and following.

Mr. Baldwin: Is that a Supreme Court of Canada decision?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It was a court made up of all the judges. It looks like the full Supreme Court.

Mr. Baldwin: Is that 1971 and following? Is this following case No. 2 heard by them?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes.

Mr. Baldwin: I appreciate getting that information from the minister, because I was not able to find it. Apart from that fact which was only collateral, my understanding of the situation is that in that case there was a problem with regard to the jurisdiction of the National Energy Board because the so-called Ottawa Valley line had been drawn in such a way as to sever the province of Ontario into two parts. The decision of a former deputy minister of justice, now Mr. Justice Jackett of the Federal Court who wrote the judgment in the first CalOil case, was to the effect that it was not within the jurisdiction of the federal government, or the National Energy Board as its agent, to enact regulations which would in any way interfere with the movement of oil and petroleum products from one part of the province to another.

Immediately after that, as I understand the citation, the National Energy Board met and amended the regulation. Then in a subsequent case in which the same parties were involved, Mr. Justice Dumoulin gave effect to the views of the National Energy Board and the federal government and declared that in fact the changed regulations did permit this prohibition to continue. That was, I think, somewhat different from the situation cited by the minister yesterday which dealt with the question of price. The case, as I read it, in its initial stages—unless some other extraneous issue was raised in the argument before the Supreme Court—was not concerned with price but with movement. I think that disposes of the authority which the minister has cited.

The other point I want to deal with now is the statement made by the minister yesterday. He suggested that the Diefenbaker government passed the National Energy Board Act in 1959 for the purpose of controlling and fixing prices, and that the act gave, and was intended to give, to the federal government the right which the present government is now claiming. I challenge that position. I was here as a member and recall the debate which took place at that time. I have researched some of the debates of 1959 and subsequent years. Allow me to read a statement made by Hon. Gordon Churchill, a distinguished member of the Diefenbaker government. He was minister of trade and commerce and was responsible for piloting the legislation through the House. He said, as recorded on page 3927 of Hansard for May 22, 1959:

Gas prices at the point of production are regarded by the provinces of origin as being under their jurisdiction, and gas prices to the ultimate consumer are controlled by the province in which consumption takes place. The government of Canada has had the power to exercise control over the price of gas being exported under the Exportation of Power and Fluids and Importation of Gas Act—

About that position there is no argument. The minister who was then piloting the bill through the House indicated in the first statement that, beyond any shadow of doubt, gas prices at the point of production were regarded by the provinces of origin as being under their jurisdiction. Mr. Churchill went on to say, as recorded on page 3928:

It is not the practice—

I interpolate by saying that it is neither the practice nor the law.

—in peacetime to control prices or commodities in internal trade, but it is normal to control transportation or transmission charges, as in the case of railway freight rates.

That statement related to the purpose of the enactment of the National Energy Board Act and the establishment of the board. The federal government, through the use of controls and conditions attached to interprovincial trade and through provisions governing the transportation of oil and gas contained in that bill, was enabled to exert some influence on the price of goods at the point of destination. Finally, Mr. Churchill said, as recorded on page 3931 of Hansard:

Also I would emphasize again that we have sought with great care to avoid any interference with the proper jurisdiction of the provinces.

I must say that the last statement does not apply to the present government. Let me now deal with what the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands said. I was surprised at his position. Let me refer the hon. member to what Mr. Bert Herridge, a member of his party, said on May 18, 1959, as recorded on page 3777 of Hansard:

It is true that intraprovincial fuel and power matters are exclusively within the jurisdiction of the provinces. That is as it should be . . . and we in this group would not want to change that one iota.

I shall refer to quotations from other sources later in this debate. I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that the statements I have read, and others, make it clear that the government of the day in 1959, in introducing this legislation did not intend to violate ruthlessly the constitution by fixing prices at the wellhead, as the government seeks to do in the present instance. That, I think, was a position of common sense.

The position which my leader took last night is the position my party has always taken. We say that you should attempt to secure consensus on a multilateral basis among all involved parties. If that is not possible, you must consider the possibility of securing an agreement between a producing province and the federal government acting, as it must, on behalf of the people of Canada. But if that agreement is not possible, if for any reason it cannot be reached, that by itself does not automatically give the federal government jurisdiction. Surely it must first await the arrival of an emergency situation before invoking the peace, order and good government clause of the constitution and thereby securing that jurisdiction.

It may well be that present conditions in the world, present conditions in Canada which are distinct from conditions in 1959, the extent to which energy and energy use has become a supremely important element in the social and economic world in which we live, present shortages of energy and apprehended shortages which may be realized in one or two years, may necessitate such changes in our consideration of the constitution as will permit the federal government to invoke that clause. All the same, we are far removed from the situation which applied in 1919 and 1920 when, in the Fort Frances case, the privy council laid down rules with regard to the right of the federal government to intervene in property and civil rights matters which come solely within the jurisdiction of the provincial government.

I readily concede that, considering the situation existing in the world today—we are awaiting reports from boards about potential energy reserves in this country—and considering that our whole social and economic structure is predicated on the use of energy, it is now far easier for the federal government to make that kind of declaration; it is easier than it would have been in 1920 or 1921, or even in 1959. For those reasons we have adopted our position. That position is consistent with the position we took in 1959 as a party, and consistent with our responsibilities as an opposition.

We say that if an emergency does not exist, the federal government does not have the power it suggests it has. We work under a finely-tuned federal system in which the producing province has the right to fix the wellhead price and to dispose of the product at the wellhead to people within the province. Clearly, the consuming province has every right by law to fix the price of the product within that province. In addition, the federal government, through its exercise of powers governing the regulation of trade and commerce and the transportation of a commodity through a pipeline, or commodities involved in interprovincial trade, may affect substantially the price of the commodity as it flows from the producing to the consuming province. But in a federal system, if there is no emergency it must, of necessity, bring all three parties—hopefully there will be three, but in any event there will be two—together and, in exercising leadership, work out an agreement.

Before I sit down, let me make a statement which we shall make over and over again. Unless that emergency exists, failure to reach agreement does not vest the government with powers it does not have.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has referred to the CalOil case. May I refer to the case decided in 1971, on appeal, by the full Supreme Court. Mr. Justice Pigeon gave the opinion of the court. The case dealt with a statement of principle. The hon. gentleman spoke about the wellhead price. In the case before the court, the question of the consumer price in the province of Ontario was at stake. The principle of federal regulation was attacked. One of the parties purporting to sell in the Ontario market argued that the restrictions imposed in the National Energy Board Act were beyond the powers of the federal government in so far as they dealt with the regulation of trade and commerce. I quote from Mr. Justice Pigeon what seems to be the clearest enunciation of the principle, to be found at page 477 of Dominion Law Reports, volume 20, third series:

● (1540)

As noted by Dumoulin, J., Lord Tomlin's fourth proposition in the Fish Canneries case . . . is:

(4) There can be a domain in which provincial and Dominion legislation may overlap, in which case neither legislation will be ultra vires if the field is clear, but if the field is not clear and the two legislations meet the Dominion legislation must prevail . . .

This principle was recently applied by this court in such cases as—

He then cites a number of authorities. This is the statement of principle:

It is clear, therefore, that the existence and extent of provincial regulatory authority over specific trades within the province is not the sole criterion to be considered in deciding whether a federal regulation affecting such a trade is invalid. On the contrary, it is no objection when the impugned enactment is an integral part of a scheme for the regulation of international or interprovincial trade, a purpose that is clearly outside provincial jurisdiction and within the exclusive federal field of action.

In other words, the power under the constitution has been given to the federal government in certain cases to regulate trade, including the setting of prices in a particular trade, where that trade is part of an interprovincial or international system of regulation. That is precisely what is provided in this case. Hon. members will have noted the bill is very careful to make it clear that it is to apply to transactions related to the removal of products from a province, removal across a provincial boundary to other parts of Canada or for export.

One of the wisest things the hon. gentleman said yesterday is that perhaps it is not a useful exercise to debate points of law in this parliament. I accept the basis of that. I merely put the proposition of the Supreme Court of Canada on the record and let hon. members and readers of Hansard judge for themselves.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister a question? Is it not a fact that that case involved a situation where CalOil was importing oil into Canada, and the National Energy Board—as it was entitled to, being the appropriate federal authority—set conditions, with regard to the importation of that oil, as to the place to which the oil was to be brought and utilized. This was because originally an attempt was made to take it from one part of one province into another. The decision of Mr. Justice Jackett was against the federal government.

The federal government made no attempt to appeal that decision. It was quite prepared to accept that decision which said, in effect, that the federal government, exercising its right, could not make regulations prohibiting or in any way interfering with the movement of oil from one part of a province to another part: it was prohibited and the federal government was out of court when it attempted to do that. That decision was not appealed. The case had nothing to do with price; it involved the import of oil into Canada with conditions attached.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, I would only say we are not talking about trade within a province; we are talking about its movement as part of an interprovincial scheme. For these purposes, under the constitution where one is talking about international or interprovincial trade, the authority is clear: the federal government, as Mr. Justice Pigeon said, has exclusive jurisdiction.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Chairman, I have enjoyed listening to this erudite discussion between the hon. member for Peace River and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on the constitutionality of the veto clauses of Bill C-32 and whether in fact the government has the authority to set prices. I cannot claim legal training other than that which I have gained from sitting in this House for some 2½ years.

It seems obvious, from sheer logic and by just examining the facts as presented, that the veto clauses are contrary to the constitution, the British North America Act, and the Mineral Transfers Act of 1930 which transferred to the western provinces jurisdiction and ownership of all natural resources. More fundamentally on the legal question, the Mineral Transfers Act, as an amendment to the BNA Act, states in plain English that the resources belong to the provinces: they are owned by the provinces. I submit that if one says "Fine," there is no contest in that regard. However, if the price, the markets, indirectly the royalties, and the transportation shall be dictated by the federal government, what rights of ownership are there? Ownership becomes totally meaningless because in fact total control rests in the hands of the federal Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

In view of the very simple reasoning in the Mineral Transfers Act of 1930 that natural resources, including oil and gas and the royalties derived therefrom, are owned by the provincial governments of Canada, these veto clauses which give the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources the authority unilaterally to set the prices of crude oil and natural gas are contrary to the constitution: they are unconstitutional.

This is the third occasion on which we have discussed this question. In the last parliament there was a predecessor bill, Bill C-18, which was never passed by the House. In this parliament we had the introduction of Bill C-32. Bill C-18 was a bad bill, and because of the minority situation the government was unable to impose it upon the House of Commons and the country. Having achieved a majority on July 8, they introduced Bill C-32, which is worse than Bill C-18. Bill C-18 in the previous parliament was bad; Bill C-32 is worse. As a result of gaining a majority, they expect they can now impose this bill on parliament and, therefore, on the country.

During our deliberations before Christmas, many arguments in opposition to this bill were presented by members of our party and members of the New Democratic Party. We indicated that we objected to the bill. Alternatives were presented to the government in terms of the availability of other acts now in existence, such as the Export and Import Permits Act, through which the government could accomplish the purposes of Bill C-32, namely, a uniform price for crude oil across Canada at something less than the world market price and impose an export charge and subsidy program for the consumers of imported oil east of the Ottawa Valley line. I thought, on the basis of those arguments and the fact that these alternatives were made known to the government, that they had decided to withdraw the bill. Indeed, they did withdraw it and supplementary estimates were introduced to look after the subsidy program.

Unfortunately, however, it appears I was naive, because this week we began again our consideration of Bill C-32, brought back—coincidentally, I am sure—just a few days after the failure of the conference of first ministers to agree on what the price of crude oil in this country should be after July 30. I am sure I would be forgiven for reaching the conclusion that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has made a political judgment and concluded that because of the failure of this conference, we in the opposition who have opposed the bill might now be more ready to give the government the power it seeks. If the minister is acting on that assumption, I am afraid he is mistaken. He is mistaken if he now thinks we will go along by giving parliamentary sanction to the powers requested in the bill before us.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Would the hon. member permit a question? Do I understand him to say that he is refusing to allow parliament to reach a decision on this question? Or is he prepared to let parliament come to a decision even though he and his hon. friends intend to vote against the bill?

Mr. Andre: I can only repeat what I have said: our position on this bill remains as adamant as it was before Christmas. As earlier speakers have made clear, we put forward a number of suggestions for amendments which, if adopted, would improve the bill to a point at which it might be acceptable. For instance, there was a suggestion that a time limit be placed upon the powers requested. As I read Hansard, however, there does not appear to have been any reciprocal desire on the part of the government to consider these suggestions, some of which would go a long way toward removing the concern we feel. I am assuming that as the committee proceedings continue, an opportunity will arise to look again at some of those proposals and, hopefully, an accord will be reached. Until such time it is a hypothetical exercise to predict how we on this side of the House will vote; it depends on how the discussion proceeds and what accommodations are reached. Does that answer the hon. gentleman's question?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): If I might respond, I can tell the hon. member that of course it does not answer the question I put to him. I can quite understand the hon. member would be embarrassed to admit that he intends to engage in a filibuster, but it seems to me his failure to deal directly with my question was in itself very eloquent.

Mr. Baldwin: The minister has gone out of his way to mention a filibuster. I would only point out that at the request of the government we are not proceeding with this bill tomorrow.

Mr. Beatty: Silence is golden in your case, Don.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, the reason we are not proceeding with the bill tomorrow is that I have accepted an invitation from Mr. Speaker to be present in his riding tomorrow afternoon, and it seemed to me nothing more than courtesy to the Speaker that I should fulfil that engagement.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Why not send the hon. member for Peace River in your place?

Mr. Andre: It is a tradition of this chamber to show respect to the Chair and to the occupant thereof, and in this case it is well deserved. However, in view of the minister's announcement, I have some questions about the Speaker's judgment that I did not have previously.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Andre: The point the minister has made by way of a question reinforces the speculation which certain observers have indulged in, namely, that one of the purposes of the first ministers' meeting was to make it easier for the government to secure the kind of legislation which is before us. I refer particularly to the first day of the meeting, the part which took place under the eye of the camera; it was obviously hopeless to expect to reach a consensus on so sensitive a matter and it might have been expected the minister would then try to use the mounting pressure, in the absence of agreement, as a means of trying to force us to be less adamant in the position we are adopting. But it is not going to work. The reasons for which we oppose this bill, specifically the veto clauses, stand on their own merits. As responsible members of the opposition, we have an obligation to the country to oppose those provisions and to do everything we can to get them amended.

An hon. Member: But not to filibuster.

Mr. Andre: No amount of grandstanding or pressure will work in this instance. We are conscious of our responsibility and we shall not be cowed by threats, name-calling or anything else.

Bill C-32 is plainly a bad bill as it is presently drafted. It is in need of considerable amendment and we shall do everything we can to see that the required amendments are made. In its present form the bill will certainly not aid in the process of negotiation which must form part of any agreement concerning a uniform price for crude oil and natural gas across Canada. This measure is a gun pointed at the heads of the producing provinces. Nobody can negotiate staring down the barrel of a gun, yet this is in essence what the situation will be. Far from facilitating negotiations, meaningful dialogue, participatory democracy or improved federal-provincial relations, these proposals will give rise to greater frustration, increased alienation and all those things the government claims it opposes.

The veto clauses in the bill will certainly not restore confidence and optimism to the industry, and if there is anything in particular which I find disturbing it is the total lack of confidence the industry is showing in Canada's future. Mr. Chairman, there are Canadian companies which have ceased entirely to explore for oil and gas in Canada. They are exploring for oil and gas in the Persian Gulf, the South China Sea and in Indonesia because, in their judgment, the political climate in those countries is superior to that in Canada.

● (1600)

Mr. Cullen: Aw, nuts!

Mr. Andre: They have more confidence that the rules set down by those governments will remain the rules than that the rules set down by this government will remain the rules.

Mr. Cullen: That is $11 and $12 a barrel oil.

Mr. Andre: The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance has given his financial judgment as to what has caused this disenchantment on the part of the energy industries in Canada. I can only suggest that while the energy minister is in Sudbury, I arrange some meetings for him in Calgary, where he will soon be straightened out on the situation. He is totally wrong. There is no question that return on investment is a significant factor. The oil companies have no confidence that the government will let them remain a viable industry and receive a reasonable return on their investment. They feel that some of the Arab emirates will in fact be more open, honest and fair in their dealings with them than will the Government of Canada.

It is shocking that such a situation should exist, Mr. Chairman. The provision of these veto clauses in Bill C-32 is one of the main reasons for this feeling. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has virtually managed to destroy the industry or to do it great damage without the sort of powers that he will be given by this bill. Imagine what he could do if he had such powers! He would wipe out the industry in a day.

This bill is not going to improve Canada's supply situation. The most serious problem that we as a nation face today—a problem that must be faced but which apparently no one in the government is facing—arises from the predictions made in the National Energy Board report of last December to the effect that this year we will become a net importer of crude oil. Within six years, according to the report, we will be unable to supply from Canadian sources the area west of the Ottawa Valley. Since the Borden line was introduced in 1959 with the national oil policy, the area west of the Ottawa Valley line has been supplied by Canadian crude oil. We produced more than the market could absorb at that time. However, within six years we will be unable to produce enough to satisfy that market, and Toronto will be in the position of having to rely on imported crude oil, which will be subject to all the vagaries of the Middle East political situation and the consequences that will flow therefrom.

With regard to natural gas, within three years there will be insufficient natural gas produced in Canada to supply Canadian markets. There will have to be rationing or the importation of very high-priced natural gas which will have to be shipped to the country in liquid state, thus driving up the price enormously.

This bill will not add one barrel of oil to Canada's proven recoverable reserves, reserves that have been declining steadily since 1971 and which will lead to the shortage I have just been talking about. This should give us greatest cause for concern and we should redress the situation. Adding to the proven recoverable reserves should be the number one priority objective of a national energy policy and the number one concern of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Any evidence of such concern is far from obvious to this observer or to anybody else. If there is any concern at all, it goes no further than some gnashing of teeth and biting of fingernails. There is nothing in the way of positive initiative to try to turn the situation around. Quite the contrary. What we have are veto clauses in this bill which can only make the situation worse.

The bill will do nothing but exacerbate an already alarming equipment drain from the country. The latest estimates indicate that 95 drilling rigs have left or are leaving Canada since the whole energy confrontation started. This in itself is a symptom of the malaise that exists. It is symptomatic of the fact that exploration and development—the search for crude oil, for the new oil supplies that Canada will need for the future—have stopped or have significantly decreased. The owners of the rigs, Canadian companies all, have found that to seek employment they must either move south or to other areas. It is incredible, but nonetheless the fact is that Canada is the only petrolific area in the entire world that has seen a reduction in exploration and development in the industry in the last year. What a testimonial to the energy policies of this country and to any confidence that this government will look after Canada's future energy needs!

Finally, and perhaps most importantly, the bill will certainly not bring about better federal-provincial relations. Far from it. I find it incredible that a government which originally was elected on the basis that it would bring about national unity, that it would pull the country together, that it deplored the divisions existing in the country and that it would make national unity its number one priority and goal, should turn around and resort to tactics that are themselves driving great wedges into the country.

Many of my hon. friends discount statements such as that. They say they are not true, that the feelings of alienation I am talking about are frustration. They accuse me of indulging in rhetoric as an argument to try to maintain the privileged position that these companies now have. That is not the case, Mr. Chairman. The situation is very serious. Those of us who are devoting our lives to the service of this country want to see the country strong and united in all parts. A continuation of these kinds of tactics and the use of brute force in the form of Bill C-32 can only make things worse, exacerbating an already bad situation.

The time has long since passed that the minister and the government should alter their direction and stop trying to pit one part of the country against another. Let them work things out in the manner traditional in Canada, which is the way we have always worked things out. There are some good, well meaning people in all jurisdictions in Canada. If the tactics adopted were conciliatory rather than confrontation tactics, this would go a long way toward reducing feelings of alienation.

For those reasons and many more, we simply cannot go along with this bill. It is a bad bill. It requires amendment because in its present form it will do great damage to the country. In essence, this bill would give parliamentary sanction to the decision of September 4, 1973, when the government introduced a price freeze on crude oil. That particular decision on that Tuesday after the Labour Day weekend, when the Prime Minister, in response to pressure from the New Democratic Party, made a statement about inflation and the anti-inflationary policies of the government and indicated that there would be a temporary price freeze on crude oil, marked a very clear division between a situation in the country in which the future, certainly in terms of the energy industries and energy supplies, looked rosy and bright to the situation we have today of doom and gloom.

We might compare the situation in the oil and energy industries between the summer of 1973 and the present time. In 1973, the industry, after a fairly long period of limited markets and low cash flows because of low prices, was in a period of tremendous optimism and enthusiasm. All the companies, particularly the Canadian independents which were doing most of the drilling in the great plains area of the western provinces, were geared up to massive programs of resource exploration and development. These companies had expansion programs. There were shortages of personnel such as geophysicists and petroleum engineers, but financing for exploration and resource development was not a particular problem.

As I indicated earlier, basically since 1971 we have been facing a decrease in respect of proven recoverable reserves in Canada. However, there is no doubt in my mind that if the exploration and development efforts planned to take place in 1973 had been carried out, the situation would be reversed and we would be in a position of having increased proven recoverable reserves; we would be in a situation where Canada would be self-sufficient well into the future if anybody cared to extrapolate. The government in July, 1973, introduced an energy policy document called "An Energy Policy for Canada; Phase One," which contained a great deal of very useful information. It contained a very well conducted analysis of Canada's energy situation and some recommendations for a national energy policy that would have made sense and been good for Canada.

Things looked very good in that period: Canada's prospects looked excellent. However, just two short months after this energy policy was introduced, the Prime Minister announced on September 4 a freeze on the price of crude oil. In something less than a month later, because of the provisions under the National Energy Board Act that Canada could not export oil and gas at less than fair market value, it was necessary to invent the export tax. Both moves, the freeze and the export tax, were taken with no consultation with the producing provinces. It was announced by the Prime Minister that this was the way it would be. There was no consultation and, understandably, there was concern on the part of the producing provinces that this move should be taken.

I refer particularly to Saskatchewan and Alberta because in that summer there were three commodities the price of which was controlled—beef, wheat and oil. It would be difficult to name three other commodities more important to the economy of those two provinces. Understandably, the people of Saskatchewan and Alberta asked why these three commodities were frozen under the government's anti-inflationary program. They wondered whether political reasons might be involved. I am afraid we know the answer. Prior to the imposition of the price freeze and the export tax, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources indicated that this was just temporary, that the freeze would be taken off on September 30, 1974, and that every dime raised from the export tax would go back to the owners of the resource, the provinces.

The government, in effect, said it had to do this because there was a difficult inflationary situation. What a bunch of nonsense that turned out to be. Far from being a temporary freeze, it became permanent. Far from every dime raised in export taxes being sent back to the producing provinces, nothing was sent back. Far from agreeing that the producing provinces own the resources as indicated in the British North America Act—that they have certain rights of ownership that are inherent in our common law—the government sought to take over all these prerogatives of ownership and in fact to leave the producing provinces with ownership in name only, and no authority.

Now we see Bill C-32 as one more step in the same direction. What has happened in the oil and gas industry as a result of this activity? Today, exploration and development has dropped off markedly. We are the only petrolific country in the world which has a reduction in exploration and development activity. We are losing personnel and equipment. We need exploration and development in order to supply Canada's needs. We face shortages of natural gas and oil in three years and six years, respectively. We have an industry which previously was very optimistic and is now very despondent. Companies which had great exploration and development programs are now laying off and transferring workers. As a member from that area, it is difficult for me not to react at least somewhat angrily when I find that friends and acquaintances of long-standing, loyal Canadians who like Calgary and want to live and raise their families there, are now in a position where in order to pursue their occupation they must move to Dallas, the Middle East, Indonesia or Australia.

The Chairman: Order, please. I must interrupt the hon. member because the time allotted to him has expired.

● (1620)

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Chairman, there are a few matters that I want to raise in this debate on Bill C-32. I shall begin by attempting to explain the situation to hon. members who do not come from regions where petroleum is produced. I am speaking here not simply of provinces or of cities but of rural areas where people rely for their livelihood and sustenance upon the oil industry. These people often come from other parts of the country to settle in communities which they anticipated would have some capacity to exist and where they could continue contributing to the economy and the future of Canada. A very real alarm has set in in those communities, a corrosive, cancerous alarm about the very future of their towns and their livelihoods. This matter is related directly to the bill before us, which is seen as one more instance of the federal government's squeeze upon the people and the industry in this region.

I want to communicate this feeling as effectively as I can. The response is not a regional anger of westerners at the east. The response is a much more direct and personal concern about what will happen to homes, to friends, to investments and to small communities—and I know that many of my colleagues on the government side come from small communities where people have relied upon there being a sense of continuity. In many of the oil producing regions in my constituency of Rocky Mountain, which include the Pembina field and also the original Turner Valley field in Alberta, particularly in the areas where there has been active production, there exists now a sense of pessimism that I do not think has been seen in that part of the country since the days of the depression. People came there with high hopes, perhaps no higher than those of people who moved to other communities to start their careers, but they have seen those hopes suddenly undermined and they are naturally concerned.

Already, in towns such as Drayton Valley, Whitecourt, Fox Creek and Swan Hills—communities that might mean nothing to some hon. members here but which mean a great deal to those who live in them—there is a great and growing concern about the number of people who have moved away, leading businessmen in the towns who ran the Scout groups, who served on municipal councils and school boards, people who saw their businesses in oil field servicing dry up or suddenly become so uneconomical that they unloaded them at a loss. These people are facing problems that are not simply personal but problems that strike at the life of the community.

This is one of the consequences of Bill C-32 and the family of acts of intervention of which this bill is a part. If there were anything inevitable about this, perhaps we would simply have to accept it. I think that no one here is attempting to maintain communities artificially at the standard they had previously. But the point I want to make and what causes so much concern, frustration and bewilderment among constituents of mine is that this attack on the communities where oil and petroleum is produced is not necessary at all. There is no reason for it to happen. The reserves of petroleum and of natural gas in those areas are sufficiently high to allow the communities to expect a long, natural lifespan.

What is shortening that lifespan, what is bringing concern and the possibility of attrition to those communities is not any natural force. It is—and I say this deliberately and precisely—the actions of this government as embodied in Bill C-32, the unilateral introduction of the export tax and of other actions which have been taken without any kind of consideration for the human and social effects which they will have upon parts of the country.

I said that the major concern of the oil producing communities such as those I have enumerated has to do with the immediate effect upon the community of the decisions of the government. There are many businessmen who two or three years ago thought that things were good, that they would be able to provide for their families and prepare for their future, but who are now having second thoughts. There is that level of concern about the immediate future of the community.

[Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain).]

A matter which should receive careful attention from the House—even if there is not much compassion on the government side for individuals in the communities in my constituency—is the effect that this kind of action has upon the attachment to this country of people who are as good and productive as any whom hon. members opposite have in their constituencies. They see the accumulation of federal initiatives in the energy field as initiatives directed, not against the Premier of Alberta whom the minister might lampoon as some kind of sheik, but against themselves, against their region, against their aspirations.

There has suddenly been a movement directly into their homes, into their lives, of a kind of attack from Ottawa. Naturally, if you see all around you evidence that the direction of the Government of Canada is clearly and precisely against your interest in ways that you can quantify, such as in the number of rigs that leave town, or businesses that begin to lay off their employees or delay expansion, then you begin to wonder about the cost and value of your commitment to the country of which you have always been proud.

I think it would be foolish if members on the government side looked upon the series of acts taken by the minister and his colleagues in energy matters as simply having to do with energy, because in fact they have to do much more with the capacity of the country to hold together and with the will of the people in my part of the country to remain active and contributing Canadians. I had the opportunity the other day to take my colleague, the hon. member for Don Valley, the energy critic of the official opposition, to one of those communities, to Drayton Valley, to see for himself some of the operations in the field and to talk to some of the people who live there in an atmosphere of uncertainty that would worry any member of the House if he found it in his constituency.

The hon. member for Don Valley went away with a predominant understanding, which he had not been able to learn from books or even from elevating debates in the House, of the degree of pride that people who work in the oil industry take in the work they are doing. They consider themselves to be producing Canadians who are dedicating their lives to building the country and to making it grow. They are absolutely bewildered, and indeed their faith in Canada is shattered, when they see a series of government actions which in accumulation seem to attack them for doing the very thing in which they have taken so much pride.

I should say in passing—and I note that the minister is here—that many of the people whom we met in the oil fields in Drayton Valley expressed to the hon. member for Don Valley not simply their appreciation of the fact that he had come to see for himself the human side of what was being done by Ottawa, but also the hope that the minister himself would come. They had hoped that the minister would remove himself from the protection of his advisers who perhaps see things in terms of war games with the provinces or, indeed, perhaps in terms of war games with OPEC nations, and would come himself to visit the people who work and live in an area of Canada where petroleum is produced and where the confidence in an ability to carry on has been very seriously undermined by the cumulative actions of this government, of which the bill we are considering is only one.

Other members of the House of Commons who have participated in this debate have raised questions about the constitution and about the reason the Government of Canada is embarking upon this particular instrument to try to achieve the goal it says it needs this bill to achieve. I think it is fair for hon. members to be frank with one another. My suspicion is that the real motive for this bill and for the other actions of which it has been part is not a concern about achieving an immediate consensus on price, nor is it a concern about establishing a particular price level in the country; it is, instead, a concern to accumulate to the bosom of the federal government as much power as it possibly can.

As others have argued and as I intend to argue later today, there is no need for this particular instrument to accomplish the goals which the government says it wants to accomplish. Those goals can be accomplished by other means. There is an extraordinary emergency power already in the constitution. There is the well established practice, venerated through many years of Canadian experience, of working out agreements on matters which cause disagreement between the provinces in conferences such as the one we saw last week. There are a number of other ways of doing this; but the only instrument the government is prepared to choose is one which will aggrandize its own power—and I think that that is rooted, unhappily, in a very dangerous view held by the government of the nature of this country.

I regretted yesterday, when the Prime Minister was uttering a very well deserved tribute to the late Senator Crerar—I have not checked to see if the "blues" were corrected—that he made a point of saying that Senator Crerar, when he spoke for western Canada, did not speak in negative terms of alienation or diversity. That, surely, is the operative word. Perhaps he meant "division." I will give him the benefit of the doubt and say that perhaps he meant "division". But if he meant diversity—and I believe that is the word Hansard shows in relation to his comments on the late Senator Crerar—that indicates a highly dangerous attitude in this country. It indicates a fundamental suspicion of diversity. In my view and in the view of others who come from other parts of the country, whether they are from areas like Cape Breton, where there are continuing attempts against great odds to maintain culture and civilization and to mine coal, or whether they come from western Alberta, we realize the tremendous importance in this country of national policy which reflects diversity.

We realize, too, that the federal system we have is not a system imposed by someone else from a distance or for some theoretical reason. It is a system which developed because it is the only system which could work in a country so broad and diverse but which wanted to haul together. What frightens me about the attitude I see on the part of this government as it reaches out to establish power under its own control—whether by establishing Petro-Canada or by introducing Bill C-32 which gives it a power it does not need, or by other actions—is that it is trying to change the balance of confederation and to reduce the capacity of provinces and regions which reflect the peculiar diversity of their areas to have that diversity reflected in the whole country.

Quite apart from other questions which might arise in connection with Bill C-32, there is no question—anyone who comes from a distant part of the country will agree with this—that a decision taken here in the isolation of Ottawa respecting other parts of the country will not be taken intelligently unless there is some direct contact with those other parts of the country. The way we can now assure some degree of consultation and of reflection of the great diversity of this country is by having a federal system which is federal in fact and which allows various provinces to exercise powers which are important to them.

This is not a question strictly of economics or energy because, as I indicated at the beginning of my remarks, the effects of this initiative and others which are most notable to me, as a member of parliament who goes home to his constituency, are not the economic or direct energy effects; they are the social effects and the disruption of communities whose leaders must move or operate in uncertainty; they are the effects upon the willingness to remain active in contributing parts of Canada; and they are the effects we see upon the pride which has existed to this point in energy producing areas of this country.

What worries me most of all about this bill is that it is a symbol and a symptom of a much broader attitude toward the nature of a country which considers diversity to be a danger, and which believes that the only way we can achieve agreement in this country is by giving the federal government a big enough club to beat the provinces or regions into some kind of submission. That suggestion is a highly dangerous principle upon which to proceed in a country.

Mr. Cullen: That is a bunch of crap.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): The hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton, quoting his leader, says that this is a bunch of crap. Well, I agree with him in so far as following that philosophy is a bunch of crap if we want to hold Canada together. But I challenge him to explain to me what other kinds of motives are generating the policies of the government which here, in Bill C-32, is trying to secure an extraordinary power which it does not need; which is determined, under the Petro-Canada bill, to set up an agency whose primary purpose is simply to add to the armament of the federal government; which is acting, in the courts of Canada, to stop the development of cable television and of a cable capacity in the provinces, and which is working in various other fields to aggrandize its own power and to weaken the power of the regions of Canada—because if that philosophy is followed, it could lead to the destruction of the country. I am afraid that it is a philosophy which is all too evident in this bill, because under it the Government of Canada will have an extraordinary power which it does not need. The government can, in extreme circumstances or in emergencies, exercise this power under the provisions already in the constitution. I think that power is the motive and it is a highly dangerous motive.

There is another aspect of this question of the acquisition by the government of extraordinary power. When the partners in confederation, the provinces and the national government, come to the table more or less as equals, there is an onus upon them to agree. They know that if they do not agree there will be no agreement, but when an extraordinary club or an extraordinary power is put into the hands of one of the members at that table, that undermines the determination of the other partners to come to agreement. It corrodes and erodes the willingness to negotiate. If we grant this desire, we are going to take away from the premiers the incentive to agree when meetings are held such as the one last week. Why should they make all kinds of trade-offs in an effort to ensure the continuity of this country, if the decision is going to be imposed anyway? There is no point in negotiating with a government which already has the power to do what it wants to do.

This instrument would allow the government, whatever the issue, whatever sides people were taking on questions relating to energy, to go to a negotiating table without the need to negotiate. That would undermine the whole future and capacity of negotiations in this country. Anyone acquainted with the history of federal-provincial relations in Canada knows that our success and continuity as a country has relied substantially on the willingness of the various partners to negotiate. It is that willingness which would be undermined if the federal government acquired this extraordinary power.

What is being asked for in Bill C-32 is a regular, continuing, extraordinary power for the Government of Canada; a power which it does not have today. If it did have it in this form, we would not need this law. The government is trying to put into law a new, extraordinary power.

The Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Chairman, in the bill before us there are three things which must be considered. The first is the question of unity within this country and the whole subject of federal-provincial relations. The second thing is security of supply of energy for Canada in the foreseeable and distant future. The third important thing is the question of industrial development in western Canada. I think it is fair to say that in the past three, four or five years of this government these three considerations have been in danger.

I should first like to deal briefly with the question of unity. We can all remember the good old days when previous federal governments paid some attention to the constitution of this country and made genuine efforts to maintain reasonable working relationships with the provincial governments. In the last couple of years in particular, steps have been taken by this government, particularly through the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, which have put a strain on federal-provincial relationships.

Less than two years ago there was a sudden increase in the world price of petroleum. At that time the federal government, without consultation with the governments of the producing provinces, and in their usual practice of government by news release, announced a tax on all petroleum products exported from this country. I do not object to the principle of the tax or what it was intended to do, but I do object to running roughshod over federal-provincial relations. This attitude cannot be tolerated in our country where so much depends upon unity and good relations between the provincial governments and the federal government.

The next step the government took was to introduce the energy allocations bill. This piece of legislation called for an inordinate amount of power to be given to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources; power far beyond what could conceivably be required to deal with any emergency. This measure was introduced without meaningful consultation with the producing provinces and was pushed through in the manner of the playground bully.

The government then imposed the budgetary provision which eliminated royalties from income tax deductibility. That not only created a strain on federal-provincial relations but it created instability in the industry and the economy. The government has followed the pattern set by introducing this petroleum administration bill without meaningful consultation with the producing provinces. The bill provides, in effect, that if the producing provinces do not agree to put a suggested price on oil, then the federal government will do it. Such an attitude is not conducive to good relations.

One could easily draw the conclusion from the steps I have outlined, Mr. Chairman, that this minister wants to amass the power in his own hands, and one might ask why. Certainly, the measures I refer to, particularly the tax changes, have led to an unwillingness on the part of the petroleum industry to carry on with the job it has been doing so well in this country. The government does not seem to have learned anything from the steps it has taken; it does not seem to have observed that exploration and development is decreasing or that security of supply of energy products is jeopardized. It continues to ride roughshod over everybody in order to achieve its goal.

One could almost conclude that this is a deliberate attempt to destroy the petroleum industry in order to make it easier for the federal government to take over not only energy resources but, in due course, all natural resource development in this country. It seems to me that is the direction in which the minister is heading. If the government wants to go in that direction, it should come clean with the people of Canada and say in this House what it is doing. Obviously, it is heading in that direction. Hon. friends to my left may applaud this move, but at least we know where they stand. They stand in different places on different days, but generally speaking they favour nationalizing resource industries, and they have said so.

Mr. Yewchuk: The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has often said inside and outside this House that he is in favour of private enterprise developing petroleum and other natural resource industries in this country, yet his actions belie his statements. Not long ago the National Energy Board issued a report which said that within the next eight or nine years Canadian petroleum products would be in short supply. That report shocked many Canadians because not long ago we were told that we possessed sufficient energy supplies to last us several decades, not just one. Yet suddenly we were told there would be a shortage in the near future.

One wonders about the accuracy of such reports. If there is to be a petroleum shortage within the next ten years, why does the government follow policies which discourage the development of our petroleum industry? Indeed, government policies are bringing about a decrease in exploration and are hindering development. Exploration is on the downswing and companies are looking to other parts of the world for investment. They seek to explore elsewhere because conditions in this country for them have become unpalatable.

What about quid pro quo for the West? About a year ago, when the federal government began intruding on provincial jurisdiction in the field of energy, it at least tried to console westerners. Ministers said, "We are going to skim off as much income as we can from the provinces and put it in the federal treasury, but in return we will implement policies beneficial to western development." They talked about reducing transportation costs and stimulating industrial development. We do not hear about these things any more. Nobody on the government side talks about quid pro quo for the west; the subject has been forgotten. Instead, the government is now concerned with power: it wants to invade, as quickly as possible, provincial jurisdiction and take over as quickly as possible the development of natural resources. Apparently it is not concerned with the long-term effects on security of supply.

A moment ago I said that a National Energy Board report indicates that we possess supplies of conventional petroleum sufficient only for the next eight or ten years. In the middle of my constituency and forming a large part of it exists one of the largest undeveloped deposits of petroleum in the world in the form of the Athabasca tar sands. It seems to me that development of the tar sands is essential to make sure we do not run out of petroleum by the end of the decade. I am in favour, of course, of increasing exploration for conventional oil: we must do all we can to find and develop these resources. However, we all know that supplies of conventional oil are decreasing. The only logical way to guarantee long-term security of supply for this country lies in the speedy development of the tar sands.

I am distressed to note that the government's remarkable vacillations in policy regarding this country's petroleum industry have resulted in a falling off of interest in the development of the tar sands. Consider for a moment the gestation period needed before a new plant can be born, so to speak. A long period must elapse between the conception of a plant on the drawing board and the actual production of oil. Obviously, we must not waste time; we must develop the tar sands. Past experience shows that it takes, on average, five years to turn a plant conceived on the drawing board into reality. It takes five years to bring new tar sands oil on stream.

At present this country consumes about two million barrels of oil a day. We export about one million barrels of western oil and import an equivalent amount to supply the markets of eastern Canada. As I said, the interval between the design on the drawing board and the operating plant is, on average, five years. We know that tar sands plants of a capacity of about 100,000 barrels a day are being designed. If we want to be assured of secure supplies after the end of the present decade, we must make certain that we possess at least ten tar sands plants each producing 100,000 barrels a day by that time. We need at least one million barrels a day of tar sands oil. Simple arithmetic shows we shall need ten plants each with a production of 100,000 barrels a day.

At present we are not likely to reach this production target. At the moment one plant produces about 65,000 barrels a day and another, under construction, will produce about 125,000 barrels per day. Two or three plants are in the early planning stages and may or may not go ahead. We do not know if they will proceed. This government's vacillating policies have caused uncertainty in the industry and have proved a deterrent to people who want to develop the tar sands. The government should not deter such people; it ought to be concerned about security of supply. We know what could happen if this country became more dependent than it is today on offshore supplies of oil. Oil prices are unpredictable, Madam Chairman.

May I call it five o'clock?

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: As it is five o'clock, and so that the House may proceed to the consideration of private members' business, it is my duty pursuant to Standing Order 15 to leave the chair at this time.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard)—Health—Possibility of provinces sharing cost of chronic care hospitals; the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—External Affairs—Government position on permitting entry of Valentyn Moroz and family as landed immigrants; the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser)—External Affairs—Discussions with United States concerning transportation of Alaskan oil across Canada.

● (1700)

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, private bills, and notices of motions.

Mr. Lefebvre: Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) is attending the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates. He has asked me to move his bill, C-367, on his behalf.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

FORT-FALLS BRIDGE AUTHORITY ACT

MEASURE TO REMOVE REQUIREMENT FOR ACT OF U.S. CONGRESS BEFORE COMMENCING CONSTRUCTION

Mr. T. Lefebvre (Pontiac) (for Mr. Reid) moved that Bill C-367, to amend the Fort-Falls Bridge Authority Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Lefebvre (for Mr. Reid) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Lefebvre: Madam Speaker, on behalf of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) may I thank the House for its co-operation in helping him to pass this bill which is very important to his constituency.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The House will now proceed to the consideration of Bill C-208, respecting Heritage Day, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. McKinley: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We cannot agree that this bill be now considered in private members' hour because notice was only given for the bill that was just passed. There are certain members of this party who like to know ahead of time when a particular bill is being brought forward. We cannot consent to it at this time.

Mr. Lefebvre: Madam Speaker, I missed part of the hon. member's remarks. Would he mind repeating them so that I can report this to the authorities?

Mr. McKinley: Yes, Madam Speaker. We were only provided with information for the bill that was just passed. There is a responsibility to give information to hon. members when a bill is coming forward in private members' hour. This information was not provided to us to pass on to our members who are concerned with this Heritage Day bill. Therefore it is my duty to be responsible to those members of our party.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, if there is the kind of objection which has just been stated, there is no point in being difficult. I may say that I do have the authority of the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) to move this bill on his behalf. It is for this bill and not another in which he is interested. However, if the Conservative party objects, I shall not try to do so at this time.

I wish to make the point that these arrangements that are being made are getting to the point where we are not only facilitating the private members' hour, but we are losing a lot of time. The rule is that when one order is disposed of, we move on to the next. Surely it should have been known that the bill of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) would take only a few minutes. Something else should have been ready for this hour. I suppose we now face the problem of what we should do.

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The hon. member can call it six o'clock if he wants. However, I do not like us giving up 55 minutes of House time. Furthermore, since it is Tuesday I certainly will not agree to our giving up this time if it is going to count as the thirty-first of the 40 hours we have on Mondays and Tuesdays. Maybe we can find some solution to this. I have a bill away down the list, order No. 111, which I am prepared to take, but I certainly do not think we should rise now and say we have had appointed day number 31.

Mr. Lefebvre: Replying to the comments of the House leader of the NDP, I suggest he raise this subject at the next House leaders' meeting rather than wait until these problems arise in the House. Our House leader is not here. I do not see the House leaders of the other parties. The hon. member is speaking as a House leader, and there is no one here to reply to him as such. I suggest he place this on the agenda for the next House leaders' meeting. To help solve the dilemma today, I suggest we return to Bill C-32 until six o'clock.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): No.

Mr. McKinley: I have to apologize for my voice, Madam Speaker, but I have a cold that has settled in my throat. If we are to do that, some suggestion should have been made before this time. Possibly we could have made some arrangements. At the present time we are not prepared to agree with the suggestion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the comments made by the chief government whip, but I wish to point out that the order of business is not completely in the hands of the House leaders. There is an order paper. At five o'clock on Tuesday the order is private members' business. We would be perfectly within our right to say we will take the first item and then the second item, whether members know about it or not. For the purpose of convenience we have arrived at this agreement, and I have no objection. However, when it is clearly understood that a bill that is called will take only two or three minutes, there should be an understanding that we will move on to something else. As I say, I am prepared to have my bill called. It asks for time off, up to three hours, for new citizens to appear in citizenship courts. Surely that is a reasonable proposition. I do not press it. I just say it is something we could do.

If we reach the point where there is nothing we can do, I make the same plea I made the last time. This hour, which is only a few minutes, should not count as one of the 40 hours we are allowed for private members' business on Mondays and Tuesdays.

Mr. Lefebvre: Just to show that we on this side of the House are agreeable, I will agree with the hon. member's suggestion that this not be charged to the 40 hours. I agree to that. If it is agreeable, I will call it six o'clock and no time will be lost for private members' business.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is it agreed that order No. 8 stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is it agreed that we do not count this as a private members' hour?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. Perhaps the House will permit our going into committee of the whole on Bill C-32 before the Chair calls it six o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

PETROLEUM ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING THE ADMINISTRATION OF INTERPROVINCIAL, EXPORT AND IMPORT TRADE IN PETROLEUM AND PETROLEUM PRODUCTS

The House resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-32, to impose a charge on the export of crude oil and certain petroleum products, to provide compensation for certain petroleum costs and to regulate the price of Canadian crude oil and natural gas in interprovincial and export trade—Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale)—Mrs. Morin in the chair.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At 5:12 p.m. the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Yewchuk: Madam Chairman, just before the committee recessed I was saying that the country in which we live has been severely damaged by the policies of the government. I said it was damaged in three ways. The first was in the area of federal-provincial relations and general unity. I said this damage had been done because no consultations of a meaningful nature had taken place before the announcement of major policies on energy matters was made by the minister.

I also said the country had been damaged as a result of the instability surrounding the petroleum industry, an insecurity which jeopardized the security of future supply. The most obvious place at which the effects of this instability are now visible is the development of the Athabasca tar sands. It is estimated that by the end of the present decade we shall require a million barrels or so a day from the sands, and to achieve this level ten plants must be constructed before the end of the next ten-year period, each producing some 100,000 barrels a day. Because of the time it takes for a plant to go on stream, some five years, it is evident we are up against what I would consider to be an emergency situation right now. Steps must be taken very soon to stimulate the industry, to create a feeling of well-being in the economy so that this important development can proceed forthwith.

I realize it is becoming increasingly popular to expect governments to participate to an ever greater extent in the development of natural resources, particularly in the field of energy. We also are aware that no governments have the machinery or the know-how at the moment to take over from private enterprise—I do not say they could not get it, but at the moment they do not have it. I am not arguing now that government should take over from private enterprise; all I am saying is that private enterprise has been working in this area for several decades and doing a good job. It is only since there has been marked interference on the part of the federal government, and maybe some others, that supplies have been in jeopardy. While some members of the House, and some people in the country may daydream about the day when governments are completely responsible for energy production, the fact remains that our only hope at the moment of assuring security of supply within the next decade or so lies in encouraging the people who have proven their success in the past, and who already have the know-how and the required machinery. I want to impress this on the mind of the minister in the hope he will give it some thought and take steps which will be more useful than those he has taken so far.

This is not the time, Madam Chairman, to be taunting the provinces, or picking fights with the various regions of the country. In days in which Canada is threatened by unemployment on one hand and inflation on the other, the federal government should be striving for co-operation and taking a conciliatory approach in an effort to solve collectively the serious problems which beset the nation. We have not seen this happening. Instead, particularly as far as the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is concerned, we have witnessed a series of confrontations staged for no particular reason. It is important that this situation be changed. Perhaps the Prime Minister himself should take a more active role in this area. The Prime Minister is probably quite sincere when he says he wants to come to grips with inflation in some way; his efforts so far have not resulted in any significant improvement. I should like to see the Prime Minister go down in history as the man who, to use his own phrase, wrestled inflation to the ground. However, I fear history will record of his leadership only the phrase "Pierre fuddled while Canada burned".

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. MacKay: Madam Chairman, in approaching legislation such as Bill C-32 I am surprised the government, when considering the implications, did not see fit to make a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada. It is not as though there was not sufficient time to permit this to be done—as a number of hon. members have mentioned, this particular piece of legislation has been before the House for many months. The regulation of trade and commerce has always been a delicate and controversial subject. The bill before us has great potential for abuse by a government which is overly concerned about legislative expediency and somewhat impatient with the rights of provinces, and, indeed, of individuals.

● (2010)

The other day I was looking at a book by a contemporary authority on the Canadian constitution, W. R. Lederman, a very distinguished academic who at one time was at Dalhousie University when I was studying there. This distinguished gentleman had some very interesting things to say about the role of courts generally in relation to our constitution, and I should like to put on the record some brief excerpts from his book, which is entitled "The Courts and the Canadian Constitution". Professor Lederman makes the point that the court has an educational role to play, and at page 172 of this book we find the following:

> It is well recognized that the ultimate court in a federal system plays two roles in relation to public opinion. It is first the institutional symbol of balance in the national life, the instrument which seeks to preserve unity in the system of diversity of interest and legal power involved in federalism. Secondly, its deliverances help to educate the public mind as to the historic purposes of the constitution, and the principles applied in the determination of great internal issues.

I do not think any of us would seriously question that under present circumstances this is a great internal issue. A determination is being made by this highest court in the land, parliament, of what the historic role of the provinces will be in the future, having regard to the rights that they and their people have to deal with their own natural resources. The Supreme Court of Canada should have a role as well. Professor Lederman goes on to say that the court is an umpire of the federal system. May I return here to the point with which I began these few remarks and suggest to the minister that I am surprised he did not seek to make use of our Supreme Court.

Professor Lederman continues:

> It is the prime function of the final court to keep the exercise of legislative powers by parliament or legislatures within the limits marked out for them. For that purpose it must interpret the heads of jurisdiction relevant to each exercise of asserted legislative power in reaching its conclusion of validity or invalidity.

Mr. Baldwin: The minister said that he did not need to go to the courts; he had Otto Lang to rely on.

Mr. MacKay: As the hon. member for Peace River says, the minister made reference to the fact that he had received the benefit of an opinion from the Minister of Justice. I believe his exact words were that the bill being put forward carries with it the judgment of the Department of Justice that it is, indeed, within the legislative power of the parliament of Canada to pass this particular enactment. I say to the minister in all sincerity, how much better would it be if he were able to make that statement with reference to the Supreme Court of Canada; and I say that with all due deference to the Minister of Justice.

In looking at another major act dealing with energy, the act that set up the National Energy Board and which came into effect in 1959, it was never intended by that piece of legislation to give the federal government the right to come into a province and fix the wellhead price for petroleum products. The government of that the day exhibited, albeit under circumstances quite different, though not entirely so, from those existing today, a more commendable concern for the rights of the provinces and the citizens of the provinces, since at that particular time the government was content, through the board, by transport controls and so on, to exert an impact on price at the place of arrival, a much different situation from moving in and interfering with prices at the source.

As other hon. members have said—and I do not wish to belabour the point—by applying the same reasoning as that applied to petroleum products the government could institute controls on the price of lumber, because most provinces export lumber. It could do it with iron ore because iron ore will eventually become steel and might be exported. No resource is exempt. So it is quite clear that the government has, if it so chooses, the power to change drastically the traditional roles that the provinces have played in managing their own resources ever since confederation.

I repeat that it becomes imperative that the government do what it did about a year ago, namely, use every effort to bring the provincial premiers back again in a more subdued and businesslike attitude to achieve a consensus, without resorting to legislative enactments of this sort. Again I caution the minister to avoid his tendency to be impatient and inflexible because of his understandable concern to achieve his objective.

There is another option that the minister and his colleagues should pursue to the utmost extent. I refer to bilateral discussions between the producing provinces and the federal government in an attempt to achieve written agreements, preferably supplemented by statutory provisions. If there really is a crisis in the area of Energy, as it was claimed there was about a year ago but which has since turned out to be considerably less than a crisis, if surely, the government can act, as it did with the Energy Allocation Act, as if there were a genuine state of emergency and deal with the situation, without being at this time in a great rush to enact this particular piece of legislation.

A province like Alberta, or any other province for that matter, cannot realistically make an agreement to sell petroleum products outside its own borders without the co-operation of the consuming provinces and the federal government agencies concerned with the transportation of such products. Given the co-operative nature of the marketing and transportation process, I want to ask the minister, without going into the many arguments previously cited, why the matter was not referred to the Supreme Court of Canada so that this, our highest and most prestigious court, could have formulated, through its ruling, the legal and constitutional position.

This ruling could then have served not only as a guide to Parliament and to the government in proceeding with its legislation; it would have demonstrated to all Canadians, and particularly to all those having the responsibility to govern in provinces, that the federal government was truly concerned with the rule of law and was using the resources of our Supreme Court to assist in evolving legislation which, by its very subject matter, had fundamental constitutional implications.

I did not intend to cite a possible amendment in its entirety at this stage, but it does seem to me that it would be appropriate to move an amendment at the end of the bill. For example, an amendment could be moved to add immediately following clause 95 on page 39 a new clause, which could be clause 96, providing for reference to the Supreme Court. Such an amendment could read as follows:

(1) Forthwith after this act is assented to in Her Majesty's name, the governor in council, under section 55 of the Supreme Court Act, shall refer all questions of law and fact concerning the constitutionality of this act and every provision thereof other than this section to the Supreme Court.

(2) Until the Supreme Court has certified to the governor in council its opinion upon each such question, no provision of this act, other than this section, shall come into force at the time of commencement provided therefor under this act or the Interpretation Act and then only to the extent, if any, such provision is in the opinion of the court within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada.

I think that is necessary in view of clauses 52 and 35, which provide that they come into effect upon proclamation. Another subclause could be added to this effect:

(3) The attorney general of each province shall be notified of the hearing under this section in order that he may be heard if he thinks fit.

I have tried to be reasonably specific in what I have said this evening, that is to say, I have registered my concern about why the resources of the Supreme Court have not in fact been utilized by the minister and the government, since they are there and presumably are available to give guidance. I want to conclude by saying that I hope the minister will address himself to this point and provide me with a resumé of why he has not taken this sort of action. Perhaps he will also say whether he feels that what I have suggested has any merit or not.

● (2020)

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall the clause carry? The hon. member for Peace River.

Mr. Baldwin: I got to my feet a little too rapidly, Madam Chairman. I see I have a competitor to whom I yield.

Mr. Elzinga: Madam Chairman, the reason I did not rise in more of a rush was that I thought the minister would wish to respond to the comments made by the hon. member for Central Nova. This petroleum administration legislation, I believe, does a very good job of setting out the philosophy of the government which governs Canada at the present time. It is the philosophy of confrontation.

When the government cannot achieve its purpose through the proper channels it is more than willing to bring out a club with which literally to ram its feelings down the throats of the objectors. It is no wonder there was not agreement reached at the recent conference of first ministers. How could our provincial administrations be assured that the federal government would not do exactly what it did after the previous meeting? Shortly after that meeting it introduced a budget which, to my understanding, was in disagreement with the consensus reached, and by which it no longer allowed royalties to be an expense deduction.

I should like to read briefly the reaction of the petroleum industry to the elimination of the expense deduction. It reads as follows:

The petroleum industry has been swift and bitterly critical in its reaction to federal budget proposals that may take as much as $800 million away from it in a full year.

Industry men said they deplored the fact that Ottawa has failed to heed earlier complaints that if the tax proposals—first put out in the defeated federal budget of last May—were passed, producers could face an economically untenable position.

I am as concerned about the petroleum industry as about the small consumer, because if we do not have exploration by our petroleum industries we will not have the supply to give to the individuals who so badly need it, and our concern must be a surety of supply.

I wish also to take a few moments to compare this federal administration to the government of Alberta and its reaction. Alberta somehow feels it is just coming into its own in regard to confederation, but the present federal administration wishes to continue its policy of excluding the western parts of our country from full participation in confederation. As I stated earlier, I should like to compare the attitude of the federal government to the attitude of the provincial government of Alberta. I shall quote out of context some remarks made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources when he spoke to the Science Teachers Association of Ontario on November 16, 1974. He stated:

I say . . . the principles of our policy, and they are threefold in regard to petroleum: To reach, through consultation with the provinces, a phased increase in the price of crude oil to a level sufficient to bring on the required additional supplies for Canadians without jumping to the high levels set by the OPEC group; . . .

I should like to dwell on his statement in respect of consultation with the provinces. With regard to this bill, is the minister willing to take the advice and guidance of the provinces when the bill contains a veto clause? What type of consultation is that? This is not consultation, but confrontation. Again let me stress that this administration wishes to have a club by which it can beat and mold the provinces to its own federal wishes.

As a comparison I should like to read the statement of Premier Lougheed which he gave at the federal-provincial conference in Ottawa on January 22, 1974. He stated:

Alberta welcomes the opportunity to participate in this federal-provincial conference on energy. As the major supplier of energy for Canada, we obviously have a substantial stake in the development of sound and fair national energy policies. They must be national policies though—national in the sense they are developed by agreement between the federal government and the provinces and with full recognition that natural resources located within the provinces, under our constitution, are owned by the provinces.

The Premier of Alberta states, "they must be national policies". By his past experience I believe he has proved he is willing to respect the national interest. As he says in his statement, with which I am in agreement, the resources are the property of the provinces under our constitution.

At the same time we find that this Liberal administration is not willing to abide by our constitution and recognize the fact that resources are the property of the provinces. The federal government is not willing to heed the constitution and the rights of the provinces. It is more inclined to ram its beliefs down the throats of what might appear to be minor governments.

There are many areas in respect of petroleum in which we should be very interested. I feel they are somewhat overlooked by this government because it is more interested in grabbing the wealth these resources will produce. The two areas on which I wish to dwell specifically are supply and national unity. The National Energy Board states that Canada will lose its self-sufficiency in respect to oil production by 1982 even if oil exports to the United States are cut off. What has the minister done in the area of security of our supply? What is he doing in respect of finding future reserves which will be very much in demand by future generations? I do not believe he is doing anything in this regard, or in respect of national unity, although the government suggests it is doing much to foster this cause.

I should like to refer to a few paragraphs from an editorial appearing in the Edmonton Journal of November 30, 1974, in respect to national unity. I believe it is very appropriate to discuss national unity with regard to this bill because I have a strong inner feeling that the present federal administration thrives on confrontation. It believes in dividing this country as much as it can, and then appearing as the godfather who can bring our country back together again with national unity policies, even when it is the parent that fostered the disgruntled feelings that exist throughout our nation. The editorial states:

> In 1865, when the Eighth Provincial Parliament of Canada asked Queen Victoria to allow the formation of a federation of provinces in British North America, the central objective was 'to protect the diversified interest of the several provinces, and secure efficiency, harmony, and permanency in the Union.'

This government has done very little to protect the diversified interests of the many regions of our country simply because all it does is to appeal to the populace which will continue to re-elect it. The article goes on to say:

> On the surface, the dispute between Ottawa and Alberta is a simple political dogfight over wealth and who will control it. If the conflict were indeed a limited wrangle over money it would be relatively easy to resolve. Instead, profound questions about national unity and the kind of Canada we will have in the future are emerging from the debate.

I think the situation is extremely touchy when we have various regions in Canada competing against each other because the government is dividing us to such an extent that we will be more concerned about regional interests than about the national interest of our country.

The article goes on to read:

> Ottawa has challenged the provinces' traditionally accepted right to certain benefits accruing from ownership and development of natural resources . . .

The federal government is challenging these rights in the bill before us. It would not be so bad if it challenged these rights from time to time, but it is its arrogant attitude in challenging provinces such as Alberta, which produces 85 per cent of the oil in our country, that is so unacceptable. I think we are all aware that what we do want is only a fair price. We do not want to be used as puppets on a string by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

The editorial also states:

> What is alarming about the Alberta case is that Ottawa's approach to oil pricing and resource royalties embodies the concept of a confederation in which provincial jurisdictions can be invaded unilaterally, both in spirit and in fact, at the whim of the central government; a confederation in which the provinces are entirely subservient to the federal authority and are, in effect, political adjuncts to the federal power.

That is just what this bill will do to the provinces, and that is why we in the Conservative party cannot agree with it. It is our hope that the minister will agree to amend the bill to include a provision for consultation with the provinces and to exclude a veto clause under which the government could force its own wishes on individual provinces across the country.

The article also states:

> It is equally ironic that Prime Minister Trudeau, that most articulate and ardent supporter of Canadian federalism, should be heading the government that is sowing such discord among the provinces.

Let me state, incidentally, that I disagree with the statement in the article that the Prime Minister is an articulate and ardent supporter of Canadian federalism. It is evident that the government thrives on confrontation and this bill is a fine example of just that.

I should like to relate to the committee a story that was told to me a good many years ago. As it comes back to my mind it makes me think of our present administration and of our Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It is a story about a man who envisioned himself pushing a wheelbarrow with a man sitting in it, on a tightrope across Niagara Falls. What our minister is asking of the Canadian people is for them to hop into a wheelbarrow which he would push on a tightrope across Niagara Falls.

I think it is evident that in western Canada we do not have that much faith in this administration, and rightly so, judging from the administration's past actions. For example, an agreement was reached by this government and the provinces a year ago but subsequently disregarded in the budget. How can we have faith in an administration that agrees to one thing at one time, and rejects it when it no longer fits its purpose?

In conclusion I should like to pose the same question that the hon. member for Central Nova put to the minister, because I am very interested in the minister's reaction to that proposal put forward by the hon. member. I would also like to know the reaction this government has received to this legislation from the various provinces.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Gilbert: This is a filibuster.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Judging from the remark just made by the hon. member for Broadview who has just awakened, one would think that the situation that we are discussing and the circumstances surrounding the proposed legislation affect other parts of Canada than the part that he represents. As a matter of fact this bill affects all parts of Canada, and particularly the province of Ontario.

It is important that we consider for a moment the geography of this country and, if one does so, one realizes that in terms of access to supply of energy, whether for home consumption for the operation of automobiles or for the operation and fueling of the industrial capacity of central Canada—which I know is sometimes the cause of comment in other parts of Canada—petroleum is significant, and Ontario is a land locked province. Any discussions in this House, any first ministers' conference, any statements by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on any aspect dealing with the supply of energy for all of the purposes I have mentioned do not end, so far as we are concerned, at the Alberta, Saskatchewan or Manitoba borders but they concern us also deeply and vitally in this part of Canada.

So I think that we must look at this bill from the point of view of Ontario, and the first question we must ask of the minister is: what will this bill do under the present circumstances to ensure one more gallon of oil, one more cubic foot of natural gas, that could not be provided by reasonable consultation? I do not want any member of the House to think that the only people who are concerned about the proper interpretation of this badly battered British North America Act are the people of Alberta or the people of western Canada, because we in central Canada are very much concerned as well.

From the point of view of central Canada the significance of the first ministers' conference and of the proposed legislation, as well as all that flows from those two events, and indeed of the attitude of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, is that if the power is given to the minister and to his department as set forth in clauses 36 and 52, then the people of central Canada can expect forthwith an increase in the price of fuel, in the price of gas, and in other prices.

Mr. Foster: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): No, I will not permit a question. Let the hon. member sit down and he can ask me again when I have concluded my remarks. I am taking my cue from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

An hon. Member: What arrogance!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): That is how important this is to the province of Ontario, and it is precisely for this reason, and also because there is a deep constitutional matter involved in this whole consideration, that the premier of Ontario, the Hon. William Davis, took the position which he was bound to take at the first ministers' conference last week. I think it is important that the people of Ontario, and the hon. members from Ontario on the other side of the House who represent people in Ontario, understand the importance of that position.

● (2040)

I heard the speech made by the premier of Ontario. In a statistical way he outlined what an increase in the price of oil might mean immediately. He told of the effect it could have on inflation, on employment, and on the development of industry in the province of Ontario. It is important to Canada, just as it is important to all of us in Ontario and in any other part of Canada, that there be a reasonable opportunity for the continuance and development of the petroleum industry in western Canada.

Surely the essence of this debate is the balance of interest between the various provinces of Canada. When the minister, in the absence of a crisis, takes upon himself the powers this bill gives to him, or he asks this parliament to give to him, then I think anyone who has any feeling at all about this question of the constitutional balance between the provinces and the central government has to sit up and take notice, and ask why and what the effect of it will be.

I certainly would agree with the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain who said, in effect, that the whole constitutional process of this country has been one of consultation. I think this is one of the few times when there has been an attempt by the federal government to amend by a statute the British North America Act, and it is really an attempt to do indirectly what it could not do directly. There is not one member of parliament or anyone in the country who would say, given a demonstrable crisis or an emergency, that the government ought not to have the powers it asks for, but there are very few people in this country who, in the absence of that emergency or crisis, would willingly allow this unilateral amendment to the British North America Act. The leader of the government has indicated that if he is given this power—and that is why he is asking for it—he is going to raise the price of petroleum. That is not to say that the price of petroleum ought to stay the same forever. Of course it cannot.

There is something unique about this country. The constitution of this country came about because some fairly wise men in 1867 decided that it was worth while to build a nation in the northern half of North America. Given the state of affairs and the threats they were confronted with at that time, and the advantages which would accrue to nationhood, they sat around a table, consulted, came to an agreement, and the country was born. It is a pretty fragile thing, a country born out of agreement and consensus rather than revolution and war. That fragility has to be nurtured at each turn of the road, and this government is about as far removed from the good constitutional gardener as I can imagine.

There have been some in my part of Canada who have called the premier of Alberta a blue eyed Arab, and a number of other things. Much of this has emanated from the press. Much has emanated from the mouths of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In all of this they have perhaps done more damage to the cause of confederation than anything else.

I have listened very carefully to the speeches which have been made, I have read the reports and the statements, and I think that it has to be recognized that a provincial premier has a legitimate part to play in the national scene, and that, if he failed to play his part, most Canadians in his province would repudiate him. I think that the premier of Alberta adopted at the conference a reasonable attitude with respect to this situation, having regard to his interest and the national interest. It is that kind of attitude of reasonableness which ought to be seized upon by the government rather than immediately legislating into place the power the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources just loves to wield. Perhaps an element of understanding, which even he may be capable of from time to time, should be wheeled into place.

It has to be demonstrated to this House that all consultation has failed at the time that agreements run out, that there is indeed a crisis in terms of supply, that there is a difficulty with respect to the development industries—those things must be balanced—and if there were a referral to this parliament of that situation then I am satisfied that this parliament would react in the national interest, and that would be understood by the people of every province.

The BNA Act does not just sit on the statute books to be ignored or to be circumvented. This problem is so important that the minister ought to accept the suggestion of the hon. member for Central Nova and refer this matter to the Supreme Court of Canada to have the constitutional position satisfied. The minister said yesterday that he was basing his case on the regulation of interprovincial commerce. That is his whole case. He puts upon himself the clothing of a constitutional lawyer, aided and abetted by a questionable opinion from the Department of Justice. Others in the constitutional debate say that that is not so, and that it deals basically in the field of property and civil rights. It seems to me that the issues are very clearly defined. They are the kind of issues, in terms of jurisdiction, which ought to be referred to the Supreme Court of Canada. It may be that the reason why the minister is not referring it to the Supreme Court of Canada is because of some doubt about what might be the outcome.

In any event I think it is worthwhile, not just for the idle fighting of a case in court but to establish the constitutional position, that the minister consider very carefully the suggestion of the hon. member and of others, that the issues are just that important in terms of our constitution, that the varying provincial and regional interests are just that important in terms of our country, and that the interests of the people of the province of Ontario in terms of price must be balanced equitably and justly with the interests of the people of the province of Alberta in terms of development.

But, most of all, no one should sit idly by in this chamber and accept the word of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources that he must have these powers, particularly when he and the leader of his government have indicated that they intend to use them immediately in a way which will likely be detrimental to the country as a whole. I ask that the minister consider this point of view. It is not just a western problem, it is not just a problem of the producing provinces, but also a problem which affects consuming provinces. I ask him to consider very carefully whether it is wise, in all of the circumstances, for him to proceed along the lines he is proceeding, in view of the importance of this issue.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Madam Chairman, that was an interesting intervention by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton. He suggested that in putting forth this bill I am counselling the ignoring of the British North America Act—that is a direct quote—that I am proposing the circumvention of the constitution, and that the policy involved is against the interests of the people of Canada. He used a very interesting sentence which I noted carefully. He said that a provincial premier does have a legitimate part to play and that most citizens in his province would repudiate him unless he speaks for the interest of that particular province.

[Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton).]

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): It was in the "national interest". You heard me.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Let the record be checked.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): You check it tomorrow.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The interesting thing is that the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton may have neglected to notice the fact that the position of the premier of Ontario, the provincial treasurer of Ontario and the Ontario government—which at one time he supported—was not just support for a measure to deal with oil and gas prices in general, not just that some provision to be used in the event of an emergency should be carried into enactment by this parliament, but specifically that Bill C-32, this legislative proposal, should be enacted by this parliament as soon as possible. If the hon. member had been following the events of the conference last week he would have noted that the premier of Ontario referred to that several times.

I draw that interesting conclusion as evidence of the extent to which this is just another area in which that premier has lost the support of the province. I have some belief at least that he was seeking to appeal on behalf of the citizens of Ontario in asking us to take this action to protect the consumers of Canada from unilateral action on the part of other provinces.

The hon. member raises the question of whether this is an appropriate action that we should be taking. I am not asking him to believe me. He does not have to accept my word, but if he is going to reject my word, and this bill, he is also significantly rejecting the premier of Ontario and the government at Queen's Park.

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Chairman, I rise to intervene in this debate because I was astounded on a number of occasions, yesterday and today, by the remarks of various hon. members, particularly those to my right, and most particularly the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands has reminded me that these are the same people who were proposing price controls a short time ago. We have not heard much about that in recent months. Now we are getting it from the other side as well, and they won an election opposing price controls.

We supported this legislation on second reading on the grounds that the Government of Canada should have the power to control these prices, or to set them if agreement cannot be reached. We have also taken the position that there is absolutely no justification for oil price increases unless all the extra money derived therefrom goes into exploration and development production. If that is not the case, then there is no legitimate reason for a price increase.

I understand why my colleagues to my right and some other people in the country feel sorry for the oil industry, but I do not agree with them. It was the premier of an oil-producing province—not the premier of Ontario or Quebec—who said that if there is to be any increase in the price of oil it should go into an energy security fund to be controlled by the people of Canada through the federal and provincial governments.

The minister has no assurance, nor have my hon. friends to my right, that the oil industry will do any more exploration than it is doing at present. One could assume, perhaps with a degree of certainty, that it would put some money into exploration, but unless all the money is allocated to exploration, development and production of energy resources, whether oil, gas, uranium, electrical power or whatever, then there is no justification for an increase. We agree, however, that in the final analysis if there is no agreement then the federal government should have that power.

I can understand why there is no agreement from at least one producing province. There was an agreement in March of last year and Saskatchewan lived up to it. Every nickel of its windfall money went into a capital fund, as had been agreed. It would have been nice, of course, to spend that money on roads, or on health and welfare, but it all went into a capital fund to be used for exploration and development. But this minister, the Minister of Finance, and the government doublecrossed us. I have urged the premier of Saskatchewan to keep his back to the wall and his gun loose in his holster the next time he comes to Ottawa, and to make sure that he gets everything in writing. In spite of that betrayal, however, the premier of Saskatchewan was the only one who returned here last week with a positive proposal.

Last night the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain said that Saskatchewan says it can steal and Alberta says it can steal. I do not know about Alberta, but the premier of Saskatchewan said that we will not steal and that, even though the resources are ours, if there is a price increase all this money will go into energy research development and exploration development.

It seems to me that a lot of this debate is not concerned so much with the constitution of Canada or the security of energy resources for the future as with the welfare and good order of a lot of multinational oil companies. What assurance do we have that the majors in the oil industry will use the funds derived from a price increase for production and exploration? The premier of Saskatchewan provided ample information. We have no assurance at all, and the evidence is to the contrary.

In spite of the fancy advertisements shown by Imperial Oil during the hockey games about how they are going to save us all in Canada, the evidence is to the contrary. While their profits after deduction of all expenses, taxes and royalties, were going up, they were not doing anything extra in exploration and production. From 1965 to 1974, with the exception of one year, their net profits from Alberta and Saskatchewan increased. In 1966 they took out of Alberta and Saskatchewan $160 million in net profits, and by 1974 they were taking $786 million. They made that much after paying taxes, royalties, expenses, lifting costs—the whole bit. And what did they spend in Alberta and Saskatchewan, in 1974, for exploration and development? They spent $220 million. Where did the other $566 million go? I say that anybody who says that any amount of increased oil and gas prices should go to the industry is betraying our country and betraying the possibility of security of energy resources for the future. The companies had their chance and they blew it.

Mr. Balfour: Would the hon. member permit a question? Were the figures he mentioned production profits taken from Alberta and Saskatchewan?

Mr. Benjamin: They are oil industry profits, in Canada, in millions of dollars.

Mr. Balfour: Is the hon. member sure?

Mr. Benjamin: Wait; they are profits in Alberta and Saskatchewan. I am sorry. They represent oil industry profits from all over Canada. I may have been out by a few million dollars. I do not know how profits made in those provinces compare with oil profits made in the other eight provinces. Most profits were made in Alberta and Saskatchewan. I am glad the hon. member drew my attention to this fact.

The point is they made $786 million in net profits after taxes, dividends, royalties and allowing for reserves. How much did they put into exploration in all Canada, including Alberta and Saskatchewan? If you say they put $659 million into all Canada, that leaves $129 million-odd unaccounted for. Yet some people are proposing that we should raise oil prices and pay some of the increase to the industry.

Let us see what happened in the years when their cash flow was going up. What did they do in exploration? Back in 1965, 1966, 1967 and 1968, the companies made a large base profit after paying all operating expenses, including royalties, and after paying income tax, extraordinary items and discretionary expenses—whatever that means. Perhaps, in the oil industry, discretionary expenses means donations to the Liberal and Tory parties. I don't know.

Around 1965 their cash flow was in the neighbourhood of $430 million or $440 million, and the oil industry spent on exploration between $170 million and $180 million in all Canada. In Alberta and Saskatchewan they spent around $120 million. When you look at the figures for 1972-74, you will see that their cash flow was in the order of $800 million, $1,200 million and $1,600 million. Did exploration expenditures for all Canada go up proportionately? No way! They certainly did not. Their exploration expenditures went up to a total of $600 million for all Canada. Therefore the proportion is lower. Their exploration record in Alberta and Saskatchewan is even worse. The expenditure stayed where it was, in the area of $180 million to $200 million. And some people want the oil industry to get part of any increased price for oil and gas.

When the industry's cash flow climbed to the $1,600 million mark in 1974, the proportion spent on exploration went down. Why should any part of a price increase go to the industry? Some say some or all of any increase should go to the industry. Really, Madam Chairman, I find that difficult to accept.

We agree that the minister should have this power if he does not get agreement. I agree with what some hon. friends to my right have said. There is good reason for at least one province, after the double-cross of last year, to say, "Bring in your budget, and we will see what we shall do. We are not prepared to make the kind of agreement we made last time. We are not prepared to play a game in which the rules change half way through it, because that is what the government did last time." The government wonders why it has difficulty getting a consensus. It will find it difficult to get any consensus even on the time of day after what happened in its dealings with certain provinces.

We hear a lot about the difficulties of independent companies, and a lot of weeping and wailing. Someone has to do the weeping and wailing for the independents, the drilling and exploration companies in Canada. Really, the big seven do not do the drilling and exploration in this country. They have done a small amount of it in the past, but the major portion of the activity has always been undertaken by independents, most of whom are Canadian-owned and who have the expertise.

Mr. Balfour: How many remained in Saskatchewan?

Mr. Benjamin: Sure, companies have left Saskatchewan and Alberta. They followed the multinationals. They are the slaves of the multinational corporations, which brings me to the point about which the hon. member for Regina East is concerned. If Imperial Oil can increase its profits by 176 per cent in four years and take that much out of this country, that is not a bad deal at all. If they decide to drill in the North Sea, or Indonesia, or Nigeria, the service and drilling rigs pack up and follow them. There is nothing new about that. They have been doing it ever since the first oil well was discovered. But you do not see Imperial Oil running around with drilling service rigs; nor does any other multinational oil company do this.

The point is that in Canada we have developed expertise that is second to none in drilling, exploration, and innovation. Why do we not explore more ourselves and drill for our own oil resources? We really do not need Imperial, Gulf, Shell, Texaco, Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas, Petrofina, or Pan Canadian, the little subsidiary of the CPR. We could go ahead on our own. Even when the federal government, together with Ontario, Alberta and the Syncrude consortium made the agreement to go ahead finally with the Syncrude operation, one premier of a producing province suggested a way by which we could operate a publicly-owned Syncrude type operation. He suggested that if we put $2 per barrel on the price of oil and set that amount aside for development, each year we could spend $1.4 billion on a Syncrude-type plant. He was talking about adding a plant each year.

An hon. Member: And what happened in Saskatchewan in 1950?

Mr. Benjamin: Listen to these free enterprise supporters crying. They keep saying, "We can't do anything unless the companies do it for us." Baloney. That is a lot of malarkey, and has always been. Even the blue-eyed Arabs of the Middle East and South America are saying that we have been "had" all these years. They say, "We don't need those oil companies," and neither do we. We have exploration and drilling expertise. True, some of the companies went bankrupt. I have some relatives who were in the oil well drilling and servicing industry and I can tell you what happened to them at the tender hands of Imperial Oil and Gulf. They invested a lifetime of savings and effort and were left in the lurch, because these multinational corporations did not do the job they were supposed to do.

Do you suppose Imperial Oil operates on principles of altruism? Why do they operate in Canada? Madam Chairman, they operated here because they wanted the bucks. That is the only reason. Their operation had nothing to do with the welfare and good order of our country and the people living in it. How much longer will we cater to these people, especially when we can do this work ourselves?

This legislation would be good if it got the minister and the government off their backsides. We could undertake these operations, either with a totally publicly-owned Crown corporation or with a combination of public ownership and private enterprise; but the operation should be Canadian-owned and controlled. That is important. The government has not had the courage to go that far. The present price of the resource appears to be the only concern of the federal government. Apparently the minister is concerned about any return that the industry needs or has the right to expect if there is to be an increase.

If the minister is going to keep using the multinational corporations and not keep on letting them use him, he needs power in the legislation to require them to put all of that extra money into research, exploration and development, not only for oil and gas, but the whole spectrum of energy sources in this country. Instead of that, he is going to go half way.

I respect the Progressive Conservative party and their concerns. At least they stand up for private enterprise and the glories of it. However, the minister wants to go down the middle and have it both ways; a little bit to industry and a little bit to the producing provinces. He wants one price for consumers across this country. He is trying to do a little bit for each of them, but is not really doing anything. It is in the same mess as it was when the Conservatives were defeated. In fact, it has got progressively worse.

I hate to say this, and I will say it without any malice. When I took my family to Montreal in 1967 to see Expo, we were happy about our one hundredth birthday and proud of confederation. However, when buying gas for my car in Ottawa, Montreal and Three Rivers, I paid between seven and ten cents a gallon less than in Saskatchewan where we live right on top of the oil. For 13 years I did not hear anyone from Ontario, Quebec or the Atlantic provinces say there should be one price across Canada. They had the benefit of cheap off-shore crude, but they did not say we should even out that price. Western Canadians paid higher gas, farm fuel and heating fuel prices for 13 years than those in Quebec and the Atlantic provinces. However, we did not hear one word about there being one price across Canada. The Middle East countries have increased their prices and eastern Canadians now have to pay more. So all of a sudden we need to have one price across Canada, and we are to have a two-price system.

Alberta and Saskatchewan have made their contribution to confederation. Both agreed to forgo hundreds of millions of dollars of revenue that could have been theirs at the world price. What happened? They got double-crossed. Saskatchewan certainly did.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Baldwin: Madam Chairman, I was hoping that these interesting tales from Scheherazade to which we were listening would be continued by the hon. member. However, we will get the next instalment later.

I want to comment on something that was said by the hon. member for Central Nova with regard to the question of emergency. As a matter of fact it would be rather simple for the government to establish to any intelligent and objective court that there was a state of emergency, and these powers could then be obtained. If you put before a court of this land the series of walking disasters that have been afflicted upon Canada, I am sure they would say that a country with a government like this is certainly in a state of emergency. There have been a few exceptions. The Postmaster General is now having a latter repentance about the genies he helped unloose from Pandora's box. I am mixing my metaphors, but hon. members will understand what I mean. He is trying to put them back, without too much success.

I want to ask the minister a few questions. Some are rhetorical, some are actual. He may answer them sometime during the course of the debate.

Through cases decided in the Supreme Court of Canada and by superior court judges, I have established, with the law as it now stands, that if a transaction takes place entirely within a province, it is for the province to regulate, even though the commodity is to its greatest extent being exported, or has been or will be going into the channels of interprovincial or international trade. That is the law as it has been laid down, with the following exception. If the intent of the provincial regulation or statute is clearly aimed at dealing with the regulation of trade and commerce, even though the transaction takes place entirely within the province, it is offensive and can be struck down. If that is not the case, if a transaction is entirely within a province consisting of a sale or a movement, it is for the province to regulate. The province can regulate, the federal government cannot.

In the first CalOil case a former deputy minister said that the federal government has not the right, despite clear evidence that the commodity in question was one which came from outside the country under the provisions of federal government legislation dealing with the import, subject to conditions, to have control with regard to movement from one part of the province to the other.

There was a situation in the province of Quebec where the processing and pricing of milk, which was known to be shipped out of the province to its largest extent, was squarely within the competence of the province. There was a case in Saskatchewan where, despite the fact that 98 per cent of the crude in that province was being exported, the right to deal with it and in effect to fix pricing was with the provincial government. That transaction was entirely within that province. This is the law as it now stands.

What would be the situation if British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan acquired Crown corporations with the jurisdiction to buy crude petroleum being produced at the wellhead? What is the position of such a corporation if it purchases from the producer the oil which is produced? Is it subject to this legislation? I see the minister is likely to answer yes. If that is the case, it is a good thing to know. In that case the province of Saskatchewan, which would be acquiring at the wellhead through the agency of a Crown corporation the crude petroleum being produced, would have to pay the price prescribed in this legislation.

What would be the situation if a provincial agency, corporation or individual in the private sector purchased the crude at the wellhead and sold it to an interprovincial pipeline in a transaction entirely within the province? What would be the situation if a corporation producing crude petroleum sold to a storage facility which is storing within the limits of the province? What would be the situation if a refinery acquired crude petroleum from producing wells and from people who own the producing wells within the province?

If a refinery purchases the crude, refines it, and then sells the petroleum partly in the province and partly outside it, does such a refinery have to buy at the price prescribed in this bill? This question goes to the heart of the situation. I have been talking about petroleum but the same applies to natural gas.

If one reads clause 36, clauses 40 to 44 inclusive, and the corresponding clauses dealing with natural gas, one can only reach the conclusion that transactions taking place entirely within a province are subject to the provisions of the legislation, and that people buying or selling must do so at the price prescribed unless a party to the transaction fulfils the onus of establishing, by documentary evidence to the satisfaction of the minister or his officials, that the transaction was limited to production purchased and sold entirely within a province. This would include provincial Crown agencies. This being the case there is no question that the provisions of the bill are repugnant to our present law and repugnant to the constitution, and for these reasons we feel they should not be supported except subject to the amendments we have put forward.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, I have a couple of other remarks I would like to make. The hon. member for Peace River made mention of British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan which have set up Crown corporations. Here again we in this party would certainly like to hear from the minister and get any kind of verbal commitments—although we are a little leery of that because we tried that before, over a year ago, and look what it got us. But supposing the minister were successful in negotiating a small, modest price increase with the Province of Saskatchewan, say 50 cents, or a dollar a barrel, and all of that extra money was to be spent by the Province of Saskatchewan, through its Crown corporation—SaskOil—in exploration, research, development and production, would the minister then forget about counting that money against equalization? Will he assure us that the Minister of Justice will forget about taxing the Crown corporation?

If a producing province decides to take charge of the development of its energy resources, no matter what province, or whether it is oil, or gas, or some other form of energy, if there is a lack of leadership by the federal government and a lack of the provision of co-ordination, will the minister make it as easy as possible for them to do it? Or will he do otherwise in an effort to shore up—as I heard him say on television when he was being interviewed by the press a few Sundays ago—his own view that it goes against his grain personally if you are not using the private enterprise sector? I heard the minister say words to that effect on television on a national program.

Does that mean that, if any province wishes to launch into taking charge of the development of its energy resources, the minister will throw up any roadblocks he can to prevent SaskOil, or any other province? Does it mean that those provinces can look forward to all the roadblocks possible to prevent public ownership, operation and control of the development of their own energy resources? Unless we can get some indications about that from the minister he should be happy that we supported his bill in principle, let alone any way else. But what more can he tell us about his plans and his programs for the future?

Another point which was made by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands was also made by the premier of Saskatchewan. I am not going to be shy about repeating it. Again, if you are going to increase the present price and the consumers of Canada pay more for old oil so that you can find new oil, are the people of Canada going to pay more for that again? In other words, are the people to be expected to pay twice for security of supply of an energy source?

This brings me back to the logical and indisputable position taken by our party, and taken by the premier of Saskatchewan, that the only possible justification for any further increase in the price of old oil—the present national production—would be if the money were to be used only for exploration and development of oil and gas or other energy resources. In fact the premier of Saskatchewan in his submission did not just talk about oil and gas. He mentioned hydro electric power, which should make people in Nova Scotia happy when they keep proposing the Fundy project, or Manitoba or other provinces which really want to get into hydro electric development and other sources for developing electric energy, a lot of which will have to take the place of heating fuels in the years ahead. Extra money could be used now for other energy sources besides oil and gas.

The record of performance of the private sector has been good in its terms, but it has not been good in the long term for our country. I do not say the private sector was deliberately trying to hurt our country, not one bit. I do not blame them. Their objective was to make a profit, and this they did. They did very well at it. I might complain about it, but I do not blame them for it. That was their purpose.

[Mr. Benjamin.]

They were there to make all the bucks they could—the multinationals—and they did very well at it. But the suggestion now, from here on in, that we have to rely on them to save us, is just nonsense. We just do not need them any more. We can do it ourselves.

I suppose it would be way too much to expect that hon. members across the way would agree to doing this in the most sensible way—that it all be done through public ownership, public enterprise. I guess that would be too much to expect. But even a mix of private and public Canadian enterprise is something we could do. There is no reason in the world why we could not. We can send Imperial Oil back to their bosses at Exxon, and we can send Gulf and Texaco and the rest of them home. There would be no problem. They have done well already. I do not see why they should need to do any better.

When the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain talked earlier about Alberta and Saskatchewan being able to steal, saying they can't reach an agreement but they can steal, I do not want to misquote him, but that is the way I understood him, I ask, who's been stealing from us? The very companies that have progressively reduced their research and exploration in both Alberta and Saskatchewan have continued to take larger and larger profits out of those two places.

Imperial Oil got $105 million in 1970, and then went up to $136 million in 1971—that is a 29 per cent increase. That is even better than the average runway sweeper got. In 1972 they went to $157 million, which was only a 15 per cent increase over 1971. In 1973 they rose to $228 million, a 45 per cent increase. That is when the exploration activities, whether by way of feet drilled or dollars spent, started to diminish. Their take home pay, if I may use a colloquial expression, went up by 45 per cent. Then in 1974 they jumped from $228 million to $290 million, a 27 per cent increase, yet what they spent on exploration went down even further.

They are now asking us for more money to explore and drill. If Canada wants its energy resources developed further, we need more dollars per barrel of oil, says Imperial Oil. I say no to Imperial Oil. In view of the record of what they have done, or perhaps what they have failed to do, in the last two years they have lost any right to expect or to ask for a further increase in the price of oil for their own benefit. This is especially so when they can give no assurance that they will spend any such increase on research and exploration in Canada, let alone in Alberta and Saskatchewan.

If the minister does not want to use Petro-Can or SaskOil, or some other Crown corporation, but insists on letting the multinationals have a piece of the action, why does he not put more teeth in his legislation and give the oil companies two choices in regard to exploration and development—that this is either compulsory or that they have to do it? If he would put that provision in the legislation he would get even stronger support for the bill from our party.

I do not question the minister's concern. He is responsible for the whole area of energy supply in Canada and I know he is making a conscientious effort to bring in legislation and policies to try to alleviate this concern and provide more protection for the country in years ahead. But we are of the view that the minister is only going part of the way, that these half measures will not in fact accomplish the results that he and all of us want. They will not accomplish those results unless he opts to strengthen the legislation or opts for public development of future oil and gas reserves.

Saskatchewan would like to do this itself in regard to the oil fields that we know we have. This would eliminate an expensive form of development. We even have a small corner of the tar sands in Saskatchewan up in the Cold Lake area. But we have much more research and development to do in the handling of heavy crudes. We could refine our own heavy crude in Saskatchewan, but we are up to our eyeballs in asphalt, and what do we do with the asphalt? One kind westerner suggested that we should pave over Toronto and fill it full of wheat.

Saskatchewan would like to spend its oil profits on doing these things, but the Minister of Finance says that the deal is off for now. Two thirds of the money is put into the capital fund and will be counted against Saskatchewan for equalization purposes. This is going to cost Saskatchewan another $30 million to $40 million in equalization payments. We gave up $400 million by agreeing not to demand or try to get the world price, and I say $400 million is a fair contribution. Alberta has contributed three or four times that amount.

I also have the feeling that, even though the minister is a free enterpriser, his biggest problem is Alberta and the premier thereof. An agreement would have been much more readily reached had the federal government and the provinces been reasonably certain that there would not have been a lot of windfall money land in the tills of the big seven multinationals. The government knows that there is no way that the people of Canada will stand for that nonsense any more.

If my hon. friends of the Conservative party of Ontario could persuade their Conservative party friends of Alberta to do something more in a public way in regard to the future development of energy resources, and to make sure there would not be some more windfall rake-off, much of which would leave this country, then the chances of reaching an agreement between the federal government and the provinces would be much enhanced.

I suspect that the problems of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources are much less with Premier Blakeney. It may well be that in his heart of hearts he would have liked to agree with the premier's proposal, lock, stock and barrel. He did say that there was a lot to be said for the proposal, that it was worthy of serious consideration, but that he could not buy the whole package. I suspect this is because of the free enterprise syndrome that still exists in the cabinet, and in some members of his party and of the Conservative party.

The one concrete proposal that made sure that the Canadian people would be given some assurance of energy supply, particularly of oil and gas, in decades ahead came from a producing province that is still looked upon as a have not province, and which has also led the way in forgoing revenue to which it was entitled. Even if I had a nightmare I would have a great deal of difficulty visualizing the province of Ontario willingly giving up as much as Alberta has Mr. Chairman. If the issue here were nickel, or iron ore, or steel, I can just see the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton rushing into this House of Commons and saying: "We want to forgo $1.5 billion a year on this development for the benefit of Canada". I would really like to see him do that. I did not hear anyone from this part of the country suggest, when the western provinces willingly went along with paying higher prices themselves, that they should pay an economic price.

This brings me to another point. We have two prices for oil and two prices for wheat. I find that very strange. I wish that someone from Ontario, Quebec or the Atlantic provinces would suggest two prices for forest products, or fertilizer, or farm machinery, or steel, or asbestos, or nickel. But, no, I hear no such suggestion. Why two prices just for oil and wheat?

My hon. friends to my right often talk of western alienation. They talk of it in different terms and for different reasons than I. They express the attitude of people who think it is their turn to get their hand in the till. They want to take the money and to hell with the rest of the country. We have put up with that sort of nonsense for too long as it is.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources might remind his colleague, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, about how much he would be able to lower the price of housing if there were a two price system for forest and lumber products. People pay hundreds of dollars per thousand feet of lumber to build a home. This has nothing to do with cost of production; this is the price of lumber on the international market. Builders and home buyers are forced to pay the international price, which is exorbitant and outrageous. But I hear no one talking about a two price system for forest products. I ask, why not?

I say that Saskatchewan has made its contribution. It has more than shown its willingness to co-operate and to reach agreement. Having reached agreement, the agreement was then thrown out the window. In carrying on his bilateral discussions I ask the minister to reassure the people of Saskatchewan in particular—and I wish the minister lots of luck when dealing with the government of Alberta—that anything agreed to from here on in will be lived up to. Forget all this nonsense about taxing not only oil companies' profits but oil companies' expenses; even I as a socialist find that difficult to live with. I am not known to have a great deal of love for multinational oil companies, but no matter what kind they are and how they operate you should still treat them fairly.

To continue to perpetuate or support the legislation which taxes not only their profits but their expenses, namely, the royalties they pay to the provinces, has to be an example of bad faith. If the minister would like more readiness to agree on the part of the provinces he should persuade the Minister of Finance to get rid of the prohibition on deductibility of royalties as an expense. That must go along with any increase in oil prices. That is a must. One must assume that the deductibility of royalties from the expenses of the oil companies for tax purposes will be allowed if that money is to be available for exploration and development in respect of oil, gas, and other energy resources in this country.

Let me close by repeating a statement by the Premier of Saskatchewan at the first ministers' conference. I know the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources heard it, but I wish to refresh his memory. It is time for Canada and the provinces on behalf of their people to take charge of the development and exploration in respect of energy resources, oil, gas, hydro-electricity and so on.

We can no longer depend on others. If ever we could depend on them we certainly cannot now. We can no longer continue our supine acquiescence to the board rooms of the multinational corporations in Houston, Chicago or New York. When will we stand on our own feet? We have the people, the money, the technology and the resources. Why do we not do it? We can. It will take some will and imagination. It will excite the imagination of the Canadian people. It will be for the benefit of all the people in the country, and there will not be any fast-buck artists running around with 19th century ideologies making all the fast bucks they can, and then running. We can put an end to that.

The minister has a golden opportunity to make these moves. He, in concert with three or four provinces, whether they are of the same or opposite political stripe, can get together now and really have wells drilled around this country to an extent that would make it look like a Swiss cheese. We could be engaged in development that would make 1947 look like a bare beginning. We have the opportunity, and it is up to the minister and the government to seize that opportunity.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Chairman, I think it must be obvious to the House that the time has come when we must face reality in respect of this bill. The position of Her Majesty's Official Opposition has been made abundantly clear, namely, that we believe the government needs some form of a bill in order to carry out the agreement of March 27, 1974, in connection with achieving one price across Canada.

We believe this bill is necessary to provide compensation for those parts of Canada which must buy their oil offshore. However, on the bringing in of such legislation we have put forward, over and over again, the proposition that it should be a bill that will stand the test of the constitution and of the courts of this land. This bill will not stand the test of the courts of this land. The evidence to this effect is preponderant. Therefore we will be proposing a dozen amendments in an effort to improve this bill and to save it from the courts if it should be challenged.

The second point I wish to make is that no bill passed by this parliament in the interests of democracy, as we understand it, should give perpetual power to a government to the extent this bill gives power to the government. So our amendments will be moved in an effort to give assurance to the people that, even though we want to give the government the power to carry out the decisions of this parliament in relation to doing these things to which all parties agree, we do not want to destroy the type of constitution and rule of law we have.

I said yesterday that no consensus will be arrived at under the early clauses of this bill on the question of the price of oil, natural gas, or synthetic oil until the irrational and asinine budget of May and November is departed from. The retreat of Napoleon Bonaparte from Moscow will be nothing compared to the retreat the Minister of Finance will have to make on this silly budget of 1974. I notice that the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre has left the House. I know he is a serious student of Hansard and will read my remarks tomorrow.

In my remarks yesterday I put into layman's language the legal decisions dealing with the question of who owns these resources. I put into layman's language the decision of the courts of this land on the question of who can do what to whom with regard to taxes. All the jurisprudence says that under the constitution these resources belong to the provinces, and that the only level of government that has the right to tax these resources 100 per cent and take it all legally are the provincial governments of this country. Therefore, to translate this into layman's language, I said that the only governments that have the legal right to steal everything, whether they be civil rights, property rights or resource rights, are the provincial governments. I do not think any person can quarrel with this. That is the reason I referred to this as a silly budget that was passed in this House last November. It was an attempt to get the federal government in the same field where it would have the right to steal some of the resources belonging to the provinces.

We know that the Minister of Finance will have to retreat in respect of his budget and make some sort of arrangement with the provinces, and say that they will have the power to make these various royalties and taxes deductible up to a certain amount because, with everybody stealing so much, there will not be enough to keep things going.

I was amused by the remarks of the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre because he must have known that some of us remember the oil play we had in Saskatchewan around 1950. The premier of the province at that time wrote to all the oil companies asking them to come to Saskatchewan. He said that so long as he was premier they would not be taken over.

You never saw such a free enterpriser as the premier of Saskatchewan in 1950. Now he can sit here and smile as one of the newcomers in the House speaks about what a great socialist he is. All I can say to the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre is that he should make that speech to the steel workers of Hamilton. I will not deal with past records, although we know the provincial government of Alberta, ever since 1946, and the provincial government of Saskatchewan, the provincial government of Manitoba and the provincial government of British Columbia tried Canadian enterprise and turned over their resources of oil and gas completely to the international oil companies. They did that with amended types of regulations which they borrowed completely, word for word, from United States regulations.

The history of the betrayal by provincial governments of the people of those provinces is not what we are discussing here tonight. What we are discussing is what kind of government we are going to have in this country; will it be one that is a strong central government and yet allows the provinces a certain place in the spectrum? This is the position of Her Majesty's Official Opposition and, I suggest, should be the position of every party in the House. The federal system we have is a unique central system of government. The federal system will not work if the central government, in the name of being efficient or strong, imposes on the rights and property of the provinces, and by provinces I mean the people of the provinces.

We have made our case as well as we know how. What we have to do now is to take this legislation step by step and do our level best to convince the government of the correctness of our approach. We cannot convince the NDP because they honestly and sincerely believe that the provinces should have no power and that they should become like municipalities. They want all the power at the centre. That is their philosophy, and they have a right to it. The Parti Quebecois has the right to call for separatism, as much as they have to call for all power to be at the centre. It is very clear how the NDP will stand, but it must be equally clear how we stand on our side of the House, and every person in the House must answer to the people of Canada.

I should like to remind the minister that there was a man who sat on his side of the House during the war and who received from the parliament in the crisis of those days the War Measures Act, and the War Supplies Act, which gave him all the powers that he needed to fight the war of 1939-1945. After the war was over, the War Measures Act was revoked.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Until 1970.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): But he kept the other act, and it was not until 1955 when he came to the well once too often, and asked parliament for the right to continue using the special powers under the War Supplies Act at a time when the war had been over for ten years, that the opposition of the day fought to take away that power. The government heeded that advice and sent Mr. Howe on a holiday. The next year its ministers forgot themselves again and tried to impose something on this country in the pipeline debate. Canadians knew what the issue was and in 1957 threw out the government which had been in power for 22 years.

The same thing will happen to this government. Canadians are very sensitive to an attempt by a government to take too much power into its hands. We are willing to give this power to the government in the case of an emergency and for a certain length of time, but every so often this legislation should be brought back to the House to see whether we will need it, because the day will come when the oil will be pouring out of the wells off the coast of Nova Scotia and off the coast of Labrador.

The day will come when oil will be pouring out in our northern frontier areas, from secondary and tertiary recovery in the prairies, and when other forms of energy will be pouring through the pipelines and over the hydro system, and this whole question of emergency will then disappear. This bill should not become an act which forever hangs like a weight around the necks of Canadians.

Our amendments to the bill, which we will put forward tomorrow and as the debate rolls on, will all be aimed at trying to keep this bill within the walls of the constitutional framework that has protected and guided this country for over 100 years. We will try to persuade the government to look hard at some of these proposals which deal with some of the evils of the legislation which have not yet been mentioned in this debate, and which could more properly be dealt with when consideration is given to the clauses of the bill as they come up for debate.

I should like to suggest that we have said all we can say many times over, and it is up to the government now to make the decisions that have to be made, whether or not we produce a good bill. I think that is the issue before us tonight.

I would like to close now to allow us some time, if the House is willing to pass clause 2, and to get on with the business of passing the bill.

The Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 3—Binding on Her Majesty.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, we have an amendment to clause 3. In view of the lateness of the hour and the interesting and excellent debate we have had, perhaps your Honour might see fit to call it ten o'clock.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Perhaps we could hear the amendment first.

Mr. Baldwin: My colleague, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain, might produce his amendment so the minister can reflect on it for the next two days.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Before the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain does that, may I point out that he has mentioned that members of the official opposition have some 18 amendments. I think it would be helpful, before we meet again, if we could get copies of them. The government has already given us copies of its amendments, and if we could get copies of the hon. members' amendments, not necessarily now but sometime tomorrow or before the bill comes up again, I think we will be able to concentrate more on the clauses and thus avoid general discussion.

Mr. Baldwin: It is a very good idea, and we will attempt to do that. We have been under the mistaken impression that the minister would see the light of reason and accept them, but that not being the case we will try to provide copies as soon as we can.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Chairman, may I point out that I did submit copies of this amendment to the House last year. I will be glad to do it again in case they have been lost.

The Chairman: It being ten o'clock, it is my duty to rise, report progress, and request leave to consider the bill again at the next sitting of the House. Hon. members by then will have received advance copies of the amendment which can be considered at the next sitting.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, before you call the adjournment motion, I wonder if the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council, or some cabinet minister of equal authority, would indicate what the business is for tomorrow.

Of course my authority is not equivalent, but I was advised through the usual channels that we will be proceeding with the bill on the Northern Canada Power Commission, Bill C-30, and Bill C-19. Unless I hear to the contrary, I will assume that that will be the business for tomorrow.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I have the same information, so it must be correct.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

HEALTH—POSSIBILITY OF PROVINCES SHARING COST OF CHRONIC CARE HOSPITALS

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, on January 28 I asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) if he was considering sharing the cost of programs with the provinces which are now left out and which the provinces carry on their own, and which are an integral part of the health care cost field. I have always felt that the minister was a very humane person with a very sympathetic understanding of the health care field. This has prompted me to urge him further to enter those fields of health care in which the federal government is not now participating.

The provinces are finding it increasingly difficult to meet those costs, and whether one is actively sick or chronically ill, care is still necessary. In the last meeting with the provinces the minister agreed to discuss and accept participation in lower cost areas if restraint could be practised in higher cost areas. I hope that this will be arranged.

It is true that active treatment costs might be cut by sending a patient to convalescent care a day or two sooner, or by sending him to his home and providing someone to give the necessary care. How do you remedy this situation and arrange for that further care outside active treatment for these patients? Let us be quite honest about this at the start when there is talk about active treatment beds and increasing costs.

[The Chairman.]

Indeed, if the active treatment beds were not occupied, it would mean there would be no doctor or nursing case required. But the cost would go down by only 20 per cent on hospital care. It follows then that it is a losing proposition to the taxpayer to have a hospital bed empty because the hospital staff and administration and upkeep costs continue. Thus the maximum use will likely be made of every bed in an active treatment hospital.

When a patient is ready to be transferred to chronic care or convalescent care, there is often no bed to which the patient can go. If the patient is sent home, there is often no one or no system to provide the proper care or attention required. Probably only a minimal amount of nursing care is required, but it is required around the clock. This should be a shared cost.

While home care at present does help, it does not meet the necessary requirements in the patient's own home. An eight hour shift does not meet the patient's needs for 24 hours. Yet it would be much cheaper to provide that care than to keep the patient in an active treatment bed in hospital.

When the patient is ready to go to a chronic care nursing home where the bed costs are approximately half that of an active treatment bed, we find that he or she has to spend weeks waiting for a bed in a chronic care nursing home. Over and over again I have heard that there are many chronic care beds in my constituency, but I have found that for periods of ten days or longer a patient often cannot get into one of these institutions.

In a chronic care nursing home the cost is $18.50 per day—this was increased from $17 on April 1, 1975—which leaves the patient paying $5.90 per day unless he is under the age of 16 years. This is a saving, on the average, of approximately $60 plus per day when compared with an active treatment bed, or $20 per day in a chronic care bed in hospital.

Nursing homes have the same economic pressures and labour costs as do hospitals, yet the government allows nursing care from one and a half to two and a half hours, and the patient load is eight to ten per attendant. For a patient who is chronically ill, this is probably more than an attendant can look after properly.

It would seem to me that we need to fund nursing homes or give incentives to allow them to make more beds available. This would relieve the situation and cut the costs of chronic care units by at least 50 per cent, and of transfer from an active treatment bed to a chronic care bed from around $80 to $18.50 per day. Obviously the place where the federal government can share cost to the greatest advantage and get the best value for its tax dollar is the nursing home.

I bring this to the attention of the minister in the hope that rising health costs will be met by efficiency in treatment and, with an aging population which is so often found in the nursing home, to carry it further by stating that all residential homes should carry 5 per cent of their beds as chronic care beds so that old people may be treated there for minor illnesses. This would not only be a financial saving but would be humane for the older person.

To summarize, Mr. Speaker, nursing care homes should be a shared health care cost. Home care costs, where feasible, should be a shared health care cost around the clock where necessary until the patient has a reasonable recovery time. All homes for the elderly should have sick bay units where those not needing full time hospitalization, or having minor illnesses, could be treated at the home as a shared health cost thus avoiding the trauma and expense of moving, and the expense of an active treatment bed.

The health resources program should establish a chair of geriatric medicine in all medical schools. This should be a demand program to meet the needs of the rapidly increasing elderly population with diseases peculiar to their age group. We have today only 26 or 27 geriatricians in the whole of Canada. This is a grossly neglected area when you think that at the other end of the scale there are around 1,000 pediatricians.

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the federal government is well aware of the matter raised by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard). In fact discussions began on this matter four years ago at the health ministers' conference held in November, 1970, at which time support was expressed for a re-examination of existing arrangements for health financing with the aim of developing an alternative to them. The stated objective was to encourage a rational, efficient and flexible reorganization of the health delivery system to increase effectiveness and reduce waste of costly resources.

Following nearly two and a half years of discussions and negotiation, the formal federal offer on health financing was placed before provincial governments at the federal-provincial conference of finance and health ministers in May, 1973, and was considered further at the first ministers' conference on May 25, 1973. The offer included a formula for grant payments related to GNP growth and a $640 million trust fund; it was designed to provide a reasonable rate of growth in the basic federal payments, a degree of risk-sharing, flexibility for the provinces to determine their own priorities, and assistance in the development of more effective and efficient systems of health delivery.

An important condition attached to the offer was that existing national standards of comprehensiveness, accessibility, universality and portability were to be retained with respect to the basic hospital and medical services. The federal offer also made it clear that the sharing of costs of major new health programs, such as denticare or pharmacare, would be a subject of separate discussion, if and when a consensus was developed by the provinces.

Following this conference, the provincial premiers met in August, 1973, and requested their ministers of health to develop a common provincial response to the federal proposal. It was more than a year later, at a meeting last September 25, that they produced a resolution which rejected the federal offer and outlined their position on new health financing arrangements. Of considerable significance in this resolution was the statement by the provinces that they were prepared to negotiate changes in cost-sharing of high-cost services in exchange for federal sharing in programs not now supported.

At the conference of ministers of health in January of this year the minister advised the provincial ministers that the federal offer of a per capita grant had now been withdrawn. There followed a discussion of various proposals, including a specific proposal put forward by the government of Quebec. In the light of the discussion the minister then suggested a new approach based on the expressed willingness of the provinces to restrain the growth of high cost services in return for federal sharing in other areas not now supported. This proposal involves a broader interpretation of existing legislation which could permit additional cost-sharing.

The ministers agreed with the proposed approach and directed their deputy ministers to undertake immediately negotiations aimed at improving cost effectiveness and comprehensiveness of health care delivery systems, within the context of present legislative authority. The objective will be improvement in health care planning and development through a more flexible approach to financing, with continued emphasis on provincial priorities. The negotiations will entail identification of measures to restrain the growth of high cost services that provinces would be prepared to adopt in order to permit extension of federal sharing to equally effective but lower cost alternatives. Deputy ministers were asked to submit their recommendations no later than September 15 of this year.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON PERMITTING ENTRY OF VALENTYN MOROZ AND FAMILY AS LANDED IMMIGRANTS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, on February 13 I attempted to move the following motion:

> That the Prime Minister and the government of Canada convey to the government of the USSR the feeling of the people of Canada that they are willing to permit entry into Canada of Valentyn Moroz and his family as landed immigrants.

I did not get the unanimous consent that is required to debate the motion. During the question period I therefore asked the minister whether he would give consideration to this proposal. The minister replied that he would examine the question and give it consideration.

● (2210)

I then asked the minister if he would arrange for representatives of the Canadian government in the Soviet Union to ascertain the state of health of Valentyn Moroz. I did this because of information which has come to light that Moroz, while in prison, has been beaten and stabbed, that he is now in poor health and in the middle of a hunger strike. The minister suggested he would not do as I asked. He said, as recorded on page 3181 of Hansard for February 13, 1975:

> ... I have not agreed to such a move as in the circumstances I think it would very likely be counterproductive.

Valentyn Moroz was born in the Ukraine, which is part of the Soviet Socialist Republic. He attended the University of Lviv, where he majored in history. After graduation he taught history and geography. In 1965, he was arrested, charged with anti-Soviet propaganda and agitation, and sentenced to four years of hard labour.

In 1970, he was again arrested, tried, and sentenced to a long prison term. While in prison he has been beaten, stabbed, and, as I say, he is now in the midst of a hunger strike.

In November, 1972, Amnesty International, known for its non-partisan, non-political work on behalf of prisoners in every country who are being persecuted by a government, reported that Moroz had been gravely wounded by some criminal inmates in the prison in which he was incarcerated. After that he was transported to a prison hospital in Kiev.

In May, 1974, many of our most prominent Canadian authors and academics made an appeal on behalf of Valentyn Moroz in the Soviet Union. Among their numbers are included Pierre Berton, June Callwood, Professor Crowe of York University, Professor Eayrs of the University of Toronto, Northrop Frye, of that same university, Professor Gerald LeDain, who headed the commission study on drugs on behalf of the Government of Canada, Peyton Lyon, a professor at Carleton University, and many others. They all addressed an open appeal to the authorities of the Soviet Union.

As I say, since his imprisonment Moroz has been beaten, stabbed and confined with the criminally insane. Reports since January, 1974, indicate that he is confined to an isolation cell, where he is being pressured to recant. He is in extremely poor physical and mental condition, and concerned circles in the Soviet Union have expressed fears that he may not survive present treatment. The recently expelled dissident, Pavel Litvinov, has stated that Moroz will begin a hunger strike until death on the fourth anniversary of his arrest if his conditions are not changed.

People have appealed to the Soviet authorities to permit Moroz to leave prison. The minister said, when replying to my question, that my proposal would be counterproductive. That opinion might have been valid during the years when Stalin ruled Soviet Russia. But the Soviets have changed. They react to international public opinion. Solzhenitsyn was expelled, not imprisoned. Rostropovich was relieved of his passport after he left Russia, as was Medved. Pavel Litvinov, grandson of Maxim Litvinov, was permitted to leave. Thousands of Soviet Jews have been permitted to leave. Most have gone to Israel, but many are in Canada.

I make two proposals. First, I suggest that the government should tell the Soviet authorities that if Moroz's views are such that he cannot be permitted to live in freedom in that country, this country would welcome him and his family. Canada has already become known to hundreds of thousands of Ukranians. Second, the government should ask Soviet authorities to permit representatives of this country to visit Moroz in prison so that those who are concerned about his well-being, his health, can be assured that his health has not been broken, as he and his family allege, but that, indeed, he is well physically, mentally and emotionally, as Soviet authorities claim. I urge the government to act along the lines I suggested.

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, Canadians have actively taken up the cause of Mr. Moroz with a view to improving his living conditions in prison and ensuring that his state of health is good. They have also called for his release from prison and have supported the idea of his emigration from the Soviet Union, possibly even to Canada, although we have no evidence that Mr. Moroz himself desires this.

The government has taken a keen interest in questions relating to human rights wherever they arise. That said, however, the government is faced with a number of considerations that must be taken into account in deciding what role it might be able to play. As the representative of the people of Canada, it is turned to by Canadians to make representations for them to the Soviet authorities on Mr. Moroz's behalf. On the other hand, its possibilities for action on behalf of the nationals of other countries are limited by international considerations. The Canadian government respects the right of other governments to run the internal affairs of their countries, just as it expects other governments to respect its right to do so. This is a fundamental principle of international law and diplomatic relations among nations.

It is, of course, possible for the Canadian government to express the concern of its citizens over violations of human rights, and it has done so frequently. However, if Canada is to have any influence on the course of events in the Soviet Union, or anywhere else, we have to take a hard look at the effect that acting on the various possibilities open to us would have. If our voice is to be listened to on such matters, it will be only if the Soviet government respects our intentions and motives.

A slamming of the door is what would happen if the Government of Canada went beyond the bounds of what is regarded as acceptable in dealings between nations. When I see that, as a result of the quality of the relations that we and others have developed with the USSR, several thousand more Jews have emigrated from there to Israel, and several hundred more Soviet citizens have been able to join their families in Canada and elsewhere, I am anxious that there should be no slamming of doors.

To return to the specific question of Mr. Moroz, the Canadian government and Canadian officials have raised this case with the Soviet authorities a number of times in light of the humanitarian considerations involved and as a reflection of the concern of Canadians. As far back as 1971 the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) took the opportunity of Soviet Premier Kosygin's visit to Ottawa to speak to him about this case. In September the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) spoke to Foreign Minister Gromyko in New York in view of the reports of Mr. Moroz's deteriorating health. He assured him then that Mr. Moroz's health was satisfactory in all respects. Later reports that came to our attention on this subject were disquieting and further inquiries were made of the Soviet Ambassador in November. The ambassador assured us that the information received from Mr. Gromyko remained valid.

There have been suggestions that the government should seek his release from prison, or otherwise take a position on the merits of his case. Quite apart from the impropriety of making such approaches to the Soviet government on behalf of a non-Canadian, we believe that adopting such a course would require information on the case to which the Canadian government does not have access, nor any claim to access. We simply do not have a right to call for information on which to base a judgment of the merits of such cases.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES CONCERNING TRANSPORTATION OF ALASKAN OIL ACROSS CANADA

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, as some hon. members know, as long ago as 1971 the government of the day under the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made a definite decision to discourage any oil pipeline from Alaska southerly along the Mackenzie valley and then southerly across Canada to the United States. This, of course, caused a great deal of debate, especially with regard to the fears raised by those in British Columbia who understandably were and still are concerned with the problems posed by tankers bringing Alaskan oil down the west coast of British Columbia through the narrow Straits of Juan de Fuca to refineries in the State of Washington. That concern, as I said, still exists.

In October of 1974, the then U.S. ambassador-at-large, William Eberle, was in Canada for several days. He made comments which clearly indicated that the United States was looking to the development of sources of oil for petroleum in the State of Alaska other than in the Prudhoe Bay area.

In the remarks the minister made it became obvious that it might very well be United States policy to ship that Alaskan oil out by means of a cross-Canada oil line down the Mackenzie to the continental United States. On October 10, 1974, I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) whether he knew that discussions had taken place between United States officials and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) concerning this particular proposal.

I also asked whether it was Canada's intention to use the desire of the United States to establish an oil pipe line across Canada as a lever in negotiations to persuade the Americans to take the tankers out of the Strait of Juan de Fuca. The Secretary of State was non-commital in his answer, but he did not deny that such discussions had taken place, and recently there has been increasing speculation that American policy is looking to a trans-Canada pipe line route.

Today, my colleague, the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil), was able to put a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on this very point. The minister answered by saying that no specific proposal had been put forward by the United States in respect to an oil pipe line but that extensive discussions had taken place between Canadian and United States officials with respect to a pipe line treaty which would govern the construction of any pipe line, either in Canada or the United States.

My question is specific, and in all the circumstances it requires a clear answer. Have any discussions gone on, or are any discussions going on, between Canada and the United States relating to an oil pipe line from Alaska through the Mackenzie Valley, and south from Canada to the United States? If not, have the Americans asked for any such discussions to take place, and what has been the Canadian response? Further, I would ask whether it is within the knowledge of the Canadian government that it is United States policy to negotiate with Canada with respect to arrangements which would enable Alaskan oil to be carried by oil pipe line across Canada to the United States?

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the government position of strong opposition to the movement of oil in large tankers into the Puget Sound area has long been made clear. This position was made known to the United States administration at an early stage, and the Canadian government proposed that Canada and the United States explore together the possibility of alternate supply routes for the Pacific Northwest area of the United States. The United States agreed, and this course of action has been actively pursued, notably at meetings in Ottawa and Washington in August, 1974 and February, 1975.

In addition we are discussing with the United States such matters as vessel traffic management, environmental control, contingency planning and liability arrangements with a view to minimizing the possibility of oil spills and providing for clean-ups should they occur. These arrangements will have considerable value in themselves whether or not increased tanker traffic develops in these waters.

In the short term, a pipe line through Canada to carry Alaskan oil to market would not be feasible as an alternative to the Alyeska line.

In the longer term it is conceivable that sufficient oil might be available in the Arctic to justify a second pipe line which could transport both Canadian and Alaskan arctic oil. However, the necessary reserves have not been discovered. In addition, a number of factors would be involved in a decision to build such a pipe line. Having regard to the complexity of this question it would be premature to make any concrete assessment of this possibility at the present stage.

The hon. member asked me two specific questions this evening, one of which I do not think I have dealt with, but I will check into it and see that he gets the information.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.28 p.m.

AGRICULTURE

EFFECT OF LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE ON FEED GRAIN SUPPLIES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture.

In view of increasing difficulties for Quebec producers, and since I have received this morning a telegram from the Poultry Producers Federation which, considering those difficulties, asks for concrete and immediate action from the government since reserves will be depleted during the next 24 hours, what is the present situation in that field in the province of Quebec, and has the government taken a decision to bring things back to normal in Quebec ports?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as we said yesterday, grain is moving. Many things are being said about the shortages of grain and when it will run out. I was expecting an updated report, which I had expected to receive at noon. The report I received this morning was that there was grain still moving from Quebec City and from Prescott by both truck and rail car into the areas most in need. We are watching it very closely and having constant meetings and discussions with the people concerned and doing everything humanly possible under the circumstances to make sure that there is no loss of livestock or poultry.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

Since the minister said this week that the producers could get supplies in Montreal harbour, thus inviting Quebec City and Trois-Rivières producers to get their supplies in Montreal, and since the grain elevators are completely empty in Quebec City and Trois-Rivières, where there is no possible access for producers, is the minister prepared to take emergency measures, which, I believe, would meet the needs of the producers?

[English]

Mr. Whelan: The latest report I received was at nine o'clock this morning, but the elevators were loading trucks with no interference at Quebec City. Several boat loads are on the way to mills in the area. Feed mills in Quebec City are back to normal operation since grain is available in the Quebec City terminals. All of these mills have had their grain trucked from Montreal and other sources last week and are doing the same thing this week to make sure supplies are adequate. In Montreal, there were only a few trucks able to move through the area this morning. I believe there were four trucks, which amounts to nothing, in view of the need, I realize that, but they are moving steadily from Prescott elevators, and that will account for approximately a million bushels.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a last supplementary.

The minister having suggested supplies may be available in Montreal, is he aware that producers in Trois-Rivières who go to Montreal for instance, cannot get the supplies they need since the Montreal and Quebec City ports are first meeting the demand of their customers, thus depriving the Trois-Rivières area of sufficient supply?

[English]

Mr. Whelan: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are aware of that, and we are trying to make sure that car loadings from other sources in central Ontario or Thunder Bay, are moved into that area. I understand that there is some movement into that area at the present time, but I do not know how great it is. I had hoped to have an up-to-date report in that regard as of one o'clock but I do not as yet have that report.

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): The minister has just said that he has no up-to-date report on whether the feed grains are moving in from areas other than Quebec City, Montreal or Trois-Rivières. The information we have this morning is that the farm producers in a substantial part of the province of Quebec will be unable to obtain the grain they need in the ensuing several days. This grain is needed to feed their poultry and livestock. Can the government assure us today that within the next few days there will not be a shortage resulting in the farmers having to kill or slaughter their livestock prematurely, against marketing conditions and against their normal plans? Surely, the answers the minister has given are only hopes—

Mr. Speaker: Order please.

Mr. Fraser: We need answers to the situation.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I am basing this on the fact that if there are no pickets at the elevators, and if there is an injunction that the pickets acknowledge and obey, for instance, at the port of Montreal, grain could be moving in an abundant supply by later this day. I say that because there is as yet no evidence that there is any livestock or poultry dying or starving as a result of this. Some may have to be cut back in the rations they are giving their livestock. I heard the radio reports on that this morning, but we are in constant contact with the people using the grain and those who truck it, and I am saying that it has not reached that disastrous stage at this time. As long as the grain continues to move and the boats continue on their way to the area to supply them with grain to replenish the elevators being used, we foresee no great disaster. But if it does appear to be otherwise, I can assure the House that we will take drastic action.

Mr. Fraser: We know that there will be no grain coming into Quebec City until at least Saturday. We know they cannot get the grain out of Trois-Rivières. The minister says that the situation is being watched day by day. The fact is that Quebec producers may have to begin slaughtering their livestock and their poultry because they do not have grain. Can the minister advise us whether in fact the situation is under control or whether he only hopes it is going to be under control? What certainty can the government give us right now that the problem is under control because all the evidence is that it is not.

● (1410)

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, this is a free society—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, they have certain rights that we have to acknowledge and other people have certain rights that they have to acknowledge. The elevators in Quebec do not have anyone on strike and the elevators in Montreal do not have anyone on strike. Those picketers are from the longshoremen who are picketing the elevators. They do not work there as far as that goes. Anyone who tells me there is not going to be grain in Quebec knows more about it than I do—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: —because my report says that grain is moving out of the Quebec elevators. My report says freighters are moving toward the elevators. My report says freighters are moving toward the elevators and they will be unloading and replenishing. There are three freighters on their way now. We do not know what elevators they will be going into but we know that the CNR and the CPR are pooling their resources. We know people are sharing the grain stocks they have. If anyone can show me this kind of thing that is being suggested he should do so because we have no evidence of severe loss or shortage of feed that would cause loss of livestock or poultry.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: A final supplementary, the hon. member for Vancouver South.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. minister this specific question. Can he assure us that within the ensuing few days or a week there is not going to be a shortage of grain which will require Quebec producers to slaughter their poultry and livestock? If he cannot give us that assurance I can assure you that the Canadian public will wonder why these things are coming to pass in the absence of some action—

[Mr. Whelan.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the minister I wish to question is not here yet. Perhaps you would see one of my colleagues.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

MINISTER'S PROPOSED MEETINGS ON TRANSPORTATION—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF POLICY

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board in view of the statement in this morning's press that he intends to hold a series of meetings in 11 centres in western Canada, as he says:

> ... for farmers, to clearly understand the precise nature of federal policies on transportation matters.

May I ask the minister if he would be good enough to announce those policies in this House before he leaves for that junket since we are unable to get them from the Minister of Transport?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the policies in question are in relation to the grain handling system and to the relevant part of the transportation system. They are policies which have been clearly indicated prior to now. The particular function of these meetings is, rather, to give accurate information to farmers compared to the rather inaccurate information which is given by the friends of the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre.

PROPRIETY OF MINISTER DEALING WITH TRANSPORT RATHER THAN MINISTER OF TRANSPORT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): A supplementary question for the Prime Minister. May I ask if he thinks it proper or if this is a cabinet decision that the Minister of Justice should be discussing not only grain handling but rail line abandonment and freight rates rather than the Minister of Transport fulfilling that responsibility, whether in western Canada or anywhere else?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I can assure the hon. member that everything is under control, Mr. Speaker.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

POSSIBILITY OF AMENDMENTS BEING INTRODUCED BEFORE JULY

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I put my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

In the last throne speech, it was mentioned that amendments would be brought to the Unemployment Insurance Act. In view of the bad service given to the public in northwestern Quebec and by several other unemployment offices in Canada, could the minister say whether he intends to change the act before July 1975?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker.

POSSIBILITY OF INCREASED DEMAND ON FUND—NOTIFICATION TO MINISTER CONCERNED

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Finance. As the Finance Minister's recent no real growth projection for the Canadian economy in 1975 implies a considerably higher unemployment rate than that suffered now by Canadians, can the minister tell the House whether the Minister of Manpower and Immigration has been notified that he should expect a much greater drain of Unemployment Insurance Commission funds than would have been expected prior to the minister's new projections?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the projections for unemployment insurance benefit requirements are formulated basically by analysts of the Unemployment Insurance Commission and, instead of the government informing them what the projections are to be, it is the other way around.

POSSIBLE INADEQUACY OF ITEM IN MAIN ESTIMATES TO MEET INCREASE IN BENEFIT PAYMENTS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration who is responsible for the Unemployment Insurance Commission. Assuming that the minister is aware that even higher unemployment rates are to be expected in 1975 and that benefit payments are already up 27 per cent over those made in a comparable period last year, is the minister prepared to concede that the $864 million item in the main estimates for the government's contribution to the unemployment insurance account will be totally inadequate to cover the cash drain resulting from larger benefit pay-outs.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, far too many variables are involved to permit me to make a precise forecast and confirm the response the hon. member desires from me.

COMPUTER TRAP TO CATCH THOSE RECEIVING BENEFITS WHO ARE INELIGIBLE—SUGGESTED CONTINUANCE OF OPERATION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration on a subject which does not involve any variables. It has been reported that a computer trap set up under a pilot scheme caught 1,000 people cheating when applying for unemployment insurance benefits. An official indicated that at least 50,000 people may be cheating.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: I heard the Minister of National Health and Welfare muttering over there. He had better stick to his old job.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister, probably, was referring to the rather extensive announcement I made on Monday, when I indicated to hon. members the desire that, to supplementaries, there should be absolutely no preamble.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, it was only four lines, hand-written. Does the minister confirm this figure and will he assure the House that he will put the pilot scheme into general operation, in order to catch the cheaters.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the commission is continuously seeking to protect the integrity of the Unemployment Insurance system. The use of computers combined with the improved record of employment process was introduced in January, 1974. The recent story which caught the hon. member's fancy—

Mr. Alexander: It is not fancy; it is fact.

Mr. Andras: —involves 1,000 people. The statistic which results from an examination of that particular location does not project the number of people involved elsewhere. I simply come back to the point that we are constantly improving our operation, in order to give better service and exercise better control.

Mr. Alexander: Where are the amendments to the act?

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO COUNTERACT DEFICIT

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: It's nice to see you back.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, it is nice to be missed. May I direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce concerning the auto pact. Bearing in mind the minister's statements to the House on Monday that a short-term solution to the auto pact trade deficit is unlikely, can the minister assure the House that his pessimism does not extend to the longer term prospects for the auto pact trade, particularly in light of predictions made by the president of the Automotive Parts Manufacturers Association to the effect that the deficit is likely to become even greater.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, that deficit will start diminishing rapidly as soon as the United States market returns to near normal conditions.

Mr. Lawrence: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Am I to understand that the minister is assuring the House that once automotive sales in the United States improve, the deficit in Canada will begin to decrease?

Mr. Gillespie: Yes, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. member would look at the figures he would see that last year Canadian export sales to the United States increased. The reason we have the deficit is that our imports increased even more. Why? Because the Canadian economy was a lot stronger than the U.S. economy.

Mr. Baldwin: That does not quite tally with what the Minister of Finance said recently.

Mr. Lawrence: Having looked at the figures and realizing that Canada has endured more deficits than surpluses under the auto pact, is the minister now prepared or when will he be prepared to tell us what longer term programs his government proposes to make so that the automotive trade will be more advantageous to Canada than it is now or has been, according to his own department's statistics?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I again remind the hon. member that it might be useful for him to review the figures on investment in Canada since the auto pact was introduced. He should look at the numbers with respect to employment increase in Canada compared with the employment increase in the United States. He will find that our performance has been considerably ahead of the United States. Notwithstanding the problems which the hon. member referred to in the parts industry market in the United States, my department has a number of programs under way aimed at trying to find new markets outside the United States for parts made by Canadian automobile parts manufacturers.

DISPARITY BETWEEN FARM AND INDUSTRIAL INCOME—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ACHIEVE EQUITY

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. As the average farm income has consistently been lower than the average industrial composite, and in view of the minister's statement in London on April 11 that "no farmer will get rich from our stabilization plans or government policies", is it government policy that this disparity should continue?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, no farmer has asked me to develop a get-rich-quick plan. They have asked for a reasonable income with any plan we provide. That is what we intend to do.

Mr. Korchinski: Are there any plans to provide equity for all Canadians and at the same time improve the economic position of the farmer, in view of the minister's statement and the fact that the farm sector gets fewer subsidy dollars than most other sectors and that tariff protection is only half that of the non-agricultural sector?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the last part of the hon. member's question, that the agricultural sector gets less tariff protection than the industrial sector, is correct. It averages about 8 per cent whereas the industrial sector averages about 16 per cent protection on imports into Canada.

Mr. Korchinski: I know what I said. I want to know what the minister is going to do.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, an awful lot depends on parliament, not just the Minister of Agriculture, as to how quickly we get the legislation passed in order that it will benefit the farmers of Canada. I might say the provinces are waiting for it, too.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

SUGGESTION FISHERMEN BE MADE ELIGIBLE FOR BENEFITS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact the government's promised income support policy for fishermen has been deferred and may be postponed indefinitely, will there be changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act to make it more applicable to fishermen because the existing act is of no use to fishermen, certainly in the Atlantic area?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, with regard to employed fishermen as contrasted to self-employed fishermen, we are examining the applicability and equitability of the act. I must confirm to the hon. member that this has to be done, and is in fact being done, in compatibility with discussions with my colleague, the Minister of State (Fisheries). When a program including the possibility of any change in unemployment insurance is decided upon, and this is not a foregone conclusion, it will be made known in the usual way.

FISHERIES

POSSIBILITY OF MAKING FISHERMEN ELIGIBLE FOR UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE IN VIEW OF DELAY IN INCOME SUPPORT PROGRAM

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): In view of the fact this has been going on for four or five years, will the Minister of State (Fisheries) undertake to discuss this matter with his colleague as soon as possible? I ask this because the government's promised income support policy program will not be implemented in the foreseeable future.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member has misrepresented what I said the other day. I said that I hope within the next couple of months to be able to present my program to my colleagues and have discussions with the fishermen's organizations. In no way am I backing down from my promise and decision that there will be some income support program for fishermen.

Mr. Carter: Will the minister assure the House and the fishermen of this country that the program referred to will be working by the conclusion of the forthcoming season, say by next fall?

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): While agreeing with the hope that it will be in place by then, I will say this: we shall not bring a program forward before we and the fishermen are convinced that it is a visible improvement in terms of the stabilization of their income as compared with what exists now.

NATIONAL CAPITAL

POSSIBLE REPLACEMENT OF NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION AND INCLUSION OF HULL IN CAPITAL REGION

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister.

In the future, the national capital area on the Quebec side, which is undoubtedly the most beautiful area in Quebec and which has been developed almost entirely by the National Capital Commission and the federal Department of Public Works, will be controlled and hampered in its development by a new agency recently set up by the provincial government, namely the "Direction générale de la Capitale nationale", under the guidance of an intergovernmental affairs official highly specialized in separatism. Given this fact, can the Prime Minister tell this House whether the Canadian government intends to abolish the National Capital Commission and perhaps to amend section 16 of the act to include Hull as an integral part of the National Capital of Canada?

Right. Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for bringing these facts to my attention. I can assure him that the government has absolutely no intention of abolishing the National Capital Commission. On the contrary, I share the view of the hon. member, namely that the commission did a tremendous job on both sides of the Ottawa River in the last few years, and we want this to continue. As to the other part of the question, Mr. Speaker, the Fullerton report will be submitted to a commission of this House. We are waiting for the reports of this commission. Personally, I trust entirely the participation of the hon. member for Hull and of the other hon. members for the area to ensure that a very good report will be brought forward in this House.

POSSIBILITY OF AMENDING SECTION 613 OF CRIMINAL CODE IN VIEW OF DECISION IN MORGENTALER CASE

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the decision by the Court of Appeal in Quebec in the Morgentaler trial imposing a decision not only as to a matter of law but also as to a matter of fact in that case and the concern expressed this week by the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert as to the effect this might have on the jury system in this country, and in view of the Prime Minister's own legal background, will the Prime Minister advise us whether the answer given in this House on April 10 by the Minister of Justice that consideration would not be given to changing section 613 of the Criminal Code under which a court of Appeal may come to the conclusion it did is government policy.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Certainly a view expressed by the Minister of Justice in an area of his jurisdiction represented government policy at the time he expressed it. The suggestion itself, to my knowledge, has not been discussed in cabinet. If there is some reason to do so I will have a talk with my colleague and see if we want to bring it up in cabinet.

POSSIBILITY OF PARDON FOR DR. MORGENTALER—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): My supplementary concerns the same case in which the Crown elected to proceed by preferred indictment thereby avoiding a preliminary hearing, the uniqueness of this case being that the Supreme Court could find no legal precedent for the actions of the Quebec Court of Appeal. Would the Prime Minister also advise whether the view expressed by the Minister of Justice on the 10th that no consideration would be given to clemency or free pardon in the Morgentaler case also expressed the view of the government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The system allowing for preferred indictment has been in the Criminal Code for a very long time. The authority it gives to provincial attorneys general is one expressed by them in conditions foreseen under the law. I would be surprised if the hon. member is correct when he says that the Supreme Court made the point he said it did about this preferred indictment. It is a provision in the Code and it is there for a good reason. I do not know of any reason to take it out of the Code. If the hon. member has particular arguments, he might want to submit them in some form to the government.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT IS ESTABLISHING A SUGAR POLICY

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the minister responsible for consumer protection.

Without prejudice to the fact that the three great sugar companies in eastern Canada are still on trial, does the minister feel that many citizens are literally taken in by the sugar cartels, which establish their prices according to the London Exchange, and therefore can he tell the House if he himself or his colleagues from the departments concerned are in the process of drafting a real sugar policy for Canada?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, in both cases.

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a supplementary.

Does the minister contemplate especially the enlargement of the Saint-Hilaire refinery as one of the concrete solutions liable to democratize the sugar market and as one of the steps likely to ensure real protection for the consumer?

Mr. Ouellet: This is also under consideration, Mr. Speaker.

INDUSTRY

TRIDENT AIRCRAFT COMPANY—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and it relates to Trident Aircraft of British Columbia which announced yesterday it will be closing down April 30. Would the minister give the Trident Aircraft company the same assistance in British Columbia that the government has given de Havilland Aircraft in Ontario and Canadair in Quebec?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, some four weeks ago in Vancouver I indicated quite clearly that the federal government was prepared to support this particular venture in a very significant way. We said we would put something like $2 million, I think it was, behind it, and we have already put close to $1 million behind it. We asked that the investors in that particular firm be prepared to put up roughly $1 million, and I think the B.C. government was prepared to come in for about $1 million, too. I think quite clearly the next move is up to the investors. I do not think they can expect governments and the taxpayers of Canada to carry the whole burden.

Mr. Reynolds: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister, is it not a fact that he has not put that offer to the company in writing?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the officers of the company are fully aware of our position, and I am not aware that that is any problem at all in this situation.

LABOUR RELATIONS

LEGISLATION DEALING WITH SINGLE SECTOR BARGAINING—POSSIBILITY OF INTRODUCTION

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. Last month when asked whether the government was considering the introduction of legislation dealing with single sector bargaining, the President of the Treasury Board scoffed at the idea while the minister himself said that he had no comment and that he was not in a position to discuss labour problems at that time. In view of the continuing labour unrest in numerous public sectors of our economy and because the Prime Minister himself has questioned the CLC about just such a proposition, can the minister now assure this House that in fact such legislation to somewhat curb the fragmentation of union power is being considered, and when is it expected to be introduced?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I cannot assure the hon. member that legislation is now being considered, simply because it is not at all certain that this is the best way to achieve this particular result. Let me advise the hon. member, however, that we have been doing a fair amount of work within the department itself to see how this tendency could be encouraged, and we have been talking with both management and labour with respect to it. Certainly, on the labour side, I have been receiving considerable encouragement toward this end.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

DATE OF CONCLUSION OF INVESTIGATION INTO SEAFARERS' INTERNATIONAL UNION

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question, which is a more or less a housekeeping one, is directed to the Solicitor General. In an answer on March 6 the minister said he was in weekly contact with the commissioner of the RCMP, and at that time the commissioner thought the SIU investigation would be concluded "in the very near future". When was the minister last in touch with the commissioner of the RCMP as to when the investigation will be concluded?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I was in touch with the commissioner of the RCMP today, but I was notified, I believe last week, that the investigation has been completed and that a report is being prepared. I will have the report shortly.

DATE OF RECEIPT OF TRANSCRIPT OF PRELIMINARY HEARING IN HAMILTON HARBOUR MATTER—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question which is more a related question than supplementary. On March 6 the minister was asked whether he has now received the eight transcripts of the preliminary hearing in the Hamilton harbour matter. Has he had a chance to review them, and what action does he intend to take?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, we have received them but I have not read all of them. I have had my officials read through them and take out the parts that were relevant, and I have examined those parts.

DATE OF DEBATE ON CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I want to put a question to the Solicitor General.

In view of the great interest in the public concerning the retention or the complete abolition of capital punishment, and following the minister's recent statements, can he tell the House whether he will submit this question again to Parliament during this session or during the next session?

[English]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, no decision has been made on that; but as the hon. member knows, we must bring the issue before this parliament because the present law, which is a temporary law, expires at the end of 1977.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker—he was here and he is gone again.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—GOVERNMENT PLANS FOR EVACUATION OF CANADIANS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs. In light of increasing Communist preparations for an assault on Saigon, would the minister care to explain his answer of yesterday to a question of mine in which he said that it was not necessary to evacuate Canadians from Saigon as they are safe for the moment, especially since I heard over the radio this morning that Canadians are being evacuated from Saigon?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on reviewing my answer yesterday what I should have said was Canadian personnel of our mission in Saigon. Arrangements are being made for the evacuation of other Canadians at their choice, preferably on commercial flights, but eventually we might have to put in a government plane.

VIET NAM—INQUIRY WHETHER CANADIAN FOOD AID GOING TO ALL AREAS OF THE COUNTRY

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to thank the minister for the clarification of his answer yesterday. I should like to inquire whether Canadian food aid to Viet Nam is going to those areas presently under the control of the Saigon government as well as to those areas controlled by the PRG?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs explained, our aid to Viet Nam is being channelled through international organizations. I would have to ascertain whether they are providing assistance in all parts of Viet Nam.

CONFERENCE OF OIL PRODUCING AND CONSUMING COUNTRIES—CANADIAN POSITION ON SUBJECTS TO BE DISCUSSED

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs respecting the preliminary conference on energy being held in Paris, which seems to be bogged down on the question whether the full conference should concern itself simply with petroleum and petroleum prices and problems, or whether it should include the consideration of other primary products. What has been the position of the government of Canada in regard to this issue, and what instructions has the government of Canada given?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the Leader of the Opposition will recall, we were not invited to the preliminary conference so our point of view was not sought.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that when I raised this question previously I was told by the responsible minister that the views of the government of Canada would be expressed through and to the international energy commission, I should like to know how the acting secretary of state reconciles the answer he had given me today with the position previously taken by the spokesman of the government in this House.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition has asked two different questions. He has asked one about the conveying of our views to a different body. I do not find that inconsistent with the fact that we are not in attendance at that preliminary conference and therefore were not asked for our views. How could we have expressed our views if we were not there?

● (1440)

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the minister was speaking doubletalk intentionally, but rather from ignorance.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: I should like to ask either the Prime Minister or the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs what is the view of the government of Canada in respect of this matter? Should the full conference, if it is held, concern itself with the prices of primary products other than petroleum?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I may have missed the first part of the first question, but my impression is that there is no more information to give than that advanced by the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs when asked whether this preliminary conference should be discussing other things than it is in fact discussing. I would tell the hon. member that we attempted to be part of that preliminary conference, and had we been part of it we perhaps would have expressed our views there, and might have had to formulate an answer to the question the hon. member is asking. We were not successful in being invited there, and therefore were not in a position to express views on that.

POSSIBILITY OF CANADA CALLING CONFERENCE OF OIL PRODUCING AND CONSUMING COUNTRIES

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, because the preparatory world conference on energy has collapsed, with very grave implications for the world in respect of the price of energy, would the Prime Minister reconsider Canada taking the lead in organizing a global conference of oil producing and consuming countries to head off a threatened price increase? I put this question in the context of Canada being both an importer and exporter of oil and because of our trusted position internationally.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we had hoped that we would have been invited to the preparatory conference, and I think it would have been helpful if we had. I want to assure the hon. gentleman that the effort to convene a conference has not yet been abandoned and discussions are going on among the countries concerned.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

SLUG OF DEAD WATER IN RED RIVER—POSSIBLE UNITED STATES RESPONSIBILITY TO INFORM CANADA OF ORIGIN—AMOUNT OF DAMAGE TO FISH

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Prime Minister is now in a position to inform the House regarding the slug of dead water moving down the Red River? Can he tell the House whether the pollution did in fact occur on the United States side of the border and if there was an obligation on the part of the United States, either under the Boundary Waters Treaty or the Fisheries Act, to inform the Canadian government on March 27 when this was first monitored in the United States?

[Mr. Sharp.]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not have the answer to that question which was asked on Monday. I am informed that the parliamentary secretary has been able to follow it through.

Mr. Len Marchand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, this particular slug of water has passed down the Red River and has dissipated into Lake Winnipeg, as I understand it. Canada has been following this problem since it began. As a matter of fact it was our department which discovered the problem first at Emerson. The whole thing has been referred to the IJC, but the cause or the source of the problem has not yet been totally identified. We have some suspicions but we really cannot identify the source until we hear further from the IJC.

Mr. Whiteway: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that on March 27 this same slug of water was monitored first in the United States sector, I am wondering if the parliamentary secretary would answer the question I put to the Prime Minister? Was there any obligation on the part of the United States government to inform Canadian sources once it did monitor this, and is the Canadian government in fact now in a position to tell us what damage in terms of fish loss occurred, and does the government intend to take legal action in respect of compensation for that loss of fish?

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I will have to check on the first part of the question. Having regard to the second part, we do know there has been some fish damage, but we do not have a complete assessment of the extent of the damage.

CHANGE IN MATERNITY BENEFITS—DATE OF IMPLEMENTATION

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration refers to a recent statement by his colleague, the Minister of the Environment, in which she said that the government has made the Unemployment Insurance Act more flexible where maternity benefits are concerned in that women will now be able to take maternity leave of 15 weeks in all in whatever way they choose, all before or all after the birth of the child. Will the minister inform the House when this legislation came into effect and when local UIC offices will be informed of the change which his colleague says will make these benefits applicable for 15 weeks either before or after the birth?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have not had the opportunity to examine my colleague's statement.

An hon. Member: It was premature.

Mr. Andras: I do not think we are interested in any of that male chauvinistic talk opposite. The amendment as described by my colleague is the intention of the government, but the precise date of its implementation into law has not been reached yet.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, is the minister aware that his colleague's statement is not in accord with the legislation regarding maternity benefits proposed in Bill C-16, and given the confusion that this has caused among the general public and the UIC offices across the country about the intent of the amendment, will the minister move toward resolving this situation by arranging with the House leader to have this bill brought forward immediately?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I will note the hon. member's representation.

ALLEGED USE OF CHILD LABOUR FOR JANITORIAL WORK AT HALIFAX—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Is he aware that child labour, both male and female, has been used for janitorial work such as cleaning floors and washrooms at the Halifax International Airport, in particular on Easter Sunday, March 30, 1975? If the minister is not aware of this will he cause an investigation to be made and report to this House immediately? Would he also confirm whether this is governmental or departmental policy?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): I will surely inquire, Mr. Speaker.

ALLEGED REFUSAL OF BOARD TO GIVE INFORMATION ON MEAT OPERATIONS OF CANADA SAFEWAY TO MANITOBA LIVESTOCK AND MEAT COMMISSION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I suppose I could say of my question that this is the third time of asking. Last Thursday in the absence of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs I put a question to the acting minister with reference to the fact that the Food Prices Review Board had refused to give certain information concerning the meat operations of Canada Safeway in Manitoba to the Manitoba Livestock and Meat Commission. Since I put my question rather fully last Thursday I need not go into it again now, but is the minister yet in a position to give the House a reply as to whether the Food Prices Review Board will be asked to co-operate in this matter?

TRANSPORT

FREIGHT RATES—APPLICATION FOR 20 PER CENT INCREASE—POSSIBILITY OF INTERVENTION BY MINISTER TO PREVENT

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. On February 24, 1975, in a joint communiqué of the meeting of federal and provincial ministers of transport on western transportation the minister was quoted as saying that he was opposed to any further general horizontal percentage increases in freight rates. Noting that The Canadian National Railways have filed for a 20 per cent increase in class of freight rates which would come into effect on May 5 and which could have quite a spin-off effect on other rates, I should like to ask the minister what action he will be taking in support of his statement that he is opposed to any further horizontal rail freight rate increases?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I had exactly the same question put to me. Today the answer is the same. I am still opposed to the kind of increase that is proposed.

Mr. Murta: Since the purpose of the 18 month freeze on freight rates was to find a solution to the so called anomalies and noting that the final study has not been completed as yet, and since the minister says he is still opposed to a further increase, but a decision will have to be made one way or the other before May 5 when the increases will come into effect, what specific action will he take? Rather than telling us his views, can he tell us what his department will do?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I think that I spoke about ten times in the House on how the freeze was imposed, for what purpose and for what length of time. All these questions were answered and I have nothing new to add.

May I ask him whether he is satisfied that the reductions in the sales tax are being passed on to the home buyers in Canada, and can he tell the House what procedures are adopted or will be adopted to put these monitoring procedures into effect?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): The materials monitoring division of CMHC is checking this on a regular basis and reporting to me. There is an indication that the reductions are being passed on. It is hard to be precise. In at least one case the builder has actually returned the rebate cheque to the purchaser after the fact. In another case we have re-negotiated a contract for a limited dividend rental accommodation, and so the sales tax reduction was passed on. This is being watched on a continuing basis.

BEEF CATTLE—DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES CONCERNING RESUMPTION OF TRADE

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Can he inform the House as to what are the possibilities of removing both the export and import restrictions with regard to cattle which affect our trade with the United States?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I answered a similar question in the House yesterday and said that discussions are going on between the U.S. and Canada. I discussed the matter with the United States Secretary of Agriculture. I do not know what the consequences of the discussions will be, whether they will bear fruit or not.

Mr. Elzinga: In view of the fact that the restrictions which the minister imposed on the import of cattle from the United States some time ago caused the United States to react by imposing protective measures of their own that have been extremely damaging to the Canadian cattle industry, and in view of the fact that the minister himself has caused this dilemma, would he assure the House that he will do whatever is possible to have these regulations re-negotiated so that Canadian cattlemen can take advantage of the higher prices in U.S. markets?

Mr. Whelan: There is no truth to the statements made by the hon. member. As the result of actions we have taken, nearly $100 million has flowed to cattle producers in Canada. If we had allowed U.S. cattle producers to dump their cattle in the Canadian market, our prices would have gone down to the level of American prices for cattle. So, in effect, our action is beneficial to Canadian cattlemen. There is still a tremendous surplus of cattle in the United States and there is no advantage to Canadians from that market at present.

REMOVAL OF SALES TAX ON CLOTHING AND FOOTWEAR—REQUEST FOR NAMES OF COMPANIES FAILING TO GIVE CONSUMERS BENEFIT

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): My question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Mr. Speaker. Having recently tabled a document on the removal of the federal sales tax on clothing and footwear which showed merely a modest decrease in the expected rise in prices, can the minister tell us whether the investigation indicated if any of the 113 retailers who were surveyed failed to pass on the tax saving to the consumers and, if so, is the minister prepared to release to the House the names of those companies?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): If the hon. member will only look into the report which was tabled in the House, Mr. Speaker, he will realize that we are satisfied with the response we have obtained from the retailers we had asked to co-operate with the department in this investigation. The names of three firms are mentioned because, during this investigation, they refused to answer our questions.

[English]

Mr. Halliday: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, with reference to the three names to which the minister has just alluded. Can he inform the House whether those three companies refused to answer the questionnaire because of some inherent dislike of it or whether they simply ignored the minister's request?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I feel the hon. member should read this report. He would clearly realize that these firms refused to answer the questionnaire. We had contacted them on a number of occasions, trying to find out if they had special reasons for refusing to answer it. Because they refused to answer our questions, when all the others complied willingly with our request, we had to print their names in the report.

AGRICULTURE

POTATOES—REQUEST FOR RECOGNITION OF FAMILY PARTNERSHIPS OR CORPORATE FARMS UNDER PRICE STABILIZATION PROGRAM

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, in view of the policies of the government in the past which have encouraged family firms to operate to increase their size to gain greater efficiency, is the minister, in his actions to assist potato producers, prepared to recognize these family partnerships or corporations as more than one unit in respect of assistance to be paid under the price stabilization program?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we are studying that request which has been put forward by other members of the House on this side.

Mr. Stanfield: Is that the only reason you are studying it?

NATIONAL PARKS

CAPE BRETON HIGHLANDS—REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF DECISION TO IMPOSE ENTRANCE FEE

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In light of several conversations and exchanges of correspondence which we have had on the unfortunate decision to charge an entrance fee at the Cape Breton Highlands National Park and in view of the representations that have been made by the leader of my party on the same subject, is the minister prepared, because of the unique situation which we have discussed in that there is only one access highway, to waive these charges or at least reconsider his decision before they go into effect?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I really do not see how we can waive them. We are endeavouring to make exceptions, as I indicated earlier, for residents of the park and people who must pass through to get to their homes. However, I will be down there over the weekend and hope to consult with the people in the area on the problem.

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege, if I might—and I am not sure whether this is the right procedure—in regard to the statement which the minister made concerning restrictions which he imposed some time ago. These regulations were so broad that United States cattle came into Canada in such large numbers that our cattle market was drastically affected, and yet Canadian cattlemen cannot take advantage of the U.S. market.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Order Paper Questions

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 1,551, 1,693, 1,695, 1,696, 1,764, 1,842, 1,918, 1,938, 1,950, 2,007, 2,010, 2,013, 2,014, 2,016, 2,021 and 2,022.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that questions Nos. 271 and 318 be made orders for return and also ask the consent of the House to table immediately the information which has already been submitted. The balance of the information will follow as soon as it is submitted to me.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

CNR—PENSIONS

Question No. 1,551—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

1. How many retired employees of the Canadian National Railways are in receipt of pensions of less than $25.00 per month?

2. How many are in receipt of a pension of $25.00 per month?

3. How many are in receipt of pensions of (a) $25.01 to $29.99 per month (b) $30.00 to $39.99 per month (c) $40.00 to $49.99 per month (d) $50.00 to $59.99 per month (e) $60.00 to $69.99 per month (f) $70.00 to $79.99 per month (g) $80.00 to $89.99 per month (h) $90.00 to $99.99 per month (i) $100.00 to $124.99 per month (j) $125.00 to $149.99 per month (k) $150.00 to $199.99 per month (l) $200.00 to $299.99 per month (m) $300.00 per month or over?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The Management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: 1. Two hundred fifty eight.

2. One hundred thirty.

3. (a) 629, (b) 456, (c) 562, (d) 1,438, (e) 633, (f) 508, (g) 422, (h) 464, (i) 1,251, (j) 1,559, (k) 3,273, (l) 6,395, (m) 8,129. In a number of cases the amounts of pensions paid by Canadian National Railways do not represent the total pensions payable to employees for railway service. Pensions payable by CNR to international employees (service in both Canada and the United States) relate to their service in Canada only. Such employees also receive annuities payable under the United States Railroad Retirement Act or the Social Security Act for service performed in the United States. For example, in the group receiving pensions under $25 a month, in 1974, there are 52 former international employees who also receive United States Railroad Retirement or Social Security annuities in respect of CNR service rendered in the United States. In addition, there are various pension agreements between CNR and other companies, such as Canadian Pacific Limited, CP Telecommunications, and the Ontario Northland Railway, where each company issues separate cheques for its portion of the total pension. Only the pension payable by CNR is in this statement. Also, since the passing of the Pension Benefits Standards Act by the Federal Government on October 1, 1967, there are employees who have terminated service with CN and are receiving rather small compulsory deferred pensions for service performed only from October 1, 1967. The balance of those receiving small pensions are employees who elected early retirement (before age sixty-five) with reduced basic pensions ($25) and employees who had very short service and very small contributions.

GOVERNMENT'S SHARE OF GDP

Question No. 1,842—Mr. Hogan:

In real terms after adjusting for price increases, what was the government's share of the Gross Domestic Product (GDP) over the two decades from 1952 to 1972?

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada reports that over the past two decades the government's share of the Gross Domestic Product is as shown in the table below.

Government Expenditure[1] as a Percentage of Total Gross National Expenditure[2] 1952–1972 (1961 dollars) per cent		per cent

1952	21.2	1963	18.9

HEALTH PROTECTION BRANCH—EMPLOYEES ON FULL-TIME LANGUAGE INSTRUCTION COURSES

Question No. 1,918—Mr. Herbert:

How many employees of the Health Protection Branch of the Department of National Health and Welfare are presently on full-time language instruction courses?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): As of March 13, 1975, 59.

DEPARTMENT OF SUPPLY AND SERVICES—CONTRACT STATISTICS

Question No. 1,938—Mr. Reynolds:

1. For the years 1972 to 1975 inclusive, how many dollars in contracts were awarded by the contracting branch of the Department of Supply and Services to companies in the constituency of Dollard?

2. What was the total number of contracts issued with dollar amounts included for the entire Montreal region?

3. What was the total number of contracts issued with dollar amounts included for Canada?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. The Department of Supply and Services does not collect contracting statistics by constituency.

2. Contracting in Montreal Region

Period	Number of Documents	Value $000
April 1, 1972 to December 31, 1974	89,986	867,282

3. Contracting in Canada

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—DEMONSTRATION PROJECT ON PRINTING AND METAL FABRICATING PRODUCTS

Question No. 1,950—Mr. Reynolds:

1. Did a demonstration project related to the national competitive purchase of all printed material and all fabricated metal products take place in the years 1972-73 and, if so, with what results?

2. Did the results in any way affect subsequent policy innovations in purchasing?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. Yes a demonstration project took place between April, 1973 and May, 1974 on printed and metal fabricated products. A detailed analysis of the results is being prepared for consideration by the government.

2. The results did not affect subsequent policy innovations in the Supply Administration.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—INSPECTION ACTIVITY

Question No. 2,007—Mr. Reynolds:

1. Is there any duplication of inspection activities with the Department of Supply and Services, particularly in the area of high cost technology contracts issued for weaponry on behalf of the Department of National Defence?

2. How many inspectors are working for the Department?

3. What are the duties entailed in their jobs?

4. What is the overall cost of such programme?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. No.

2. There are 18 Technical Inspectors employed by the department.

3. Duties of the Department of Supply and Services Technical Inspectors are to provide technical supervision and inspection during the construction, conversion, repair, refit and docking of government civil ships or associated major components and equipment.

4. The overall cost of this programme is $459,000.

CONTRACT REVIEW BY TREASURY BOARD

Question No. 2,010—Mr. Reynolds:

1. What contracts in 1973-74 did Treasury Board review?

2. What were the negative recommendations made by Treasury Board for such contracts?

3. What latitude in decision making is preferred by the Board to the Department of Supply and Services purchasing wing?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. In 1973-74, 501 contract submissions requesting authority to enter into or to amend contracts were recommended to the Treasury Board by the Minister of Supply and Services or an authorized representative of the Minister.

2. In 1973-74 there were no negative recommendations made by the Treasury Board for such contract submissions.

3. Pursuant to Section 22 of the Government Contracts Regulations, the Treasury Board has delegated authority to the Minister of Supply and Services for the entry into contracts for the performance of any matter or thing that falls within the duties, powers or functions of the Minister as follows: (a) For the entry into a contract—a limit of $500,000 where tenders have been called and the lowest qualified tender is accepted; a limit of $250,000 where tenders have not been called or only one tender is received; (b) For increasing the Amount of a contract—a limit of $100,000; (c) Where the Government Contract Regulations provide higher limits than those noted above, the regulations shall govern.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—DESIGN CHANGES WITHIN CONTRACTS

Question No. 2,013—Mr. Reynolds:

1. When design changes are found apparent and necessary within contracts awarded to suppliers, how lengthy is the process by which a contract may be refitted with proposed new dimensions?

2. What body is responsible for this task?

3. Are there any reported cases where the design authority and the contractor give effect to the change in advance of approval?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. The length of the process depends mainly on the complexity of the change in question. Difficult changes may take months while simple changes may require only a few days.

2. The design authority for specific contracts is usually the customer department. DSS negotiates the contract terms for design changes with the supplier.

3. Design changes that affect the contract price must be negotiated and approved through a contract amendment. Changes that the supplier undertakes without approval are made at his own risk.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—CASH DISCOUNTS

Question No. 2,014—Mr. Reynolds:

1. Does the Department of Supply and Services have a uniform practice with respect to accepting cash discounts offered by suppliers for large quantities of goods purchased?

2. Do purchasing agents make efforts to have significant savings on their bulk purchasing?

3. What is the policy concerning the purchase of vehicle tires for the many vehicles operated by the various departments?

4. What departments or agencies purchase tires at commercial service stations and for what reason?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. Yes, when the terms of the contract provide for such a discount.

2. Yes.

3. Tires for the many vehicles operated by the various federal government departments and agencies are purchased against National Master Standing Offer arrangements which have been negotiated by DSS with tire manufacturers and their distribution organizations.

4. All departments and corporations listed under Schedules A and B of the Financial Administration Act, and all branches of the government designated as departments for the purpose of this Act may purchase tires at commercial service stations in emergency situations only using the Canadian Government's National Credit Card System.

[Mr. Goyer.]

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—PURCHASING COSTS

Question No. 2,016—Mr. Reynolds:

Can a comparison be provided of salary costs in purchasing officers proportionating the cost of items purchased in actual salary dollars for figures of contracts of $1,000 to $100,000 in terms of the average dollar expended and, if so, what is it?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Any comparison of salary costs to the value of contracts awarded in the Value Class Interval of $1,000 to $100,000 is not possible as the Department does not isolate its salary costs in such a manner.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—SURPLUS MATERIAL

Question No. 2,021—Mr. Reynolds:

What are the current procedures for the declaration of surplus material and supplies within the Department of Supply and Services?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): The current procedures for the declaration of surplus material and supplies within DSS are: (1) determine that neither DSS nor any other federal government department or agency has a use for the item; then, (2) assign the item to Crown Assets Disposal Corporation for disposal.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—INVENTORY MANAGEMENT

Question No. 2,022—Mr. Reynolds:

1. To what extent are inventory and ordering patterns counterbalanced so as to minimize costs and immobilize capital?

2. What are the inhibitions within the Department of Supply and Services policy that remove the tendency to overbuild stocks?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. Through use of phased deliveries and direct shipments from factory to users.

2. Interest charged on investment in inventory is an important factor in the revenue dependency program of the Department.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

EXEMPTED STAFF ON GOVERNMENT PAYROLL

Question No. 271—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

1. Under what authority are exempted staff hired?

2. Under what vote (or votes) are exempted staff paid?

3. From what are exempted staff exempted?

4. Are all exempted staff employed for service in Ottawa or are they sometimes assigned to other parts of Canada or overseas?

5. How many exempted staff are now on the government payroll and, of these, what is the breakdown (a) by department (b) by city or area of assignment?

6. How many former Liberal candidates for Parliament during the 1972 general election are now employed as exempted staff?

Return tabled.

NUMBER OF PUBLIC SERVICE EMPLOYEES WHO SUBMITTED TRAVEL EXPENSES

Question No. 318—Mr. Orlikow:

1. For each department, departmental corporation, agency corporation and proprietary corporation, how many employees whose headquarters were in Canada travelled outside of Canada and submitted travel expenses in each fiscal year 1969-70, 1970-71, 1971-72, 1972-73 and 1973-74?

2. In each fiscal year and for each department or corporation, what was the total amount expended on employee travel outside of Canada?

Return tabled.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call notices of motions for the production of papers Nos. 34 and 37?

CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO PROPOSED TRANSFER OF CN HOTELS TO CONSORTIUM OF CN, AIR CANADA, HILTON AND TRIZEC CORP.

Motion No. 34—Mr. Mazankowski:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the proposed agreement, as well as copies of correspondence, telegrams and minutes dealing with the proposed transfer of CN hotels to the consortium of CN, Air Canada, Hilton and Trizec Corp.

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the papers requested by motion No. 34 are private and confidential and not of a public or official character. I therefore ask the hon. member to withraw his motion.

Mr. Baldwin: Transferred for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

COPIES OF DREDGING CONTRACTS, 1970-74

Motion No. 37—Mr. Paproski:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of contracts, correspondence, agreements and papers for each year 1970 to 1974 relating to dredging contracts in (a) Toronto (b) Quebec City (c) Île d'Orléans (d) Cap-de-la-Roche (e) South Baymouth (f) Hamilton.

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the papers requested cannot be produced as they might prejudice any proceedings before a court of justice. I therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Paproski: I am willing to wait until after the court proceedings, and we will debate it in the House.

Longshoremen's Strike

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate. Shall the remaining notices of motions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

[Translation]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE—EFFECT ON FEED GRAIN SUPPLIES

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 26, I should like to present a motion for the discussion of a specific matter of importance and extreme urgency.

Mr. Speaker, I maintain that the House must study, in all haste, the present work stoppages which are paralyzing the ports of Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec City, and are preventing the millers from getting feed grain supplies intended for cattle, thus threatening the lives of thousands of them, which will result in food product losses on the one hand and income losses for the farm producers on the other.

In spite of the injunction in the port of Quebec City, which is not the case with the ports of Montreal and Trois-Rivières, customers from those two cities have been forced to go to Quebec City for their supplies but reserves there will last no longer than a couple of days at the most. Public interest therefore demands that Parliament intervene immediately; to that effect, I move:

That this House do now adjourn.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I did receive notice of motion on this subject, pursuant to Standing Order 26, from the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle). It might perhaps be preferable to listen to him now before reaching a decision.

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to see that some hon. members are interested in the problems of Quebec.

In view of the alarming situation the Quebec producers are in, I feel compelled to rise under the provisions of Standing Order 26 to put forward a motion to discuss a serious and urgent matter, that is the longshoremen's strike in the harbours of Trois-Rivières, Montreal and Quebec City, which has the effect of jeopardizing the feed supply and even in some instances of fully disrupting this supply required by Quebec farm producers who are thus forced to take prematurely their cattle and poultry to the slaughterhouse. I therefore propose:

That this House do now adjourn.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is the second time I am submitted a notice of a motion on the same subject pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 26. Last Wednesday, the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) gave the Chair notice of a motion pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 26. I did not accept the motion last week, but I stated that it might be advisable to delay the matter for a few more days. I invited the hon. member and his colleagues to follow the situation very closely, stating that if such a situation would persist I would reconsider that serious matter.

[English]

A week having passed, and not only the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) having raised the subject again but this week is supported by a similar notice of motion proposed by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), the subject is obviously still current. The situation has not improved in the ensuing week. A week ago I took the precaution of holding it over for a week for further study to see if perhaps during the intervening days the situation, which was changing rapidly, might be better. It obviously has not greatly improved, and I think it is important to note that it is not for the Chair to try to make a decision on the details.

There were further questions today, there have been questions every day, and there have been suggestions that perhaps some things might develop which might improve the situation, but surely it is not for the Chair to interpose itself to try to make a decision on the details. The Chair must accept the fact that a week ago the subject was raised by the hon. member for Bellechasse. I asked the House to wait a few days to see the situation would alter for the better. We waited a week, and it is now raised again.

As suggested by the hon. member for Bellechasse, as well as by the other hon. member, I cannot see how the Chair can ignore the fact that the situation continues to be grave. Therefore, it seems to qualify eminently as a very serious situation deserving the special attention of the House pursuant to Standing Order 26 and, if it meets with the approval of the House, I propose to set the debate for eight o'clock this evening.

NORTHERN CANADA POWER COMMISSION

AMENDMENTS TO CONSTITUTION AND POWERS OF COMMISSION

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved that Bill C-13, to amend the Northern Canada Power Commission Act, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, would you please be so kind as to call for the yeas and nays?

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five hon. members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: I caution hon. members that in the last 24 hours we have experienced some difficulty with the operation of the bells, and we will have to ensure that, during the course of the summoning of hon. members for this vote, the bells are in fact functioning in the West Block. They were repaired and are evidently functioning in the Centre Block and in the Confederation Building. If there is some difficulty in the West Block we may have to take steps to make sure hon. members are summoned.

In any case, call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Buchanan) which was agreed to on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE ACT

MEASURE TO REPEAL ACT

The House resumed from Friday, April 11, consideration of the motion of Mr. Whelan that Bill C-30 to repeal the Prairie Farm Assistance Act be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, when this bill to repeal the Prairie Farm Assistance Act was introduced on Friday last I had just reached the point in my remarks at which I said this matter was now under investigation by the fraud squad of the RCMP.

I think I should remind hon. members that the purpose of the bill before us is to repeal a statute which has been on the books since 1939. It was an act devised to help farm families get through the winter in the years of drought by giving them a small payment, up to $800 a farm, which was just enough to pay for the groceries, to pay the taxes, and perhaps cover other incidental expenses incurred during the winter. This legislation served the country very well.

Unfortunately, in the course of time the PFAA organization became one of the main weapons in the arsenal of a political machine known as "the Gardiner machine."

● (1550)

The technique was that when in a year of drought PFAA had to hire staff to inspect each of the farms that had made application for payments under the act. These field men, as they were called, were hired on a political basis, and it was so easy to move from hiring friends of the party in power into a situation where you began to play games with the farmers respecting which classification they were put into regarding their claims for help and relief under this act.

This type of political machine reached such a level of interference in the economic and political lives of the western farmers that it has been written up in many places. I can recall the Meisal study on this in the Queen's Quarterly many years ago describing the Gardiner machine as a parallel to Tammany Hall of New York City, which was over 100 years old. More recently a book has been written called "Prairie Liberalism". This book by Smith, which has recently come into the Library, describes in very intellectual and prosaic language the building up of this political machine in which the power of the party in office was used to persuade or to force farmers into supporting the Liberal party.

One of the great reasons for alienation on the prairies was not only the preponderance of members of parliament from the central provinces but the fact that, when the legislation was passed and put into effect, in deciding how much money would be paid out of the fund in times of great duress on the prairies, pressure was put on individual farmers to declare their allegiance to the party in power. The technique, or the principle, used by this machine was a very elementary and brutal one. It was that of fear or inducement. If they could not induce you by offers of higher returns to support the Liberal party, then the full pressure of fear was applied to you. By fear, I mean statements like, "If you don't do what we think you should, you and all your relatives will lose all chance of access to better positions in society."

This has all been documented, and I can speak with personal knowledge of it. Before you could get to be a teacher in the province of Saskatchewan, if you applied to become a teacher at a normal school you had to have a signed statement from the Liberal MLA that you were worthy of that particular position in society. If you wanted to become a member of the secretaries of municipalities organization, for example, so you could become a secretary to a municipality, an ordinary clerical or administrative job, you had to have verification that you were a member in good standing, and have the support of the local MLA. I happened to grow up under that regime and, not only because of my Irish background but, because of the very immorality of that system, I have been an opponent of this sort of thing all my life. I do not care which political party does it, this sort of thing has to be opposed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Prairie Farm Assistance Act

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): In my remarks on Friday I described how, when the government changed in 1957, the Diefenbaker administration, under express orders from the Prime Minister and his cabinet, tried to clean up the situation not only in regard to PFRA but also with regard to the PFAA legislation. It was a tough operation to make it clear to everybody concerned that no more dishonesty would be allowed in handing out the farmers' own money to farmers. In this regard the evidence given in the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, and again during court proceedings held in Saskatchewan on the question in 1964, revealed that that administration was vindicated.

I want to say in fairness that after the government changed in 1963 there was no evidence that PFAA had gone back to its old habits. One of the reasons—I think I made this clear on Friday—was that the man who was put in charge of this in 1961 was a man known to all municipal councils and secretaries in the whole province, Mr. Howard Riddell. His reputation for honesty and hard boiled integrity was such that, with him in charge of it, everybody knew things would be run honestly and fairly, and he was in charge from 1960 to 1974.

However, during the last few years we have begun to detect signs that the old machine is coming back into operation, and this has a bearing on this bill. This bill seeks to repeal this legislation. Actually, for all practical purposes, the government, without any authority from parliament, repealed the act long ago.

I commenced my remarks on Friday by saying that when, in 1970, the government decided to impose controls on the western farmer under the so-called LIFT program, the program was entitled "lower inventory for tomorrow", but turned out to mean "low income for tomorrow". Under this control mechanism of supply management, once again you met a whole army of inspectors. They had the PFAA organization in place. It was not being utilized by the government. Therefore the government brought that administrative procedure into action to handle the grasslands program and the summer fallow program under LIFT. Under LIFT farmers were told that if they did not do what they were told, which was to get away from growing wheat, and that if they did not summer fallow their land a second time, or go into grass, they would lose their quotas to sell. So 85 per cent of the farmers, who had to have some money in order to live, had to obey the government and go into summer fallow the second time, or into grass.

Since the farmers were asked to take these uneconomic steps such as reducing their production of food, or doing things dangerous to their rotation system, such as summer fallowing twice in a dry desert area, the government paid them $6 an acre, which was roughly the cost of running over the land in summer fallow. They were also paid for going into grass. This is where I think the opportunity arose for those in the program to visualize, having all these inspectors inspecting the amount of land that was in summer fallow and the amount of land that was in grass, how easy it would be to build up the old political machine again. "Tell your friends, don't worry; submit any figure, we will accept it" that was the type of technique used.

[Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain).]

All of the areas in summer fallow were photographed and surveyed by aircraft. After long study of these photographs, and through other techniques, it was discovered by those who keep the accounts that more money was spent than should have been spent on land in summer fallow. Likewise with the grass program; more money was spent on that program than should have been spent. Then instructions went out to collect from those people who got too much money. All this happened at a time when there was an election campaign going on, and no political party in power wants to antagonize too many voters by collecting money from them that they receive wrongly.

● (1600)

After the election they started this collection procedure again and, low and behold, another election came on in 1974. Then very peculiar instructions went out. This long history I have described led to the facts I mentioned on Friday. I asked the minister in the House whether he was aware of these things and whether he would investigate. He said he would take a look, and I read that reply into the record.

Later on in the week the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) asked if the RCMP fraud squad was being asked to investigate these particular allegations of fraud. Let me say that under the rules of the PFAA, in order to keep it honest, the director sent all supervisors and field men instructions, that during election campaigns they were not to do anything not specifically directed by the supervisor. This was to keep these inspectors, or field men, off the farmers' backs and away from any criticism as to inducements being offered or threats being applied.

After the election was over on July 8, the field men in x number of locations appeared with second expense accounts. In the normal course they submit their expense accounts to the supervisor who looks over the jobs they have done, signs his name, and submits them to a higher authority for final payment by the treasury office.

When the supervisor in these locations saw that these new expense accounts covered periods of time for which the inspectors had already been paid, they refused to sign them, then phone calls were made. Somebody gave the order over the phone not to worry about the supervisors, but to get these expense accounts sent to Regina where they would be signed and paid. This involved expense accounts being paid twice for the same period.

What were we to do with this information? I am not going to go over the story told by the hon. member for Red Deer, or his conversations with the RCMP. The hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Hamilton) and the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) will tell their stories later. What I am saying is simply that when you have a situation in which there have been financial irregularities, the Auditor General should be asked to do an audit. So the Auditor General sent his staff in to photograph all these documents. There is a limit to what we should say on a matter under investigation under our sense of responsibility. I have gone as far as I think I should in saying that this matter is being investigated by the Auditor General's department and by the RCMP fraud squad.

A good deal of the information that has been provided to the Auditor General and the RCMP is in my possession, and I think we have many more questions to ask in addition to the questions about financial irregularities. The allegation of financial irregularities is something with which the Auditor General should deal, but what intrigues me and forces me to ask under my responsibility as an MP, is who authorized this whole thing, and where does this trail lead? I cannot see an administration man in Regina signing papers which he suspects and probably knows are fraudulent without having obtained clearance from somebody higher up. This investigation will track down the details at that level.

These are the kind of thing that those of us who should be protecting the public interest should be questioning. Those of us who are fighting against this type of political force being applied should be interested in these matters.

The PFAA has been virtually out of operation for five years during which time it has been winding up its affairs, probably improperly. During that time why was the director paid $25,000 a year in taxpayers' money, yet not even allowed into his own office? I think that is a question hon. members want answered. Why were three supervisors asked to retire before their terms were up? In one case an individual refused to retire voluntarily before his time, and was fired. He was not fired because of incompetence or for cause. All three of these men were top men, and this one man was let go a year and a half before his pension started. Why were the authorities trying to get rid of these people at the top level?

Mr. Horner: It looks like a cover up.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Why were these field supervisors dismissed? Why were several girls who worked in the PFAA offices dismissed at the end of the year, just at Christmas time? Surely they were not guilty of planning this great conspiracy. Some of these girls had been working in that office for many years. They were appointed by the Liberals. They were kept on by the Conservatives. Why would this government come along when all this fuss began to develop, and dismiss this staff, even before parliament authorized the repeal of this legislation? These are political questions that cannot be investigated fully by the RCMP or the Auditor General.

Before this House decides that this is just a housekeeping bill and should be passed, we should be given a lot of answers. I have also heard reports about bills under the PFAA legislation which have not yet been paid. We have many questions to ask about this sort of thing. There may be no dishonesty involved in this non-payment of bills, but how can we blithely repeal this legislation when we know these matters have not been cleared up properly? These are matters that we should try to clear up under our political responsibility.

Another point of interest is that the money in this fund was collected under this legislation from every farmer, but now that the act will no longer be in operation what is left in the fund will go into the consolidated revenue account in trust. I would like to know who it is being held in trust for, and why—

An hon. Member: For Otto Lang.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Somebody has a Freudian complex behind me. This bill says this money will be held in trust for the western Canada grain stabilization fund. That bill has not even been passed, and if it is passed this program will be a voluntary thing. What moral right has this parliament to take this money that belongs to all those grain farmers that paid it, and put it into a fund where only a few farmers have access to it?

I think I have made enough points to explain why it is that we will be moving a motion asking parliament not to read this legislation a second time, but to refer the subject matter to the standing committee so that it will be taken out of the House to that place where we can ask the proper questions.

Therefore, as I said in my opening remarks, my first thought on seeing the bill was to ask the House leader whether it could be delayed until we have the reports back from the Auditor General and from the fraud squad of the RCMP. I think we have the responsibility, as members of parliament, to see if this money spent under the LIFT program in payment for summer fallow and grass pasture operations was properly spent. Theoretically one could deal with this under the estimates, but the estimates on this are under PFAA which is now off the books. I know that PFAA estimates run until March 31 of 1975 and they are automatically passed through the committee at the end of May, if I understand the rules correctly. We may not have the RCMP report at that time. I think we should keep this bill in limbo until we have the full story because parliament demands that we scrutinize the expenditures of money under this bill.

Let me put it this way. I will tread very lightly on these alleged fraud charges because I think that matter is probably in the hands of the RCMP, but I have many political questions to ask. Forgetting all about the exact amounts of money involved in the frauds, which are criminal offences, there is a political question I should like to put. What were these field men doing during the pre-election period before July 8? Obviously they had done their duty as demanded by their supervisor, and had been paid their expenses. What was the second thing they were doing that brought in expenses of $1,400 in one report that I saw?

Mr. Benjamin: Counting the grass roots.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I, and I think other members of parliament, want to ask those supervisors who were fired last fall why they refused to authorize the expenses of those field men, and who authorized the second set of expenses, and why he authorized them.

I want to know who it was that the field men knew whom it was safe for them to phone and bypass their supervisor. Who was it in Regina from whom they received these instructions, and who authorized that official in Regina, because no official in Regina would take a chance on this rip-off unless he had authority from someone higher up?

It is abundantly clear that what we want is to get a chance under the parliamentary rules to ask the political questions that will not be asked by the fraud squad or by the Auditor General, to track down this person who is trying to build up once more the political machine which dominated western Canada for so long. This rebirth of the Gardiner machine is not good for the prairies and not good for the country. The PFAA was good legislation although it had to be amended and made more workable, but why did they ruin it by making it a political tool of a political party? The Diefenbaker government cleaned it up at great political risk, and now it is back again.

We are being asked to repeal legislation whose author we should have been praising for having brought it into effect and making it a genuine monument. I am referring now to the Right Hon. James G. Gardiner who brought in the legislation nearly 40 years ago. Now this legislation is ending with a whimper and a horrible smell. I do not know who is responsible. I have my own suspicions about ambitious politicians in Saskatchewan who aspire to even greater things.

I want to speak for all farmers of all political persuasions when I say that agriculture should not be made a political football. It will require the best efforts of all political parties, working together, to try to get the agricultural sector to do the job that the world is demanding of it. I believe that the way to assist agriculture to do the job that the world expects of it in the next 25 years is to put agriculture in Canada under one minister. The division of the agriculture portfolio into four or five sections, all with responsibilities leading up to various ministers, is a multiple schizophrenia that must stop. I know that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), who has had this portfolio for 2½ years, has set up an office in Regina and staffed it with a very able man. I thought this office was being set up so that the department could get a true representation of what the west thought, fed right to the minister. I thought that office was being set up to balance off the great political power of the crown prince of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Benjamin: What was that?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): There is a deaf man to my left. I said, "the crown prince of Saskatchewan." What I fear is that the office which the minister has set up in Regina has become part of this political machine. When birds of a feather flock together, one gets the idea that something is going to happen.

I suggest to the Minister of Agriculture that he take the lead. I have suggested to him that if he will join us in this motion to take the subject matter before the standing committee so that he can deal with the monetary parts looked after by the Auditor General and the criminal parts looked after by the RCMP. Also we should look into the political parts to see if we can get at the truth. Then it would be evident to the western farmers that the government is not trying to cover up this whole smelly mess. The way to kill this political machine on the prairies is to get it out in the open here. Let us take a good look at it. We trust the Minister of Agriculture to fight for the farmers. We, in turn, will fight to see that agriculture is made whole again and that we get ARDA, PFRA, and the whole question of incomes policy back under the Department of Agriculture. All these things that are so dependent on a unified policy should be run by some one who knows what the target is. Then we can gear up agriculture to its maximum efficiency.

If politicians want to build political machines, let us not have them built on the backs of many of the farmers. Let us not have them built on the backs of the men who will be asked to make maximum efforts in the next 25 years to produce for the world. Let us use some other method, but let us not use agriculture to build a political machine in western Canada.

The motion I have outlined will be moved later on by one of my colleagues, and I strongly suggest to the hon. members of the government party that they do not hide all the truth of this smelly mess from the people of the west. I suggest that they bring it out into the open, get it cleaned up, and let the farmers go to work to do their job. Let us do our job here and have this legislation ultimately repealed, but before we do, let us clean it up and bury it decently.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have carefully read the remarks made by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) when he started this debate on April 11, and I have listened to him carefully today. This is one of the rare occasions upon which I can agree with almost everything he said. Either he or I may think that that is a refreshing change, but it does not matter.

I want to echo some of the remarks made by the hon. member. I have spent most of my life in southwestern Saskatchewan and southeastern Alberta, which must be the middle of the dust bowl, both as a teenager and when I got older. There were countless occasions when the PFAA inspector, that person who hovered over the lives of farm people all those years, was talked about either in disgust, anger, or fear. I can recall relieving a station agent in southern Alberta during the 1949 federal election campaign, and sitting having a beer with some of the boys one evening, and the hearing the local kingpin Liberal saying that if that poll did not go Liberal they would not be able to get the dry bonus. That was just rampant all over the prairie provinces. It was used as a weapon to frighten people, and almost to terrorize them. It was not a lot of money, but to people who had been dried out, it meant a lot.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain spoke about expense accounts. I recall that in my baseball playing days one of the members of the team was the local PFAA inspector. We went to a baseball tournament and played until dark. On the way home we stopped at a farm. He went in and looked at a couple of granaries, got back into his car and we proceeded home. The next day he put in a full expense account for inspecting x number of farms on behalf of PFAA. The expense account included mileage, meals, and the whole thing. He delighted in telling us how he went one time to play poker and put in an expense account to PFAA. The operation of this organization was common knowledge to the people out in the field over all those years.

I agree with the remark the hon. member made about Mr. Howard Riddell. For the first time in the history of the PFAA it was headed up by someone with integrity and honesty, and who would not put up with the kind of hanky-panky the Gardiner machine organized and maintained. That is all history, but I think it is only proper for hon. members to bring these matters to the attention of the House in order to try to persuade the government that it would be somewhat unseemly, to say the least, to repeal the legislation before all the administrative details are cleaned up satisfactorily.

I would like to submit to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) that this mess he has inherited will not be cleaned up by August 1 when he wants the repeal of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act to take effect. To support the remarks made by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain, I submit that in the areas of expenditures, particularly travel expenditures, I have received reports similar to those received by other hon. members from different parts of the prairie provinces, and there can be no doubt that a full and thorough investigation is needed. I have no doubt that it will result in some criminal charges.

There is one other area the minister became responsible for when he became minister. He became responsible for the treatment afforded permanent employees under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. My information is that of the approximately 18 permanent employees in the PFAA office in Regina most, if not all, have now been let go, but casual employees have been retained.

Some, if not all of the employees who are presently running the PFAA office in Regina, were out in the field on expense accounts. Most of the work which has been going on in PFAA offices over the past year and a half or so had to do with the Grasslands Incentive Act. There have been very few PFAA matters to clean up, except for the odd farmer's estate or something of that nature. These people have been operating on expense accounts from Regina up to the Peace River country and into Manitoba. It seems that it has been a very cosy operation, and perhaps even lucrative for those travelling on mileage expenses and per diem allowances for meals and rooms, considering the distances involved. This should also be part of the full inquiry and investigation.

Why have permanent staff, some who have worked in excess of 30 years, not been placed in other areas of the federal public service? Mr. Riddell is now working for the department of municipal affairs of the province of Saskatchewan. I would have thought that a person of that calibre would have been eagerly sought by the Minister of Agriculture to work in some part of his department, or at least in some part of the federal government. There is a list of male and female permanent employees who have not been placed.

On December 17 I wrote to the minister, and I quote from that letter:

> It has been brought to my attention that you are closing the PFAA offices in Regina and that no action has been taken to ensure that long-term employees are found suitable alternative employment.
> A number of these people have served the Department of Agriculture in the Prairie Farm Assistance Branch up to 32 years. If they retire and go on pension they will only receive 64 per cent of the average of the highest six consecutive years salary.

In my letter to the minister I also wrote the following:

> ... because these people are not 55 years of age they are penalized further under the Superannuation Act by going on pension prior to the age of 55 years.
> I believe something should be done for the 18 permanent staff members in the Regina office and the 12 field supervisors. The 18 staff members I understand are to be let out at March 31, 1975. I would appreciate any assistance you can give to protect these people.

● (1630)

I wrote to the Minister on December 17. He replied on January 31, 1975, and said:

> With the phasing out of the PFAA offices in Regina, the department is making every effort to find alternate employment for the employees affected.
> We have contacted other departments in the federal government, employment agencies of provincial governments and municipal governments. In addition, every effort is made to ensure that these employees are aware of vacancies in the department so that they can indicate interest in any position for which they may qualify.
> Yours sincerely,
> Eugene Whelan,
> Minister of Agriculture.

My information is that of those 18 permanent office employees of the PFAA in Regina only one is presently an employee in the federal public service, and that is because prior to going to the PFAA he had already served with the crop insurance branch and so had public service status. None of the other permanent employees were placed in the federal public service, however. In fact the minister has not done what he said he would do in his letter of January 31, that is, make every effort to find alternative employment for the people effected.

It would seem to me, Madam Speaker, that it is incumbent upon the minister to do something for an employee who has 32 years of service and has not yet reached the age of 55. Surely such a person should automatically get a position in the minister's department. There was one woman in the Regina office who was competent to run it and supervise the staff, but it is my understanding that she is no longer in the federal public service and, as a result, has been penalized in respect of her pension plan. This sort of callous treatment of people who have spent years and years in loyal, dedicated, permanent employment is not good enough.

An hon. Member: There just were not good Liberals.

Mr. Benjamin: I think many of them were, but some have said they are not any more.

It appears that it is the casual staff of PFAA that has been retained. Surely casuals should be let go before permanent staff. I would have bet money that this sort of thing could not have occurred under the present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) although I would not have bet money on any of his predecessors, with the possible exception of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton). I am anxious to hear from the minister how this action can be justified and, if I am wrong, of course he will correct me.

I agree with the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain that the subject matter of this bill should be referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture, or to some other forum for full and open inquiry. Mr. Riddell should be invited to appear with all those employees who were affected so that they can make their representations. The results of any police investigation, or other inquiries into fraudulent practices regarding expense accounts, should also be presented to the committee. Surely the minister must agree that this matter cannot be cleared up by August 1 when he wants the repeal of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act to take effect.

There are some questions which I think should be answered, Madam Speaker, and I will go over them slowly in order that the minister can make notes and reply to them when he speaks on second reading, or at a later stage in the debate we should certainly have more detailed information.

First, is an investigation being carried on regarding expense accounts or irregular practices of the staff of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act and, if so, who is conducting it? Is it being done by the Auditor General, internally by the department, or by the RCMP? Have charges been laid and convictions obtained? Are charges yet to be laid? Will the minister provide the number of permanent employees of the PFAA as of March 31, 1971, and March 31, 1975? How many permanent employees have been released, dismissed, resigned, or pensioned? How many have been transferred to other service in the federal Department of Agriculture, and how many in other branches of the federal public service? How many are still in PFAA service? How many have been retired under the age of 55, how many have been retired between the ages of 55 and 65, how many have been retired with under 30 years of service, and how many with under 35 years of service? How many casual employees did the PFAA have as of March 31, 1971, and as of March 31, 1975? How many of these casual employees have been released, dismissed, or transferred to other service with the federal Department of Agriculture or other federal departments since that time? How many casual employees remain with the PFAA?

I think the committee should also have a list of the employees of the PFAA during the last 24 months, and that the chairman of the committee should write each of those employees informing them that the inquiry is being conducted, that the subject matter of the legislation is before it, and inviting them to appear, to tell anything they wish to tell or know about the operation of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. They should also be invited to air any grievance they may have at the failure to place them in other branches of the federal public service, about early retirement, or about their treatment in regard to superannuation.

Those are the questions I would like answered, and no doubt other hon. members will have more. I am confident that we will get from the Minister of Agriculture a full and frank response, and that he is interested and anxious for a complete and proper finalization of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. I am sure he will agree that all these questions cannot be answered fully before August 1 at which time he wishes this repealing legislation to take effect.

I want to raise a couple of other matters which are involved with this legislation. The great grain income stabilization debate of 1971 brought beneficial results for crop insurance. Those who were members of this House in 1971 will recall what was said in that debate by the then hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar, Mr. Gleave, by myself, others in my party, members of the Conservative party including the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski), the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) and others, by the then minister of agriculture, who suffered the fate ministers of agriculture of his kind suffer, and by the present minister who is in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board.

The grain stabilization bill of 1971 provided for the repeal of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. We said in that debate that we would not accept legislation which repealed the Prairie Farm Assistance Act unless and until the Government of Canada could replace that act with something better. Since then the government has made substantial improvements in the way the present crop insurance plan is operated and financed, and I commend it. The result has been that in Saskatchewan the cost of premiums has been halved, and many more thousands of farmers can now buy crop insurance. I learned in the last day or two that about 60 per cent of all Saskatchewan farmers are now enrolled in the crop insurance scheme.

Ever since the 1940's thousands of farmers on the prairies have been waiting for this program. It is a long-cherished dream, that the day will come when farmers are covered by a universal, all-risk crop insurance program of the sort they are entitled to, which covers all forms of natural and man-made hazard. One of those latter hazards is the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. That was one of the successes flowing from our preventing the government from enacting the first grain stabilization bill. After that the government improved substantially the operation and financing of the crop insurance program. I believe it is fair to say that it involves all provinces of Canada. All are co-operating, paying their share, and administering it well. The number of farmers taking advantage of the program has increased markedly.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain mentioned that about $7 million or $8 million is left in the PFAA fund. I hope the minister, when he speaks, will tell us the exact amount. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle Moose-Mountain felt that something other than what the government has proposed should be done with that money. We think so too, for the following reasons.

Those who were here when we debated the first grain stabilization bill, which had been introduced by the minister in charge of the Wheat Board, will recall that members on all sides, particularly members of opposition parties, repeatedly said that the bill should provide for pay-outs on a regional, even on a local basis. The pay-outs should be similar to those made under PFAA, because often farmers in various regions suffered from a loss of income, a loss which was often localized as a result of factors beyond their control. Factors like drought, frost, flood, wind, wild life and what-not were mentioned. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board, and the then minister of agriculture, Mr. Olson, and others on the government side repeatedly made the point that these hazards, namely, drought, flood, wind, wild life and so on, were covered by crop insurance. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board said, and he has repeated it in recent months, that a grain income stabilization program would be related to markets and price.

If one accepts the position of the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, the grain stabilization fund has nothing to do with natural hazards brought on by weather, wild life and so on. Its only involvement ought to be with market and price. If that is so, how in heaven's name can he justify taking the money left in the prairie farm assistance fund and putting it in the grain stabilization fund? PFAA moneys are for programs covered now by crop insurance. It provides money for drought bonuses and so on. You hear people talk about drought bonuses, wet bonuses, for grain under the snow bonuses, and whatnot. Clearly that money has nothing to do with markets and price. It has to do with natural risks, natural hazards thrown in our way by mother nature.

It has been suggested by some that the $7 million or $8 million still left in the PFAA account should be put in the crop insurance program fund and used for crop insurance in the designated areas, namely, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and that portion of British Columbia which comes under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board. That money should be used for crop insurance in that area, and should be divided in direct proportion to the amounts collected in those areas over the years.

The Department of Agriculture says that this is not being done because it would be terribly difficult to figure out ways for dividing that money. I think that is not so. The department knows how many farmers delivered grain and from how many they deducted 1 per cent or 2 per cent. The money should be divided in the same proportion.

I have talked to people working in the crop insurance field and they say that $7 million or $8 million would not do much to reduce premiums in the three prairie provinces and the Peace River country of B.C. because the total amount of money involved is massive. But I submit that you can do other very useful things with that $7 million or $8 million. For example, you could use it for research connected with crop insurance, and for an enlarged program of education and information for farmers of the area who do not have crop insurance and are still examining it. Spending that money on research, information and education would be a good idea. It should be spent in the area from which it was collected. Any attempt to transfer that money to the Consolidated Revenue Fund and then to the grain stabilization fund would be totally unjustified, even if one uses the arguments of the minister in charge of the Wheat Board and of the former minister of agriculture. They said, "Oh, no, you cannot have pay-outs under a grain stabilization plan for hazards which should be covered by crop insurance." I argue, conversely, that you cannot take money collected for crop insurance and pay it into a grain stabilization plan.

In other words I submit that the Minister of Agriculture should not let the minister in charge of the Wheat Board have it both ways; he should not let him put his cotton picking hands on money which only the Minister of Agriculture ought to administer. I think he would get the unanimous support of all members on this side for that proposition. I hope the minister will look again at the wording of the bill.

People in the crop insurance field have said that we should look more closely at damage done by wildlife in the three prairie provinces and the Peace River country of British Columbia. The provisions of the bill in this regard ought to be substantially expanded. Wildlife damage perhaps is not as significant as flood, wind or drought damage in the area of concern to the Wheat Board, but wildlife, all the same, does a considerable amount of damage to crops. The north end of Last Mountain Lake, which is in my constituency, is the centre of the Sandhill crane migration. What a flock of those do to a field of grain swaths in an afternoon is enough to drive any farmer to drink. It occurs annually.

I have lived in a number of places in Saskatchewan and Alberta. In the southwest dry area, the northwestern and southeastern areas there is a lot of bush, and big game crop damage occurs. It would be money well spent if they had $7 million or $8 million for that. This could be combined into the whole area of research, and more could be done by way of lure crops. Certain acreages should be set aside to entice wildlife away from farmers' crops.

The money belongs to the farmers in the Canadian Wheat Board area. They contributed it to a form of crop insurance, PFAA. When that act is repealed the money left over should go to the crop insurance plan. The minister may have some different idea that would be even better with regard to how that money might be used for crop insurance. However, I submit that that is the proper way to do it.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain made one specific and some general statements regarding the administration of expense accounts and so forth. I have had the same sort of thing relayed to me. No doubt it has been relayed to the minister in one form or another. We would like a full and frank account from the minister on what he has been doing, what is now going on, and the results of any investigations or inquiries. I appreciate that if there is anything liable for court action it cannot be gone into at this point. However, he can certainly answer some of my questions. Have any charges been laid and convictions obtained? Will more charges be laid? Is there really anything to this at all?

I know the minister is anxious to deal fully and frankly with the members of this House and the Standing Committee on Agriculture. I am sure he will ask his House leader for the fullest possible terms of reference for the Standing Committee on Agriculture so witnesses can be called and all former and present employees, whether permanent or casual, will be notified in order that they may appear if they wish. I also ask that he give a full account of the efforts he said were being made in his January 31 letter to me in order to obtain employment for these permanent employees, some of whom have been with the PFAA administration for many years. Surely that is owed to those people who have given loyal and dedicated service.

The government should resist the Gardiner hanky-panky of the late thirties, forties and fifties up to 1957. It is to the credit of the Diefenbaker administration that they made some real effort to put a stop to that. They had some success. I was not aware of any re-occurrence of that sort of operation during the Pearson years. However, I cannot say the same for the Trudeau years with regard to the administration of PFAA and other programs for the prairie provinces related to agriculture. I sincerely believe the Minister of Agriculture will not allow the situation to revert to what occurred in the forties and the fifties. However, it is cropping up again.

I ask the minister to examine this operation very closely. I hope this will include looking at the operations of one of his colleagues from the prairie provinces whose name I need not mention. The minister owes it to the employees and to the farmers who contributed the funds to give a full report, and to arrange for the referral of the subject matter of this legislation to the standing committee.

The minister and the officials in the three provinces concerned should do what they deem best with the $7 million or $8 million left in the fund. I leave that to them. We can offer suggestions which may or may not be worth considering. However, I believe the money should go to the crop insurance program. The minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board should not be allowed to get his hands on one nickel of it. We can go into the reasons for that when we finally get to the bill covering the grain stabilization program. Those are all the remarks I will make at this point. I am anxious to hear from the minister at this stage of the debate, and also in the committee.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, from the evidence given by the previous speakers, including the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), it is clear that someone, or some organization, is responsible for the present mess in the PFAA administration. The point of this debate is to try to decipher who is responsible for it. If it is the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), he will have to take full blame. If that is the case he will find that the smell of rotten eggs is like perfume compared to what will come out of this. I am sure the smirk on the face of the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) will be on the other side before we are through.

If the Minister of Agriculture does not accept responsibility, it must lie in one of two other areas. One is in the realm of the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Lang). If that is not where the blame lies, it has to be in the Liberal organization.

Reluctantly I rise to participate in this debate on Bill C-30. This bill should not have been put before the House while an investigation is being conducted into reported irregularities within the administration. No valid reason was given for presenting this bill to repeal the Prairie Farm Assistance Act now when important legislation directly affecting Canadians has been set aside.

I received documentary information which I turned over to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The Minister of Agriculture cannot say he is unaware of the current RCMP investigation into the PFAA for which he is responsible, or is he going to shift this responsibility to the Canadian Wheat Board?

[Mr. Benjamin.]

Not only was the minister's attention drawn to alleged unauthorized payments by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain on December 9 last, but the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) was questioned in the House three days later about the same matter. Last week the government House leader was requested to delay this bill until the RCMP had an opportunity to submit its report. He did not agree. I asked him the following question, as recorded at page 4719 of Hansard:

> Mr. Speaker, my question is for the government House leader. In view of the fact that four months have passed since the Minister of Agriculture was questioned about reported irregularities in the operation of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act during his term of office and that the House leader has said Bill C-30 which would repeal the said act will go before the House today, and in view of the fact that the RCMP investigation might not be completed for some time, would the government House leader agree to withhold Bill C-30 at least until the report on the investigation has been submitted?

The House leader would not agree to that request and, as a result, we now find ourselves spending time on legislation which might well be dealt with later without anyone being adversely affected.

What is the reason behind the minister's insistence on putting this bill through at this particular time? Surely the minister and the government, no matter how irresponsible they may be, realize that there was an element of wrongdoing within PFAA or the RCMP, in conjunction with the Auditor General, would not have decided that such an inquiry was necessary. Another important reality is that regardless of the findings of the investigation, and whether or not charges are laid, the minister will be answerable for the repeal of this act no matter when the report is submitted or on what date second reading is given to Bill C-30. I feel sure most members of the House would be willing to listen to an explanation of the supposed urgency attached to the repeal of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act.

While the minister in charge of the Wheat Board lives in the PFAA region it is not my wish, nor is it the intention of any member, to cast a reflection on innocent people but, unfortunately, until we know whether or not there were irregularities within PFAA a cloud hangs over every one of its employees. The purpose of the investigation is to find out who is responsible for the actions now being questioned. A line must then be drawn between what is right and what is wrong so that, if guilt is established, punishment will follow; otherwise public servants generally, as well as the public at large, will be without the protection which is their right.

We have to ask why any employee of the federal government would become involved in a situation whereby his integrity is at stake and he could be subjected to charges of fraud at the cost of his job. Who was the instigator of these alleged misdeeds? Who placed these people in such an unfortunate position? What were they doing, and for what purpose? Were they electioneering on behalf of the federal Liberal party on the instructions or advice of someone in a senior position, even someone from the other chamber—the highest court in the land?

Were they offered inducement to commit fraudulent acts? Is the minister running for cover by demanding that Bill C-30 be rushed through parliament now, or is someone else within the Liberal organization, someone inside or outside the other place, calling the shots? These are some of the questions to which answers should be given before the Prairie Farm Assistance Act is repealed.

There is another point which must not be overlooked. Is there a double interpretation placed on the laws of this country as they affect those employed in the field and appointees to the other place who are paid by public funds too, both working for the government? If the persons in the field now being investigated were trying to sell Liberal policies, is it fair to prosecute those who were involved while similar performances by Liberal appointees to the other chamber are permitted to continue without question? Is there a law for the rich and a law for the poor?

A newspaper article which appeared in the Ottawa Journal on September 6, 1974, under the heading "The Senate—The Who's Who of Liberal functionaries," brings out some shocking facts and, with your permission, Madam Speaker, I should like to quote a few paragraphs from it. I read:

"I am, and have been since the fall of 1968, the chairman of the Finance and Treasury Committees of the Liberal Party of Canada, and in that capacity I have the overall responsibility for raising the funds for the federal Liberal party, not only at election time but also to maintain its activities between elections."

Notes from an address to a Liberal gathering somewhere in Canada? Not on your life. A speech by a new member of the Senate of Canada. Date? Jan. 10, 1974. The speaker? Senator John M. Godfrey.

In the past, appointments were used as rewards for past performance, usually on completion of a tour of duty. It is obvious from Senator John Godfrey's speech that it is now the oasis for present and not past performance. Look at the recent election campaign and you will discover that the Who's Who of the Liberal Campaign Committee resided in the Senate of Canada.

The national campaign headquarters of the Liberal Party of Canada lists Senator Keith Davey as the Co-Chairman with Jean Marchand of their national campaign committee. Also listed are Senator Gildas Molgat as the President of the Liberal Party of Canada; Senator R. J. (Ray) Perrault as Chairman for British Columbia; Senator Earl Hastings as Chairman for Alberta; Senator Jean-Pierre Côté as Chairman for Quebec and Senator Lorne Bonnell as Chairman for Prince Edward Island.

But it doesn't end there. We have Senator Al Graham as the President of the Liberal Party in Nova Scotia. Also Senator Richard Stanbury as past-president of the Liberal Party of Canada. Then we have a long list of Senators involved in the financing of the party as members and contributors to the committees, headed by Senator John Godfrey. Among those actively involved are John Aird of Toronto, Sydney Buckwold of Saskatoon, Douglas Everett of Winnipeg, Louis-Philippe Gelinas and Louis Giguere of Montreal, Harry Hays of Calgary, Dan Riley of Saint John, Irvine Barrow of Halifax and George Van Roggen of Vancouver.

It is an impressive list and it doesn't take long to learn how Pierre Elliott Trudeau has set about to reform the Senate. He has determined it is much better to have the taxpayers of Canada providing the dollars to operate his party than to take them from the party's war chest. At a time when the nation requires the very best in performance from the parliament of Canada, the Prime Minister is turning one arm of the institution into a Liberal party machine. It is a very sad commentary on both parliament and the objectives of men appointed to that body. Surely we should be able to turn to the Senate and anticipate something more than the partisan meanderings of a far-too-large coterie of its membership.

But if the Senate is to be developed into Liberal party headquarters and if those who accept appointment to that institution are willing to give their allegiance to their party rather than to the nation, Canadians should seriously consider—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order. I fail to see the link between the article the hon. member is reading and the bill which is before the House. Perhaps the hon. member would return to the bill now.

Mr. Towers: Madam Speaker, I am trying to make the point that someone, or some organization, is responsible. It is well known that the Liberal organization has infiltrated the very roots of our society. Our democratic system has been undermined and brought to a very low level as this type of manouvering and manipulation of public funds continues without any apparent suspicion of impropriety. Why should our taxpayers, regardless of their political affiliation, pay for the operations of the federal Liberal party in this undercover way, particularly when one remembers that its leader has described himself as "a hell of a rich guy?"

We are aware that people in the middle-income bracket pay more taxes than any other segment of society, but few taxpayers in any income bracket would condone the policy of squandering tax dollars as a means of selling the Liberal party through its own upper chamber members. They hide behind their title and the so-called red chamber—their sanctuary. What sanctuary is there for Liberal party workers who through some form of persuasion—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): I regret to interrupt the hon. member again, but let me remind him that the title of the bill before us is an Act to repeal the Prairie Farm Assistance Act.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Towers: I am sorry, Madam Speaker, but had you been in the chair when the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain spoke, and during the remarks made by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin), you would realize that an investigation is taking place into PFAA at the present time. We feel this investigation should be completed before the House is asked to debate the bill before us. We are trying to find out at this point who is responsible, who caused this investigation to be necessary? The people out on the prairies, the supervisors, are the ones who are going to take the rap. It is a shame if we have developed a democratic system which will allow those people to be prosecuted. At the same time there are people in the other chamber doing exactly the same thing, yet they are protected because they are all appointed by the Liberal machine. This is why we have a problem, Madam Speaker. Why protect one segment of our society but allow another segment to be prosecuted?

● (1710)

If the people of Canada do not demand that this demonstrated wrongdoing within a level of this parliament be stopped, and stopped immediately, they will live to regret it. This government is destroying the democratic system. The upper house should be purged of all those who carry on partisan activities under the guise of legislators.

Just as we must not cast suspicion on anyone until he is proven guilty, let us not overlook the fact that there are many who accepted appointments to the other place with a desire to carry out their legitimate duties, and they are not involved in Liberal fund raising activities or propaganda publicizing. How frustrating and belittling it must be for these sincere members to be compelled to bear the same title, and be classed in the same category as those whose main, if not sole purpose is political. They receive the same remuneration, and no doubt their hours of legitimate work exceed those of the active Liberal party workers. These are the people who are responsible for the situation with which we are now having to deal.

When there is one rotten apple in a barrel, every apple is automatically suspected of taint. The dedicated, non-partisan members of the upper chamber deserve fair treatment. Public servants who have been found responsible for wrongdoing, or who will be so charged in the future, will be dealt with according to the law of our land, even though their efforts to aid the Liberal organization trapped them. Liberals who have been awarded appointments to the other place, and who do such a masterful job of manoeuvring and manipulating for that party, whether to settle a debt or not, do so under the protection of parliamentary rules, and are not faced with either questions, discipline, or punishment.

Any government which does not exercise justice at every level of public service—whether hired, elected or appointed to office—is not worthy of the power entrusted to it by the electors. As is usual, this government operates under the misapprehension that being a Liberal places a person in a secluded dreamland where impropriety, doubt, and the enforcement of justice dare not enter. When that thinking penetrates the public service, the danger point has been reached, and I trust the people of this country will be afforded the opportunity of demanding their rights.

Mr. Frank Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Madam Speaker, the problem here is that the PFAA administration has become caught up in the dog fight that has been going on between the Department of Agriculture and the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. I must say this started almost the day that the present minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board was appointed to that position.

I can have some sympathy for what the long time staff of PFAA went through when they were all dismissed this past Christmas because I was caught up in the same sort of situation. I was caught in the dog fight between a minister of agriculture and the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, though I must say it was the previous minister of agriculture. I watched the government place political expediency above the best interests of the western producers one time too many, with the result that we parted company. This was at a time when, in western Canada, we had a four bushel quota at $1.25 a bushel.

Hon. members opposite have said that western Canadians are considered negative and critical because of their opposition to some government programs. They say we can spend our time much better co-operating with the government. At least that is what the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) said. The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) wonders why they let the permanent staff of PFAA go and kept the casual staff. I suggest the answer is because the permanent staff knew a little too much.

[Mr. Towers.]

I have done my best in the past year to try to get some answers to questions posed today by members on this side, but I cannot get to first base. The one per cent levy was suspended on July 31, 1971. In the fiscal year 1972-73 after the act had wound down administratively, the travelling expenses of the PFAA group amounted to $1,000 per working day. So it is obvious that although they may have been winding down administratively they were certainly winding up politically. It was common knowledge in my area that members of the staff were very active in the last federal election. There is only one way to clear up any question in the minds of a good number of people, and that is to have a full investigation into the whole matter.

The last payments under this act amounting to some $5 million were made in 1972. In the period from 1939 to 1973 total payments under the act to farmers have amounted to $397 million. It is interesting to compare this figure, paid over some 34 years, with our grain exports this year. At the present time, compared with the same time two years ago, we are some 140 million bushels short. In other words we are $500 million short on exports this year compared with two years ago. This represents more than the amount paid out under PFAA between 1939 and 1973.

The PFAA staff were responsible for making payments under the grasslands incentive program and also for handling the LIFT program. Over the years PFAA programs have been operated mainly by the farmers themselves. They were the inspectors and they took information from their neighbours, and this legislation served its purpose well.

All of the goodwill built up over a period of 20 to 25 years has now gone out the window. As I have said, the administration, with few exceptions, was a credit to those involved. Let me go back to an incident that occurred a few years ago which, for political reasons, was blown up out of all proportions. It concerns a former supervisor in PFAA who was subject to an investigation under the act. The former member for Swift Current-Maple Creek had this to say of the commissioner's report:

> I would say it is a political report for more than one reason. Maybe the members of the committee do not know this, but I am informed that the judge who presided as commissioner, not in the capacity of judge but as commissioner, was a defeated Liberal candidate in the city of Moose Jaw. Not only that, his counsel, who acted for the government, was a defeated nominee for the candidacy of the Liberal party, and the second lawyer who acted for the government on behalf of the PFAA was a chief fund raiser for the Liberal party in the province of Saskatchewan for a number of years, and was chairman of the finance committee.

That is what this supervisor was up against. At the end of the commissioner's recommendation appears the following:

> I recommend that consideration should be given to placing the permanent staff of the Prairie Farm Assistance administration under the civil service of Canada in order to eliminate the possibility of political pressure being exerted on those entrusted with the responsibility of administering the act.

● (1720)

That recommendation was never implemented. Members of this staff who had served for up to 25 years were turned loose. Now we have a so-called group of casual employees, and the expense accounts have gone wild. The last annual report I received shows travelling expenses of $1,000 a day.

An hon. Member: If they are casual employees they must be going like hell.

Mr. Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): As far as I can make out, in the last two years the staff in Regina have been working in a make-believe world where the best of government public servants have nothing but despair. They have made plans, have had them signed, but then one of the minister's cronies thinks the plans may damage his standing, he buttonholes the minister and the plans have been scratched. And so another political debt is paid.

These Liberal party hacks and defeated candidates are becoming unique. They are becoming as important as they think they are. They can offer to open political doors, threaten public servants, and there seems to be nothing that can be done. This is nothing but a collection of Neros in the guise of public servants and assorted experts who do nothing but fiddle, scratch and jawbone away the time. I would like to know what these people are doing.

No attempt was made to modernize this act over the years. One of the criticisms was that the act could not be operated on an individual basis because it came under provincial jurisdiction and this would put it into the federal sphere.

The figures I look at show that we have between $9 million and $10 million left in the fund. I suggest this money should be transferred to the Canadian Wheat Board Pool account for disbursement, with the final payments to offset some of the approximately $30 million demurrage charges which accrued as a result of the west coast strike.

Any institutional setup develops interests of its own, but in its death throes the PFAA group has been solely concerned with its own status, its own funds, and jockeying for position. I raised the case of my constituent who was hauled before the commission to compare his situation with the present one. Certainly I think the present setup of PFAA is a perfect model of that mean little description of politics: who gets what, when and how? As I said before, the only way we can be satisfied is by having a full-scale public investigation into this matter, and I hope the minister will see fit to initiate one.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I have been interested for sometime in prairie farm assistance administration, but I was never more interested than I was when the Minister of Justice decided to eliminate the operation of this program, supposedly on behalf of western farmers.

I have listened with interest for the last hour, and I have read the report of the commission of inquiry into the Prairie Farm Assistance administration held in June 1964. Apparently there were two points of view in respect of this legislation. The first was that it had a great deal to do in the playing of politics. It is also interesting to note some of the results of that inquiry.

The remarks of some of the knowledgeable members from western Canada have been of interest to me. It was indicated again that the Prairie Farm Assistance Act has become a political football. I have been around here long enough to remember the antics of Jimmy Gardiner, a former minister of agriculture. It was once said that he came the closest to setting up an operation like the political Tammany Hall operation in the United States. That is probably true. That reputation will have difficulty in surviving if we continue to allow the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) to play around with agriculture in western Canada.

What has been done by the Minister of Justice in agriculture has certainly not been in the interests of a well organized change in farming legislation for western Canada. Some of the things he has done have had an adverse effect on the whole operation.

Mr. Horner: And they have not been compatible with justice.

Mr. Peters: Of course they have not been compatible with justice. Any school that would have this particular minister as an instructor of any sort must be the most ignorant school in Canada. Not a day goes by when I do not hear some misjustice that is taking place in the whole field of western agriculture.

We are now faced with the disposal of some $8 million left in this fund. This legislation has been in effect for many years and has done a great deal to help farmers in western Canada. I was interested to hear the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) point out how very small amounts of money given under this act had helped so many farmers in western Canada survive. He pointed out that amounts such as $400 or $500 helped to maintain the very economy of farmers in western Canada.

We should be putting the money that remains in this fund into a fund that will continue to be of assistance to farmers in western Canada. This money has been collected from the farmers in those areas where grain was the main crop, and many of those areas have been high risk areas over the years. I am sure there will be emergencies in the future, many of which could be met through this fund. If the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) would quit playing games with the Minister of Justice and administer this act as it should be administered, I am sure such an emergency fund could be set up so that whatever money is left could continue to be used to the benefit of those people who contributed originally to the fund.

Such a fund could be attached to the crop insurance program, or used as a separate fund for emergencies in western farm areas. The minister would get full credit for such a move, and would not be associated with the sole purpose the Minister of Justice has been trying to achieve for the past four or five years.

The last annual report I have indicates that no money was collected under this legislation for the 1972-73 crop year. It is interesting to note in that annual report that there were payments made in respect of the 1972-73 crop year. In Manitoba 910 awards were made amounting to $184,000; in Saskatchewan 5,223 awards were made amounting to $1,423,094; in Alberta 7,456 awards were paid, amounting to $2,150,755, and in British Columbia 668 awards were made amounting to $258,606, for a total of 14,257 awards.

An hon. member on the other side laughs, but let me tell him that those are farmers who have experienced a crop disaster and who have received assistance. He comes from an area where crop disasters take place occasionally, and I am sure that he would not expect other people to laugh at the plight of farmers in his constituency. I am sure he will not laugh to the extent of supporting the action of the Minister of Justice who wishes to eliminate this.

As I said, awards were given to 14,257 farmers in 1972 amounting to over $4 million. This is not a laughing matter. In my opinion it was of great significance to those 14,000 farmers in western Canada. Although they did not collect any money in 1972, there were awards, and I suggest that the minister should seriously consider whether or not he should drop the Prairie Farm Assistance Act and substitute crop insurance which is supported by the provinces and the federal government. He should consider whether he is not relinquishing his obligations and responsibilities to farmers in western Canada and transferring them to his colleague who is responsible for another portfolio. If that is what he is doing then I have little respect for him, as little as I have for the other minister who, I think, has played politics at a time when most of us thought that type of backwoods politics had disappeared.

It may be that the minister will want to add this money to a contingency plan as part of the crop insurance program. If he does that he will be substituting prairie farm assistance to farmers in Canada, and I give him full credit for making the effort to reduce premiums so as to enable a larger number of farmers to benefit from crop insurance. However, that will not be a satisfactory solution for farmers in any part of Canada until it is applied universally, and it cannot be applied universally until farmers can afford the payments, and in many areas that is not yet possible.

Other hon. members not representing western Canada are well aware of difficulties that farmers experience when various types of crops are destroyed by hail, frost and other weather conditions. Because of the diversification in Quebec and Ontario, farmers in those two provinces will not be able to take full advantage of crop insurance. Therefore it will not be available to many farmers in eastern Canada until this program is applied universally and until the levy is collected in the same way that it was originally collected under PFAA. I suggest that we are not really being fair to the people who impose this levy if we put the money into a stabilization fund because not only will a limited number of people be able to participate in the program on a voluntary basis but the program will be limited in its application.

A number of questions have been put to the minister which I hope he will answer. The minister has had dealings with labour and I know he has not been unsympathetic with regard to that sector of our working population, but I am shocked when I hear colleagues in both opposition parties indicate that there are a number of people whom we have employed under the act for up to 30 or 40 years who are being told to go on early retirement simply because we have not made the effort to provide them with other employment.

[Mr. Peters.]

When it comes to dealing with the grasslands program which is under the Minister of Justice, we understand that casual labour is employed because it is expected that they will spend their time working in his election campaign and therefore that is all right. I am certainly concerned about some of the other programs under which we have employed people over a long period of time, for example, under PFAA, particularly in senior positions, and gave them no protection under the public service act. In fact I would be surprised if any one employed under the Grain Stabilization Act was ever given the protection given by the public service act because, if that were the case, they could not be pushed around politically and that would not be the way to re-establish the Gardiner machine. I certainly hope that the minister will consider the point that I am making and that he will not play that game because it would not be in the national interest.

I have here the report by order in council, PC1963-1896 of December 21, 1963. An investigation was carried out by Mr. Justice Pope in which the names of the 12 or 14 people referred to by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain and the hon. member for Regina Lake Centre are mentioned. If you read the report carefully you will find that with one exception very little patronage was involved and few political shenanigans. One gets the impression that, except for some political interference, most of the employees under PFAA have been doing an excellent job and have put up a strong resistence to political interference. The report indicates that most of the employees are competent, diligent, and deserve to be employed in the public service until their normal retirement age.

The PFAA has been around for a considerable period of time. If my memory serves me right, about $15 million was involved when the grain stabilization idea was originally put forward. That amount was to go into the new fund which was to include several other funds as well. The carrot was added back in 1971, I believe.

Mr. Horner: It seems like a long time ago.

Mr. Peters: It appears that one has to fight the same fight continually for a long time to establish a reasonable and justifiable position. Back in 1969 a payment had not been made. Farmers had received out of the fund pretty close to $20 million. There has been no payment since 1971, and yet I understand that in winding up this act $7 million to $8 million remains to be disbursed.

● (1740)

I am not convinced that the transfer of this money to the stabilization act will be equitable, serve the purpose we intend, or provide the protection for which the levy originally created this money. I would much rather see the minister put it into a fund. I would much rather see the minister put it into an emergency fund which would be for use in the type of emergency we now have. I would like to see it related either directly or indirectly to the operation of crop insurance.

But I wonder how long it will be before we can really accomplish the things we wish to accomplish in terms of insurance for crops in Canada, particularly in various parts of Canada where the administration is different.

Normally in western Canada where there is a crop disaster of quite a large proportion it covers a large area and involves a number of farmers. In eastern Canada it can be in one particular crop, and wipe out that crop and have not much effect on other areas. It has been brought home to me very forcibly that crop insurance still leaves a great deal to be desired.

About five years ago in Ontario there was a disaster caused by weather conditions, and the Ontario government lent sums of $5,000 or $10,000 to replace crops so that farmers could stay in business. This year, with the cost of farm inputs being high, with a poor crop in Northern Ontario last year, the minister of agriculture in Ontario has put all those bills into collection, and he is using a collection agency to collect from the farmers. Crop insurance is still necessary for protection from disaster. I sincerely hope that we will continue to work toward providing a type of universal coverage which will cover not only crop economy but which will cover mixed economies.

I hope the minister will give serious consideration to sending this to committee. I agree that he has to be sympathetic with his colleagues, no matter how nutty they become. I think that he has to have some solidarity, but he really has an obligation to farmers as well. He should allow us to call witnesses. He should allow us to arrive, as representatives of farmers, at the best way of disposing of this fund.

I think he also has an obligation, in winding up the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, to provide for the staff being displaced. It is not as though this happened yesterday. I am looking at a press release dated July 16, 1971, when the then minister of agriculture, Mr. Bud Olson, announced the winding up of the PFAA, and he expected that to take place in May of the following year. We have been doing it for some time, and it seems to me that farmers would be better served if consideration were given to the best method of handling it, though not necessarily the most politically expedient for the cabinet minister who comes from that area.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, I realize that if the minister spoke now, the debate would close. I am very disappointed that some of the other members from Saskatchewan did not rise in their place and make an honest attempt to set aside the fears and the accusations which were expressed so vividly by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers), and others here this afternoon, with regard to an act which has served western Canada and the prairies rather well for some 34 years. I would hate to think that the Act is now being swept under the rug in a cloud of suspicion that the books are not accurately audited, and that the RCMP is carrying out an investigation, as we were told this afternoon.

If we pass this bill now there is reason to believe that, for some reason or another, the RCMP will not become awfully busy, and that the investigation they had attempted to start will lie on the shelf somewhere and never be completed. One of the basic concepts of democracy is that the government of the day shall be accountable to the elected representatives of the people. We have seen no accounting at all here today.

The RCMP is carrying on an investigation. The Auditor General has photographed all the books of the PFAA. Now the government wants to hurry and repeal the act so that the whole examination by the Auditor General's department can be forgotten, and so that the investigation by the RCMP can be forgotten.

The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale), who was in the House this afternoon, all of a sudden disappeared. Apparently the speech writers the Liberal party hire could not prepare a speech in time for him to speak this afternoon. That may be one excuse he will give to his constituents. I do not know. Where is the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. McIsaac)? Why is he not speaking in this debate and strongly defending the government's purpose for repealing this piece of legislation? The backbone of democracy must be that the executive is accountable to parliament. We have seen no accounting here today. No one has even attempted to account.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is an innocent bystander with regard to the operations of the PFAA. All of the accusations made this afternoon by speakers from the NDP and from the Conservative party have been directed at the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang), his manipulations and his delicate hand in the manoeuvering of the operations of the PFAA inspectors.

The hon. member for Assiniboia, who is a former executive assistant to the Minister of Justice, fled from the House when he saw that this was going to be a prolonged debate, when he discovered that he might be asked to do some accounting, and to rise in his place and make an attempt to defend the Minister of Justice.

Why do I say that someone has had his delicate hand in the operations of the PFAA? It has been made clear that the auditor has photographed all the books of the PFAA and that the RCMP is carrying out an investigation. There is, supposedly, $9 million in the fund. Bill C-30 does not mention any amount of money. Clause 1.(2) says:

● (1750)

> All moneys remaining in the Prairie Farm Emergency Fund immediately prior to the repeal of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act . . .

That does not say any specific amount. I suppose if we were following that we should have repealed the bill some years ago when there would have been more money than there is today. There would have been more after the 1974 election if the accusations made this afternoon are correct that some of the casual help spent as much as $1,400 in two weeks just prior to that election. At that time the director of the PFAA told them they were not to do work in that area, but they got authority from somebody else to do the work and spent the money.

It has been long established that the PFAA has been used as a political tool, a political machine. The name of Jimmy Gardiner has been mentioned this afternoon. He set up the PFAA to work just that way and do his bidding, whether that implied political doings or otherwise. Why do I say "political doing or otherwise", Madam Speaker? A lot of evidence has been put on the record this afternoon to the effect that most of the supervisors appointed were former candidates of the Liberal Party.

The Pope Committee which investigated some accusations made years ago pointed out that all of the supervisors were political appointees and that most of them were former candidates of the Liberal Party. All this has been said today, but no one from the other side has risen to defend the party. I can remember a former Liberal member for Assiniboia, who is now in the other place, Senator Argue, who used to speak at length about what a great tool PFAA was. If he were in the House today he would have something to say about the death of this legislation which served his constituency so well for 34 years. He would have something to say about why it can no longer function to provide a reasonable amount of security in hardship years for the area of Assiniboia. He often advocated in this House that the $800 maximum payment to each farmer be raised to $1,200, and at one time I believe he introduced a private member's bill to that effect. It would be as easy to justify raising it to $1,600 as it is to justify crop insurance in that amount.

There were faults in the act, and a good deal of politics was played in the administration of it. Those areas that had good crops claimed they paid a levy of one per cent to the PFAA and of course rarely collected anything. Those areas that were low yielding had a record of collecting nearly every year, or at least about three-quarters of the time. As a representative of one of the areas where high protein wheat was grown I can say that we felt the PFAA payment was merely a bonus for growing that wheat. We brought in protein grading, but there is no bonus for growing high protein wheat. You get the same price for it as for any other type.

Before this legislation passes, Madam Speaker, I think we should be told exactly how much money is in the fund, when operations under the Grasslands Incentives program and LIFT program actually ceased, and who authorized the people within the Regina, southern Saskatchewan and the Battleford-Kindersley riding to spend that money prior to the 1974 election. It certainly was not done under the authority of the director of PFAA. Have those accounts been paid and, if so, under whose authority? We certainly should be told far more than we have been told this afternoon.

I am disappointed at the government's attitude toward its duty to be accountable in the face of the accusations made here. In a democracy such as ours no one should be able to stand up in the House of Commons and make accusations of questionable administration and questionable handling of finances without someone in the government rising to set the record straight. There has been no attempt to do so thus far.

Mr. Whelan: Madam Speaker, on a point of order and just to set the record straight, on December 12, 1974, the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) directed a question to me asking if an investigation was going on. I replied, as reported at page 2189 of Hansard:

> Mr. Speaker, the inquiry is not completed, so far as I am concerned, but I was in the province of Alberta the day before yesterday and the preliminary reports contain enough information in my view to show that what took place was grossly overstated.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. This is a point for debate. Perhaps the hon. minister could make those comments when he closes the debate.

[Mr. Horner.]

Mr. Whelan: Madam Speaker, on a question of privilege, then, on behalf of the people—the innuendo that has been heard while this is before the court. It is before an inquiry at the present time. How can anyone really speak on that when an inquiry is going on? That is what I would like to know?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: Because there is an inquiry going on—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: In my 17 years in the House of Commons, Madam Speaker, I have never seen that kind of demonstration before—a deliberate clapping to attempt to use up the clock—to filibuster their bill so they will not be accountable for their sins. The minister stands up and says these investigations are before the courts. There is nothing before the courts. He is a member of the House of Commons, and every member of this House of Commons should advise in this debate today what they want the RCMP to investigate, what they want the Auditor General, who took the photographs, to look for in his investigation. It is their duty as representatives of the people to advise the RCMP and the Auditor General what to look for in their investigations. The government is not doing a very good job of accounting for their expenditure of the farmers' money.

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

Mr. Horner: May I call it six o'clock, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Whelan: On a point of order—

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): It being six o'clock—

Mr. Lefebvre: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. Just to make sure there is no misunderstanding and that this debate can continue at some other time, I should like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Renfrew North-Nipissing East (Mr. Hopkins):

> That this debate be now adjourned.

Mr. Horner: Madam Speaker, I have the floor. The hon. member rose on a point of order. He cannot rise on a point of order and move the adjournment of the debate until he gets the floor. I will adjourn the debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The hon. member for Crowfoot.

Mr. Horner: On a point of order, Madam Speaker, the hon. member, the whip of the government party, cannot move the adjournment of the debate without first having the floor. He rose on a point of order. I called it six o'clock, assuming that would be the adjournment of the debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. A motion is made by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) as follows:

> That the debate do now adjourn.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): It being six o'clock, under the provisions of Standing Order 26 this House stands adjourned, to resume at eight o'clock tonight. Accordingly I do now leave the chair until eight p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

[Translation]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE—EFFECT ON FEED GRAIN SUPPLIES

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) has leave to move the adjournment of the House under the provisions of Standing Order 26, for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, that is the longshoremen's strike in the ports of Quebec City, Trois-Rivières and Montreal, which is preventing feed mills from getting their normal feed grain supplies in order to meet the feeding needs of the livestock, thus threatening the lives of thousands of farm animals.

Therefore the motion is as follows:

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse), seconded by Mr. La Salle (Joliette), moved:

That this House do now adjourn.

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Madam Speaker, I must first of all—

Mr. Ethier: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): I apologize to the hon. member for Bellechasse. The hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Ethier) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Ethier: Madam Speaker, I should like to point out that only one Social Crediter was there to launch the debate on this very important issue.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I am sorry, the hon. member knows that this is not a point of order.

The hon. member for Bellechasse may continue.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Madam Speaker, I must first of all thank my hon. colleagues—

[English]

Mr. Fraser: On a point of order, Madam Speaker, although there are more Quebec members on the Liberal side than on the Créditiste side, it was a Créditiste member who moved the motion tonight.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. Again, this is a point of debate.

Mr. Lefebvre: On a point of order, Madam Speaker, I remind the hon. member that this is not merely a Quebec question, it is a national question and where you come from does not matter.

Mr. Fraser: Madam Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member would like to make his point when it is his turn to enter the debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Madam Speaker, first I should like to say in answer to the point of order raised by the government member that I am quite sorry to note that in such serious circumstances, one would pass the time rising on points of order merely for the sake of the matter.

An hon. Member: Such dirty politics!

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): If we pointed out the absence of some members each time they are not at their place, we would have fun doing it.

An hon. Member: We could start right now, if you like.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Anyhow, the sitting was to resume at 8 o'clock. I was here and I noted that many members were ready to support my motion and I gratefully thank them, especially the member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle). This shows that the opposition at least is unanimously ready to consider a very serious matter and help the government to find solutions and correct a situation before it grows worse.

● (2010)

First of all I wish to thank the Chair for accepting my motion and allowing this debate on a very serious problem, which will hopefully help me to get to the bottom of the matter and find solutions more quickly. I wish also to thank my colleagues in the House for accepting the ruling of the Chair. Even though it is Hockey Night in Canada this evening, our national sport, they realized that we must look into the problems of Canada first and enjoy ourselves later. That is why I am grateful to them. So, Parliament is at work even on a Wednesday evening, which I hope will be appreciated by the Canadian people.

I had moved a similar motion on April 9, but the Chair ruled it out of order, while urging me to keep an eye on new developments. I was told that if the situation deteriorated, I might have the opportunity to raise this matter again. Since the situation has indeed deteriorated, I have deemed it my duty to raise it again today. I am glad that an hon. member from another opposition party, namely the hon. member for Joliette, also felt that this matter should be brought to the attention of the House. This shows once more that Parliament, the highest authority in the land, must take its responsibilities when situations such as this seriously disrupt our economy and endanger this country's main industry, agriculture.

On March 19 last, an emergency debate was held in this House on the work stoppages in western ports. I took part in that debate in order to prove that although representing an eastern constituency, I share a concern for problems arising in western Canada. As I said before, all members should have common concerns in Parliament and we all have the same obligations to the Canadian people as a whole. Let me turn now to the subject matter of this debate, work stoppages in the Quebec ports.

For more than a week, the longshoremen's strike and its impact have prompted a number of queries during the question period. The bulk of the questions were for the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). They concerned feed grain supplies at the Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec City elevators, and also the feed mills' supplies in elevators and their ability to provide their customers with the feed grain needed. The minister's answers showed he was not overly concerned with the situation. As late as yesterday, the minister stated in answer to questions that there were adequate supplies in Quebec ports to meet requirements. Although I have no inclination to disbelieve the minister's statement, the situation prevailing today is different. I contacted the Bunge elevator in Quebec City around eleven o'clock this morning. As the president of the Farm Producers Union, Mr. Couture will testify, the manager told me he had in stock, at that time, exactly 62,000 bushels of wheat, 92,000 bushels of oats, and 65,000 bushels of barley. The Canadian Wheat Board had 12,500 He also told me he needs 175,000 bushels a day to meet the demand. Therefore, there are supplies for two days only. On the other hand, I am informed there are 498,000 bushels of corn. While it is always possible to feed cattle with corn alone, that will help them survive, but it may upset the balance of their diet entirely and cause losses to farmers.

At the elevators in Quebec City, last Friday, 60 trucks were loaded, 221 on Saturday, four on Sunday and 200 daily on Monday, Tuesday and perhaps today. Today, April 16, 50 per cent of the trucks loaded were from the Montreal area. This means that Montreal is getting its supplies in Quebec City. This means Quebec City is serving the whole region where production is the greatest.

Therefore, the situation is a tragic one. I am told that a hog producer was there at five o'clock on Saturday morning in order to get some feed. Only in the evening did he manage to get his load. He was crying with joy after he had loaded the feed he needed for his pigs which were beginning to eat one another. When animals start acting this way, they become a total loss for the producer. And this spells bankruptcy in a not too distant future.

The manager of the Bunge elevator in Quebec City told me that short of a miracle, he was not expecting a feed-loaded boat to dock in Quebec City before another eight days. One may readily see how precarious and serious the situation has become. He hopes that a barge loaded with grade 2-C barley now sailing on the Great Lakes can be unloaded at Quebec city even though its shipment is intended for export.

Shipping by rail remains, but only 40 per cent of the millers are served by that means of transport, and delivery is very slow. It takes weeks once the order is put in, before delivery.

Members of Parliament have received many telegrams from millers and various farming organizations describing the situation as tragic and calling on Parliament to put an end to these work stoppages which intensify the economic crisis our country is going through at this time. Consumers are faced with price and tax inflation. This inflationary thrust generates unemployment. Unemployment brings about a reduction in gross national output. The construction industry is idling. Bankruptcies are multiplying. Society in general is worried about tomorrow. Nobody trusts anyone anymore. People wonder whether essential public services will be working tomorrow. That is the situation in which we are now living in this country.

With all the difficulties in securing feed grains Quebec farm producers are wondering, and rightly so, whether they should continue operating.

The Canadian Livestock Feed Board was set up for a very specific purpose, that is to ensure that there is an adequate stock of feed grains and enough storage space to meet the needs of farm animal producers in Eastern Canada and British Columbia, contribute to reasonable stability in product and facility prices, and help to equalize feed grain prices for Eastern and B.C. producers.

So the board must assess the needs for feed grains as well as the storage space required, negotiate and coordinate activities relating to storing, handling, transportation and prices of feed grains. Such is the role of the Canadian Livestock Feed Board.

That board comes under the authority of the Minister of Agriculture. He therefore is responsible for supervising its officials closely and ascertain that they carry out their duties efficiently by resorting to the necessary means in achieving the aims of the board.

I do not wish to blame the minister severely for the shortage of feed grains in eastern Canada; still, I must point out to him that since the fall of 1974, I have been concerned with what would happen in the spring of 1975 when the consumption of feed grains would reach its peak. I am well aware of this because of my experience as a cattle producer.

I foresaw higher consumption of feed this Spring because breeders kept more cattle over the Winter, the price of beef being low in the Fall. Consequently, there was a greater consumption of hay which created a real shortage and not an artificial one, and a fantastic increase in prices. Such is the situation. The Quebec cattlemen, the farm producers must use more feed grain due to the lack of hay to meet the needs of their cattle.

Given this, it was still incumbent on the minister to see that there should be more feed in Eastern Canada. That was obvious last fall, and many questions were put in this House, even to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. The minister of Agriculture and the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board have both guaranteed that supplies were normal and that there would be nothing to worry about, even during the months of March, April and May.

On the other hand, I know that the minister of Agriculture has no jurisdiction on transport. He has to rely on the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Commission who, in turn, has no concern with the needs of the Feed Grain Board. That is why I propose, once again tonight, as I already did, that, as a means to achieve this objective, the minister of Agriculture responsible for supplying Eastern Canada with feed grain should have additional authority which should allow him to mobilize the necessary transportation means, when required to do so by an emergency situation, so that we should not be caught unaware and that farm producers of Eastern Canada and British Columbia should not be deprived of the feed grain they need to maintain production.

I believe that this kind of action would be a great step forward in the right direction, for the producers of Eastern Canada rely on the Feed Grain Board for adequate supplies, as grain producers rely on the Canadian Wheat Board for storing and selling their wheat at a good price.

The agricultural industry of Quebec plays a great part in the economy of this country, directly or indirectly.

Thousands of people rely on production, transformation or distribution of different products to live.

It is therefore a very important industry in the economy of our country, an industry that is of great consequence, and we, members of the Canadian Parliament, must take the means available to us to ensure its survival, in order to help prevent the unemployment rate from rising—it is already high enough—without forcing the farm producers who still have guts left to retire from business and live on social welfare.

I think, Madam Speaker, it is important for us to take the steps to ensure farm producers, those who still have enough courage to persevere in that essential industry, all that is necessary so they can count on the public power to restore order where there is disorder, in order that they have sufficient revenues to live reasonably. They do not want to become millionnaires, but they want to have a reasonable income which will allow them to live decently, to pay their debts, to support their families, to have their wives and children live in normal conditions, in a country where it is possible even for farmers to enjoy a good standard of living.

However, I acknowledge the right of the longshoremen to strike, but I think that at some point in a dispute, the right to strike must be weighed against the public interest, and in my opinion we have reached that turning point. In one year, twelve strikes have affected farm producers throughout Canada. So I think that we must have reached that turning point where the government must intervene and bring the matter under control.

If cattle is being slaughtered prematurely for lack of feed grain, producers will suffer a loss, consumers will not get a good-quality product and perhaps in a few months food supply problems might develop, with the result that prices will go up. Quality will go down and prices will go up. That is not the way we are going to fight inflation.

I have said before in the House and I express again tonight the opinion, about which I feel very strongly, that the cost of living adjustment of wages does not solve anything, prices keep on rising, there is further recourse to strikes for higher wages and we cannot escape the vicious circle. Another solution will have to be found.

Let us now consider seriously the number of strikes that occurred in Canada over the last year. That is an indication that the indexing formula did not solve much.

I notice that the discussion of problems we are experiencing seem to strike a member on the government side as funny. My God, if the Canadian people could see us behave that flightily, they would know why there are so many problems in Canada!

Mr. Lapointe: On a point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The hon. member for Charlevois is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Lapointe: The hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) appeared to be pointing at me when he said that we tended to take the debate lightly. Madam Speaker, I strongly protest against that accusation, because we are here for no other reasons than to discuss this important matter—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order. Again this is not a point or order but a point for debate.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Madam Speaker, I knew it was not a point of order. There was no sense in it being a point of order.

I suggest another way of giving more justice to workers. Parliament should adopt immediately a law to guarantee a minimum income for all workers. Such a formula would not be included in salaries and would not contribute to the price increase of things consumers must buy to meet their needs.

We live under a capitalist economy which is in a sorry plight and faulty in many respects. Therefore it is up to Parliament to reform it before it is too late.

That capitalist economic system will be reformed by order-loving men—that won't happen by itself—or it will be destroyed by others. Such a wave of strikes and demonstrations throughout this country should show us clearly that we must abandon beaten tracks, old methods, redress the wrongs so as to put an end to the exploitation of man by man, because that is also one of the causes for the strikes that keep on increasing.

We live in a society headed by a Parliament, by a government whose responsibility consist in providing for the common weal through respect for the legal rights of everyone.

Time has come for the authority to assert itself so as to replace disorder by order. All reasonable people have an eager desire for governments aware of their responsibilities and able to replace chaos by harmony—and most people still feel that way. One wants the rights of labour capital to be safeguarded, one recognizes the necessity for that. One recognizes also that the rights of money capital should be respected but one wishes both to work together in the best interests of this country. That is where the conflict lies, between those two forms of capital.

As long as those two forms of capital necessary for the country's prosperity will constantly be opposed, by no means will there be any social peace and security for the whole nation.

When the point is reached where workers are fighting other workers to deny them access to essential raw materials that would enable them to carry out their task, namely to produce food products to meet the needs of families, then it can be said that the situation has become extremely serious, that those who apply the divide and rule principle have achieved their end, and that time has come for parliament to introduce an emergency legislation and put an end to such situation as well as assure workers on strike that bargaining will be carried on until a final settlement is reached.

As a third means of providing farmers with necessary feed grain, I suggest—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has now expired. He would need the consent of the House to cary on with his speech.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The hon. member for Bellechasse has the floor.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): —I suggest that grain stocks that are stored in the Saint Lawrence elevators and designed to the export market should be transferred immediately in order to meet the needs of our domestic market, until a more definite solution is worked out.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, I must say that Quebec farmers, up to 1974, did not claim their rights too loudly. However, in the past few months the situation has changed, and they decided to demand efficient legislation from governmental authorities whenever a problem arises that might jeopardize the Quebec agriculture.

Quebecers consume each year $2.5 to $3 billion worth of products, and agriculture in Quebec produces only about $1 billion. So there is room for expansion.

Quebec obtains outside three quarters of its food products, in a packed, canned, ready-to-eat form. We cannot bear this situation too long, because there will be a time when we depend on other countries for our food.

Farm producers of Quebec have been faced with the problem of feed grains for years. At a time, it was because they were forced to pay higher prices than western producers. Their cost of production being higher, their income was reduced. This is why per capita farm income is lower in Quebec than in any other part of the country. The situation has improved a little. But in one year producers have had to put up with six strikes which crippled grain movement.

Now, Madam Speaker, in the face of such a serious situation, as sponsor of the motion, I wanted to stay serene but firm, and I can assure the government that I shall consider it as my duty to support a legislation designed to put an end to this labour dispute in all fairness.

[Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse).]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, it is not necessarily with pleasure that I am participating to this debate. It is a lot more by obligation and particularly because this situation cannot go on very long.

I too would nevertheless like to congratulate the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) for having put forward a motion identical to the one we had planned. I would also like to congratulate him for having reminded the House of certain statistics which show clearly that the present supply is clearly inadequate. I will not recall them, since the hon. member fo Bellechasse has mentioned them in a rather accurate way.

I have met this morning, Madam Speaker, with the officials of the Farm Producers Union who have drawn for us a picture of the situation, a very sad, not to say tragic, picture. Of course, there are probably some hon. members who did not want to accept the qualifiers I have been using today, and for the last two weeks. For two weeks, Madam Speaker, we have been looking for answers. The official opposition has asked the minister many questions. I would like to thank my colleagues who have supported the idea of asking for a special debate. For the past two weeks, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), whose absence tonight I regret although I recognize it is justified because I know that he is a very busy man, has not answered our questions. According to the information given to us the farmers, situation is precarious indeed impossible.

I was surprised these last two weeks to hear the Minister answer our question and even those of a couple of government members who were watching the situation daily and even hourly, without realizing the immediate need for a concrete and fast action from the government. In view of the six strikes which have plagued the farmers in less than a year, work stoppages are becoming a tragedy for agriculture and this time we are talking about the Quebec farmers. One month ago we asked for a similar debate in view of a situation with no end in sight. Today we are supporting a very particular point but which I suppose is of considerable interest to government members as many of them live in la Belle Province.

But, Madam Speaker, no matter how many pieces of legislation this government has proposed or will propose they will definitively be ruined by these work stoppages. The benefits that could accrue to the farmers are definitively outweighted by the problems resulting from these strikes.

I repeat that for two weeks the minister has been saying that he is watching the situation very closely and that things are not as bad as all that. Yet, this morning, the president of the APU told me about the situation. He was very concerned and thought that things could not go on this way very long.

On April 12, the secretary general of the Poultry Producers' Federation of Quebec, Mr. Jean-Marc Kirouac, gave the alarm. This was last Saturday. He said that the situation was dramatic but added that in the Quebec area, the producers had succeeded in getting supplies because the picket lines had let the millers through on certain days. Mr. Kirouac's panic is certainly caused by the absence from work yesterday of the grain elevator handlers because, without them, the millers cannot obtain grain even if they succeed in crossing the picket lines.

Mr. Kirouac also said that he had nothing against the strikers, that they were in their right since this is a legal strike. However, he held the government responsible for the situation because it is up to the government to solve labour relation problems so that no one may suffer from the government's inability to solve them. These are the words of Mr. Kirouac, a responsible man and an agricultural expert who could be compared easily to several members of the House.

He added that the millers must supply about 6,000 egg producers, some 15,000 poultry and turkey producers, 23,000 industrial milk producers, 5,000 plain milk producers and about 6,000 hog producers who cannot store grain for more than a week since they lack the space to do so. Consequently, they must get their grain from the ports on a regular basis.

Yet, Madam Speaker, this afternoon the minister said that it was possible for Quebec producers to go to Montreal even though he is well aware, but did not say that like the ports of Quebec and Montreal, on the few days when this was possible, served first their own customers, which prevented the others from obtaining supplies.

I therefore regret to say that the minister had either erroneous information or bad intentions. Knowing his honesty, I am more than willing to believe that he was ill-informed. But how could he possibly have been since within the government party there are enough Quebec representatives to inform the minister. He went on to add that he had no proof when the fact was mentioned that some producers, being excessively worried, had to lead their animals to the slaughterhouse. And the minister, in reply to a question I asked, said that such was not the case and that my observation was not justified. And yet, last April 13, in Beauce, for instance, an hon. member had surely informed him; he even asked questions of him, emphasizing and showing his concern. He questioned the minister and was not any more successful than we in obtaining an answer. For example, an inspector from the provincial Department of Agriculture disclosed that during last Friday alone a slaughterhouse in Beauce refused 40,000 hogs. And everywhere the same situation prevailed. The reason for it all was not that the hogs had not reached the slaughterhouse on time, but rather that the producers, in view of their concerns and impossible circumstances, obviously wanted to avoid the worst—famished hogs readily devouring one another.

These observations have been made to the Minister of Agriculture for more than two weeks ago, and we are scandalized to see that he was unable to give one or several replies or, at least, some type of assurance. The question was once again asked of him by one of my colleagues requesting some assurance that no producer would be lacking in supplies, to which question no one seemed to be willing to reply.

The minister did answer on a few occasions that in certain ports, there were some supplies. He seemed completely unaware that there is a lot of difference between the supplies themselves and the ready access to ports. Sure, in Quebec City, producers were allowed in freely for a few days to load their trucks, for silos were empty. But concerning supplies in the Trois-Rivières area as mentioned by the minister, which should account for a few more days supplies, there is no possible access to them. Producers are therefore prompted to turn not only to Montreal, but also to the province of Ontario, and especially the Prescott area for their supplies.

We already know what problems producers are faced with, problems of thaw and fines they have had to pay because their trucks were overloaded. The government of Quebec agreed yesterday to let producers load in whatever they could without necessarily being fined. Such is therefore the whole series of difficulties our producers are faced with.

The hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) mentioned that problem earlier and stressed its importance as we did within our own party, but we still expect a government answer to know on the one hand what is happening especially with respect to the agreement expired on December 1st, 1974, and on the other hand what solution the government intends to present this Parliament with in order to enable producers to get their supplies in a normal way.

Madam Speaker, those questions have remained unanswered for several days, and those are the reasons which led us to favour an emergency debate. We want the government to provide us tonight with the means of reaching a solution.

Maybe we shall be asked what solution we suggest. It is up to the majority government elected last July to provide this country with leadership and administration, and, therefore, to find solutions. God knows, Madam Speaker, how many solutions with respect to agriculture as well as in other respects we had during the electoral campaign.

An hon. Member: There still are some.

Mr. La Salle: Somebody says that there still are solutions. I sure hope we will know about them tonight. I hope so too for producers. I am not pleading for myself tonight; I said earlier that it was with great sadness that I felt I had to participate in an emergency debate because of the difficulties producers face.

An hon. Member: He is crying!

Mr. La Salle: No, Madam Speaker, there is nothing to cry about, as the hon. member says, and I know he will not cry over that, I know it well. In any case he sits on the other side of the House.

I think, Madam Speaker, it is urgent that government members who offer us solutions as valid as those they were talking about last July make them known to us tonight.

About supplies which the minister says are available to a certain extent and in a particular port, he is right, but he failed to add that accessibility is impossible. Where there is access there is no grain; where there is grain there is no access. The minister did not elaborate, yet he knows that. The consequences are serious for producers in view of added costs. The minister pointed out yesterday that he would be prepared to consider and examine additional costs and make a decision later on. The producer also needs to know, that is part of his concerns. He is concerned about not being able to get what he needs for his stock. That is very important. One can also talk about an animal being changed or upset by an altogether different diet, and all that because of the feed grain shortage.

All hon. members who follow the situation closely, and several sit on the agriculture committee, know what I mean and the kind of concern or difficulty that means to producers.

In spite of all these reasons and arguments that have been discussed for two weeks, we are still waiting for a solution, a proposal that we are ready to support and, hopefully, a worthwhile one. We ask only one thing; an adequate solution acceptable to both parties, of course. It is a not a matter, Madam Speaker, of condemning the union or condemning the strikers. Their contract expired on December 1, 1974. Why should negotiations drag on and on? How can one explain demands which to some extent seem founded? No one seems to be able to find a solution. What are we waiting for? That the farmers be even more helpless, that the people demand a special government legislation?

I know full well, Madam Speaker, that the matter was brought up in government caucus this morning. The Prime Minister said, yesterday I believe, that he was looking into the possibility of passing special legislation. Bearing in mind the public interest, that of the farmers, when are we going to decide that the time has come to straighten out this mess? That is what we are waiting for.

Will we see a repeat performance of the public slaughter of cattle we witnessed not so long ago in Quebec? Within a couple a days, Madam Speaker, because of the inertia of the government, we will face once again that spectacle both disastrous and revolting, but justified by the inaction of the government which refuses to assume its responsibilities. That's that, Madam Speaker.

I spoke this morning to the representatives of the the Agricultural Producers Union and the Feed Mill Owners Association. It is clear that the producers cannot tolerate much longer that inertia and lack of concern on the part of the government towards Quebec farmers. The APU and the Feed Mill Owners Association sent an SOS to the government: Something must be done. We, of the opposition, especially those from Quebec, who are living through those difficulties, and those from other provinces who understand them—and we will have proof of it afer my speech, Madam Speaker—are also appealing to the government.

Personally, I feel obliged to condemn the present attitude of the government because it has failed to intervene. What is it waiting for? I trust the minister responsible or other hon. members will give us an answer in a little while. Is the Quebec representation not sufficient to prove to the rest of the party that the situation is critical? Sixty Quebecers have failed to convince the minister in charge to do something. That is embarrassing, Madam Speaker. It is indeed embarrassing that 60 members have not been able to convince the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to do something in order to meet the pressing needs of the producers.

[Mr. La Salle.]

Therefore, I accuse the government, Madam Speaker, of having been thoughtless and weak in the face of their responsibilities. I accuse the government of cutting the Quebec producers adrift, even if this province has given much support to the government, it seems to me. I also accuse the Quebec members of unforgivable negligence towards the Quebec farmers, and at the same time, I urge the Quebec producers to remember in due time this obvious act of cowardice at such a difficult time.

Madame Speaker, it is hard to accept these criticisms. If the government intends to introduce a special legislation, I hope it will find another solution. They have some responsibilities with respect to negotiations which should be progressing and are not, contrary to what one of the ministers has said; the Acting Prime Minister did say on April 10 that negotiations were going along well, despite the fact that they had been interrupted since April 2. This information was false and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) kept on saying for two weeks that the situation was not as bad as suggested. Today there are opposition members, apart from the Quebec members, who are aware of the situation. There are also members on the government benches who are aware of the situation and I urge these gentlemen to be honest and to assume their responsibilities towards the farmers of Quebec. If ever they have wanted to provide answers and make a positive gesture which could breed results, the opportunity is theirs this evening.

Madam Speaker, I know that many speakers will rise after me. Before concluding, I urge the government to provide answers for producers, not merely for us, but for them through us. It is our duty to beg for such answers this evening and I venture to hope that the government will become more sensitive and less unconcerned that in the past two weeks.

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I hope the Opposition members will allow me to deal with the statements made by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) and the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), who jointly moved this motion.

I should like first of all to tell hon. members that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) would have liked to be in the House from the very beginning to take part in this debate. As hon. members doubtless know, this special emergency debate was agreed upon at the very last minute. A Cabinet member as active as the Minister of Agriculture never refuses an opportunity to make a speech on a Wednesday evening, and he had already accepted an invitation to have discussions with farm producers from Eastern Ontario. He has assured us that he will try and return to Parliament as soon as possible. Should this debate continue late into the night, he will certainly be able to take part in it.

As a matter of fact, I do not think there is a single member who would dare blame the hon. Minister of Agriculture for carrying out his duties and acting quickly in any emergency. In fact, Madam Speaker, as I was listening to the trivial statements made by the hon. member for Joliette, to his unfounded accusations and partisan remarks, I felt there was no need for the Minister of Agriculture to be here and listen to all this in order to find solutions, for the hon. member for Joliette had none to suggest. To his credit, I must say that the hon. member for Bellechasse has at least tried, although with limited success, to make concrete suggestions for solving this problem. And I want to say, not only to the hon. members for Bellechasse and Joliette, but also to all other members present in this House, that the government has assumed its responsibilities in connection with this problem; in fact, we did not wait for this special debate in the House to act and, although this may not be very pleasant for certain hon. members of the Opposition to hear, I am going to quote figures and indicate steps which were taken by the government over the past few days to try and solve this problem.

I have something else to say, particularly to the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) who persisted in putting all the blame on the government and especially on Liberal members from Quebec. The hon. members for Bellechasse and Joliette stressed the fact that they had spoken today to the president of APU, Mr. Couture. I also spoke with the president of APU today. But to make it a point of honour to have contacted the president of APU today is really, in my opinion, vacuousness.

I say that every day of the week several Liberal members of the House, be it the member for Frontenac (Mr. Corriveau), the member for Richelieu (Mr. Côté), the member for Laval (Mr. Roy), the member for Gatineau (Mr. Clermont), the member for Compton (Mr. Tessier), the member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Lessard), the member for Portneuf (Mr. Bussières), the member for Charlevoix (Mr. Lapointe), the member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Béchard), and the list is surely not complete, are concerned about the problem. I see the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Pelletier) who is behind me. All those members look actively after Quebec farm problems and speak regularly throughout the week either to the president or to members of the APU executive.

I see the hon. member for Matane (Mr. De Bané) and the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Carron) who took an active part with me and with other members I already mentioned and others who are not here tonight, in meetings with various farm groups from Quebec. Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Joliette has no lesson to teach us on that score.

Madam Speaker, I have only one other thing to say to the hon. member for Joliette. To hear him speak, one would think that the government is depriving farmers of their grain on purpose.

Mr. Boulanger: That is nasty.

Mr. Ouellet: According to the substance of his remarks, the government is to blame for its failure to take action. Little or no mention was made of the real problem—the real cause of this difficulty, of the longshoremen's strike in the Quebec, Trois-Rivières and Montreal ports.

Madam Speaker, to blame the government as a whole because this strike is not settled yet does not take a lot of imagination. Does that mean that the hon. member wants to deprive the workers in those ports of the right to strike? Does that mean that the longsshoremen should not have the right to strike? Does that mean that regardless of the workers' wage demands, regardless of their claims, the government should readily comply with them? They are irresponsible demands in some cases. Does that mean that every time a conflict may arise, since the interests of certain groups might be affected, the government should abdicate its responsibilities in an irresponsible way and settle at any cost the labour dispute?

The hon. member for Joliette did not have the smallest element of solution to suggest in this labour dispute which is nevertheless very important.

I think it would be advisable to enumerate the actions taken by the government these last days to bring elements of solution to the problem. We know that, precisely to help the supply, the government rerouted a ship so that it would unload its cargo at Prescott, a cargo of 825,000 bushels. More than 150,000 bushels have already been delivered to the province of Quebec. This is something that has been done in that field.

I would like to echo the remarks of the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) who mentioned in his comments certain figures concerning supplies in the port of Quebec. I do not have any reason not to believe that the majority of those figures are exact, that is that a cargo has recently been unloaded in the port of Quebec, so that there are now some 719,000 bushels in the port. It is true that some 498,000 bushels of American corn constitute the most important part of that reserve.

And the hon. member is probably right in saying that this corn could be used but could also disturb the normal feeding methods.

Those bushels are there and they could be used if an agreement could be reached to allow the millers to cross the picket lines and go and get the grains.

I may say also that there are more than a million bushels in the Port of Trois-Rivières, some 211,000 bushels in the port of Sorel and more than 2,724,000 bushels in the port of Montreal.

I do not know if the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) ate corn before coming to the House, but I think he should better listen carefully to what I say, because we are trying tonight to find some elements of solution to this serious problem. And I agree with the hon. members for Bellechasse and Joliette, and with the other members on this side of the House who said that the situation was serious, that every effort must be made to enable the millers in Quebec to lay hands on the grains that are now stored in Quebec ports.

The figures I just gave show that there are grains in sufficient quantities for about a month. At the same time, I can assure the members that three ships are now sailing towards eastern Canada and St. Lawrence ports loaded with more than one million bushels. Which might also help to solve the problem.

However, I would like to remind the hon. members that yesterday, grain handlers in Montreal voted against a work stoppage. Of course, that alone does not solve the problem, but it is something encouraging, one less obstacle, and an important sign in the present conflict at the ports of Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec City.

Madam Speaker, injunctions which have been taken and gave results have been mentioned in the newspapers and various sectors. In fact, an injunction was issued in Quebec City last week following which it was possible to move out considerable quantities of grain which were stock piled in the port of Quebec city.

I must mention that tomorrow, other injunctions are to be requested in Trois-Rivières and Montreal and I assure the hon. members that, in the discussions which I had today with the chairman of the UPA, I insisted on the fact that the UPA could, through its members, request injunctions and should at the very least try to make the longshoremen involved understand that there is some urgency and that they should show humanitarianism and allow the mill owners to load up the supplies which they need urgently. This matter was discussed with the chairman of the UPA and we shall be getting in touch again during the next few days to see what these next steps will bring about.

However, in replying to the completely unfounded accusations of the member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), I must remind the hon. members that the government has established a service which loads hopper cars in Thunder Bay to bring grain to eastern Canada. Today, 59 hopper cars were loaded and are now headed for eastern Quebec. Steps taken by the government have brought about the assurance of 300 Canadian National hopper cars in at Thunder Bay for the exclusive use of grain bound for eastern Canada.

The Canadian National and Canadian Pacific have assured the availability of 200 hopper cars for other more remote points in eastern Canada. So I can state that through the government initiative and especially the work performed during the past few days to cope with that condition, it is entirely false to maintain, as the member for Joliette has suggested, that the government has not tried to cope with that difficulty while respecting the basic right of the longshoremen who are on a legal strike in the ports of Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec City.

An hon. Member: Farm producers also have rights.

Mr. Ouellet: Obviously, Madam Speaker. To my mind, there is not a single member of parliament, who does not recognize farm producers some rights. That matter is not in question here. There is no need to make a series of speeches to pay homage to the farmers. I am sure we all agree on that.

I feel that the action of the government, through its agricultural policies in the last few years, has proved categorically and fully to what extent, under the leadership of our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), it has endeavoured to better understand and help Canadian farmers.

I would even go further, Madam Speaker, and say that the government is fully aware of the situation. When there is a strike, the Prime Minister said so yesterday, there always comes a time when public interest must be weighed against the right to strike. The government and the cabinet are now looking into that matter. At this point in time, Madam Speaker, I doubt that it has time to legislate the strikers back to work in the ports of Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec City.

To my mind, if the right to strike is to have any meaning, if it is to be of value to Canadian workers, the time and possibility to use it must be allowed those to whom it was given.

An hon. Member: You are not doing anyting.

Mr. Ouellet: I must say a few things to the hon. member who, I suspect, would like that right to strike withdrawn since he told us to assume our responsibilities without being specific about how to do this, unless it is to order the strikers back to work.

I am sure, Madam Speaker, that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), in close co-operation, have been watching the situation closely on a daily basis to ensure that the rights on the one side will not result disastrously in the suppression of the rights on the other. When time will come to act more drastically, if need be, the government will not shirk its responsabilities. It has acted often in the House by bringing in legislation to force strikers back to work. But that cannot be done without due consideration each time a conflict is brewing somewhere and causes some difficulties.

Eastern Canada farmers have to face problems. I have mentioned some measures taken by the government to alleviate them. I am confident that such provisions are, will be and will keep being applicable and that there will be no need to legislate in order to withdraw the right to strike from workers out on a legal strike.

[English]

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Madam Speaker, unfortunately we are having too many of these Wednesday evening debates.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peters: It is an indication that there are a number of problems which this government is not facing up to before they becoming emergencies.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peters: I was very interested to hear the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) defend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). That is certainly a switch. I think that in itself is worth the price of admission to tonight's debate. The minister agreed that there are certain problems and that the government has had to take some unusual measures to deal with them.

I am glad the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) and the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) proposed this motion which I believe highlights the fact that the government is not facing up to problems as they develop and before they reach crisis proportions. I do not come from the affected area but I imagine the problem is neither as bad as has been stated by the opposition nor as good as has been stated by the Minister of Consumer and Coprorate Affairs: the truth lies somewhere in between.

I was surprised to hear the minister say that the opposition should suggest solutions to the problem. I remind him that four or five years ago we established the eastern feed grains board for the purpose of guaranteeing supplies to eastern Canada. If the minister knows the provisions of the act under which we can bring grain from the Lakehead to the eastern market and have the federal government pay the eastern feed grains board for the transportation costs, he will know what we are concerned about.

Not long ago we dealt with difficulties concerning longshoremen. Some members tonight have suggested that since the government intervened on the west coast, it should intervene on the east coast. I remind the minister that many of the problems in the ports of Montreal, Three Rivers and Quebec are the result of government intervention in the last contract negotiations. I am referring to the way we settled the longshoremen's strike. When we sent the workers back, we locked them into a contract which was to run to the end of December. Not all ports were involved. The port of Saint John was not involved in that return to work legislation! workers there, in early December, negotiated for a cost of living increase and that settled the problem in the area. The legislation ending the eight-week wildcat strike in 1973 did not allow for the reopening of the contract. That is why we are facing problems at this time connected with cost of living escalator clauses.

Surely parliament will not be asked to intervene in every labour dispute. Some members suggest that strikes are not in the national interest. I suggest that not all strikes involve the national interest. Obviously, the strike we are considering affects a number of farmers in Quebec who are supposed to be serviced by the eastern feed grains board. After all, we set up this board so that it could provide, free of charge, assistance with feed grains. The government, if it so wants, can move grain to eastern Canada by rail. That movement need not cost the farmer a penny; the government can pick up the tab.

The problem we are discussing concerns, it seems to me, Quebec in particular. It concerns, more especially, the major ports, Montreal, Quebec City and Three Rivers—perhaps I ought to say Trois-Rivières—and, as well, Baie Comeau. The guarantees have been given. The machinery for settling this problem exists. Is this, then, a matter involving the national interest? Is there not legislation for dealing with it? Clearly, what has happened has inconvenienced farmers, distributors and producers who need feed grains for their operations. But the government can supply that feed grain from Thunder Bay. The mechanism exists for providing it directly to those who want it.

It is easy to criticize the government, to be wise, with hindsight, and to say we should have adopted a different or a better feed grains policy or we should have provided financial assistance. I know that what is happening may be causing hardship to certain farmers. I also know that most people are not overly concerned about labour disputes affecting others. Only when a dispute affects one directly does it become a national issue: that is the attitude of many people. I remind the House that when it intervened only one year ago to settle the dispute affecting Montreal, Three Rivers and Quebec and eliminated a cost of living clause from the contract, it sowed the seeds for the present strike which is affecting the same ports.

Recently we were involved in some difficulties concerning longshoremen and management. Allow me, Mr. Speaker, to read an extract from the Montreal Gazette of October 29, 1974. The headline of the article is "Longshoremen, management talks on new contract open." A paragraph of the article reads:

> "The port of Montreal is doing well and the other two are having difficulties," says one shipping agency president here. "Why should we pay for the others? Let each one stand by itself and if one port has trouble—well, then, just close it."

People who have experience with contract negotiations and have dealt with management know only too well that the general attitude is, "Well, Jack, we are all right in Montreal and to hell with you in Trois-Rivières and Quebec City." That was the management's attitude in dealing with longshoremen, and it did not help. We know that Judge Alan Gold was appointed as mediator in the Quebec longshoremen's strike and submitted his report on March 19. The report was accepted by the MEA, but rejected unanimously by the International Longshoremen's Association on March 27. Shortly after that, the Quebec minister of agriculture, Rene Toupin, sent a telegram to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) asking for an injunction ordering the 2,200 longshoremen back to work so that grain supplies to Quebec farmers would be assured. Let me point out that longshoremen are not primarily concerned about the movement of grain. One wonders why management wanted an injunction ordering the longshoremen back to work when the longshoremen were not involved in the feed grain contract.

In the present case, the longshoremen's union says that the wage proposal is not bad. It amounts to a 57 per cent increase over the three-year life of the proposed contract. So the longshoremen are doing better than members of parliament who are working on the basis of a four-year contract, so to speak. The most contentious issue, say the longshoremen, is job security. Perhaps hon. members should look at that clause because they may need to be as concerned about job security as the longshoremen.

At the present time, when we are seeing technological changes, the mechanization of industry, advanced work techniques, and so on, we have not been able to establish a satisfactory way of resolving labour-management problems. We in this country have not been able to do anything about establishing any form of industrial democracy in the negotiations we conduct between employers and employees. In the case of the longshoremen they point out that the wage increases that have been offered—and they are not bad—can be easily removed if the payment of those wages is on the basis of possible deductions from the total annual guaranteed income which they had previously, and which they were able to improve by working overtime, when necessary, without losing any of their yearly benefit.

● (2130)

Under the terms of the Gold proposal, by working overtime they were, in effect, having this deducted from their annual guaranteed income. Therefore they might not be any better off at the end of the year than they were previously. The Gold solution really applied to the hours of work and was satisfactory. However, it did not solve the problem of the technology being used on the waterfront. Although we have been faced with this problem at least twice a year, we have not arrived at any solution.

I do not believe that, every time a segment of the population gets into trouble, parliament should be asked to do the negotiating. If we do, we will get into the kind of trouble we now have with this longshoremen's strike. The problem is that when we settled the longshoremen's strike last year we did not take into account the rising cost of living. Therefore these people were worse off after we settled their contract than were their fellow workers in St. John's who were able to negotiate a cost of living escalator clause before the end of their contract. That eliminated the problem for those people. If we pass legislation we will continue to have that kind of problem. I am very concerned because we are not able to handle the problem. We are spending a lot of money. We established a board to regulate. However, we are still running into this kind of problem.

The Eastern Feed Grain Board has the right to bring in grain from Prescott, corn from the United States, and grain from Thunder Bay in any mix it wishes. The Feed Grain Trade Assistance Act will pick up the tab for those shipments, but they must be made by rail as opposed to bringing them in by boat.

I suggest that the government is not blameless in this instance. If the feed grain agency is not working right, we should know it. The Minister of Agriculture was asked about this. He should have been prepared four or five days ago to give a detailed description of the efforts being made by the two or three agencies directly under his control. That information should have been made available to all members of this House. It is not good enough to write it out for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to give to the House when there is an emergency. That information should have been given to the House when it was requested. All members are interested in heading off the problems we face, and we are going to have a number of these problems.

The Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) is here this evening. I suggest the next problem will be in his department. But the problem is again being attacked in the wrong way. It has been decided that by using the position of the minister the problem will be solved. However, if there is going to be a problem, parliament should know the position the government intends to take so that it can try to do something about negotiating that problem.

In every strike in which the federal government has been involved, the cabinet has put more money into the settlement rather than setting up legitimate eye to eye negotiations so that those on both sides of the fence know exactly where they stand. We have already legislated the longshoremen back to work. It seems foolish to compound the difficulty by again sending them back to work.

What do we do now? Do we send them back to work with Gold's suggestion for a three year contract, 57 per cent across the board, and add to that a cost of living clause, or do we negotiate what kind of jobs the longshoremen will do, what kind of work in which they will engage, and the type of responsibility the NEA will have to the employees? Are we going to negotiate the details of contracts? If we do not do that we will get into the same box we got into last time.

The reason for this debate is that the government has not taken parliament into its confidence. We have not been asked for our views on how to solve this particular problem. Some useful advice will come out of this debate. It would have been free for the asking if the government has sought it before the problem developed. When questions are asked in the House about government departments or agencies, the ministers responsible should give full reports.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to take very long. I know that the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), and others, want to participate. Nor do I want to address myself too deeply to the specific merits of the strike in Montreal, Three Rivers and Quebec.

I usually agree with the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) on a philosophical base. I do so again this evening. If I had to agree with him on a factual base, I would know a lot less about the strike than when it first occurred. The fact is that there has not been a legal labour strike in the port of Montreal since 1966. I do not think the same can be said about many other ports in the world.

The last time we legislated a settlement in the House of Commons that involved the ports of Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec, it was to bring to an end an illegal work stoppage on the part of the workers undertaken for reasons best known to themselves, when they decided to ignore a collective agreement which had been signed in good faith. They decided that the quickest way of settling the dispute, which could have been settled through a grievance procedure was simply to walk off the job. That is hardly the type of action that is in the best interests of the labour movement or industrial relations in general.

There are very good reasons why I do not want to get involved in discussing the problems of Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec, which some people know. I have had a close relationship with the Port of Montreal as a member for Montreal, as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour, and as a Minister of Labour. In each of those roles I participated in the disputes that were occurring there in the early sixties as the industry began its transition from being a labour-intensive industry to the capital intensive industry it is today. Whatever the hon. member may say about industrial democracy, and about employers in the Port of Montreal, there is one thing he cannot take away from those employers; the fact is that when they found it necessary to reduce the work force by 800 people they at least paid each and every one of those workers a $12,000 indemnity. I should like to see more employers, including the government, put that into practice.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: The hon. member for Timiskaming is perfectly right when he says that each time parliament has to settle a legal strike we are weakening the collective bargaining process. He is a legitimate labour representative; he understands this, as I think most of us do, and I agree with him wholeheartedly on that. But the whole system is under review by the public for a variety of reasons. One of those reasons is the tendency of labour, and sometimes of employers, to ignore the law of the land and to take the law into their own hands to settle disputes which could be settled by means of the channels provided in every collective agreement in the country.

The hon. member referred to the Post Office. I do not intend to use this debate to talk about the Post Office, though I may say I am certainly not as pessimistic as is the hon. member for Timiskaming, and as a number of other members appear to be. Indeed, I am optimistic we shall get an agreement in the Post Office without a strike, because I believe that 99 per cent of the people who work in the Post Office are decent, law-abiding Canadians who simply want to work in dignity and peace, and who fully intend to do so. It is my responsibility as Postmaster General to see whether we cannot clean out of the Post Office those bully boys who tend to dominate the 99 per cent. It is my responsibility to help do this, and that is exactly what I am doing.

As to the question of feed grain, the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) made a point, as did the minister. It was good, honest debate on the question of whether there is sufficient feed grain in the elevators or not. If there is not, then certainly there should be. But the more fundamental question is this: if the feed grain is in those elevators, what is preventing merchants from going there to obtain their feed grain if they wish to do so? The fact is that they are being prevented in some instances by people who believe that the way to settle disputes is through violence.

Picket lines are a legitimate expression of freedom, an informational device which should never be banned under the laws of this land as some people advocate. At the same time picket lines should not be used as a means of bullying decent citizens who wish to exercise their rights and follow their normal activities. It would not matter whether all the elevators in eastern Canada were chock full of grain if the Province of Quebec, where the injunction has been served, does not have the courage to instruct its police forces to provide the necessary protection for the people who want to go into these elevators and acquire the grain.

It is ridiculous, listening to the radio, to hear the Quebec deputy minister of agriculture seeking to shift responsibility to the federal government when it is a provincial responsibility to protect people after a court has decided, on hearing the evidence, that an injunction should be granted.

I shall not get into the argument about the three ports where these strikes are occurring other than to say that the longshoremen are on strike legally. I would be the last to deny them that right. In this area I share the sentiments of the hon. member for Timiskaming. After all, I can remember as far back as 1965, which is not such a long time ago, when the men had to drink out of what amounted to garbage cans; when there were no facilities for them to wash their hands on the waterfront, when people were hired on a daily basis, and when they had to bribe officials in order to get a job. That is all gone and, if it is all gone, it is because employers, as well as employees, have recognized the need for change.

We now have an enlightened management in the ports at Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec—a very enlightened management there. This does not mean employers are right in this case, nor does it mean they are wrong. All I know is that the best brain as far as port problems are concerned, Alan Gold—he is not a mediator, as the hon. member told us; he is a conciliation commissioner—was named by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) to endeavour, on the basis of his experience, to come up with what he believes to be the best solution to the problems of the port, in the interests of both workers and employers. I do not intend to pass judgment as to whether his solution, guaranteeing 1,600 hours to workers, $13,000 a year to work in Montreal, is sufficient. That is not a judgment for me to make. It is up to the workers themselves whether they feel they should accept or reject a guaranteed annual income of $13,000. I simply think a lot of people wish they had that guarantee.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: I do not disagree that they have the right to reject it if they feel that to do so is in their own best interest—after a strike lasting two, three, four or five months they may conceivably end up with a better settlement, possibly $500 more. That is up to them.

The point which has tempted me to participate in this debate has nothing to do with that particular aspect. It is interference by forces outside this country, namely, one Mr. Gleason, President of the International Longshoremen's Association, from the City of New York, who, from his headquarters there, has decided to dictate to the longshoremen of this country what is in their best interests. I say to Mr. Gleason: Stay home and mind your own business.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: Let the Canadian labour movement solve its own problems. If Mr. Gleason had his way he would lock up the Port of Toronto despite the fact that there is no right to lock it up. The ports of Trois-Rivières, Quebec and Montreal are on strike legitimately. The same Mr. Gleason is interfering with the ports of Saint John and Halifax, and if he has his way he will lock up all these ports in order to divert work to New York where, incidentally, he accepts the same contract as he is recommending the longshoremen of Montreal to reject.

Sometimes you have to do hard things to help your friends. I have not been happy in the last two weeks taking what has been described as a hard line in the Post Office. But what has it been? It is simply that you respect the law, that you respect a collective agreement, that you respect your own signature; that if you have an honest difference of opinion on the work site—and that happens daily—you take advantage of the grievance procedure and obtain justice in that way. If in the public service the grievance procedure is too slow, and it is, then we as a government and as a parliament have a responsibility to see that justice is done by speeding up the grievance procedure. I hope that this is one of the recommendations that comes out of the joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons when they complete their hearings.

As the hon. member for Timiskaming said, there are many other recommendations that are needed to bring collective bargaining in the government into the twentieth century, instead of it remaining in the nineteenth as it is at present in too many respects. I agree with him, but you must be realistic and work within the framework that exists. Sometimes you have to substitute goodwill for legality. That is the only way to bring peace to the post office until the legislation or the rules under which they have to bargain in the interval are changed, hopefully for the better, depending on the wisdom of the people who participate on that particular committee.

Coming back to the matter of feed grain, there is feed grain and there will be feed grain in sufficient quantities for the farmers in the east. The question is: Will the people be able to obtain it in a peaceful manner? That will depend upon the ability of government, federally and provincially, to see that the law of the land is enforced for the good of democracy, which is the reason we are all here.

I just want to say that it is a sorry day when an international president, in this case of the longshoring industry, can dictate to law abiding longshoremen in Saint John and Halifax—

Mr. Forrestall: They did not listen to him in Halifax.

Mr. Mackasey: No; Halifax had the courage to tell him where to go, and I am doing the same thing tonight. If the longshoremen in Saint John understand, they will look after their own interests and tell him where to go as well.

I get excited about this, Mr. Speaker, but there was an award obtained from an arbitrator in Saint John forbidding the longshoremen to pick and choose among the ships in the harbour in Saint John. That is an approach that will eventually kill the port of Saint John just when it is becoming known around the world as one of the more productive ports in the world, with a good work force, deep water, good facilities, and the ability to handle containers. Yet we have this gentleman from New York telling the industry at Saint John: "Refuse those ships because I, your international president, tell you to do so". I am telling the people of Saint John that if they know what is best for the labour movement as well as for themselves they will tell Mr. Gleason to stay in his ivory tower in New York.

As far as the strike in Trois Rivières, Quebec and Montreal is concerned, as the hon. member for Timiskaming has said, it has to be settled. Each and every time we settle a strike in parliament we conceivably weaken the industrial relations process, but not nearly to the degree it is weakened when public opinion gets fed up with people taking the law into their own hands. The purpose of parliament is to take decisions even when they are unpopular.

Mackenzie King, who knew as much about labour as any of us living today, said that when private rights become public wrongs then it is time for members of parliament to act on behalf of the public, even if temporarily it removes the rights of private groups—in this case the MEA and the longshoremen. Sooner or later if they cannot settle their dispute, in the best interests of the public we will have to settle the dispute in parliament, even if we have to nationalize the ports, seize the MEA, take over the longshoremen and dictate the conditions of operation through a trusteeship, if that is necessary. But I do not think we will need to go to that extreme; I am sure there is a settlement somewhere in the offing.

However, I do know one thing. In order to make the economic forces even, which is really what collective bargaining is about, it is imperative that the strike be limited to those ports that are legally struck, which are Montreal, Trois Rivières and Quebec, and not extended to Halifax, Saint John and Toronto, which are not in a position to strike legally, and which are according to the injunction which I have read tonight for the first time, not in a position under their collective agreement, according to the arbitrator who granted the injunction, to pick and choose which ship they will discharge or load in those particular ports.

If everyone respects the law and respects injunctions which the court finds necessary to make, if the longshoremen at Saint John do what the longshoremen at Halifax do and tell this American fink that they belong to his international union, that they are proud to be members, but that they are Canadians and want their own autonomy, that they do not need him to tell them what to do and thank you very much, that they will remain open and service their customers and retain their reputations as good ports, I am sure there will be a solution found to the problems of Montreal, Trois Rivières and Quebec.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member for Calgary North rising for the purpose of asking a question?

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, Mr. Speaker. First of all I should like to congratulate the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) on his very able speech.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: Has he any formula—I listened to him very carefully and he came almost to that conclusion—under which a union like the longshoremen's union which deals with all ports could arrange for all its contracts to become due at the same time, so that if there were a settlement in Vancouver there would be a settlement all across the nation from coast to coast? This would mean we would not have a strike going on at ten or 12 ports at different times throughout the year. I ask this question rather selfishly. I am from western Canada, and not only is Quebec suffering tonight but grain is not moving out of the prairies to supply cattle and poultry in Quebec.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has asked what we used to call a $64 question. I have always said that industrial relations are human relations. Just as you cannot legislate a happy marriage, you cannot legislate industrial peace. You have to work at it, and sometimes we are rather intolerant of that fact, and this is one of the problems.

One of the encouraging things that I have noted about this parliament is that we do not always tend to blame the labour movement for industrial strife. We forget that one of the problems in Vancouver was what we call the stuffing and unstuffing of containers. We talked as though the union were attempting to obtain that right when in reality they had that right. What the strike was about was management's determination to remove that right. You remove the right through collective bargaining by a fair exchange.

The problem in the three Quebec ports, if I may say so, stems from the fact that last year some 1,500 longshoremen were not remunerated to the extent of some $12,000. They were guaranteed, however, 40 hours' pay weekly if I recall, regardless of whether or not they had to work.

This is a very generous contract like the one signed in New York by Mr. Gleason, but I have no way of knowing whether the contract is viable. It is suggested that this new contract creates a financial burden that will make it impossible to maintain operations, particularly in view of the vagaries of economic conditions around the world. It is very difficult to maintain the volume necessary in order to maintain this type of contract.

Let me say specifically that I believe there are too many units. We must remember the strike of the blue collar workers which caused so much havoc and that this was due to the number of public service departments involved. As far as I am concerned, the unit was spread too far across involving too many departments of the government, increasing the opportunity of the workers to defy the law and injunctions. The injunctions were not for the purpose of disseminating information but, rather, to harass the people who would otherwise have been pleased to cross the picket line, mind their own business and do a day's work. In other words, if everybody obeys the law, then a strike will have minimum effect, not doing too much damage other than to the parties that find their differences too great to reconcile, therefore leading to a strike.

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin by paying my compliments and the compliments of my party to the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) for introducing this motion today. In view of the remarks of the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) in the last few minutes, I think I should invite all hon. members of this House to join me in expressing appreciation to the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) in joining the hon. member for Bellechasse in presenting the motion, giving us the opportunity to debate a matter which every member of this House who is sincere about serving the public interest of Canada cannot help being concerned about. I want to say, through you, Mr. Speaker, that there is a great deal of truth in what the Postmaster General has said, and I hope much of what he said will receive approval from both sides of the House.

I think it is important that we remember that the subject which brought on this emergency debate tonight is not used as an attempt to debate the issues between the Maritime Employers' Association and the longshoremen. This motion is not an attempt to debate the question whether longshoremen in ports other than those that have been struck have been obeying the law or carrying out the terms of their contracts. There will be time enough to debate that matter.

The Postmaster General quite properly alluded to certain things going on which are wrong and about which we all know. The point at issue tonight, I am sure all hon. members agree, arises from the fact that the producers in the province of Quebec have come to members of parliament on all sides of the House stating that they need help. This motion introduced by the Créditiste party and by the hon. member for Joliette on behalf of my party did not come out of the blue; it came as a direct request by the producers of the province of Quebec for help. In fairness, they did not come to members on just one side of the House, as the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) appeared to suggest. That minister had quite an enjoyable time for a few moments naming the members—and he gave their ridings—who had discussed these problems with representatives of the producers in Quebec. Let it be very clear to everyone in the House that these producers felt it necessary to come to members on this side as well. Just as I am sure members on the government side listened, members over here listened.

The question to be answered in this debate is whether the government has satisfied us that the complaints of those producers are being met by some sort of government action, or whether in fact the complaints are well founded. I listened extremely carefully to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and made notes of his points and the steps he said the government had taken to allay the fears of the people from his province who came to him and to us, and in looking at that list I hope the minister does not expect us to take him seriously.

I am quite sure the gentleman I met this morning in the office of the hon. member for Joliette would not take seriously what the minister said. I am sure that hon. members on the government side, especially those from the province of Quebec—a province that I love dearly and which gave so much to this country—will not believe the minister. I do not suppose it is my place, as a relatively new member of this House, to unduly chastise a member of the cabinet, but I suggest—we are entitled tonight—as are the people who came to us asking that we bring on this debate—to hear a little more from the government side about the factual situation, what has been going on and what is being done about it.

With great respect to the Postmaster General, who touched on a subject that is very important but not the subject of this motion, we did not hear from the two ministers who spoke tonight a single word about the actual situation respecting available feed grain supplies for the farmers of Quebec. It does not matter how you want to slice it, that is the fact. I invite hon. members to examine Hansard in French and in English and I suggest they will not find one assurance that there are adequate and available supplies of feed grain for the farmers of la belle province. We have not had a single assurance.

Furthermore, there has not been a single suggestion tonight by any member on the government side—and we have heard from two members of the cabinet—regarding the government's intentions. In fairness, the Postmaster General said, and I agree with him, that no union in this country, no matter how justifiable its grievance, has the right to take the law into its own hands. It should be made very clear at this time, if it has not been made clear before, that every member of this House who has the public interest at heart agrees with that sentiment. I agree wholeheartedly with the Postmaster General, as does my party.

However, when you have a situation in which exactly the opposite is taking place, what does the government do? It is not good enough for the Postmaster General to ask why the provincial authorities should try to blame the federal authorities for these difficulties. This is a labour dispute that comes within federal jurisdiction, and it is incredible—I say this without attempting to use language that is extreme—that three ministers who should be involved are not here tonight.

Where is the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro)? Where is the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan)? We understand that he refused to give up a special engagement, in spite of the fact that the House of Commons of Canada agreed to an emergency debate on a matter that affects the livelihood of the farm producers of Quebec who are responsible for a tremendous portion of the food production of this country.

Where is the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand)? None of the ministers who should be here tonight are here. We heard a very fine speech from the Postmaster General on a subject which is not at the centre of the debate tonight. I know that hon. members will agree with me that we have not had answers to the two crucial questions which the representatives of the farm producers in Quebec brought not just to me, not just to my colleague, the hon. member for Joliette, not just to the hon. member in the other party, the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert), and not just to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs or to a number of other hon. members to whom he referred tonight. Those representatives brought their problem to the House, and we have an obligation tonight to try to meet that problem with facts and at least a recommendation from the government side, or some indication as to what the government will do about it.

If that had been put forward, then of course it would be the responsibility of members on this side of the House to say something about the proposed measure, either in praise, in criticism, or as suggestions to try to improve it if necessary, or support it if it were found to be satisfactory. But we have nothing to bite on, and if any one had been listening to this debate for the last several hours, any one who had stumbled in from another planet, or even, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said, any one 50 yards from the hill, that person would have wondered what in the name of heaven we were debating. It is incredible to me that after producers from Quebec have come here and spoken to members from every party in the House and asked for help, we put on a performance such as this one tonight.

This is not good enough regardless of whether one comes from the province of Quebec or from the province of British Columbia, as I do. I am sorry to have to say that to hon. members, but I am saying it because it is true, and I might as well say it now because some of us undoubtedly will be asked tomorrow by some of the producers from Quebec what in the blazes we were playing at tonight.

[Mr. Fraser.]

I have not risen in the House tonight to say that the solution to moving the grain is to end by legislation the legal strike taking place, but I am prepared to rise in the House to say that there is a time when, barring other methods, a selective form of legislation may have to be brought forward to meet a situation which is biting at the vitals of the economy of the province of Quebec through a sector of the economy in Quebec, and which is striking at the capacity of farmers to produce food for Canadians. It may well be that such selective legislation should be considered.

I listened to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs tonight when he made a long speech about the right to strike. I believe in the right to strike, but I do not believe that any right within a civil community is absolute, and I do not think most hon. members do so either. I see the following statement in today's issue of the Montreal Star:

> And, in Ottawa, Prime Minister Trudeau said ministers are looking at the possibility of federal intervention to end the strike.

Perhaps the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has not got around to reading the Montreal Star. I am sorry that he is not in the House now, but perhaps some one will show it to him tomorrow morning.

Now I want to raise a matter which I find quite incredible, and I think that even my friends on the other side of the House will recognize the logic of what I am about to say. Again I will quote from the same article, and I ask hon. members to listen to these comforting words. This is about the Minister of Agriculture. The article reads:

> Answering questions in Parliament yesterday, federal Agriculture Minister Eugene Whelan hinted strongly that his department would compensate farmers for the extra feed costs resulting from use of the more expensive truck and train transport.
> "We've always looked after them in the past," he said.
>
> Should federal aid fall through, Mr. Toupin pledged his support for provincial compensation to the farmers.
> He said he felt the federal government should pay for the extra costs since it had jurisdiction over the strike.

Surely in the name of heaven you do not defend the right to strike by calling on the taxpayers in Canada to pick up the tab for the guys who are getting it in the ear. It does not make any sense.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fraser: We have not had answers to those questions tonight.

Let me come back to what the Postmaster General said in terms of the difficulties in this particular strike. I do not want to interfere with the negotiations, although I understand that they have broken down and I should like to hear from the Minister of Labour what is happening. But one thing I do know is that the Gold report came down on March 14. On March 24, 1975, the Maritime Employers' Association accepted it. If anybody would take the trouble to look at the Gold report they would recognize that the employers accepted the recommendations in one of the most comprehensive conciliation reports that has ever been written or filed in the history of Canadian labour affairs. I am sorry that my friend, the Postmaster General, is not here now because I am sure he would agree with me.

What is happening now? What will we be faced with? What will happen if tomorrow, because of the vagaries of the court system, somebody will not be able to get the injunction which the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs said should be obtained at Trois-Rivières? He said that an injunction could be used if some agreement could not be found across the picket lines. He suggested that he had said today to Mr. Couture that the UPA could ask for injunctions as an agricultural organization. But could they in law? What contractual right do they have?

It is not easy to walk into a court and obtain an injunction. I see hon. members on the other side nodding their heads and I know that some of them are learned in the law, which is a great contribution that they bring to this House. It is not that easy to leave problems of settlement to recourse within the civil legal system. There are times when the government must step in. I am not advocating for one minute that every time there is a work stoppage, especially a legal one, parliament move in carte blanche and wipe out the right to strike. But there are times when certain action must be taken, we hope, on a selective basis only.

If the threat that faces the producers in Quebec is that they will not have sufficient feed grain to feed their poultry and livestock and that their poultry and livestock will have to be slaughtered prematurely, perhaps at the wrong market time, and if they are slaughtered other than in the normal course of the agricultural business year, plenty of members on the other side of the House know perfectly well how that dislocates the entire agricultural economy and how it upsets the stability of supply which is necessary to maintain stable prices for the consumers in Quebec and outside Quebec who buy those products. All hon. members agree with this.

I say to all hon. members tonight that we have not had an answer to allay the fears that have been brought to us personally by representatives of the farm producers in Quebec. I also say with great regret that despite some of the oratory tonight, some of the invective, heckling and good natured boisterousness which goes with debates, especially debates that take place after the supper hour, we have not heard from the government a specific answer or a program to meet what may well become a very serious situation within a few days.

● (2220)

In closing, Mr. Speaker, let me remind all hon. members that when the Minister of Agriculture was before the television cameras this afternoon, as a result of questions asked by hon. members on this side of the House he admitted that he could not give any estimate of what the amount of feed grain for consumers in Quebec would be in a few days' time. That is the situation we face, and it is a situation in respect of which there has been no answer this evening.

[Translation]

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, since the beginning of the dockers' strike in Montreal, Quebec City and Trois-Rivières, its effects have appeared to become ever greater as days went by. The sector of the economy most severely affected at the present time is that of agriculture, and should such a situation persist much longer, the effects would prove disastrous, even in other sectors of the economy. As a result, I wish to make my contribution to the present debate by supporting very strenuously the proposals of my colleague, the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert), who moved this important motion which is now before the House. I also take this opportunity to congratulate the hon. member for Bellechasse on having raised the issue several times. It simply means that he had foreseen the need for this conflict to be settled as early as possible so as to prevent extremely serious consequences.

We are now placed before the facts and have to recognize the need to take definite steps in the very near future.

On a few occasions, the Minister of Agriculture indicated there was no need for alarm about the present conflict. On the one hand, he pointed out that there was a certain amount of cereal reserves in the grain elevators, and on the other hand, that the millers as well as the people in charge of transporting the grain to the agricultural producers had access to the ports for supply purposes. The reason behind the minister's statement was probably that he wanted to avoid interfering in the conflict and reassure the millers as well as the agricultural producers.

The situation, Mr. Speaker, has now considerably changed, to the extent that the reserves previously extant in the grain elevators are now, for all practical purposes, completely expended. As a result, the House of Commons is no longer in a position to ignore the situation and can no longer wait to take action because such idleness on its part would risk demolishing an agricultural system that is already sufficiently weakened in eastern Canada, and more particularly in Quebec.

I do not intend to describe the pitiful condition of our agriculture, for I did it earlier in this House, as I indicated the excessive cost of farm inputs, the decline of net farm incomes and the market fluctuations in that economic sector. However, what I want to emphasize is that if our farmers are now short of feed for their cattle, in addition to the rest, it might do them irreparable harm. Are we going to witness more auctions? Is the flight of our farmers to cities going to increase further? And furthermore, who is going to carry on farming?

These are very important questions, because, if agriculture is to be weakened further by an extension of the strike, that will have an impact on the rest of the economy and finally, the consumer will have to foot the bill. In fact, everybody is loosing in that sort of situation.

As for the strike itself, Mr. Speaker, I am not saying that the longshoremen are wrong or right. However, we must admit that more and more workers of various sectors are frustrated, they feel unsafe and fight a systematic and continuous increase of the cost of living, which compels them to always ask for more, and more and more often.

I also notice in this conflict that the UPA did not find advisable to ask for an injunction against the longshoremen. They let the Coopérative fédérée du Québec do so because their opinion is that they are an association, therefore a union, and they do not want to fight another union. They would like the government to incur all the odium of the conflict by putting the strike to an end through an act of Parliament. I say here that the leaders of the UPA see the members of Parliament, irrespectively of their party membership, mainly those of the government, they come to us, they go to the neo-democrats, to the progressive conservatives, they often meet members of the cabinet, but they say: It will settle by itself. Mr. Speaker, who meets the greatest difficulties, but the producers? Therefore the producers, through their association, should take advantage of the law, ask for an injunction against the longshoremen association, ordering them to let the millers get feeds to distribute to their customers. It is once again the same old story of Pontius Pilate washing his hands. We know that. One has to have guts enough to state that in the face of the whole population, particularly that of Eastern Canada and of the province of Quebec.

I sincerely wish that the present situation, added to all the ones we have been experiencing for some months and some years, will be a lesson and that the government will come to grips with the labour matters.

If we have to pass emergency legislation once again to get those people back to work, let us do it. However, that should be the last time. I notice by the gestures of the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Lajoie), that he seems to be aware of the matter. Since I arrived to Parliament, this is the fifth or sixth time we came back, we even had to come back in summer time, in July, to pass emergency legislation, because no understanding was possible between employers and employees. I understand that it is due to the spiralling increase of the cost of living, and that is inflation. I believe that the federal minister of Labour, together with his provincial counterparts should agree once for all to pass comprehensive legislation in order to put an end to that kind of strike.

The government must find once for all a permanent solution to all those conflicts which are growing in number and increasingly undermining our economy. Besides, that does not solve anything since there is no end to it! We are going through increasingly difficult years and, in my opinion, it is our duty to focus our efforts on the search for new mechanisms especially adjusted to our times of constant economic disruption. I would even say that the right to strike should in fact be now considered as outmoded since it no longer produces expected results.

Those are the points which I consider to be of the utmost importance in the present debate, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, I feel that we must at any rate give farmers the immediate guarantee they will be able to get necessary supplies for their cattle. On the other hand, I ask the House to consider as well to set up new playing rules in the labour field, so as to avoid once and for all to have to intervene by passing more and more emergency legislation.

Mr. Léopold Corriveau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, let me first say that I am glad to have the opportunity to address the House on this matter.

May I point out to some opposition members who mentioned that the Minister of Agriculture was not here tonight that we have a very active Minister of Agriculture who wants to protect the interests of farmers. For those reasons, the Minister of Agriculture is not here tonight to take part in this emergency debate.

As some of you know, the Minister already had an engagement to meet a group of producers in eastern Ontario and at the same time attend a consumers' symposium. When you deal with agriculture, you necessarily have to deal with consumption, and I think the Minister of Agriculture is quite aware of it.

Mr. Speaker, since the beginning of the longshoremen's strike in Quebec, several statements have been made which were either exaggerations or half-truths. As Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture, I would like to address myself to those remarks, thereby putting the situation in its true light.

When it became apparent that a strike was imminent, the minister immediately contacted his officials and assistants and asked them to keep him informed of every development taking place in eastern ports, particularly in Quebec.

Most members know that the Canadian Livestock Feed Board is responsible for ensuring adequate supplies of feed grains in eastern Canada and British Columbia. Unfortunately, we have had five strikes within one year. Some members, like the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) and especially the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin), have been telling us tonight that an emergency legislation should be passed to force the longshoremen back to work, when last Sunday at a convention which seemed to be a national mini-convention in my area and in my town, asbestos strikers were called upon on the radio to continue their strike in order to press their demands and earn better wages.

I think the hon. member for Richmond should expect asbestos miners not to be all "dummies". You cannot have it both ways, that is three days earlier, he said to the strikers: Continue your strike, apply all necessary pressures on mining companies to claim your rights; and tonight, he asks the government to present an emergency legislation to force longshoremen back to work.

I believe this is playing with people's feelings. I hope the same member will be forced to retract his statements over the radio stations in my area and tell asbestos workers now on strike: "I lied when I told you I supported the strike, because three days later I stated in the House of Commons that a back-to-work legislation should be voted concerning the longshoremen strike.

If in each of the five strikes we have had in one year's time the government had brought down back-to-work legislation, we should seriously consider with drawing workers the right to strike. But this government in not anti-labour. We trust the unions and the people now negotiating to bring about a settlement that is fair to every Canadian.

As I said, live cattle deliveries to Quebec slaughterhouses are being monitored—and I stress this because it has been submitted a while ago by some members that Eastern Canada slaughterhouses are congested because producers were unable to get feed grain and apparently a majority of them were sending their cattle in.

I must emphasize again that the minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has been monitoring the number of heads of cattle slaughtered, and the situation is similar to that in the same period last year.

So the government is having a clear picture of the situation. Let me now give a brief outline of events in each of the Eastern ports. In Quebec City, supplies come and go normally in the port since saturday evening, because longshoremen complied with injunctions secured by some companies. There is presently no general shortage of feed grains in the Quebec City area. Present supplies in Quebec port elevators now amount to 700,000 bushels.

Hon. members will be happy to learn that 150,000 minots were delivered to millers today.

During the first day of the strike the port of Montreal operated normally. So the problem only started recently in that area. An injunction was served on Montreal longshoremen. I agree with members of the opposition that the injunction is perhaps half respected but I think it is not incombent upon the Department of Agriculture or the government to provide millers who go in the port of Montreal to get supplies with the security they need to get their supplies out. Picket lines are perhaps respected but perhaps half respected. Trucks are allowed to load but they will find a way of boycotting delivery, that is they cause difficulties to truckers by puncturing their tires.

I think it is not incumbent upon the Department of Agriculture to provide police service within the port to ensure that trucks can run freely.

If truckers who want to deliver feed grains encounter other problems in the city of Montreal, it is not up to the Department of Agriculture to provide police service. It is transporting a problem in another jurisdiction.

Madam Speaker, there are now 2,500,000 minots in Montreal elevators. It is a matter of respecting the injunctions now in effect to allow millers to go and get their supplies and providing them with the security they need for the transportation of feed grains and I think, Madam Speaker, that we do not need special legislation to solve the dispute.

Mr. La Salle: This is what we want.

Mr. Corriveau: Agreed. The hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) says that this is what we want, but we tried to learn more. I listened carefully to the hon. member for Joliette and I tried to understand his suggestions. He wants to have it both ways. We should perhaps pass a special legislation, we should perhaps ensure feed grain supplies. We are aware of it. We shall have to take the necessary steps. We have taken some.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but I wish to remind him that he must always address the Chair.

Mr. Corriveau: Excuse me, Madam Speaker, I was carried away by the heat of my discussion with the member for Joliette who is asking questions.

An hon. Member: The member for Joliette does not understand a thing.

Mr. Corriveau: Madam Speaker, I apologize once again.

I would like to refer to the situation in the port of Trois-Rivières. Up to now millers in the area have managed to obtain feed grain from Montreal or Quebec City.

The elevators in the port of Trois-Rivières now contain over a million of bushels.

There have been instances where farmers in possession of extra supplies offered them to millers or to other farmers.

Madam Speaker, I know that tomorrow injuctions will be granted agains the Trois-Rivières harbour stevedores, and if the Eastern producers obtain such injunctions at this harbour, the situation will be corrected.

Mr. La Salle: If, if—

Mr. Corriveau: The hon. member for Joliette says: if, if. I carefully listened to the suggestions he made a few minutes ago, and I found nothing in them. Madam Speaker, I wish you would ask the hon. member for Joliette to listen, and afterwards, other members will be recognized, perhaps opposition members.

I have also heard reports to the effect there is cannibalism in some piggeries in the province.

Experts from the Department of Agriculture tell me that this problem could be caused by a more or less adequate management rather than by a shortage of feeds. Any member of Parliament who has any experience in farming knows very well that a certain degree of cannibalism may occur at any time whenever the management is not sufficient.

To this day, there has been no major change in the live cattle trade. Madam Speaker, that is what I was saying a while ago. We are keeping an eye on the slaughter houses to find out whether more cattle are being slaughtered than usual.

The hog trade would be in fact a lot more indicative than the cattle trade. There were fewer hogs slaughtered this week than last, which means that there is no serious shortage of feed grain in Eastern Canada.

What steps has the government taken to maintain the supply of feed grain in the province of Quebec? They have decided to dock a cargo in Prescott, Ontario and have her 850,000 bushels of feed grain delivered into the province of Quebec. And yet, there are people who say that the government has not assumed its responsibilities.

An hon. Member: It is too late.

Mr. Corriveau: I should like to invite the hon. member who just said that it is too late, to at least listen, take note of my figures and check them.

An hon. Member: Tell us that the UPA people have lied.

Mr. Corriveau: We talked to them.

Madam Speaker, those 850,000 bushels represent at least three quarters of the total volume of western feed grains required weekly by the province of Quebec. Tomorrow, freight cars will be loaded for shipping to Quebec millers.

Moreover, two ships are now entering the St. Lawrence river: the Thornhill, carrying 450,000 bushels of feed grain and the John Misner, carrying 270,000 bushels of grain also. These two ships could dock at any port, depending on the regional situation.

In Thunder Bay, the number of cars loaded with grain increases from day to day. There will be a meeting tomorrow to discuss the possibility of further increasing the number of cars loaded each day.

The railway companies have promised the government at least 300 cars at Thunder Bay, if the situation so requires. In addition, they promised cars coming from Ontario loaded with feed grain to be delivered in Quebec.

According to another rumour, it is more costly to move grain from Thunder Bay to the province of Quebec by rail than by boat. According to the figures of the Department of Agriculture, this is not the case. We should also consider the transportation costs accrued between the port of Thunder Bay and the Quebec mills.

As a rule, people forget there are transportation costs from the elevators to the mills. After a comprehensive study, one finds that transportation costs are often the same.

In brief, the government is aware of the circumstances and recognizes there is a problem which might become rather serious. The government took some measures to help farmer and provide further assistance. Exaggerated rumours do not help to solve such a problem. The Minister of Agriculture said in this House that he would not let the livestock die. He has devoted all his energies to this matter up to now, and I do not see what could prevent him from keeping on working in the same direction.

Madam Speaker, when one says that the government has been inactive and has done nothing, I feel that time should be taken to have a good look at what the government has been able to accomplish at the present time, not with a view to trying and interfere with the settlement of the strike, but rather trying and understand the trade unionists as well as the farmers. I feel that all government members who have spoken tonight have not tried, as was well evidenced a while ago, to play a game on two levels, that on a given day, people are visited in a region and encouraged to strike, and on the following day, they are visited in another region and told: The government should legislate, the government should adopt special legislation, the government should do this or that. Madam Speaker, I believe that the government has taken a totally different course of action.

An hon. Member: That's easy to say.

Mr. Corriveau: Necessarily these are very practical matters. I was saying earlier that we had stopped a ship at Prescott to be able to supply eastern Canada. The railway companies have promised to make more cars available to the government if necessary. These cars shall be available at Thunder Bay and in Ontario, as required. A meeting will be held tomorrow in Thunder Bay to discuss the possibility of increasing the number of car loads to be shipped to Quebec. A meeting will take place with the province of Ontario, on the possibility of issuing special regulations for the Quebec flour-mill trucks that are to load supplies in the port of Prescott. There is at the present time an agreement with the Quebec government, with the Minister of Transport, allowing truckers to move grain so that they will not be limited to half loads. Tomorrow, the government will get in touch with the Ontario government, and ask for the same privileges. Contacts have already been established. Millers from Ontario co-operatives are allowed to carry full loads on the Ontario Highways, but a law was passed recently that does not allow other trucks then those belonging to co-operative millers to move very heavy loads on the Ontario highways. This will be discussed at a meeting between the federal government and the Ontario government and, Madam Speaker, I am under the impression that the Eastern Quebec producers will be listened to. I have tried to give an account which provide perhaps a clearer idea of the situation in Quebec. The farmer from Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner), is going to speak.

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Madam Speaker, I can hear the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Corriveau) say: The farmer from Saint-Hyacinthe is going to speak.

It would be doing me great honour to credit me with the qualities, the attributes of Saint-Hyacinthe farmers. I admit however that my experience in agriculture, my knowledge of agricultural problems is in inverse ratio to the distress I feel about the problems affecting farmers of Saint-Hyacinthe. So, Madam Speaker, it is with very great pleasure that I shall take part briefly in the debate, remembering that at the outset, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister or the chief whip, the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Lefebvre), if I am not mistaken, said on a point of order that the matter under consideration is a national problem.

● (2250)

And he is right. The problem is of national importance—which may perhaps explain the absence of almost the whole cabinet from this House tonight—and a problem to which no hon. member should be indifferent. It is of national importance, and so much so that not only has the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) been sitting in his seat here since the start of the debate, but representatives of all the provinces of Canada on the opposition side will have the opportunity of making themselves heard, of pleading the case of the Quebec millers and of saying openly to the government that, to them, this is not a problem of secondary importance, and that when there is a crisis in Quebec they are so deeply concerned that they are moved to champion the cause of the people, the consumers and the farmers of Quebec.

It is with special gratitude, therefore, Madam Speaker, that I address my thanks to the hon. member of Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) and the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) for having moved this debate, for having assumed their responsibilities and having made heard the voice of the opposition.

Madam Speaker, concern has been expressed about the absence of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). Some elements of explanation have been provided.

Mr. Corriveau: And true ones.

Mr. Wagner: True ones, and which we believe. However, this afternoon, when the emergency debate was agreed to by the Chair, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) uttered a few words, shall I say so sweet, which were recorded and reported to the media, he said something like: "Why waste such a lovely evening?" So it was the prospect of that spring night which made him decide that he had better go and talk elsewhere than listen to hon. members and have the opportunity to act. I readily agree, Madam Speaker, that having lenghty debates will not help solve problems. However, it is surprising to get tonight from the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Corriveau) a series of figures, disclosures, and informations which we have been demanding in this House, day after day, for the last fifteen days, and it will have taken an emergency debate for us to get that information and to lead the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) and others concerned to tell hon. members: waht is the root of the crisis we are witnessing in Quebec?

Madam Speaker, I am surprised and I think to myself: the Minister of Agriculture may think he is lucky he escaped the questions and cross-examinations by members of Parliament tonight, but tomorrow when he reads Hansard, he might consider himself slightly less lucky since his cause was pleaded by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet). I must admit, Madam Speaker, it seemed a little bit strange. It seemed a bit strange to suddenly see the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs come to the rescue of the Minister of Agriculture, and in an outstanding display of solidarity take up his cause and make himself his spokesman. We were then reminded of the days of the old solidarity when, on the matter of eggs for instance, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs made statements totally inconsistant with what he thought of the Minister of Agriculture's activities. So maybe he was just paying him back in his won currency when he was led tonight to plead so vehemently the cause of a man whose action he had unfortunately stigmatized several times in the past. In any case, Madam Speaker, lucky or not, the minister will have the opportunity tomorrow to read everything that was said and to draw his own conclusions.

I would not like to forget to welcome particularly the speech of the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey). Members for Verdun have a very special way of saying things, they are vigorous and I see that the former as well as the present members for Verdun do not change, for the well-being of Canadian society.

Madam Speaker, I would now like to say that my colleagues have showed firmness to this moment, in particular my colleague from Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), who depicted very clearly the disaster of which Quebec farmers are now the victims. The supply of feed grain is disrupted to such an extent that Quebec farmers are forced to send their cattle and poultry prematurely to the slaughterhouse. Soon this premature slaughtering will upset the whole market, which is already so unstable, very soon production costs, already too high, will be accordingly increased and once more, consumers will pay the bill. However costly and dramatic the present Quebec longshoremen strike may be, and however costly it may be for cattle or poultry producers, I do not intend to blame the longshoremen alone for the feed grain shortage in the province of Quebec.

I know what were the recommendations of Mr. Justice Gold. I am particularly aware of this clause 1.09 of the Gold report which says, and I quote:

> The operation of any rented equipment, unless otherwise specified, is a duty that does not fall on longshoremen.

I also know that a new mobile hour system is proposed which may jeopardize at least to a certain extent the job security of longshoremen in Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec City.

But since the longshoremen by going on a legitimate strike have succeeded in making the governments of Ottawa and Quebec and the general public aware of the problem, and that, with the same intensity, as pointed out by the hon. member for Richelieu (Mr. Côté) the opposition has succeeded in waking up the government by having this special debate, I ask them, and I hope that members of the government side will support me, I ask the longshoremen and all my colleagues on this side as well to take concrete and immediate action and to facilitate the free and efficient access to grain elevators to the recognized representatives of co-operatives and millers of the province of Quebec. I hope this appeal will be heard. Otherwise, the longshoremen would only compel Parliament to adopt, for lack of other means, a special legislation to force them back to work.

Madam Speaker, I feel that it would be appropriate at this time to remind all those concerned that the right to strike has reached its limit when it starts to interfere with the rights of others, with the collective right of a whole community.

Let the federal government, because of the urgency of the situation, make use of the means of pressure at its disposal and, should the need arise, make use of his legislative weapons, if the longshoremen refuse to demonstrate themselves their concern for the true interest of the people. Producers and consumers cannot and must not remain 24 hours more the hostages of ship owners and dockers who have refused far too long to listen to one another.

Why don't the union members concerned make a similar gesture, comparable to the one they made earlier in this strike; thus, it seems to me the unions would stand to gain, to win new favour—and God knows they need it at this time!—and so all the freedoms could be saved, in the best interests of society.

To conclude, essentially, this conflict and the dire effects it has already had on our farmers, and will soon have on consumers generally, raise the problem, the challenge of assuming, with maturity and in a civilized way, the choice and exercise of our freedoms in Canada.

In the short run, the government must expedite recourse to the means at its disposal, and if need be, resort to an actual rail lift from Thunder Bay to Montreal, and an actual truck lift from Prescott to Eastern Quebec, to make up for present shortages of feed grains and, eventually, if the quality of the stocks now locked up for some time in the elevators does deteriorate, to substitute new supplies for the old.

But already, this again shows how poorly the central government may be equipped, may lack the instruments required to face the consequences, which are always foreseeable of conflicts such as the one we are now up against.

In conclusion, I should like to cast a look to the future.

Tomorrow, farmers will have to be compensated for the higher costs this conflict has imposed upon them. Above all else, the government must, in the future, be ready to mitigate the effects of similar situations; it must adopt, in advance, measures of a permanent nature which are worthy of the government, and worthy of the social and economic leadership our people are entitled to expect.

And on another level, over and above that of the present conflict, the federal and provincial governments will once and for all have to define the nature of labour relations in Canada, especially, as the fact has been brought out so well, in the public sector.

A labour court will ultimately have to be established before which parties to a conflict in the public sector will necessarily have to appear for a final settlement; such a settlement, if not accepted by one or the other of the two parties, shall be imposed. The idea of such a court is not to suppress the right to strike, but to subject it to the common good when a strike has lasted too long.

The people are fed up, I should say really fed up, with the eternal perpetuation of conflicts in the public sector, as well as with those trade unionists and, I insist, those employers who have an innate tendency to hold the public as hostages.

Such, Madam Speaker, are the few objective reflections that I wanted to pass on to this assembly, and I sincerely hope that they will find their concrete application in the decisions made by the Government.

Mr. Yves Caron (Beauce): Madam Speaker, it is with pleasure and with great interest that I take part in this emergency debate that was requested because of the urgent, and rather dramatic situation that has prevailed these last ten days in the ports of Quebec City, Trois-Rivières and Montreal and which has the effect of interfering with feed grain supplies because of a longshoremen strike.

Madam Speaker, I do not speak often in this House, and believe me it is not because I am not aware of the problems facing my country; on the contrary, but every member somehow has his personal philosophy and mine is, on the one hand, that I believe more in action than in great speeches and, on the other hand, that this House is made up of an impressive number of members with a long experience of politics who can afford to make learned an eloquent speeches.

However, today I have a reason to speak because I would not want the voters in my riding, and particularly in Quebec, who elected some sixty liberal members, to have the impression that the opposition is the only group to stand for the interest of producers. The hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) and the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) speak on behalf of Quebec. We are indeed some sixty liberal members from Quebec and several of us come from rural ridings and find just as much interest in this matter as evidenced in recent days by myself and the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Béchard), the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Lapointe) and the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy) who pleaded directly in this House with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and who showed they wanted as much as I do a quick solution to that serious problem of grain supplies.

Madam Speaker, first I want to say to this House that I am not against strikes but like any other sensible person I think there are limits which must be imposed when the common good is threatened and at present, Madam Speaker, the common good is threatened in Quebec.

A reply was sent to me by the Minister of Agriculture Tuesday, April 8, last, because I told them that Quebec grain elevators were empty and producers were becoming alarmed, and rightly so. Since then and before asking that question I received several telegrams from organizations in my constituency asking me to appeal to the minister and during the weekend, several producers of raw milk and manufacturing milk came to meet me at my office and asked me to appeal directly to the minister and the whole government and ask them to take an early decision to settle the problem—as it is done for example when western supplies are threatened—either through legislation or otherwise.

The government is not indifferent to the problems of western farmers and eastern consumers, as suggested by members opposite. Let us only take as example Bill C-19 providing for a double price system for wheat grown and sold in Canada. This bill has now reached third reading in the House and if the opposition acts in good faith as it claims, it should prove it to the producer and consumer by hastening to support that bill which will greatly encourage western producers generally and Quebec consumers more particularly.

Madam Speaker, as a Quebecker, I deeply realize what can be the effects of such a strike, especially for the Quebec agriculture during the months to come and I know that it will eventually be reflected in higher prices if it is not immediately settled, which will first affect the producers and then Quebec consumers. This is why I eagerly hope that the matter will be settled as quickly as possible.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Madam Speaker, I think it is my duty to support the initiative of the opposition members in this emergency debate for the supply of feed grains to Eastern Canada, particularly to the province of Quebec, through ports now closed in Quebec City, Montreal and Trois-Rivières.

Since the beginning of the debate tonight, thanks to the initiative, among others, of the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert), who came back charging on several occasions, we have heard many different theories, excuses or attacks, but, Madam Speaker, we are still at the same point where we were at 8 o'clock, when the debate started. The means of the Parliament in an emergency situation recognized by the four parties in the House are the organization of an emergency debate; it is the only means available to the institution called Parliament, in an attempt to make the government aware of a particular matter in order to bring about a precise solution. The government, through the Minister of consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), tried to throw the ball back to the Opposition, superficially, and, I should say, without any apparent success. Surprisingly enough, he has even been contradicted several times by his colleague the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) who—and I want to commend him for it—took a positive and logical position towards the disturbed work force of Canada.

An hon. Member: No wishy-washy he!

Mr. Fortin: Madam Speaker, it is regrettable of course that the Minister of Agriculture is not here tonight, but he was very well represented by his parliamentary secretary (Mr. Corriveau).

He told us the government had taken adequate measures to ensure feed grain supplies in Quebec, that they had sent ships, stopped ships, opened grain doors, closed elevators, mustered people, done some picketing as he so aptly said. But we are still waiting for a solution. Immediately after his illustrious and eloquent speech of apologies, his colleague from Beauce (Mr. Caron) says that after ten days the situation is now dramatic and that what is at stake is cattle feeding in Quebec. Their government colleague had stated earlier that opposition members were trying to play politics by asking questions, and that this debate was practically pointless. In the same breath, the hon. member for Beauce indicated that he and four or five other colleagues had been asking questions from the minister for the last few days.

How are we to reconcile this, Madam Speaker? If an opposition member is playing politics urging the minister of Agriculture to act in a dramatic situation, so does a member on the government side. I suggest also that when an opposition member puts a question to the minister and the member on the government side asks a similar question, and in both cases the minister does not act but simply submits that elevators are full and that the question is out of his hands, I feel that Quebecers were wrong in sending upwards of 60 liberal members to Parliament.

I would not want to show prejudice or divide the country, but there is something I must say, no matter what. In the eight years I have been a member of this House, we have been hearing of grain problems in Western Canada. A handful, or rather a good number of members from Western Canada—and let me emphasize they are not government members but opposition members—by holding together and making a stand and defending their area's interests and on a number of occasions they have managed to instigate emergency debates, force the government to act and bring about results for western Canada. To those who accuse me of partisanship, I shall say that we in Quebec have a talent to talk so little about Quebec's problems in this House that everytime we have that opportunity, a very limited one I must say, we systematically attack each other and display to other members of Parliament of this country the show of members of Parliament who forget the problems of their own provinces to uphold the interests of their own parties. That is the kind of show we have been witnessing tonight up to now, Madam Speaker, and that greatly disappoints me. In support of what I say, the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Corriveau) became irritated because somebody visited him in his constituency during the weekend. He would rather accuse the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin) a few moments ago than talk about the problem of supplies, and deliver a message of hope or suggest a practical solution. In that respect, the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Caron) was right, the hon. member for Frontenac just said, after he read a speech which had been drafted by civil servants, that the hon. member for Richmond was being illogical, a citizen of Quebec attacking another citizen of Quebec. Madam Speaker, he said that the hon. member for Richmond, while inducing striking asbestos workers to maintain their strike, and that now, in the case of the longshoremen strike, wanted emergency legislation to be passed. He said the hon. member for Richmond approved of the strike in Thetford Mines, but that in the case of longshoremen he thought emergency legislation was absolutely needed.

Madam Speaker, if the hon. member for Frontenac and parliamentary secretary (Mr. Corriveau) really believes that, which would have to be proven, he should realize that in the case of the asbestos strike, the common welfare of our population is not involved, but this conflict lasts and will go on lasting because it was caused by the Liberal party, maintained by the inaction of the Liberal party, and today, Madam Speaker, those people are asking for justice. However, in the case of the longshoremen's strike, for the information of the hon. member for Frontenac, the conflict really threatens the common welfare.

Having said that, I would like to emphasize one thing. I received today a telegram from the Farming Co-operative of Bois-Francs, Victoriaville, signed by its managing director, Mr. Marcel Pothier, and I quote:

> Situation impossible in feed grain supplies. No shipment today from Quebec elevators despite injunction. Our trucks stopped today at Montreal elevator. Stikers strengthen their positions. Our stocks at a minimum about 12 hours' operation. Thunder Bay rail shipments completely disorganized. Request emergency action.

This completely contradicts the statement of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) and the statement of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Corriveau).

Even if this debate only allows us to learn the truth about the situation, it will represent a considerable gain for us. I received today also another telegram from the Poultry Producers' Federation of Quebec, and I quote:

> Poultry Producers' Federation of Quebec includes all chicken and turkey producers in province of Quebec. Poultry producers alarmed by feed grain supply situation, caused by lack of access to national ports because of strikes. Supplies of producers will run out within 24 hours, request immediate action; otherwise, enormous losses will occur following lack of food.

That is another situation, further evidence that indicates the need to step in as quickly as possible. The common weal of the Quebec people is at stake. The matter is not, as the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) said so eloquently and so justly, of passing emergency legislation every time a major problem, limited though it may be, arises. Tonight's sitting is perhaps evidence that our present labour policy has failed. It probably shows that our bargaining procedures, our desire to solve labour disputes are not as unyielding as the economic problems facing our fellow citizens.

The debate tonight, as the one we held in the case of Vancouver longshoremen, as the ones on all other disputes since 1968, indicates the importance of updating our bargaining methods and process. It proves it is time that Canadian employers realize the importance of meeting around a table, of discussing, of finding solutions to this problem to ensure the common weal and meet the needs of the people.

In my area we are now suffering from a strike involving workers in furniture industries. It is a serious conflict, because each party is standing firm and not budging from its demands and perhaps because laws are inadequate or obsolete in today's labour world to provide means of solving problems quickly.

In the case of longshoremen, exactly the same situation prevails.

Let us suppose for a moment that we legislate longshoremen back work. What would happen? It would constrain people who are resorting to justice to obtain greater employment security, better working conditions or wages. Are they right or wrong? It does not matter. This Parliament would force workers back to work without probably having obtained what they were asking if not on the whole at least in part; however, on the other hand, it would guarantee grain supplies. But would the problem would be settled for all that? It is not sure. It is not certain that emergency legislation would solve the problem since in two years, a year or six months from now, the same problem will reappear.

Madam Speaker, as stated by the Postmaster General, it is time for everyone to understand and reappraise his position and take consider circumstances from a fair and equitable point of view.

The hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Caron) told us that the situation was dramatic and he was right. And, Madam Speaker, this must be acknowledged without reference to any party politics.

We now have the opportunity of holding a debate that will allow us to show the longshoremen, the Canadian people and the millers as well that this parliament is anxious to see our country carry on its business properly and to deal with those problems. Obviously, we shall not solve this problem tonight.

Madam Speaker, I was listening this afternoon to an interview with the head of the longshoremen's union in Montreal and when the interviewer asked him: "If the parliament voted an emergency measure, what would happen?" he answered, if my memory serves me well, that even with an emergency measure, he was not sure at all that his men would go back to work.

Madam Speaker, with such an attitude prevailing we certainly shall not find a solution. And then the interviewer asked him: "Why, after having said that you would respect the injunction and that you would grant free access to grain elevators, you no longer do so?" He answered that he did not receive the unconditional support of the Quebec millers in the longshoremen's struggle to get justice.

Madam Speaker, the picket line is considered by the longshoremen as a means of pressure to force this government to act, to make people aware and to bring pressure to bear on the millers. And the same labour leader added that if the millers were so powerful that they succeeded in getting supplies they should be powerful enough to deal with their own conflict.

And, Madam Speaker, the notorious social process is again engaged and where shall we stop? As the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) was saying: Not only the common good is at stake, but the concern of our fellow citizens is reaching its highest point. It is time to take action whether or not there is grain in the elevators and what concerns me at this time is that the millers may get their supplies without trouble or fear.

Madam Speaker, Quebec needs 1,200,000 bushels of wheat, 1,700,000 bushels of oats, 2,300,000 bushels of barley and 1,200,000 bushels of corn per month, which makes a total of 6,400,000, or 213,000 bushels per day. At eleven this morning, there were in Quebec 219,000 bushels of oats, barley and wheat. The ports of Montreal and Quebec City are now supplied by Quebec City.

Madam Speaker, this shows the extreme urgency of the situation. I do not want to take the time of the House any longer, but I want to say this: I hope wholeheartedly that a positive settlement will be found in the very near future. I hope that if urgency legislation is passed, it is not exceptionally intended for a special group of longshoremen or for a special group of Canadian workers.

I believe that we should work at the same time towards a much more permanent solution, either the use of a labour court like the one the Social Credit members have been asking for a long time, or binding arbitration or any other positive solution that would enable us to secure justice and to respect requests from both parties concerned.

Madam Speaker, this government did nothing up to now. In his reply to the hon. member for Bellechasse last week, the minister said there was no problem, that he was controlling the situation keeping an eye on what was happening and he replied in a rather sneering way to the hon. member for Bellechasse that the elevators were full of grain, that there was enough grain. But, Madam Speaker, as one can see in Hansard, that does not settle the problem since it has to do with an access problem.

In concluding, Madam Speaker, I hope, as I said, that a rapid solution may be found, considering the emergency of the situation. In the Lotbinière area particularly, we are, a little like the Richelieu constituency, between Quebec City, Trois-Rivières and Montreal, we are really at the core of the problem. Madam Speaker, I sincerely hope that this strike will not be pursued at the expense of producers, that the longshoremen will understand that. I hope above all that in this House of Commons we will try, and that this debate will teach us a lesson once and for all, we will try to get together in the east so as to secure justice for all people, just like the people from western Canada, who have been setting an example for us since I do not know how many years in this House. If and when we do understand that, Madam Speaker, we will surely be able to legitimate the presence of Quebec members in Ottawa, otherwise it will keep on being a colossal farce since the government members will be there to defend the government's position and the opposition members to attack the government.

Now I do not believe, at least it is my point of view and that of my Social Credit colleagues, that that should be our role. We do not claim, we from the Social Credit Party, to be the only ones to represent Quebec. That is not true. But we hope that we and other members from Quebec, regardless of our party, will exert pressures on this government by taking advantage of this dispute to show them that in Quebec we are as strong as western people when it comes to cope with a labour problem such as this one.

Mr. Speaker, when a problem from western Canada is brought in the House, each time I realize that it tries the patience of hon. members from Quebec—often myself first—not because it is not important but because we are being given a lesson in solidarity and unity. I tell myself that in such situations it is exactly the position we should take and I think that in this regard the positive speech of the hon. member for Bellechasse has been a commendable example.

[English]

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, there are a number of things that should be said.

Mr. Paproski: There is no minister in the House.

Mr. Forrestall: There have only been a couple of ministers here all evening. It is quite proper for us to commend the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) and the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) for their initiative in bringing this subject matter to the floor of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Forrestall: Unlike most hon. members who have risen tonight, I do not take particular pleasure in being here, largely because the problem that keeps us here is one that could have been resolved a couple of weeks ago with a little foresight and speedier action on the part of the government.

This evening we are dealing with a number of separate matters and it is important to keep them in perspective. The sense of solidarity among the members from Quebec is quite noticeable. I have sensed tonight in the debate something other than a desperate rush on the part of some backbenchers merely to support the words that come from members on the treasury benches: I think that is a positive thing. It suggests to me that there is indeed a serious problem in Quebec with respect to access to feed grains.

Coming from Nova Scotia, and particularly the area of the port of Halifax, I have known all my life that the St. Lawrence river is frozen over in the winter and I have wondered what is done with feed grains for six months of the year. There must be a serious problem or we would not be here tonight: all hon. members who have participated in the debate recognize that.

What brings me to my feet tonight is my wish to remind all hon. members that, notwithstanding the grievous and potential damage that can be done to producers in Quebec with respect to their livestock and poultry, there are some things we must keep in mind. In fact, this is a narrow problem. As I see it, it is the application of proper collective bargaining procedures and, in this case, the abuse of certain of the prerogatives and rights of men who are on strike legally.

The Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) dealt fairly forcefully with this subject tonight, and the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) expressed the feelings of all of us that it is not acceptable to any member when people on strike abuse certain of their rights to the detriment, damage and injury of people who are not directly involved. I think this is something that we should keep in mind.

What seems to be happening here is that as a result of picketing arising out of a legal dispute between the Maritime Employers' Association and the ILA, serious potential grievous harm can come to producers—and this situation must be corrected. As virtually every member has said, it not only must be corrected but it must be corrected quickly.

It is important that we keep in mind at this stage a word of caution and do not unduly interfere with that legitimate dispute. What is important is outside interference in legal acts such as picketing, or the action of the president of the International Longshoremen's Association in the United States, Mr. Gleason, and his associate Mr. Sullivan, who have attempted to direct Canadian longshoremen not to service ships plying our waters.

I mentioned earlier to the Postmaster General that I think it is a measure of the seriousness and good will of Canadian port workers that by and large they have ignored this direction. I think they have ignored it properly, and I think they will continue to do so. I believe that the situation in Saint John will rectify itself and, with respect to the movement of goods in and out of Canada from overseas, the situation will become acceptable to all concerned in a short period of time. We hope it will be corrected at about the same time that the government gets around to correcting the situation in Quebec with respect to access by millers to storage elevators and storage bins.

So far there does not seem to have been any substantial damage done to the national economy as a result of the strike which is now about two weeks old. Again as the Postmaster General indicated earlier, this strike follows a long period of relative peace in the river ports. The last walk-out was in 1972 and it was of seven or eight weeks duration. It arose not out of a legal or legitimate dispute but, rather, as a result of varying interpretations of a contract that had been signed only a few weeks before the walk-out.

The third thing that I think we should bear in mind when we are considering representations to the government with respect to methods of bringing this unfortunate situation to an end is the nature of the ILA itself. We are not dealing with a homogeneous group; we are dealing with a very loose international organization—indeed, a very loose Canadian union whose strength lies in the autonomy of its separate locals, not in its national structure. I think this is important because when we, unwittingly perhaps, sometimes blame labour for all the problems that crop up, we do little to serve good collective bargaining processes in Canada and I think we must be careful.

Here we are dealing with separate locals which for one reason or another have chosen to exercise their political muscle in the way that to them at the time seems most appropriate. I am not suggesting that the methods being chosen, of blocking access to feed grains, is proper; but in their minds it is proper, and if we are to overcome the difficulties of strikes, legal and otherwise, we must bear in mind that these individuals are acting in the most effective way they know.

The Postmaster General dealt with a number of areas which I wish to touch upon tonight. One has to do with the rate at which existing labour laws permit us to correct situations which exist, such as the one causing great concern in Quebec. The instruments and the procedures which are available—and I think this is apparent to everyone here this evening—are simply not adequate. They are not capable of meeting a worsening and deteriorating situation.

If the situation in Quebec city, Montreal and Trois-Rivières has brought anything to our attention, it has to be the fact that injunctions are not quick enough, and tribunals to decide through arbitration whether certain things may be done are not swift enough. These are things we in this chamber have a responsibility to correct. Hopefully we can go a long way by means of example in the present review of the Public Service Staff Relations Act and related acts. Hopefully we will be able to find some solutions, because that is our responsibility.

It is not necessarily our responsibility to intervene in legitimate disputes within the existing framework, but it is our responsibility, where we see weaknesses, to correct them. One of these weaknesses is the rate at which governments and users of services are able to obtain corrective action where illegal activity takes place. It is our responsibility to support that type of action.

I am somewhat regretful that there has not been tonight from the Treasury benches, particularly from the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro), some acknowledgement of this. I am not here from Nova Scotia to make a speech on labour, but I am here to demonstrate my support for the necessity to improve some of our labour procedures which will remove or eliminate the causes which bring us here tonight. That is a problem which faces us all.

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) this evening was looking for suggestions on how we might improve this situation. This is an area we must consider. We must also consider carefully the definition of when an interest is so critically affected that this chamber must intervene with legislation. It is regrettable when that has to happen, and we know that it does from time to time. Again it is incumbent upon us to find ways to obviate or eliminate that necessity.

I will make a suggestion which the minister, or whoever reads these speeches tomorrow, might consider. Quite possibly we should take, for example, the pay research bureau away from the Treasury Board and from the staff relations board and imbue it with its own authority, establish it in an independent atmosphere, perhaps attach it to one of the universities in Canada which has demonstrated concern for government matters, and imbue it, as I said, with its own authority to do two separate things, among others.

First it should have the authority to do those cultural things which are necessary, the identification of proper pay and other benefit statistics, bring that information together, analyse it, and then disseminate it in areas where it can best be used. Money should be provided to do that, because this would be costly. Second, the government should give serious consideration to imbuing the Treasury Board with the responsibility of identifying that type of information which will describe for all of us the definition of essential services, that critical point in our day to day lives when interruption of those services requires the action of this chamber. It is the second suggestion to which I think the government should give the most consideration so that we can find some way out of the dilemma which continues to face us. It seems more and more so as time goes by.

We could have heard something of a more positive nature tonight. Compensation for losses has already been mentioned, but we have not heard very much about it tonight. This is an illegal matter. I suppose there is redress in the courts for third party damage, but it is extraordinarily expensive for a farmer to go to court and fight his way to the Supreme Court of Canada to recover losses incurred as a result of an illegal activity. I would not want to be the lower court trying to interpret just what is legal or illegal. Perhaps this is an area for very serious thought on the part of the government and this chamber, to seek out some method of compensation for innocent victims of actions arising from illegal activity, or activity which on the surface seems to be illegal.

These are suggestions, albeit not necessarily appropriate to the particular situation tonight, because there is nothing which can be done about it. But in order to remove the necessity of bringing these matters before the House in order to establish new methods of dispute resolution—keep in mind that the adversary system is probably the only one we have with respect to negotiation—we must move away from the mandatory results of the adversary system. That system brings about attitudes like, "I will not do this", and "you will not move me", and "get your policemen to move me", or "drive your truck over", or "I am here to protect my rights" when in fact those "rights" are duly protected by law, and an illegal interpretation is being exercised, or an illegal action is being carried on.

A question which keeps members of parliament here until midnight must indeed be serious. There is an hon. member here from Nova Scotia, another from British Columbia, some from parts of Ontario, a couple of hon. members from British Columbia, from Alberta, and many from the prairies because they sense a concern on the part of all hon. members from Quebec.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Forrestall: We are here because we feel a need for an immediate end to this particular problem. We are here to make sure that they have the support of other parts of Canada, we are here to make sure that those involved in illegal activity realize that we will not tolerate it. There is no misunderstanding whatsoever as to the position of, I hope, all of us with respect to illegal activity, and we want to demonstrate to those who are suffering that we will not tolerate it.

When that type of solidarity is required, hon. members from Quebec need not look very far afield because there are many men and women in this chamber who will stand with them to correct wrongs which seem to have been perpetrated upon them in the last week or so.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Tessier (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I agreed to take part in this debate because we too on this side of the House share the concern of producers, and particularly the producers of Quebec and eastern Canada. We are ready to recognize and respect the rights of workers, even the right to strike, within the limits of the rights and duties provided for in the labour code. However, if we have to consider the great harm done to the producers, the agricultural industry and the economy of eastern Canada, we are ready to act. The situation has been termed a crisis situation, and we cannot sit back while it deteriorates to the point of assuming disastrous proportions. As to the role of Parliamentt and the government, it is becoming more obvious hour by hour, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) himself already said so, because he knows he can rely on Parliament.

As to the role of various co-operative associations, representations were actually made, and we accept them and thank those who make them, for even though we know they were working in their own interests, after all, we are beginning to think that they were also working for the common good.

This is not a test case which will afford us the opportunity to teach a lesson to some people. What we have to do is grant a salary which will ensure us the respect of the people, of our organizations and institutions, in our economy and our agriculture, and also in social peace. What we have to do is avoid stirring up merely emotional reactions. We have a duty and an obligation to base our actions on the principles which should guide legislators: first, the public weal and the common weal; second, the respect of the letter and the spirit of the law; third, the necessity to accept only means that are in keeping with present economic and social restraints as well as the needs of individuals and associations.

Finally, to accept the principles of free enterprise and freedom. Leadership is absolutely necessary and there is no room for compromise when it is a matter of respecting the law and making people respect the law, especially if the law and the common weal are involved. This leadership is given fully by the government, every hour, and if it is necessary to take action, action will be taken.

Quarrels and party politics are a dangerous game, since they weaken Parliament, and it should be known that the population is indifferent to parliamentary games since it is the results that count and all the words, opportunism and mean politics only discredit the institution of Parliament in the eyes of all thinking men.

In our own struggles, we must show maturity and logic. I would like to give an example of this. A few weeks ago, the APU made representations to get $11.60 a hundredweight of milk. Members of the APU came to meet us. They even threatened us by saying that it was essential that they get $11.60, otherwise, there would be trouble. We saw those same representatives today and they were asking us to take very severe action against other workers. Does this mean that as far as we are concerned, there is one system for one segment of society and another system for another group? I believe that in the case of milk, as in the case under consideration tonight, the government will act with authority and, as usual, we can be assured that the action it takes will be appropriate.

We have and will continue to have this authority and sense of our responsibilities and, instead of talking about it, we will continue to act. Respect commands respect, and if we want to be respected, we, the members of this Parliament, must act accordingly. We take our responsibilities with the courage it requires as concerns respect for people, rights of individuals, organizations and even unions, respect for institutions, legislators, Parliament, government, democracy and rights, respect for the human being in general, which, as a matter of fact, is supposed to be a favourite theme of my friends the Social Crediters. It is also dear to us, but this is not demagogic affirmations or empty words, but a fluid and complex reality to be built every day, and this is what we are doing taking into consideration the whole Canadian reality, this moving reality.

With respect to solutions concerning grains, those who need supplies must be supplied, and the game and whims of those who prevent them from being so must stop immediately. Furthermore, it is necessary to improve that supply by making it less vulnerable, and I ask the minister to take the necessary steps to give the proper person the necessary authority.

Then, as in cases where the situation gets worse, the government is not using violence, but when there is no agreement, the economy and public welfare are concerned, someone must decide at the proper time and place, and the resulting peace is a subject for rejoicing for the great majority, except inexperienced or professional agitators and for them, in the name of the majority, I have no pity.

I am not too eager to support tonight's speaking marathon, but I can assure those interested that the government is aware of the situation, and because the interests of our economy and agriculture are involved, a decision will be taken in due time and place.

That also is respect for the people and the rules we have accepted, and of which we are courageous enough to take the consequences, without, however, neglecting our responsibilities.

The government is prepared to act as arbitrator if and when necessary. The pursuit of the objectives of both parties remains total, and it rests with each of them to respect the common weal, otherwise the government will have no other choice but to step in.

As far as we are concerned, it is a principle and, moreover, a rule of conduct. I hope it will be a guideline which we will follow every time the common good, the rules, the respect of the law, of the rules of democracy, of the government and of Parliament are involved, all of which in a living and thriving democracy, ably and courageously led through all the difficulties that we are experiencing.

The difference is that some members may speak for a long time still, and as far as we are concerned, we have the duty to act in due time and we will.

But, if we agree to speak about it, we will continue to listen, then, as proof of our seriousness, I hope we will strike a balance. We will find that the people were right in electing us, because what is important is action, and we shall take it.

● (0000)

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I am the first member from the Prairie provinces to take part in the emergency debate tonight. As my friend from Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) said, western Canada suffered from serious problems in the free movement of farm produce. When problems such as those, or others such as the oil crisis, arise, the members of western Canada, of our party, intervenes to speak for the interests of our voters. But when problems affect the province of Quebec, where are the Liberal members? Hon. members from the Conservative party and the NDP are the ones who request an emergency debate.

This matter is of the utmost importance, especially for the Quebec farmers. That is why one is amazed to note the absence this morning of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and that of the Ferench-speaking ministers from Quebec, except for the Minister who has provincial ambitions in Quebec.

So, where is the Minister of Agriculture? The hon. member for Papineau told us the Minister af Agriculture had an appointment outside Parliament. I should like to point out that my colleague from Joliette (Mr. La Salle) also had an appointment in Montreal, but that he excused himself in order to be here tonight, or rather this morning.

The glaring absence of the Minister of Agriculture and Quebec ministers proves to what extent the government takes for granted the support it got from the Quebecers in the last election, and how lightly it takes a problem that strikes at the very heart of life in Quebec.

This shows very clearly that the Quebec population has no guarantee that in casting such a massive vote for the Liberals its interest will be secured for all that. Quite the contrary. It seems the more members from Quebec the Liberal party gets, the less they care for their province.

[English]

The problem we are discussing tonight, Mr. Speaker, is particularly acute for the farmers of Quebec who face immediate and practical problems. These are people who, as all in this House know, are not organized with the same strength as companies, unions and other strong agencies in society. They are people who do not have protection against agencies of size and strength. The problems which these people must face, whether they are problems to do with the weather or of the kind they are facing at present, can literally cripple them in their operations, in their capacity to continue in agriculture and to keep on doing what they have been doing. They have no strike pay to fall back on, no corporate profit to support them.

These people are virtually without protection; their only protection is an appeal to parliament when they are caught up in a dispute with organized agencies of size in the country. Representatives of these farmers have come to members of the House of Commons on all sides. They obtained an active response at least from my colleagues, the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) and the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), in that an emergency debate was forced this evening.

We heard from the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), that sudden, emergency minister of agriculture—I presume on the government side they choose an acting minister of agriculture by flipping a coin—a good deal of nonsense when he intervened in the debate, before he fled. I can understand his leaving suddenly after delivering the kind of speech that we heard.

An hon. Member: At nine o'clock this evening.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): As my colleague points out, that minister left at nine o'clock this evening. He suggested there was feed grain at Prescott and all that farmers need to do is go and get it. He suggested there was grain at Montreal. Surely the facts placed before the House must be known even to this instant minister of agriculture from metropolitan Montreal. Surely he knows that in Montreal the practice has been established amongst dealers of serving their own customers first. That does not help people in need in other parts of Quebec. Surely the minister must know that the cost of transportation, if those farmers were to go to Prescott, would be serious, particularly for people who are operating on low incomes, low margins and face great problems.

That minister ought to know, unless he has travelled all his life on pavement in Quebec, that we are in the midst of a season when in that province certain kinds of travel on certain roads is banned and it is not possible for trucks to travel on those roads because of the heavy weights involved. When he says there is feed grain at Prescott, he might as well say the farmers should go to Saskatoon, to Rio de Janeiro or other places to which it is practically impossible for them to go. That is the kind of nonsense he spoke tonight. I say it is no wonder, having made that kind of speech, that he left at nine o'clock.

The point which must be driven home concerns the responsibility of the government, a government elected largely with the support of those people whose problem now occupies the attention of this House. The problem was referred to by my colleague from Joliette and by the hon. member for Bellechasse. It is not a sudden problem, not a surprise problem. My colleague from Joliette raised the matter in the House two weeks ago. The government knew about the problem: it knew that a problem existed for people singularly ill-equipped to deal with the kind of difficulties they are now facing. Yet even as recently as a few days ago the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) did not know what was going on. On April 8, replying to a question from my side of the House, as recorded on page 4593 of Hansard he said:

—according to information I have received today most people still have some stocks of grain and there is no real loss of feed stocks. That is, no livestock or poultry are going without feed. We are watching the situation very closely—

So on April 8 the situation was being watched closely. On April 10 his tune changed. Somebody told him what was going on and he said, "There will be some loss of poultry and livestock." He admitted the problem was serious. But even now, seven days afterwards, we still do not see any plan of action for coming to the aid of these people who are among those in Canada least equipped to help themselves when caught in a conflict between agencies of size. They face problems which literally can mean the end of their livelihood, the end of their capacity to carry on.

Let me refer to the acting prime minister, and I underline the word "acting".

An hon. Member: As a noun, or a verb?

● (0010)

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Of course, it is a moment of glory for any members of parliament from Quebec to sit on the government side, generally in anonymity. There is an opportunity for any of them, perhaps by flipping a coin. Perhaps if it were by the loudest voice the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. MacFarlane) would prevail. There is an opportunity tonight for any of them to be acting Prime Minister. The actor acting as Prime Minister on April 10 declined to answer because mediation efforts were then under way. That was eight days after they had broken down.

This indicates the degree to which the government keeps track of what is going on in this matter. It might be of so little importance to it that no minister of the cabinet is here now and only two showed up for the debate, but this is a very great concern to the people of Quebec who are directly affected. They are caught in the squeeze between these agencies of size against which they individually cannot compete.

All of us who come from or have any knowledge of agricultural matters know the urgency with which this problem must be addressed. We know the problem that faces the farmers of Quebec. They now face the prospect of having to try to get by without feed, having to kill cattle prematurely, and undermining what little chance for profit they now have.

This is clearly a case where simple compassion should cause the government to move to action quickly. However, we have gone on since the hon. member for Joliette raised this matter two weeks ago. Literally nothing has been done. The government has not even kept itself up to date on developments in the matter, and no minister is here tonight to explain what the government might contemplate doing.

The point has been made—I know it does not need repetition, but I will say it one more time—that governments are elected to do certain jobs. They are elected to exercise responsibility. It is not enough for someone in the back bench of the government party to shout across the floor, "What would you do?". The point is that for whatever reasons or whatever justification, the government was elected to serve as a government. It was elected to assume responsibilities, not to shunt them off.

The point that is particularly ironic tonight is that the government was elected almost primarily because of the support of people in a province toward whose interests it has cast a blind eye for the past two weeks. That is terrible.

An hon. Member: Don't be partisan.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): I am advised by a member opposite not to be partisan. I am not being partisan. If it is partisan to suggest that a government, once elected, has the responsibility to act, then I am being partisan. That is a simple statement of the responsibility of government. It perhaps should not be surprising that that comes as something of a revelation to members on the other side. They either sit in silence or simply pound their desks despite the failure of the government ministers to show up for a debate, let alone come to the aid of people whose votes, support and confidence are the single reason why many members opposite are here. Those people must be asking themselves what was involved when they vested that confidence in members opposite who have shown so little concern for their condition that it required the hon. member for Joliette and the hon. member for Bellechasse to cause this debate tonight, which is proceeding without the participation and apparently without the interest of ministers of the Crown, particularly those most directly responsible.

The government has the responsibility to act, not to pass things off to other parties or agencies, and not to duck. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), who should be in the centre of the action, is not here. He at least sent an excuse. The Minister of Labour did not do that. The Prime Minister is not here. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), the new chief in Quebec, fled after making a speech. He did not dare stay to try to defend it. None are here. However, these are the people responsible for carrying out the responsibilities vested in them by the very people whose problems brought us to a debate in the House of Commons at 17 minutes after midnight on a night that most of us expected to have off. It is perhaps worth noting that while many members chose to come here and debate this question, the Prime Minister, the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Labour took the night off. That is shameful.

When the parliamentary secretary intervened earlier he said that certain matters were being considered. As I understood him, the government is considering the possibility of some sort of rail transport and other options. Why so late? Why did consideration of those matters not begin when my colleague from Joliette raised the question in the House of Commons? Why has there been a delay which has caused such uncertainty and many problems for so many people from the province which elected most members across the way?

The government has a clear responsibility to act in a way which will help these people, numbered among the people less capable because of their lack of forceful organization. As the elected Government of Canada it has a responsibility to help them in a country that is increasingly dominated by agencies of size.

If this debate has no more purpose tonight, I hope that at least when the Prime Minister, the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Agriculture wake up from the long, restful sleep they are taking while we are here, they will peruse some of the debate and see the concern that has been consistently expressed by members on this side of the House, especially by backbench members from the areas where the problems of which we speak tonight are most acute.

The government has the power to act. It has known about the problem and the seriousness of it for at least two weeks. It has done nothing. That, Mr. Speaker, is shameful.

Mr. Béchard: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Béchard) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to put a suggestion to the House. In view of the late hour and of the number of members wishing to take part into the debate, could we not, with the unanimous consent, decide that those who will speak from now on will limit themselves to 10 minutes in order to allow every member who wish to speak to do so?

Some hon. Members: No.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Hon. members have heard the suggestions of the hon. member for Boanventure-Îles-de-la Madeleine (Mr. Béchard) that speeches be limited to ten minutes. This can only be done by unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, some members' speeches are a little longer than ten or 15 minutes and I think we should carry on as we have been.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As long as they do not go beyond 20 minutes, I have no objection.

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, it being well after midnight I will not take the time of the House during this emergency debate to repeat in perhaps different words the substance of the harmful dock strike at Montreal, Three Rivers and Quebec which my colleagues before me have already given. Instead, I would like to point out some of the outdated and antiquated means which the government seems to have accepted as a way of life when dealing with labour disputes such as the one we are presently discussing.

I must first give credit to the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) and the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) who are responsible for bringing this emergency debate before the House at this time. Looking at the record of Liberal management I doubt whether we in this House of Commons would even be discussing this particular strike, certainly not before we were faced with the loss of thousands of heads of livestock and poultry due to the stoppage of grain deliveries. This is precisely my point—the fact that the Liberal government, when dealing with this or any other strikes, be they legal as is the one we are considering tonight, or illegal as has been the case much too often in the past, does not act until after the fact, after the harm has been done, after millions of dollars have been lost, after thousands, indeed millions, of working man days of productivity have been wasted.

Time after time the government sits complacently by while irreparable damage is done to the economy by strikes and walk-outs, and this during a period in which the economy certainly does not need an increase in domestic problems—there is enough reason for anxiety as a result of international pressures. In my opinion there is no question that the main cause of internal domestic inflation is the ever-increasing rate of work stoppages and strikes, be they legal or illegal. If the country is to survive the system it was built on, immediate action must be taken in this area.

I believe there is urgent need for federal legislation requiring union groups in a single public service sector to bargain with the Treasury Board on a joint basis only for an agreement of perhaps not less than three years duration. The result, in the simplest terms, would be an assurance to the taxpaying public that each essential service sector would be strike-free, except for the possibility of a walk-out every three years or so. There is no better example of the need for such legislation than the dock strikes which are taking place in Quebec today, when we consider that only recently parliament was obliged to introduce back-to-work legislation affecting dock workers in British Columbia. The railways, the Post Office, airlines and other services run the same risk of disruption as a result of the fragmentation of union bargaining.

It is ironic that when I brought the suggestion of single sector bargaining before the House, as I did on several occasions in the past month or so, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) scoffed at the idea, and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) had no comment except to say that he was not in a position to discuss labour problems at the time. Of course at that point the minister had his dredging problems to worry about, so we must excuse him for not wanting to discuss problems relating to labour.

Things are looking up, however, because in answer to a similar question regarding single sector bargaining which I put to him today in the House he said that though he could not assure me that legislation was now being considered, simply because he was not at all certain that legislation was the best way to achieve a particular result desired, he could state that a fair amount of work had been going on within the department itself to see how single sector bargaining could be encouraged; talks with both management and labour had been going on with respect to it, and certainly on the labour side he had been receiving considerable encouragement. That answer, in itself, is encouraging to me since it shows that the government does, at times, listen to ideas from the opposition. Perhaps if we are sufficiently insistent, some of them will be adopted.

Directly connected with this strike and with the emergency debate upon which we are now engaged is a private member's bill, Bill C-386, which I introduced just three weeks ago. Since it is relevant to precisely the situation we are discussing tonight, allow me to quote briefly from this bill. It is an act to amend the Canada Labour Code, and I will read the first section of the proposed amendment.

181(1) Where

(a) a strike or lockout not prohibited by this part is apprehended or has occurred, and

(b) the strike or lockout would, in the opinion of the governor in council adversely affect the national or public interest if it occurred or continued, the governor in council may refer the dispute or difference that may cause or has caused the strike or lockout to an industrial inquiry commission for investigation, report and recommendation.

(2) Forthwith upon the appointment of the commission

(a) the strike or lockout, apprehended or occurring in respect of such dispute or difference, is prohibited;

(b) no employee shall strike and no employer shall lock out his employees, and

(c) a strike or lockout that has occurred shall cease.

We should take note of a further clause in the same measure, clause 5:

An order made under this section expires upon the execution of a collective agreement by the parties to the dispute or difference.

What the bill seeks to do is to disencourage and, where necessary, to prohibit irresponsible actions by any of the parties to collective bargaining. It seeks to reduce or remove the danger to the citizens of our country of unlawful and irresponsible strikes, lockouts, and other actions undertaken from time to time by either labour or management when there are breakdowns in contract negotiations. The power vested in the government to prohibit or order the end of a strike or lock-out can only be used when it is established that such actions would be against the public interest. This is not unreasonable. We are not living in the age of sweatshops, child labour, 14-hour work days—

An hon. Member: Oh?

Mr. Jelinek: —or other oppressive and inhumane employment practices. Those years are behind us, but in many respects the laws and methods which were used to correct those abuses are still with us. I do not have to tell hon. members on this side of the House that the unions have brought humanity and dignity to the process of bargaining for better working conditions, better salaries, better pensions, and many other improvements in the lot of the working man and woman. It has been a long and hard-fought battle, and they have won. Today working men and women have a say in deciding what their conditions of work will be, and how much they will be paid for doing a particular job.

In recent years management too has been embroiled in the process of improving working conditions and salaries along with efforts to improve the quality and volume of its products. In most cases better working conditions and better morale can be translated into higher quality, improved production, and fewer industrial accidents. These things are just as important to management as they are to labour.

We are all thankful that, except in isolated incidences, brutal and vicious confrontations between labour and management are a thing of the past. It has become apparent, Mr. Speaker, that when such consultations occur today, both workers and management lose. Workers lose their wages, and in many cases plants are forced to close because they cannot settle their disputes with their employees. In these cases the workers lose their jobs, which is always tragic.

In recent months, however, we have seen a return of irresponsible, confrontation-type actions on the part of some labour unions and, in some cases, on the part of management. We have seen instances of the refusal of the parties to bargain in good faith, resulting in strikes which should not have been called. If we are only interested in dealing with crises after they have had a chance to disrupt the economy, and impose undue hardship on the people of our country, the present labour code is perhaps adequate. However, I cannot believe that the majority of the people, or that the majority of the members of this House, will continue to be content to deal with these situations only after they have reached the crisis stage.

Prevention is almost always more acceptable than a cure. It is less costly, it is usually less painful. The cost of a crippling national strike is too great, the bad feelings are never completely forgotten, and there are always many people who never really recover from its effects.

We must remember that a great number of workers would prefer to stay on the job, or at least would be in favour of returning to their jobs before they are ordered back by parliament. In many cases workers are coerced, even threatened, if they do not go along with the wishes of the union executive. There was an example of this in my own riding, which is mostly a working riding, recently. Just last month I sent a questionnaire to my constituents, and one of the questions asked whether my constituents would approve of the right to strike being taken away from workers in essential services. I have received over 4,500 replies to date, and over 85 per cent of these favour such a move.

Anyone who reads the newspapers and watches television knows this to be so, and that is not responsible union conduct. I know that some union leaders feel that they must be involved in controversy and confrontation with management to justify their positions and their high salaries, and I know that there are lawyers who represent unions in such situations who stand to gain much from labour disputes that drag on and on.

But we must not refrain from strengthening the labour code in order to please a few. We must update the labour code and bring it into the 1970's in order to protect the many. We cannot continue to stand by and watch our country being brought to its knees through the actions of an irresponsible minority.

Under our present laws it is necessary to move a motion in parliament in order to deal with serious work stoppages in essential services and industries. If parliament is not in session the members must be flown in from around the country, and it could take days or even weeks for legislation to be framed, debated, and approved, to send workers back to their jobs. Aside from being cumbersome and costly, this procedure is also quite often a case of too little, too late. By the time we go through the motions of assembling parliament and approving back to work legislation, considerable and unnecessary damage could be, and usually is, caused by the strike. It would be much better to place specific and implicit authority in the hands of the government to deal with emergency situations threatened by actual or apprehended strikes.

If the suggestion in the proposed bill is accepted, the government will have the authority, and will have the responsibility, to provide such service in any future situations of that kind. The government will be able to stop a strike that shows promise of jeopardizing the health and safety of the people of our country, and prohibit a strike from occurring. It will be able to order negotiations to proceed in the event of a breakdown in contract negotiations, and it will be able to impose binding arbitration on management as well as labour. There is, of course, a provision for setting aside any decision of the industrial inquiry commission on the execution of a collective agreement by the parties to a labour dispute affected by this legislation.

It can be seen that every effort has been made to respect and preserve both the letter and the spirit of collective bargaining. My idea encourages rather than discourages collective bargaining, and in the final analysis it is intended solely to eliminate irresponsible actions and conduct from labour-management relations. I would not say that it is the whole answer, or that sweetness and light and total harmony will result immediately upon the approval of such a bill. But it would be a start.

Any conscientious citizen of this country must realize that now is the time to start before our country deteriorates any further due to labour unrest. We must begin setting down concrete measures rather than ad hoc pieces of legislation. We must begin to lay the groundwork, whether it be by adopting single sector bargaining or even considering the possibility of abolishing the right to strike in essential services. This groundwork must be laid not only for the present and existing problems but, more important, for the future.

Mr. Charles Lapointe (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I would like first of all to thank the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) for bringing this important matter to the attention of this House this evening, and giving us an opportunity to participate in this debate which is most important to every member concerned and to every member of this House.

Although he deserves commendation for that action and for a most constructive speech, perhaps the only intelligent one from the other side this evening, this may not be the best forum for the solution of an increasingly urgent problem. Because this room is too often turned into a temple of the spoken word. And that is all we heard this evening, words. All the speakers we heard from the other side tried to accuse us, they seeked one by one ministers, first or second benchers, asking where they were, whether they were banqueting or sleeping, in an attempt to have the Canadian people believe government ministers are not interested in the problems which are now of concern to Quebecers. It is not by spending evenings here listening to such nonsense as we have been getting from the other side that we will solve the movement of grains in Quebec.

Up until now, no reference has been made to the facts. What is really going on in Quebec presently? It has been said that grains do not move because of the longshoremen's strike. What are the facts, exactly? There are now 1,200 longshoremen in dispute with the Maritime Employers Association in the ports of Quebec City, Montreal and Trois-Rivières. The conciliation board chaired by Mr. Justice Gold submitted after the conclusion of the collective agreement on December 30, 1973, various measures aimed at solving the dispute. Among other measures, Mr. Justice Gold recommended a 57 percent salary increase over a two-year period. Present longshoremen wages in Quebec City, Montreal and Trois-Rivières average $5.10 an hour. In his conciliation report, Mr. Justice Gold also recommended a 1,600-hour per year guarantee for Montreal longshoremen 1,400 for those in Quebec city and 1,200 in Trois-Rivières. The members of the International Longshoremen Association did not accept that report. They in turn ask for a 52 40-hour-week guarantee, that is 2,080 hours a year for an average of $20,000 yearly wages.

They also object, perhaps rightly, to the around-the-clock availability clause, believing that such a clause could be prejudicial to them in their dealings with their employer. Since the positions seemed to be increasingly hardening as much on one side as on the other, as a result of that deadlock, the government appointed an arbitrator, Mr. Charles Poirier, but unfortunately, for the past few days, Mr. Poirier has remained constantly available to meet the two parties involved, but nobody up to now during the past few hours or days has resorted to his services. Now, even if those negotiations have not broken down, they have at least reached a standstill and this is why it is becoming more and more urgent that the movement of feed grain be restored in Quebec.

The closing of the ports in Montreal, Quebec City and Trois-Rivières prevents that movement of feed grain and, consequently, gives rise to very serious problems for farm producers and secondly for Quebec consumers.

The current situation prevailing in Quebec ports was described tonight by several of my colleagues but the fact is that the details given by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) as well as the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Corriveau) shed a little more light on the situation as it now stands. We know, as we were told, that an injunction was granted which will quite probably be extended for a further period of 10 days for the port of Quebec City. At present, the port is open and trucks can run. Unfortunately, as was also mentioned, most of the grain supplies now available in Quebec City are made out of corn, and feed grain must be obtained from other ports. In Trois-Rivières, unfortunately, access to elevators is entirely impossible at present and quite the same occurs in Montreal with the exception of four trucks which managed this morning to reach the elevators, load and leave before 7 o'clock in the morning, when picket lines were set up. With the exception of four trucks this morning, the situation is the same as in Trois-Rivières. The Quebec Federated Cooperative asked today for an injunction for Montreal, and if granted, it can take effect as early as Friday. Millers and farm producers in the area of Montreal and Trois-Rivières must haul grain from Prescott by truck. That is no doubt quite detrimental to the economic well-being of Quebec producers because they then have to pay $7 a ton more for grain. Producers on the Northern shore which includes Charlevoix and lower St. Lawrence producers must pay between $10 and $12 more than the normal price for grain coming from Prescott.

But there is another problem. Some dealers now take advantage of the situation and sometimes ask between 5 cents and 10 cents more per cwt. Thus, in a conflict—and it is not a matter of judging whether it is justified or not—in a conflict, as the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) explained, opposing longshoremen to their employers, it is farmers and, altumately consumers who will have to foot the bill, and that is the reason why I am glad to support the request submitted by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner), that is to ask longshoremen to act as good citizens by allowing farmers access to grain elevators now.

In an emergency situation like the one we are now facing, Mr. Speaker, we hear many different things. One speaker tonight said that pigs were eating each other; they must be cannibal pigs, certainly not pigs from Charlevoix.

I am happy to welcome the Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Speaker. In spite of his absence from Ottawa, explained several times tonight in the House, the members of the Opposition have continued to criticize him in an attempt to prove that he is not interested in the problems of Quebec farmers. That is completely false, and the Minister's presence in the House at 1:45 is a proof of his interest in the problems we are now facing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Now the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is back. He must have thought it was over.

An hon. Member: Who said he wasn't here?

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Five hours late.

An hon. Member: He didn't miss anything when you spoke.

Mr. Paproski: Who woke him up? Where are the other ministers? Where is your lieutenant from Quebec, Lalonde?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I think hon. members should listen to the hon. member who has the floor.

[Translation]

Mr. Lapointe: Mr. Speaker, if Charlevoix has no carnivorous pigs and no chickens fluttering because they are not fed enough grain, the producers of the area as all those in Quebec are experiencing very urgent problems and, as all other members on this side of the House who represent Quebec ridings, we have a heart to find a solution as quickly as possible to a situation that is getting more and more difficult.

The problem we now have is not so much with supply in Quebec ports, because, as the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Agriculture has indicated, measures have been taken. For instance, two ships are now on their way to ports on the St. Lawrence, another has been rerouted towards Prescott, thus making stocking possible, etc. We are experiencing a labour dispute, and in a country with a democratic tradition as Canada, we must let negotiations proceed freely and avoid bringing all problems before Parliament to settle labour relations. The longshoremen are availing themselves of a legitimate right which this Parliament has granted to them as well as to all other Canadians; moreover, theirs is a legal strike. However, as the Prime Minister indicated in the House yesterday in reply to a question from the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Béchard), the common interest must be taken into account. And like all other hon. members on this side, I feel that the government is acting wisely, before introducing any special legislation in the House, letting the bargaining process take its course, before considering legislative action. If we were to act too quickly, as it is always the case when we introduce a special legislation to force strikers back to work, NDP members would accuse us of facism, while Progressive Conservative members would join our Social Credit friends in branding us as socialists.

If we favour bargaining and make use of every possible means of reaching a harmonious settlement to a dispute, some hon. members, as the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) did so inconsequently tonight, would accuse us of carelessness and weakness, while others would say that hon. members from the Province of Quebec are nothing but pawns in the House for respecting the rights we have granted to these people as to any other group of Canadians. The hon. members from this side are aware of the serious situation which prevails in Quebec. We know that it is extremely serious. And when the time comes, if it does come, the government will certainly not hesitate introducing a special legislation. That is what I call leadership.

[English]

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I think we are privileged in this House that the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) and the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) have brought this important matter to our attention. I feel a certain sense of privilege in having the opportunity to speak on it, not only because I come from the rural riding of Battle River, in the province of Alberta, and not only because this is a matter that affects all Canadians but, more importantly, because it is an international problem that faces the whole agricultural industry. The fact is that every nation in the world which depends on an agricultural economy is among the world's poorest countries, and every industrialized nation of the world can look to its economic sectors and note that the agricultural regions are among the poorest of the country.

In this debate tonight, when talking about the agricultural industry we can show by facts and statistics, it has taken a back seat and, more importantly, that this government has turned a blind eye on this extremely important industry. This is an industry on which every one of us is absolutely dependent. I would suggest that probably no member of this House has gone for 48 hours without food, and I would suspect that most have never gone even 24 hours without food.

● (0050)

Farming is the business of food production, and yet what do we see in this country in terms of support for the agricultural industry? A 25 cent loaf of bread, even if the farmers gave their wheat away, would still cost 23 cents. That simply shows that farmers are not getting much of a fair shake. I would like to point out the fact that the agricultural industry is certainly an industry that has pulled its own weight in society and it deserves credit.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Malone: At this late hour of five minutes to one, we could take a look at some information released by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) who, some moments ago, arrived from a Liberal fund raising meeting. It is stated that in 1940 a farmer could produce enough—

Mr. Whelan: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. I am sure the hon. member would not want to put anything on the record that was incorrect. Most times I find him to be accurate. Let me tell him that I attended the Brampton Rural-Urban night in Brampton, Ontario. It was no fund raising meeting but a public meeting called by the Brampton Board of Trade.

Mr. Malone: I will change the word fund to fun. The important thing is that in 1940 a farmer could produce enough to feed himself, his wife and ten other people, but in 1975 a farmer can produce enough to feed himself, his wife and 50 other people. What I am trying to point out is that production by farm people, wherever they might be in this country, has significantly increased, but it is of ultimate importance that we realize that farmers are leaving farms in this country because they are not receiving the support of society as a whole. How do we know that? The fact of the matter is that every day, for the last 20 years, 31 farmers have gone out of business. That shows that agriculture is a kind of industry that is either unpopular or is receiving insufficient support. In talking to people in rural communities across the country I find that quite obviously the latter is the case.

Let us take a look at what a former Liberal member of this House, now a Senator, the Hon. Harry Hays, has to say about Canadian support of agriculture. He said:

With the exception of Denmark, Canada has the lowest percentage of public support for the agriculture industry of any country.

I want to say that out of farmers' net income Canada provides, through support of one form or another, 1.7 per cent, the United States provides 17 per cent, France provides 50 per cent, and the U.K. provides 67 per cent. This country ranks lowest in terms of the way it supports its agricultural industry. This leads me to point out that there are three sectors of our society that continually receive extremely poor support from the government, and that simply do not have the kind of clout they should have to give these industries the support they need. Those three are agriculture, fisheries and forestry.

Two of those industries deal with food production. The irony lies in the fact that, on a world basis, food takes up 40 per cent of our disposable income, and yet not one nation in the world gives top priority to food production. What perhaps is more curious still is that most nations put the lowest priority on agriculture, and I will demonstrate this again later when I deal with the strike situation and show that a very low priority is given to people in the agricultural industry who are affected.

The Minister of Agriculture has stated in some of the information that he circulated to our offices that farmers get fewer subsidy dollars than most other sectors of our economy. The average tariff protection for farm products is 8 per cent, but for non-farm products it is 16 per cent. This is another proof that farming in this nation is not protected. In Canada more than one third of all jobs are directly or indirectly related to agriculture. That simply emphasizes the fact that we should be giving the highest priority to agriculture because it affects one third of all the people in this country.

Let us take a look at the present situation, at the strike damage and at how it affects the agricultural industry. What are we doing about it? I should like to point out that here is an industry whose members cannot strike because of its very structure, because of the way farmers are organized, and because they lack the mechanism with which to fight back. Of the 35 weeks following the start of the crop year, at the end of July, 1974, there were only six weeks of free movement of grain to the port of Vancouver. The rest of the time there were either strike actions or derailments of trains on the trackage.

Let us take a look at the agricultural industry as it relates to what is coming up soon. In this year ten contracts which will affect the movement of grain out of Vancouver come up for renewal, three of those being related to railroads, two to the Government of Canada, two to longshoremen—one to the workers and the other to the foremen—one to the handlers, one to tugboat operators, and one to marine pilots. Every one of those contracts has the potential to stop the grain industry. Yet do we ever see legislation to make these contracts run out at the same time, or even to give compensation to the agricultural industry which cannot fight back?

Tonight we are back in the House again, this time because strike damage is being done to the agricultural industry in the province of Quebec, more specifically to a group of people who are not in a position to fight back. Farmers are not in a position to protect themselves from strike action.

To make the situation even worse, labour organizations are striking against management, thereby incurring major expenses. Instead of either labour or management absorbing the expense, it is charged to farmers. This is done through demurrage charges which, I charge, is something which is illegal because there is no precedent in our society for two people incurring a direct cash cost and charging it to a third party. This is no longer merely a nuisance or an inconvenience. It is a direct expense which is finally charged to a third party. Farmers do not have collective bargaining powers. When their prices go up they cannot establish new prices in the market because the market establishes them itself.

● (0100)

So we find that a group of people from one end of this country to the other are simply victims of the collective bargaining system, with a government unwilling to take action to give the protection they need. Farmers have doubled their output in the last ten years, while others in our society have increased their output by only 40 per cent. The way this country responds to that is to shrug its shoulders and say, "So what".

We are here tonight to debate an issue of paramount importance, yet a third minister has arrived just moments ago, and no minister has stayed here for longer than the duration of his own speech.

This is a problem of tremendous importance to an industry, and I simply repeat that agriculture, fisheries and forestry are considered to be low on the totem pole.

When these problems arise, people simply turn a blind eye and do not care. Considering once more how agriculture is treated with a low priority in this country, recently the cost of food was reported by Statistics Canada to be reduced. There is a hoop-la about that. Not once has it been mentioned that the reduced cost of this food is borne by the farmer. The farmer has paid for every cent of advantage which has gone to the consumer for cheaper food. I think we should recognize that farm people have certainly increased their efficiency, and they are doing it more cheaply, yet they do not have the protection of society which they ought to have.

According to the Food and Agricultural Organization of the United Nations, 460 million people live in a state of malnutrition. To paint the picture clearly, that is as many people as there are in Britain, Germany, France, Italy, and the rest of Europe. While there is a famine aspect to the world food crisis, the malnutrition aspect is an old scandal and one which the rich, well fed nations have learned to live with, Mr. Speaker.

We witnessed just recently what we in this country called an energy crisis. We worried about where we would get fuel to heat our homes and to drive our cars. Through that crisis there was only a whisper of the fact that nitrogen fertilizer is 100 per cent a product of the petroleum industry. As we look around the world we note that this year we will fall three and a half billion tons short of its nitrogen fertilizer, requirements. No emphasis was placed on that problem, and the simple reason was that it dealt with agriculture. It is about time that this nation began to realize what agriculture is. It is the business of food production, and without it we do not live, we do not develop strong minds and bodies, and we do not have a society of value or worth.

Part of this debate tonight is meant to give a status to an industry which has been held far too long at the bottom of the totem pole, along with fisheries and forestry.

To share some information, I would like to point out that Canada is the world's largest exporter of rapeseed. Rapeseed was brought into this country after studies and experiments at the dominion experimental stations. The investment in those experiments was extremely small, yet rapeseed has developed into a billion dollar industry for this country. When we consider the importance of agriculture to Canada and compare that with the amount expended in agricultural research, we should be ashamed.

We should also recognize just the very fact of growing wheat. Most people do not realize that if it were not for experimental studies, which are continually developing new varieties of wheat, the province of Manitoba and most of southern Saskatchewan would not be able to grow wheat longer than five years, because that is about how long it takes for the species of varieties which cause rust in wheat grains to develop enough strength against the rust resistant varieties. I am trying once again to demonstrate that it is the experimental stations which are making it possible that the wheat industry continues in southern Saskatchewan and in most of Manitoba. The amount of money we put into that is extremely small.

We are once again in an emergency debate with regard to agriculture because we have allowed it to grow to the crisis stage, rather than looking at this as a major industry, and with a philosophy and objective that this industry should not only be protected from coast to coast, but we should give it a major importance both in research and support prices and in terms of selling it abroad. This is an industry which could become as well to do as any other, and which could assist us in an economic way. Certainly the data we have ought to underscore that. It is a simple fact that Saunders wheat brought another billion dollar industry to this country, which cost the experimental stations almost nothing in terms of their work.

In 1978 the international soil scientists conference will be coming to this country. The support of the federal government for that conference is so meagre that it is shameful to announce it in the House. Yet in Vancouver this year there is tremendous support in the form of millions of dollars going into the international urbanization conference which will be held in that city. I do not begrudge it getting that money, but I simply point out that the agricultural industry, which feeds us, gives us healthy bodies and minds, protects us from going blind from a deficiency of vitamin A, and which provides protein and energy for our bodies, is the very industry we simply do not recognize as having importance in this country.

We are here tonight because there is a crisis in Quebec, which is just another crisis heaped upon crises because the government started off with the wrong philosophy in the first place. We are talking about animals which are about to starve, about poultry which will not be getting food, about elevators which are empty, and about transportation to them and other elevators which are full. But farmers do not have that transportation, and yet we are being told that the farmers of Quebec can get grain. The fact of the matter is that the roads will not provide sufficiently, and there is nothing to account for the expense. Once again the government has not cared about the most important industry.

Mr. Pierre Bussières (Portneuf): Madam Speaker, I am obviously quite happy to take part in this debate which deals with feed grain supplies to farmers and agricultural producers in Quebec. The urgency of the situation has been stressed often enough, and yet comments in today's papers tended to fit with the description given by the hon. minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), to the effect that the situation is serious but, thanks to the measures taken by the government, has not yet become an emergency.

When farmers are hampered by a problem, society as a whole is affected, and not just a marginal group, a small group, not just agricultural producers, but each and every citizen who depends on agricultural products for his food.

Unfortunately, that element is not always felt in the reactions of public opinion. It can be frequently noted that whenever there is an increase in the price of agricultural products, whether it be milk or butter or other food products, it is immediately followed by an outcry of indignation in the papers and among people. However, no one worries about the income of farmers.

When there is a union claim for a salary increase, people agree, they say it is fine, and one should make a good salary. But in fact, who cares about an increase in the farmers' incomes? Who cares constantly about working hours and working conditions for farmers? Farmers in Quebec still have difficulties now which stem from a labour dispute. That workers' dispute, that labour dispute which is at the root, at the origin of that difficult situation for farmers makes the situation even more tricky and delicate.

We on this side of the House believe that the labour relations system in Canada should be a liberal system, we believe in negotiations, we believe in the right to strike as a means of obtaining better salaries and better working conditions.

We often talk in this House about labour disputes when strikes as means of pressure are put into practice and cause hardships, but we very seldom hold emergency debates to emphasize labour disputes which are settled.

In today's papers, there was mention of a labour dispute which has been ironed out, but nobody during the debate tonight has stressed it. This labour dispute which has been solved through negotiations dealt precisely with harbours, and particularly with the Montreal harbour. That is not very far away from the discussions we are having. With their acceptance of the last propositions made by the harbour authorities, the members of the Montreal harbour labour union (CNTU) have definitely put away the threat of work stoppage they had held over the harbour for two months. It is said that since the Trudeau government already gave premiums on salary scales, a majority of union members could be obtained to solve the problem.

There was no need for special legislation, there was no need for a special debate, the strike was solved, but no one talked about it. But if a labour conflict is troublesome—it is normal that a strike be troublesome, it is a means of pressure—immediately we want a special debate. I do not want to say that respecting the right of longshoremen to strike solves the problem of feed grain supplies for our farm producers, far from it. What I want to say is that we should distinguish between one right which belongs to the longshoremen and another which concerns supplying. The longshoremen have a right to strike, the have a right to use a means of pressure to improve their working conditions, we respect this right until, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said, this really endangers the common good.

[Mr. Bussières.]

The longshoremen have the right to strike, the farmers have the right to obtain supplies to feed their animals. Not only do they have this right, but they also have the duty to do it. They have the duty to feed their stock to maintain good meat quality and also to protect the balance of farm production. They also have the duty to think about the consequences that their neglect at feeding their stock could have on the population, and also the duty to think that insufficiency or malnutrition could cause irreparable damages to our farm production. It is an awareness of these duties that this debate should give all members of the House, an awareness of this need, of this duty of farm producers to feed their cattle and of our own duty to examine their possibilities of improving and simplifying their grain supplies.

As a short term solution, I would like to repeat what my colleague for Charlevoix (Mr. Lapointe) said earlier, that all members of this House ask the longshoremen in the ports of Quebec City, Trois-Rivières and Montreal to allow the millers to obtain supplies in the next few days.

Madam Speaker, I would like all hon. members here in this House to agree unanimously on this request to longshoremen. They are not forced to go back to work by legislation or by bludgeon. We say: You too must realize that farmers have a fundamental duty to feed their stock; let them gain access to the warehouses so they can supply themselves, then go on exerting pressure by strike, because the strike can continue.

I am convinced, Madam Speaker, that the longshoremen will hear the voice of reason and that, if we all agree to make this request, they will follow it.

On medium term, we must ensure that other loads are given priority and that the appropriate means will be taken to bring them where they are needed. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) has also reassured us on this point tonight, as did the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Corriveau). And I am convinced that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) will confirm these words.

● (0120)

When there are problems, cataclysms, in other countries, airlifts are organized immediately, countries get together to transport, in no time flat, tons of foods of all kinds, anywhere in the world. It is unthinkable that within our own country, we should be unable to get organized too, to transport from one end of it to the other, the feed required to nourish what will feed us in turn tomorrow and to supply the farmers with the grains they need. It is inconceivable that such steps should not have been foreseen, that they cannot be taken quickly.

Over the long term, I believe the Canadian Livestock Feed Board should be authorized to set up reserves and charter adequate means of transport to mitigate such situations. That authority, Madam Speaker, the board should have; and it is up to the government to see to it that it gets it.

At the World Food Conference in Rome, according to the newspapers, discussions dealt with the means to store food supplies in countries stricken with famine or droughts. We have heard of it here too, in Canada because the Canadian delegation took a very active part in those discussions. The Minister of Agriculture himself took part in them.

Regardless of conditions or circumstances, supplies of grains should be ensured in situations such as the one we now know. So much the better if we can ensure the storage of food products in needy countries, but we should also be able to ensure the same to our eastern producers who are now in difficulty; at other times, western producers will have problems, and we must make sure the feed they need is then available. The Canadian Livestock Feed Board must have the means and authority to give those assurances.

In his summary, the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) appealed to the honesty of hon. members, and especially to that of the Quebec members who sit on this side of the House. In the same breath, Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Joliette implied something when he uttered a word, the word "cowardice", hinting that some members whom he urged to be honest could be cowards. If we look into the meaning of honesty, we find that it is to describe things according to reality. I wonder how he can urge anyone to be honest when he himself, by implying the word "cowardice", was surely not giving a true account of things and of the exactness of duty, of the sense of duty, of the trust, of the integrity of Liberal members, of my colleagues on this side of the Commons.

Madam Speaker, the situation now existing in the province of Quebec could lead to many things. It is obvious that due to higher costs, our farmers' income will drop. Not many people in our society agree to a lower income. Every day there is talk about indexing, salary increases. Even we are talking about it. Farmers will get less income. Their income had already dropped because of the higher cost of living and following a labour dispute, it will decrease still more. This is not normal and should not happen again.

Also, one wonders whether some animals when they are sent early to the slaughter-house, do have the quality that they could have had, and this is detrimental to the consumers, even though it will not be necessarily detrimental to health, but the product will not have the same quality.

Also there is the danger of an imbalance in our production. If we send cattle to the slaughter-house before the proper time, it is clear, in view of the period where the supplies will not be the same, there will be an imbalance in our production.

Then, to conclude, I wish to remind the members of three suggestions which I feel should be accepted. First, we should ask the longshoremen to allow the millers to have access to supplies; secondly, as Canadians, we should take measures in order that grains reach the places where they are needed; finally, we should give to the Canadian Feed Grain Board the authority and powers necessary to meet such difficulties.

[English]

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make some comments on the motion before the House dealing with grain tie-ups in Quebec ports. First, however, may I join with other members of this House in complimenting the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) and my colleague the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) for bringing this matter to the attention of the House. We are considering an important and urgent matter, namely, a situation which is preventing feed grain supplies from reaching feed mills and livestock producers in certain communities in Quebec.

There is some argument about the extent of the emergency. Obviously, if this matter is not resolved quickly, some livestock and poultry producers will have no option except to ship to market, and there will be a surplus on the market and prices will be depressed. It is most unfortunate that members on my side of the House once again were compelled to act because of the government's lack of leadership in this situation.

On March 19, less than a month ago, we debated a similar sort of motion dealing with grain movement on the west coast. Strikes, labour disputes, work stoppages, poor rail facilities and services have plagued the entire movement of grain in this country, particularly in the last year. When grain began moving on the St. Lawrence on October 3 last, it was the first such movement of grain since August 7. Obviously, a new method for approaching these difficulties must be found. I submit that only one other industrialized country has lost more man-days through strikes than Canada: that situation is totally unacceptable. The record shows that last year we lost 9.2 million man-days through strikes, an increase of nearly 60 per cent over what we lost in the previous year. That is not a good record of achievement for this government.

The government was warned many times, particularly by members on my side, of feed grain shortages in Quebec and in Quebec elevators. Obviously, those warnings were almost totally dismissed or ignored. It is true that Quebec producers are the most seriously affected, but it is also true that the entire regional economy will suffer if some agreement is not forthcoming immediately. Every Canadian is affected in some way by these disputes, and we feel their effects long after they are settled.

If the government's performance and reliability does not soon improve, and drastically, we stand to lose valuable export markets for our grains. When potential buyers regard Canada as an unreliable supplier of grain, their attitude not only hurts one's pride but it hurts the Canadian economy. We accept orders, sign contracts and then cannot deliver on time. We make commitments to provide food aid, and cannot even deliver the food to the ship which is to carry the food to where it is most needed.

Obviously, inflation and the uncertainty brought about by continuing inflationary pressures continue to be factors in the breakdown of contract negotiations. Unless we are prepared to tackle the problems at the root of our difficulties and allay the fears of organized labour, of public servants and of those on low or fixed incomes who are afraid their incomes will not keep up with the cost of living, we shall continue to see unrest in those segments of our society.

On July 8 last the government was given a clear mandate to govern and to show leadership in solving these problems—and it still lacks an effective policy for dealing with them. Indeed, we have seen little or no action for coming to grips with this problem. We must give immediate attention to the establishment of a public disputes commission. The difficulty is this: no body or tribunal has been established to examine contracts now in force and to deal with problems and grievances before contracts expire. No single body has been established to encourage or to promote the renegotiation of a contract before its expiry date. I submit that there is necessity for such a commission and its establishment is more urgently needed now than ever before.

If the government does not actively seek a new approach we shall see a repetition of this dismal performance—if not with the grain handlers, then with the public servants. The Canadian people are dissatisfied and impatient, and look to this government for leadership. Government members asked for suggestions. My colleagues have offered suggestions and alternatives in this debate and on previous occasions. So far the government has failed to act: that is the crux of the difficulty.

● (0130)

Let us set up the machinery that is required. Let us restore good faith between management and labour. Let us at least attempt to avoid similar situations. That is a responsibility the Canadian people gave to this government. If the government would move in that direction, Madam Speaker, I am certain it would find support from this side of the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Madam Speaker, I will try to confine myself to the limits I suggested earlier and for that reason, my comments will be very brief.

But I thought it was my duty to participate in this debate for two main reasons. First, because in some way I have suggested this debate tonight because of the question I asked the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). Indeed, they can laugh in the opposite, they congratulated themselves a short time ago. They say that it should not have partisanship, but if they want to have some, there are others who are able to do so.

Madam Speaker, I would like to repeat for the sake of those who did not hear it, and I believe that with my question I woke up the Opposition and even the member for Saint Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) who was far away, heard it and he came back to give his speech tonight and there was only partisanship in the first part and there was fairly good common sense in the second one.

So, Madam Speaker, I repeat the question I asked yesterday. I was referring to a telegram from the Poultry Producers' Federation of Quebec, which has been delivered to my riding office in Bonaventure, but thanks to a very great organization, was immediately transmitted to me and this morning I had the Federation telegram in my office here on the Hill.

Here is the question I put to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan):

Has he received a telegram from the Quebec poultry producers association—

[Mr. Wise.]

. . . then I reminded him of the substance of the message. Here is the Minister's answer:

Mr. Speaker, we have received many telegrams but I am not sure if I have seen that one concerning the possible shortage of feed grains. The grain elevator in Quebec City has been opened for two or three days now and grain is moving out of that area. Other ships are moving into the area.

. . . that was said a moment ago. And then I asked the hon. Minister of Labour and in his absence the right hon. Prime Minister, the following question, as reported in page 4807 of yesterday's Hansard:

I asked the Minister of Labour, or in his absence, his parliamentary secretary, or the Prime Minister, whether the government intends to take legislative measures identical to those Parliament passed to settle the longshoremen's strike in the port of Vancouver to settle the strike now paralyzing the ports of Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec City?

Here is the Prime Minister's answer:

Mr. Speaker, there always comes a time in a strike when the public interest must be weighed against the right to strike. The government and the cabinet are now in the process of looking into this matter.

That is what rang a bell in the ear of the Opposition. I quote again:

For the time being we have no statement to make, but one thing is sure: the Minister of Labour and the government are watching the situation very closely.

Madam Speaker, at the very beginning of this conflict in the port of Montreal, it were members on the government's side, among whom the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Lapointe), who first brought this to the government's attention, followed by the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Caron) and the hon. members for Compton (Mr. Tessier) and for Laval (Mr. Roy) and others. Then people will say that the government is aware of the longshoremen's strike thanks to the Opposition.

When the possibility, and the newspapers referred to this at length yesterday, of a settlement other than the one now expected is envisaged, we then say: We must ask for an emergency debate and we shall take credit for it. Those are the people who are asking us to act and to unite, to defend the interests of a seriously affected area and to co-operate not as supporters but as members for an area affected at this time.

When I heard this evening at the very beginning of this debate the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), I felt we were back in that dark period which we have unfortunately known in Quebec under a government which has now disappeared and which was called the Union Nationale, when the workers and public servants were fighting to unite, to form unions, in order to defend their rights, and God knows that they were downtrodden during that dark period, well, I felt right back in that period once again. This unhealthy situation was fortunately corrected by a government to which the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) belonged, when citizens were allowed to unite to defend their interests and to do so in all freedom.

It is all very well to charge the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) with every imaginable sin, but are the hon. member for Joliette and all the others who accused him of those misdeeds aware that there are laws giving those people the right to strike? Do they know that even the Minister of Agriculture as well as the whole cabinet must obey the laws of Canada and the legislation that we, legislators, adopt here in Parliament?

Madam Speaker, I did not interrupt the hon. member for Joliette when he made his speech tonight and I hope he will extend the same courtesy to me and let me make my comments.

The situation is serious and we do not need, as the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) said tonight, to be told about it by the member for Joliette. We do not spend our lives in the clouds, but on the ground and in the province of Quebec. We know the difficulties the farmers have and that the present strikes are creating.

The government will take its responsibilities and, as far as I am concerned, and such was the purpose of the question I asked yesterday, I hope that when all means have been exhausted in an attempt to settle this dispute, I hope that the means used in similar circumstances will be taken as quickly as possible.

The second reasons that prompts me to take part in this debate, Madam Speaker, is that farm animals are not the only ones to be looked after at the present time. I represent the people of Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine, and for those who realize what an island is, they will learn perhaps, if they don't already know it, that the people I represent must bring in all their winter supplies before the closing of the shipping season in the fall, because once the shipping is stopped, they cannot think of bringing in supplies except by plane at a prohibitive cost.

Then, when the shipping season opens, the CTMA ships of the Magdalen Islands are berthed in the port of Montreal since the previous fall. All the merchants put in their orders, everyone orders whatever goods he needs; when one is isolated, one knows how important to those people to see the start of the navigation season.

So, now, those boats are standing, waiting in the ports of Montreal and Quebec City. They are kept from loading the supplies so urgently needed in the Magdalen Islands. Trucks are even stopped which come to the hangars to drop their loads; they have to turn around. The situation is this: not only will the animals not have feed in the near future, since a telegram said 24 hours in the case of poultry, but the population of the Magdalen Islands is about to suffer seriously from the longshoremen's strike. That is why, Madam Speaker, after all I said a while ago, I ask again the stevedores, and in this I join the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) and those of my colleagues who spoke before me, I ask the stevedores to show some human decency, some sense of charity towards those people; I ask them, if they want their rights to be respected, to at least show respect for the rights of others, and allow the goods being rent to those islands to be put on board the ship which is waiting only for their permission, that the stevedores at the hangars where those goods are loaded for the islands, who are not on strike, might do their work and send the "Madelinots" the food, the clothing and all they need to go to work at this time of year, and so help these people who have been inactive and unemployed throughout the winter.

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Madam Speaker, I feel it is my duty to help my colleagues with this current problem, in the middle of the night, to speak about the shortage of feed grains in the province of Quebec. What harms this province, harms the whole country, and especially the farming industry and the people who depend on it for their livelihood.

[English]

Only last week we were informed of the government's plan to play a useful role in helping to feed a starving world—regions and countries whose people are in dire need of food. Yet tonight we look to a government which will not even see to it that our own food production is maintained. I have been speaking to a number of members from the province of Quebec and they have all told me—even those on the Liberal side—that it is time to do something.

This afternoon in the agriculture committee we were told by Mr. Coutu, president of the Canadian Pork Council—he is also president of the Fédération Producteurs de Porc de Québec—that the situation is very serious. But still the government does nothing. It has been pointed out by more than one speaker throughout this long night that there is not one member of the cabinet present during this debate.

An hon. Member: That is not so.

Mr. Alkenbrack: There is none in his seat at the present time.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is here.

Mr. Alkenbrack: The absence of ministers shows that the government cares nothing for the interests of the farmers and feeders of Canada, and particularly of Quebec. This Liberal arrogance was also manifested in the agriculture committee yesterday afternoon. I was present at the meeting, along with my hon. friend for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga). The witnesses were members of the Canadian Pork Council, headed by their president Mr. Coutu, as I have mentioned.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I must remind the hon. member that no report of what was said in the committee can be made in the House tonight.

Mr. Alkenbrack: All right; I have not made any report of what was said in the committee.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): On a point of order, Madam Speaker, I should like to call your attention to the fact that the Minister of Agriculture has been right here with us. He just happened to move from one area of the House to another to get back to his seat.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The hon. member knows very well that what he has referred to is not a point of order.

Mr. Alkenbrack: In the time allotted to me for questioning in the committee, I asked Mr. Coutu to inform the committee of the effects of the feed situation resulting from this vexing strike. As we know, it is preventing Quebec farmers and feeders obtaining badly needed feed grain from the elevators. The Liberal member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Daudlin) immediately asked the chairman of the committee, the hon. member for Saint-Jean (Mr. Smith), to rule me out of order and prevent the subject of my question being raised.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. In accordance with the ruling of the Chair a few moments ago, no mention must be made of what was said or done in the committee.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Alkenbrack: I hear shouts from members opposite, Madam Speaker. That is typical of the arrogance of Liberal members. I am not mentioning what the chairman said, but I will say that the chairman did not rule me out of order.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Madam Speaker, on a point of order I want to bring it to your attention that you were quite right. If the hon. member was told he was out of order in the committee, he is out of order in this instance.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I want to tell the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) that what is not allowed in the case of the hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Alkenbrack) is not allowed in the case of the hon. member for St. Boniface.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alkenbrack: I did not report anyone's words; I was just reporting the actions of the Liberal members in that committee. This request by the hon. member for Kent-Essex shows how much the Liberal Party cares about the interests of the farmers and feeders of Quebec. It shows how much the hon. member for Kent-Essex cares about Canadian agriculture, though he comes from an important agricultural riding in western Ontario. How his action in the committee furthers the interests of agriculture, I cannot understand. It is typical Liberalism at its lowest ebb of mediocrity.

Mr. Whelan: On a point of order, I think it would be of interest if the hon. member were to make it clear that he was the only Conservative member attending the committee at that time, and that there were never more than two of them at the committee.

Mr. Alkenbrack: I did not say how many members were at that committee meeting; I am only saying how much the Liberal Party cares about the feed grain crisis.

● (0150)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order. The hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Elzinga: On the same point of order, Madam Speaker, since the Minister of Agriculture has referred to the committee, may I point out to him that at prior meetings we have always outnumbered the Liberals.

[The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin).]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): If the hon. member wants to waste another hour on an alleged point of order, I am ready to listen to him. That is not a valid point of order.

Mr. Towers: A point of order, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Madam Speaker, let them heckle all they want, it only shows their arrogance and their lack of concern for this crisis.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): If your party was concerned, there would be many more of your members in the House.

Mr. Alkenbrack: I congratulate the mover and seconder of the motion, my colleagues for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) and Joliette (Mr. LaSalle), and I thank you, Madam Speaker, for granting time for the debate. Mr. Coutu before the committee this afternoon informed the House that the situation is desperate.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member but no mention of what was said or done in a committee can be allowed at this time. Is the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) rising on a point of order?

Mr. Towers: Yes, Madam Speaker. The point of order I should like to bring to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) through the Chair, is that apparently the government cannot manage the business of the House. The reason there were not more members in the agricultural committee this afternoon was because we were discussing agriculture in this chamber.

Mr. Whelan: On a point of order, Madam Speaker, yesterday afternoon when PFAA was under discussion in this House there were no more than four Conservative members in the chamber, so there were a lot of members who could have been in the agricultural committee.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): I suggest to all hon. members, and especially to the hon. member for Lotbinière, that it is highly irregular to talk about assiduity in the House at this time and during this debate. The hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Alkenbrack).

Mr. Fortin: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The hon. member for Lotbinière on a point of order.

Mr. Fortin: Thank you, Madam Speaker; I had not yet dealt with assiduity, but now that the Minister of Agriculture is here, instead of playing politics and accusing Progressive Conservative members of not being there, surely he should take advantage of this debate, thanks to the initiative of the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert), to advise us of the steps the government will take, instead of letting this debate continue forever and fruitlessly.

[English]

Mr. Alkenbrack: I am indeed gratified that my remarks are causing some reaction in the Liberal ranks. I am sure the Minister of Agriculture knows what I am about to say. I do not have to quote the origin of my information, but I got it not very far from where I got the other. There is an immediate danger that an estimated 40,000 hogs could be prematurely dumped and sacrificed on an already sluggish market as a result of this illegal deprivation of feed to the farmers resulting from the action of the longshoremen. Does anybody want to contest that statement? Yet the government still does nothing.

About a month ago we had a similar situation on the west coast, the stoppage of our world grain trade by the grain handlers in Vancouver. This stoppage went on for more than three months and the government would not act. The official opposition acted. We forced a debate on the question, and while it was going on a settlement was reached. But it took two weeks more of procrastination and protest to get the grain handlers back to work and the grain moving.

We now have a similar situation, this time in the east. So far the government has done nothing. It says it is studying the situation. I hope it is. It is waiting to read the temperature—Celsius—of the farmers of Quebec. If anything is done the opposition deserves top marks and credit for standing up tonight for justice for the Quebec farmer in this ill-defined just society, headed by a Liberal government which refuses so frequently to govern. Even with a clear majority it still refuses to govern.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): You are still living back in 1958.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Let me remind them that the clear majority granted to them was granted in good part by the farmers of Quebec, which is part of their power base.

Tonight the cabinet is watching the press and the level of publicity from this debate. Last night's Ottawa Journal had this to say. There was a report headed "Cabinet may order men back" and it went on to say:

> The cabinet is studying the possibility of forcing striking Quebec longshoremen back to work, Prime Minister Trudeau said Tuesday.

I hope it is, and that it has the guts to do it. What is there to study? All the cabinet need do is act and legislate the longshoremen back to work. If it cannot do this, then it could order an injunction giving needy farmers and their starving cattle, hogs and poultry access to the grain supplies in the Quebec elevators which are so fanatically and illegally picketed, thus withholding grain from the public. This reminds me of the ancient Bishop Hatto of Bingen who would give his hungry people no food.

I call upon the Prime Minister, the cabinet, and government benches, on behalf of the Quebec farmers and feeders, to put an end to this impasse by seeing to it that feed is provided to the livestock of Quebec farmers. In yesterday's Ottawa Citizen there was a picture with a news item showing Quebec trucks lined up at the Prescott elevator to load up with feed grains to be transported to Quebec to help in this serious situation. As a member representing the riding of Frontenac-Lennox and Addington in eastern Ontario, I hope our Prescott elevator supplies help alleviate the shortage and play a helpful role. But there are, of course, limits to supply, and Quebec's problem this week could become our problem in Ontario next week. Then if we run out of grain and the longshoremen, abetted by this do-nothing Liberalism here on Parliament Hill, continue to control the situation and feed remains unavailable in Trois-Rivières, Quebec and Montreal, most of eastern Canada will then be helpless and immobilized as far as this phase of our food production is concerned.

The government has a duty to perform, which is to stop this illegal sideshow run by the longshoremen's union at the elevators in Quebec. Their strike is no doubt a legal one, but their action in picketing grain suppliers is illegal. They are not classed as grain handlers, and their action is victimizing the farmers and feeders of the province of Quebec, starving their livestock and crippling and disrupting the production of food in this country. This must be stopped—immediately, forthwith, and now. I call upon our philosophic Prime Minister, his supine cabinet and his bewildered and misled followers, to govern themselves accordingly and move to alleviate this hardship and injustice that is being perpetrated upon the farmers and feeders of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, after six hours of debate that I watched with interest, you will understand no doubt that I will try to limit my intervention in a gesture of friendship for my colleagues on this side of the House in particular who described the situation in great detail and explained to all members of this House that their colleagues on the government side were unanimous in deploring the urgency of the situation and the importance of finding a solution in the near future.

During this debate, Madam Speaker, I was particularly struck by the extremely sensible comments about Quebecers by my colleagues of the official opposition. And if I recall, a few years ago when the party opposite was in power, I was not a member of this House but I was nevertheless following what was happening here in the House of Commons and for having consulted abundantly the pieces of legislation that were passed at that time I remember quite well that eastern Canada and eastern farmers did not obtain to the best of my recollection legislations suited to the needs of Quebec farmers. Without wanting to pass any final judgement, perhaps I might be permitted to consider and hear with a little skepticism that sudden interest and somewhat extreme manifestation from members opposite for Quebec farmers.

I remember a few minutes ago, or let us rather say a few hours ago, hearing a member of the Official Opposition who did us the courtesy of saying a few words in French, but I must add that those few words in French indicated to me rather clearly that if he had a certain, at least apparent, respect for one of the official languages which is that of the man talking to you, there was a rather obvious lack of understanding of what is a French-Speaking Canadian and the way he acts in politics.

I think our friends opposite too often identify the activities of Quebec members with bombastic speeches and cutting interventions in the House of Commons or elsewhere.

I think those who somewhat know us realize that we have some sort of lobbying methods which may be more important and more efficient within the framework of a party, and which consist of regular meetings with the ministers concerned and official and often unofficial representations to them, which should not necessarily be identified with those long speeches intended, as my friends opposite have often said, "to be on the record".

That is not our line, and I would invite my friends on the other side to stop telling liberal members from Quebec that we do not speak up enough in the House. I respect them enough to respect their way of doing things and stepping in in due time, and I hope they will show their respect for our personality which leads us to act by using the means we think most efficient in the way we think most appropriate in the interest of our constituents and in the interest of the Quebec people as a whole.

Madam Speaker, it should no doubt be recognized that our debate tonight represents an extremely important step in the dispute we have been discussing for several hours.

I also think that the tribute we paid to the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) seconded by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), was well deserved. I think the hon. member for Bellechasse in particular, and even my friend from Joliette with some reservations, on the whole made interesting points, but I think what we should keep in mind tonight at this late hour and as this debate drives to a close, is the fact that we should understand that all parties represented here in the House of Commons should unite to understand how important it is to make the government realize that it is urgent not to consider in detail the situation but to take a decision.

I think that, as a government member, it is my duty to endorse the action that will be taken by the minister concerned. On that point, I trust him entirely, and I urge him not only to consider the emergency of the situation but also to take action since, in my opinion, the situation has reached a degree which warrants government intervention. Even though I respect, as most members do, the workers' right to strike, even though I accept straight away that collective bargaining formula, I think public interest demands, at the present time, that the government take the matter into its own hands and take the action requested by the circumstances and which, to my opinion, justifies the drafting and tabling of special legislation. I think we must not dodge the issue. It is of course easy to try to protect altogether the worker, the union, the government and the opposition and to adopt a middle of the road solution. But I think that period is over with, and, as a government member, I think the representations submitted to the Minister of Agriculture are likely to indicate to him that the problem has reached such a point as to warrant government action, and I am convinced that hon. members opposite will be the first to support a legislation designed to enable Quebec farmers to get supplies, as they have the right to do, in order to distribute to Quebec consumers the food they need for their families.

An hon. Member: It is very important.

[Mr. Marceau.]

Mr. Marceau: Madam Speaker, I think that . . . Oh, I am sorry, things are changing so quickly, Mr. Speaker; I think, looking at all of us here tonight, at this time when both hands of the clock are meeting, that it would perhaps be the time for all parties to join together. It may be the time for each of us, irrespective of the political party we belong to, of our nationality, of our cultures or language, to understand that the situation the Quebec farmers are now requiring that we join together and, that in a movement of collective solidarity, we tell the Minister of Agriculture that we trust him, that we urge him to take immediate and concrete action to meet the needs of Quebec farmers and at the same time of the Canadian people who is looking at our government, who trusts them and will continue to trust them and to support them for the action they will take hopefully very soon.

[English]

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, leave has been granted to the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) to move the adjournment of this House, pursuant to Standing Order 26, for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the continuing longshoremen's strike in the ports of Quebec City, Trois-Rivières and Montreal which prevents millers from getting the feed grain supplies normally required for animal feed, and endangers the life of thousands of animals.

May I commend the hon. member for Bellechasse and the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) for bringing in such a timely motion, and may I commend all hon. members who have, and are, participating in the debate at this late hour. I see the time is now 2.15 a.m., and after listening to the debate for some 6 hours and 15 minutes I feel somewhat like the man who married a widow who had eight children. Everything that had to be said has been said, and everything that had to be done has been done—by the opposition side only. We have urged this government to action, but now all we can do is hope that the Liberal administration will react in a positive way to the extent that these ills will be cured with regard to the crippling situation we have now in Quebec.

Mr. Béchard: You did not hear the last speaker.

Mr. Elzinga: The hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Alkenbrack) attempted to gather opinions for some individuals from the Quebec region on this depressing problem. One individual he questioned appeared before the Standing Committee on Agriculture on behalf of the Pork Council of Canada. I should like to relate to the House the opposition which the hon. member met from the Liberal members of the Standing Committee on Agriculture. It was their feeling that they did not have to discuss this pressing problem. This is just another example of the Liberal arrogance we have been experiencing and it is typical of their approach to the serious problems facing us as a nation.

The reason we enjoy our liberty now is that in the past people were allowed to speak out. People had enough brains to reject what was false and to hold on to the truth. I submit that that should be the basis of our public policy in Canada today. Yet we see attempts time and time again by this Liberal administration to muffle members of the House. There is also an indication that the government does not know, or is not completely aware of the facts regarding this strike. On April 8, as recorded in Hansard at page 4593, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) said:

> Mr. Speaker, according to information I have received today most people still have some stocks of grain and there is no real loss of feed stocks. That is, no livestock or poultry are going without feed. We are watching the situation very closely and moving as much as we possibly can by all means, as I have said.

Two days later, the Minister of Agriculture abruptly changed his mind. As recorded in Hansard of April 10 at page 4672, he said:

> Mr. Speaker, the condition is rapidly deteriorating and unless injunctions are obtained to disallow the picketing at the elevators in Quebec City and Trois-Rivières, there will be some loss of poultry and livestock. We know people are being asked to share the feed that is in the area and feed is being trucked in from Montreal and Prescott. We do not think, however, that this will be sufficient to look after the needs that will be there in the next day or two.

I would like to share, now, with the House points that were brought out in conversation with the millers' association. Contrary to the statements made by the Minister of Agriculture, the association feels that the situation is reaching dramatic proportions. They are preparing an injunction to force the port in Trois-Rivières to open if the situation does not change by the weekend. They are confusing "provisions" with "abcess". The minister said that there seems to be enough grain. The millers' association says that the grain might be there, but they do not have access to it. Producers were leading their stock to slaughter in Beauce last week, and this week it is mostly in Nicolet, St-Hyacinthe and Yamaska. Farmers are blaming this on lack of feed grain.

Producers usually replenish their supplies every three or four days. If the grain is available in Prescott, producers cannot truck it from there every three or four days. Producers are not even thinking of the cost of the strike to them in terms of increased grain costs; their main concern is to get enough feed for their stock. If producers have to truck the grain from Thunder Bay or Prescott, the increased cost of the grain would be prohibitive. In Quebec, trucks were able to pass on Saturday and Sunday, but in Montreal and Trois-Rivières they cannot. Some producers in southern Quebec have already sent some calves to slaughter because of feed shortage, calves that had not attained the normal weight for slaughter. In the province in general, producers will have to slaughter shortly because they cannot change the feeding habits of their stock.

It appears that the minister is unaware of the real truth, and I would like to pose a couple of questions to him in my closing comments because this government is not coming forward with the answers which the country is looking for. It is my sincere hope that the Canadian people will not again be disappointed. Since the hour is late and, as I said earlier, what needs to be said has been said, all we need now is action from the government. I ask the minister if he plans to introduce special legislation to deal with this serious situation. The Canadian people are looking to him for action.

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, without downgrating the importance of the special debate which started at 8 o'clock last evening, I must inform opposition members that we on the government side have not waited for this debate to make representations to the Minister of Agriculture or to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. I for one made such representations a number of times, and other names were quoted here by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs or by my colleague from Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Béchard). A couple of other names should be added, among others that of the member for Pontiac (Mr. Lefebvre). I join my colleagues to appeal to both parties affected by the strike in Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec City. I urge them to take into serious consideration the human problem referred to by the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine. It is not only a matter of moving feed grain. The sending of goods to the Magdalen Islands for instance is also involved.

I was amazed at the remarks by the hon. members for Saint-Hyacinthe, Rocky Mountain (Messrs. Wagner and Clark) concerning the contribution of the minister for Consumer and Corporate Affairs. They seem to be surprised that the minister participated in this debate. They implied that the minister was speaking on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture.

The hon. member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) could speak on his own behalf for various reasons. I shall mention at least two. First, as minister of Consumer affairs, he knows full well that if the strike goes on in Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec City, this will mean production costs to cattle producers in Quebec will go up. And you know what happens in this case, higher costs are often passed on to the consumer.

So I am glad to do justice to the hon. member for Papineau.

We all know, on the government side, that the hon. member for Papineau has been very concerned for several years by the question of feed grains supplies for Quebec. As recently as yesterday afternoon, cabinet ministers were accused of not having been present yesterday evening or during the night at this emergency debate. I have been told by authorized sources, Mr. Speaker, that representatives of the FPA have met yesterday afternoon with three members of the cabinet of the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), who are the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet); those representatives have informed those ministers of the problems which the cattle producers are presently facing in the current situation. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Corriveau) have set forth a list of measures the government has been taking for some time to ensure a normal supply to Quebec cattlemen. But I have to catch the attention of the minister of Agriculture and also, hopefully, of the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. I believe there is an area in need of improvement, Mr. Speaker. It is that of railway transportation to the East. I heard representations by those responsible for purchasing at the Coopérative Agricole Papineau. Since last January, railway transportation of grain to the East has been extremely limited, and I am asking the Minister of Agriculture to make the necessary representations to whom it may concern. Sometimes, Mr. Speaker, I get the impression that the authorities of the Canadian Wheat Board do not consider consumption important for the domestic market. I know that foreign markets are very important for Western wheat producers, but I believe that the priority must be given to domestic consumers. I join my colleague for Portneuf (Mr. Bussières) and the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) in asking the minister to give more power to the Canadian Livestock Feed Board. Mr. Speaker, I have made this suggestion several times in the past and I know that it will not be welcome among Western members. But we Easterners want the Canadian Livestock Feed Board to have more power to ensure a regular supply for Eastern livestock producers.

Therefore, I would like to suggest to the Minister of Agriculture that he seriously consider the increased costs that the present situation will bring about for livestock producers, and I hope that if he needs any help from members on the government side to support his requests from the President of the Treasury Board or the Cabinet we shall be behind him so that he may offset in one way or another the additional cost that Quebec cattle producers will have to bear because of the present situation.

Let me make a further suggestion which was made to me by someone who deals in feed grain because mention is often made of millers, even in the motion of the hon. member for Bellechasse. Not only are millers experiencing difficulties in obtaining supplies of feed grain, but cooperatives as well. One of the suggestions made by a representative of a very important cooperative on the Quebec side of the Ottawa Valley is that the government should perhaps seriously consider building regional storage facilities which could be supplied by rail. Among others, I think of the Coopérative Agricole Papineau which has its headquarters and plant in Plaisance. Since it is located west of Montreal, it would be much more economic for it to get its supplies by rail—the Canadian Pacific serves our area—if we had such a warehouse in our area.

In conclusion, I join with all the members who have already participate in this debate to urge once again the parties involved in this labour dispute affecting the three ports I mentioned to carry on serious negotiations around a table and arrived at a settlement soon, so that our Quebec producers will be normally supplied with feed grain.

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I must warmly congratulate my colleague, the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) as the previous speakers have done it, for his excellent job in proposing to the House a motion under Standing Order 26 in order to discuss this urgent matter of feed grain supplies and in particular the strike now going on in the province of Quebec.

I think that every member of this House is prepared to congratulate the hon. member for Bellechasse. First because he himself is a farmer and as such, is deeply concerned by the problem of agriculture of which he has a thorough knowledge. Since we have had the opportunity of taking advantage of his knowledge in this House, we have been able to appreciate his devotion and concern over this matter in the committee on agriculture.

However, I heard my hon. colleagues tonight and this afternoon try to take the credit that the hon. member for Bellechasse deserves for putting this motion forward. Things have been said on the Progressive Conservative side by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) and on the government side through the question asked by the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Béchard), who pretended to be the first one to raise the matter yesterday when he asked a question to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I invite the hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Alkenbrack) to check in Hansard where he will see, on page 4651 of the Debates of House of Commons of April 9, that the hon. member for Bellechasse was the first one to raise this matter of the strike in the ports of Quebec City, Montreal and Trois-Rivières. On page 4651 of Hansard—and I shall not read again the motion he has put forward in its whole—he said and I quote:

> Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 26, I request that an emergency debate be held on the feed grain supply in eastern Canada, and more particularly in Quebec.

And he listed all the effects of this strike that had been going on for more than 7 days and has worsened from day-to-day.

Yet, the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine tries to take the credit that the hon. member for Bellechasse entirely deserves. I remember quite well that in 1962 when we arrived in this House as a result of the general election of 1962, we raised for the first time the feed grain issue in Eastern Canada.

I remember quite well that the government of that time, day after day, week after week, promised to come up with a solution and now, in 1975, we are still at grips with the same problem. After 13 years, the situation is exactly the same. There is still no solution. We heard pious wishes from all sides and I do not know how many Ministers of Agriculture made promises though we are still facing the same problem today. This is an important issue which threatens our economy and Canadian consumers and tonight we heard some interesting comments from government members. For instance, I liked the comments made by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Marceau) who did not simply state: I have confidence in the minister and he will solve the whole problem in due time. He asked instead for immediate measures and we fully agree with him.

I also support the comments of the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Bussières) who said that there should not be any problem for a government which can use an airplane overnight to move food products to the Western world or to Bangladesh. Why could it not move food products from Western Canada to the port of Montreal or to the farm cooperative of Granby or to any farm centre in Eastern Canada?

Mr. Speaker, there are members who have been kind to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), as if they were afraid to expose themselves.

There were members who said tonight: we have other means of pressure, we have other solutions within our reach to force the government to act. We of the opposition have been blamed for wanting to make speeches and have been told that such speeches would not move grain. If our speeches did not move grain, they have made it possible for some members from the province of Quebec to express their views on as important a problem as the one we are faced with today. They have enabled some Liberal members who did not have the opportunity before—I do not say they did not avail themselves of it, but they did not have it before—to speak openly in the House, and enabled us to see what they think of the problem.

Mr. Speaker, there is no need to say this is an important problem, since several members have stressed it. The strike that is now going on in the ports of Trois-Rivières, Montreal and Quebec is jeopardizing food supply in Quebec for several months to come.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take either the millers' or the employers' side, I do not want to take one side, but I would like to refer you to some court judgments. I admit as everybody does that the strike between employers and employees is legal. However, if I refer to a judgment in a trial of Dusessoy and Hersees, in a case of retail clerks union put before Mr. Justice Aylesworth, mentioned in Carrothers at page 462, and I quote:

An hon. Member: What page?

Mr. Rondeau: Page 462 and you can refer to it.

An hon. Member: And what date?

Mr. Rondeau: In 1963, you will see that this is a very interesting judgment which has a direct relation to the present conflict and I quote:

> . . . the secondary strike pickets (that is those who prevent the entrance of the employer's suppliers or customers) were declared illegal because they violate the right of trade. These cases present some remarkable aspects, not only because of the prohibition of secondary action, but also because the decisions were taken while considering the conflicting interests. The proposal was as follows:
> "The right . . . of the respondent to take part in picket lines in a secondary strike . . . must give way . . .

So the members of this House should be serious and refer to that judgment.

> . . . must give way to the right of the petitioner to trade; the first right . . . is exercised for the benefit of a particular category, while the second is a much more fundamental and important right . . . as it is exercised for the benefit and in the interest of the community as a whole. For the purpose of the act . . . the interests of the community as a whole must outweigh those of the individual or of a particular group of individuals".

Mr. Speaker, unlike those who talk nonsense on the other side, those judgments still have their full value, particularly in the current conflict. We recognize the right of longshoremen to strike, but on the other hand, we oppose picket lines which hinder trade or deny the right to supply millers. Those judgments should allow the Minister of Agriculture to take more urgent measures, more effective means to meet the situation.

Mr. Speaker, Quebec producers now have problems, consumers will have some too. Moreover, farm animals have also theirs, not because of animals but because of the stupidity of men who have been looking for solutions since 1962, but offer nothing except wishful thinking.

Mr. Speaker, if government members reproach us for speaking too much, we are really anxious to see concrete action not expedient, temporary measures, but positive measures which will solve the problem of feed grains in eastern Canada and will do so for good.

Mr. Speaker, the problem in this House is, in fact, similar to the difficulties in the Babel Tower. In a country as affluent as ours, in a country where grain is abundant, there is a transportation problem between the East and the West. I support the action of the member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) in this House. If Liberal members have, as they alleged, efficient leverage and better means than speeches and words, well, now is the time to prove it.

It is easy to blame the opposition, but only the government party can act. Government members are the ones who can take measures. Tomorrow, when Canadian consumption will be jeopardized, when hundreds and thousands of farmers will be on the brink of bankruptcy because a situation has been allowed to deteriorate, it might be too late. I believe that in such situations supply is involved and we should be able to agree that supply is vitally important for a province. Our Quebec farmers will soon lose millions of dollars.

I would not want the Minister of Agriculture to put forward, by way of a solution, the same ones I have seen since 1962. Anytime there were losses, the Minister of Agriculture offered long term loans to compensate for the losses suffered. The Minister of Agriculture should not suggest as a solution to delay the interests on losses brought about by a situation which the government could have settled otherwise.

● (0240)

When we see such absurd solutions as the ones we have known up to now, some so-called proposals or solutions suggested by the ministers, we are aware that farmers and producers are always a little poorer, always more in debt and that financiers are always a little richer.

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Rondeau: It is pitiful to note that in our economy on a whole for the past two years, the various groups of producers have been in a bad way. Only the banks and their branches as well as monopolies which belong to banks have prospered. The finance companies and banks have prospered. The financiers have thrived, but farmers as other social classes have been in a bad way. All we can offer them is debts, all we can offer them is deferred interests.

Mr. Speaker, since 1962, in every budget speech in, every throne speech, I heard about saving measures to help farmers, but those saving measures, before being tabled in this House, always amounted to the same thing: a bigger farm loan than before, more debts than before and then, we hear government members boasting of having saved agriculture.

Well, Mr. Speaker, when one sees the farmers' situation, when one sees that the number of farmers is decreasing every day in Canada, that debts on farm loans, farm securities, securities on machinery, on livestock constantly increase, that banks are doing a roaring trade with farmers, and that today we still are in a situation where there is a huge difference between the prices paid to western producers for their production, for barley, oats and corn and other grains, and the price paid by eastern farmers for the same production, for the same grains, well, that scandal was exposed.

I have been hearing this same old story, this tune, those pious wishes, since 1962. No solution came out of them. No solution since how long? We suggested grain elevators in eastern Canada where grain could be taken at harvest time and be moved immediately so as to prevent any labour dispute.

The hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Bussières) admitted a while ago in this House, and he was right—

An hon. Member: He spoke well.

Mr. Rondeau: Yes, he spoke well and I congratulate him. And when the government—

I am not here to reproach him, when I hear an hon. member say something sensible, I am the first to recognize it. The government can solve the national harbours problem tonight if they want to. The minister could have solved the problem seven, ten days ago.

An hon. Member: The hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Marceau) spoke well.

Mr. Rondeau: The hon. member for Lapointe, and I said so a while ago. He was not satisfied with flattering the minister, he asked him to bring in a serious solution. When animals begin to destroy one another, it is absurd, it is a perfect Babel, and the opposition members are not responsible for this state of affairs. Those responsible, those who maintained or supported and tolerated this situation are those now sitting on the front benches, those who have the power to solve problems but do nothing, lead nowhere, administer nothing, but let the bureaucrats decide everything. I am anxious to see the Minister of Agriculture assume his role as he wanted, as he wished and as he advocated when he was a member on the government side and his predecessor was sitting in the Chair of the Minister of Agriculture, the former member for Medicine Hat. I recall very clearly that when the present Minister of Agriculture was sitting not far from us, across the aisle, he seemed to know all the answers then. He would grumble and criticize—although not too loudly—the then minister of agriculture, and I would rely on the present Minister of Agriculture. However, I am somewhat disappointed by the time he needs to make up his mind, although I am willing to admit something: he may be competent and knowledgeable, but I feel he is prevented from acting by his officials who make decisions much too often in all departments. These are the real administrators of this country, while ministers only pretend to administer their respective departments. Ministers are not responsible for decision-making.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired. The hon. member for Richelieu.

Mr. Florian Côté (Richelieu): Mr. Speaker, at this late hour, I shall try to be very brief and perhaps overlook all that has been said since the start of the sitting which, to my mind has lasted much too long.

Contrary to some of my colleagues, I am not so pleased with the debate held tonight. For some, it was a happy occasion because they were able to express themselves. If I were the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau), I would be happy because, as he said, he learned something from the Liberals tonight.

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Boulanger: No points of order are allowed after two o'clock.

An hon. Member: It is too late.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Shefford on a point of order.

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out to the House that the only thing I learned tonight from the Liberal members, is that two of them I suspected of having Le Page glue on their seats, finally managed to prove that it was not so.

Mr. Côté: Just as he does not know anything in agriculture, he does not know what a point of order is, because he would not have risen to say what he has just said.

As I said earlier, I have not learned anything from what has been said tonight, except that I fear there was more harm than good done to the farming community, to the consumer and to the negociations where tension will increase because everyone looks up, because there might be "exploitation" at some time. I shall be very glad if it is not the case, but I am afraid that such will be the result of the dabate. I find it unfortunate that the opposition members . . . to try to be as brief as possible, I should like them to understand. First, I do not blame the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), but I did not appreciate the way he accused the hon. members from Quebec. I do not like what the hon. member for Shefford has just done but I appreciate the spirit in which the mover put this motion forward, because I think he did it with good will. I want to prevent new accusations from one side and the other. When there is an election like the one which has just been held and when it is said that Quebec liberals do not know the problems of agriculture in Quebec, you, Social Credit and Progressive Conservatives, are told that the farmers decided to trust us. So, it is useless to hurl accusations to one another and to be hurt after such a long debate. Personally, I do not mind this very much, because I know who people trust and I think that the Minister of Agriculture knows it too. Because when leaders of APU, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and Coopérative fédérée come to Ottawa, we see them long before they go to the Social Crediters or the Progressive Conservatives, or even to the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) to whom I am very grateful. So let us forget all that and be practical. Very often we do not rise because we have very easy ways to promote our views. No mention was ever made of the discreet but very significant work done by the hon. member for Saint-Jean (Mr. Smith). He fights to maintain the rights . . . and if the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) came more often to the agriculture committee sessions, where I never see him, he would realize why perhaps all parties in this House agree that he is one of the best. In that committee, work gets done without fights.

● (0250)

I would now say a few things while the minister is there. The opposition will think I speak for the first time. What I shall say every Liberal member has said, because we know when to ask for measures. But I shall make to the Minister of Agriculture a suggestion we all put up together. On that, I ask the member for Joliette to convince the members in his party, in order to avoid repetition of this present hardship to the Quebec farmers and also to the Quebec consumers. I recommended three years ago to the agriculture committee that the Canadian Feed Board be given more powers, as mentioned by the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Bussières) and the member for Gatineau (Mr. Clermont). The first ones to object were the Progressive Conservatives. Let us not forget it was the western ones. At one time I would have liked the member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) to rise . . .

Mr. Boulanger: He resigned at that time.

Mr. Côté: No, that's true, he was in the opposition.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), on a point of order.

Mr. La Salle: I shall be very brief, Mr. Speaker, and mostly very practical. The hon. member for Richelieu (Mr. Côté) is inviting me to rise on this question; I would like to remind him that they have been in power for about 30 years and that they should stop creating opposition about things that they have not themselves realized. You have the power, you should solve these problems!

Mr. Côté: Thank you for this reminder—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Lotbinière on a point of order.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Richelieu says that as a government member, he has many more effective means of action than the opposition and he also says that three years ago, he recommended more power for the Canadian Livestock Feed Board. I would like him to explain to me what use government members are if he was not able to convince his own solid government to implement this idea three years ago.

Mr. Côté: First of all, I shall reply to the question of the hon. member for Joliette who did not let me finish. I was not accusing him of not having risen. He could not rise to make representations on behalf of his party because he did not belong to it at the time—

Mr. Boulanger: He had resigned.

Mr. Côté: If he had let me finish, I would have told him that I was not accusing him. I was saying what I would have wanted at the time. Now I think that he may have the chance soon to convince his colleagues to support us so that we may be unanimous in the agriculture committee. In reply to the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) I would say that if we were not so efficient, they would have increased their representation in the last elections. It is in the province of Quebec that farmers told us that we were capable, us Liberals, that we had the best solutions. The people said so, not us.

● (0300)

Mr. Speaker, I want to talk about the possibility of agriculture in eastern Canada relying on at least 10 million bushels of wheat from the Wheat Board which has them available for international trade and supplies for internal consumption in eastern Canada. But the Canadian Wheat Board sees to it that there are available supplies and means of transport for shipping it in eastern Canada and in the four corners of the country.

So, in support of what my hon. colleague from Gatineau (Mr. Clermont) and the other one from Portneuf (Mr. Bussières) are saying, this problem has been existing for three years now. Two years ago the grain handlers began to strike in the fall. Last year we were concerned with petroleum. This year we are not having quite the same problem, but we fear a shortage. Farmers have that feeling even if there is still grain in eastern Canada. Such fears, such apprehensions encourage speculation from dealers.

If there were any available . . . I do not know who would be paying the bill. I am not sure about that. Would it be the farmers' organizations, either the APU or the provincial government. What matters is that this grain would be in eastern Canada and would be shipped before the closing of the St. Lawrence Seaway. Thus it would cost us less to ship this grain by boat than by rail. So we would be sure that if there is speculation during a strike it would not be to the detriment of farmers.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say for those who perhaps are not listening to us but who will be reading about it in the newspapers that at the present time there are injunctions—

An hon. Member: Injunctions.

Mr. Côté: —yes, injunctions and thank you. Injunctions have been claimed, but unfortunately, the injunctions claimed to date have been asked for by bodies which buy grain to resell it to farmers. The farmer has not asked for injunctions. I have asked representatives of the FPA this afternoon, and I hope that the farmers in the Trois-Rivières area, who own large quantities of grains, will ask themselves for injunctions, several of them. They might not be respected, but at least if the farmer as such, the one who is really involved, would ask for injunctions, there might be some pressure on the government, on the state, on the provincial government, for as far as the Department of Justice is concerned, at the provincial police level, laws are not complied with, and pressure will be put to bear on this jurisdiction. In Ottawa, the federal government will be urged to settle problems, not by incurring a reprimand or seeking to revolt, for what is being done here tonight is of no help for agriculture.

I will therefore conclude, Mr. Speaker, by asking the hon. member for Joliette to convince the Progressive Conservative members to give their consent for the Canadian Wheat Board, which their predecessors established in 1929, to be more generous, since we are presently experiencing difficulties in getting a bit of Western grains, about ten million bushels, for Eastern Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is rather late in the night, and I feel we should go and get some rest.

● (0310)

Mr. Prosper Boulanger (Mercier): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) has just said—

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Bellechasse on a point of order.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): May I ask the Chair if I could put a question to the hon. member for Richelieu (Mr. Côté) who has just completed his speech, for I would like to ask him a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have to remind the hon. member that he should ask the hon. member for Richelieu and not the Chair.

Mr. Côté: It is agreed, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have always been told that I was to address the Chair in order to tell an hon. member something. So, in these circumstances, I would ask the hon. member through you if he agrees that the Canadian Parliament has a very great responsibility with respect to problems which might arise within our society and that it is the duty of members of Parliament, be they on the opposition side or on the government side, to raise those questions and problems when they arise, or under the standing orders of our assembly, in order to focus the attention of the Cabinet on some particular question and that such a way of acting is not unreasonable. Does the hon. member agree with that way of looking at things?

Mr. Côté: I believe I do, Mr. Speaker, I am ready to accept that with some reservations. We should be careful. Considering the very broad jurisdiction of the Canadian Parliament and its administrative procedures, the acts which were passed and the powers some agencies were interested with, when it comes to believing that one is right in trying to urge government to pass bills faster than the acts which were designed by that very Parliament, then I have reservations. That is why I am saying that as members of Parliament we should try not to prove people that we have been strong, that we loved them; crying on the left shoulder knowing that favors may be obtained from the right one, that is what my reservations are about.

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Speaker, the answer just given by my colleague, the hon. member for Richelieu (Mr. Côté) was a small part of my speech. I should not exceed 20 minutes since the mover and his party, the Social Credit of Canada are willing to hear me for about 20 minutes. I will try to interest them and make them understand certain things. I do not know as member for a small town on the island of Montreal, if they wonder why I rise to speak.

First, a few hours ago, I was talking with one of my best friends who is simply a longshoreman, an honest man who has earned his living for 30 years in Montreal harbour and who knows that there has been a debate taking place here since 8 o'clock. The first thing he did was to congratulate the mover, the member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert), for this emergency debate, and that proves that he is a serious and sincere man. But he told me, a few hours ago, that we should not forget that the speeches we will hear tonight could bring certain of our members to start a small rebellion that there is a more serious conflict than you would think. Then I asked him the reason? I am speaking as a Montrealer, not as a farmer because I do not know agriculture. I do not know if that will please some of my colleagues in my party because that is the opinion of a worker, a longshoreman but expressed so eloquently by my colleague from Richelieu (Mr. Côté). He is afraid that we are preparing an early measure forcing them to return to work. They have been fearing a little for a few hours already. Is it that fear—

● (0320)

I do not have any details to give because there is a part I can tell, and the other does not concern the House.

I will tell you the part that concerns us. When one talks of a friend, of a worker, if one does not have respect for the friendship of a worker who confides anything to you, that is a proof that one does not have any dignity at all.

So the part I want to tell you about a man I did not and I will not name is that he fears the government, and particularly when he refers to the Minister of Agriculture, that the government should proceed too rapidly to reach a decision within a few hours. I answered: There is no question of a few hours.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Boulanger: There is a question of allowing you to use all your rights, all your privileges because your strike is legal and to use all that to defend yourselves. But, on the other hand, we, in the government—I was talking about Parliament then—members both in power and in the Opposition also have a duty to fulfill, that of ensuring that the people of this country are well served. At present, there is no mistake about it, you are depriving farmers of part of their income and also run the risk of depriving the consumer. In a few weeks, if that ever lasts a few weeks, there will be a danger of depriving people of food and by the same token a danger of speculation called the black market of prices, etc.

So, we have a duty to fulfill, and a decision must be made. Our friend from Bellechasse, I agree, was serious. On the other hand, I told my hon. friend the expert from the area of Joliette (Mr. La Salle), that is perhaps less serious. When one thinks that he pretended at one time to be a defender of Quebec, of French Canada, and he left the party because he was badly treated in that party, but he has not yet succeeded to convince anybody of his western group to help us bring back order, then justice in the Eastern Canada. You have done nothing of the kind.

Mr. Speaker, it is the first time that I attack him in this House—

Mr. La Salle: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Boulanger: It is the first time that I attack him in this House, but it is not the last one.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Joliette rises on a point of order.

Mr. La Salle: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, because of the words used by the hon. member for Langelier—

Some hon. Members: Mercier!

Mr. La Salle: I mean Mercier (Mr. Boulanger).

As the Progressive Conservative Party was not aware of the interests of Quebec, he may have been late during this debate, and as I think he met a longshoreman who took part of his time, I would like to tell him that we never got such co-operation and support as regards the problem of Quebec from members of that party from every province, as many government members have shown, even members of the Social Credit party.

Then, I think that the hon. member for Mercier is late with these news.

Mr. Boulanger: I will invite him to join another party.

I do not know, Mr. Speaker, if it is a valid point of order, but he understood quite well that I was in no way referring to what the Progressive Conservative party has just said tonight; I was referring to its past, he knows quite well what I mean, he understood me pretty well. However, I want to show him tonight that it is not easy for you in the official Opposition, with three good guys from Quebec, to be understood by millionaires of Western Canada. Now, you know everything.

We, Easterners, from Quebec, the Maritimes or elsewhere, who are unable to make ourselves understood by your party and you do not even realize it. You are trying to blame the government, that is the Liberal party that is leading the country. You should at least understand that we have absolute majority, a mandate from the population and that means: We trust you. Lead the country. There is an expression that says: A government must govern. But we have enough diplomacy to choose a typical Minister of Agriculture, an expert in his field. He is not a comedian, he has no desire to make jokes.

The Minister of Agriculture has a responsibility and he intends to assume it and discharge his duty. But you know there are some petty politicians in the opposition, in the Social Credit Party who believe that they can solve all the troubles in the world with a stroke of the pen. That is called clownery. And it is to be heard here only. It is time for one among us to let you know it. It is easy to drift in demagogy. There is nothing easier than to criticize. But did you accomplish miracles when you were in power in Vancouver, British Columbia? You saw what happened there. Anyhow we will not speak about it, because I do not wish to deviate from the subject. Moreover, I did not say to the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) that I had met the longshoreman, but that I had spoken to him on the phone.

Coming back to what he told me, it is true that I heard my colleagues say to the Minister: You will immediately take some action, you will see to it right now. Granted, I speak as a Montreal member who meets the labourers and the blue collars all day long and all week-ends long, to express myself correctly. I agree that important measures have to be taken, but mind you: we should not ask our longshoremen what we did not dare ask those out West; we should not be too strict either. Let us not forget that out West, before they decided to take emergency measures, they sought our advice; they even criticised us and almost compelled us to let things go for nearly seven weeks. I am not asking you to waste seven weeks, because the matter is really an emergency, but I ask the Minister of Agriculture, and even my colleagues are asking you to decide, knowing your sound judgment, your sense of responsibility, I ask you when the time comes to prepare a draft, either for the return to work or to request a stoppage, once again I ask you to consult with the Minister of Labour and see whether it would be possible to settle the problem within 24 hours. Because we can cause a lot of damage to these blue-collar workers, the Montreal longshoremen. I sympathize with the farmers and I understand them very well, although I merely eat the food that they are producing for us; it will certainly require greater efforts to produce it, and I am sure that the farmer is earnestly and honorably earning his income. There must be justice, so that they can be paid like everybody. I agree that they have low incomes. Yet, we must stop complaining that all farmers are starving, living in distress, and without a cent in their pockets. This is exaggeration again. Personally, I was born in a small village called St. Eugene de l'Islet; my parents had a farm, and although I cannot say that I grew in the field, it was certainly not far from it: this was meant as a pun. When I inherited my father's farm, I was so scared that I gave it away to my eldest brother and said: do whatever you want with it. I was scared. Well, if I was scared at that tender age, you realize how unhappy my brother was with it during the 30 years he kept it. It is true that it is not that profitable. However, we still have a decision to make, which means nearly what you had in mind to do shortly—I will not tell you what it was—and I know that you are going to do it, I know that you have understood your Liberal colleagues. I hope that a decision will be made shortly and that it will benefit both parties, that justice will come for everybody and that the Opposition will have lamented in vain.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): I raise the question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Bellechasse on a question of privilege.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I do this in all honesty and I know the hon. member for Mercier (Mr. Boulanger) will understand why.

I am willing to understand that in the heat of the debate he used expressions which he knows, having been the Acting Speaker in the House of Commons, are unparliamentary. For me, I do not accept to see the speeches of the Social Credit members termed as clownery.

I think we have—

Mr. Boulanger: There is nothing unparliamentary about that!

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, may I go on with my question of privilege. I would not want the Canadian people to have the impression that the members of this House, in the exercise of their duties, act like clowns. They act as members responsible to the Canadian Parliament, to the people, and I would request the Chair to ask the hon. member for Mercier to please withdraw this unparliamentary expression of "clownery" attached to members as respectable as any other member in this House. I therefore request a decision from the Chair.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) is asking the Chair. Order, please. If hon. members will kindly let the Chair decide and not take the decision themselves, the hon. member for Bellechasse is raising a question of privilege regarding certain comments made by the hon. member for Mercier.

Nevertheless, I am not too anxious to accept the invitation extended by the hon. member for Bellechasse. This in fact is an invitation extended to the Chair asking to pass judgment on the comments of the hon. member for Mercier. The words used by the hon. member without necessarily being those one hears in the great British parliamentarism, or its way of saying things, do not have anything anti-parliamentary. I do not think his words have attacked the reputation of any member, I do not think his remarks, at least those I have heard, have reflected on the frankness of hon. members. It is a matter of appreciation. If the hon. member for Bellechasse wants to give the Chair an opportunity to review the proceedings of tonight's debate tomorrow, and if he himself deems it appropriate to raise that question again on tomorrow, he can do it when orders of the day are called.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I accept your decision, but do you allow me to think that what he might have attributed to us can be thought of them?

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Speaker, I raise the question of privilege.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Mercier on a question of privilege.

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Speaker, all I have to say on this question of privilege is as I have been in this House since 1962, I have heard the Leader of the Social Credit Party (Mr. Caouette) and all the members of the same party using at any time the word "bouffon" or "boufonnerie" and even others terms. I wonder why my good friend the hon. member for Bellechasse tries to put a question of privilege about this by pretending that it is not an anti-parliamentary expression, since I heard his leader using it many times.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. In view of this late hour I shall invite the hon. members to go back to the main issue of the debate. As it is very late, it may be easy to have exchanges under a question of privilege or a point of order but as there are a few more members who wish to take the floor to express their views concerning the problem of grain, this matter which has been so well presented by the hon. member for Bellechasse, I hope that these members as the hon. member for Drummond (Mr. Pinard) will have the opportunity to take the floor and to express their views before breakfast tomorrow morning. The hon. member for Drummond.

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, at 3:25 a.m. I shall be very very brief. I wish first to congratulate the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) for having moved this motion. I do not doubt his sincerity, on the contrary, but what surprised me in this debate is that we have accomplished the miracle to say in seven hours and 25 minutes what the Prime Minister said in less than a minute in an answer to a question put during the oral question period yesterday afternoon.

I am referring to the public interest which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) emphasized when he spoke of the interest of the farmers and consumers, as opposed to the right to strike. While being very conscious of the public interest demonstrated very ably during the many interventions in this debate, I hope that, as a result, the strikers, first of all, will get the message and stop interfering with the movement of feed grains; otherwise, I am convinced the government, as it usually does, will assume its responsibilities if the situation continues to deteriorate.

In closing, I stress the fact that unfortunately some tried through this debate to enhance their personal prestige instead of considering the public interest, simply and solely, as they should have.

Mr. Denis Ethier (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to take part in this debate tonight and I would have preferred to let all the Quebec members speak, since this is a problem that concerns mainly the Quebec people. However, since the Opposition has so mischievously attacked my Liberal colleagues from Quebec, I deemed it my duty, as an Ontario member, to take part in the debate so as to tell the Canadian people what the Quebec Liberal members are doing for agriculture.

First of all, I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) for giving us this opportunity to discuss publicly what my colleagues from Quebec as well as all of us discuss in caucus, namely the farmer's problems, to settle this dispute, to correct this unfortunate situation existing in Quebec since the beginning of the longshoremen's strike.

The hon. members from Quebec, my Liberal colleagues have again and again, since the beginning of this conflict made representations to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) to give the assurance to the Quebec producers that they would not be deprived of the supplies needed for their poultry and their cattle. I believe those representations were fruitful, considering this strike situation that we all regret. I repeat that their representations were fruitful for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (M. Ouellet) ably explained at the beginning of this debate what this government had done up to now to provide for the supplies needed by our Quebec producers.

As I said earlier, in spite of the longshoremen's strike we all deplore, contrarily to the members of the opposition, we do not reprove this strike but we regret it.

I deemed it my duty to participate in this debate because my constituency is adjacent to the "belle province", and not to refute the arguments from opposition members, not to bring upon myself political publicity like the hon. members for Joliette and Bellechasse (Mr. La Salle and Mr. Lambert) but to back up my Liberal colleagues from Quebec for their constant dedication for their farmers.

Since I represent myself a country riding, I understand very well the anguish and the unrest which the Quebec producers are experiencing presently. During all this debate, nothing has been suggested by the opposition as a solution to this sad situation, except maybe by the hon. member for Bellechasse. All the others have kept criticizing.

Mr. Speaker, a number of my colleagues on the government side made a positive contribution to this debate. First the hon. member for Shefford, I believe.

An hon. Member: No, not Shefford.

Mr. Ethier: I can have a word or two about the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau). He said in his speach that the situation could have been settled a week ago, ten days ago. It could have been solved in one day. Of course, when they think of mingling in a labour dispute. We, on the liberal side, respect the bargaining process. We still believe in negotiated agreements. I simply wish to state briefly to join those among us, from either side, who urge that we speak together and that our voice be heard by longshoremen, so that they make an exception in view of the present hardship to Quebec farmers and that they open picket lines, so that farmers get their supplies.

In view of the late hour, I shall conclude by urging members and Quebec producers themselves to trust the minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). I urge you to compare the improvement in agriculture since the hon. Eugene Whelan took over this portfolio two years ago. I am certain that if we give him our confidence, the situation will improve, hopefully without interfering in a labour dispute.

Feed Grain

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to take the time of the House now, but I shall take only one minute. I am pleased, Mr. Speaker, to inform the House that today, April 17, 1975, at 3.30 a.m., is the birthday of the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Duquet). I shall not mention his age today, but on behalf of all members of this House, I wish him a Happy Birthday.

● (0330)

[English]

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, before this debate comes to an end may I, on behalf of all my colleagues in this chamber, thank the officers of the House, the interpreters, the Hansard reporters, the heads of the page staff, and the protective staff who have worked so diligently and remained with us through this long and important debate.

May I call it 3.30 a.m. Mr. Speaker? Thank you and good morning.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Olivier (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, as it is very late, I would like to join my colleagues of the opposition in thanking sincerely all the people who contributed to the efforts made to explain to the Canadian people the present problems in Quebec and particularly in our three main ports. I thank those who are present and even those who are not. I am sure that tomorrow they will notice that some of their colleagues spent the night not at doing nothing, but at discussing a serious problem, which concerns the Westerners who spoke tonight as much as the Easterners who did the same. Finally, Mr. Speaker, we can say that tonight there were no Westerners and no Easterners but Canadians, members of Parliament who are Canadians, who are truly Canadian and wanted to discuss the problems, be they from Quebec, from Ontario, from the East or from the West. Mr. Speaker, I believe that the interests of the people that we represent must always come first in this House and I believe that we must put aside all party politics and try to solve their problems.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I believe that those who contributed to the printing of the Hansard and who helped us to express ourselves truly deserve sincere congratulations.

[English]

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, may I apologize for my raspy voice which I have had since last night. I do suggest that it is regrettable that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has not been able to rise in the House and present to us some kind of solution to the problem that was brought before the House tonight. I regret that very much.

[Translation]

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, after listening carefully from last night on to this late hour to all those who took part in this debate, I should like to let you know that I am of those who believe in all sincerity that in our modern times it is not necessary for us members of Parliament to spend a whole night to try and impress upon Canadians that members of Parliament in Ottawa do their job. Even if we have emergency debates, I sincerely believe it is not necessarily to have them dragging on until half past three or four o'clock in the morning so that we can boldly say on the next day: We did not adjourn until whatever hour in the morning. You will realize too, Mr. Speaker, that we still have work to do tomorrow, particularly those who will sit on committees and that this makes it a fairly difficult task for us.

[English]

There is no doubt in my mind that the fact that we are sitting here all night will not impress any constituents or in fact any Canadians, and if there are any hon. members who say so I must tell them that I do not agree with them because I believe, as was mentioned by an hon. member on this side a while ago, that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) very ably answered the question that was put to him in the House by saying that the matter was being looked after, and also that the Department of Agriculture was doing its best. We know what the problems are.

I do not think hon. members should sit here all night and play the ball game in which each of them rises and voices an opinion in repetition of what was said all night. We are not accomplishing anything. While we are talking about the rules and regulations of the House, I suggest that a provision should be brought in to stop—here I will use a word which might not be to the liking of every one—this nonsensical discussion which is taking place until the wee hours of the morning.

Mr. McKinley: I rise on a point of order. In some ways I have to agree with the hon. member who has just spoken. I think it is kind of hon. members to have stayed around until this late hour, but we have to recognize the fact that there are problems facing this country. There are also problems within the cabinet, such as the problem of abortion. There is a fight going on between two ministers.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please, I invite the hon. member to express his point of order. Right now he is prolonging the debate on the arguments put forward by the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay). I do not wish to prevent the hon. member from raising a point of order, but according to our rules he is not entitled to speak a second time. If he wishes to make his point of order, he should do so directly.

Mr. McKinley: I agree with you, Mr. Speaker. We must recognize that there are problems facing this country and sometimes it is up to the opposition to make the government take action I think all members of the opposition were trying to do that today. If the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) does not like it, then all I can say to him is that if it is too hot, he should get out of the kitchen.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I rise on the same point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. This is hardly a point of order.

Mr. Elzinga: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I agree sincerely with the point made by the hon. member for Huron-Middlesex (Mr. McKinley). I must say that I am very disappointed with the point made by the hon. member for St. Boniface. He should not be so quick to judge others by his own character traits.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): On the same question of privilege—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Surely they can put their message across before twelve o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I must say that none of the remarks that have been made were points of order. Perhaps I should add that the best judges of our actions are the people of Canada. I think we should leave it to them.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could get the unanimous agreement of members who are here that it is time for us to go home.

[Translation]

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, since it is 3.40 a.m., I shall only take a few minutes to congratulate both movers of the motion and ask the minister whether he thinks Quebec is still part of the Confederation. I want to ask him to take the necessary measures to solve the problem.

Mr. J.-Roland Comtois (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, I listened rather attentively to most of the speeches made tonight. To conclude, I think there is an urgency to revise the rules of this House. I am perhaps repeating what some said, I think the point was made, the problems were pointed out, and in the future those who sit on that committee should perhaps agree in an emergency debate on limiting the participation of the different parties represented in this House to a few members only. In this way, the same purpose would be met in a much shorter period of time. I know there are other members on the government side who have not spoken; just like me, they listened and could easily intervene at this point, but I think that out of decency this debate should be brought to an end at this point. I want to point out once again before I sit down that I think the rules are being abused when debates are prolonged in this fashion and that those same rules should be amended as soon as possible.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 26 (13) I am convinced, and definitively, that this debate is over.

I therefore declare the motion carried.

Pursuant to Standing Order 2(1) the House stands adjourned until two o'clock p.m.

At 3.34 a.m. the House adjourned, without question being put, pursuant to Standing Order.

AIR CANADA

PROPOSED INVESTIGATION OF RELATIONSHIP WITH McGREGOR TRAVEL AGENCY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under Standing Order 43, involving what appears to be a rather unusual procedure by the management of Air Canada. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta):

That the Minister of Transport cause an investigation pursuant to the Inquiries Act into the legitimacy and propriety of arrangements between Air Canada through Mr. Menard its former vice-president for marketing and Mr. R. Y. McGregor of McGregor travel agency of Montreal wherein Mr. McGregor in return for, among other things, "influencing governments and trade in the Middle East and Latin America," was paid $100,000 in advance on November 29, 1974 by three separate authorizations for expenditures dated the previous day and that the minister request the proper officials of IATA investigate the relationships generally between Air Canada and travel agencies.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion being proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43 cannot be presented without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AUDITOR GENERAL

SUGGESTED DEBATE ON AMENDMENT OF STATUTE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I request unanimous consent of the House to discuss a matter of great importance and urgency.

Because of the very important role of the Auditor General of Canada, entrusted as he is with the heavy task of scrutinizing government expenditures which must be performed with the widest possible latitude to ensure the efficiency of his work and inspire public confidence, and also because of the serious recommendations recently made by Mr. J. R. Wilson's committee in this regard, which bring to the fore the debates of 1970 and 1971 to which the government did not respond seriously, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin):

That this House now discuss the status of the Auditor General, the need to broaden his mandate and powers, the need to amend the act in order to authorize auditors to scrutinize the expenditures of government corporations as well as those of the departments, and also the need for facilities to be made available to him both from the technical and personnel points of view.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, the motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: As there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

PROPOSED CONDEMNATION OF COMMUNIST AGGRESSION IN VIET NAM AND CAMBODIA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43 I rise to seek permission to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that Cambodia has fallen into Communist hands and South Vietnam's very existence is being threatened by Communist aggression and because of the fact that this government has in the past officially condemned acts of aggression in other parts of the world, and therefore, with no statements on recent tragic Communist offensive aggressions in Southeast Asia it could be assumed that this government is in fact approving this inhumane takeover of democratic governments, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams):

That the Secretary of State for External Affairs be instructed to condemn the tragic and inhumane attacks on both the Cambodian and South Vietnamese governments as well as the helpless populace in order to demonstrate this country's opposition not only to war crimes but to the cancerous spread of Communism into vulnerable democratic and previously peaceful states.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This motion proposed under the provisions of Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Oral questions.

CAMBODIA—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ASSIST POLITICAL REFUGEES—RECOGNITION OF NEW REGIME

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the apparent fall of Phnom Penh to Khmer Rouge insurgents and the Khmer Rouge indication that those associated with the previous government or sympathetic to it would be liable to execution, is our government, either through the United Nations or on its own, prepared to take any initiatives to assist political refugees, either with safe passage out of Phonm Penh, or more directly, in terms of accepting any such refugees who may seek admission to this country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know if any initiatives have been taken but I shall inquire.

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question also for the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the decision by our Commonwealth sister, Australia, to recognize the new regime in Phonm Penh, can the Prime Minister indicate at what stage our own government's evaluation of the recognition question is at present?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, when the general principles of a measure of stability and durability have been established we would extend recognition but this is a matter of judgment. It is a matter of getting information from other friendly countries, particularly in Asia. In view of the fact that Canada does not have any immediate national interests of great importance involved I think the question does not have to be answered urgently.

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE CAMBODIANS NOT FORCED TO LEAVE CANADA

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary is addressed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Can the minister assure the House that any Cambodian students or nationals living in Canada who might, for political purposes, find it difficult and unsafe to return home, will, in fact be allowed to apply for more permanent immigration or resident status and not be forced to return home?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated that Cambodian or Vietnamese people who are in Canada temporarily would not be asked to leave while the present emergency and confusion exists. When that situation is clarified, the degree of which I obviously cannot indicate now, we will review the situation. In addition, as I have already indicated publicly as well, people who are outside Viet Nam or Cambodia but from those countries who apply to stay in Canada on the grounds of being refugees, would be judged in terms of our normal refugee program and policies.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM AND CAMBODIA—ROLE OF UNITED NATIONS COMMISSIONER IN DEALING WITH REFUGEES

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of his earlier replies about the use of multilateral aid channels for getting food and medical assistance to this area in question, can he say if there are indications that the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and his staff have been or will be allowed to play a full role to alleviate the distress of refugees in this area.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I cannot speak specifically about the High Commissioner for Refugees, but I can say that the food aid and other aid Canada is providing to international agencies is being made available in all parts of South Viet Nam and Cambodia regardless of the group which is in control.

VIET NAM—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE CANADIAN AID BEING DISTRIBUTED IN ALL AREAS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs did not say by what means aid is being distributed. I should like to know if by any chance there are reports from our man in Hanoi, for example, saying that the refugee situation in the area overrun by the PRG is also being dealt with in the same way under this assistance program.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The High Commissioner for Refugees is one of three international organizations through which we give relief and the information we have is that this kind of relief is being given in areas controlled by the PRG and in Cambodia.

CAMBODIA—SUGGESTED EARLY RECOGNITION OF NEW REGIME TO MAKE AID PROGRAM MORE EFFECTIVE

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question relating to the same general area to the Prime Minister. As it is the desire of Canadians to give as much help as possible to countries like Cambodia through aid and rehabilitation, and as this can be done more effectively if we have contact with the de facto government there, will the government speed up its process of assessing when recognition should be accorded.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I answered the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe, the government is trying to assess the situation and is consulting with friendly governments in the area to determine how speedily the process should take place.

VIET NAM AND CAMBODIA—SUGGESTED CO-OPERATION WITH UNITED NATIONS COMMISSIONER FOR REFUGEES

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs. Considering the grim prospect of the refugee problem in Indo-China reaching horrendous proportions, can he advise if Canada as a UN member has taken or will consider taking any initiative with Prince Sadruddin, so that that man and his organization might take immediate steps to deal with what obviously will be a very serious problem along the lines of his excellent initiatives in Bangladesh which are fully in accord with the 1967 protocol.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman knows, our relations with the High Commissioner are very good. He has looked upon Canada as one of the most co-operative countries in the world and I am sure we will continue to deserve that reputation.

LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE IN QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON PROGRESS OF NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour.

Can he advise the House whether the bargaining in connection with the striking longshoremen in the Quebec City, Montreal and Trois-Rivières ports is progressing and, if so, can he assure the House that a final settlement is forthcoming?

[English]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, there have not been formal discussions. Informal bilateral discussions have taken place between some of my officials and the parties concerned, but I cannot predict at this stage whether there is any hope of settlement in this particular dispute.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture.

In view of the reply the Minister of Labour has just made, can the minister advise the House whether the picket line will soon be withdrawn, so that millers may get their supplies from the Montreal and Trois-Rivières terminals?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I understand there have been applications for injunctions but I do not know at this time if any applicants have been successful with further injunctions.

ALLEGED DIRECTION TO CANADIAN LONGSHOREMEN BY UNITED STATES UNION NOT TO UNLOAD SHIPS DIVERTED FROM STRIKEBOUND QUEBEC PORTS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Labour concerns the strike to which the hon. member for Bellechasse alluded. What action is the minister taking in connection with directions given by United States union officials to Canadian longshoremen who are not on strike to refuse to unload ships diverted from any of the three strikebound Canadian ports?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, there is not much in the way of any formal action the government can take. I realize it has been suggested there has been this type of interference by the head office of the international union in the United States. Generally speaking, I think this is the type of action that Canadian unions repudiate. Also, I think all members of this House repudiate it. This type of interference should be resisted and I trust that the longshoremen in Canada will resist it.

Mr. Fraser: In the debate last night, the Postmaster General, in the absence of the Minister of Labour, spoke extensively on this problem in view of the fact there was an arbitration related to it with regard to a specific order that Canadian longshoremen not on strike refuse to abide by any directions from American officials to refuse to unload. Has the minister had any discussions or does he feel the most he can do at the present time is to depend on the good faith of the Canadian union? Is the minister powerless in this regard?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am not powerless in the sense that if there are unionists, longshoremen in this particular case, who set up illegal pickets, whether it be of their own volition or at the instance of some foreigner, as is the suggestion in this case, they can suffer the penalties if we are successful in a legal action. The hon. member may know that an application for an injunction was taken out, particularly in the Saint John situation. My latest advice is in that particular case, the court turned down the application for an injunction.

LONGSHOREMEN AT SAINT JOHN—ALLEGED REFUSAL TO UNLOAD SHIPS DIVERTED FROM STRIKEBOUND QUEBEC PORTS

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, as some days have gone by since the directions were given that I have spoken of, are Canadian longshoremen not on strike at Saint John still refusing to unload cargo from any ships diverted from Three Rivers, Quebec City or Montreal?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, my latest information is not of a specific nature that I can reply with any degree of accuracy to the hon. member. I hope to be in a position to do so later today.

Oral Questions

LONGSHOREMEN AT SAINT JOHN—POSSIBILITY OF INTERFERENCE BY UNITED STATES UNION OFFICIALS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Labour. Is the minister inferring that the interference by Mr. Gleason and Mr. Sullivan of the United States International Longshoremen's Union is the cause for the union men in the port of Saint John not working? Is this what the minister is inferring or have I misunderstood?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have to answer this in a hypothetical vein. If it can be established that the Canadian membership took this action at the sole instance of direction from Mr. Sullivan or Mr. Gleason, then, of course, this is the type of action that should be repudiated. There is also the suggestion that the membership could act on its own and perhaps some did indeed act on their own.

AIR CANADA

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO RELATIONSHIPS OF McGREGOR TRAVEL AGENCY

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. I regret I did not have the document or I could have taken this up with the minister in committee. Will the minister cause an investigation under the Inquiries Act into the circumstances whereby the president of McGregor Travel of Montreal received $100,000 in advance late last year ostensibly for three consultant tasks involving relationships with provincial governments and, according to two of the letters of agreement, influence governments and trade in the Middle East and Latin America for the benefit of Air Canada?

● (1420)

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Who received the $100,000? I did not get the name.

Mr. MacKay: The name is Bob McGregor—R. Y. McGregor of McGregor Travel, Montreal.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): He received the $100,000?

Mr. MacKay: May I put one further question to the Minister?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): It is a serious question but I shall have to inquire because I was not aware of that fact.

Mr. McKay: Would the minister not agree—assuming that this is right, and I have the documents for him—that this type of approach by Air Canada through a travel agency official could be misinterpreted by the governments of other nations and also impinge on the prerogatives of some of the Minister's colleagues including the Secretary of State for External Affairs, as well as being questionable business ethics which could involve the jurisdiction of IATA. Is he not concerned about the implications of what Air Canada is apparently doing, not through regular channels such as the international affairs division of our airline, but rather through a travel agent?

[Mr. Munro (Minister of Labour).]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): When I have the information I will give the opinion the hon. member is inviting.

HEALTH

MEDICARE—ALLEGED SETTING OF TIME LIMITS FOR MEDICAL EXAMINATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): A question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare, Mr. Speaker. In view of the threatened withdrawal of several practising physicians from the medicare plan in one of the provinces which is scheduling examination time allotted for patients, a gross interference with the consciences of the doctors and the quality of medicare, I should like to ask the minister whether any of the provinces have consulted with him regarding this new departure, the setting of time limits for medical examinations?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, Mr. Speaker, the only information I have is what I have read in the newspapers.

[English]

Mr. Rynard: Would the minister agree with me that this is a dehumanizing restriction? Since the medicare legislation protects the quality of medical care in all the provinces, does the hon. gentleman not agree he has a direct responsibility in this matter?

Mr. Lalonde: The answer to both questions is no. With regard to the first question, what I have seen reported in the press is that doctors will be required to spend a minimum of time with their patients, not a maximum. So there does not appear to be any intention of restricting the time spent with patients. Rather, doctors are being expected to spend sufficient time with their patients to enable them at least to know what is wrong with the patients.

Mr. Rynard: Would the hon. gentleman get in touch with his provincial counterparts to ascertain whether he is correct because, if the situation is as he says, time might well be wasted.

Mr. Lalonde: I have sufficient confidence in the ability of my provincial counterparts and in the medical profession in this country to deal with this matter.

INDUSTRY, TRADE AND COMMERCE

DATE OF APPOINTMENT OF DEPUTY MINISTER OF DEPARTMENT—POSSIBILITY OF SPLITTING DEPARTMENT

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. In view of the critical importance to the Canadian economy of the activities of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce particularly with reference to Canada's precarious position in the auto pact and lessening export sales, would the Prime Minister advise us when a deputy minister will be appointed to this department?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Next week.

Mr. Stevens: With the estimates for the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce down from last year, would the Prime Minister tell us whether the department has been in a state of freeze pending a review to determine whether it should not in fact be split up with one part given to DREE and another part to the Department of External Affairs?

Mr. Trudeau: I will ask the deputy minister what he thinks about that.

ENERGY

ATHABASCA OIL SANDS—LETTER FROM HOME OIL COMPANY—MINISTER'S REPLY AND REQUEST FOR TABLING

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources regarding a letter he received some weeks ago from the Home Oil Company requesting concessions similar to those which have been granted to the Syncrude consortium? In view of the fact that this is the only Canadian-owned oil company that has any immediate prospect of entering the development of the Athabasca oil sands, and in view of the need for supplies of oil to meet the critical situation predicted by the National Energy Board, has the minister replied to the letter from Home Oil Company and, if so, what is the nature of his response and would he be prepared to table the letter in view of the fact that he tabled the letter he received from that company?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to do so. My recollection is that the nature of my response was substantially in the vein of my testimony before the committee.

ATHABASCA OIL SANDS—REQUEST OF PETROFINA FOR PERMISSION TO EXPORT SURPLUS TO UNITED STATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that a partner of Petrofina of Canada has told the National Energy Board that they may not proceed with the construction of a plant in the Athabasca oil sands unless, among other concessions, they are assured that they will be allowed to export to the United States all the oil that is surplus to Canadian requirements, can the minister assure the House that no such guarantee will be given having regard to the need for Canadian self-sufficiency of oil supplies in the future?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the National Energy Board Act provides for determining the appropriate point to review any exportation. This is a new and additional condition that has not been included within previous applications, and I would think it is a condition that we would not accept.

ATHABASCA OIL SANDS—POSSIBILITY OF NATIONAL PETROLEUM CORPORATION PARTICIPATING IN DEVELOPMENT

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the reluctance of many of these companies to enter the Athabasca oil sands project, and in view of the fact that they are imposing more and more conditions, is the minister examining the possibility of the National Petroleum Corporation entering the field, either as a joint venture with any provinces that are interested or on its own?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the National Petroleum Corporation, Petro-Canada, will be entering into Syncrude as a partner.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): No, Mr. Speaker.

AUDITOR GENERAL

SUGGESTED TABLING OF MODEL BILL PREPARED BY REVIEW COMMITTEE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Privy Council whose official duties, I understand, include the difficult task of concealing all documents that are painful or embarrassing to the government or too esoteric to be disclosed to public view. Would the hon. gentleman now agree to table the model bill regarding the Auditor General prepared by an internal committee, which is alleged to suggest very considerable extensions of the power of that official, so that the members of the House will have an opportunity of judging what is in the bill?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, when the government is ready to present a bill to the House, it will be presented. Whether it will be exactly along the lines of the bill that had been prepared in the past, I do not know. I would hope we would be influenced by the report of the group that is advising the Auditor General.

Mr. Baldwin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In light of the views of this House, certainly the views of members on this side of the House as illustrated by the motion moved pursuant to Standing Order 43 this afternoon, would the minister take into account our views that parliament should have some input into the preparation of the bill because of the special relationship between the Auditor General and parliament, rather than just vetting the mild version that the government will probably prepare?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I am quite sure that the government, when it exercises its responsibility, will want to act in the interests of parliament as a whole and will be very ready to accept any amendments that are useful and in the interests of the adequate control of the public purse.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CONFERENCE OF OIL PRODUCING AND CONSUMING NATIONS—CANADIAN REPRESENTATIONS ON SUBJECTS TO BE DISCUSSED

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs relating to questions asked of him yesterday regarding the energy conference in Paris that started on the seventh, and in respect of which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said on March 5 the government of Canada would keep in close touch with these discussions and make its views known to all participants with whom we have diplomatic relations and, in particular, with members of the International Energy Agency which will be participating. Does the minister stand by his response yesterday, that we were not in attendance at that conference, therefore how could we have expressed our views, not being there?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the general view of the Canadian government on the conference is that we would have preferred that it concentrate on energy and closely related matters. As I understand the situation, however, this view was not shared by all members of the committee who attended. Had we been present we would have sought a compromise, but we were not there and, as the hon. gentleman knows, so far the efforts to get the conference underway have not been successful. As I told him yesterday, however, these efforts are continuing.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs whether in fact the government of Canada made any representations regarding the position that should be taken at the conference, or made any representations for example through the International Energy Agency as to that position? Did the minister in fact make any representations?

[Mr. Sharp.]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the views that the government expressed were the views we made known to the International Energy Agency. My understanding of the position is that these developments took place in the last few days, and we were not called upon specifically to comment on them. I have expressed the view, which I have expressed again now, that we would prefer a conference that was devoted specifically to energy and related matters. At that preparatory conference, however, some of the underdeveloped countries wanted to extend the ambit of the conference to a wider scope, and the preparatory conference broke down on this question. We are still hopeful, however, that some compromise can be reached.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, even if the minister or some minister in the government did not keep in close enough contact to make his views known while the meeting was going on, has the government of Canada made any representations since that time as to the scope of the agenda it would have preferred? When the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs said a moment ago that Canada would have preferred some compromise did he mean to indicate that although Canada's preference would be confined to a discussion on energy or petroleum, Canada would be prepared to enlarge the scope of the conference to include other raw materials?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, we would prefer the conference to be held, but we would not want a conference that was so wide in its scope as to have very little influence on the field of energy, which is our prime interest. We are in favour of a compromise.

STRIKE OF LONGSHOREMEN IN QUEBEC—INQUIRY WHETHER MINISTER MET WITH MEDIATOR

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I want to put a question to the Minister of Labour.

Since on April 2, Mr. Poirier, the federal mediator in the longshoremen's dispute in Quebec, stated that he was unable to meet the two parties and since the negotiations were interrupted at that time, I want to ask the minister whether he has met with Mr. Poirier since April 2, what the discussions were, and what kind of measures the minister invited the mediator to take to settle the dispute.

[English]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I did meet with Mr. Poirier I believe on the date the hon. member mentioned. He indicated he had been meeting with the parties but negotiations had broken down, and that he felt there should be an interval of time for the parties to reassess their positions, at which time there might be hope for further mediation.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I want to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour.

Since the minister considers it necessary to let some time pass before the negotiations can resume, when will the minister ask Mr. Poirier to take the necessary steps toward such a resumption, so that Quebec producers can obtain justice?

[English]

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): There was no specific date, Mr. Speaker. When Mr. Poirier was down here he was instructed to make himself available to the parties at all times, particularly since he was here, in the hopes of arriving at a settlement. In that sense he was under a constant mandate to try to bring the parties together if they were prepared to come together.

RESOURCES

WATER—VIEW OF MINISTER OF STATE FOR URBAN AFFAIRS ON SHARING WITH UNITED STATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, when speaking to the American Society of Planning Officials the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, Barney Danson, said he would be very hardheaded about sharing energy resources, but a much softer line would be appropriate where renewable resources like water were involved. Was the minister expressing government policy when he made this statement and, if not, what is the Prime Minister's opinion on this subject?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this statement was drawn to my attention and it was stated quite clearly by the minister that he was expressing personal views. If the hon. member wishes to read the report he will see that this is made quite clear.

Mr. Wenman: Mr. Speaker, has the Prime Minister participated in or is he aware of any discussions with the United States regarding the use of Canadian fresh water supply by the United States, and what is the government's policy on the export of Canadian water to the United States?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I know of no approach that has been taken, at least in recent times, by the United States on this subject. There has been no decision made nor is any contemplated by the government of Canada on the export of water.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

CAPITAL MURDER CASES—INQUIRY AS TO CABINET ACTION IN CASES WHERE NO RECOMMENDATION OF MERCY MADE

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, I know I could direct this question to three different members of the Cabinet, the right hon. Prime Minister, the Solicitor General and the Minister of Justice, but I think the Minister of Justice is the man to answer this question at this time. My question arises from a recent example of the decision and the verdict of a jury being overruled by an appeal court and again by the Supreme Court, all of which is of grave concern to the future prospects—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a question would he be kind enough to put it.

Mr. Alkenbrack: This is of grave concern to the future prospects of the jury system in our administration of justice. In light of what has happened, in present cases of persons being convicted and sentenced to hang for capital murder, will the Cabinet also overrule and void the sentence of the ultimate penalty, even where no recommendation of clemency has been made by the jury or a majority of the jury?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I recognize the hon. member for York-Sunbury.

Mr. Alkenbrack: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I will hear the hon. member's point of order at three o'clock.

VIET NAM—REFUSAL OF GOVERNMENT TO GRANT EXIT VISAS TO DEPENDANT CHILDREN OF VIETNAMESE IN CANADA—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, what action if any does the government of Canada contemplate in light of the refusal of the government of South Viet Nam to allow exit visas for dependent children of landed Vietnamese immigrants in Canada?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, of course we cannot interfere with the decisions of other governments, but we will certainly take whatever action we can in an attempt to reunite families of Canadians or Canadian landed immigrants.

Mr. Howie: Mr. Speaker, would the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs receive an application from me if I gave him sone information?

Mr. Sharp: Certainly, Mr. Speaker. I may have to discuss it with my colleague but I would be glad to receive it.

PROPOSED NATO SUMMIT MEETING—GOVERNMENT VIEW OF NEED FOR MEETING

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In light of President Ford's statement that he endorses the idea of a NATO summit meeting, will the Prime Minister support such a summit meeting, and also what would Canada's position be at that meeting?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs dealt with that question about a week ago, I believe. He indicated that he had expressed some reservations on the timing of the summit which had been discussed for the end of May but indicated of course that if one were to be held we would certainly consider favourably the opportunity to participate in it. As of now, there has been no date announced. I believe the NATO Council is meeting tomorrow at Brussels and we will know whether or not the summit meeting is to take place at the end of May.

● (1440)

Mr. McKinnon: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. The right hon. gentleman again distorted somewhat the answer of the Acting Prime Minister on April 10, as noted in Hansard when he dealt only with the timing. Does the Prime Minister not now agree that the changing situation in respect of Portugal, Italy, Greece and Turkey requires NATO consultation at the highest level to affirm once again our cohesion and common destiny?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker, this certainly is a very important and urgent situation that is developing. Really the only question is the timing for that particular meeting. The fact that the hon. member mentioned two countries which already have indicated they would not be represented at the summit makes one wonder if it will be all that important to have the council sitting at that particular time. I repeat that the Secretary of State for External Affairs expressed his views on that to various people, including Secretary Kissinger. We are not holding back on the meeting which is not confirmed. We think there should be one. The only question is one of timing so that there would be sufficient preparation for it. If the meeting should take place, which is hypothetical, I assure the hon. member that this government will be represented at the summit.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Victoria on a final supplementary.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the right hon. gentleman could explain his statement about me mentioning two countries which will not be attending. I was quoting the President of the United States who intends to attend this conference to "affirm once again our cohesion and common destiny".

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

COMPLAINT OF CORPORALS COX AND MATERIE CONCERNING ALLEGED BREACH OF SECURITY—POSSIBILITY MINISTER BEING SUED

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. Has he received any complaints from Corporal Cox and Corporal Materie members of the National Crime Intelligence section which complaint alleged that there has been a very serious breach of security? Has he received that complaint and what was the nature of the security breach?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I do not recall the names. Would the hon. member tell me whether this was recent or some time back?

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, it has been in the last year. I might put the question to him—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In the light of that, perhaps the hon. member might better seek that information in another way.

Mr. Woolliams: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister been sued in the Federal Court because of a breach of security? Has he been served with a statement of claim in this regard?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, from time to time I receive complaints from members or ex-members of the RCMP. I have been sued by some individuals. I cannot recall names. I will have to look at the records in order to find this information.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

MERCURY POISONING OF NATIVES AT WHITE DOG AND GRASSY NARROWS RESERVES—GOVERNMENT ACTION ON ALTERNATIVE EMPLOYMENT AND COMPENSATION

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the evidence that at the White Dog and Grassy Narrows reserves, out of 17 Indians examined, Dr. Newberry found 15 to be suffering from Minamoto disease or mercury poisoning, would the minister advise the House what arrangements he has now made after his belated acknowledgement that they should not eat the fish to see if there are some other alternative protein sources for those bands. Second, what arrangements have been made for alternate employment or an alternate livelihood beyond welfare.

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I indicated in an earlier reply to the hon. member that we felt the logical alternate employment would be a move to another location. That has been discussed with Chief Keewatin on the Grassy Narrows Reserve. He and his band were utterly opposed to making that move, so unfortunately that alternative is not available. We are pursuing the other aspect with my colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare to see if there are some other short-term arrangements we can make.

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary may I ask the minister whether he would advise what steps his department has taken to ensure that the native people on those reserves will receive adequate compensation from those responsible for the destruction of their livelihood because of mercury poisoning? What steps has he taken to assist the Indians to help themselves to obtain just compensation for the destruction of their livelihood.

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, when I met with them last fall I discussed the possibility of taking the company involved to court.

HEALTH

ASBESTOS LEVELS IN LAKE SUPERIOR—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO STOP ASBESTOS DISCHARGES AT SILVER BAY, MINNESOTA

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of the Environment or the Minister of National Health and Welfare. What immediate action are the federal officials taking to stop asbestos discharges at Silver Bay, Minnesota which it has recently been revealed are leading to asbestos levels in Lake Superior which are higher than allowable and which United States scientists consider to be dangerously high.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am sure my hon. friend would be pleased to make his representations to his colleagues in the Ontario government since the health aspect of water quality is controlled by provincial and municipal health departments in Canada. I might also inform my hon. friend that the Health Protection Branch scientists in my department are co-operating in a large scale study in the United States in respect of the health aspects of ingested asbestos.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): On a supplementary, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister will he stop attempting to avoid his responsibility for problems which occur outside the jurisdiction—

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member have a supplementary question?

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Excuse me, Mr. Speaker. My question is, when will the minister and the federal government recognize their responsibility for problems which arise in the United States, a foreign jurisdiction outside the jurisdiction of the province of Ontario, when there are concentrations of asbestos which have moved in the last three years from a point where they were considered not to be dangerous to a point where they are now considered to be dangerous? Is he suggesting that the Government of Ontario has jurisdiction over a situation which arises internationally in the United States?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I can only answer my hon. friend by asking when he will learn to get his facts straight.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Is the minister telling the House that the Silver Bay—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for South Shore.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED NATO SUMMIT MEETING—POSSIBLE DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES ON NECESSITY FOR MEETING—ATTENDANCE OF PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Prime Minister. On Monday the Prime Minister promised to check with the Secretary of State for External Affairs to see if there had been any discussions with United States authorities concerning NATO in light of the growing threat of Communism which is now menacing Europe. I should like again to ask the Prime Minister if he has had any discussions with the President of the United States on this matter and if a summit meeting is called for May or later is it his intention to attend and can he tell the House what Canada's position would be at such a meeting?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe I indicated the answer to that in respect of a previous question earlier today when I indicated that the Secretary of State for External Affairs had indeed discussed this matter with Secretary Kissinger at the last meeting. On that occasion the Secretary of State for External Affairs repeated the position he made public that we would go along with the idea of a summit if it was thought necessary but we had some question about the timing.

● (1450)

On the other part of the question, I also answered in my previous answer that in the hypothetical case of the summit meeting being held at that point, I indeed would go and represent Canada. I hope I will have the support of hon. members opposite. As to the position we will take, I will have occasion to report to the House on that in due course.

HOUSING

ALLEGED THREATS BY CMHC OFFICIAL TO NOVA SCOTIA MINISTER—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Would the minister inform the House what action he has taken regarding the charge by the Liberal minister of housing in Nova Scotia that threats had been made by an official of CMHC to the effect that Mr. Fitzgerald must toe the line or a squeeze would be put on CMHC funds for use in Nova Scotia?

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have heard of these reports, and I have asked for an investigation. I will be calling Mr. Fitzgerald. I doubt if anything like that could conceivably have taken place, considering the integrity of the officials of CMHC.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Is the minister implying that Mr. Fitzgerald, when he said, "such threats from a CMHC official are highly irregular, and I am prepared to take the matter up with CMHC president William Teron and federal urban affairs minister Barnett Danson," was lying?

Mr. Danson: Not at all, Mr. Speaker. I mentioned that I had not spoken to Mr. Fitzgerald. I just read the report, just as an hon. member heard reports about my selling water somewhere. I have to get the facts straight. I would rather hear the facts by speaking to the person directly than by going by newspaper reports.

PROPOSAL TO EXAMINE CMHC CAPITAL SPENDING BUDGET IN COMMITTEE—MINISTER'S POSITION

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Given the intensified criticisms of present policies of CMHC which are being voiced at the provincial level right across this country, will the minister now say when he intends to fulfil his commitment to bring the capital spending budget of CMHC before the standing committee so that that corporation's policies, which are causing such consternation at the provincial level, can be examined in detail? Is he not prepared to tell us when he will fulfil his commitment?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am looking forward to appearing before the committee and discussing everything as openly as possible, including the capital budget.

SOCIAL SECURITY

CANADA PENSION PLAN—DATE OF NAMING ADDITIONAL MEMBERS TO COMMISSION

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the minister of National Health and Welfare.

Could he tell us when additional members will be appointed to the pension plan appeal commission and does he know that there is no co-operation from Quebec for the operation of that Commission? In addition, does he know that Quebec having appointed its own Board is demanding the return of any Quebec file connected with the operation of the appeal Commission?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I hope that the members will be appointed in the very near future. I must point out to the hon. member that there have been constant consultations with the Quebec government on the matter during the past year and that the developments up to now are in accordance with the spirit of the provincial and federal legislation.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

Is the minister stating to the House that the province of Quebec has the right, under the federal act and pursuant to the agreement passed between Canada and Quebec on that matter, to take away any record and set a jurisdiction that is complementary and perhaps divergent at the Canadian level? What are the rights of Canadians and Quebecers in each jurisdiction?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member certainly does not expect me to give a legal opinion to the House on the respective rights of the two levels of government in that field.

[Mr. Danson.]

PUBLIC SERVICE

INQUIRY WHETHER PROSECUTION OF ILLEGAL STRIKERS WILL EXTEND TO UNION OFFICIALS

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. In its consideration of criminal court action against members of designated groups in the recent blue collar strike, has the Treasury Board decided whether there should also be action against PSAC higher ups who planned to put the designated groups on the picket lines, or will the law only be applied to "Joe Lunchpail"? I was going to say "Joseph Boardroom", but I will say to union brass.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we apply the act as it is written and we prosecute all those who have infringed it. Does it include union officials? I do not know, I do not think so, but I will check and report to the hon. member.

BILINGUALISM

FARES LANGUAGE SCHOOL—INQUIRY AS TO RENEWAL OF CONTRACT

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board. Is the minister now in a position to report as to his investigation of the Fares language school for civil servants specifically regarding the renewal of the school's contract with the federal government?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I investigated the matter and the contract will not be renewed until the inquiry is completed.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

LEGALITY OF DEMURRAGE CHARGES AGAINST INNOCENT THIRD PARTY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Before embarking on his trip to the western cities, will he "consult with legal authorities in the Department of Justice on the legality of demurrage charges being forwarded to innocent third parties, namely, farmers, and not being picked up by the unions and management organizations?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the questions of demurrage which arise, will, I think arise either in the case of the Canadian Wheat Board or of individual private owners of grain, and in each case they will have their own legal advice.

Mr. Malone: Is the minister suggesting that the board has no direct obligation to find out, in view of the fact that so many farmers across the country are asking about the legality, and the Wheat Board is the only institution being sued, but represents all farmers?

Mr. Lang: There are many private individuals who own grain involved as well, but of course the Canadian Wheat Board is very careful about its contractual arrangements and obligations and obtains constantly very good legal advice.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

MACKENZIE HIGHWAY—DATE OF DECISION ON CONSTRUCTION

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. On March 21 I asked the minister about the future of the Mackenzie highway, and in response to my question he said that the cabinet was currently examining the matter. I wonder if he can tell us if the cabinet has made a decision, and if not, when we can expect a decision.

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, this matter is still under consideration. I am not certain that I said cabinet. I thought I said department. The matter is still under consideration, and we have not yet taken a decision.

TOURISM

DISCREPANCY IN MAP OF BRITISH COLUMBIA—REQUEST FOR CORRECTION

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, my question is actually a supplementary to one posed by the hon. member for Kootenay West last Tuesday to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. If he will check that tourism map which is published in the National Geographic magazine, he will find that the city of White Rock, British Columbia has been exchanged for Blaine, Washington.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Friesen: I think this is carrying international trade too far. Since White Rock is known for its recreational beaches, I wonder if the minister will be good enough to check his records to see if that city really is there.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am sure I do not need to check to assure the House of that fact. That city is very well represented in this House.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Minister of National Health and Welfare mislead the House in making in answer to a question of mine, a mis-statement of fact when he suggested that responsibility lies with the province of Ontario for a problem which is known to originate in Minnesota, outside the jurisdiction of the province of Ontario, and including an international water matter within the jurisdiction of the International Joint Commission. I hope that the minister will correct the record and that he will accept his responsibilities.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, the record tomorrow will show exactly what I said.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to ask the President of the Privy Council about the business for the rest of this week and for all of next week?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I will give the intended business for today, tomorrow and Monday. Today we will continue with Bill C-32, the petroleum administration act. Tomorrow we will take, in this order, Bill C-3, Bill C-5 and Bill C-20. On Monday, if the report of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates has been made and we are in a position to proceed, I intend to call Bill C-44. I am not certain of the business thereon because I am not sure how long these items will take.

● (1500)

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): On the same matter, Mr. Speaker, in view of the undertaking given by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs to have his capital spending estimates brought before the Standing Committee, I wonder if the government House leader would consult with his colleague and see what can be done about having that reference made as quickly as possible so that the committee could get on with this important study.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre on a point of order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the government House leader with respect to his announcement that on Monday we might be dealing with Bill C-44? Is it clear that no attempt will be made to proceed with this bill on Monday unless we have a reprint of the bill as it was amended by the committee, and also the reports of the committee?

Mr. Sharp: I hope that will be possible, Mr. Speaker. I had not realized there might be any delay in that respect, but I understand the concern of the hon. member and I will try to speed up the progress of the report. At least we will have a reprint of the bill before us, I would hope.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): With respect to House business, may I also ask the government House leader when there will appear on the order paper the bills to amend the Old Age Security Act about which the Minister of National Health and Welfare has been making pleasant noises?

Mr. Sharp: I am sure my hon. friend will show his customary zeal.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for St. John's East.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, regarding the business of the House, I want to draw to the attention of the government House leader the fact that there were 11 committees meeting this morning, mostly in consideration of estimates. This deprived a number of members of the opportunity to carry out their responsibility to scrutinize the spending of the government. I should like to ask the government House leader if he would take under consideration a more proper scheduling of these committee meetings so that we can carry out all our responsibilities in all the committees.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, I should like to address the President of the Privy Council and make a fresh attempt for the umpteenth time. The throne speech mentioned the presentation of new legislation on unemployment insurance. I asked the President of the Privy Council many times when this legislation to amend the 1971 act would be brought forward. Did the President of the Privy Council keep his promise to get information from the Minister of Manpower and if he did, when will the bill to amend the present act be presented?

[English]

Mr. Sharp: I shall make inquiries, Mr. Speaker.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 27, 70, 673, 771, 1,221, 1,225, 1,523, 1,559, 1,570, 1,771, 1,781, 1,797, 1,798, 1,815, 1,829, 1,839, 1,840, 1,841, 1,867, 1,933, 1,934, 1,963, 1,970, 1,978, 2,008, 2,128 and 2,147.

Mr. Speaker, if question No. 881 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

POLICIES AND OBJECTIVES UNDERTAKEN BY GOVERNMENT

Question No. 27—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What is the complete list and the exact description of each promise or undertaking to the Canadian people made public by the Prime Minister or by anyone acting on his behalf between May 1, 1974 and July 8, 1974?

2. What is the estimated cost in each such case and what is the estimated total cost for all such promises or undertakings?

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

3. Will the government proceed to enact all such promises or undertakings within the next twelve months and, if not (a) for what reason (b) what are the specific promises or undertakings that it will not enact and what is the reason in each such case?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): 1. From May 1 to the dissolution of the 29th Parliament government policy, as is the custom, was disclosed to the House. From the commencement of the election to July 8, 1974, the Prime Minister on behalf of the Liberal Party of Canada outlined a series of policies and objectives which the government if re-elected would pursue in its full term of office. The Throne Speech of September 30, 1974 and the government's legislative program itemise the measures introduced to the House and Senate to this time. The Liberal Party of Canada will make available, on request, policy documents of the Liberal party issued during the election period.

2. Costs of government policies will be disclosed in the customary way, that is by Estimates and Supplementary Estimates.

3. The government will proceed with its policy program during the full term of this 30th Parliament.

STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER RELATING TO INFLATION

Question No. 70—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Where and on what date during the last federal election campaign did the Prime Minister state that he and his government are prepared to "wrestle inflation into the ground"?

2. Since making that statement, what steps or actions has the Prime Minister and the government taken to commence this wrestling match and, if none, on what date will the Prime Minister and the government take any steps or actions of this kind?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): 1. Etobicoke, May 27, 1974.

2. See Speech from the Throne, September 30, 1974, and the Budget Speech, November 18, 1974.

"PRIORITIES FOR THE 30TH PARLIAMENT" BY THE PRIME MINISTER

Question No. 673—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the newspaper column appearing on October 23, 1974, in the Lanark Era and other Canadian weeklies, and headed "Priorities for the 30th Parliament by Pierre Elliott Trudeau, Prime Minister", what are the names and addresses of all persons who had anything whatsoever to do with compiling or writing this column in whole or in part?

2. Are such persons government employees and (a) if so, what are their job designations (b) if not, are they employees of the Liberal Party of Canada?

3. Did the Prime Minister see and approve all the material in this column before it appeared in print and, if so, on what exact date and time?

4. Will the Prime Minister continue to permit his name or that of any Cabinet Minister to be shown as the author of newspaper columns that have been written by paid public relations functionaries of the Liberal Party of Canada and, if so, for what reason?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): 1 and 2. The column is signed by the Prime Minister and he alone is responsible for it.

3. October 7, 1974.

4. The question is of a hypothetical nature.

SPACE ALLOTTED TO DONOVAN JOY ON DND 707 FLIGHT

Question No. 771—Mr. McKinnon:

With reference to the answer to Question No. 306, wherein the Department stated that Mr. Donovan Joy was allotted priority one space on a DND 707 flight, Comox to Ottawa, on April 22, 1974, and the purpose was "to advise the Minister upon the completion of reports", were the Minister of the Environment and Mr. Joy on the West Coast for several days before they flew East together and, if so, for what reason did Mr. Joy not report to the Minister in situ instead of occupying priority space on DND 707?

Mr. Len Marchand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): This matter does not fall within the administrative responsibility of the present Minister of the Environment (see Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Form—Fourth Edition, citation 171 (LL)).

SIRENS—ACCIDENTAL TRIGGERING

Question No. 1,221—Mr. O'Sullivan:

1. Did sirens warning of a possible nuclear attack sound in Southern Ontario during the last week of December, 1974 and, if so (a) how many sirens sounded (b) in which municipalities (c) for how long did they sound (d) for what reason did they sound?

2. (a) Who is responsible for the maintenance of these air raid sirens (b) how much was paid for their maintenance in the calendar year 1974 (c) what measures, if any, have been taken to prevent any accidental triggering of these sirens in the future?

3. In the event of the air raid sirens sounding, which members of the Cabinet, if any, are to be so advised?

4. Were any members of the Cabinet advised of the soundings that occurred during the last week of December, 1974 and, if so, which members and on what date?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. No. The sirens were triggered and emanated a flat monotone sound but the attack warning signal was not given. The attack warning signal is a waiting, undulating sound. (a) 162. (b) The municipalities in which the sirens sounded are: Newmarket, Markham, Stouffville, Richmond Hill, Maple, Woodbridge, Aurora, Oak Ridges, Thornhill, Oakville, Streetsville, Brampton, Malton, Cooksville, Port Credit, Toronto, Georgetown, Milton, Hamilton, Action, St. Catherines, Beamsville, Niagara on the Lake, Welland, Niagara Falls. (c) The duration of the sounding varied from 15 to 45 minutes. (d) The activation of the sirens was due to an act of vandalism by two teenagers using powered rifles.

2. (a) CFB Toronto—Base Construction Engineering Section. (b) $8,490. (c) Within the design of the system there are physical, mechanical and electrical safeguards to provide reasonable assurance against the sirens being activated accidentally. All accidental soundings in 1974 were attributable to lighting, ice storms or vandalism. Measures to preclude all possibility of accidental sounding would be cost prohibitive.

3. The Minister of National Defence or the Acting Minister, is to be advised if the attack warning signal is given.

4. No. The minister is only advised if the attack warning is sounded. Accidental soundings are reported to the regional commander for corrective action and advice to the public.

PRIME MINISTER'S VACATION

Question No. 1,225—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What is the full name and job designation of the person on the Prime Minister's staff who informed the press that it was not possible to reveal where the Prime Minister would spend his recent vacation "for security reasons"?

2. Was such a statement by the member of the Prime Minister's staff an attempt to create an air of importance designed to attract public attention to the Prime Minister and members of his family for political purposes?

3. Did the Prime Minister or anyone acting on his behalf request secrecy from the Jamaican Government concerning the vacation and (a) if so (i) on what date and by whom was such a request made (ii) what are all the details of the request (b) if not, what was the basis or consistence in the attempt by the Prime Minister's Office to shroud the vacation in the secrecy at the outset?

4. What are all the reasons that details were withheld at the outset from members of the Canadian news media when the Prime Minister was aware that on arrival he would be met by the Prime Minister of Jamaica and members of the news media in that country?

5. (a) Is the Prime Minister aware that President Ford of the United States recently vacationed in Colorado and, if so, is he aware that there were no pompous attempts by the President's Office to shroud the vacation in secrecy (b) is the Prime Minister aware that the President talked freely to members of the public and the news media while on vacation and is the Prime Minister giving consideration to following President Ford's example?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): 1. Courtney Tower, Assistant Press Secretary.

2. No.

3. (a) No. (b) None.

4. The Prime Minister's vacation was a private occasion.

5. (a) No. (b) The Prime Minister regularly talks freely with members of the public and the news media.

AIR CANADA PASSES

Question No. 1,523—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Since January 1, 1974, how many passes have been in effect and at any time issued by Air Canada (a) what are the names and addresses of all persons holding such passes (b) what are the reasons in each case that a pass was issued (c) in each case, was the pass requested by the holder or someone acting on the holder's behalf?

2. Have any passes been called in by Air Canada or returned by the pass holder since January 1, 1974 and, if so, what are the names and addresses of such pass holders and what is the reason in each case for such a move?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advises as follows: 1. (a) and (b) Air Canada has a program of limited personal free transportation for its 22,000 employees and their qualified dependents. The quantity of such passes, which are subject to the availability of space at flight departure, is sealed in accordance with an employee's years of service. A number of passes are provided each year for promotional purposes and the airline considers the names of persons receiving these individual trip passes as proprietary information. As well, passes are issued as required for employee business travel and to non-company persons such as cabinet ministers, Ministry of Transport officials with aviation responsibilities, Canada Post Office officials, other airline heads, and to certain CN employees performing functions for Air Canada as well. These policies are similar to those of other Canadian airlines. (c) The pass recipient is usually the requestor except in the case of employees' dependents when the employee is the requestor.

2. Passes are generally not returned except on rare occasions when they are not used.

AIR CANADA PASSES

Question No. 1,559—Mr. Blackburn:

1. What were the names and official positions of employees of departments, agencies and Crown corporations who were holders of Air Canada passes as of February 3, 1975?

2. Do such passes entitle the holder to first-class or to economy travel?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advises as follows: 1. Air Canada's 22,000 employees and their qualified dependents are eligible for limited personal passes which are subject to the availability of space at flight time. Passes are also issued to company employees as required for business travel, and term passes are provided to non-company persons such as cabinet ministers, Ministry of Transport officials with aviation responsibility, officials of Canada Post Office, heads of other airlines, and to certain CN employees performing functions for Air Canada. These policies are similar to those applied by the other Canadian airlines.

2. Taking into consideration all pass issues, the majority entitle the holder to economy travel but these passholders may at times be upgraded if space is unavailable in the economy cabin.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—PERSONNEL INVOLVED IN OCTOBER, 1970 CRISIS

Question No. 1,570—Mr. Kaplan:

1. How many members of the Armed Forces were involved directly or indirectly in the government's response to the insurrection in Montreal in October, 1970?

2. What proportion of Armed Forces personnel then in Canada did this number represent?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. The number of Armed Forces personnel who were directly involved was as follows:

Period	Number of Personnel
October 18—October 31, 1970	8,066
November 1—November 30, 1970	7,200
December 1—December 15, 1970	4,211
December 15, 1970—January 4, 1971	Reduced to Nil

No precise number can be given for Armed Forces personnel who were involved indirectly. However, the following indicates the type of support involved: Staff personnel at National Defence Headquarters and various Command Headquarters, who prepared orders and arranged for administrative and logistic support. Air Transport Command resources. Depot, workshop and repair facilities. Bases support in the despatch of personnel and administrative functions.

2. The proportion varied over the time frames between October 18, 1970 and January 4, 1971, however, as there were approximately 83,600 Armed Forces personnel stationed in Canada at that time the highest percentage directly involved was 9.6 per cent.

LAND USE POLICY

Question No. 1,771—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

What specific steps are being taken by the government to discourage the non-agricultural use of agricultural land in Canada?

Mr. Len Marchand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): The administration and regulation of use of lands is a provincial jurisdiction. The government of Canada is, however, undertaking a comprehensive review of all activities within its area of responsibilities that directly affect land use and particularly the use of highly productive lands including agriculture. As indicated in the Speech from the Throne of the 29th Parliament, discussions have been initiated with the provinces towards the development of a national land use policy. In addition the government of Canada requires the preparation of an environmental assessment and review of all capital projects undertaken by a federal department, in which there are substantive federal funds or occurring on federal lands. By this means the irretrievable use of highly productive lands, including those with a high capability for agriculture, can be controlled.

CRESTON VALLEY WILDLIFE MANAGEMENT

Question No. 1,781—Mr. Brisco:

1. What percentage of the capital cost of operating the Creston Valley Wildlife Management area is paid for by the (a) government (b) Government of British Columbia.

2. Are the salaries of employees paid by the provincial government or the government.

Mr. Len Marchand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): 1. The Creston Valley Wildlife Management Area operates using funds derived from: (i) grants to a trust fund by the governments of Canada and British Columbia; (ii) appropriations by the B.C. legislature. Summary of funds provided to the Creston Valley Wildlife Management Area for 1974-75: (i) Grants to trust fund 1974-75: Canada, $55,000; British Columbia, $55,000; (ii) Appropriation by B.C. legislature: 1974-75, $72,130; Percentage contributed by Canada, 30 per cent; British Columbia, 70 per cent. In addition the B.C. department of labour supplied $44,000 for summer help in 1974-75. All building maintenance is done by the B.C. department of public works. The C.V.W.M.A. also derives limited revenue from the granting of permits, campground fees, etc.

2. Employees are paid by the British Columbia government out of funds appropriated for the Creston Valley Wildlife Management Area.

MR. PITFIELD'S TRIPS

Question No. 1,797—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to Question No. 447 to the effect that Mr. Michael Pitfield accompanied the Prime Minister as liaison officer on a trip to the Mediterranean for a period of twenty-four days from August 16 to September 9, 1969, what was (a) the exact and detailed itinerary for each day involved including the location in which each day and night was spent (b) the names and owners of any ship travelled upon (c) the names of all persons present on any ship other than bona fide members of the crew?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The itinerary and mode of travel were those chosen by the Prime Minister since he was assisting the Prime Minister as referred to in Question 1,798.

MR. PITFIELD'S TRIPS

Question No. 1,798—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to Question No. 447 to the effect that Mr. Michael Pitfield accompanied the Prime Minister on eight specifically named trips to foreign places in the capacity of liaison officer (a) were these in reality joint holidays for the Prime Minister and Mr. Pitfield paid for in whole or in part from public funds (b) did Mr. Pitfield do any work whatsoever on these trips and, if so (i) what is a detailed list of the work done (ii) dates involved (iii) people dealt with during each of the eight listed trips?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): It is government policy that the Prime Minister may travel with an official or officials to give him administrative support and in order to provide for possible emergencies and that expenses thus incurred by the official should be paid from public funds.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

Question No. 1,815—Mr. Herbert:

Is "conflict of interest" legislation being considered to cover employees of Crown corporations?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The government policy with respect to conflict of interest of employees of Crown Corporations is set forth in the Prime Minister's statement of December 18, 1973, to the House of Commons.

TOTAL COST OF "WHY NOT—POURQUOI PAS" PROGRAMME

Question No. 1,829—Mr. Reynolds:

1. What is the total cost of the "WHY NOT-POURQUOI PAS" Programme?

2. How much of this money is for (a) buttons (b) newspaper ads (c) radio ads (d) television ads?

3. What percentage of the budget is for the English language?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. As of March 24, 1975, $890,296.

2. (a) $19,857; (b) $314,337; (c) $140,305; (d) $159,677.

3. Eighty per cent.

CREWS REQUIRED CARRIAGE OF 40 PER CENT OF PRESENT LINER CONFERENCE RATED CARGO

Question No. 1,839—Mr. Forrestall:

Is the government taking steps to determine how many merchant seamen would be required to accommodate the staffing of the number of ships required to accommodate the movement (a) out of Canadian ports to foreign destinations (b) into Canadian ports from foreign destinations of 40 percent of the present liner conference rated cargo and (i) if not, for what reason (ii) if so, what are the specific steps and what department is responsible?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): (a) and (b) Yes, steps are being taken to obtain on a continuing basis, cargo statistics on which such calculations could be based. (i) Not applicable. (ii) The statistical problem here stems largely from the fact that conference vessels carry not only conference rated cargo but also non-conference rated cargo, i.e. cargo from shippers not party to the conference. In addition, conference vessels also make voyages outside the conference structure. As indicated in replies to questions 1,131 and 1,132, means are being developed to provide satisfactory statistics on the movement of liner conference rated cargo to and from Canadian ports. The Canadian Transport Commission and Statistics Canada have this work in hand. Thereafter the statistic will figure in the report on liner conference operations which the Minister of Transport makes annually to parliament under Section 12 of the Shipping Conferences Exemptions Act. With that statistic on cargo, and setting aside considerations of seasonal movements of goods, it could readily be calculated how many ships of a given size, loaded to a reasonable percentage of their carrying capacity, would be required to move 40 per cent of that much cargo in one year. An upward adjustment could be made to allow for repairs and times in drydock. By application of the Canadian Manning Regulations, as revised from time to time, the crew complement for each such ship could be determined. In order to provide for vacations and sickness, a further upward adjustment could be made.

NUMBER OF CONFERENCE VESSELS SERVING CANADIAN PORTS

Question No. 1,840—Mr. Forrestall:

Is the government taking steps to determine how many (a) general cargo (including passenger-cargo) (b) container type vessels were employed in the liner conference rated international inbound and outbound seaborne shipping to serve Canadian ports within the most recent 12 month period and (i) if not, for what reason (ii) if so, what are such steps and what department of government is responsible?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): (a) and (b) No, it is not proposed to make such surveys on an annual basis. (i) In the liner trades, ships switch from conference to conference during the year depending on cargo availability in various parts of the world. Some ships visit Canada frequently, others rarely. The number of different liner vessels visiting Canada in a year is therefore not particularly relevant to our work and lists are not compiled from port records on an annual basis. Special surveys are, of course, made from time to time, which can provide information for statistical breakdowns of the type requested. The most recent such survey was for the year 1972 and information from it was used in the replies to Questions 1,133 and 1,134. (ii) Not applicable.

SHIPPING CHARGES ON CANADIAN IMPORTS AND EXPORTS

Question No. 1,841—Mr. Forrestall:

What was the dollar value of total payments by Canada for shipping charges on Canadian imports and exports for each of the past five years?

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada reports that shipping charges on Canadian imports and exports for the last five years are as follows:

Canadian earnings from non-residents in respect of freight and shipping charges on exports:

	$ million
1970	938
1971	954
1972	987
1973	1,166
1974	1,326

Canadian payments to non-residents in respect of freight and shipping charges on imports:

	$ million
1970	812
1971	912
1972	1,052
1973	1,225
1974	1,383

AIR CANADA—SUN LIVING PACKAGE TOURS

Question No. 1,867—Mr. Mazankowski:

Did Air Canada expect to lose money on its Sun Living package tours to the Barbados and, if so (a) how much money was lost last year (b) what is the financial breakdown of the loss (c) to what extent did the leasing arrangements with Sunset Crest Ltd. contribute to the loss?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advises as follows: Air Canada's Sun Living programme applies to all its southern destinations and is part of a wide range of tours, vacation packages and other services offered by the airline in order to provide a complete product line to the travelling public. Prevailing market demands, coupled with market research, determine the direction the company should take to maintain and broaden its share of the market. Such things as hotel accommodation, car rentals and transportation are involved and no separate financial breakdown is made for each component part.

BRUCELLOSIS

Question No. 1,933—Mr. Mitges:

1. Has there been a problem with brucellosis in the Carleton County and Northern Saskatchewan areas and, if so, what action has been taken in the two areas to curtail it?

2. How great is the incidence of brucellosis in Canada in terms of (a) the number of cattle with the disease compared to the total cattle population (b) the number of diseased herds in comparison to the total herds in Canada?

3. How effective is the brucellosis vaccination in controlling and eventually ridding the country of the disease?

4. What percentage of heifers vaccinated acquire immunity?

5. At what age should female calves be vaccinated?

6. Is a programme of private vaccination by herd owners recommended?

7. Is vaccination of cows against brucellosis recommended?

8. Can a vaccinated animal spread brucellosis?

9. (a) How much and under what conditions is compensation paid regarding cattle with brucellosis (b) how is such amount determined (i) regarding grade cattle (ii) purebred cattle?

10. How long after can a farmer expect to receive compensation for infected cattle after he has disinfected his premises to the satisfaction of a departmental inspector?

11. Is it possible that a valuable cow infected with brucellosis can be placed in permanent quarantine instead of being slaughtered and, if so, in what manner and how often is it applied?

12. What training and/or experience is required by those employed in the Department of Agriculture to draw blood samples from herds to be tested for brucellosis?

13. Prior to the federal-provincial calf vaccination programme, what was the brucellosis infection rate in Canada?

14. What was the estimated annual dollar loss to the cattle industry?

15. As the result of the vaccination programme, what effect did it have on the brucellosis infection rate and the annual dollar loss to the cattle industry?

16. What is a brucellosis control area?

17. What was the result of the test and slaughter method and its effect on the reduction of brucellosis in Canada?

18. What is the national infection rate of brucellosis in Canada?

19. Did the Veterinary Director General in a speech state that brucellosis was eliminated in a number of countries and, if so, what countries?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): 1. A general test of Carleton County was conducted between November 1, 1974, and February 28, 1975. Out of 42,232 samples collected, only 52 positive reactors were uncovered, and there were no heavily infected herds. A general retest of the high risk area of Northwestern Saskatchewan was done during the fall and winter of 1973-74. A total of 329,213 blood samples were collected from 6,538 herds and 3,044 cattle were removed as reactors. The reactors included cattle which were negative to the test but were ordered slaughtered when heavily infected herds were ordered depopulated. At the present time, there are only 0.14 per cent of the herds under quarantine for brucellosis in the entire province.

2. (a) Between April 1, 1974, and January 3, 1975, out of a total population of approximately 15,000,000 cattle, 12,628 animals were ordered destroyed for brucellosis. Included in this figure are 5,813 cattle which were negative to the test but were ordered slaughtered in heavily infected herds that were ordered depopulated. (b) As of January 31, 1975, there were 734 herds under quarantine out of a total of 269,485 herds.

3. From 1950, when the federal-provincial brucellosis vaccination program was introduced, to 1957, the infection rate was reduced from 9 per cent to 4.5 per cent. It is recognized that complete elimination of brucellosis cannot be achieved in conjunction with calfhood vaccination.

4. Under usual field conditions, the vaccine protects about 60 to 65 per cent of the animals vaccinated.

5. An officially vaccinated animal is one that is vaccinated not earlier than three months and not later than nine months after the date of the birth of the animal. It is recommended that a calf be vaccinated as soon as possible after it reaches three months of age.

6. No.

7. Definitely not. In fact, it is illegal to vaccinate cows.

8. A vaccinated animal can be infected and may spread brucellosis.

9. Compensation is paid for all cattle ordered slaughtered for brucellosis. The maximum rate of compensation for purebred cattle is $450 and for grade cattle is $200. The owner is paid the market value of the animal up to the maximum compensation that can be paid for grades and purebreds.

10. A farmer can expect to receive his compensation in four weeks after his premises has been cleaned and disinfected to the satisfaction of an inspector from the Department except in unusual circumstances.

11. It is a dangerous procedure to place a brucellosis infected cow in permanent quarantine; this has been done only on very rare occasions and only in the case of a very valuable cow under approved and controlled conditions.

12. A new employee is trained in the field by a full time officer until the Department is satisfied that he is adequately trained to draw blood samples and to complete the required reports.

13. It was estimated at 8-9 per cent.

14. In 1957, at the beginning of the test and slaughter policy, the annual dollar loss was estimated to be $10,000,000.

15. The vaccination program reduced the infection rate from 9 per cent in 1950 to 4.5 per cent in 1957. As a result of the reduction in the infection rate, the annual dollar loss to the cattle industry was also reduced.

16. A brucellosis control area is an area that has been consituted by the Minister of Agriculture for the purpose of eradicating brucellosis. When the infection rate in brucellosis control area is below 1 per cent of the cattle and 5 per cent of the herds, the area is designated as a Brucellosis Certified Area. When the infection rate is not over 0.2 per cent of the cattle population and not over 1 per cent of the herds, the area is declared a Brucellosis Free Area.

17. The test and slaughter method, whereby infected animals are identified by testing and are ordered slaughtered, has reduced the national brucellosis infection rate from 4.5 per cent in 1957 to less than 0.2 per cent at present.

18. From April 1, 1974, to January 3, 1975, a total of 6,815 brucellosis reactors were ordered destroyed. Calculating this number of reactors against approximately 15,000,000 cattle represents a percentage infection rate of 0.045 per cent.

19. Brucellosis has been eliminated in Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Holland, West Germany and Poland.

Order Paper Questions

SWAMP FEVER

Question No. 1,934—Mr. Mitges:

1. How widespread is equine infectious anemia or swamp fever in Canada?

2. How can this disease be detected?

3. Is there any vaccine to prevent this disease?

4. Is compensation paid to owners of horses with swamp fever which have to be disposed of and, if so, what is the (a) minimum (b) maximum amount?

5. On what date did a programme of testing for swamp fever start in Canada?

6. How many tests have been conducted for swamp fever since that time?

7. How many tests have proved positive?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): 1. The incidence of this disease is relatively low with a few isolated pockets of infection in widely separated parts of the country.

2. By the testing of a blood sample drawn from the horse by a veterinarian.

3. No.

4. Compensation is payable to owners of animals ordered slaughtered under E.I.A. control program. (a) and (b) Compensation is based on the market value of the animal up to a maximum of $200. There is no minimum amount.

5. February, 1971.

6. Between February, 1971 and February 28, 1975, 202,566 tests were conducted.

7. Between February, 1971 and February 28, 1975, there were 5,593 positive reactions.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—ECONOMIC ORDERING PATTERNS

Question No. 1,963—Mr. Reynolds:

1. When were the latest studies of economic ordering patterns undertaken within the Department of Supply and Services?

2. What were the results?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. The development of economic ordering patterns is an inherent part of the procurement function and is done on a continuous basis. In some cases, such as in the replenishment of DSS stocked items a computer programme is used to assist in determining optimum reorder points.

2. Inventories are held to a minimum consistent with economic purchase quantities, adequate customer service and market conditions.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—TYPES OF AIRCRAFT

Question No. 1,970—Mr. Reynolds:

1. What aircraft, by type, does the Department of National Defence have and what is their respective use?

2. Are any aircraft in the process of being phased out and, if so, what types?

Order Paper Questions

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. The types of aircraft and their respective use in the Department of National Defence are as follows:

Aircraft Types	Use
CC109 Cosmopolitan	Transport
CC115 Buffalo	Tactical Transport-Search and Rescue
CC117 Falcon	Transport
CC130 Hercules	Transport-Tactical Transport
CC137 Boeing 707	Transport
CC138 Twin Otter	Search and Rescue
CC129 Dakota	Training and Utility
CF100 Canuck	Electronic Warfare
CF101 VooDoo	Air Defence Interceptor
CF104 Starfighter	Tactical Fighter
CF116 CF-5	Tactical Fighter and Training
CH113 Labrador	Search and Rescue Helicopter
CH113A Voyageur	Medium Transport Helicopter
CH118 Iroquois	Base Rescue Helicopter
CH124 Sea King	Anti-Submarine Warfare Helicopter
CH135 Twin Huey	Light Utility Transport Helicopter
CH136 Kiowa	Basic Trainer-Liaison-Utility Helicopter
CH147 Chinook	Medium-Heavy Transport Helicopter
CP107 Argus	Patrol-Anti-Submarine
CP121 Tracker	Patrol-Maritime Surveillance
CSR 123 Otter	Utility-Reserve
CT134 Musketeer	Aircrew Selection-Basic Trainer
CT114 Tutor	Basic Trainer (Jet)
CT133 T-33	Training-Liaison

2. All types of Aircraft are currently in use.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—DOPPLER NAVIGATION SYSTEMS

Question No. 1,978—Mr. Reynolds:

Is the Doppler Navigation Systems to be retained for DND aircraft and, if so, is it being upgraded or phased out?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Four types of Canadian Forces aircraft are equipped with Doppler Navigation Systems. There are no current plans to change or dispense with the systems.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—PROCUREMENT PROCESS

Question No. 2,008—Mr. Reynolds:

What are the routine steps made in the procurement process within the Department of Supply and Services?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Following is a list of the routine steps made in the procurement process. Some or all of these steps are followed to a greater or lesser degree depending on the nature of a particular procurement. 1. Consultation with customer department to define requirement.

2. Price and availability determination.

3. Receipt and recording of requisition.

4. Acknowledgement of requisition.

5. Allocation of requisition to purchasing specialist in a Product Centre or to a Project Manager.

6. Review and verification of requisition.

7. Facility surveys.

8. Preparation of procurement plan.

9. Establish list of eligible sources of supply.

10. Bid solicitation (competitive or single source).

11. Receipt and opening of bids.

12. Bid evaluation.

13. Contract negotiation.

14. Contractor selection.

15. Review, approval and award.

16. Contract administration including: (a) monitoring of time, cost and performance; (b) expediting and follow-up; (c) design change; (d) contract amendment; (e) quality assurance; (f) delivery, acceptance and payment; (g) termination and settlement; (h) cost audit; (i) plant and personnel security.

17. Contract close-out.

STOL AIRCRAFT

Question No. 2,128—Mr. Robinson:

Will the government consider the advisability of providing a Crown corporation to develop and commercialize STOL aircraft for the short haul domestic service for all parts of Canada?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The government has not yet decided what role STOL aircraft should play in providing short-haul domestic air services in Canada. In considering this question the government will study a number of options, among them the advisability of providing some of these services through a Crown Corporation.

U.N. CONGRESS ON THE PREVENTION OF CRIME AND TREATMENT OF OFFENDERS

Question No. 2,147—Mr. Kaplan:

Are there provisions in existing agreements relating to the United Nations Congress in Crime and Criminality scheduled for Toronto in September 1975, which in the opinion of the government prevent it from denying entry to Canada to representatives of terrorist organizations and, if so, what are such provisions?

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Negotiations are still continuing between the United Nations and the Government of Canada concerning the text of the understanding that will set out the terms of reference for the 5th U.N. Conference on Crime to be held in Toronto next September. Until these are completed, it will not be possible to provide a definitive answer to the above question. Meanwhile, the hon. member may rest assured that the Government is giving the most careful attention to the problems implicit in his question.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

PUBLIC SERVICE—DECENTRALIZATION

Question No. 881—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

1. Since 1968, which departments or agencies have decentralized functions or personnel to a region or regions and, in each case (a) what were the functions and the public service classifications of the individuals concerned (b) what was the extra saving or extra cost involved?

2. Is the Treasury Board, or any other agency of government, currently preparing, or now in possession of, a cost-benefit analysis respecting present or potential decentralization of public service functions or personnel to a region or regions and, if so, what is the (a) budget (b) personnel (c) estimated report date of that analysis?

3. Has the government entered into consultation with any province or territory or any foreign jurisdiction to determine the experience of these other jurisdictions with decentralization and, if so (a) what are the other jurisdictions (b) what, in each case, is the specific purpose of the consultation?

Return tabled.

BROADCASTING, FILMS AND ASSISTANCE TO THE ARTS

Third report of Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts, in both official languages—Mr. Guilbault.

[Editor's Note: For text of above report, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

[English]

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order concerning a matter I raised earlier in the question period. It arises because of my concern for the future of the jury system and the damage being done to it by the courts and bodies standing within the authority of the portfolio of the Minister of Justice. If appeal courts and the Supreme Court of Canada are ignoring and overruling the verdicts of juries—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member may have many representations to make in this regard. If he has some concern about his question being ruled out of order in the question period as a point of order, I may tell him that he clearly asked the minister to anticipate a situation that may come before him in the future, and to make a pronouncement now as to what he would do in the event of such a situation coming before him with or without a recommendation of leniency.

This has to be a hypothetical situation and accordingly it does not constitute a proper question. Neither do the hon. member's remarks at this stage, as a representation, make a valid point of order. If the hon. member has some complaint about my failure to accept his question, however, I am quite prepared to hear it as a point of order. Representations about the jury system is not a point of order.

Mr. Alkenbrack: With all due respect, my question is not hypothetical; it is realistic. This is happening today and has been happening, and we do not want it to continue to happen. To finish my point, in light of what I have outlined, is the cabinet also going to continue to perpetrate the same travesty of justice in the cases involving capital punishment now awaiting final decision?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Tabling of documents; the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner).

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

TABLING OF NOTICE OF WAYS AND MEANS MOTION

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 60(1), I am tabling on behalf of the Minister of Finance notice of ways and means motion pursuant to Standing Order 60(2). I would request Your Honour to designate an order of the day for consideration of the ways and means motion.

Mr. Speaker: It is agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I have a few questions on the order paper and I was wondering if the parliamentary secretary would be able to answer at least one or two a week. I am willing to be patient.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

PETROLEUM ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING THE ADMINISTRATION OF INTERPROVINCIAL, EXPORT AND IMPORT TRADE IN PETROLEUM AND PETROLEUM PRODUCTS

The House resumed, from Tuesday, April 15, consideration in committee of Bill C-32, to impose a charge on the export of crude oil and certain petroleum products, to provide compensation for certain petroleum costs and to regulate the price of Canadian crude oil and natural gas in interprovincial and export trade—Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale)—Mr. Laniel in the chair.

On clause 3—Binding on Her Majesty.

The Chairman: When the committee rose on Tuesday, April 15, 1975, clause 3 of the bill was under consideration. Shall clause 3 carry?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Chairman, in the debate on clause 2 last fall I made a rather lengthy and, hopefully, clear explanation of a concern I had about clause 3. I suggested at that time, because I was concerned, that I was prepared to move an amendment which would clarify the position. I gave copies of the amendment to the minister and members of the other parties in the House. Let me say briefly why I wish to move an amendment. Clause 3 of Bill C-32 reads:

● (1510)

This act is binding on Her Majesty in right of Canada and in right of any province.

To a layman, it seems remarkable that the legislative assembly which I am addressing can take unto itself the right of binding Her Majesty in right of Canada and in right of any province without producing some document which shows that the provinces have given it this right to bind them. When arguing last fall about the prerogatives of the Queen, I traced how power had passed from the monarchy to our people who live in the modern age. I pointed out that the power which in ancient times had resided in the Queen, in the monarchy, is now in the hands of the people and prerogatives of the Queen, or powers, which were passed on to a province were passed smoothly on to the people of that province. I am not speaking as a lawyer or constitutional expert. I know the subject of the royal prerogative is in the realm of discussion and I know there are no authorities which one can consult. I am simply expressing my concern.

I think parliament should make its legislation as unassailable as possible. Here, parliament seeks to pass legislation claiming to bind the people of a province without first having obtained the consent of the people of the province for that binding. In the debate last fall, the minister rejected my argument concerning the prerogatives of the Crown. He did not accept arguments dealing with consent which ought to be given to parliament before it enacts laws affecting the Queen's prerogatives. He did not accept my argument that if the people of a province are to be bound to do anything, parliament should first have from the people of the province and their government consent for that binding.

It was suggested that the recommendation of the Governor General is sufficient to indicate that we have power to deal with the Queen's prerogatives, that consent in this instance is not required, although it has been required when laws have been passed affecting the Queen's prerogatives. By the Queen's prerogatives, I mean the property of the people. I gave several examples to back up my argument. I alluded to the mineral rights on reservations in Canada. For years parliament assumed that we had full power in connection with Indian reservations because the land had been granted to the federal power. When the matter finally came before the courts about 20 years ago, the courts ruled that the federal power has power over the land but that the mineral rights belong to the owners of those mineral rights in the first instance, the people of the provinces.

[Mr. Speaker.]

We went through an embarrassing procedure in 1957-58 when a minister of the government of that day—a minister who had not been involved in past decision-making and advice given by law officers of the Crown in the preceding 20 years—had to stand in her place in the House and say, "We must do this the proper way. Consent has been granted." Then she had to prove, by document, that she had the consent of the provinces concerned for her statement.

The House ought to thank the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich for his research in this area. He has dug up some examples which suggest that parliament should not legislate in connection with the right of a province unless consent has been given to parliament. This sort of thing has only happened a few times previously: I am referring to bills being passed where consent had not been given. It was done with the Explosives Act of 1953-54. For obvious reasons, the federal government felt it had to act on the matter of explosives. The second example is the International River Improvements Act of 1955. Once again, one could claim that the federal power extends into that particular field. The third example is the Fisheries Act of 1970. Again, federal government jurisdiction has strong claims in that area. The fourth example is the Nuclear Liability Act of 1970. I understand that there is another act which could be used as an example.

To me, as a layman, it seems that this bill, which clearly seeks to deal with the property of the people of a province without their consent, is an aberration. It contains a clause which says that the act is binding on Her Majesty in right of Canada and in right of any province. The government has included this clause without showing evidence that any province has agreed to it. On the contrary, there is written evidence from ministers of the Crown and provincial premiers showing they do not consent.

My point is simple. If we are to pass a good bill we should word it in such a way that historians at least will know we are conscious of the dangerous ground on which we are treading, Therefore, I will read the proposed amendment. I think it will meet our objections and show the people of the provinces that we are aware of their rights with respect to resources.

The amendment reads:

That clause 3 of the bill on page 2 be amended by deleting line 9 and substituting therefor the following:

province; and, where the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada does not extend to bind Her Majesty in right of a province, then to the extent that Her Majesty in right of a province consents thereto.

I should like to move that amendment, seconded by the hon. member for Regina East, for the consideration of the committee. I made it clear when I spoke last fall that, as a layman, I was treading carefully in the field of constitutional precedent and the delicate field of the prerogatives of the Queen and of the people. I shall therefore put on the record, in careful phrases, what I tried to say when I made my speech last fall.

This is a case where it is easier to distinguish the relative jurisdictions of the federal and provincial fields by looking at the respective Crown prerogatives rather than the respective federal and provincial legislative powers.

The provincial Crown, as a prerogative, has property title rights in provincial property, just as the federal Crown, as a prerogative, has property title rights in federal property. These rights can only be legislated upon by the appropriate legislature and then only with the consent of the federal or provincial Crown, as the case may be.

It may be difficult to determine when the federal government, by legislation, impinges upon the provincial legislative field; however, it is not so where the federal legislature impinges upon a provincial Crown prerogative. One need only look to see if there is a record showing that the provincial Crown has consented to this impingement upon the prerogative. If there is no consent, then the infringement is invalid. While it may be argued that the federal government, by legislation of parliament, can bind the provincial Crown in matters not involving the prerogatives that are within the legislative competence of parliament, there is no doubt that the federal government, through parliament, cannot bind a provincial Crown prerogative without the consent of the provincial Crown. Indeed, parliament cannot, by legislation, bind the federal Crown prerogative in a matter of property rights without the consent of the federal Crown.

Clause 3 purports to extend all the provisions of the bill to Her Majesty in right of a province. This may or may not be constitutionally correct with respect to certain of the provisions of the bill, but so many of the provisions which purport to affect the provincial Crown prerogative of property rights in gas and oil or any incidence of those property rights are invalid. Even those which affect the federal Crown prerogative in property are invalid without the Crown's consent, although this can be cured in the present instance by the Crown giving its consent before or during third reading.

This amendment to clause 3 serves to point out the dependency of the federal government upon provincial government consent, through the provincial Crown prerogative, to many of the bill's provisions. It is curative, also, and should be adopted by the government; otherwise, if the act is subsequently challenged on this point, it will be held totally or partially invalid. The amendment provides for obtaining the consent. Probably, the provincial Crown could not give its consent to federal legislation without legislative authority from the provincial legislature.

That, Mr. Chairman, in careful language is the explanation for having moved this amendment. Going back to layman's language, I simply say we can make this a better act that will not be challenged by anyone if we add this phrase that I have read to the committee, and I will read it again:

—where the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada does not extend to bind Her Majesty in right of a province, then to the extent that Her Majesty in right of a province consents thereto.

In the particular situation in which we find ourselves, where we have before us a bill to put into legal effect the machinery to carry out the purpose of an agreement arrived at between the 11 heads of government last March 27, there should be in there a statement that there should be consent from the provinces. The provinces whose resources are affected in this instance are primarily four in number. Alberta and Saskatchewan, Manitoba to a lesser degree, and British Columbia, which wants gas prices up but not oil prices, have already indicated their position with regard to having their oil and gas prices controlled. It all boils down to the fact that if this clause were put in, before anything is done with this legislation we would expect some indication from these provinces which I think should come through a statutory provision or resolution passed in their legislatures. As a substitute for that, there could be an order in council of those four provinces saying that they consent to the terms of this agreement arrived at by the heads of the provinces and the federal government last March 27.

The best argument I can make as an individual, supported by at least the party of Her Majesty's Opposition, to try to get across the idea that we would like to see action taken in this very necessary field of price and supply allocation is that it be done within the framework and under the umbrella of the constitution which we have in Canada. There is no question about whether my amendment will achieve this purpose. The question we now have to decide is, will the members of the committee accept this proposal and make this good legislation?

The Chairman: I am sure hon. members took notice of the amendment of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain. Before I decide whether the amendment is in order and put it to the committee, I invite the opinions of hon. members as to its acceptability. I prefer at this time to reserve expressing my views on the amendment, although my first reaction is to put it to the committee. I do not want hon. members to feel that the Chair is not open to expressions of opinion as to the acceptability of the amendment, and if there are hon. members who have views they wish to express, they may do so. The Chair has to be very careful about commending the proposed amendment; there is the danger that it might be making a legal judgment or constitutional interpretation on the implication or application of this piece of legislation.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain spoke of the consent of Her Majesty. This bill does not deal with property of Her Majesty in her own right which would be transferred with her consent. It is very difficult for the Chair to get involved in the intricate aspects of this kind of proposition. In any event, if there are any comments I invite hon. members to make them and I will then make an immediate decision.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, unless there is sustained argument on matters which are very complex in nature and issues which are difficult such as this—and Your Honour said he had an inclination to put the motion—it is usually sound to follow your first inclination.

The Chairman: Does the hon. member wish to speak on the procedural aspect of this amendment, or on clause 3?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, at this time I do not want to deal with either the acceptability or the substance of the amendment. If the minister is going to speak on this matter, I want to ask whether, for the edification of a non-member of the legal profession, he would begin by explaining clause 3 itself because I must confess that I am at a loss in understanding it. The clause reads:

This act is binding on Her Majesty in right of Canada and in right of any province.

Whenever I am confronted with legal terminology, I find myself somewhat at sea. I therefore appeal to the minister, as a distinguished member of the bar—I said "of the bar", not "at the bar"—to explain exactly what it means. I find it difficult to understand just how an act of this parliament can be binding on Her Majesty in the right of a province. Maybe this is the type of terminology that is used from time to time, but I have not come across it. Before the minister gets into the ramifications of the amendment being proposed, either with respect to its acceptability or its substance, I think all of us would be able to make a much more intelligent judgment on the matter if he would begin by explaining clause 3.

● (1530)

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): As the committee knows, the bill provides for certain charges to be made under part I and also for certain compensation to be paid under part IV, and among the entities which will be subject to export charges under part I will be any agencies of the Crown in right of Canada, for example, Petro-Canada when it comes into existence or of the provinces which may be engaged in the export of commodities chargeable under the bill. The clause is similar to section 9 of the Excise Tax Act, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, chapter 12, and is necessitated first by the provisions of section 16 of the Interpretation Act which provides as follows:

No enactment is binding on Her Majesty or affects Her Majesty or Her Majesty's rights or prerogatives in any manner except only as they are therein mentioned or referred to.

It is, of course, Her Majesty in right of Canada who is being referred to in this situation, so the first part of clause 3 saying the act is binding on Her Majesty in right of Canada is in response to section 16 of the Interpretation Act which requires parliament specifically to state how the rights of Her Majesty are affected. I will go on to complete the circle with regard to Her Majesty's participation. As the committee knows, parliament is made up of three parts—this House, the other place and the assent of Her Majesty in parliament. In due course the Crown will be asked to assent to whatever enactment is produced by the two chambers.

When we go on to deal with the second part of the sentence, "and in right of any province", we are really getting to the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain. The position, basically, is similar to that under section 9 of the Excise Tax Act: the Crown in right of Canada, acting within its jurisdiction, has full authority to bind the Crown in right of any province or any entity of the Crown in right of any province. This is a position which is well established in the jurisprudence. I think I am right in citing the Gold Seal case as an example—the imposition of federal Customs tariffs on provincial Crown corporations.

To put it the other way around; in other words, where the Government of Canada has jurisdiction under the British North America Act, a province cannot defeat the exercise of that jurisdiction by taking an activity out of private hands and putting it in the hands of a provincial Crown corporation. I feel this deals with the case of the royal prerogative. The legislative jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada applies equally to a transaction whether it is in the hands of a private individual or a Crown entity in a province. I trust I have shown satisfactory reason and authority for extending this to the Crown in right of any province.

Dealing now with the terminology of the amendment itself, I would say the amendment is redundant in the sense that it makes no valid legal addition to the bill. It really purports to extend the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada. If it were found that the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada did not extend beyond a certain point, the amendment would purport, by the consent of Her Majesty in right of a province, to extend that jurisdiction. However, under our constitution it is not possible for the act of one parliament, of one level of jurisdiction, to extend the jurisdiction of another level.

It is possible to delegate a particular responsibility, as in the case of the Motor Vehicle Transport Act, or in such a manner as was sanctioned by the courts in connection with the Prince Edward Island potato marketing legislation; but the hon. member is not proposing a delegation of that kind. The amendment purports to say that if the Government of Canada does not possess jurisdiction, the province can allow jurisdiction by consent. It is well established that this cannot be done. The only way by which jurisdiction could be added to the federal government or taken from the province would be by way of an amendment to the British North America Act, carried out in this case by the parliament at Westminster. In this case I would argue that the amendment should not be agreed to: it is redundant; it attempts to do something which is not in the power of either this House or the provincial legislation to do.

Mr. Andre: I have a question for the minister concerning one aspect of clause 3 relating to the powers it would seek to exercise over Her Majesty in right of a province. Clause 89 in part V, at page 36 of the bill, gives the minister or his agent the right to enter any premises in which he has reason to believe there may be evidence of contravention of the act; it gives him, also, authority to seize records, to carry away such records, and so on. These rights being binding on Her Majesty in right of the province, it concerns me that under the terms of the clause the minister or his designate may enter the office of the premier of a province, seize his records and do all the things which clause 89 provides. The likelihood of this happening may be remote, but I think it would be extremely ill-advised for us in this assembly to pass any legislation which provided for such a possibility.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I think the hon. member is referring to clause 89 (1)(b). That is the authority to enter premises and seize documents, the kind of authority which is also found in taxation statutes such as the Excise Tax Act to which I have referred. It is true that since the law speaks in general terms, it would, of course, apply to any provincial entity which was covered by the provisions of the statute. I suppose the premier of a province could choose to carry on the buying and selling of petroleum products from his own office. However, in fact, in Alberta that is not the case; it is the Alberta Marketing Corporation which does so.

It is really a matter of judgment that is involved here, rather than a legal limitation. I would take it that since the powers are well established, as I have said, a province cannot avoid the lawful exercise of the jurisdiction of the Government of Canada by setting up a Crown corporation and this provision would, of course, apply. I suppose that in the circumstances it would be done by consent. But the hon. member is right; in terms of the law, there would be the right to enter premises for the purposes mentioned.

The Chairman: Order. Perhaps I should return to the procedural aspect of the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain and render a decision. I wish to thank hon. members who have expressed their views on the subject. Though they did not deal directly with the procedural question, they did put the matter into perspective. Apart from the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain, the minister was the only member who commented on the amendment from a procedural point of view. He said that the amendment was, in his view, redundant—not that it was unacceptable on procedural grounds.

The minister also said the amendment did not appear to add anything to clause 3. His conclusion was that the amendment should not be carried—not that it should not be accepted. Legislation is binding or not binding. It is not for the Chair, looking at an amendment and deciding whether or not it is acceptable, to consider whether the legislation is binding; that is a matter for the courts. In due time the courts have to decide the implications of attaching an amendment in the terms proposed to such an act.

● (1540)

I am ready at this time to put the amendment to the committee.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Chairman, I want to put a further question to the minister.

The Chairman: Putting the amendment will not prevent the hon. member from pursuing his question. It is moved by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain:

> That clause 3 of the bill on page 2 be amended by deleting line 9 and substituting therefor the following:
> Province; and, where the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada does not extend to bind Her Majesty in right of a province, then to the extent that Her Majesty in right of a province consents thereto.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Chairman, following my earlier question, as I had previously perceived the minister's position, this clause gives the minister or his designate the right to examine the books of a Crown corporation. However, I was not alluding to that; I was asking the minister whether it is true that clause 3, as it relates to clause 89, gives the minister the right to examine the records of the premier of a province and/or one of his ministers? Does the clause authorize the minister or his designate to enter any premises where there is reason to believe there might be certain evidence? It is conceivable, for example, that a provincial premier or minister could have in his office records associated with a Crown corporation, if that were the vehicle through which the province pursued its activities in a certain area.

It has also been rumoured that one province, anyway, is contemplating, not the vehicle of a Crown corporation but, rather, a direct operation so that operations in the oil and gas industry would be administered directly by a government department, which means by a minister of a Crown, a minister of Her Majesty in right of the province. I am asking the minister whether it is true that this clause would give him or his designate the right to walk into the office of a provincial premier or one of his ministers and examine and seize any records he deems necessary to enforce this provision.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, may I suggest that, since the hon. member has expressed specific interest in clause 89(1)(b), it would seem to me that an appropriate time to discuss various powers of entry, and so on, would be when we get to clause 89, rather than under the general provisions of this amendment dealing with the distribution of legislative jurisdiction. In other words, the consequences of the distribution of legislative jurisdiction are dealt with systematically clause by clause. I wonder whether it is not more appropriate to deal with each of these events when we get to that clause, rather than to argue them all on clause 3.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Chairman, with all respect to the minister, clause 3 is the relevant clause. A particular power is being sought in clause 89 and the clause may well be appropriate for corporations that come under the provisions of this bill. But I question whether the powers would be appropriate as applied to Her Majesty in right of a province. The interpretation that I perceive from clause 3 is that the minister would in fact have that authority. We are nearing the point of voting on clause 3, so I think it is highly appropriate at this point in time to get an interpretation from the minister, if he is willing to give one. I am reaching the conclusion that I am right and that this provision would grant the minister power to walk into such premises.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I have just said that, Mr. Chairman. May I point out to the hon. member that I have just answered the exact question he is posing.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) some information respecting clause 3 of the bill. It should be understood that through that clause the federal government is granted unusual powers such as are not to be found in many acts. The minister admitted earlier, I think, that such a clause can be found in bills due to special circumstances only. Can the minister tell us whether before this provision was made in Bill C-32, he sought the opinion of the authorities in every province to know what their positions were in that respect and request their consent to that provision of Bill C-32?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, the answer is no, because we are abiding by the precedent of the excise acts. The federal government is granted the very same powers under section 9. In fact, to impose a charge on the export of crude oil from Canada, that power to tax provincial governments or any provincial government corporation is requested if the province has chosen to extend authority to a corporation or the private sector. Therefore, in order to levy charges on crude oil, to subsidize Quebec and other provinces, such powers are required, whether through the private sector or a provincial corporation. In that sense, it is exactly the same type of policy as the excise law policy.

[English]

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Chairman, I want to thank you for your ruling; I think it was the correct ruling. My words now are in reply to the minister's remarks. I appreciate the difficulty of trying to put this point clearly. So far as the prerogatives of the Crown are concerned, I have left that question out of the amendment. It is an exotic field that I do not think we are expert enough here to explore. I am satisfied that I put my argument clearly enough in my speech last fall and again in the more careful statement I made today.

What this amendment is concerned about is the question of legislative authority. There is no question in my mind that this bill will give legislative authority to the federal government to impose an export tax. I also accept completely that the federal government has the power to impose an export tax.

Another part of the bill deals with price setting, and price setting is a power exercised only by the provincial governments. Related to this power to set prices is the value of the property concerned, and the property is clearly established under the constitution as being the property of the people in the province. In other words, we are moving in the legislative field into an area where it is very difficult to be absolutely sure the federal government has complete legislative authority.

The argument made by the federal government is that through its powers connected with interprovincial trade or trade outside the borders of Canada, it is given this legislative authority and, as I say, I accept that. But there is also an equally powerful law that provides that the property that is moving is property belonging to the people of the province concerned. So we are in a somewhat cloudy area here, and if the matter is brought before the courts I should like the justices of the courts to know that we in parliament were conscious of the difficulty and that we inserted into the act a clearly stated provision.

● (1550)

This clause arbitrarily states that this act is binding on Her Majesty in right of Canada and in right of any province. I am just adding these careful, extra words, that where the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada does not extend to bind Her Majesty in right of a province, and only in that case, then to the extent that Her Majesty in right of the province consents thereto, it will be binding. So there would be nothing to stop the government, if it accepted my amendment, doing what it wants to do if it is convinced, on the advice of its law officers, that it is within its legislative authority to do so.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

If this matter is challenged in the courts and the courts rule that this part of the legislative action of the federal government is legitimate and should go forward, that is fine. If the courts should rule that another part of the legislative action is not legitimate, then we have covered our responsibilities as legislators by saying that if the courts rule that it is not legitimate, then we have this procedure to follow: the government gets the consent of the province if the courts rule it is a matter within provincial jurisdiction.

I think this amendment adds to the clarity of clause 3 and does not take anything away from the power the minister wants under this legislation or which he had before the legislation. I do not think I have to say anything more about it, as the argument has been made very clearly. We should vote on the matter now, but I want the record to show that we are simply trying to improve the legislation so we do not look silly if the courts turn down any of the federal government's actions under this legislation.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, as I understand clause 3 from the minister's explanation, it simply states that the legislation we are now in the process of considering, when passed shall apply to any agency of Her Majesty either in right of the Government of Canada or in right of a provincial government. Whenever I am faced with legal jargon, I always have to get it down into nickel and dime words. I take it that if the national petroleum company which is to receive some 15 per cent of the oil from Syncrude is set up and is in operation, it will be subject to the same laws and same inspections as any other company in Canada handling oil. I take it that SaskOil of the province of Saskatchewan, which is drilling for and marketing oil, will also be in the same class as any private company and subject to the restrictions and controls laid down in this legislation. It seems to me, of course, that this has to be the case, otherwise it would be possible to subvert the intention of this legislation.

My difficulty about the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain is that it suggests that where the legislative authority in this bill does not extend to bind Her Majesty in right of a province, the province must consent. But who is to determine when and to what extent the legislative authority in this legislation does not extend to the binding of Her Majesty in right of a province? Is the federal government going to make that determination? If the federal government makes that determination, and its decision is contrary to the opinion of the province, then of course the province will have to go to court.

The province will have to go to court, anyway, if under this legislation it feels that the federal government is using the authority given under the legislation in a manner that abridges its rights as set out in section 92 of the British North America Act. Therefore, I do not see what value the amendment adds to this particular clause. If there is an invasion of provincial rights, surely in the final analysis it will have to be settled in court. It is not going to be settled by allowing the federal government to determine whether in its opinion it has abridged the rights of a provincial government. To leave to the federal government the right to determine whether it should seek the consent of the province, or whether it is not necessary to seek that consent, is not satisfactory because this is a matter that can only be decided in the courts.

I think the amendment is superfluous, but I can understand the good intentions of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain. I really cannot, for the life of me, see how the amendment would add to the effectiveness of the clause. I think the clause itself states clearly that the purport of this legislation will apply to Her Majesty in right of both Canada and the provinces, and that any agency set up by the Government of Canada or by any province which deals in petroleum products or natural gas moving across provincial or international boundaries shall be subject to the provisions of this act.

If there is an invasion of provincial rights, it can only be settled by referring the matter to the courts, and this situation is not going to be assisted, as far as I can see, by any provision that we put in this bill which states that the federal government must seek the consent of the province, because the federal government itself is to be the one to determine when it will seek the consent of the province. It is not likely to seek the consent of the province as long as it is convinced it is acting within the full ambit of the rights it enjoys under section 91 of the British North America Act.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, the explanation by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands with regard to Petro-Can and SaskOil outlines exactly the situation. As is habitually the case, explanations given of difficult points of law by non-lawyers are infinitely more comprehensible than those given by lawyers. The situation as outlined by the hon. member is exactly what this clause has in mind.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Chairman, I have a small point in reply to the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. He and I share the same bed today in that we know very little about legal jargon. The reason for my concern relates purely to Saskatchewan and Canadian politics. If we read the precise terms of the Alberta Natural Resources Act and the Saskatchewan Natural Resources Act, we see that the words I am using are used in those statutes. Those acts admitted that the federal government has for many years done certain things wrong. The federal government said in the act that it will in future consider the rights of the provinces. It goes on to state in the Saskatchewan Natural Resources Act of 1930-31 that changes can only be accomplished with the consent of the province of Saskatchewan in the form of a legislative resolution.

I maintain that the bill we are discussing affects the rights of the people of the province of Saskatchewan, and clearly under the Saskatchewan Natural Resources Act and the British North America Act, changes in the statute of 1930-31 can only be made with the consent of the legislature of the province of Saskatchewan. Here we are taking away the substance of that agreement of 1930-31 by making in this clause 3 the flat assertion that this Parliament says this is binding on the federal government and the provincial government. As a layman I am simply saying that I accept the position the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands is taking that really with all these possibilities it does not matter if this clause is there if the courts will deal with the situation in any case. I simply say that I know the people of Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia and Manitoba believe that this legislation will be challenged. That means that the Parts that are challenged will be thrown out by the courts. I feel sure of that. When they are thrown out there is a course of action laid down in our legislation which they can follow. They simply need consent. The consent arranged for in 1930-31 was a result of action by the legislatures of the two provinces, Alberta and Saskatchewan. I would qualify that in modern days by saying simply that it should be by Order in Council to make the decision-making more rapid. I think not only is my amendment well meaning but that if the history of the next few years were known it will be face-saving for those of us to like to believe we are doing the best job we can and are being good legislators.

● (1600)

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, perhaps I might be permitted to comment for a moment on the remarks of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain. I cannot agree that this legislation is on all fours with the Saskatchewan resource legislation to which he referred, nor can I agree that the measure before us will interfere with the rights of the people of Saskatchewan with regard to the management of their resources.

In the case of the Saskatchewan resource legislation, we are dealing with the management of resources which was given to the province under the legislation of 1931. With reference to the development and exploitation of those resources, this legislation in no way interferes with that right. What this legislation does is to deal with price, and I cannot agree with the hon. member when he says the federal government has no right to interfere in respect of price. It has no right to interfere in respect of the price of a commodity sold within the province in which it is produced, but surely when a commodity crosses provincial boundaries or goes into export trade the federal government clearly has responsibility to deal with the matter of price.

There may be parts of this legislation with which we will disagree later, but in so far as the clause now under consideration is concerned, what we are saying is that a provincial agency comes under the same strictures and the same guidelines as any private corporation which is handling a commodity when it goes into interprovincial trade. In a number of places it is made clear that the provisions of the legislation do not apply to petroleum products sold within the province. Therefore, there can be no invasion of provincial rights when it comes to the matter of development of resources or the sale of them within the province. This legislation exercises that power when the product moves into interprovincial and international trade. It seeme to me there can be no argument about the jurisdiction of the federal parliament to legislate in that matter.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I must say, from my many years of experience in the practice of law, that when one has two persons who maintain they are laymen and express their apprehension about the legal language used,

I think it is time for a lawyer to be careful. I am convinced that the two distinguished laymen in this House, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands and the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain, each of whom have held high positions under the Crown, probably know a great deal more about law than many lawyers. However, I shall exercise my great deal of experience in the law in an effort to come between them and make a settlement, without benefit of a fee.

Mr. Foster: Confuse them both.

Mr. Baldwin: I would present a proposition to the minister for consideration. He stated the law correctly, that in respect of an arrangement between governments, one government cannot delegate to another. One government, however, can in fact delegate, through the proper procedure and with adequate consent, to an entity of another government the right to exercise authority in a field which initially may be squarely within the right or jurisdiction of the first government in question. It is quite obvious that by this legislation a great deal of authority is given, for example, to the National Energy Board. It is my judgment that the National Energy Board, created under the act, is an entity of the federal government? Would the minister agree with that proposition?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes.

Mr. Baldwin: The minister agrees. The National Energy Board is given very considerable power in respect of granting licences and the functions permitted under those licences. While the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands may be right under certain circumstances, I come back to the argument of my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain, that if an arrangement is made by way of agreement—I believe under clause 22 an agreement need not be expressed in writing—it may well be to the benefit of the federal government to have a clause such as that suggested in the amendment of my hon. friend which would provide the statutory authority, so that the provincial authority could then, by the consent so given, give to the National Energy Board the authority which the licensing provisions required it to exercise.

I understand the other situation, and it might well be that the courts would decide on certain issues. We will argue that question later: we have a very good beginning. I point out to the minister and to the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands that the authority granted the National Energy Board would in some conditions involve the need for a provincial authority to express, by apt words, its approval of that authority. I put forward that proposition. Certainly, in that limited sense it may be that this amendment is required.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, in dealing with that point, I suppose it goes back to the question concerning whether or not any addition is necessary to give the federal government the power to carry out the requirements of the statute. Whatever the merits of the proposition of the hon. gentleman, I suppose it is probably a moot question because we think we have all the powers within our own jurisdiction in dealing with interprovincial trade in this regard. So the question of delegation, for example, of the provincial jurisdiction to the National Energy Board in our opinion does not arise. Here the federal government is exercising its jurisdiction under section 91.

Mr. Baldwin: You might live to regret those words.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a word or two on this clause because it deals, in essence, with the whole bill and allows for perhaps a wider range of discussion than that which has taken place between the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain and others this afternoon. I am not going to get into the legal interpretation because, as I understood the remarks of the Chair, the clause is hardly needed at all. In fact, the latter remarks of the minister suggest that.

There has been a great deal of discussion about the Department of Transport. The Minister of Transport from time to time has stated that transportation and transportation policy is in a mess. In looking at the question of Canada's role vis-à-vis that of the provinces in regard to energy, if there is a mess in the transportation department there is a double mess in the energy department. The squabble that has been going on between the various levels of government occurred perhaps because over-zealous provincial governments are demanding more and more of the tax dollar. Certainly an over-zealous federal government is invading provincial jurisdiction, for one reason or another.

We had recently an energy conference. Many Canadians viewed it on television with a great deal of interest. I suppose some people in the Liberal Party in the province of Alberta would think that we recently had an Alberta election—

Mr. Baldwin: Are there any Liberals left in Alberta?

Mr. Horner: —based on the energy question. That is, indeed, if there are any Liberals left in Alberta. Who is wrong and who is right? Basically, after the energy conference the conclusion I reached was that it was a draw or a postponement of the real issues.

The purpose of this bill, in essence, is to set a uniform price, a stable price, to reach some kind of balanced price between consumer and producer. I suppose it is to allow the federal government to assert its authority over the petroleum industry and over the provinces. I think Canadians generally are fed up with the bickering which has taken place between the province of Alberta and Ottawa, and with the mess and the stalemate the politicians have created. Who is wrong? When will there be a righting of the wrong? After the energy conference, the Premier of Alberta went home to Edmonton and stated publicly that any increase in the price per barrel of oil would certainly have to wait until after the budget of the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance immediately stated that he would not be bringing down a budget until the price of energy was known.

There, again, we witnessed two politicians vying for the same stage but questioning each other as to the right time to take that stage. All the while, Canada suffers. There has been a tremendous change in the position of the federal government in the last year over that which it took some two years ago when it first intervened in the energy question. In watching that energy conference, it seems that even the Prime Minister—when he is in Canada—realizes that Canadians will be running out of oil in the near future and that it is not the question of price which should be concerning governments but the question of supply. If it is a question of supply, then the Premier of Alberta is certainly correct in saying that he wants to know what the federal Minister of Finance is going to do with regard to the question of double taxation.

It might be said that the resource industries for years have been pampered with regard to taxation and encouraged to develop and find resources, but certainly in the last year or two governments have made up for many slack years in taxing resource industries. Now it is quite clear that an increase in the price of oil would mean the federal government would receive the whole of the increase. If one considers the royalty question and the no write-off aspect for the oil companies, they have to pay, in essence, double taxation. Royalties vary. On the last price increase the province of Alberta took 65 per cent. The province of Saskatchewan took it all. It is no longer allowed as an expense.

To me, the principle upon which the federal government deliberately intervened was the reason the last energy conference broke down completely. We see that Ottawa is anxious to have a price increase, knowing that if the price increased $2 a barrel it would in the long run add the $2 to the federal treasury. Yet in putting the price up by $2 a barrel we see another situation developing whereby our exports of oil to the United States will be reduced. Then there will be less money with which to pay the subsidy to communities receiving a subsidy of $5.20, approximately, on all oil used east of the Ottawa Valley.

The federal government was prudent. If the situation is analysed, it took the only course it could. It had to advocate a higher price. A higher price results in less subsidy out of the federal treasury to all communities east of the Ottawa Valley. A higher price results in more money for the federal coffers, but not necessarily more profit for the provincial governments.

During the energy conference we were told repeatedly by the Prime Minister that the whole purpose of the higher price was to create more money for exploration. I suppose it could be said that with more money in the federal coffers—and by taking the socialist route—Ottawa could then promote Petro-Canada and become involved in exploration in earnest. The Premier of Saskatchewan advocated nearly the same thing, except that he would use the extra $2 or so per barrel to build up a fund earmarked specifically for exploration—again by the socialist route. We can only hope that the increase of $2 per barrel which has been advocated by some people, which would go 100 per cent to the federal government, will be used for the most part for further exploration in Canada. Rather than the Minister of Finance travelling abroad to try to settle some of the world's economic problems, he should be travelling to the producing provinces: he should be in Saskatchewan and Alberta attempting to iron out the squabble between the producing provinces and Ottawa, because it has continued long enough.

Canada will suffer because it will run out of oil: the last report of the National Energy Board makes that abundantly clear, because it says we will be net importers of oil by 1982. I think Imperial Oil stated some time ago that it estimates we will reach this position by 1983. But let us look at our rate of consumption, our rate of production and our rate of finding more reserves in Canada. Even in the last six months the falling off in discovering reserves has in fact exceeded all estimates. The National Energy Board and the oil companies estimate that our consumption has not been reduced by any appreciable amount, no matter how well the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources appears on television and shows Canada 100 ways to conserve energy by switching the light off a little earlier, and so on. There is a negligible amount of energy saving as a result of the advertising program. The minister has spent a lot of the taxpayers' money with some advertising firms, but I do not think he really believes he has convinced anybody to save energy.

What is the solution to the squabble over the energy question? I think Canada should get on with exploration. We are not fortunate enough to have the type of land formations that are abundant in oil reserves; in other words, Canada is not the best place in the world to be searching for oil. Of course, we realize now that oil will be a very expensive commodity for many years to come. We can talk about the break-up of the OPEC nations, but I think they have realized the power they hold and will maintain it.

In the past, the fedral government had the right to tax a commodity after it was developed. When we saw the OPEC nations increase the price of oil, we realized that the oil companies were going to make huge profits, so both the federal and the provincial governments jumped in to grab that profit. We must realize now that the principle of the royalty question, the tax on doing business within a province, should be allowed as an expense. That is, an initial charge in the development of a resource and traditionally it has been allowed to the provinces. The federal government's position has been to impose an end tax.

If the federal government felt the resource companies would make too much profit, there were two steps available to them. If they were concerned about the profits leaving Canada and being used to find oil in the North Sea, in Indonesia or elsewhere, they could have brought in a measure prohibiting the money leaving Canada; and if the money remained in Canada and was not reinvested in exploration, the companies could have been taxed on it. So far, the governments concerned have not found any solution to the squabble and the country continues to suffer.

In a speech made some months ago in Toronto, the minister said that between now and the year 2000, $100 billion would be poured into the exploration of oil and other energy resources. He must realize, of course, that he will have to go to the resource industries in order to find people with the knowledge and skill required for exploration, whether they be Canadians or non-Canadians.

How do we go about setting a uniform, stable price which will balance consumer satisfaction with producer satisfaction? I think we need a formula, Mr. Chairman. We are not fortunate enough to have bountiful reserves of oil and energy, and we need all we have. We want to be as self-sufficient as possible, yet we want some of the benefits of having the resource. A formula should be established so that the other resource countries would know where they stand. The minister could say that in 1975 it will be 70 per cent of the world price, and by 1980 it could be increased 10 per cent or 20 per cent, for instance.

As a Canadian taxpayer, I should be able to buy oil cheaper from Canada than from the Arab countries. It is reasonable to expect to pay less than the world price for Canadian oil, but that price should not be determined periodically by a federal-provincial conference. That creates instability in the industry and thus instability of supply and, of course, there is no stable price without an assured supply. Setting the formula at 70 per cent or 80 per cent and letting everybody concerned know what the changes would be in the years ahead would reassure the oil industry and encourage them, whether Canadian or multinational, to explore for oil in Canada.

We read in the newspapers that the oil companies are making huge profits, but really most of those profits are not made in Canada at all. If an oil company has made a profit in Canada, it is because they have cut down on exploration; they are not spending the money and therefore the profits are high. The federal government, through taxation, should prohibit the flight of those profits into Indonesia or the North Sea of even the United States. It should consult the petroleum industry in order to bring about a stable, uniform price; but one cannot do this without a stable supply.

We should be ironing out the difficulties between the federal government and the producing provinces. In the long run, of course, we hope there will be ten producing provinces, not just two. The minister talked about needing $100 billion before the year 2000 for exploration and development. This money should be encouraged to stay at home, Mr. Chairman. Through taxation, the government could give a 150 per cent depreciation allowance for exploration carried out this year in any part of Canada: that would encourage the companies to spend some of their profits in this country. Write-offs should not be allowed to Canadian companies operating outside Canada. Certain measures should be taken along these lines to bring the producing provinces together with the federal government in order to create a stable, uniform price and a balance between consumers and producers.

● (1630)

I do not know which will come first, the budget or Alberta's demands for higher oil prices. In the long run, it will be best for Canada if the Minister of Finance comes forward with his budget and sets out criteria as to how royalties will qualify as an expense. The onus would be on the provinces to make sure that royalty charges adhere to criteria laid down by the Minister of Finance.

The Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Schumacher: Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak briefly to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain. As the hon. member for Crowfoot said, Your Honour's argument concerning the amendment could apply equally well to the clause itself. What the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and others participating in the debate on the procedural admissibility of the amendment said boiled down to this: the courts will need to decide what is under provincial jurisdiction and what is not. That being so—I hope the minister will reply when I have finished speaking—why include clause 3 in the bill?

When parliament passes a bill, it is binding on the federal Crown, but the federal Crown cannot arrogate unto itself the prerogatives and rights of any provincial Crown. I cannot understand why it is felt necessary to include clause 3 in the bill. I do not think the minister answered the objections of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain to clause 3. The hon. member interpreted clause 3 as an attempt by the government to intrude on the valid jurisdiction of the provinces. I suggest that by including clauses 3 and 36 the federal government is attempting to arrogate unto itself power it does not possess under the constitution for regulating the price of commodities the ownership of which falls completely within provincial jurisdiction.

Clause 36 purports to give the federal government power to set the price of various kinds and qualities of crude oil at the wellhead within a province. I understand the act of 1930 transferred the ownership of these resources from the federal government to the provinces. How can the federal government say that its claim to power to set the wellhead price of oil is constitutionally valid? It claims it is given that power by the British North America Act which gives the federal government jurisdiction over interprovincial trade and commerce.

If that is the government's position, it should say it has the right to set the price of any product which leaves one province and crosses the border of another. Surely, any bill which attempts to set the price of a product within a province is beyond the constitutional competence of this government. After all, much of the oil and gas taken out of the ground in Alberta will be refined and consumed in Alberta. I hope the minister will comment on that point. In what way does he feel the constitution of this country gives the federal government power to regulate the price of oil which is produced, refined and consumed within a province? I suggest that this is not a case which comes under the heading of interprovincial trade and commerce.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, to answer the hon. member's first point, we are not purporting to set the price at the wellhead but, rather, the price at the point where the oil or natural gas moves into another province or into export trade. That is clearly within the jurisdiction of the Government of Canada. To answer his second question, the bill expressly excludes oil being consumed within a producing province.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Chairman, I ask the minister to clear up some confusion. We have been using the term "wellhead price". I suppose that is wrong; we should be speaking about price at the provincial border. If we use that terminology the provisions of the bill may become clearer.

I suggest that the proposed amendment of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain is good. On the other hand, I wonder what point there is in including clause 3 in the bill. That clause seeks to give the government of Canada power to interfere with matters coming under provincial jurisdiction. The minister himself suggested that this is not the intention, that the government is acting within its powers, and he mentioned law cases supporting his position. I say that the government could do what it wanted without needing to insert clause 3. I do not see the rationale for including that clause in the bill.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I have described our opposition to the bill as opposition in a constitutional sense to certain parts. I have said that over and over again. At times I think I see a glimmer of light on the other side, but then it disappears. That makes me bitterly disappointed. Some have compared the minister with General Giap and see him as thundering out of Ottawa with his socialist hordes, to envelop and encircle the natural resources of the provinces.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): This bill could be this country's Dien Bien Phu.

Mr. Baldwin: My colleague from Esquimalt-Saanich says this bill might become the Dien Bien Phu of this country. I want to point out that if this amendment is defeated and the clause is accepted—and I will vote against it—a situation will develop where a province or its agencies can be subjected to penalties, searches and the seizure of documents in respect of a transaction taking place entirely within a province covering natural resources which belong to the people of that province. If that is going to be done without the consent of the people of the province, expressed through their government in the form indicated by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain, it will be a situation causing great concern.

● (1640)

I want to comment on the point made by the minister in response to the situation proposed by the hon. member for Palliser. The minister should know this: his officials know it. Petroleum products and gas coming from the wellhead are not dedicated in any particular form for use within the province. In the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan, and British Columbia with respect to gas, the product that emerges at the wellhead will to a limited extent be used within the province. In Saskatchewan, it is to the extent of 2 per cent. I understand the total refinery capacity in Alberta is about 300,000 barrels a day, which could mean about 15 per cent refined capacity, and that may be used partly in Alberta and partly in Saskatchewan.

The minister has not been, nor do I think he can be, successful under this bill. This clause is symbolic of the situation of demonstrating that by this measure, the government is now taking control at the wellhead of the full production, which is a transaction taking place entirely within the geographical limits of a province. The minister knows that if this bill passes in its present form, it will be competent for the government, and to a limited extent the National Energy Board through its licensing capacity, to move into the wellhead and say at that point, "The price that must be sought and paid is our prescribed price." That will be the effect of this legislation unless it is changed, and it is a proposition which I am not prepared to accept.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Madam Chairman, with regard to the hon. member's reference to oil at the wellhead, and so on, I draw his attention to clause 20. The application is to crude oil that enters into interprovincial or international trade or that is mixed or blended with such crude oil.

Mr. Baldwin: That is the point.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Chairman, my intervention at this stage in connection with clause 3 of the bill under consideration is related to the search I carried out on the previous occasion when I put on the record a number of instances of this sort of legislation in Canadian law. That is on the record of the previous debate on this matter when I think we were in committee of the whole.

In the course of our work in the committee on the environment we had before us Bill C-25. In going through Bill C-25 I came across a further instance of this sort of wording that causes us to react and which caused the particular amendment before us to be formulated and presented to this committee. I think it is worth mentioning that in clause 2(2) of Bill C-25 the following wording is found:

> This act is binding on Her Majesty in right of Canada or a province and any agent thereof.

We are in the same general field of the overriding nature of federal legislation. True, Madam Chairman, this chamber is not a court of law; we do not decide on the legalities of legislation. However, we must draw attention to matters in draft legislation that could conceivably run parliament into trouble. We know that the books of precedents of our courts are now pretty well filled. To encourage litigation, particularly in this sensitive field of federal-provincial relations, is something we should not do. We should not deliberately foster this sort of litigation.

My reaction at this time is to ask whether, in the absence of any other way of making their power felt, this government has a clause like this stashed away in the office of the drafters of legislation. If they feel the need to use it, they paste it into the draft legislation they are going to present to this House.

If my information is correct, we have already had three bites at this sort of legislation. Bill C-32 is the fourth and Bill C-25 is the fifth. In the committee studying Bill C-25 I asked for some jurisprudence on this particular clause so that we in the committee might know—and I think it would be relevant for this committee to know—on what constitutional ground the government feels it is entitled to produce this bald, overriding wording in legislation in a country which is a federal state and which has very clearly defined areas of jurisdiction.

Where there is no conflict of jurisdiction, of course, this is not needed; the writ of federal law runs freely across the country. One can see this in some interprovincial relations. On interprovincial waterways, for example, if there is the introduction of a pollutant upstream and this causes damage downstream, we see the need for something of this sort. However, I am not going to let that particular clause of Bill C-25 go by without a similar amendment to that being proposed to Bill C-32.

I merely intervene at this stage to suggest that there seems to be a deliberate—well, perhaps I am imputing motives and it is just a matter of sloppy or unthinking drafting on the part of those who are preparing legislation. It might even be that the arrogance that comes from power permits governments, after a number of years in office, to feel they are entitled to bring forward this sort of legislation and hope it will slip through without anyone noticing. I think it is our duty to draw attention in the record of Hansard to this very dangerous element, this phraseology in our federal law which could impinge upon provincial jurisdiction.

● (1650)

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, I was speaking a few minutes ago but I had not completed my remarks when my time expired. However, in committee, as hon. members know, one can speak again after a brief period.

I was about to say it was not good enough to allow the oil companies a million dollar tax concession in lieu of royalty payments. The sum of $1 million has no relation to what a company may be paying out in royalties or may be prepared to spend on exploration.

The dispute between the provinces and the central government over jurisdiction now hinges on the need for more vigorous exploration and the improvement of supply. When we consider the question of jurisdiction in this country as between the federal government and provincial governments, we can make some interesting comparisons with the situation in the United States; the way in which authority is apportioned as between the central government and the individual states in that country. The powers of individual states are clearly defined and this results in a far greater degree of stability within the industry. In the United States one does not find the kind of squabbling that goes on in Canada between the producing provinces on one hand and the consuming provinces on the other.

Clause 24 of the bill deals with the manner in which prices shall be applied. To my mind it comes down to a question of the various formulae which have been used by the provinces and by the federal government down the years with respect to taxation. The tax a province levies has always been considered to be eligible for deduction when computing the federal tax. Only in the field of energy has the federal government departed from this practice, and that is the root of our problem today. That is why the federal-provincial conference, part of which we all saw on television, ended the other day without any conclusion being reached.

An hon. Member: Bill Davis.

Mr. Horner: Bill Davis came out of that conference looking the best of all the premiers.

An hon. Member: That is not what Walter Baker said.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Oh, yes he did. He looked a lot better than the minister did, too.

[Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich).]

Mr. Horner: The Premier of Alberta felt that more money should be going into exploration, but he got no guarantees whatever from the federal government that if the price were raised, more money would go into exploration. He realized that the total increase in the price would go into the coffers of the federal government by reason of its taxation policy. Alberta is a province which realizes its reserves are shrinking and wishes to enlarge those reserves.

I would agree that the easy-to-find oil has, perhaps, already been found. I would not say, though, that it has all been found. We believe more exploration should be carried out and that more money should be allowed to go into exploration. The Premier of Alberta said that if there were any increase in price, royalties would be reduced from the 65 per cent level, but he realized that as a result of the present taxation system any increase in price would only bring about an increase in revenue to the federal treasury.

The federal government is not in the business of exploration. Exploration for natural resources comes under the jurisdiction of the provinces, as the minister has admitted. The producing provinces do not believe the federal government has the know-how to develop greater supplies of oil. I should like to believe that every Canadian realizes we shall run out of oil by 1982. The longer we postpone the price increase, the longer we shall be at the mercy of the OPEC nations down the road somewhere. It is easy to assume, when one considers the minister's statement that $100 billion will be needed by the year 2000—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but in order that the House may proceed to the consideration of private members' business it is my duty to leave the chair.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Humber St. George's Ste. Barbe (Mr. Marshall)—Transport—Need for icebreakers in Northwestern Atlantic—Government position; the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark)—Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—Suggestion standing committee question Mr. Johnson prior to confirmation as Vice-President.

[English]

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills, notices of motions (papers) and public bills.

There being no item under the heading of private bills on the order paper, the House will now proceed to notices of motions (papers).

Mr. Lefevbre: On a point of order, I believe there is agreement that we continue the debate on notice of motion for papers No. 22 in the name of the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) with respect to which there are 44 minutes left. I understand there is some feeling that this debate could be shortened and that a vote could take place. We might also go on with notice of motion for papers No. 21 standing in the name of the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) with respect to which there are 11 minutes left. Perhaps we could vote on that motion also before 6 p.m.

● (1700)

Mr. Forrestall: Madam Speaker, on the point of order that is being raised, I think there is general agreement and that there is a disposition not to have a recorded vote on the order standing in my name. This will depend upon what the parliamentary secretary will say to me within the next few minutes, but I think we can accommodate him on the point raised.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On the point of order, Madam Speaker, we have been in on these discussions and we would agree with what has been proposed. We would like to have a recorded vote on the motion in the name of the hon. member for Fundy-Royal.

Mr. Lefebvre: Madam Speaker, due to difficulties that have been encountered electrically in ringing the bells, would it be agreeable that the discussion on the first motion, No. 22, terminate at 5.30 to give us time to ring the bells and get the members in for the second?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Not later than 5.30. It might be earlier.

Mr. Lefebvre: Yes, not later than 5.30.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Before proceeding to notice of motion No. 22, shall notices of motions Nos. 17 and 24 be allowed to stand and retain their place?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

CANADIAN MERCHANT MARINE

The House resumed, from Thursday, March 6, debate on the motion of Mr. Forrestall:

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of all studies, notes, position paper, memoranda, etc., relating to the requirements of Canadian shipping with respect to the proposed formula for import/export conference rated seaborne trade, in terms of the number of ships required, the capacity of Canadian shipyards, the number of Canadian merchant seamen required, the level of ancillary shipyard related industries of design capability, etc., in the event Canada ratifies the proposed code of Conduct for liner conferences.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I am privileged to be able to continue my intervention on this resolution. In doing so I should like to update some statistics that I placed on the record when I began my remarks a month ago.

In the first column on page 3858 of Hansard for March 6, when this debate began, I gave figures indicating the drop in the strength of the Canadian merchant marine from 1946 to 1972. The last figures I had then—figures provided by the Canadian Transport Commission, official government figures—indicated that in 1946 there were 203 dry cargo merchant vessels in the Canadian deep sea trade flying the Canadian flag. These vessels were over 10,000 tons. In 1958 the Department of Transport had to reduce the measure from 10,000 tons, because there were not very many by that time, to 3,000 tons in order to have an entry in their statistics. At that time there were five vessels, only three of which were over 10,000 tons, the others being between 3,000 and 10,000 tons.

In 1968 the total was down to three vessels over 3,000 tons. Then in 1972, again in order to have an entry in the tabulation, the measure had to drop from 3,000 tons to 1,000 tons, so as to give at least some indication of the strength. In December, 1972 it was indicated that there were six vessels over 1,000 tons, four of which were dry cargo vessels and two tankers. Two years later the report, again from exactly the same source, on the basis of the measure of 1,000 gross tons dry cargo vessels, shows the number down to three.

This is evidence, if any is wanted, of the lack of interest of this government, despite its protestations, in the regeneration and revitalization of the merchant marine. If this is not a sign of complete neglect, of a decision to bypass completely this very important service for Canada as an international trader, first of all, as well as an employer, as basically a maritime nation with—I think I am right—the longest coastline in the world, I do not know what is. Yet we have a merchant marine at the end of 1974 consisting of three vessels over 1,000 tons. Their total tonnage is 13,010 tons, not much bigger, in fact I think ten tons larger, than a Liberty ship. Here is a record of complete and utter neglect.

Last month we were delighted to see a press release issued by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) indicating some activity in the field of ship repair and shipbuilding on the east and west coasts. This is beginning to be, to my way of thinking, a chronic reaction by the government to present problems: issue a press release and the problem will go away. The minister spoke of a floating dock in Vancouver, and I am going to deal only with the west coast. Unfortunately I do not have a copy of the Minister's press release with me, but as I say he spoke of a floating dry dock in Vancouver harbour and indicated that funds had been allocated for this purpose amounting to about $30 million, though I stand to be corrected.

In the same breath, or rather in the same release, he mentioned the rehabilitation of the graving dock at Esquimalt costing $1 million or $2 million, but he did not say in his press release where the funds were coming from—another vague promise made by the government to rehabilitate an industry which has been the pride of the west coast, as it is the pride of the east coast, and as we have heard previously in this debate the pride of the industry along the St. Lawrence river.

Why, we westerners are bound to ask ourselves, especially those of us from Vancouver Island, should it be so difficult to find one or two million dollars when a $30 million allocation seems to be available without any problem at all? It is not that this floating drydock for Vancouver harbour is going to be built within the year. Some portion of that money could surely be put aside for the restoration and rehabilitation of the graving dock in Esquimalt harbour, but this is not being done.

I could go on to cite in the estimates many other examples, such as fisheries patrol vessels that are on the stocks. But let me just remind the House that the west does have a memory. We on the west coast recall the promise made in 1968 of the Estevan a weathership, which was going to be replaced by a new weathership. Curiously enough, and quite coincidentally I am sure, that promise was made in the middle of an election. It was pure coincidence that it should have been made at election time and that two Liberals were elected in 1968 in the area where the Estevan was required. But also perhaps by coincidence the Estevan was never built. Also by coincidence—though there might have been something in the minds of westerners that had an impact on this fact—no Liberals were elected in 1972, I suggest because the promise was made but not kept. The Liberals concerned were defeated in 1972.

There is a lesson here and I feel it might be worth recording. If you have got the goods, produce them. If you have not, don't pretend you have, because you really cannot fool the electorate forever. Either you are prepared to go back into the shipbuilding business and the merchant marine on the west and the east coasts on a scale that has been maintained at some cost in terms of credibility on the St. Lawrence, and I would underline that phrase "in terms of credibility", or failure to show your hand and produce the goods will render your conduct and your policies suspect.

● (1710)

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I just want to refer briefly to part of the motion put forward by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) in order to bring the debate back to the topic, if you like, not that it has not been good a good debate in itself.

The points raised in his motion, and with the indulgence of the Chair and the House I will follow these comments fairly closely because of the terminology involved in the various codes of conduct, conferences, and other phrases that occur fairly regularly, were related first of all to a request in December last as follows:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all studies, notes, position papers, memoranda, etc., relating to the requirements of Canadian shipping with respect to the proposed formula for import/export conference rated seaborne trade—

[Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich).]

As I said, we have had an excellent debate on marine issues, but one that has departed a bit from the particular request.

A reply was tabled on January 29, and I should like to go over that to some extent in order to amplify what was meant. At that time I asked the hon. member to withdraw the motion. The first point I made was that the bulk of Canadian seaborne trade is not carried by liner conferences. I think that is certainly borne out, and the intention here is to put the whole question in its proper perspective.

An hon. Member: It is carried by ocean-going vessels.

Mr. McIsaac: Yes, but not by that particular category of vessels. The major shipping out of Canada is bulk freight such as wheat, coal, and potash, as I am sure is known to hon. members.

In addition there are liners operating outside the conferences such as tramp vessels, and the liner conferences themselves carry only a small proportion of Canadian tonnage. Officials of the department tell me it is probably in the neighbourhood of 10 per cent to 15 per cent.

As indicated in reply to questions asked by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East at about the time this came up, we said we are attempting to develop more statistical procedures which will enable us to measure better the kind of things here referred to, that is, what proportion of Canadian cargo is actually carried by the conferences.

The second point made in that earlier reply was that if and when the convention on a code of conduct for liner conferences becomes effective, and is acceeded to by Canada and by Canada's major trading partners, it is not clear what influence the proposed non-mandatory 40-40-20 cargo shipping formula would have, Madam Speaker.

The UN convention on a code of conduct for liner conferences, which opened for signing on July 1, 1974, will only become effective when it is ratified by 24 countries having 25 per cent of the world value of general cargo and container ships. To date, and this is about a month ago, only six countries had signed this convention, and even those signatures are subject to ratification. They are Iran, the Philippines, Gabon, Guatemala, Equador and Yugoslavia.

In practical terms the attitude which Canada's major trading and shipping partners take to implementation of the code of conduct will necessarily affect its relevance to Canada. Most of Canada's trading and shipping partners are also members of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development. They were very split in their attitudes when the convention was negotiated. Denmark, Finland, Norway and other countries opposed it. Canada abstained, and other OECD countries such as Japan, Australia, and France voted in favour.

Canada is bound by the OECD code of liberalization of current invisible transactions. This code lists maritime freights as among current invisible operations in relation to which, according to Article 9 of the code, OECD members shall not discriminate as between other members. A further note to the maritime freights entry makes that point even more clear. It states:

> These provisions are intended to give residents of one member state the unrestricted opportunity to avail themselves of, and pay for, all services in connection with maritime transport which are offered by residents of another member state.

So we have that aspect of another international agreement to contend with as we look at this proposed 40-40-20 split.

Some parties to the code of liberalization believe that the code of conduct convention is incompatible with it. Of course the code of conduct convention can be interpreted in more than one way. It is possible, depending on how a country interprets and implements the code of conduct convention in its own national laws, that this need not be incompatible with that country's prior obligations under the code of liberalization. Whether this is so, and if so in what way the code of conduct convention could be interpreted and implemented, have not yet been determined by announced policies of countries that are party to the code of liberalization.

The margin for interpretation of this code of conduct of convention is very wide. There is the well-known 40-40-20 cargo sharing formula with 40 per cent of cargoes being carried in conference vessels of the exporting country, 40 per cent in conference vessels of the importing country, and 20 per cent in conference vessels of a third, or a variety of other countries. That is merely a proposed cargo sharing formula.

We said in our initial reply that the formula would relate not only to a member state's flag vessels but even to chartered vessels participating in a conference. Again this indicates, as I say, a wide margin for interpretation; that is the proposed code of conduct convention.

We said as well that it would depend on how the convention was implemented whether it would have any effect at all on flag registry, national shipyard, shipyard-related activities, or merchant seamen of an exporting or importing state, and I again refer to the merchant marine concept brought into this debate at the same time. Because of these circumstances studies have not been prepared on the hypothetical ramifications of the proposed cargo sharing formula for Canadian ships, shipyards, shipyard-related activities, or merchant seamen.

I would like at this time to go a little bit further. In recent years, as the hon. member is well aware, international shipping has undergone quite a revolution. Larger and more specialized ships have made it a very capital intensive industry, and this has led to consortia and a tendency toward cartelization of shipbuilding and the shipping industry.

At the same time we have seen an increase in the world of state-backed or state-operated shipping lines, some of which have a non-economic motivation. This latter tendency has been accompanied by movement toward more restrictive or protectionist shipping practices, toward bilateral shipping agreements and that kind of thing. This is certainly of extreme importance to a code of conduct convention, whether it is ever implemented, and it is in some of its aspects a further development of this new spirit of bilateralism in shipping arrangements, but only in so far as liner conferences are concerned. As I mentioned earlier, they only carry a small proportion of Canadian shipping, perhaps 10 per cent to 15 per cent.

In January of this year the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) tabled a consultant's study on "The Elements of an International Shipping Policy for Canada", and announced at that time the formation of an interdepartmental shipping advisory board to assist him in the coordination of present government activities in this field, and in the development of future policies.

What this means is that in the face of a period of revolutionary change in terms of international shipping, to which the hon. member's motion refers, this is but one manifestation that Canada is reviewing its position to ensure that our policies are well directed toward the protection and promotion of Canadian interests so far as shipping is concerned. It is on this basis that recommendations will be made concerning Canadian national policies, including policies with regard to a Canadian merchant marine, and not on the basis of an international convention which may or may not develop. We are not sure how it might develop in that situation. In any case, as I say, it relates only to a liner conference in the international concept of Canadian shipping.

I do not wish to belittle, if you like, the Canadian convention on a code of conduct for liner conferences and the possibility of that, the text of which many developing countries supported and which contains many useful provisions. This will continue to be given attention by the government, both in itself and as part of the over-all review in respect of shipping, but only in that particular context.

As I pointed out to the hon. member in my earlier comments in January, we have no particular studies under way. Only this morning in the transport committee one of the hon. member's colleagues criticized the government in respect of the amount spent on consultants to examine into this and that. I believe he would be critical of us if we had gone to any great extent in exploring the possibilities in this regard, which is a far cry from being a fact, and is not the number one priority in respect of examining the real needs of the marine and shipping industry.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I should like to remind the House that if the hon. member speaks at this time he will close the debate.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, pursuant to the order I think the debate will come to a close in five minutes in any event. I wish to make two or three brief observations in respect of the remarks of the parliamentary secretary this afternoon and the other conversations we had at the time of my moving of the motion. At the close of my remarks I shall ask leave of the House to withdraw the motion.

The observations of the parliamentary secretary are very interesting. There are several things involved here. The motion arose from the position taken by Canada at the UNCTAD meetings which seemed, to all of us who are interested in these areas, to be a studied position. What escaped me at the time was how Canada could have a studied or reasoned position in respect of a particular matter if it had not bothered to look into it in some depth, and in respect of which it had not prepared positions or papers. I still think that kicking around in the cobwebs of the UN or somewhere else are our papers pertaining to this.

My immediate concern relates to the development of a deep sea fleet to move goods in and out of Canada. I am not particularly interested in whether we do it uniquely or solely under the liner conference. I am aware that we do not carry all our goods in that particular way. I am also aware of the liberalization code and have some feeling in respect of it. I suggest to the parliamentary secretary that part of our concern is that we should become more keenly involved in, and develop a firm position, on the part of the government, parliament and Canadians, on Canada becoming involved in the deep sea and offshore business even if we do so through the liner conference, because if that should provide a rationalization for direct government entry into such movement then I am not prepared to dismiss that.

The Canadian Labour Congress, at its last meeting I believe, discussed this and suggested that the need was so important that perhaps the government should consider direct involvement. I am not prepared to dismiss that out of hand. I am particularly concerned because time is becoming a very critical element with regard to the movement of our extractive resources in the north.

If we do not develop our own capability then both the financial resource, the northern engineering and the maritime resource will be developed by the large cargo carrying vessels which operate in the north, and we will be precluded from operating there and will have lost yet another opportunity for Canadians. In the last five years alone, for what it is worth, we have been running some $3,684,000,000, in lost revenue in Canadian payments to non-residents with regard to freight and shipping charges on imports. That is a tremendous amount of money. In addition to that, of course, there is all the money we could have spent on a shipyard industry, and so on.

I am satisfied with the explanation of the parliamentary secretary on why there might be particular papers, studies, memoranda, or notes which could directly relate to the wording of my question. On that basis I would seek leave of the House for the purpose of withdrawing my motion with the final caveat that I reserve the right to introduce it in other words.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is there unanimous consent that the hon. member have leave to withdraw his motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion withdrawn.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Pursuant to the order made in this sitting, the House will now proceed to the consideration of motion No. 21.

[Mr. Forrestall.]

LETTER FROM MINISTER OF JUSTICE TO SECRETARY OF STATE RESPECTING GRANT TO WOMEN'S GROUP

The House resumed, from Thursday, April 10, consideration of the motion of Mr. Fairweather:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of a letter written by the Minister of Justice to the Secretary of State, dated October 21, 1974, about a grant to a women's group in Saskatoon.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): For all intents and purposes the time provided under section 2 of Standing Order 48 for the consideration of this motion has now expired, but I would point out that the Standing Order also permits a 15-minute participation in the debate by a minister of the Crown, and an additional five minutes for the mover of the motion, after which the Chair is bound to put the question.

[Translation]

I would like to remind the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Marceau) that it has been said that only a minister or the sponsor of the motion may have the floor at this time, unless there is unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): There is unanimous consent. The hon. member for Lapointe has the floor.

● (1730)

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Justice opposed the motion for production of copy of a letter he addressed, on October 21, 1974, to the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) concerning a subsidy to a group of women in Saskatoon because, as the custom would have it, the recommendations of the legal advisers of the Crown on government policy matters being included under confidential matters, their release has usually been refused. In this regard, I refer to May's Parliamentary Practice, 17th edition, page 272, and Bourinot's Parliamentary Procedure, page 338. That guide line on notice of motions for production of papers was enunciated by the government and published as an appendix to Hansard on March 15, 1973 (page 2288). The fact that, in this case, part of the documents containing that ruling may have been made available to the media does not constitute a valid reason for breaking the tradition that requires such confidential documents not to be released. If documents of that nature were subject to disclosure, the freedom of expression and frankness that are essential to the proper management of state affairs would be seriously jeopardized, and the exercise of guiding the ministers of the Crown would be paralyzed.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): I would remind the House that if the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) speaks at this time he will close the debate.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, I will not use the five minutes which the rules allow me. I am one of those who do not mind breaking with tradition, and I am rather surprised that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Marceau) finds tradition such a motivating force for him and his government.

The issue, of course, is the right of the public to information. I suggest that if the minister had been responding to the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) after a request for a legal opinion addressed to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang), then perhaps I would have a more difficult time preparing my argument, but what the Minister of Justice was doing was objecting to a program, speaking as the member of parliament for Saskatoon-Humboldt. That is quite a different category, and I am surprised that the minister should wish to take refuge in the traditions of confidentiality—I think very largely outmoded—by resisting my motion.

As I said earlier, we will continue to have leaks of information, letters, and other documents if governments persist in trying to hold the lid on consultants' memoranda, letters, and so on which, by their very nature, should never have been marked confidential. In any event I think the issue should be tested, and I will be glad to have it tested. I suspect that the Secretary of State has heard many more representations about this particular program than that of the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt (Mr. Lang), who is also the Minister of Justice of Canada, and I am surprised that all these letters should be locked away so that we, as representatives, and the public, are unable to judge the merits of those representations.

Once again I thank those who have participated in the debate. I am sorry that inevitably the majority is a tradition bound government and that will mean that I will not be successful, but I am sanguine about the outcome and I hope that some day this, or a succeeding government, will be much freer about making information available.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five hon. members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Fairweather), which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PETROLEUM ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING THE ADMINISTRATION OF INTERPROVINCIAL, EXPORT AND IMPORT TRADE IN PETROLEUM AND PETROLEUM PRODUCTS

The House resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-32, to impose a charge on the export of crude oil and certain petroleum products, to provide compensation for certain petroleum costs and to regulate the price of Canadian crude oil and natural gas in interprovincial and export trade—Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale)—Mrs. Morin in the chair.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: It being after six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At 6:10 p.m. the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The Committee resumed at 8 p.m.

On Clause 3—Binding on Her Majesty.

The Chairman: When the committee rose we were considering an amendment to clause 3. Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: No.

Amendment Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain) negatived: yeas, 6; nays, 25.

The Chairman: Shall clause 3 carry?

Mr. Baldwin: On division.

Clause 3 agreed to on division.

On clause 4—Definitions.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): At this point, Mr. Chairman, we start Part I of the bill, the provision for the petroleum export charges. Clause 4 is the definitions clause embodying substantially those found in the Oil Export Tax Act of 1974. I have an amendment to offer to this clause as follows:

That Bill C-32 be amended by striking out line 23 on page 2 thereof and by substituting therefor the following:

"for delivery outside Canada or to use it as bunker or aircraft fuel outside Canada by such persons in such circumstances as may be prescribed by the regulations;"

[Mr. McCleave.]

The purpose of the amendment is to make certain that aviation fuel and bunker fuel from Canadian sources are included in the definition "oil product". Foreign aircraft landing in Canada which until now have been able to obtain fuel at lower prices than those current in the United States—in effect they come here, fill up with Canadian fuel and go away with a full load—from now on will be obliged to pay the export tax.

The Chairman: To make sure there is no procedural difficulty, maybe the amendment could be moved by one of the minister's colleagues.

Mr. Sharp: I so move.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I wish to thank the minister for letting us see the amendment ahead of time. We have had an opportunity to read it and we approve it.

Amendment (Mr. Sharp) agreed to.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I have one question for the minister. According to the definition, "exporter" means a person. Am I right in concluding that "person" is a term which covers Crown corporations or any agency of the Crown, provincial or federal?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, Mr. Chairman, pursuant to the Interpretation Act.

Clause 4, as amended, agreed to.

On clause 5—Charge in April and May.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Would the minister ask his officials whether they could make available to us figures showing how much money has been collected up to the end of the calendar year 1974, month by month?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): We do not have that information at the moment but I will get it and make it available to the hon. member.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Perhaps we could stand clause 5, go on to the other clauses, and come back to it when the information has been supplied.

The Chairman: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 5 stood.

Clause 6 agreed to.

On clause 7—Imposition of charge.

Mr. Ritchie: I should like to make a few comments on this clause, Mr. Chairman. The setting of a flat rate of export tax has served some parts of the industry badly. In the finance committee the other day I asked some questions about the effect of the export tax in this form. I asked the Minister of Finance about the Fosterton fields in Saskatchewan, crude from which was shut out of the United States market because there was no demand for it there. The minister turned to Mr. Shoyama, who said:

One of the facts which was not foreseen at the time the oil price was increased in 1974 was that the flat amount per barrel was applied to all existing levels and the effect of that was to narrow considerably the differentials which had always been maintained as among different qualities of crude and this has also had an effect, in a sense, overpricing them in the market but the provinces on the whole have been very resistant to any suggestions that their prices should come down to restore the differential—

● (2010)

My point is that it would appear that by setting a flat rate formula we have shut down one oil field in Saskatchewan, and I understand from reading news items that it is not likely to be reopened. Of course the minister will say that this stems from the argument between the provinces and the federal government. I assume that the province of Saskatchewan feels that if it gave in to what it regards as blackmail on the part of the federal government, it would destroy its case.

As I understand the situation, these fields are dependent on a type of crude that a refinery in Minneapolis is the only one that can handle it. We have no use for it in Canada. The fields have 10 to 15 years to run and are not big ones. If they were shut down they could never be reopened, or at least a substantial portion of them. I believe this clause gives some sort of variable, and perhaps the minister would comment on my point.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the hon. member's comments. He is quite correct when he talks in terms of a variation being available. If I can indicate the variations that the National Energy Board have been recommending, and which the governor in council has been following, for light medium the export charge has been at the level of $5.50. For the Lloydminster heavy, it is $4.40; that is to say, there is a $1.10 discount below the light medium. For other heavy crude oils except Lloydminster, it is $5. Condensate is being taxed at the rate of $5.20. So it will be seen that we have set a range of export charges that is related to the varying value of the crude to the refinery.

Mr. Shoyama's comments were referred to, and they related in particular to the impact on the domestic market of crude pricing. As was said at that time, traditionally when the price was down in the $3 to $4 range Saskatchewan heavy was selling at a discount because of its heavier gravity and its sulphur characteristics. With the uniform increase in the price of the oil barrel, the relevant discount has not been continued. In the domestic market it is estimated there is a potential market in Winnipeg and Ontario for about 30,000 barrels a day of Saskatchewan heavy. In effect it has been priced out of the market.

We have had discussions with the Saskatchewan oil administration and suggested that there should be a differential pricing for the heavy, which would open up for that particular product some of the Canadian market. As for the export market, it is true that there has been some frictional competition in the Minneapolis market with alternative source products, and indeed even some alternative source oil that has been barged up the Mississippi. The principal reason for the lower take, however, by the Minnesota refineries has been the relatively lighter runs this winter. They have very high inventories of crude oil and, for this reason, they have not been taking as much Saskatchewan heavy.

One of the problems is that there has been a reduction in the general take of heavy. Because of earlier representations from both producers and the producing provinces, we dropped the charge on Lloydminster by $1.10. There was an immediate move from other Saskatchewan heavy crude users to Lloydminster, which is the lowest cost oil, and that is one reason why the demand for Fosterton has dropped off very sharply. If there were a relative adjustment in the charge on Fosterton, some Fosterton production might come up but Lloydminster would go down, there being only so much export market for Saskatchewan heavy.

We suggested to Saskatchewan that a differential pricing for the Canadian market for Saskatchewan heavy could open up the domestic market and increase the flow over what it has been in the last several months.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): In view of the discussions with Saskatchewan about the differential, what has been the response of the Saskatchewan government to the proposal of the minister?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, as a matter of fact the hon. member may have seen it on television. I put that suggestion to Premier Blakeney and, in the words of Cole Porter, he didn't say yes, but he didn't say no. I think they recognize the merits of the suggestion, but this is one question which at the moment has not been decided. I think it would be in the interests of heavy oil production if they did agree to this, but at the moment a decision has not been reached with respect to it.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Still on the same theme, Mr. Chairman, I know the minister has had representations from the oil producers of southeastern Saskatchewan, but has he been shown the unaudited books for 1974? If so, how much do they make on a barrel, or do they lose?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I have seen their calculations in this regard, and it appears that at the current level there is little incentive for them to increase production since it would involve an actual cost rather than a return. We have suggested that it would be appropriate to adjust the royalty which takes 100 per cent over the given figure provided for this quality.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Has the proposal been made to the Saskatchewan government that if the provincial government reduced its royalties the federal government would indicate the extent to which royalties would be made deductible under the Income Tax Act?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I would not have authority to do that, Mr. Chairman. A statement of that kind would be in the nature of a budgetary statement.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Chairman, according to the news item I read, there is a possibility that the Fosterton fields might be closed down and may not be reopened. As a result we will lose some oil for an indefinite period. As I understand it, if oil fields are shut down usually they are not reopened again.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It is certainly correct that it would take some time to get the flow on again, particularly with regard to the heavier crudes. It would take some investment to get the more viscous crudes migrating, and therefore make them available for pumping.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 8 agreed to.

On clause 9—Just and reasonable price to be reported.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Chairman, I have a question for the minister about the National Energy Board fulfilling its duties regarding section 83 of the National Energy Board Act in terms of establishing a just and reasonable price in relation to the public interest for oil in the export market for any given month. My question relates to the different qualities of crude oil that might be exported. Should there be a schedule of prices along the lines of clause 7? Will the National Energy Board be reporting a schedule of prices for the various grades of crude, or will it just be reporting one price, and to what type of crude would this one price refer?

● (2020)

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, what the board has been doing is in fact what the hon. member suggests and, indeed, as I suggested in my response, that is, indicating a range for the different qualities. This would likely take light-medium as the standard, and a standard qualitative differential would be applied on each side of the light-medium.

Mr. Andre: Would it improve that clause to indicate that in fact it is a schedule of price, and the board is following along the lines of the wording used in Clause 7?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The schedule, or the range, is set out in subclause (3) of Clause 9, and represents the tariff that would be recommended by the minister to the governor in council. Subclause (1) really draws on the expertise of the National Energy Board in this regard, and on the basis of that we would then recommend the tariff to the governor in council. This indicates a quality of judgment involved as in the kind of questions referred to by the hon. member for Dauphin. This involves not only the question of what is a just and reasonable price in the United States, but also whether there should be an adjustment in the price in the interest of keeping that particular crude flowing, perhaps because of a high inventory in Minnesota and other points.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I know the government realizes this is a very important clause as it is one of the main mechanisms for the establishment of the charge. This is important to the government in the sense of determining what funds it will have available for the purposes of the equalization plan. The machinery is fairly simple, but I imagine a lot of thinking goes into it. The recommendation from the minister to the governor in council in respect of charges is to be taken in the first instance from the department and from the board for the purpose of determining what is a just and reasonable price.

Anyone who has had any dealings with the National Energy Board will know the reason for that clause, and how these just and reasonable prices are determined. What really interests me are the other two subclauses which refer to the public interest of Canada generally, and all the circumstances that appear to the minister to be relevant. I know the minister cannot advise us on the monthly price until his advisers go through it and make the recommendations, but this is going to be of some importance in the future. Precisely what are the basic guidelines that animate the minister in making these recommendations in the public interest of Canada generally, and particularly with reference to all the circumstances that appear to the minister to be relevant? Are there circumstances above and beyond the public interest, or what are the guidelines that the minister will adopt?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Just by way of an example, this would involve a judgment we would have to make with regard to the heavier crudes. Because of the nature of the reservoirs, the heavy crudes are the most difficult to move. If the demand for crude is down in a particular month it has been the practice in western Canada over the years to use the light crude for the purpose of a surge tank, which goes up and down, leaving the volume of heavy crude relatively static, so far as that is possible. In that sense I think that would be a relevant circumstance to be taken into account. I think it can fairly be said that this would not be in the public interest of Canada so much as being a relevant circumstance which would perhaps cause one to set a differential to make sure that the heavier crude was kept moving, rather than to have a pro rated reduction of all crude types.

Mr. Baldwin: This is sort of like the belt, suspenders and safety pin aspect. You are taking all the safety precautions you can to allow yourself the fullest freedom possible in setting the price.

There is another clause in respect of which we might raise an issue, as it will have to be dealt with either here now, or later. Could the minister give some idea at this stage, and it can only be an estimate, of what he views as the situation during the ensuing six to 12 months in relation to the amount that will be raised? What will be the extent of the charge, and how is that charge to be applied in respect of the forecast of the number of barrels of oil exported that will be required to recover the revenue necessary to meet the equalization process? What is the minister's judgment in this area? Can he say how much may be required to supplement the charge in order to provide for those importing areas in the eastern part of the country?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It is difficult to be precise, but perhaps I might suggest some round figures that could be the basis for an instant calculation. If one goes on the assumption that between May 1 and the end of December, 1975, the average throughput will be 650,000 barrels a day, and of course between January 1 and June 30, 1976, that will be down to 550,000 barrels a day, the average tax per barrel might be in the neighbourhood of $5. Perhaps that calculation can be made while I continue talking. One also has to make certain round assumptions as to what the season of the year will be like and what the demand will be.

Mr. Baldwin: Celsius.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Celsius will have a major impact on it. We would estimate that between July, 1975, and July, 1976, the necessary supplement from the Consolidated Revenue Fund would be somewhere in the range of $300 million to $500 million for the 12-month period. This would be the case if there were an agreement between the provinces and the federal government in respect of the change in price. I am recalling the figure from memory, but I think that if there is an assumption that the price will increase $1 per barrel, the exposure in eastern Canada would be cut down by about $50 million on an annual basis. So there would be some savings if there is an increase, and we are talking about a range somewhere between $300 million and $500 million a year taken from general revenue to supplement the export tax revenue.

It has been confirmed that the deficit would be in the $300 million to $500 million range, and as you increase the price by $1 barrel you save about $70 million in each step up, so there would be a reduction if there was a price increase.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I am concerned about what seems to be a free exchange of expression as it suits the circumstance. Under subclause (2) of Clause 6 there is an imposition or a collection of a charge which also applies under Clause 7, but then we have a payment of this money directly to the minister under Clause 10. Then when one goes to Clause 14 the charge becomes a debt due to Her Majesty, and under Clause 14(2) the reference is directly to the Excise Tax Act. What concerns me is that it appears the Government of Canada, through this legislation, is attempting to impose an export tax. The use of the word charge is merely a play with words. It is an export tax.

We know there are two corporations, one in Saskatchewan and one in Alberta, which may be the owners of oil. There is also, in addition, a national petroleum corporation which is a federal corporation in the process of being created. Under its statute it can become both the owner of and exporter of oil. Under what authority does the Government of Canada claim the right to tax a provincial Crown corporation, a provincial entity, or a provincial government, which in itself is the owner of the oil without the consent of that province? Second, where does the Government of Canada propose and how does it propose to charge itself a tax?

We say that the national petroleum corporation could be subject to being indebted to Her Majesty. How can Her Majesty be indebted to Her Majesty, and how can the terms and provisions of the excise tax under subclause 2 be applied? There are other questions of records, books, and accessibility thereto, and penalties for the failure to comply. I am wondering how we can get around the question of trying to dodge, by language, a tax which is said here to be a charge. I do not think anyone in Canada would be deceived into thinking that this is not a tax. I am wondering whether the minister can give us an explanation.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): There are really three questions involved here. First, why is it a charge and not a tax? The term "export tax" is understood to refer to the regime in existence up until the commencement of this particular regime. Fifty per cent of the proceeds were made directly available to the province, and 50 per cent were to be redirected by the federal government to the province. The shift from tax to charge marks a shift which takes effect in the new regime.

I agree with the hon. member that in substance a tax is now applied for export compensation purposes. There is no more sinister intent involved than that. With regard to the provisions of clause 14(2), that really represents an incorporation by reference mutatis mutandis of the provisions of the Excise Tax Act. The hon. gentleman will recognize that the draughtman's shorthand is to prevent him having to repeat, again in extenso, the provisions which are already in the law in the Excise Tax Act. The third is how does the statute impose the tax or the charge on the Crown, whether federal or provincial? This of course is the question we debated at length this afternoon.

With regard to the federal government it is pursuant to section 16 of the Interpretation Act and the declarations involved in clause 3 of this particular bill, where the tax is imposed on the Crown in the right of Canada, and in due course, with regard to parliamentary action, would be imposed on the national petroleum corporation if it were an exporter of oil. With regard to the imposition of the tax on a provincial Crown corporation, that power is provided by clause 3 of the statute and is further to the provisions—to give the actual jurisprudence—of the case, the Attorney General of British Columbia versus the Attorney General of Canada, 1924 Appeal Cases at page 222, in which the Crown in the right of Canada was entitled to charge customs tax in that particular case against a provincial Crown corporation.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I raised this question in order to get the minister to admit that this is an export tax. I have a different opinion than he has about the right, without the consent of the province, to tax property of the province. If it were not to be a tax how could we proceed in the House by way of a ways and means motion insofar as this particular bill is concerned? Unless it were a tax then it cannot in any way come forward as a ways and means motion and be considered in the House in committee of the whole.

So, we recognize here that if clause 3 falls to the ground this means that what the minister has said flows therefrom also falls to the ground, and that the lynch pin for the authority for the imposition of this so-called charge—I prefer to call it a straight tax—depends upon clause 3. It may be that there might be some judicial challenge on that particular point because it seems to me that the whole idea—and I do not wish to repeat the debate of this afternoon—is a denial of the essence of confederation and the ownership of the resources by the province, and that the federal-government by this bill is trying to arrogate to itself powers it never did have, does not have, and never should have. In any event the minister has cleared up the point. He calls it a tax. Therefore it is a tax. That clears up the procedural point I raised in this regard. I do not agree with the minister's concept, but there it is.

The Chairman: Shall clause 9 carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): On division.

Clause 9 agreed to on division.

On Clause 10—By whom charge payable.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Chairman, I shall be very brief. In looking over the provisions I wonder whether perhaps the minister, in view of his highland Scottish heritage, gave instructions to those who drafted the bill that it be in Gaelic and then be changed back again to English. I have difficulty understanding the Subclause 2 of clause 10. I believe what is meant is that anyone exporting oil must pay the export charge, but the way it reads is:

A person who exports oil on which a charge is imposed under this Part in circumstances in which there is no exporter who is liable under this Part to pay that charge is liable to pay that charge.

I find that confusing. Would the minister explain that provision for me and give me an example?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Of course the hon. gentleman would recognize, as I do, that this country is an Ecossocracy, that is to say, a society run by Scotsmen, and the draftsman happens to be a graduate of Edinburgh University. However, the purpose of it being expressed in this rather elyptical way is that the exporter is defined in the commencement of the part as being one who holds an export licence. That is the reason for the rather elyptical wording involved in subclause 2 of Clause 10.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Chairman, I wish to place on the record the fact that in Clause 10 the word exporter appears. The minister explained earlier, in dealing with the definitions, that an exporter was a person and could include Crown corporation, or agency, or province, as well as the federal government. I, like the hon. member for Edmonton West, have the simple understanding of the constitution that one government cannot tax another.

● (2040)

If the governments of the provinces of Alberta or Saskatchewan are exporters under this definition, and if SaskOil, a government agency, is exporting, you have a real cause of clash. I have grave doubt about this, and I wanted to record it at this particular time.

The Chairman: The hon. member asked a question. Is he expecting an answer?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): There is no answer required, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Shall Clause 10 carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Clause 10 agreed to, on division.

On clause 11—Board to administer.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Chairman, during one of the standing committee meetings I expressed my concern about the heavy burden which was being placed on the personnel of the National Energy Board with the administrative responsibilities which had to be added to their ordinary duties this last year and half. At that time the minister stated that they were strengthening the personnel of the board in the hope that they could carry these extra responsibilities. I do not have to point out to the minister that the administration of the bill now being put to the House will continue to add tremendously to the administrative burden of the National Energy Board, and therefore the difficulties I noticed this last year and half in carrying out the operations of the National Energy Board will be compounded.

This brings me to my major concern. I was a member of the Diefenbaker administration which set up the National Energy Board. We wanted to give Canadians protection in the handling of their energy, protection they had not had before that time.

The first function of the National Energy Board was a judicial one. It was to decide matters which were brought before it pursuant to the National Energy Board statute. I have observed the actions of the board over this last 14 years, and my criticism has been on this question of administration. I think that the time taken in handling routine applications for changes of facilities along a pipeline, for example, has been too long. This has been costly for people applying, costly for the people intervening, and certainly, in the long run, costly to the consumer who has to pay for all this delay. For my part I would like to see a strengthening, a speeding up and streamlining of this judicial function.

Since there are only a few members on this board, the judicial function should take most of their time. In addition to this judicial function they have another extremely important function, and that is to act as a policy suggestion type of institution.

It was recognized back in 1958 and 1959 that Canadians had to look ahead. They had to be informed continually as to the supply situation. These figures should be provided by an independent and capable board. How much natural gas is it proven that we have? What is the best guess of the potential gas supplies to be found? How much proven oil do we have? How much potential can we expect to have, within a time frame, for the safety of the nation?

The failure of the National Energy Board to carry out these advisory functions, which are clearly laid down in the act as their responsibility, is one of the reasons we have been in this situation for the last two years. When the new chairman took over last year I questioned him on behalf of the opposition to see what his position was on this advisory function. He assured the committee that he would do everything he could to restore the operations of the board in the field of advisory function to the government and to the people of Canada.

Knowing something of the heavy load the board has had to bear these last 15 years, knowing a little bit about the tremendous extra administrative responsibilities of the last year and a half, and then to have added to it all these new responsibilities this legislation will entail, I see trouble down the road purely from an administrative standpoint. I think the minister would be well advised to inform his cabinet colleagues that the National Energy Board structure and the divisions of its duties into judicial, advisory and administrative will have to be radically changed. If the minister would give this advice to his colleagues I think they would respond favourably because the board will be the key for several decades to come in the administration and handling of our energy resources.

I would like to give an example of what concerns me. The changes in the movement of oil around the world have been so radical in the last two years that I doubt if there is a single person in a single oil corporation who fully understands the significance of all these changes. Tonight we heard the hon. member for Dauphin ask questions about what is happening to the heavy and medium crudes of Saskatchewan. This is a classic example of how the resources of the country are hurt by not having staff on a board with time to look ahead and to visualize the impact of their decisions on the various types of producers of oil in Canada.

In the rush of quick decisions which were made last year and in light of the under staffed energy board, no one if about to point his finger at the board. But coming from the province of Saskatchewan and representing a constituency where a large percentage of its wealth depends on the health of the companies operating in nearly a score of oil fields, I see the populations of towns of 2,000 reduced by 20 per cent, 30 per cent and 40 per cent because of the exodus of people working in these fields just because the board, at the request of the government in setting a price, did not think through what the disastrous impact would be from setting that price. When they were raising the price up to $6.50 and raising all grades of crude up the same amount, they did not have time to realize that this would destroy more than a score of small but very valuable oil fields in Saskatchewan.

The hon. member for Dauphin is quite right in suspecting that once a low viscosity oil field has been pumped for 15, 18 or 20 years and it goes out of action for two or three years, it is very marginal and dubious economics as to whether that oil field will be brought into production again. If that oil field is kept pumping constantly and the proper recovery measures are taken constantly, it may last another 10, 12, 15 or 18 years, providing a tremendous value in terms of energy to this country.

It is true that production in south eastern Saskatchewan in only measured in terms of 50,000 or 60,000 barrels per day, but 50,000 or 60,000 barrels per day times the number of day in a year times the number of years left in that field, with proper conservation techniques in the pumping and management of that field, amount to hundreds of millions of dollars over the next decade or so.

There is not only the threat that we lose all the jobs of the people who bought or built homes in this area expecting to have 30 years to work looking after these fields, but there is the fact of the stupidity of this country in not thinking ahead on the significance and impact of these increased taxes on the fields. No one on the Energy Board is to blame for this stupidity because there was not the staff to cope with the subject.

I suspect that what is true in southeastern Saskatchewan is also true in other parts of the west, that an understaffed National Energy Board was doing things which were not intentionally harmful but whose effect was disastrous. Now, a year and a half later, the minister is saying "We made a mistake and now we are consulting with the province of Saskatchewan to see if they cannot alter their royalties". In this particular case two guilty parties, two greedy governments, are trying to grab all the economic rent they can from these oil companies, and so great was their greed that the sum total of their tax liability is greater than 100 per cent.

When I asked the minister if he had seen the figures he said he had, and that every time they produce a barrel of oil it costs them money. The more honest way of saying it is that they are losing money on every barrel they produce. When companies only produce 20 barrels per day per well, if the number of wells they have is multiplied by 20 cents or 30 cents per barrel, it could come to as much as $20,000 or $30,000 per year. They can only carry that kind of loss so long.

I have in my possession letters giving their liability in exact figures. In one particular case the profit on a particular operation is $4,000 and the tax liability is $6,000. The owner of that operation is not going to keep it operating for too long, I should say.

I am making two points, Mr. Chairman. The first is that we have to strengthen the National Energy Board immediately, both in numbers and by restructuring it to handle these decisions more effectively. At the same time we must give it the quality of manpower that is able to understand the impact of its actions. In the theory of the government at Ottawa, a person who is a highly trained administrator in one field should be able to administer in another and could be taken from any department, put into the National Energy Board, and told to "administer". He might be told by the government to raise the price, but I would suspect that many of those administrators would not know the significance of having mediums or heavy crude and so on. This last mistake I referred to was very costly to oil companies in terms of dollars and cents, but it was also costly to the human beings who work and serve in the oil fields.

I am pleading with the minister, under this clause of the bill, to give high priority (a) to increasing the personnel and National Energy Board staff, and (b) to restructing it so that it can separate the judicial function from the administrative function more clearly. Above all I plead with him not to betray the people of Canada in the future by setting aside the advisory function of the National Energy Board. We have paid heavily for that failure in the last ten or 15 years.

I would repeat that when the minister goes looking for new personnel it is going to be hard to find them among civil servants, who usually have a limited knowledge of oil and gas. He will have to consider seeking them within the oil industry, so it will be necessary to set down very clear guidelines on the question of conflict of interest for these people, and to ask them to abandon all ownership of oil and gas.

I have deliberately taken the time of the committee to make this presentation of my feelings in regard to the National Energy Board, Mr. Chairman. I believe it is an excellent institution which has served this country well, but if it is to grow and be staffed in the usual method of institutions and agencies around Ottawa, we are in for some serious trouble. I hope my proposals are acceptable to the minister and that he can put them to his cabinet colleagues with all the energy he can amass in an attempt to give the country a better break than it has had in the last two years.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word by way of explanation. The Board now has the responsibility of determining the export volume from month to month and of issuing export licences from month to month, so it already has substantial administrative responsibility. What we do here is impose upon the person who is to make the judgment and issue the licence a further responsibility which goes along with the basic one of collecting the taxes. We are not creating a separate agency in either the Department of National Revenue or my own department for that purpose. We are trying to minimize the number of government agencies dealing with the transaction.

As the hon. member says, I do not think there can be any question that these further responsibilities will impose a need for additional personnel employed by the board. In the past the entire personnel of the board has come from the private sector. The hon. member mentioned the problem of conflict of interest. In trying to balance that, I think it is essential to have people in this field with practical experience in the oil and gas business rather than take them from some other sector of the government.

There is one point on which I take issue with the hon. member, however. He said that in setting the price the government had not been flexible enough. As I pointed out to the hon. member for Dauphin, the government has been flexible in setting the export tax and this is the result of setting variable export prices for the various commodities. With respect to setting the domestic price, by the agreement of March 27 we set the maximum price.

It was the government of Saskatchewan by choosing to go to the full maximum in these particular qualities of oil that, in effect, made that oil non-competitive in the Canadian market. That was the essence of my observation to the hon. member for Dauphin, and the essence of my conversation with the provincial administration. If they would choose to go to the full maximum price, as they chose with lake crude, and arrange the price for sale in Canada with the customers' discount as in the past, it is the belief of my advisers that there could be an increased flow from these particular fields, and some of the hardships he referred to would not have been felt by the industry.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, with the greatest respect to the minister, in the government's headlong rush to control the production of oil and petroleum in Canada we have seen something which is retrograde.

The establishment of the National Energy Board was the subject matter of the Borden Royal Commission on Energy and was set up as an independent body to advise the governor in council of certain action that should be taken by the governor in council, such as the approval of applications for export permits and pipelines. It was an independent body of experts. The National Energy Board was also to consider matters of production and the sale of electrical power.

● (2100)

There is also the question of uranium. All forms of energy were to come under the purview of the board, which was to advise the cabinet about them. By this bill the National Energy Board is to be set up, first of all, as a tax collecting body. It must administer taxes levied on all petroleum products. Is it to do the same with the export of electricity, if the government should decide it will raid that field as well?

By this decision the government will destroy the independence of the National Energy Board. It is to become merely a further instrument at the behest of the minister and the department.

Certainly the collection of taxes, matters involving the excise tax, and all questions of distraint, recovery, and so on, can come under the Minister of National Revenue. This should not be done by the National Energy Board. After all, the Minister of National Revenue is responsible for customs on the one hand and the excise tax on the other. He collects the premiums payable under the Unemployment Insurance Act and the contributions made under the Canada Pension Plan Act. Why should the Minister of National Revenue not collect this tax and be responsible for the administration of its collection?

The minister opposite feels there would be an economy of personnel if it were done by the board. I suggest there will not be; there will be a different philosophy, a different policy governing the way the tax is collected. The Department of National Revenue possesses expertise in these matters.

My colleague from Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain was right when he said that at the heart of this matter there is a potential conflict of interest. In moving around personnel of the National Energy Board I do not see how the chairman, who is responsible for that board and must advise the cabinet about certain administrative matters, can maintain his sense of independence. The board, in essence, should be composed of experts. Somebody there, some member of the board, will become the administrator charged with the responsibilities given to him by this bill.

It seems to me that a potentially grievous wrong is being inflicted on the National Energy Board. Its value is being affected. I go further than my colleague for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain. I say that all of these administrative provisions should be removed; they should not be the responsibility of the National Energy Board. If we are to have a tax of the kind proposed, its collection and the turning of the moneys over to the Receiver General of Canada should be a matter for the Minister of National Revenue. I think we would see a much tidier administration if that were done.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Madam Chairman, obviously I will reflect a different viewpoint. The board is already, under the export provisions of the National Energy Board Act, responsible for determining on a monthly basis the total amount which may be exported and what amounts may be exported by individual exporters. We took the approach that, as less than 20 licensees are involved, the step we are proposing would convert the collection into a toll collection. In administrative terms it would add one relatively minor function to those already being exercised. In all logic, as we were dealing with fewer than 20 licensees, it seemed to the government to make more sense to add what is really a minor administrative program to the responsibilities of people who are already totally familiar with the transaction, because they authorized it.

Mr. Horner: Madam Chairman, much of our discussions has centred on the National Energy Board. I do not disagree with my colleagues and will try not to be repetitious. I submit the National Energy Board has been somewhat negligent in carrying out its duties. Some time ago it published a couple of books dealing with energy and the right way to use energy. Then it published its report on our energy requirements and energy reserves. It came as a shock to many Canadians to learn that we do not have all the oil we thought we had, and that our reserves will run low in the near future. If the Canadian people had known this two or three years ago we should not be in our present difficulties. The oil companies knew as early as 1969. Certainly the National Energy Board should have known this sooner than it did, and should have informed the Canadian public.

Now the National Energy Board is doing a feasibility study on the Mackenzie Valley Oil Pipe Line. Did the minister ask the National Energy Board if the oil pipeline from Sarnia to Montreal is feasible, and whether it supports the building of that pipeline? I think it will be a political pipeline, not an economic one. I submit it will be uneconomic. I thought that more than a year ago, when the minister said, I think in the summer of 1973, that the pipeline to Montreal would be built and operating before that winter. Well, the winter came and the winter went, and the pipeline was not built. It was not even begun. When questioning the staff of the National Energy Board about its role as a collection agency and whether that role should be enlarged, he should also ask it if it thinks the pipeline from Sarnia to Montreal is feasible and economic. Or is this to be a political decision only? Will the pipeline be built only for the sake of politics?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Madam Chairman, I want to correct the hon. gentleman. The board has held a number of hearings and there was never any suggestion that the pipeline would be completed by the commencement of last winter. The initial timetable was for completion by December, 1975. Principally because of the intervention for environmental reasons of the province of Quebec, the time has moved up and it will now be in mid-summer, 1976. The board held its final hearing on Friday last and will be pronouncing its decision within a few days. The applicant is ready to go, having acquired the necessary right-of-way. Of course the government, to back up its policy, has assisted the applicant in two ways, namely, by ensuring the early delivery of the pipe, which is now being delivered, and by entering into the deficiency agreement which was approved by parliament at the end of the last fiscal period.

Mr. Horner: Madam Speaker, I will briefly sum up the minister's remarks as I do not want to misunderstand him. The minister stated that the pipeline will be finished in the middle of 1976 and that the National Energy Board will shortly be publishing its report on whether it is economic. He stated that the energy board held its last hearing this past Friday. I gather from that that the government acted before hearing from the National Energy Board on whether it reached the conclusion that the project is economically feasible. I do not want to leave the chamber this evening with a strong assumption with respect to the minister's remarks.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Madam Chairman, the hon. member does not quite have it right. The pipeline can only go ahead if the board makes the final judgment that it is economically sound. We will hear within a day or so whether that is so. However, he is quite right in saying that for policy reasons we judged it advisable to put that pipeline into Montreal from a national security standpoint. It is for that reason, at the time when pipe was in short supply, that we took steps to guarantee the availability of pipe. It was because of the potential of a deficiency that we came forth with a definite agreement. Under the law provided by parliament, it has to be the ultimate judgment of the board. I cannot anticipate that. This is why I cannot be final in saying that it will go ahead. My expectation is that the board's decision will be favourable, but we will have to wait until we get it.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 12—Exemption or reduction.

Mr. Baldwin: Madam Chairman, this clause is giving me concern. It gives to the governor in council under certain conditions very broad powers with regard to what is in effect the remission, either prospectively or retroactively, of charges which are covered by the clauses with which we have been dealing.

I fear giving this power to any government without some safeguards attached to it. I am particularly concerned about giving it to this government whose track record, from the time of Hal Banks up to the time of the dredging companies, has not been too inspiring with regard to its assessments of people and corporations. We must consider that those who might be the beneficiaries may be some of the large corporations involved in transactions for the sale or shipment of petroleum products to the United States.

The governor in council is given the power solely on the indication by the board that it is in the public interest to so do. What is the public interest? Who is the judge as to what is in the public interest? Does someone on the board pick up the telephone and say "Mr. Minister, I think it is in the public interest that you exempt XY corporation from the payment of these charges"? This clause retroactively permits that a charge paid four months previously can be remitted, or the liability released.

There is presently a means of doing this under the Financial Administration Act. According to Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules, authority is given to the governor in council on the recommendation of Treasury Board whenever he, that is the governor in council, considers it in the public interest. There is the same language. The governor in council on a recommendation of Treasury Board may, when he considers it in the public interest so to do, remit any tax, fee or penalty. I notice the word tax here. I listened to the interesting discussion of the hon. member for Edmonton West and the minister. In any event, that is covered by one of the subsections in the Financial Administration Act, the remission clause, which defines tax as including any tax imposed, duty or toll payable to Her Majesty. I think that is wide enough to cover it.

In addition, there is in the remission provision in the Financial Administration Act, with the necessity for remissions to be reported to the House of Commons in the public accounts with statements, names and amounts in respect of anything over a certain amount. This is what alarms me about clause 12. There is nothing which compels the government, unless the minister can advise that the provisions of the Financial Administration Act are applicable, to state that the government is compelled to publish a list of the exemptions with the names and the amounts.

Why is there the word retroactively? Why was that put in? Are there situations now in existence where the government is contemplating exempting people or corporations from charges for which they normally would have been liable last month, the month before, or the month before that? It may be there is something else in the bill of which I am not aware by which this will have to be done. However, as it now stands, the governor in council on the simple advice from the board, which does not have to be expressed in terms of a written certificate and can be done only by a telephone call, can deem it in the public interest that XY corporation, which three months ago was liable for charges in the amount of $100,000 or $150,000, is now exempt from that charge. Any member of this House is bound to be concerned about a bill which grants such extensive power to the government and its representatives when, side by side with that, is authority to provide for these exemptions.

I would like a more detailed explanation if there are people to whom the retroactive aspect is going to be applied. What assurance can we have from the minister, without us moving amendments, that there will be full and complete disclosure? Has the government decided that the provisions of the Financial Administration Act will be applicable, and will it publish in detail all of the facts surrounding any exemptions with the amounts, names and reasons? I believe this is a very reasonable request bearing in mind the rather awesome powers which this gives to the governor in council.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Madam Chairman, the hon. member is referring to what is now Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act. Under the export tax as opposed to the export charge provision, there were a number of remissions to the British Columbia Council of Forest Industries and for the purposes of Canadian Pacific aviation fuel. This arose from the situation on the west coast whereby Canadian crude goes to the Puget Sound refineries and is refined there and some of the product, but not all of it, is brought back in, for example in the form of heavy crude for the Council of Forest Industries or in the form of aviation spirit for CP aviation. That is the kind of case that has occurred in the past.

One of the reasons for the reference to retroactivity here is that at the time when there was some debate as to the appropriate level of price and hence of export tax for the export of Lloydminister crude, we indicated that while the export tax system remained in force generally we would, subject to proof, be prepared to remit a defined portion of the tax to exporters of the Lloydminster product. Those exports have gone ahead, the applications have been received but, because the statutory authority existing at that time has now expired, we have included a retroactive provision in the bill so that we can honour that undertaking. This, of course, is done by an order in council which is made public in due course subject, of course, to the provisions of the statutory instruments legislation.

With regard to the comment about the provisions of what is now subsection 8 of section 17 of the Financial Administration Act I would be quite prepared to amend clause 12 by adding as subclause (2) thereof a provision identical to that in the Financial Administration Act, which amendment reads:

> That Bill C-32 be amended by adding thereto immediately after line 22 on page 6 thereof:
> A statement of each exemption or reduction of any charge ordered pursuant to this section shall be reported to the House of Commons through the public accounts.

I believe that is a correct paraphrase of the words used in the Financial Administration Act. I would ask my colleague to move an amendment along those lines. Perhaps we could pause at this point while the precise wording is being considered.

Mr. Baldwin: That is the kind of amendment which I praise the minister for his willingness to make. I must say it would put my fears within manageable bounds.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I should like to add my own words of praise to the minister along the lines suggested by the hon. member for Peace River. When I read these words in the proposed legislation I was a good deal disturbed because the power of exemption does allow tremendous room for certain things to happen.

If I am not disturbing the minister while he is drafting his amendment I should like to ask him whether he would use this retroactive power in connection with the medium and heavy crudes of Saskatchewan. If he finds, after this legislation passes, that serious and proven harm has been done to exporters of those grades in Saskatchewan because the incidence of the export tax has priced them out of the market, and because of provincial royalties and taxes coupled with the decision as to non-deductibility for federal tax purposes, could the minister under this clause consider an order to return part of the export tax to these companies when they have suffered losses through no fault of their own?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I think that is very doubtful. I am doubtful whether I should put that proposition to the governor in council, and I am even more doubtful that it would be accepted. It would involve a reduction of the federal revenue having regard to the level of provincial royalties. This, of course, is the subject of intensive debate between the federal government and provincial governments. The purpose we have in mind with regard to the Lloydminster crude in particular is that at a time when the market has been highly volatile in terms of marginal price differences because of the arrival of competitive offshore crudes, it is desirable to encourage exporters to go ahead and seek markets for a certain volume of this product in the United States.

If, in fact, it is found that the judgment which the board had to make—it is always difficult to make these judgments during a volatile market—put the tax too high, then the companies would be able to seek some kind of recompense. Any general remission because of the royalty level in the province of Saskatchewan, for example, would not, I think, be covered by the intention here.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): The point I have raised is a crucial one for operators in Saskatchewan. I am not referring to Lloydminster crude, I am referring to the operators in the medium and light-medium field in Saskatchewan. If the discussions which I know must be going on between the Minister of Finance and the Saskatchewan ministers do result in the Saskatchewan government reducing its taxes and royalties and where it can be shown that the combination of the export tax, the provincial tax, the royalties and the non-deductibility provision in the budget has put companies in a negative earning position through no fault of their own, can these companies be compensated for losses they suffered in 1974 retroactively? I am assuming now it is possible to get agreement on the part of Saskatchewan to reduce its royalties. Is there any possibility of making retroactive payments under this clause?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Of course making a judgment of that kind would involve a political accord which has not been reached. The quick answer to that question would be that this would be one way of putting an exporter back into a better financial position.

We now have a more refined copy of the amendment I discussed with the hon. member for Peace River. I will ask my colleague, the President of Privy Council, to move:

That Bill C-32 be amended by striking out line 7 on page 6 thereof and by substituting therefor the following:

"12(1) Where it is shown to the Governor"

That is an amendment to the first line of the clause so as to get subclause 2 in, and here the necessary amendment would read:

That Bill C-32 be amended by adding immediately after line 22 on page 6 thereof the following:

"(2) A statement of each exemption or reduction of $1,000 or more ordered pursuant to this section shall be reported to the House of Commons in the public accounts.

Mr. Sharp: I so move.

● (2130)

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Madam Chairman, may I say a word about the amendment. May I preface my remarks by saying something about the exchange that has been taking place between the minister and the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain. I never fail to be amused at the way the minister always suggests that if an oil Company is in any difficulty the provincial government ought to reduce the royalties, forgetting that the oil belongs to the people of the province and that they have a substantial claim.

The federal government has moved into the oil field with a very heavy hand in its most recent budget. In the September, 1974, issue of "The Petroleum Industry of Canada" there is a breakdown of a barrel selling for $6.50. They point out that the amount paid in income tax for Alberta oil prior to the budget was 66 cents; under the budget it will be $1.96. For Saskatchewan income tax was 21 cents; it will now be $1.78. That is a very hefty intrusion by the federal government into the cost of a barrel of oil.

I do not think the minister can altogether avoid his responsibility by saying that whenever a particular section of the oil industry is having difficulty the answer is that it should go to the provincial government and ask for a reduction in royalties. As a matter of fact much of the difficulty that we are having now with respect to the oil industry is because in his recent budget the Minister of Finance introduced a provision whereby royalties paid to the provinces were no longer deductible for income tax purposes. The result of that has been that oil companies are now being asked to pay taxes on an expenditure, something that just has not happened in any other area of the economy.

I sometimes get the feeling that the Minister of Finance and Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources are not playing on the same team. One seems to be pulling one way and the other is pulling in the opposite direction. I think the first ministers' conference which took place last week would at least have had a reasonable chance for success had the heavy hand of the Minister of Finance not intruded to the point where the provinces felt they could no longer either trust the federal government or expect from it any degree of fairness and equity. I express the hope that if on re-examination some of the oil companies in Saskatchewan, where they are handling medium and heavy crude oil with a very high sulphur content, can be reclassified, this is something that should be considered.

With respect to the amendment I agree with what was said by the hon. member for Peace River. When I read clause 12 I was exceedingly perturbed. I recognize—and the explanation of the minister has clarified the point for me—that there is a need for flexibility. I know something of the situation in British Columbia where much of our oil goes across the line, is refined, and brought back again. We depend on Vancouver Island for bunker C, for example, which is processed in the State of Washington. It comes through the Trans Mountain Pipe Line, is shipped across to the United States and then is returned to Canada. So I do not quarrel with the need for flexibility. I agree with the minister's explanation that flexibility is required, both with respect to retroactive exemptions and with respect to making rebates in certain instances.

I am not sure that the amendment proposed by the minister is a very satisfactory solution. It will be better than nothing at all, but we have had some unfortunate experiences with respect to rebates, as the minister will recall. I remember it was only a few years ago when a rebate was made to the Ford Motor Company of Canada of $75 million. I think we spent days and days in the House trying to find out why it received this remission, a very substantial sum of money. I recall that none of the other automobile companies received this concession.

Recalling the extent to which the public accounts committee seems to have difficulty in getting data and is always operating on accounts that are 15 to 18 months old, I am somewhat fearful that the amendment that the minister has proposed is going to meet the situation. I should like the minister to let the clause stand until we meet again so as to see whether he can find some more satisfactory way.

A number of things could be done. There might be a provision that all remissions that are made shall be tabled in the House within 15 days of the House meeting or, if the House is meeting, that they be tabled immediately after coming into the possession of the minister, and then referred to the public accounts committee. It seems to me that this would promote more publicity than merely sending these reports, dealing with what could be very large sums of money, to particular individuals or companies. First of all they should be public knowledge, published in the annual report of the National Energy Board, or tabled in the House within 15 days of the sitting of the House and referred to the public accounts committee. In this way not only the members of the public accounts committee but all members of the House would have an opportunity to see how large these sums are, and to whom they have been remitted.

I also think they ought to be categorized, with some explanation of why the rebates have been granted. Without casting any reflection upon the minister, which is the last thing I would want to do, the fact remains that this could become a gigantic boondoggle. I am sure the minister would not condone that, but the fact is we are passing legislation that is not just for this minister but for any minister of any government that may sit on the treasury benches. We should be extremely careful when we give the government power by order in council to pay back millions of dollars, certainly hundreds of thousands of dollars, and to exempt certain companies or persons from the payment of thousands of dollars. Surely there should be every possible safeguard so as to make sure there is no favouritism or any squandering of public funds. I suggest the proposed amendment could be strengthened very considerably.

Mr. Ritchie: Would the minister clarify whether this clause applies in any way to offshore oil that is refined to any extent in Canada, presumably eastern Canada, and then exported to the United States or some other country? I believe a certain volume is handled in this way. Is the oil in any way liable to tax, does the tax have to be rebated, or does this clause apply in any way to that type of transaction?

● (2140)

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Madam Chairman, under this part we are dealing with Canadian source oil only. The kind of situation the hon. gentleman has in mind does arise in succeeding clauses of the bill which deal with the import compensation or the recovery of compensation when the product is re-exported.

I would be glad to accept the suggestion of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands to take a more elaborate look at this amendment to Clause 12, and unless other members have a wish to comment on this I would suggest that we stand that clause and move on to the next one.

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

Mr. Baldwin: I have just one brief comment on that, Madam Chairman, and this applies to one of the reasons I was probably a little more willing to accept the clause than the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, although I certainly agree with him that it would be preferable to go the whole mile. We at least have an advantage under the Statutory Instruments Act, and the minister might look at this, in that an order in council of this nature must be one made public, and all orders in council now stand automatically referred to the Joint Committee on Statutory Instruments, which provides the members of this House and the other place an opportunity to examine the orders in council. That committee has the duty to examine all these orders in council to see that they are in accordance with the act. This is a little extra assurance, and I would suggest the minister have a look at this as well when he is considering whether this clause can be improved by the suggestion made.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that Clause 12 stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 12 stood.

On Clause 13—Monthly Return of Export Sales.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Madam Chairman, Clause 13 is an administrative provision which stipulates that persons required to pay the charge must each month make a return to the National Energy Board showing their exports of oil for the last preceding month, and they must pay the charge in respect thereof not later than the last day of the first month succeeding that month in which the exports were made. I would like to suggest an amendment to this provision which was proposed to me by the National Energy Board and really follows in the form of Section 55 of the Excise Tax Act, with the exception that "board" is substituted there for the word "minister".

The intent of the amendment is to provide a mechanism of alteration in the matter of time. There may be circumstances in which it is impossible for a person to comply within the strict time required in Clause 13(1). This provision or amendment provides the means of controlling the extension of the time limit. I see that the Minister of State for Urban Affairs is waiting patiently to move this amendment. Before the minister does that perhaps I should read the amendment into the record, as follows:

That Bill C-32 be amended by adding thereto, immediately after line 43 on page 6 thereof, the following new subsection:

"(4) The Board may, before or after the day prescribed by subsection (2), specify in writing a later day for the filing of a return or the payment of the charge or any portion thereof; and when the Board has specified a later day

(a) no penalty shall accrue or shall be deemed to have accrued under subsection (3) prior to such later day in respect of default in payment of the charge or portion thereof for the payment of which the later day was specified; and

(b) failure to pay, on or before the later day, the charge or portion thereof for the payment of which a later day was specified constitutes a default for the purposes of subsection (3)."

I see the Minister of State for Urban Affairs rising to move this amendment.

Mr. Danson: I so move.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Amendment (Mr. Danson) agreed to.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Madam Chairman, I just wanted to know whether the Minister of State for Urban Affairs wanted to speak on this.

Mr. Danson: I think the words of the amendment express exactly what I was going to say, Madam Chairman.

Mr. Ritchie: Madam Chairman, I should like to ask the minister whether the oil industry is such that in almost every case the exporter will have his returns accepted, except in rare circumstances? Is the financial pattern of the industry such that the amount is paid monthly following the sale, or does the exporter tend to incur carrying charges, or does he tend to pay the government ahead of time?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Generally speaking, the first suggestion has been the prevailing practice.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Madam Chairman, to be consistent let me register my caveat in respect of Clause 13. When this exporter happens to be the government of a province I foresee great difficulties in applying this clause, unless the consent of that provincial government to be so penalized is obtained. I would like to register this caveat, as I have done on previous clauses.

Clause 13, as amended, agreed to.

On Clause 14—Debts to Her Majesty.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Madam Chairman, we have already discussed Clause 14, making the charges and penalties payable under the act. Debts are recoverable by civil process, and sub-clause (2) provides for the incorporation by reference of procedures under Section 52 of the Excise Tax Act, mutatis mutandis, in this statute. Section 52 has 15 sub-sections covering procedure, and this really represents the draftsman's shorthand.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Madam Chairman, I take it there are alternative procedures for collection under this clause? These are alternatives available to the Crown, is that right?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The alternative procedure is rather lengthy. As I said, there are some 15 subsections under the Excise Tax Act. Subsection (1) in fact declares the charges to be civil debts, and then subsection (2) provides a rather elaborate procedure under the Excise Tax Act whereby the sums payable and charged, mutatis mutandis, including penalties may be recovered at any time by an action in the Exchequer Court, which in fact now is the Federal Court of Canada, and it sets out the procedures there.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I confess that I am not aware of the provisions of the Excise Tax Act, but is there provision for imprisonment for debt?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): There is provision for recovery. The penalty may be set for prosecution and recovery with costs by the Attorney General of Canada. There is no provision as far as I can see, and I feel there is none, for imprisonment in that regard. This is really a civil recovery as though it were a debt due under contract.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Would the minister tell the House how he would propose that the Government of Canada could institute a levy and restraint against a provincial government if the provincial government were the owner of the asset?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I can tell you.

● (2150)

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): There is no purpose in providing for something that cannot legally be done. You cannot restrain from rent because there are no rents due here. You may try to obtain a judgment in the Federal Court of Canada and then, on refusal of the provincial Crown corporation to pay, the matter would be pursued through a court, through the sheriff in a province, because there is no way the minister could move directly himself. The minister would have to proceed through the sheriff of the judicial district where there are assets, either of the province or the Crown corporation, for a levy in execution in satisfaction of the unsatisfied judgment. I would invite the minister, as a lawyer, to tell me how he would proceed.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): There would be difficulties in certain respects. However, there is no difficulty in proceeding through the Federal Court and having this progress to the state of there being a judgment debt. I think one of the more probable ways of proceeding would be as provided by subsection 9 of section 52, in which it states that where a person is indebted to Her Majesty under this act the minister may require their attention by way of reduction or set-off by such amount as the minister may testify, that is, any amount that may be or become payable to such person by Her Majesty.

The nature of the thing is that there are inclined to be accounts running in both directions, and therefore a set-off. I am not sure of any practical example, but I referred earlier to the case of the customs duties or excise taxes which are now being payable by a provincial Crown. The federal Crown is not without remedy in this regard.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I would call that an invitation to war.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I know the minister is concerned in respect of the answer he gave about the remedy he is seeking, especially when the agency may be a Crown agency or when the federal Crown may be proceeding against a provincial Crown. The hon. member for Edmonton West mentioned the matter of one aspect of collection. There is of course the second aspect which would be levy and execution in the usual way. I have a question in my mind as to whether that is applicable in the circumstances. Again there is the whole matter of garnishee in respect of collection, and whether or not that is applicable in terms of the Crown. I know the hon. member for Edmonton West is not suggesting, and I am not suggesting, that the federal Crown should be in itself without remedy when under the laws of Canada something has occurred, or a lawful debt has not been paid, provided it has been incurred properly.

I am not suggesting that the federal government ought to be without remedy, but I wonder in the circumstances, particularly in view of this long section and in view of the minister's answer to the hon. member for Edmonton West, whether he would consider standing clause 14 for the moment so that we may see just what these remedies are. I think it is important in the federal-provincial balance we are talking about. The hon. member for Edmonton West referred to it as a possible declaration of war. I do not know whether that is right, but it is important that there not be involved in any statute a reference to a remedy in which there is some doubt that the federal Crown could act when dealing with a provincial Crown or its agency.

I want to emphasize that I am not suggesting the federal Crown should be without some remedy, but I want to ensure that there is a real remedy. If I may put it as kindly as possible, I believe the minister equivocated in his reply in respect of the question. I would ask the minister whether he would consider standing this clause. I am sure it could be dealt with quickly at some future time. Perhaps it could be stood, unless the minister has some references with which he could satisfy the House now.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I see no purpose in standing it. There is a long standing procedure in respect of provincial governments and Crown corporations with regard to the Excise Tax Act. It has been established for a long time, since the 1926 appeal case that the provincial Crown is under this particular obligation. I think it is a fair judgment to make that on the whole provincial governments and provincial Crown corporations have a good credit rating; they have paid their debts. The hon. member for Edmonton West in his comments used the expression "an act of war". If it is an act of war the causus belli would have been the non-payment of the due debt by the provincial corporation.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Possibly the levy.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Well, the Government of Canada of course is acting fully within its powers as in the Excise Tax Act, and it seems to me that the procedure is long established. There are some practical difficulties in applying some of the remedies. The remedies of collection, as the hon. member knows, whether we are talking about an individual, a corporation or a Crown corporation, vary in their availability from time to time.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 14 carry?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): On division.

Clause 14 agreed to on division.

On Clause 15—Deductions and refunds.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In clause 15(1)(b) it says, with reference to deduction or refund, that this can be made "where the charge was paid in error." I notice that in clause 13(3) where money is owing the Crown in the right of Canada one can have a one per cent payment for default. Do I assume that where a remission is made for over-payment the same one per cent will apply, or will it operate in the same way as the income tax department where if you owe any money you pay interest and, if they owe you money, you receive nothing?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): What we have here under clause 15(1) are the two cases of payment due to mistake of fact and payment due to mistake in law. In both cases there is provision for a refund. I have to say there is no provision for interest running on an overpayment. On the other hand, the over-payment of mistake of course is a mistake on the part of the exporter who will have overpaid in the first instance.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): It does not say that.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Well, he first determines his liability and the mistake initially would be his.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 15 carry?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): On division.

Clause 15 agreed to on division.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

TRANSPORT—NEED FOR ICEBREAKERS IN NORTHWESTERN ATLANTIC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Madam Speaker, I appear tonight to follow up on my question of April 15 to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand). My concern is as a result of the bill inadequate icebreaker service. Although my main and specific concern is with regard to my particular district of western Newfoundland, the need exists throughout the region.

● (2200)

This is an annual and persistent problem that I bring to the attention of the government every year. Certainly I have brought it to its attention most of the almost seven years I have had the pleasure to be here, but all I receive is the usual answer that the government will do something about the problem sometime in the future. In this case the minister replied that the government will build more icebreakers when it can pay the bill.

I want to make it clear that I have no quarrel with the officials responsible for the development of icebreakers.

They can only do what they can with the equipment on hand. I realize what they must experience when fishermen, port authorities, or freight handlers want their needs fulfilled on a priority basis.

At this very moment the lobster fishing season is about to open in district 11 on the west coast of Newfoundland. As a matter of fact, it opens on Sunday. Further along the coast the season opens May 5. Both these districts include an extended area along the whole of the west coast. They provide for many hundreds of fishermen a livelihood, or at least a large portion of their annual income.

I was surprised when the minister facetiously indicated that the government will provide more icebreakers when it can pay the bill. Through his parliamentary secretary I can tell him with the greatest respect that the bills and compensation fishermen and governments have had to pay over the years as a result of losses to lobster gear and other fishing gear due to ice conditions would have much more than paid the bill required to provide a reasonable and adequate icebreaking capability. It is still the old old story of the apathetic approach Canada takes to the fishing industry. I wonder what will happen over the next two or three months as a result of the lack of protective policy for fishermen. Will we have the same battle, when losses are suffered by fishermen, in trying to recover for losses? The season will again have to start late, with the resulting loss of income to fishermen. The same merry-go-round will persist to the frustration and discouragement of Newfoundland fishermen.

This problem focuses attention on the related need for implementation of an income support program. I was surprised to hear the Minister of State for Fisheries (Mr. LeBlanc) indicate that it will be another couple of months before it can be put into affect. I feel that he forgot to indicate that the introduction of an income support program is dependent upon the completion of the licensing program now in affect. If that is a fact, the minister's optimism, at least to my mind, leaves some doubt.

Returning to the main topic of my question, I appeal to the minister that some meaningful effort be made to determine icebreaker needs in collaboration with the efforts of the environment department and the fisheries department in a closely co-ordinated plan to provide an adequate icebreaker service which will support a fast deteriorating fishing industry, something which is the result of this lack of support.

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) makes reference to a reply given by the minister on April 15, and if I understood the hon. member correctly he implied that the minister was expecting fishermen to pay the bill for the icebreakers. He shakes his head in disagreement. I hope he does disagree because, in reading the minister's reply, that certainly is not what he said or meant.

I think the hon. member is well aware of the cost involved in supplying icebreakers and the fact that costs in this particular area, as well as other areas in the last few years, have gone up dramatically. I think that is exactly what the minister was referring to in his remarks.

I am sure the hon. member knows Canada has been and continues to be in the forefront in icebreaking technology with regard to hull designs, propulsion systems and techniques of this kind. The ministry has at its disposal about 25 icebreakers, and it is intended to begin building two more this year. Study is under way as to the possibility of a third and larger one.

I might also point out to the hon. member—and this may have some eventual possibilities for the Newfoundland coast—that last winter the ministry conducted very successful research into the use of air cushion vehicles to break up ice. They have broken up ice of quite a thickness. That is the kind of research that is new not only to Canada but to the world.

The hon. member asked on April 15, 1975, what actions were being taken with regard to the specific conditions in his area. As of yesterday the department informed me that all the requests for icebreaker support on the west coast of Newfoundland have been answered. There have been no complaints due to lack of support reported to the ministry. The hon. member may have different reports but, if so, our staff has not seen them.

I am advised that ice has been broken by the Louis St. Laurent, the Sir William Alexander and the Labrador in 12 different harbours on Newfoundland's west coast this spring and that, generally speaking, ice conditions are far better this year than they were last year at this time. That may not be of much consolation to the hon. member, but I believe the coastguard is doing and will continue to do everything it can to help shipping and to develop the kind of technology that would put in service more icebreakers, or more air cushion vehicles, or whatever, to accommodate this area.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION—SUGGESTION STANDING COMMITTEE QUESTION MR. JOHNSON PRIOR TO CONFIRMATION AS VICE-PRESIDENT

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Madam Speaker, on March 24 I asked the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) if he would make a reference which would allow the Standing Committee on Broadcasting to question Mr. A. W. Johnson prior to the confirmation by the government of his appointment as executive vice-president of the CBC. That request was refused. On April 3 the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) announced the appointment of Mr. Johnson to the position, with the very generally accepted understanding that Mr. Johnson will rise to the presidency of that corporation by 1976.

There are three reasons why I want to discuss this question on the adjournment motion tonight. The first has to do with the very serious continuing uncertainty about who determines the mandate and responsibilities of the CBC on a day to day and year by year basis. I realize there is the statute, but there are also various agencies which are expected to have that power and there has been confusion among them. We are all aware in this House of the celebrated conflict between the CBC and the CRTC. The board of directors of the CBC do not know what their mandate is, where it stops and starts. The standing committee of the House of Commons is similarly in the dark. The question of who is to be interpreting the mandate of the CBC and keep it in touch with Canadian requirements needs to be clarified.

The second matter is the general question of why important public appointments have to be made in private. The CBC is important to the nation; it can help to unify us or fragment us. Mr. Johnson himself has said, and I paraphrase him, that it is the most important national institution after parliament. Yet the public had no role in determining what action and what set of ideas is going to guide the future of that institution, nor did parliament have any role in the decision. Parliament was explicity excluded from taking any part at all in even questioning the man who would assume the role. I think it is fair for us, as members of parliament, to ask whether the best man was appointed; whether Mr. A. W. Johnson, for all his qualifications—and I recognize them—is the best man to serve that very important institution at this time in Canada.

Since others have spoken and written in other places of his qualities, let me speak about the weaknesses that should have been examined by the standing committee. For one thing his whole experience has been as a professional public servant. He has served in that rather rarified atmosphere in Regina, Saskatchewan, and Ottawa for almost 30 years. By his training and background he is skilled in compromise but not skilled in innovation. There are those who would argue that innovation is needed in the CBC. He has absolutely no broadcasting experience. He has no particular background in other media or in artistic fields which would help a president of that corporation.

One has to pay some heed to the observation of the Canadian journalist, Christina Newman, who in an article in the Globe and Mail wrote that one of the reasons for this appointment:

... has to do with the ways in which he's unselfishly paid his dues to Liberal régimes for the past 10 years.

Christina Newman there was referring not to partisanship in the normal sense, not to partisanship to a party, but very much to partisanship to a narrow view of Canada, a view which happens to be shared by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and others close to the Prime Minister, such as the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde). It has become well known that the major reason for Mr. Johnson's appointment to this highly sensitive position was that he learned to get along well with people like the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Prime Minister and shares their views about this country.

His appointment is but the most recent in a series of appointments to important public positions of people who happen to share the view of the Prime Minister of Canada, who happened to share the Prime Minister's views on this diverse nation. I, for one, representing a region and being an individual, do not share that point of view. I think there is a danger in loading the top command positions in Canada with people who have a very particular and certainly not universally held view of the nature of the country. Mr. Johnson joins Mr. Michael Pitfield and the ranks of new deputy ministers who were appointed by the Prime Minister on the pretext they are modern, but who in reality were appointed because they share the Prime Minister's particular view of the country. It might even be suggested that this was the mode of choice of those people who were among the most recently appointed to the Supreme Court of Canada.

So here we have a situation where the command positions in a country that is marked by its diversity are held by people whose personal view is strongly centralist and who seem, on their record, to undervalue the diversity which, in my view, must be nurtured if this very diverse country is to survive. This is true of the CBC. All we know of this man who was appointed in privacy is what we read about him. If it is true of the president to be of the CBC, the situation is particularly dangerous with regard to that corporation which can unify this particular, peculiar country only by reflecting its diversity.

These are reservations which I, as a member of parliament committed to the independence, survival and thriving of the CBC, would have preferred to express before the confirmation of the appointment of Mr. Johnson. But we were not given that opportunity. Instead, we were told that it was none of the business of parliament to look into the ideas of the kind of man who is going to guide the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation for the next seven years. I think that was an unfortunate development and an unfortunate precedent. That was the second of my reasons for wanting to raise this question tonight.

My third reason has to do with parliament itself. If the responsible standing committee of parliament, the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts, which passes and approves the estimates of the CBC, cannot even question the man whose personal opinions, stemming from his personal background, are going to guide what he calls the second most important national institution, for the next seven years, what can we do? I think this is a particularly important question to ask now, since so much of the power to affect the decisions of parliament has been accumulated by the treasury benches and taken away from the committees.

Mr. Gustave Blouin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, the views expressed by my hon. friend, the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark), are well known to my minister, to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts and, indeed, to the whole House. On March 27 the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) responded to a letter from the hon. member through which he supported the views expressed by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) on March 11, 1975, in this House during question period.

Further, Madam Speaker, a motion was put to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts to whom the hon. member had been referred by my minister, a motion which would have directed the chairman of that committee to request the government to make a reference which would have allowed the committee to question the government nominee for the position of executive vice-president of the CBC prior to the confirmation by the government of this nominee. The proposed amendment, Madam Speaker, was negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The motion to adjourn to the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 o'clock a.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.17 p.m.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Minister of Finance, but perhaps I could defer it if he will be in the chamber later.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Cannot something be done about having ministers here when the question period starts.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT—POSSIBILITY OF MEETINGS BETWEEN MINISTER AND UNITED STATES COUNTERPART

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce—who is about the only minister present—about the auto pact.

An hon. Member: There are at least five people on the front benches.

Mr. Lawrence: Would the minister be good enough to inform the House if he or his department have applied for or scheduled any meetings with their United States counterparts with respect to the auto pact.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, discussions go on from time to time between officials of the two governments but no date has been set for any meeting between myself and my opposite number in the U.S.

Mr. Lawrence: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister tell us if he intends to arrange for any top level meeting with his U.S. counterpart with respect to the auto pact and the problems we in this country are obviously facing in the auto industry.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, no meeting has been scheduled at present.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if we could obtain either from the Prime Minister or the government House leader information as to whether the Minister of Finance will be in the chamber for the question period.

● (1110)

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance is in the Middle East so he will not be here for the question period. The Acting Minister of Finance is in Vancouver at the opening of the Lester B. Pearson College of the Pacific, I think it is. The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion is second acting and we have the excellent parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton, who is also here.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—POSSIBILITY OF GOVERNMENT PLANS TO RESTRICT PROFIT GROWTH

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Being in a mood of profound optimism, I will address my question to the Prime Minister. It concerns the economic plan of the Minister of Finance that we are presumably going to be presented with one of these days concerning levels that the government considers acceptable for incomes, profits and so on. Will the Minister of Finance, in his forthcoming discussions with the leaders of the trade union movement make clear to them and to members of this House, preferably in advance of that, what position the government is going to take concerning profit levels in the economy? I ask this specifically because the rate of growth of profits, as documented in the most recent report of the Food Prices Review Board, increased by some 100 per cent between 1972 and 1974 and salaries and incomes in the same period increased only by about 50 per cent. Does the government plan to outline in its proposals a method of restricting profit growth and bringing it back to a much more acceptable level?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance, and other ministers engaged with him in this process of consultation and consensus seeking, are talking to various sectors of the economy and putting to them suggestions for restraint. Of course, such suggestions have been made to the employment side.

INFLATION—GOVERNMENT PLANS TO AID UNORGANIZED WORKERS TO GET APPROPRIATE RATE OF INCREASE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Considering that the vast majority of Canadian workers are not members of the trade union movement and therefore have little or no bargaining strength in the economy, and assuming that the government's program gains widespread acceptability, and I have my doubts about that, are there plans available so that the unorganized workers in Canada will be able to get even that rate of increase which the government may think is reasonable?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in the statement the Minister of Finance made at the federal provincial conference, a copy of which was tabled in the House by his excellent parliamentary secretary, it was indicated that the government had concern for the weaker sectors of the economy and those parts of the labour movement that are not organized and that there are provisions for a certain form of catchup for those who have fallen behind. I think the hon. member will see that the government is very concerned about getting greater equity for all parts of the economy.

Mr. Broadbent: Without doubting the concern expressed by the Prime Minister, the fact is that concern will not be translated into action for unorganized workers unless there is some specific mechanism to give them power in the economy to make that possible. Does the government have any plan to give the unorganized workers the effective strength to secure the increasing level of income to which they are entitled?

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. gentleman is asking a question which has to do with the extent of union organization in the country. This government has always taken the position that unionization should be encouraged and union ranks increased. As to whether the government has any specific mechanism in mind for dealing directly with unorganized workers, obviously not, because we have no precise hold on them. The market economy has always, of course, to face this problem; the hon. member knows that when salaries and wages go up they tend to follow in the unorganized sector. Indeed, very often they precede in the unorganized sector.

AGRICULTURE

BEEF AND VEAL COMMISSION—ALLEGED CONFLICT OF INTEREST OF COMMISSIONER

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture about the federal commission of inquiry on beef and veal prices.

Does the Minister of Agriculture know that the commissioners give rise to obvious conflicts of interest since Mr. Maxwell Mackenzie, who is a member of the commission, is one of the directors of International Multifoods, Mrs. Lydia Patry-Cullen comes from Steinberg Limited and there is only one cattle breeder sitting on that Commission? Can the minister assure the House that the commission will really uphold the interests of Canadian consumers and not those of producers or chain stores?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): The members of this commission, as far as I know, are honest individuals. They come from different walks of life and add their knowledge to the commission so that evidence which is presented can properly be weighed. I have no doubt as to the integrity of those who make up this commission.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—PROPOSED MEETING OF UNION LEADERS CONCERNING CONSENSUS ON RESTRAINT—POSSIBILITY OF MEETINGS WITH OTHER GROUPS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister or for the acting Acting Minister of Finance or for the excellent Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance as they may see fit. Can we get any confirmation with regard to the reported meeting of major Canadian union leaders on May 7 to make a decision with respect to the acceptance or rejection of the so-called consensus program? Can any of those three gentlemen I have mentioned give the House any details or information about this prospect?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I have been informed of the meeting but according to my understanding it is a meeting of labour leaders themselves to decide what response to give to the representations and suggestions made to them by the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Labour and other ministers. It is not something in which the government is directly involved.

Mr. Stanfield: Can the Prime Minister or either of the other two gentlemen indicate whether meetings of the other interested groups, the business element, for example, are scheduled for the same purpose, that is, to make decisions with regard to the consensus program and, if so, approximately what dates are likely?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the process outlined by the Leader of the Opposition is the one which is being followed. I saw the item this morning with regard to the meeting which is to take place on May 7. I suspect this meeting has been scheduled in anticipation of discussions which will precede it among various groups within the labour movement; that is the meeting at which, presumably, they will discuss the results of the earlier meetings. The same sort of exercise will be carried out by other groups in the economy.

INFLATION—GOVERNMENT EFFORTS TO HAVE PROGRAM DEVELOPED THROUGH CONSENSUS SEEKING ACCEPTED BY ALL GROUPS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): A final question to the Prime Minister who presumably believes that he and his government are putting forward a sound and equitable program to restrain inflation, one which is important to the welfare of our country and our citizens. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he will make a personal effort to persuade the principal groups in our economy on the labour and business side, before they take decisions, to accept the program that the government has developed in co-operation with them and which the government is putting forward.

• (1120)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have earlier in this process met with groups of labour leaders and groups of business leaders and I have done precisely what the hon. leader suggests I do.

INFLATION—GOVERNMENT POLICY ON RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN CANADIAN AND UNITED STATES DOLLAR

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Preparatory to the hoped for consensus on an anti-inflationary program, would the Prime Minister indicate whether it is government policy that the Canadian dollar should be allowed to drift down and remain at the 96 cents to 98 cents level in terms of the United States dollar?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is Canadian policy that the dollar respond to market forces and that any intervention by the governor of the bank would be only to assure that the float does not have any—

Mr. Stanfield: —dirt in it.

Mr. Trudeau: —any dirt in it.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, further to the Prime Minister's answer, in view of the anti-inflationary consensus discussions and negotiations, would the Prime Minister indicate whether it is at least government policy to counter any further fall in the Canadian dollar, which would at least partly maintain relatively cheap imports in the country and which would in turn be an anti-inflationary measure itself?

Mr. Trudeau: I repeat, Mr. Speaker, the policy of the government is that the Canadian dollar is left free to float and respond to market forces.

INFLATION—SUGGESTION BANK OF CANADA SHOULD RESTRAIN INCREASE IN MONEY SUPPLY

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): A further supplementary question for the Prime Minister, again with the background of our discussion on consensus and anti-inflationary programs. With our money supply having jumped three times as fast under the present Minister of Finance as under his predecessor Mr. Benson, would the Prime Minister take this opportunity, with the Minister of Finance out of the country, to inform the Bank of Canada that any future money increases should be more restrained, and thereby set the framework for a truly anti-inflationary program?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance had occasion to answer the hon. gentleman on a question along the same lines a couple of weeks ago, and I remember remarking on the selective statistics of the hon. member.

Oral Questions

COMMUNICATIONS

VIOLENCE ON TELEVISION—EFFECT OF APPOINTMENT OF ONTARIO COMMISSION ON PROPOSED CRTC HEARINGS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Communications. Now that the government of Ontario has taken the leadership role by the appointment of a royal commission to study violence on the media and its impact on society, may I ask the minister whether he is now prepared to fulfil an undertaking that he made to the House a week or so ago with respect to announcing a date for the holding of public hearings into this matter by the CRTC, or are such hearings postponed because of the appointment of the Ontario royal commission?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, without admitting the gist of the preamble to the hon. member's question, and although I have never agreed to indicate a date to the House, this decision not being my responsibility but that of the autonomous corporation called CRTC, the reply to the question asked by the hon. member who, yesterday, was kind enough to give me advance notice of it, is as follows: I have contacted the Chairman of the CRTC who has advised me that the appointment of this royal commission by the Ontario government was too recent for him to have been able to assess its impact on the CRTC's own plan to have hearings on the subject plan which I had mentioned to the House, and that the CRTC needs to delve into this question a little deeper before deciding on a date or a postponement.

[English]

VIOLENCE ON TELEVISION—POSSIBLE REFERENCE OF SUBJECT MATTER TO COMMITTEE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the indecisiveness of the CRTC in this regard, would the minister be prepared to consider bringing in a reference to the House to have this matter referred to the standing committee on broadcasting, or in the absence of such a reference would he be prepared to discuss the possibility of having the subject matter of Bill C-380 referred to that committee?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I feel that no reference is really necessary; the Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts has the authority to send for CRTC officials and ask all the questions it may care to ask this corporation when it appears concerning its yearly estimates.

INDUSTRY

TEXTILES—FORM OF AID MINISTER INTENDS TO GRANT

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Following his meeting yesterday with the Quebec Minister of Industry and Commerce (Mr. St-Pierre), can he tell us what specific, concrete and new steps, if any, his department intends to take in the near future, that is this month, to prevent other lay offs in the Quebec textile industry, or else, is he willing, very candidly, to admit to the House that he is helpless in the face of this situation?

[English]

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I had a very useful discussion yesterday with the Minister of Industry and Commerce for the province of Quebec. We reviewed the state of the industry, as I have done with others including Liberal members of parliament who have made many representations to me in respect of the condition of the industry, and I have had discussions with the industry itself. I think it is quite clear that as a result of a turn down in the economy of Canada, and a turn down internationally, there is no quick and easy solution in the short term for this industry. As I said, we have taken a number of measures to ensure the security of this industry notwithstanding the difficulties of the present moment.

I have indicated to the House on previous occasions that we have accepted the recommendations of the Textile and Clothing Board. A team went to the Far East immediately following that announcement and made substantial progress in negotiating new restraints with those countries. At the same time we also placed polyester filament yarns on the import control list. They have been on for 30 days, and at the end of a further 30 days we will make our decision as to whether a surtax should be placed on imports of that product.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM AND CAMBODIA—INQUIRY WHETHER AID OFFERED IN FORM OF FOOD OR CASH

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my first question to the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs for the purpose of clarification. He was in the House on April 10 when the Secretary of State for External Affairs answered a question in reference to aid going to the suffering, the hungry and refugees. In that reply he stated:

> Mr. Speaker, I would have to check on the specific organization but in these circumstances it is usually better to provide assistance in the form of cash.

Yesterday the minister answered the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich by stating:

> Mr. Speaker, I cannot speak specifically about the High Commissioner for Refugees, but I can say that the food aid and other aid Canada is providing to international agencies—

I should like that clarified. Is this aid going in the form of food or is it going in cash? Why in one circumstance should the aid go in cash to Viet Nam while the conflict is still going on, yet in the form of food when the conflict is over and the communists have taken over in Cambodia?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the aid is going in both forms, food and cash. The international agencies asked Canada if it would put up part of its aid in the form of food and we complied.

FOOD GATHERED BY CANADIAN FRIENDS OF CHILDREN OF VIET NAM—GOVERNMENT AID IN DELIVERING

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, may I just follow up on that answer. At page 4671 of Hansard for April 10 the minister is reported as having said that he would check into the organization in Canada called the Canadian Friends of Children of Viet Nam in Toronto which has gathered together 100 tons of food, and I would ask if the minister or his department has now had a chance to do so. When I asked if that aid would be delivered the minister said it was only going in the form of cash. Has the minister looked into that organization, and is the government now prepared to see that this food gets to the people who need it?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I understand the circumstances of that particular case there was a relatively small amount of food involved. The sponsors tried to organize transportation but were having very great difficulty. When the government looked at the problem it came to the conclusion that it would be far better for this organization to provide cash rather than have the government put up the cost of moving that very small quantity of food, as the cost would far exceed the amount of aid involved.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, the minister has said that this 100 tons of food is a small amount. To follow up my question, let me bring the minister's attention to the fact that this organization in question named three commercial airlines which would fly the food to Hong Kong from which point a military charter could take the food into Viet Nam. Does the minister consider 100 tons of food a small amount, and has he or his department had any indication in reference to the planning that group carried out in respect of the transportation of that food, as this is somewhat of a contradiction to what he said a moment ago?

● (1130)

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I did look into the circumstances as did the Department of National Defence which was asked to provide a plane for this purpose. I repeat what was said then that the cost of moving this food far exceeds the value of the food itself which is a very small amount in relation to the need or the quantities being provided by Canada under our official aid program.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

DAMAGE TO "S.S. PRINCE GEORGE" BY FIRE—REQUEST FOR REPLACEMENT VESSEL TO CONTINUE SERVICE

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport regarding the S.S. Prince George which operated between Vancouver and Juneau, Alaska, and which recently has been partially damaged by fire. In view of the fact that the CNR has indicated it may permanently discontinue the operation of this vessel, and in view of the fact that American vessels operate in the inner passageway and undoubtedly will pick up this traffic, will the minister be prepared to make a representation to the Canadian National Railways to continue this operation either by securing another vessel or by having the present vessel repaired and put back into service?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Canadian National intends to repair the vessel, at least temporarily, to continue the service this year, but the CN is convinced that its operation is not profitable; doubtless it will have to be convinced to build a new vessel if ever we want the service to be maintained. I am quite willing to take up the matter with the CN to see if it might not be possible to maintain it.

RECOMMENDATION IN DARLING REPORT COASTAL TRADE BE CARRIED IN CANADIAN SHIPS—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO IMPLEMENT—POSITION OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister what progress is being made with regard to the recommendation in the first Darling report which the minister has had now for over two years which would require that by legislation all coastal trade be carried in Canadian bottoms similar to the provision contained in the Jones Act in the United States. When I asked the minister about this about a year ago he said he was waiting for consultation with the Premiers of the coastal provinces. I want to ask the minister whether he has had consultation with the premiers, what progress has been made and when we may expect legislation to implement this particular recommendation by the Darling Commission?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as I answered at that time I consulted with the Atlantic premiers. We discussed the impact it could have on the freight rates and we found agreement. If my memory serves me well, I think cabinet has given notice to the commonwealth countries that we were withdrawing from the commonwealth convention. If this should be done it means that by the end of the year the whole cycle will be completed.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that there is very heavy traffic on the Pacific coast and a good deal of coastal trade on the west coast of Canada, did the minister have any consultation with the Premier of British Columbia? Is it the intention of the government, once the proper notice has been served on the other commonwealth countries, to proceed with legislation applying to both coasts so that the recommendation of the Darling report will be fully implemented?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I had discussion, not with the Premier of British Columbia but with the minister responsible for transportation. One of the problems was that British Columbia wanted to know if we would consider both coasts as one coast, in other words if they would be compelled to use a Canadian ship to go say from Vancouver through the Panama Canal to the other coast. So we agreed that the west and east coasts would be considered separately.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

INCREASES IN COMMUTER FARES—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PREVENT

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Is the minister aware of the outcry that has followed the announcement by Canadian Pacific Railway yesterday of major increases in commuter fares from Montreal and is he prepared to intercede immediately to stop the May 1 implementation date for this exorbitant public transportation fare structure?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Is it CP Air or CP Rail?

Mr. Herbert: CP Rail.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Well, I know that CP Air and Air Canada filed increases with the CTC this morning, too. I will make a special appeal, and will do it formally later today, to the companies to exercise certain restraint because I notice that some of the increases are really exaggerated. I do not see how it would be possible for the public to absorb that. I will surely meet with the companies and try to keep the increase as near the floor as possible.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST OF CANADIAN FORCES LONG PENSIONERS ASSOCIATION FOR ACCREDITATION OF ITS MEMBERS AS VETERANS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Veteran Affairs. Could the minister indicate whether he has received a brief from the Canadian Forces Long Pensioners Association asking for accreditation as veterans in order to qualify for other benefits under the charter for which they do not qualify.

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have not received the brief but have received a copy of it. I suggest that it will be looked at by the various departments concerned and probably some attention may be given to it.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the Canadian Forces Long Pensioners Association presented a brief to the Prime Minister's office and, while possibly he may not have seen it, I am wondering whether he would exhibit his concern in the matter by asking that the Minister of National Defence and the Minister of Veterans Affairs co-operate in reviewing this matter so that these people would receive the consideration they deserve.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, first may I repeat that, although I do not know whether the brief has been received, I can assure the hon. member that every brief I receive gets the attention it deserves.

NATIONAL PARKS

INCREASE IN ENTRANCE FEES—REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development if he would be good enough to return to his chair. In view of the number of complaints the minister has received about the large increase he announced on entrance fees to our national parks, is he prepared to review his position and be more realistic in the amount of increases in these entrance fees.

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, we looked carefully at this matter on several occasions and, as I indicated in the House before, even with these increases recovery represents roughly 17 per cent or 18 per cent of the total operating costs. We feel that a subsidy by the taxpayers at large of 82 per cent is still a very substantial subsidy and that asking the users to pay 18 per cent is not unreasonable.

Mr. Stewart (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my supplementary to the Prime Minister. As the Prime Minister and his government have asked all Canadians to practice restraint, will the Prime Minister intervene and ask the minister responsible for our national parks to practice restraint and reduce the announced increases in entrance fees that run from 500 per cent to 1000 per cent.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this seems to be a representation or an argument.

AGRICULTURE

POTATOES—SUGGESTED PROCESSING OF SURPLUS FOR USE IN FOOD AID PROGRAM

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the genial Minister of Agriculture in reference to a statement by the Secretary of State for External Affairs to the effect that CIDA and the Department of Agriculture were co-operating in an effort to make better use of agricultural production for food aid needs. Can the minister advise if steps are being taken to carry out a crash program to process this country's surplus potatoes so that in a hungry world the outrage of wasted potatoes will not follow that of rotten eggs.

● (1140)

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, even before the announcement was made we had discussions with the CIDA officials and the processing industry, to find out just how many potatoes could be processed which could possibly be used in aid programs. There are very few countries in the world where procedures for processing potatoes into flaked or powdered form can be carried out, and as to whole potatoes, there are no areas that we could find where they can be used in their original form. We have investigated all that, and the processing industry is being asked to process as many potatoes as they possibly can. I understand they are doing it, and our next step will be to find areas where those processed potatoes can be sent through aid programs.

CABLEVISION—POSSIBLE REQUIREMENT THAT COMMERCIAL MESSAGES ORIGINATING IN UNITED STATES BE DELETED—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jim Balfour (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. Is it to be the government's policy to require as a condition of licence renewal for cable broadcasters in Ontario that commercial messages originated in the United States be deleted from their programming and, if so, why?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, that was required of some cable broadcasters. It even led to legal proceedings and there is an appeal in one case. I could check but I do not think universal regulations applied to all cable television companies in Ontario. I shall inquire and report further to the hon. member.

Could he check with his officials to find out what is the reason for the apparent delay in the construction work at the Halifax airport because if the delay continues it seems to me that the pyramids of Egypt were built at a much faster pace than the one at which the construction work is being carried out.

CROWSNEST PASS RATES—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE NO CHANGE MADE WITHOUT CONSULTATION WITH PRODUCERS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. It results from his reply to Premier Blakeney in Saskatchewan following the resolution which was passed regarding the possible removal of the Crowsnest Pass rates in which he stated that the government will not make changes in the transportation field that cannot be shown to be of significant benefit to the people of Saskatchewan. Since the Minister of Justice has already thrown out suggestions that grain producers might be compensated directly through schemes other than through the Crowsnest Pass arrangement, would such a plan be sufficient to cause the government to consider the removal of the Crowsnest Pass agreement?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the telegram speaks for itself and it answers the question put by the hon. member.

Mr. Korchinski: Is there a study presently being conducted which might produce a plan other than the Crowsnest Pass arrangement to compensate wheat producers?

Mr. Trudeau: Not that I know of, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Korchinski: May I ask a final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker? Can the Prime Minister say whether the absolute approval of grain farmers will be necessary before the Crowsnest pass agreement is tampered with, even though other groups might favour such a removal?

Mr. Trudeau: I did not hear the hon. member. The absolute approval of what group?

Mr. Korchinski: Of grain producers. Would the absolute approval of grain producers be necessary before the Crowsnest Pass agreement is tampered with, even though other groups may favour such a removal?

Mr. Trudeau: It is a completely hypothetical question.

DREDGING—GOVERNMENT PLANS TO DO WORK WHEN COMPANIES INVOLVED UNDER INDICTMENT

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the dredging season in Canada is just about to begin and that there are a number of jobs to be carried out, both large and small, and most of the companies involved are now under indictment, has the Prime Minister or any member of his government evolved a policy to have this type of necessary dredging, in land and on the sea board, carried out? Can he say also what security will be provided and to what extent the requirements of the work can be completed, particularly in view of the unusual situation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Public Works answered a similar question a few weeks ago. I will refer to it to see whether anything can be added to what he said then.

JAMES BAY HYDRO PROJECT—REPORT ON ENVIRONMENT—EFFECT ON NATIVES

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

On last March 24, a group of experts published a report on the environment concerning the James Bay power development. Could the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development say whether experts in his department studied the report and whether he intends to make recommendations to the Quebec government to protect the environment and avoid as much as possible future complications in that vast territory?

[English]

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, our officials are certainly aware of this report. Its contents have been made well known to the Indian and the Innuit people involved in the negotiations concerning Jame Bay. They hope that the recommendations in the report will be taken into account in these negotiations, for instance keeping up the flow in the Eastmain river and the problem of the Caniapiscau river. These concerns are being taken into account in the negotiations preceding the final settlement.

REGIONAL WAGE POLICY—REQUEST FOR RE-EXAMINATION

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the fact that in both the public and the private sectors regional wage disparities have a double discriminatory effect in terms of the best talent leaving the region and the corollary effect that my province, for example, is disadvantaged by the loss of some of its best talent, its most capable people, can the President of the Treasury Board say whether he will seriously examine present government policies with a view to setting an example for the private sector as well?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we are continuously studying this problem. Everybody knows that it is extremely difficult; some areas would like to have national rates, others regional rates, but perhaps I could say to the hon. member that last week the New Brunswick Minister of Finance complained that our officials in that province are so well paid that we take civil servants away from them.

FOOD PRICES REVIEW BOARD

ALLEGED REFUSAL OF BOARD TO MAKE INFORMATION AVAILABLE TO OTHER BOARDS OR COMMISSIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Although the minister was able on Wednesday to tell me that certain information is being sent directly to a commission in Manitoba, will he deal with the main point of the question that I have been putting to him, namely, the refusal of the Food Prices Review Board to co-operate with other boards and commissions which are making inquiries into food prices and related problems, and will he get in touch with the Food Prices Review Board and suggest that it co-operate with such other agencies?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I do not doubt, Mr. Speaker, that the commission is prepared and willing to cooperate with any other agency in Canada. In my opinion, the hon. member must understand that if the commission receives confidential information and gives those who provide it the assurance that it will not be divulged, it is very natural for the commission to keep its promise and not to reveal the information so obtained.

● (1150)

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister aware that Mrs. Plumptre has declared in writing that no such information will be given to any other government agency, even when the companies concerned request that this be done? Is this co-operation?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: I have the impression that the hon. member is stirring up a storm in a teacup, since in any case the information he seems interested in has been passed to the association in Manitoba.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A point of order, Mr. Speaker. The minister has missed the point again.

POST OFFICE

ALLEGED INEFFICIENT DELIVERY—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO IMPROVE

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): A question for the Postmaster General, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister aware of, and has he investigated, the statement by Mrs. L. T. Brodie of Toronto that a letter from her hospital informing her that she has cancer and should appear for more tests took some 12 days to travel the eight miles between the hospital and her home?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): No, Mr. Speaker. I read the press report and asked for a report. As you can well understand, I cannot investigate all the complaints that arise from an operation that is 99 per cent efficient and one per cent inefficient. In an operation that handles five billion—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mackasey: If you want an answer I will give you an answer.

An hon. Member: A truthful answer.

Mr. Mackasey: A truthful answer. I hope the hon. gentleman is asking the question in order to obtain information. Five billion pieces of mail are handled annually with an inefficiency rate of one per cent. I am sure the hon. gentleman can figure out the potential for these types of complaints. Nevertheless, we are looking into that particular problem.

Mr. Beatty: A supplementary question. In light of the fact that the Post Office system seems to be breaking down in a number of very important cases, would it be the minister's advice to Canadians that if they have important messages to transmit they should find some other way to send them, either by telephone or courier in order to ensure that they get there safely and on time as opposed to relying on the Post Office system?

Mr. Mackasey: That is a very valid question. If people can find a less expensive way of mailing or delivering mail from Newfoundland to Vancouver by some other method for eight cents I would advise them to go ahead and do so.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is a supplementary one. In view of the fact that a petition mailed by the mayor of Red Deer to my office on February 20 arrived there on April 14, and this problem was not created in the Post Office at Red Deer, can the minister tell this House whether there will be a time when there will be a postal service that Canadians can rely on?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

SECURITY AT OLYMPIC GAMES—NUMBER OF PERSONNEL INVOLVED AND COST

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice as Acting Solicitor General. In light of the fact that the RCMP will be participating with the Montreal city police in providing security against the possible presence of guerillas and other troublemakers at the 1976 Olympics, can the minister advise the House how many members of the special national crime branch, if any, will be involved, and how much federal money has been assigned to this particular scheme? As there will be so many different agencies involved, perhaps the minister could indicate who will ultimately be in charge of this giant security operation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The information ought to be sought in another way.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PROTECT NATIVE HANDICRAFT PRODUCTS

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Has the minister received several hundred individually signed petition letters from the Native Women's Association of Manitoba and would he, perhaps, in conjunction with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, see to it that measures are taken to prevent the influx of native-like handicrafts into Manitoba? This undercuts the market of authentic native handmade goods in that province.

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, from looking at the list of the mail coming in, I am not aware of any volume on this particular problem. It is a genuine problem, however. We have endeavoured to promote the stretched beaver pelt as the symbol of the Canadian Indians' handicraft and have endeavoured to sell Canadians on the idea that is the symbol they should look for when buying Canadian handicrafts. It is an ongoing problem, however, and as the hon. member is probably aware a couple of recent cases on that subject had a successful outcome in Ontario.

INDUSTRY

SYSCO STEEL—REQUEST FOR AID IN FINDING MARKETS TO AVOID FURTHER LAY-OFFS

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In light of the fact that there has been a lay-off of 200 employees at the Sysco steel plant in Sydney and in light of the fact that the management now says there is a softening in the steel market which was not there before according to their own statements, is the minister prepared to make any assistance available through his department to find further markets for steel of that plant? Has he been contacted by any representatives of management of that plant requesting any type of assistance?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether we have received any requests from the company, but we have been very active in trying to promote its products. A member of that company was on a mission that I took to Latin America last year and I think it was a very successful mission for him. Another point I might make is that a senior member of my department has been lent to the Nova Scotia government and has been working with them and Sysco in making plans for a larger and more efficient steel industry in Nova Scotia.

Mr. Muir: I thank the hon. Minister for his reply. May I ask if he would take the initiative to have his officials talk to the management of Sysco steel and offer any assistance possible to eliminate the necessity for laying off further workers at the plant?

Mr. Gillespie: I would be pleased to do that, Mr. Speaker. I might add that we have been very active in helping Sysco to obtain the supplies of pelletized iron that were so important to its future plans.

AIR CANADA

REQUEST FOR INQUIRING INTO RELATIONSHIP OF McGREGOR TRAVEL AGENCY—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport which I am sure he should be able to answer. He has been in constant contact with his constitutional legal adviser, and another even more dubious source. Is the minister now able to answer the question asked by the hon. member for Central Nova yesterday? Is he able to make a statement in regard to the question involving the consultant's fees alleged to have been paid by Air Canada? In particular, could he deal with the question of why Air Canada did not advise him that this matter was coming up yesterday, in light of the fact that the hon. member for Central Nova had advised Air Canada that he would be raising it?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for having asked the question.

The question the hon. member for Central Nova asked me yesterday was extremely pertinent. It seems that some absolutely irregular activities were going on between Air Canada and the McGregor travel agency. I have asked the President of Air Canada to be here at two o'clock this afternoon, and we will see to it that a full inquiry be launched so that we will know all the facts. In my opinion, the question asked by the hon. member for Central Nova was well founded, and I thank him for having raised it. How come I did not know of it before? The inquiry will show why I am not informed when there is something going on.

[English]

Mr. Baldwin: I have been trying.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): You know, there are so many things going on in the department that I do not know anything about.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with respect to the report that has just been tabled. Yesterday the government House leader said that on Monday the House would be proceeding with Bill C-44. There was some discussion across the floor about the matter and there was discussion between us afterwards. Could the minister now tell us what bill we will be dealing with on Monday?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for asking his question. Because the weekend intervenes, we have decided to call Bill C-44 on Tuesday rather than on Monday. The business for Monday, unless there are further agreements among House leaders, will be the continuation or opening of debate on Bill C-20.

EXPLANATION OF PROCEDURE TO BE FOLLOWED UNDER PROVISIONAL ORDER

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) having indicated his intention to make a statement on motions at this time, it becomes the first such statement to be made since the provisional, or experimental order was invoked by the House to be effective on the first sitting day after the Easter break.

The terms and conditions under which statements on motions are to be made are not described in detail, but there are two points of guidance for the Chair. The first, taken from the report of the committee as printed in Votes and Proceedings of March 14, is the consensus that statements by ministers and responses thereto ought to be limited. The report of the committee reads in part as follows:

> On statements by ministers, as listed in section (2) of this Standing Order, a minister of the Crown may make a short factual announcement or statement of government policy. A spokesman for each of the parties in opposition to the government may comment briefly thereon and members may be permitted to address questions thereon to the minister. Mr. Speaker shall limit the time for such proceedings as he deems fit.

Today we shall hear the first of such statements. I presume that the only guideline I can follow is that the minister's statement should be brief and factual—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: Hope springs eternal.

Mr. Speaker: —and that there will be an even briefer statement by each of the opposition spokesmen. I say that it should be even briefer, because apparently the intention of the order is that there shall follow, at the discretion of the Chair also, a short question period in which members may address questions to the minister solely on the subject of his statement.

If, at the discretion of the Chair, questions may be asked following brief statements in response, it follows, surely, that statements in response must be extremely brief and concise in setting out the position of the party on whose behalf the member is speaking, because, as I say, there will be a brief period in which members in general will be at liberty to ask the minister questions.

That is the general procedure I propose to follow this morning. There will be a brief statement by the minister, a very brief comment by each opposition spokesman, followed, for a limited period, by questions.

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, although we are all groping in the dark, Your Honour is doing so even more than some members, because at least some of us served on the procedure committee and know what we had in mind. I suggest that there was some feeling in the committee that it might be possible, for reasons of common sense, to allow the questions to precede the statement—

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Baldwin: I do not want to debate the point. We cannot do it. I merely point out that if we are to respond to the statement, it is sometimes necessary to ask for clarification and inquire into meaning. I think that practice is followed in other jurisdictions, and I suggest that that is what we had in our minds.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. With all respect to the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), I think Your Honour's suggestion was more in line with what we had in mind. It is correct that we had in mind that responses from the first spokesman for each opposition party should be brief. I think Your Honour has made a good point, that they should be even briefer than the minister's statement so that anything left in doubt can be resolved in the brief question period which follows. It seems to me the question period must come after the statement.

Mr. Speaker: In any event, as it fell to someone to choose how the order should be interpreted, I made the choice and I think we ought to proceed this morning in the way I outlined. It is to be hoped, this being the first such statement, we shall learn from our procedure. If there are to be modifications and suggestions regarding the format we shall use this morning, certainly those can be considered in due course and the procedure can be adapted as we go along. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

AGRICULTURE

CHANGES IN SUBSIDY FORMULA FOR INDUSTRIAL MILK AND CREAM PRODUCTION

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I would have much preferred it if some other minister had made his statement on this first occasion. I understood my statement was to be brief. I will try to be brief.

For some time the members of the dairy industry and the government have been working to build a long-term dairy policy. Working together, we formed the Canadian Dairy Commission in 1967. That was a big step in the right direction. It saved dairy farmers from abrupt swings in the market. It also provided security against barrel-bottom prices to milk producers. Now it is time to take the next step. That is why, starting today, the returns to industrial milk and cream producers will be adjusted to changing production costs. We will use a formula to do this.

As you know, at the beginning of each April a new dairy year begins and producers wait anxiously to hear the government announce the support levels for the coming year. Rapid increases in the prices of dairy inputs have made their situation even more urgent. Dairy farmers have to tie up too much money in land, buildings, and stock to live from year to year. That is the reason behind our move to formula pricing. It will give needed security to both producers and consumers.

This formula will gear industrial milk and cream producers' incomes to input prices. What it means to the efficient, hard-working farmer is that neither inflation nor a big jump in cash costs will leave him in an income squeeze. To consumers this will mean a constant supply of nutrition-packed milk. Although it will guarantee producers a fair return, consumers should realize that this also will protect them from rip-off milk prices at the farm gate.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Whelan: When people call milk the perfect food, they are right on target, and this government is not going to risk having any consumer go to the supermarket for milk and being turned away.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Two hon. members are seeking the floor on points or order. I think I can anticipate their nature. I wonder if we might allow the minister to finish, and then hear the points of order?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, no with respect. It is precisely, shall we say, the clownish way in which the minister is trying to interpret the meaning of "short statement" which makes nonsense of our interpretation system. Members here who do not want to listen to this statement in the English language are entitled to hear it as much as possible through the very excellent interpretation service of the House. But there is no interpreter on the staff who can translate the minister's delivery of this statement, with all its limitations as to accent and presentation. It is on that point I rise. We are not here to make this procedure clownish. The House will be reasonable, but let us not make a farce of this procedure, and it is now a farce.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order, to express views similar to those expressed by my colleague for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). I hope, since this is the first such statement, that in future the kind of thing we are witnessing will not happen again. The statement is important. The length of the statement ought to be weighed in the balance against its importance and, certainly, a statement is not made more brief merely because it is read in the way this statement was being read just now. May I suggest that you, Mr. Speaker, take under advisement the propriety of reviewing statements, in advance so that you can decide on the basis of their length whether they are proper. Otherwise this whole system will break down.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Both comments are valid. This, of course, is the first occasion and the minister, perhaps remembering my admonition, has been trying to rush the statement in order, thereby, to make it brief. Perhaps it would be better to make statements factual. Let the minister take his time in delivery. Let us proceed on that basis and perhaps we can learn from this experience.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, there was so much noise in the House that I did not know what members were saying. I understood I was to make a short presentation. It was to be as short as possible and the question period afterwards would make clear matters that were not contained in the statement. I could have made a longer statement, of the sort that will be released later for public information, of the sort I presented before cameras, to milk producers and to the processing industry earlier today, for their information. This is done all the time. I was trying to be as clear and as quick as I could, and I apologize if I ran too fast. If you want, I can start over again.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

● (1210)

Mr. Whelan: The target price today is—

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Read it intelligently.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps hon. members have had as much enjoyment about the new procedure as they propose this morning. Possibly we can now pay a little more attention and get the statement on the record.

Mr. Whelan: As a minister and a member of parliament, I think I have some rights too. We are criticized for not making statements. I had hoped to have had this here several minutes before eleven o'clock, but I understand there is no real deadline as to when it should be here. There was a mixup and it was not delivered to the leaders' offices as soon as it should have been. I think the dairy policy is very important. I am of the opinion that the opposition does not want to hear this.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: The target price today is $11.02 per hundred-weight for industrial milk. This will be the starting base for the formula. Future changes in support levels will reflect changes in labour and cash costs which will make up 80 per cent of the formula. Forty-five per cent of this formula is based on the cash costs of producing milk. Thirty-five per cent is based on labour earnings adjusted by the consumer price index. In addition, a number of other supply and demand factors will be taken into account.

If, midway in the dairy year, the returns adjustment formula goes up or down more than 4 per cent, this will result in a change in producer returns. This change, up or down, will come from the marketplace. The support levels will not be changed more often than once every three months. It is important to understand that the government will be reducing direct support payments to dairy producers. Our aim, over the long haul, is to have producers get every cent of their income from the marketplace.

There is another point I want to make clear. Under this policy it is more important than ever before for producers to gear production to known market needs and opportunities. In many ways the dairy industry is unique in Canadian agriculture. That is why we have special support programs and controls for this industry. I met representatives of the dairy industry this morning to explain how the long-term policy will work. We discussed details of this policy, as I had promised in the announcement I made on April 1. This, Mr. Speaker, is a big step for the dairy industry.

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, I will bear in mind the new rules of the House in replying very briefly to the minister's statement.

Months ago, and on many occasions in this House, members on this side and the dairy farmers of Canada were assured of the introduction of a long-term dairy policy. Efforts have been made by those in the industry to meet with government officials for discussion on this subject. Unfortunately little or no meaningful discussion has been held.

It is true that interim, but insufficient, adjustments have been made, the latest of which was announced during the Easter recess. The industrial milk subsidy at that time was established at $11.02. The dairy farmers of Canada had requested at that time a support level of $11.60.

Cost of production figures for many dairy producers indicate the cost of production of milk ranging in the area of $12 to $14 a hundred, and some in fact have even reached a higher figure.

I suggest that the general approach is in the proper direction, but if the base price to be used is too low, which I suggest is the case in this particular situation, then the end result will not be obtained.

Will the minister indicate the reaction of the dairy farmers to his statement? What was their reaction when he met with them this morning? My colleagues on this side of the House will have questions regarding the composition of the index to be used, and other related matters. I cannot over emphasize the importance of the dairy industry to this country and the contribution it makes to the entire economy and the health of the nation.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, it is not easy to follow Irish frustration travelling at 200 words a minute. I can understand the minister saying that he wished some other minister were making this statement, because if ever I saw a bitter pill very thinly sugar-coated, it is the statement which the minister just made.

The important paragraph of the minister's statement is as follows: "It is important to understand that the government will be reducing direct support payments to dairy producers. Our aim, over the long haul, is to have producers get every cent of their income from the marketplace."

The minister said in his statement, and I quote: "When people call milk the perfect food, they are right on target." The minister has a great capacity for stating the obvious as though it were a revelation from the supernatural. If milk were the perfect food and if it is essential, particularly for children, then almost every country in the world should have subsidized milk production, both to the producers and the consumers. The United States has a school lunch program and free milk. For years the United Kingdom has had subsidized basic foods, of which milk is one. They have done this because they recognize that the poor in any country, and particularly the children, ought to have certain basic foods at prices which they can afford to pay.

What is the minister now announcing? Having cancelled the consumer subsidy a few months ago, the minister is now telling us they are going to reduce the direct support payments. When he says that the producers will now have to get every cent of their income from the marketplace, he is in effect saying the consumer will have to pay more for milk. People with large families who cannot afford to pay higher prices for milk will have to reduce the amount of milk which their children consume. I say this is a backward step, and a policy which any minister and any government ought to be ashamed to announce.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to deplore very briefly the offhand and jesting manner in which the minister announced a policy which will have such serious effects.

It seems to me that for once, when he could have had the opportunity to take a position about a dairy policy, he could have done so seriously, particularly out of respect for Parliament which is trying a new method to update our procedure.

Mr. Speaker, the minister announced today that, from now on, dairy policy will be based on input costs, including 45 per cent production costs and 35 per cent manpower costs. The minister said that, from now on, this policy will be reviewed every three months instead of once a year, on April 1. Those are the points which have impressed and interested us and which we support. However, we find the pricing method extremely complex especially as concerns the famous 4 per cent mentioned on page 2, to modify the producer's income.

Mr. Speaker, if the government—and here I agree with the previous speaker—uses this policy to withdraw from this field by saying that we must also understand that the government will reduce the direct support payments to milk producers, this will mean automatically, because of the laws of supply and demand, an increase in consumer prices.

Mr. Speaker, I do not have confidence in the statement of the minister for a very simple reason. Last year, the minister announced a consumer subsidy. Indeed, the government invested $109 million for this purpose, but at the same time it imported 24,749,000 pounds of milk at an average rate of 54 cents a pound, which it sold at an average price of 95 cents. In other words, the government took from the consumer what it had politically announced as being a consumer subsidy. In fact, the consumer had to pay. Mr. Speaker, I do not question the good intentions of the minister, but if we look at the complexity of this formula, we have no guarantee that the consumer and the producer will be protected. However, Mr. Speaker, I hope very sincerely that the methods used for the implementation of this new policy will be simplified so that for once the dairy farmer understands how his own income is established.

[English]

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, now that the government has given the consumers of this country the bad news that it intends to rescue the dairy industry on the backs of the hard-pressed consumers of this country, and in view of the fact that the price of fluid milk has risen by 37.7 per cent already in this year and represented the highest single rise in the consumer price index last month at 2.2 per cent, and in view of the findings of the Food Prices Review Board that there is a serious calcium deficiency in the diets of Canadians and that this could adversely affect the health of Canadians because of the importance of milk to young Canadians, I ask the minister what he intends to do with respect to the retail price of fluid milk? Does he propose to provide some kind of subsidy, or is he giving consideration to the provision of a special program to get milk to the children of the country?

Mr. Whelan: The policy I have announced has nothing to do with fluid milk at all. It relates to industrial milk products, and I think this should be made clear. The distribution of fluid milk is carried out by the provincial marketing boards; each province runs its own program for the sale of fluid milk. We have not cut out the subsidies. We have actually added to the subsidies for industrial milk products. With respect to the one that is used particularly by people in outlying areas in Canada, skimmed milk powder, we have added to that subsidy; there will be no increased cost to the consumer with respect to that commodity whatsoever.

We feel that provision of social benefits is an area for the social services of the nation and for the social services of the provinces, to take care of those people who need help, rather than working through a subsidy program, through our farmers. We have said we will not cut back the subsidy unless such action is warranted. We will review the situation from time to time.

Mr. McGrath: How can the minister reconcile the reply he has just given with the words which appear in his statement—"our aim over the long haul is to have producers get every cent of their income from the marketplace"? Other references are made to fluid milk during the course of the statement. How can he reconcile this with the statement he has just made? Surely he has a responsibility to consumers of this country for whom fluid milk is an important part of their diet.

Mr. Whelan: We certainly realize that, and I realize it as much as anybody, perhaps more than anybody, because we are dealing with products which consumers use. And we cannot produce them unless they can afford to buy them. We say that over the long haul these programs will be arranged in such a way that those people will be in a position to buy the products in the same way as anybody else in society. People receiving lower incomes will be taken care of by the social services of the country, but those social service programs will not be run by the federal Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): In light of the fact that according to the minister's statement the formula is based only on direct cost, although the hon. gentleman mentioned that the real producer squeeze arises from the cost of land, buildings and capital assets, and in light of the fact that all representations by the producers to the minister have emphasized the necessity of including in any formula that portion of production cost related to the cost of borrowing money, or capital assets, will the minister tell us whether any input in that formula arises from capital cost and, if not, will he explain why not?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I said that the 45 per cent and the 35 per cent made up the 80 per cent; there was 20 per cent left, and this comes from that area. This amount will be reviewed from time to time. The costs which vary a good deal from farm to farm, and which are not the same from time to time, will have to be reviewed in the year-end review.

Mr. Jarvis: The minister's aim in the long haul, to use his words, is to have the producers get every cent from the marketplace. What target date does the minister have in mind for the complete elimination of the subsidy on industrial milk?

Mr. Whelan: It should be quite a number of years. There is really no set time. We are thinking in terms of possibly ten years. The program we have set up now will be reviewed from time to time; it is for five years.

Mr. Jarvis: What was the response from the dairy industry? Was it acquiescent or enthusiastic this morning?

Mr. Whelan: The meeting was still going on when I left there. The dairy industry all over Canada was well represented, both the producing side and the processing side. I would say the reception was exceptionally good.

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): I am intrigued, Mr. Speaker, that the minister should still be making statements outside the House albeit to a very receptive audience, one I could not object to, but could the minister tell us how he intends to determine the costs which will go to make up the input? Does he propose to use figures supplied by Statistics Canada? How is he going to dream up these costs?

Mr. Whelan: We use 35 per cent for wages etc. on the CPI index. The rest will come from the input costs the producers have to bear.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I have three short questions to ask the minister. The first has to do with his statement, "Consumers should realize that this also will protect them from rip-off milk prices at the farm gate." What indication is there that rip-off milk prices have been charged at the farm gate? To what extent will the measure he has just proposed remove such an occurrence if it has actually taken place?

Mr. Whelan: Dairy products are sold under the Dairy Commission. The formula is based on a set price with set margins. There have been instances every now and again when skimmed milk powder sold for consumer use has not been sold taking into consideration the subsidy we pay on skimmed milk powder for human consumption. If we did not have this formula, if we did not have this commission, it would not be easy to make sure that all consumers in Canada are treated in the same way.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): When the minister talks about reducing direct support payments to dairy producers, what reduction will there be, what form will that reduction take, and over what period of time will it be made?

Mr. Whelan: That would depend upon the conditions existing in the country at that time. We do not intend to add any more money to the subsidy, but the wage index in Canada, the CPI in Canada, will all be affected by what the market can bear and by what our supplies are; if we have an abundance of supply and we are over-producing, we can be in real difficulty if we do not have markets for those programs. That, too, will affect the price set for producers. The producers recognize this. I do not think there is any more I can say on that aspect at this time.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): My final supplementary has to do with the minister's statement that producers will have to get every cent of their income from the marketplace. In answer to the hon. member for St. John's East, (Mr. McGrath) the hon. gentleman said it would now be up to the provinces, with their various social welfare departments, to make sure that adequate dairy products are available to those with low incomes. If that is the policy of the government I want to ask the minister why, only last year, the government introduced a subsidy for milk? At that time the minister felt that the government had some responsibility for seeing to it that milk prices, for low income families particularly, were kept at a level they could afford. Why has the government changed its policy and now says it has no responsibility in this matter?

● (1230)

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I want to make one thing clear and plain. I did not isolate the government's social service responsibility to the provinces. If I did say that, I did not mean to. The federal government has a certain responsibility and we pay into provincial programs. I am sure the hon. member knows that as well as anyone. Why we put the five cent a quart consumer subsidy on milk was because the other programs had not moved. We had not moved on indexing pensions and so on, we had not changed family allowances, we had not lowered income tax. All these things we have done have benefited people much more than the $100 million. The criticism that this government gets most of all is for spending. I point out that over 50 per cent of the extra spending by the government has been on social services.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, on page 2 of his statement, the minister said he would consider a number of other factors concerning supply and demand. Can the minister say if these factors include those relating to export and transportation and, if so, in what proportion?

[English]

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the pageboy was handing me a note and I did not get the full context of that question. I apologize.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I have another question. Does the minister mean that, under the general philosophy of this statement, the dairy policy is going to be revised every three months to ensure a minimum income to the producers?

[English]

Mr. Whelan: Only if it changes more than 4 per cent, Mr. Speaker. If it does not change any more than 4 per cent, there will be no change in the price of the commodity.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I am coming back to my first question.

The minister said in his statement that he would consider a number of other factors related to supply and demand. In these other factors, does he consider the export and transport costs of these products and, if so, in what proportion?

[English]

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the judgment factors we speak of arise from the world supply of industrial milk powder. At the present time I believe the producers subsidize export sales of that at 16 cents a hundredweight out of the returns they receive. There is a world supply position of milk powder that is greater than it was before, so this could affect the returns to the farmers if they have to contribute more to be able to compete in the world export market. By the producers contributing we do not get into any trouble with GATT or any of our international trading partners, and the dairy farmers are quite responsive to the suggestion.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is in the discretion of the Chair, under the terms of the provisional order, to limit debate or the question period as the Chair sees fit. This is the first of such periods and I do not propose to limit debate severely. However, in my opinion, I must say frankly that the subject seems to have been covered pretty thoroughly in questions.

There are three other members seeking to ask questions, the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers), the hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo (Mr. Beatty) and the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. MacFarlane). I propose to allow those members to ask their questions, but I would ask them please not to repeat any of the ground gone over already. If they have fresh ground they want to cover with the minister, would they please ask brief questions so we can conclude the matter? The hon. member for Red Deer.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister tell the House, when a price change is to be made, what will trigger the action and who will have input into establishing the cost of production? Will it be the national farm organizations, or the provincial agricultural departments, or is it wholly within the federal Department of Agriculture?

Mr. Whelan: It is mainly the Canadian Dairy Commission which has worked out the formula. It was said earlier that there had been no consultation. If there was any more consultation on any subject than there has been on this, then I do not know what it is. We will continue on with our discussions and work on the formula, but we have made a commitment that our findings will be published every quarter.

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I hope you will not feel that I am abusing the guidelines you set by asking questions respecting the eventual elimination of subsidies, but I want to approach the matter from a different angle. In light of the minister's announced intention eventually to phase out the subsidies and have all the increased costs to producers met at the consumer level, what assurances can the minister give milk producers that as the cost of milk, both fluid and industrial, rises at the consumer level and becomes less economic to buy compared with competing products on the market shelf, consumption of milk will not drop and that they will be forced to curtail production as a result?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the total program is geared to guaranteeing that there will be constant production. As a result of the measures we took last year, Canada has had a lesser reduction in production than nearly every other nation of the world. Our dairy products also, even with the present program, are comparable with any nation of the world, and in most instances at a lower price to the consumers. Last year when we used the subsidy of five cents a quart, costs were rising faster than the general CPI. That has changed at the present time.

I repeat that we never said that we would discontinue the subsidy to producers. We said we would not enlarge it, and we hope that as a result of our programs more of it will be passed on to the consuming public. I know I am repeating myself, but these social programs will take over the extra cost to consumers on fixed and low incomes, etc., who cannot afford this commodity. They will be taken care of by that kind of program.

Mr. Beatty: I have a brief supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the subsidy on skim milk powder. In light of the fact that experience in many cities has been that the introduction of the federal subsidy on skim milk powder has trapped supermarkets, so that if they are to take advantage of the subsidy they are required to take a loss on the sale of skim milk powder, and as a consequence they dropped certain brands and sizes of packages affected by the government refusal to allow them to increase prices at the consumer level, is the minister reconsidering representations made by the National Dairy Council and by the Retail Council of Canada suggesting that the retailers be allowed, if they collect the subsidy, at least to cover their costs?

Mr. Whelan: In the first place, Mr. Speaker, the retailers do not collect the subsidy; we pay it to the processors. In turn, the processors apply it to the retail outlets. The retailer is allowed a margin on this. Some do not think they are getting a big enough margin, and in some instances they are selling it as a stock loss leader. There is no real way they are bound by what they can do with it except sell it. I should not say there is no way; there is a certain margin they are allowed to have, but no higher than that.

Mr. Beatty: Some of them, when the price was frozen, sold it as a loss leader.

Mr. Whelan: There is an inquiry going on at the present time by the Food Prices Review Board just on this very point, and it is quite detailed. I know there are some difficulties but I do not foresee them to be insurmountable. They are difficulties that can be overcome. We agreed today to work out a proper program with the trade so they are treated in a fair fashion.

Mr. Gus MacFarlane (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is somewhat related but deals more with the small dairy producer. In the minister's discussions did any of the dairy producers indicate that they had a fear that because of the increase in price their market will drop off? If that is the case, is there anything within the minister's organization to give them an opportunity to indicate that it might not be feasible for them to continue production? Is there any kind of assistance they could look for if this were to occur?

Mr. Whelan: There is no doubt that the program is one that is geared to the efficient producer. It is also geared to protect the small producer. The figures used here to work out the base price of $11.02 a hundredweight were worked out on a herd size of 17 milking cows. It was not worked out on a herd size of 100 milking cows or one of lesser size, but on one that we figured was the size you should have to make it productive so that the family farm can stay in business. This program is geared to a quota program to make sure these farmers stay alive, but there will be an incentive here for them to be creative and more efficient.

● (1240)

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I understand the Secretary of State has a bill to present. Would it be possible to go back to introduction of bills to allow him to make that presentation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the House agree to revert to the introduction of bills to allow the Secretary of State to introduce this bill?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 1,273, 1,478, 1,574, 1,855 and 1,898.

Mr. Speaker, if questions Nos. 1,079 and 1,937 could be made orders for returns, these returns would be tabled immediately.

I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

FRANCE-CANADA AGREEMENT—FRENCH CIVILIANS IN CANADA

Question No. 1,273—Mr. Schumacher:

1. Since the signing of the France-Canada agreement, by month to date, how many French civilians of military age made application to come to Canada instead of doing their compulsory two-year military service?

[Mr. Whelan.]

2. By month, how many were accepted and, by province, where are they located in Canada?

3. How many of those accepted are in the employ of the (a) government (b) provincial governments and, in each case (i) where are they located (ii) what is their job description (iii) what salary are they receiving?

4. How many are employed in (a) education (b) health and/or social services (c) private industry and, in each case, what is their job description, salary and location?

5. How many applications to take advantage of the France-Canada agreement are still in the processing stage?

6. How many applicants have been refused admission under the agreement?

7. Is the agreement perpetual or is there an end-date after which no further applications will be received and, if so, what is that date?

8. Who is responsible for (a) travelling expenses (b) accommodation expenses (c) medical expenses (d) unemployment expenses, for those taking advantage of the terms of the agreement?

9. In each case, what is the marital status of those accepted and do the terms of the agreement allow for the transfer of spouses and family to Canada?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Information not available.

2. Statistics are not available on a monthly basis. In 1974, 37 civilians came to Canada to begin their 16 month employment in Canada. By province, the distribution is as follows: Ontario, 22; New Brunswick, 10; Alberta, 3; British Columbia, 1; Manitoba, 1. Statistics are not available for Quebec.

3. (a) Nine of the 37 mentioned in Part 2 are employed by the government: Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, 1; Department of Supply and Services (Translation), Fredericton, 1; Department of National Defence, Kingston, 1; Secretary of State (Translation), Ottawa, 4; Canadian Transport Commission, Ottawa, 1; Canadian Economic Council, Ottawa, 1; Economic Council of Canada, Ottawa, 1; (b) (i) (ii) (iii) Five of the 37 are employed by the Department of Health and Welfare of the Province of New Brunswick in Fredericton. Each is paid a monthly allowance of $450.

4. (a) Twenty of the 37 are employed in the field of education. By province and by institution, their distribution is as follows: Ontario, 14: Lycée Claudel (Ottawa, 5; University of Toronto, 3; Queen's University, 2; University of Ottawa, 1; Guelph University, 1; University of Western Ontario, 1; Canadian Memorial Chiropractic College, (Toronto), 1. Alberta, 3: University of Alberta, 1; University of Calgary, 1; Collège Saint-Jean (Edmonton), 1. New Brunswick, 2: University of New Brunswick, 1; Institute of Modern Languages (St. John's), 1. British Columbia, 1: Simon Fraser University, 1. Information on job descriptions is not available. Each civilian is paid a monthly allowance of $450. (b) See 3 (b). (c) As a rule, private industry is excluded from the programme. However, in 1974 two civilians were seconded to l'Évangéline (Moncton) and one to La Liberté/Le Patriote (Saint-Boniface).

5. Information is not available.

6. Information is not available.

7. There is no formal agreement covering this programme.

8. (a) The Canadian employer. (b) The civilian. (c) The French Government and the civilian. (d) The Canadian employer and the civilian.

9. Civilians may bring their dependants to Canada but must defray themselves all costs incurred.

PRIME MINISTER'S SPEECH TO LIBERAL PARTY FUND RAISING DINNER IN MONTREAL

Question No. 1,478—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the Prime Minister state in a speech to the Liberal Party fund raising dinner in Montreal on or about January 31, 1975: "I will not leave Ottawa until the country and the government is irreversibly bilingual"?

2. Is it also the Prime Minister's intention not to leave Ottawa until the country has moved irreversibly down the road to inflation?

3. Is it also the Prime Minister's intention not to leave Ottawa until the country has moved irreversibly into business and industrial recession?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): 1. Yes.

2 and 3. These questions are unusually silly, even for the questioner.

PUBLIC SERVICE—NUMBER OF PERSONNEL SENT ON FULL-TIME COURSES

Question No. 1,574—Mr. Herbert:

For each of the past two years, how many public servants were sent on full-time courses of (a) a duration of more than six months (b) three months or more immediately after having completed such a course?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows: (a) Language courses: 1973, 290; 1974, 877; British Program for Administrative Principals: 1972-73, 3; 1973-74, 3; 1974-75, 4. École nationale d'administration (Paris): 1972-73, 2; 1973-74, 3; 1974-75, 4. École nationale d'administration (Québec): 1972-73, 4; 1973-74, 5; 1974-75, 4. École internationale de Bordeaux: 1973, 3; 1974, 3; 1975, 1. (b) Nil.

FULL-TIME LANGUAGE TRAINING

Question No. 1,855—Mr. Herbert:

How many public servants who have taken and passed instruction courses in second language training have subsequently taken additional full-time instruction course other than for reasons connected with promotion?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows: Public servants who have taken and passed instruction courses in second languages training are not, as a general rule, entitled to further full-time language training. However in cases where a public servant is appointed to a bilingual position requiring a higher level of language knowledge than that required by the previous bilingual position occupied that person may receive up to six months of additional continuous full-time language training in order to meet the higher linguistic requirements of the new position. Our records indicate that to date, no person has received additional continuous full-time language training as specified in the question.

Order Paper Questions

JACQUES CARTIER TERMINAL FACILITIES, MONTREAL

Question No. 1,898—Mr. Forrestall:

1. What was the basis for the decision for funding the construction of the Jacques-Cartier terminal facilities in Montreal?

2. Was the consulting firm of Peat, Marwick and Partners involved in the preparation of any studies used in any way whatsoever to justify this situation and, if so, what was the nature of their involvement?

3. (a) What is the estimated total cost to the Canadian taxpayer of these facilities (b) what dollar level has been expended to February 28, 1975?

4. Was the National Harbours Board involved in this decision and, if so, to what extent?

5. Were these facilities constructed at the urging of the Montreal Port Authority?

6. What are the terms, if any, of repayment for these facilities?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The National Harbours Board advises as follows: 1. The Jacques Cartier Terminal is being funded by the Port of Montreal out of National Harbours Board's own resources according to policy.

2. No.

3. (a) Nil, National Harbours Board's own resources are being used. (b) Not applicable.

4. The National Harbours Board approved the Jacques Cartier Terminal project.

5. The Montreal Port Authority concurred in the decision to construct the Jacques Cartier Terminal.

6. Not applicable, National Harbour Board's own resources are being used.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

WAYS AND MEANS

INCOME TAX

The House proceeded to the consideration of a motion to concur in a ways and means motion with respect to the Income Tax Act.

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (for the Minister of Finance) moved:

That a ways and means motion to amend the Income Tax Act, laid upon the table, Thursday, April 17, 1975, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There was some discussion earlier about the introduction of a bill by the Secretary of State for the Minister of Finance. The ways and means motion which has been taken and disposed of as an order of the day was a condition precedent. The bill can only be introduced now by leave of the House because there is a time limit involved between the filing of notice of the ways and means motion, which we have just done, and the actual introduction of the bill, which would have to be abridged if the bill were to be introduced now. In other words, this would have to be done with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister could assure us that he has the approval of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) in respect of the introduction of this bill.

Mr. Speaker: Does the House give its unanimous consent to the introduction of this bill?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Rodriguez.]

INCOME TAX ACT

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (for the Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-58, to amend the Income Tax Act, be now read the first time and printed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACTS, 1867 TO 1965

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING SENATE REPRESENTATION FOR YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council) moved that Bill C-3, to amend the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1965, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to amend the British North America Acts to provide for the appointment of one senator from each of the Northwest and Yukon Territories.

Hon. members are aware of the concern of the government that all regions of Canada should receive fair representation in both Houses of parliament. This aim has been achieved with regard to this Chamber with the enactment of the Representation Act, 1974, and the Northwest Territories Representation Act. Equitable representation in the House of Commons is by no means sufficient, however; we must achieve equitable representation in parliament as a whole. It is essential that the northern viewpoint should find expression in the other place, just as do the views of all other parts of Canada.

This is not a partisan matter, Mr. Speaker. Nor is this the first time the matter has been before parliament. In the second session of the 29th parliament the House gave second reading to Bill C-11, which was identical in terms to the bill now before us, Bill C-3. At that time my predecessor in office pointed out that in the early days of confederation before the creation of the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Territories were represented in the Senate as well as in the Commons.

Moreoever, the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) has introduced a private member's bill to the same effect as Bill C-3. As hon. members are aware, the government was willing to support the passage of that member's bill until it became evident that there were technical problems which could not be resolved.

It is of fundamental importance to this country that the north should be justly represented in parliament, and I am sure this will be recognized by all hon. members in their consideration of this measure.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would now recognize the hon. member for the Northwest Territories, if the House has no objection.

Mr. Baldwin: His approval is automatic.

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, my remarks on this matter will be very brief. I think the time taken up with the introduction of this bill in the House is a waste.

When we get the Liberals and the Conservatives together on a measure to provide for the residents of the Northwest and Yukon Territories, a measure they consider to be some kind of a plum, it arouses some suspicion in my mind. Had the two parties got together and suggested the appointment of an ombudsman, or someone of that nature, who could do something for the people of the Northwest and Yukon Territories, I can assure the House they would have received a great deal of support. I see no merit whatever in this idea on which the Liberals and the Conservatives are in agreement. This is a waste of money, and the people of the north have not asked for and do not want anything like this. I do not think any self-respecting northerner would accept such a measure.

Should this bill be approved by this House, and that seems very likely since the Liberals and Conservatives are together on it, it will discriminate to a large extent against the native population of these territories. If hon. members will look at Section 23(4) of the British North America Act they will find that, among the qualifications required to become a senator, a candidate must personally have real property over and above his debts to a value of $4,000. I should like anyone to travel throughout the Northwest and Yukon Territories and point out to me a number of native people who are in that position. I am sure they will find the number to be very small. Just yesterday—

Mr. Chrétien: You have it.

Mr. Firth: Do you want to be one of the representatives of the north?

● (1250)

Just yesterday before the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development some figures were read out to us by the representatives from the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. They referred to the income of the people in the Northwest Territories. That is on the record and shows that the income level for the majority of the northern native people is under $1,000. The accepted poverty level for the country, I believe, is somewhere in the neighbourhood of $3,500. I suggest this discriminates to a large extent against the northern native people.

I should like to reiterate the point that I would rather see this thing scrapped and sent to the junk yard. We would prefer having an ombudsman representing both territories. This could be accomplished with one third the cost of having a senator from each territory who would not be representative. In addition this would amount to the appointment of either a Liberal or Conservative hack, who perhaps would be a campaign manager in forthcoming election campaigns. At the present time I think the Liberals are indicating some kind of desperation over the fact that they do not have representation from either territory, and therefore they intend to take some more of the taxpayer's money which will be wasted in an effort to obtain some representation from that part of the country. I made a slip—that would not be representation at all, Mr. Speaker.

I hope that this bill does not pass but, if it should pass and should be referred to the committee, I hope that we will have in attendance there representatives from the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory, and from their councils, because I am sure they will say what the people from that part of the country believe about this matter. I am almost certain they will echo the sentiments I have expressed at this time. I shall waste no more time on this matter.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, while I always respect the remarks and the feelings expressed by the hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth), I should say I am a little disappointed this morning to hear him accuse the Liberals and Conservatives of getting together in a sort of conspiracy to deal with this bill. Hon. members should be aware that we in this party have never gone to bed with the government. I look back on the twenty-ninth parliament and recall vividly the actions of the party to my left in dealing with the government of that day. I can assure the hon. member that there is no conspiracy at this time on our part to co-operate with the government. We do feel, however, that this bill is necessary and should be passed.

I have no intention of making a lengthy speech on the subject this morning, but I do recall that a week or ten days ago we were dealing with amendments to the Northern Canada Power Corporation Bill. While that bill was in committee we heard from various groups and representatives of the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories. They made representations and suggestions concerning how that particular bill should be dealt with, and nearly without exception the members of those various groups and organizations indicated they were looking forward to the day when both the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories would attain provincial status. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Buchanan) and the staff of that department taking part in the committee hearings indicated it was their feeling that we should work toward the day when both these territories would attain provincial status.

I feel this particular bill is one more step toward giving both territories provincial status. It moves us one step closer toward attaining that status, which I believe is what the people of the territories and all members of this House want. Over the years there has been much criticism of the other place. Much of that criticism has been deserved. Over the years appointments to the other place has become a means of paying the political debts of the party in power to those people on the hustings who worked on its behalf.

That was not the intention of the Fathers of Confederation when they set up our constitution and provided for the Senate. They felt there was a need and a place for a Senate in the government of our country, and that the Senate would serve a useful function. The Senate should be made up of a balance of representatives from the various political parties. This is not the situation at the present time.

Before I came down to the House I looked at the parliamentary guide, and noted that recent figures show that the representation in the Senate is made up of 85 per cent of appointees by the government and some 15 per cent of appointees from this side of the House. This is not a balance. If we have a Senate made up of that proportion of representatives of the two political parties we really are not getting a proper representation so far as the people of the country are concerned. At this time I should like to call it one o'clock if I may, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Reid: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Earlier when we dealt with the notice of ways and means motion Mr. Speaker indicated that unanimous consent was required before a bill based on the notice of ways and means could be brought forward. I should like to reserve my right to argue the point, perhaps on Monday, that the 48 hours' notice is not necessary once the notice of ways and means motion is accepted by the House. In that situation there is authority to bring forward a bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not wish the remarks of the hon. member to be considered as a precedent of a 48 hours' notice to debate the point of order in respect of the 48 hours' notice.

It being one o'clock I now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At one p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, before I called it one o'clock I was referring to the imbalance in representation in the Senate and I mentioned that at present about 85 per cent of the Senators are Liberal appointees, about 15 per cent are Conservative appointees, and there is a small handful of independents. I think it is important to point it out, because this imbalance creates such a situation that I do not believe the Senate can function properly.

It seems to me that the government should quickly call together a committee made up of representatives of all parties in the House to study and examine the Senate as it stands at present, to give consideration to the reorganization of the other place, and to see what changes we can make in the Senate to enable it to make a sound and active contribution to the government of the country.

In the meantime I hope that the government will give serious consideration to the manner and method of appointment of the two Senators for the territories. I hope that the amendments that we have before us today in Bill C-3 were made for the purpose of making positions available for people of integrity, people who could contribute, and not just for the purpose of making a place for some political hack. I feel it is important in both cases that the person who is appointed should have stature in the territory and the respect of the residents of that territory. He or she should be a person who has been a leader in the area, should be a person who is apolitical, and does not have political ties.

Furthermore, I think serious consideration should be given to naming a native person as a Senator from one of the territories, preferably someone of the Inuit race. The hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth) has indicated that he feels that under the present provisions in the BNA Act it would be almost impossible for any native person in the territories to qualify as a Senator. I have had the opportunity to examine the BNA act and I find that under 23(3) there is a requirement that anyone who is appointed to the Senate own lands to the value of $4,000 over and above his debts and liabilities. I realize that many of the native people in the territories could not qualify because they do not own land in their own right.

I feel it is incumbent on the government to bring in an amendment to the BNA Act with respect to native people to permit them to qualify as Senators without having to comply with these specific requirements. I believe that if the government, in filling these key positions, follows the criteria that I have mentioned, it will show the public that the Senate does have a place in the government of our country and it can serve a useful function.

On the other hand, if the government proceeds in the same manner as it has in the past with regard to the appointment of Senators, I am sure that the public will continue to feel that the Senate is a rather useless place to which we send people who have served their political parties over the years. We on this side, as well as the public generally, are looking forward with interest to seeing who the candidates will be for appointments in the Senate from the Northwest Territories and the Yukon.

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak for only a moment on this subject. I thought that since there has been so much concentration from the other side on who might be appointed to these positions, we should rather think for a moment about the principle underlying this legislation.

I am very pleased that three years after the special joint committee on the constitution of Canada presented its report to the House and the other place, the government is now bringing forward in legislative form many of the recommendations of that committee.

I think the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth), who just spoke, had a point when he mentioned the difficulties to be faced in the appointment of a person of native race to the Senate. This relates not so much to the bill before us, however, as to the requirements for a member of the Senate. If he and other hon. members look at the report of the special joint committee they will find that we had something to say on this point as well. It is high time that the present qualifications were changed, not by way of exceptions for the native people, although indeed they are worthy of exception if one were needed, but because such qualifications are now purely anachronistic.

We do not need another study or commission to consider what needs to be done with the Senate. That question was canvassed by the joint committee on the constitution, and those of us who served felt that, as at the time of confederation itself, this was the single most controversial question before the committee. After some meetings we were able to come up with a consensus on the Senate which included doubling the number of senators from western Canada. I know that will strike a responsive chord with many hon. members opposite.

This bill is something which is overdue. I am very pleased that it is now before us, and I hope it will be followed by other pieces of legislation also emanating from the report of the committee on the constitution.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on this bill. I certainly agree with the purpose of the bill which is to give the Northwest Territories and the Yukon representation in Canada's second chamber. I think that, more than most, this bill will provide a means of fulfilling representation at a level of government which is represented by area. I shall speak on this a little later in relation to our problems on redistribution in this chamber and the relationship of the other place to this chamber in representing areas in Canada.

I believe that the Senate has a recognized role in our government. Even though it is balanced in favour of one political party I feel it does give some input to our governmental process.

I feel that more could be done by the Senate, perhaps by way of introducing bills that are not controversial but are highly technical, because I think the Senate has more time for such study. They have people who can give considerable thought to bills of a special nature such as commercial, financial or cultural, and perhaps they are not quite so restricted by party politics as we in this chamber. Unfortunately, at the present time there are not enough people to give the Conservative viewpoint, but nevertheless I feel that the other place has contributed to the work of this chamber.

On occasion I have been critical of Senate committees although I can think of such worth-while endeavours as the Senate Committee on Poverty and the good job a committee did on the white paper on taxation. I believe that work was useful to us in considering the subsequent legislation.

When considering the recent redistribution of seats, the problem of representation at Ottawa came to the fore. We in the House of Commons have endeavoured to have representation by population. By allowing up to 25 per cent tolerance between urban and rural ridings we recognize that such small provinces as Prince Edward Island have less representation than they are entitled to were they strictly represented by population. Similarly, New Brunswick has less members than is normal. There has been considerable discussion about whether some of these voids might be filled by a better balance in the Senate, and whether the other place could fulfil something that the House of Commons does not.

Whether we like it or not we have always had a great deal of regional government. One region of the country has been dominant in government for some time, and then has been replaced by a predominance from another region. There is no doubt that the province of Quebec and central Canada, with their large populations, have made the rest of the country seem like onlookers on the government scene. This imbalance might be removed to some extent by having representation in the other place that would protect the smaller provinces.

It is perhaps significant that provinces like Ontario and Quebec are in the centre of the country, flanked by the relatively small four eastern provinces and the four western provinces which are not small but have nothing like the population of Quebec and Ontario. If the western provinces and the maritimes had the population, and Ontario and Quebec were divided into smaller provinces, of course it would have been a different country.

I think we could look at the possibility of the provinces having a hand in making appointments to the other place when vacancies occur. As the west matures I think there is a growing feeling there that it is not adequately represented in Ottawa, and if this feeling persists it could lead to even greater regional strains than we already have.

The tradition of appointments to the other place being made by the party in power may have seemed a good thing in the beginning, and had the political parties alternated with reasonable frequency perhaps no great harm would have been done. I think there is much to be said for keeping close to this House those people who have finished serving their time as members. Let us keep them near us so that they can offer us the benefit of their political experience. Their opinions will be valuable in giving cohesion to our political process.

The Conservative party was the governing party in the first years after confederation, but the Liberal party has governed for most of the past 60 years. Consequently representation in the other place is not balanced. That is why I think an alternative way of making appointments should be considered.

Canada is a regional country. When the pendulum swings back and allows the Conservatives to assume power, it is possible my party will stay in power for as long as the Liberals have governed. This would be in accordance with the nature of our country. It is a regional country and we must do our best to give cohesiveness to this regionalism. I suggest that we have not fully taken this into account in our appointments to the other place. Perhaps it may be desirable to establish a committee of this House, to consider how there might be a better balance in future in the appointment of members to the other place.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the valiant efforts being made to discuss this bill as if it were a serious matter. But I am afraid that like my colleague the hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth), I regard this as a Friday afternoon joke.

All this talk about bringing the north into the decision-making process is meaningless when one considers what the bill will really do. All that will happen if this bill is passed is that some time soon—I suspect it will not take long—the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) will announce the appointment of a couple of northern Liberals to the other place. Incidentally, some of us have argued that there is far more value to a decision we have already made, namely that in the next parliament there are to be two members of parliament from the Northwest Territories as well as one for the Yukon. I point out that not until 1978 or 1979 will we get a second member from the Northwest Territories sitting in this elected House. I suspect that the two northerners who are to sit in the Senate will take their places in the Senate chamber in a few months. For all I know they may already be in Ottawa, waiting for the invitation to take their seats in the other place.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The list is long.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I hear my hon. friend from Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) commenting that the list is long. This morning my colleague from the Northwest Territories said that no self-respecting northerner would accept the appointment, and the jest came from all parts of the House to the effect that there is a long waiting list. I suggest that such comments only show very clearly the ridiculous nature of this proposal. It has nothing to do with the good governing of Canada or the rounding out of the parliamentary system. It has nothing to do with providing a greater say for the people of the north. This is just a provision to give two more Liberal appointees a spot in that other place.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): They might even offer you a spot, Stanley.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My hon. friend says they might even offer me a place. Well, that just proves we are having good fun on Friday afternoon.

Mr. Neil: Would you turn it down?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My hon. friend knows that I have repeatedly said I would not accept an appointment to that other place.

Mr. Stanfield: How about an appointment to the bench, Stanley?

An hon. Member: The gate should never be closed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It has been suggested that the gate should never be closed. That reminds me of a conversation I had some time ago—let us not put a time limit on this—with three friends of mine in the other place.

An hon. Member: So you have friends there?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I thought that remark would produce that retort. Yes, I have friends over there. I became involved in a conversation, some time ago, with three of my friends in the other place who were trying to persuade me that I should go over there. I said it was a nice place to visit but I certainly would not want to go over there to stay. At any rate I argued with them in every way I could. I said, "You know what I think of the Senate and you know what I have said about it in the House of Commons. You know I keep introducing a bill to abolish the Senate. Why do you want me over there?" They said they had quite a few people over there who had been opposed to the Senate before being appointed to it, and that they had become good Senators. I said that would not apply in my case. At any rate, I tried all my good arguments to show why I would not consider a Senate appointment, and got nowhere.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Finally I said to those three friends, all of whom were in the Senate before there was an age limit—in other words, they were appointed for life—I said, "Look, I am now 66 years old, almost 67. If I go to the Senate I can stay only eight years or so; but in the House of Commons I can stay as long as I can get elected." They could not answer that. They liked the idea of their appointment being permanent, for life.

Let there be no question about it. I join the self-respecting northerners mentioned by my hon. friend from the Northwest Territories. I would not consider such an appointment in any circumstances.

What has the Senate done lately? What do Their Honours have to their credit, this year? They amended a bill of ours a few weeks ago. This House passed a bill which, among other things, provided that officers and directors of a corporation under certain circumstances could be held personally responsible for the wrongdoings of their companies. When the bill arrived at the other place, they—there are quite a few directors sitting over there—amended it, striking out the words "officers or directors" in all places in that bill where this House had inserted them. I was concerned when this House so supinely accepted the amendments. But that was the Senate's main contribution to the legislative program this session. It protected the position of officers and directors of corporations.

Of course the main activity over there was well documented the other day in a column in one of our daily newspapers which pointed out that the Senate is really the right arm of the Liberal party. After all, most of the people who are at the top level and run that organization must have some base from which to operate, must have some guarantee of their daily bread and butter; so they sit in the Senate and run the Liberal party from that place. All we shall do, if we pass this bill, is provide for two more persons to be part of the right arm of the Liberal party.

When my hon. friend from Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) spoke a while ago he said the Senate consisted of 85 per cent Liberal appointees and of 15 per cent Progressive Conservative appointees, and a handful of independents. Of course even those so-called independents are part of the first group. They may contend they are independents, but they are Liberal appointees. That is all we shall get from this bill—just two more Liberal appointees. And we shall get them right away.

Mr. Paproski: They are saving a spot for you, Stanley.

● (1430)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Was the hon. member not here a few minutes ago, or do I have to go over all that again? Certainly those of us who are practically always here on Friday afternoons have fun. There is no reason why a place as serious as this should not get light once in a while and indulge in a bit of jest. However, I submit that the humour being expressed respecting this bill really shows that, for all of the attempts that have been made to make serious speeches, we do not have respect for the non-elected other chamber in this parliament.

It is a downright insult to the citizens of northern Canada to suggest that, by giving them these two spots in the other place, we are doing something for them. In his speech before lunch the hon. member for Northwest Territories suggested that one ombudsman for that area would be of far more value to the people of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories than two northern Liberals sitting in the other place. If this House is determined, as apparently it is, to go through with this proposition, I suppose it will do so, and we should not spend too much time on it. However, let us not think we are doing anything concrete for the north, or for Canada, by increasing the size of the other place.

This leads me to say that what we should be doing about the other place is to reduce its numbers, not increase them. I noted the comments made by the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) about the report of the joint committee on the constitution of Canada. I do not blame him for standing up and boasting of the fact that that committee made representations respecting the Senate. As he knows, the Senate barely survived the discussions and the vote in that committee. Instead of a recommendation to increase the number of Senators from some parts of the country, there might well have been a recommendation that it be abolished.

At this point, I should like to do, as I always do quite sincerely in this kind of a speech, that is put in my caveat about this not being criticism of individuals in the other place. There are some over there who are more hard-working than some individuals in this place. I see them around here. They are on the job. They are sincere in what they are trying to do. It is the whole idea that persons who are not elected and not responsible to anyone, not even to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who recommended them in the first place, or to the Governor General who summons them there, should have a say in the passing of the laws of this country equal with the say that is given to us who are elected by our people and are responsible to them—it is that whole idea I criticise.

There are one or two things about the bill that should be looked at in committee if it gets past second reading. As has been pointed out, it is a requirement of the British North America Act that Senators shall have a certain residence requirement. In Section 23(5) of the British North America Act there appear these words: "He shall be a resident of the province for which he is appointed." By passing this bill are we going to declare that the Yukon is a province and that the Northwest Territories will be regarded as a province? Where will these persons reside? There is nothing on that in Bill C-3.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): "Notwithstanding anything—".

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Do you find anything that says "notwithstanding"?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes, "notwithstanding anything contained in the British North America Act".

Mr. Buchanan: We used to have members from the Northwest Territories.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In the Senate?

Mr. Buchanan: Yes, four of them.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You are talking about the Northwest Territories when they included the part of the country that the member for Edmonton West and I now represent.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes, but they have not changed. All they did was put in provincial boundaries.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I might say that at one time we had members of a second chamber in the province of Manitoba, as they did in Nova Scotia, but in those provinces we got sensible a long time ago and got rid of them. The last remaining upper House in a provincial legislature was in Quebec, and they got rid of it a short while ago.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That is irrelevant.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The hon. member says it is irrelevant, but I do not see anything in those words that gets around the requirements of the British North America Act with respect to the Senate. If the hon. member is trying to say that those words in the first line wipe out the residential qualification, do they also wipe out the qualification that the Senator must have $4,000 worth of real property?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I would think so.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Do they also wipe out the requirement that he must be at least 30 years of age?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Presumably.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): This is great legal advice I am getting on the constitution.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It says "notwithstanding", almost even the title.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): This is very interesting legal advice that is coming from the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), and when it is free you look at it a second time.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes; but, Stanley, you are just thinking on your feet now.

An hon. Member: Wait until you get the bill.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I have it in front of me. I will give my interpretation of this, and I will also give it free. The phrase "notwithstanding" relates to what this bill does, which is to increase the number who sit in the other place. At the present time the British North America Act sets a limit on the number that can be in the other place, normally 102, plus a certain group that can be added for emergency reasons. All that "notwithstanding" does is set aside that number and permit the House to increase the number of persons in the other place.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That may be one interpretation.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The hon. member for Edmonton West has one interpretation and I have another. Either interpretation produces laughter in various parts of the House. I suggest that shows how careless has been the preparation of this bill and how big a joke this whole thing is.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Buchanan).

Mr. Watson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If the minister's remarks will close the debate—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): This is not his bill.

Mr. Buchanan: This is a bill of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It was introduced by the President of the Privy Council.

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to support the bill of my colleague, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp).

Dealing with the comment raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), the concept of the bill is not new. Prior to 1905 the Northwest Territories were represented by four members of the Senate, when the Territories included all of what is now the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan, a large part of Manitoba, the northern part of Ontario and the northern part of Quebec. With the creation of the two new provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan, these Senate seats were allocated to them. Since then suggestions have been made from time to time, and from various quarters, to correct this situation and provide the north with a larger voice in parliament.

Members recently indicated their support for this principle when they gave approval to Bill C-51, to create a second seat in this chamber for the Northwest Territories. Today we have an opportunity to go one step further, and I sincerely hope that all members will lend their support to this measure.

The people of the north are developing an increasing interest and awareness of their affairs. They wish to participate more actively at all levels. I am sure that both the hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth) and the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) will attest to this.

● (1440)

I might add that the Northwest Territories Council is on record as supporting the provision of territorial representation in the Senate. The Council's representatives made this point clear when they appeared before the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development approximately one year ago and indicated that the Council had unanimously endorsed this bill when it was before the previous parliament. I have no doubt the people of the Northwest Territories look forward to being represented in both Houses of Parliament again. Nor do I have any doubt that the people of the Yukon want their own Senator.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

It is as important to increase the northern voice at the national level as it is at the territorial and municipal levels. The provision of Senate seats for the two territories will provide additional opportunities for the expression of the northern viewpoint in parliament, and improve communications between Ottawa and the two territories at the parliamentary level. I have no hesitation in recommending that all hon. members give favourable consideration to this bill.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I have been engaging in an exchange of legal opinion here in connection with the wording of this bill.

An hon. Member: With that other lawyer.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Neither of us charged the other.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Notwithstanding that, there is no doubt that further comment will be made in the committee when the bill is under consideration there. I have always been amused at the attempts at levity made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). He said that the efforts which he called fun and jokes—and incidentally he did not recognize that there was some rather sharp shafting being included in that levity—were a measure of the lack of concern, or contempt, that the House holds for this particular provision. All I can say is that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre unfortunately takes himself too seriously when he is sententiously expressing the opinion of one person—himself—particularly so on this point.

In so far as hon. members make strictures with regard to the other place, I would like to say that they are perhaps lucky that in the other place they do not make strictures about reducing the size of this overgrown chamber, and I may say I can say that because I am a member of this place. The proposal to bloat it out of proportion that we blithely adopted in the legislation considered earlier this session was a serious mistake, I think, for the future operation of this chamber. Be that as it may, I would hope that some hon. members feel that some of the more able of their colleagues or contemporaries in the other place would be restrained or constrained from making similar remarks about eliminating parts of the House of Commons, or perhaps one of these days we will see a proposal in the other place to do precisely what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre tries to do at a stroke of the pen, likely his own, to wipe out the other part. That is the easiest way to eliminate differences of opinion—just strike them out.

I can think of no greater danger in Canadian democracy than the tyranny of a temporary majority. We have seen temporary majorities here run away with ideas. In 1970, for instance—and I know the hon. member will gladly subscribe to this—in October, 1970 it was a temporary runaway majority, a stampede of opinion, which created terrible precedents in this country, and we will live to regret it.

I welcome the provision now before us if only, Mr. Speaker, because many times in schools that I visit in my constituency I am asked to trace through the structure of Canadian government in Canada. I am asked to trace back to the days of Confederation and to say why the Senate was proposed, why it was established.

Some people feel the world was discovered yesterday. But many of the problems faced in Canada today are merely a translation into a present-day picture of a problem which existed in the 18th century, for example, the question of disparity of language, the disparity of people in the Atlantic provinces as compared with those of Central Canada.

It is heard quite frequently, both in the Atlantic provinces as well as out in the west, that the people in Ottawa, Toronto and Montreal think that all that is good for Canada are the things that are good for their areas. In other words, if it's good for Central Canada it has to be good for the rest of Canada. It is precisely that spirit which existed in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island back in the 1860's. One of the ways to counteract this oppression by population, this potential injustice, was to have a Senate in which the representation was disproportionate. In other words, by giving 24 Senate seats to the Atlantic provinces, 24 to Lower Canada, 24 to Upper Canada and 24, in the end, to Western Canada, some counterbalance was created against this mass of population in favour of smaller regions with smaller populations. That was the theory. It hasn't always worked out.

I think that the constitution of the Senate, that is, the naming of members, the practices of governments and prime ministers, all have eroded the proper status of Senate representation. I think the Senate has far greater potential than has been expressed by it. After all, it lies within the hands of government first of all to appoint members, and I think the government could quite readily name individuals to the Senate from all parts of the country, whether or not they are necessarily recognized by reason of party service, or have been effective political bagmen, or wanted to become effective bagmen, or because they are needed on some kind of part-time salary ready to become national chairmen, or for any other ulterior reason.

But even among those men who are appointed for the reasons I have outlined, I must say that there have been some excellent workers in so far as the country is concerned. There have been men and women of energy, and I do not wish to pick out any particular individuals. However, let me say that I do not think that outside commentators should point at one or two individuals in the Senate and condemn the whole institution. If it were all right to do such things, then some of the reputations in this House would not be very high either. Of course, the same could be said of newspaper editors, university professors, by anybody who wished to cast stones. They need only pick the poorest representatives in their class and give them a general classification, and we would all be in the same boat, somewhere down at the bottom of the heap.

Notwithstanding what the hon. member for Northwest Territories had to say this morning, I do not see that an ombudsman named both for the Yukon and the Northwest Territories would add one cubit to the effectiveness of government for the people in that area. Is it to be an ombudsman between the people and the Northwest Territories council, the administration there, or between Yukoners and the Yukon administration, or is it to be an ombudsman vis-à-vis the whole of the federal administration?

So far we have not appointed a federal ombudsman, and I may say that I am not too sure it would be as effective as a provincial ombudsman. I do not know that a federal ombudsman is necessarily the answer but, leaving that aside, so far as representation of the people in the territories is concerned, it seems to me that we have a classic example of a territory that so far is economically lightly developed, with a very small population, in the same way as we would consider, say, Prince Edward Island was at the time of confederation.

Mr. Stanfield: Oh, they had a much higher degree of advancement.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): With all respect to my leader—

Mr. Stanfield: You must be careful!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, he tells me I have to be careful. I am not talking about their intellectual development. If my leader continues this too far he might find himself in trouble in Yellowknife! Let us look at the relative picture. I think there is some similarity between the time of confederation and today in terms of the degree of population, the density of population, of Prince Edward Island and Upper Canada, compared with the territories vis-à-vis what we call southern Canada, and so far as the relative degree of economic development is concerned.

Looking back 115 years, in some areas of Canada it was thought right to have Senators in addition to members of the House of Commons. In terms of population alone, neither of the territories really deserves representation in this House. In other words, there is an over-weighting even on the basis of their representation by one member each. After all, my own constituency has four times the population of either of the territories, yet there is still equal membership.

I have no objection to that. Even without direct contact with the area it is easily recognizable that both hon. members who represent those areas today have a great physical problem in getting around to see all their constituents. Not only is it a physical problem, it is also monetary. Surely representation in this place on behalf of that vast territory, the Northwest Territories, and the geographically less extensive Yukon territory, would be enhanced by representation in the other place, and I cannot see why not.

I must say I find it rather difficult even to take half seriously the criticisms of the hon. member for Northwest Territories to the effect that there would be difficulty in finding people from the territories, that so many people would be disenfranchised and would not be entitled to appear in the Senate. I cannot agree with him there.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You think you will be able to find two all right?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes. Let me say that if you really want to dig into it there are a lot of people, true northerners and not transplanted southerners, who are, without my trying to be in any way patronizing, wise and educated, and what we call natives of the Northwest Territories, and they would be an addition to the other place, as they are to this place. I would be the first to defend the appointment of my old friend Jim Gladstone to the Senate, at a time when a lot of people derided it. They said we were taking a prairie Indian and putting him in the Senate, and that, aw shucks, this would accomplish nothing.

However, the appointment of Senator Gladstone and the work he did among the native Indians to bring them to the position of voting, and then convincing them that they should exercise their right to vote, is an historical fact. Doubtless members recall the difference between the election of 1962-63 and other elections as to the exercise of the ballot. I was with Senator Gladstone, and I know that immediately following passage of the act in 1962 that allowed treaty Indians who hitherto had not had the right to vote to exercise their ballot, there was a great deal of suspicion and uneasiness. After all, this was something unknown. That this suspicion was dispelled was due largely to the efforts of Jim Gladstone.

I am sure there are scores and scores of people in the Northwest Territories and Yukon, whether they be Indian, Eskimo or, not strangers to the place, but white men who were born and raised there, and who have the spirit of the Northwest Territories in their blood just as much as anybody else in the provinces have the spirit of the provinces in their blood, who would be suitable for appointment.

This might offer the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) an opportunity to change his policy with regard to appointments to the Senate. He could take some independent-minded people and those of other parties and appoint them to the Senate, considering the value of the individual concerned for his or her own intrinsic worth and the contribution that they could make.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He is the fifteenth Prime Minister who has had that opportunity.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): There is always a first time. I hope these two Senators will be named and that they will take their place there. We are going to see two additional members from the territories in this House around 1978 or 1979. One might say this is going to be disproportionate representation, but bearing in mind that the over-all ceiling of this House is going to rise up like dough rising in a warming oven, this number will not be out of line with the sum total representation of the rest of the country. Again I regret the increase in the size of the membership of this House because I do not think it is going to work toward its efficiency.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): They will have to be pretty thin.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): They would certainly have to be thinner than me. However, you would be surprised how those of us who are squarely built, like myself, get along well. In any event I commend the bill to the hon. members of this House. I am sure there will be some representation, notwithstanding what was said by the hon. member for Northwest Territories, and I am sure that the majority of the people in the Northwest Territories are in favour of this particular bill.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

● (1500)

After all, it is only since 1972 that the hon. member has represented the Northwest Territories, and there are people there of political persuasions other than his. In fact, I am sure there are more people of non-New Democratic persuasion in the Northwest Territories: the hon. member does not speak on behalf of the real majority of the people in the Northwest Territories. He is the elected member representing that area and he has given us his opinion. I am sure that if it were put to all the people in the territories, there would be a majority in favour of the bill.

I commend the bill to hon. members with the hope that in due course the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs will see fit to pass it and recommend it to the House for ultimate inscription in the statutes of this country.

[Translation]

Mr. Ian Watson (Laprairie): Madam Speaker, though the government justifies this bill saying that the Northwest Territories and the Yukon will be better represented, I feel that it is ill-advised, and find it difficult to accept the increase in size of a group that is neither elected nor, in fact, representative of the population.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I find it very difficult to accept this bill and I intend to vote against it. I do not oppose it because I quarrel with the legitimate desire of northerners to have additional voices here in Ottawa, and that is certainly one of the aspects which is on the plus side for northerners. My objection is that while we are talking about Senate reform we should not be proceeding in the direction of increasing the size of that place, at least before we have given serious consideration to such proposed reform. I think the government is out of line completely in moving on this bill now. It has made promises over the last generation, and certainly in the last few years I have been here—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): And ever since I have been here.

Mr. Watson: —the government has made promises to move toward Senate reform, yet we are here debating a measure to increase the size of that body which is non-representative and non-elected. We should not be doing this. We are going to increase the size of the representation of the Northwest Territories in this House when the next election occurs. We have passed that bill, and it seems to me that the change we are discussing today could have waited until we had an indication of the direction we intend to take on Senate reform. In spite of the fact that northerners may feel they are getting some kind of additional representation by having two senators, the method that has been generally used in selecting senators up to now does not lend much support to the theory that they are really representing anyone.

I would argue that northerners need more visits from members of the House of Commons. We have a committee that is responsible for Indian affairs and northern development. That committee put itself on record as being in favour of annual visits to each of the territories. It is part of the function of that committee, perhaps not all of its members at one time but the members of sub-committees appointed for that purpose, to visit the north on a regular basis, listening to the people and supplying them with an additional means of influencing the decisions made here in Ottawa.

The people in the north are in a different constitutional category from other Canadians in that these areas are not provinces. Judging by size of population, it will be a long time before they become provinces. Major changes have taken place in the viewpoint of Canadians toward resources generally. We now realize that there is perhaps no more important element in our economy than the natural resources spread across the country, 40 per cent of which are located within these two territories if our geological theorists are to be believed. Those two territories represent approximately 40 per cent of the total land mass of this country.

Given this change in the Canadian attitude toward resources, I think it is reasonable to expect changes in our thinking on the constitutional development of these Territories in the coming years. This bill is a mindless sort of move to implement promises of the past. It is an unthinking-forward motion resulting from past promises and it is ill-timed. Because of the prior need for Senate reform and possible changes in our thinking and approach to the constitutional evolution of the Northwest and Yukon Territories, I intend to vote against the bill.

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I should like to make one or two comments prior to the passage of this motion on Bill C-3. After listening to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), I got the impression that while he is consistent in his view about rejecting acceptance of the Senate out of hand, he feels that if a person agrees with his point of view he must be serious, but if he does not he must somehow be looking at this matter in a flippant way. While I appreciate the hon. member's consistency in his point of view, I find it a little difficult to accept that idea. I do not accept that kind of condemnation.

In respect of representation of the north and Senate reform generally, I appreciate the views expressed by the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Watson). As parliamentarians, we are liable to a lot of criticism as a result of the impression held by many Canadians about the role of the Senate. According to the terms of the British North America Act, the Senate has two very specific functions to perform. It is supposed to be the place of sober second thought on legislation passed by this House. When you consider the age of some of us, perhaps that sober second thought is needed more today than ever before. That is a matter of opinion.

In the past, the Senate has performed many useful services to the parliamentary process. It has taken a second look at legislation and has possibly seen it from another perspective. From that point of view, the existence of the Senate is of real value. This takes me directly to the subject of area representation. It is said that the Senate is based on area representation but I do not believe for one minute that anyone in this House would really try to support that argument. Senate representation is really approached or accepted on the basis of compromise. If area representation in the Senate is to be valid, a new formula of representation will have to be considered during our discussions on Senate reform.

When we have a situation where a province such as Quebec or Ontario has 24 senators while the whole of the west has 24, I do not believe we have area representation. Also, I believe senators have been appointed through the political process. Often they have received their appointments for political favours given in the past. This process has been followed by both Liberals and Conservatives. In this way senators are compromised: when they reach the Senate they will not bite the hand that feeds them.

We have heard the arguments in respect of provincial rights with relation to natural resources. In that case, do we hear the members of the other place fulfilling their role as area representatives or, rather, do we hear them voicing the official party position on this question? It is my thinking with regard to a review of the British North America Act that it is incumbent upon senators to find out what the area views are and to express them no matter to what political party they belong. If there is to be Senate reform, senators first and foremost should protect provincial or area rights rather than vote according to official party lines.

In the joint committee on the constitution a recommendation was made that representation from the west be increased by 12 senators. I do not believe that in any way addresses itself to the problem. I do not believe that by this means area representation would be improved. While I support Bill C-3 in principle because I want to see representation from the north, I do not believe for a minute it contributes to the principle to which I am referring. It is my opinion that if the Senate is to be representative of the areas of Canada, it should reflect that representation on the basis of numerical equality rather than on the misconstrued formula which we have at the present time.

One of the objections that we as public officials receive comes from people who in effect ask what the senators are doing. They ask whether they are simply being paid off for favours rendered in the past and whether they simply become the right arm of the political machine or organization of the party to which they belong. I raise this matter very sincerely, Madam Speaker. I do not believe it is in the interest of parliament or the attitude we want to develop within the Canadian public, namely, of respect for the parliamentary process, that senators should take on a leading role in the party to which they belong.

The image of the Senate and parliament which the public seems to receive is that an attempt is being made to perpetuate the political process of the various parties rather than to carry out the responsibilities under the BNA Act, which are, primarily, that the Senate be a sober second-thought legislative body and that there be area representation. I say seriously that I do not see area representation being given a very prominent position. I suggest that when members of the Senate take leading roles within the party, it compromises their position as senators in respect of their first responsibility and also destroys the confidence of the Canadian public in respect of the parliamentary process.

Senators are paid from the funds of the taxpayers. If they spend the majority of their effort in the interests of their parties, surely this is not the role of senators. I should like to see reform in that regard. This might not necessarily be related to Senate reform, but I think it is incumbent on all parties today to see that the Senate performs its constitutional role rather than a role which might be politically expedient at a given time.

In respect of reform of the Senate other than the question of area representation to which I have referred, the political question and the salaries senators receive, I believe senators should be appointed for a certain period of time. I do not believe the qualification in respect of age 75 is really any great factor. I think senators should be appointed, for example, for a five-year period and that the Prime Minister should have the constitutional right to reappoint them for one further term, let us say, for a total period of ten years.

In that way I feel a senator would know he had a specific period in which to work in the Senate, and because of that might fulfil his responsibility more faithfully. If a senator had fulfilled his responsibility, he would be eligible for a second term. I think this is a concept which should be examined. The public image of the Senate might be enhanced, because the people would know that senators were appointed for a period in order to provide service to their country.

I am in favour of the Senate. I want to see these reforms take place in order that the Senate may function better. I reject out-of-hand suggestions concerning abolition of the Senate. I want to see the bicameral system continue. Having said that, however, I believe that when there are difficulties we must not hide our heads in the sand and say there is no cure. I believe that when it becomes apparent that changes will take place, a change in public opinion will be reflected. So I intend to support this bill but, again, I wish to stress that we should seriously look at Senate reform and not merely talk about it. We should bear in mind that the Fathers of Confederation saw the Senate as a necessary function of the political process.

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Madam Speaker, this will be one occasion in the House of Commons when I will support an initiative of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Buchanan).

An hon. Member: It is not his.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): After looking at the signature on the bill, I find it is much more difficult for me to support an initiative of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) than it is to support one by our generally, at least, good natured colleague the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. However, I believe this matter is important enough for me to overlook its sponsorship by the President of the Privy Council.

[Mr. Epp.]

I think we must bear in mind that this initiative has been discussed many times and has been approved by all the major spokesmen for the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories except, as we heard earlier today, the present member of parliament for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth). It is a matter of record that the Council of the Northwest Territories—both its influential, appointed members and its less influential, elected members—has expressed itself in support of this principle. The same position has been taken by the Council of the Yukon Territory and has been stated very clearly by my colleague who has represented that region so effectively for many years in this House. So I think it is clear this is a measure which receives the support of the great majority of the people of the territories.

● (1520)

I must say that I am rather surprised that my colleague the hon. member for Northwest Territories has chosen this occasion not to support an initiative which would add to the capacity of his region to express its views here in Ottawa and in official circles in the whole of parliament. I regret that. I think that generally he might have come too much under the influence of his colleague the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) whose views on the other place are very well known.

I want to say in passing that I had the opportunity once to serve as a chauffeur to the late Woodrow Lloyd who was a distinguished premier of Saskatchewan and a member of the party of my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, shortly after he had lost an election there. I asked him why he had lost the election, and he told me he had lost it because there was no Senate in the legislature of that province to which he could elevate some of his colleagues who had lost their effectiveness on the hustings but whom he could not dislodge.

There are some practical reasons which would recommend themselves even to the colleagues of my friend, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is an even more unkind comment than I sometimes make. So the other place is just a dumping ground, is it?

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): To a certain degree, in the recent debate on this question the point has been missed. We are not talking about whether or not the Senate of Canada should continue to exist. It does exist. The bill before us is not a bill to do away with the Senate; it is simply a bill to make it a more representative national institution. That is what we are discussing, not the future usefulness or function of the Senate. The precise question is whether the two great northern territories which occupy so much of our land mass and affect so much of the future of this country should be represented in an institution which calls itself national. I think the answer to that question is clear, and that it should be so representative.

It is clear to many of us who have had anything to do with northern policy that the people of the territories have too often been incidental victims of other ideas, other ideologies and other policies proposed for other purposes here. I believe that they are the incidental victims of the policy of colonialism which, unfortunately, is rampant in the northern development section of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development because there is a determination among several well entrenched bureaucrats there to hold on to power in the northern territories. The capacity of the people of those two territories to have some degree of self-government has been delayed for far too long.

I, for one, would most strenuously oppose any suggestion that they should be made victims of a simple dislike of the other place by some members of the House. I think they have suffered too much from being the victims of particular ideologies that happen to seize either individual members of the House or individual public servants. I think that if the Senate is to be a national body, it must represent those people and allow them this extra opportunity to have their views expressed and their opinions count here in the whole parliament of Canada.

Let me deal for a moment with the problems of the Senate—and no one would sweep them under the rug. Of course there has been patronage, and of course it has been perpetrated by prime ministers from this party—on the rare occasions we have had them—and prime ministers from the other party. Of course, as the anecdote I recounted earlier about the late, distinguished premier of Saskatchewan indicated, the same motive would have been followed by an NDP government, given the chance. But the fact that patronage has existed does not mean, and has not meant, that some effectiveness of the Senate has been totally undermined. Quite the opposite: there have been some very effective initiatives taken and effective roles played by the Senate despite the patronage.

My colleague, the hon. member for Northwest Territories, I understand raised a good point, that the present appointment requirements involving property and a certain amount of money may well militate against the appointment of native citizens in the two territories. That is a very serious fault and I hope it will be possible at least to consider some means to ensure that the native people, who in the Northwest Territories compromise the majority of the population, will have an equal opportunity to be named to the two new appointments if this House and the whole parliament agrees to create them.

I share the reservations expressed by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), and by others in this debate and elsewhere, about some of the recent practices of the Liberal Party in turning the Senate, in effect, into a political organization room for the Liberal Party and installing their chief executives, their chief fund raisers and chief propagandists in the other place so they can do their partisan work at public expense. That is a practice which, clearly, should be stopped. But the fact that that shameful practice is carried on as one of the functions of the Senate should not obscure our vision of the importance of the Senate on other fronts.

In my view—and I do not often offer congratulations to my colleagues across the way—there has been some modest progress in the appointments to the other place in the last number of years and, indeed, not simply in the last number of years. My own province is represented by at least two senators who clearly got there by merit, namely, Senator Donald Cameron from my own constituency, the founder of the Banff School of Fine Arts, and Senator Ernest Manning who served with distinction and success for so long as the premier of my province. Neither of them can be called Pavlovian Liberals who support the government every time it twitches. Indeed, I think that the recent evidence of independence in the Senate indicates that there has been a greater inclination on the part of the Liberals appointed there to question what the treasury benches do than we have found among the backbenchers of the Liberal Party in this House. There has been a much greater inclination for them to stand up for what they believe than there has been among some of my backbench colleagues on the other side.

Having regard to the recent record of my colleague, the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Watson), who spoke before me and who has left, I think that perhaps the consistent independence he has shown in this debate and others will stand him in good stead and at least offers one qualification for his elevation to the other place. Certainly, his independence would make him more at home there than it does here in the back benches of the Liberal Party.

I want to deal for moment with the suggestion that we have some sort of pure democratic system here to which the Senate is a singular affront. We have no such pure system. We have never had a system of direct democracy where one man equalled one vote. My own constituency is an example of the problems of that principle in a country as large as Canada. I represent an area of 40,000 square miles and a population smaller than that of many of my colleagues, such as the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski) and others who represent more compact urban areas. We have always recognized that it is in the nature of this country to allow for some variation in the principle of pure democracy. The Senate is not the single exception to that rule; there have been several others. It is, to say the least, unfair to try to single out the Senate for attack as being undemocratic in one sense or another.

The importance of the Senate—my colleague the hon. member for Provencher and others have made this point—is that it retains the capacity in the Parliament of Canada to ensure some kind of representation for the regions of Canada. That has always been important in a country that is as diverse and as liable to splinter apart as is this country, because it ensures that whatever might happen in an election there will be a vehicle open to the government to draw upon a region where it might not have been successful politically, for advice, for counsel and for the participation in government of outstanding men and women from that particular region or province.

The rationale of our Senate, in part, is that we must never overlook the importance to Canada of keeping in touch with the diversity and regional variation in this country. Of course, it has sometimes fallen down in that role, but the capacity is there. I suggest this is a capacity which is particularly important now because of the secret changes that have been introduced by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in his attempt to centralize authority in a small group reporting to him and his office. This is a group which more and more reflects his own particular prejudice, even as all our views are particular and prejudiced. It reflects his own prejudiced view of the country.

By appointing people who share his particular perspective of Canada, whether it is the president of the CBC, the Clerk of the Privy Council, or whatever, he has moved away from the traditional idea that the people who make the decisions in this country should reflect as much as possible the diversity of the country. Instead of choosing those people, he has tried to choose people in his own image, and that only reflects a part of the country. At a time like this, when a system of government is being smuggled in which increasingly centralizes power in the image of the Prime Minister, it is doubly important that we maintain and strengthen an institution which can speak for the regions of Canada.

This is precisely what the bill would allow us to do in a small way. It would ensure that regions such as the north, which perhaps more than any other is left out of the day to day considerations of the centralized group who run things, would at least have the right of representation in the second chamber of the Parliament of Canada. I think that is an important innovation and one which we in this House should applaud.

I want to deal now with the opportunity that members from southern Canada have to become acquainted with the special problems of that unique region, the north. It is a region which is unique not only in Canada but in the world. It is a region which is little known to most of us here, although some of us have had an opportunity to visit it. The hon. member for Laprairie—the next senator from the Liberal side—had the opportunity to visit the north, as he told us, as a member of the standing committee.

It is clear that the composition of the population, the nature of development, the delicacy of the ecology, the capacity for exploitation of mineral development and the consequences of that exploitation, are different from the problems in other parts of Canada. It is, therefore, important that there be some continuing way in which both chambers of the Parliament of Canada, which are responsible as a whole for deciding the destiny of this country, should reflect that particular and peculiar part of the country. Of course, it is important, as the hon. member for Laprairie indicated, that the standing committee and other members of parliament should visit that unique region as often as possible.

It is helpful that the publicity attending the Berger inquiry and other such inquiries has increased an awareness in southern Canada of what is going on in the north. Some things have increased our understanding of that region, but certainly the government has been deficient in allowing a greater degree of self-government for those areas and not ending the colonial rule of the region. It is too mature and important to be ruled by a bunch of bureaucrats in an ivory tower in Ottawa.

The government has acted too often to limit the capacity of the north to make its own decisions. This bill is an exception to that general practice and allows an opportunity for the people of the territories and the interests and peculiar nature of the territories to be better known in the whole parliament of Canada. While I agree that this could be achieved in other ways, that fact should not negate the necessity and wisdom of pursuing this particular path. That is all we are being asked to do here. We are not being asked to pass judgment on the Senate of Canada, on whether there should be a Senate. We are not even being asked to pass judgment on the practice of institutionalizing the Liberal Party and its political arm in the Senate. We are simply being asked to make that institution, which like this one is supposed to be a national institution, one which is national in fact. I think this is an important initiative and it is one which I intend to support. I regret having to commend the President of the Privy Council for anything, but I commend him for bringing forward this measure and I intend to support it.

[Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain).]

Mr. Jack Cullen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I had not proposed to participate in this debate, but having heard some of the comments I must say that I was impressed in particular with the speech of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). I am surprised that the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth) would object to the suggestion that one person from the Northwest Territories and one from the Yukon be appointed as additional members of the Senate. Surely this would provide a voice that is needed for those two parts of the country. I am sure everyone in this House feels there is room for reform of the Senate. I must say that when I first came here, my answer to the Senate was simplistic—abolish it. But I think that as long as we have it, we should find ways to improve it.

An hon. Member: You were right the first time.

Mr. Cullen: The appointments that have been made, and the role taken by the Senate in the six or seven years that I have been here, have given me a new appreciation of the part that the Senate can play. Whether the appointments are political or, as the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark) has said, are made on the basis of individual talent and ability, I think there is a role for the Senate to play. I do not think anyone would detract from the excellence of the report on the media that was made by that staunch and persuasive Liberal, Senator Keith Davey. There was also Senator Croll's report on poverty which I commend to all hon. members for reading or rereading.

The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) said that senators would do nothing to bite the hand that feeds them. But, Madam Speaker, they are appointed until they are 75; they do not have to worry about the hand because it has already fed them. They are very independent members in that particular tribunal and are in a position to do something for Canada.

I do not think I am betraying any confidence by saying that I have recommended two individuals, both Liberal, for appointment. Neither has been appointed yet, I might add, but I am sure that if they become members of the Senate they will lose any Liberal bias and become good Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cullen: They will be able to ignore the political patronage aspect or feeling. In my experience, Liberals are the people who do most for this country and that is why there are so many in the Senate.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cullen: I was surprised to hear the hon. member for Northwest Territories speak about the appointment of an ombudsman. That is why I paid particular attention to the speech of the hon. member for Edmonton West. A senator is in a position to be an ombudsman. Surely one of the first obligations of a senator or of a member of parliament is to act as ombudsman. The two new senators may be known as senators from the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, but their role will be that of ombudsman.

● (1540)

Speaking of ombudsmen, it is interesting to note that the CBC ombudsman—who does a commendable job—has at his disposal a staff of 65 and a fairly large budget. Any member of parliament who worked with a staff of 65 could do a pretty good job as an ombudsman. In addition to his large staff, the CBC ombudsman has available the services of television camera crews and aircraft which may fly him and his staff to any part of the Northwest Territories or to any other part of the country. Sometimes the revelations of the CBC program "Ombudsman" embarrass this government and embarrass the governments of the provinces and the territories. I think the role which the CBC ombudsman assumes is a proper role, a commendable one, and I commend the CBC for this program: It is a role which all members wish to assume. Independent-thinking people from the Northwest Territories and the Yukon who will be appointed to the other place will also have a role to play as ombudsmen.

One hears much talk in this House about reforming the Senate. Right now, however, we are concerned about giving the people of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories another voice in government and another voice in caucus. Since the NDP adopts the position that it does not want NDP supporters to be appointed to the Senate, that leaves only the other two major parties. Perhaps one candidate should be a Conservative, and one from the NDP.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): We will see what influence you have.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It may be that the hon. member made a mistake; but if he meant what he said, that one of the appointments should be from the NDP, I reject the suggestion.

Mr. Cullen: It may be that I felt one of the appointments should be from the NDP, but the NDP do not want appointments to the Senate. I think they are mistaken in their position; they are doing a disservice to the people they represent. Surely not all the people represented by the hon. member for Northwest Territories agree with the philosophy of the hon: member. The people of the Northwest Territories and of the Yukon should be represented in the Senate.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): They will get two Liberals.

Mr. Cullen: The hon. member for Rocky Mountain made a good speech this afternoon. Although I must defend him from time to time in my caucus, he is not a bad guy. I suggest he speaks much better on his feet than when he is sitting in his seat; he makes a lot of innocuous, silly comments from his seat. When he rises to speak, he makes good sense most of the time, but he is too partisan a Conservative.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): As you are a Liberal.

Mr. Cullen: All this talk about the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) being a centralist, about his grabbing control, and so on, comes about because the hon. member belongs to a party which does not know what leadership is all about.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: That is exactly what we have been looking for.

Mr. Cullen: There comes a time when the leader of a party must seek consensus. If he cannot get it, he must adopt a certain position. That is exactly what the Prime Minister has done.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): What is his present position on prices and wages?

Mr. Cullen: I doubt if the hon. member for Rocky Mountain would understand that, he being a member of the Conservative Party. I support this bill. I hope the appointments will be made. I hope the senators will play the role of ombudsmen, a role the hon. member for Northwest Territories favours; but I think he misses the boat when he says he will not vote for this bill.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, like many others I did not intend to speak on this bill which concerns the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) is interested in this subject but is not present this afternoon because he did not know the bill was to be discussed. It is ironic that the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth), in the shortest speech so far, took the position, categorically and without qualification, that so far as he is concerned the Northwest Territories do not need and do not want a senator.

Members have spoken about the merits of appointing two new members to the Senate. In view of some of the remarks made by the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen), and in view of the lighthearted attitude of the House—this being a Friday afternoon—my party's position, the cross-current of ideas in the House, and the eloquence of the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark), I feel impelled to take part in this debate. I agree with some of the things the hon. member for Rocky Mountain said, although I do not think everything he said was logically consistent. He talked about the independence of the Senate. I ask myself, how can one talk about the independence of sterility? After all, twice zero is zero; ten times zero is still zero. So why talk about the independence of the Senate?

So far as I can see, most members, apart from the hon. member for Northwest Territories and those sitting near him, support this bill. If there is to be a Senate—and on this point I am on the side of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—then I suppose this bill providing for the appointment of a senator from the Northwest Territories and one from the Yukon will help. I know the hon. member for Northwest Territories has an interest in this matter. He knows much more about the north than any member who has contributed to this debate.

As I say, I would not have spoken on the bill if I had not been aware of the interest shown in this subject by the hon. member for Yukon. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) said very kindly and generously, when introducing the bill, that the hon. member for Yukon had wanted to propose a private member's bill to expand the Senate and provide Senate representation for the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, but for technical reasons that bill could not be brought forward and the bill we are now debating was introduced instead. The President of the Privy Council was most generous in his remarks. I know the hon. member for Yukon would like to see the part of the country he speaks for in this House represented in the Senate.

What I now have to say concerns my support for this bill, a support which is qualified. As a student I studied political science, and when I was elected to Ottawa I saw the practical workings of the political process. I, like the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton, had doubts about the Senate. I think that was his position, judging from what he said. However, unlike the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton I still retain some doubts. Without question, there are some great Canadians in the Senate. Without question, the Senate in recent years has done good work in producing task force reports and in its committees. All the same, to me the Senate, fundamentally, is an historical anachronism. The legislative councils, for all their national aspirations, sincerity and good intentions, have disappeared from this land; the senate, too, will disappear, and I do not think it will take too long.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: It is difficult to defend the existence of the Senate, with its present imbalance. This imbalance results from a fact of political history. For the last 30 years or so the party opposite has been in power in this country. I do not say it would have been any different in the Senate if the Conservative Party had been in power for the last 30 years.

You hear much about the work being done by the Senate and about the good work it can do. I know there are many good men there. Perhaps this is part of the difficulty of the hon. member for Northwest Territories. He has this problem and no one in the House can share it, not even the members from Prince Edward Island; but they come closest. The only purpose of the Senate is in providing a floor for representation in this chamber. There is the anomaly of Prince Edward Island, with four Senators and four members. With the population of my area it is difficult to produce much more than one member, perhaps two at the most.

● (1550)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): One and a half.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

Mr. Nowlan: That is right. You have that balanced against the great province of British Columbia where, again because of history, with its population it has a limited number of members in the Senate. At the present time there is a fundamental purpose in the Senate of safeguarding the floor—not in the Senate, although it has to start there, but in this chamber.

Perhaps part of the difficulty of the hon. member for Northwest Territories—and it would perhaps be my difficulty if I were elected by the people to represent that area—is the property qualification. That was a very relevant objection of the hon. member. However, it does not just apply to a senator from the Northwest Territories; the property qualification applies right across the country.

I would feel somewhat differently, representing the people of the Northwest Territories—and I may be an NDP and perhaps not in the party in power, or a Conservative and not in the party in power—if as a result of this bill there was going to be another political voice in my territory, another person who would speak for the people. But first there is a property qualification that eliminates the majority of the people from the territory, the native people; second, and more important, he or she is an appointed person and does not have to go through the rigours of hopscotching around the vast area of the Northwest Territories in order to get elected.

When talking to a former member for the Northwest Territories he told me about the uniqueness of that area. He had to travel to Montreal and then fly north to cover the eastern part of the Northwest Territories. He had to go to Winnipeg and then north to get to the western part.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Edmonton.

Mr. Nowlan: You have to go to Edmonton to get to the far west. If I were the member for that area and had to hopscotch around a territory that is larger than "X" number of countries, and go through the election process, I would not feel very happy if out of the blue the government of the day, without any consultation with the people or the elected councils in the Territories, appointed someone who for all practical purposes, and perhaps more so because he was appointed by the government of the day, has more voice in certain parts of the power structure than I did.

Listening to the hon. member for Northwest Territories was almost like listening to the abortion debates we have had in this House. The men of the world stand up and state strongly why they are against abortion; However, when you talk to the ladies who go through some of the pangs of both conception and abortion—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: —you get a different response from them. The men make the most fundamental Baptists seem pure. I am not a fundamental Baptist but I am a good, practising Baptist. I am not trying to resurrect the abortion debates which we have in this House from time to time. However, if I were the elected member for Northwest Territories I know how I would feel about someone being appointed without any input from the people and not elected by the people. This problem will face the hon. member for Yukon as well as the hon. member for Northwest Territories; he will also be confronted with it being a political appointment by the government of the day. I think there can be good appointments to the Senate. However, I question the need of it. Until we are emancipated like all the provincial legislatures which have abolished the Senate, I will support the bill, with the reservations I have stated.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On division.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions, public bills and private bills.

Mr. Reid: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think there is agreement to proceed with notice of motion No. 24 standing in the name of the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway).

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

LAKE WINNIPEG, MAN.—SUGGESTED FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL PROGRAM TO PREVENT FURTHER EROSION OF SHORELINE

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should take action to initiate a program in conjunction with the government of Manitoba to prevent further erosion of Lake Winnipeg shoreline through the construction of adequate breakwaters, pilings and rip-rap.

He said: Madam Speaker, with reference to Manitoba in general, and Lake Winnipeg in particular, as far as can be determined the three levels of government, particularly the federal and provincial governments, have engaged in little or no concentrated action to lessen the effects of erosion. There was a study announced by the then environment minister, Jack Davis, on September 29, 1971, costing $2 million and to be completed by the end of 1974. Its purpose was:

—to determine the effects that regulation of Lake Winnipeg, diversion of water from the Churchill River and development of the hydroelectric power potential of the Churchill River diversion route are likely to have on water and related resource uses.

It was also to recommend ways of increasing over-all benefits from these projects. The Canada-Manitoba agreement noted that both governments are anxious to ensure that planned water resource developments achieve the greatest possible benefits without unduly prejudicing the present or potential development of these water bodies for other uses. These include water supply, fisheries, wildlife, recreation and transportation.

● (1600)

The Manitoba government initiated studies of erosion and sand movement along the shoreline of Lake Winnipeg. These will be incorporated into the studies authorized under the agreement. Broad guidelines were provided for the studies, involving investigations into the effects of the power development of the water regime, including water levels and flows, erosion, sedimentation and water supply. They will also cover effects on the uses of water and related resources, including community supply, fisheries, wildlife, recreation and tourism, navigation, forestry, land use, mining and historic sites. Social implications were also to be investigated by the board, which I expect will propose means of avoiding undesirable effects on people in the area and suggest how they can gain the greatest social and economic advantage from the development and activities arising out of it.

I commend the governments involved for their efforts. However, the report has not been made public to date and the people of Manitoba are as much in the dark as ever. I understand that the Canadian Centre for Inland Water has proposed a study of Lake Winnipeg which would include environmental aspects, particularly soil erosion. The government of Manitoba has given no indication to the federal government whether or not it intends to proceed at this stage with a joint study. We are awaiting an answer from Manitoba.

I would say this: simply identifying the problem is not enough. At the present time we are awaiting a report on the situation on the Nelson and Churchill rivers. Simply to understand what is taking place in relation to shoreline erosion is not good enough. It is incumbent upon federal and provincial governments that some kind of protective action be considered. I am certain that such measures will be found necessary. What should be the twofold purpose of these studies? The first should be to identify the problem, and the second should take whatever measures are necessary in terms of the prevention of erosion.

I expect the response of the government to this motion will be to the effect that the subject does not specifically fall within federal jurisdiction. Madam Speaker, I wish to bring to your attention examples of federal participation in the conservation of shoreline properties. I cite in particular what has been done in connection with the St. Lawrence, the St. Clair and the Detroit rivers. The federal government sought to ascertain the amount of damage resulting from what I might call unnatural causes, specifically, in these cases, the movement of ships up and down the rivers. The river bank was zoned in accordance with the percentage of damage by erosion attributed to waves caused by the movement of ships. The property owner concerned would then get an estimate of the cost of preventing erosion. He submitted this estimate to the Department of Public Works and in turn the department would authorize the payment of that percentage of the cost of protection payable under the formula—the percentage of erosion caused by, shall I say, the human factor, in this case shipping. I put it to the minister that the erosion of the shoreline of Lake Winnipeg is also due to human causes, and I suggest that the federal government should participate in the cost of remedial measures to the same degree as it has in the case of the three rivers I have mentioned.

In the last few years in Manitoba, Manitoba Hydro has embarked upon a number of extensive development projects. One of these is known as Genpeg. It is no secret in Manitoba and elsewhere that the potentialities of Genpeg can only be realized if Lake Winnipeg can be used as a reservoir. The corporation intends to raise the average level of the lake from 713 feet to 715 feet by a system of locks, and so on, thereby assuring a reservoir which would provide a constant current for the project. Because of the unnaturally high levels which are constantly maintained, excessive erosion is now a fact. As we saw earlier, where there is a factor in erosion other than natural conditions, the federal government has chosen to take an active interest. Today we see, on Lake Winnipeg, similar conditions, conditions not caused by natural phenomena but by human intervention, by human construction. Erosion of the shoreline has been caused by those factors. I submit that excessive shoreline erosion is taking place as a result of human interference in raising the level of the lake from 713 feet to 715 feet. I do not propose that the federal government should accept full responsibility for the prevention of this erosion of the shoreline. Nevertheless, I believe it would be equitable if the federal government were to participate on the basis of the same formula as applied to the cases I have mentioned.

It would be remiss of me if I were not to say that there is, in fact, the possibility of preventing shoreline erosion. In case the minister may wish to allocate the necessary funds immediately, I propose to outline a scheme upon which the minister can spend this money, if he wishes to do so, starting at the beginning of next week. A number of schemes have been aired by leading engineers in Manitoba, and the one which particularly strikes my fancy, since it is within the easiest economic reach of the federal government, involves a system of groins to be constructed along the shoreline of the lake. Take the stretch of the lake where erosion is most prevalent—around the Sandy Hook area; take a stretch of five miles and build groins, 62 of them, 100 feet in length, running 30 degrees with the coast and extending one mile into the lake, and set them 500 or 600 feet apart. The phenomenon caused by a system of groins is well known. As a result of the currents created by these groins existing along the shoreline, back of the groins there is a field of sand, so that you get natural beaches and the only erosion that takes place is just before the groins at the far end. So that over this stretch of five miles along which these groins are actually constructed there would be virtually no shoreline erosion.

I was quite prepared to do some homework for the minister so that he would not have to run around getting figures for himself, and I inquired in terms of cubic yards of material what the cost would be, whether the material was really available, and so on. I do not want to suggest a solution if in fact we have to lug the rocks from Nova Scotia. Consider the fact that this five-mile stretch attracts thousands of Manitobans. It would take only 50,000 yards of material to cover this stretch, and this could be acquired as at the end of this month. If the government does not get inflation under control in the month of May, the costs might be somewhat higher; but assuming that the cost remains the same for May, it would be $10.95 a yard delivered and in place.

If you multiply this figure by the 50,000 yards required, it will cost $549,500. Then there is roughly $90,000 additional labour cost. So for total protection forever and ever, or at least for the next 100 years or so, for some $639,500 we can beat shoreline erosion on this stretch of shoreline of which I am speaking of some five miles. We are not talking about billions of dollars of expenditure; we are talking probably of only 40 to 50 miles at the maximum along which this system of groins and rip-rapping, pile-driving and possibly breakwaters would have to be constructed. When I make an estimate, Madam Speaker, I like to be accurate and conservative. Perhaps the minister is not familiar with the process of accuracy in estimates, but the total amount required for the protection of the shoreline for all of Lake Winnipeg, with which we are vitally concerned, is within $1 million of $20 million.

I am watching the clock and I notice that my time is almost up, so in summary let me say this: I do not believe that the federal government is justified in continuing an attitude toward shoreline erosion that is indistinguishable from that exemplified by the flat earth society. Shoreline erosion on Lake Winnipeg is, and will continue to be, caused in great part by the human element.

I want to stress again that in the cases I have cited where the human element has caused erosion, the federal government has been willing to participate. I am calling for a very similar and equitable attitude on the part of this government with reference to Lake Winnipeg in particular, and generally for all those areas of western Canada where shoreline erosion is attributed to these factors. Using a similar formula, the federal government is now obliged, because of the sheer magnitude of the issue and the reasonableness of my arguments, to make funds available immediately for this project.

Mr. Charles Turner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I should like to commend the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway) for bringing this problem to the attention of the government. I should like to speak on behalf of the Department of Public Works. The Department of Public Works is not responsible for shoreline erosion due to natural causes. It does, however, accept responsibility for shoreline damage or erosion which has been caused by wave action from commercial shipping or through the presence of a federal structure such as a breakwater, wharf or other harbour works. Where erosion is caused by natural forces and remedial measures are considered necessary, it is the responsibility of the riparian owner to initiate a remedial program. Where erosion arises from high water levels and flooding and a disaster situation exists, a number of federal government agencies could provide assistance to the province concerned consistent with pertinent federal policy.

I should like to bring that policy to the attention of the House. The British North America Act delegates responsibility for the control of navigation to the federal government. A cabinet directive on remedial works recorded on November 6, 1966, provided for federal government participation in remedial works where erosion is caused by commercial navigation or the presence of a federal government structure. On behalf of the government, the Department of Public Works has been discharging the responsibility of constructing protective works along shores of the St. Lawrence River and other navigable waters where waves from commercial navigation cause erosion. The department also considers erosion to be its responsibility when a government structure is deemed the cause of erosion and when a government property is threatened by erosion from natural causes such as waves, currents, seepage, rain, frost, ice, etc.

It is realized that there should be some reasonable relationship between the cost of the protection work to be built and the value of the property to be protected, otherwise the government could be blamed for having built costly works for the protection of properties of very little value. To ensure that a fair and reasonable relationship criteria is applied, the 1966 cabinet directive was amended and approved by cabinet on May 2, 1974. All memoranda on this subject written prior to the introduction of the revised policy, excluding reference to criteria and guidelines developed by the Department of Public Works, are superseded.

The revised policy is summarized as follows. The Department of Public Works is authorized to construct remedial works and assume the total cost of such works in the event that more than 50 per cent of the erosion can be attributed to navigation or a federal government structure and the value of the land or property to be protected is equal to, or greater than, the cost of such remedial works. Where erosion results mainly from natural causes but where navigation or the presence of a federal government structure is a contributing factor, the Department of Public Works may contribute to the cost of such remedial works in proportion to the effect these causes have on erosion. Contributions will be based on a cost that DPW considers sufficient to provide adequate protection. The Department of Public Works continue to carry out minimum maintenance of such works in accordance with the terms of the policy.

Headquarters and regions will ensure that all remedial works are evaluated in accordance with the terms of the amended policy, and where investigations indicate federal government responsibility, that the degree of government contribution is clearly established through the application of supporting criteria developed by the department. Where supporting criteria is considered inadequate in complex cases clearly to define the degree of government responsibility, it will be the responsibility of regions to identify the need for special studies or measurements and to report their recommendations to headquarters.

Erosion of the shorelines of lakes and rivers is a continuing natural process. The boundary between land and water is subject to constant changes and shifts due to natural causes, and occasionally man's activities. Erosion and its resulting problems for shoreline property owners occur throughout Canada. Unfortunately, historical development of shorelines has proceeded without a proper awareness of the process of erosion or of the constantly changing nature of the shorelines. All too often this has resulted in serious problems.

● (1620)

The rate of erosion depends on composition of the shoreline and the exposure of the shore to the natural weathering agents, especially currents and waves. In some cases, surface water run-off, ground water seepage, frost and ice action also contribute to erosion. Human activities sometimes intensify these natural erosion processes and cause additional damage. From the environmental point of view it is often a wise rule not to interfere with nature's shoreline processes. The eroded materials usually contribute to building of beaches in other locations and the formation and maintenance of offshore sand bars and islands. However, erosion of shorelines has often led to financial hardship and personal losses. In some cases government action is necessary, but in the case of Lake Winnipeg the federal government is limited in its choice of action.

In most cases erosion affects private property directly. Under the British North America Act, matters concerning property rights normally fall under provincial and municipal jurisdiction. Thus, the federal government has not usually contributed to the construction of erosion protection works. The federal government does have responsibilities related to navigation, fisheries, and in connection with the management of international and interprovincial waters. In special cases, then, it assumes, through the Department of Public Works, some responsibility for protecting shores from erosion caused by commercial navigation or due to the presence of federal structures. Under these circumstances, the federal government has spent about $30 million on the construction and maintenance of shore protective works since 1947.

Where shore erosion can be traced to waves generated by commercial navigation, the Department of Public Works will construct dikes and bank stabilization works to protect the shoreline. If more than 50 per cent of the erosion at a location is caused by marine transport, and if the land to be protected is worth at least twice the cost of remedial works, the Department of Public Works will assume all project costs. If transport or federal structures contribute to less than one-half of the erosion at a site, the department may assume up to 50 per cent of project costs.

In the case of Lake Winnipeg, the government does not consider that the appropriate conditions exist for federal participation in erosion protection projects. Neither commercial navigation nor federal structures contribute in any significant way to the natural erosion forces. Wind-generated waves on this large, open body of water are the main causes of weathering of the shoreline. Furthermore, Lake Winnipeg is neither an international nor an interprovincial body of water and the jurisdiction over property rights lies with provincial authorities.

If, in the judgment of provincial authorities, the erosion problem is serious enough to be considered of national concern, the federal government is willing to discuss the situation. Appropriate mechanisms have been established under the Canada Water Act for joint federal-provincial studies and action in matters of significant national interest. However, in general the federal government is very reluctant to impinge on the provinces' prerogatives in this matter. There is, therefore, no readily apparent justification for federal involvement either directly or in co-operation with the provincial government. Indeed, to federally fund protection bank stabilization works in this instance might create a precedent that could have multibillion dollar ramifications throughout the country.

Nineteenth century thinking demanded that man conquer and tame nature, but human existence is not necessarily a battle against nature. Today we are realizing that perhaps the best course of action is to live in harmony with our environment and the forces of nature. It has been said that flood damages are not cuased by an act of God but by acts of men. The same can be said of erosion damages. It is this government's view that in many cases the most desirable solution to the problem is not the provision of structural works but the introduction of land management practices designed to discourage development on erosion prone shorelines.

Mr. Ross Milne (Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I should like to take part in this debate for a few minutes, not so much because I have an in-depth knowledge of these problems on Lake Winnipeg but, rather, because I have some general concern along the same line in relation to Lake Ontario, particularly the Scarborough bluffs, and perhaps because I have some background in working in this area as a result of professional training.

We should take a look at the matter of erosion control as introduced by the motion of the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway). The previous speaker pretty well outlined the official position of the Department of Public Works and the federal responsibility. Federal responsibility is in the area of navigable waters and damage relating directly to the use of such waters, taking into account the cost of the work in relation to the amount of damage.

I was rather impressed by the approach of the Canadian government to erosion problems. The hon. member for Selkirk raised a question about the time-frame involved and I think his concern is justified. In terms of the government's approach to this problem, I am not sure how widely distributed is the report resulting from the study of shoreline erosion on the St. Lawrence River and Great Lakes system. This is a good document in terms of its inventory of those areas that have been damaged, or could be damaged, and the extent. This is much like carrying out a school board inventory of the school repairs necessary and deciding which school needs the repairs most. I do not think you can go ahead with projects in many of these areas until you have made an inventory of the existing problems. The consultative process that flows from this very necessarily involves the provinces.

I hope the report resulting from the study in Manitoba of erosion damage on Lake Winnipeg will soon be forthcoming. I differ with the hon. member in that I believe it will be up to the province of Manitoba to invite federal participation and assistance in this area. I understand the causes of erosion in the area are two, namely, falling water levels and substantial wave action due to unprecedented winds.

One of the results of hydroelectric power projects is the alteration to a substantial degree of water levels. This is something the governments involved, whether federal or provincial, will have to take into account in dealing with these changing levels. Whenever there is a change in the water level, nature takes its course and re-establishes the shoreline. Those shorelines along our lakes and rivers which are not subject to erosion are shorelines that have experienced a fair amount of erosion in days past, with the soil and material that can be eroded having gone, leaving a granular base that is pretty well erosion free.

I have looked at a number of hydroelectric projects in which I have been interested over the years and have found that much of the damage to the environment has resulted in nature re-establishing shorelines that are essentially erosion-proof. I think it is absolutely necessary, in terms of hydroelectric projects, that this type of analysis and assessment be done ahead of time. I think the remedy proposed by the hon. member for Selkirk is good, but it should have been established before any change in the water level so that nature might have worked to establish the new level.

I have some knowledge of the structure of municipalities, and so on, surrounding lakes and I assume that if Lake Winnipeg is like most lakes of this size it has several municipalities perhaps of differing financial straits and ability to deal with such a program. I was associated with the conservation authority in Ontario some years ago. I was very impressed with the role played by that authority. At one time it was really responsible for the watershed policies in respect of navigation and drainage of the lakes and larger rivers into the conservation and water conserving projects there.

It is of interest, perhaps, to the hon. member that at the present time, in the city of Toronto, all of the shoreline associated with the greater metropolitan area has been turned over to the metropolitan and district conservation authorities in terms of the water shoreline development as well as erosion and shoreline maintenance. This has been done because the province of Ontario has taken the view that perhaps of all the bodies which might be involved in this, this group of people with the overview it has, not only in respect of the shoreline but because of having jurisdiction over the entire watershed, is perhaps the best qualified body to deal with the shoreline itself.

In terms of some of the remedial action the hon. member is suggesting, I think the establishment of a conservation authority, founded essentially by the province but contributed to by each of the municipalities through which the watershed flows, and in some instances by the federal government, is a very good approach to take. I believe it was back in 1954 that we had hurricane Hazel. At that time my riding and particularly the adjacent riding were very drastically affected by the flash flood. There was tremendous erosion not only of the watershed area draining the Humber River system and the metropolitan area, but also on the lakefront, involving loss of life and property. That was really the impetus for the establishment of the conservation authorities which have been able to turn much of the land subject to flooding and bad erosion more or less over to public ownership, on the basis that the land would be used for recreational purposes. With the tremendous growth that we have in urban areas, I think it is almost impossible to satisfy the need for recreational facilities. Much of the remedial work and programs of the authority have been compatible with using the land, when restored, for recreational purposes. I think really this is the only way to accomplish this.

I think quite often when we speak about erosion problems in respect of shorelines, we are specifically interested in a particular shoreline and how it might be repaired at a reasonable cost and in a proper engineering manner. I believe we quite often forget that a good deal of the problem may originate inland, and that we must take a very close look at the entire watershed in terms of agriculture, conservation practices and what the over-all land use practices are.

I have some knowledge of the Great Lakes. From year to year when water levels vary as they do, particularly when the level is high, there is a tremendous amount of erosion and much of that problem results from some very questionable municipal zoning which allows structures to be built in areas which, to the practical eye, are very prone to damage. I think zoning is another area of municipal responsibility in this regard.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Kent-Essex): Madam Speaker, it is with some trepidation that I rise to join in this discussion this afternoon since I, like the previous speaker, have little knowledge of the actual physical conditions of which the hon. member opposite speaks when he describes the problems that caused him to present this motion. He made reference to the problems around Lake Winnipeg. My riding borders on Lake Erie, one of the Great Lakes which has experienced substantial difficulty from erosion. Considerable assistance has been granted by the federal government in the form of studies along the lakeshore to determine what are the sources of difficulty and what might be a potential cure for these problems.

Along Lake Erie and Lake St. Clair, and indeed—to bring it into context with what the hon. member has said—along the Detroit River and the St. Clair River there has been substantial damage caused by high water. Much damage is experienced from year to year as a result of wind conditions and shipping in this area. I suggest that the federal government, by its proposals and policies described by the parliamentary secretary, has recognized that in certain cases, in fact, the damage has been caused or has resulted from the construction of some type of federal work or work it has permitted to be done in the navigation area. In many cases the erosion has been caused by wave action.

There is no question that when in the area of $30 million was spent by the federal government on the St. Lawrence River system, Lake Erie, Lake St. Clair, the Detroit River and the St. Clair River, it was spent by reason of the fact that much of the destruction of land and property owned by private individuals was caused by the heavy wave action resulting from navigation. I have sat beside the river and seen what the wave action of a freighter can do: it is unbelievable.

I think the policy of the federal government, that there must be some reparation in respect of this type of damage, is sound. However, when I find in fact that there is no heavy shipping on Lake Winnipeg, I find it difficult to believe that the hon. member opposite can make the same point that is applicable to the St. Clair and the Detroit River system in respect of Lake Winnipeg and its shoreline. I was interested when the hon. member suggested that many engineering studies had taken place and that some of the conclusions of those studies seemed to be that the groins system might be the answer. He seemed to think this might be the answer for time immemorial, and then he cut down to perhaps 100 years.

I suggest to him that the same type of protection that he described has been tried with respect to Lake Erie. I would advise him that I would be happy at any time to take him into areas on the south border of my riding to show him what happens to the groins. The experience in the area of Lake Erie has been that a groin lasts perhaps 30 years, if you are lucky. They have tried all kinds of groins. They have tried them with timber and the gabion type, being wire mesh, stone filled. The latest method seems to be very large, armoured stone. The force of water is something to behold. It tears these great, man-made gabions out as if they were nothing.

I think of gabions that were put in in my riding less than 20 years ago. Now there is nothing left to bear witness to them except a few pieces of water-torn and ice-torn wood. It is true that there was a certain build-up of sand behind these gabions and then, for a certain period of time, they worked. But with the high water over the past two years, this sand is rapidly disappearing. I, along with the hon. member opposite, would like to be able to call on the federal government to give us some assistance in protecting the land that is rapidly being worn away. However, the fact that my constituents, as well as the constituents of the hon. member, are experiencing the same difficulties does not make it a federal problem. Surely we should look beyond this and consider the total cost as well as the precedent we would be setting in providing the kind of support which the hon. member seeks.

If there are difficulties such as I have described in my riding, and such as those described by the hon. member opposite along Lake Winnipeg, surely the same type of problems exist along all our coasts, inland or otherwise. If the federal government goes beyond the bounds described in its policies, it will enter into what is essentially provincial jurisdiction in protecting these shorelines, and I suggest that the cost would be too high for this fair land of ours to support. Even when expressed by the figure $20 million, which I think the hon. member opposite suggested for one project, if one multiplies that figure by the number of projects which would ultimately come before the federal government, one would be faced with a gargantuan sum.

I think that the policy described by the parliamentary secretary is reasonable. It affords the opportunity to the federal government to take its share of the burden and, indeed, to accept the blame if in fact it has been responsible or should have some responsibility. It recognizes that there are certain instances when it is not just nature that is tearing away at the shorelines and that perhaps we should give some assistance; but I think it also does service to the separation of power between the provincial and federal jurisdictions, recognizing that the province has some obligation to do something within its borders as well.

I think recognition of that shared responsibility is accepted by other jurisdictions, and I point specifically to the jurisdiction of Ontario which I know best. The province recognizes, through its special emergency assistance programs, its disaster and relief assistance programs and its shoreline property assistance program—the list is long and I have looked at these various problems because I have experienced this type of difficulty in my constituency—that it has a substantial responsibility.

I suggest to the hon. member opposite that surely the province of Manitoba, in this instance, must also recognize that it has a responsibility, if indeed not the total responsibility, for dealing with the problem which he described. I might have a certain sympathy for the problem of the hon. member opposite by reason of shared experience, but I would have some difficulty in requesting the federal jurisdiction to change its policy position. I think the policy is sound and I think the federal government recognize their responsibilities. They recognize that there are difficulties with respect to shared responsibility with the provinces and that those responsibilities should not be breached.

Before concluding I should like to point out that in addition to the problem in the areas I have described in my riding, and indeed in the Lake Winnipeg area where erosion is taking place, there is the problem of land use and subsoil erosion. In my area there are high bluffs around Lake Erie which have been dropping into the lake. Notwithstanding the fact that for a number of years this process has been going on as a result of natural erosion, this has increased. There is some suggestion in the independent studies that have been made that the cause of this type of fall may be subsoil water that has been created by putting up new subdivisions which have created tremendous subsoil water loads from septic systems which flow toward the lake trying to seek their natural levels, thus creating potential slides which cause great chunks of land to fall in.

I think this example points out the necessity for the investigative program and study that the federal government has undertaken in the Lake Winnipeg area. Taking all these things together, I cannot support the motion of the hon. member although I sympathize with his reasons for bringing it forward. I suggest that perhaps he should seek further assistance from his constituents and from the provincial jurisdiction. For the reasons I have given, I am forced to speak against the motion.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, like the hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Daudlin), I am in sympathy with the position stated by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway), but I have to part company with the hon. member for Kent-Essex with respect to his statement that he would oppose the motion. Indeed, I give it my support. Admittedly, this problem of erosion of the shores of Lake Winnipeg must be shared provincially and federally; no one denies that, least of all the hon. member for Selkirk. It is also my understanding that the government of Manitoba has sought financial assistance from the federal government, and I hope that despite the possibility that this motion may not pass this afternoon, continued consideration and study will be given to this matter.

I can confirm the seriousness of the problem. This erosion is taking place on the west shore of Lake Winnipeg in the constituency of the hon. member for Selkirk, in the area to which he referred from Sandy Hook to Gimli. It also takes place on the east shore of Lake Winnipeg in the constituency of the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), north and south of Victoria Beach.

My interest in this subject of course is not only because of the fact that, like these two hon. members, I am a Manitoban, but also because quite a few people from the city of Winnipeg, part of which I have the honour to represent, have summer homes and cottages on both sides of Lake Winnipeg. When the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Turner) started to make his speech, I thought for a moment that perhaps the battle had been won. As he outlined the new criteria on the basis of which the federal government will make money available, I thought my hon. friend from Selkirk was going to win, but there seem to be different forms of logic around the place. I regret that at the end the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Works, speaking on behalf of the government, came down with the negative reply that he gave today.

There certainly are many causes for the situation so far as Lake Winnipeg is concerned. Part of the trouble is because of navigation, but no one of us would claim that is the only reason. Part of it is weather and winds. Last summer, in particular, unusual winds resulted in very severe erosion on both sides of the lake. Some people thought that the trouble might be because of the provincial government's hydro work in the north, but it was pretty clear to the persons who were there that it was when the wind was blowing a certain way that most of the erosion took place.

From what has been said on behalf of the federal government, it strikes me that it recognizes it has to consider causes that are natural and part of the whole development of the surface of the earth, but that it also has to consider man-made causes. On all counts, it seems to me there is a case for the federal government to be interested in and to share the responsiblility of dealing with the problem that faces people on both sides of Lake Winnipeg.

I should like to express once again my support for the resolution presented this afternoon by the hon. member for Selkirk.

[Translation]

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Madam Speaker, though I have no direct interest in the erosion around Lake Winnipeg other than that of sharing the concerns of those who live along its shores, and the concern so well expressed by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway), I want to assure that hon. member that I share fully the views he expressed in this House, this afternoon and previously, for, although I do not come from Manitoba, I do represent a riding that suffers extreme erosion damages from the sea.

If I am not mistaken, until 1954 the government had a policy whereby it granted a certain amount annually to remedy, at least in part, this situation which has become most alarming. But since Canada, unlike Africa, has many streams, damages by erosion are therefore very extensive. In 1954 the government, faced with the enormous claims and costs involved—I was told that they could then even exceed the federal budget—decided in its wisdom, if we can call it that, to set guidelines that were described, I think, by the parliamentary secretary, stating the federal government would recognize its responsibility in cases of erosion due to shipping or the presence of structures erected by the federal government.

Those are the same guidelines that have been dinned into our ears for many years, since 1954, and which were reiterated recently by the Minister of Public Works in reply to a question asked by a member of the Social Credit Party. I believe it was the hon. member for Bellechasse.

At Chaleur Bay, in some places, there are 25 or 30 miles between the two shores, that of New Brunswick and that of the province of Quebec. One easily realizes that when a ship goes up Chaleur Bay to reach the ports of Dalhousie or Carleton for example, what impact the wake can have on the bayshore.

This can happen on the St. Lawrence River, relatively narrow at Quebec City and maybe somewhat more a little upstream, but among our criteria was the presence of federal structures. For eight years at least I, for one, have been pleading in favour of the numerous constituents located between two wharves built by the Department of Public Works and who unfortunately were unable to have protection walls erected to protect their buildings, first the barn and then the house, from falling down into Chaleur Bay.

So my argument is based on the presence of federal structures in the area. There are two such structures: one west and the other east. But that is not enough. The property is valued, and then it is found that such and such a percentage shall be paid by the municipality, another percentage by the owner and the balance by the federal government.

This can no longer be tolerated. As suggested in the motion by the hon. member for Selkirk, the federal government should do something since this is an area of mixed jurisdiction. I would even say it is almost exclusively provincial jurisdiction. Even considering what the federal government did in the past, the province submits this is under federal jurisdiction.

My constituents ask whether the waters are federal. Nowhere have I read that the waters in Chaleur Bay or elsewhere were federal waters. The problem should be settled once and for all, because the province cannot afford it alone. The owner with repairs to be done cannot pay the cost, neither can the municipality. There should be agreements of necessity, as soon as possible, between various levels of government so that the situation may be corrected, which has become very urgent in some instances. If our areas are to be developed, they should first be saved and protected.

SUGGESTED REFERENCE OF ALLEGED DREDGING CONTRACT IRREGULARITIES TO COMMITTEE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity arising from the statements of former Auditor General, Maxwell Henderson, concerning the blatant disregard of his warnings of irregularities in the dredging industry by the public accounts committee. I therefore move seconded by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil):

That the government refers the question of irregularities in the dredging industry back to the public accounts committee for a thorough and objective inquiry and further that the government directs that committee to exercise its duties with the respect for the recommendations of the Auditor General and the objectivity necessity to function as government watchdogs, rather than government lapdogs.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion being proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43 cannot be presented without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43, I request unanimous consent of the House to discuss a matter of extreme urgency which requires our immediate attention.

Because there is now a real crisis in the Canadian labour sector, which crisis is to a large extent caused by the uncertainty in which Canadian workers live with regard to job security as well as the cost of living, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That this House study, as soon as possible the Social Credit proposals for the adoption of a guaranteed annual income to be paid all Canadians, to give them access to economic and material security and thus put an end to the present crisis in labour relations.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, the motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: As there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

SUGGESTED PLAQUE AT ETOBICOKE, ONT. COMMEMORATING PRIME MINISTER'S BROKEN PROMISE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise to propose a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43 arising out of the urgent and pressing necessity of permanently preserving great moments in Canadian history. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

In view of the Prime Minister revealing last week in an answer to a written question that it was on May 27, 1974 in Etobicoke, Ontario, that he made the solemn commitment to "wrestle inflation into the ground", the House requests the government to declare that place a national historic site with a suitable plaque to be erected thereon commemorating the greatest broken promise in the history of Canadian politics.

AIR CANADA

REQUEST FOR DETAILS CONCERNING PROPOSED INQUIRY AND ASSURANCE IT WILL BE PUBLIC

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is the minister now in a position to inform the House as to the precise nature of the inquiry that he has announced is going to take place with respect to Air Canada, its terms of reference, its scope and other pertinent details involving what particular phases and aspects of Air Canada's operations will be examined?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the only answer I can give at this moment is that it is not going to be an in-house inquiry, but a governmental inquiry. I have to submit to cabinet tomorrow the form it is going to take. I think that tomorrow we will know the terms of reference and the person who will be in charge of the inquiry.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I hope the minister will be able to assure the House tomorrow that this inquiry will be public and not necessarily limited to this particular incident, but will include such matters as labour relations and accounting procedures. Perhaps the inquiry could also look into the pay and prerogatives and privileges of those in Air Canada's upper level of management. Will the minister consider taking this under advisement?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, in the question which the hon. member directed to me the other day, he revealed something which was very important as far as Air Canada is concerned. That is why I reacted immediately. If he is now asking me to make an inquiry into the whole Air Canada organization, I do not think that would be in the public interest. I do not know what the terms of reference will be. Cabinet will have to approve them. As soon as I know, I will communicate them to the hon. member.

FARE INCREASES—SUGGESTION CANADIAN TRANSPORT COMMISSION HEARINGS BE EXPEDITED TO DETERMINE JUSTIFICATION

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I hope this will be a public inquiry and not strictly limited to the narrow aspect of what Air Canada is doing. I wish to direct a related question to the minister. In view of the precarious position of Air Canada, with its load factors dropping and deficit increasing, will the minister expedite hearings by the Canadian Transport Commission to determine whether fare increases are necessary and justified and, if so, will he act on this as quickly as possible?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In fairness, I cannot honestly say that is a related or supplementary question.

PROPOSAL CERTAIN ASPECTS OF OPERATION BE REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is a follow up to that asked by the hon. member for Central Nova. Without prejudicing in any way the eventual decision of the government for a wider inquiry into the Air Canada charges, will the minister put the matter to his cabinet colleagues that there are certain other matters concerning Air Canada that should be dealt with by parliament? Some of these matters were referred to in the statement made last night by Maxwell Henderson on the show W-5. These matters are clearly within the prerogative of parliament to decide, not an inquiry. Without prejudicing what the decision will be of the government inquiry, will the minister consider putting these wider political matters referring to the economy of Air Canada into the parliamentary committee set up for that purpose?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the House will have an opportunity to inquire into Air Canada. The Standing Committee on Transport and Communications will probably call Mr. Pratte as a witness. Hon. members will be able to put any questions they want to Mr. Pratte. Outside that, there is the general air policy being reviewed which will include Air Canada and civil aviation policy, which the House will have an opportunity of discussing. So I do not see why we should mix all that up with this popular inquiry referring to something which apparently seems abnormal. We have so many opportunities that I do not think it would be useful to lose sight of this popular problem which is a very precise one; we know the terms, we know what happened—or we think we know. We shall deal with the aspect as fast as we can. For the rest, I have no objection at all to discussing the case of Air Canada.

[Mr. Marchand (Minister of Transport).]

● (1410)

DATE OF DECISION OF MR. PRATTE TO APPEAR ON "W-5"

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I should like to thank the minister for the tenor of his answer because it is exactly what I was hoping he would say: the subject matter of the inquiry he is setting up is one thing, but parliament has its own function to perform, and that is another thing. And that is what the minister has pledged to do. I think the minister is aware of what my next question is going to be. It is really simple. Was the decision of Mr. Yves Pratte to go on "W-5" made some weeks ago before this fuss started and, if so, was the inquiry which was agreed to here last week a device for him not to give the information which he was prepared to give there last night?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): I do not know what the result of the inquiry will be. I do not think there is any charge against Mr. Pratte. I think that one of the vice-presidents was involved in the transaction which was referred to by the hon. member for Central Nova. I think that Mr. Pratte can go on "W-5". He is in charge. He is president of Air Canada. If some day we think there are good reasons to remove him from that position I think the government is going to do it. But for the time being he can go on "W-5" and answer the questions of the newspaper men.

TRADE

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON PROPOSED MEETING OF COMMONWEALTH TRADE MINISTERS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It arises out of the report which Mr. Arnold Smith, Secretary-General of the Commonwealth, has prepared for the Commonwealth meeting in Kingston, Jamaica, in which he suggests there be a meeting of Commonwealth trade ministers. In view of the fact that the Canadian representatives at the Rome food conference last November took the position that trade matters should be dealt with exclusively by GATT, I want to ask the minister whether the Canadian government is prepared to support the idea that a meeting of Commonwealth trade ministers be held in order to assist the developing parts of the Commonwealth in establishing outlets for commodities at reasonable prices?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I have not seen the report to which the hon. member refers but I am sure the Prime Minister, who will be attending the meeting of first ministers at the Commonwealth conference within the next ten days, will want to take that suggestion under advisement.

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON INTERNATIONAL COMMODITY AGREEMENTS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In view of the fact that the Canadian representatives at the Sugar International Agreement Conference held in Geneva in 1973 are accused of being among those who stonewalled efforts to reach agreement on sugar prices with the effect we have all noticed—domestic sugar prices have quadrupled since that time—is the Canadian government now prepared to discuss international commodity agreements which would stabilize trade with respect to both price and supply throughout the developing countries of the world?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): We are, of course, prepared to discuss these questions at any time. One of the reasons the conference to which the hon. member has referred was not successful was that the producer countries did not feel it was in their interest to conclude an agreement at that time. They felt that prices would continue to rise. I think it is important to recognize that there are many more people in the developing countries that are sugar importers rather than sugar exporters.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I put my final supplementary question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the speech which he made at the Guildhall dinner in London recently in which he made a plea for sharing the world's goods, particularly with the underdeveloped areas of the world, what initiative is the Canadian government going to take with respect to developing international commodity agreements, and what leadership will the Canadian government be prepared to give at the Commonwealth meeting at Kingston, Jamaica in order to assure these countries that they will get prices for their raw materials which bear some relationship to the durable goods which they have to purchase?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is a question which was raised at the previous Commonwealth conference held in Ottawa and regarding which we took the initiative of asking the Secretariat to prepare a series of reports. We in the Canadian government have also been studying this question, and we will take in Kingston, Jamaica, the position which will carry out best the aims and objectives that this government wants to follow.

POST OFFICE

MONTREAL STRIKE—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON PROGRESS OF NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General.

In view of the rather difficult situation in Montreal, which is due to the postal conflict, and since we are receiving phone calls almost every minute from Montrealers who are asking whether negotiations are progressing, is the minister in a position to say whether the negotiations now going on between the department and the union are improving or deteriorating?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member might be asking two questions. If he means the negotiations between the government and postal workers, they are proceeding smoothly. If he means the negotiations between the minister and those who work in the Montreal building, productivity has improved and I believe the backlog of one million letters is already down to about 500,000.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary.

I have heard yesterday on the news that a union official, the president I think, had charged the government with a certain provocation, arguing that they had hidden parcels and letters in some warehouses in the vicinity of Montreal; is there something founded in that allegation? Can the minister tell us whether this union president is a liar or whether he said the truth?

[English]

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, rather than reply in my sidewalk French, I might say that the reason we have been putting the mail in locations other than the main post office is that if we put any more in the main post office you could not get in the door if you did want to work.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LAW OF THE SEA CONFERENCE—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON SHARING REVENUES FROM MARGINAL AREAS OF THE SEABED

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is to the right hon. Prime Minister and it is about his sharing concept. Does the sharing concept indicate that the government is now anxious to compromise in its position about sharing the revenues in the marginal areas of the seabed, as hoped for by many nations at the Law of the Sea Conference, and would such revenue sharing not mean perhaps that many countries would then accept Canada's position?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The question is a legitimate one, Mr. Speaker, but it does have to do with the whole process of putting together a series of agreements and understandings on the law of the sea. The hon. member will understand that some countries are prepared to give up something in return for something else. I imagine this is how every country is proceeding at that conference. Each country is trying to get a law of the sea accepted by all, but one in which that particular country's participation will not be unfair to itself as opposed to what others are prepared to give up. The hon. member knows that this is how these discussions take place. He will have to see what package Canada is prepared to accept when the whole package is put together, but he would not expect me to give him our official position on any one element of that package now.

● (1420)

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, would the right hon. gentleman not agree that time is running rather late for a compromise Canadian package?

Mr. Trudeau: I hope again, Mr. Speaker, that time has not run out until the last card is on the table.

AIR CANADA

REASON FOR FAILURE OF MEMBERS TO RECEIVE 1974 ANNUAL REPORT—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OFFICIALS WILL APPEAR BEFORE COMMITTEE

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport that is somewhat supplementary to questions asked previously, and it is in connection with the "W-5" program last night on CTV when a statement was made quoting from the 1974 annual report of Air Canada. Can the minister explain why members of parliament have not received this report when apparently certain people in the news media have received it? When will the report be tabled? Can the minister give us the assurance that Air Canada officials will appear before the Committee on Transport and Communications and when can we expect that appearance?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the next time I will bring my pencil to take notes as there are so many questions asked about the same thing.

An hon. Member: You couldn't answer anyhow.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I think the committee can ask Mr. Pratte to appear before it at any time, and I do not think he would refuse to appear. As far as the report of Air Canada is concerned, it all depends on to which report the hon. gentleman is referring. If it is the financial report, it has been postponed for about two years along with the CN report because there was not approval in the House here. That is the reason you do not have it. If there is a public report of Air Canada, there is no reason you should not have it.

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, the fact is that it would have been easier to ask my questions in logical order than to ask supplementary questions. Let me inform the Minister of Transport that the report I was referring to was the 1974 annual report from which some figures were quoted. Apparently, it must be ready or some of the people of the press would not have been using those figures on the program. I am wondering when that report will be tabled and why it has not been tabled up to this point if it has been released in part to the media?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I would ask for the indulgence of the House in saying that if my memory serves me well this report has to be produced before May 5.

An hon. Member: The 1974 report?

Mr. Fairweather: This is 1975.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Was he referring to last year's report?

An hon. Member: The 1974 report.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): And you do not have it?

Mr. Murta: No.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I am going to institute a departmental inquiry.

POSSIBILITY OF SOME PERSONS BEING SUSPENDED UNTIL COMPLETION OF INQUIRY

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, in view of the allegations of serious improprieties on the part of top management of Air Canada and what appear to be serious contradictions between statements by a former marketing vice-president and Mr. Yves Pratte, I would ask the minister whether it is the intention of the government to suspend any person or persons while the inquiry referred to by the minister is underway?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am going to do what I promised the House I would do. Tomorrow, I intend to recommend to the Cabinet that we institute an inquiry. Do not ask me to make this inquiry here in the House, as I am not going to do that. When the inquiry officers have been nominated and the terms of reference and the time established, then at that moment perhaps you can put questions, but I am not going to tell you that we are going to fire a man who may be charged wrongly. I do not know that. If we knew all these things we would now only have to make a decision.

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It covers the general question of the accountancy proceedings of Air Canada, certain payments made, contractual measures and authority of vice-presidents. Is the right hon. gentleman aware that when his Minister of Transport in the House used the term "a government inquiry" in English in any event this has an innuendo to the effect that it would be some type of government, departmental or in-house type of inquiry. Is the hon. gentleman aware that some of us in any event on this side of the House would be satisfied with only a judicial type of public, open or royal commission investigation of this matter.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

POST OFFICE

RURAL ROUTE MAIL CONTRACTORS—REQUEST FOR ADJUSTMENT OF CONTRACTS IN VIEW OF HIGHER COSTS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. In view of recent cost of living figures which indicate an annual increase in the cost of living of some 11.3 per cent what steps is the Postmaster General taking to adjust the contracts of rural route mail drivers, those locked into five-year contracts, when the agreements normally are not increased at least until after an initial two-year period?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. gentleman for his courtesy in having given me notice of the question. He is quite accurate in saying that in initial contracts the law at the present time stipulates there will be no increase for the first two years but a contract can be adjusted annually after that. Those contracts which are renewal contracts can be adjusted annually. We are very conscious of the fact that the increased cost of petrol, gasoline and maintenance has in many instances created a degree of hardship and we are contemplating changes in the act which might reduce the two-year period.

We are certainly giving maximum consideration to those requests which have been made and some people forget they have the right to request adjustments. Inflation is taken into consideration in readjusting the contracts.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the general transport index is up even higher, to 12 per cent, and auto operation and maintenance cost is up to 14.3 per cent and that on October 11 last, as recorded at page 345 of Hansard in answer to a similar question, the minister indicated to the hon. member for Gaspé that "there may be other ways in which we can take into consideration the effect of inflation on this particular group of contractors", since the minister has had this under consideration for something over half a year, when will we in fact have a program to alleviate a very serious problem in respect of these rural route mail drivers?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I think the reference is very accurate. The continued rate of inflation means more urgency in respect to introducing the required amendment. In the meantime greater consideration to costs has been taken when adjusting these contracts considering what they have suffered in the fixed two-year period through inflation.

TRADE

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON INTERNATIONAL COMMODITY AGREEMENTS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might press the Prime Minister a little about the government's position with regard to international commodity agreements and ask him to indicate to the House what is the general disposition of the government toward these agreements at the present time. Does the government regard a general approach to the international commodity agreements as desirable or not in general?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker; that is I think quite simply answered by saying the government's position throughout has been that we are preparing any international commodity agreements to cover both consumer and producer groups. Very recently we have refused to participate in a union of countries trying to get together on a producer basis. It has been our consistent effort, whether it be in wheat, sugar, ferrous minerals or any other commodity, to ensure that there be a meeting of producer and consumer interests instead of confrontations between them.

● (1430)

INTERNATIONAL COMMODITY AGREEMENTS—ALLEGED STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF FINANCE ON CANADIAN APPROACH—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): The report out of Teheran quotes the Minister of Finance as having said that the price of all raw materials, whether they be oil, bauxite or wheat, should be fixed by agreements between producers and consumers. I have no way of knowing whether that is an accurate report, but perhaps the Prime Minister would indicate whether that statement represents government policy and whether it represents, on the part of the Minister of Finance and the government of Canada, an effort to extend to the international area the consensus that the government is seeking inside Canada in so far as the prices of raw materials are concerned?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I do not know any more than the Leader of the Opposition what were the exact words used by the Minister of Finance, but it seems to me that the intent of his reply as quoted by the hon. gentleman is to the same effect as was my reply, that is that we prefer agreement by consent and co-operation between all parties rather than a cartel type of approach which imposes prices unilaterally on consuming nations.

CONFERENCE OF OIL PRODUCING AND CONSUMING COUNTRIES—GOVERNMENT ATTITUDE TOWARDS INCLUSION OF OTHER COMMODITIES IN DISCUSSIONS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Perhaps another day the Prime Minister may have an opportunity to check out what the Minister of Finance did say, and we can look into it then.

Now, I would like to ask the Prime Minister or the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs whether the government of Canada has indicated to those countries which participated in the Paris Conference which commenced on April 7 its desire to see a compromise reached and whether the government has communicated its views to those participating countries, and what precisely is the attitude of the government now with regard to the inclusion of other commodities in these discussions?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I have said in reply to other questions from the Leader of the Opposition, the government is anxious to reach a compromise on this particular issue. The conference that we had in mind, and that we would have supported, would have been one dealing essentially with energy, but we feel it might be possible to reach a compromise by including some other items, provided that the emphasis of the conference is not lost. The great danger, of course, is that the conference will be concerned with all materials and that the particularly urgent question of energy might get lost in the wider sort of conference that might emerge. These views, which I have expressed publicly, are of course now known throughout the world.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

POSSIBLE RECALL OF PEACEKEEPING PERSONNEL TO PROVIDE SECURITY AT OLYMPIC GAMES

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. In view of the suggestions that some of the 1,600 Canadian troups presently serving with the United Nations peacekeeping teams in Cyprus and the Middle East may have to be recalled to Canada to provide security in the 1976 Olympics, would the minister advise whether this information is correct and also how many troups would be withdrawn and from which peacekeeping assignments will the withdrawal be effected?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the information is not correct. In fact, before the committee last week I indicated that we could provide sufficient forces to assist in providing security at the Olympic games without withdrawing any of our peacekeeping forces.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON POSSIBILITY OF FURTHER DECLINE IN CANADIAN DOLLAR

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In the absence of the Minister of Finance and of the acting minister, would the Prime Minister accept the recommendation that either the acting minister or some other delegated person make a statement to the House this week on the decline of the Canadian dollar, the prediction that the dollar will decline further, the relationship to Canada's adverse position on current account balance of payments, and so forth, or must we await the undefined date of the budget before we can have an explanation of what is happening now?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I answered a similar question last week indicating that the Canadian dollar was floating freely in response to market forces. As to predictions regarding what will happen with the dollar, surely the hon. gentleman does not expect that kind of prediction in the budget.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): My question relates to the decline of the Canadian dollar that is forecast as a result of reduced borrowings abroad and to the adverse balance of trade. The budget is to be brought down some time towards the end of May, but not necessarily so. That is more than six weeks away.

Mr. Trudeau: I understand, Mr. Speaker, but the hon. gentleman is suggesting that the budget, whenever it is brought down, should include some predictions and forecasts about how the Canadian dollar will behave. Surely, the Minister of Finance will not want to do that.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): He always does.

Mr. Trudeau: If the hon. gentleman wants to speculate on the future of the Canadian dollar, he should do that on the basis of his own knowledge.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Read the minister's former speeches.

REASON FOR OPENING PARKING GARAGE AT TORONTO WHILE CLOSING ONE AT VANCOUVER

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the announcement last week that $127 million will be spent on extensions at the Toronto International airport, including a five storey parking garage, and in view of my recent inquiry in the House which revealed that the parking garage at the Vancouver international airport will be closed and the outdoor lot extended, can the minister tell the House by what logic his department plans to provide covered parking in Toronto, which will reduce the walking distance to the terminal by half while at the same time the garage at Vancouver is to be closed, resulting in the walking distance to the terminal being doubled?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: They need exercise in Vancouver.

An hon. Member: It makes a good over-all average.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in order to satisfy the hon. gentleman, who seems to be well aware of all the facts—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): —and if he is not, he will be informed of them tomorrow—I will double check what he said to see if it is really what will happen.

NATO SUMMIT CONFERENCE—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON TIMING—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON CANADA'S POSITION ON SUBJECTS TO BE DISCUSSED

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the NATO council, composed of the ambassadors of the 15 member states, agreed on April 18 to hold a summit conference at Brussels on May 29 and 30, would the Prime Minister now comment on the timing of this particular conference, since it seems to have been his chief concern, and will he be informing the House of the position which Canada will adopt at this meeting before his departure since he did state it was his intention to attend?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Our position on the timing was stated publicly and it is on record. We thought that the timing was somewhat premature, but we also indicated that we would adjust to any timing that the majority preferred, and that is still our position. As to what position I will take at that conference, I will first have to know what is on the agenda, and then I will see whether it is in the public interest to make a statement before the conference is held rather than after.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

KNOWLEDGE OF SOLICITOR GENERAL OF PRESENCE OF MR. DURHAM, ALLEGED FBI INFORMER, AT DEMONSTRATION ON PARLIAMENT HILL

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. Was he informed and did he give his prior consent to the presence on Parliament Hill during the January demonstrations last fall of Douglas Durham, a paid informer of the American FBI?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): I am told Mr. Durham came to Canada after the demonstration on Parliament Hill at the opening of parliament and that he was invited at the request of the Indian movement in Canada, and some of the people who were organizing that demonstration. His presence here in Canada at that time was not known by the RCMP until afterwards.

SUGGESTION UNITED STATES SEEK APPROVAL OF SOLICITOR GENERAL BEFORE SENDING AGENTS TO CANADA

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Can the Solicitor General tell the House whether or not at that time Durham was working for the FBI and reported back to them, and also, can the minister tell the House whether or not he has been in touch with his American counterparts to instruct them that before American agents are sent to Canada he expects to be informed and give his consent prior to the coming of those agents to Canada?

● (1440)

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Durham, I understand was a paid informer for the FBI, and he had been to Canada on previous occasions following requests by the FBI and consent given by the RCMP. However, since it is very easy for people to move back and forth over the Canada-U.S. border, he came on that occasion without any knowledge of the FBI or the RCMP, as I said, at the request of the Indian movement. But under the agreement we have with the FBI, they are to request the approval of the RCMP each time one of these movements is made, and I presently have this whole policy under review.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

POSSIBILITY OF PROVINCIAL CROWN CORPORATIONS RECEIVING GRANTS—REQUEST FOR ANALYSIS OF EFFECT OF CROCUS FOODS ON DAIRY PRODUCERS OF MANITOBA

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the department's expressed policy to give incentives to establishing industry or expansion of existing industry, could the minister indicate whether it is the policy of his department or of the government to give DREE grants to corporations being established as Crown corporations by provincial governments?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, there is no prohibition against such grants, and going by memory, I think that in a few cases we have actually done so. Basically, each case is judged on its merits, and the test is not whether it is a Crown corporation, but whether it will enhance the economics of the particular region or area. If the hon. member could be more specific, I will try to be more specific in my answer.

Mr. Epp: I would like to ask the minister whether, before making any final approval for the DREE application made by the Manitoba government respecting Crocus Foods, to be located as Selkirk, Manitoba, he will undertake to do a very careful analysis of what effect the establishment of such an industry might have on the dairy processing industry of Manitoba and specifically the dairy producers of Manitoba?

Mr. Jamieson: I can give the hon. member an unqualified assurance on that. I am now familiar with the case to which he refers, and such an examination is now being made. I have had some consultations with the government of Manitoba in this regard, but no decision has been reached.

Oral Questions

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

INVESTIGATION OF SEAFARERS' INTERNATIONAL UNION—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REPORT

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. Since the minister has repeatedly refused to hold a public inquiry into the SIU investigation, and now since, according to an aide, that report is concluded would the minister consider tabling the report, and if not, why not? And why was this announcement made by an aide outside the House?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, it was not made by an aide, in the first place. I had an answer to give in the House on both Thursday and Friday, but the question was not put. When I went outside, a member of the press asked me the question, and I gave the answer. I do not know why it was reported that the answer was given by an aide. It may have been given by an aide after I had given my original response to the press. In any case, the report was rather a lengthy one which stated that all the allegations made by Dr. Shulman and others who had made similar allegations had been investigated.

The report also stated that there was no evidence to back up any of those allegations with respect to wrongdoing or criminality by members of parliament or ministers with respect to the SIU. The report was sent to me by the RCMP under either a confidential or secret label, and that was due to the fact that they repeat in the report many of the allegations made against many people, both members of parliament and others. It seems to me that we should not make that report public, but I will look into that once again.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE REPORT ABSOLVES MEMBERS AND MINISTERS OF POLITICAL IMPROPRIETY

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): I thank the minister for that part of his answer, but since there were allegations, not just involving criminal conduct or criminal matters, but also of political improprieties, can the minister assure the House, as he sort of reported outside of the House, that the report also completely absolves any member or minister of such improprieties as political misconduct or political indiscretion as compared with anything of a criminal nature?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, many people made allegations by innuendo, and it is difficult to know exactly what was charged and what was not charged, but any allegations which involved criminality were investigated by the RCMP. If the hon. member has in mind other charges, perhaps he should ask me about those charges, and we will certainly determine whether there should be any public inquiry with respect to them, but I would like to know exactly what he refers to when he says there were other allegations.

Mr. Nowlan: To make it really crystal clear, separate and apart from criminality, can the minister state publicly in this House that the report now marked confidential makes no reference or recommendation as to anything of a political impropriety involving a member or a minister?

[Mr. Jamieson.]

Mr. Allmand: In a nutshell, the allegations made by Dr. Shulman were that federal ministers and members of parliament were not investigating the SIU because they received campaign contributions, and for that reason they were not acting when they should have been acting or when someone asked them to act. These allegations were thoroughly checked into and found to be false.

INFORMATION

REQUEST FOR GREATER FREEDOM IN SECURING INFORMATION

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, having heard the Solicitor General with regard to the release of information, and having heard the former auditor general last night, I would like to ask the President of the Privy Council if he will undertake to change the rather medieval approach of the government toward freedom of information and bring about a support for measures which will make this an open society rather than a secret society.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think it is very fortunate that the hon. member has a bill which is now being considered by a parliamentary committee. I know he would not want to cast aspersions upon the members of that committee.

Mr. Baldwin: I would like some support on it.

AIR TRANSPORT

STRIKE AT TRANSAIR—SUGGESTED USE OF OTHER AIRLINE TO TRANSPORT ENTOURAGE ACCOMPANYING PRINCE CHARLES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister, although it could be that the Minister of National Defence or the Secretary of State might be involved. My question relates to the fact that the entourage which will be going north this week with Prince Charles is being transported by several airlines, one of which, namely, Transair, is strike bound. In view of this fact and in order to avoid any picket line difficulties for the members of that entourage—I am not talking about the Prince himself, I am talking about the entourage—will this matter be looked into in the hope that the contract with the strike bound company might be replaced by a contract with some other airline?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will take the question as notice.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ASBESTOS FIBRE COUNT OF WATER IN GREAT LAKES—REQUEST THAT INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION CONDUCT INDEPENDENT STUDY

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs, the President of the Privy Council. The February report on asbestos in the Great Lakes basin, released by the International Joint Commission, used figures obtained from the Ontario ministry of the environment showing the asbestos fibre content of drinking water in Thunder Bay North as 830,000 fibres per litre. In view of the fact that two universities', Lakehead and McMaster, studies show concentrations 20 times this amount, would the minister request that the IJC conduct an independent study to ascertain the real fibre content?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will give that request sympathetic consideration.

ENERGY

NATURAL GAS—PROPOSED MEETING WITH UNITED STATES ON EXPORT PRICE—POSSIBLE ATTENDANCE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF PRODUCING PROVINCES

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is basically for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, but in his absence I will put it to the Prime Minister. Given the fact that the United States government has asked for a special meeting almost immediately—and I understand that Canada has agreed that it take place within the next day or two—about the price of natural gas to be exported to the United States, can the Prime Minister tell us who will represent Canada at these meetings? More particularly, will there be observers or representatives from the producing provinces attending this important meeting in the next day or so?

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I will take notice of the question on behalf of the minister, and he will respond when he returns to the House.

Mr. Gillies: There are reports that that meeting might well take place tonight or tomorrow morning. Is there any truth in reports that this meeting will take place that soon, or are these reports in the press perhaps not as accurate as they may seem to be?

Mr. Foster: The minister is just out of the House for a moment. He will respond as soon as he returns.

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

ALLEGED FINANCING OF POLITICAL AND HOLIDAY TRIPS AT PUBLIC EXPENSE

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Did the Prime Minister travel to and from Toronto last Friday at taxpayers' expense for the purpose of attending a Liberal party fund raising dinner, and can the Prime Minister tell the House when he will discontinue financing his political trips and holidays by dipping into the public pot?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

HEALTH

LACK OF MEDICAL SERVICES IN CHAPAIS, QUEBEC

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Since Chapais, a municipality of 4,000 inhabitants, is entirely devoid of medical services and since the Quebec government seems unable to solve that serious problem, I would ask the minister whether he has any responsibility at all for those people demanding a resident physician?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the distribution of health care, as the hon. member knows, comes under provincial jurisdiction and I think that the question he raises should be directed to the Quebec Minister of Health.

Mr. Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

When a province remains idle, is it not proper for the federal government to intervene?

Mr. Lalonde: It is surely a curious interpretation of the constitution and if the Social Credit Party endorses that position, it would be interesting to have it join the next constitutional conferences.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

POSSIBILITY OF INQUIRY INTO POTENTIAL IMPROPRIETY OF MEMBERS OR MINISTERS IN RELATION TO SEAFARERS' INTERNATIONAL UNION

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister and is supplementary to the answer recently given by the Solicitor General. Can the Prime Minister advise the House whether there has been any investigation or inquiry undertaken into questions of potential impropriety involving ministers of the Crown or members of this House and the Seafarers' International Union. If there has been, will he tell us by whom that was undertaken and whether it has been completed.

If it has been completed, will it be made available to the House?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the only inquiries I know of are the ones to which the Solicitor General referred in his answer a few moments ago.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the Prime Minister want the House to understand that there has only been an investigation into criminal actions involving the SIU, or has there also been an inquiry into questions of impropriety that might not involve criminal action or criminal charges. Have there been two investigations.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the investigation which I just referred to and which was mentioned by the Solicitor General was one in response to charges made by Mr. Shulman, to the effect that there have been criminal actions of some kind. There was another proceeding—I do not suppose you would call it an inquiry—where the Department of Justice was looking at the suggestion made by the Attorney General of Ontario on the general question of a broad-reaching inquiry into the SIU. This was not, to my understanding, an inquiry into personal conduct, personal behaviour, as alleged by Mr. Shulman. Instead, this was an inquiry into whether this was an area where the federal government should set up a general inquiry rather than having the provinces and the police pursue an inquiry by their own means.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF TERMS OF REFERENCE OF ALL INQUIRIES INTO SEAFARERS' INTERNATIONAL UNION

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if I could ask the Prime Minister to make available to the House, or table in the House, the terms of reference of the inquiry undertaken by the RCMP and of any other inquiry that was undertaken in reference to connections between the Seafarer's International Union and members of this House.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if there were any precise terms of reference, they would have been given by the Solicitor General in one case and the Minister of Justice in the other case.

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON ADEQUACY OF RCMP REPORT ON ALLEGATIONS INVOLVING SEAFARERS' INTERNATIONAL UNION AND MEMBERS OR MINISTERS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Is he content with the situation in which a charge is made which possibly involves members of this government—whether there is any merit or weight to it is another question—where the only report made is a report by a member of his government indicating that he has a confidential report from the police which absolves all members of government. Does the Prime Minister find that a happy situation?

[Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain).]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I do. I think everyone engaged in politics is used to this kind of general charge made against politicians of one side or another. When the charges are specific enough to permit inquiry, as Mr. Shulman's charges purported to be, I think the proper procedure is for the RCMP to look into the facts and see if they can find any cause for laying a criminal charge. The fact that they reported there was no such basis certainly satisfies me. I trust their capabilities in inquiring into such matters and I would think, if there is any distrust, that it should be levelled against those who have perpetrated charges without foundation.

INVESTIGATION INTO SEAFARERS' INTERNATIONAL UNION BY MINISTER OF JUSTICE—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. It is related to the investigation which is going on—or perhaps it is not going on—and the involvement of the Minister of Justice in looking into the SIU and its activities. Can the Prime Minister advise the House whether this investigation still is going on or whether it is contemplated. If so, will the report be made public?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe it would result in a report which would be in any written form. It would be a matter for the Minister of Justice. He, advised by his officials, would look at the general subject of whether the Ontario government and its police and the municipal governments are able to conduct this inquiry themselves, or whether it is an area where the federal government should step in. I do not know if the Minister of Justice has taken a final decision on this. He will be back in the House tomorrow and he will be able to answer the question himself.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM AND CAMBODIA—REQUEST FOR PROTEST AGAINST COMMUNIST AGGRESSION

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is also addressed to the Prime Minister. In view of continuing communist aggression in southeast Asia, is the Prime Minister now prepared to instruct the Secretary of State for External Affairs to launch a formal protest or a condemnation of communist aggression by force against both Cambodia and South Viet Nam. If not, for goodness sake, why not. Are you supporting communism?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ELIGIBILITY OF PEACEKEEPING PERSONNEL FOR VETERANS PENSIONS—ELIGIBILITY OF CAPTAIN PATTEN'S FAMILY FOR PENSION BENEFITS

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence and concerns the brief submitted by the Long Service Pensioners' Association. Since the official definition of a veteran restricts veterans' benefits to someone who has served in a war zone, would the minister not consider our peacekeeping contingents as being in actual war zones. Would he tell the House if Captain Ian Patten's family is eligible for veterans benefits, as Captain Patten was killed in Cyprus, in the service of his country?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the last part of the question concerning the widow of Captain Patten, I will be able to give a full account of the payments, but I can indicate now that there will be a cash payment of some $33,000 and a monthly allowance of some $753. Concerning the first part of the question to do with the brief, we are studying that brief now and will have a further report to make about it.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

ENERGY

NATURAL GAS—PROPOSED MEETING WITH UNITED STATES ON EXPORT PRICE—POSSIBLE ATTENDANCE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF PRODUCING PROVINCES

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): —I will restrain myself from directing a number of questions to my colleagues. I understand that during my momentary absence from the House the hon. member for Don Valley raised a question about the meeting between American and Canadian officials concerning natural gas export prices. I confirm that there will be a meeting of that kind tomorrow here, in Ottawa.

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): A supplementary question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister inform the House who will represent Canada at that meeting and, most particularly, will there be any representation or any observer from either of the producing provinces attending the discussions?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, it will be officials of the Department of External Affairs, accompanied by officials of my own department and of the National Energy Board. There will be no provincial representation at that meeting.

Mr. Gillies: May I direct a final supplementary question to the minister, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister an agenda for that meeting, will discussions be limited precisely to the pricing of natural gas exports or will other items such as crude oil and pipeline construction be discussed?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, it is with regard to the regulation 11A report concerning natural gas export pricing only.

Mr. Baldwin: In the west we are hewers of wood and drawers of water only.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I asked the Prime Minister a legitimate question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jelinek: It seemed to me as if the Prime Minister would answer. The government in the past has officially condemned acts of aggression in other parts of the world, but this government has not said anything so far about the aggression occurring in South Viet Nam. My point of order, or question of privilege, as the case may be, is this: are we, as Canadians, to condone the fact that this government has accepted communist aggression by force?

● (1500)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member will realize this is not the first time this question has been put in recent days. Secondly, the hon. member was doing fine until he got to what he must clearly accept as a most argumentative suggestion.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

HOUSE TO ADJOURN AT SIX O'CLOCK TO ENABLE MEMBERS TO ATTEND FUNCTION IN HONOUR OF PRINCE CHARLES

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this evening a gala concert is being given at the National Arts Centre in honour of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, to which members of this House have been invited. In order to enable hon. members to avoid the conflict that might otherwise arise between their desire to honour Prince Charles and their duty to be present in this House, I wish to suggest—and I know this has the support of the House leaders of the other parties—that when this House rises at six o'clock this evening, it stands adjourned until 2 p.m. tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In view of the fact some hon. members turned down the invitation last week because of committee meetings to be held tonight, can we now accept?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, there is the other side of that question: what about committees tonight; will they also be suspended?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I have no objection, but the chairmen of the committees might not want me to make the rules for them.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 326, 1,171, 1,447, 1,526, 1,675, 1,688, 1,778, 1,780, 1,805, 1,823, 1,827, 1,885, 2,068, 2,069, 2,070, 2,131 and 2,225.

Mr. Speaker, if questions Nos. 1,247 and 1,702 could be made orders for return, these returns would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call starred question No. 2,083?

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

EXECUTIVE ASSISTANTS APPOINTED TO PUBLIC SERVICE

Question No. 326—Mr. Coates:

1. From 1968 to date, how many executive assistants who have worked at least two years for a Minister were transferred from the Minister's staff to the Public Service?

2. What are the names, positions, and salaries of such executive assistants who have made transfers and are still working in the Public Service?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows: 1 and 2. Executive Assistants who may have been appointed to the Public Service after having worked for two years for a minister would have received no preference in appointment and would, therefore, have had to become members of the Public Service through open competitions. Records are not kept in such a way that such persons can be readily identified and the necessary staff is not available to undertake a review of the files of all appointees since 1968 (approximately 170,000 in number).

PACIFIC ENVIRONMENT CENTRE, VANCOUVER, B.C.

Question No. 1,171—Mr. Huntington:

With reference to the Pacific Environment Centre that was planned for North Vancouver, what have been the expenditures made to date on (a) architectural services (b) engineering services (c) surveys (d) land options (e) land leases (f) department salaries (g) models and promotion (h) other department expenditures (i) monies budgeted for future expenditures?

[Mr. Benjamin.]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): In so far as the Department of the Environment is concerned: (a) $198,000; (b) $22,000; (c) $12,000; (d) Nil; (e) $241,402 net annually; (f) $150,000; (g) $4,000; (h) $198,000; (i) $22,000. In so far as the Department of Public Works is concerned: (a) $136,394.06; (b) Nil; (c) $8,076.02; (d) Nil; (e) $4,021,688.40; (f) $15,800.00; (g) Nil; (h) $25,735.48; (i) $17,799.79.

FUNDS GRANTED FOR BILINGUALISM PROJECTS

Question No. 1,447—Mr. Cossitt:

Since the coming into force of the Official Languages Act, what is the total amount of funds in any way granted or distributed by the Secretary of State connected in any way with bilingualism and, of this total, how much involved contributions (a) to French Language or culture projects (b) to English language or culture projects?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): The following funds have been distributed by the Language Programmes Branch to March 31, 1974, for (a) French language projects, $112,088,559; (b) English language projects, $145,209,226; (c) Projects involving the two official languages indiscriminately, $14,926,937. The following grants have been accorded by the Programme for Official Languages Minority Groups to March 31, 1974: (a) Grants to French-language groups, $8,505,494; (b) Grants to English-language groups, $292,025; (c) Grants to groups from both communities for inter-group understanding projects, $792,985.

STUDY OF THE DETERRENT EFFECT OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Question No. 1,526—Mr. Reynolds:

1. What was the cost to the Department of the Solicitor General of the report by Ezzat Abelel Fattah called "A Study of the Deterrent Effect of Capital Punishment with Special Reference to the Canadian Situation"?

2. Did Mr. Ezzat Abelel Fattah prepare any other reports or is he in the process of preparing reports for the government and, if so (a) what is the title of these reports (b) what is the cost to the government?

3. (a) How many reports has the government had prepared on the subject of capital punishment (b) who were the authors and what were the costs of each report?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): In so far as the Department of the Solicitor General is concerned: 1. $4,990.

2. Yes. (a) and (b): Mr. Ezzat Abdel Fattah, while working for a research contractor, was the author of one volume of a seven volume report rendered to the Department of the Solicitor General in December, 1974. The volume which he prepared was entitled "Étude de la main-d'œuvre policière Montréal, Toronto, Vancouver". The total cost of the project was $80,000, but no specific cost can be assigned to the one volume attributed to Mr. Fattah. Mr. Ezzat Abdel Fattah is now preparing a review of existing research literature on public attitudes towards capital punishment in Canada and will render a report. The cost is $3,000.

3. (a) Two.

3. (b)

Report	Author	Cost
A Study of the Deterrent Effects of Capital Punishment (mentioned above) 1972	Ezzat Abdel Fattah	$4,990
Capital Punishment—New Material, 1972	Bernard Grenier	$14,400

In addition to the aforementioned documents made under contract, a report entitled "Capital Punishment: Material Relating to its Purpose and Value" was written in the Department of Justice and published in 1965. As it was of Departmental origin the authorship was not specified.

In so far as the Department of Justice is concerned: 2. Yes, for the Law Reform Commission: (a) "Deterrence"; (b) $2,000.

3. (a) As far as can be ascertained from Department of Justice records, one, "Capital Punishment, Material Relating to Its purpose and Value". (b) Prepared by the Department of Justice and issued in 1965 under the authority of the Minister of Justice. No record of cost is available.

UNITED STATES-CANADA BORDER INCIDENTS

Question No. 1,675—Mr. Railton:

1. What is government policy and the intention of the Department of External Affairs with respect to (a) the incident at the Peace Bridge involving the Buffalo police (b) the incident occurring at the British Columbia-Washington state boundary?

2. (a) Was Captain Simpson, who skippers a fishing boat out of Kingsville, Ontario, stopped and boarded by a US game warden last October (b) did Captain Simpson proceed to Kingsville with the US game warden on board (c) what action will the government take in relation to this incident?

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. (a) It is government policy to protect Canadian sovereignty. It is the intention of Canadian authorities to pursue discussions with the United States authorities with a view to minimizing the possibilities of a recurrence on either side of the border. (b) The Department of External Affairs considers the incident closed. The United States government acknowledged that the arrest of Mr. Anderson was made on Canadian soil, expressed its regrets, and returned Mr. Anderson to Canada.

2. (a) Captain Simpson's boat was boarded by an Ohio Wildlife Agent. (b) Yes. (c) The government has been in continuing contact with the United States government concerning the incident. The Essex County Crown Attorney has determined that the facts of the case do not warrant the laying of charges in Canada and the government does not plan to take any action bearing uniquely on this case. However, the government intends to meet with United States officials to review the situation and to seek to avoid the recurrence of such incidents on the Lake.

FRENCH LANGUAGE UNITS

Question No. 1,688—Mr. Cossitt:

How many unilingual French language units have been established in the Public Service (a) in what department, agency or Crown corporation is each located (b) what functions and duties does each perform (c) what is the total number of personnel and salaries involved in each unit?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): According to the data from the 4th survey on French Language Units, the latter number 736 units and sub-units. (a) and (c) The attached table shows the distribution of FLUs by department as well as the number of employees and their total annual salaries. (b) The functions and duties assigned to each French Language Unit vary according to the responsibilities of the department or agency.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE PROGRAMME STATISTICAL DATA

Question No. 1,778—Mr. Saltsman:

1. For each year 1950 to date, by industry, in actual dollars, and in constant uninflated dollars, what were (a) the total government expenditures on unemployment insurance (b) the same information for males (c) the same information for females?

2. For the same years, by industry, in actual dollars, and in constant uninflated dollars, what was (a) the total government revenue in unemployment insurance premiums (b) the same information for males (c) the same information for females?

3. For the same years, by industry, in actual dollars, and in constant uninflated dollars, what were (a) the per capita expenditures, revenue through premiums and net effect (b) the same information for males (c) the same information for females?

4. For the same years, in actual and constant uninflated dollars, what were (a) the total and per capita unemployment insurance expenditures, revenues through premiums, and net effects for participants, with participants grouped by (i) increments of $1000 personal income per annum (ii) increments of $2000 of family income per annum (b) the same information for females (c) the same information for males?

5. For unemployment insurance participants with males and females calculated separately and together, what are the overall Lorenz curves of benefits from unemployment insurance in the periods 1950-59, 1960-69, 1970 to date, calculating across each period and not for each year separately, and excluding all participants who ceased participation during the middle of a period?

6. For each year 1950 to date, for unemployment insurance participants with males and females calculated separately and together, what are the Lorenz curves of benefits from the Unemployment Insurance Act?

7. What proportion of female beneficiaries of unemployment insurance resumed their contributions to the plan after leaving the workforce to give birth?

8. For each year 1950 to date, what were the mean per capita benefits, premiums, and net effects throughout their work histories of females who received benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act as a result of giving birth as opposed to females who did not receive benefits as a result of giving birth?

9. For the same years, what were the mean family incomes of females who received benefits from the Unemployment Insurance Act as a result of giving birth as opposed to females who did not receive benefits as a result of giving birth?

10. For the same years, by industry and overall, what were the total and per capita expenditures, revenue through premium, and net effects of unemployment insurance programmes in (a) the United States (b) Great Britain (c) Sweden (d) West Germany (e) Australia?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Manpower and Immigration and Statistics Canada as follows: 1 to 10. Information not available.

DREE—APPLICATIONS FOR KOOTENAY WEST

Question No. 1,780—Mr. Brisco:

1. (a) How many applications have been completed for Kootenay West under the DREE programme for expansion for each year Kootenay West has been designated (b) how much was each such application?

2. (a) How many applications have been completed for new industry for each year Kootenay West has qualified under the DREE programme (b) how much was each such application?

3. Other than expansion and new industry, have any other grants been awarded under the DREE or ARDA or special ARDA programmes for Kootenay West for each year Kootenay West has qualified under such programmes and, if so, what are such grants?

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The answer for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. Incentive offers accepted for the expansion of manufacturing and processing facilities in Kootenay West under the terms of the Regional Development Incentives Act:

Fiscal Year	(a) Number of accepted offers	(b) Estimated amount of accepted offers
1969–70	2	$ 31,640

HAINES-ALASKA ROAD

Question No. 1,805—Mr. Huntington:

1. (a) For the period November 1973 to May 1974, what was the cost to the government to clear snow on the Haines-Alaska Road, through British Columbia and the Yukon (b) to whom was this money paid?

2. For the same period, how many (a) American cars (b) American trucks (c) Canadian cars (d) Canadian trucks entered Canada on the Haines-Alaska Road going north?

3. For the same period, how many (a) American cars (b) American trucks entered Canada on the Haines-Alaska Road going south?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Public Works and National Revenue as follows: 1. (a) The cost of snow clearance operations on the Haines Road from the Alaska/British Columbia boundary to Haines Junction in the Yukon is $286,940. This includes such items as snow removal, snowfencing, culvert cleaning as required, control of gates to ensure that no vehicles are stranded. There is no breakdown into these items. (b) Government of the Yukon Territory.

2. (a) 3,383; (b) 298; (c) 774; (d) 527.

3. (a) 5,949; (b) 1,115.

JONQUIÈRE COURSE IN FRENCH LANGUAGE

Question No. 1,823—Mr. Cossitt:

1. (a) What is a full description of the nature and purpose of what is called the Jonquière Course in the French language (b) what is the total cost since its inception?

2. (a) What is the total number of persons that have taken or are taking such language training (b) what is the average cost per student including board and expenses?

3. Is there a comparable course in the English language and (a) if so, where is it given (b) if not, for what reason?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): 1. (a) It is assumed that the Jonquière Course refers to a proposed exchange of students between Fanshawe College of London Ontario and College de Jonquière, Jonquière, Quebec. (b) As the exchange has not taken place there have been no attendant costs.

2. (a) Nil; (b) Nil.

3. The exchange was to have been reciprocal.

SALE OF VISCOUNT AIRCRAFT

Question No. 1,827—Mr. McKenzie:

1. Has the sale of 24 Air Canada Viscounts, or any portion of said sale, to United Services Ltd. and Beaver Enterprises Ltd. been cancelled and (a) if so (i) for what reason (ii) what are the plans for the affected aircraft (b) if not, on what dates are the companies to take delivery?

2. Was one or more aircraft sold for the sum of $1.00?

3. Who owns the Viscounts that are presently sitting unused on or near the property of Winnipeg International Airport?

4. (a) What are the applicable rules governing the sale of used aircraft to individuals or groups of individuals (b) have any such individuals or groups offered to purchase any of the aircraft?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advises as follows: 1. The contract with United Aviation Services and Beaver Enterprises Limited terminated on March 31, 1975. (a) (i) Contract terms were not met by United Aviation Services and Beaver Enterprises Limited. (ii) The disposition of the 24 Viscounts has been under active consideration by Air Canada management since the March 31st contract termination date.

2. One Viscount was sold for $1 to the National Research Council.

3. Title to each of the Viscounts located at Winnipeg rests with Air Canada.

4. (a) There are no rules governing sale of used aircraft to individuals or groups of individuals. (b) No individual or groups of individuals have submitted any economically viable offers which have resulted in a sale.

PRODUCTION OF STEREO RECORDS FOR READER'S DIGEST BY RCA, SMITHS FALLS

Question No. 1,885—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Is the Secretary of State and the government aware that approximately 10% of the employees of the RCA Victor Company at Smiths Falls, Ontario are engaged in the production of stereo records under contract with Reader's Digest magazine?

2. Is the Secretary of State and the government aware that the proposed tax change in regard to Reader's Digest could have the effect of loss of employment to between 30 and 40 persons working in the Smiths Falls plant of RCA Victor Company and, if so, will the government take this into account before proceeding further?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): 1. The government is aware that the Reader's Digest Association (Canada) Ltd., has engaged the R.C.A. Victor Company at Smiths Falls, Ontario under contract to produce stereo records.

2. The government is not persuaded that its proposed changes to the Income Tax Act would cause grievous financial loss to the Reader's Digest Association (Canada)

Ltd., such loss that its record distribution and other activities would either be dropped or significantly restricted. Reader's Digest is a highly diversified and very profitable company, and it is the government's view that it is well equipped to adapt to a changed Income Tax Act.

APPLICATION FOR DISABILITY PENSION—MR. H. T. BOWEN

Question No. 2,068—Mr. Cossitt:

Did the Department of Veterans Affairs receive an application for a disability pension from Mr. H. T. Bowen of Brockville, Ontario in November 1974 and, if so (a) for what reasons is it taking so long to process it (b) will the government give this veteran immediate service by attending to his application?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): The Canadian Pension Commission received an application for a disability pension from Mr. H. T. Bowen on November 28, 1974. Applications for disability pensions received by the Canadian Pension Commission are basically dealt with in the order of receipt although there are exceptions within a stated priority system. Priority is given to veterans of World War I and to widows as well as to claims where there is a demonstrated urgent medical or social need. In adjudicating on pension applications the Canadian Pension Commission is required to collect such relevant material as is available in the records of departments and agencies of the Government of Canada and to make such inquiries into the facts as it deems advisable to enable it to reach a decision. The Commission will consider Mr. Bowen's claim within its priority system.

LIP PROJECT 311-3520—RCMP INVESTIGATION

Question No. 2,069—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to Question No. 1,041 that stated in part that an October 1974 RCMP report mentioned that charges of fraud would be laid as the result of an investigation into Local Initiatives Programme Project 311-3520 in the Constituency of Montreal-Bourassa (a) on what date have or will charges be laid (b) what are the names and addresses of all persons charged or to be charged and the nature of the charges?

2. What are the names and addresses of all those who recommended acceptance of this Local Initiatives Programme application prior to its being approved by the Minister?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of the Solicitor General (Royal Canadian Mounted Police) and Manpower and Immigration as follows: 1. (a) A court brief is in the hands of Crown Counsel for review. Until a decision is reached by Crown Counsel, it is impossible to state when any informations will be laid. (b) it is impossible to name those to be charged and the nature of the charge(s) until a decision is reached by the Crown Counsel.

2. Please refer to answer for question 1041 (f). Moreover "A question oral or written must not: (d) repeat in substance a question already answered or to which an answer has been refused (C. 128)". (Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms Fourth Edition, 1958, pg. 147, article 171.)

[Mr. Faulkner.]

LIP PROJECT H-2217—RCMP INVESTIGATION

Question No. 2,070—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to Question No. 1,042 that stated in part that an October 1974 RCMP report mentioned that charges of fraud would be laid as the result of an investigation into Local Initiatives Programme Project H-2217 in the Constituency of Montreal-Bourassa (a) on what date have or will charges be laid (b) what are the names and addresses of all persons charged or to be charged and the nature of the charges?

2. What are the names and addresses of all those who recommended acceptance of this Local Initiatives Programme application prior to its being approved by the Minister?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of the Solicitor General (Royal Canadian Mounted Police) and Manpower and Immigration as follows: 1. (a) A court brief is in the hands of Crown Counsel for review. Until a decision is reached by Crown Council, it is impossible to state when any informations will be laid. (b) It is impossible to name those to be charged and the nature of the charge(s) until a decision is reached by the Crown Counsel.

2. Please refer to the answer for question 1042 (f). Moreover, "A question oral or written must not: (d) repeat in substance a question already answered or to which an answer has been refused (C. 128)". (Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms Fourth Edition, 1958, Pg. 147, article 171.)

*LAW OF THE SEA CONFERENCE—CONTINENTAL SHELF LIMIT

Question No. 2,083—Mr. Marshall:

Does Canada have a contingency plan to support the government's statement that if agreement is not reached at the Law of the Sea Conference with regard to a continental shelf limit, Canada will take unilateral action to declare such limits and (a) if so, will the government Table such plan (b) if not, for what reason?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the answer is as follows. I am not aware of the government's statement to which the hon. member refers. It is the long standing position of the Canadian government that Canada's continental shelf extends to the continental margin both by virtue of Canadian legislation and international law.

PERMISSION TO FLY CONCORDE SUPERSONIC AIRCRAFT TO GANDER, NEWFOUNDLAND, FOR TEST FLIGHTS

Question No. 2,131—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Did the government grant permission to Aerospatiale of France to fly Concorde supersonic aircraft to Gander, Newfoundland for test flights and, if so (a) on what basis (b) was the government aware that Finnish environmental associations took strong issue with the Concorde landing in Finland?

2. Has the government studied the protests of the Finnish environmental associations to see (a) what was the basis of their opposition (b) whether their complaints were applicable to Canada in general and Gander in particular?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. Yes. (a) That the aircraft would be operated only at sub-sonic speeds, while in Canadian airspace. (b) Yes. However the Ministry is not aware of the reasons for the Finnish position.

2. No.

MANPOWER MOBILITY PROGRAM

Question No. 2,225—Mr. Herbert:

For the fiscal year 1973-74, what was the total cost of assistance to the 11,019 persons relocated under the Manpower Mobility Programme?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The total cost of assistance to 11,019 persons relocated under the Manpower Mobility Program for the fiscal year 1973/74 was $8,230,966.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH COMMISSION

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications) moved that Bill C-5, to establish the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission, to amend the Broadcasting Act and other acts in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential provisions, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Pelletier (Hochelaga) moved that Bill C-5 be read the third time and do pass.

[English]

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I intend later to make a few remarks on this bill; however, at the moment I am rising on a point of order. I am a little surprised at the minister. Perhaps he is not going to say anything at this stage of the bill; I see he is not moving too fast. The bill has gone through committee, where some amendments of a technical nature were made. I take it, from the minister's stable position in his seat, that he does not intend to say anything about Bill C-5 at this time. It is relatively clear—as clear as anything ever is in this House—that the minister intends to speak later. Therefore, I would like to make a few comments now.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, since we are on third reading the minister cannot speak twice. As he moved the motion, that constitutes his speech, unless he makes it now. We may give unanimous consent to a speech later, but I think Your Honour is familiar with the rule that there is no right of reply on third reading.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The point raised by the hon. member is well taken. The fact that the minister did move the motion, even if only by nodding his head, is participation in the debate. If he wishes to speak a second time, he must have unanimous consent. It will be up to the House to decide at a future time, because the minister does not seem to be indicating that he wishes to speak at this time.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I am glad the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) stood up. Because of that, without getting into the technicalities of the rules, I was surprised the minister did not say anything, having fathered this bill which has had a long gestation period. He has not indicated any of the highlights which the bill in its present form contains. The minister may reply, with unanimous consent; however, we will have to wait and see what happens when this stage of the debate draws to a close.

I say, with all respect to the minister, that the fact he has not seen fit to say anything at this time is symptomatic of some of the problems in this bill and in the field of communications generally. I am speaking strictly in terms of the minister as a minister. I do not want my remarks this afternoon to be misinterpreted as criticizing the generous personality and philosophic nature of the minister in a personal way. But the fact that nothing is being said on third reading of this bill is symptomatic of the whole problem in communications. Since 1968 with the Broadcasting Act, through the terms of office of various ministers—and of course the present ministry of communications was only created in 1969—there has been almost a vacuum in terms of discussion in this House of a subject as vital to this country as the whole topic of communications.

● (1510)

If the minister has the chance later on, he will undoubtedly say that Bill C-5 is just a housekeeping bill, a bill to merge the functions of the CRTC with the telecommunications functions of the CTC, and creating a new agency, bureaucracy or commission combining all those communications functions. The bill is not a lengthy one. It uses big words. At first blush one might be prepared to accept that it is only housekeeping but, as I said at the beginning of my remarks, if the minister persists in telling us that this is a housekeeping bill involving a merger of regulatory functions, that is really part of the disappointment which members of the House share about this field of communications.

Regardless of what members feel as to the state of communications and/or the communicativeness of the Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier), outside this House, in the experience of interested parties, be they in the field of commentary, the field of cable or the field of broadcasting, it has been the silence or the inactivity of the Minister of Communications which has really, with all respect, created a good many of the problems. I say this advisedly, and I shall try to support my argument with certain basic facts.

If this is only a housekeeping bill—and it does provide for the merger of certain regulatory functions—I say that this in itself is an indictment of the Minister of Communications who, rather than do housekeeping even at this time in the spring of the year when so many homes across Canada are engaged in spring cleaning, should have been exercising leadership, showing initiative and stimulating his imagination to tackle some of the fundamental problems in communications, rather than paper them over with Bill C-5. If this is housekeeping, as the minister said in committee, then it is housekeeping in a house built with termite timber, on a weak foundation, with some very relevant questions to be asked about the paternity and the powers of the housekeeper of the house.

I have often sat in the committee with the minister and I appreciate some of the problems he faces in trying to reconcile conflicting views in various areas of communications. However, the fact that since 1968 not a single legislative enactment has been dealt with by the House—the Department of Communications was created in 1969—is testimony to the absence of leadership and, in effect, the abdication of real responsibility in this field. The minister may wonder what I mean by termite timber, weak foundations and questions about the housekeeper. I say termite timber because of the CRTC regulations or the powers and regulations of the CTC. You don't really have very strong timber in a house when you find one of those agencies, the CRTC, acting, as is so often the case, unilaterally and making pronouncements about broadcasting.

The most recent pronouncement of the CRTC caused great agitation across the country. After a year or so studying cable regulations, the CRTC announced on February 17 or February 19 that the proposed regulations were to be gazetted; I think the date was March 4. Written responses to what had been gazetted were supposed to be in the mail and back by March 17, albeit that during some of that time there was something called a postal strike. I guess we are going through another phase of that strike today. Some of the parties concerned, who would have been very interested in attending that public hearing in March, as well as on April 8—I understand there is to be another on June 10—did not even get the announcement by the CRTC in the mail prior to the date by which the formal reply was supposed to be in. So part of the timber of this house, which the minister says is just housekeeping legislation, is ridden, I suggest, with termites in terms of regulations and procedures.

The bill itself is one of a hybrid nature. The agency is to use CRTC procedures when broadcasting is involved, and CTC procedures when the telecommunications functions of the CTC are concerned. What could cause more confusion than to see a big, new agency using different procedures for different arms of its authority? The number of commissioners is, of course, increased. There are to be nine full-time members on this board and ten part-time members. They are going to wonder which hat they are wearing on any one day—whether they are going to follow CRTC procedures or CTC procedures. The whole problem of trying to balance and reconcile conflicting views between the broadcaster, the common carrier and the cable operator is so complex that surely, in a housekeeping bill to put these functions together, there should be some consensus about the procedures to be followed by the new agency, rather than compound the confusion and complexity by adopting dual procedures depending upon which function the commission is considering at any particular time. If this bill as it stands is not a breeding ground for more confusion, I find it difficult to picture what is. I cannot imagine another government agency working with different procedures depending upon the subject matter before the agency.

I could say much more about termite timber, but I want to turn now to the foundation—the shaky foundation. I say it is a shaky foundation because the problem of federal-provincial relations is completely ignored. There is no recognition given to whether or not the provinces even have an interest in communications, let alone in cable transmission. If there is any doubt about that, I need refer only to what was said in the Ontario legislature not too long ago.

I am sure that when the minister is in Quebec at the annual meeting of the Canadian Association of Broadcasters which is to be held early next month, he will deliver a very interesting speech on some aspect of communications. I understand his counterpart in the province of Quebec, Mr. L'Allier, is also to speak on the same day; I don't know whether it will be on the same symposium or panel. It will be very interesting and stimulating. I have not read what Mr. L'Allier said about the recent pronouncements of the CRTC on proposed cable regulations, but the minister in Ontario, Mr. Rhodes, in the legislature on Friday, March 14, expressed in fairly strong language his irritation at the unilateral pronouncements of the CRTC on proposed cable changes. I think it would be relevant to read a portion of what Mr. Rhodes had to say. At a time when there is a new attempt to have a second federal-provincial conference on communications, Mr. Rhodes said:

● (1520)

In the meantime, the Canadian Radio-Television Commission issued policy statements and proposals on February 17. These are more far reaching in their policy implications than anything put forward to date by the federal government in its 1973 green paper on communications policy, at the first federal-provincial conference, in correspondence with the provinces or in private discussions.

These proposals—

He is referring to the CRTC proposals.

—would appropriate to the federal government all areas of cable communications, including those areas which have previously been considered by the provinces and also the federal Minister of Communications as being the responsibility of the provinces. We are confronted with a situation in which the regulatory agency, without clear legislative authority, is zealously acting to consolidate the maximum of de facto federal jurisdiction, regardless of existing provincial activities and legitimate claims. This is all going on at the same time as the federal minister is denying the provinces an opportunity to discuss jurisdictional matters.

I have expressed my concerns most strenuously to the Minister of Communications and told him that the CRTC action surprised and disappointed me and left me angered. The premier has also written emphasizing this government's concern.

That is pretty strong language. In another part of his remarks the minister had this to say:

The proposals of the CRTC are not federal government policy statements. They are unilateral actions by an appointed regulatory agency. I would have expected the federal government to put forward such proposals itself so that the people of Canada and the provincial governments could effectively discuss them with the responsible federal minister as a matter of important public policy.

We do not accept that such far reaching actions can be taken by a regulatory body which apparently considers itself beyond the need for political control and which appears to be beyond the control of the federal government.

I am making public today the letter I wrote to the federal minister on Monday requesting a public clarification of the federal government's position on the subject of consultation between governments on policy issues. I have asked that the federal government make its position known on the issues and proposals of the Canadian Radio-Television Commission. I have also asked that the initiatives of the CRTC be indefinitely deferred until there has been a resolution of the major policy issues involved by the federal and provincial governments.

There are many more things that could be said. The letter was tabled in the Ontario legislature. It is a very succinct and interesting document outlining the very real concern of one minister of communications in one of the provinces, a concern also shared by a good number of ministers of communications right across this land. Yet this housekeeping bill to merge these functions does not admit, recognize or even suggest there is any provincial involvement in the field of communications or telecommunications.

I suggest that this housekeeping bill is built upon such a shaky foundation that it is not the type of legislation that this Minister of Communications should have brought forward. He has had a long period as minister. He has had bilateral discussions with his provincial counterparts, he chaired the first federal-provincial communications conference in November, 1973, and fortunately has now finally called a second federal-provincial conference for May of this year. He has had the benefit of the studies on telecommunications and the green paper. Yet he has come up with a housekeeping bill which, in effect, insults the provinces because it does not even recognize that they exist and have an interest in this field.

I question whether that is the type of federal leadership required in such a complex, complicated field. The minister has been charged with the responsibility of helping resolve some of these problems of communications affecting all Canadians, rather than trying to paper them over with this charade of a housekeeping bill. In terms of who is the housekeeper and/or the powers of the housekeeper in a bill supposed to be a housekeeping bill, we get into the whole question whether the minister is calling the shots, the chairman of the present CRTC is calling the shots, or that great, august body, the House of Commons, is calling the shots on this question fundamental to all Canadians, namely, communications policy.

I appreciate the problem of the Minister of Communications in the House and I know it is shared by other ministers of communications in provincial legislatures. Communications is not a very sexy subject to get all steamed up about. There are many other facets of parliamentary life that can excite the id and the pancreas, and other portions of the human anatomy, in terms of real parliamentary debate. Really, we have not been very partisan or political in terms of any discussion of the present problem of communications; but apart from discussing the economy and all its ramifications, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) and his so-called consensus, or the group of seven who were in the Prime Minister's office until they were kicked out, there is not another subject that more fundamentally affects the life-style of Canadians from coast to coast than this whole subject of communications.

I think it is a very relevant subject, and it is a very relevant question to ask who is the housekeeper in this house that the minister says is being cleaned by Bill C-5. Is it the minister who is calling the shots, is it the chairman of the CRTC, or is it that great, august body, the Parliament of Canada? I do not know whether it is the minister. I suggest he has not been calling the shots that he should have been calling and that he has the authority to call. The chairman of the CRTC is a public servant of the highest integrity and administrative competence. Yet because the minister is not leading the way, you have the situation where the chairman of the CRTC is moving into a vacuum on policy, in terms certainly of cable.

It is not just this minister who has to share responsibility for this, but also his predecessor. The government has to share the collective responsibility. The sadness, to me, of an admission by the minister that Bill C-5 is only housekeeping is the fact that this government has been charged with this task since 1967-68, when the broadcasting bill was passed. That was the last initiative shown on this subject in a legislative way by this government.

At that time the federal government through this minister and his predecessor, could have moved into the field of communications, set down some terms of reference and outlined some guideposts pointing to the direction in which we as a country should go on the subject. Instead, we had study, review, commission, re-commission, telecommission, pause, hesitation, vacillation, consultation and more vacillation. We have had no federal initiative. The ministers of communications in the respective provinces have roared into the vacuum, and now instead of having a unifield, national consensus policy so that Canadians know where they are heading, we depend on the strength of the various provinces, not just Ontario or Quebec but other provinces as well.

Now we have the advent of socialist governments in the deep west. I see the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) in the chamber. He is a resurrection of a socialist government in the west. A resurrection could start here in the House of Commons. However, I will not get into that as it would divert me from my very serious and relevant remarks about this very tricky field of communications. There are many problems in respect of communications, yet the federal government has been sitting, marking time. It is much like the pause before the railway crossing. But this government would make this minister look like Rip Van Winkle: he would never get across the crossing, because he really never makes a decision, just as he has not come to grips with fundamental problems in respect of communications, albeit at times he has tried.

● (1530)

I think this minister is sometimes misinterpreted, because individually and personally he is a very congenial man, but in some ways I think he has been too gentle as a minister, particularly at times when he has been inclined to attempt to resolve some of these problems with his provincial counterparts.

Here we have a housekeeping bill for a house which I suggest has timber problems because of the different types of termites eating away at the structure and the forms. It has a very shaky foundation because there has been no recognition of federal-provincial involvement. We have a housekeeper of questionable paternity and doubtful power because we really do not know who is calling the shots in respect of communications in this land. We read about Mr. Rhodes, and sometimes about Mr. Farran of Alberta and other provincial ministers. We hear more from them than we hear from this Minister of Communications who should be leading the country.

The one great sadness of this bill is that it is only a housekeeping bill, which really illustrates the paradox in the whole field of communications. It is a field where communicability should be of paramount importance, and the whole paradox is that the ministers charged with resolving problems of communication are not even communicating. With all deference to the minister, I think he must accept a great deal of the responsibility for this situation.

If anyone who is listening to my moderate comments doubts the veracity and substance of the unfortunate charge I make against the minister, who has diddled and daddled and almost fiddle-faddled in coming to grips with these problems, he has only to look at the record. The trouble with this diddling, daddling and fiddle-faddling is that this matter involves a national system. I do not think this minister believes in communications, and I do not think any successor will ever again get control of our communications problems. This whole matter has been growing and expanding and fragmenting almost like division itself. So much has happened that I doubt whether any federal minister for a long time will be in charge of these things so that Canada can have a national communications policy. It will be a very long time before any federal minister can resolve these conflicting jurisdictional problems while at the same time balancing the conflicting interests of the broadcaster, the common carrier and the cable operator.

A review of the recent, relevant legislative history is testimony to the indictment I make against this minister. In 1967-68 the Broadcasting Act was passed establishing the CRTC which was supposed to have a new outlook for all broadcasting and communications interests. The Department of Communications was established in 1968-69 when we had our first minister, Mr. Kierans. On September 18, 1969, the then minister of communications announced plans for a comprehensive study to be undertaken by what was to be known as the telecommission: it was to study the present and prospective outlook of telecommunications in Canada.

That commission actually compiled a lot of interesting and fundamental information on the state of telecommunications in Canada. It produced more than 40 separate studies organized by a committee of officials from the Department of Communications, the Privy Council office and officials of the CRTC. As a result of that telecommunications study and the 40 separate studies, a number of interesting facts were collected—I think, quite frankly, more than put together by any other country. The Minister of Communications is to be complimented on the fact that these studies were finally boiled down into what is known as the "Instant World" summary on telecommunications, which in summary form is one of the most interesting and sometimes conflicting assessments of communications in Canada which we have seen. If anyone wants a bird's eye view about communications, "Instant World" is required reading because the individual would never have the time or the technical knowledge to fully assess or assimilate all these telecommunications studies.

Those studies were all commissioned in 1969—and this is 1975. What has happened during this time? The throne speech of 1970 suggested there would be a white paper on communications. Nothing happened. We did see other people moving in this field because they were not prepared to sit still; one cannot blame them, because nature abhors a vacuum. In June, 1971, the Quebec green paper on communications was tabled. It was not a study; I suppose that provincial government had carried out its studies before then. We had the Speech from the Throne which stated there was to be a communications policy in 1970-71. Our studies continued. In May, 1972, the report of the Canadian computer and communications task force called "Branching Out" was made public. Finally, in March, 1973, not quite two years after the Quebec green paper on communications, the federal green paper on communications was tabled in this House. In April, 1973, the computer and communications policy set out 29 recommendations for computer policy and the report was published.

Finally, after all this effort which started with the Broadcasting Act back in 1968, and certainly the creation of the Department of Communications in 1968-69, the Minister of Communications had before him all the necessary work—I appreciate that there was a lot of it—and convened the first federal-provincial communications conference in the Conference Centre down the street for November, 1973. That conference was intended to discuss various national policy problems—the minister knows better than I the results of that conference—and there was the difference of opinion as to whether ministers were to meet again six months later. They have not met since. I appreciate that there was an election in between. Finally, it has been stated that the ministers of communication are going to get together again in May of this year. That, certainly, is a positive step.

My point is that in view of the legislative history—really, the Broadcasting Act of 1968, with all the studies since then, including telecommunication reports, bilateral discussions and a federal-provincial conference—surely this minister should have come up with something more than a housekeeping bill. I think the litany of legislative inaction other than studies bears me out in my indictment. The fact is that this is an important and fundamental field which involves radio, television and cablevision all across the country. It also involves common carriers—and we all know about Bell Telephone rate applications. There is nothing more fundamental than this matter, yet the government is just marking time.

I could perhaps use the analogy of another department in respect of our economic problems. Other ministers have been charged with the responsibility of doing something about our economic problems, but all we have seen on this side of the House is a government marking time. That is really an objective comment, because those of us on this side of the House could, quite rightly, say a great deal more. Certainly, we have seen no move in a substantive way on the part of this government in the field of telecommunications.

Even if this is a housekeeping bill, which I suggested earlier is a sad admission, the real question is whether it will help meet some of the problems, or really aggravate them. Without repeating everything I have said, the first, fundamental flaw is that the bill does not recognize in any degree any provincial interest in this field. As I say, I shall not repeat all the problems involved in that respect. The minister may wish to comment on this question; however, it is the most profound and serious indictment one could make in respect of this bill.

Bill C-5—and there was some discussion on this matter in the committee when the minister was there—increases the number of full-time members of the executive council to nine, while the part-time members remain at ten. There is no suggestion that the part-time members will be provincial or regional representatives. When one looks at the bill, one asks oneself if there is to be some form of tokenism in respect of provincial or regional input to this new commission, with the change from five to nine full-time members. I realize the minister attempted to deal in part with this matter in committee. When one looks at the bill, it would appear that the full-time members take on even more power because now, instead of there being merely five full-time members on a 15-man board, there will be nine full-time members on a 19-man board with power to set up special and standing committees to do, I suggest, in effect the substantive work of the commission.

The fact that the number of full-time members has been doubled means there will be a dilution of the input of the part-time members. I wonder whether this was the intent; it might have been. In effect, if that will not be the result of this new commission, I do not believe it will help resolve regional problems and/or conflicts or help in respect of provincial representation if the provinces are to be represented through appointments to this board. Something else which gives concern is the procedure which is outlined in this bill under which the new commission is supposed to function. I alluded to this earlier. There will now be two streams of procedure under the new commission. There will be the present CRTC procedure, which is non-adversary in a sense if the matter involved is a broadcasting matter, and there will be the present CTC procedure, which is adversary in nature because it involves the hearing of witnesses and conducting cross-examination.

In effect, the commissioners of this new commission will wear two different hats: one day they will wear the CRTC hat and another day they will wear the CTC hat. They will have to be sure they get into the right room so that they will know what procedure is to be applied to the subject matter being discussed on a given day. There are no guidelines here in respect of how this problem might be solved. However, with the two new vice-chairmen of the commission there might be one vice-chairman to look after the former CRTC procedure and another vice-chairman to look after, in effect, the former telecommunications, CTC procedure. The two procedures will flow from the two vice-chairmen and, in effect, there will be two parallel streams within the one body which is supposed to be a body to rationalize the complex and complicated field of communications.

I wonder what purpose is to be gained by having two parallel streams under two vice-chairmen. Another question flows from that. If there are two vice-chairmen with two different streams of procedure, will this remove the chairman that much further from his function of keeping a finger on the whole work and function of the commission? Even though I have suggested that the chairman of the CRTC sometimes has moved into an area where there is a vacuum, because of inaction on the part of the federal government, to help make, in effect, almost legislative pronouncements in a sensitive area involving broadcasting and/or communications, at least he is there. But if we have two parallel streams within one commission, under two vice-chairmen, if I were involved in the industry as either a broadcaster, a common carrier or a cable man I wonder whether I would be worried, in that situation, that the chairman would be so far off, in his rarefied, ivory tower, that he really would not be involved.

We have the present situation where the chairman is so sincere and hard working that sometimes he becomes involved in physical participation in the function of the commission. Now it would appear that we are to move to the other extreme of removal because of the two vice-chairmen and two parallel streams of procedure. I suggest this is just as bad as the other. The minister may be able to make some comments on that matter. When we have the two streams, will we have rotation within the commission between the streams, or will four full-time commissioners be assigned to one stream and the other four assigned to the other stream, with all the built-in biases and attitudes that prevail when commissioners or members of a commission hear just one type of problem?

When I first read the press release and the green paper of the minister, I thought one of the reasons for the merger of the regulatory function was not only to create more input—which is not being done by this merger—but was perhaps to bring together, rather than divide, the three elements, broadcasting, cable and common carrier. If some of my fears are justified in practice, one really wonders what will be accomplished by this merger if we are to have two parallel streams, one dealing with the CRTC function and the other dealing with the telecommunications function of the CTC. Those are some areas which create real concern in respect of this bill.

I come back to my earlier question: Who is really calling the shots? In all of this there is one fundamental question: Who is really regulating the regulator? Is it the minister who looks after what the CRTC is doing and who is suggesting that in administration sometimes they are not really up to scratch? Is it right to have licence applications for cable outstanding for six to eight years, as was the case in Saint John where they waited for six years, and also in Regina and Saskatoon where they waited for eight years? Is it right that our cities should be waiting so long for the CRTC to make a determination on their cable applications? As the hon. member who represents Pembroke knows, that city has been waiting for a number of years for the CRTC to decide on microwave in that area. In many other areas there are interminable delays caused by administrative red tape.

It is obvious to me that the Minister of Communications should involve himself more—without in any way interfering with programming—in the actual administrative function of the commission, and he should be much more receptive to the complaints from coast to coast about the administrative red tape and other problems which the CRTC creates. It seems that sometimes the commission is its own worst enemy. The CRTC officials often come before the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts and they use that great escape clause or scapegoat and say, "Gentlemen, your questions are good, very interesting, penetrating, etc., but we are just trying to interpret the will of parliament under the Broadcasting Act and if you want to do anything you will have to change the act".

So what do we have? We have a brand new bill, a housekeeping bill which does not get down to any of the fundamental problems. As I have said, it creates many more problems and it does not give more authority to the Minister of Communications to regulate the regulator any more than has been the case up to the present. Many more things could be said at this stage but I know that other hon. members will want to contribute to the debate. Let me only say that one of the saddest things with regard to this bill, perhaps because of the technical and complex nature of the whole field of communications, is that while it vitally involves all Canadians in the use of cable, in the rates they pay for telephone service under this bill, or in the broadcasting signals, and while it involves the very life-style of all Canadians, it has not stimulated the type of debate either in the committee or in the House that it should have. The last real debate in the whole area of broadcasting was on the Broadcasting Act in 1968.

My colleague, the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave), who is here in the House, is very familiar with that debate: he took a leading part in it, as did the then secretary of state, Miss Judy LaMarsh, who piloted the bill. At that time there were no obvious solutions to these fundamental problems, but members from all sides of the House contributed in trying to seek solutions in this complicated field. Since then there has been silence in the House in terms of legislation, but not outside the House. One might ask, why are we dealing with a so-called housekeeping bill when so many fundamental problems are there to be solved?

[Mr. Nowlan.]

I hope the minister will reply at some stage in this debate to some of the questions that were raised in committee and which I have asked today. I have directed my questions to him in his ministerial capacity. I believe that, after the legislation brought in in 1968 and all the studies that have been carried out, the housekeeping bill before us is a rather pathetic piece of legislation on a matter that is so fundamental, one which involves Canadians in all parts of the country. Perhaps the minister will be able to comment on that matter when he speaks later in the debate.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to make any comments on this bill on third reading, but after I heard the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan) I thought I would make a few points. I made many of my criticisms of this bill on second reading and in committee. To a large degree, I sympathize with the Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier) because of the problems that he, as federal minister, is facing in this very complex, difficult and important area of communications in the country. Indeed, there have been federal-provincial conferences to try to iron out some of the jurisdictional problems between the federal and provincial governments. Sad to say, there does not seem to have been much progress made at those conferences.

Meanwhile, we seem to be drifting, in terms of a communications policy. I believe we need a strong federal presence in communications, because often we are concerned about the economy of the country, control and ownership, but if our broadcasting system does not meet the needs of Canadians but relies on foreign programs and foreign ideas, then we are eroding the cultural and national fabric of this country.

It seems to me very important that we move speedily in the area of communications to set up a national communications policy and iron out the problems of jurisdiction. Therefore, I was disappointed in Bill C-5 which has turned out to be just a housekeeping bill—although sometimes I wonder about housekeeping bills: often they are sleepers; in other words, some of the administrative changes that are made have far reaching implications.

On the issue of jurisdiction, I would have hoped that Bill C-5 would have done more than just amalgamate the communications part of the Canadian Transport Commission with the Canadian Radio-Television Commission. I had hoped there would have been some recognition of the need for provincial input in determining policy. Again, I think ultimately the final jurisdiction must be in the hands of the federal government. The minister well knows that if he wanted to, he could take the case to court and the Supreme Court would find in favour of the federal government in a case, for example, involving jurisdiction over cable.

I commend the minister for trying the consultative approach in seeking some kind of accommodation with the provinces, but I do not know how long we can follow that route because if we cannot reach that kind of agreement and just keep postponing, meanwhile we will only be drifting in trying to find a communications policy for this country. I hope we can strike a balance—that the federal government, through its regulatory agencies, can have the power to regulate broadcasting across this country and, at the same time, that the federal government will recognize that because we are such a diverse nation and have so many regions, provinces should have some kind of input in determining policy and some kind of control over distributing broadcasting signals to the more remote parts of the province where, for example, an expansion of educational television could take place beyond the very narrow definition that applies in this area.

● (1600)

I mentioned many of these points at second reading. I do not want to dwell on them again except to say I am disappointed that the bill does not go further: it is only a housekeeping bill. However, I think it does acknowledge that the federal government and the provinces are at a stalemate; they are not making progress. This will certainly hamper the whole country in regard to a national broadcasting policy.

I would like to re-emphasize a few fears I have about the bill just as a housekeeping bill. I hope that because the Liberal members of the committee and the minister have not chosen to make amendments along some of the lines I have suggested in my remarks at this time, they will keep these points in mind for future legislation. I worry about combining the telecommunications aspect of the CTC with the CRTC into this new, super agency because, as I stated earlier, there are parallels where this has happened in the United States with the federal communications commission. Where there is a big agency, there is a tendency to have a fixation on technology and to be worried about the technical aspects of cable distribution, distribution of signals, the kind of equipment and all those nuts and bolts kinds of worries and to lose sight of some of the very important aspects of content. I think the CRTC, the old agency, is to be commended for its stress on and concern for Canadian content in radio and television, and I hope that with the new, super agency we will not slide into the kind of danger and pitfalls the American super agency has fallen into.

I have some concern about the number of full-time and part-time directors on the new board. I think the number should be increased. I know there is a heavy workload for those in the existing agencies. But, more important, I think we should have an expansion of the support staff. There are the appointed directors, but much of the real work is, of course, done by the support staff. I do not see any indication in the bill that the support staff will be increased.

Perhaps my greatest reservation about the bill, even though it is housekeeping, is the lack of provision for consumers to have a say in determining policy, especially as it relates to rate increases. One of the great criticisms consumer associations and citizens across the country had with the old Canadian Transport Commission when it came to telephone rates was that Bell Canada had its battery of lawyers and experts and could produce stacks and stacks of very technical and detailed documents, but the ordinary consumer group of a dozen individuals—or even some of the larger, national consumer groups—did not have that kind of resource background nor the finances to present their side of the story.

This has been a great weakness in our regulatory legislation and it will remain a weakness in this bill. I hope that in future policy, perhaps by regulation, the minister will see fit to provide moneys and support staff expertise to be available to consumer groups so that when they want to come before this new Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission on matters related to broadcasting, they will be able to present their arguments, especially on rate increases for cable television also and on other areas of policy.

We hear of the Ontario government having a royal commission on violence shown on television. It seems to me that consumer groups and citizens' groups should have direct access to the commission to present their views on matters such as advertising or violence on television. I see that as a fault in this bill. I hope that in the future we will find some provision for consumer advocacy in the field of broadcasting and telecommunications.

To reiterate, the position of the New Democratic Party is that, as a housekeeping bill, we can go along with it. Perhaps the bill says more about this government's failure or lack of progress in the field of telecommunications. I sympathize with the minister. I will not be totally negative and say he has failed, or that he should resign, because I know how difficult it is in this country to reach agreement with ten provinces and with ten ideas of what communications should be about. But if we are not making progress in conferences and in federal-provincial meetings, then for the sake of broadcasting and for the sake of national unity I suggest the minister will have to take strong action perhaps to test some of the powers in the courts which, under the constitution, the federal government has, to make it very clear to the provinces that we must move ahead and that policy must be ratified.

So we will support Bill C-5. We have expressed our reservations. We are saddened that the minister does not have more support staff and consumer advocacy bureaux for the new commission, but perhaps in the future, as Canadian citizens make their point known, the minister will move in this direction.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to speak on Bill C-5 longer than is necessary, nor do I want to monopolize the time of the House, but as we know, after third reading, this bill will become law.

The bill orders a type of reorganization of Canadian radio-broadcasting and television. At the time when the minister introduced Bill C-5, some provinces were opposed to...

[English]

Mr. Hnatyshyn: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to report that the translation system from French to English does not appear to be working. I wonder whether there could be a rectification.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will look into it immediately.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, the sound is back. As I was saying, Bill C-5 provides for a revision or reorganization of radio-broadcasting throughout Canada. This bill is extremely important because, like most federal hon. members I feel that we should have some measure of unity in telecommunications and communications across Canada. As I said earlier, at the time the minister introduced Bill C-5, people—as are indeed still found in Quebec—protested against the intervention of the federal government in the provincial area. Furthermore, a written as well as an oral fight was in fact staged on all Quebec radio and television stations and in newspapers charging the federal Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier) with interfering in strictly provincial business. That is not the only area where people in the provincial government oppose and fight the federal government.

Mr. Speaker, those provincial interventions always happen after the federal government decides to take action. That is true not only in this area, but in all areas. The federal government goes ahead with something at a certain moment, and the province says, that belongs to us, not Ottawa. The minister, Mr. L'Allier, says telecommunications and communications in Quebec concern only the province of Quebec. Ottawa is somewhat tolerated but that concerns Quebec. We have quite an outfit in Quebec with respect to broadcasting. They are all lost in there not even knowing where they are going. In Ottawa, in both French and English, I think the provinces—Quebec as others—can reach agreement with the federal government to benefit from a single communications policy for all Canada. There is room for that without having storms in teacups.

Mr. Speaker, nothing prevents the province of Quebec from using radio and television stations when it needs to or when other provinces need to. Everyone recognizes that education is a provincial area. I do not think anything in the Broadcasting Act prevents provinces from drawing benefits from it. Then I say Ottawa must respect provincial autonomy but to hear them cry every time Ottawa takes action becomes somewhat irritating. Ottawa is always accused of duplicating expenditures. Mr. Speaker, I have not seen one single area as far as the province of Quebec is concerned, where I live, in which the province did not duplicate what Ottawa decided and did every time, and after that they want to replace that duplication by saying, that belongs to Quebec, not Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker, no later than this last weekend people like Mr. Lévesque in Quebec would want to isolate Quebec from the rest of civilization. Every time Mr. Lévesque says: A civilized people, as if Quebec was not civilized. He keeps repeating the same thing.

Mr. Speaker, Ottawa has given an example to all provinces. I regret that Bill C-5 does not provide for agreements between the federal and the provinces in certain areas. However, as a Canadian, I think we should have a broad policy in matters of broadcasting and communications across Canada. For instance, if we have to come to terms with a foreign country, Canada is Canada, it is our country. We hear about noisy brats who say: Well, we will make arrangements independently from Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker, these people are causing the Quebec people, the Canadian people and Parliament to lose a lot of precious time.

I suggest again that more could have been achieved with Bill C-5 by expressing the true ideas of Ottawa. If all hell breaks loose once this bill is adopted, a bill which will give rise to increased expenditures, and if we must later make new distributions and grant increased powers to the provinces, we shall have authorized additional expenses which all may be eventually wasted the day we withdraw from the area of communications to allow its take over by the provinces.

Broadcasting is extremely important from the point of view of education. In my opinion, this new commission, which will carry hardly more authority than the CRTC, will have to act promptly to meet the needs of the Canadian people.

People of my area have been calling for improvements for about fifteen years. The improvements have not yet been achieved. In the Lac-Saint-Jean-Saguenay area, in that of Chibougamau, Rimouski and around, permits were asked to improve the systems, the matter has not been solved, it is under consideration, a small commission was formed and inspectors have been going back and forth three or four times a year and no decisions are reached.

Radio Nord Inc., in my area, is now making an application to expand to serve the southern part of Témiscamingue and old Pontiac. The southern part of Témiscamingue includes the city of Temiscaming, Fabre, Béarn, the area close to the Ontario border to the south. There have been requests for improvements in the area of Matagami, between Senneterre and Chibougamau. The CRTC does not reply or says: We are making a study.

Mr. Speaker, time has come to stop the studies doing something. Improvements have been asked for fifteen years. Radio Nord Inc. is prepared to update its system, perhaps not as much as I would like it to, especially in television and I am wondering whether the commission would have the power to tell the company what to do. I have been asking them for two years to provide CKRN with colour TV cameras, but instead of providing them, maybe they are too poor to do so, the boss of Radio Nord, a millionaire who claims to be a socialist in Montreal, when the time came to renew the equipment, went and bought old black and white cameras from Channel 10 in Montreal. We have them in our studios now in Rouyn, Mr. Speaker. At the same time as licenses are granted, let them think about equipment, let them update it so that we are not 15 or 20 years late. The fault does not lie with the government, it lies with those who have jurisdiction over broadcasting and communication. With respect to asking for improvements for them, I would ask the Commission or the CRTC at the same time to suggest that they improve their equipment and provide people over there with the same kind of services as they provide people throughout the province and the rest of the country.

Mr. Speaker, those were the few comments I wanted to make about Bill C-5, which will show us to what extent the minister can reach an agreement with Mr. L'Allier from Quebec or with the authorities from the province of Ontario. The problem seems to be purely a matter of parliamentary or political jurisdiction. Let people know where they stand, let Ottawa work to give provinces satisfaction, all right, but a province should by no means be allowed to go its own way, against or beside other provinces, and I think in that case we should tell Mr. L'Allier: Listen, you stick with us and stay where you are.

We are in Canada, we are not in Cuba. The Prime Minister or someone else said last night on television about separation—I think it was Mr. Bourassa—: While in Europe people are realizing that they must unite and form some kind of federation, here in Quebec we have dummies who would like to throw away everything and start having the same troubles as Europe.

Well, Mr. Speaker, we should not tolerate the broadcasting and communication systems to be used to destroy what we hold dear, what we love, what allows us to be what we are, absolutely free to say what we think, to write what we want.

Therefore, if Bill C-5, with the new commission, aims at achieving better understanding among the people and the provinces, I shall be happy to support a bill which will unite Canadians instead of destroying them as certain people try to do. Let us work for the progress and the development of all Canada which will also enable the provinces to strengthen their position.

[English]

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, we have before us Bill C-5. Apparently, its aims are simplicity itself. It seeks to establish the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission. There is a marvellously devious preamble to the bill. It contains the existing letters of the organization and its abbreviation, CRTC, even as it somewhat manages to alter the structure of that organization.

● (1620)

One suspects that the operation, as well as being housekeeping, is also a case of tightening the ship somewhat for the anticipated confrontation between the federal government and the provinces over the issue of broadcasting and broadcast control. That confrontation, at least as it affects my own province of British Columbia, may be a little further away than the minister anticipated when the bill was prepared and as he began to pilot it through.

At one time there was a feeling that the confrontation would develop over educational television. That always seemed the most natural ground on which the confrontation of broadcasting could develop because the provincial jurisdiction in education is absolutely clear and the federal jurisdiction in broadcasting is equally clear. They came together at that particular point and it looked as if the battle could be fought out there, if it was to be fought out anywhere. There has been a lack of development in educational television in recent years. It has not proved to be the effective way of transmitting knowledge, concepts, ideas, morality or anything else that its proponents held it out to be some years ago.

I have always had the gravest doubt about the efficiency and usefulness of the role of television in education. I subscribe to the theory that the prime use of television is for entertainment. I think that all our government problems with this rather thorny, elusive and ephemeral medium would be simplified a great deal if everyone came around to that way of thinking and realized that the role of television is primarily the distribution of entertainment to those who desire to be entertained. Educationally, it has been and continues to be a disappointment. It, like almost all the other aids to education, serves the purpose of placing something between teacher and student. It is one of the reasons why, in North America, people are concerned about a return to savagery. This concern is continentwide. Only human contact can make people humane or fully human.

Attempts in the field of education to place something between teacher and student, be it film, slide or television screen have in many instances served a negative purpose, limiting what has already been greatly limited by changes in programming, namely, the contact between teacher and student. At one time it was felt that educational television would allow a master teacher to teach thousands of students at the same moment. Unfortunately, we tended to lose the concept of the master teacher in the classroom. I contend that the need is greater now than it ever has been to have students meet, confront and be taught directly by master teachers. There has been a loss of excitement over educational television. In my province, the Kamloops school district pioneered a great deal of work. About eight years ago, there was enormous excitement about the development of local television programming that would be educational.

Provincial and other governments have come to realize some of the questions involved. The kind of programming that needs to be developed, and its dissemination, simply could not be handled by a group of teachers knocking around after school. They had to be professionally prepared. The information had to be disseminated, and in many ways this became very expensive. Therefore, the bloom is off; the excitement has died down.

If Friday's edition of the Ottawa Citizen is to be believed, we can assume that the takeover of B.C. Telephone by the British Columbia government has been greatly delayed. Hon. members may recall that takeover was promised immediately following the success of the NDP in the last provincial election. There was concern expressed in the province that the culmination of a takeover of B.C. Tel, a move into educational television and the setting up of what would amount to a provincial broadcasting system, would place in the hands of a somewhat doctrinaire political regime an extraordinary power it did not have before. There was a looking to the CRTC and the federal broadcasting control to provide something of a safeguard against what many people found to be a rather frightening possibility.

It seems there will be a delay in the hope of the British Columbia government to take over B.C. Tel. I imagine that will not be a great deal of comfort for people who have just received the news that an application is going forward for a 20 per cent increase in telephone rates in that province.

One thing that bothers me very much about this bill is that the CRTC, along with its other duties, will be spending its time determining the level of rates for telephone subscribers. This has already been alluded to by the previous speaker. The CRTC has been very much preoccupied with cablevision regulation and broadcast regulation in terms of licensing. Determining the channels available and how they are to be distributed for federal television and radio takes an enormous amount of time.

As members of parliament, we receive on our desks copies of all applications that are made across Canada. Some time later we receive copies of the decisions, or notice that a decision has been delayed. The number of applications in the whole country is such that one wonders when the commission, no matter how much it might be increased in size, finds time to do anything except handle them. As earlier speakers have said, even the ones being presented are not always immediately handled. There can be many delays amounting to years.

If you were to ask the average Canadian the work of the CRTC, he would probably reply that it has something to do with licensing. He would probably say it is the body which denied a licence to expand or a licence for another channel for the cablevision company involved. I recall the Broadcasting Act debate in 1968 which led to the change in the act. Arguments were presented in this House against any move to have the federal broadcasting authority in the cablevision field which had grown up without restriction. I sometimes wonder whether the one, lonely individual who seemed to be fighting most of the battle did not have more of a point than was conceded at that time.

I should like to quote one or two lines submitted to us by the Canadian Television Association; part of the discussion paper sent to the minister. This appears on page 5, in item 19:

> Unnecessary restraints on cable companies have created a gap between public expectation and the delivery of cablevision services.

I know for a fact that this is true. People in isolated areas, for example, Elkford and Sparwood, cannot understand why the new technology cannot be used to deliver a clear signal to them by cable. The expectation is there. The little community of Yahk suddenly found that the cost of wiring a cable connection had increased beyond all expectation and was obliged to withdraw the proposal that cable coverage be extended. Yahk is the kind of isolated community where older houses have been purchased by retired persons. Winters are long, and television is expected to provide entertainment during the years of retirement. Disappointment is great. The gap mentioned in the brief is a very real one. It is difficult to explain to such people why there should be such long delays or why their applications are denied.

I suspect that in the back of the minister's mind—I have little doubt this applies also to the CRTC—there is a feeling that somehow this method of transmission will take something away from the off-air broadcasters and in some fashion limit the development of Canadian nationalism through the CBC; that it will prevent the development of what is described as truly Canadian television.

I contend, and I have said this before, that the load of maintaining Canadian nationalism has been placed on those communities which are removed from the United States border and from the major metropolitan centres. For some reason, these people find themselves regarded by the powers that be as responsible for the maintenance of Canadian nationalism; the load is placed on their shoulders in order to salve the consciences of all of us who live in centres where any number of channels, from 5 to 13, can easily be received. Somehow, we all feel better for knowing that certain smaller communities are receiving only one flaky CBC channel, thus ensuring that all is well with Canadian nationalism.

Mr. Paproski: A flaky CBC program; that is a hockey game that's a week old!

Mr. Johnston: Applications for better service are set aside though there often does not appear to be any good reason for doing so, apart, of course, from this vague fear that Canadian nationalism would in some way not be served if action were taken. Thus, a decision is not made, action is delayed for another year, possibly in the hope that in the interim a study will be undertaken which will show that in some way we are better, as a nation, for refusing these applications. However, I doubt whether that will ever be demonstrated to anyone's satisfaction. If Canadian nationalism burns brightly at all, it is in some of the smaller communities, and if it is to be dampened down it is probably dampened down because the people who live in them do not see any connection between their patriotism, their pride in their country, and the fact they are denied the quality of coverage they desire.

There is one other aspect of this subject I should like to mention in closing, and that is the whole question of violence on television programs. I have the feeling that if the CRTC has not been spending a great deal of time on this area in the past, it will be spending even less time on it after taking on increased responsibilities. If the government of this province has found it necessary to appoint a commission, naming as chairman a former member of this House, to look into the entire question of violence and terrorism on TV, it is a sad commentary on the way in which the CRTC has regulated broadcasting in this land.

An hon. Member: An electioneering gimmick.

Mr. Johnston: There are members across the way who are calling this an electioneering gimmick. I suggest they should read the material which is available in the library of parliament. A few weeks ago a list of new material acquired was published by the library. Included in that list was a book I had requested, one which deals with this very question. I think it is called "Where do you Draw the Line?"

It is difficult to ascertain just what can be done to control pornography, for example. The book deals specifically with violence on television. I suggest to hon. members opposite that they should borrow the book and read the comments it makes. If they doubt that it is a matter of great concern, let them go back to their constituents and listen to the people who are talking about the need to reintroduce capital punishment. I am not one of those advocating the reinstatement of capital punishment, but we have to admit there is some connection between the wave of violence sweeping this continent and the fact that night after night we have permitted our television services to carry a compendium of crime.

I am sure that some time in the future, historians will look back on us and wonder how we could have been so simple as to allow the nightly portrayal of violence and criminality to all who care to watch, including the young people of this country. When a province like Ontario reacts, I would say it is high time we began to pay attention. It is almost certainly an indictment of the federal role in broadcasting, of the manner in which th federal authority has been exercised, and of the way in which the federal regulatory authority has carried out its work. Having regard to the quality of the programming now in evidence, it is not surprising to me that a provincial government should find itself constrained to set up this kind of commission.

I would hope that the CRTC, with its added concern for telecommunications, would find time to carry out the role which I believe was implied in the former designation, Board of Broadcast Governors, a body which I believe carried out as part of its duties the governing of broadcasting right to the programming end. It does not matter at all what we do with the hardware, the software, the off-air or cable broadcasting; if what is distributed to the subscriber at the end is not worth the effort, then we have truly failed. I am very skeptical that there will be any time left in the organization seriously to consider the most important aspect of all in public or private broadcasting.

● (1640)

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, earlier in the debate the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan) was kind enough to recall to the House that I had been in the broadcasting committee when, among other things, Miss Judy LaMarsh and I exchanged poetry, at a time when the House passed the Broadcasting Act a number of years back. I am not going to recall the poetry; I am too much of a gentleman even to publish what she sent to me. Neither will I go over all the reasons why I still bear scars from that particular occasion. This has nothing to do with Miss LaMarsh but it has a lot to do with broadcasting in Canada.

There is one feature I should like to deal with in a very brief intervention in this debate, and this is the question of cablevision—actually cable television, but cablevision since it may include radio channels as well—in the less populous areas of Canada. When this session commenced, or shortly thereafter, I put a star against a question of mine. It was a very brief question and I thought I would get a very brief answer. My question, No. 781, asked simply this:

> Has the Canadian Radio-Television Commission a policy to enable Canadians in less populous areas to receive cable television and, if so, what is it?

As I say, I expected that the answer would be as brief as my question. Instead, as members can observe for themselves, I received a veritable blizzard of paper in response to my question. It not only included a recent reply as provided by the commission to the Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier), but also some of the decisions made by the Canadian Radio-Television Commission. As a result, I might have said to myself that the government had no policy at all, the answer was so large and I thought, in some respects at least, obtuse. I am still somewhat inclined to that opinion and I have to apologize to several bare acres of erstwhile Canadian forest which have been levelled in order to provide the paper that provided the answers given so generously not only to myself but to other members of the chamber, consisting of about 100 pages, I would guess.

Then I decided to take a second look at the matter when this particular debate came on. I have done so, and I want to review what I think are the points that the Canadian Radio-Television Commission has been operating on in regard to providing Canadians in less populous areas with cable television. Then I want to make a suggestion as to how almost everybody in Canada can receive cable television.

I make this argument because, even though my constituency be in the older, settled province of Nova Scotia, there are large parts of Halifax-East Hants which are outside the cable systems operating in the constituency. I know that as one goes across Canada, with very few exceptions this is the case. The metropolitan ridings in Toronto, Montreal, Winnipeg and Vancouver would perhaps be exceptions, but generally members must have people in their ridings who do not have the advantage enjoyed by their big cousins of receiving cable television.

I do not know whether I should be arguing the merits of cablevision and whether it is worth while receiving. There is a lot to be said for getting away from television in any shape or form, but I think most people regard it as one of the things they would at least like to have the right to turn off, if they do not already have that right, or, for that matter, the right to turn on.

The answer from the CRTC was given to the minister and tabled by him in the House in response to my question dealing with the commission's view of cable coverage in lower density areas. The first principle that I could discern from the answer of the commission was that where, in its opinion, economic conditions are such that there is little probability of a second service extending on-air coverage in the foreseeable future, the commission's view is that cable should be allowed to act as a means of bringing television to the public, and that this is sometimes the case in less populated, isolated areas of the country. I think that makes reasonable sense and explains itself. Secondly, the commission replied as follows:

> Concerning the extension of existing licensed cable television systems into adjacent, less densely populated areas, existing policies require the service to be provided to any residence already provided with municipal services.

In other words, if your residence is supplied with sewer or water lines, then surely you are entitled to be on a cablevision line. The commission goes on:

> While the commission has refrained from forcing the extension of services to clearly uneconomic regions, which could jeopardize the stability of licensed systems, they have always encouraged mature, well developed systems or those with a high degree of potential growth to expand into neighbouring territories even if such expansion is only marginally viable.

As the answer presented to me by the minister points out, in this regard one might refer to decisions granting licences in Sudbury and Timmins, where in both areas licensees were required to extend service throughout the respective regional municipalities. The Timmins licensee was also required to provide service to Cochrane and Iroquois Falls, notwithstanding that he had in fact not applied to service those areas. Thirdly, in looking at the policy of the CRTC as it was then and ever more shall be until royal assent is given the measure we are now considering, we find this statement:

It should be pointed out that many less populated areas while having a sufficient population base to ensure a potentially successful cable television undertaking, were they able to receive sufficient television signals off-air, could not possibly survive, given the requirement for a microwave delivery system, without a significant degree of support from larger centres.

If you want that to be boiled down into simple English, Mr. Speaker, let me go back to the Toronto Maple Leafs' defence of the 1930s, where little King Clancy had to have big Red Horner alongside him so they could operate effectively as a team. The little fellow could not do it by himself; he had to rely on the bigger fellow to help him.

I think these three citations are the requisites of the policy set forth by the CRTC. When all of them are examined together, I think what they amount to is this, that where lots of people live in houses connected to sewer and water lines, or there are people in remote areas which somehow are adjacent to big cities, then those people can have cable television; otherwise they will have to wait for a new policy. I hope the minister will take this point very seriously and perhaps act as a communications source with the new commission, and that the 19 people or whatever who are on the commission will appreciate the point I am making.

● (1650)

If we are to appear absolutely fair to all Canadians in the developing of communications by cable television, we will have to seize a particularly grisly nettle. It is a grisly nettle if you happen to be a member on the government side, because you have to recognize that not only is it very logical to require services where there are municipal water and sewer services, but you must not judge communications interests on the basis of whether someone runs a sewer line into a particular area. It must be recognized that these services must be provided in certain areas whether the authority wants to provide them or not. They must generally be provided where Mother Bell has already provided her services. The marginal areas have now all been exhausted. We have to tell these people, when their licences are renewed, that they must go out beyond the limits of the metropolitan areas; that they must go out ten miles here and another ten miles there until everyone is covered.

The CRTC has found it can tell people to extend services and undertake greater jurisdiction than they originally wanted. We have to tell these people to provide services wherever the people need communications. They have to provide these services where other communication services have gone before. There must be wider limits in respect of cable television than have existed before, at least according to my understanding of the situation. These companies must match the services provided by our telephone companies, including the Bell system in Quebec and Ontario, the provincial systems in western Canada, the Maritime Tel and Tel, the New Brunswick telephone system and the Newfoundland system. I think the matter is as simple as that.

I also suspect that some kind of directive from the federal government will be required. The government cannot look askance at this new commission if it expects to open up the unserved areas of Canada. This can be done through the operations of the existing telephone companies, because the hardware is already in place to provide service to the remote parts of the country. I think you will find that wherever there is a telephone system there is also the technical and technological ability to provide a cablevision system. This is a choice that has to be made by the government and by this commission, and until the choice is made there will be large areas of Canada not served by cablevision. I make that point as my only point to the Minister of Communications in respect of this new commission.

[Mr. McCleave.]

Perhaps the only other thing I might add by way of a philosophic comment is that it seems very strange, in an age when communication is so very important to us all, that we only get measures such as this one to deal in a fundamental way with communications in the vast areas of this country. It seems strange that in this important area of bringing the people together, with all our new techniques, innovations and technological changes, we should only take such a small step once every ten years. This must be a commentary on our ability to communicate with each other.

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I realize I have only a few minutes this afternoon at my disposal, and I know the minister is anxious to make his position clear. However, I am sure he will want to answer some of the questions I should like to pose, as well as the questions asked during the substantial contributions made by others during this third reading debate. I hope in due course the minister will answer the one or two questions I would like to put to him this afternoon.

One of the things I have observed during the 9½ months I have been in this House is the tendency on the part of the government to create administrative tribunals, bodies or agencies to deal with very important segments of governmental responsibility. To use the Department of Transport as an example, since the parliamentary secretary is here and I want to take advantage of that fact, parliament seems to have lost control of certain areas of transportation as a result of the government's delegating responsibility to agencies, Crown corporations and departments.

When an individual member of parliament attempts to obtain information about the operations of an agency involved in transportation matters, the civil servant tends to adopt a very cursory or arbitrary attitude. The civil servant or bureaucrat, if I may use that term, is inclined to take the attitude that in fact it is none of the individual member's business but, for example, is the basic concern of the agency, such as the CBC. I use that as an example as I see that the minister responsible is here, and I would like to take advantage of that fact by again letting him know that this kind of response does not sit well with individual members of parliament.

The point I am making is that while it has been pointed out that this bill in fact is a housekeeping bill to create a new commission with expanded authority over communications in our country, the fact of the matter is that there is nothing in the bill to indicate that this House or the executive in cabinet will have any input in the deliberations of that commission. This fact intrigues me and perhaps the minister in due course will explain why there has not been provision for the government to give direction to the CRTC in matters of policy.

Government leadership is very much required in respect of communications services in this country. If we are to have a viable country in which one part feels as much a part of Canada as another, it seems to me that the institution of services across the country should be the result of government policy and there should be a mechanism or a provision within the bill by which the government can, in fact, give direction that certain services must be provided to certain areas.

This leads me to a rather parochial observation, if I may be permitted to make it at this time. I refer to the services that have been provided over the years in that great province of Saskatchewan. It seems to me that the CRTC in the past has misinterpreted its jurisdiction in respect of broadcasting. It is apparent that the CRTC understands that its responsibility in respect of broadcasting relates to the area 50 miles north of the United States border. The fact of the matter is that in some of the major centres in the province of Saskatchewan there has only recently been the development of a second television station, and I suggest that the size of these cities, with their reasonably large populations, would demand cablevision service.

Mr. Speaker, I see that you are about to rise because it is almost five o'clock, so I will take the opportunity of calling it five o'clock now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Unless the hon. member seeks the unanimous consent of the House to carry on for a few minutes, I must call it five o'clock. With the unanimous consent of the House, I will not see the clock for a few moments.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Perhaps I might ask that Your Honour does not see the clock, in the hope that we might be able to deal with the bill.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Realizing the attention I have received, and the importance of this matter, I appreciate the indulgence of the House in allowing me an extra couple of minutes to bring these things to the minister's attention. If the minister intends to reply, I hope he will elucidate a little in respect of the apparent lack of a provision in the bill which would allow the government and parliament to give directions regarding broadcasting policy.

● (1700)

I understand the basic principle involved and that in the area of broadcasting the government would be very leery in this respect, but I do not think a responsible body or government would abuse that particular prerogative. I think on occasion, however, the government must be in a position where it has the ability to issue directives to a body such as the CRTC. It should have the power to say, if it should be considered a matter of national interest, that service shall be provided to a certain area. If the government, for example, should decide that there should be cable service in Saskatoon, which I believe to be of great national importance, it should be in a position to deal with that matter.

I merely wished to make these few observations in respect of this bill. I hope the minister will have an opportunity to address himself to some of the matters raised by hon. members.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the motion carry?

An hon. Member: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions, public bills.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I think there would be agreement to take motion No. 35 standing in the name of the hon. member for Brandon-Souris.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it also agreed that the motions preceding this one shall retain their position on the order paper?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SOCIAL SECURITY

SUGGESTION POLICY BE ADOPTED TO REINSTATE CHRONICALLY SICK AND DISABLED PERSONS INTO THE FAMILY AND COMMUNITY

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, recognizing that an essential part of any social security policy is a program of adequate care, compassion and opportunity for Canada's disabled, the government should give urgent consideration to initiating, in co-operation with the provincial governments, and voluntary groups, specific programs for chronically sick and severely disabled Canadians including (a) mandatory building standards designed to provide easy access to public buildings, schools and universities (b) special housing facilities and adequate educational vocational and employment guidance service and opportunity, making it possible for the disabled person to be creatively employed to the degree that his/her handicap permits (c) the provision of technical and electronic equipment so that handicapped persons might be released from helpless dependency by controlling their immediate environment (heat, light, radio, telephone, TV, typewriter, tape recorder, etc) (d) income maintenance sufficient to enable the disabled person to enjoy a reasonable standard of living (e) the general coordination of policies and programs designed to aid this group i.e., policies that combine the ingredients of a sound rehabilitation program, the medical, social, vocational and educational aspects, in a positive approach that will enable large numbers to be released from static expensive institutional care to a creative life in the family and community.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the debate on this motion is a continuation of a debate which took place in this House on February 19, 1973. On that occasion the motion was phrased in terms similar to those of the motion today. The whole basis of the motion was to draw the attention of the House and of the government to one of the most urgent social problems confronting Canada at the present time. It is appropriate that for the debate this afternoon we have a representative group from across Canada present in the Speaker's gallery.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dinsdale: The technical aids committee which is sponsored by the Canadian rehabilitation Council for the Disabled has been in session throughout this day in an endeavour to come to grips with some of the problems outlined in the motion before us. Specifically, it has been concerned with making available the growing number of technical aids so that they may be put into service for the severely handicapped and chronically ill citizens of Canada, of whom there are many.

I trust that those who will take part in the debate this afternoon—and I am glad to see a representative attendance in the House—have taken the trouble to read the discussion which took place in 1973. That discussion took place at the beginning of the exercise of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) based on the presentation of the orange paper which resulted in a dialogue concerning social and health problems over the past two years which is about to come to a conclusion. We anticipate that some legislative recommendations will result from that long discussion between government and representative groups of the people of Canada.

During the previous debate I suggested that a logical method of handling the complex issues embraced in a rather lengthy resolution would be to refer the matter to a committee of this House, preferably a joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons, which could examine in depth all the problems relating to adequate policies and programs for the disabled population of Canada, so that representative groups could appear and a body of information could be brought together, and on the basis of the recommendations of that committee, policy recommendations could be co-ordinated to meet the need.

On that occasion the government declined to accept the recommendation. Now that the discussions with regard to the orange paper are reaching a point of action, I would hope that the recommendation would be accepted during the debate this afternoon so that after a period of two years we might have a body that would move toward implementation of the urgent needs that are set out in the resolution before us.

● (1710)

To tie into the debate on that occasion, let me point out that one of the main points I stressed was that the motion is designed to establish an atmosphere in society where there is genuine respect for the handicapped; where understanding is unostentatious and sincere; where, if years cannot be added to the lives of the very sick, at least life can be added to their years; where needs come before means; where the mobility of disabled people is limited only by the bounds of technical progress and discovery; where the handicapped have a fundamental right to participate in industry and in society according to their abilities; where socially preventable distress is unknown; and where no man has cause to feel ill at ease because of disability.

Several members took part in that debate, including the hon. member for Lafontaine-Rosemont (Mr. Lachance), the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle) and the former hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, Mrs. Grace MacInnis who is no longer with us. On that occasion also I quoted the Minister of National Health and Welfare to the effect that he was giving priority emphasis in his policy considerations to the needs of the handicapped. I believe that is still his emphasis. I quoted at that time from the speech that he made to the Montreal Chamber of Commerce on February 5, 1973. He said:

> In the first place, the social security plan shall ensure to persons unable to work, the elderly, the blind and the disabled, an annual guaranteed income that is fair and compassionate.
> This principle is already embodied in a whole series of measures which go back as far as 1927.
> These programs, drawn up to meet special needs, have never been fully integrated; on the one hand, because they were adopted at different times for different purposes, and on the other hand, because it happened that the same program came under different jurisdictions.

Recently, the minister made a speech to the Empire Club of Canada. These are interesting and important groups in Canada and it is noteworthy that the minister is using these forums to press on with his crusade. The speech I refer to was made on October 31, 1974. In it he continued the emphasis of his earlier statement in 1973; he referred to the decisions that were about to be made with respect to the upgrading of the health and welfare program of the government, and said:

> There will be a lot of decisions, and they will be difficult ones. What, for example, is the best way—the most humane and most efficient way—of meeting the income needs of those who are unable to work: the physically and mentally handicapped; the single mothers who must remain at home to raise and care for their children—

He listed a whole series of people in this category. I merely want to underline the stress on the physically and mentally handicapped. Later in the same speech the minister said:

> Above all, how can we design the social security system so as to provide adequate income support, and increasingly a combination of income support and income from employment, to people who are handicapped and otherwise unable to achieve full independence, while at the same time ensuring that people who are able to work are found employment, thus enabling to achieve income security through income from employment.

You will see that this emphasis is continuing right down to the present moment. Much progress has been made since the initial debate in 1973, and perhaps it would be most useful at this time if I indicated some of the things that have happened since that time. For example, in March of 1973 there was a conference on technology and the handicapped. This took place with the support of the Department of National Health and Welfare at the Brooke Claxton complex, so obviously it had the official blessing of the government and the department. As a result of that conference there is much additional useful information upon which the government can base urgent action.

Also, since that occasion a committee known as the health care delivery committee was set up as part of the Canadian Association of Physical Medicine and Rehabilitation. The members of the committee are outstanding people in the field, such as Dr. Frank Murdoch from British Columbia, Dr. Veronique Susset from Sherbrooke, Quebec, Dr. Doris MacKay from British Columbia, and Dr. David Symington who is the professor and head of the Department of Rehabilitation Medicine at Queen's University. This group, which has now been operating for over a year, has been compiling information that has become available to the government and to the Department of National Health and Welfare.

With respect to the objective of the technical aids committee, we have in the Speaker's gallery this afternoon some of the most active people in the field of rehabilitation. I will not name them personally; I tried to do that when I initiated this topic back in 1973, but on such occasions one tends to miss some names. However, I will say that they are representative of such groups as the Canadian Paraplegic Association which has always provided outstanding leadership.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dinsdale: They also represent the Canadian Rehabilitation Council for the Disabled, and other representative groups from across the country.

Last August, in the city of Vancouver, under the aegis of the Kinsmen Rehabilitation Foundation, the first international conference on technical aids for the handicapped took place. This was a major milestone in Canada's involvement in this increasingly important field of endeavour on behalf of the handicapped. As a result of that conference, a publication is now available which will be in the hands of the government and, I think, will provide all the necessary guidelines to come to immediate grips with the problems of implementing as quickly as possible, in terms of the resolution that we are debating today, a program of electronic and environment controls that is geared to meet the needs of the severely disabled and the chronically ill. It is the feeling of the committee that once we have a program of such controls for the severely disabled, there will be a positive approach to the care, treatment and rehabilitation of the severely handicapped, and I quote now from the last part of the motion——that will enable large numbers to be released from static expensive institutional care to a creative life in the family and community.

● (1720)

I want to pay tribute this afternoon to the leadership which has been provided by the Kinsmen Rehabilitation Foundation in the province of British Columbia. That foundation is one of the affiliated agencies of the Canadian Rehabilitation Council for the Disabled, and it is largely because of the leadership they have provided in implementing the program in the province of British Columbia that we have been able to move forward in the technical aids committee to the point where we are now able to make specific recommendations to the Government of Canada.

I know that mentioning names is always risky, but I think it should be placed on the record that people like Mr. Ed Sherwood of the Kinsmen Rehabilitation Foundation, who was with us in the gallery today, has provided leadership. As this is Women's International Year, we should not forget to mention that Miss Margret Perry has been very active in this program as well. She is an occupational therapist who has considerable experience in implementing technical aids programs for the physically handicapped of Canada.

I want other hon. members to participate in this debate this afternoon, but I want to wind up with three major points to bring the whole argument into focus. First, there has been renewed leadership on the part of the physically handicapped themselves, and the Canadian Rehabilitation Council for the Disabled has brought together a conference of the handicapped to deal with the problems of meeting their own specific needs. The first conference took place in the city of Toronto a little over a year ago. I must give credit where credit is due: it was funded by the Department of National Health and Welfare.

Out of that initial conference has come a continuing committee of the physically disabled which is continuing to explore the areas I have outlined in my resolution, that is, transportation facilities, housing facilities, educational facilities, technical aids, income maintenance and general co-ordination of all these problems.

I should point out, too, that there have been specific policy recommendations in this area both from the opposition party and, as I have already indicated, from the minister representing the government side of the House. Again we have reached the important stage of development where, instead of the non-handicapped sitting in conference and committee to recommend solutions for the handicapped, the handicapped themselves have taken control of their own destiny and have come up with some excellent recommendations which have been given to the government for its consideration.

All this, of course, requires funding. Up to the present moment, in meeting the needs of these various activities to which I have referred funding has been on an ad hoc basis. Whenever a request has been made to the officials of the government of Canada who are concerned with the area of rehabilitation, there has been a positive response. But I am sure the minister, or whoever is speaking for the minister this afternoon, will agree that the time has come when there has to be a specific program and a policy which moves beyond the ad hoc approach, and what I have tried to do this afternoon is to point out that there has been considerable input into this subject since this debate last took place in 1973.

I hope the government will respond in a positive way to the recommendations of the CRCD, which has put forward positive budget recommendations which, if accepted by the government, will make it possible to expand the excelent program already under way which I have outlined briefly this afternoon. But fundamentally and primarily, I hope that as other hon. members take part in this debate this afternoon we will obtain support from all sides of the House for the setting up of a committee, preferably a joint committee, which will be authorized to deal in depth with the subject of rehabilitation. There are any number of agencies in the field. What is needed now is policy co-ordination. I hope this recommendation will be accepted and that it will be one of the positive outcomes of our discussion this afternoon.

Social Security Policy

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to give my strong and unqualified support to the motion presented this afternoon by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale). One of the ways to make one's support effective in private members' hour, of course, is not to take too long, and I will try to abide by that principle. I should like to join with the hon. member in welcoming to the gallery today the members of the delegation which is with us, and to join with him in commending them and their various organizations on the tremendous work they do in the field of rehabilitation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Since the hon. member for Brandon-Souris and I have managed to break the rule about referring to people in the gallery without, thus far being chided by Your Honour, may I go just one step further and say to the hon. member for Brandon-Souris that I personally am delighted to see his son in the gallery today as well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If I may say so, it was my honour and privilege a couple of years ago, in another capacity, to confer upon Mr. Gunnar Dinsdale the degree of Bachelor of Arts at Brandon University, and all of us who know this young man know what an achievement it was for him to reach that status.

Mr. Speaker, the motion of the hon. member is well put. It does seem to cover everything. I think there is only one word missing, but it is probably covered by implication. In the main, the hon. member has done well to point out that such things as income maintenance at an adequate level must be achieved if we are going to help the disabled, the handicapped and the severely ill, but there are many other things we must do. In the main we must co-ordinate the services and the assistance which will enable such people to get out of static conditions in institutions and to live a normal life, or as normal as possible, in the family and in the community, if I may use the words of the hon. member's motion. The only word I do not see in the motion is "transportation", which may be covered by certain other phrases. It strikes me that transportation needs to be organized for the handicapped so that they can get to their places of education, employment, and so on.

● (1730)

All told, and I shall stand by my commitment to be brief, I think the hon. members' motion is excellent. We know how difficult it is to get any motion through in the time allotted for private members' hour. I hope, if it does not get through, that at least positive consideration will be given to the suggested establishment of a joint committee which can work on this matter and push it forward.

I thank the hon. member for his kind reference to my former colleague, Mrs. Grace MacInnis. I am sorry she is not here to speak in the debate on this important motion. We miss her in this House. She, by the way, is on a cruise in the South Pacific. I thought hon. members would be glad to know this. On her behalf and on behalf of the New Democratic Party, I register my strong support for this excellent motion.

[Mr. Dinsdale.]

Mr. Gus MacFarlane (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to join in thanking the members of the Canadian Rehabilitation Council for the Disabled for the wonderful work they are doing. I wish to assure them that we are all appreciative of their work and are certainly attentive to their recommendations.

The motion proposed by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) asks the government to give urgent consideration to the rehabilitation of disabled persons by means of providing the necessary income and services to enable them to integrate into Canadian society. While I support the hon. member's intention, I hope we will not slow down the work of the committees. I have faith in the ability of our federal and provincial governments to act on this matter and to implement suggestions of the kind the hon. member has brought forward. Perhaps we can make recommendations, but we should not do anything to slow down the progress of committees.

Allow me, Mr. Speaker, to quote part of the speech of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) to the conference of federal and provincial ministers of welfare in February, 1975. He said:

> —a concerted effort should be made by federal and provincial officials alike to persuade employers to adapt their employment practices and work arrangements so as to make possible the part-time employment of single parents who are unable to work full-time outside of the home, and the employment of handicapped people who are unable to adapt themselves to normal work arrangements. Efforts of this kind have already been begun in several provinces but they need to be expanded and generalized. The community employment strategy proposed in the working paper on social security, and administered by the Department of Manpower and Immigration, was created for this purpose.
> Rehabilitation and training programs must be expanded so as to ready for employment people who are handicapped in terms of personal capabilities or of their training and experience. The Vocational Rehabilitation of Disabled Persons Act and the Canada Assistance Plan provide federal assistance to this end, in so far as my ministry is concerned, but proposals for their expansion and integration will be advanced before the completion of the social security review this summer.

It gives me great pleasure, Mr. Speaker, to speak on this motion today because I feel the federal government can take real pride in its accomplishments so far in this area. After the First World War it became interested in disability because of returning war veterans. Many Canadians tend to forget our Canadian war heroes. We tend to forget the two boys who grew up in Almonte, Ontario, in that little one-roomed school. I am talking of Tait MacKenzie, the sculptor, who is responsible for many of our great pieces of athletic sculpture, and of James A. Naismith who invented the game of basketball. Those two boys skipped a stone off an old rock, as the story goes. One of them eventually went to McGill. Tait MacKenzie, after leaving McGill and having left James A. Naismith in charge, so to speak, sent him to Springfield. He went to the University of Pennsylvania and became a medical doctor. He was instrumental in developing, at the instruction of the president, rehabilitative devices for the American armed forces.

We in Canada did the same thing after the war. Before this some voluntary organizations had taken an interest in the disabled. Since that time we have demonstrated a continued interest in the needs not only of the military disabled but also of the civilian disabled. The national health grants program was instrumental in permitting the establishment of rehabilitation programs, the purchase of equipment and the training of personnel. The crippled children's grant encouraged the organization of crippled children's societies. In addition, programs such as the Old Age Assistance Act were set up to assist the disabled financially. That act gave assistance to blind persons as early as 1937. This program was followed by the Blind Persons Act, the Disabled Persons Act and the Unemployment Assistance Act.

As Canada evolved it was felt that these programs were too restrictive, had little flexibility and did not provide for services to alleviate dependency. For these reasons the Canada Assistance Plan was introduced in 1966. The government was also interested in vocational rehabilitation. In 1952 it established the vocational rehabilitation of disabled persons program, first under order in council then as a separate piece of legislation. It permits the provinces to provide the disabled with a comprehensive program of services which are necessary to assist disabled persons to become employable, thus enabling them to become integrated with society. In 1973 this program was transferred from the Department of Manpower and Immigration to the Department of National Health and Welfare because it was felt that this would permit closer co-ordination of services to the handicapped, particularly in view of the welfare services provisions of the Canada Assistance Plan.

I recognize the interest of the hon. member for Brandon-Souris in the area of technical aids for the disabled, and will therefore begin my remarks on the subject which is closest to his heart. As I mentioned, the government has had a continuing interest over the years in the needs of the disabled, and the Department of National Health and Welfare has been particularly interested in the area of technical aids. We sponsored a Canadian conference on technology and the handicapped in March, 1973, at which the hon. member was a keynote dinner speaker. Various recommendations of this conference dealt with the need for a national information centre. We are presently supporting a feasibility study for such a centre undertaken by the Canadian Rehabilitation Council for the Disabled and the Centre for Applied Research and Engineering Design at McMaster University—a university which, as the hon. member will realize, is close to my heart.

Mr. Dinsdale: I am a graduate of McMaster.

Mr. MacFarlane: In addition, we supported an electronic control seminar last August at which the hon. member made the opening remarks. This conference acquainted participants with the various electronic aids available. Through the prosthetic services division we are concerned with the manufacture of artificial limbs, braces and orthopaedic shoes and we provide fitting services for these devices. The production, engineering, testing and training unit tests appliances and components developed in various research centres across the country and develops them for general use.

We also provide consultant services on all aspects of prosthetics and orthopaedics to provincial governments and agencies, to commercial and institutional organizations and to clinics. More recently, we have undertaken to put TOSC into production. This is the touch-operated selector control for persons who have limited use of all limbs. It was developed, as the hon. member mentioned in this House last year, by Mr. Bud Cairns, a quadraplegic. By use of two remote switches, the handicapped person can request assistance, use an intercom system, unlock a door, receive and make phone calls and control appliances, including radio, TV, lights and dictating machine.

This has been an exciting development and has been acclaimed as one of the breakthroughs which will permit the severely disabled to leave institutions and live with some independence. These units are now being disseminated throughout Canada, one to a province, in co-operation with the Canadian Rehabilitation Council for the Disabled and, I understand, the Canadian Paraplegic Association.

The hon. member is also aware of our interest in the national technical aids committee of the Canadian Rehabilitation Council for the Disabled of which he is the chairman. This committee is representative of Canadian experts including scientists, engineers, physicians, federal and provincial government officials and agency personnel. We have funded a meeting of this committee in order to gain a better understanding of this complex question and to assist in preparing guidelines on the financing of special devices, some of which are very expensive.

For the benefit of other hon. members here this afternoon who may not be as aware of the technology which is assisting with the everyday problems of the disabled as is the hon. member for Brandon-Souris, I should like to mention a few devices: they include communication aids for the speech-impaired, environmental controls, such as TOSC, and wheelchair designs incorporating new, lightweight alloys. There is even a device available to enable a blind person to read regular print.

The problem lies in the lack of co-ordinated prescription, production and delivery systems for this hardware. Inventors seem to be developing these aids with little knowledge of each other. This is indeed unfortunate as the whole area of modern technology holds great promise for increasing the life, skills, independence and employability of the physically disabled. What is needed now in a co-ordinated approach to the development and delivery of technical aids, and this is the reason we are supporting the consultations with the members of CRCD technical aids committee.

● (1740)

The great majority of handicapped aspire to be as normal as possible. This desire is expressed most frequently in terms of employment. The work ethic is alive and well and living among the handicapped. It expresses itself in a rejection of inertia, a rejection of make-work activities, a rejection of unnecessary sheltered employment, a desire for training and placement in regular jobs. The brief submitted to the provincial ministers of welfare by the national steering committee of the physically disabled, a group of disabled persons, also reaffirms the right of the disabled to employment as a means of obtaining income but also as a means of self-expression and integration into the community.

There was a great example of this last Saturday. A blind student I had seen at McMaster for three years was able to make his way around the campus. Although not a member of my constituency, he arrived at my office last Saturday.

As it was not like the old office, he bumped into things. He sat down and told me his story. He did not want to be in employment where he could not give anything. He has had that for two years. He has a pension about which he could not care less. He had done his work at McMaster and wanted to know if there was something I could do for him. This boy wants to work at something useful. Although I tried to do as much as I could for this boy while at university, I had not realized I was not doing anything to make certain, when he finished, that he could do what he wanted to do. This is indeed a responsibility we must bear in mind. People with this kind of disability want to work as an expression of themselves, not just to do their work.

For many of the disabled, work gives meaning to their lives. A citizen has commented to me that work has a primary role to play in the way his family sees him, the breadwinner. He said, "A man or woman has to feel that he or she is still a man or woman even though disabled. Work also gives me the satisfaction of not being dependent. Work gives me self-satisfaction, self-respect and the pride essential to a human being." Another disabled person was not for work as much as he was against not working; he said, "I work because if I don't, I feel sick. I just don't feel the same. I never wake up all day; I'm in a sleepy mood because I'm not using my energy. I feel dopey."

As I have mentioned, the government has been active over the years in providing the disabled with the necessary training and services to permit them to become employable. This has always been the goal of the Vocational Rehabilitation of Disabled Persons Act. VRDP permits the provinces to offer comprehensive vocational rehabilitation services which include medical, social and vocational assessment, counselling, restoration services, provision of prostheses, training, maintenance allowances, and the provision of tools, books and other equipment. These services can be provided directly by the province or they may be purchased from a voluntary agency.

The act recognizes the uniqueness of each disabled person's problem and allows for individuals to be provided with the services required on an individual basis. In addition, it permits the individual disabled person himself to be involved in the planning and processing of his own rehabilitation. He participates in setting rehabilitation goals for himself in employment and in the means by which he is to reach that goal. Services are available to a person on the basis of his disability and his need for services rather than the financial need of the individual and his family: there is no financial test under VRDP.

Service delivery is co-ordinated under a provincial co-ordinator and the program draws on the resources of all levels of government, the voluntary sector and the private sector; for example, training on the job in private industry. It is supplementary and complementary to existing social services and other related programs. The Department of National Health and Welfare has been pleased to be a part of an interdepartmental committee which is presently studying employment in the public service for persons with special needs. Demonstration projects will soon be set up in Toronto, Montreal, Vancouver and the national capital area with the dual aims of increasing the employment in the public service of persons with special needs, and of providing data on barriers to employment.

When we speak of employment of the handicapped it becomes necessary to speak of sheltered workshops, of which there is a wide variety. The Department of National Health and Welfare has been pleased to collaborate with the Canadian Council of Rehabilitation Workshops in formulating guidelines for the operation of workshops. The vocational needs of disabled persons are similar to those of other people. They, too, seek employment in the world of work at a level compatible with their abilities and potential. At one time or another, all of us have required some assistance in achieving employment and social participation. The disabled person, as is the case of the non-disabled, expects society to provide a reasonable level of assistance in helping him or her to prepare for and obtain suitable employment. When the limitations of the individual do not permit him or her to meet the demands of traditional work settings, alternative work opportunities appropriate to his or her level of capacity should be available.

Many vocationally disabled individuals are able to function effectively in normal employment situations. Others can only do so with the aid of specialized preliminary vocational services to the handicapped, ranging from intensive assessment to ongoing sheltered employment to activity programs where work is one of the several program components. It is important for us here to think of the person being rehabilitated. We should be very careful about getting involved in the sheltered program all the time because many of these people do not want a sheltered program; they want to work on their own and to be accepted into society. We should have programs which try to bring them into that situation.

We also have to think of institutional care. I wish to say here, in a few short words, that while it is important to have institutional care, there are some people who say some pretty strong things about it. A young man said in a letter that he felt he was continually surrounded by people who were going to leave him, people going to the great beyond, people who were going to die. He said he wants to be on his own where he can make his own way. It is terribly important that we should develop the independence of the individual and provide the funds for that individual to grow up in family surroundings, not necessarily in a confined, controlled area.

Another young man in a chronic care hospital said, "It's a lonely place. The main recreation is watching your room-mates die." We should not take those words lightly. These are sincere words; they are not of a person crying in the dark but of one who wants to get out and live and be part of the world, which is justly his or her right.

I have not touched on the mentally retarded; I have been talking largely on the physical. However, it is terribly important to think of these people. I had a wonderful opportunity last Saturday evening. I was invited to a dance in aid of a local initiatives program which I thought was fantastic. I am very proud because this was in my district. In Hamilton Mountain there are some people who work for the Royal Botanical Gardens. Sometimes these people have just been released from mental institutions. If they are given a task where there is not too much pressure with someone over them telling them what to do, it becomes their task. Within a short period they become rehabilitated and can go out to work. There is a program where these people work in these gardens. They know their area of the garden and they take pride in bringing it on. These people work in a calm surrounding where they do their own thing.

An invitation was sent out to people of all political backgrounds, as well as those involved in the community, to attend a dance in a small centre last Saturday evening. They had Colonel Sanders' chicken and an open, pay bar for those who wanted a drink. The admission was $2.50. Among those attending were persons being rehabilitated as well as those who work in the hospital in nursing and social services. Even the young people who clean the wards were in attendance. There were also businessmen there who were willing to take those who had completed the garden project into the normal work force. We were actually being made to feel part of the scene by the people who were being rehabilitated.

This is the most important thing we can face in this life. We always think we should bring along our children; we feel we should pave the way for them; we feel we should show them the bright prospects as well as the dangers down the road. We must look after those in our country who are disabled for one reason or another, whether it be physically or mentally. We should be prepared to say; "My God; here are our brothers and our sisters. Let us walk forward with them because we need them and we need their help."

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I rise at this point to speak for a few minutes only, because I firmly believe the motion should pass this afternoon. This is a subject in which I am deeply involved. I wish to commend its sponsor for introducing it today. Of course we received no notice of it. This is why I have no wish, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), that the carrying of the motion be presented by prolonged debate.

What is requested here is simply that the government establish a mixed committee to study once more the problems of the disabled social security efforts should concentrate on services adapted to the disabled and more human treatment. Placement especially should be studied; its seems at this point, Mr. Speaker, that studies should be brought to a halt. Emphasis should be put on looking at the facts. I believe that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) deserves commendation, because the trend is more and more to the practical side. All the disabled ask for is an opportunity to live their lives, to work, to earn their living, to try and live as normally as everyone else. I find evidence of that in my constituency, where a sheltered workshop has been in existence for some years. We benefited from some LIP projects, and we often took part in the minister's demonstration project. I mention the fact only to remind the minister that he promised these projects would become permanent. We had once again this year a splendid LIP project to submit for the disabled in my area. It was turned down by the provincial government for the reason that there was another project. We immediately thought of the project the minister had promised to bring in on a permanent basis. We wish that this project be permanent for this group of disabled persons. I believe the situation is the same throughout Canada: we have been waiting for two or three months. These disabled have nothing more to lose because the LIP project was turned down, and I urge the government to continue its move forward. Studies are a good thing. So is the establishment of a committee, but I am not overly confident on studies at this point. What is needed is practical moves, action. What I want is industries, housing needed by the disabled, but above all jobs that will allow them to live as any other Canadian. When I saw these handicapped people work, I was amazed at the fine pieces of work they could do.

I talked to these people who are happy to be alive. A number of young ones told me: "Sir, we are just starting to live."

I hope the minister will listen to these appeals and provide these people with jobs on a year round basis and help them live like all other Canadians.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for York South (Mrs. Appolloni).

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): On a point of order, I wonder whether I might ask the hon. member for York South (Mrs. Appolloni) to give up the precious right to speak so that there might be time, in the name of the handicapped of the country, to take a decision on this important matter.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not think such a request is in accordance with our practice. An hon. member may move that another member be heard, but that is a different matter.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): We just want to get to a vote, that's all.

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have already spoken several times in this House regarding the needs and aspirations of the handicapped. A private members' bill—alas, far down on the order paper—appears in my name. I am humbly grateful to be able, now, to speak on this motion.

Some years ago, Mr. Speaker, I was paralysed. It is a sobering thought to realize that if I had been elected at that time it would have been extremely difficult, if not impossible, for me to take my seat, since I could not have manoeuvred my wheelchair into this chamber. Indeed, had it not been for the grace of God and the indefatigable efforts of skilled doctors, I would not even have been able to go the visitors' gallery. On that point, I am saddened to see only three wheelchairs in the gallery today; thank God three of them made it. We might start putting our own house in order by building a ramp so that the handicapped could visit that gallery, or any others if they want to, without having to perform acrobatics.

I have promised some good news and now I am happy to give it. I would like to make particular reference to point (e) of the motion put forward by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale). It gives me great personal pleasure to assure the hon. member, and indeed the entire country, that the government is not only concerned about sound rehabilitation programs, but is now about to undertake concrete steps aimed at fostering and promoting them. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I will read excerpts of a letter dated March 26, 1975, which I received from the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer). Speaking of various rehabilitation activities and government procurement programs already under way in his department, the minister said:

> I recognize the positive and valuable rehabilitation work carried out by the sheltered workshops and am prepared to take similar initiatives to ensure that they have every opportunity for obtaining work contracts. To further encourage sheltered workshops to compete for government business I have instructed my officials to undertake a review of our present source lists to ensure that workshops interested in doing work for the government will have an opportunity to do so.

I am very happy to say that the letter I have read came from this side of the House. It is tangible proof of the interest taken by the government in the well-being of our handicapped citizens.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being six o'clock, pursuant to the order made earlier this day, this House stands adjourned until 2 p.m. tomorrow.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Shameful. You people talked it out.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to special order made this day.

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

REFERENCE TO PURCHASES MADE FOR OFFICIAL RESIDENCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to seek leave to move a motion arising out of certain purchases made at public expense for the Prime Minister's official residence at Sussex Drive. I would move:

That in view of the fact that the Prime Minister has purchased at public expense $337 worth of matches and $385 worth of candles for his official residence, the House requests the Prime Minister to state whether these purchases indicate a need for enlightenment in high places or whether in view of the failure of government policies to deal with the galloping cost of living the Prime Minister has finally adopted as his motto the title of the popular song, "I'm beginning to see the light."

AIR CANADA

SUGGESTED EXTENSION OF TERMS OF REFERENCE OF INQUIRY TO INCLUDE ACCOUNTING PROCEDURES—REASON FOR EXECUTIVES LEAVING COMPANY

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have one or two questions for the Minister of Transport or, in his absence, the Prime Minister. Perhaps I could address them to the Acting Prime Minister. I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister, now that an inquiry is apparently to be held into the affairs of Air Canada pursuant to the Inquiries Act, whether he can assure the House that upon additional evidence being presented concerning other areas of Air Canada's activities, the terms of reference will be extended?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): I expect my hon. friend the Minister of Transport will be here shortly and will answer questions about the inquiry which has been decided upon. It is my understanding that the inquiry will relate to the particular charges and reports which have been made so far.

Mr. MacKay: The Acting Prime Minister will surely be aware that conditions in the Winnipeg finance section of Air Canada are causing great consternation. Will he consider taking steps to inquire why the finance section has become so chaotic and ineffective that a good percentage of the loss incurred by the airline, over $1 million recently, was due to poor accounting and collecting procedures?

Mr. Sharp: It is my understanding that the inquiry will relate to the accounting procedures of Air Canada.

Mr. MacKay: Perhaps the Acting Prime Minister will also take steps to find out, on a frank and factual basis, why so many capable executives have left Air Canada in recent years, including the present chief executive officer of Eaton's, whose talents the airline could ill afford to lose and whether this exodus has any significance in terms of the way in which Air Canada is being managed and directed.

SUGGESTION INQUIRY SHOULD BE BROAD IN SCOPE

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Does the Acting Prime Minister not believe that if an inquiry is launched on a very narrow basis, while still including accounting procedures, the committee of the House studying the annual report of Air Canada might find that answers to many questions are refused on the grounds that the subject is sub judice? Does he not therefore agree that it would be wrong to embark upon a narrow inquiry and that it would be better to hold a broad inquiry covering the whole aspect of the management of Air Canada?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): I do not follow the logic of the hon. member. If the inquiry were to be very broad it would preclude to an even greater extent the normal cross-examination which might take place on the estimates. The purpose of the government is to assist parliament in getting at the facts.

Mr. Horner: This way, excuses will be made and there will be no facts given to us.

An hon. Member: It is the opposition which has been asking for the inquiry.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

STRIKE OF LONGSHOREMEN IN QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON PROGRESS OF NEGOTIATIONS—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO SETTLE

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Labour whether he can give the House some information with respect to the situation in the river ports and tell us specifically what steps are being contemplated by the government with respect to the legal strike there?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Yes, I can give the hon. member a quick report. It appears that a settlement is very difficult to obtain in connection with the question of job security along the lines the conciliation commissioner, Judge Gold, recommended. This is what is keeping the parties apart. I am giving it one last try to see whether that issue can be resolved. If it cannot, we shall have to consider an alternative which I know all hon. members as well as myself consider unpalatable, that is to say, legislation.

● (1410)

STRIKE OF LONGSHOREMEN IN QUEBEC—ALLEGED ABUSE OF LEGAL RIGHT TO PICKET AS FACTOR IN SETTLEMENT

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour. The minister seems to indicate that it is the government's intention at this point in time, having given every opportunity for a settlement between the parties, to focus upon the broad issue of the Gold report. Is it not the understanding or belief of the government that the difficulties concerning this legal strike have to do with the much narrower aspect of the illegal use or abuse of the right of men on legal strike to picket? Is this not the area upon which the government should in fact be focussing its attention in so far as legislation is concerned?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is referring to the fact that there has been picketing in certain situations, then this is a matter for interpretation by the courts. If someone wants to take out an injunction against picketing, an injunction is issued and if it is disobeyed, we would have to consider very seriously taking legal action against those who disobey the law. When I say "we" I am talking of those people who take out these injunctions, and in this case, being in the private sector, government is not necessarily involved.

Mr. Forrestall: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. So that we understand the Minister of Labour, can I ask him whether he will confirm to us that the government is now giving consideration to legislation for a return to work of workers who have been on legal strike for about three weeks on the basis of the Gold report?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, without going into what the legislation will contain at this stage—I think the hon. member will understand my reservation on that score—let me say that when a strike situation does appear to be very difficult of resolution the necessity for legislation is always a consideration of the government.

AIR CANADA

DECISION ON HOLDING INQUIRY—REQUEST FOR OUTLINE OF TERMS OF REFERENCE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport, who has finally come into the House. Has the government reached any decision as to whether or not to proceed with an inquiry into certain financial dealings of Air Canada and, if so, would the minister inform the House of the terms of reference of this inquiry?

[Mr. Forrestall.]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this matter came before cabinet this morning and we have decided to have an inquiry under Part I of the Inquiries Act. We have a certain number of names of people who have been suggested by members of the cabinet and others. Before we can disclose them I think it is the decent thing to do to wait for their acceptance, and we have not received any answers yet. I think that before the end of the day we will be in a position to say exactly who will be the commissioner or the person making the inquiry, and we will be in a position—

Mr. Lawrence: What about the terms of reference?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Before publicly announcing the terms of reference, Mr. Speaker, I think I should first see a copy of them. I have the authorization of the cabinet to discuss with the judge whether he is satisfied that he has enough power to fulfil his duty as defined by cabinet.

Mr. Broadbent: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If I understand the minister correctly, then at least by tomorrow he should be in a position to tell us what are the terms of reference?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Yes, I think so.

Mr. Broadbent: Would he at this time assure the House that the terms of reference, whatever else they may include, will be broad enough to include all the financial dealings of Air Canada?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there will be any restriction. There is one thing which is evident to all members of the House, and it is that we would like to know if there is enough financial control within this big organization, Air Canada, so that the things we think have happened will not happen again. This will be one part of the mandate, and it will not be restricted to that part of the deal referred to by the hon. member for Central Nova. I can give you this general term of reference in that after that we will want to know whether the top management acted quickly enough in this case so we are sure that the interests of the public of Canada were protected as far as this organization is concerned.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REPORT ON MR. MÉNARD'S ACTIVITIES AND INTERNAL AUDIT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, when Mr. Ménard resigned as Vice-President of Air Canada last March it was reported that an internal audit was done at that time by Air Canada and that shortly thereafter an internal or in-house investigation of his work was carried out which, it was claimed, totally exonerated him of any wrong doing. Will the minister take steps to ensure that the internal audit report done by Air Canada at that time is made available to the public, and also, if there was a written report as a result of the investigations of Mr. Ménard's activities, which it was claimed totally exonerated him, will the minister make sure that is made available to members of the House?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): In the terms of reference as I see them there is no restriction in that regard. I think the man who will be in charge of the inquiry can inquire not only about the deal with the McGregor Agency, but also in respect of the deal that took place involving the Barbados affair. I do not know whether Mr. Ménard is guilty of anything as there has been no judicial inquiry in that case yet. I think we should be satisfied with the scope of the inquiry when we remember that members of the House can ask any questions in the committee on estimates, and that I am going to produce a policy on civil aviation. In that way I think we can obtain answers on anything relating to Air Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Témiscamingue wish to put a supplementary?

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): No, Mr. Speaker, my question is not a supplementary.

SOCIAL SECURITY

GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MANITOBA PILOT PROJECT

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

A few months ago the minister advised the House that a guaranteed annual income pilot project would be tried out in the province of Manitoba. Can he tell us today whether that project is now in operation in Manitoba, what its results are, and whether he intends to extend its application to the other provinces in Canada?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, indeed this pilot project has been operating in Manitoba for several months. It will operate for three years after which a period of critical assessment of 18 months will follow. I am therefore totally unable at the present time, to give a progress report on this experiment.

With regard to the last question of the hon. member, to date I have received no request from any other province for a similar project elsewhere, and the government does not intend to extend it for the time being.

● (1420)

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

If the government does not intend to make this project available to other provinces, will the minister hold a meeting of some sort with the other provinces to discuss this project?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, the Manitoba project was approved following intensive discussions with all the provinces; the possibility of launching a pilot project was open to any interested province. Manitoba was the only province at that time to show continued interest, to the point of setting up its own pilot project. As to the assessment of this project, it is clear that we will discuss it as we receive reports on the current experiment. On the other hand, we are dealing with the general scheme of guaranteed income during the current review of social security.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a last supplementary.

This guaranteed annual income actually helps strengthen the bureaucracy that applies the whole system. Is the minister considering the establishment of a universal annual guaranteed income which would simply be readjusted at the end of the year in income tax returns, so as to reduce this overly heavy bureaucracy and also give more satisfaction to all the people?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, the proposal having already been studied by the governments concerned, I need not reconsider it. We examined it anew last year and we discarded the option for all kinds of reasons that obviously I cannot detail in the House at the present time.

POST OFFICE

REQUEST FOR OUTLINE OF WAGE INDEXING FORMULA BEING CONSIDERED DURING CONTRACT NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Postmaster General. In view of the statement last night on television by the Postmaster General that he agrees with the principle of indexing with regard to employee contracts in the Post Office Department can he tell the House, in view of his agreement with this principle, whether or not he is advancing this as part of the way to a settlement of the postal strike and, if that is the case, could he tell the House what index he is considering or is in fact advancing with regard to a way of escalating salaries in the postal service as conditions change?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I did say I agreed with the principle of indexing as has the President of the Treasury Board on several occasions. This concept was advanced at the last bargaining session. I think the hon. gentleman will appreciate, however, that if we were to divulge our bargaining position so far as the format or indexing level is concerned, we would in effect be notifying the whole world what our position is and this would make a mockery of bargaining. This is something which will have to be determined through future discussions with the union.

Oral Questions

PUBLIC SERVICE

PROPOSAL GOVERNMENT ADOPT POLICY OF WAGE INDEXING—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the statement just made by the Postmaster General that he and his colleague the President of the Treasury Board generally approve the question of indexing, is the government about to announce a policy in respect of public service salaries in general that there will be the principle of indexing recognized in negotiating salaries as has now been recognized in one salary settlement dealt with through arbitration proceedings.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be inadvisable to generalize in this way. The Postmaster General and the President of the Treasury Board have indicated that there are circumstances under which this might be suitable. Perhaps this particular negotiation is one of those. It does not necessarily follow that one would want to apply exactly the same principle everywhere.

PUBLIC WORKS

GOVERNMENT PLANS FOR DREDGING IN VIEW OF FACT ALL DREDGING COMPANIES UNDER INDICTMENT

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Public Works. In view of the fact that all major dredging companies in Canada have been charged with conspiracy to defraud the government of Canada, and in view of the fact that we are now into a time when dredging demands are made on the government in respect of inland ports, great lakes ports and ports on the east and west coast, I should like to ask the minister what he is doing to discharge these responsibilities.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, we still have under study a technique of tendering and awarding contracts which will effectively safeguard the public interest.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the country will be reassured by that statement, but I want to ask the minister if he intends, in conducting the day-by-day dredging operations which continue in a demand situation, to do so by using the capabilities of the department or Crown corporations, or by dealing with United States companies or dealing with these companies which have been charged by the police.

Mr. Drury: My hope is that we would be able to make use of all the facilities in the dredging industry to accomplish our purpose.

Mr. McGrath: I have a final supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Do I take it from that that the minister intends to do business with the companies charged with conspiracy to defraud the federal government on dredging contracts?

[Mr. Mackasey.]

Mr. Drury: Subject to appropriate safeguards, Mr. Speaker.

AIR CANADA

POSSIBLE INCLUSION OF WINNIPEG FINANCE BRANCH IN TERMS OF INQUIRY

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, to clarify what the Acting Prime Minister said regarding an investigation into the Air Canada finance branch in Winnipeg, may I ask the Minister of Transport if he would consider implementing a separate inquiry or instruct the private lawyers to encompass the Air Canada finance branch in Winnipeg in view of the fact that the labour and management problems there have been brought up over 27 times in the twenty-ninth and thirtieth parliaments, the billing schedule is presently eight weeks in arrears, there are over $127 million in outstanding accounts receivable—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the question is clear enough for the minister to answer it.

Mr. McKenzie: My question is—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I was under the impression that the hon. member had put his question to the Minister of Transport concerning the investigation of the finance branch of Air Canada.

Some hon. Members: Say yes.

Mr. Hees: Yes or no, Jean?

An hon. Member: Say maybe.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): I will not commit myself, Mr. Speaker. The problem is that we will be launching today or tomorrow a very important inquiry whose terms of reference will be very extensive and can be related to several questions included in the quite lengthy question put by our friend from Winnipeg. Anyhow, I think we will carry out that inquiry, see its results and whether it would be advisable to go further and take further action. I am not going to launch three or four inquiries on Air Canada one after the other. It would not be proper to do so.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REPORT ON INVESTIGATION OF SEAFARERS' INTERNATIONAL UNION

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General and it relates to questions put yesterday regarding the SIU investigation and report. If the report clearly removes the suspicion of criminality against any member of parliament, why does the minister not table the report, and thus make it public, so as to remove any doubt that there has been a cover up, thus insulting the intelligence of Canadians who can clearly distinguish between innuendo and improper or illegal conduct?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned yesterday, it is against a long tradition to publish or issue copies of police reports. Not only might this hurt some of the people who were investigated in this case but also many people who made the allegations outside the House and elsewhere. So I do not think we can release the entire police report, but I am looking at the possibility of releasing the conclusions, the terms of reference and certain parts of the report. I am studying that right now.

Mr. Nowlan: I appreciate part of that answer, Mr. Speaker. Since the Minister of Labour was shown the interim report of the SIU investigation, has he been shown the final report, and, if so, can the minister assure us that any other member who is mentioned in the report will be sent a personally autographed and confidential copy of the report?

Mr. Allmand: No other minister has seen a copy of the report until this time, neither the Minister of Labour nor anyone else.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SUGGESTION MR. LEMAY RELEASED BEFORE EXPIRATION OF SENTENCE

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Lafontaine-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Solicitor General.

According to a Montreal daily, Mr. Georges Lemay, well known by the police authorities, would have been released after serving only two of his eight-year sentence. Can the minister tell us whether this information is true and whether Mr. Lemay has enjoyed preferential treatment from the National Parole Board?

[English]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): No, Mr. Speaker. I read that story, it was incorrect. Mr. Lemay was only released after five years, after the full term of his sentence had run out in accordance with the law and, as the story points out, he has now been arrested on another charge. He has served five years, and when he was released it was not on parole but on the termination of his sentence.

AIR CANADA

POSSIBILITY OF LAY-OFFS AT CHARLES DE GAULLE AIRPORT—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I want to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

My question relates to Air Canada's activities. The authorities of Air Canada-France having apparently decided, on April 3, on the advice of Mr. G. Chiasson, to lay off 82 per cent of Air Canada's personnel at Charles de Gaulle airport and assign their duties to another air company, is the minister assured that the regular procedure provided by French law has been followed in the proposed dismissal of such a great number of employees of Air Canada in France, and can he assure the House that all the necessary arrangements will be made to preserve the job security of these employees of Air Canada?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): My good friend from Saint-Hyacinthe should know that I have so much trouble understanding and enforcing Canadian legislation, that if he asks me whether I am satisfied that French legislation is enforced in France, I cannot tell him—

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

I know the Minister of Transport has a persistent humour. However, it seems to me that this is an extremely serious question, which concerns Air Canada personnel, and, under the circumstances, if he is not aware, would he accept to tell the House tomorrow, if possible, whether it is true that 82 per cent of Air Canada personnel at Charles de Gaulle Airport must be laid off?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): The question seems very reasonable to me, Mr. Speaker, and I will try to get a report as soon as possible. However, whether this stems from implementation of French legislation, I do not know.

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILES—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE CANADA WILL SHARE IN INVESTMENT PLANS OF FORD AND GENERAL MOTORS

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It is in regard to an announcement that the Ford Motor Company plans to invest $2 billion in the manufacture of small cars over the next number of years. I would like to ask the minister whether he has been in touch with the Ford Motor Company and whether he has received assurances that Canada get a fair share of that investment.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we are frequently in contact with the senior officers of the Ford Motor Company. I am not in a position at the moment to say that there has been any discussion of the details of the program to which the hon. member refers, but I can assure him that, given this information, I will make it clear to him that we would expect the participation of Canada in the program.

Mr. Saltsman: Is it the intention of the minister to make a definite inquiry of the Ford Motor Company as to the percentage of investment and the job training opportunities which should take place? While he is doing that does he also intend to be in touch with General Motors, which plans a $3 billion investment over the next few years.

Mr. Gillespie: I have been in touch with both companies on the question of investment, and I have made it clear to the automobile industry generally that I expect them to invest in Canada on the same relative percentage basis of the total North American investment as they enjoy in the Canadian market.

Mr. Saltsman: When will the minister be in a position to report on his representations to both Ford and General Motors as to their plans?

Mr. Gillespie: I feel that I am reporting back to the House on a regular basis because this is an on-going situation with the automobile industry at the present time, and I look forward to doing so again in the coming weeks.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

SUGGESTED INCREASE IN PENSIONS OF WIDOWS OF RETIRED WORKERS

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

This being Women's International Year and Mothers' Day, being only a few weeks away, would the minister be in a position to tell the House whether he has taken or is about to take necessary steps to upgrade the pension of the Canadian National pensioners' widows?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): —to upgrade the pensioners of women . . . of widows—

Some hon. Members: —of widows!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): —of widows! Ha! Yes. I hope the hon. member will make written representations, particularly with respect of the widows he is himself interested in.
