EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—POSSIBLE USE OF ARMED FORCES TO ENSURE SAFE EVACUATION OF CANADIANS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is very serious, and it is addressed to the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs. In light of the fact that the United States seems prepared to use its armed forces to ensure the safe evacuation of its nationals from Viet Nam, is the Canadian government also planning to use Canadian armed forces, air and naval, to undertake the safe evacuation of Canadians from the area, and is that why there are naval units in the western Pacific?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, Canadian forces do have two Hercules aircraft stationed in Hong Kong. They have travelled to Saigon and brought out some Canadian personnel. They are available to evacuate all Canadian personnel as the need arises. The other forces which are in the Pacific are there for training purposes and not in connection with the evacuation.

VIET NAM, CAMBODIA AND LAOS—NUMBER OF CANADIANS TO BE EVACUATED AND PLANS FOR EVACUATION

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I will address my supplementary question to the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs and ask him how many Canadians are still left to be evacuated, and are there at present firm plans and alternatives for their evacuation? In the same general context, what about the safety of Canadians in Cambodia and Laos?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we are receiving regular reports on Canadians in Indo-China, some of whom, of course, do not wish to leave. Those who do wish to leave have the alternative of leaving immediately on commercial aircraft, and as my colleague has said, if in the end it is necessary to use Hercules aircraft to evacuate those who still remain before a possible collapse, those plans would be put into effect.

AIR TRANSPORT

POSITION OF IATA ON AIRLINE ACQUIRING INTEREST IN TRAVEL AGENCY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. It is not a question relating to specific dealings between Air Canada and a particular travel agency. I would like to ask him whether IATA, the international organization which regulates air travel in general, approves of an airline like Air Canada acquiring an interest in a travel agency.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think that is a very pertinent question. I presume that the inquiry officer will have to look into that. If a deal took place, I do not know. I am not the inquiry officer, but there is no doubt that if this deal took place, there surely is a problem in the regulations of IATA, of which Air Canada is a member.

PUBLIC WORKS

DREDGING—REQUEST FOR OUTLINE OF SAFEGUARDS BEING CONSIDERED FOR NEW CONTRACTS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to follow up with a supplementary to questions asked by the hon. member for St. John's East to the Minister of Public Works, who indicated that he is prepared to accept the services of dredging companies now charged, subject to safeguards. Is the minister in a position now to elaborate on that statement? What are the safeguards he has in mind at this particular time?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I would like to be in a position to say what the appropriate safeguards are, but discussions are currently taking place with the Ministry of Transport, the National Harbours Board, the Department of Justice as well as Public Works to try to determine what is both practicable and adequate.

Mr. Alexander: Can the minister advise whether he is having any discussions, with respect to the safeguards, with the companies which are now charged, and is it the intention of the government to advise the House and the public what these safeguards will be and whether in fact he will seek the approval of the House regarding these safeguards and the contracts before entering into them? I ask these questions because of the very serious nature of the matter and because of the peculiarity of the entire situation.

Mr. Drury: I think that I would probably be very glad to inform the House of the safeguards, but perhaps seeking approval of the techniques to be adopted, which I am sure will commend themselves to the House, would be a time-consuming procedure which would hold up effective work in this area.

● (1440)

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, a final supplementary. I can understand the predicament in which the minister finds himself, but I wonder if he could advise the House and the Canadian people what the safeguards are before entering into any contracts with the dredging companies, particularly those which are presently charged? Could the minister do that?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, there is really no great difficulty about that because the period between calling for tenders and entering into contracts is necessarily quite long.

AGRICULTURE

FEED GRAIN SUPPLIES IN THE EAST—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ASSURE

Mr. Yves Caron (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Agriculture.

Following the great number of questions some hon. members have asked in the House last week from the Minister of Agriculture, and since the problem of grain supplies for eastern farmers has not yet been settled as far as the elevators are concerned, does the Minister of Agriculture intend to take special steps to settle this very urgent problem as soon as possible and, if so, what are they?

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): An excellent question.

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the people who are on strike do not come under the jurisdiction of the Department of Agriculture. The grain is still moving. There are still ships moving in the St. Lawrence. Grain is moving out of Prescott and some out of Montreal. We know that feed mills are still being supplied at the present time but we do not know how long that will last.

HEALTH

IMPRESSION GIVEN TO STUDENTS CONCERNING SEX—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, my question was for the right hon. Prime Minister, but in his absence I will direct it to the Acting Prime Minister. An official of the Department of National Health and Welfare stated recently in a discussion, and I will quote this as it is in writing. I hope you will bear with me—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member would just put his question.

Mr. Elzinga: I have no question without the quote, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Go ahead.

Mr. Elzinga: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The quotation is:

> Publications were put into what is called "Generation", a package of information distributed to high school and university students giving them full information on what the problems are . . . At present we have an advisory committee, a working group that is doing a special study on how to go into new ways of trying to convince people, such as, you know "Sex is okay, but V.D. is out".

This is my concern and my question to the Acting Prime Minister is—

Mr. Alexander: What does Mitch know about sex?

Mr. Elzinga: —is it this government's policy to convey to high school students the impression that sex is okay but venereal disease is out?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I find some support in the House for the first part of that statement.

ENERGY

DECISION OF INTERNATIONAL ENERGY AGENCY TO ESTABLISH FLOOR PRICES—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Due to the fact that the 18 member International Energy Agency has agreed to the establishment of minimum international floor prices for energy and has agreed that this decision should be made by July 1, can the minister tell the House what position Canada is putting forward with respect to the floor price to protect our investment in energy and domestic fuel?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, at 3.30 this afternoon we have a meeting of the National Resources Committee specifically to discuss our adherence to the IEA. I hope the hon. member could put that question to me and my officials who will be present so that we can discuss it more fully.

Mr. Gillies: A supplementary. Will the minister give an assurance to the House and the people of Canada that before an agreement is made on the floor price it will be discussed in the House of Commons?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): We can start discussing it this afternoon.

AIRPORTS

PICKERING—POSSIBILITY OF EXPROPRIATING TOWN OF STOUFFVILLE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): My question is to the Minister of Transport. In view of the Prime Minister's statement Friday that the Pickering Airport development will disrupt the lives of only some 2,000 people at Pickering, and in view of the fact that the town of Stouffville, having a population of some 5,000 was found by the airport inquiry commission to be within the undesirable noise disturbance area for the new airport, would the minister indicate if the government now intends to expropriate the town of Stouffville with its 5,000 people as recommended by the airport inquiry commission or has the Prime Minister just chosen to include these residents in his "nobody" class for the purpose of his Toronto speech?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think all questions relating to expropriation should be addressed to the Minister of Public Works who has that responsibility.

Mr. Stevens: Then, if I may I would put that question to the Minister of Public Works. I hope he was listening.

Mr. Drury: No.

Mr. Stevens: To the Minister of Public Works. In view of the Prime Minister's statement in Toronto that only 2,000 people would be affected by the development of Pickering Airport while Stouffville, an area covered by the noise area according to the Airport Inquiry Commission has 5,000 people, would the minister indicate if it is the government's intention to expropriate the town of Stouffville as recommended in the Airport Inquiry Commission report?

[Mr. Gillies.]

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): No, Mr. Speaker, there is no present intention to expropriate the town. An offer has been made for those who want to leave to regard the government as purchaser of last resort, but there is no intention to expropriate.

PICKERING—POSSIBILITY OF DELAYING CONSTRUCTION IN VIEW OF DECLINE IN AIRLINE GROWTH FORECASTS

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): A supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the general decline in Canadian airline growth forecasts, with Air Canada now setting its growth projection at only 2 per cent for this year compared to 8 per cent, the figure advanced at the beginning of the year, would the minister indicate if consideration is being given to delaying construction of the Pickering airport for at least a year so that these declining growth patterns may be taken into account rather than running the possibility of building an airport with no one to use it?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member knows that the economic situation which affected Air Canada affected all airlines in the world, particularly North American airlines, one aspect of which was the increase in the price of fuel. I do not know what the situation will be next year. I think we have taken all precautions because we are only building one runway and it will be ready in a few years. In the meantime, we will be in a position to judge if we should go ahead or stop.

HOUSING

DROP IN NUMBER OF STARTS—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO INCREASE

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In view of the drastic drop in housing starts for March to 138,000 on a seasonally adjusted basis, compared to the minister's annual target of 210,000 starts, is he going to adjust his annual target of 210,000 starts or what steps does he intend to take to increase the starts?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member obviously shares my concern about the drop in starts over last year. I do not intend to lower my target. I intend to take those initiatives that are necessary to meet the targets.

SUGGESTED LOWERING OF MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES TO STIMULATE HOUSE BUILDING

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): A supplementary question. In view of a recent survey of economists by the Financial Post who almost unanimously stated that the most important single thing necessary to stimulate housing is to lower interest rates on mortgages, may I ask the minister if he agrees with this finding and if he will recommend lower interest rates on mortgages to the Minister of Finance?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that is one of the many elements for consideration in my recommendations to the Minister of Finance.

ALLEGED HERRING FISHING BY FOREIGN VESSELS IN TERRITORIAL WATERS

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of State for Fisheries.

Did the minister or officials of his department receive complaints from Îles-de-la-Madeleine fishermen about ships flying the French flag and fishing herring in the 12-mile territorial zone near the Îles-de-la-Madeleine and, if so, what action does he intend to take?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet received any such information, but I shall look into it as soon as I leave the House and submit a reply to the hon. member later on.

NITROGEN FERTILIZER—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PROTECT SUPPLY IN VIEW OF INCREASING PRICE OF NATURAL GAS

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the energy crisis and the increasing price of natural gas, may I ask the minister what policies are being developed to guard against diminished nitrogen fertilizer supplies in this country?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, the National Energy Board has conducted an extensive series of hearings and is now in the process of preparation of a projection of Canadian natural gas supplies for the next ten years. I think he will have a better idea when that report becomes public as to the state of our supply and perhaps the action can be taken.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

GRENADES MISSING IN TRANSIT FROM DUNDURN, SASKATCHEWAN TO CHILLIWACK, B.C.—INQUIRY AS TO SECURITY MEASURES

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of National Defence to advise the House of the details surrounding the reported theft of a number of grenades in transit from Dundurn, Saskatchewan, to Canadian Forces Base Chilliwack and, in response to a telephone call, their discovery in various locations in the city of Chilliwack.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the grenades which were missing for a short period of time have all been located and are in safe custody.

Mr. Patterson: In view of the minister's answer, I now wish to ask what security measures are taken by the Department of National Defence or the Department of Transport when such transfers are being carried out.

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, the highest possible degree of security is taken, particularly when handling explosive weapons of that kind.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—POSSIBILITY OF REPRESENTATIONS TO HANOI CONCERNING SAFETY OF NORMAN AND JOAN JOHNSON

Mr. Sean O'Sullivan (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the government's decision to refrain from any protests about the aggression of communist forces in South Viet Nam on the excuse that this might endanger the safety of Canadians in that country, have any representations been made to the Hanoi government about the safety of Norman and Joan Johnson, two missionaries from Hamilton, Ontario, who are believed to have been captured at least a month ago by the Viet Cong?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might be permitted to answer this question since I have the information for the hon. member. He will recall that when we contacted the Provisional Revolutionary Government of South Viet Nam through their representatives in Paris, we were referred to one of their earlier statements in which they offered assurance that all foreigners in South Viet Nam not engaged in military activities would be well treated. More recently we have received information from other sources indicating that Mr. and Mrs. Johnson are alive and in good health. Although they are being detained in a prisoner of war camp, I understand that Mr. Johnson is being allowed to do some missionary work during daytime hours. Our efforts to secure their release are, of course, continuing.

Mr. O'Sullivan: I wish to ask specifically whether our government, through our representatives in Hanoi, have made specific representations to the Hanoi government, the central command, about the release of Mr. and Mrs. Johnson, in keeping with the statement the minister just made. Are they going to live up to that statement?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member does not think there is any distinction whatever between the North Vietnamese and the PRG. If he knew more about it, he would be more careful in the use of his words. We believe it is more effective to deal with the PRG at the present time than to deal with the North Vietnamese.

Oral Questions

HEALTH

DENTAL CARE PROGRAM IN SASKATCHEWAN—REQUEST FOR INCLUSION OF INDIAN CHILDREN

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for either the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development or the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It concerns the availability of certain dental care in northern Saskatchewan. In northern Saskatchewan, dental care is being advertised for certain children between the ages of three and 16, excluding those who are under the federal Indian health services. Have representations been made to the minister to have this service available to those who are presently under Indian health services or, conversely, has the department initiated any discussions with the province of Saskatchewan to have the plan co-ordinated?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, we have discussions underway with the government of Saskatchewan on this subject. Our policy is that the government of Saskatchewan should take care of Indians outside of reserves, while my department will be responsible for the Indians on reserves. However, I must say I am having difficulty convincing the government of Saskatchewan to exercise its responsibilities in this regard.

Mr. Korchinski: Will the minister advise whether there have been any representations from the Indians with regard to this matter?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, we have had representations from the Indians from time to time on the subject of health services. I believe discussions were held with Indian representatives on this particular point several months ago.

REQUEST FOR INCREASED FUNDS FOR RESEARCH ON IMPLANTABLE ARTIFICIAL PANCREAS

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It is as a result of a letter I received from the Brant county medical officer of health. It refers to the fact that the Medical Research Council has three times in a row turned down an application for a grant to develop an implantable artificial pancreas in those who suffer from diabetes. This involves many hundreds of thousands of people throughout the world. Will the minister reconsider and grant more funds to the research team at the Banting Best Institute in Toronto?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, my answer will be very simple. The Medical Research Council is an independent body; it determines the amount and the allocation of grants at its complete discretion. I do not intend to intervene, nor do I have the power to do so, in the decisions taken by the council in respect of some research projects. These projects are not determined by politicians but rather by a group of scholars who carefully consider every project submitted.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

STRIKE OF LONGSHOREMEN IN QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO SETTLE

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour.

Considering the interest shown for many weeks by hon. members from both sides of this House and the fact that the minister said earlier today that a last effort would be made today to reconcile the interested parties in the longshoremen's strike, could the minister tell us whether Mr. Poirier is still mediator for the federal government and, which is very important to all farmers, how long the government intends to wait before bringing forward the special measure mentioned by the minister earlier today?

[English]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Poirier is still the mediator, I can advise the hon. member. I think he will agree that affairs affecting the port of Stanley qualify him for that particular job. As to the latter part of the hon. member's question, we are not prepared to wait very long.

Mr. Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In answer to my question yesterday, the Minister of Transport indicated that I seemed to be well aware of all the facts. He continued "and if he is not, he will be informed of them tomorrow". Since we did not hear anything from the minister, I wonder if I might assume that my facts were correct.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

COMBINES

ANNOUNCEMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION TO STUDY IMPLICATIONS OF MAJOR CONCENTRATIONS OF CORPORATE POWER

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in the last several years Canadians have seen an increasing number of changes in corporate organization in Canada through acquisitions, amalgamations and mergers as well as through the growth in size and activity of many corporations.

In a growing economy it is natural that participating corporations will grow in size, strength and capability, and this is also desirable. It is always, however, necessary to ensure that while maintaining flexibility in Canadian corporate activity so that business can continue to meet the changing challenges of domestic and international commerce, the dynamics of change in corporate life are, nonetheless, contained with the needs of the public interest. Concentrations of corporate power in Canada must not be allowed to take place where the result would be injury to the fair operation of the capital and financial marketplace. The availability of the resources necessary to Canadians as a whole to continue to participate in an expanding and successful economy is of fundamental importance to Canadian society.

With current activity suggesting that further large-scale concentrations of corporate power in Canada may be taking place, particularly in relation to conglomerate enterprises, the government has decided that it is necessary to inquire into whether and to what extent such concentrations of corporate power confer sufficient social and economic benefit to Canadian society as to be in the public interest. The government considers these questions to be serious and to require prompt examination, including whether existing legislation and planned amendments to the Combines Investigation Act are sufficiently comprehensive as to ensure protection of the public interest.

The government is, therefore, today appointing a royal commission under part I of the Inquiries Act to investigate the economic and social implications of major concentrations of corporate power in Canada and to make recommendations as to safeguards which may be required to protect the public interest in the presence of such concentrations.

An hon. Member: Another one?

Mr. Trudeau: It is the first since we have been in office. I do not know what "another one" means here. The commission is being instructed to report with all reasonable dispatch.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, a former secretary of the cabinet, former deputy minister of finance and, more recently, director of the International Monetary Fund, Mr. Robert Bryce, will be appointed chairman of the commission. In the very near future, two other commissioners will be appointed to assist him.

[English]

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, as usual I speak for a constructive opposition, and I think an inquiry of this sort will serve a useful purpose. I cannot help but wonder, however, whether an inquiry with regard to the concentration of corporate power within Canada alone will necessarily be completely enlightening: it is quite possible to have concentrations of power internationally which, though not looming very large within Canada, could have a substantial effect, even a highly detrimental effect, upon life in this country. I would therefore think it highly important for the Government of Canada to take some initiative with regard to the examination of the concentration of corporate and perhaps other forms of power on a worldwide scale with a view to examining the effects upon the world at large and upon Canada in particular.

I shall have two or three questions to put to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on the implications of his statement. For example, does it mean that the government intends to hold up the legislation now before us to amend the Combines Investigation Act until this inquiry has been completed? Does the government intend to hold up, for example, the proposed take-over of Argus Corporation by Power Corporation until this inquiry is complete? Has the government given any consideration to the investigation of other possible concentrations of power within our country?

I do not want to raise any howls from the unions or anything of that sort, but I think it might be prudent for the commissioners appointed under the Inquiries Act to be given authority to look also at other possible concentrations of power which may have an unfortunate effect upon the social and economic life of this country, contributing, for example, to the inflationary push. I will seek the privilege of questioning the Prime Minister on these points at an appropriate time.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, it is now ten years since John Porter's monumental study of power in Canada, entitled "The Vertical Mosaic," was published. During those ten years, Liberal governments, which normally specialize in royal commissions, have not even followed their usual course of setting up an inquiry into the subject. It has taken them ten years to set up a royal commission to look into the concentration of corporate power. Moreover, in the period I have mentioned the lamentable state of Canadian society from the point of view of those concerned with justice and opportunity, so well described by Professor Porter, has become worse, as was so ably documented by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) in the speech he gave last fall in Toronto.

Looking at the statement the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has made, I see at the outset an encouraging sign. The terms of reference give the commission power to investigate the economic and social implications to the public interest of major concentrations of power in Canada. That is encouraging. But if we look at the authority to make recommendations, we find that the commission has the authority only to recommend safeguards to protect the public interest in the presence of such concentrations. The conclusion I reach is that the commission will be entitled only to set out procedures designed to mitigate existing situations. However, it is not going to be authorized to come up with a set of proposals that would recommend any principle of fundamental change in the system itself if it found such concentrations of power were not desirable in the public interest of Canada.

The situation concerning the concentration of power in the western world has already been ably documented by many scholars in many lands. In our own country we have had, I think, one of the most distinguished contributions to this literature just recently published. I refer to the work of professor Wallace Clement of Carleton University, which is not far from the Hill. The title of his book is "The Canadian Corporate Elite". In fact, he is the son-in-law of a Liberal member and I congratulate the member on his family connections.

In my view, we do not need a royal commission to look into the problems posed by the concentration of power. The kind of findings that have been made in general in recent years in other countries have been brought together in a thorough, coherent and cogently argued way by Professor Wallace Clement in his recently published book. What are some of his findings, which I hope will be considered by the commission? First of all, that during recent years the opposite of what the statement says has happened. At one point in the statement there are suggestions that further large-scale concentrations of power in Canada "may be" taking place. That is a euphemism. It is not simply suggested by Professor Wallace Clement but it has been documented that in case after case and in sector after sector of the Canadian economy we have had an increasing concentration of economic power among a small elite in our society.

That is my first point, Mr. Speaker. My second point bears on the question whether the commission will have the right to make recommendations for change.

Our banking industry in Canada has played a crucial role in financing foreign corporations in their attempts to take over major sections of the Canadian economy. Is this commission going to have the authority to recommend a change in the fundamental nature of the Canadian banking system?

My final point bears directly on one of the tasks assigned to the commission in terms of whether concentration of power is of social and economic benefit to Canada. The conclusion Professor Clement reaches in his book is that concentration of economic power in Canada is fundamentally inimical to those who believe in social and economic equality; that to achieve a society in which equality of opportunity is at all possible, a fundamental change in the nature of economic power in Canadian society is required. I doubt very much whether we are going to get that kind of recommendation from this kind of commission.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, some forty years ago, the Stevens enquiry was ordered in Canada to achieve just about the same objectives as those the Prime Minister set out in his statement. We have seldom heard of it since. I would hate this new commission to have the same fate; I would like to know where we are going.

Mr. Speaker, the new royal commission announced by the right hon. Prime Minister will certainly discover cartels, monopolies, coalitions and concentrations, but not only in the field of big companies where obviously they exist. We, of the Social Credit Party of Canada, have a basic principle, which we clamour and express right across Canada. I quote:

[English]

We firmly believe that the individual is the most important factor in organized society. Because he is a divinely created being with spiritual, mental and physical needs and potentialities he has inalienable rights which must be respected and preserved.

Because of this belief, we are unalterably opposed to communism, fascism and all forms of totalitarian government which make the individual citizen subservient to the state.

We stand opposed to political organization whose aims are the furtherance of the sectional interests of organized labour, business, or finance.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the royal commission of inquiry announced by the Prime Minister should take in consideration what the then Prime Minister learned in 1931 and what I learned myself in the encyclical Quadragesimo Anno, to wit:

. . . they hold the money and completely control it, control credit also and rule the lending of money. Hence they regulate the flow, so to speak, of the lifeblood . . .

Mr. Speaker, if that commission only investigates to find out large corporations, we do not need it. The present legislation deals with corporations, monopolies, thieves and so on. Mr. Speaker, not only is there concentration in the hands of corporations, but there is also concentration in the hands of labour unions, which is also a danger for the average citizen.

I learned this morning about the complaints of the CNTU that there are agreements between the QFL of Montreal, the James Bay Corporation, the government, the City of Montreal and what have you to control labour.

Mr. Speaker, that commission should be instructed to consider labour relations or conditions as much as trade, industry and corporations in Canada. We will then surely find solutions to the problems which we are now facing.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether it is the intention of the government to hold up consideration of the amendments to the Combines Investigation Act or certain aspects of those amendments until the commission completes its work? I ask this in view of the reference of the Prime Minister to the terms of reference of the commission as including whether existing legislation and planned amendments to the Combines Investigation Act are sufficiently comprehensive to ensure protection of the public interest, and so on.

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker, on the contrary: we hope that the opposition parties will co-operate with the government in expediting the adoption of phase one of our competition policy, the legislation that is presently before the House. We certainly intend that that shall become law, parliament willing, by the end of June.

The government has made it clear that this phase one is to be followed by a second phase in the next session of parliament. The second phase would contain many provisions, but I think it is probably fair to sum up the spirit of that proposed legislation as being intended to ensure greater efficiency of the economic system in Canada. It is possible that if we get the recommendations on this in time, we could incorporate some of them or at least consider them before the end of the next session. If there should be some delay, we could still proceed with the second phase and consider acting again in the session after next, if such action seems to be warranted following the report of the commission.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I do not want to argue with the Prime Minister about this; I just want to know what his intentions are regarding the legislation. Is it the intention of the government to take any interim action to prevent further large-scale movements toward concentration of corporate power in the country? To be specific, is it the intention of the government to hold up the proposed takeover of the Argus Corporation by the Power Corporation pending the report of the inquiry to be conducted by the commission announced today?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, as far as I am aware, the government has no legal means to hold up such a transaction even if it found it desirable to do so. The full import of my statement today is that we want to have more knowledge in order to know whether this type of concentration of economic power is in the public interest. Certainly, at this time there is no intention on the part of the government to attempt to hold up this particular transaction. To repeat, even if we wanted to do so, we do not have the legal means. Of course, it may be that the concentration of power after the contemplated merger takes place will be such that there may have to be some action taken under the present Combines Investigation Act in certain areas; but that is a hypothetical situation for the time being.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, it is pretty difficult to unscramble an egg, but in any case I thank the Prime Minister for his frankness. I would ask whether it is going to be a matter of government policy, now, not to request a particular deferral or postponement of action unless the government has the power to enforce it. It seems to me—I have noticed this on a few occasions, at least—that in the past the government has made requests of people in business and in other forms of life in this country not to do something when the government did not have the slightest vestige of legal power to justify it, but sought co-operation and nearly always obtained it.

Mr. Trudeau: That is true, Mr. Speaker. I do not mind confessing that the setting up of this royal commission is an indication by the government that it is not clear to us what will be the effect of the proposed takeover of Argus by the Power Corporation. Perhaps it is clear to the opposition and, if so, I will be glad to entertain any representations on this from the Leader of the Opposition.

As far as we are concerned, we are not able to reach any clear conclusion at this time as to whether this might improve the economic efficiency of the Canadian system, whether it would produce more, or less, jobs or whether it would make Canadian companies more, or less, able to compete in international markets. These are very difficult questions. I repeat that we would not be setting up a royal commission if we had some definite views on this proposed takeover or on the general theory of the concentration of economic power.

The examples the hon. gentleman refers to were areas where the government was able to state policy and back up that statement by proposed legislation, but we are not in this position with regard to the takeover to which the hon. gentleman refers.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, my question to the Prime Minister relates to his understanding of the words in the terms of reference which indicate that the commission will investigate economic and social implications. With regard to the social implications, I would ask if he understands that to mean that the commission will investigate, in the context of looking at corporate power, such ideals as equality of opportunity in Canada, for example. Is it the government's intention that this kind of social implication will be looked at? If the conclusion is reached, after assessment of the concentrations of corporate power in Canada, that the ideal of equality of opportunity is a contradiction in terms in such a society, will this commission have the right, as the Prime Minister understands it, to recommend certain steps to make a fundamental change in the corporate power that might be required to achieve equality of opportunity?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker, the commission will have the right to recommend what it sees as the best means of pursuing greater economic and social justice in Canada. I doubt very much that this commission would want to take ideological positions such as those for which the NDP is perhaps searching. I do not think it would want to take such ideological positions. I imagine that, quite to the contrary, it would try to make the market economy more efficient and just in Canada. This is the general framework within which we are operating. However, the word "social" has been put in there with the positive desire to make sure we are not looking only at the economic consequences of such concentration of power.

Mr. Broadbent: Just to be perfectly clear on the Prime Minister's answer to that question, Mr. Speaker, is he saying it is his understanding that the terms of reference of the commission, however broad they might be, should not go beyond the operations of the current kind of market economy we now have in Canada?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker. I believe that the expression "market economy" is a very general expression that covers market economies as they will exist in time, and market economies as they now exist. The hon. member should know that there have been a great many variations in market economies both geographically and in time.

Mr. Broadbent: I have one final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby will observe that I am in some difficulty in attempting to limit this kind of question period. Another member of his party also seeks the floor. I will not be able to see everyone who wants to ask a question, because in attempting to apportion the time I have to limit the individual time in some way.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister.

According to his statement about that royal commission of inquiry, private enterprise will of course be well monitored so as to determine whether or not there is too much concentration. Giving the Prime Minister an example, I wonder whether the royal commission will go further than he suggested in his statement. For example, if at a certain moment corporations are brought under public ownership, as was the case with insurance companies in Manitoba, and if after one, two or three years that public ownership results in lost profits for private enterprise, and I am thinking about the $25 million auto pact deficit in Manitoba, this is certainly not profit! Will the commission be empowered to tell the Parliament of Canada whether nationalization by provinces will also be monitored and examined by the commission so as to determine whether or not private enterprise works for the individual or whether nationalization does?

Mr. Trudeau: I do not think the royal commission is moving into that direction. It will deal mainly with the concentration of economic power but if governments or socialist parties want to destroy or disperse their economic power in the manner suggested by the hon. member, that is their problem rather than ours.

[English]

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, while acknowledging the qualities of Mr. Robert Bryce, I should like to ask the Prime Minister why the government, again in this appointment as in the recent appointment of a senior executive officer of the CBC, has resorted to a man whose experience, while distinguished, has been predominantly in the public sector; and will some of the other commissioners have a private sector background, in light of the general mandate of this commission?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the whole intention of the royal commission is to take steps to increase the extent of the public interest in the economic system. It should not be unnatural, when it comes to public interest, that we have recourse to a very distinguished public servant. To answer the other part of the hon. gentleman's question, he may not have to wait too long before seeing who the other two commissioners are; but I understand he is making suggestions to me.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I propose to see three other hon. members before concluding this matter, the hon. member for York-Simcoe, the hon. member for St. John's East, and the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister indicate whether he feels that the terms of reference of this royal commission will be sufficiently broad to enable a complete review and investigation of the Canadian banking situation, including the Canadian chartered banks whose aggregate assets have grown from about $20 billion to $100 billion since the last royal commission?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it seems obvious to me, from the hon. gentleman's question, that he is indicating an area where there is a great concentration of corporate economic power indeed, and the answer undoubtedly will be yes.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister indicate, if he can, that the terms of reference of this royal commission will be sufficiently broad to cover Crown corporations and, in turn, is he contemplating setting up a further royal commission that perhaps would look into big government, such as the Glassco commission which looked into government expenditures in general?

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the opposition party should get itself together. When I announced this royal commission, some members of the party said "Another royal commission," and another member is already suggesting another one.

[Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue).]

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the appointment of this royal commission would indicate that the present Combines Investigation Act is inadequate—and there is nothing in the amendment now before the committee that would cover these inadequacies—I ask the Prime Minister if he would consider allowing the House to see phase two of the Competition Act, which would assist us in expediting passage of phase one which is now before the committee.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I really do not see why the hon. member has to know what the government intends to do one or two years down the road in order to make up his mind about what we are putting before the House now. If he wants to know the general direction of government thought, he can go back to the bill that was put before the House by the now Minister of National Revenue a couple of years ago which had two phases, one and two, in the same phase.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, the announcement of the establishment of a royal commission came as quite a surprise. One would have assumed that over the years the government would have made some decisions on this question of concentration. It seems to have made some decisions; it has been encouraging various forms of concentration in consortiums. On the occasions when ministers have been asked about the dangers of large corporations, they invariably have replied that the government has the power, can sort it out, and that we do not have to worry about it.

My question to the Prime Minister is a somewhat philosophical one; however, I believe it is a terribly important question. It deals with the terms of reference being given this royal commission. Does the Prime Minister intend to ask the royal commission to examine the question of power itself and who has it? Do the corporations have the power, as some people think, or does the government have the power and is simply failing to use it on the corporations? I think this is a pretty fundamental and important question, and unless this matter is given to the royal commission for examination it may simply concentrate on the assumption that it has not been done this way.

Mr. Trudeau: On the preamble to the question, Mr. Speaker, I confess that the government did not have a final position on this subject of concentration of economic power and whether it was or was not, in certain sets of circumstances, beneficial to Canadians generally. I confess the government's inadequacy in that regard. I think the hon. member would understand this, because I do not see coming from his party any great statements on concentrations of workers' power in trade unions, a subject to which the Leader of the Opposition referred. I think for the serious members of that party—I include, of course, the present House leader of the party—this is a very serious question, the question of concentration of economic power in trade unions. I repeat that our policy is not final on either one of these matters. We are tackling one aspect of it at this time. I hope the New Democratic Party can give us some inkling of its philosophy in respect of the other aspect of concentration of economic power.

The final part of the question has to do with power itself and whether or not the government has it. If this is what the hon. gentleman is leading to, I would certainly agree that in a constitutional sense the government has the power to act. I do not agree that in a legal sense we have made laws which permit us to interfere with the rules of the game as they are now played legally by the corporate players. This is why, in the terms of reference, it is indicated that we want recommendations on what laws might be adopted by parliament, should that be necessary, in order to make sure that that power can be exercised.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

TRANSFER OF REGIONAL HEADQUARTERS OF PARKS CANADA FROM CORNWALL

Question No. 2,163—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What are the names and addresses of all persons or groups of any kind who have recommended to the government that the Regional Headquarters of Parks Canada be moved from Cornwall to the Toronto area and, what reasons did they give for recommending such move in each case?

2. What is the total number of jobs that will be lost to Cornwall and Eastern Ontario as a result of this move and, what is the total annual payroll at the present time of all such employees in the Cornwall area?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Management decision based on the operational requirements of the Program, to maximize operational and administrative effectiveness in program achievement.

2. The current level of federal employment in Cornwall will be maintained and there will be no net loss as a result of the relocation. Parks Canada payroll for employees at the Cornwall Regional Office was $1,336,000 last year.

TRANSFER OF REGIONAL HEADQUARTERS OF PARKS CANADA FROM CORNWALL

Question No. 2,164—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to Question No. 1,266 which stated in part that the Parks Canada Regional Headquarters will be moved from Cornwall, Ontario, to "be somewhere within reasonable commuting distance to the other federal government services..." and "within one hour commuting time of Toronto", what is a complete list along with the exact locations of the government services referred to that are within one hour commuting time of Toronto?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): The Federal Government services referred to are supplied by the following departments in Toronto: Department of Labour; Department of Public Works; Department of Justice; Department of the Environment; Department of Indian and Northern Affairs; Department of Supply and Services; Public Service Commission; Department of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I have a few questions on the order paper with regard to CIDA. I was hoping that the parliamentary secretary would answer at least one or two of them each week. It seems that the government have something to hide, and if so I wonder whether they would tell me what they are hiding.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT, THE SALARIES ACT AND THE PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARIES ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING SALARIES AND ALLOWANCES

On the order:

Consideration of report stage of Bill C-44, an act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act, the Salaries Act and the Parliamentary Secretaries Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.—The President of the Privy Council.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have had an indication of two points of order. I suspect the one by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has to do with proceeding with the report stage consideration of this bill, and that the other by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Reid) has to do with the manner in which we should proceed if we do proceed. If I am incorrect in my assumption, I stand to be corrected. If I am correct, it would seem proper to take first the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, Your Honour is quite correct. The point of order I wish to raise at this time deals with the question of whether we should be proceeding at all today with the report stage of Bill C-44. The basic reason for my questioning the right of the House to proceed today with the report stage of Bill C-44 lies in the fact that in my submission the committee on miscellaneous estimates which dealt with Bill C-44 and reported it to the House included in the bill amendments which the committee did not have the authority to make. Therefore, sir, I contend that the bill as reported to us is defective in form, that Your Honour should so rule and that Your Honour should instruct that the bill be referred back to the committee so that the committee may make any amendments it wishes in accordance with the rules. This would not prevent the committee making recommendations to the House concerning matters that it could not write into the bill itself.

Prior to my seeing the order paper this morning, which contains the report stage amendment in the name of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp), I had faced the fact that I might have to argue at length concerning the rules that were broken by the standing committee. Any such lengthy argument, I suggest, is now not necessary because the motion put down in the name of the President of the Privy Council is an admission that certain amendments that were made in the committee should not have been made at that stage. Even so, I think that two or three of the citations that bear on the point should be put on the record in this procedural debate. I draw your attention, sir, in particular to citation 246(3) of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition which reads as follows:

The guiding principle in determining the effect of an amendment upon the financial initiative of the Crown is that the communication, to which the royal demand of recommendation is attached, must be treated as laying down once for all (unless withdrawn and replaced) not only the amount of a charge, but also its objectives, purposes, conditions and qualifications. In relation to the standard thereby fixed, an amendment infringes the financial initiative of the Crown, not only if it increases the amount, but also if it extends the objects and purposes, or relaxes the conditions and qualifications expressed in the communication by which the Crown has demanded or recommended a charge. And this standard is binding not only on private members but also on ministers whose only advantage is that, as advisers of the Crown, they can present new or supplementary estimates or secure the royal recommendation to new or supplementary resolutions.

The same point was spelled out in citation 249(1). I should like to read just the first two sentences, which are as follows:

"No cases can be found of any private member in the Canadian Commons receiving the authority of the Crown, through a minister, to propose a motion involving the expenditure of public money. No principle is better understood than the constitutional obligation that rest upon the executive government, of alone initiating measures imposing charges upon the public exchequer—

Likewise, citation 250(4) says it again. It reads:

The fundamental terms of a money resolution submitted to the House with the Governor General's recommendation upon which a Committee of the Whole is set up cannot be amended.

I interpolate to suggest that the same applies to a standing committee. It continues to read:

Amendments will only be in order if they fall within the terms of the resolution. The procedure in committee on those resolutions follows in principle the procedure of the Committee of Supply, and amendments are out of order if they are proposed with a view to substituting an alternative scheme to that proposed with the royal recommendation.

The recommendation in the name of the Governor General that was attached to Bill C-44 when it was first brought in last December provided for certain indemnities, salaries and allowances for members of parliament, members of the Senate, cabinet ministers, and so on. The committee studying the bill brought in amendments reducing those figures in some cases. There is certainly no quarrel with that, speaking procedurally or in any other way, so far as that goes. There is no question from the precedents that an amendment can be moved calling for a lesser expenditure than was set out in the Governor General's recommendation. But the Governor General's recommendation provided for a fixed indemnity, allowance or salary which in all cases, was to remain at a set amount for the duration of the thirtieth parliament. There was no authority in the Governor General's recommendation for any scheme of indexing or escalating any salaries, allowances or indemnities in the thirtieth parliament. The committee studying this bill recommended an indexing or escalating formula that would apply in this parliament to all the indemnities, salaries and allowances referred to in this bill.

I make the point that if that indexing is applied—compounding it as called for—the result at the end of this parliament would be higher salaries and allowances than would have been the case under the old bill. But even if that were not true, it is an alternative scheme; it is something totally different from what was recommended in the Governor General's message to the House and I submit that therefore any such amendment without the Governor General's approval is out of order.

The other point I wish to make is that the Governor General's recommendation did propose an escalation or indexing formula to apply in the thirty-first and subsequent parliaments. But the committee studying the bill discarded that precise formula in its entirety and instead brought in a proposal that after each election, the next one and all the rest of them, a commission should be established to review the rate of indexing or the rate of escalation, and if that commission recommended to the government that the rate of indexing be increased, the government would have the authority to put that into effect by order in council.

At some stage in the proceedings we shall be dealing with that in terms of substance and I will have some strong things to say about it, but at the moment I am trying to confine myself to procedure. I submit—and there is no doubt in my mind about the correctness of what I am saying—that there was nothing in the Governor General's recommendation attached to the original bill that would permit the House to delegate that kind of authority to be exercised by the cabinet by order in council. I think, also, that there is some question about the setting up of a commission. Every time anyone else proposes a commission, the question of what it would cost comes up. I think it is pretty generally established that to appoint a commission requires the approval of the Governor General.

In my view, the committee thus erred on three counts. In the first place, it provided for an escalation formula in the thirtieth parliament, which is not covered by the Governor General's recommendation; in the second place, it provided for the appointment of commissions in future parliaments, which is not covered in the Governor General's recommendation; and in the third place, it provided for an indexing formula in the thirty-first and succeeding parliaments, which was not forecast in any form in the Governor General's recommendation. Therefore, I contend that the committee gravely and seriously exceeded its authority by bringing in these three amendments to the bill. The other amendments that have been put in the bill, whether or not I agree with them, cannot be attacked procedurally, but I submit that these three are grossly out of order and if they were allowed the whole financial procedure of the House of Commons would be thrown into a tailspin.

I said earlier that when I looked at the order paper this morning I realized that I did not have to speak at length on that phase of the matter. Perhaps I did not need to speak as long as I have, because the motion that has been put down by the President of the Privy Council seeks to cover these three points, and the motion has attached to it a new recommendation from the Governor General. That, among other things, is an admission that the three amendments of the committee to which I referred were not correctly made since the committee did not have the power to make them.

But that leads us to the question as to whether it is now appropriate, the committee having broken the rules, for the government simply to correct all of that by putting down a motion which asks that the House, at the report stage, delete the whole clause 2 of the bill, the one where all the mistakes are, and then put it back in again almost in the same words but with the Governor General's recommendation attached thereto. It may seem a bit clever to do it that way; it may seem to cover the point by now producing the Governor General's recommendation—

An hon. Member: Why didn't you put in amendments yourself?

Mr. Broadbent: We did.

An hon. Member: If the bill is no good, then why did you put in amendments to it?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The hon. member across the way is asking why we have put in amendments. One does not yet know what the ruling of the Chair will be, and if the amendments brought in by the committee are allowed then we will claim the right to try to amend them. If those amendments are ruled out, then of course our amendments are not necessary.

Mr. Broadbent: Even a Liberal can understand that.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): But the point which must trouble Your Honour—and I suspect that Your Honour has given it much thought, especially in the last 24 hours; it is a new point compared with one which was obvious a week ago—is whether it is now appropriate to correct that mistake simply by allowing the President of the Privy Council to move the motion which is on the order paper today in his name.

I submit that if what the committee did was wrong, the Chair will have to tell the committee that it will have to do the job over again and do it correctly. In other words, in my view the bill should be sent back to committee and the committee should be told that the amendments it made to clause 2 are inappropriate; that it can send the bill back again with the amendments to the other clauses and with the recommendation, if it wishes, that the bill be amended at the report stage along the lines of what is in clause 2. But I submit that it would make a mockery of our procedure if it were possible for a committee to make all those mistakes and then for them simply to be corrected on the floor of the House by the introduction of a motion which says: Take out all that is wrong and put it back in again in the same words, but attach to it a royal recommendation.

I hope some of my friends, like the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), who have been pretty good watchdogs in terms of Governor General's recommendations, and so on, will for the moment realize that we are not debating the substance of the bill; we are debating the procedure. I hope they will agree with me that if this practice is allowed, from here on when money bills go to committees, any private member in such a committee can move an amendment which involves the expenditure of money and no chairman will be able to stop him.

An hon. Member: Provided the Governor General agrees.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): There is nothing in the report of the committee to this House which says that the committee submits these amendments provided the Governor General agrees. The report of the committee is simply the report of a bill, and the chairman of that committee raised no procedural objection to these amendments; therefore I say that chairmen of committees in the future will not be able to register procedural objections to money amendments to money bills.

There is going to be a bill amending the Old Age Security Act soon to be brought in by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde). I have in mind the one which will provide pensions to spouses between 60 and 65 where the other spouse is over 65. In that committee I will be able to move that the pension be increased and that it be paid to all persons 60 years of age or over, and if the chairman tries to say that that is exceeding the Governor General's recommendation, I will be able to cite this bill, C-44, as an example. I will say that surely I have the right to make my motion and have the bill reported, in the hope that the President of the Privy Council or someone, when we get back to the report stage, will bring down a recommendation of the Governor General.

I am an opposition member, I have been most of my life, and I may be in the opposition for quite a while yet—

An hon. Member: For the rest of your life also.

An hon. Member: Certainly in the opposition.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): —and we on the opposition side frequently feel frustrated by the requirement of the recommendation of the Governor General. I am sure that if anyone has done any procedural research in the last day or so, he has probably found occasions when I have tried to move amendments which involved the expenditure of money, only to be told that I could not do so because I could not obtain the recommendation of the Governor General.

One which comes to my mind in particular was in 1966 when we were debating the Medical Care Act. The present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) at that time was the minister of national health and welfare. We pleaded with the minister to amend that act to make it possible for medicare to extend to optometrists and other paramedical groups. At first the minister said no. I moved an amendment for that extension but was told it could not be done because I could not produce the recommendation of the Governor General. So we pleaded with the minister to do it. The minister finally agreed, but I draw the attention of the Chair to the way with which it was dealt. Once the minister had agreed in committee of the whole that the act should be amended to provide for these paramedical services, under certain restrictions, the committee rose, reported progress, a new recommendation of the Governor General was presented to the Chair, the resolution attached to it was passed and we went back into committee and made the appropriate amendment.

But—and I say this to my hon. friend opposite—the order should be noted: we obtained the approval of the Governor General first, not afterwards. Once we establish a precedent that the recommendation of the Governor General can be obtained afterwards, we private members in this House are in for a field day: we can do it every time a money bill goes to a committee.

I also remind the Chair of the experience of this House when another important piece of legislation, the Canada Pension Plan Act, was dealt with in 1964 and 1965. I ask that it be studied in particular because I think it is a classic example of the right way to do things. In the special joint committee on that bill we found that there were a number of changes we wanted to make. Some of them were procedural and administrative. It was within our power to make them, we made them in committee and so reported the bill. But there were other changes we wanted to make which we and our joint chairmen knew we could not do because they involved the expenditure of money, so attached to the bill we sent back a report recommending that certain additional changes be made and the government brought in the appropriate recommendation of the Governor General and the appropriate legislation to make those changes.

I submit that that is the correct way, and that is what this committee should have done. I am not now saying whether I think it should have done it because I want the substance of the committee's proposal, for I do not, but I suggest that procedurally the committee should have confined itself, so far as the bill was concerned, to making those amendments it had the right to make, but that with respect to amendments it had no authority to make it should, instead, have made a recommendation to the House and to the government that those recommendations be made.

I submit that what is now called for is a ruling of this House that the steps should be retraced and that it should be done the right way. I am sure there will be hon. members who will ask what difference there is, and who will say that the end of that process will be just the same as if we today accept the motion of the President of the Privy Council; that we will send the bill back, we will get the same thing back and we will be right back where we were. But the point at issue is the financial procedures of this House, the question of the authority of the executive and the question of whether private members can make these changes.

Incidentally, just to make the record clear, most of the amendments made to this bill in committee were made in the name of the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Reid), who is a private member, but one very important one was made by the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. MacLean), a private member who sits on this side of the House and who has no authority to obtain a recommendation of the Governor General. He moved the amendment which calls for the government in future parliaments to have the authority to set up a commission and on the basis of that commission's report to increase the salaries of members of parliament by order in council without coming back to the House of Commons at all.

These things could have been the subject of a recommendation by the committee to the House, whereupon the government could do what the President of the Privy Council is now doing, but I submit very seriously that this procedure is one which does great havoc and great harm to our financial procedures.

Mr. Speaker, I realize that every member of this House knows, and a lot of people outside this House know, my feelings about the substance of this bill. I know my views are not popular with most members of the House, but that is not the issue. I hope some, like the hon. member for Edmonton West and the hon. member for Peace River who disagree with me thoroughly on the substance, will support me on the procedure, that if we let this go this way we will have done great damage to the whole arrangement.

I have one other point to make. I ask you to consider the unfairness of the position in which we are put by the motion of the President of the Privy Council. I ask you to consider what happens when that motion is voted on. I make the point that the result would be the same either way. If the vote for the motion carries, then the wording in the name of the President of the Privy Council becomes part of the bill. But if that motion is defeated, we are back to the wording that was put in there by the committee, which is really the same wording. The numbering is different and one little clause having to do with a minor matter is left out, but whichever way the vote goes, the result is the same. We have no opportunity on the motion of the President of the Privy Council to say that we do not want this arrangement either way.

Let me put that again, Mr. Speaker: if the House votes for the motion of the President of the Privy Council, then his motion becomes part of the bill. If the House votes against it, the result is that the words introduced by the President of the Privy Council do not go into the bill and, instead, the words that are already there, put in by the committee, stand. It is the same either way. I submit that for the House to be put in the position where, whether it votes yea or nay, the situation is the same is hardly giving the House an opportunity for decision.

I may have things to say on other points of order, Mr. Speaker. I shall certainly have something to say on substance, but the basic point I am making now is, as you surmised when you gave me the floor, that the House should not be proceeding with this bill today. Let me say this: if Your Honour decides there is nothing wrong with the bill, that the committee was in order, then we can proceed—but even the President of the Privy Council admits there is something wrong, by his motion—but if it is found that the bill is defective, then it should not be before us; it should be sent back. To proceed with this bill at this time and to try to correct it, instead of going back and redoing what was wrong, would put the procedures of this House of Commons in serious jeopardy.

I hope you will find, therefore, that the bill that is before us is defective and cannot be considered at this report stage. If someone tries to argue that we are not amending the wording that was put in by the committee, we are really amending the wording that was put there in the first place, then we are in trouble—lines that are referred to in the amendment, and all that sort of thing: we are in real difficulty. I submit, despite the anxiety of many members of the House to get on with the legislation, despite the sensitive nature of the whole thing, that it ought to be done in the right way. This is the last piece of legislation about which parliament should cut any corners. I therefore hope it will be sent back to committee.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I submit that you should authorize the House to consider the bill that is before us, and particularly the amendments that have been put down. It is my submission that the question of whether the bill is in order cannot be decided at this juncture because there are, in fact, six notices of amendments. This indicates that the House will eventually be asked to concur in and pass the bill, maybe in a different form.

I followed with great interest the arguments of the House leader of the New Democratic Party and reviewed them in my mind. It is a difficult point, but I think the simple question that we have to consider now is whether we should proceed with consideration of the motions to amend the bill. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) makes the point that if we proceed with this bill it will be possible for members to amend bills, and somehow in this way to increase their opportunities of having the amendments approved even though they exceed the recommendation of the Governor General. It seems to me that if at any stage a committee were to exceed, inadvertently—and I think that may be the case in the instance before us—the royal recommendation, of course when the bill came before the House in its amended form it would be for Mr. Speaker to decide whether the bill did exceed the authority that had been granted for expenditure under the royal recommendation.

In this connection, on the point of whether the bill should be resubmitted I would draw Your Honour's attention to a ruling of Mr. Speaker Lamoureux, to be found at pages 499 and 500 of the House of Commons Journals for July 20, 1973, where he said:

> There is no recent precedent that I know of even with the assistance of the advisers to the Chair at the Table, to indicate that the Chair could take this rather bold step of refusing, on behalf of the House, to accept a bill as amended in committee. I think that committees, to some extent, have to accept some responsibility, and return to the House bills which contain amendments which are procedurally correct.
> If the Chair were to take the initiative and suggest that some of the amendments, particularly an amendment or amendments which in effect amend the Parole Act, cannot be accepted, I would be placing the Chair, and the committees, and the House, in the position that in every instance where a bill returns from a committee there might be an appeal from rulings of committee chairmen, to the effect that the ruling of a chairman on a procedural point, accepting or refusing an amendment, should be reviewed. I wonder whether this is the position in which hon. members would want to place the Chair. It would be a very difficult position. Maybe we should give the matter some thought.
> If this bill were not a bill which, as I understand it, is not a government bill—a bill on which there is a cross-section of views on both sides of the House—there might be a tendency on the part of the Chair to take bolder action, refuse to accept the bill, and suggest that some of the amendments proposed should not be received. But in view of the character of the bill, in view of the nature of the discussion which has taken place, both in committee and in the House on second reading, I would very much hesitate to rule at this point that this bill should not be accepted, and that the many hours, days, and perhaps weeks of work spent by the committee in studying this matter, preparing amendments, and referring the bill to the House for third reading should be discounted. This is why at this point I would be prepared, on behalf of hon. members, to say that what we have before us is a bill with these amendments, and I will try to make my rulings on the motions now before us on the basis of the bill that we now have before us from the committee.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has pointed to motion No. 4 that is on the order paper in my name, and he argues that I have validated his case that the committee has in fact exceeded the royal recommendation. I do not know in fact whether the committee did exceed the royal recommendation. It is rather like the amendments that the hon. member and his colleagues have put down to amend this bill. He is not quite sure how Your Honour will rule, so he has put down amendments which would be operative if in fact Your Honour rules that we can proceed. That was the point of motion No. 4 that I put down, that one ought to proceed with an abundance of caution. It was on that basis I put forward my amendments and the accompanying royal recommendation.

I would point out that this amendment does more than change the order of the clauses. It introduces an amendment of very substantial importance, namely, the indexing of salaries and allowances of officials of this House, ministers, and so on. It would be quite in order, I submit, for Your Honour to permit the House to proceed with the amendments that are now before you. Accepting the case put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, if the bill as it emerges after these amendments is found to exceed the royal recommendation, then Your Honour would be in a position to say that we cannot proceed with the bill. That is not now the position, Mr. Speaker. In my submission we should proceed with the amendments and then Your Honour can consider whether the bill is in order. That cannot be decided at this juncture but only after we have dealt with the amendments.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) on the brilliant and eloquent argument that he has put before this House. I am sure Your Honour has given it great credence. I am deeply sorry I am unable to accept the validity of his argument. He and I have fought many valiant battles together and we will probably fight some on the same side in the future. In this case, however, I am unable to follow him.

I am reinforced in my attitude toward the hon. member's position because of the way he conducted his case. The hon. member started off by telling the House he did not think he had to argue at any great length the question as to the fact the committee had exceeded its authority because the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp), by bringing in the amendments in his name which appear on the order paper, has virtually admitted that. Having made that statement, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre proceeded to devote a large part of his case to demolishing the validity of what the committee had done. After saying he did not need to do that, he spent a great deal of time on the issue. There is an old legal phrase which Your Honour may remember: when you are weak on the law, you raise hell about the facts.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: That is what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre did. Realizing that he did not have a very good case on the law, he really rode into the facts about what the committee had done. Maybe it was a Freudian slip, but in asking that things be done to rectify the situation he appealed for a ruling of the House. I hope Your Honour will accept the position we will take, and that it will be left to the House to come to a decision on these matters later.

Let me get to the facts. First, there is a rule—if there isn't one, there should be—that those who live by the rule book should perish by it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: I am sorry if I am a little slow: I am unaccustomed to getting applause from both sides of the House. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre should have taken the position he has today last Friday when the report was received. It would be my submission, if I were going to rely purely on the technical aspects of this important issue, that once the report of the committee has been received, the House is seized of jurisdiction. What is now left to decide in due course is whether the House should divide on the motion to concur in the report—which, of course, is something we come to after we dispose of the amendments.

I also bring to Your Honour's attention and the attention of the House that there is another very interesting legal phrase, namely, that you could turn to on the question of the jurisdiction. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre—he made a special plea in this regard by putting down his amendments and in then referring to wording in the reprinted bill which is before the House—obviously attorned turned to the jurisdiction and accepted the fact that this report is properly before the House. However, I have other, more valid arguments to rely on than this.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I hope so.

Mr. Baldwin: We, in this party, prefer to do more than play around with technicalities: we like to go to the substance. I suggest there is a very stringent rule, unless the Chair is satisfied there are clear and major defects, that there is a presumption that the Chair should come down on the side of regularity. I have argued the same thing before on the question of amendments; this is not the first time I have put it forward.

The Chair has to have a discretion; that discretion should, as far as possible without doing violence to the rules of this House, come down on the side of allowing amendments to be put, debates to take place and members of this House to divide on issues in respect of which questions need to be put and decisions made. I suggest that is a valid point Your Honour should bear in mind should you approach this very difficult and novel—almost completely new—issue with some doubt in your mind. I ask Your Honour to exercise that principle, to come down on the side of regularity and permit the House to come to a decision. This is a salutary rule which should be observed more and more now that appeals from rulings of the Speaker have been abolished. I never objected to that. However, that being the case, there is an onus upon the Chair, where there is doubt, to come down on the side of regularity.

[Mr. Sharp.]

I was going to refer to the citation referred to by the President of the Privy Council—the ruling of Mr. Speaker Lamoureux on July 20, 1973, on the Criminal Code capital punishment bill. I would only add to the passage quoted by the President of the Privy Council these words of Mr. Speaker Lamoureux:

If this bill were not a bill which, as I understand it, is not a government bill—a bill on which there is a cross-section of views on both sides of the House—

I believe that was, in fact, a government bill but Mr. Speaker Lamoureux had in mind what is known as a free vote, with greater freedom than normally permitted.

Your Honour can take judicial note of the fact that when this bill was up for debate and the question was put on second reading, there was a division of opinion on both sides of the House. That requirement of Mr. Speaker Lamoureux has been met by the actual facts of this particular case.

● (1620)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The hon. member's arguments are getting weaker as he goes along.

Mr. Baldwin: My arguments would be stronger if the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre had given me something to aim at.

I wish to point out, also, that we are in a different position from some of the situations referred to by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. Before we adopted the report procedure, if there were amendments brought about in committee of the whole which exceeded the royal recommendation, and if by some chance they slipped past the vigilance of the Chair or of the officers at the table—something which does not happen very often but it happens occasionally—then the proper course to take during third reading was to refer the bill back to committee. I suggest, though, that a different situation prevails today because when the rules were changed and the report stage was introduced, a particular Standing Order was established, Standing Order 75, which states in paragraph (6):

When the recommendation of the Governor General is required in relation to any amendment to be proposed at the report stage of a bill, at least 24 hours written notice shall be given of the said recommendation and proposed amendment.

I suggest that when the House adopted the rule changes which put Standing Order 75 into effect, we had in mind a situation of this kind where at the report stage it might be essential for amendments to be discussed, either because of what had gone on in committee or because the government had concluded that because of what was said in the committee it was essential to bring about suitable changes at the report stage. Only the government can do this, of course, because only the government can bring down a recommendation from the Governor General.

It was this situation, or variations of it, which must have been contemplated at the time Standing Order 75 was brought into existence. Let us assume, for the purpose of argument—and I might find it difficult to argue to the contrary—that the committee exceeded its instructions. Let us assume that it did, and there was a failure to appeal to the Chairman as to the validity of any amendments which were offered. A report was presented to the House and was to be considered. In those conditions, I would suggest there is no better way in which to make use of Standing Order 75(6) than to bring back into the House, through a person authorized to do so, the amendment or amendments with suitable royal recommendations which would give effect to the conclusions of the committee.

It is possible, as was suggested, that the committee could have contented itself by passing the bill in its existing form and merely making recommendations as to changes. In light of a number of decisions by the Chair in the past, I think it is doubtful how far a committee could go along these lines. But surely there is no better evidence of the intentions of a committee than the amendments it proposes and embodies in a report to the House, even though its procedure might not have been proper. I therefore suggest, Mr. Speaker, that you should rely strongly upon the authority given in Standing Order 75(6).

Finally, I would say this: in our parliamentary system, a committee is a subordinate and junior section of the House. It has functions to perform as laid down in our Standing Orders. With respect to the consideration of legislation, a committee acts as a forum in which bills are considered clause by clause and before which witnesses are called when considered necessary; amendments are discussed and there is full opportunity to evaluate all the situations and conditions surrounding a particular piece of legislation. However, a committee remains perpetually subordinate to the House, and if a committee exceeds its authority the House always has the right to purge any defects or improprieties.

With all due respect to the argument advanced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, it would be monstrous if we could not make use of Standing Order 75(6) in order to reform a bill, with the proper royal recommendation, so as to correspond with the views of a committee but, rather, were obliged to send the bill back to the committee for the appropriate recommendation to be brought in by the government if it saw fit to do so. It would be the height of folly for the House to adopt the circuitous and unnecessary procedure which has been suggested.

If Standing Order 75 were not applicable, if we were faced with dealing with this matter in committee of the whole, it might well be that the proper motion would be one referring the bill back to committee with instructions to reform it in accordance with the royal recommendation. However, we have now permitted the intervention of a report stage at which there is an opportunity to change or correct what was done incorrectly in a committee—assuming anything had been done incorrectly.

I make this argument without in any way indicating the position to be taken by my party with regard to the various amendments which have been placed on the order paper by private members or on behalf of the government. We reserve the right to debate these matters and, possibly, to divide on them from time to time supposing the House finds itself in the position where it can engage in debate and divide on the issues. I strongly urge the Chair not to permit the House to be placed in the ridiculous position of having to take a circuitous route in order to do something which it has the power to do now under our Standing Orders.

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have two points to make. The first has to do with the quotation which was read by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) from the ruling made by Mr. Speaker Lamoureux as reported in the Journals for July 20, 1973, at pages 499 and 500. Mr. Speaker Lamoureux made it clear that he was giving a ruling in an exceptional case. He said:

> If this bill were not a bill . . . on which there is a cross-section of views on both sides of the House, there might be a tendency on the part of the Chair to take bolder action, refuse to accept the bill and suggest that some of the amendments proposed should not be received.

I do not want to go over the history of Bill C-44, but it was clear when the bill was first debated that it would be substantially amended in committee. This was understood by everybody in the House of Commons, although that understanding did not extend to the press gallery or to the editors of newspapers throughout the country. However, we understood it and I think most hon. members understood it. In other words, everybody knew at the beginning of the procedure that the bill would be substantially amended.

When we concluded second reading debate it was also understood that a great many details of the bill would be left for the committee to decide. There had not been complete agreement between the leadership on the government side and that on the opposition side, so it was known that it was an exceptional set of circumstances.

The first meeting of the standing committee took place on the evening of April 14. At that meeting the President of the Privy Council indicated the terms of the agreement that had been made between himself and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), but left it to the members of the committee to decide the course the bill should take. This was done in discussion and following that amendments were moved and the bill was revised as it was.

I want to point out that in keeping with the judgment that Your Honour's predecessor made on July 20, 1973, this bill has clearly been an exception to the normal processes by which we handle legislation. It has been more of a parliamentary bill than a government bill and the committee has been acting almost unanimously, with one exception, in order to accomplish the ends that are set out. That is my first point regarding the exceptional nature of this particular set of circumstances.

My second point concerns whether this discussion is in order at this time. What is before the House at this time is not the bill itself but the amendments to the bill. The only time that we can discuss the bill during report stage proceedings is after we have disposed of any amendments. It seems to me that the logical time for the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to raise his point of order is after the House has considered the amendments that are now before it at this report stage. As I say, it is only at the conclusion of the report stage that you, Mr. Speaker, can say what kind of bill we have.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

I think we must admit that it is possible for committees to overstep occasionally in regard to what they can do under our procedure; the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) pointed this out. However, having overstepped, there is a remedy in the House in terms of amendments at report stage. It seems to me that the only time the hon. member can discuss whether or not the bill is in order is at the point in time when the amendments are disposed of and Mr. Speaker asks the question: Shall the bill as reported carry? Or: Shall the bill as amended carry? That is the point when Your Honour must decide whether or not the bill is defective. Now is not the time to argue that point, since what is before the House is amendment No. 1, standing in the name of the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman).

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am, of course, fascinated by the number of interesting procedural arguments that have been raised, not the least of which are those by two opponents of the proponent of this point of order, who put forward the suggestion that the hon. member is out of order by raising his objection now. One has said that he ought to have done it when the report first came in, and the other has said that he ought not to do it until we get to the motion for concurrence. So there are certainly a number of interesting arguments which have to be sorted out in my mind.

Indeed, those who have said that we have been giving this matter very careful consideration are absolutely right. It would not be possible for me to do justice to this important point by giving a decision now, because it is fundamental not only to the nature of the recommendation and to the nature of the power of hon. members to move amendments in committee, but also to the very basic nature of the report stage which interposes itself in between and in fact has a very serious effect on a number, indeed almost all, of the precedents which have been cited, since those precedents were referable to a time when the report stage did not exist in the form it does now. In any event, I do not want to delay or hold up unduly the progress of this bill, but I hope hon. members will think it reasonable that I try to return at eight o'clock this evening and deliver my ruling.

Is there a disposition to proceed with private members' hour? Would that embarrass the proponents of the motion, or could the time be used in some other way?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave)—Public Service—Inquiry whether prosecution of illegal strikers will extend to union officials; the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt)—Administration of Justice—Possibility of amending section 613 of Criminal Code in view of decision in Morgentaler case—Possibility of pardon for Dr. Morgentaler; the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp)—Abortion—Request for clarification of government policy.

The House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business, as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, private bills, notices of motions.

Mr. McKinley: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the notice sent around concerning private members' hour today indicated that we would proceed with Bill C-217, standing in the name of the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am told the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) is on his way to the House. Is it agreed that the bills preceding this one on the order paper shall stand and retain their place?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Hon. members may wish to relax in the meantime, unless the parliamentary secretary has a point of interest to raise.

Mr. Reid: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have. I might take the opportunity to indicate to hon. members who receive this list which emanates from my office that it is not an official list. It is the result of work done in my office. We take each member with a bill or motion that is ready to come up, we go through the list, and we ask each one if he or she will take the next spot available. We take them all in strict rotation in the order they stand on the order paper. We take no responsibility for this list, Mr. Speaker; it is merely circulated for the use of members. I want to emphasize that it is not an official list but is totally unofficial, and we have been producing it at the request of hon. members.

I might say that I have written to Mr. Speaker to suggest that the list be printed perhaps each week as an addendum to the Monday order paper, as an easy means of informing members what business is to come during private members' hour. I hope that suggestion will be seriously considered by the Chair.

Mr. McKinley: Mr. Speaker, I thank the parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Reid) for that explanation. I would also bring to the attention of the Chair and hon. member that private members' hour generally starts at five o'clock, and it is not yet five o'clock.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to confirm what the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Reid) has said, namely, that we do these things by way of arrangement for general convenience, but that does not rule out the possibility of following the list as it is on the order paper.

When I got to my feet I was going to express the hope that we might at least do the report stage of Bill C-208, since there is no debate on it in any case, and that would bring it up to third reading. I see that the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) has come in in the meantime. Even so, I wonder if there would not be agreement to deal with Bill C-208 at the report stage. There are no amendments to it, so there is no debate. I would accept my hon. friend's suggestion that third reading stand over to another time. I think Your Honour will find that there is consent to do that. Perhaps the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) will move the motion, and I would second it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. As far as the Chair is concerned, there is no objection; but if I heard correctly, the House had already agreed to proceed with Bill C-217 in the name of the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis). That hon. member has arrived. There has been no indication, other than the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the nod by the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan), to indicate that there has been general agreement to proceed will Bill C-208. Is there agreement in respect of the suggestion by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that we immediately proceed with the consideration of report stage of Bill C-208 and then proceed to the consideration of Bill C-217?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before I put the motion on the report stage of Bill C-208 I give notice that private members' hour will end at a quarter to six, which will give a full hour for debate.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

HOLIDAYS ACT

ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL HERITAGE DAY

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour) moved that Bill C-208, respecting Heritage Day (title amended to read an Act respecting National Heritage Day), as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Next sitting of the House.

Gasoline Labelling

NATIONAL TRADE MARK AND TRUE LABELLING ACT

AMENDMENT TO REQUIRE OCTANE RATING OF GASOLINE TO BE DISPLAYED AT PLACES OF SALE

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West) moved that Bill C-217, to amend the National Trade Mark and True Labelling Act (octane rating of gasoline), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the bill that stands in my name today was presented at a previous parliament, debated at some length and suffered the usual fate, in some respects, of private members' bills. On that occasion, however, the hon. members who spoke at length until six o'clock were in the opposition benches, and I should simply like to bring to their attention that it was not members on this side of the House who prolonged the debate.

The purpose of my bill is very straightforward: it would provide that the consumer, the purchaser of gasoline would have the right to know what he or she was buying when purchasing gasoline to put into a private automobile or for any other purpose. At the present time a number of companies simply display the indication of high test or low test without giving an indication to the purchaser as to the octane rating. My bill would provide that a technical scale be developed by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and according to this scale there would be the requirement on every vendor to exhibit conspicuously, in a public place, the octane rating.

I have observed on a number of occasions that there is a great variation in the quality of gas that is rated as high test. Since the time of introducing my bill there have been two developments which may have influenced the enthusiasm in certain quarters for this principle. The first is the recognition by a number of vendors that it is only fair and proper that the consumer be given a choice, and in many cases when the purchaser goes into the gas station to purchase a tank of gas he will see exactly what the octane rating is and a number of blends are offered. I think this is highly commendable.

The second development, and a more recent one since the energy crisis, is the emphasis on more and more lower octane ratings; many of the new engines in cars that are sold today do not require premium gas. It may well be that fuels sold in the near future will require a very minimum octane rating, particularly if it is possible to use unleaded gasoline. This may indeed mean that at some point in the future the purpose of my bill will no longer be required. As long as there are cars on the road that require higher octane gasoline, and as long as there are vendors who have two grades or more which they simply describe in general terms, without giving any technical description of the rating of the product they are selling, I think there is the simple and basic requirement that my bill is designed to meet. The consumer has the right to know what he or she is buying, and the right to know the kind of gasoline they are getting when they spend their money.

I hope this bill will commend itself to hon. members of the House. I see fewer members opposite today than on the day in 1970 when I first presented this bill, and I am hopeful that it will pass.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I understand and sympathize a great deal with the intent put forward by the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) in Bill C-217. However, as the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, I must say I have some reservations in connection with it.

One thing I think we always have to be concerned about is whether the action we would take in our department in fact would be productive in terms of benefit to the consumer, or whether we would in fact be placing a burden on the manufacturers and producers and, indeed, the government itself that would not be worth the cost involved and perhaps could even impose burdens on those in the industry which would have to be passed on to the consumer in terms of higher prices.

We all know that the principle of disclosure to the consumer is a very important principle, and all the information we can give the consumer is very valuable provided, of course, we do not—as I pointed out a moment ago—impose burdens through disclosure that really is tokenism and does not serve the consumer's interests in the long run.

In connection, specifically, with additional information on the quality of gasoline purchased, particularly with the increased interest in petroleum products over the last year in terms of cost, we have to be extremely careful. Recent legislation by some of the provinces is aimed at making mandatory the disclosure of information to help the consumer make rational decisions in the marketplace. We intend to continue in that direction.

The proposal of the hon. member for Ottawa West that octane ratings be disclosed in accordance with standards to be prescribed by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is a very complex one, requiring very careful analysis to confirm that the information would be meaningful, that the costs of setting standards and monitoring observances would be reasonable and that the legislative jurisdiction lies with the federal level of government. Some provinces have related gasoline tax legislation, although the only two which have experimented with requiring the disclosure of octane ratings, New Brunswick and Quebec, have now dropped that particular requirement. Only Nova Scotia has a disclosure requirement at the moment. Rather than using octane rating as proposed in this bill, that province calls for the display of the grade of the gasoline on the pump, in three categories—premium, regular, and unleaded.

Federal-provincial responsibility concerning gasoline regulations remains unclear. A positive determination of these responsibilities should first be made before proceeding with this kind of bill as a federal statute. To permit consumers to utilize octane rating as a basis of comparison between brands, and so on, automobile manufacturers would need to specify the precise rating or range of octane ratings suitable for the optimum operation of each motor vehicle. Currently, most manufacturers indicate the brand categories of premium, regular, and non-leaded. While precise octane numbers could be useful to some degree, such specifications would necessarily apply to only new engines.

Unfortunately, such factors as accumulated mileage, altitude, general operating conditions, and so on, can modify octane requirements in a given engine substantially, thus rendering original specifications of little use. Should octane declarations be required, a laboratory analysis program of gasoline samples would be necessary to determine compliance levels and provide the basis of enforcement action. We are advised that there are presently two government agencies in Canada involved in routine octane testing of gasoline, the quality engineering test establishment of the Department of National Defence and the Research Council of Alberta. Those are the only two which have this capacity.

Consequently, unless sampling programs are very restricted or private, or petroleum industry laboratory facilities are enlisted, government-sponsored analytical capabilities appear to be very seriously limited. This argument is meaningful, but it would not be if the cost benefit to the consumer were not worth while. I think the fundamental point is whether, in fact, the benefits would be worth the effort involved and would be beneficial to the individual consumer. Our investigations suggest that the approximate cost of laboratory octane analysis on a per sample basis would be in the range of $70 and requires, apart from preliminary time required for preparation of test equipment involving special internal combustion engines, about one man-hour per sample. It is apparent that the cost of an extensive compliance testing program involving some 19,000 retail gasoline outlets in Canada would be very high. Even the testing of only 10,000 samples on an annual basis would run in excess of $700,000.

In Canada, the Research Council of Alberta co-ordinates the operation of what is known as the Canadian Co-operative Fuel Exchange. This 35-member exchange is comprised of oil refining companies and provincial and federal research agencies. Each month, a different oil company circulates two samples of its production, normally a motor fuel and some other fuel product, to each of the other 34-member agencies for analysis. In the case of gasoline, octane rating and a number of other, qualitative tests are carried out. Results are reported and circulated to all members to serve as a means of industry-operated quality control.

Due to lack of knowledge on the part of the average consumer concerning the basic meaning of octane number, declaration of these numbers at retail outlets would appear to be of limited benefit to consumers without an extensive educational or explanatory program. The cost to all oil companies of providing octane rating declarations at all retail outlets may well be passed on to consumers in the form of increased gasoline prices.

We have not received any real indication of consumer desire for more information concerning gasoline quality, nor have we received any complaints which would serve to suggest that there may be a need for consumer protection in this area. In view of the current debate and continuing investigations respecting environmental pollution problems, and the ongoing modifications by automotive manufacturers to the automobile engine, it is questioned whether federal regulations should be imposed at this time to require a declaration which may be subject to considerable change in the near future.

In the United States, the American Society for the Testing of Materials has recently established a system which employs the numbers one through six declared on gasoline pumps to denote the different grades of gasoline offered for retail sale. The grades are based on the minimum octane rating specifications which have been established in the six categories as lowest grade, unleaded grade, standard grade—which is regular grade—intermediate grade, premium grade and super premium grade.

In accordance with this system now used by several states, the owner's manual for some United States models of 1975 cars now specifies the correct grade number or numbers to be used in each vehicle. The co-ordinating research council in the United States, sponsored jointly by the American Petroleum Institute and the Society of Automotive Engineers, conducts a comprehensive series of tests and user surveys on each year's new car models under a wide range of operating conditions across the United States to determine actual gasoline octane requirements. Information gathered indicates which rating levels are preferred by users for the various types of vehicle and operating conditions and the relative volumes sold.

The data is then made available to oil companies to permit them to produce the ratings and volumes necessary to effectively meet market demands. On balance, because of the degree of self-regulation existing within the industry, and because of the likely costs of monitoring any mandatory disclosure requirements, it would be preferable not to proceed with Bill C-217 without a very thorough examination of the need for such legislation in light of other priorities in the consumer protection field.

I wish to say, Madam Speaker, that in the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs we do not look lightly at this bill and its proposal. We believe that anything that can be done to provide more information to consumers at a cost which they can afford and which will not increase the basic cost of the commodity itself is very worth while. At the same time, however, we must recognize a very simple principle. I think it could be best enunciated by quoting G. K. Chesterton, who one time said that every vice is a virtue gone mad. What he meant by that was that it is quite all right to have a good, valid program or plan; but if you apply it without discrimination and draw it through to its appropriate conclusion, you will end up with something that is counter-productive. In this case, that is very apropos to our particular department.

For example, you see concern expressed by consumers, and even by members of the House about some regulations, for instance, in connection with car seats, saying that we should provide more protection for babies in cars. However, we must watch that we do not end up with such high standards for that kind of thing that the cost of a child's car seat will be $100, or even more, in order to provide the kind of protection that we would all like our children to have. We would then find out that we had a perfectly safe car seat but that no one, or very few people, could afford to buy it.

We must always have a trade-off; we must look at the consumer interest in the light of reality. In this particular case we feel that there are other areas of activity that are of greater priority to consumers than the one with which we are dealing tonight. So I suggest that although the bill is founded on a perfectly valid observation and a real genuine concern for adequate disclosure to consumers, there is insufficient information available to our department to indicate that it is of such a great priority that it should be put ahead of other things. It must be pointed out that there is a considerable dearth of real information and research on the subject, and there is also a considerable question as to the constitutional jurisdiction in respect of this type of regulation.

Mr. A. C. Abbott (Mississauga): Madam Speaker, I rise on Bill C-217 presented by the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis), recognizing, as did the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik), that the bill is inspired by the highest possible motive to protect motorists from exploitation by gasoline companies which are misleading their customers, or by automobile gasoline dealers who are not living up to the standards laid down by the gasoline companies.

Unlike the hon. member for Ontario I am not an expert on the subject of octane content and I was struck, as was everyone, by the hon. member's remarkable grasp of the problems, and the way he illustrated to us in such fulsome detail the number of dealers and the cost for analysing each and every sample of gasoline. It was a remarkable performance. His ability to link the question of the octane of fuel with quotations from G. K. Chesterton was indeed to be admired. It was a high octane performance.

However, we must be struck by the fact that, desirable as certain protective devices may be, the price we pay exceeds the protection afforded. I notice that the hon. member for Ottawa West derived great comfort and assurance as he motored through New Brunswick in 1970, savouring each opportunity when he filled his car with gasoline from seeing the information as to the octane content of the gas legibly displayed. Nonetheless, I am advised, partly by the hon. member for Ontario who supplied me with some information from his enormous sources, that in 1966 the requirement in New Brunswick for declaring the octane rating was deleted. The only assumption then is that the gasoline dealers in New Brunswick who ignored the fact that the requirement of the law was no longer in effect continued to provide visitors, such as the hon. member for Ottawa West, with the information which he so greatly desired.

The important thing in considering this measure is not simply the cost ultimately to be borne by the consumer but the value of such information. Recently we have had a tremendous variety of government regulations and requirements for industry and business to provide the consumer with better information. This in itself is a desirable thing, but I would like to cite an example which is perhaps analogous to the suggestion made today by the hon. member, namely, that the Textile Labelling Act, which is an act of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, required that every garment made in Canada should carry a description of its fibre content—what percentage of cotton, polyester, or other fibre it contains, in both official languages. On the face of it this is a very necessary piece of information, but the fact remains that for the average Canadian purchaser this sort of information is almost worthless without information being provided on how the garment should be cleaned or laundered in order for the best use to be made of the particular fabric, particularly for reasons of durability.

The departmental officials decided, in their great wisdom, to lift almost the whole requirement from U.S. regulations, except that they made a single amendment. They pointed out that rather than simply having the vendor of textile fabrics provide a description of the fibres contained in a particular garment, the requirement would be that the garment survive ten washings, which meant that a permanent label had to be attached to it with what, to the average consumer, was almost irrelevant information, whereas the department failed to provide consumers with care labelling, which is what they really need.

I hope, Madam Speaker, you will not think I wandered too far from the subject but I will return to the matter before us when I suggest that the same problem exists in requiring an octane rating to be displayed on the gasoline pump. The average motorist does not know the first thing about octane and he has no desire to know what it means. I think that almost certainly he would prefer the kind of standard set out in the United States, that is, octane rating specifications which simply describe a list of grades which he can select and which are recommended in the manual appropriate to his particular car. This is a far better method because of the technical problems that occur in making a simple declaration as to the octane rating, particularly when you consider that a certain car may be eight years old and have 150,000 miles on it, and it serves no purpose whatever for the owner of the car to expect the same performance from that car when he fills it with a certain high octane gasoline as he would from another car.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): May I ask the hon. member a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Would the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Abbott) permit a question?

Mr. Abbott: Yes, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Francis: The hon. member just said that this is of no value to the consumer. Is it not conceivable that the owner of a car might not be able to observe the performance of that car with variations in altitude or in temperature, and purchase an appropriate octane rating of gasoline? Is this not quite a reasonable thing for owners of cars to do?

Mr. Abbott: Madam Speaker, I think that what the hon. member is asking is that the information be displayed by a gasoline company, whether it be in numbers, which are incomprehensible, or in words with which the motorist can identify. I suggest that this information in numbers is obscure and that it should be stated in words that this is premium gasoline, gasoline of second grade, or whatever, so that the motorist knows what he is buying. If a No. 3 gas is provided to him when he thought he was buying a No. 1 premium grade, he can then utilize the misleading advertising provisions in the present Combines Investigation Act.

An hon. member handed me a note asking if I could relate the problems disclosed by this bill and the points I have raised about textile labelling to his concern about the purity of peanut butter. I see that the hon. member has left the chamber for some important business, so I will not comment on what may have been a frivolous suggestion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He has probably gone for a sandwich.

Mr. Abbott: Perhaps he has gone for a sandwich. It would certainly be unfair and inappropriate for me to cast away lightly the serious measure being recommended. I am not endeavouring simply to talk this matter out. Like many well-intended measures which have already become law, in some cases I suggest that as consumers we pay a very high price for very little protection, and I think this is an outstanding example of that kind of inappropriate legislation.

Mr. Alan Martin (Scarborough West): Madam Speaker, in joining this debate I notice that almost the same bill was debated in the twenty-eighth parliament, some four and a half years ago. From reviewing the debates at that time it seems to me that there was a good deal of sympathy for the concept advanced by the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis), that of ensuring that consumers will not be misled at any time by marketing devices.

I would be most anxious to support this bill and see it through the House if I felt for one moment that the consuming public, by the absence of this kind of legislation, would be subject to misleading information which could in fact cost more money by virtue of damaging automobiles, but I do not really think that is the case. I do not think people are being misled because a certain octane number does not appear on gasoline pumps. I am more concerned when I go to a service station wishing to have repair work done on my car, and there is no indication as to the quality of the mechanical work which one can expect from that particular place. I think that this reality is even more serious.

There has been a good deal of literature in the newspapers in recent months and years in connection with so-called rip-offs which take place in various garages and service enterprises dealing with repairs to automobiles. It concerns me that there is no protection for the consumer—such as that which the hon. member is seeking in the area of gasoline, which I do not think is warranted—who drives into one of these repair locations and has no reasonable assurance, in either his own personal experience or by word of mouth, that the kind of repair work he can anticipate for his dollar will be fair and reasonable.

In the case of gasoline it seems to me that the average consumer looks upon the matter very much as one who goes into a new municipality and has his first glass of water. I think it is assumed that the standard of the water in that municipality is a standard satisfactory to the consuming public, and that the standard set by that particular municipality, area or county is up to the standard one might anticipate in other parts of the country. One would not expect to see something written on the tap. One would not expect in a restaurant to have something written on his glass to the effect that the quality of the water was indeed one up to normal, acceptable standards. I think that this is what we have been led to believe in terms of obtaining gas from the average retail outlet.

I sympathize with the hon. member for Ottawa West, and I would be concerned if this could be proven to be the case. If there were a risk of having gasoline put into our cars which would be injurious to motors, then we would have a problem requiring legislation. However, I do not think that this case has been made, and I do not think the hon. member for Ottawa West attempts to make this case.

There is an interesting aspect, however, to which I would like to refer. For many years as an automobile driver I had a real fear of going to retail outlets which were not outlets of the major oil companies. My fear was that the gasoline from one of these outlets would be inferior to gasoline from major oil company outlets. I carried on with this assumption until a neighbour of mine, who happened to be a proprietor of one of these outlets, when I put these concerns to him, said that my fears were shared by a great many automobile drivers, but that they were completely invalid. He proceeded to explain the reason for this. The reason was that he was obtaining his gasoline from exactly the same warehouses as other retail outlets were obtaining their supplies.

Simply because he owned his own trucks and did his own hauling, he was able to obtain his gasoline at a cheaper price and could offer it to the public at a cut rate, which in some cases was as much as ten cents less than the rate charged by the major retail outlets. I have driven some 150,000 miles since that time, and I use those cheaper stations whenever I can in order to save myself that amount of money.

The question is whether the the consuming public has this fear. I think it is an interesting case of protection in reverse. It is a case where, either intentionally or unintentionally, the public has been forewarned through advertising that, in effect, they are not safe unless they go to one of the outlets operated by one of the major oil companies. This is an invalid concern which I do not like the public to have, because the price is cheaper elsewhere. In the case at hand I feel that unless we notice or are advised that gasoline is being sold at retail outlets which is of inferior quality, and when it is marked regular, premium or no lead, does not meet the standard indicated, it seems to me that bringing in special legislation to enforce costly measurements of octane ratings, stampings on pumps and inspections by provincial and federal governments, would be an unwarranted cost which at this time would do no particular service to the consuming public.

There are probably other aspects of this bill to be discussed. If the hon. member for Ottawa West were convinced that there was no possibility of receiving an inferior product which could damage an automobile, I wonder whether he might not be content to let things stand as they are now.

• (1720)

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, the weight of the attack being levelled against my hon. friend by his friends, the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik), the hon. member for Mississauga

(Mr. Abbott) and the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Martin), makes me think that he may have something.

The argument that the bill does not go far enough, that there are other ways in which consumers must also be protected, is surely not an argument against taking this step. It seems to me that the least this House should do is to let this bill go to committee where all the points that have been raised today could be examined very carefully. I urge that the Liberal side not talk out this bill sponsored by a Liberal member.

Mr. Serge Joyal (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to make my contribution to the debate which raises a problem that concerns all members of this House even if since the beginning of the debate, government members have been much more eloquent than members opposite.

The first point which I want to make, Madam Speaker, is that the interventions of this government in the publicity field and in the disclosure of information for the benefit of consumers have altered during the past few years. Indeed, if I am not mistaken, the measures more widely discussed among the public have been those meant to include labels and pertinent information in both official languages. It will be remembered that lengthy and acrimonious debates were then held to determine the importance which should be given to the second language when products were sold in a region rather than another.

In spite of everything, the government was convinced that such information was necessary, and the act and regulations which were passed to force producers into labelling their goods in both official languages have proved beneficial for Canada as a whole.

Madam Speaker, there are several kinds of publicity, just as there are several ways of giving the consumer information that is both useful and necessary in his decision to purchase a product. There is obviously what is known as misleading advertising. Such advertising, Madam Speaker, is intended essentially to warp the judgment the consumer must make on an article before he purchases it. There is no need to give any example of those practices. I believe the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission takes legal action every day, that every day it calls producers before it to state clearly what their objectives are with regard to the advertising for this or that product. Madam Speaker, no party in this House, I am sure, would prevent the government from regulating and forbidding that kind of publicity. That is not the purpose of the bill introduced today by the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis).

But there is another kind of publicity, Madam Speaker, which is called dangerous, in that it incites the consumer to buy a product whose use can be dangerous if it is not subject to rules or strict standards. One example that comes to everyone's mind and is most recent in that field is the publicity surrounding tobacco products and specially cigarettes. It has led producers and tobacco producers and distributors to include in their publicity a notice urging consumers to consider the fact that its dangers increase with usage. That publicity is therefore said to be dangerous.

There is another kind of publicity, Madam Speaker, the effects of which have been and continue to be of concern to this House, and that is excessive publicity. That publicity is in itself dangerous. However the message or the information repeated eventually conditions the consumer and makes him believe that if he does not purchase the particular item or does not use it in sufficient quantities, his comfort or well-being will be reduced.

I already mentioned during a meeting of the parliamentary Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs which is now considering Bill C-2, that such advertising should be restricted by that bill. I have in mind particularly the commercials for a provincial lottery which eventually lead the consumer or buyer of a ticket to believe that some day he will win. Of course, if you repeat the message all day long, the consumer will believe that after all if he does not buy a ticket he will never become a millionnaire or become wealthy in a jiffy. I believe in that respect Bill C-2 as it now stands should regulate that form of advertising which in my opinion has an unfortunate impact on a more and more frantic society which aims at consuming more and more new products everyday.

That is not the type of excessive advertising the hon. member from Ottawa West wants to draw our attention to. The kind of advertising he would like the House to legislate upon aims at providing consumers with necessary information so that he can make the best decisions when he buys gasoline. I believe, Madam Speaker, that the bill he wants us to pass adds a new dimension to the government's responsibilities with respect to advertising. In fact, it aims at having the government wonder if they should provide consumers with the information required for a wise decision, whatever the cost of displaying that information, or whatever the cost of providing consumers with that kind of information.

I believe, Madam Speaker, that we shall more and more have to wonder about the social role of advertising. Personally, when I am watching TV or listening to the radio, and I hear commercials for certain types of products, I can never be totally satisfied with the fact that, for instance, a banana retailer or any canned product retailer is allowed to advertise his products and that nobody at the same time wonders whether part of the money spent to promote sales of the particular item should not be used to inform consumers on the way he can dispose of waste resulting from the consumption of that product.

For example, if we allow canned food distributors to advertise, I do not see why, on the 60 or 30 or single minute of broadcasting this distributor is going to take, we would not require him to take 15 or 30 seconds to tell the consumer: Here is how you can dispose of the waste produced after consumption. This, Madam Speaker, is one of the aspects of advertising which will probably be the next stage we will have to reach if we really want to protect the consumer.

The information requested in the bill introduced by the hon. member for Ottawa West clearly involves outlandish costs to meet the objective. According to preliminary estimates, laboratory testing of the various samplings would involve an expenditure of more than $700,000. I believe this amount would be better invested in social advertising which I submit is now lacking in the information available to consumers.

I believe this debate gives us an opportunity to move one step further in discharging the government's responsibility to legislate on consumer information. Clearly, by preventing merchandizers to give necessary information, one would in the final analysis be guilty by omission. The preventing or non-requiring of certain merchandizers to give information allows them to profit by the consumers' ignorance, by selling products that are not those really needed to drive and properly use motor vehicles.

Our obligation to force merchandizers to completely inform must not in my view affect the social impact of advertising, which we will have to consider during the coming month, if our overall policy on or comprehensive approach to consumer protection is to reach its goals.

It must be emphasized that during the last few years, the government also acted to restrict media advertising time. This had to be done, because it was realized that merchandizers could literally submerge the consumers under a flow of information that was not necessarily useful to properly choose a product.

We have also witnessed the discussion centering on children advertising. This is another aspect of the social impact of advertising I was mentioning. I feel it is of paramount importance at this stage. It is actually towards the consumers who are the less protected and the less able to defend themselves that we must direct our attention, especially when we discover that, were we to agree to what the hon. member for Ottawa West is proposing, we would have a piece of legislation which would involve spending considerable sums of money that might not have the immediate results expected.

Some other hon. members who spoke before me have stressed the complexity of implementation of such a measure. They mentioned, among other things, that it was not obvious that it was constitutional, or within the authority of the federal government. They also emphasized the fact that it would be difficult to administer this legislation.

I think, Madam Speaker, that the opportunity afforded to us by the hon. member for Ottawa West to consider the publicity, the information which must be made available to the consumers is a responsibility which has been amply debated in recent years. The government has taken positive action that has really urged the distributors to act bearing in mind that great objective involving consumer protection and I am sure there is not one member present here who does not partake of that objective which the hon. member for Ottawa West is striving for.

For that reason, Madam Speaker, I would invite the hon. member for Ottawa West to participate in the discussions of the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs on Bill C-2 and particularly to read the briefs which have been presented and the evidence which has been brought by the 20 witnesses who appeared before the commission and who all discussed clause 36 of this bill, which contains, I think, the elements necessary to the solution of the problem he raised in his bill.

Gasoline Labelling

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Madam Speaker, the proposal which is now before us in connection with bill C-217, introduced by the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) springs of course from a good thought and a good intention, which is to better protect and inform the Canadian consumer, particularly as regards the gas he buys regularly.

However, I would like to make a comment. I have known my colleague from Ottawa West for many years, and having had the pleasure to sit with him in this House, I acknowledge him as an expert in parliamentary debate, especially during private members' hour.

During the many years we sat in this House we were witness to his many interventions and his participation during private members' hour.

Mr. Francis: I rise on a question of privilege, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The hon. member for Ottawa West.

Mr. Francis: Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I did not take part in private members' hours during this Parliament, in spite of everything I did during previous Parliaments.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The hon. member for Lac-Saint-Jean.

Mr. Lessard: Madam Speaker, does my hon. colleague mean to say that somewhow he changed or became wiser? I am not sure at all that this is the case. It is probably true that he was not as present in those debates during this Parliament but, as he suggests himself, during previous Parliaments we were witness to his many interventions—and this is not a reproach, far from it, since it gave an opportunity to communicate to his colleagues and myself his wide knowledge in certain areas, as indeed he did again today. He is concerned about the consumer and he would like the protection that was previously given by gasoline retailers by indicating the octane rating—a current practice a few years ago that was abandoned in most, not to say all, provinces—to be reinstated so the consumer who parks his car near a gas station can get the quality of fuel he wants for his vehicle.

His idea may be good. It remains to be seen whether from a practical point of view that situation which existed previously really protected the consumer. Personally I would rather be inclined to ask myself if the question should not be examined from another angle. Instead of asking gas companies, dealers and distributors to indicate at their pump stations the octane rating of the gas sold and the various varieties offered to consuming customers in general, I wonder if we should not standardize gas. It seems that private enterprise in its constant search for new products or rather new clients tends to diversify the variety of its products in the hopes of meeting a non-requirement in several cases and create an appetite, a need, through advertising, through the sale of new products which advertising says are always the best offered on the market.

I am not at all convinced that all that variety of products, and in this case the various kinds of gas offered, really have all the properties they want to sell us on. I have been driving a car for over 30 years and I used the various brands, varieties and components offered, and I must admit, Madam Speaker, that I did not see much difference. Of course, there is a difference between regular, yellow as it is commonly called, and red, or extra, but is there really the difference that is indicated? Does the difference that is indicated really exist in terms of the price differential?

Like most car drivers I made certain checks on my gas mileage when I filled up with extra at 6 cents, 8 cents, 9 cents and sometimes even 12 cents a gallon more than regular, yellow. Of course, I noticed I was getting better gas mileage with extra, but not in proportion to what I was paying. So, particularly with respect to engines used in automobiles, I say we should rather standardize the manufacturing of those engines, bearing in mind the fuel they must use.

All automobile and engine manufacturers should be required to provide engines which run for all practical purposes on the same type of gas. The result would be twofold. First of all, does it really matter whether it costs more to producers to build various types of engines or carburators, since it is much more the carburator than the engine which is involved in the choice of the proper grade of gas? Then, would it not be a saving or protection of some sort for the consumer if we forced manufacturers to build only one type of engine which would run on only one type of gas or fuel? Should we not compel gas producers to supply for automobile consumption only one sort of gas which would be the same?

The question I am asking therefore is this: Would not this gas be more economical if gas producers supplied only one type of gas with the same octane rating, whether super or regular, which would have only one name or grade? I believe that in this way, gas would be less expensive. The installations that refineries have to provide for these various grades would not be necessary and perhaps this could result in savings. I am not sure about this because I wonder if there really is a lot of difference between all these types of gasoline. I do not believe there is; the difference is much more significant in the publicity than in the real product.

On that point—and hon. members could recommend this to the government—we would have much more to gain in my opinion if products were standardized and varieties, names and attributes of products were restricted. We should aim at eliminating these things which only confuse the general consumer public. The poor consumer does not know what he buys and very few people know and distinguish among the various grades of gasoline. I do not want to suggest that we men are more knowledgeable than women in this field, but it is true that today more and more women are driving cars. They must fill their tanks.

Can the ladies really appreciate the differences among the various fuels that they are offered? They follow the advice of salesmen, of distributors, and buy what is recommended without seeing the difference. Nearly 30 per cent of the people who drive cars today are women. Is there not complete abuse of these people who are not familiar with the technology since there is already some abuse as concerns the 90 per cent of men who are not more familiar with this technology than women? On this point, I would be personally opposed to a concentration of our efforts in the fields suggested by the hon. member, and I would much prefer that the gasoline and motor manufacturers be required to standardize these things so that they all use the same fuel and that we no longer have to pay for these various fuels and the publicity required to extol the virtues of these products to the consumer. Very often, these virtues do not exist.

It is in that direction, I think, that we should make our efforts, Madam Speaker, and I would advise my colleague from Ottawa West to introduce some other legislation at the first opportunity so that he may work and devote his energy along that line. I thank him in anticipation.

[English]

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (St. Boniface): Madam Speaker, I know that the bill before us is intended to ensure that consumers are getting their money's worth when they buy gasoline. I am sure this is in the mind of the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis).

In this day and age everything is inspected. All food is inspected. In all areas there are provincial inspectors as well as federal inspectors. When we were discussing a similar matter in 1970 a former member of parliament from Calgary South said it was possible that the oil companies would be pleased to take up a suggestion made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), by appearing before a committee of the House and answering any questions put to them by hon. members.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock tonight.

At 5.45 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT, THE SALARIES ACT AND THE PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARIES ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING SALARIES AND ALLOWANCES

On the order:

Consideration of report stage of Bill C-44, an act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act, the Salaries Act and the Parliamentary Secretaries Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.—The President of the Privy Council.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I indicated earlier this afternoon that because of some of the very serious procedural problems and deeply fundamental procedural questions which were raised in the very important argument that was put forward this afternoon I would try to give judgment at eight o'clock. I have given the matter the most careful consideration, study and review in the interval, and in fairness, because of the rather important and fundamental points involved, I cannot bring myself to decide the question at this time. I therefore ask whether the House might involve itself in the consideration of other matters this evening to give me an opportunity to examine the matter further during this evening and tomorrow morning, and I will give my judgment at three o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

OCEAN DUMPING CONTROL ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR CONTROL OF DUMPING SUBSTANCES INTO THE OCEAN AND TO ESTABLISH A BOARD OF REVIEW

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (for the Minister of the Environment) moved that Bill C-37, to provide for the control of dumping of waste and other substances in the ocean, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

Mr. Len Marchand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege this evening, on behalf of the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Sauvé), to brief the House on Bill C-37. It is a measure to provide for the control of dumping of wastes and other substances in the ocean. This bill is not only important—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I make a suggestion regarding what we should dump in the ocean?

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): I thought the hon. member wanted to make a deal and pass the bill without debate. Certainly I would be willing.

This bill is not only important in Canadian terms but as part of a wider international effort to preserve our environment. Traditionally Canada has been committed to the principle that in some of its most critical aspects the work of protecting the physical environment is world work—work that nations cannot do successfully unless they do it together.

This is not a matter of abstract idealism but an operating principle based on a recognition of things as they are. The biosphere is one. The oceans, regardless of the names we give them, or the lines drawn on maps are, physically speaking, one. So Canada has consistently taken the lead or participated energetically in promoting international co-operation to protect the environment.

Late in 1972 our representatives met with those of 90 other nations under UN auspices to sign an agreement to control ocean dumping. The convention which came out of that meeting—it is known as the London convention—is based on the following principles. First, that the sea and the life it supports are vitally important to all the world's people. This being so, all of the world's people have a direct interest in making sure that the sea is managed and used in ways that will damage neither its quality nor its resources. Second, that the capacity of the sea to absorb punishment, to assimilate wastes without damage and to sustain life, is not unlimited. The sea is vital yet fragile. Third, the nations signing the convention also recognized, in keeping with the United Nations charter and the principles of international law, that nations have the sovereign right to exploit their own resources. At the same time they have the responsibility to ensure that things done within the areas that lie within their jurisdiction do not damage the environment of other nations.

The 91 nations involved agreed to take measures, individually and collectively, to prevent marine pollution caused by dumping. In signing the London convention, Canada signalled her commitment to the principles of the convention, and our intention to ratify it. The bill now before the House is the instrument needed to fulfil our obligations under the London convention.

Before going into more detail let me first outline the salient features of the London convention itself. The convention will, when ratified, prohibit the dumping of wastes in the oceans without specific permission granted by the national authority designated by the state concerned. As far as the convention is concerned, dumping means any deliberate disposal at sea of wastes or other matter from vessels, aircraft, platforms or other man-made structures at sea. The ocean is no longer to be a garbage dump; neither is it to be a junkyard. Dumping also means the disposal at sea of the vessels themselves, or aircraft, or platforms, and so on.

In the context of the convention and of this bill, dumping does not mean the kind of waste disposal at sea which comes about in the course of the normal operation of vessels, aircraft, platforms or other installations. Nor does it mean the disposal of wastes or other matter generated in the exploration, exploitation and offshore processing of seabed mineral resources.

I should remind the House that separate instruments have been developed and are available to deal with pollution of the oceans by oil and other polluting substances, such as garbage and sewage, from vessels. Nationally speaking, the Canada Shipping Act addresses this problem. So does an international convention signed in London in November, 1973. The more recent London convention will operate separately.

Finally, in summarizing the history of the London convention let me add that it was preceded by a regional agreement for the prevention of dumping signed by 12 northwest European nations. This document is known as the Oslo Convention and its focus is on protection of northeast Atlantic fisheries and contiguous waters.

The bill now before the House will give the government of Canada legislative authority to control and manage dumping by all vessels in Canadian waters. This latter term includes Arctic waters within the meaning of the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act. It also embraces Canada's fishing zones. The bill will apply to dumping by Canadian ships wherever they may be located. It will also apply to foreign ships that come to Canadian ports and load wastes with the intention of disposing of them at sea. Please note, Mr. Speaker, that the bill will make all types of dumping subject to permit. Anyone applying for a permit to dump will pay a prescribed fee.

In general the wastes we are dealing with, both in the bill now being considered and in the London Convention, fall into two classes. One class comprises wastes which are highly dangerous to the marine environment, wastes which we know will cause serious damage. Dumping of this kind of waste is prohibited. No permits will be granted except in very special circumstances. In this class, to name a few examples, you will find organohalogen compounds such as DDT, polychlorinated biphenyls, and others. Mercury and cadmium and their compounds are in this class. So are persistent plastics and other synthetics; for example, netting and ropes which may float indefinitely in the sea, causing obstruction. Oil of all kinds, crude, fuel, heavy diesel and lubricating are in this class and covered by the bill when taken on board for the purpose of dumping. So are high-level radioactive wastes or materials produced for biological and chemical warfare.

The second class is made up of substances which could be damaging under certain conditions; in certain areas, in certain concentrations and at specific times of the year—substances, in short, which, with the right precautions, may safely and legitimately be deposited in the sea. In these cases the permit issued will specify certain requirements such as the rate of dumping, the time it takes place, the location, and so on.

The bill lists both of these classes. The prohibited substances are in Schedule I. The restricted substances are in Schedule II. I should emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that even substances which are not included in these schedules will be covered. They may not be dumped without permit.

It is reasonable to expect that there will be extraordinary situations in which it may be necessary for substances to be dumped without prior permit, in crisis situations, for instance, to avert danger to human life at sea. The bill will require that when such emergency action is taken, a full report of all the circumstances must be made. Similarly the minister may grant an emergency permit to authorize dumping action necessary to avert danger to human health on land. In this case the dumping action will be reported to other states affected.

Schedule III of the bill spells out criteria, the factors which the people who grant permits must calculate in making their decisions. In this respect, as in others, the bill follows the pattern of the London Convention. The factors to be considered include: (1) The characteristics and composition of the substance to be dumped; (2) characteristics of the dumping site and the method of deposit; and (3) possible effects on the environment in all its aspects—effects on amenities, on marine life, on other uses of the sea. "Do we have to dump?" is a question that must be asked. The availability of other options must be considered such as alternative onshore methods of treatment, disposal or elimination.

The bill provides for penalties for the dumping of materials into the ocean without a permit. Offences will be assessed in accordance with the severity of the violation.

[Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo).]

Offenders who contravene clauses 4, 5 or 6 of the bill are liable on summary conviction to the following fines: for offences involving substances not listed in Schedules I or II, up to $50,000; for offences involving substances in Schedule II, up to $75,000; for offences involving substances in Schedule I, up to $100,000.

Clause 7 of the bill deals with the disposal, or the junking of ships or aircraft in the sea. Anyone who contravenes this clause is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding $75,000. Failure to report dumping is punishable, on summary conviction, by a fine not to exceed $25,000.

The bill also gives the government authority to detain, seize or force forfeiture of ships and aircraft, and to demand redress of environmental damage by pollutors.

Environment Canada will administer this bill. This, Mr. Speaker, is a logical arrangement since this department's current activities already include such environmental protection functions as surveillance, monitoring, marine scientific research and vessel inspection. The Ministry of Transport will also be involved. So will the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, the Department of National Defence, the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs, and other federal and provincial organizations.

The governor in council is empowered to make regulations needed to carry out the provisions of the convention and of the bill. The bill is binding on Her Majesty in right of Canada or a province.

Before I close, Mr. Speaker, I should point out to hon. members that the London Convention will come into force automatically once it has been ratified by 15 nations. As of now, a number of countries have already done so. The 12 nations which signed the Oslo Convention mentioned earlier are in a position to ratify at short notice whenever they desire. What this means is that the 15 necessary ratifications may be imminent. At that point, with the convention in effect, the immediate next step will be to call an organizational meeting of all nations involved. This will be a conference which will significantly shape the future development of the convention and it is important that Canada be there. It is a matter of urgent business that we have the implementing legislation in place and that we be in a position to ratify the London Convention as soon as possible. When we have done this we can be sure of participation in these arrangements and, sure also that Canada's special coastal state interests are represented.

I urge the House, Mr. Speaker, to give swift consideration to this bill. Although ocean dumping is not a major Canadian problem, not a major feature of Canadian maritime activity, our waters are as vulnerable as anyone else's. We must act to shield the great Canadian fisheries and our coastal recreational areas. Beyond that we must move to protect the ocean at large, the sea which belongs to us all, the common heritage of mankind.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the parliamentary secretary who has just made a very interesting speech on a subject in which we are deeply interested would answer a question in order to help us in connection with the future conduct of this debate.

I am concerned about Clause 2(2), the definition of the sea. The parliamentary secretary will have noticed that the sea is defined as the territorial sea of Canada; the internal waters of Canada other than inland waters; any fishing zones prescribed pursuant to the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones Act; the Arctic waters within the meaning of the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, all of which are perfectly clear, and then any area of the sea adjacent to the areas referred to in paragraphs (a) to (d) as may be prescribed. I am particularly concerned about that when it is read in conjunction with Clause 19 which provides in part:

Where an offence against this act is committed by a person, whether or not he is a Canadian citizen, in any area of the sea referred to in paragraphs 2(2)(a) to (e)—

Could the parliamentary secretary, who I am sure has given a great deal of thought to this bill, indicate to the House what the government has in mind when it says in paragraph 2(2)(e) "any area of the sea adjacent to the areas referred to" in those paragraphs? How far away from the territorial sea of Canada would that area adjacent extend—would it be up to 10 miles, 15 miles or 20 miles?

I am worried about the question of jurisdiction when charges are laid, particularly in light of some of the decisions of the World Court, with which the hon. member and I are particularly acquainted. I am wondering about this area of Canadian jurisdiction when charges are to be laid against persons who are alleged to have committed offences in these areas adjacent to the sea. Perhaps the parliamentary secretary could elaborate on that for a few minutes.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) would repeat that question?

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, any member, other than a member from the inland province of Saskatchewan, would know very well what I mean.

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I am not certain I can answer all the questions the hon. member has raised. Many of them are highly technical and are the kinds of questions that should be answered in committee. If I thought the hon. member were serious in making this speech in the form of a question I would take him seriously, but I do not think I should take him seriously now. I would be happy to assure the hon. member that the minister will appear at some stage before the committee, along with the appropriate officials who will be able to answer any of these technical questions the hon. member might like to raise. I should like the hon. member to attend the committee hearings.

Mr. Baldwin: I am sure the committee proceedings will be in order.

Mr. Roche: Mr. Speaker, I should like to pose a question to the parliamentary secretary, if I can get his attention. I should like to ask him how he possibly could have made a speech on ocean dumping tonight without one single word or reference to the Law of the Sea Conference that is now going on in Geneva, which is considering ocean dumping as well as many other subjects related to the common heritage of the sea. Is this not an indication of the government's—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I think the hon. member is taking advantage of a question to make his own speech. This is not according to the rules. If the parliamentary secretary wishes to answer I shall allow him to do so, but personally I feel this is not a proper procedure at this stage.

Mr. Roche: I will repeat my question for him in a shorter form. I simply want to know why, in the speech he made tonight, he made no reference to the Law of the Sea Conference in Geneva, which is very important to Canada.

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): I suppose the hon. member could mention many things that could have been contained in the speech. The hon. member might refer to the statements which have been made about the Law of the Sea Conference by the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. LeBlanc), the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Sauvé) and others.

I do not believe it is a valid point at this stage to suggest I should discuss everything that is being dealt with by the Law of the Sea Conference. It is dealing with many important questions, one of which is the 200-mile zone. We are all concerned about this. I think we all hope we will achieve the 200-mile economic zone at the Law of the Sea Conference. Really, however, I think this is a question which has been very adequately debated. The position of the Government of Canada is very clear relating to what it hopes to achieve at the Law of the Sea Conference.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the parliamentary secretary would permit one futher short question.

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Yes.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Thank you very much. My question relates to the matter referred to by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), that is, the definition of the sea as it appears on page 3 of the bill. There is a reference to the territorial sea and various other seas. There is also mention of areas under foreign jurisdiction, and other areas. Would the parliamentary secretary assure us that when the matter goes to the committee there will be someone present from the department to tell us what part of the sea the bill does not refer to, in view of the broad definition that has been placed in the clause? Would he undertake to do that?

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Yes, I would be happy to give the undertaking that at the hearings of the committee on this bill we will answer all technical questions any hon. member would like to raise.

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat surprised to be debating this matter tonight, but I am pleased that the government has at last found the time to devote to this matter in the House of Commons.

This is a matter which all parties in the House have agreed is of some substantial importance to Canada, to the longer range development of programs and agreements of the type being discussed at the current conference in Geneva on the Law of the Sea, and to general questions relating to the establishment of some kind of international authority on issues which have too long existed without agreement. The failure to achieve agreement concerning some kind of rules has caused substantial problems for this and other coastal countries.

I missed part of the speech by the parliamentary secretary. I regret that I was not able to give attention to all the remarks he so carefully prepared. I certainly can share with him—and I say this on behalf of the official opposition—his concern that Canada should participate as much as possible in the conclusion of this accord and that it should participate as one of the original signatories to the ratification of the convention.

I want to enter the caveat, which is not serious but which I feel should be mentioned, that if during the detailed discussion at the committee stage it should become apparent to us that there are some serious deficiencies in the bill as it stands we will not allow an international time table to cause us to rush through this parliament a piece of legislation dealing with a subject matter which is too important to be dealt with in haste. However, in the event that this problem does not arise—and I respect the good will of the parliamentary secretary and his minister in this regard—I think we are certainly inclined to give the matter expeditious consideration in the committee.

Naturally there are a number of members of my party who have a long standing interest not simply in coastal matters but also have very important questions relating to the Law of the Sea, and who will want the opportunity to speak on this matter and raise questions in the standing committee concerning the implications of Bill C-37. There are some anomalies which I believe it is important to consider even at this early stage. One is that the bill on its face seems to refer to all substances, and yet in a later portion of the bill there is reference to the establishment of certain schedules. This would seem to indicate that there will be in the schedules some kind of limitation concerning the categories of substances which this bill or the convention will treat. This will certainly be one of the things we in this party will insist upon having information on at the committee stage.

We will want to have a detailed delineation of the contents of any schedule such as referred to in the bill. We will particularly want to have answered the question concerning whether this legislation will in fact deal with all substances or whether there will be in the schedules some kind of limitation in respect of the substances which will be dealt with, because this could seriously detract from the effectiveness of the convention internationally or the effectiveness of the legislation with which we are dealing this evening. Therefore I want to advise the parliamentary secretary and the government that we in this party will be interested in having quite a detailed elaboration on the relationship between the part of the bill which appears to refer to all substances and the implication in the latter part of the bill that there is a possibility we will be dealing with a limited range of substances.

As the bill stands it contains certain inherent limitations; perhaps as well as being inherent they are inevitable in dealing with matters of international law. The bill quite clearly deals with dumping where Canadian ships are involved or where a cargo which was loaded in Canada is involved. The extent of the prohibition with which we are dealing—I will await the contributions of some of my colleagues here who are more expert in the intricacies of the international law of the sea—has to do with a fairly limited number of ships which might be involved in dumping, a number limited either by the ships in question being Canadian ships or the cargoes in question being Canadian cargoes.

Apart from that, our shore lines which might be affected by loopholes in any international dumping agreement, and indeed the general safety and cleanliness of the seas, are not protected against the possibility of dumping by ships that either are not of Canadian registry or are not carrying Canadian cargoes. That, taken in tandem with the matter that I raised earlier—the question that is on our minds because there is a reference on the one hand to all substances being covered, and on the other hand a reference to certain schedules—raises some very serious questions as to how complete a protection will be given by the legislation to Canada as an interested coastal state, and indeed by the convention in the ratification of which it is intended that Canada participate.

If I may enumerate them again, there appear to be three categories of substance that could seep through a leakhole—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): I seem to be coining a new word.

Mr. Roche: That is the way the government operates.

Mr. Woolliams: Did you say seep through a leaphole?

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): —seep through a loophole. First, any substances which we think are prohibited but which do not appear to be in the schedule are in the first category. In the second category are substances which are dumped by non-Canadian ships, and in the third category are the commodities which are dumped which were not loaded in Canada.

I think it would be difficult for us at this stage in the debate to gather exact information on the range and importance of the substances that might be affected by the weaknesses in the bill. However, it is clearly a highly important matter for us to consider and on which to have some detailed information from the lawyers who have been involved in the discussions at the Law of the Sea Conference and who can tell us the extent to which Canada may be protected by the convention, and the offshore areas which our own law will protect. We would also want to have more information from people who are expert in marine practices and marine traditions as they relate to registry and to cargo loaded here in Canada or loaded in other places.

Given the weaknesses in the bill and given the fact that there are certain substances which can leak through, those of us who are interested in the protection of the Canadian coastline will be in the situation of having to rely upon the powers of the international accord and, more particularly, upon the comprehensive nature of the international accord and its capacity to include countries which have operated in the past in the business of ship registration and perhaps have not been as careful as Canada would like to be in adhering to international regulations which would lead to a safer environment.

That, of course, is in the nature of the problem under any international law. Those who obey the law are always at the mercy of those who do not. I simply underline the point that we will be in that difficult situation here, and one of the matters on which we will seek some clarification and specific information in the committee has to do with what kind of substances might leak through the loopholes in this law, and also the incidence of problems arising either from ships of foreign registry or from cargoes loaded elsewhere than within the jurisdiction of the signatories to this particular accord.

Another limitation in the bill is that the strictures here apply to cases of deliberate disposals. Again it will be necessary to refer to the accumulated bodies of laws for a definition of deliberate. I think most of us would agree, and it is well established in our own legal system, that there is not much protection that we can provide, particularly in a rudimentary system, against accidental occurrences.

One would hope that the Department of the Environment is acting under other headings to try to protect our coastline against accidents, but the fact remains that there is no way in which we can prevent, by law, the occurrence of accidents. Perhaps we can respond, but we cannot prevent. So there is some sense in including the adjective deliberate, but it raises a serious problem of definition as to just when a disposal is deliberate and when it is accidental.

There will be a grey area that will cause some difficulties of interpretation. I imagine that there is some learning or case history in international law on this matter now, and that will be something to which we will want to give our attention in the standing committee. It is a matter of some concern to us that we may be creating, by the language of this legislation a capacity for certain countries, or certain ship owners who might not want to adhere to the convention, to find a way out because of the adjective deliberate. That is a matter to which, I am sure, the parliamentary secretary has given extensive attention, and I am looking forward to hearing from him, his advisers and the minister on this matter in committee, and on the extent of the loophole that it might create for people who normally come within the confines of this legislation.

There are some other problems that occur to me as I look at the legislation. Of course I will not violate the rules of the House by referring at this stage to specific clauses or subclauses, but a problem seems to arise in the case of emergencies. I am speaking now not from the perspective of the country that might be affected but from the perspective of the ship owner or captain who might be in the situation where he or his crew are faced with an emergency and, for the safety of his ship and of his crew, he might engage in some kind of dumping. Clearly that kind of thing happens at sea and it is clearly a matter which we must contemplate.

Dumping at Sea

As I read the bill—again this might be a matter on which the parliamentary secretary or advisers to the department can ease our concern—there is a requirement that before a cargo can be dumped there must be notification to a particular agency in order to claim exemption from the law. In other words, we may have some poor guy at sea in an emergency who might be faced with the problem of having to dump his cargo. If, for one reason for another, he is operating in waters or under agreements that make him subject to the accord of which we are speaking tonight, as I read this legislation he must notify someone to obtain permission to dump in the event of an emergency before he can be exempted from the strictures of the legislation.

It may well be that that is necessary, and it may well be that other countries which have engaged in the development of law relating to off-shore dumping have come to the conclusion that, if someone is going to suffer in an emergency situation, it is better that it be the ship experiencing the emergency than the country which tried to pass a law to protect its shoreline. It may well be that this will be a considered provision in this legislation, but that again is a matter we want to take advice upon later.

The bill establishes a board of review. I speak now of the effectiveness of this legislation in fact and of its capacity to serve in a genuinely protective way the Canadian coastal environment and, indeed, the coastal environment of other countries sufficiently concerned about this problem that they intend to be signatories to the international convention. But in the Canadian law there is a board of review established with discretionary powers, at least as I read the legislation. There is no automatic provision for the board of review to begin to act. It is up to the minister to decide whether a matter is to be referred to the board of review. That is my understanding of the legislation, and we might consider that in detail in committee.

The problem here is the problem of ministerial discretion. Whenever there is in a statute a provision for discretion by a minister, I think it behooves parliament to ask why that particular discretion is there. What is anticipated by the minister or by the department which causes them to introduce this discretionary provision? The question is not simply why that discretion is there, but who might benefit from it. I think that will be another matter we will want elaboration upon when we get to the stage of detailed discussion in committee. We should try to determine why there is this discretionary provision and who it might benefit, who might evade the provisions of the accord, because the board of review does not come into effect directly but comes into effect only with the agreement of the minister.

There is throughout this legislation and, indeed, throughout much of the legislation which is brought forward to deal with environmental matters in this country, a very real question as to the capacity of the general public to raise matters of concern to them, to raise matters which are not simply of specialized concern to people who happen to deal in the arcane regions of the law of the sea or inhabit the environment department. As I read this legislation there does not seem to be very much opportunity for individual members of the public, who might have reason to apprehend an emergency at sea, to anticipate such an emergency or to be effective in bringing into action the sections of this legislation.

I think that one of the matters of concern in this legislation, and in much of what has come forward from the Department of the Environment, is that there is relatively little attention given to a process which would encourage public participation, either in the sense of expressing anticipated dangers or in the sense of creating a mechanism which would allow for the effective registration of complaints.

We will want to consider that and particularly the failure, as I read the bill, of any mandatory provision for the public to initiate the calling of the board of review. That is done only with the permission of the minister, and there are a variety of reasons one could anticipate, without attributing any meanness of motive to the present minister, why the minister might not want to make that reference to exercise that discretion, but there is no mandatory right of the public or of a member of parliament to call the board of review into being, and that is a matter we will want to have explained to us with specificity at the committee stage.

One of the related weaknesses in this aspect of the bill is that even where public complaints might arise there is no provision in the bill, as I read it, for a reliable reference or a mandatory reference to the committee or to the board of review for consideration. Concerns which might have occupied question period in the House of Commons for five days in a row need not be referred, simply because they are in issue here, to the responsible agency. I admit that this is a long shot, but if the minister decides that he or she does not want that reference to be made, the minister has the discretion and the power to stop consideration of a question which may be of such public importance that it has occupied the attention of this House for some time. I do not mean to suggest that all matters which occupy the attention of this House for some time are necessarily of paramount importance, but that is often the case. One of the matters we want to have explained to us is why there is not a greater reference in this bill to the encouragement of a response to public concern.

One of the other matters which may make sense to people who might have had the chance to study in detail the whole history of issues relating to dumping, or perhaps to people who have specialized in law of the sea questions, is why there is a provision in the bill that there will be a two-year delay in any proceeding, in respect of the legislation, after its passage. I think we will want to have from the parliamentary secretary, or the minister or her officials in committee, some justification or some indication of the reasons for this two-year delay, and some justification for a delay which may extend over a period which could cause serious problems for the coastline of Canada and, indeed, for the waters off-shore.

As a layman in the various fields of international law it seems to me that this is a holiday which is given to people, companies, or ships which might violate the spirit of the accord, and we will want to know in some detail why there is this two-year delay in the application of the possibility to charge an offender with an offence under the legislation we now have before us.

There is another matter which may have less to do with the problems of international law and the prohibition of dumping than it has to do with the status of the Department of the Environment among the portfolios of the government. As I read the definition section of this legislation there is reference to enforcement by a minister, but there is no specification as to who that minister will be. It may be that the minister concerned will be the Minister of the Environment, but we cannot take that for granted. The mere fact that the Minister of the Environment sponsors the bill does not mean that that minister will be the one referred to in the clauses of the legislation.

Just the other day we had legislation which appeared in the name of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) and which would involve actions taken by other ministers. There is no guarantee of that, without the specific indication that the minister concerned here is the Minister of the Environment. That may seem a relatively small point to some members but it is not when seen in the context of the general concern of Canadian environmentalists for a commitment by the government to high environmental standards.

There has been all too much evidence on all too many fronts that the Department of the Environment in Canada is very much a junior partner, second in status and lacking in clout compared with other departments of the environment in other jurisdictions.

Mr. Corbin: Name them.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): I am challenged by the hon. member opposite. I can name the United States of America for one. I know that my colleague from Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin) is speaking with his usual expertise on this matter, which is to say not much, but it is clearly the case—

Mr. Corbin: The stupid things you are saying!

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): —that in comparison with the United States the provisions for the empowering of environmental authorities in this country are much weaker. We could go through a list of examples starting with their determination to consider problems of asbestos discharges and going on to a number of other categories. If the hon. member opposite wants to engage in debate about the matter we can do that on another occasion.

The problem now is that we have a bill before us which might be enforced effectively by a strong minister of the environment but which probably would not be enforced effectively by a weak minister of the environment, and which certainly would not be enforced effectively if, by statute, the minister who had the power was not the minister of the environment.

If the government had the commitment to environmental questions that the hon. member opposite suggests it has, it would have specified in this legislation that the minister concerned here is the Minister of the Environment. What are we going to do if it turns out to be the minister of transport—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): I make no personal reference to the present minister here, Mr. Speaker, but it might be that such minister, for reasons of his or her jurisdiction, would have an inclination to go easy on ships which might be likely to pollute.

I repeat the point I made earlier, Madam Speaker, that in this legislation there is a capacity for whichever minister is concerned to block the effectiveness of it. The apparatus we are establishing here can come into play only at the discretion of the minister. If the minister chooses not to exercise that discretion we are wasting our time in signing the accord or in passing this legislation. My colleagues seem prepared to celebrate the waste of time; we are not.

This is an important matter not simply as it applies to this particular piece of environmental legislation but as it applies to the whole question of the status of the Department of the Environment. Unfortunately, as we have seen in regard to environmental impact legislation and the attitude toward class actions and a number of other occasions, the Department of the Environment here does not have the standing relative to other departments that its counterpart has in our neighbour to the south, or that it should have in a country where environmental questions are as important as they are here.

We have so much to preserve in Canada in the way of offshore and coastal considerations, but the problem here is that we have established a minister whose discretion can cancel the effectiveness of this bill, and we have not specified which minister. We on this side of the House are concerned in any event with vesting in a minister that wide kind of discretion which can cancel the application of the bill. That is alarming enough in itself. What makes it even more alarming is the fact that it might not be the Minister of the Environment who can exercise that discretion, but some other minister with other priorities who has to heed other demands and jurisdictional questions.

If the Minister of the Environment is to have any credibility surely that minister must speak up, whatever the issue, on behalf of environmental quality. That is the justification for having a minister of the environment. That minister is supposed to be the spokesman in the cabinet for environmental quality. That assumes there are going to be, in a complex country like this with various interests, other ministers with other portfolios and other interests. The danger that exists in this legislation as it stands is that we can have a discretion to cancel exercised by a minister whose primary interest is not an environmental interest. I suggest that is an aspect that we will want to repair in the committee.

If some of my vociferous friends on the other side want to come to the committee I hope they will, and I hope to hear a rational explanation of the extraordinary step taken in this bill of not specifying which minister will be the effective minister, and of vesting in the minister a substantial discretion which would allow him or her, which would allow a minister of transport or a minister of the environment, to cancel the effectiveness of the legislation.

Mr. Bechard: We have a strong Minister of the Environment.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): The chairman of the committee tells me we have a strong minister. The problem of the Minister of the Environment is not one of personal qualities but one of not having the legislative clout to do what must be done for the environment in this country. Even if the minister did have the legislative clout that she should have, there is no guarantee in this legislation that she will be the minister who can exercise the discretion which would be critical in putting the bill into effect.

Then there is the whole question of enforcement of the provisions of the bill. Will it be enforcement by reference to courts, international courts, or some body of international jurisprudence? Will some active attempt be made to police those parts of the Canadian sea which are within our jurisdiction? Does the government intend that the Department of National Defence, for example, will engage in enforcement activities? If so, what would that mean for the already limited budget of that department? Is it the government's intention to create some new kind of policing authority under the Department of the Environment perhaps, or some other department? The question is not how it will be done but whether it will be done. In the address of the parliamentary secretary I heard not one reference to that question, but it is one that should be elaborated on in committee.

There is one other matter which is more important to us than the other signatories to the convention or countries affected by it. That is the question of Canadian offshore areas in the Arctic. We have there a situation where the dangers of dumping can be much more severe than in southern climes. We share northern waters with only a few other countries of the world and probably only a few of the signatories to this convention. One of the matters on which we will need elaboration when this comes to committee is the special way in which this convention and this bill, which would allow Canada to give force to this convention, is going to be effective in the ecologically delicate areas of the Canadian Arctic. That is a matter on which both the parliamentary secretary and the bill have been silent. I advise the parliamentary secretary that it is a matter on which we are going to request considerable elaboration when it comes to committee.

Another factor that relates to the question of the potential use of National Defence ships and potential detection is whether, in carrying out the spirit of this convention, there is going to be any new emphasis upon detection of dangers arising from dumping, or any new development in the technology of cleaning up pollution problems caused by ocean dumping. There is no point to Canada simply signing a law and agreeing to a convention if that is all we are going to do.

If we are serious about preserving the quality of sea waters offshore to Canada, we have to do much more than simply pass this law or sign a convention. We will have to change substantially our approach to the whole question of the priority of the environment. We will have to assign that concern a priority which so far has not been assigned it by the government.

It is not enough just to have a bill or a convention. If we are serious about this we will have to engage in the development of new methods. We must be prepared to sponsor new research. We must take steps which will make it possible for Canada to act effectively on a day-to-day basis in dealing with problems which might arise because of the loopholes in this agreement or because of accidents that might occur.

Earlier in the discussion tonight one of my colleagues raised the very germane question of the progress of discussions now under way concerning the international Law of the Sea. It is abundantly clear from what I have been able to see in a brief discussion of this bill that this bill, as it stands, provides no protection unless it is backed up by a strengthening of the state of the international Law of the Sea.

The bill allows loopholes concerning cargoes loaded outside Canada, ships of foreign registry, leakages that might be construed not to have been deliberate, and actions about which the minister may have decided, for whatever reason, not to exercise a discretion.

There are all sorts of possibilities for pollution to occur despite this piece of paper we are discussing here this evening. One of the most important safeguards we can develop, and of which this bill can be a part, is to continue, and give greater importance to, the process now under way in Geneva to strengthen the international Law of the Sea.

In this matter, and in many others which involve Canada's relations with other countries, what we do in this parliament is only a very small part of the job. It is only a very small part of our protection. It will turn out to have been in vain unless we can establish some international mechanism to ensure adherence to the standards which we might set out in statute, or the standards which might flow from an international convention respecting ocean dumping.

I have raised some of the concerns that I, and my colleagues in the official opposition, have about this bill. I reiterate that we share the concern of the government that Canada have the opportunity to be one of the signatory nations in the bringing into force of this convention. However, I repeat the caveat I uttered earlier. Unless we are given adequate answers to some of the questions we raised, unless there is some assurance the loopholes we are dealing with are going to be closed or narrowed, and unless there is some assurance that we are engaged in something more than a gesture, we will hold up the bill in committee until we get a good bill. We are not going to pass a bad bill simply so Canada can be a party to the signing of an international convention.

We share the concern of the government, the minister and the parliamentary secretary regarding the importance of this legislation. We regret that it was not brought in earlier. We on this side of the House were told for some time that this was a matter of priority to the government, yet it is only now under extraordinary circumstances that the government has introduced it. We are prepared to overlook the gap between the priority it claims and the priority it displays. However, we are not prepared to overlook the gaps which exist in this legislation and which could cause problems and thereby render our work here and in committee useless.

In closing I simply repeat that we agree with the motives of the bill. We have some concern about the particulars of it. It is a bill which we feel unhappily reflects the generally junior status of the Department of the Environment in the government. This bill will only be effective in the final analysis when Canada and Canadians can play an important role in causing other nations of the world to develop a stronger body of international law.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Marchand) will realize that the facetious comment I interjected in the first two or three minutes of his speech, which was made in the spirit of the proceedings of the House at that moment, did not represent either my view or the view of this party with respect to Bill C-37.

The fact is that we regard this as a serious and very important piece of legislation. We would like to see it get second reading within a reasonable period of time so that it can be sent to the standing committee for the thorough study it will have to be given there. After all, it takes only a cursory glance at the 25 pages of the bill to realize that it is a highly technical piece of legislation. It is the sort of bill that can best be examined in a committee where, in addition to the members themselves being present, there can be the officials who can advise on the terms of this legislation.

I would like to say that in my view and in the view of this party every step we take, even if is not the giant step we would like to see taken, in the direction of doing something about pollution anywhere, is important and should be supported.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I like the words, poetic though they were, with which the hon. member completed his speech. He said the sea was the heritage of all of us. That is true, and steps should be taken to make sure it is protected. This goes for the sea, for our own inland waters, and for the air above and around us. We are really just getting started on the whole business of controlling pollution. Future generations are looking to us to take all the steps we can to protect our environment, and there is no time to lose.

I gather from statements made by members of the official opposition that they will probably complain that the bill does not go far enough. And then, within minutes, they are likely to complain that it goes too far.

An hon. Member: That always happens!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hon. members opposite appear to be in good spirits tonight. That pleases me very much. I agree that further steps will have to be taken; I see loopholes in the legislation already. The point is that together with other nations we are getting started in an attempt to protect the oceans against undue pollution.

The hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark) made the point that emergencies might arise at sea in circumstances in which a person in charge of a vessel might have to carry out dumping in the absence of a permit, or without making the required report. I would remind the hon. member that such a situation is covered in clause 8 of the bill. The descriptive word used in the marginal note is "Emergencies". It says that notwithstanding what is contained in subclause (4)(1) dumping may be carried out without a permit if it is necessary to avert danger to human life at sea or to any ship or aircraft. So the emergencies are covered. The clause goes on to circumscribe the permission which is given, but it strikes me from a quick reading of the bill that an attempt has been made to put forward legislation which will at least constitute a start in this important field.

It is also said we should not be expected, as a country with a great deal of interest in the ocean, to take all the responsibility; that others will have to work with us. That is true. But what is involved is the carrying through of a purpose. We signed the Oslo Convention on December 29, 1972, and I would say that if even 15 nations of the world are prepared to take steps to protect the oceans against undue pollution we should be part of that effort. The leadership we can give in this field is important, and it is the kind of thing Canadians want to do.

I listened with interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Rocky Mountain about the question of which minister is to be in charge of the legislation we are considering. I agree with him that it ought to be the Minister of the Environment. I agree that the clout of the Department of the Environment should be strengthened, and I hope this will be the decision eventually reached. I have to say, though, that I am not scandalized by the fact the bill does not name a particular minister as minister in charge of the act, but leaves it to be decided later. I say this because I have seen similar provisions in a number of bills; in other words, some latitude is given to the government to make a decision.

I agree with the hon. member for Rocky Mountain that it should not be a minister who might be involved in a conflict of interest and who might therefore play down concern over the environment because of some commercial consideration. Perhaps the minister chosen could be someone like the Secretary of State for External Affairs; I can see the holder of that office as a possible minister in charge rather than, say, the Minister of Transport within whose department a conflict of interest might easily arise. In any case, the matter has not been resolved against the Minister of the Environment—the wording is set out in subclause (2)(1).

I do not agree with everything the hon. member for Rocky Mountain said, but I join with him in expressing the hope that added strength will be given to the Department of the Environment. There is no use this department becoming just a hanger-on, one which gets into the picture now and then. Preservation of our environment is one of the most important issues facing us in the latter part of the 20th century. It is terribly important to the 21st century, and the sooner we build up this department and give it the strength and authority to enable it to make effective decisions concerning our environment regardless of commercial considerations, the better it will be for all concerned.

I am the last to suggest the bill is perfect or that it does not need to be carefully considered in committee with the officials present, but participating with other countries in the world in an attempt to protect the seas around us is a good and an important endeavour and I should like to see second reading given to the bill fairly soon so that it may be sent to the appropriate standing committee.

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to note that the first two speakers representing the official opposition come from the province of Alberta which is a land-locked province. This is a fact which I believe underscores the importance of the bill before us, one which goes far beyond the superficial idea that it is of concern only to the provinces which border our seas.

We shall be hearing tonight from a representative of our party from British Columbia, and undoubtedly he will speak out of his concern for the protection of the coastline of that province. But it is particularly important for us to understand the final sentence spoken by the parliamentary secretary in introducing this bill when reluctantly, it seemed to me, he came round to a recognition that anti-dumping legislation affecting the high seas and the seas adjacent to Canada is connected with the whole issue of the pollution of a common heritage of mankind. This places the bill in a far larger context than that of unilateral action taken by Canada, or even of Canada becoming a signatory to a convention. This bill has far wider ramifications than anti-dumping, and that is why I pleaded with him at the conclusion of his remarks and criticized him for stopping short in his speech.

What the world is concerned about today in regard to our seas is not simply anti-dumping legislation, however important that be for the protection of this part of our environment that covers four-fifths of the surface of the globe. What is of concern to the world today is the total management of the seas.

As we examine this bill we read that the measure will provide for the control of dumping waste and other substances in the ocean; for the establishment of a board of review consisting of not more than three persons; that it will provide that the federal Crown is bound by the measure; for fines in contravention thereof in the amounts prescribed; and for costs of the federal Crown to repair or remedy any condition or to mitigate any damage, and for their recovery.

In implementing this recommendation contained in the bill, I ask how we can expect other nations of the world that have access to the high seas, and whose vessels pass within 200 miles of our shores, to observe our rights if we do not indicate today that we are concerned with the common rights of mankind which are currently under examination at the Law of the Sea conference? I am saying very plainly to you, Madam Speaker, that it is futile for us to have a narrow concern regarding anti-dumping, however important that be, if we do not join with that concern a much more active role of leadership in regard to protecting the high seas and the 200 mile zone, of which I will speak in a moment. We must show a determination to use the seas and their fabulous wealth for the good of mankind.

I will enter evidence in a moment indicating that Canada is not doing that. Hence my argument is that it is rather pointless for us to be introducing this bill in the expectation that it is going to be sufficient to protect our seas from dumping, whether by Canadian vessels or foreign vessels that come close to our territorial waters. We must, as I say, play a much more active role in leading the way.

I want to suggest that the threat to the oceanic ecosystem, including the threat to the food chain and the very air that we breathe, is the question that is before us tonight. This threat comes not only from oil installations in the sea but, even more, from land based pollution, from conscious ocean dumping, from rivers polluted with lethal substances, and from pollution of the atmosphere by the burning of petroleum and other fuels. The world's oceans are one, and pollution respects no national boundaries.

Therefore it is not for Canada alone to take any kind of unilateral action in regard to protection of the seas or the seas adjacent to us; we must win the respect and co-operation of other nations. This is partly what the Law of the Sea conference is all about. I suggest to the parliamentary secretary that this bill should not be discussed, and that when it gets to committee the committee should not discuss it without reference to Canada's role today in the Law of the Sea conference which is now being held in Geneva.

The Law of the Sea conference resumed in Geneva three or four weeks ago, the first session having been held in Caracas last year. There was a clear trend toward the acceptance of what the government itself has called a three tiered concept of the Law of the Sea. The first is that there be established an economic zone out to 200 miles from the coasts of nations, over which those nations would have control of the fishing and mineral rights within those 200 miles; secondly, that there be established an international area beyond the economic zone reserved for the common heritage of mankind; thirdly, that there be the application throughout the oceanic space of sound management principles for the use and preservation of the sea.

When the conference resumed in Geneva, attended by the majority of the nations of the world, an attempt was made to produce what has been called a package agreement by which there would be brought into one general agreement all those factors concerning pollution, navigational rights, fishing rights and, most important, mineral rights. This package agreement is to open the door or lead the way to a common heritage fund that is to be administered under international authority. This international authority will take the first significant step that has been taken since the United Nations came into being in sharing the wealth of the world in a planetary sense.

No one has been concerned until now about the kind of wealth that can be produced from the high seas, other than fishing wealth. This is because it has not been technologically possible to produce from the high seas mineral wealth in great quantity and of great value. We know there is immense wealth in the seas. To show how important this subject is—I am not talking here of the international zone beyond 200 miles but only of the economic zone within 200 miles of the shores of coastal states—within that relatively small area of 200 miles there is $20 trillion worth of exploitable oil and gas.

There are many nations that went to the Law of the Sea conference wanting an international authority established that would share revenue derived from the exploitation of the mineral resources of the sea within a 200 mile zone. Most of the developed countries vetoed this proposal, Canada included. If I had to, I could establish an argument that the developed countries of the world should agree to the establishment of an international authority to share such revenue on a global basis in order to close the gap between the rich nations and the poor nations of the world, which is the cause of the social dilemma that we are facing today. However, I am not going to establish that argument because at the moment I want to concentrate upon that part of the high seas beyond the 200 mile zone—the high seas.

I know that mineral exploitation is not yet technically advanced sufficient to realize this fantastic amount of wealth that is rather immediately recoverable from within this zone of 200 miles. What I am concerned about is that part of the high seas beyond the 200 miles which is most open to the argument of international authority since it gets away from the first 200 miles.

Now we come back to Canada and this bill. Sometimes I wonder, as I look around the House, whatever happens to speeches made here. I only hope somebody reads them. I know there are losts of meetings and things going on which the ministers have to attend, but hon. members of the opposition try to present positive suggestions, some in support of government measures that come before this House, in an effort to move Canada ahead and in recognition of our international responsibility. One only hopes that some of the ideas that spill out on this floor gradually find their way at least into consideration by the government.

The Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Sauvé), the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), his deputy and his assistant, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) are all away. No one is ever here to hear these things. One wonders about the usefulness of this exercise, and one is not surprised that so many members of the public are disillusioned about the political process today. I will not deviate too long on that.

The important thing is that today Canada is taking part in this Law of the Sea conference at Geneva. We are not debating it here in the House. No one is standing up in the House each day asking what we are doing at this most important United Nations conference. We are not doing that. We are dealing with a rather narrowly focused bill which is a nice piece of motherhood. My friend, the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark), had some legitimate criticisms, but even he had some difficulty in finding some really substantial points to criticize in respect of this bill, mainly because it does not really say that much. This is stange when there is so much that ought to be said by Canada in the explosive world of today.

I now come back to our position at the Law of the Sea conference and what actually is happening there. That conference today is breaking down in that it cannot come to a package agreement because it cannot agree on the concept of revenue sharing beyond 200 miles. It cannot agree to sharing in that international zone, and one wonders why. One reason, among others, is that Canada is opposing it.

Canada is today, and I want to make this point very clear, killing the idea of a common heritage of the sea by its conduct in Geneva right now. Canada is killing that concept. I would only indicate one remark made at the Law of the Sea conference by a representative of Kenya, who said just over the weekend:

> If the Canadians would only offer revenue-sharing as a trade for their claim to the margin then there might still be a chance for agreement.

What does he mean by margin? He means our continental margin extending out in some cases 640 miles. He is talking about that area over which we want total economic control beyond the 200 miles. If we had total control of our continental shelf in both oceans we would expand the acreage of Canada by 40 per cent. I would ask hon. members to remember that Canada is the second largest country in the world, having 7.6 per cent of the land mass of the world today, even though we have only one-half of 1 per cent of the population of the entire world. To this we are now asking in Geneva that we add the right to total control over that amount of land beneath the oceans which would add 40 per cent. I would ask if that is a reasonable position for Canada to take. I would certainly listen to anybody who stands up and says that is a reasonable position, but I do not think it is, and I do not think there are many members of parliament who will get up and say it is reasonable.

The conference at Geneva today is breaking down because we are adhering to that idea, and because there is a lack of acceptance by developed nations of the whole idea of the common heritage of mankind. I only suggest that Canada should develop much more cognizance of its international responsibilities.

I support the Prime Minister in his speeches in this regard, as I support the Secretary of State for External Affairs in his two most recent speeches on Canada's role internationally, made in the months of March and April of this year when introducing his estimates to the Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. When the Prime Minister was in London he made a speech that has been noted around the world. I have seen it quoted in the international press in several countries. I want to align myself with the thoughts of his speech as reflected in the position taken by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Prime Minister said:

> The human community is a complex organism linked again and again within itself and as well with the biosphere upon which it is totally dependent for life. This interdependency demands of us two functions: first the maintenance of an equilibrium among all our activities, whatever their nature; second, an equitable distribution, worldwide, of resources and opportunities.

He referred to an equitable distribution, worldwide, of resources and opportunities, but you simply cannot square these comments, laudable as they are, with our conduct at the law of the sea conference, or with our posture here tonight in talking about anti-dumping legislation to protect Canadian shores. This will simply not wash in a world today torn between the growing disparity of rich and poor nations.

This concept will not wash either in a world that is having a series of United Nations conferences on population, on food, on resources and on the Law of the Sea, culminating with a special session on development at the United Nations this fall. When all these problems come into sharp focus this position will not wash. We cannot have it both ways. We cannot make fine speeches on what we feel is our international role and then go into this Law of the Sea conference with the position I know that Canadian technocrats are taking there, mainly with the object of protecting our own interests first and foremost. I have not been at the Law of the Sea conference but I have been at others, and I know this will not wash in the kind of world we are living in today which is lacking leadership from countries like Canada.

I feel very badly that when we get into conferences the position of Canada seems to be confined to technical positions. Our position in this House is confined to pieces of legislation that are of marginal significance when there remain outside this House, and away from parliament, tremendous questions regarding Canada's relationship to the world population explosion.

I only plead with the government to reconsider its position at the Law of the Sea conference before its delegates come to the final conclusion that Canada is among those countries that killed the common heritage idea of the seas, and before we lose one of the greatest opportunities we have had in the 20th century of establishing an international authority with some teeth in it, based on the concept of revenue sharing in respect of mineral exploitation in that part of the world which has not yet been claimed by any national authority.

We must be able to think beyond our own self national interest for every moment of every day. I am not selling out Canada or saying it does not have the right to protect its development. Certainly we have that right, but we do not have the right to be overly concerned with the total economic control of an area equal to 40 per cent of our land mass, when that very attitude will be responsible for killing the concept of common heritage of the seas.

Finally I would conclude with the thought offered by my colleague, the hon. member for Rocky Mountain. I too do not think the Minister of the Environment is the one to handle this matter, and I say this in context with my arguments so far. I think it is far too big and involves far more than environmental questions. If we are to take that into account and think of who is to control this and how Canada fits in, surely we must feel that this ought to be a matter for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He is a minister to whom I give full credit as I think he is increasingly conscious of all these problems. I think he is aware that we, as Canadians, must have a greater participation in these matters, and therefore, if we are to talk about anti-dumping legislation, it should be that minister who is put in charge.

I think the Secretary of State for External Affairs should be in charge. But that is a lesser concern to me than the general interest of this parliament and the government. I can only repeat the content of my opening question to the parliamentary secretary. He gave us a very deficient and narrow presentation. I plead with him and his minister to say something better at the committee hearings on behalf of Canada and the national authority.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I regret that I was not present to hear the introductory comments of the parliamentary secretary. However, I wish him to know and to convey to the minister that we believe this is the sort of bill that this country has been waiting for. It is high time we had a bill of this nature. There are many housekeeping matters which must be dealt with in this bill, but I believe it is important that it be considered.

This party, through two speakers, is on record as believing that this is the sort of bill Canada needs for the control of pollution off its shores. As I see it this is in accord with the implementary portion of the bill with regard to the ratification process of a convention so to speak, in respect of the prevention of marine pollution by dumping of waste and other matter at sea, signed by Canada in December, 1972. I believe it is unfortunate in many respects that we should have to wait for an international convention before coming up with legislation to deal with a matter which is so urgent for a country with such a long coast line.

The convention, I believe, was negotiated in the IMCO context, the Intergovernmental Maritime Consultative Organization, and is part of a series of negotiations undertaken by that organization of the trading nations, those nations which ship and receive their goods by sea, so as to improve the rules of the sea over the conditions which existed in earlier years, and looking forward to the 80's. I am delighted there is before us now legislation that would permit us to implement the provisions of that convention, a portion of which is being dealt with in another context. As my colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona said this is part of the Law of the Sea.

Generally when one thinks of the Law of the Sea, unless one is dealing with it in some detail, one thinks of it as defining the limits of the territorial boundaries out to sea beyond the land mass of the state, and then perhaps beyond that into a zone over which the coastal state has some control. My colleague mentioned the vast area beyond that which was once known as the high seas and asked what is to be done about that. Pollution exists out there.

The conference on the Law of the Sea which is meeting at Geneva at the moment is dealing with pollution as well as the definition of territorial and management limits. It is also of course dealing with fisheries within and beyond those limits. Then there is also the matter of mining in the seabed and research into many of the facets that make up the maritime environment, such as research into fisheries, research into current, and research into upper air movements which affect the weather out beyond those areas of national control. This evening I believe it was unfortunate that the sponsor of this particular bill, the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Sauvé) was not present to introduce it.

[Mr. Roche.]

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): I rise on a question of privilege, Madam Speaker. My question of privilege is that the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) mentioned that the Minister of the Environment should be here tonight. I merely wish to point out that she is with Prince Charles, and is unable to be present.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I merely regretted her absence. I was not commenting on it. I just said it is unfortunate she is not here. I am sure she would like to be here to introduce this bill. I know she has left it in the very competent hands of the parliamentary secretary.

There is one element in the bill which fascinates me every time I run into it. I run into it more and more in respect of legislation. It is what I call the overriding clause. We found it the other night in Bill C-25. We found it in Bill C-32. We find this overriding clause, so to speak, in clause 3 of this particular bill. I mentioned that it is contained in four or five other measures passed by previous Liberal governments. It is becoming a habit. I should like to read this article so that it will be clearly understood by the House what the intent of the government is in respect of federal-provincial relations. It states:

> This act is binding on Her Majesty in right of Canada or a province and any agent thereof.

There is no mention of consultation between the federal government and the provinces. It is an overriding mandate which, in effect, says that it is this government which decides, and that the provinces must do what it says. If my memory serves me correctly I believe this is about the seventh instance in which we have had this overriding terminology in legislation. I find this supersedes disallowance which is no longer used. Instead of provincial legislation being disallowed we now have an overriding clause in legislation to deal with the provinces as this government sees fit. I think it is worth dealing with this matter in the committee.

The bill will be going to committee shortly; there is no question about that. When I was asked if I would be interested in intervening in respect of this particular bill I was delighted to agree to do so, but I did not know that it would come up this evening. I took a brief glance at the recommendation which gives a brief summary of what this legislation is intended to do.

It has three or four purposes. The first is to provide for the control of dumping waste and other substances in the ocean. The second is to provide for the establishment of a board of review and to provide that the federal Crown is bound by the measure, and for fines in contravention thereof in the amounts prescribed. That is interesting. Just as this legislation binds the Crown, in right of Canada, it binds the province. Therefore, if a fisheries vessel or a patrol vessel of the RCMP should contravene this legislation, they will find themselves in real trouble. This is a progressive and very good form of legislation.

Finally, the purpose of this legislation is to provide for costs of the federal Crown to repair or remedy any condition or to mitigate any damage, and for their recovery. This is why I think the Minister of the Environment could very well find herself involved in this particular operation. It is under the Department of the Environment in association with the Department of Transport that the clean up operations, particularly respecting oil spills, must be undertaken.

So I do not think it is a matter of surprise that the Minister of the Environment should have introduced this legislation. It could have been the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) or, as my hon. friend suggested, perhaps the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen). Basically the object of the bill is to ensure that there is no pollution, but if something is to be done about it, that is an environmental problem.

Now I should like to comment on dumping in general terms. There is one piece of information which I think is well worth putting on the record for those who are busy talking tonight, and who will perhaps read the record tomorrow. There is a rather interesting bit of information which I discovered in my reading over the weekend. I have managed to get hold of a copy of Noel Mostert's "Supership", and account of the construction of super tankers, the problems of living on them, of loading and unloading them, the problems of their navigation, and so on.

I was struck by one particular paragraph in chapter seven of this book which deals with what is left behind in a supertanker, clinging to the walls or the floor of the tanks as they are being discharged. It is rather a frightening thought when one considers what happens to this particular material that is not pumped out of the vessel when it is being unloaded. A vessel carrying 200,000 tons of crude oil will leave behind clinging to the walls of the tanks, one per cent of its cargo, or 2,000 tons. What happens to that crude? If it is left in the tanks, it will generate gases and create a danger for that ship. Ships have been known to disappear following an explosion of this source.

What is happening is that these tanks are sluiced down with water at high temperatures, and when the ship gets far enough out from shore, the tanks are sluiced out and what is left is dumped out into the sea. This is what Noel Mostert is complaining about, and this is what we should be complaining about. It is also worth recording that this same Noel Mostert once sat in the press gallery here. So I commend this book, not only because it was written by a former member of the press gallery but also because it contains a great deal of information that is valuable. The book is well written, and it is readable. It is written on a subject which we should all know about in present circumstances.

Let me come back to the sluicing of the tanks of the supertankers and what happens to the remains. They are thrown out to sea. We are talking about shortages of crude these days. I think measures should be taken to recover what is left of the crude and to have the tanks pumped while the ship is still in port, or preserved and unloaded into a barge that could accompany the ship as it sits out to sea. Some means must be found to recover this discharge, which is noxious, toxic, and causes the pollution that brought about this particular convention.

I will not get very far into this bill tonight, I can see, Madam Speaker. Under the definitions, for example, I find on page three the following:

> For the purposes of this act, "the sea" means
> (a) the territorial sea of Canada;
> (b) the internal waters of Canada other than inland waters;
> (c) any fishing zones . . .
> (d) the arctic waters . . .

The arctic waters are well defined in the act. The bill goes on to read:

> (e) any area of the sea adjacent to the areas referred to in paragraphs (a) to (d) as may be prescribed;

In passing I might mention that paragraph (d) which reads "as may be prescribed" is obviously a typographical error and the subsequent paragraphs (f) and (g) should be relettered. There was another definition which occurred in answer to a question of mine not long ago when I was tracing the saga of that magnificent ship Answer, which would answer to no call. Not even the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) could bring it back. But it looks as though I shall have to call it ten o'clock, Madam Speaker, and there is no answer.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

PUBLIC SERVICE—INQUIRY WHETHER PROSECUTION OF ILLEGAL STRIKERS WILL EXTEND TO UNION OFFICIALS

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Madam Speaker, I should like to float an idea here this evening and I will smuggle it onto the floor of this chamber by the use of my dissatisfaction with the answer given by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) to a question of mine the other day. Actually I did not expect anything different from what the minister had replied to me and, given my comic nature, I did not pursue the question with three or four others which would really have shown what I had in mind. But I would like to take the opportunity for a few minutes this evening to leave the hon. gentleman with at least something to think about. I do not expect an immediate reply from him.

My question arose from the recent strike of the blue collar employees and was prompted by two facts. One was that the Public Service Alliance of Canada in its battle with the federal government used as shock troops the employees who did maintenance work. Many of us on our week end forays into our ridings—if we managed to get there at all—were treated to the spectacle of airports jammed with people who were simply not able to travel, as they had normally expected, over one of the busier seasons of the year. That was part of the story, and I think the bitterness from that is still reverberating in many a Canadian household.

The other part of the story came from another matter I raised in the House recently, and that was that some of the blue collar workers who were a part of the larger alliance—but not the part which was on strike—were prevented from going to work at Willow Park, the army service base in the city of Halifax, and rather than challenge members of the same union and thereby risk some considerable conflict, on the advice of their superiors they did not go to work. They stayed away. For a while the Treasury Board was inclined to dock their pay. Then better sense set in, and those people have been paid.

I think those two different episodes point out that it is psychologically impossible for people who belong to a large union and who are forbidden the right to strike—that is, they are in what are called designated groups—to refuse picket lines. If picket lines are thrust up, or if they are asked to go on strike, it does not matter that the law says they are forbidden to strike. They feel they have to be one with their fellows in the labour union and stay away from work, and yet this clearly flouts the law of Canada.

So I asked whether the government intended not only to prosecute the designated employees for disobeying the law—and I call these people the "Joe Lunch-pail" types—but whether it would go further and prosecute those higher ups, Claude Edwards and other people at the very top of the Public Service Alliance who, from day one in their disputes with the government, have put these people on strike from time to time across Canada. There is no question but that this has happened. We all knew that even before the first strikes occurred, people at the airports would be used on a strike basis and on a selective basis, but on a calculated basis, so that to me the higher ups of the union by putting these people on the strike lines in some way flouted the law.

My suggestion is simply that there should not be people belonging to the same union, some of whom are forbidden to strike, and others who are permitted to strike. If we have to have designated groups who cannot strike, we have to give them a special privilege. We have to give them an opportunity to be represented—but only by themselves—in labour associations. They should not belong to labour associations of which part of the membership is permitted to strike. I know this is a great denial of liberties for such people, but I think it is the only practical solution one can find to prevent the kind of strikes which bedevilled transportation a few weeks ago.

In conclusion, every effort should be made to see that those designated employees denied a rather basic labour right should be given almost continuous attention by the government to see that their pay is never out of line and that their grievances are never left too long before solution. I do not quite know how this could be done, but perhaps it could be done by some special board of labour experts. Unless we do that, the suggested approach of the government to drive up the penalties against designated employees who go on strike when they are not permitted to do so, is a solution that will not work.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, this is not an easy subject, as you understand. When the hon. member put his question in the House a few days ago he asked me if we had prosecuted some union officials. I can report that those who have violated the law have been prosecuted.

Some stewards, local presidents and vice-presidents, a vice-president of a national component and a regional vice-president of a component union of the Public Service Alliance of Canada are included in our application for prosecution for unlawful activities that occurred in December, 1974. At this moment we are processing cases of all others who have acted illegally during the strike of a few weeks ago. It is not for pleasure that we took that course, but the policy of the government is to respect the right to strike for those who have it, and those who do not have it must be prosecuted.

In the past when there was a settlement there was always a kind of compromise by which we withdrew all charges. This time I did not withdraw the charges. I wanted to clarify that situation. Of course, there were some people who were caught in the process in good faith, and as they are members of the union, but designated, it caused some confusion when their friends were on the picket lines. But they knew they were designated. The designation was agreed between the union and the government and every one knew who was designated and who was not. They gambled and thought they were right to gamble, but sometimes we have to draw the line and this time we did it.

I think the hon. member's suggestion makes sense and I will advise him, because I do not have much time to debate tonight, that a good place to make this argument is in front of the joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate which is to consider the Finkelman report. That will come up very quickly; members of this House and the other place can put their propositions forward and I hope this particular idea will be considered. It is difficult to make a pronouncement on it at this time because the government has not taken a stand on the Finkelman report. We wanted to be fair to members because we were asking them to give us their advice. I did not want to tell them beforehand what I will do, but rather I want to get their ideas.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE—POSSIBILITY OF AMENDING SECTION 613 OF CRIMINAL CODE IN VIEW OF DECISION IN MORGENTALER CASE—POSSIBILITY OF PARDON FOR DR. MORGENTALER

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Madam Speaker, I am rising in regard to a question I put to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in the House recently dealing with section 613 of the Criminal Code and the ramifications of that section as a result of the recent Morgentaler case in the Supreme Court of Canada.

The jury system has been honoured in our legal traditions since almost the beginning of legal history. We have relied on it to prevent the elite or the state from imposing its view on the community. We have always argued that, in terms of the facts and what occurred in the community, the jury system was the bulwark for the ordinary person to have protection from tyranny—from the elite. In legal jurisprudence, they have always been the final judge of the facts.

The uniqueness of the Morgentaler case is that, under the provisions of the Criminal Code, the Supreme Court of Canada found that a court of appeal can superimpose not only its verdict on the law but also its verdict on the facts. That becomes an extremely dangerous legal precedent for those of us who cherish the jury system in this country.

In the jury system you perhaps deal with 12 prejudices. With a judge, you may deal with one. I am convinced that, in any fair judgment of the facts when we want to find out what the community standards really are, and in terms of the ordinary experience and ordinary human beings, when we depart from the principle of relying on 12 men good and true, we depart from one of the fundamental cornerstones of democracy in this country. Therefore I urge the government to give serious consideration to that section of the Criminal Code which has been under such severe attack in the Morgentaler case.

There is another aspect to that case. That is not the only thing that is unique about the Morgentaler case. In that case the Crown proceeded with preferred indictment and not in the normal way by preliminary hearing. The defence therefore lost one of the usual opportunities one has in these kinds of cases.

There is something else unique about that case. The court of appeal ordered the lower court judge to impose a sentence upon Dr. Morgentaler before the Supreme Court of Canada had heard his subsequent appeal.

We are looking at a unique situation, one that admittedly rarely occurs. In spite of that, no consideration is being given to a free pardon. I have to ask some questions.

The evidence in the Morgentaler case was that between 5,000 and 6,000 abortions had been done by that doctor. The reason he did so many was because of the confidence the medical profession in the Montreal area had in him. Why were charges not laid in Montreal against any other member of the medical profession for counselling an offence? I think that is a very serious question. I realize the federal minister does not have direct responsibility for this. However, I would ask that his ministry make proper and appropriate inquiries of the Quebec minister of justice as to why other Criminal Code offences have not been proceeded with, investigated, or pursued.

The suspicion remains that this doctor has been made a martyr. I recognize the position of Dr. Morgentaler. Perhaps he wants to be a martyr for a cause in which he sincerely believes. Nevertheless it is wrong for the state to attempt to create this kind of legal precedent and create a martyr in these circumstances.

Again I ask the very serious question, why only Dr. Morgentaler? I am sure there is overwhelming evidence of many others who have done exactly the same. I ask that proper inquiries be made. I ask why more charges have not been laid in the Morgentaler case. Last but not least, why is Dr. Morgentaler not being given an opportunity to receive the American humanist award? There is ample precedent for this.

There is no need for vindictiveness. Admittedly, it is a controversial case. People have very deep feelings on either side of the issue. The unnecessary harshness of the Quebec minister of justice the other day, suggesting that he got what he deserved, is incredible. Surely it is not for him to pass comment on sentences imposed by the courts. That is an incredible statement.

Dr. Morgentaler has requested leave from prison in order that he may receive the American humanist award. On receipt of this reward he will be in such company as Dr. Margaret Mead and the previous Canadian recipient of the award, Mrs. Grace MacInnis. I realize that that is not the direct responsibility of this ministry, but not to allow this man to go from prison to receive that award is a disgrace.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, the Morgentaler case has become a leading case that will go down into history. Its implications are not only personal but collective. This decision involves human aspects and challenges fundamental principles liable to affect the future of all Canadians. Therefore the legislator must act with care and restraint to avoid taking sides in a case where ethics and the law overlap and we legislators often have to make this important distinction.

Madam Speaker, as the Minister of Justice said earlier in the House, regarding the pardon for Dr. Morgentaler, hon. members will understand that any action by the executive about pardon or the commuting of a sentence must be limited to the rare cases where it is a matter of maintaining the integrity and power of justice. The executive's general power of clemency should not be confused with the power to grant a reprieve in the case of capital punishment where the Criminal Code stipulates an examination of the sentence by the cabinet. The general power of clemency is very rarely used; if it were not, the cabinet would become a court of appeal from the decisions of the Supreme Court.

Naturally, the government studied the consequences of the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada, which has the power of a court of appeal to reverse a jury's verdict of acquittal and substitute a verdict of culpability, with a view to deciding whether the law should be changed in this regard. According to the government, the decision of the Supreme Court in this case obviously proves that this power of appeal is very rarely resorted to and, consequently, that there is no reason to fear the ruling of the Supreme Court will harm the jury system. The Supreme Court pointed out that this was the first time the power of appeal had been invoked in Canada and that it can be resorted to only in very exceptional cases.

As to the investigation asked by my hon. friend, I think he raised a very interesting point, and without wanting to give an opinion on the decision of the attorney-general who prosecuted Dr. Morgentaler, I am very sympathetic towards someone who is thrown in prison, but I am perhaps a little less so when this person boasts about having violated the law and claims he is proud of it.

This is perhaps a partial answer, but I shall extend the invitation of my colleague with his interesting comments to the Minister—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allocated to him is now over.

ABORTION—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, some time ago I addressed a question to the government with respect to the definition of health as it relates to the Criminal Code, and specifically to the provision covering abortion.

The definition which had been generally accepted, or which was widespread at the time amendments to the Code were being established, was that the health of the mother meant her physical health and also her mental health. Much discussion and debate have taken place since that time as to the legal and medical definitions which should be operative in defining the health of a mother.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) who at the time the Code was amended was Minister of Justice, has, along with others, gone further in his interpretation of the law as it applies, or as it should apply, to abortion, and in agreement with the United Nations view he adds that economic and social considerations should be taken into account when reaching decisions as to whether or not legal abortions should be granted.

It is my contention that if we go to this extreme we have in essence arrived at abortion on demand. I do not believe this was the intention of the government, or of those members who voted for the amendment to the Criminal Code. It would constitute, to my mind, the removal of any restriction, and abortion as a crime might as well be removed from the Criminal Code.

In the Ottawa Journal for March 6 the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) is quoted as follows:

Mr. Turner said because opinion is so sharply divided on the issue—

That is the abortion issue.

—criminal law should not be used to force one moral view over another.

"When there is no consensus, criminal law should withdraw and it should be a personal matter," Mr. Turner continued.

I believe that is an abrogation of the guarantees given by the then Minister of Justice to those who strongly opposed the legalization of abortion. In the few minutes I have this evening I am pressing the government to define in very clear terms, or to undertake amendments to define in very clear terms, what its interpretation of the Criminal Code respecting the health, both physical and mental, of the mother should be or is.

Personally I am very strongly opposed to abortion on demand. I feel that in many of the hospitals at the present time that have established therapeutic abortion committees, abortion on demand is virtually taking place. When I look at the 43,000 plus legal abortions occurring across Canada and at the rapid increase in abortion, specifically at the Vancouver General Hospital where over 10,000 abortions alone were performed, I say that in some hospitals at the present time abortion on demand is already virtually a fact.

Yesterday's Ottawa Journal came out with headline "171 abortions after 5 months." Apparently, 171 abortions were performed in Canada after five months of gestation. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) is quoted as being "deeply disturbed" at this evidence. I do not think he should be deeply disturbed. Surely it was well known to many people that this was happening. Pro life groups have been pointing out for some time that abortions are taking place after a gestation period of 20 weeks plus. They have shown very clearly that some of these aborted fetuses actually live after the abortion, and possibly could have lived had proper medical help been given.

I say it is high time that the government clearly defined its position on the meaning of health. Again quoting the article in the Ottawa Journal for April 21:

At this stage—

That is, at 21 weeks of gestation.

—say specialists in the field, the baby is completely developed and could most likely survive outside the mother.

I think the government had become part and parcel of what I would simply refer to as wanton murder. I for one believe that life is sacred and I am very strongly opposed to abortion on demand, something which I maintain is already taking place in some of our hospitals. While this is a thorny issue, I feel it goes beyond political confines to the point where we should ask: how does society look upon itself and its responsibility to protect those who cannot protect themselves?

I was reading that in Manitoba this past week tremendous efforts were made to save twins at The Pas born prematurely. One passed away; the other is still being kept alive. So on the one hand we are doing everything that medical science can do to preserve life, yet fetuses of the same gestation period are being aborted or allowed to die in hospitals. I should like a response from the government as to what is its definition of the law.

One last fact remains. Despite the laws that we might pass in this parliament, indeed that pass the parliaments of other lands, there is a certain law that supersedes the law of man, and that is the law of God. I am asking the government: where does it stand on that issue?

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, in 1969 Parliament amended the provisions of the Criminal Code concerning abortion. The amendments to the act were a compromise between those who are opposed to abortion and those who do not want any legal obstacle.

In 1972, in reply to a question he was asked, the Prime Minister said: "... your slogan... free abortion on demand... is not mine, and you will have to convince me... if you want me to support the idea... that a person who asks for an abortion has no responsibility. From a certain moment, when you destroy the foetus, you suppress a life... I shall never accept that a person who kills is not responsible for his or her action and is not required to justify it . . ."

However, the amendment made in the act in 1969 admits that medical reasons may justify abortion. These amending provisions stipulate that an abortion will not be a legal offense when a committee of three qualified physicians of a certified hospital attests that in its opinion the continuation of the pregnancy of the woman would or might endanger her life or her health. It is important to emphasize that the danger for the pregnant woman's life or health is the only criterion in this matter.

If it is proven medically that financial, social or other circumstances endangered or would probably endanger the mother's life or health, a certificate may be given; but the decision must be based on reasons of real danger to life or health, and not on social or financial factors as such.

What is involved is a medical decision, a conscientious medical assessment of whether there is in fact reason to fear that continued pregnancy would or probably would endanger a pregnant woman's life or health.

Enforcement of these provisions is the responsibility of the attorney general in each province. In other words, he is responsible for investigating any alleged violation, and to initiate proceedings under the law.

As far as we are concerned, it is clear that the justification to practice abortion inserted by Parliament in the act is grounded on life and health, and I believe we should rely on expert judgment in this area. If medical committees accept the responsibility and seriously endeavour to determine whether the criteria established by Parliament are met in a particular case, the objective will achieved. The government shall continue to monitor the carrying out of the act, in the context of questions raised by the abortion problem, in order to decide whether improvements are in order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock.

PROPOSED REFERENCE OF FREIGHT RATE INCREASES TO CANADIAN TRANSPORT COMMISSION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43 concerning further freight rate increases which are being phased in by our railways and which will have an impact on many sectors of the economy in eastern Canada. This action by the railways, following on the heels of a 25 per cent rate increase which already has had adverse effects on this region, threatens to have further economic implications on an already depressed region. Since the railways will be permitted to implement this increase unless intervention takes place, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall):

That the Minister of Transport take the necessary steps to have the matter referred to the Canadian Transport Commission for their consideration and evaluation.

Mr. Speaker: A motion proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43 cannot be debated without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

STRIKE OF LONGSHOREMEN IN QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO ENSURE RETURN TO WORK—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion dealing with an urgent and important matter.

Since the longshoremen's strike in the Quebec ports as well as the inspectors' strike are entirely paralyzing the grain shipment, which does considerable harm to Quebec breeders, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That this House consider immediately the steps to be taken so that Canadian dockers will no longer be subjected to foreign orders and that the refitting inspectors return to work right away.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such a consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Since there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

AIR CANADA

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE INQUIRY INTO ACCOUNTING SYSTEM NOT PRECLUDED BY TERMS OF REFERENCE

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. Since there seems to be some possible confusion or discrepancies in the statements made by the Acting Prime Minister yesterday and the statements made by the Minister of Transport concerning the terms of reference for the inquiry into the affairs of Air Canada, would the Prime Minister assure the House that the Minister of Transport's discussions with Judge Estey will not preclude the possibility of an immediate inquiry into the accounting system of Air Canada and ancillary matters relating to finance?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to add to what the Minister of Transport himself said in the House yesterday.

Mr. MacKay: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the right hon. gentleman assure the House, as I felt the Acting Prime Minister did yesterday, that since many other aspects of Air Canada's operations have been the subject of frequent complaint, often well documented, he will consider other inquiries if he does not give Judge Estey wide powers pursuant to this particular inquiry?

Mr. Trudeau: I take it that is a representation, Mr. Speaker. I will see that the minister reads it.

LAY-OFFS AT CHARLES DE GAULLE AIRPORT—MEASURES TO IMPROVE SERVICE

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Yesterday I asked the Minister of Transport a question concerning the possibility of 82 per cent of Air Canada staff being laid off at Charles de Gaulle airport and the Minister of Transport undertook to report to the House.

Today, the staff went on strike. I want to know whether the Prime Minister can indicate to the House first of all, if it has become government policy that Air Canada management lay off its staff with a view to assigning its operations to another company, in this case to the "Union des transports aériens de Paris" and second, what does the government intend to do to facilitate the return of passengers who are held up because of the cancelled flight of the DC-8 to Canada which was occasioned by this strike?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of this problem, but I thank the hon. member for raising it and I shall see to it that the department provides an answer.

PROPOSED TAKEOVER OF ARGUS CORPORATION BY POWER CORPORATION—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REPORT OF GOVERNMENT INVESTIGATOR

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. When about a month ago the Prime Minister said the government was concerned about the possibility of a takeover of Argus Corporation by the Power Corporation, I asked him whether he would investigate it and he said that was being done. Since at the same time the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs announced that Mr. Robert Bertrand, the chief anti-trust investigator of the government, was going to embark upon an investigation of this specific takeover bid, would the Prime Minister tell the House whether this investigation has been completed and, if so, would the government make the report available to members of the House?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the investigation must have been an in-department study. I do not know its exact nature, but I can tell the House that my decision announced in the House yesterday afternoon was the result of discussion of the matter in cabinet, and particularly discussion between the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and myself.

PROPOSED TAKEOVER OF ARGUS CORPORATION BY POWER CORPORATION—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON GOVERNMENT ATTITUDE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question relating to the Prime Minister's assertion in the House yesterday and subsequently at a press conference that the government's position on the Power-Argus takeover, as well as any others that may take place before the royal commission brings forth its findings, was a neutral one. Will he clarify that position in light of the judgment of some that by saying he would not prevent the takeover of Argus by Power the conclusion one could reach is that this is, in fact, a go ahead signal to the Power Corporation to make and succeed with such a takeover bid during the next 12 months because they would clearly understand that the government would do nothing?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member says this is a judgment by some, but obviously it is not the judgment by others. It seems to me that kind of judgment would be arrived at by some very tortuous logic. The position of this government is that when we see nothing illegal and we have no policy against a thing, the government should not intervene just for the purpose of stopping it, which would probably be the hon. member's position.

PROPOSED TAKEOVER OF ARGUS CORPORATION BY POWER CORPORATION—REASON GOVERNMENT COULD NOT TAKE ACTION SIMILAR TO THAT IN CASES OF STEVE ROMAN AND HOME OIL

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, in view of the brilliant logic of the government in the past that led it to conclude that, in the cases of proposed actions in the uranium field by Mr. Steve Roman and in the petroleum field by Home Oil, the government should announce a moral position in advance, indicating that legislation might be forthcoming if a certain course of action were taken, could the Prime Minister, by whatever process of logic he wants, explain to the House why the government could not have done the same in the present circumstances concerning the Power-Argus Corporation situation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): For the very simple reason, Mr. Speaker, that in the case of Home Oil the government had and was developing a position on foreign ownership, and in the case of uranium the government had jurisdiction over the area and the legal instrument to act. This involved a matter of defining with some precision our policy for the long term. In the matter of concentrations of economic power, as I explained to the House yesterday, there are some advantages to the Canadian economy in such concentrations, particularly when it comes to competing with large multinationals who operate in Canada, or in other markets in which we are operating. It is because of this, that there may be advantages and disadvantages to this kind of a takeover, the government announced the royal commission and remained, as I said, neutral by not interfering in an area in which it had no legal obligation to act.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON INQUIRY INTO INTERPOL—NATURE OF INFORMATION TRANSMITTED BY ORGANIZATION

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Solicitor General.

Considering that Senator Joseph Montoya, Chairman of the America treasury grant sub-committee, is carrying out a thorough investigation into the financing of Interpol and its activities within the United States, an organization which is jointly financed by the United States and other member countries including Canada, can the minister advise the House whether his department is also investigating this international organization which operates in Canada and over which the Canadian government has no control whatever?

[English]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, my department is not taking part in any such studies. The RCMP is a member of Interpol which has its headquarters in Paris, France. Interpol is merely a centre for the exchange of information and is not an operational agency. I will look into the other aspects of this question.

Mr. Rondeau: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Is the minister aware that while Interpol disclaims any access to privileged information in Canada, it has nevertheless access to all facilities and information of Canadian police forces and may therefore disclose this information to Communist countries which are members of this organization. My question is this: can the minister tell the House whether he is aware of the sort of information which may be passed on to Communist countries through Interpol?

[English]

Mr. Allmand: As far as I know, Mr. Speaker, there are no communist members of Interpol, except perhaps Yugoslavia. As I mentioned to the hon. member, Interpol is an organism for the interchange of information in respect of known criminals. The RCMP will provide information to other countries in respect of criminals who may have had some operations in Canada, and those other countries will provide information to us in the same manner. I know of no basis of information that would support the question asked by the hon. member.

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a supplementary question.

Can the minister assure the House that the information available to Interpol is not passed to other members of that agency and that the RCMP exercises control over the information given to Interpol?

[English]

Mr. Allmand: I will look into that question, Mr. Speaker. I think I should point out to the House that the RCMP have some members of their force working at Interpol headquarters in Paris and the President of Interpol is a former commissioner of the RCMP.

ENERGY

NATURAL GAS—REASONS ADVANCED BY UNITED STATES FOR CHANGE IN TIMING OF INCREASE IN EXPORT PRICE

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the fact the minister said that because of the representations by the United States government at a meeting held in Ottawa Tuesday morning the government will probably reconsider the timing and the price in respect of the export of natural gas and change the August 1 date, would the minister tell us what were the new items brought to the attention of the government by the government of the United States which caused the government to change its mind in this matter.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The United States representatives wished a longer term phasing-in of the price increases in respect of natural gas.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is again directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Could the minister tell us whether in the course of these conversations, either directly or indirectly, the United States representatives suggested that with the change in price proposed by the Canadian government there might be some type of retaliation either in the form of capital flows, export quotas on beef and so on brought into play.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, my understanding is there was never so much as a hint of this.

IMMIGRATION

DECISION OF UNITED STATES TO ADMIT SOUTH VIETNAMESE—POSSIBLE REPRESENTATIONS CANADA FOLLOW SAME COURSE

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In light of the announcement by the United States immigration and naturalization service that it will admit a maximum of 50,000 high-risk South Vietnamese to the United States has the United States made any representation to Canada to also accept a number of South Vietnamese refugees.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker.

INQUIRY WHETHER VIETNAMESE GIVEN REFUGEE STATUS

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, in respect of those who are leaving South Viet Nam, could the minister tell us whether or not the department considers these people as refugees or whether any statement has been made by the UN High Commissioner for Refugees which would indicate that there is status given these people as international refugees.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated that people wishing to leave Indo China or South Viet Nam can apply to come to Canada under the refugee provisions of the immigration regulations and would be dealt with on an individual basis and judged accordingly. With regard to the second part of the question, the most recent information I have had from the office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees is that there has not been a formal declaration of a refugee status for people leaving either Cambodia or South Viet Nam, but we are in almost weekly contact with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, and indeed one of my officials will be in New York tomorrow talking with him on that subject.

POSSIBLE USE OF ARMED FORCES AIRCRAFT TO TRANSPORT VIETNAMESE CITIZENS TO CANADA

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. If Canadian armed forces aircraft are used to evacuate Canadians from South Vietnam will these aircraft also be used to transport South Vietnamese citizens if these citizens would be capable of receiving UN status as international refugees?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, we have already used Canadian forces planes to evacuate Canadian personnel from Saigon as far as Hong Kong. We would respond to requests from other departments to make use of these aircraft for other purposes.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—SUGGESTION PRIME MINISTER USE PRESTIGE OF HIS OFFICE TO OBTAIN ACCEPTANCE OF CONSENSUS PROGRAM

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister who looks lonely over there. I should like to ask him, now that his consensus program has reached a crucial stage, whether the government has reached a decision that the Prime Minister should use the prestige of his office and persuasive power to try to persuade the principals in the economy to adopt the Prime Minister's consensus program. If so, is the meeting of the labour leaders on May 7 to be postponed, so that the Prime Minister can attempt, on his return to intervene there?

● (1420)

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should explain that the Prime Minister has had to leave the House to participate in some of the activities in connection with the visit of His Royal Highness The Prince of Wales.

An hon. Member: All the royalists have left.

Mr. Sharp: As to the question itself, the Prime Minister and other members of the government have been participating in the development of the policy consensus. I do not think it will be necessary for him to abandon his plans to intervene in this way, but I can assure the House that he is fully in support of the activities of all the ministers in the field.

INFLATION—PERSON IN CHARGE OF CONSENSUS PROGRAM IN ABSENCE OF PRIME MINISTER AND MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I was not asking that the Prime Minister abandon his plans but rather whether the government has any plans in this connection. With the Prime Minister going away and the Minister of Finance out of the country, perhaps the Acting Prime Minister could indicate to the House who will be in charge of the consensus program at this crucial stage, will it be the Acting Minister of Finance or the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance? I got the impression yesterday that the Acting Minister of Finance is pretty busy trying to figure out a way to get dredging done in the country.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): I would just like to assure the Leader of the Opposition that the process of the development of the government's consensus program is continuing, and we see no reason to think that it will be delayed by the absence of the Prime Minister or of the Minister of Finance at the present time.

Mr. Stanfield: I would like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether it is his hope and the hope of his colleagues that business and labour in this country will take the consensus program more seriously than they themselves seem to.

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker.

OLYMPIC GAMES

POSSIBLE CONTINGENCY PLANS TO SUPPLEMENT LOSS FROM SALE OF COINS

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. Because of the fact that the Olympic revenue may be short by some $75 million or more as a direct result of the Olympic coin program, thus further adding to the already incredible deficit of Montreal, COJO and Quebec, can the Postmaster General advise the House of the contingency plans, which I know the government has, to supplement the loss in revenue to the Olympics?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The figure quoted in the newspaper today of $100 million revenue from the coin program is precisely the figure that was given before the Quebec legislature some months ago. So, we are short $75 million only in anticipation that we would have sold coins worth $175 million. In so far as the second question is concerned, I am hopeful that the government will be advancing acceptable legislation in the not too distant future.

PROPOSAL COMMUNIST CHINA PARTICIPATE IN GAMES RATHER THAN TAIWAN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact Communist China has approached the International Olympic Committee with the proposal that it be accepted to the 1976 Olympics on the condition that Taiwan, which has a fully recognized national Olympic committee, be expelled, and because of the fact that these games will of course be held in this country and the federal government is in fact responsible for deciding who will be permitted into this country, can the minister advise, therefore, whether or not the Canadian government will support the participation of both nations at the games and, if not, what is the government's position in that regard?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, these decisions have to be made by the International Olympic Committee. We are the host for the Olympic games but we do not decide who participates.

THE MINISTRY

INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBILITY OF CABINET CHANGES

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister.

An hon. Member: Welcome back.

An hon. Member: What a beautiful tan.

Mr. Hees: It is nice to be missed, Mr. Speaker.

In view of the announcement in the last 24 hours of the shuffle of six deputy ministers in an attempt to make the operation of the government more effective, is it the intention of the Prime Minister, when he returns from the south, to make a similar type of announcement regarding members of his cabinet? It is well-known that the ineffectiveness of the government is due to the operations of the ministers and not the deputy ministers.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is not one of the prerogatives of the Acting Prime Minister.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW BOARD

POSSIBILITY OF ENLARGING POWERS TO DEAL WITH PROPOSED ARGUS-POWER CORPORATION TAKEOVER

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister, in connection with the announcement yesterday regarding the royal commission. Before deciding on establishing a royal commission, did the government consider the possibility of enlarging the responsibilities of the Foreign Investment Review Board in order to put Canadian mergers under scrutiny? It seems to me that that could have been done, and the question of the Argus-Power merger could have been dealt with effectively.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): It seems to me that it would have been most improper to have amended the statute, which was directed to the problem of foreign takeovers, or potentially to the question of foreign investment, to apply to purely domestic matters.

Mr. Saltsman: Since the government did not feel it had the authority to amend or to send that as a term of reference to the board, did the government consider coming to the House of Commons and asking the House to amend those terms of reference so that there could be a very quick referral of the Argus-Power situation, rather than waiting for a royal commission to report, which would probably be after the fact?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I think the Chair might have taken some exception to amending an Act, which is designed to deal with foreign takeovers and foreign investment, to include mergers within Canada. Moreover, generally speaking, I think it would be more appropriate to proceed under other legislation, and if we do receive recommendations to that effect and adopt them, we will have no hesitation in bringing legislation before the House.

Mr. Saltsman: Is the Acting Prime Minister saying to the House that he is going to have a different set of rules, or is it the intention of the government to have a different set of rules regarding takeovers, the question of concentration in size as it affects Canadian corporations, as against foreign corporations?

Mr. Sharp: There are various approaches to this. There is no doubt whatever that foreign takeovers can produce mergers and concentrations of power. Those factors are taken into account when decisions are made whether to permit foreign takeovers to occur, but I think that the two issues are separate and should be treated separately.

PROPOSAL TERMS OF REFERENCE OF BRYCE ROYAL COMMISSION INCLUDE CROWN CORPORATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Acting Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Woolliams: I am glad to see that the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings and I receive the same response from the House. I always like to see this equality.

Coming back to my question I would like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether, in light of the fact that the government is setting up a royal commission to look into corporate power—

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Oh, oh!

Mr. Woolliams: I wonder if the hon. member for St. Boniface would keep quiet just for a moment.

I would like to ask if the royal commission is prepared to look into Crown corporations. I ask this particularly in light of the financial debacle of Air Canada and the fact that Air Canada and some other Crown corporations have in the past—this has been brought to light in our committees—had ambitions of various takeovers, and they are, of course, corporate bodies, the same as any other corporation.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I read the terms of reference of the royal commission, one of which concerns the nature and role of major concentrations of corporate power in Canada, Crown corporations are not excluded.

● (1430)

Mr. Broadbent: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby on a point of order.

Mr. Woolliams: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: One supplementary question for the hon. member for Calgary North.

Mr. Woolliams: I take it that the terms of reference do include Crown corporations, without equivocation?

Mr. Baldwin: Ask your neighbour, Mitch.

Mr. Broadbent: The government and the Prime Minister—

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, there was so much noise in the Chamber that I do not know whether the Acting Prime Minister heard my question so I should like to put it again. Do the terms of reference, without equivocation, cover Crown corporations as well as other corporate bodies in Canada? We would like that clarified.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, in my previous answer I pointed out one of the terms of reference is:

> ... to inquire into, report upon, and make recommendations concerning:
> (a) the nature and role of major concentrations of corporate power in Canada;

In so far as Crown corporations are corporations and are an aspect of corporate power, there is nothing to prevent them being inquired into. The hon. gentleman will realize, however, that those under public control are in a rather different position from those that are privately owned.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby on a point of order.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, since the Acting Prime Minister just quoted from what he called the terms of reference of the royal commission, I wonder if he would be good enough to table that so that all members of the House could see it and also have it appended to today's Hansard?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I only have it in one of the official languages but I can get a copy in French as well as in English. Perhaps, I might have permission to table the copy in English now.

COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

SUBJECTS ON AGENDA WHICH MIGHT AFFECT CANADA—INFORMALITY OF DISCUSSIONS

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, my question was for the Prime Minister but since he has left I will put it to the Acting Prime Minister. With respect to the forthcoming Commonwealth conference to be held in the Caribbean, could the Acting Prime Minister inform the House and the country what areas of discussion are contemplated for that conference which might affect Canada and whether it is going to be an informal discussion with the major concern, as reported in today's press—how does one fire a cabinet minister?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think one of the great contributions of the Prime Minister to Commonwealth discussions is the degree of informality that he has introduced. That was very desirable—

Mr. Hees: Like sliding down a bannister!

Mr. Sharp: And it would be highly desirable that the informality of these meetings should be continued. I cannot say if there is any agenda but I would hope it would be as informal as possible so that there is a free exchange of views.

Mr. Hees: What is he going to do? A handstand on the city hall steps?

TRANSPORT

REQUEST MINISTER DISALLOW PROPOSED FREIGHT RATE INCREASES

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Minister of Transport if there is one in the House today. On February 24, the minister said he was opposed to further horizontal increases in freight rates. Noting that the railways filed an increase set for May 5 which would bring the total percentage increase in rail freight rates to nearly 50 per cent in the first five months of this year, could the minister set an example by exercising the power and authority of his office or the authority of the government in overturning the CTC ruling which might uphold this further increase in freight rates?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Acting Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in replying for the Minister of Transport, I am not altogether certain that authority for railway freight rates rests with the minister except, I believe, in response to some kind of written submission or complaint from users or other citizens. I shall be glad to convey the question to the Minister of Transport, however, and try for a more detailed answer later.

FARE INCREASES BY AIRLINES AND BY CANADIAN PACIFIC FOR COMMUTER SERVICE—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): A supplementary question. On Friday April 18, the minister stated that he would ask Air Canada and CPAir to reassess their proposals to raise domestic air fares some 8 per cent to 15 per cent with some rising as high as 61 per cent, to be effective on May 19, and that he would also ask CP Rail, which filed a 26 per cent increase in Montreal commuter fares to reassess their position. In order to assure that these different modes of transport will heed the words of the minister, could the acting minister ask him to consult with other members of cabinet with a view to putting some kind of clout in this position and that of the government to show that they are prepared to do battle on inflation and defer these increases where they do not meet or are not consistent with the government's attitude toward inflation?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Acting Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am quite certain that the representations to which the Minister of Transport referred last week have been transmitted to the airlines. The hon. member also involved commuter fares in his question, but I am sure he knows there is a difference in approach in the filing of fares with regard to air traffic as opposed to rail, so the approach must differ in each case. I can say for myself and for the Minister of Transport that we will make the strongest possible representations to the transport companies with a view to getting them to conform, as we hope others will, with the government's objectives regarding inflation and increasing prices.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, which deals with his two colleagues, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt and the hon. member for Langelier who are wandering around western Canada now. Can the Acting Prime Minister indicate which of those two gentlemen will be speaking for the government on questions of transportation?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I did not understand the purport of the hon. gentleman's question. Perhaps he would put it in a little clearer language.

Mr. Baldwin: With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I am talking about the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Transport. When these two gentlemen make statements at variance with each other, which is speaking for the government on questions of transport?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I am sure I could answer that question better if I had some evidence of the contradiction.

Mr. Baldwin: Which speaks for Transport?

STRIKE OF LONGSHOREMEN IN QUEBEC—MEASURES TO ASSURE SUPPLY OF FEED GRAIN

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I want to put a question to the Acting Prime Minister.

In view of the longshoremen's strike and, more recently, the checkers' strike which have been paralysing the movement of grain in the ports of Quebec, since also these strikes have caused irreparable prejudice to Quebec cattle producers and since grain handlers are not on strike, may I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether immediate measures will be taken to give easier access to the ports to grain handlers, so that they may proceed to the loading of the trucks which supply mills and through them farmers, because this matter is extremely serious and, on behalf of Quebec farm producers, I would like to ask the Acting Prime Minister to assure that this matter will receive serious consideration by the Cabinet.

[English]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may answer the hon. member's question. We realize how very serious this particular problem is, and it is the government's intention to take as immediate action as possible to resolve this dispute.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a supplementary question.

As the Minister of Labour probably knows, injunctions of the court have been issued to clear the access to elevators and these orders were not respected. Can the Minister of Labour say whether discussions were held between his department and the provincial department, with whom lies the enforcement of the injunctions so that they can be respected?

[English]

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, those who have taken out the injunctions are considering the necessary legal remedies that can be taken against those disobeying them. I am not aware of precisely what happened, but I know that type of consideration has been given and is being given.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): A last supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Since the raison d'être of a government is to set order where there is disorder, may I ask the Minister of Labour whether this important matter relating to the problem caused by the strikes in the harbours of Quebec has been discussed by the cabinet, whether he considers this problem of national interest, and whether an immediate solution will be advocated to settle it?

[English]

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Subject to proper consent being given, Mr. Speaker, we intend to move ahead today with necessary legislation that we hope will resolve this dispute. I think this is indicative of how seriously this government regards this particular problem.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—POSSIBILITY OF LEGISLATION FREEZING PRICES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, in the Prime Minister's absence may I direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. Considering Canada's constantly increasing inflation, does the government intend to back up its bid for price and wage guidelines with legislation which would force business to freeze prices or roll them back. If so, when can we expect the government's prices justification bill?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that particular subject is under discussion in connection with the discussions that are going on between the government and various economic sectors.

Mr. Stanfield: So, something is going on.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY OF STRIKE OF NURSES—CONTINGENCY PLANS TO PROVIDE SERVICE TO REMOTE AREAS

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare I direct my question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Given the remote location of many northern nursing stations and the difficulty of supplying alternative services in the event of an early strike of federal nurses, a strike which could come as early as next week, will the minister indicate if a contingency plan has been developed to ensure that medical services will be available on a continuing basis to these remote northern communities.

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I will have to pursue this matter with my colleagues. I understand the majority of these nurses are in designated positions. I assume that would cover our nurses in the north.

ADVERTISEMENT OF SAFEWAYS TRAVEL AGENCY CONCERNING PASSPORTS AND CITIZENSHIP—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State may I direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. I have in my hand the April issue of a magazine called Indo-Canadian. On page 5 appears an advertisement by Safeways Travel Agency which is laid out in part as follows:

We Arrange Passport:—

Canadian—4 days.

Citizenship: Canadian—30 days.

Mr. McCleave: And all for $5.

[Mr. Munro (Hamilton East).]

Mr. Friesen: Does that tavel agency have a special arrangement with the government. If so, will the Acting Prime Minister tell the House what it is.

An hon. Member: A Liberal lawyer.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the question is, no, there is no such arrangement.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, may I direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. If there is not an arrangement with the government, will the minister investigate this travel agency, to see what kind of breach of advertising ethics is involved in this particular advertisement.

An hon. Member: Lay a charge.

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the officials of my department are already looking at this matter and, as I understand, they are exploring avenues to reimburse people who have been adversely affected. As soon as I have further details I will communicate with the hon. member.

Is the minister aware of the publication of the book entitled "Bended Elbow", by a resident of the Kenora area, one Eleanore Jacobson? Has the minister examined the distribution of this book from the point of view of laying charges under the existing hate literature legislation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Peter Kelly, the president of the Grand Council of Treaty III, gave me a copy of the book. We share his concern. We are looking into the matter, to see what action should be taken.

POST OFFICE

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE MINISTER INVOLVED IN NEGOTIATIONS WITH EMPLOYEES

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. In view of reservations being expressed publicly by representatives of both the Letter Carriers Union and the Canadian Union of Postal Workers with respect to the inadequacies of Treasury Board as the sole bargaining agent in the current sensitive contract negotiations, can the Postmaster General assure the House that he is continuing his involvement in the negotiations, so that a direct communications channel is established between employer and employee in these delicate negotiations?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, any mandate which Post Office negotiators have is subject, of course, to Treasury Board approval, as that mandate involves a monetary package. But, according to the spirit of co-operation which prevails in this party, direct negotiations are taking place between negotiators of the Post Office and the Letter Carriers Union, so that the union should have no misgivings about our direct involvement in these negotiations.

Let me tell the House that I appreciate the responsibility of the Letter Carriers Union, which yesterday decided even though they are in a legal position to strike to return to work, at my suggestion, in return for the assurance that we will continue bargaining later this day. I intend to see that that particular promise on my part is respected.

MONTREAL—PROBLEM OF CASUAL EMPLOYEES—MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): May I direct a supplementary question to the Postmaster General, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister inform the House if he is maintaining continuous contact on the issue of casual employees and the suspensions arising therefrom at the Montreal post office.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the other, independent issue, namely, the whole problem of casuals across Canada which is principally a problem particularly for the Canadian Union of Postal-Workers, will be negotiated at the national level when we begin that round of bargaining. The local problem of casuals in Montreal is really not a problem concerning casuals but a problem as to how this difference of opinion which periodically arises is to be resolved. I simply repeat, today, that so long as there are militants in the Post Office who think the proper way of resolving this difference of opinion is through violence, they will continue to be suspended indefinitely as quickly as we note such type of action which I am sure the majority of workers find distasteful.

FISHERIES

POSSIBLE CONTAMINATION OF FISH RESOURCES BY MYXOSOMA CEREBRALIS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of the Environment. Has the minister, or officials of her department, been in contact with Ontario and Michigan state officials concerning the possibility of contamination of Ontario and Canadian fish resources by the disease myxosoma cerebralis which has all but destroyed the Michigan state hatcheries program?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the details of this. Perhaps the hon. member might direct his question to the Minister of State in charge of fisheries.

Mr. Darling: Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of State responsible for fisheries. May I repeat it, in case he was not listening. Has the minister, or officials of his department, been in contact with Ontario and Michigan state officials concerning the possibility of contamination of Ontario and Canadian fish resources by the disease myxosoma cerebralis which has all but destroyed the Michigan state hatcheries program?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, I have asked for further information on this. I will endeavour to give it to the hon. member within the next 24 hours.

Mr. Darling: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister please inform the House what the federal responsibilities are concerning contamination in a case such as this where natural fish movements across international boundaries could lead to contamination and eventual destruction of entire hatchery and fish populations?

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, the problem of disease in hatcheries is one of complicated jurisdiction at which we are looking right now.

ALLEGED HERRING FISHING BY FOREIGN VESSELS IN TERRITORIAL WATERS

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State (Fisheries).

Could he answer the question I asked yesterday concerning the problems created by the French, violating our territorial waters in the Gulf of St. Lawrence?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, I have been able to control the facts respecting that situation, and I can inform the hon. member who asked me a question on that matter that, indeed, there are French trawlers in the gulf, because of the agreement providing for a progressive reduction up to 1986, and allowing French trawlers to fish, provided they do not increase their fishing effort.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF TERMS OF REFERENCE AND REPORT OF INVESTIGATION INTO SEAFARERS' INTERNATIONAL UNION

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. ● (1450)

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): I am considering the matter. I am not ready to do that yet.

RENTAL OF SPACE IN CHAMBLY BUILDING—PAYMENT OF RENT BEFORE OCCUPANCY

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question, too, is directed to the Solicitor General. Is the hon. gentleman aware that the RCMP has rented seven floors of office space in the new Chambly Building at the corner of Cooper and Bank Streets and that though the premises will not be ready until November 1 they started to pay full rent as of February 1 amounting to between $600,000 and $700,000? Is this an example of government restraint as practiced by his department?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): I was not aware that the RCMP was renting that space.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Allmand: I would point out that under his terms of reference the Solicitor General is not responsible for the day to day administration of the RCMP.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: I can say that the RCMP is a part of the government which exercises very great restraint in the spending of public funds.

FINANCE

INTERVENTION OF BANK OF CANADA TO SUPPORT CANADIAN DOLLAR—POSSIBLE CHANGE IN GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Peter Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Minister of Finance. In view of the report that Bank of Canada traders officially intervened in the foreign exchange market on Monday, reversing a sharp decline in the value of the Canadian dollar, will the minister advise us whether the Bank of Canada is implementing government policy having regard to the statement by the Prime Minister in the House on the same day that the Canadian dollar was floating freely?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Acting Minister of Finance): I think it is well recognized—it has been stated on a number of occasions—that the dollar is free in the sense of being subject to long term movements in the international marketplace. However, to avoid sharp fluctuations there is intervention by the Bank of Canada periodically.

Mr. Bawden: In view of the fact that this was a fairly massive intervention, one which did reverse the decline of the dollar, would it be true to say there has been a change of policy and that Canadian currency is not now floating freely?

Mr. Drury: I think that would be a wrong conclusion to draw.

[Mr. Lawrence.]

SUGGESTED CHANGE FROM FIVE TO ONE YEAR LEASES TO PERMIT MOBILE HOME OWNERS TO QUALIFY FOR $500 GRANT

Mr. Ken Hurlburt (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for Urban Affairs. It arises from the fact that many mobile home owners are faced with signing five year leases in order to receive the $500 grant under CMHC provisions. Will the hon. gentleman tell us whether this clause could be amended to read "one year"? This would prevent discrimination against first time trailer home owners.

Hon. Barney Danson (Secretary of State for Urban Affairs): The hon. member has drawn attention to one of the problems which has arisen. The five year land lease requirement was necessary to establish regular residence. The intention is, of course, to avoid subsidizing the purchase of what are strictly travel trailers. I cannot give the hon. member the assurance he seeks right now, but I am looking into the matter.

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): With mobile homes presently consitituting 13 per cent of all residential housing in Canada, is the minister considering regulations to encourage the purchase of such homes?

Mr. Danson: We already have measures designed for that purpose. I consider mobile and manufactured homes to be a major factor, particularly in some parts of the country, and as a very real answer, temporary in cases, to some people's housing needs.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of National Revenue): The answer is, no. I am not aware of any difficulties which preclude people from putting their tax returns in the mail, which is the date that governs.

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. Has the minister checked to determine whether any illegal immigrants are working as cleaners in buildings under the supervision of the Department of Public Works or whether any illegal immigrants are employed by building cleaning contractors working for his department?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not run such a check.

BOURDIGNON BUILDING, VANCOUVER—REQUEST FOR REPORT OF INVESTIGATION OF ADVERTISEMENT FOR LEASE

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. In reply to a question addressed to him several weeks ago he undertook to look into the matter of the calling for tenders for space in Vancouver for the offices of the National Revenue Department, taxation division. I should like to ask the minister what action has been taken as a result of the investigation, since there seems to have been no result at the Vancouver end.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): I regret to say I do not have the notes with me today, but I will be glad to bring them tomorrow. I thought the subject had been abandoned.

Mr. Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): No.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

NUMBER OF REPORTERS ASSIGNED TO PRIME MINISTER'S TRIP TO COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE—SUGGESTED REDUCTION

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, my question was intended for the Prime Minister or the Secretary of State but in the absence of those two members, may I direct it to the Acting Prime Minister? It being now some time since the fact was first mentioned in the House that as many as 22 CBC personnel were asked to cover the Prime Minister's forthcoming journey to the Caribbean, which exceeds coverage by the other sections of the news media by 500 or 600 per cent, can the Acting Prime Minister tell the House whether steps have been taken to curtail this large expenditure of public funds to a level in keeping with the already established news value of the Prime Minister's trips.

Mr. Hees: One man!

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): The CBC makes its decisions in accordance with what it considers newsworthy. A trip by the Prime Minister of Canada to a British Commonwealth meeting in the Caribbean is considered big news in some parts of this country even if it isn't big news to the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cossitt: One further question to the Acting Prime Minister on the same subject. Is the government attempting to use the publicly-owned CBC as a means of propping up its own and the Prime Minister's sagging image?

Speaker's Ruling—Bill C-44

Mr. Sharp: Since the premise to the question is false, it of course requires no answer from anybody on this side of the House. But I suggest the hon. member should not ask so many silly questions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cossitt: A question of privilege, Mr. Speaker!

THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT, THE SALARIES ACT AND THE PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARIES ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING SALARIES AND ALLOWANCES—SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: Yesterday, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) raised a point of order in connection with Bill C-44. The importance of the point of order was amply demonstrated by the rather full discussion which took place in the House and in addition, I hope, by my efforts to come to a decision by eight o'clock. That was not possible, but as a result of further study and examination of the question I am now able to inform the House of my decision on the matter.

The procedural questions in connection with some of the amendments made to the bill in the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates are important inasmuch as they involve two or three fundamental principles of our procedure, not least of which, of course, is the question of the financial initiative of the Crown. Another question involves the relationship between proceedings in a standing committee and the Chair, and the third involves the relationship between the committee and report stages of legislation.

Dealing with the first point, namely, the financial initiative of the Crown, it is obviously one of our most basic and fundamental procedural principles that only a minister of the Crown may originate legislation which proposes a charge upon the revenue, and then only when last legislation is accompanied by a recommendation from the Governor General. No amendment can exceed the terms of that recommendation, no matter by whom it is moved, and no action taken by the House, by any member of the House, by any standing committee, and least of all by the Chair, must in any way weaken that very basic and fundamental principle of our practice.

The foundation for the point of order raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is that subclause (2) of clause 2 of Bill C-44, which was adopted in the standing committee, firstly establishes commissioners who will review future salary changes, secondly advances the implementation of the indexing process from the date originally contemplated, and thirdly expands the concept involved in the indexing itself, none of which was contemplated in the original recommendation, and that therefore the amendment ought to be held to be out of order. No serious argument to the contrary was advanced, and in any case, even if there had been one I would have no difficulty finding the point well taken. In my view the subclause is out of order.

The difficult question, however, relates to the action that ought to be taken at this time. In this regard I must stress that the circumstances are unique. There are precedents regarding defects in bills as a result of amendments in committee, but most relate to proceedings in committee of the whole or to other circumstances in which the report stage as we now know it did not exist or was not operable.

Since the report stage is a relatively recent proceeding under our rules, its precise nature is still a matter of some disagreement. There is no disagreement, however, that the report stage is one of reconsideration of events that have taken place in the standing committee. I am sure hon. members are well aware of the extensive powers relating to the retabling of amendments that have been procedurally or otherwise rejected or which have been passed. The power to propose amendments at the report stage and to cause the House to reconsider those questions amply stamps the report stage as one of reconsideration of the events which took place in the standing committee.

There remains the question, however, whether it is a separate stage from the report stage or whether it is a continuation of that stage which begins in the standing committee and which is not finalized until the motion for concurrence is dealt with in the House. Furthermore, if through the process of reconsideration the report stage allows, in effect, an appeal to the House of decisions taken in the standing committee, even to the point as is mentioned in Standing Order 75(6), of permitting the filing of a new financial recommendation—although here, again, I accept the argument that the recommendation now listed at the report stage is in respect of amendments which will be dealt with at the actual report stage. Nevertheless, if in fact the report stage is an opportunity for appeal and for reconsideration of decisions taken in standing committees, then it might be asked, why should the House or the Chair concern itself at all with proposed or alleged procedural irregularities in the standing committee? And if the Chair or the House should concern itself with those problems, what about the timing? Is it appropriate that they should be considered after we have embarked upon the report stage by the actual filing of amendments, or must it be done prior to that point?

Obviously, I am not answering those questions; I am only putting them forward to demonstrate that we have never addressed ourselves to a precise understanding of the nature of the report stage and of its relationship to the committee stage of a bill. I also want to stress that it has been suggested that I send the bill back to the standing committee for further consideration. I make it clear that I have no authority to do so. That is a decision of the House, not a decision of the Chair. That decision may still be taken on third reading. Secondly, it is suggested that if it did go back to the committee, it would have to be accompanied by a direction to the committee to somehow cure its own procedural irregularities. I should not like, and I am sure the House would not like, to have the task of trying to frame that direction, and in any case, if it were a good idea in principle, which I feel it is not, it would be most difficult to find the actual wording.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Finally, this is an extraordinary situation because we have already arrived at the notice of the report stage. Amendments filed by both sides of the House including an amended recommendation, make it clear to me, that the House—that is to say, the whole House—is about to embark upon consideration of those very questions which we would be proposing to ask the standing committee to consider. Therefore, it does not seem useful to suggest that the matter be sent back to the standing committee to consider the very things that the House itself is about to consider.

I do not have the power to order the bill sent back to the standing committee, and I would not do so even if I had the power. For the same reason, I cannot justify simply holding that the bill cannot proceed and then leaving it to the House to try to frame that sort of order.

I wish to make it clear, first of all, that having already embarked upon the report stage and the filing of these notices of amendments and the amended recommendation, no precedent can be taken from this circumstance as to what will happen in the future if such an argument about a procedural irregularity in a committee is made before we actually get to this point. Secondly, there is a necessity for clarifying the very nature of the report stage, the relationship to the committee stage, and also the proper procedure which must be followed if objections of this sort are going to be taken in the future, and particularly in regard to the timing that must be involved. I look for, and accept, an undertaking of the House leaders that this matter will be considered in the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization at the earliest possible opportunity.

In these circumstances, which I regard as singular, I reiterate that I find the amendment made in the committee, being subclause (2) of clause 2 at page 2 of Bill C-44, in that it has exceeded the original recommendation that accompanied the bill, out of order. Secondly, I reject the notion of returning the bill to the standing committee. Thirdly, however, I cannot allow the bill to proceed, knowing, as I have found, that it contains procedural irregularities.

Therefore, on the basis of precedents which I would be pleased to provide for members who are interested in examining them, I take another course, which is to direct—and I hereby do so—that the procedurally unacceptable amendment, being subclause (2) of clause 2 of Bill C-44, be stripped from the bill and that the bill be reprinted as otherwise amended and reported by the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates; that notices of report stage amendments now filed be removed from the order paper; and that upon the filing of the reprinted bill, which I will announce to the House when it takes place, the time for the filing of notices of report stage amendments pursuant to Standing Order 75 shall begin to run as though the bill were at that time being reported from the standing committee.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I take this rather unique and singular step relying, as I say, on the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization to examine this problem and to come to some answers as to how we should deal with the matter on a continuing basis. I take the step also because I wish to stress that there are deep differences among members and parties in this House, and whatever course I take should give recognition to the fact that the House should move as quickly and as directly as possible to a debate which would permit full and further discussion of those differences, not only regarding the procedural aspects of the bill but its substantive aspects as well. I have taken this course in order to ensure free liberty by all members of the House to file such report stage amendments as they desire, with plenty of advance notice in order to make sure that all questions are fully and openly discussed in the House.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of privilege arising from the remarks made a few moments ago by the Acting Prime Minister. Last Friday the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and a few moments ago the Acting Prime Minister, referred to questions that I had asked in this House as silly.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, while I quite realize that I would have a very difficult time to be as silly as the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay), I submit this is nothing more than an attempt to hide the giving of embarrassing information. Nevertheless, I believe that any member has a legitimate question of privilege when both the Prime Minister and the acting Prime Minister come into this chamber and mock the democratic process by arrogant, flippant and insulting answers.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cossitt: Surely, Mr. Speaker, there never was a more arrogant or worse government in the history of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I cannot conceive why the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt) chose to put me in the same boat. I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, that if the hon. member for Leeds has doubts concerning himself, for my part, I have none. Anyhow, I would like to indicate to the House that when I ask a question, it makes sense.

AIR CANADA—NUMBER OF EMPLOYEES IN RECEIPT OF $25,000 A YEAR

Question No. 1,875—Mr. Mazankowski:

What are the names and positions of Air Canada executives making more than $25,000 per year (a) which ones have been (i) promoted through Air Canada ranks (ii) recruited from outside ranks (b) how long has each worked for Air Canada (c) how long has each been in his present position?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Tranport): The management of Air Canada advises as follows: Information concerning individual salaries of Air Canada executives has traditionally been treated as proprietary. GOVERNMENT SUBSIDY FOR PRINTING OF "LES PATENTEUX DU QUÉBEC"

Question No. 1,912—Mr. Laprise:

Did the government grant a subsidy for the printing of the book entitled Les patenteux du Québec and, if so (a) in what amount (b) to whom was it granted?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Although not an agent of Her Majesty, the Canada Council has provided the following information: "Les patenteux du Québec" was on a list of Canadian books published by Parti-Pris book publishers in 1974-75, under a Council block grant. Publishers who are awarded a block grant may allocate it across their current publishing program at their own discretion. (a) and (b) Not applicable.

NOTE: Council subsidized in 1973, under its Explorations Program, a photographic study of the various creations of Quebec handymen, hobbyists and home craftsmen, a study which eventually resulted in the publication of "Les patenteux du Québec". The grant, worth $6,500, was awarded to Lise Nantel.

2. How many copies did Information Canada expect to sell at that price?

3. Was a comparative study conducted on the sale price and, if so, had a price of $2.50 per copy been charged, what greater demand would have been anticipated and what costs savings would have resulted from the greater production run?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): In so far as Information Canada is concerned, the answers are as follows: 1. The price was determined in counsultation with the Royal Commission on the Status of Women in Canada according to the rates prescribed by the Treasury Board.

2. 16,471 copies in English and 3,285 in French have been sold since November 24, 1970.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might briefly, on a question of privilege, make reference to three questions standing in my name on the order paper. I am sorry I do not have the numbers immediately at hand. These questions were responded to in a standing committee last night. It is surprising to me that you can get answers in a standing committee to questions placed on the order paper, but cannot get them responded to in the normal way in the House. I wonder if the hon. parliamentary secretary would take note of that. Perhaps other members in the chamber who want answers to their questions should raise them in committee, as opposed to waiting for the parliamentary secretary to respond.

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I might say that I am equally surprised.

ST. LAWRENCE PORTS OPERATIONS ACT, 1975

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR RESUMPTION OF LONGSHORING AND RELATED OPERATIONS AT PORTS IN QUEBEC

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-59, to provide for the resumption and continuation of longshoring, checking, cargo repairing and related operations at certain ports in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the hon. member shall have leave to introduce the bill.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I might say that I am a bit surprised that this has not been done in the usual way, namely, by way of a request earlier in the day's proceedings. May I indicate that despite the fact that by the rules this should not take place until tomorrow, we are prepared that first reading be given now. We are also willing at this moment to consent to a second reading debate following that motion today. We suggest that the government not ask for any further concessions at this point.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, may I just follow up on what was said on the point of order of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). In so far as we are concerned, with regard to future concessions we will consider the exigencies of the situation as they develop and then consider any suggestions that may be made by the minister.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the House leaders of the other parties for the co-operation which I requested. Certainly, we on this side of the House would be prepared to see the bill proceed to second reading debate immediately.

Mr. Speaker: Shall it be so ordered, that second reading be taken forthwith?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour) moved that Bill C-59, to provide for the resumption and continuation of longshoring, checking, cargo repairing and related operations at certain ports in the province of Quebec, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on another technical point of order. Since we have passed the motion that the bill be given first reading and be printed, I should like to know if that has been done and can copies be distributed to all hon. members?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The bill is now being distributed as it has been printed. It was evident that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) proposed to make some initial comments on the bill, and I thought I should recognize him while the bill was being distributed.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would join the government House leader in thanking the House leaders of the other parties and hon. members for their co-operation.

Let me say at the outset that it gives me no pleasure whatever to introduce this emergency, back to work legislation respecting the St. Lawrence River ports' longshoring operations. The government is committed to the free collective bargaining system and this dispute has not shaken our faith in collective bargaining as the most safisfactory method for determining wages and conditions. Unfortunately, bargaining in this dispute discontinued more than three weeks ago, and despite the best efforts of an experienced and respected mediator we were unable to get the parties back to the bargaining table.

Confronted with this situation, the government could have allowed the dispute to take its own course in the hope that eventually the loss of wages and the loss of business would compel the parties to reach their own solution. This parliamentary intervention in the affairs of the Maritime Employers Association and the longshoremen would not have been necessary had the longshoremen restricted their activities to their own industry and allowed employees of other organizations who were not on strike to do their jobs without hindrance. I am referring particularly to those employees not on strike who are engaged in the movement of grain at elevators on the waterfront.

As members of this House well know, I support the right to strike as a basic freedom of Canadian workers, and I certainly supported the right of longshoremen in this dispute to strike. But I cannot and do not condone illegal activity by strikers and I do not support activity which impinges on the rights of other workers. The actions of certain individuals created an intolerable situation for the feed grain industry and employers and employees not involved in the strike, and placed in jeopardy the livestock industry of an entire province.

I should like to make it clear that labour solidarity is a respected and desirable practice among members of the trade unions. Workers who join longshoremen in peaceful picketing should not be criticized, but it is unacceptable to me and to the government for workers on strike or workers who sympathize with those on strike to engage in acts of vandalism or intimidation. All such activity places the trade unions and collective bargaining in disrepute.

It will, I hope, be accepted that, under the unfortunate circumstances that prevail, the government has no option now but to consider such legislation as is proposed. Let there be no mistake about the government's intentions: while this is the second occasion in recent times that back to work legislation has been or will be passed by parliament, in so doing there is not, of course, the least intention on the part of the government to start a trend or a pattern of government intervention. Indeed, such a trend would be repugnant to this government. I say this so there can be no doubt whatever.

My hon. friend from Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) mentioned the railroads. May I remind him that they voluntarily came to settlement earlier this year, ensuring peaceful negotiations during the whole of the term of the collective agreement and ensuring continued operation of the railroads. I think this is evidence of how free collective bargaining can work constructively when both parties have a willingness to do so. As I say, it is repugnant for the government to order back to work legislation and to constantly intervene. I say this so there can be no doubt whatever that the course of action which this government has embarked upon is a course of action thrust upon it by the particular circumstances and demands of this dispute situation.

It should also be made clear that this bill is by no means intended to establish a precedent. I want to serve notice on the parties in this dispute, and on the parties in any dispute that may take place in the future, that there is no certainty as to this government's course of action with respect to intervention or the nature of the legislation itself. The parties should not look upon parliament as being part and parcel of the bargaining system, the place where they go to get an extra concession which they could not negotiate at the bargaining table. This is far too often the attempt of one side or the other. Those who attempt to use parliament in this way will be sorely disappointed.

The principal subject matter of this legislation is the dispute between the Maritime Employers Association and the International Longshoremen's Association, specifically local 375, Montreal; local 1739, Quebec City; and local 1846, Trois-Rivières. I will refer later to the secondary dispute which this legislation also concerns. The parties to the principal dispute have been unable to negotiate revisions to their three collective agreements, which expired on December 21, 1974, in Montreal and on January 15, 1975, in Quebec City and Trois-Rivières. The total number of longshoremen involved stands at some 2,400.

It would be pertinent for me to briefly recapitulate the sequence of events that have led to the present situation. The parties met in direct but unsuccessful negotiations on a number of occasions prior to the expiry of their old collective agreements. Consequently, on December 24, 1974, I appointed Judge Alan B. Gold of Montreal as conciliation commissioner under section 164 of the Canada Labour Code. At that time I also authorized Judge Gold to commission an independent study into the matter that is primarily responsible for the present dispute: the longshoremen's job security plan. I will refer to this later.

Between December 30, 1974, and February 24, 1975, Commissioner Gold met separately with the union and the employer and held a number of hearings. Commissioner Gold's report was received on March 14. This report was, as we know, accepted by the Maritime Employers Association but was rejected by the union membership at all three ports. Some two weeks later I appointed Charles Poirier as mediator in the dispute, pursuant to section 195 of the code. But despite Mr. Poirier's best efforts, the longshoremen began legal strike action on March 31, a strike which is continuing to this moment and which is unacceptably damaging not only sectors of the local economy, particularly the agricultural sector that is dependent on the importation of feed grain, but the national economy as well.

It will be noted that the second part of this legislation involves the Maritime Employers Association, local 1657, Montreal, and local 1605, Quebec City, of the ILA—the latter representing some 320 checkers and cargo repairmen. In this instance, the parties were also unable to negotiate revisions to their two collective agreements which expired on December 31, 1974. On March 10, I appointed Judge Gold as a conciliation commissioner and he handed in his report on April 9. As with the other dispute, the Maritime Employers Association accepted the report and the union did not. The union struck on April 17 and remains on strike as of today.

Before referring to the proposed legislation itself, I would like to add some appropriate observations concerning the conciliation commissioner, Chief Judge Gold, on whose reports the legislation is founded. Judge Gold's knowledge in the field of industrial relations is unquestioned; and, equally important, his expertise in industrial relations as practised at the St. Lawrence River ports is unequalled. It is unnecessary for me to provide a detailed biographic note on Judge Gold, but it would be appropriate to recall that in 1968 and again in 1971 he was appointed chairman of conciliation boards that dealt with the most complex and difficult longshoring disputes. On the former occasion, both parties saw fit to vest in him the powers of an arbitrator and by the following year were able, through the efforts and skill of Judge Gold, to agree to a comprehensive three-year agreement.

It will be obvious from this government's legislative proposals, then, that the government has utmost confidence in the abilities, judgment and expertise of Chief Judge Gold. Indeed, it is certain that without this confidence the government would not now be proposing the legislative provisions it is, writing into law Judge Gold's considered recommendations. The indisputable fact of the matter is that nowhere can be found another individual with the specific qualities which Judge Gold is able to call upon, and most certainly nobody else with the knowledge which Judge Gold has accumulated in the course of his lengthy exposure to St. Lawrence River ports' operations. I can say without equivocation that Judge Gold is respected by both parties to this dispute.

I will now refer to the proposed legislation itself, namely, the St. Lawrence Ports Operations Act, 1975. This legislation is in two parts, dealing separately with the longshoremen and the checkers/repairmen. However, to simplify an explanation of this legislation I will now relate the provisions as they affect both parties. The legislation provides for the immediate resumption of longshoring, checking, cargo repairing and related operations, and for all employees to return to work under the terms and conditions detailed in Judge Gold's reports.

With respect to the longshoremen, this means a change in job security from a weekly to a seasonal guarantee, with provision for weekly wage payments. The new seasonal guarantee, which it is hoped will prove a more realistic and manageable burden for the employers association, is of differing length depending on the port concerned, with Montreal longshoremen being guaranteed 1,600 hours over 40 weeks, those at Quebec City 1,400 hours over 35 weeks, and those at Trois-Rivières, 1,200 hours over 30 weeks. None of the longshoremen, however, retains the weekly guarantee which previously dictated that however much overtime was worked in one week or at weekends, none of these hours would be credited to a subsequent week.

Mr. Speaker, it might be helpful if I were to give the House an explanation of the job security provision as proposed by Judge Gold, which is part of the legislation, according to my understanding of his proposals. The job security clause of Judge Gold operates in two phases. It is based on a seasonal guarantee of paid hours, rather than being based on a five-day week guarantee as it was under the last collective agreement. Each employee is guaranteed 40 hours of pay every week whether he works or not. If work is offered, he must be available or he will lose the call and eight hours of his guaranteed work for the season. If he works more than 40 hours in a week and does not owe any time under the guarantee, he keeps all his hourly income for that week. If he puts in, let us say, 32 hours in a week he will be advanced an eight hour credit and thereby will get 40 hours pay for that week, but he will owe the fund eight hours of work. If in the next week he were to work 48 hours, he would get 40 hours of pay and the extra eight hours would be used to refund the advance he received the previous week. He will also add to this week's income the overtime premium rate of pay.

The second phase of the guarantee proposal of Judge Gold is computed at the end of the season. If an employee has not been offered 1,600 hours of work, the employer will pay the difference at the appropriate hourly rate. If the employee received an advance at any time during the season and did not later make it up, he could owe the fund the same number of hours at the end of the season. He would then be obliged to make a refund to the guarantee plan in a lump sum or to make the payment from his vacation pay or other money owing.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, before the minister goes on, in view of the fact that we did not have an opportunity to study the bill, could I ask him a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This can only be done with the permission of the minister.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): May I finish my speech first, and then I will answer the hon. member's question? I would now like to refer to the commissioner's wage proposals which, in my opinion, adequately compensate for the loss of the weekly guarantee. As an example, a Montreal longshoreman will receive a guaranteed minimum, by the end of the contract, of $12,800 a year. He will receive this amount whether he worked or not. This does not count overtime, which is usual. Across the board, the proposals compare favourably with hourly rates paid at any port in North America.

Under these proposals, the current base rate of $5.10 per hour will be increased in four stages to a maximum of $8 per hour effective January 1, 1977. The intermediate increments are of 90 cents—to $6—as of January 1, 1975; of 40 cents—to $6.40—as of October 1, 1975; and of $1—to $7.40—as of January 1, 1976. In percentage terms, the increase would be 19.6 per cent for the first year, 15.6 per cent for the second year, and 8.1 per cent for the third year, for a total of 43.3 per cent over three years.

Earlier in this presentation I expressed my distaste at having once again to use parliamentary procedures to get striking employees back to work. I repeat this sentiment of repugnance at being forced to chisel away at what I and many other people regard as a structural part of Canadian democracy, the free collective bargaining process. But at the same time I must point out that such recourse is a necessary part of our system—indeed, a vital part of our system—which will continue to be used, albeit with the reluctance I have referred to, whenever the circumstance demands it, on an ad hoc basis, such as we are dealing with here. This is certainly the antithesis of compulsory arbitration which, as I have indicated many times, I do not favour and it is contrary to the fundamental principle and democratic elements of the free collective bargaining process. I only hope that in the future the circumstance does not arise as frequently as it has in the recent past.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I want to refer to certain press reports which would indicate that legislation ordering a resumption of longshoring would not be obeyed. I can understand the disappointment of both the employees and the employers being the subject of parliamentary intervention. It is obvious that one party or the other, or both parties, will not be satisfied with the provisions of the legislation. But this is an inevitable consequence of the failure of the parties to find their own solution. While I can sympathize with the sentiments which lie behind the news reports from the St. Lawrence River ports, I know that common sense will prevail and the longshoremen will go back to work under terms which compare favourably with any in the longshoring industry in this country.

I wish to thank hon. members for giving me the attention they have. I hope that although they have not had time to consider the legislation in detail, through the course of the afternoon they will be able to study it and, I hope, support the proposed action of the government.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the minister for an explanation since this matter came up very quickly. Am I right in my understanding that under the previous agreement, longshoremen were guaranteed a base minimum of 40 hours for some 37 weeks, which works out to 1,480 hours, and that under Mr. Justice Gold's proposal longshoremen at the port of Quebec will be reduced to 1,400 hours, and at Trois-Rivières to 1,200 hours? In the hasty arithmetic I have done, that would indicate that unless there is a great deal of overtime the guaranteed pay that they will receive at Trois-Rivières and the port of Quebec, even with an increase in wages, could be less than they are getting at present. I wonder if the minister has looked at this matter and is prepared to take it into consideration. The minister has said that this legislation will relieve the employers, but I do not think that is its primary purpose.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I would like to check the point that the hon. member has raised, quite rightly, with respect to the ports of Quebec and Trois-Rivières. I would point out, of course, that the guarantee has been increased for the port of Montreal from 1,480 hours to 1,600 hours. I am trying to check whether there was a differential from the previous collective agreement.

Mr. Orlikow: I have a question for the minister, Mr. Speaker. The minister used the illustration of a longshoreman who worked 32 hours in one week and was paid for that, then the next week he worked 48 hours: the eight hours of what was formerly overtime would be charged against the hours of the week before when he did not work 40 hours. At what rate of pay would he be paid for the extra eight hours? Would he be paid at the regular rate of pay, or would it be at overtime rates?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): He would be paid at overtime rates. The portion which was normal overtime would be credited to the previous week, but he would be paid at overtime rates.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I would like to make one thing clear. The minister indicated that he would give further information in reply to the question of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas). This will not be possible after I have recognized another speaker because the minister, when he replies, will close the debate. Therefore, I hope hon. members will be satisfied if the reply is given at that time. Otherwise, it will have to be done in committee or in the committee of the whole House, as the House wishes.

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, in rising to lead off the debate on second reading on behalf of my party, I want to say first that my party will support in principle the legislation which the minister has brought before the House. We will support this legislation because, as all hon. members know, my colleague the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), along with my colleague from the Créditiste party, the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert), introduced motions a week ago today calling for a special debate, with specific reference to the very serious situation which was plaguing farm producers of the province of Quebec because of their inability to obtain, on a stable basis, sufficient supplies of grain to feed their livestock.

In addition, my party supports this bill for some of the reasons the minister put forward in his brief remarks a few minutes ago. As I said a week ago, I believe all hon. members of this House agree that illegal action on the part of some people involved in an otherwise legal strike cannot be tolerated in this country. However, having said that, we will support this bill. Having made quite clear that this support is a result of our belief that the situation has reached a point of some urgency and that action has to be taken, we say to the minister and to the government that we are not completely happy with the formula the minister is using and which is incorporated in this bill. We are not completely happy with it because, once again, hon. members of this House, no matter to which party they may belong, are being asked to determine among themselves an appropriate award in a very complicated dispute between the Maritime Employers Association and three locals of the longshoremen's union.

I am charged by my caucus with responsibility for the question of labour. We have said before that it is not the function of parliament to try to determine what is a fair settlement between the parties to a dispute. I cannot emphasize this too much. I have here the Gold report which is the basis of the legislation. Admittedly, it is not a perfect copy but I count about 60 pages before I even get to the appendices which Chief Justice Gold attached to it. This report came into my hands within the last few days. I am sure that most hon. members have not yet had the opportunity of seeing it, and they are not likely to have a chance to see it before we have gone through all stages of this bill which imposes upon the parties the recommendations of Chief Justice Gold.

I say to the minister most sincerely that I agree with him when he says it is probably impossible to obtain the services of anyone better than Chief Justice Gold. But that is not the whole question. The question is whether we have a satisfactory approach to this kind of problem. I know the minister's feelings about the importance of the right to strike in a free community. I think he knows my feelings on that, too, and I think we agree that in a country of free men and women there must be the right to strike. I am sure hon. members opposite will agree when I say that every right has a limitation. It is easy to say repeatedly that we believe in the right to strike, but as a consequence there has not been any need to find a more effective way to settle this kind of difficulty. The minister says that this is the second occasion recently.

Mr. Stanfield: The third.

Mr. Fraser: I know that the minister is referring to only a few weeks ago.

Mr. Stanfield: His memory is short.

Mr. Fraser: I know the minister well, and his memory is better than that; it goes back to before I was a member of this House. He will remember the legislation in August of 1972 which put the longshoremen back to work. He will remember the legislation, when we were both in the House, of the last weekend in August of 1973 which put railway workers back to work. He will remember that in May of 1974, rather than let the grain handlers strike he invoked sections of the labour code to forbid a strike during an election. I do not want to remind the minister of all the unhappy events surrounding that particular dispute. He will remember that in October he introduced legislation in this House to put the grainhandlers back to work. The minister will also remember that in March of 1975 he introduced legislation to put the longshoremen on the west coast back to work. And now there is legislation to put the longshoremen at the three river ports back to work.

The government seems to approach this matter on the basis that it is exceptional. It is not exceptional. It is, to a dangerous degree, beginning to establish a regular pattern. I know that there are hon. members from both sides of the House who will agree with me. We do not have, and the government has not yet seen fit to provide, a mechanism whereby strikes which affect an essential service, where it is intolerable to allow that service to be discontinued, or strikes which affect the national interest in such a way that we have to do something about it, can be dealt with. There is no capacity for identifying such disputes and reporting back to the government so that we know in advance whether we are dealing with a labour-management dispute which is going to affect the national interest and sooner or later parliament will be called upon to take action.

The minister is absolutely right when he says that some parties sit back and do not negotiate as expeditiously as they might, or even sometimes as sincerely as they might, if they know that all they have to do is cause sufficient inconvenience across this country and parliament will step in. This is not always on one side; it is often on both sides. We have not developed—the government has had a number of years to do it, and plenty of evidence that it is necessary—a mechanism whereby these kinds of disputes can be determined in advance as having the effect which everyone in this House knows they will ultimately have. Despite all the rhetoric which may be heard from certain members in this House, the situation finally reaches a point where public opinion builds up to the point that we come back here and take action. Some complain more than others, but everyone goes along with finally using parliament to put people back to work and to impose a settlement.

In committee, at the time the legislation affecting grainhandlers was before the House in October, 1974, the minister will remember that we had a very interesting exchange. It was directed at discussing this very important problem and trying to find solutions. I put it to the minister then that in that particular case they took a conciliation report which happened to favour the union, stated in advance that they would support it, and then asked the parties to continue negotiating. We said at the time that was an incredible position for the government to take, to state that they were going to accept a conciliation report and then ask both parties to negotiate.

I asked the minister if this was a precedent and if future conciliation reports were to be the basis of legislation, and the minister said no. But now we have a conciliation commissioner's report, which I admit is in different form—I see the minister shaking his head; I am going to come to that—and this time management accepted it and labour did not. Once again, however, it forms the basis of legislation. This is something that we cannot properly do, Mr. Speaker. How am I to get through the Gold report between now and committee of the whole, and how are other members to become au fait with the argument?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): You said yesterday that you liked it.

Mr. Fraser: The minister is interjecting, and quite properly. As he has said, we have here a conciliation report written by one of the most capable persons that could be found; indeed, there may be nobody more capable. It is also written in such a way that it amounts to a draft of a collective agreement. Some conciliation reports are not nearly as definitive as this one. But I think the minister is in considerable difficulty with this ad hoc method of doing things, namely, bringing in a report and saying, "Here it is". The effect is to ask us to apply our minds to the complexities of Mr. Justice Gold's recommendations and agree, within a few hours, that it is a fair settlement. I do not think that is possible: it is playing a game with ourselves and, if it continues, with labour and management and the general public.

When we had the rhetoric about the right to strike we had a gentleman's agreement, if you like, that at a certain time we would bring in an ad hoc arrangement to take away the right to strike. In many cases, to ask members of parliament to try to determine, in a couple of hours, what is a fair settlement is absolutely impossible, Madam Speaker.

When we look at the merits of this particular dispute it is interesting to note that following the protracted negotiations between the Maritime Employers Association and the longshoremen in 1972, the Globe and Mail of April 5, 1972, had a headline which read, "Big pensions, end to featherbedding bring peace to Quebec ports." On an inside page an article read, "Job security, end to featherbedding in Quebec ports pact." At that time, Madam Speaker, we thought these major difficult issues between the parties had finally been resolved, but the very fact that we are here this afternoon indicates that is not so.

Whatever comfort the government may take from deciding that in the interest of the right to strike no public mechanism is needed, the fact of the matter is that the rhetoric of 1972, and the government's attitude at that time that negotiations had led to a happy conclusion, indicate that we still have not found an effective way of settling these matters when everybody knows that sooner or later the national interest will be affected and parliament will move in.

I can understand why in this particular instance the minister has chosen the Gold report as the basis of the legislation, but I say it is a dangerous precedent. There should be legislation to restore normalcy as far as work is concerned, but determination of the final terms of settlement should be left to somebody independent of this chamber. That is the only proper way to approach this situation, and in the long run only on that basis will both sides to the dispute accept the terms of settlement. They know that we are not in a position adequately to deal with these complicated issues. The questions asked by two members of the New Democratic Party at the close of the minister's remarks indicated just how complicated the issue is in this particular dispute and how difficult it is to get answers. I am sure the minister will try to answer those questions when we get into committee of the whole.

We shall support this legislation, Madam Speaker, but we are going to ask some questions. Surely it is time all hon. members of this House face the fact that we are not taking this action occasionally any more; there is a real pattern of this sort of thing. Everyone engaged in labour-management negotiations knows that in matters which affect the national interest, sooner or later they can expect legislation to sometimes rescue and sometimes impale them, depending on their point of view. As long as we continue this way, there will be a cloud over collective bargaining in the areas of essential services and national interest.

I remember a spokesman for the railway workers saying two years ago that they always negotiated under threat of parliamentary action and legislation. In his opinion that worked against the employees but, of course, in other cases management believe it works against them. In the absence of mechanism to identify labour disputes which affect the national interest or essential services, this pattern will continue. The pressure by unions will be more and more difficult to overcome and more and more demanding as time goes on. In the absence of some sort of program other than this elusive consensus we have been hearing about to curtail inflation, I think we will be back here taking this action again and again. As far as the public is concerned, that is just not good enough. Surely the responsibility lies with the minister and the government for solving these problems in a better and fairer way than we are solving them now. Perhaps legislation could be introduced.

This strike began on March 29. Over and over again members of my party from Quebec, and other members of this House representing Quebec constituencies, have expressed concern about the difficulties farm producers in Quebec are facing. One after another they have risen in their places during the question period and asked, what is the situation; what is to happen; can the government guarantee grain supplies to Quebec farm producers; what will the government do as ships are being diverted and in some cases not being unloaded because longshoremen take the position that some ships and their cargoes are "hot"?

Day after day members on the government side did not tell us what the facts were. They gave no explanation. Certainly, the government gave no indication that this matter would be settled ultimately by legislation. One week ago an extraordinary debate took place as a result of the motion proposed by the hon. member for Bellechasse and the hon. member for Joliette. They are Quebec members. The debate began at eight o'clock and ended just before four o'clock the next morning. Many Quebec members spoke in that debate. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) who admittedly had been engaged on other matters earlier in the evening, returned to the House but did not speak. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) was not in the House at any time during that debate; neither was the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand). If you examine Hansard you will see that not only opposition members, but Quebec members in general expressed their concern about the situation. The government did not attempt to answer those concerns or indicate what would happen. The remarks of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) are interesting because in them one will not find any suggestion that the situation was so severe that within seven days of the debate the government would ask the House, on short notice, to get on with the business of ending the strike.

In the short time I have been a member of this House I have seen this pattern repeated over and over again. Week after week goes by: the members of the House know that in the absence of a settlement, legislation sooner or later will be introduced. But week after week we do nothing and the damage is compounded day after day. Surely that approach to things is utterly ridiculous and nonsensical. That approach seems to be based on the myth that if only we wring our hands enough and utter enough pious hopes, the situation will go away. In the end, we always act in the same way: we bring in legislation and justify it by saying that the strike affects the national interest or some essential service. But surely those areas ought to be identified well in advance. If we are to bring in legislation four weeks after a strike affecting the national interest takes place, is it not more logical to anticipate such a strike before it takes place, to pass legislation and not allow it to happen in the first place?

An hon. Member: But you can't do that.

Mr. Fraser: An hon. member says we cannot do that because it would interfere with the right to strike. What can be more ridiculous than knowing what you are going to do in the end but not doing it at first and allowing the situation to go on and on; and then, after the damage has been done, coming before the House and saying piously, "We have decided we cannot stand it any longer; we must Act." Is it utterly impossible—I see my friend on the government side shaking his head—to establish a mechanism whereby we can be warned in advance of what is likely to happen in this field, so that the public, the House and the cabinet may know in advance what will be the ultimate effect if a work stoppage takes place? Should we not say in advance what will be the effect on the national interest? Surely the games we have played lately are not the only way of resolving these problems. Surely even my friends opposite are skeptical. Surely they have not lost complete faith in their ability as human beings to face facts and resolve these disputes more effectively than they are now being resolved.

My party will support this legislation; I emphasize that. There may be certain difficulties connected with the use of a conciliation commissioner's report as the basis for legislation. I have expressed my reservations and I am sure the minister knows exactly what I am talking about. I sympathize with him in this particular dispute. I doubt if any conciliation commissioner more effective than Judge Gold could be found. I also pointed out earlier that the conciliation commissioner's report is in specific terms and, indeed, amounts to the drafting of a collective bargaining agreement. As I said, my party will support this legislation. We will, of course, wish to ask the minister questions about longshoremen's wages, and so on, when we consider the bill in committee of the whole. We shall be pleased to see this debate proceed and, hopefully, end as soon as possible.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, for the fourth or fifth time since becoming a member of parliament I rise to take part in a debate such as we are now engaged in. All the arguments I have heard—and I include arguments which I shall put forward—are a repetition of arguments we have heard on previous occasions. My party is not opposed in principle to getting these ports back in operation. Let me repeat an argument we have made on every previous occasion: if parliament is to legislate people back to work and take away the right to strike and to continue collective bargaining, the terms of that legislation must be fair.

I listened carefully to the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser). He spoke about the public interest and essential services, but I did not hear him recite a list of what is in the public interest or what is an essential service. Surely, therein lies his problem. Who is to say what is an essential public service, and when? Is such a service to include longshoremen, railroaders, garbage collectors and the medical profession? I wish the hon. member for Vancouver South had presented his criterion. I am sure I have touched on the difficulty, on the conundrum which every member of this House must consider. I am sure the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) would welcome such a list. We have all been wrestling with this difficulty.

I heard some talk from the member for Vancouver South about identifying problems in advance and preventing strikes before they even happen. This would cause the minister some difficulty, and it is this: employers and employees in those sectors of the economy which might be designated as essential services would say, "We do not need to bargain." One side or the other, or both sides, could say, "We do not need to bargain, because parliament will legislate." If we begin specifying all the essential services in each industry, employers and employees will ask, "What is the use of our bargaining? Let parliament do it." The simplistic approach taken by some people does not grab me. I do not think it grabs anyone else, either, unless it is the hon. member and his friends.

I said the legislation should be fair. It is true the public is upset about industrial disputes and strikes. But I do not believe anyone wishes parliament to legislate people back to work on an unfair basis; and this feeling extends to the farmers with whom I have spoken. I submit, on behalf of my party, that there are provisions in this legislation which are unfair. As I read the news reports, we can assume that the wage award embodied in this bill is acceptable to the employees because, according to one news report, an officer of the union concerned said the wage award was not bad. Since it has been accepted by the employers, I think this portion of the legislation would be agreed on by both sides. This, I submit, is about as far as a government should go in legislating specifics.

I would remind hon. members that the issue of job security is one which arises in virtually all the collective bargaining which goes on in this age of automation. It is crucial. It is of even greater importance than wages and hours of work. In this area, we are being asked to act unfairly; in fact, most employees will be worse off under the proposed legislation than they were before.

A few moments ago I suggested that the public generally, in its desire that something be done about strikes and disputes, does not expect parliament to legislate people back to conditions of work which are unfair. The Gold report makes recommendations in the area of job security which, if I read them properly, are less than equitable. I confess I have not had a chance to read the whole of the report; I have had to rely on news reports. We saw the bill before us for the first time this afternoon, and I saw the Gold report for the first time an hour ago.

From what I have been able to gather from that report, these people, who used to be guaranteed a 40-hour week for 37 weeks, will receive a minimum gross income of $11,840 in 1977 in accordance with the pay increase recommended. From what appears in the Gold report and subsequently in the legislation, even in the case of the port of Montreal, where 1,600 hours a year is guaranteed, the award would amount to $8 an hour in 1977—in other words, $12,800 a year—and at that point the Montreal longshoremen will be $1,000 a year better off than under the old agreement. The "hooker" in all this is that any hours of overtime work from Monday to Friday, excluding statutory holidays, is to be deducted from the 1,600 hours. So one can anticipate a situation in which for three or four weeks during those 1,600 hours the port is extra busy, the employees go on overtime, and at the end of the year they end up having to pay back a fairly large sum of money one way or another as a result of the hours of overtime worked. Even if they are paid at overtime rates, those hours are deducted from the 1,600 hours guaranteed in the legislation.

The situation is even worse at Quebec and Trois-Rivières. The Gold report and the legislation say the workers in Quebec will be guaranteed 1,400 hours. Mr. Speaker, they already had a guarantee of 1,480 hours. Once again, hours of overtime worked on regular working days are to be deducted from the 1,400 hours. At Trois-Rivières, the number of hours guaranteed is 1,200. Under the old contract it was 1,480 hours. We submit it is unfair to legislate the recommendations of the Gold report in terms of job security. We intend to ask the government to bring in amendments at committee stage to remove this unfairness and to do what was done in the case of the Vancouver settlement.

We can safely legislate the wage award because, as I say, it has been agreed to by both sides, though maybe not in writing. But as to the other matter, we should do as we did in the Vancouver case—provide for the appointment of an arbitrator whose decision would be binding on both sides. The parties could then go back to the bargaining table and work out a fair settlement in the area of job security, a settlement which the arbitrator would apply to both sides.

Argument will no doubt be put forward to justify the position taken by the government in supporting Judge Gold's conclusions as to the differential between Montreal, Quebec and Trois-Rivières. I do not question for one moment the competence or the ability of Mr. Justice Gold. He is probably the best man who could be found to undertake the task of conciliation. But one criticism I have of his report is that it seems to reflect the callous attitude of the Maritime Employers Association as it concerns the situation in Montreal vis-à-vis the situation in Quebec and Trois-Rivières. I say this in light of a statement which appeared in the Montreal Gazette of October 29 last. I quote the following paragraph:

"The port of Montreal is doing well and the other two are having difficulties," says one shipping agency president here. "Why should we pay for the others? Let each one stand by itself and if one port has trouble—well then, just close it."

I am sure that the people in Quebec City and Three Rivers will be glad to hear that from the president of one of the shipping firms in Montreal. But surely that kind of callous attitude and state of mind on the part of employers reflects to the detriment not only of the employees but also to the detriment of two of the major ports in the province of Quebec.

May I suggest, as one way to help resolve the difficulties that occur in our ports, that if you had a harbour or port authority which had authority to assign the loading and unloading of cargoes in terms of how many ships go where, when, and how often, there is no question that you could make certain that there was a sufficient level of shipping being handled at Three Rivers and Quebec City and there would be no difficulties. We know that as a result of the natural growth alone of the requirements of the port of Montreal, that port will do well anyway. Any harbour authority that would have control over what shipping is unloaded, at which port and how many vessels should be unloaded, I submit would make it unnecessary to have a differential of this magnitude between the longshoremen at the three different ports.

Another point I want to make is this: I remind, as well as warn all hon. members of the House that when we legislate differentials like this among employees who do the same work, belong to the same union and work for the same employer, a differential that gives one section more than a second section, and that second section more than the third, we are doing nothing but asking for disruption, wildcat strikes and refusal to obey orders given the longshoremen by their own officers, let alone the government and their employers. We will be compounding the felony if we legislate differentials of this nature between these three ports. We will be asking for a great deal more trouble within a matter of weeks or months.

Surely we can do better than this in legislation that is going to take away the right to strike and force these people back to work. As I said at the outset, we are not opposed to the principle of getting these ports opened and operating. But if we are going to do that, we must do it in a fair manner, a manner that does not abuse the people we are sending back to work.

We will have some suggestions to make in the committee. We will be moving amendments if the government does not, and I hope that members of all parties, particularly from the province of Quebec, will receive them with some sympathy. We should do no more than we did in regard to the situation at Vancouver harbour so we do not do violence, in an economic way or in the way of job security, to the men we are sending back to work.

There is another area I want to deal with. It is the issue that brought this matter to a head at the outset, as it did on Wednesday of last week. I refer to the movement of grain, particularly feed grain. In the emergency debate that we had, many questions were asked, I find it passing strange that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is not here today. Neither is the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Lang).

With regard to the movement of wheat for export or feed grain, there need not have been, and there need not be today, any difficulty, though there may be some inconvenience. I am wondering why the Minister of Labour has not asked the Minister of Agriculture to instruct the Canadian Livestock Feed Board to implement plan C. I do not know whether all hon. members received this little leaflet which arrived in my mail this morning from the Canadian Livestock Feed Board, but any or all feed grain requirements of the province of Quebec can be met whether or not the ports of Montreal, Quebec City and Three Rivers are operating.

There are three alternatives for any buyer or user of feed grain in eastern Ontario and the province of Quebec when purchasing feed grain either directly in western Canada or through various companies. Plan C provides that the grain be shipped direct from country elevators to Granby, Quebec, for example, by rail. In fact, according to the Canadian Livestock Feed Board, when you deduct what you get under the Canadian feed freight assistance act from the total cost of moving feed grain by rail, the cost to the purchaser of feed grain amounts to 31¾ cents a bushel, which is fewer cents per bushel than if the grain is moved in the usual way, namely, from a country elevator to the terminal at Thunder Bay, then from the terminal at Thunder Bay by ship to Montreal, and then by truck from Montreal to, say, Granby, Quebec. Shipped this way, it costs 35 cents a bushel.

Plan B provides for shipping it by rail from country elevators on the prairies to the terminal at Thunder Bay, then by rail from Thunder Bay direct to consumers of feed grains, bypassing the ports of Montreal and Three Rivers, Quebec or any other port. The cost amounts to 35 cents a bushel after deduction of feed freight assistance.

I bet you a dollar to a hole in a doughnut, Madam Speaker, that there are several hundred, if not one or two thousand, carloads of grain sitting at this moment at the Winnipeg rail yards in normal course of transit to Thunder Bay. I bet you a dollar to a hole in a doughnut that there are three or four hundred carloads that contain barley, oats or feed wheat. It would require one train of 100 to 120 cars a day on each railroad to lay down half a million bushels of feed grain per day in Quebec.

Had the Minister of Agriculture or the minister reponsible for the Canadian Wheat Board instructed the Canadian Livestock Feed Board to require the private grain trade to start moving grain under plan C, or under a combination of plan B and plan C, the day the strike started or even a week after it had started, this strike would have no effect whatever on the people requiring feed grain in the province of Quebec.

I say to my good friends, the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) and the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) that their concern regarding the requirements of agricultural producers in Quebec for feed grain was perfectly right and justified. But they should remember and should tell the farmers of the province of Quebec that the mechanism for moving the grain is there now and always has been there, and that their requirements for feed grain can be met whether or not the ports of Montreal, Quebec and Three Rivers are operating.

Mr. La Salle: Not during the strike.

Mr. Benjamin: I would point out to my hon. friend from Joliette that under plan C of the Canadian Livestock Feed Board, carloads of grain hauled by rail do not go anywhere near the strikebound harbours of Montreal, Three Rivers and Quebec. These carloads are delivered to large feed mills, feed wholesalers or feed retailers in places like Granby and many other locations. They go direct. Under the feed freight assistance act, any additional costs are picked up. There are no additional costs to the feeders in the province of Quebec, be they poultry producers, livestock breeders or what have you.

I point out to the Minister of Labour that the grossest incompetence has occurred on the part of his colleagues responsible for grain movement. I include in that the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), and the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. It is also my opinion that in the area of export grain, the Canadian Wheat Board is doing a magnificent job. It has been and is now bypassing the ports of Montreal, Three Rivers and Quebec City, and except for two ships at Quebec City and perhaps one at Montreal that are tied up, all the other grain for export has been moved by laker from Thunder Bay to other ports where ocean-going vessels have then been loading export grain. My information is that there has been no hold-up or problem in respect of export grain.

I think I know why there is great reluctance on the part of the Minister of Agriculture and the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board to implement plan C or a combination of plans B and C, and that is that this will harm the private grain trade. It is my opinion that the private grain trade is reluctant to implement plan C or a combination of plans B and C because it means that large lots of feed grain will have to be transferred to other shippers or other companies and the private trade which holds that grain will lose some of its premium and some of the other profits it might make through speculation.

I hope at the next cabinet meeting the Minister of Labour will point his finger at the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board and say, "That is what you get for taking feed grain out from under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board and putting it on the open market." The private grain traders who operate out of the Winnipeg commodity exchange, and some who operate out of Montreal, Three Rivers and Quebec City, are not interested in the emergency movement of grain by rail or by a combination of rail and the Thunder Bay terminal. They are not interested in that because it means they will lose some of their premiums and some of the profiteering they do on the open market on the backs of the farmers of both western and eastern Canada.

While this whole issue of the supply of feed grains in Quebec is serious and of legitimate concern to members of parliament from that province, we should remember that the shipping alternatives were there, are there now and always will be there. They have not been used.

This brings me to a further point. When we get into a situation like this, even when there is no strike but suddenly a surge of export sales or a surge in the requirement of feed grain because something has happened to the United States corn market, or some such thing, we need a transport controller who can say to the railways that they will each have to place 500 boxcars in service for the movement of grain, and the locomotives required to move those cars to eastern Canada, so that the grain is moved by rail. He should say to the railways that they have two choices: it is compulsory, or they have to do it. The machinery is there, the equipment is there, and the grain is there.

If the Canadian Livestock Feed Grain Board's figures are right, then with the benefits of the feed grain assistance measures it would be cheaper for the users of feed grains in the province of Quebec to ship it by rail all the way from Moose Jaw than to run it through the terminal, down the lakes and up the St. Lawrence Seaway. I suggest it would be cheaper by three or four cents per bushel.

What is the government doing today? I submit this is the old divide and rule game that is going on, keeping the workers fighting with the farmers, and vice versa. The mechanism is there, but it has not been used. The Minister of Labour is the one who is stuck here; his colleagues who are responsible for this situation do not even have the courage to come into this chamber. The Minister of Labour is left to hold the bag in piloting legislation through the House that runs against the grain of every member who has any respect for the right to strike and the right to free collective bargaining. The minister is stuck with this and it is about time he started throwing his weight around in cabinet. The next time he is asked to do something like this, he should tell them they can take his job and give it to somebody else.

The grain issue in respect of this strike situation is as phony as a three-dollar bill. There are other reasons why the government feels it has to legislate and other reasons why members of parliament feel we are now faced with a situation in respect of which we have to do something; but as far as I am concerned those reasons have nothing to do with grain movement. The private grain trade is the fly in the ointment in respect of this whole issue of grain movement and the supply of feed grain in the province of Quebec. I hope this situation will teach the government a lesson. I hope it will show them how effectively they have allowed themselves to be prevented from doing something toward minimizing the impact of this strike on the public.

We submit this legislation must be changed so it is not unfair to the longshoremen. Let me suggest to the minister that unless I am incorrect in my understanding of the Gold commission report and the bill, surely he does not want to proceed with the implementation of the Gold report in respect of job security. While I agree it would be extremely difficult, if not impossible, for us in a matter of hours to come up with a specific alternate solution, I submit that this legislation should read the same as the legislation which put the dock workers back to work at the port of Vancouver.

This legislation should appoint an arbitrator to go into the whole matter of job security and his decision should be binding on both sides. That certainly could not be worse than what is in this legislation or what is in the Gold report. Surely, after examining both sides and examining carefully what Judge Gold had to say, the arbitrator could come up with something better than a differential between the ports of Montreal, Three Rivers and Quebec City. That is just intolerable. I am sure the minister would agree that to require the men in the other two ports to work with much less secure positions than those in the port of Montreal is intrinsically unfair, and I would be surprised if he wanted that particular provision in this legislation. I hope that in the next hour or two he can persuade his colleagues in government to amend the legislation so that it is not necessary for us on the opposition side to do it.

Failing that, and if the legislation as it now stands is passed, then mark my words: if you think you have a mess now in these three ports, just wait a few more months. Employees at the low end of the scale will not stand for this, and I suspect that if we were in that situation we would take the same position.

This brings me to the point on which I should like to conclude. I understand and sympathize with the hon. member for Vancouver South—we all do—when he says there must be a better way of settling industrial disputes and providing a mechanism or a system which sets out what is and what is not an essential service. I defy anyone to come up with a list in that regard which would receive significant acceptance in our society by both the employer and the employee. We in the New Democratic Party submit that if you wish to obtain ready acceptance on the part of the great majority of people, you need an incomes policy that does not pick on those at the lower end of the scale but starts at the top when it comes to showing restraint.

The other day I read some material which suggested that a family consisting of a husband, a wife and two or three children in the city of Toronto, with only one car and an average home, hoping that one or two of those children would go to university, could not expect to make it on less than $15,000 a year. But the minister and the government tell people on wages of $7,000, $8,000, $9,000 and $10,000 a year what they are going to get, or to show restraint while those on high incomes continue to do well. This legislation, I submit, will aggravate disparties in the longshoremen's group at these three ports. If you expect that they will hold still, stand up and say, "Aye, aye" to the Minister of Labour and the Parliament of Canada, that will not be the case.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Would the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) allow a question?

Mr. Benjamin: Certainly.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Madam Speaker, when I was talking about gross incomes in excess of $12,000 under this legislation, I was referring to what the guarantee worked out to; I was not talking about the average earnings at these ports. If the hon. member wishes to talk about the average earnings, I would ask if he is aware of the distinction. The average earnings are substantially higher than the guarantee in respect of straight time.

Mr. Benjamin: I appreciate that. I was talking about the minimum, because the overtime earnings under the old agreement would be, on average, higher than the minimum. But now, under this legislation, the job security provisions provide that in Montreal the hours of overtime will be deducted from the guaranteed 1,600 hours. This may not hurt the Montreal people too much, but those in Quebec City whose guarantee is only 1,400 hours in the Gold report already had 1,480 hours guaranteed under their old agreement.

The situation is even worse in Three Rivers. Does the minister think the men working in Quebec City will be happy when they see what is happening to them, compared to the people in Montreal? This situation will apply even more so in respect of Three Rivers compared to Quebec City and Montreal. If I understand the legislation correctly and the guaranteed number of hours of work, many of these men will find themselves in a bad situation at the end of the year when they have "X" number of hours overtime deducted from the guarantee of 1,400 hours. They could even find themselves in the position of having to repay some money or having their holiday pay money held back in the amount that is in excess of the guarantee.

If I am mistaken in this, I hope the minister will explain it in the committee. I do not think I am mistaken because I have not heard any response; but if I am, I hope we will have a more detailed explanation. If I am correct, then surely the minister can agree to do no less than was done in the case of the Vancouver port strike settlement and leave it, as the hon. member for Vancouver South said, to someone outside this chamber and the government who will arbitrate and bind both sides to something that is much more fair than this legislation.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Madam Speaker, after waiting for 15 days and repeatedly attacking the government to inform it about an exceedingly serious situation in the province of Quebec, especially as concerns feed grain supplies for farm producers, the government has finally understood that the situation is truly urgent, even after negating this urgency.

I remember that in all good faith, all hon. members asked many questions, sometimes to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro), sometimes to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), in relation with the consequences of the longshoremen's strike in Quebec ports.

I understand that the ministers did not have to give us all the information that they had when we asked our questions, but I also understand that Parliament must be kept informed as much as possible about situations which interest the whole population, whether they affect producers or consumers.

I have always thought that a government exists in a society to put order when problems are caused by conflicts between the various categories of persons, associations or workers of a country. And I have never thought that when the government acts, it is by introducing an oppressive measure concerning one class instead of another.

I do not believe that the bill now introduced by the Minister of Labour falls into this category. It is an extreme measure, aimed at finding a solution to allow the continuity of a production required by Canadians and to prevent considerable losses for several types of farm producers who are fed up because they cannot get supplies.

On April 9, Madam Speaker, because I was aware of this situation and had received many telegrams from farm producers and their associations in the province of Quebec, I had taken it upon myself to present a motion under the terms of Standing Order 26 to ask for an emergency debate. The Chair had decided to adjourn the holding of such a debate.

However, the situation having deteriorated in the following days, I returned to the charge on April 16 with a similar motion, at which time the Chair decreed an emergency sitting.

During that debate, Madam Speaker, I endeavoured to show what the situation really was, even to the extent of quoting authentic figures on the quantities of feed grains available at the elevators in the port of Quebec City. At that time I refrained from quoting figures on Trois-Rivières or Montreal elevators, because there was no need for it. There was no way feedmills could get into both ports and have their supplies in a normal way.

● (1650)

I regret that the Minister of Agriculture is not here, but anyway if my remarks do not agree with the information published in newspapers, I know beforehand that he will correct remarks published by the press.

Since he was not present at the outset of the April 16 debate, newspapers reported that the Minister of Agriculture said this:

An emergency debate never moved grain.

I also know that such a debate never moved grain. Every member knows that. Such was not the aim of the debate, but rather to allow those moving it to have access to the ports and to obtain that longshoremen fulfill their duties, discharge their responsibilities by unloading the ships and loading the elevators.

In view of the serious situation prevailing, I thought we had a duty to act in that way. I realize more than ever that we were right in so doing. Not only did we draw the government's attention, but we also gave hope to people, organizations and farmers victimized by the situation.

Today, on this 23rd of April, the situation is no better. I suspect the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) must have been informed. Right at this time, there is in Quebec City's elevators 48,000 bushels of wheat, 45,000 of oats, 48,000 of barley, 396,000 of corn. That does not mean that every teamster, every miller coming to Quebec City's port will have its truck loaded with grain. This grain belongs to a few millers, Out of the hundred, two or three only can get their supplies. They could do so, as a matter of fact, but they no longer can since the checkers have also gone on strike. The latter struck and are now keeping the trucks owned by the millers from picking up their grain in the port of Quebec City. The situation is even worse than that. They even stop the owners of the feed grains from picking up their own feed, their own property.

On the other hand, a grain barge entered the port of Quebec. The grain handlers are unloading it, just the way it is done on the black market. This is no joke: in Canada, right in the port of Quebec City, the oldest port on the North American continent, labourers are forced to work as if we were at war, on the sly, as if for a black market. And that goes on in 1975! That means the situation is extremely serious. In this case we are concerned with supplying the domestic market. The longshoremen have nothing to do with that, not even normally. They are there to unload the ships, the ocean liners. In the case of barges that transport goods for the Canadian market, it is not up to them to load or unload them. In this case, we are dealing with grain handlers. They perform their work with great difficulty. We are left then with trucking. The former speaker, a while ago, mentioned the possibility of transport by truck or by rail.

I would like to give some particulars on the great transport opportunities by truck or by rail and the supplies needed in Quebec and then we could see whether it is urgent for Parliament to pass that bill.

According to the information that I obtained today, it is related to a question asked yesterday in Quebec City to the Minister of Agriculture. On April 22, the Minister of Agriculture stated in answer to a question that 150 railway cars reach the province of Quebec every day.

We went to the sources of information and checked further. It was revealed that in the last nine days, a daily average of 48 cars—a far cry from 150—were dispatched to the ports of Quebec, each car containing some 2,000 bushels or a maximum of 2,500 bushels.

Two injunctions were therefore requested by the Trois-Rivières Feed Mill Owners Association. The injunctions were not obeyed. Since the volume of grain moved is not as told, injunctions are sought to get supplies from a port where there is an abundance of grain; according to my information, there are actually in the port of Trois-Rivières, 1,300,000 bushels awaiting takers. A large quantity of those 1,300,000 bushels belong to feed mill owners, grain that was bought in December or January, that is ready for delivery but out of reach.

This morning, on April 23, again in the province of Quebec, the port was exceptionally crowded; even taxis could not pick up passengers arriving on other ships. That means people were coming and going in the port, but the movement was not such as to allow farm producers and feed mill owners to get grain supplies.

The weekly consumption of feed grain in the province of Quebec amounts to 2 million bushels. One can readily appreciate the predicament in which Quebec producers are. They are concerned, and duly so.

We can read in newspapers that feed grain shortages causing irreparable wrong to Quebec livestock producers. Some people think that we are joking, that hogs could never eat one another. That is quite normal. When there is not enough food to go around, all hogs in the pig sty will fight and the big ones will eat the small ones. That is the normal way for hogs to behave in society; we must call things by their names.

However, when reasonable men who are endowed with intelligence, judgment and experience are behaving exactly the same way, I say this is unacceptable! Well, if such things are unacceptable, we must take steps to prevent them, for they must not occur. To prevent that, we must ensure the sound distribution of goods and of whatever is required for production and consumption. I think that it is the duty of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) to find a temporary solution. However, while temporary, I would not like that solution to be a drawback for the workers. I understand the workers have rights but they also do wrong, just as we do in certain other areas of society. It must be understood that we have rights andthat sometimes we do wrong when we do not fulfill all our responsibilities.

So the government's role is to keep a lookout, to check what exactly is going on in every field of human endeavour, so that we respect each other, so that we act like men do, like intellegent men do. I would not like to read in the newspapers tomorrow or the day after that the hon. member for Bellechasse or still Parliament have declared war on workers. Absolutely not! I respect the right to strike as a fundamentel one. It is endorsed by law. But when it is time for a collective agreement to be renewed, when we fail to come to an agreement and when talks are dragging on, then it is imperative that an authority intervene and try to conciliate disagreeing parties and see to it that lengthy discussions do not cause considerable damage to other workers in the same society.

It is in this spirit that Parliament must consider today's legislation to which we did not have the opportunity to give much consideration because we just received it, along with the report of Judge Gold, conciliation commissioner. We have had precious little time to study it. Still parliamentarians should not be expected to perform miracles, to try to become acquainted with a bill or a document before they receive it. One must be reasonable. I surely hope that during the procedure in committee of the whole the minister and his officials will be in a position to answer the questions that will be put to them by members so that, if necessary, amendments can be made to the bill so as to make it fair and efficient.

Madam Speaker, this morning someone asked me why the Agricultural Producers' Union—which, all things considered, is a labour union—did not itself take an injunction against longshoremen in the ports of Quebec City, Trois-Rivières and Montreal. I think that might have been possible. I think that might have given results a little sooner. But let us imagine ourselves in their shoes—workers against workers coming face to face. They both have rights, they both have obligations. So, in a given situation there is a confrontation and one of the two unions asks the court for an injunction to prevent the other from exercising its right to strike. Such situations are extremely difficult. I do not say it is impossible but I do say it is difficult and I think that although it is difficult it might have been normal to try that procedure, not to place those people in conflict, a potentially dangerous confrontation, but to test our policies in such a situation because I think for my part that, to my knowledge, it is the first time such a thing occurs.

Given the gravity of the situation, associations, particularly the APU, turned to Parliament. Will we, parliamentarians, try to turn to others to avoid our responsabilities? I say no. I say we must take our responsibilities because the interest of the whole community is at stake.

During the weekend I saw with my own eyes 36 calves killed, hooked on a cable along a road because they cannot be delivered on the market, nobody wants to buy them. Everything is disorganized, and the ravens will eat that meat, and this fall people will not be able to buy meat.

But if this is a recurring situation, it means that we shall be wasting a possible production which might be needed in six or eight months. Same thing with respect to egg production. We heard about eggs at length last year. We even had a special committee of the House which met a number of times to study egg marketing. Well, if this situation is allowed to go on, I think they will no longer have to have special meetings on egg marketing, for considering the number of hens sent to the slaughterhouse for want of feed, I guess the problem of egg overproduction or marketing will no longer arise. And we have the same situation in respect of poultry meat.

Now, with respect to all those equally serious questions, even if it hurts, even if we may be somewhat unpopular for a while, even if we give workers the impression that we are passing legislation to force them to do something against their will, I answer that when we think back upon it, after we have had the advantage of analysing every situation, we will all agree that those measures were necessary and even in the interest of workers.

I wish us to have the common weal in mind throughout this debate. I personally do not want to accuse anybody. I do not hold anybody responsible for the present situation, but I will hold our Parliament and government responsible tomorrow and on the following days if, in the light of the situations we are witnessing, we do not amend our labour code so as to have a permanent mechanism at our disposal to make conciliation and the renewal of collective agreements easier, instead of allowing situations to deteriorate. We should heed from day to day the progression and the way of looking at things, the way workers put their claims, and the way employers answer workers' demands. Workers are not the only ones involved, Madam Speaker, there are also numbers of heartless employers, people who do not want to admit that they should not operate only to make profits, but that consideration should also be given to services to be provided to people. We must admit that those who contribute to assure these services or to produce this or that product also have rights and that these rights must be recognized. The employers are not sensible enough to recognize them in practice. It is therefore the government's duty—and Parliament's duty, since it is the supreme authority in this country—to pass legislation which will force these heartless organizations to be more reasonable.

I heard today on the radio a statement of the right hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) on cartels and large corporations, and I understood that a commission would be formed to study what goes on in that field and that the government will also introduce legislation establishing the regulations these cartels and large corporations will have to comply with. I hope it is true, but I would not want another inefficient piece of legislation. We have the anti-combines and anti-cartel acts, but they are practically never enforced, and the penalties are so small that when the companies that openly violate these acts are convicted, they do not care a bit about justice because the penalties are so small.

We need a sharp-edged legislation, so that when a corporation is sued for having violated the law, for having abused the public or for having made excessive profits to the detriment of workers, the legislation will be enforced to teach a good lesson to the others who would be tempted to do the same. That is called an efficient Parliament, a government which is aware of its responsibilities and which is willing to assume them.

One must not only create the impression that something is being done, that legislation is being passed, but those laws must not become a dead letter. We must have operative and effective laws upon which all Canadians may rely. So I hope that once this bill is passed we do not remain idle saying that everything has been done. No, we will have to work to improve bargaining conditions in all areas so as to avoid those strikes that plague this country. It is discouraging. It has come to the point where people are worrying about the future, asking themselves what is going to happen or whether such or such service will be working.

We do not live within a stable society. And such an unstable society involves small cells of disruption. Those who set up cells are allowed to disrupt society, to organize revolution without admitting it but through very active means. We give them tools without knowing it. To govern is to foresee, to look after the common good as far as it is humanly possible to do so.

I believe that in such a situation, we will take the trouble of scrutinizing the law. That cannot be perfect, it is made by men and therefore can be changed by men. We will try to scrutinize the law to see if it is really effective. Are we going to do injustice to a given class of people? Is it worth while doing so, so as to progress and enable other classes of people, of producers to keep on playing their part? It seems to me there are enough problems nowadays in the agricultural field and that we should not create any more. Now it is in that spirit that I address myself to this bill and I am sure that if we all get together and try to make this legislation into the best possible law, nobody will be dissatisfied and a great step will be taken on the road to social, economic and political stability in this country.

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, I am very happy to take part in this debate today. May I say right off to the hon. minister responsible that we will support, without hesitating his bill which finally meets with the wish expressed over a week ago.

I must also congratulate the hon. members who took part in the debate, bearing in mind their information and intentions. We support this bill which we feel is most urgent. To my mind, it is the totally logical result of the special debate held last week.

Madam Speaker, I know some hon. members may have found me severe, and I said so last week. I was not the happiest of men when I moved my motion, as did the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert), even though it had the support of my colleagues.

I would also like to take this opportunity to thank the hon. members on both sides of the House who took part in the debate last week. Generally speaking, I believe that we have discussed this problem sufficiently to make the government understand the importance of resolving it and the difficulties which the farmers are facing.

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), replying on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture who is justifiably absent, had accused us of suggesting this debate for unfounded or illogical reasons. The hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Béchard) has already started to interrupt me, but I shall forgive him since I know that this is one of his habits.

Last week, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs said that our debate was unfounded, but I believe that today, the Minister of Labour, by the decision that he made, has replied very objectively to our invitation and that of all hon. members who were asking last week that the government take its responsibilities.

It is certain that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs found that we could not offer any answers, but the answer that we requested last week is the same that we request everyday from the government—that it take its responsibilities. This is what the minister is doing today. The government has some authority and, in view of the situation, it is finally replying to our invitation of last week.

Madam Speaker, I must also point out that a government member had the courage to talk about the need for special legislation. I am speaking about the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Marceau), who made an excellent speech last week. We recognize this and I believe that he had already foreseen a solution. And one can wonder why we have waited so long, and what are the possibilities to right the wrongs.

Certainly some members are still convinced that the farmers did not lose anything, that they did not have any difficulty. Maybe they should read from time to time the news releases from the APU president and other representatives of the millers association and, especially, from the farmers themselves, to realize the enormous difficulties the latter have met.

The hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) told us the numerous difficulties he noted in his riding last weekend. I think all hon. members from rural ridings know that full well.

We therefore had valid reason to request concrete action from the government and today, we wholeheartedly responded in the affirmative to a legislation which, on the one side, will not be accepted right away by the workers of this sector, but, on the other side, corresponds to a real need.

We regret being forced to favour the implementation of such a measure, taking into account the workers, but, even then, I wonder to what extent we must say that nobody is responsible.

To my mind, contrary to what the hon. member for Bellechasse said earlier, there are responsible people and, as member of this House, as representatives, we have responsibilities to take on both sides of the House. Our present duty is to ask the government for immediate measures. That is what we are doing, and I think our responsibility then is part of the commitment we all took in our ridings.

I wish to say, Madam Speaker, that the government through this emergency measure presented today is answering our questions. We have been asking questions for three weeks. The government is taking a responsibility for which we have been calling for three weeks. I believe it is important that not only government members but also the whole labour sector concerned know that we have been demanding this measure for the sake of 6,000 egg producers. It was also for the sake of 15,000 poultry and turkey producers. We did it for 23,000 industrial milk producers, 5,000 fluid milk producers and 6,000 hog producers, as well as for all Quebec consumers, millions of them, who were waiting and calling for concrete government action. I think we are indeed meeting a big enough need of the community.

Therefore, all the feed supply in Quebec was, for all practical purposes, interrupted, breeding was in a difficult situation and egg producers would once again become the victims of American imports. Many of them would face bankruptcy. There was a rush on slaughterhouses and the food market would also be disturbed. Our farm producers support the consequences of a sixth strike within a year.

[Mr. La Salle.]

We had the strike of pilots, railway workers, inspectors, handlers, labourers and, today, longshoremen.

The situation is, and already was two weeks ago, dramatic and all the more abominable that agriculture in Quebec knows one of the worst crisis of its history, and rely on supplies of feed for more than 60 per cent to feed cattle.

The temporary measures of the government which the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) pretended to be efficient last Wednesday, have proved completely unsatisfactory for three weeks because they were too late, too slow and too expensive.

Therefore, the government now recognizes the validity of our assertions and of the questions which all members in this House have put for three weeks. On both sides of the House, members felt it a duty to put some embarrassing questions to the minister; we now ask: How is it that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), or the Canadian Wheat Board, or the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) did not give any answer to these repeated calls? Of course, it could be said that the guys in the opposition put questions so as to make headlines, and so on.

But there are still serious members on the other side of the House whose riding is affected. I was very happy to see those members show their interest in this area but, unfortunately, they did not get any answer. For three weeks, they did not come up with the answers we were expecting. I do not think that we could be reproached with not interfering. The Minister of Agriculture has been saying for three weeks that we were panicky, pessimistic, and that the information of the member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert), of the member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) or, recently, the information of an NDP member, was not complete. There were many questions. The more we were trying to make the government aware of that alarming and dangerous situation, the more they answered us that it was untrue.

Last Wednesday, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) was saying that supplies would last a month. Some were talking about half empty elevators. They did not say that access to the ports was impossible, and that regularly. Therefore faced with such positions, we were justified, I think, to ask for a special debate last week. Today, it is quite obvious that the opposition was right since the minister is forced to act now. Indeed just three days ago I was asking the Minister of Labour how negotiations were progressing, what news did the mediators report. Since April 2, we were told that negotiations were broken and that the time had not come to try to bring the two parties together again, no matter the situation in which the Quebec farmers found themselves.

Therefore, Madam Speaker, we were entirely right. It will surely be stated that we want again to play politics in this debate. I do not want to do so, but I want to remind those who have accepted parliamentary duties that they have failed to assume their responsibilities during the past few weeks. And we are pleased today, even if it will cost money, that the government has at last decided to take position.

Some members and even some ministers, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) for example, surely do not relish the idea of passing an ad hoc legislation, they would still rather see the victims get a series of injunctions from the court. That, Madam Speaker, is either hypocrisy or perhaps artlessness, because the systematic resort to court injunctions is tantamount to the denial of the right to strike. We know that perfectly well, but we are afraid to say so. Last week, we were asked by the government members: "Tell us whether you are for or against the right to strike?"

Asking the question in those terms is much too easy, Madam Speaker. But we are all perfectly aware that as long as the government keeps urging companies to resort to injunctions, it renounces its responsibility to decide and act. "Well, let companies resort to injunctions". Yes, but it means for all practical purposes doing away with the right to strike.

So, the government decided to get rid of its reponsibilities and turn them over to the courts. Courts will settle the problem. The worse of this business, Madam Speaker, is that the labour movement once again used farmers to force the government to give in, while the government used ship owners to curb labour demands. All during that time, Quebec farmers and—by way of consequence—consumers became the hostages of longshoremen as well as the Ottawa government, as my colleague the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) was saying last Wednesday.

We are already wondering whether these longshoremen will abide by the law, or whether, as some indicated as recently as this morning, they will oppose the will of Parliament.

I should like to remind these working men for whom we have great consideration and for whom we wish a fair treatment, I should like to remind the inspectors and longshoremen that the alternative is not, as some of their representatives have mentioned at a given moment, whether Parliament must first protect the hogs or the longshoremen. Such a solution, in my opinion, is far too simplistic. Such a position only goes to show the misgivings, and even the contempt, that some of our fellow citizens might have vis-à-vis our farmers.

I feel that the choice must be made at the following level. The rights of longshoremen must be recognized, of course, for instance security of employment and a minimum income for their work. No member of Parliament, in my opinion, is obstinate or hesitant in recognizing them such rights. But there are other workers.

The real victims throughout this conflict, Madam Speaker, are not the people of Bay Street or St. James Street: the real victims are the agricultural workers.

I believe the best thing those concerned in the conflict, that is the workers, could do for Workers' Day next May 1, would be to go back to work willingly. I hope that they do so for the sake of the farmers, whose job security and income are much more threatened than those of unionized workers.

However, the longshoremen should not be alone in suffering from the bad effects of their strike, which we recognize as legitimate and legal. Later, in committee of the whole, we shall ensure that there is greater job security. There does not seem to be any now according to the Gold report.

If the longshoremen have to go back proudly to work tomorrow, the government, once this measure is passed, will have to consider that its role is not finished. I believe that this may be the most important aspect of this issue, Madam Speaker. Today, we are discussing a special measure. Unfortunately, we have waited for it too long, and the workers as well as the members of Parliament knew very well that the government would be pressured, conditioned and forced to take some action. Indeed, the minister said earlier that he did not want to make this a case of first choice. This is not the first time that we have to legislate. It is not a precedent, as the minister said a while ago, far from it, for the government to be forced to introduce special legislation.

But tomorrow, as concerns the farmers, for instance, what guarantee do we have that the Quebec farmers, and especially those in eastern Quebec, will be compensated for the losses they have suffered during this conflict. We know that for those who could not get any supplies, the loss was much greater. What guarantee do we have from the government that the farmers will not lose their necessary profits? What guarantee do we have that the government will eventually make provisions for permanent measures which will allow us to be better prepared for such situations in the future? These are questions which we hope the members of the government, and especially the minister, will answer during the minutes to come.

And above all I wish to join with every party concerned with the new system of collective agreement, since the current one does not satisfy anybody anymore. Of course people are afraid. Politically speaking, this is dangerous matter, a vote here, a vote there if we start contesting labour unions, current methods. Still, I believe we must fact the facts. We must have the courage to say that we are not satisfied, that currently things are going wrong in every area.

I think the government has a responsibility to meet with the unions and review the so-called right to strike. There is no question of taking away the right to strike without compensation, some security, certain safeguards ensuring a fair deal to workers. But how far must we go? Today members say: "We will vote this special legislation but we will not remove the right to strike". But I submit we will be forced to call other workers back to work. If we are not affecting the right to strike, what then are we doing now? Are we not again taking the right to strike away from workers? So, a mechanism that used to do the job does not seem to meet today's requirements. Strikes break out in increasing numbers, at what cost and with what economic disruption! How long is this going to last? We have asked labour union representatives whether the right to strike is not used as a common tool nowadays.

Considering consequences, how far do they go in the assessment and weighing of their actions? These are questions that every member asks himself, but we do not dare deal with the issue in public, because there is always the danger of displeasing one category, which would be quite dangerous come election time. If, to be elected, we have to remain silent on problems that call for our attention, on solutions we should be promoting to protect the common interest, I believe we are intellectually dishonest as a group in this House.

We have a responsibility to ask the government to call that important meeting, not only with labour unions, but also with businessmen, some of whom border on exploitation. I think that together they can find that sharing formula, that minimum income which is necessary not only to the farmer but the worker as well. And if the government does not move to bring those people together to set up fair standards for everyone I say it is failing in its responsibilities. That is exactly what happened a month ago. With respect to Quebec problems, that is not the first time. A month and a half ago we were discussing an almost identical problem in Vancouver.

So the union has responsibilities vis-à-vis consumers, the people of this country. It is necessary to remind that to the union, just as it is necessary to remind the government which says publicly it has powers that it also has responsibilities. Powers exist to be used. Today they are being used, and it took one month of shouting to get the government to move. We know how much farmers are going to pay for this, and it is impossible to assess the consumer's bill.

We know perfectly well, Madam Speaker, that the public is tired. For the worker what is important is his strike. They condemn the other guy's strike but try to justify theirs. We must try to restore the mechanisms that correspond best to this stability we want, the just society we have been hearing about for a very long time. I think that just society will not build itself. It will be achieved to the extent that we will have at least the courage to bring together the people responsible for the economy, including those in the fields of food and farming, and make them understand that it is time to find a solution, acceptable compromises from which will stem the sharing formula that is absolutely necessary.

Madam Speaker, I will conclude by saying that we support this legislation and we are not attempting to prolong the debate.

I would also like to remind all those who accused me last week of being a member of a political party which does not serve the interests of the province of Quebec, that we proved them wrong last week, in the special debate. Today, however, it is not without a certain degree of hesitation that all my colleagues in this party are assuring the government of their co-operation in dispatching the bill through the House, bearing in mind the urgency of the matter and the interests of the farmers of Quebec and of all of Canada.

Madam Speaker, I hope the government will be doing this again, repeating what he is doing today, saying: We take our responsibilities.

This is not a long-term solution; again, we will see that other similar conflicts will come up and that, if there is no change in all the mechanisms, in all the methods which have become a necessity today, if we do not want to be forced to return to Parliament to pass special bills such as this one—

[Mr. La Salle.]

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Madam Speaker, I believe there is a general disposition to continue the debate beyond six o'clock this evening, and accordingly I have a motion that the hours of sitting be extended beyond that time.

Mr. Jones: On a point of order, Madam Speaker, I do not know of any agreement to extend the hours.

Mr. Sharp: I intend to make a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 6(5). It would, of course, not be our intention to sit after six o'clock in the literal sense—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is the motion in writing?

Mr. Sharp: Yes. I move:

That the hours of sitting be extended beyond six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Those opposed to the motion will please rise.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Madam Speaker, on a point of order—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order. I would like to remind the hon. member that he will have a chance to rise on a point of order later.

Mr. Fortin: Madam Speaker, in this case I raise a question of privilege.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order. When the House is called upon to vote it is not in order to raise a question of privilege.

[English]

All those opposed to the motion will please rise.

Mr. Baldwin: May I rise on a point of order, first?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. May I put the question? All those who are against the motion will please rise.

Mr. Baldwin: Madam Speaker, if you feel I should not speak I will not do so, but surely we can work out some order from this situation. If the motion is passed as worded we would sit continuously, and from this point of view I urge that there be unanimous consent that I be allowed to say something on this point right now.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Very well. I will call upon the hon. members for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin), Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and Moncton (Mr. Jones).

The hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin), the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and the hon. member for Moncton (Mr. Jones) will speak afterwards.

Mr. Fortin: Madam Speaker, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) moved this motion pursuant to a unanimous agreement and saying that there had been consultation. I have to protest, because we were not consulted and therefore we cannot take part in the conclusion of a unanimous agreement at this level. This is why I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. From now on, when the President of the Privy Council really wants to move a motion on unanimous consent, he should not forget the 11 members of the Social Credit Party of Canada in this House.

[English]

Mr. Baldwin: Surely there is a reasonable and civilized way to deal with this. We could probably come back here at eight o'clock and sit, I suggest, until ten o'clock, in an effort to determine whether satisfactory progress has been made. If, toward ten o'clock, we find the bill is almost disposed of we would not place any obstruction in the way of allowing any reasonable addition of time in which to finish the work. I might say, though, that the other place, I am instructed, will not be meeting until tomorrow—I may he wrong, but my instructions are that the other place is not sitting and that this measure cannot be reached by them until tomorrow. I should like to know what position the NDP is taking. I do not look forward to sitting here continuously from six o'clock onward.

I might point out that Your Honour could not interfere with the terms of an order providing for a continuous sitting after six o'clock. The hon. member for Moncton (Mr.Jones) has told us he is not prepared to give unanimous consent. I certainly do not think we should sit through from this moment continuously until late tonight.

Mr. Sharp: On the same point of order, Madam Speaker, I was aware of these difficulties but I was advised that, under the terms of the standing order, unless we were to proceed by unanimous consent, which might have jeopardized our sitting this evening, I could only move that the hours of sitting be extended beyond six p.m. It was my intention—I hope we will have unanimous consent—as I indicated in my preliminary remarks that we adjourn between the hours of six and eight. I want to say to my hon. friend that I would be very happy to fall in with this suggestion, but I am not sure whether it is entirely within the rules.

Mr. Baldwin: Then on those conditions, and if the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) will give me his assurance—I know there are limitations to what he can do—that we will review the question at ten o'clock, I will agree to that. There is no point sitting here ad nauseam if the matter is not going to be completed tonight, particularly in light of the fact that it cannot become law until tomorrow evening by reason of the fact that the favoured people of my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre are not available until tomorrow.

Mr. Jones: Madam Speaker, I am becoming a bit concerned at the government House leader periodically getting unanimous consent for this thing and for that thing, and asking unanimity in connection with this and that. This matter was not discussed with me as a member of parliament, and when we sit in this House surely to goodness we sit as members of parliament without relation to partisan politics.

I am concerned about a lot of these things, and particularly about this type of legislation. I just do not like it. I want to serve notice on this House through you, Madam Speaker, that I do not intend to strike but I do intend to withhold consent when unanimous agreement is asked for in the future until the House of Commons has the common decency (1) to make provision for independent members to become members of standing committees; (2) amends the Elections Act, the Election Expenses Act, and the Income Tax Act to give independents the same benefits as other members of parliament belonging to so-called recognized political parties; and (3) gives greater consideration to the rights of independent members of the House. I do not like being pushed around by the House leader on the government side saying there is unanimous consent on this and that matter, when it is not true.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I just want to say that it is not often that I defend the government House leader. At least that has not been a practice of mine during the last few weeks. But I do not think that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) said that there was unanimous consent.

Mr. Jones: Yes, he did.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I think all he said was that there was a general disposition. In other words, he thought that the people he had talked to would agree, but he did not ask for unanimous consent. He asked to act under Standing Order 6.

I think we have had enough of these Wednesday nights and I do not like the idea of sitting tonight on this measure. But I might be persuaded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) to go along with the understanding that we sit at eight o'clock, provided it is clear now that we are going to close off at ten o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Pursuant to Standing Order 6(5) there is a motion to extend the sitting beyond six o'clock. All the members opposed to the motion please rise.

And fewer than ten members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): I declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, can we now have a clear undertaking from the government House leader that what has just been discussed is what he intends, namely, that we rise at six, come back at eight, and that unless we review the matter we rise at ten?

Mr. Sharp: I am in general agreement, Madam Speaker. I doubt whether we will need to go beyond ten o'clock, but I am sure that if we were not quite finished with the bill there might be a disposition to go on. However, it is not my intention to go on all night or anything of that kind. Ten o'clock is the target that I have in mind.

Mr. Baldwin: Madam Speaker, when the government House leader and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre come to a consensus ad idem, who am I to interfere, particularly when it was I who suggested it in the first place?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is it agreed that we rise at six o'clock and resume at eight o'clock?

Mr. Jones: I do not agree to that, Madam Speaker.

An hon. Member: You go home. We don't need you.

Mr. Jones: You may not need me but the people in my constituency need me.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. MacGuigan: Madam Speaker, before putting the question on second reading of the bill, I think there is some agreement, which I hope is unanimous, that the bill be dealt with in committee of the whole rather than being referred to the standing committee. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Joyal):

That the motion be amended by deleting therefrom all the words after the word "referred" and substituting therefor the following words: "to a committee of the whole House".

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Jones: No. I want my vote registered.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Carried on division.

Amendment (Mr. MacGuigan) agreed to on division.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion as amended agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into Committee thereon, Mrs. Morin in the chair.

Mr. Fraser: Madam Chairman, I wonder whether in view of the hour we could call it six o'clock?

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that we call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Jones: No.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: There is no unanimous consent to call it six o'clock, the hon. member for Moncton having objected. Is there agreement to rise at six o'clock?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Why not rise now and come back at eight?

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

[Mr. Baldwin.]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Chairman, may I suggest that you should not have called clause 1 at this point. You should have started with clause 2.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Clause 2 agreed to.

Clause 3 agreed to.

• (1750)

On Clause 4—Longshoring operations to be resumed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Chairman, I wish to move an amendment to Clause 4. My hon. friend, the member for Regina-Lake Centre, pointed out when he was speaking at the second reading stage that we agree a case can be made for the wage settlement part of the Gold report but we do not feel that we should impose upon those longshoremen the provisions of the Gold report that refer to job security and some other matters. Therefore, Madam Chairman, we would like to see the portion of—

Madam Chairman, a moment ago I was chiding you for having called clause 1 when you should have called clause 2. I find that I am now standing here speaking on clause 4 when it is clause 5 to which I wish to move my amendment, so I guess we are even.

Clause 4 agreed to.

On Clause 5—Term of collective agreement extended.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Chairman, I believe I am now on the clause to which I wish to move an amendment. Clause 5, which starts on page 3 and runs over to the middle of page 4, includes sub-clause (3) which would put these longshoremen back to work under all the terms of the Gold report.

As I have already said, we recognize that a case can be made for the wage settlement proposed in the Gold report, but we think a strong case can be made against the part of the Gold report that fails to meet the employees in the matter of job security. It is our view, therefore, that paragraph (b), being line 13 to line 18 on page 4, should be deleted.

This is a little bit complicated because if that much is deleted it is also necessary to delete the letter "(a)" at the beginning of line 43 on page 3, and it is also necessary to delete the word "and" at the end of line 12 on page 4.

If there is anyone, I have not lost, may I go on to say that the simplest way to do all of this is to move an amendment to strike out all of sub-clause (3) of clause 5 and then put it back in without including the portion that we think should not be there.

I would therefore move:

That Bill C-59 be amended by striking out lines 39 to 48 on page 3, and lines 1 to 18 on page 4, and substituting therefor the following:

(3) Upon the coming into force of this Part, the terms and conditions of each one of the collective agreements to which this Part applies are amended by increasing each hourly rate of wages, as established by or pursuant to such agreement and in effect on the date the collective agreement expired, by the amount recommended in the reports of the conciliation commissioner that were received by the Minister of Labour on March 14, 1975, which increase shall,

(i) in the case of the collective agreement referred to in paragraph (a) of the definition "collective agreements to which this Part applies" in section 3, be effective as of January 1, 1975, and

(ii) in the case of the collective agreements referred to in paragraph (b) of the definition "collective agreements to which this Part applies" in section 3, be effective as of January 16, 1975."

That may look like a lot of words, but what it amounts to is leaving in all the words that are already there except paragraph (b), being line 13 to line 18 on page 4, and leaving out one or two connecting items.

The purpose and the intent of the amendment is to limit the compulsory feature of this legislation to the wage settlement and not to make it apply to other features of the Gold report. I hope the minister will look with favour on this amendment.

Mr. Jones: Madam Chairman, I move we adjourn until eight o'clock.

Mr. Fraser: On a point of order, Madam Chairman, I wonder if the hon. member for Moncton could again address the Chair as I did not hear his remark and I should like to hear it.

Mr. Sharp: Madam Chairman, before the hon. member does that I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Moncton, that we rise at six p.m. until the hour of eight o'clock.

Motion agreed to.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. When the committee rose at six o'clock clause 5, to which an amendment had been moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, was under consideration. Is the committee ready for the question on the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment (Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)) negatived: Yeas, 2; nays, 34.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: I declare the amendment negatived.

Shall clause 5 carry?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On division.

Clause 5 agreed to on division.

Clause 6 agreed to.

On Clause 7—Parties to negotiate.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Chairman, I wish to move an amendment which again is very lengthy. I hope that, when I have indicated what it is and where I obtained the wording, the committee might be willing to put it in the record without my reading it.

An hon. Member: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I detect a willingness that this be done before I indicate what it is.

There is a unique feature about this bill which gives us concern. I think I speak for most members of the committee when I say that none of us likes back-to-work legislation of any kind. This is not the way to settle an industrial dispute. However, usually when as a last resort the government brings in a measure to force workers back to work it provides for the immediate settlement of certain conditions and also provides for an arbitrator to settle some of the outstanding matters. In this case there is no arbitrator. In this case the entire Gold report is legislated and nothing is left for any further consultation or bargaining.

We feel that there should be written into this bill the same provisions for an arbitrator that the government put in the bill a few weeks ago when it sent the longshoremen on the west coast back to work. Therefore, Madam Chairman, I should like to move:

That Bill C-59 be amended by striking out paragraphs 7 and 8, lines 1 to 47 on page 5 and lines 1 to 15 on page 6; and by substituting therefor the following:

"7. (1) The Minister of Labour shall

(a) appoint an arbitrator and refer to him all matters relating to the amendment or revision of the collective agreements to which this Part applies, with the exception of those matters referred to in paragraph 5(3); and

(b) provide for the form in which the decision of the arbitrator in respect of the matters referred to him shall be set forth.

(2) An arbitrator appointed under subsection (1) has, with such modifications as the circumstances require, all the powers and duties of an arbitrator under section 157 of the Canada Labour Code.

(3) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act or of the Canada Labour Code, the arbitrator shall be required to decide all matters referred to him under this Part within 60 days of his appointment.

8 (1) When an arbitrator appointed under section 7 decides all matters referred to him, the collective agreements to which this Part applies are deemed to be amended by the incorporation therein of such decision and by the incorporation therein of such other amendments as may have been agreed to by the parties thereto prior to the decision of the arbitrator, and the collective agreements as so amended constitute new collective agreements which shall have effect

(i) in the case of the collective agreement referred to in paragraph (a) of the definition "collective agreements to which this Part applies" in section 3, on and from January 1, 1975, and

(ii) in the case of the collective agreements referred to in paragraph (b) of the definition "collective agreements to which this Part applies" in section 3, on and from January 16, 1975.

(2) Nothing in section 5 or in subsection (1) shall be deemed to limit or restrict the rights of the parties to a collective agreement to agree to vary or amend any of the provisions of the collective agreement as amended pursuant to that section and that subsection other than a provision relating to the term of the collective agreement, and to give effect thereto."

As I said, Madam Chairman, my amendment is a lengthy one. I have read it all so it is not necessary to ask for the consent I referred to earlier. The point is that the language is taken verbatim, with the exception of changes in respect of certain clause numbers, from the legislation which sent the longshoremen on the west coast back to work. It provides for an arbitrator, a provision which we think should be a part of this legislation. I hope the government will give favourable consideration to this amendment. When we rose at six o'clock I gave the Minister of Labour a copy of all the amendments we intend to move at this stage.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The House has heard the terms of the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said amendment?

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Chairman, I was hoping the minister would rise at some point during committee of the whole stage to tell us how he feels about what we have said at second reading and at the committee stage regarding these three harbours and the job security provisions of the Gold report.

The Gold report is fairly thick but I suspect both sides will accept, either willingly or grudgingly, most of the recommendations in the report, with the exception of the job security provision which is the most crucial issue in this dispute. I would like the minister to let us know why he cannot accept exactly the same as was provided in the case of Vancouver. There an arbitrator was appointed and his decision was binding on both sides. There are arguments against that situation as well, but at least we would not be legislating a contract in the kind of detail that is in the Gold report.

Unless I am mistaken in my reading and understanding of the Gold report, we are legislating all of the longshoremen in Three Rivers back to work with a guarantee of 1,200 hours. Under the previous agreement they had a guarantee of 1,480 hours. Even with the wage package that is in this legislation they will be no better off, and possibly will be worse off, than they were under the old agreement. If, in fact, Mr. Gold's report says that the overtime they work from Monday to Friday will be deducted from the 1,200 hours, they will be in an even worse position. Surely we can do no less than legislate these men back to work in a way whereby they will be no worse off than before.

I ask the minister what is wrong with these amendments? They do exactly what was done before, namely, leave it to an arbitrator to examine Mr. Gold's recommendations on job security. The only point we are trying to make is with regard to the job security issue. As far as I am concerned the other 60 or 70 pages of Mr. Gold's report can go "as is", with possibly only minor changes. After meeting with both sides surely an arbitrator will endeavour to meet these points and come up with something that is more acceptable with regard to job security provisions.

If we in this parliament insist on legislating men back to work in Three Rivers with a guarantee of 1,200 hours instead of 1,480 hours, and other men with a guarantee of 1,400 hours instead of the former 1,480 hours, even with the pay increase they could well lose if the overtime hours are counted against them. An officer of the union said that what has been given in the wage package, which is not too bad, has been taken away once or twice in the job security provisions of maximum hours guaranteed in the course of a year's work. I just cannot see workers of any kind sitting still for that. Why does the minister not agree we can and should do exactly the same as we did in the Vancouver legislation?

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Madam Chairman, I will answer the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and then get to the questions asked by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre.

With regard to the precedents we are dealing with here, the legislation we had dealing with the west coast longshoremen was in a situation where there was not a commissioner appointed. There was no board chairman appointed. In that situation the parties asked that there be no commissioner and no board chairman. They wished to negotiate themselves. However, they were unsuccessful in doing so. There was no report on which to base any legislation. That is why we just extended the collective agreement and appointed an arbitrator.

In this situation we have a commissioner's report. He made firm recommendations in contractual language. This is similar to the situation we had with the grainhandlers' strike on the west coast. In that case, Dr. Perry was the single man commission. He recommended all the provisions of the collective agreement, put it in contractual language, and parliament legislated the Perry recommendations in total as the collective agreement. In that particular case the commissioner's report had the support of the employees. Parliament supported the government. I believe the members of the New Democratic Party supported that legislation and, as I indicated, so did the union.

Here we have an analogous situation. We have a commissioner's report by Judge Alan Gold. Again, it is highly thought of by both union and management. Both agreed to him in this particular role as commissioner. He has come down with a report in detail. All the recommendations are in contractual language. However, this time it is agreed to by the employers and not the employees. We are following the same course, but it happens to be the opposite side of the coin in so far as who agrees to it. There is our precedent.

I will now turn to some of the points raised by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre. I might just indicate to him that what is recommended here in terms of job security is a job security study provision that has been plaguing the proper operation of this port for endless years. It has been studied by the most able man in this field, Judge Alan Gold. It is agreed that in industrial relations his ability is unquestioned. Equally important, his experience in industrial relations is practiced in the St. Lawrence ports.

I repeat that it is appropriate to recall that in 1968, as I indicated in my opening remarks, and again in 1971 Judge Gold was appointed chairman of the conciliation board which dealt with the complex and difficult longshoring problems. He is the one who dealt with this particular situation. With regard to the differential between Trois-Rivières, Quebec City and Montreal, he had a special assignment by Professor Bellemare that also looked into this. The situation is that the traffic is not as heavy in Trois-Rivières and Quebec City as in Montreal.

I would point out to the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre that job security in Montreal is higher, 1,600 hours as opposed to 1,480 hours. Of the 2,200 longshoremen, 1,600 are in Montreal. Therefore the vast majority do benefit. The recommendations are based on the most solid expertise we could get.

Even if the government followed another course, and this is hypothetical, and decided we would do something along the lines recommended by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, appoint an arbitrator and extend the current collective agreement, it is very unlikely we could find an arbitrator of the competence of Alan Gold.

These are essentially the reasons why we are recommending action along these lines. Once we have decided to proceed along the lines of incorporating a commissioner's report as the collective agreement, we cannot change that. Some of us may not like one particular aspect and want it deleted. Others may want other aspects deleted. Before we know it the whole thing could collapse and we would not have a coherent, cogent collective agreement incorporated in our legislation.

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Chairman, I recognize the difficulty of the minister. In this bill he is essentially proposing that we follow the recommendations of Mr. Justice Gold. We do not question the ability of Mr. Justice Gold or his past experience, but we are wondering how this will actually work. The minister said that 1,600 to 2,200 workers work in Montreal. They are protected, of course, by the provision that they will be guaranteed 2,000 hours. But we are concerned about the 600 workers in Quebec City and the workers in Three Rivers. In the case of the latter, they will be guaranteed not more than 1,200 hours. That works out to a guarantee of 30 weeks' work and a gross income of $6 per hour, or $7,200 for the year. For a married man with a wife and two children, that amounts to less than the poverty level. I do not think the minister can be very happy about making that kind of proposal.

I suggest to the minister that if the workers in Three Rivers are guaranteed only 30 weeks, they will be entitled to 20 weeks' unemployment insurance benefits. That seems a very strange proposition for the government to make. The worker would be guaranteed 30 weeks' work in the industry, and if that is all the work there is they will be guaranteed 20 weeks' unemployment insurance benefits. They then become, not the responsibility of the industry to which they are tied as long as they work but the responsibility of the Canadian taxpayers. This would not be just for one year but on a permanent basis unless there is more work in Three Rivers than the minister seems to feel there is.

The situation in Quebec City, while a little better is really not much better. Instead of 30 weeks, the workers would be guaranteed 35 weeks' work. Surely the minister can come up with a better, more humane proposal than that contained in this bill.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Benjamin: No, Madam Chairman. The minister did not answer the points I raised. He discussed the integrity and the ability of Mr. Justice Gold, and there is no argument about that, but I hope he is not trying to tell the House that Mr. Justice Gold is perfect and that everything contained in his report is 100 per cent correct. No matter who takes the role of conciliator or arbitrator, they are not perfect when they bring in their reports. Both sides to a dispute would agree with that. All we are saying is that we remove much of the specific decision-making that is asked of this parliament and turn it over to an arbitrator. The minister has not assured the House and this committee that several hundred longshoremen will not, in fact, be worse off than under the old agreement.

Since the issue is job security, I remind the minister that there used to be 3,400 longshoremen and there are now 2,200. That fact should cause some concern. With all due respect to Mr. Justice Gold, in regard to the job security provisions and the annual number of hours at these three ports he is wrong. Even if he is not wrong, surely parliament should not legislate in respect of that kind of detail: it is something an arbitrator should be doing. All we ask is that an arbitrator rule on that part of the draft collective agreement which Mr. Justice Gold submitted in the form of a report to the minister. I refer only to the job security provisions. If the minister wishes to legislate all the rest, I am in no position to argue with him because I have not had a chance to peruse it all. I refer only to the job security provisions, the 1,600-hour framework for Montreal, 1,400 for Quebec City and 1,200 for Three Rivers. It seems to me that is the meat of the issue which will have the minister and many others in trouble in just two or three months.

The amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre proposes that the arbitrator must report back within 60 days with his ruling, which will be binding on both sides. That will not put us into another strike situation. The contract will be for three years until the end of 1977. I agree that this is not exactly the same as the Vancouver situation, but the principle is the same.

Can the minister assure the committee that the recommendations will not in fact mean, with deductibility in respect of overtime hours, that workers—certainly those in Three Rivers, probably those in Quebec City, and among the junior workers in Montreal—will not be better off, and usually worse off, than they are under the existing agreement? How can we legislate that kind of settlement? I repeat what I said this afternoon: if we are to put them back to work, let us put them back to work fairly, and not unfairly.

Mr. Forrestall: Madam Chairman, I wish to direct a related question to the minister. Having some sympathy for the point being made by this amendment—and I am speaking in a very personal way—and having some concern about this House having anything to do with legislation respecting terms of collective agreements, I ask the minister if he can shed some light on the position we are put into with respect to negotiations, for example, which are going on now at the port of Saint John. Negotiations are reasonably well advanced there.

I dislike dealing in hypothetical situations, but I think the minister at this stage of this legislation could let his mind roam and give us an indication as to whether what we are doing now could be considered a precedent in the—hopefully, unlikely—event that the good workers in Saint John will not be able to reach meaningful arrangements with the MEA. In the event they do not and a conciliator has to be named in Saint John, New Brunswick—and, as well, with respect to the port of Halifax where negotiations will commence, probably, in September or October—will what we are doing tonight not establish a precedent which probably could place negotiations, particularly in Halifax, in a more militant posture and could have very serious consequences with respect to the finalization of the negotiations in the port of Saint John?

I wonder if the minister could shed a little light on that matter, because in no small way would it have something to do with my decision as to whether in fact we have any moral right to tamper with an issue which is in dispute and with my accepting the minister's arguments with respect to items which are in dispute. But with respect to items which are in dispute I am afraid of the precedent we might establish in terms of current negotiations and others which will be current before the end of the summer or the early part of the fall.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Madam Chairman, I indicated earlier that the action we are now recommending is not to be regarded as a prededent. I think the course of action followed by the government, when it has to legislate, should be one which, considering all the circumstances, is the best and is not tied to precedent, on the basis that often this is an argument which enhances the chances of a settlement outside parliament. The parties are not aware of precisely what they may face if they have to come to parliament. That type of situation may very well retard the efforts of one party or the other to get off the hook, so to speak, with their own membership. By letting parliament pass legislation that the employers do not like and would prefer to have foisted on them, or that the union leadership does not like because they do not want to take the risk of recommending it to the membership and having it repudiated, both parties avoid responsibility.

I do not think the hon. member should be too concerned about the precedent setting nature of this particular legislation. In answer to a question by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre I indicated that we had followed this course before. It is true that we did not do it with the west coast longshoremen, but we did it with the grain handlers and the Perry report.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment (Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) negatived: Yeas, 7; nays, 65.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 7 carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 7 agreed to.

On clause 8—Appointment of Referee.

Mr. Fraser: I wonder if I could ask the Minister of Labour in regard to this clause whether it is his understanding that the referee will be looking at the wording of the Gold report only and will not be referring back to any of the collective agreements that have covered relationships between these parties over the last several years. In terms of the interpretation and implementation of this clause, is it his intention that the referee must confine himself to the Gold report and this legislation, and will not wander back into the collective agreements that are no longer in effect between the parties?

[Mr. Forrestall.]

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Yes, Madam Chairman. In the exercise of his duties he is restricted to refereeing the interpretation of the contents of the Gold report.

Mr. Forrestall: Madam Chairman, clause 8(4) reads:

> For the purposes of this part, a referee appointed under this section has, with such modifications as the circumstances require, all the powers conferred on a conciliation board under section 175 of the Canada Labour Code.

Is the minister saying that the clause modifies the powers that are conferred under the appropriate act? Is he now saying it is restricted, without having spelled it out, while the latter stage of this clause is expanding the powers of section 175 of the Canada Labour Code?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): No Madam Chairman, this clause refers to procedural matters. In other words he has the power, if he wishes, to call witnesses and that type of thing. He has powers of subpoena but on strictly procedural matters, not matters of substance.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Madam Chairman, I take it from clause 8(4) that the power of the referee is strictly that of a conciliation officer. He is not the arbitrator but is simply to bring parties together to try to get agreement on matters that might be outstanding.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): The referee is not a conciliation officer. A conciliation officer is one who goes out to the parties later on as a matter of course and endeavours to bring them together before they move to the next stage of a conciliation commissioner. It is not that at all. It is the function of a referee to interpret whenever there is some difference of opinion about what we are faced with here, the contents of the Gold report. In so doing he has the powers of a conciliation commissioner, not officer—a conciliation commissioner or conciliation board, in terms of having the capacity to summon witnesses.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Of course I should have used the term conciliation commissioner. He has the power of a conciliation board to seek to bring parties together on any matters that are still outstanding. I wanted the assurance of the minister that he has not got the power of arbitrator, that he cannot make any change unless it is acceptable to both parties concerned. Is that correct?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): That is essentially correct, if we understand each other. He cannot go beyond Gold; that is his limitation. He may be called upon to interpret the language of Gold, however, if the parties themselves cannot do it.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Madam Speaker, Clause 8(5) under consideration provides that the parties may amend the collective agreement. Does that mean that the parties may agree to amend part of the collective agreement, or all of it, by mutual agreement? Still, the last few lines read as follows:

—other than a provision relating to the term of the collective agreement.

Is this a restriction provided in case an agreement is reached on the clauses of the collective agreement, whereby the act would then prevent any agreement to extend or shorten the life of the collective agreement, complete agreement having otherwise been reached between the two parties?

● (2040)

[English]

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Madam Chairman, if the parties agree, that is fine. They can make any amendments they wish, except those altering the termination date in the agreement. They can make any type of amendment they wish, provided both parties agree.

Clause 8 agreed to.

Clauses 9 and 10 agreed to.

On clause 11—Term of collective agreement extended.

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Chairman, we have now reached the part of the bill which deals with checkers and cargo repairmen. I wish to move an amendment which will endeavour to do for these people the very same thing we tried to do for the longshoremen, and do what the hon. member for Vancouver South this afternoon said we should do in the area of job security. The amendment would put the matter in the hands of an arbitrator who should make decisions binding on both sides. That is exactly the point made by the hon. member for Vancouver South this afternoon, with which we agree. The hon. member said that parliament should not legislate all these details. I hope the hon. member for Vancouver South, who said in a much better way this afternoon what I just tried to say, will support this amendment to clause 11.

I move:

That Bill C-59 be amended by striking out lines 3 to 20 on page 8, and substituting therefor the following:

"(2) Upon the coming into force of this Part, the terms and conditions of each of the collective agreements to which this Part applies are amended by increasing, effective January 1, 1975, each hourly rate of wages in effect on December 31, 1974, as established by or pursuant to such agreement, by the amount recommended in the reports of the conciliation commissioner that were received by the Minister of Labour on April 9, 1975."

The amendment, if accepted, would leave in the bill only those parts relating to wages, and would delete that part of the clause which talks about the incorporation of all the other matters recommended by the conciliation commissioner. It would do what the hon. member for Vancouver South this afternoon suggested should be done.

Amendment (Mr. Benjamin) negatived: Yeas, 8; nays, 63.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 11 carry?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On division.

Clause 11 agreed to on division.

Clause 12 agreed to.

On clause 13—Parties to negotiate.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Chairman, just as we proposed two separate amendments respecting those involved in longshoring and related operations, so are we now moving similar amendments with respect to checkers and cargo repairmen. We have already dealt with an amendment which would have confined the compulsory nature of this legislation to the wage settlement. I now wish to propose an amendment which would put an arbitrator into the picture with respect to the checkers and cargo repairmen, in the same way as we proposed with respect to the longshoremen. The amendment is pretty long, so hon. members can relax for a couple of minutes. I move:

That Bill C-59 be amended by striking out clauses 13 and 14, lines 1 to 44 on page 9 and lines 1 to 18 on page 10, and by substituting therefor the following:

"13. (1) The Minister of Labour shall

(a) appoint an arbitrator and refer to him all matters relating to the amendment or revision of the collective agreements to which this Part applies, with the exception of those matters referred to in paragraph 11 (2)

(b) provide for the form in which the decision of the arbitrator in respect of the matters referred to him shall be set forth.

(2) An arbitrator appointed under subsection (1) has, with such modifications as the circumstances require, all the powers and duties of an arbitrator under section 157 of the Canada Labour Code.

(3) Notwithstanding any other provision of this act or of the Canada Labour Code, the arbitrator shall be required to decide all matters referred to him under this Part within 60 days of his appointment.

14. (1) When an arbitrator appointed under section 13 decides all matters referred to him, the collective agreements to which this Part applies are deemed to be amended by the incorporation therein of such decision and by the incorporation therein of such other amendments as may have been agreed to by the parties thereto prior to the decision of the arbitrator, and the collective agreements as so amended constitute new collective agreements which shall have effect on and from January 1, 1975.

(2) Nothing in section 11 or in subsection (1) shall be deemed to limit or restrict the rights of the parties to a collective agreement to agree to vary or amend any of the provisions of the collective agreement as amended pursuant to that section and that subsection other than a provision relating to the term of the collective agreement, and to give effect thereto."

The reason that language is so choice and fits the bill so well is because it is taken from the Minister of Labour who put those words in the last bill which sent longshoremen back to work. I move this amendment in the hope that, despite the refusal of the minister to accept my hon. friend's proposal, he will see fit to approve this proposition as it relates to checkers and cargo repairmen.

Amendment negatived; Yeas, 9; nays, 64.

Clause 13 agreed to.

Clauses 14 to 18 inclusive agreed to.

Mr. MacGuigan: On a point of order, Madam Chairman, there is a minor typographical error in clause 5 having to do with the term of the agreement. Would there be consent to re-open clause 5 in order that this amendment could be made?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is not the only error in this bill.

An hon. Member: This is typographical.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On clause 5—Term of Collective Agreement Extended.

Mr. MacGuigan: I move:

That Bill C-59 be amended by striking out line 33 on page 3 and substituting the following:

"the period beginning on January 16, 1975".

An hon. Member: The wrong year!

Mr. Stanfield: On a point of order, Madam Chairman, I do not object to the clause being re-opened, but that is not a typographical error. It is just an error.

Mr. MacGuigan: I do not wish to indulge in a debate on semantics with the Leader of the Opposition, but there are several other places where the same formula is repeated and this is the only one where there is that error.

Mr. Stanfield: It is a mistake, not a typographical error.

Mr. MacGuigan: In my opinion it is a typographical error.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise not only to express the thanks of my union, the International Typographical Union, for the support given to us by the Leader of the Opposition—

Mr. Stanfield: I repudiate it!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I suggest to the Leader of the Opposition that he spoke too soon. I would point out that the so-called error appears both in the English and in the French versions. I suggest, therefore, that it was not a printer's error, but an error in the copy which was sent to the printer.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause 5, as amended, agreed to.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What about clause one? On clause 1—Short title.

Mr. Forrestall: Madam Chairman, there are one or two things I want to get off my chest with respect to what has taken place this afternoon before we move on to third reading. I shall try to be brief.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Forrestall: Those members sitting in the back row opposite who supported that comment should wait until they have been around a little while and suffered the consequences of making a mistake about what they are doing here. It may all be a little humorous to a number of members opposite, but some of us who are concerned for labour and the rights of labour in Canada do not regard it as humorous. Rather than identify the individual to whom these remarks are directed—he is relatively new around here—I will let him get away with it for once.

The step we have taken tonight is not a very healthy one for this parliament. The minister himself has indicated that this was not the procedure he would like to find himself pursuing. I hope that is true of all of us. When the House of Commons finds itself called upon arbitrarily to settle the terms of a collective agreement between two parties, I think we ought seriously to review our procedures, not only those in Part V of the Canada Labour Code but those set out in other legislation dealing with relations between employers and employees.

I have reservations about this bill which go beyond the fact that we are dealing with the terms of a collective agreement. They concern the very nature of the relationship between the Maritime Employers Association, the longshoremen's associations and the Government of Canada. The government is not here with completely free hands. It is party to a guarantee to secure to the banks certain amounts of money—I think the total amount owed by the MEA is now some $18 million.

The people have a right to know what is being done in this chamber tonight. The situation is not without conflict, and this conflict arises when it becomes apparent to those who are familiar with the financial obligations undertaken by the government—obligations which must, I suppose, be honoured—that the government is committed to honouring a debt of the Maritime Employers Association. It is in the best interests of the government that this strike be settled. It is not necessarily in the best interests of the employers and members of the unions involved, save for one respect.

However, clearly there is a conflict among those in the government seats about using this way of getting around an obligation that could very well follow should the strike be prolonged in the river ports to the point where the Maritime Employers Association might be forced to default in their undertakings to two of the principal banks that advanced them money, firstly for their retirement program two or three years ago and latterly for other reasons. I do not think we should let the bill go out of committee without some observation being made in this regard.

I find this proceeding distasteful. I abstained from voting for that reason, in part. Perhaps, more fundamentally, I abstained because this is the second time in the nine or ten years I have been here that this chamber has been caught up in determining the terms of settlement for a collective agreement between two parties. I am also somewhat disturbed about this proceeding, even though the difficulty has arisen in large measure because of abuse of the legal right to picket by striking employees albeit on legal strike. I find no capacity within my thinking to tolerate or accept this, and I do not think any other member of the chamber does. I regret very much that the laws that now exist are not sufficient to correct this situation and that the government has used this thinly disguised pretext for bringing this measure before us. I regret that the existing authorities could not be invoked to protect the right of Quebec producers to have access to feed grains.

Based on the debate that we had a week ago tonight, I suspect that the urgency of this matter is not the national interest but that much narrower concern. Had we been dealing tonight with that much narrower concern, I would have felt a lot better as a member of this chamber. But we are not. We are here, as we all know, arbitrarily imposing upon employer and employee the terms of their collective agreement for the next two or three years. I regret this and I hope it will not be a precedent. I hope the minister's caution to the parties to the collective agreements will be taken at its face value and that this parliament does not intend lightly to find itself back in this position. The collective agreements with respect to the ILA and the Maritime Employers Association are ongoing in Saint John and will come up again in Halifax.

I hope that members of the unions involved, particularly the member companies of the Maritime Employers Association, do not sit too comfortably in their chairs tonight—I am not suggesting that they will do so—laughing at some of us because, in their opinion, they feel we have been dupes or pawns, unaware of some of the ramifications and implications of what lies behind the action of this parliament in ordering men back to work on the basis of a conciliation report.

I hope the minister will flex his muscles a bit and find some way to force parties to collective agreements to get on with the job of working out their problems. In my opinion, it was not good enough for the mediator in this case to meet with the parties once or twice and then wander off for three weeks. I am suspicious of that. I do not think we put our fullest effort into bringing the two sides together. The fact that they said they were not going to talk, and broke off discussions because of an apparent inability to get together, is all part of the adversary system. We may not like that, but we accept it. But it does not mean that the two sides cannot be brought together. In this case it is a matter of personal regret that a greater effort was not made so that we might have avoided doing what we are doing tonight.

Mr. Andre: Madam Chairman, I shall not keep the chamber long; I just want to add a few remarks to those of my colleague who has just resumed his seat. I have come out of this experience feeling used. In participating in the debate and voting for this bill which I think is necessary, essentially I am an arbitrator: I am arbitrating a labour dispute—and I just do not have the competence to do that. I submit that none of us in this chamber has the competence to make such a decision at this time.

Mr. Benjamin: That is what our amendment said.

Mr. Andre: This is the fourth time in the 2½ years I have been in this chamber that we have acted on legislation like this. It is the second time that we have been arbitrators. Once we were partial arbitrators, and only once did we in fact ask for arbitration by a competent arbitrator.

Collective bargaining procedures in most cases make provision for the four steps of negotiation, mediation, conciliation and arbitration. Each of those steps requires expertise, talent and time for the individuals concerned to look at the facts, to hear both sides of the story and to do what they can to bring about a solution. In this case we are being arbitrators and imposing a solution with none of the necessary study or expertise required; and this leaves me, as I say, feeling used. I think it is a most unsatisfactory way of proceeding.

Mr. Benjamin: Did you support our amendments?

Mr. Andre: The hon. member from the NDP keeps interjecting and asking about their amendments. He would have us acting, of course, as partial arbitrators, which is the worst possible thing. The one advantage here is that we are acting upon the recommendation of a well known labour expert by the name of Judge Gold and there is some comfort to be derived from this. But even that is not sufficient because I do not have the competence, and I think no one else here has, with due respect to Judge Gold, to make a judgment without having participated in the whole process.

I suggest to the minister and those on the other side that it is time something was done to find a permanent and more satisfactory structure for resolving these sorts of situations. I think it is ridiculous to demean parliament by continuing this procedure at the rate we have. Surely some permanent structure can be worked out which will be fair, equitable and just and will not amount to asking this House to arbitrate a labour dispute in this manner. It is time some leadership was shown.

Mr. Stanfield: Madam Chairman, I wonder whether the minister is in a position to give us an assurance tonight that the House is not going to be asked to do any more of this sort of thing for the next three years because we are going to have a beautiful consensus in the country.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I am very optimistic, Madam Chairman.

Clause agreed to.

● (2110)

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, we agree with the views which have been expressed by a number of members to the effect that this is a distasteful business. I have listened many times to speeches in which people have said, "Let it not happen again"—but it seems to continue to happen. Even so, I think when in the view of the government the time is reached when legislation of this kind must be introduced, it should be tempered as much as possible.

We felt very strongly, and acted accordingly in committee of the whole on the bill, that the compulsory part of this settlement should apply only to the wages and not to some of the other features of the Gold report, including those having to do with job security. We also felt that the provision for an arbitrator which has been included in other legislation should have been included in this bill, if we must have a bill of this kind at all. We feel very strongly that a bill which just legislates the whole package and leaves no room for adjustment other than such adjustments as both parties agree to is not an example of parliament at its best.

Mr. Speaker, we regret that the committee of the whole did not see fit to accept the amendments we proposed. We feel, therefore, that the House should have an opportunity to reconsider this matter. To be specific, we think the House should have a chance to reconsider the narrowing of the compulsory element in the case of both groups, the longshoremen and the checkers and repairmen, and that in both cases we should reconsider the question of appointing an arbitrator. For this reason, we intend to move, as an amendment to third reading of the bill, that it be referred back to the committee of the whole House for the purpose of considering the subjects to which I have just referred.

The technical way to do that is to move a reference back for the purpose of reconsidering the precise clauses that need to be reopened in order to deal with these two matters. I say that so there will be a clear meaning to the amendment I shall read momentarily. The amendment just refers to clause numbers, but if one looks at the bill and those numbers he will realize we are asking for reconsideration of two propositions, namely, narrowing the compulsory feature of the Gold report to the wage settlement, and the appointment of an arbitrator in both cases. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin):

That Bill C-59 be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole House for the purpose of reconsidering clauses 5(3), 7, 8, 11(2), 13 and 14 thereof.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said amendment?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I shall only take a few minutes to ask the House, particularly my colleagues, the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre), the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) and the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), to consider this third reading amendment on the basis of their argument and proposition. I say immediately that our amendment does not mean that there will be prolonged delay in the passage of this legislation. In fact, if the House accepts the amendment it means that we will revert to committee of the whole for five or ten minutes, accept the amendments we moved at the committee stage, return to third reading and pass the kind of bill that my colleague the hon. member for Vancouver South and I suggested we should have so that we will not be legislatively arbitrating a settlement of the most contentious part of the dispute at these three ports, namely, job security. That is all our amendment is addressed to, and all we are asking the House to do now is reconsider what we failed to do in committee of the whole.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

I reiterate that legislating that portion of the Gold report which is in very serious dispute can mean only that we will end up having even greater industrial strife at these three harbours in the months ahead. I hope I am wrong in this prediction, but from past experience in similar instances when we have dealt with legislation in the House in respect of industrial disputes and a settlement has been unfairly arrived at, it has lead to more industrial strife.

I agree with the hon. member for Calgary Centre that in respect of the amendment we are appointing an arbitrator to arbitrate part of the dispute in contention, but from what I have been informed and have read, the only really serious issue in contention is job security. I believe that most, if not all, of the other recommendations in Mr. Justice Gold's report are acceptable in whole or in part to both sides of the dispute, but job security is an issue which is of even more serious consequence than the issue of wages. I think both sides will accept, on the issue of wages, Mr. Justice Gold's recommendations.

If the House accepts this amendment, it will not mean there will be a prolonged delay of the legislation. We could still be out of here by ten o'clock. If we were to accept the amendment moved in committee of the whole, we would not be placing this parliament in the position of legislating a back to work law about which the hon. member for Vancouver South, the hon. member for Calgary Centre and the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East expressed fears, as I believe did the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert).

The issue to which I have referred is most contentious and could cause us serious difficulty in the months ahead. Let us take the matter of job security out of the legislation and put it in the hands of an arbitrator, whose decision would be binding in the same way as the decision of the arbitrator in the Vancouver situation. I admit this is only on that one issue, but it is the main issue and the one that caused this strike in the three ports. Surely it is not unreasonable to place this serious issue in the hands of an arbitrator rather than members of parliament legislating that kind of settlement.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I simply want to indicate that I find it difficult to believe that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) are serious in making a motion such as this, when the matter has just come out of the committee. I have to say that I find it difficult to take the motion seriously.

I want to add just one more sentence. I notice in connection with this kind of bill that judging from previous occasions my friends in the New Democratic Party usually vote for the bill on second reading, then put in some amendments that are rejected in committee, and vote against the bill on third reading in order that they may be on both sides of the question right through the piece.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I merely want to correct an impression that might have been left by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin). He is absolutely right when he says I find it almost abhorrent to be called upon to be an arbitrator. I think it is wrong for parliament to be called upon to be an arbitrator. It is an inappropriate procedure.

The one redeeming feature of this bill is that the conciliation report on which this legislation is based was assembled by a man of high repute. His repute is indisputable. Therefore I guess we can put up with the embarrassment of being called upon to arbitrate this dispute.

To follow the suggestion of the NDP in this regard of looking at this conciliation report and saying this clause is fine, that clause is not, this clause is fine, that clause is not, is to in cast a doubt on this report by the commissioner. If we were in fact to do that, there is no way I could feel in justified in going along. The one redeeming feature is that we are basing our arbitration on a report by a man who is well reputed and whose judgment we can trust. That does not get away from the fact I still find it repugnant for parliament to be called upon the act as arbitrator.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to join in this debate because the case for our party has been fully put by other spokesmen. However, I cannot refrain from replying to the comment made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield).

The suggestion was made that somehow the NDP is doing something that is inappropriate when it agrees in principle with a piece of legislation, then tries to get it amended, and when it fails to get through the amendment that it desires, votes against it in the final stage. Surely that is what the parliamentary process is all about. Just because the Conservative party makes not effort to propose serious amendments to legislation is a rather poor reason for criticizing those who do.

In so far as the Leader of the Opposition thinks it is necessary to provide some argument to justify our position, I will add one other point. The NDP took the same position on the last back to work legislation we had before the House. We agreed with it in principle. Unlike the Conservative party, we proposed amendments which were accepted by the House, and we voted for the bill on the final reading.

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, despite the feeling of some members of this House, I feel the amendment makes good sense, particularly if one has had any connection with labour and management problems. I am not only concerned because the right to strike has been taken away, but the right to further negotiate is being interfered with. If this amendment is not accepted we will be leading this country labour relations-wise into a real jungle of labour management problems and confusion. Labour and management will always be dependent on government to write compulsory labour agreements. I do not think that is the function of parliament. It is not fair to the employee or the employer, and is not in the public interest. I think this is a darn poor precedent for this parliament to establish.

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, as I said in my statement this afternoon, I thought this bill was based essentially on a report submitted by the conciliation commissioner, Mr. Justice Gold, to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) and dated March 14, 1975. In a letter sent on the same day to the Minister of Labour, Mr. Gold wrote, among other things:

> I regret to inform you that, although both sides tried their best during our almost daily meetings since I was appointed as conciliation commissioner, on December 24, 1974, they have not managed to reach an agreement. You will therefore find herewith my report and recommendations by way of a collective agreement draft.

Mr. Speaker, I sincerely believe Mr. Justice Gold submitted that report to the Minister of Labour as the result of a very serious work; he himself reports: "Almost daily meetings". In other words, considerable attempts were made to reach an agreement, a conciliation, to sign a collective agreement which would satisfy both employers and employees. Unfortunately, after many meetings, they were unable to reach an agreement. And since March 14, the Minister of Labour let hold of events. We asked him questions in the House; we were concerned, and rightly so, about the effects of such unfortunate work stoppage, on behalf of workers and of those who suffer from this situation, in particular farming producers in the province of Quebec. More than a month later since today is April 23, the Government eventually decided to introduce a legislation, not of their own free will as the minister said, but because the parties of the dispute did not manage to reach an agreement even thanks to such a highly competent man as Mr. Justice Gold, who made every possible effort to try and reach an agreement acceptable to both parties.

This afternoon, a bill was introduced, Bill C-59. All the hon. members had the opportunity to give their opinion about the principle of the bill. Then, we studied it in committee of the whole. It is obvious that the bill pleases no one, at least not the hon. member for Bellechasse, but in view of the urgent need for a settlement, something has to be done in the interest of the public, and Parliament must legislate. I understand that NDP members have moved amendments with all their usual sincerity. I am convinced that these members wanted to take part in the debate and make, or at least suggest, amendments so that the bill would be more in keeping with the aspirations of the workers.

Since we have been in committee of the whole since the House resumed tonight at 8 p.m., and have made a clause by clause study of this bill, I believe that every effort has been made by Parliament to provide a measure as fair as possible to the workers and the employers. It is quite obvious that when we drive a car and must apply the brakes at a given time, the speed of the car is reduced. We reach our destination later, but this is sometimes necessary to avoid losing control in a detour. This is what we must do today in Parliament. We are aiming at bringing back together parties who do not agree, without taking sides. We want to solve a problem and we are giving them time, in the next weeks and months, to continue to negotiate and to understand each other.

Mr. Speaker, it is in this spirit that Parliament has made a serious study of this bill, and I hope that tonight we shall be able to go through the final stages of the bill in the House of Commons, even if we have to let the Senate do its own work later.

For my part, I am ready to support the bill, as I said earlier, so as to put some order in this matter and avoid the worst.

PROPOSAL TO INCREASE FUNDING OF NATIVE ORGANIZATIONS PARTICIPATING IN BERGER COMMISSION HEARINGS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the importance of the Berger commission hearings to the people of the Canadian north and, indeed, to all of Canada, and in view of the necessity of providing adequate funds for research and educational work if the native and environmental groups are to have a significant input to the Berger hearings, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House instruct the government to review its level of funding for the native and environmental groups involved in the Berger commission hearings, with a view to restoring such financial support to a level that will permit an adequate degree of research and educational work.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion is proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43 and cannot be presented or debated without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

REQUEST GOVERNMENT ACT TO BRING TWO DAUGHTERS OF MRS. LAM FROM VIET NAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on an urgent and pressing matter concerning the fate of two small children in South Viet Nam. I believe this is a matter that rises above any political consideration, on which hopefully there might be unanimity in the interests of humanitarianism. I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp):

That, in regard to Mrs. Lang Lam and her two sons who are landed immigrants from South Viet Nam living in Toronto, and in consideration of the fact that Mrs. Lam's two small daughters age 13 and 15 still remain in Saigon in serious danger of being trapped there, the House asks the government to consider taking whatever steps it feels may be necessary to hopefully bring about the safe evacuation from Saigon and transportation to Toronto of these two children.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion being presented pursuant to Standing Order 43 cannot be debated without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

VIET NAM—METHOD OF DEALING WITH EVACUATION OF VIETNAMESE IN VIEW OF WITHDRAWAL OF CANADIAN DIPLOMATIC PERSONNEL

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the government has now withdrawn its diplomatic personnel from Saigon, in what way is the government now trying to arrange the evacuation of Vietnamese personnel and families, and I think particularly of those who are long-term employees of the Canadian government offices in Saigon or in Viet Nam?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it was my impression that all the Canadians who were in Viet Nam had either decided to stay or had taken advantage of the opportunities to get out. Perhaps the Leader of the Opposition could be a little more specific as to particular cases?

VIET NAM—NUMBER OF VIETNAMESE DESIRING TO COME TO CANADA AND GOVERNMENT'S ATTITUDE TOWARDS THEM

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question does not relate to Canadians, but rather to Vietnamese who have worked for the Canadian government and have expressed a desire to come to Canada. How many such Vietnamese employees have expressed a desire to come to Canada and what is the intention of the Canadian government with regard to these people?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration can answer in detail on the policies we have been following, but in general we have been prepared to accept Vietnamese who are related to Canadians, or people of the kind referred to by the Leader of the Opposition. The difficulty arose not on our side, in that we were prepared to grant visas, but arose because they could not get exit permits.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, my question was asked in respect of long-term employees of the government of Canada and the Acting Prime Minister has not told me how many there are of those who wish to come to Canada. Let me put my question this way to the Acting Prime Minister.

Mr. Stanfield: How many government employees, for example, who are Vietnamese and want to come to Canada have been refused permission by the Vietnamese authorities? Is it simply that they have been unable to obtain an answer, have been refused permission, or is it the attitude of the Government of Canada that in these circumstances the Government of Canada would not be justified in taking a humanitarian attitude rather than a strictly legalistic attitude toward people who have served this country for many years.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I do not have the number of applicants. Perhaps my colleague the Minister of Manpower and Immigration has some of the figures concerning the numbers who want to come and who have been granted visas by the Canadian government. I can only reiterate that the difficulty does not lie on our side. It has arisen from the fact that the government of the Republic of South Vietnam has not been prepared to issue the permits.

VIET NAM—RIGHT OF VIETNAMESE AUTHORITIES TO BOARD CANADIAN AIRCRAFT—POSSIBILITY OF HAVING IMMIGRATION OFFICERS IN SAIGON

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. Does the Canadian government recognize the right of the South Vietnamese government to board Canadian aircraft and decide who travels on Canadian aircraft.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, so long as those aircraft are in South Vietnam they are under the jurisdiction of the Government of Vietnam.

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, I would have hoped that the government would adopt not a legalistic but a humanitarian attitude. Since the government is so concerned about South Vietnamese regulations will the government send several immigration officers to Saigon to facilitate the departure of those Vietnamese who receive exit permits whether they be staffers of the embassy or other Vietnamese?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I think this question should be directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration under whose jurisdiction this lies.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I totally understand the concern of opposition members in speaking on this question, but the presence of an immigration officer in Saigon would do nothing to solve the particular problem that my colleague has described. We have issued visas. We have sent over some 14,000 names of nominated and sponsored relatives which have been supplied to us by Canadians of Vietnamese or Cambodian origin in this country over the last two or three weeks. We have done our best to locate as many of those as possible but it is very difficult under the circumstances for obvious reasons. We did issue visas to several hundred before the South Vietnamese Government requested, quite forcibly, that we refrain from issuing such visas because they were not going to issue exit visas which is the prerogative of the South Vietnamese Government. Within the last short time, however, we have sent letters to some 1,100 families from a list which contains to the best of our ability all the people named and nominated from Canada, indicating our willingness to accept them in the nominated and sponsored category under special circumstances if they are able to get out South Vietnam. That is the point at which our difficulty arises.

Although this is in the external affairs area, I might say to the Leader of the Opposition that we did indicate to our people in Saigon several weeks ago that we would most certainly welcome and accept people of Vietnamese citizenship who were related in the sense the Leader of the Opposition described. But I come back to the point that up until very recently, up until this point, the difficulty has been in the obtaining of exit visas from the Government of South Vietnam which they have been refusing to adults between 17 and 43 years of age.

VIET NAM—METHOD OF DEALING WITH VIETNAMESE DESIRING TO COME TO CANADA

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, would the minister kindly tell the House how he proposes to handle these admissions now, if exit visas have been refused by the South Vietnamese Government?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we have been in communication with the United States authorities in an effort to determine what plans they may have for large evacuations of people from that part of the world. We have indicated to them that in the case of any people such as I have described, to whom we have given written notice, if they can get out we will certainly honour our side of the situation in terms of receiving them in Canada. I have already described to the House what our approach would be to people not in the sponsored or nominated category who might apply under refugee status.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

ALLEGED REDUCTION IN FUNDING OF NATIVE ORGANIZATIONS PARTICIPATING IN BERGER COMMISSION INQUIRY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I have a few extremely important questions to ask of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It has been reported that funding has been drastically cut-back to native and environmental organizations participating in the Mackenzie Valley pipeline inquiry. Does this cut-back in funding apply exclusively to participants in the inquiry or can the native organizations expect general cut-backs, including cut-backs in programs such as research programs, field workers' programs and land claims research?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, so far as the funding for Mr. Justice Berger's inquiry is concerned, in the fiscal year 1974-75 the native organizations received $400,000. For this fiscal year they will receive, in anticipation of the inquiry winding up by the end of the calendar year, so it would only be for the nine months, an amount of $300,000. That is the funding that has been provided for the native group, and it has no impact on the funding of other groups.

Mr. Firth: In view of the fact that only one of the 20 or so local community hearings have so far been held, and considering that a significant part of the expenditure by the native groups is for local research and educational work in connection with these community hearings, will the minister undertake to reconsider the level of funding for these organizations so that the community hearings can proceed in an orderly and thorough manner?

Mr. Buchanan: I will look at this situation again, but we would certainly hope that the funding could be within the allocated $300,000 for the nine month period.

ELIMINATION OF FUNDS FOR NORTHERN ASSESSMENT GROUP PARTICIPATING IN BERGER COMMISSION INQUIRY—REQUEST FOR REINSTATEMENT

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): May I ask a third and final supplementary question of the minister? In view of the fact that the northern assessment group has had its budget cut completely, and in view of the fact that this group was charged with providing valuable technical support information to the native groups participating in the inquiry, would the minister reconsider the level of funding for this organization so that it may continue its essential role in the inquiry?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): The government has not funded the northern assessment group; it was funded through Mr. Justice Berger's allocation last year. There is an on going discussion which started as recently as April 21 with Mr. Justice Berger to see if he could use part of the $1 million allocation to assist the northern assessment group. He seemed receptive to the idea but the commission counsel, Mr. Scott, had some doubts. There are some on going discussions to see whether or not funds can be provided out of the commission's $1 million funding to assist the northern assessment group.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON TREATMENT OF ARMENIANS BY TURKEY

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of External Affairs but, in view of his absence, my question shall be directed to the Acting Prime Minister.

Could he tell the House what is the Canadian government's position with regard to the fate of the Armenians who are now victims of the irresponsible attitude of two superpowers, the United States and the Soviet Union, whose only objective is to be on good terms with Turkey, a country that has been occupying the Armenian territory for the past 60 years, namely since the first genocide perpetrated in the 20th century by the Turks against the Armenians?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government of Canada recognizes the government of Turkey and deals with that government as a friendly power. The issue that the hon. gentleman has referred to is a long standing grievance of the Armenians but it is not one upon which we would make direct representations.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary.

Since we have here in Canada several Armenians who have become excellent Canadian citizens, would it be possible to know whether this matter has ever been discussed at the United Nations by our Canadian officials, or even by our present Acting Prime Minister, formerly Minister of External Affairs?

● (1420)

Mr. Sharp: Not by Canada, Mr. Speaker. I cannot be certain that it has not been raised by some other country, but Canada, as I have said, has not felt that it had a special responsibility to raise this particular grievance of the Armenian people.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a last supplementary.

Could the President of the Privy Council confirm to the House that the Canadian government really intends to make special representations at the United Nations and to the government concerned, so as to give justice to the Armenians?

[English]

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker. As I have said, we have not thought it advisable to do so in the past, and I see no reason for changing our policy now.

Oral Questions

VIET NAM—REASON FOR REFUSAL TO ALLOW VIETNAMESE ON CANADIAN PLANE WHICH CARRIED AUTOMOBILE AND OTHER ITEMS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which is supplementary to that posed by the Leader of the Opposition. I would like to ask the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs which criteria were used in the decision to airlift a Japanese car, souvenirs and other sundry items out of Saigon but to refuse space to Vietnamese employees of the Canadian embassy on the same aircraft.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of Privy Council): I would like to ask the Minister of National Defence, who is familiar with the details, to answer the question.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): One of our Hercules aircraft was in Saigon yesterday and brought 22 Canadians out of Saigon to Hong Kong. There were some pieces of equipment, and an automobile on board, but there was enough space in the aircraft for all who were either authorized to leave or who wanted to leave.

Mr. McGrath: In view of the fact that there was additional space on the aircraft to carry these questionable items, did the minister's department or our mission in Saigon make any effort to ensure that there were no relatives of Canadians left behind who wanted to come to Canada?

Mr. Richardson: As I have already indicated, all who were authorized to leave or wished to leave could have been accommodated on the Canadian Forces plane. It is not the responsibility of the Department of National Defence to go beyond that.

Mr. McGrath: Might I ask the same question, then, of the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs? What steps were taken to ensure that all relatives of Canadians were offered space on that aircraft who wished to come to Canada prior to the decision being made to allow these automobiles, etc. to be carried on the same aircraft?

Mr. Sharp: My colleague has made it quite clear that all those who wanted to leave and were authorized by the government of the country in which they were located to leave could have been accommodated. None appeared.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY REDUCTION IN FUNDS WILL CURTAIL INPUT OF NATIVE GROUPS TO BERGER COMMISSION AND IMPAIR EFFECTIVENESS OF COMMISSION

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, my questions are supplementary to those asked earlier by the hon. member for the Northwest Territories to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Does the minister agree that by cutting the budgets for these native groups he will seriously curtail a substantive input by the native people into the Berger Commission inquiry?

[Mr. Sharp.]

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, this is certainly not the intention. It was felt that the funding last year would be primarily for research and work of that nature in preparation of the submission, and that the funds this year would be primarily for appearing before the body and for providing the educational aspect in the various communities where they were visiting. Our analysis suggested that the funding would be sufficient for those purposes.

Mr. Holmes: I am not quite satisfied with that answer, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps I could ask it in a different way. In view of the fact that these budgets have been cut, thus eliminating the major opposition group in terms of the inquiry, does the minister not agree that the objective of the Berger Commission, which reconvenes May 12, will be seriously compromised by the actions the minister has taken?

Mr. Buchanan: I assume that when the hon. member mentions the major opposition group, he is referring to the northern assessment group. As I indicated in reply to the hon. member for Northwest Territories earlier, we are still discussing with Mr. Justice Berger the possibility of providing these funds out of his allocation, as he did last time, since he was the one who originally provided the funds for the group.

Mr. Holmes: A final supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I am somewhat concerned that this implies some infringement on the part of the government on the Berger Commission. I should like to ask the minister what measures are being taken to ensure that any opposition groups will be able to present their briefs to the Berger Commission.

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, I do not accept this suggestion that this is an infringement. Last year Mr. Justice Berger, in his wisdom, provided $200,000 to the northern assessment group for studies. This year he is examining the situation and presumably will make a decision on whether or not he intends to provide the group with funds.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

ALLEGED GOVERNMENT INTERFERENCE WITH BERGER COMMISSION AFFECTING INDEPENDENCE OF COMMISSION

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Given the number of occasions the government has interfered with this inquiry since its inception, does the minister seriously think the Canadian public will continue to regard this as an independent inquiry? Is it not merely a whitewash for a decision the government has already taken to proceed with the pipeline?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have full confidence that Mr. Justice Berger will do the task assigned to him in first class fashion. I do not accept the premise of the question.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): A further supplementary. While everybody might have full regard for Mr. Justice Berger they do not have the same confidence in the government not to interfere with his inquiry.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—NECESSITY OF PARTICIPATION OF MAJOR UNION IN CONSENSUS PROGRAM OF RESTRAINT—POSSIBILITY OF PROPOSALS ON EMPLOYMENT GROWTH AND JOB SECURITY

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, a question for the Acting Minister of Finance. Since the government recognizes that no one group will co-operate unless it knows others will be exercising similar restraint, is it the position of the government that the participation of the major unions such as the United Steel Workers would be a pre-condition to the consensus program?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Acting Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this is the kind of issue that is currently being discussed. To lay down, in the form of ultimata, what people must do or must not do would not help the process of trying to find a consensus.

Mr. Fraser: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister tell the House whether the government has presented any policy with regard to employment growth and job security for the consensus period and, if so, have any proposals been prepared on this matter to be part of a consensus package?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, obviously there are a number of possible scenarios which are not being prepared, projected or discussed in detail but rather there is a process of seeking consensus on general principles such as was enunciated by the Minister of Finance to the first ministers' conference and subsequently communicated to the House.

INQUIRY WHETHER QUESTIONS OF CANADIAN LABOUR CONGRESS BEING ANSWERED

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I also have a question for the Acting Minister of Finance regarding the consensus. Can the Acting Minister of Finance tell the House whether the questions of the Canadian Labour Congress regarding low income workers and other important matters have been answered or will be answered and not held up until the return of the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Acting Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in respect of specific questions, we are working on these to find answers as quickly as possible.

POST OFFICE

LETTER CARRIERS—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON POSSIBILITY OF SIGNING CONTRACT

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Postmaster General if he can confirm reports that the long slide to chaos in the Post Office Department, if I may use a quote from a leading newspaper on the subject, "has been arrested" and that based on the element of goodwill that the Postmaster General's involvement in the negotiations has engendered, a contract has been signed with the Letter Carriers' Union of Canada?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce that less than an hour ago we were able to reach a collective agreement with the Letter Carriers' Union.

● (1430)

Mr. Mackasey: Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, in order to reduce—

An hon. Member: Is the price right?

Mr. Mackasey: Somebody opposite asked if the price is right. Considering that the Post Office workers are among the lowest paid workers in the Public Service, I am dissatisfied when somebody over on the other side makes innuendoes about the price being right. These are the most underpaid people in the Public Service and I think the settlement they got, based on the terms of the report, is a fair one.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I will do something I rarely do in the House, because I am as political as the opposition. I should like to say this: The hon. member for Brandon-Souris played a considerable role in convincing certain members on the negotiating team about the fairness of the settlement and in shortening the period of negotiation.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Brandon-Souris, on a supplementary.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, if I may risk a supplementary.

An hon. Member: It's a commercial.

REQUEST MINISTER CONTINUE NEGOTIATIONS WITH POSTAL WORKERS ON ISSUES OF CASUAL WORKERS AND AUTOMATION

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): I would carry the discussion one stage further and ask the hon. gentleman if he is now going to move to the other side of the puzzle and continue the same vigorous negotiations with the Canadian Union of Postal Workers, giving particular emphasis to the issues of automation and casual workers.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Yes, Mr. Speaker. With the co-operation of my close friend, the President of the Treasury Board, I do not think we will in any way be impeded in obtaining a fair settlement which will take into consideration the restraint the labour movement has to exercise at this time because of inflation. This concern will be reflected, I think, in the letter carriers settlement when it is divulged to the membership. There is no reason why, if the same common sense type of responsibility is shown by inside workers of CUPW, the problems which separate us cannot be resolved. Once again I hope the hon. member for Brandon-Souris will use his influence behind the scenes to expedite this settlement.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO AGREEMENT—POSSIBILITY OF DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES LEADING TO IMPROVEMENT FOR CANADA

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Considering the record $1.3 billion deficit in Canada-U.S. automotive trade last year and the fact that some 20 per cent of those normally employed in the automotive parts industry are now without jobs, can the minister inform the House whether at the meeting which took place in Ottawa last Friday between Canadian and U.S. officials some decisions were reached which will lead to an improvement in the situation for Canada.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I cannot report any specific progress, although I think that when officials of two governments are speaking, that is progress. I think it should be clear that the auto pact is not up for renegotiation at present.

AUTO PARTS—GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO IMPROVE SITUATION OF MANUFACTURERS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the specific proposals the minister brought forward in the last few days to deal with the lamentable situation in the parts industry pertained to only about 5 per cent of that industry, to a part not covered by the Canadian-U.S. pact, and as the major problem in the parts industry is associated with Canada-U.S. trade in auto parts, has the government any policy changes to suggest which would improve the situation for Canadian auto parts producers.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the auto parts industry, like other parts of the automobile industry, will recover its sales as soon as the United States market recovers. Clearly, that is the major market for auto part sales. We are trying to assist the auto parts industry to find new markets outside Canada. The particular measure the hon. member referred to is aimed at providing incentives for foreign automobile manufacturers to purchase Canadian-made auto parts.

An hon. Member: You have got to be kidding!

[Mr. Mackasey.]

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO AGREEMENT—SUGGESTION CANADA BE GUARANTEED RIGHT TO PRODUCE EQUIVALENT IN DOLLAR VALUE OF CONSUMPTION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Considering the difficulties which, from the Canadian point of view, have arisen from the current practices engaged in under the Canada-U.S. automotive agreement, can the minister tell the House whether the Canadian government is proposing certain specific changes in that agreement; more particularly, would the government favour a proposal that would guarantee to Canadians the right to produce in dollar value, averaged over a two or three-year period, that level which we actually consume in automotive cars and parts.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, when the automobile market in the United States is good, Canadian automobile parts manufacturers participate. Nevertheless, when the market turns down, they have to take their lumps along with everybody else.

STATUS OF WOMEN

ADVERTISEMENT IN "GLOBE AND MAIL" BY ORGANIZATION CALLED ZERO POPULATION GROWTH—REQUEST FOR ACTION

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minsiter of National Health and Welfare. In view of the minister's responsibility for the status of women in our society—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Appolloni: —what action—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Appolloni: As I was saying before I was so rudely interrupted, what action does the minister intend to take in response to the heavily sexist and distastefully anti-feminist advertisement appearing in today's Globe and Mail?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member would have to give me the page.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Watch out, Marc. Here it comes.

An hon. Member: Serve him!

Mrs. Appolloni: I hear the hon. member. The minister will be served.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Appolloni: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is addressed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. What action does the minister plan to take, in view of the racist overtones of this same advertisement.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this advertisement was drawn to my attention this morning. The main subject matter has to do with immigration. It is put out by an organization called Zero Population Growth, an organization with which I am not familiar and of which I have no knowledge.

An hon. Member: Talk to Otto Lang about it.

Mr. Andras: I can only say that I will consult my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, who may want to enter the act as well and determine the ethics of this advertisement. Beyond that I have no further comment.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre.

Mr. McKenzie: A supplementary—

INQUIRY WHETHER SAME AGENCY HANDLED ADVERTISING FOR INTERNATIONAL WOMEN'S YEAR AND ORGANIZATION CALLED ZERO POPULATION GROWTH

Mrs. Simma Holt (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the minister in charge of International Women's Year if the agency which is handling the "Why not" and all the rest of the International Women's Year chauvinist publicity is the ad agency which handled the advertisement just referred to. If not, can he find out which agency handled this advertisement.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing but praise for the agency which handled the International Women's Year publicity program, especially as the account executive in charge of the program is a very able woman working in the field of publicity and advertising. As far as the particular advertisement mentioned is concerned, the sponsor is a private organization. Therefore the advertisement has nothing to do with the government. Obviously I cannot answer the question asked by the hon. member.

Mrs. Holt: The minister did not answer my question.

An hon. Member: Now, you know how we feel.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ALLEGATION CIDA PROJECT FUNDS IN NON-INTEREST BEARING ACCOUNTS—SUGGESTION FUNDS BE TRANSFERRED TO INTEREST BEARING ACCOUNTS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. At the External Affairs committee meeting this morning, CIDA officials revealed that millions of dollars of CIDA project funds are deposited in non-interest paying deposit accounts around the world. Will the Acting Prime Minister investigate this, have these funds transferred to interest paying accounts and have the interest returned to Canada where it belongs?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will take the suggestion under consideration. I assume this matter was discussed in committee and answers were given by the organization that is responsible.

ALLEGATION CIDA EMPLOYEES INSTRUCTED NOT TO COMMUNICATE WITH MEMBERS ABOUT PROJECT DIFFICULTIES

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, the answers given this morning were not satisfactory. I have a supplementary question. Will the Acting Prime Minister also investigate whether CIDA officials are instructing CIDA employees in Kenya not to contact members of parliament with regard to project problems?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will investigate this.

ENERGY

NATURAL GAS—EFFECT OF DECISION TO CHANGE TIMING OF INCREASE IN EXPORT PRICE ON HYDROCARBON EXPORT POLICY

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Does the minister's decision to reconsider the timing and price in respect of the export of natural gas to the United States represent any change in the government's hydrocarbon export policy other than extending the time at which the price increases will be phased in?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, there was no final decision by the government on this matter. There will likely be a further exchange with the United States. I hope a decision will be made within the week. If the hon. member is thinking ahead on the question of supply, this will have no impact from a supply standpoint.

NATURAL GAS—POSSIBLE ADVANTAGE TO CANADA IN CHANGING DATE OF INCREASE IN EXPORT PRICE—DATE OF ANNOUNCEMENT OF NEW DATE

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): From the viewpoint of the government, what particular advantages have accrued to Canada by changing or extending the time at which the proposed price increases will come into effect?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, that is a question I ask myself.

Mr. Gillies: I hope the minister gets an answer to that question from himself. Has August 1, the previously scheduled date for the phasing in of these increases, been changed and, if so, when will the minister announce what the new date will be?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, there has been no change in that. As I say, there has been no final decision yet.

HEALTH

REQUEST FOR INCREASED FUNDS FOR RESEARCH ON ARTIFICIAL PANCREAS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare a question regarding the funding of the artificial pancreas, now technically operative and able to do the work of a failing diabetic pancreas on demand. Apparently all that remains to be done is to reduce the artificial pancreas to a micro-sized implantable one, the same as we have done with the pacemaker. I believe this particular project needs special consideration both historically and scientifically. Insulin was discovered 50 years ago in Toronto, Ontario. It was world startling and brought hope to millions of people.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should ask this question.

Mr. Rynard: I wanted to place this in context because of the importance of the situation. In view of all the tradition and interesting scientific possibilities, will the minister use his good offices to approach the Medical Research Council and ask them to have another look at those priorities?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for having given me notice of this question. I am advised by the Medical Research Council that discussions are continuing between the investigators concerned and the Medical Research Council. We expect another proposal to be put forward before long. The MRC does not consider the matter as closed.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Solicitor General. Is the minister aware of Dr. Shulman's most recent allegation that he has RCMP files on political and union leaders in Canada? Did the minister instruct the RCMP to investigate what happened and just what is the political division of the RCMP?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, every time I hear this story, it is a little bit different. However, the RCMP did investigate all the allegations that Dr. Shulman made. They have questioned him on several occasions. As far as I know, there is no truth whatsoever with respect to what Dr. Shulman is reported to have said.

[English]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, at this moment I am not aware of the telegram. I will check my office to see if it arrived in the last hour or so. WOMEN'S CAREER COUNSELLING CENTRE—REASON FOR FAILURE TO RENEW CONTRACT

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact this is International Women's Year and in view of the Prime Minister's statement of January 22 about Canada's program of support, which includes federal funding of groups and organizations, I wish to ask the minister why the Ottawa Women's Career Counselling Centre, an innovative and creative project funded under his department's Outreach program, has not been offered renewal of the full 12 month contract it sought and which is essential if the project is to survive.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think it is reasonable to expect the minister to have that kind of information at his fingertips.

INDUSTRY

DATE OF ANNOUNCEMENT OF INDUSTRIAL STRATEGY FOR CANADA

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Some time ago the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, speaking to the House stated, and I quote, "I think most people have gained the expectation that all we have to do to solve everything is to produce some sort of all-purpose grandiose government game plan called 'an industrial strategy for Canada'". However, last week to a Liberal fund raising dinner, the Prime Minister stated and I quote, "we are creating a national industrial strategy." In light of this commitment, when will the minister be announcing this, to use his words, "all-purpose grandiose government game plan called an industrial strategy for Canada"?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have made it quite clear on a number of occasions that one strategy is not going to be sufficient for Canada. We have various industrial sectors. We are currently working on 19 separate industrial strategies for Canada for 19 specific sectors.

Mr. Andre: Is the minister confirming to the House that the Prime Minister's statement that we are creating a national industrial strategy is inaccurate or at least incomplete?

FISHERIES

EFFECT OF RECOMMENDATION NO INCREASE IN NUMBER OF VESSELS FISHING GROUNDFISH ON PROPOSALS AT LAW OF SEA CONFERENCE—AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS FOR SHIPBUILDING

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of State (Fisheries). In view of the minister's statement outside the House yesterday outlining a $50 million federal program to assist the fishing industry and his recommendation that there should be no increase in the number of vessels fishing groundfish stocks, will he tell the House if this means the government has given up all hope of securing agreement at the Law of the Sea Conference on Canada's proposal to manage the resources on our continental shelf, since this area would require increased rather than decreased fishing effort. Also, will any funds be made available for assisting shipbuilding this year?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the first part of the question, in no way does this decision indicate that we have given up hope of securing agreement on our proposal to manage resources on our continental shelf. I will check into the exact wording, but what I meant to say was, in the area where the species are already heavily exploited, we should not extend that type of fishery. With regard to the other part of the hon. member's question as to boat building subsidies, I hope to be in a position to announce something within the next 15 days.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister. Since the minister's statement really signals to the world that we have no intention of increasing our fishing activity at this time, thereby placing in serious doubt our delicate bargaining position at the Law of the Sea Conference, why was the minister's statement covering the freezing of our fishing fleet not delayed until the results of the Law of the Sea Conference were made known on May 10; and in light of the minister's statement will we be taking unilateral action to protect our resources in this area?

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, in no way was I signalling to the rest of the world that we would be giving up anything. I was signalling to the rest of the world that the state of the fishery off our coast now is creating a situation so far as stocks are concerned in which we have to intervene with rather heavy financial commitments. It is important to tell the world community our priorities respecting our own coastline. This effort on our part to support the groundfish fishery is a good way to make the point.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LAW OF THE SEA CONFERENCE—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON PROPOSAL TO SHARE REVENUE FROM MINERAL EXPLOITATION BEYOND 200 MILE ZONE

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary and bears on the Law of the Sea and it is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. It relates to the mineral exploration question as distinct from the fisheries question. Has the government reconsidered its position on total economic control of our continental shelf beyond the 200 mile economic zone, and is the government now ready to offer revenue sharing from mineral exploration and exploitation, so that this acceptance of international authority can lead to a package agreement promoting the common heritage of the seas?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government has not given up in any way its assertion of control. The question of revenue sharing is one upon which we have some flexibility, but it would not in any way, in our opinion, impinge upon the question of control. We do assert that mineral exploration is an area over which we have control.

Mr. Roche: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to have a point clarified. May I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether it is the policy of the government that Canada, which already occupies 7.3 per cent of the land surface of the world, should have total economic control of our continental margin beyond the 200 mile economic zone, and how does this reflect the Prime Minister's recent speech in London to the effect that "we must aim for nothing less than an acceptable distribution of the world's wealth"?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman is confusing two issues. We have had recognized our right to exploit the minerals out to the margin or the slope—I am not sure which is correct—beyond the 200 miles. The question that has arisen at the Law of the Sea Conference is quite a different one, and it is whether we would be prepared to share the revenues that might be derived from our exploitation. On that matter, we have some flexibility at the present time.

Oral Questions

IMMIGRATION

INQUIRY WHETHER VIETNAMESE GIVEN REFUGEE STATUS

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Yesterday in the House I asked him a question specifically referring to Canada's role in the acceptance of South Vietnamese refugees. As reported at page 5108 the minister said:

—indeed one of my officials will be in New York tomorrow talking with him on that subject.

He was referring to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. Has the minister anything further to report on those discussions, and has any decision been made by the department respecting Vietnamese refugees?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether it was yesterday, but in any event my official is in New York today and he will be seeing the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees either this afternoon or tomorrow, I am not sure which. Obviously, I do not have any further report flowing from that meeting. I can only confirm what I told the hon. member the other day as to the answers we have had from the UN high commissioner's office so far, which are to the effect that there has been no declaration of a mass refugee movement. We have indicated our willingness to assist in and support any such activity based on any international action that he might recommend.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—REASON FOR WITHDRAWING ALL REPRESENTATIVES FROM SAIGON

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. Why has the government of Canada closed down completely its operations and its representation in Saigon, knowing that there may well be Vietnamese who are not Canadians who may want to get out of the country and who may get permission to come out? Why has the government at this time closed down its whole operation there and not even left anybody on the ground at all who could provide quite possibly a humanitarian service, and who could be taken out in the future if need be by the Canadian Armed Forces?

[Mr. Sharp.]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we hesitated for some time before taking this decision. We consulted with the governments of other countries that were in a similar position to ourselves, and our action was accompanied by similar action on the part of most of the friendly countries. It was not followed by the French who have taken quite a different attitude, but I do understand it was followed by the British, for example.

It is a common action that one takes in order to protect the lives of those whom we have asked to serve in Saigon. The point arrived when it was believed that they would soon come under fire, and we felt that in their interests—I am sure the Leader of the Opposition would agree—it was prudent that we should take this action.

RENTAL OF SPACE IN CHAMBLY BUILDING—PAYMENT OF RENT BEFORE OCCUPANCY

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. Yesterday I asked the Solicitor General a question about the RCMP renting office space in Ottawa which will not be ready until November 1, yet they are paying rent in the amount of between $600,000 and $700,000 commencing February 1. In view of the fact that three months have elapsed and we have paid about $200,000 in rent, and in view of the fact that I inspected the premises today and every floor is empty, that there is not one partition on any of the floors, would the minister look into the matter and stop the wasteful spending of government moneys—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gilbert: —and set an example of government restraint?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, after the hon. member asked his question yesterday I asked the RCMP for a full answer and they will have it for me tonight when I appear before the justice committee on my estimates. I would expect the hon. member to be there tonight to put his question to me and members of the force will be there to answer it.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REASON FOR NOT PROVIDING WITH AMENDMENTS TO ACT—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON NECESSITY FOR AMENDMENTS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and it concerns his responsibility for unemployment insurance. Is the minister's decision not to proceed with amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act before July, 1975 based partly on the fact that this country will experience no growth and resulting high unemployment?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Alexander: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In light of the fact that the government promised in its throne speech after the election of 1972, and made substantially the same promise after the election of 1974, that amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act would be brought in, would the minister advise whether there is or is not any urgency with respect to the matter, or in other words that the minister finds that the Unemployment Insurance Act is now working as it should?

Mr. Andras: Amendments will be brought in, Mr. Speaker.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the government House leader about the business for the rest of this week and for the first two or three days of next week, so we can prepare for it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With respect to the point of order that has been raised, I might indicate that in accordance with the direction I gave yesterday, the reprint of Bill C-44 ought to be available tomorrow. It has come to my hands within the last few moments, and if after inspection it is in accordance with the direction, it ought to be filed tomorrow. I say that in case it might be a consideration in calling the business for next week.

National Parks Act

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, it is our intention to proceed today with the committee of the whole stage of Bill C-32. I would hope that we could continue with it tomorrow: I have had some consultation, and if that does not prove convenient we will revert to discussion of the bill in respect of ocean dumping and perhaps one of the bills standing in the name of my colleague the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. He has one bill in respect of the Statistics Act and one in respect of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

● (1500)

I am hopeful that Bill C-32 will be out of the committee by Monday. If it is not, we will certainly continue with it. If it is out of the committee by then, I would like to call the bill on citizenship: the minister is not well, and this depends partly on his health; but that would be my intention.

Mr. Baldwin: That is Bill C-20?

Mr. Sharp: That is Bill C-20. Then on Tuesday I hope we can go back to the report stage of Bill C-44.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask the government House leader about the undertaking of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs on several recent occasions to refer the capital spending budget of the CMHC to the committee. Is the government House leader now prepared to proceed with the necessary referral motion in order to honour that minister's commitment?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I have been discussing the matter with my colleague. I am not sure how firm his commitment was, but I hope it was not too firm.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): It was very firm.

NATIONAL PARKS ACT

AMENDMENT TO ENABLE PERSONS OVER AGE SIXTY-FIVE FREE ACCESS TO NATIONAL PARKS

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-388, to amend the National Parks Act (free access for senior citizens).

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to provide free access to the national parks for persons over 65 years of age, which is similar to the current policy in Ontario in respect of provincial parks.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Order Paper Questions

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 1,748, 1,854, 1,869, 2,081, 2,115, 2,169 and 2,190.

Mr. Speaker, if question No. 1,846 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call starred question No. 1,792?

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

CMHC—ASSISTANCE TO DAVENPORT HOMES FOR YOUTH INC.

Question No. 1,748—Mr. Jelinek:

1. What was the exact amount of the mortgage loan to Davenport Homes for Youth in Toronto?

2. On what date did Davenport Homes for Youth receive such monies?

3. What was the interest rate of the loan to Davenport Homes for Youth?

4. What portion of the mortgage is "forgiveable"?

5. Is it the policy of CMHC to advance monies without proof that the use of the property is not in violation of municipal ordinances?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I am advised by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows: 1. A loan in the amount of $92,505 was approved on July 31, 1974, under Section 15.1 of the National Housing Act, to Davenport Homes for Youth Inc., Toronto.

2. It is not the policy of CMHC to disclose details of transactions between borrower and lender.

3. The interest rate of this loans is 8 per cent.

4. The loan includes a contribution of $9,082.

5. No. Monies are advanced to CMHC's solicitor in trust, who ensures that the property is properly zoned before releasing the funds to the borrower.

*CBC—ALLOCATION OF TIME TO PARTY LEADERS IN GENERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN, 1974

Question No. 1,792—Mr. Coates:

1. During the general election campaign of July 8, 1974, from the date the election was called to July 6, 1974, what was the breakdown of time allotted to each of the party leaders of the four national political parties on the National News programme of the CBC television in both English and French newscasts?

2. During the same period, what was the breakdown of news time allotted to the four political party leaders on the CBC English network news programme "The World at Six" and on the equivalent programme on the CBC French radio network?

Mr. Gustave Blouin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, in view of the lengthy answer to question No. 1,792 I wonder with your permission if it could be tabled and included in Hansard?

[Mr. Whittaker.]

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the answer be tabled and taken as read?

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, that is agreeable if there is a valid reason, for instance if it is quite lengthy and detailed. Now that the oral question period has been arranged so that written questions are dealt with each day we should consider each question individually.

There is a specific purpose, of course, for putting starred questions on the order paper. If the parliamentary secretary indicates that the length and the detail of the answer is such as to require the procedure he suggests we would agree, otherwise we would have to consider it further.

Mr. Blouin: There is no specific reason, Mr. Speaker, except it would save the time of the House if it was taken as read. It is only two pages in length and I could go ahead and read it.

Mr. Baldwin: If it is two pages, then as interesting as it is in respect of the CBC and time spent by political leaders, we would rather read about it than hear about it.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the answer be tabled and printed in Hansard as though it had been read?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. Figures for the time allotted to each of the party leaders of the four national political parties were kept by the CBC English television network for the period May 9 to July 7, 1974, inclusive. For the 11 p.m. television news program "The National", the breakdown was as follows: The Right Hon. Pierre Elliott Trudeau, 67 minutes; The Hon. Robert L. Stanfield, 51 minutes; Mr. David Lewis, 50 minutes; Mr. Réal Caouette, 11 minutes. The CBC French television network did not keep statistics on the time devoted to individual party leaders. Over the period May 9 to July 6, 1974, the overall time allotted to each of the national political parties (including declarations by party leaders and others) on the 10:30 p.m. television news program "Telejournal" was as follows: Liberal Party, 110 minutes; Progressive Conservative Party, 93 minutes; New Democratic Party, 64 minutes; Social Credit Party, 62 minutes.

2. For the period May 9 to July 6, 1974, the time devoted to each of the party leaders on the CBC English radio network news program "The World at Six" was as follows: The Right Hon. Pierre Elliott Trudeau, 38 minutes; The Hon. Robert L. Stanfield, 26 minutes; Mr. David Lewis, 33 minutes; Mr. Réal Caouette, 4 minutes. The CBC French radio network did not keep statistics on the time devoted to individual party leaders. Over the period May 9 to July 6, 1974, the overall time allotted to each of the national political parties (including declarations by party leaders and others) on the 6:00 p.m. radio news program "Le Monde Ce Soir" was as follows: Liberal Party, 63 minutes; Progressive Conservative Party, 62 minutes; New Democratic Party, 48 minutes; Social Credit Party, 38 minutes.

GIFTS RECEIVED BY PRIME MINISTER ON TRIP TO EUROPE

Question No. 1,854—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the statement made in the House of Commons by the Prime Minister before commencing his present trip to Europe to the effect that he would bring back to Canada any gifts received from heads of government or other persons without paying duty to Canada Customs (a) what is a complete list of any gifts received while on this trip along with the value and the name of the giver in each case (b) what is a complete list of all gifts given by the Prime Minister to any persons while outside the country along with the value and the name of the recipient in each case?

2. Will the Prime Minister personally keep any gifts received while on this trip or on any other occasion and (a) if so, will he reconsider his decision not to pay custom duties applicable to all other Canadians returning from abroad with purchases for personal use (b) if not, will such gifts become the property of the Government of Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): 1. (a) Artifacts, objects d'art, books, etc, etc. International protocol and ordinary good manners dictate that it would be in bad taste to disclose value of gifts received, or to invite invidious comparisons by divulging donors' names and the nature of their gift to others than the Canada Customs authorities. The hon. member is no doubt aware that customs declarations once filled by visitors and returning Canadians are confidential. (b) Answer to (a) above applies mutatis mutandis.

2. (a) Yes. An Order in Council was passed on April 22 under S. 17 of the Financial Administration Act remitting the customs duty, sales tax and excise tax on the above mentioned gifts inter alia. It will be published as provided by law. (b) See answer to question no. 1,296.

CALGARY CONVENTION CENTRE

Question No. 1,869—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. When was application first made for funding of the Calgary Convention Centre under Urban Renewal?

2. (a) What was the amount originally requested for construction of the Centre (b) what were the terms of this funding?

3. What was the final amount expended on the Centre and on what date?

4. What funding is applicable to the adjacent hotel?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I am advised by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows: 1. In September 1970, the City of Calgary requested funding under Sections 24 and 26 of the National Housing Act, for the purpose of acquiring and clearing a one block area in Churchill Park. The Calgary Convention Centre has been built on this land.

2. (a) Financing under the NHA, through CMHC, was not requested, nor has it been used for the construction of the Centre; (b) not applicable.

3. NHA funds or loans were not provided.

4. NHA loans or funds were not applicable to the adjacent hotel.

CMHC—AGREEMENT WITH NEWFOUNDLAND UNDER SECTION 40 NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

Question No. 2,081—Mr. Marshall:

With respect to the agreement between CMHC and the Province of Newfoundland under Section 40 of the National Housing Act, which terminates March 31, 1975 (a) have any discussions taken place concerning the possibility of increasing the loan amount beyond $19,000 (b) does the provincial government intend to seek an extension of the agreement (c) how many of the projected 700 units were completed (d) how many applications were approved in each federal electoral district in Newfoundland?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I am advised by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows: (a) Formal discussions with the Province of Newfoundland have not taken place, with respect to increasing the loan level for home ownership housing financed under Section 40 of the National Housing Act. Loan levels would be a matter of provincial policy, provided they do not exceed those premitted under the CMHC Assisted Home Ownership Program. (b) The Provincial government has sought an extension to the program, and a draft agreement is now with the province for execution. (c) Of the projected 700 units, 130 are completed and 425 are under construction. (d) Data on activities under the National Housing Act are not compiled on the basis of federal electoral districts. A total of 612 applications were approved.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): One case of notifiable major quarantinable disease, subject to the provisions of the Quarantine Act, was reported.

Question No. 2,169—Mr. Leggatt:

Who were the eight members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police who attended the Hudson Institute seminars in New York between 1970 and 1974 (a) what was the purpose of the seminars (b) for what reason did they attend (c) in what locations are the eight members presently stationed?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): The eight members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police were: M. J. Spooner, D. K. Colwell, O. A. Davey, H. W. Brandes, G. H. Powell, J. G. Long, K. D. Green, V. E. Gooch. (a) To make the results of Hudson Institute studies and the points of view on policy issues developed by Hudson Institute staff available to business and professional leaders. (b) To broaden their horizons and gain insight into future trends. (c) Ottawa—Spooner, Colwell, Powell, Long, Green and Gooch. Washington, D.C.—Brandes. No longer in Force—Davey.

Question No. 2,190—Mr. Neil:

Did Canada Council make a grant to assist in the production of either of the films "Ten Lost Years" or "Head Guts and Sound Bone Dance" aired on CBC television and, if so (a) what was the amount of such grant in each case (b) to whom was the grant paid?

Oil and Petroleum

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: No.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

AGRICULTURE—ISSUANCE OF PERMITS FOR IMPORT OF EXOTIC BREEDS OF CATTLE

Question No. 1,846—Mr. Neil:

1. With respect to permits issued by the Department of Agriculture in 1974 for import of exotic breeds of cattle, how many (a) individuals (b) partnerships (c) cooperatives or corporations received permits to import more than one animal?

2. What are (a) the names and addresses of the (i) individuals (ii) partnerships (iii) cooperatives or corporations who received permits (b) the number of permits in each instance?

3. With respect to Part 2, how many permits did each receive in the previous years 1970-73 inclusive?

Return tabled.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. On numerous occasions I have inquired about questions on the order paper in my name concerning CIDA. They have to do with the criteria used in awarding contracts. They are very simple questions, and there must be files in respect of each contract. There should not be any difficulty in producing those files and providing me with answers. Surely this government had nothing to hide.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, the minister has been out of the country for a week and until he is back we cannot produce the answers.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PETROLEUM ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING THE ADMINISTRATION OF INTERPROVINCIAL, EXPORT AND IMPORT TRADE IN PETROLEUM AND PETROLEUM PRODUCTS

The House resumed, from Thursday, April 17, consideration in committee of Bill C-32, to impose a charge on the export of crude oil and certain petroleum products, to provide compensation for certain petroleum costs and to regulate the price of Canadian crude oil and natural gas in interprovincial and export trade—Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale)—Mr. Laniel in the Chair.

[English]

The Chairman: When the committee rose on Thursday, April 17, clauses 5 and 12 had been allowed to stand and the committee had started its consideration of clause 16.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, the minister was going to give some thought to clause 12 in respect of a proposed amendment and the remarks of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. We may be standing additional clauses and I wonder if the minister is now prepared to deal with this amendment. If he is not, we could perhaps move ahead.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, as I recall it, the point was made by the hon. member for Peace River that the type of scrutiny involved in this situation is already covered by the statutory instruments legislation. From our standpoint there is no difficulty at all in making a reference to the public accounts. I indicated that I would propose an amendment to that effect, but I wonder if this is not already covered under the existing law and therefore it is not necessary to add anything at this point.

Mr. Baldwin: I am satisfied, Mr. Chairman, but I do not know about the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. I put everything together and found there was a reasonable assumption that we had adequate protection.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I would suggest that we go ahead and deal with clause 12.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, I wonder if we could put the amendment and then put clause 12 as amended, if the amendment carries.

● (1510)

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The Chair is in some difficulty. We cannot find a copy of the amendment which has been presented to the committee, and it would be difficult for the Chair to put it until we find it.

On clause 16—Records and books.

Mr. Baldwin: While we are waiting, Mr. Chairman, I have a question or two I should like to ask the minister in respect of clause 16. I do not know whether it has been carried; I hope not. This is the clause which provides for the keeping of records and books. I shall not read it. The Clause is far reaching and some of us on this side are concerned about its contents.

I should like to ask the minister if there will be a requirement that provincial governments, agencies of provincial governments or Crown corporations shall keep books and records and make them available from time to time, as this clause appears to call for in so far as individuals and corporations are concerned. The minister might have some ideas on that.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, it would be the intention, just as in other taxing statutes, to stipulate that this requirement would apply generally so that the taxing authority would be in possession of all this information.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. Is the committee ready to make a decision on clause 16 while we are still searching for the amendment? Shall clause 16 carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 17—Appeal.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might say that this clause is adopted from the Excise Tax Act and the provision already in that act which gives authority to the Tariff Board in respect of questions of fact, or of law and fact. If, of course, as indicated in the statute, a question of law should be raised as a result of these inquiries, access would be available from there to the Federal Court.

Mr. Baldwin: While I do not have any great objection, it is a matter of curiosity to me why the Tariff Board, particularly, was designated. I understand the practice, but in the opinion of the minister does the Tariff Board have the necessary expertise and specialized knowledge, and does he think it would be the closest approach to the type of tribunal that would be adequately equipped to handle this particular issue?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It is certainly the feeling that the Tariff Board is the body which is best equipped in the economic area with developed procedures and expertise in dealing with this type of problem. It would appear to be the most suitable tribunal to carry out this particular function of appeal.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 18—Regulations.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, it would be desirable that I point out that there is a technical amendment to clause 18 to change the definition of "oil" so as to indicate that oil products which are normally derived from crude oil are also derived from natural gasoline and condensates which generally are produced in conjunction with natural gas and which are used in some Canadian refineries as feedstock. I seem momentarily to be without a colleague to move an amendment. Perhaps the Solicitor General would move into his place; he has a particular interest in this amendment to clause 18. The amendment is as follows:

That Bill C-32 be amended by striking out paragraph (a) of clause 18 on pages 8 and 9 thereof and by substituting therefor the following:

"(a) designate any hydrocarbon or mixture of hydrocarbons resulting from the processing or refining of hydrocarbons described in paragraph (a) or (b) of the definition 'oil' in section 2 as an oil products; and"

I see the Solicitor General rising to present this amendment to the House.

Mr. Baldwin: Would the minister say whether it applies to skating rinks?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Chairman, I support everything the minister does, and I would move the amendment which he has read.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. Andre: Mr. Chairman, there are a couple of questions I should like to ask the minister in this regard. First, I wonder whether the minister could enlighten the committee concerning the substantive differences between clause 18(a) as originally written in the bill compared to the amendment proposed by the Solicitor General.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The substantial difference is that the amendment as originally proposed would include oil products derived from crude oil, which by narrow definition would not also mean derived from natural gasoline. This is a redrafting, shall we say, to make certain that it covers products derived from natural gas and condensates as well as from crude oil.

Mr. Andre: Is the minister, then, indicating that products such as ammonia, plastics, paints, food additives, protein products—if we should develop that process in Canada—and the whole range of products which start from hydrocarbons in one form or another, whether oil or gas, would in fact be subject to the control of the minister?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, the products are defined in clause 6(1) and 6(3).

● (1520)

Mr. Andre: In reading those clauses which define products, and the amendment to clause 18(a), I am left with the impression that the minister could exercise price controls on the full range of products starting from simple hydrocarbons. Certainly, with the exception of potash and natural fertilizer all our other fertilizer production in Canada starts from natural gas, all our plastics, paints and clothes; and I submit that you could extend that definition to nylon stockings.

Mr. Woolliams: Pantyhose.

Mr. Andre: I submit that if this bill does grant authority to the government to control the price of pantyhose, then it goes too far.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I would point out to the hon. member that clause 6(1) refers to "gasoline type fuels" and clause 6(3) refers to "middle distillate and heavy fuel oil." Trying to fit pantyhose under that would be difficult.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Allmand) agreed to.

Mr. Baldwin: Before clause 18 as amended carries, may I point out that I do not think the minister's amendment deals with paragraph (b) as it was originally.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): That is correct.

Mr. Baldwin: Clause 18(b) reads:

(b) provide for such other matters or things as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this part.

I know that we have had these kinds of all-embracing regulatory sections which vest in the governor in council powers to do almost everything, and I must say, as a member of the statutory instruments committee, we have had occasion to examine some of them and have found that it is not a very desirable practice. I know there are certain circumstances when it might be necessary. However, perhaps the minister could give his attention to this subclause which seems to me to extend to the governor in council legislative powers which I believe go far beyond the powers which should be granted to the government.

We have had occasion in the House and in committees to study the impact of clauses of this kind and I feel, as a matter of practice and of caution, that this should not be done. This applies not only to members of the opposition but to private members on the government side. I spoke to some of my colleagues who sit with me on the joint statutory instruments committee who have seen at first-hand precisely what certain officials do. I am not referring to elected branches of government, although I will have something to say about them from time to time. I am referring here to members of the bureaucracy and the civil service who, probably with the best intentions in the world, twist, torture and pursue clauses such as this one to ends which were never designed by the legislation to be dealt with.

I believe that when we are giving to the government a great deal of power which it in turn will be delegating to a number of people and a number of boards, the minister should put on record the government's and his views. In this case he should state his views on what is contemplated under clause 18(b). It is simply one of these suspender-belt, safety-pin kind of clauses where the government says, "I may have missed something here and therefore I will put in a clause to cover it"? If that is the case, I do not like it and I am prepared to object to it. If the minister has a valid reason for putting it in, perhaps he would give it to us.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): As is the case under our legislative practice, we do not attempt to set out in advance all the possible circumstances under which a modification might be necessary by the administration in the application of a particular statute. We recognize that it is difficult to predict all the circumstances which might arise, particularly in a commercial statute which is sought to apply to the infinitely various combinations of fact which arise in a particular community. Therefore, as much for the benefit of a particular taxpayer as for the benefit of the administration, it is wise to have residual power, which this one indeed is, so as to make certain that if a situation arises that is not covered by the exact terminology here, the governor in council may act by way of regulation for the purpose of setting that situation right.

I take it that that was inherent in the decision of the House in earlier years to set up the statutory instruments procedure. The basic assumption is made that in order to have flexibility in administration, powers of a more general kind will be required, but that the desirable arrangement we have made within the confines of the House is to have a statutory instruments committee which may study not only the formulation of these instruments from time to time but may go into some detail on the manner in which they are carried out. Recognizing that the administration will need this much flexibility from time to time, we also recognize that those using it should be under the potential scrutiny of the committee so that any excess of power or misapplication of this authority would then be subject to examination and possibly, in due course, criticism in the House.

To strike out this part of the clause may indeed make it difficult for the government to administer this part of the act. Also, it may be doing an injustice to an individual or a firm in the case of an export which will be impossible to correct, for legal reasons, without coming back here for legislation. It is desirable to have this kind of residual power if close scrutiny is applied to the manner in which it is exercised.

Mr. Baldwin: I am glad to say that the minister and I have progressed to the stage where I can say frankly that I do not doubt his bona fides in making that statement. In so far as he personally is concerned, he probably feels that; but he will not be in the same portfolio forever. In fact, I have a feeling that in a year or so he will not be there. Perhaps this is a pious hope, but the fact is that another person may be in his position. The minister's good intentions and his bona fides now will not necessarily be binding upon his successor.

I would like to give an illustration of the dangers of a clause of this kind, and when I have finished I will ask the minister to give us certain assurances in this regard. I am glad to see the Solicitor General here because this is something which he probably does not know and it affects his department. I am using this illustration as an analogy to show the dangers of this clause. There is regulatory power under the Penitentiary Act that under certain circumstances punitive action and sanctions may be taken against people who are serving sentences in penitentiaries, and by way of punishment the statutory right to limitation of the time they are serving can be denied them.

It happened, as a matter of fact, through something brought to our attention this morning, that despite the fact that the statute provides that this shall only be done by way of a trial in the penitentiary under the authority of the Penitentiary Service people, it has been done time and time again without the protection which the statute provides. In other words, there have been obvious abuses of the regulatory power which has been granted. That is one aspect of which many members of the House are well aware. Another aspect is that it is now possible, despite the Statutory Instruments Act, to so define the orders in council which may be passed that they need not be published. I notice that the words "governor in council may, by regulation" appear. If in fact the government takes that regulation under the Statutory Instruments Act, then as a regulation it must be published. But we have the same problem that I spoke of just a few minutes ago. We found there were a number of administrative directives issued which had all the effect and force of an order in council in many respects, as they affect the liberties of a great many people, but because they were called directives they were not published. They did not have to be published. No one knows what they contain. The committee cannot find out what they contain, and I think this is a danger we always face.

If the minister thinks, I have made an adequate case, and that when the word "regulation" is used here it is being used under the terms of the Statutory Instruments Act and regulations passed under this clause would be brought to the attention of the people involved, then I will be a great deal more relieved than I am now.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, the regulation as used here, I am advised—and it seems to be well founded—is a regulation in the technical sense which will in due course appear in the Canada Gazette and will be made public by that means. A slightly more difficult question is bringing something to the attention of those who may be affected by it: the Canada Gazette purports to be this kind of legal notice.

Mr. Baldwin: Not the best reading in the country!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It is not the best reading in the world, I agree: even insomniacs would despair of the Canada Gazette. But in effect this is a regulation where the term is technically understood to be a minor law-making instrument and one which would be made public in accordance with what used to be known as the regulations act and which is now the Statutory Instruments Act.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Chairman, in my earlier question to the minister I asked just how far this clause could go in including other products which might be subject to control by regulation, and the minister accused me of extrapolating beyond what is stated in the legislation. That is simply not true and the committee should be made aware of it. Clause 18, as amended by the minister, reads:

> The governor in council may, be regulation,
> (a) designate any hydrocarbon or mixture of hydrocarbons resulting from the processing or refining of hydrocarbons described in paragraph (a) or (b) of the definition "oil" in section 2 as an oil product;

An oil product is defined in clause 2 as follows:

> —any product designated as an oil product by regulations under section 18.

In fact, the minister is free to designate any commodity or product which has as its root feedstock hydrocarbons. Planning is advanced to the stage of near construction of a substantial ethylene plant in the province of Alberta. A number of methanol plants have recently been built; others are planned for construction in the province of Alberta. There is the Petrosar plant in Sarnia, as well as several other types of closely related petrochemical plants in various stages of planning.

As I read the legislation, the minister through order in council can, unilaterally, control the price of the entire product line from any of these plants and any future plants coming on stream. Thus, if the output of the Petrosar plant is used for the manufacture of polystyrene for such things as coffee cups and insulation, the minister could conceivably control the price by regulation. As my erudite friend from Peace River has just indicated, we are not suggesting this will happen the day after this bill receives royal assent; indeed, we are not suggesting that anyone on the treasury benches or in the civil service has any such intention.

Mr. Bawden: There is no guarantee.

Mr. Andre: That is right; assumptions are always risky. Nonetheless, the possibility exists. It is simply bad legislation. We are abdicating our responsibilities as members of parliament by providing the civil service with authority to make such decisions. The minister has indicated that that is not quite true; that it has to come by regulation of the governor in council. But this in itself is not sufficient control.

It is wrong to extend the provisions of the bill far beyond the point which was intended in the former bill, Bill C-18, introduced in the last parliament. The intent was to give a legislative basis to substantiate an agreement reached by the first ministers at a luncheon held at 24 Sussex Drive. The government was interested in seeing the bill introduced as quickly as possible. We were prepared to co-operate to the fullest possible extent. The government threw in a twister in terms of the veto clauses of the bill which gave us some concern, and we had some discussion in committee.

Considering clause 18, there is the potential of going far beyond the agreement of March 27 or any agreement based on discussions held between the first ministers or anyone else. I reiterate that we are not suggesting this will happen immediately, but there exists the possibility of interprovincial tensions arising and a political situation in Canada developing where it may be opportune for some minister to use the authority granted under this legislation to put pressure on a certain province in order to force it to adhere to a policy decision he would like to see adopted. I therefore sincerely ask the minister to reconsider this question and to ask his officials to come up with alternative wording which will afford him the latitude he needs.

We recognize that the minister needs to provide for a uniform price across the country for crude oil and natural gas. We will discuss natural gas later, but in the meantime we recognize his need to implement the agreement of all the premiers and the agreement of the House of Commons that Canada should have one uniform price. But this does not mean that he should take unto himself, or a successor should take unto himself, authority to control virtually every product which has as its feedstock crude oil or natural gas. It is hard to imagine a consumer product on the market today that does not include, in one way or another, some element which is a byproduct of crude oil or natural gas.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, I am advised that the terminology used here is precisely the same as that used in the National Energy Board Act and has been in use for many years. It is desirable to have this taxing statute in exactly the same form as the existing statute under which the board now regulates exports from Canada. The board has not in fact extended its power to the commodities to which the hon. member has referred. It has, rather, confined itself to the addition of crude oil and natural gas, the specific products I referred to in my earlier answer.

It would be preferable to keep the flexibility of the governor in council, in this regard, to act by way of regulation. It clearly has not been necessary to extend it to manufactured products, as the hon. member suggested. The best legislative solution, in my opinion, is to leave the power here. Of course, it could be a matter of political debate subsequently if there is any attempt to extend it.

The Chairman: Shall clause 18 as amended carry?

An hon. Member: On division.

Clause as amended agreed to.

The Chairman: Does the committee wish to revert to clause 12?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On clause 12—Exemption or reduction.

The Chairman: Although the record indicates that the amendment was moved by the President of the Privy Council, Hansard does not indicate that is has been put to the committee. I will put the amendment so that it will be clear in the record.

It is moved by Mr. Sharp:

That Bill C-32 be amended by striking out line 7 on page 6 thereof and by substituting therefor the following:

"12(1) Where it is shown to the Governor"; and by adding immediately after line 22 on page 6 thereof the following:

"(2) A statement of each exemption or reduction of $1,000 or more ordered pursuant to this section shall be reported to the House of Commons in the public accounts.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Sharp) agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall clause 12 as amended carry?

Clause as amended agreed to.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain raised some questions about the figures for taxes, and copies were circulated to the interested parties in the House. I wonder if it would be possible to go back and pass the earlier clause as well.

The Chairman: Is it agreed that we revert to clause 5 which has been stood?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On clause 5—Charge in April and May.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, could I ask the minister what figures he is referring to?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It was my understanding that they had been handed to the messenger and distributed. They were the figures on returns from the various stages of export tax and then charged at the various stages set out under clause 5. The question was raised generally, rather than just with regard to clause 5.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain is in Quebec City in connection with the visit of the interparliamentary group from the United States. We would not want to hold up all other clauses of the bill. I believe the hon. member will be back before report stage is completed, and I wonder if the minister would object to continuing to stand this clause. I think I can give an undertaking that if by Friday we have completed committee of the whole study of all clauses but this one, we would not hold up the bill.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): That is fine, Mr. Chairman.

[The Chairman.]

Clause stands.

On clause 20—Application.

The Chairman: Shall clause 20 carry?

Mr. Andre: Mr. Chairman I have some questions. The wording of this particular clause gives me some concern. It reads:

This part applies to crude oil that enters into international or interprovincial trade or that is mixed or blended with crude oil that has been acquired for movement out of its province of production.

It seems to me that clause could be interpreted to include considerable portions, if not all, of the crude oil which is designated for use within the producing province and supposedly, therefore, outside the authority of the federal government. Even the government appreciates that intraprovincial consumption cannot be controlled constitutionally. In a tank battery collection system among a number of producing wells it is often the situation that when oil flows from producing wells into a central collection point, some of the oil belongs to companies whose markets are totally outside the province. Therefore, the oil might be intended for shipment totally outside the province, and according to the government it would fall within the ambit of this bill. Other oil might be produced entirely for consumption within the producing province, so cannot be controlled by the federal government, according to the constitution. This clause provides that because they have been mixed or blended, the federal government would have the authority to control the price of any crude oil within the province; that is, any crude oil that was mixed or blended and was intended for extraprovincial consumption could come under their control, according to this clause.

If the legal experts can convince a chemical engineer that the clause does not imply that, I would abide by their judgment. To a layman, however, it implies that crude oil produced for consumption within a province, which at some time might have been mixed with crude oil produced for the purpose of extraprovincial consumption, could be subjected to control under the provisions of this bill. If that is the case, it is unconstitutional and we should look for better wording for this clause.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, we are dealing with the legal problem of fungible goods, that is to say, where goods not identifiable as those of a particular owner are mixed together. A similarity is the treatment of grains under the Canadian Wheat Board Act. From a practical standpoint, it is desirable to have these two separated and the effect of the clause would be that. I have asked for confirmation in this respect: my recollection is that this is parallel to the provisions of the Canadian Wheat Board Act, which establishes that where there are fungible goods of this kind mixed together in an elevator under a particular system, it has been held that those are indeed goods involved in this legal phrase. I think it is a marketing scheme for interprovincial and international trade and on that basis is within the jurisdiction of the Government of Canada.

Mr. Woolliams: Perhaps I can come to grips with this problem, Mr. Chairman. If this clause were worded to apply only to crude oil or blended crude oil that had already left the producing province, I would be satisfied. It would seem to me, however, to apply to all crude oil the moment it is moved out of the well to a storage collection system or a storage tank. But how can we differentiate? Perhaps 90 per cent of that oil will be used in the producing province and 10 per cent outside.

I think what we are trying to do here is get a foot in the door to set the price of crude petroleum in the province where it is produced. I agree with the hon. member for Calgary Centre that such action would be unconstitutional, and I think hon. members from provinces producing other commodities would be concerned about this. Surely it should only apply to crude petroleum when it has left the producing province. Say it is produced in Alberta: when it reaches Saskatchewan or British Columbia, then it has gone to another province or the international market. But how are we going to differentiate? It does not apply to all crude oil, blended or not blended, the moment it is taken out of the ground.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): At least the hon. member agrees on the nature of the problem, that it is difficult to separate crude oil of various kinds. The bill proposes to deal with crude oil which either moves in interprovincial trade or, by agreement of the parties, is produced and sold for movement outside the province. In these circumstances, it is clearly a transaction coming under interprovincial or international trade and in that sense falls within the jurisdiction of the Government of Canada.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, the fallacy of the minister's interpretation is to be found in clause 36. The federal government can set the price of this oil. I ask, who will determine whether a barrel of oil is to be sent to another province? Who knows what will happen to the oil once it is in the collection system? It may be used in the province or it may not; but the federal government is to set the price of the oil. Further, who will determine if this oil is to be traded interprovincially or internationally? If this were a matter for the producing province, there would be no difficulty. As it is, the bill is ambiguous.

Frankly, I think the government is trying to put its foot further in the door of provincial jurisdiction. In the absence of an agreement, the federal government can say that the oil in the collection system can be treated as oil being interprovincially or internationally traded and coming, therefore, under federal control. That is what is wrong with this clause. Surely it can be clarified. If the minister is sincere in what he says, he will clarify this provision. I know as well as the minister that the interpretation of a provision in parliament is not necessarily the interpretation of the courts. I remember Judy LaMarsh saying that the Canada Pension Plan would never apply to members of parliament. Yet once parliament passed the bill, the civil servants held that it applied to members of parliament as well. I am not necessarily satisfied when the minister tells me that A plus B equals C. I think this provision ought to be clarified further.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, judging from the hon. member's dogmatic attitude, I doubt if we shall ever satisfy him. I point out that the licensee will determine in a particular case how a shipment of oil is to be dealt with. The provision relates to contracts of sale for export either to the United States or for removal to other parts of Canada. This is a matter involving a contract between the parties themselves who must determine the manner of disposal of the oil. The whole scheme is not to be defeated by someone saying at any particular time, "This oil is to be used here, in the province, and that oil is to be used outside."

As I indicated when citing authorities the other day, it is entirely competent, in a national marketing scheme of the kind involved here, for the federal government to take this action and, for the purposes of an integral part of the national marketing system, in this way deal with a commodity which otherwise, I agree, would be under the jurisdiction of the province.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to labour the point, although we think it is germane to our basic objection to certain aspects of this legislation. We cannot evade our responsibilities. I know, judging from the minister's remarks, that the bill will pass in due course with this clause which we find repugnant still in it. In my argument, let me use the minister's analogy. He talked about the Wheat Board. But there is this to be said for the production of grain: a farmer of any province of western Canada or eastern Canada, but more particularly of western Canada as the Canadian Wheat Board Act applies particularly to that area, can produce feed grain and dispose of it to his neighbour. It can be determined that the grain has been disposed of to someone within the province; therefore, one can say that a clearly identifiable commodity has been produced, sold, dealt with and consumed in a province. The Canadian Wheat Board Act does not eliminate that prospect.

Let us examine the case of oil. I am not an expert on energy, petroleum and natural gas: I am learning as I go along, just as the minister is. Some of us learned the lesson some time ago. As I apprehend the picture, it is not possible for one to say, as oil flows up and is produced at the wellhead, that this particular barrel of oil, or that, is to be consumed within the province. Surely it is impossible to say that. One could only say it if certain conditions existed and I know of no case in which this holds true. For example, one could say it if, adjacent to one or two small wells, a small refinery, refining the oil coming from those wells and producing petroleum products, sold the products from those wells only within the province. In such a case one might be able to determine where the oil is to be consumed. However, those who are expert and knowledgeable in this field—the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands is knowledgeable—say that the situation does not apply anywhere. I know of no particular situation where this applies.

If this is so, what is to happen with regard to the process which the minister outlined? In theory his argument sounds good. He suggests that he is complying with the letter of the constitution by saying that any oil which flows up and is consumed and dealt with in a province is outside the ambit of this bill. But I say to the members of this committee that it is utterly impossible to find this out, to know how oil is to be dealt with. As my friend from Calgary Centre indicated, of the oil which leaves the wellhead, 15 per cent is used within the province and probably 85 per cent outside. How can one identify which part of the barrel will stay in the province and which part will go out of the province?

If you consider clause 20 in conjunction with clause 36 and other pertinent clauses, it becomes abundantly plain that the effect of this bill is to attach the jurisdiction of the federal government to every barrel of oil produced in the province of Saskatchewan, the province of Alberta and the province of British Columbia as it leaves the wellhead unless the producer can discharge the onus or proof which this legislation will place on him and produce records to show that the oil will be consumed in the province. That, I suggest, cannot be done. Despite what may be the genuine good intentions of the government, and growing mellow with the years I am inclined to impute good intentions to them.

An hon. Member: Not me; I'm skeptical.

Mr. Baldwin: Despite the skepticism of some of my colleagues who have not yet attained my years, I suggest that once this bill is passed every barrel of oil produced will be oil in respect of which the Government of Canada can fix the price the moment it leaves the wellhead. As I read the bill, that will happen.

Where will this stop? We see year after year that government after government has, stage by stage, altered the basis of confederation. The rights of the provinces are being scuttled by the great monolith, the central government which is being pushed by the colossal civil service. The government is hungry for more power and introduces legislation of this kind. Perhaps it is what the people of Canada want; I don't know. Maybe they want it and perhaps they will say so. But I strongly object to this being done by the back door method as in the present case.

What about lumber in the province of Ontario or the province of Quebec? What is to prevent the federal government from doing precisely the same thing with regard to lumber—unless you have a small sawmill that will make the complete product which can be identified as being consumed entirely within the province? Practically all lumber produced in the three largest lumber producing provinces is used partly within the province and partly outside. As the lumber leaves the sawmill, in most cases it is not capable of being identified. Under the same type of legislation that we have here, there is nothing to stop the federal government moving into the province of Quebec and saying, after the trees have been felled and sawed, "The finished products or part of it will enter the channels of international or interprovincial trade and as such it is our responsibility, if we see fit to exercise it, to fix a price for it at the sawmill." That is an identical situation.

I do not think the people who drafted our constitution or those who now live under it want this to happen. If they do, there is a better way of finding out than through legislation of this kind. That is our objective and we intend to repeat it, not ad nauseam but to make our point. If in the final analysis we are defeated, we will at least have done our duty.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, there is an argument often repeated by members of the official opposition, namely, that provisions like this will be applied to other commodities. They always choose either the province of Ontario or the province of Quebec for the purpose of this kind of control: in legal terms, there is no reason why this should not happen. The argument is put back to back with the question, why does it just apply to oil and natural gas? I could put the argument back to the right hon. member for Prince Albert when he returns. It was he who chose to segregate these two commodities from a great number of other commodities exchanged in Canada. He set up a special regime for oil and natural gas in Canada, for a very sound reason; they are of unique importance in the whole operation of the national economy.

For these commodities, national policies were adopted so as to exclude foreign imports, to the benefit of Canadian producers. National transportation systems were constructed to carry them. Since 1959 or 1960, and perhaps even before that, when oil and gas came under other provisions of the law they were treated as special commodities and dealt with in this way. It could indeed be conceivable at some future time that it would be equally advisable to apply the same regime to other commodities. However, the fact is it has not been applied. It has not been found necessary. They do not have the same dominant characteristics in our economy as energy commodities.

Dealing with the particular provisions of clause 20, I will restate the argument. We are dealing with a group of fungible goods. Oil may well be mixed for the purpose of ultimate use in the province or outside the province. Therefore, it is a fungible good to which the clause applies. The next step is, how does the part apply. At that point you go to clause 24. You have a specific dealing, a specific part of those fungible goods which the buyer and the seller have chosen to move outside the province. At that point the legal impositions of this part do apply. A buyer and seller, having chosen to deal by moving it within the province, are left free of the touch of this particular part. However, that which the buyer and the seller have chosen by contract to sell for the purpose of moving outside the province will be dealt with by the effective provisions of this part.

Clause 20 does not prevent in any sense a particular commodity being sold and delivered between a buyer and seller inside the province of Alberta, for example. Clauses 24 and 25 are the effective clauses for the purpose of controlling those parts of this total move of fungible goods described in clause 20. I would only say that the final judgment of the draftsman is that this is, from a standpoint of a national marketing scheme, an appropriate exercise of the authority and dealing with transactions to be effective outside the province, transactions of the kind of fungible goods declared under clause 20.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I apprehend the minister's position. I think it is the only position he can take. However, the minister cannot neglect the provisions of clause 42 which has to be read in conjunction with clauses 20, 22, 36 and 51. Clause 42 reads:

No person other than a licensee shall sell any crude oil in an exporting province except when the crude oil is being sold within that province for consumption therein.

Anybody can say that when the producer acquires oil at the wellhead he knows that to some extent at least it will go out of the province. This question has to be considered in conjunction with the prohibition contained in a combination of clauses 20 and 36. I again read clause 42:

No person other than a licensee shall sell any crude oil in an exporting province except when the crude oil is being sold within that province for consumption therein.

How in the name of heaven can a producer say that the oil he is selling within the province to some person for storage, for ultimate refining or for other disposition, will be consumed in the province? He knows that part of it will go out of the province. When you put all these things together, the legislation is definitely repugnant to the constitution.

I go back to the point made by the minister. I did not intend to pick out Ontario and Quebec in particular; I included the province of British Columbia. In his response, however, the minister made it quite clear that our fears are not unfounded. He said that under certain circumstances which may arise, the same can be done with regard to other commodities. According to what the minister is saying, the federal government has the right to move into any province and fix a price for any natural product or natural resource unless it is possible to establish that the particular commodity will be consumed within the four corners of the province.

With regard to the minister's comments about the right hon. member for Prince Albert, it is true that he and his government did bring in the National Energy Board Act. However, when the right hon. member was in power, he and his ministers were most careful to keep the extent of their intrusion well within the federal responsibility. It is only since the minister started the series of legal steps of the various legislative processes that there has been this movement into a province for purposes which may well be valid. However, in our opinion, until there is a declaration of an emergency which entitles the federal government to exercise additional powers, what the government is doing is wrong. It is not only wrong in fact but it is wrong in law. I do not think the minister can escape by saying that the former Conservative government brought in the National Energy Board Act: it brought in a legal act.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I suppose hon. members have pretty firmly taken their position and will not depart from it, which is their prerogative. We are dealing with transactions involving fungible goods rather than specific quantities of oil. Transactions under clauses 41 and 42 are confined to oil bought and sold within the province. If a buyer and a seller get together and conclude a transaction within the province, the legislation does not attempt to restrict that. I can only repeat that individual quantities of oil are not indentifiable, but the transactions clearly are.

Mr. Woolliams: Then does the minister mean this, that there does not have to be a contract between a buyer and a seller? Take the case of a well that is producing 100,000 barrels of crude petroleum a day, and this amount of oil is stored in a collection system for three or four years and there is no contract or designation made as to whether it will be used in the province of Alberta or some other province of Canada: does the minister mean to say that the mechanism for setting the price does not apply for that length of time?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): If the buyer and seller are not contracting to remove that particular commodity from the province, then obviously the statute does not apply.

Mr. Woolliams: One more thought. This is no longer the case, but at one time oil was sent from Alberta to be refined in Moose Jaw and it was then brought back again into Alberta as gasoline. What would happen in that situation?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Obviously, this is petroleum moving outside the province so there is a contract for removal outside the province and the statute would apply.

Mr. Woolliams: Then right there the minister is contradicting the very purpose of this bill. It is really a bill to set the price of oil that is used outside a producing province. If oil is sent to be processed and refined from Calgary, say, to Moose Jaw, and then it is brought back to Calgary to be used as gasoline, this provision should not apply because the crude petroleum was produced in Alberta and the gasoline is being burned in Alberta.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, the provision does not say "used"; it says "enters interprovincial or international trade".

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, my colleagues and I feel that it is economically desirable, and we think constitutionally permissible, to fix the price of petroleum products that move into interprovincial and international trade. However, we think it is desirable that we have clearly in our minds at what point the price becomes applicable.

I am not sure that the minister's analogy of the Canadian Wheat Board is on all fours with this situation. It is a long time since I looked at the Canadian Wheat Board Act, but my recollection is that it derives its authority from the fact that all grain elevators have been declared to be works for the general advantage of Canada. That applies even to wheat sold in the province when it goes into commercial channels. It is only exempt if it is sold by one farmer to another. So the two situations are not really analagous.

What I hope the minister can clear up for those of us in the committee who are novices, and I am certainly one, is this whole question of at what particular point the price becomes applicable. It has been said it becomes applicable at the wellhead. I cannot agree with that because the oil is not sold at the wellhead. In the province of Alberta, as I understand it—and members from Alberta know the situation much better than I do—the oil is sold to the Alberta marketing board.

Let us assume that producer A intends to sell 50 per cent of a given quantity of his oil to a local refinery and 50 per cent to a refinery outside the province of Alberta. I assume he markets it through the Alberta marketing board; it is largely a paper transaction. Is it at the time that he designates through the Alberta marketing board where the oil is to go that the price we are now talking about becomes applicable? Is that the situation, or is the situation somewhat different? It would be useful if the minister would clarify that point for us.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, the events in regard to which the statute is intended to operate are set out in clauses 24 and 25. In other words, the provisions relate to oil sold for consumption outside the province of production; oil purchased for consumption outside the province of production, which is the reverse side of the same transaction; the acquisition of crude oil for consumption outside the province of production, really acquiring the title to the particular property that is not a purchase or sale transaction. Then clause 25 refers to acts of transporting, carrying, conveying or moving crude oil out of its province of production. In other words, it requires a conscious act as between buyer and seller for this part of the statute to become applicable; a conscious act to move a particular quantity of oil outside the province of production for consumption elsewhere.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In other words, destined for a place outside the province.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Outside the province of production. In this sense it is either the purchase or sale transaction, or the transaction of conveyance, or the transaction of transfer which identifies at that point the particular transaction as being one to which the statute applies, and at that point the statutory provisions with regard to price apply.

To deal again with the point made by the hon. member for Calgary North, a transaction between producer A and the Alberta marketing board at that point would be a sale within the province of Alberta between two entities within the particular province and it would not be identified in any sense as an export transaction. It is only when the particular quantity is put up by contract for sale outside the province that the provisions of this part of the statute would apply.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Chairman, I listened to the minister and I agree that that is the intent, or should be the intent, of those provisions. But that is not what the clause says; that is our whole point. Very simply, what happens in terms of crude oil production in Alberta, and I guess most other places, is this. Let me take as an example the Pembina field west of Edmonton, which is a major producer in the province. Oil is produced by a number of wells in this field; there are sub-collection stations among groups of wells, together with tank batteries. From there the oil moves into a bigger collection system owned, I think, by the Pembina Pipeline Company, and it is transported to Edmonton. At Edmonton a portion of the oil is diverted to, among others, the Imperial Oil refinery at Edmonton, I imagine to Gulf and also to McColl-Frontenac's refinery. Some of the oil would be diverted from this pipeline to the Interprovincial Pipe Line system east of Edmonton, and from there piped to markets outside the province. I think there are markets in every province east of Alberta as far as Sarnia.

The fact of the matter is that the oil that is consumed within the province of Alberta is refined at the Edmonton refinery and from there is transported by product pipeline to Calgary, Lethbridge, Peace River and other places in the province for consumption. This oil would have been mixed in the Pembina pipeline, mixed farther back in the collection system, mixed at the tank batteries, indeed mixed as it comes out of the wells, with crude oil intended for export. Clause 20 applies to crude oil that is mixed or blended with crude oil that has been acquired for movement out of the province of production, and therefore it applies to all of the oil from the Pembina field. Exactly the same story can be told in regard to Leduc, Redwater, Fox Creek, Swan Hills—you name it. So in fact clause 20 means that the statute applies to all of the production within the producing province that is intended for consumption within the producing province.

My colleague the hon. member for Peace River alluded to clauses 41 and 42 which state, in essence, that the Alberta marketing commission must be a licensee. I do not anticipate a problem there, but clause 43 provides:

> No licensee shall purchase any crude oil originating in an exporting province except at a price that does not exceed the prescribed price therefor at the time the purchase is made or the contract to purchase is entered into.

That means the Alberta government cannot, as an instrument of its policy under this act, indicate that in respect of oil consumed totally in Alberta it would like to pay $6.75 a barrel. In other words, it cannot pay a little more for the crude oil consumed totally within the province of Alberta, even though we recognize the importance of increasing the cash flow in order to help make this producing industry viable in Alberta, an industry which employs so many people. This might be very good policy and totally within the authority of the Alberta government according to the constitution, yet this clause says the provincial government cannot do that.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Which clause says that?

Mr. Andre: Clause 20, combined with clauses 41, 42 and 43. This is very clear to me in that clause 43 reads:

> No licensee shall purchase any crude oil originating in an exporting province except at a price that does not exceed the prescribed price therefor at the time the purchase is made—

The Alberta marketing commission will be a licensee. If the minister had said that this part applies only to oil entering the international or interprovincial trade, then he would be right. I really do not understand why there is such difficulty, but in clause 20 the minister has gone ahead and included not only the crude oil that enters international or interprovincial trade but also crude oil that is mixed or blended with crude oil that has been acquired for movement to another province.

I would be willing to bet that this means essentially all oil, because all the oil consumed within the province of Alberta is in fact mixed or blended at one time or another with the oil acquired for consumption primarily outside the province of Alberta. I suggest this is wrong and unconstitutional. On that basis, I should like to move an amendment and I cannot see any reason why there should be any objection to it. I should like to move:

That lines 26, 27 and 28 of clause 20 be deleted and replaced with the word "trade".

I do not think that violates in any way, shape or form the intention of the minister as he has indicated it this afternoon, yet it would prevent governments, this one or any future one, from unfairly interfering with the legislative prerogatives of the province of Alberta.

The Chairman: The committee has heard the proposed amendment. Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Chairman, I am trying not to be obstinate about this, but why, for goodness sake, will the minister not accept this? Does this involve just a matter of obstinacy? Is what is involved a matter of the government saying that this is the way it is, and it is going to be this way or no way at all? The scenario I have portrayed is realistic; it is a possibility. For goodness sake, the minister should at least have the decency to explain. I find it incredible that the minister would sit there saying the government has a majority and it will force this bill through whether we like it or not.

It is incredible that the minister would indicate he does not care about the logic or the facts, this is the way things are going to be. If that is the situation, it is a deplorable attitude. If that is the situation, perhaps we are all wasting our time here and maybe we should just be around every four years for an election and skip the rest. Some very logical arguments have been raised and I think the minister responsible has a duty to explain or least to attempt to refute the logic we have advanced before forcing a vote.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, before the minister answers, I wonder if I could pour a little oil on troubled waters. Would the minister agree to an amendment which would clarify this, putting it in the terms he says he intends by the clause? Would he agree to an amendment which would make sure that this only applies to crude oil which moves out of the province to another province or to international trade, or crude oil blended or mixed with another commodity? Surely that would be very easy to spell out and there would be no problem. I am only attempting to pour a little oil on troubled waters.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I do not see the difficulty at all. The legislative scheme is as I have set it out. The fungible goods to which this applies are covered by a clause with no legal consequence: it is the other clauses which are involved in that way. I have given an explanation to the hon. member for Calgary Centre. I do not really expect him to accept it, but I do not think he can fairly say I have not explained this to the committee.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, the minister said in response to a question by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands that this measure does not apply to crude oil at the wellhead. Would he give an earnest indication of his good intentions by including a proviso to that effect at the appropriate place?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I do not have to do that, because it is provided by the other clauses.

Mr. Baldwin: How does the minister get around clauses 41 and 43 which make it quite plain that a sale at the wellhead is covered within the purview of these clauses? The minister may not intend this, but certainly within the four corners of clauses 40, 41 and 42 there is a definite implication that the price at the wellhead is fixed and prescribed. Perhaps the minister does not intend it, but if that is the case it is possible to use this measure in that way. It may well be that he says this does not apply, but it is applicable or can be made applicable by a combination of clause 20 and the other three clauses.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): No, Mr. Chairman, and I repeat again what I said several minutes ago, that clauses 24 and 25 deal with the prescribed price and create the circumstances in which the prescription applies; otherwise it does not.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Chairman, the minister has not explained this adequately, because the Alberta marketing commission would be a licensee and under clause 43(1), in conjunction with clause 20, would not be permitted to pay the producer more than the prescribed price even in respect of oil that would be used totally within the province of Alberta, and the commission should have that authority.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I would point out to the hon. gentleman, for the fifth time, that this prescription applies to clause 24 and not clause 41.

Mr. Andre: Perhaps the minister would like to take me through this slowly. Does clause 43 not say that no licensee shall purchase any crude oil originating in an exporting province except at a price that does not exceed the prescribed price therefor at the time the purchase is made?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The over-all pattern is really a general licensing one. Under clause 39 one can be a licensee for one transaction and not for another. We could come back to the matter of licences as set out in clauses 24 and 25.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, the minister referred to clause 39 which says that where an order has been made under section 38 in respect of an exporting province, the board may, in accordance with any regulations under this division, and subject to such terms and conditions as are prescribed by the board, issue a licence to any person engaged in selling any crude oil for consumption outside the exporting province.

As has been pointed out by the hon. member for Calgary Centre and myself, the Alberta energy board, as licensee purchasing at the wellhead, purchases crude oil which in part will be consumed in the province and in part will be exported from the province. At the particular moment when that transaction is made, clause 43 combined with clause 20 applies and the Alberta energy board is obliged, if the government prescribes the price at that time, to pay that price.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): No; the Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission indeed will have to be licensed as a seller for extraprovincial sale, not provincial sale. The clause does not attempt to deal with intraprovincial sale.

Mr. Andre: For goodness sake, that is not what it says. It says that a licence must be obtained by any person engaged in selling any crude oil for consumption outside the exporting province. The Alberta marketing commission will be doing that; therefore, it is a licensee and according to clause 43 it cannot pay more than the prescribed price for crude oil that is to be consumed within the producing province. This legislation could be made to apply to oil totally produced and consumed within the province of Alberta, and that is unconstitutional. What violation in respect of the bill, other than the pride of the draftsmen, would there be by the acceptance of the proposed amendment.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I do not know how many times I must repeat this, but this does not apply to oil consumed in the province.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Amendment (Mr. Andre) negatived on division: Yeas, 5; nays, 29.

Shall clause 20 carry?

Mr. Baldwin: On division.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 21—Purpose.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Chairman, this clause is important not so much for what it contains but for what it omits. It states that the purpose is—

(a) to achieve a uniform price, exclusive of transportation costs, for crude oil used in Canada outside its province of production—

Of course, the previous clause already violates that particular purpose. The next purpose is—

(b) to achieve a balance in Canada between the interests of consumers and producers in Canada; and

(c) to protect consumers in Canada from instability of prices for petroleum in the international markets.

Again, we in this party certainly do not quarrel with the intent of those purposes. Indeed, that has been a feature of our energy policy since November, 1973. However, there is one more important feature of our energy policy which I believe should be the energy policy of a responsible government concerned about Canada's economic welfare, and it should be included as a purpose of this legislation. In a moment I shall move an amendment to clause 21 to cover this matter. The amendment primarily deals with the question of Canada's self-sufficiency or long-term security of supply. If we do not have that as a fundamental purpose of the government's administering this legislation and setting prices for crude oil and natural gas in Canada, then not only future generations but we who are alive and well now could in a few years face a precarious situation.

Unless there is some improvement in the matter of self-sufficiency, it will be impossible to protect consumers in Canada from instability of prices for petroleum in international markets in a very few years. At the present time we in Canada are net importers of crude oil, although not to a very great degree at the moment because the difference between our exports and imports is relatively small. However, our exports are dropping dramatically. Our ability to produce from proved fields is dropping dramatically and our demands are increasing substantially. A consequence in the not too distant future is that we will become, more and more, net importers or we will rely more and more on imported crude oil from other areas in the world. This has been shown in the past to bring instability in political and economic terms.

Unless we attempt to achieve self-sufficiency and security of supply through government fiscal and tax policies, and otherwise do what we can to encourage exploration and development, the purposes of this bill will be meaningless. A year from now people will be wondering why it was necessary to raise the price of crude oil at this time and why the Prime Minister indicated at the first ministers' conference that the price of oil would have to go up. Was it because he was responsive to the desires of the western provinces? Hardly, Madam Chairman.

The reason is very simple. We cannot afford subsidy programs unless we have exports to balance imports. Those exports raise cash with which to pay subsidies. If we were to attempt to maintain a price regime closely approximating what we have now, the drain on the treasury would be horrendous. The Minister of Finance should ask himself whether we should subsidize the gasoline used by big V-8 motors or whether we should use taxpayers' money for a more socially viable project such as pensions and assistance to those in our society who are in desperate need of it.

I think that a rational government has made a rational decision that they cannot go on subsidizing gasoline for V-8 engines out of taxpayers' money. They do not have sufficient funds from the export tax with which to subsidize crude oil. The only alternative is to raise the price.

There is another alternative over the longer run which would make sense in terms of national policy; that is, proper administration of the responsibilities of this government in terms of land use regulations in the far north. Income taxes, as they apply not only to corporations but to individuals, would include incentives to invest in oil and gas exploration in this country. If these things were to pass, our declining recoverable reserves would stop declining and start increasing. We could then consider a larger pipeline to Montreal than the 2,000 barrel a day pipeline which is planned. In fact, we could consider the possibility of supplying the whole Montreal market with Canadian produced crude oil, possibly extending it out to the farthest reaches of the eastern parts of this country.

Perhaps it would make more economic sense to make exports to the United States so that we would have the export tax with which to subsidize oil which would be imported into the maritime provinces for their use and which would be at the same price as that paid by other Canadians. It would not put them at the competitive disadvantage of having higher priced energy sources. All those things are possible with a sound and rational energy policy. We in this party feel that the matter of security of supply, of Canada's long-term self-sufficiency, is fundamental.

How will we benefit from a situation that might develop where as a result of political decision taken now we will not be able to obtain oil at any price because of some political development in the Middle East? Although one is always optimistic that the situation in the Middle East will resolve itself without a holocaust, without a renewed war which could interrupt supplies to the west, we are also hopeful that the OPEC nations will in fact be a little more reasonable in terms of their future imposition of higher prices for crude oil. We hope there will be tremendous discoveries in other parts of the world which will help to improve the supply situation. Although we hope for all those things, it is neither prudent nor sound for us to plan for them. It is reasonable for us to plan to be self-sufficient. For that reason, I would like to move an amendment to clause 21 of the bill on page 10. My motion reads:

That clause 21 of the bill on page 10 be amended by deleting line 39 and substituting therefor the following:

"producers in Canada;

(c) to protect consumers in Canada from instability of prices for petroleum in the international markets; and

(d) to ensure the discovery, development and production of a supply of crude oil adequate to the self-sufficiency of Canada.

I think the future objective of trying to ensure Canada's self-sufficiency—and we have the geological potential for that—should be part of the purposes of this legislation, part of the decision-making as to what is an appropriate price for Canadians to pay for crude oil and natural gas. It should not be made on the sole basis of the interests of governments or short-term interests of consumers or producers, but in fact on the basis of the interests of Canadians. As can be seen, this amendment simply adds a section to ensure Canada's self-sufficiency. If it is appropriate, I move the amendment.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Madam Chairman, I have no objection to the purpose of the amendment. Of course, one of the factors to be taken into account in price determination from time to time is the very relevant question of setting the price at such a level that it will bring additional supplies to the country. I wonder, however, if because of the uncertainty that is always involved in exploring for hydrocarbons, the word "ensure" is the most felicitous word in the circumstances. It seems to indicate that by the mere setting of price you would not have dry holes. I have sometimes been accused of being a Pollyanna in these things, but this word perhaps implies more hope than circumstances permit.

Mr. Baldwin: What about the word "encourage"?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): "Encourage" would be a much better word, and we would be glad to accept the amendment with that amendment.

Mr. Andre: I do not know what the appropriate procedure is, but it would be satisfactory to me to move that subamendment.

● (1650)

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please, The subamendment is moved with the unanimous consent of the committee; is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Baldwin: In the amendment the word "encourage" will replace the word "ensure". We "encourage" you, Madam Chairman, to make that change.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed to amend the amendment in paragraph (d) to replace the words "to ensure" with the words "to encourage"?

Amendment to the amendment (Mr. Andre) agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment as amended carry?

Amendment (Mr. Andre) agreed to.

Mr. Gillies: Madam Chairman, we would like to propose a further amendment to clause 21 as follows:

That clause 21 on page 10 be amended by deleting line 42 and substituting therefor the following:

"international markets, in co-operation at all times with the provinces of production which, in the interests and for the protection of consumers in other provinces, have forgone to the degree necessary to this purpose their constitutional autonomy over crude oil as a natural resource and are therefore entitled, so far as compensation may answer, to be restored to a position of equality with other provinces with respect to the administration and control of one of their natural resources."

The purpose of this amendment should be quite clear. We in this party have argued very strongly that the pricing of an important natural resource such as petroleum should certainly be done in co-operation with the provinces. We have at all times argued that control over this resource lies in the hands of the provinces and that any action on the part of the federal government with respect to the pricing of resources, the ownership of which constitutionally lies in the hands of the provinces, should be a matter for provincial concern alone.

We have taken the position that in order to achieve some of the things we think are important with respect to energy policy, namely, one price across the country, it is appropriate that the federal government should engage in discussion with the provinces with respect to the achievement of this objective. We have never agreed, and do not believe the federal government has or should have the single authority to establish prices of these products.

An hon. Member: Why?

Mr. Gillies: Because we believe that constitutionally the resources belong to the provinces. The constitution makes this very clear. We do not believe that special consideration or dispensation should be given in respect of petroleum products. We do not believe the federal government has the right or the propriety, except under conditions of extreme emergency or declared national emergency, unilaterally to establish the price for any resource, whether it be nickel from Ontario, pulp from British Columbia or oil and gas from any of the producing provinces. We have argued that in the past, and we will argue it again.

We believe the amendment I have put forward is appropriate. Since the federal government has moved in on the unilateral pricing approach, great consternation in the nation has been created. It has caused confrontation between provinces, and between provinces and the federal government. A situation has developed in which good federal-provincial relations are being eroded to a greater degree than ever before in our history. Surely it should be possible to work out a method, through consultation, by which this operation can be handled in an effective and appropriate fashion.

If the federal government believes that it alone should have the power to set prices, then it should approach the matter in a totally different way. It should be approached through an amendment to the constitution, constitutional reform or constitutional adjustment. This whole question arises primarily from a series of events taking place outside Canada and over which Canada has no control. We in this party believe that the federal government through this legislation has not found the appropriate way to proceed.

This amendment is based on the proposition that under our constitution resources and their control belong to the provinces, and that the federal government has absolutely no constitutional right to move unilaterally into the pricing and sale of these resources. As we argued at the second reading stage, we hope the government will be willing to accept the amendment. There is nothing to be gained, in terms of the development and unity of this nation, by the federal government attempting to move unilaterally in the pricing of resources in this way.

I speak as a member of parliament from the non-producing province of Ontario, but I speak fervently for the country as a whole. I would not like to see the federal government move in on the pricing of resources in the province of Ontario or in other provinces. These things can be done on the basis of consultation and co-operation. There are many arguments which could be made to the effect that if we can obtain the necessary supply, pricing is not the problem at all. Most of the problems created in this country have been created by our tax regime rather than by our pricing policies.

May I call it five o'clock, Madam Chairman?

Mr. Baldwin: Before we call it five o'clock, because of the fact that the amendment of the hon. member for Calgary Centre was accepted there may be some need to adjust the precise wording on a number of lines because there has now been some change. We are not used to the minister accepting amendments. Occasionally he is very yielding. We did not expect this and we were not prepared for it. We should make the amendment conform to the change.

Progress reported.

[Mr. Gillies.]

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

CORRESPONDENCE WITH CBC PERTAINING TO PROGRAM "BAPTIZING"

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris) moved:

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of all correspondence with CBC pertaining to the program "Baptizing", presented on the CBC national TV network on Sunday evening, January 19, 1975.

He said: Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to discuss the refusal of CBC officials to respond to motion No. 28 that I placed on the order paper for the tabling of letters arising from the program "Baptizing". This is the first time in the years I have been in parliament that a refusal of this kind has come out of an agency such as the CBC. I know from time to time the explanation given for refusal to table documents requested by members of parliament is to the effect that the tabling of such documents would not be in the public interest. By no manner of means could the refusal to table letters pro and con some of the recent programming of the CBC be denied on the basis of the explanation that it would not be in the public interest.

I firmly believe that some of the matters I am going to refer to this afternoon have to be dealt with in the public domain, and the wide exposure that can be given to the subject, both positive and negative, is in the greatest interest of the Canadian public. As I begin my remarks this afternoon, I hope there will be a vote on this matter and that many members from both sides of the House who have indicated their concern will vote in a positive way on the subject of the motion so that members can have an opportunity to view the dialogue and debate on this important subject through the channels of communication and correspondence.

I have had to do some research on my own, not having access to the letters. I have had to dig up some of these documents myself. I think it is a sad commentary on the CBC, which is the organ of public broadcasting funded by the taxpayers of Canada, that the elected representatives of the people of Canada are denied access to information of this kind. It goes back to other periods when the CBC has tended to be secretive to the extent that parliamentary committees have had to delve deeply into the subject. If this is the current trend of the CBC, we might have to resort to that sort of procedure if hon. members are to have an opportunity to hold the public broadcasting organ, the CBC, to public accountability.

CBC Programming

I have raised the issue because I wrote to the president of the CBC immediately the program was aired. I am going to restrict my remarks pretty well to the program "Baptizing" so that we may keep the subject in focus. I wrote in the following terms and had the letters made public. I am sure this information would have come up in the public domain.

Dear Mr. Picard:

Re: The Program "Baptizing"

I had the occasion to view the above program which appeared on the CBC affiliate CKX, Brandon. It was such a distortion of real life that I feel that I must launch a formal protest. My mail has indicated a similar response from many of my concerned constituents.

The program was based on the primitive Freudian psychology interpretation of life that the ID—the raw sexual urge is the sole motivating force in human behaviour.

I may interpolate here that I am an old sociologist and psychologist. Freud went out the window years ago but still comes in the back door in a lot of the stuff we find in the news media at the present time. The letter continues:

While this is a premise that saturates much of our interpretation of human nature and destiny today, it is hardly appropriate that the CBC should be using the powerful public media of TV to communicate this distortion of the essential nature of human behaviour.

A little further on, the other major point I made on page 2 of the letter was as follows:

Not only was it a subtle sell of the Freudian psychology, but the program also included a monstrous caricature of evangelical Christianity.

I received a reply from the president of the CBC, Mr. Picard—and it is too bad we have to go at it in this piecemeal way—in which he said in part:

I'm sorry you were so offended by the play, but I find it difficult to accept the suggestion that CBC should not have carried it. "Baptizing" was a dramatization of a chapter in a book by Alice Munro, a respected Canadian author and the winner of the Governor General's award for her first book. This, I feel, is an important responsibility for the CBC—to reflect contemporary Canadian writing in all its forms, even though some of our viewers may disagree with the ideas expressed.

We've had a number of letters from viewers who agreed with your comments, but we've also had some from people who liked the play. Newspaper columnists were almost unanimous in their praise, calling it "sensitive and sympathetic", gentle, poignant and sometimes funny", "beautifully done", and "deeply warming".

That is as far as I shall quote from that letter. That response and the letters which flowed in persuaded me to go the only road which members can tread in dealing with an impersonal, faceless corporation of this kind: I asked for the documents to be tabled and, inexplicably and unwisely, this request was refused by officials of the CBC, as was explained by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State (Mr. Blouin), on page 4506 of Hansard. He said:

● (1710)

—I am advised by the CBC as follows: The correspondence in question is confidential as between the correspondents and the CBC. The CBC welcomes reactions to programs and the effect of publication of the correspondence would be to create a reluctance on the part of interested parties to comment in writing to the CBC about its programs.

The next entry in Hansard reads, "An hon. Member: Nonsense." I am sure most hon. members support the interjection by that anonymous member as recorded in Hansard.

It had occurred to me that the Baptist Church might be disturbed by the caricature of one of its religious services. True enough, I was able to discover that there was a spontaneous response from the general secretary of the Baptist Federation of Canada, Fred Bullen. His letter to the president of the CBC reads:

—As general secretary of the Baptist Federation of Canada, I wish to express the deep concern which many of our members across Canada have regarding many of the programs shown on CBC television. On Sunday evening, January 19, over channel 5, Toronto, a program entitled "Baptizing" was a caricature of the Baptist churches and was extremely offensive. We are aware that literary and visual art often depict some of the less desirable characteristics which are common to mankind, but we do not believe that it is a function of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to deliberately choose material that is offensive.

The letter continues in that vein. It is a good letter. I think it should be available to all members who are concerned about this matter, because it also makes positive observations about the work of the CBC. The letter-writing activities increased. Obviously, the CBC was disturbed, because the head of TV drama, Mr. John Hirsch, entered the letter-writing business. He wrote to the major newspapers in Canada, which shows the heat must have been on in the offices of the CBC bureaucracy. His letter, as it appears in the Globe and Mail of Thursday, March 13, under the heading "CBC Holds Mirror up to the Viewer", reads in part:

As reported in the Globe, an intensive survey of viewer reaction was commissioned by CBC about "Baptizing," the show that drew the greatest number of protests, a drama concerning the sexual awakening of an adolescent girl.

Over two and a half million people watched "Baptizing"—

I interpolate: the influence is more insidious than I thought.

—one of the largest audiences for a drama to date, and about 300,000 over average. Of these more than 84 per cent watched the show through to the end. The enjoyment index for the program was 70 per cent.

The survey also indicated that about 50 per cent of the public found the play particularly enjoyable, while about 20 per cent was very much against it. The polarization of the audience was clear and extreme. Thus public opinion actually forces decision-making back on the corporation.

The CBC has had to decide whether to go with the minority that objects or with the majority which seems ready to accept a greater latitude of subject matter and language, given, of course, that both subject and language are artistically justified and thoroughly motivated.

The letter continues, but the sentence I want particularly to pick out from the letter is the following:

Obviously programming must not go more than a few steps beyond what viewers are accustomed to.

I, too, started writing letters. I released a letter to the press which, unfortunately, was not given the exposure that Mr. Hirsch's letter was given. In my letter I referred to the interesting and important speech the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) had made when he received the freedom of the city of London. My letter was entitled "A sick society." I am sure all of us were able to read the text of the Prime Minister's letter in which he talked about changing values in society. In that speech the Prime Minister said, when dealing with the issues of a sick society, that we require institutions and régimes of immense dimensions and novel attributes. Our basic institutions are breaking down and new ones are required. That was the essential message. I said in my letter:

[Mr. Dinsdale.]

This disintegration of basic institutions such as the family, the church, the school, and politics is readily discernible today. It is ironical that the mass media is reinforcing this disintegration. The CBC, for example, has been experimenting recently with programs that depict the sick side of Canadian life. In defending the CBC against public criticism and the growing criticism from members of parliament, John Hirsch, head of CBC TV drama released a letter to the editor which included the following phrase:

I then quoted in my letter part of the letter sent by Mr. Hirsch to Canadian newspapers as follows:

The CBC has had to decide whether to go with the minority that objects or with the majority which seems ready to accept a greater latitude of subject matter and language, given, of course, that both subject and language are artistically justified and thoroughly motivated . . . Obviously it is not up to CBC to go wildly off into avant garde styles and far-out situations and language, but rather to remain just a few steps ahead of the whole viewing public in such matters.

My letter then went on to say:

These excerpts from Mr. Hirsch's letter contain many ambiguities, and even contradictions. He is saying that the majority of Canadians like the way-out dramas such as "Baptizing", "Ten Lost Years", "You're Going to be All Right", "Jamie Boy"—

Incidentally, the family name in the last named production was Dinsdale. I do not know whether malice aforethought was involved, but let me say that any resemblance to any Dinsdale family I know was purely coincidental. I continue quoting from my letter:

Therefore, CBC is only catering to prevailing tastes. He goes one step further, however, when he says that CBC has to remain a few steps ahead of the whole viewing public in such matters. In other words, CBC is not only catering to public demand but is also stimulating public demand for programs that include blasphemy, obscenities, violence and situations that are at odds with the traditional values of Canadian society.

At a fund-raising dinner held recently in Toronto, the Prime Minister made some interesting observations about what is happening. According to a news report in the Ottawa Citizen of Saturday, April 19, 1975, the Prime Minister said:

We are no longer convinced that a higher salary is more important than family life, that human beings can live comfortably in isolation from each other, or that a new factory is necessarily more important than the productive land which it will sterilize.

According to the report—

Mr. Trudeau said it no longer is surprising to see young married couples leave large cities in favour of life in smaller communities—

Perhaps they want to get away from CBC programs. I continue quoting:

—or to hear employees turn down transfers to large cities even at the cost of financial gain and career advancement.

That seems to contradict Mr. Hirsch's viewpoint. Others entered the letter-writing game. One letter which ought to be on the record is from the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid), who is deputy House leader. In writing his letter to the editor, he said:

We feel that because we are totally dependent on CBC-TV there ought to be greater attention paid to our needs and requirements. Even some of the CBC officials understand this point. But of course it is rejected by the "artsy" CBC production people whose main purpose in life is to work out their own private fantasies and frustrations on a captive audience.

My constituents complain this year that CBC programming has deteriorated in quality, that when they see a "Canadian content" program they automatically cringe. Instead of using art to make their points, "Canadian content" productions use dirty words, vulgar expressions, scenes of sexual congress.

That is from the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River. I now quote from a recent letter from the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) who has had a long interest in this matter:

The United States Surgeon-General, in a recent report to Congress, has concluded, after two years of research, that there is a "causal relationship between television violence and anti-social behavior to warrant proper and immediate remedial action"—

I am satisfied that there is a causal relationship between the increase in crimes of violence in Canada and violence shown on television. There is, in my opinion, sufficient evidence to warrant immediate action.

The hon. member for St. John East then refers to his bill to amend the Broadcasting Act with respect to the portrayal of sex and violence. His final statement reads as follows:

In my opinion, social control for the protection of children is unrelated to censorship and interference with the civil liberties of adults. History clearly shows that regulations to protect children be they with regard to child labor, food, drink, arms, sex, publications, etc., have never played any role in the abridgement of political or civil liberties for adults. Where freedom has fallen, it has come about in a totally different way.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired. The hon. member can only continue with unanimous consent. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Dinsdale: Not only have I been denied access to the letters so that we might properly understand the problem, but not once have I received an invitation to appear on any CBC program to discuss matters of this kind. I can only conclude this is a form of censorship by exclusion because this is a subject the CBC is not even willing to discuss over its own broadcasting facilities. It is for this reason I trust hon. members will support me so that we can bring this chartered libertine under control and have the CBC accept its responsibility as the chosen organ for public broadcasting in this country.

[Translation]

Mr. Serge Joyal (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Madam Speaker, I am happy to take part in the debate this afternoon, because the contents of the motion of the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) are almost similar to those of the motion put before the House some 15 days ago. At that time, the motion called for production of correspondence between the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) about the subsidy applied for by a group of Canadian women.

Today's motion calls for production of the correspondence the CBC is said to have received following broadcasting of a play entitled Baptizing.

I followed the speech of the hon. member for Brandon-Souris very closely, and throughout I wondered what his purpose is in requesting the House to force the Crown company to produce those documents. He himself mentioned, in the course of his remarks, that over 2,500,000 Canadians had seen the play, which is the highest rating ever registered for that type of broadcast. He also mentioned that the viewers' approval index reached over 70 per cent, and that more than 50 per cent of the viewers—

An hon. Member: That is the CBC viewpoint.

Mr. Joyal: The hon. member should allow me to proceed with my statement, for I listened carefully to his. If he wants to ask questions, Madam Speaker, I shall be pleased to answer them.

He stated that over 50 per cent of viewers had said they were satisfied. I do not think anyway that the aim of this debate is to question the CBC's statistics. We know quite well that when companies, whether public or private, comment on the opinion of the Canadian public on their own services, the public is sufficiently mature to analyse those statistics and put them back in their proper context.

During this debate I also became aware of comments in various Canadian newspapers, and of course I realize that it was just as easy to quote favourable letters as to quote hostile ones, expressing criticisms of the program. During the hon. member's speech, I could not help remembering a program which, Madam Speaker, you may have seen on the CBC network, around 1956 or 1958 I think, after the canonization or beatification of Marguerite de La Jemmerais, when the CBC featured a drama relating the main events in the life of that Canadian woman which probably had a similar audience as the program we are discussing today, and raised such a general outcry from the Canadian people.

But to revert to the heart of the matter, I am somewhat surprised that the hon. member did not even mention that the very subject of his motion is the tabling of documents. That question, as I said at the beginning of my statement, has been frequently raised in this House since the beginning of this session, and that motion is indirectly supported by Bill C-225, introduced by a colleague of the hon. member, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), which is presently being discussed by the Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments.

In fact, that committee had the opportunity to hear the hon. member for Peace River deal with government guidelines respecting the confidentiality of some documents or the objection the government might have to tabling some documents.

I too have tried to check the reasons why the CBC will not allow this correspondence to be published.

Criteria to be applied for exemption from production of government papers include the following, and I quote:

7. Papers of a voluminous character or which would require an inordinate cost or length of time to prepare.

I believe this criterion, among others, may have a bearing on the present instance.

There is also criterion no. 15, which reads as follows:

15. Internal departmental memoranda.

This also might receive application in this instance. And finally we come to the following heading:

Minister's correspondence

... that is, exchanges of documents between a minister and a Crown corporation whose minister is answerable to the House, or exchange of papers between ministers on the implementation of various government programs.

Clearly, if the CBC were to be required to produce correspondence received or exchanged with the minister or the public, on any of its programs that might lead to comments or protests from Canadians, it would require a much larger budget, because such requests would be so numerous every time there is objections among viewers, that the situation would be far beyond control.

Surely, if the CBC's way of discharging its responsibility to prepare programs is to be questioned, I believe today's debate is not the best forum.

During hearings of the standing committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts, when the CBC's representatives appeared, I believe it was three weeks ago—the chairman himself appeared—members had an opportunity to question the latter on program contents. During these hearings they were able to voice their views.

I do not believe that adding correspondence will allow us to truly determine criteria as to the way in which the CBC fulfills its responsibility to prepare adequate programming. Evidently the corporation, when dealing with the whole Canadian public, must meet certain requirements for general adequacy. It is clearly not within the term of reference of the CBC to spearhead the evolution of mores within the Canadian society, and it is not within its term of reference to slow it down either.

I feel that the CBC's first responsibility is to reflect the Canadian society as it is now, although one may of course wonder when one considers the statistics which the hon. member quoted a while ago and which I quoted myself bearing witness to the fact that Canadians are extremely sensitive to this program, notwithstanding the qualified reaction they have had.

When the CBC however must define its responsibility as to programming, it must do so while taking into account the state of the evolution of mores within the Canadian society.

It is very easy to criticize the CBC, for it is the corporation which lays itself more open to criticism. Why? Because it is almost free from government control. There are two elements which I should like to mention and which emphasize my point.

About two years ago, a program was broadcast at 8 o'clock, therefore at prime time for families during which some scenes dealt with homosexuality. A month or a week later, the programs were suspended and the series was discontinued for the remainder of the season.

I think that no motion was then introduced in the House asking the minister responsible for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to file the correspondence exchanged about the program. Under the circumstances the CBC was probably questioning the same kind of morality as in the program Baptizing; it did show such maturity that I think its deserves our confidence.

Other judgments could be passed about the CBC and the way the government is discharging its responsibility towards that Crown corporation. I would like to mention to the hon. member a thesis submitted to La Sorbonne in February and for which that university has awarded a doctorate to Miss Denise Bombardier who was a Canadian student in Paris. Its specifically dealt with a study on the control of the CBC status, as a Crown corporation in relation with other European television networks. And the main conclusions of her thesis were that the CBC was one of the freest television systems in the world. Of course, if the doors are thrown wide open, schedules and broadcasts may contain programs that are shocking, likely to call for blame and particularly likely to force CBC officials to withdraw those programs from the schedule.

I think it was done in the past, and I also think they are likely to retain the confidence already expressed on several occasions by Parliament vis-à-vis the CBC. I do not mean that the CBC must be absolved of all the mistakes and errors it may have been guilty of in the past, and particularly those that will happen in the future. Because, you see, Madam Speaker, when you rely on an institution run by men, errors are always possible. There have been some, there will be others. Our responsibility is to set the main criteria delimiting the operation of the Crown corporation. It is not necessarily by trying to arouse the passions of Canadians for or against such and such a type of program that we will fulfill our mandate. Our mandate is to ensure that the Crown corporation best serves the interests of Canadian morals as they exist now because there are Canadians who are behind average morals, and others who are ahead. This is an ever changing situation that the Corporation must reflect. Of course, it makes mistakes but I do not think that our role is to brandish the stick or the machine gun every time there is that kind of outbursts. On the contrary, I believe that on the long term, the record of the CBC is still favourable. And if we can attract comments like those which I mentioned and which have been approved by a university outside Canada, I believe that the CBC still deserves our confidence. But if these criteria which I mentioned a while ago had to be applied and if the attitude of the government in this matter had to be reviewed, we should refer this to the Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments, review this list of criteria and proceed so that the bill introduced by the hon. member for Peace River can be debated and so that this bill may include elements which will prevent a Crown corporation from having a tendency or an orientation toward secrecy which stops Parliament from assuming its own responsibility, which is to control its operations.

Of course, Madam Speaker, when we talk about cultural issues, taste and morality, the interpretation is exceedingly flexible. We can give to the same painting, the same literary hour, a series of definitions and values which can be as valid for various people who are considering them. I am thinking, for instance, about the difficulties that the Canadian courts had in applying the criminal laws concerning morality. What is obscene and what is not? What, by its nature, can shock public morality and what is acceptable? All these limits are extremely flexible. They change with the events and I am certain that the morality of today's society in 1975 is not the same as the one to which I was referring when I mentioned this program of 1958. If the same drama were broadcast today, it would probably pass unnoticed.

The same applies to this program. Maybe in five years from now, no one will even pay any attention. Naturally, the role of a Crown corporation is not to aggravate the opinion of Canadians. And were I personally convinced that the CBC was not conscious of such a role, I would be the first to intervene in the House, and when the CBC appeared before the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts, I would have joined my colleagues and expressed my opposition as well to the way in which the CBC has so far carried out its mandate.

Finally, I feel that guidelines such as those being now applied for the production of documents seem valid to me. The government has defined in very precise and explicit fashion its notice of motion on the production of documents, which should now open the doors wider to publicity on all decisions and information likely to help the government take its own decisions. On the whole, I feel that if we are to amend its guidelines, that ought to be done by the committee, and not simply by asking for the production of letters on a program which, all things considered, remains of very slight importance amidst all that is heard and published in Canada.

[English]

Mr. Gus MacFarlane (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I want to assure the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) that although I graduated from McGill and know Patrick Watson very well I have not been invited to "Some Honourable Members" either, so he is probably in very good company. I would also draw attention to the fact that on such a problem of social conscience I notice no member from the NDP has seen fit to attend at this hour, so I imagine they are not interested in the topic.

Mr. Dinsdale: They are out watching the CBC.

Mr. MacFarlane: I would like to stress the fact that I do not believe that it would be a sensible matter to table, or even request the tabling of, letters from the general public. I think we all realize that correspondence received from the public has its own benefit and its own nature of truth in it, and since, like the programs, it would be "in the eye of the beholder", we would only be making our own judgments of those letters.

I will have something to say about the program a little later on, but I think that the "eye of the beholder" has to be looked at pretty closely. I wonder what we would think if we looked down through the list of films some of us have seen. For example, I do not know whether any hon. members have seen the Scottish film called "The Brothers". If so, they would have seen the two brothers go out to the island, swim across the loch, and on the island one of the brothers catches his hand in a crevice, and then in the scene in the film he takes a knife and cuts his hand off and the blood rolls into the water. Nobody seemed to think that this was undue violence; it was part of the story and was accepted as such.

I wonder what we would think of "Volpone" when it was on the stage of Her Majesty's, as it was called, in Montreal, perhaps re-presented at O'Keefe's, with Donald Wolfit playing in it, and we see the scene where he comes across the stage, much like a wolf moving toward the fair maiden he is about to rape. I wonder whether we would say that this should not be seen by all those wealthy people who could buy tickets, and by the few students who could sneak in.

What would we really think if we took a look at some of Shakespeare's writings, and when he writes of Gloucester "Put out his eyes, out of their bloody sockets!". I wonder just how horrible this is.

I wonder what we would think of it all when we think of sex and remember that there she lay, the fair Lucretia, two alabaster castles in white, where the breath came and went and the currents moved slowly. Is this terribly sexual, or is this beautiful writing? It is in "the eye of the beholder" to a great extent.

If we want to come back to our young people, and I caution you about being certain when you talk about young people that you have some experiences with them, we should not always see them as adults. One Sunday in Ottawa if you happen to be attending a speaking engagement here and not in your riding, you should go out and see what the young people, the little people do. They are at Kung Fu or they are at a Sunday afternoon movie.

What is this Kung Fu? I really do not like Kung Fu films. I was probably fairly agile in my day. I think I can still do a pretty good Russian dance and throw a few pretty good drop kicks, but I am not really too interested in that. But you had better go and see these things. What do you see there? Do you see them performing these actions which people say are just exhibits of violence? Suddenly do you find all the children very, very silent, and then suddenly the bad guy does something and they say "boo", just like we did for Ken Maynard, when we shouted "hurrah" for Tom Mix, and booed the bad guy? There is no difference. These are great morality plays. We should take a look at that aspect of it and see what is actually happening.

I know I used to have fights on Fifth Avenue in Verdun and I never used to win. The other guy was Tom Mix and I used to play Ken Maynard, and the one guy wore black, and the one guy wore white. This is ridiculous. I do not think it is fair for us to presume that all this evil is happening, and everything we see on TV and all the violence are affecting young people in this way.

I remember sitting up at night at 11 o'clock when I was seven years old, turning on the radio, and "Here comes the Shadow; who knows what evil lurks in the minds of men?" My mother said I was going to have dreams. It was a good experience. It was exciting drama. I do not see any reason why we should be too concerned about the wonderful generation that is following. I do not think they will be easily hoodwinked. They will not be hoodwinked any more because of the fact that many of them are now interested enough, and the records show it, in returning to their churches. They have not been frightened by all of the hypocrisy that existed. They have gone back to their churches, and some of them have brought better music and ideas into the services of churches of all denominations.

Mr. Dinsdale: Agreed, but let us have the—

Mr. MacFarlane: Incidentally, these young people are very polite. They do not interrupt. They just usually wait until I stop talking and then ask me about the salary raises. They are very honest.

Mr. Dinsdale: Are you Irish?

Mr. MacFarlane: No, I am actually a Canadian who is proud of his Scottish heritage. In fact I am going after multiculturalism for assistance to buy bagpipes for Hamilton Mountain. I think this is a good idea.

I would like to say that I do not accept any undue exploitation. I am the last person who would believe in any form of censorship of any undue sensationalism. If you think honestly of the kind of letters you receive as a member of parliament you will know the kind of issues that are referred to in them. These are letters you receive from people who are very concerned about a specific issue.

Sometimes the people who do not write are sort of in agreement with what is occurring, or do not have any real comment to make. If you took your letters on a particular issue and threw them on the table—and you know that they would go right through the whole social gambit, right through from the bill on oil to the letters you get from Alberta as against those from Ontario—you would not get a fair sampling of the criticism of a program. I suggest you would have received a real bombardment and a real playing up of the very things on the program we are saying should not be exploited by the CBC. I think it is very dangerous to just ask for the presentation of documents which are indeed letters from people who are complaining.

I appreciate the sincerity of the hon. member for Brandon-Souris. I am sure he is making a point here. I think many of us are going to take a good look at the CBC. I have other questions to ask which do not concern this subject. I know that we will take heed of some of the things he has mentioned, but I really do not believe in the production of the documents.

I want to say that it is very important, and I hope I say this loud and clear so it is printed in many places, that we know that the young people who watch Kung Fu, and some of the things that some of us suggest are the violent things, do see in some of those things a bit of a morality play, the same as when playing "the King of the Castle," with the hope that the good guy wins. It is not a bad thing for them to have imagination and the desire to end up in good places. There is enough tragedy as you move through life without clouding it there.

The moment of enjoyment for these young people is not the moment where they grab flies and tear their legs off, as the people told us in the old days. I think we have to respect that. I would like to say on the other hand that the CBC in drama, in some of its presentations and earlier documentaries, as well as the new ones coming up, is not excelled in the world, and when we are talking about something we should not destroy the thing itself by trying to get at some of the appendages on the outside which we think should not be thrown at us.

The CBC does not need to throw at our generation, the young and the older people, some of the smut that is being shown today. There is no need to use rough language in the non-poetic way to make no points but just to use rough language. I agree with the hon. member completely in that regard.

By the same token I think a sensitive treatment of anything such as sexual relations of a man, a woman, people on this earth can be treated in the most beautiful of fashions. There are many, many ways in which this can be treated in an artistic way to bring home the fact that after all God's people do love, do experience, and that it is physical without being evil. The CBC does not need to do to us some of the things it is doing, and that is just trying to make something into a purely flesh experience for excitement, and to grab the attention of people who are less interested in the true artistic process of seeing the realism of theatre.

Mr. Roger Young (Niagara Falls): Madam Speaker, I trust that members will forgive me if I take a big gulp of air as I have just rushed back from a committee meeting in the west block. I would like to follow up some of the comments made by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. MacFarlane). I also have a great deal of trouble when I look at some of these motions for the production of papers, particularly in respect of a matter like this.

The first question that really comes to my mind is: having produced all these other letters, if they were to be produced, of what real value or benefit would that be? I think hon. members must realize that there are people in this country who are sincerely concerned about the programming we find on our national network. I think that is a valid concern. When they spend their evenings watching a few hours of television they want to be adequately and properly entertained, and not bothered by what they see.

It strikes me that each and every one of us in this country has the first and primary solution to this problem in respect of the content of television programming right within our grasp. If you do not like the program, or you do not like what you see, you can reach out with your fingers and turn the knob to the off position. You are then no longer bothered by what is there. I sometimes wonder whether this whole issue raised by some people does not involve their own attitudes which drive them to antagonize themselves by continuing to listen and watch programs they do not enjoy. This is particularly true when the opportunity is available in the first place for them to turn the set off rather than continue to watch, thus allowing the program to bother them. That is the easiest solution.

I think one must also remember that before considering the problem of turning the knob on or off it is necessary to buy the television set or radio in order to receive the program. I might again comment on what I said first gave me the most difficulty in this regard. I wonder what it is we should do with the letters and documents which are raising such a great issue. As a member of the broadcasting committee which interviewed Mr. Picard and his officials some two or three weeks ago I know that this situation, or problem if you like, was quite clearly aired before the committee. I do not recall that the hon. member who moved the motion attended those two committee meetings and raised any questions.

Mr. Dinsdale: Is the hon. member aware that there are 20 other committees which also had meetings?

Mr. Young: Yes, but certainly I would suggest that having prepared a motion of this importance to the hon. member, he himself might have attended the committee meetings at that time. We often switch around from committee to committee when there is a matter of some interest to us being discussed by a certain committee.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

PETROLEUM ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING THE ADMINISTRATION OF INTERPROVINCIAL, EXPORT AND IMPORT TRADE IN PETROLEUM AND PETROLEUM PRODUCTS

The House resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-32, to impose a charge on the export of crude oil and certain petroleum products, to provide compensation for certain petroleum costs and to regulate the price of Canadian crude oil and natural gas in interprovincial and export trade—Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale)—Mrs. Morin in the chair.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: It being after six o'clock, I leave the chair to resume at 8 p.m.

At 6.05 p.m. the Committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

On clause 21—Purpose.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Chairman, at five o'clock I was speaking to the amendment we are proposing to clause 21. I had almost completed my remarks. I wish to reiterate strongly that the setting of prices of natural resources should not be a unilateral decision on the part of the federal government. The purpose of my amendment is to make it mandatory that the government, in setting prices, consult with the provinces, which constitutionally and, we believe, without question, own the resources.

It was not until the unique and strange experience in the Middle East that this fundamental principle came into question. We do not believe that the constitution should be rewritten through legislation of this kind in response to a particular phenomenon which developed far from Canadian shores. For these reasons I hope the minister will accept the amendment we have proposed.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, I wish to deal with the amendment itself. We have taken the opportunity to consider this, having had a copy of it from the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain since late 1974.

It could be described as adding an editorial opinion to the legislation. It certainly has no effect in law with regard to the arrangement involved here. The hon. member for Don Valley said that he and his party were in favour of a procedure for consultation and that he hoped to achieve it by the adoption of his amendment. He overlooks the fact that in clause 22 and following clauses there are expressly stipulated in the bill provisions for just such consultation between the federal and provincial governments in an effort to reach agreement on an appropriate price. That is the whole context of division one of this particular part, namely, that there should be discussions between the two levels of government in an effort to reach agreement.

I am leaping ahead of myself, but clause 21 applies to both divisions of this part. The question is: what happens if agreement is not possible? If the Province of Alberta, for example, says that it should receive $1.30 or $1.35 for natural gas and a higher price for a barrel of oil, and the federal government says that because of the state of the economy and because of the impact this will have on other parts of the community it is far too high, and we simply cannot agree with that, the position the hon. gentleman would have us take is that—since the word veto has been used—if there is to be a veto in this regard, the veto should reside with the producing provinces. He would say that the provinces should be entitled to say to the rest of Canada, which over time has come to use the oil, that they do not care what Canadians think is a fair price, the provinces will set their prices at their own level.

The hon. member for Don Valley may feel that way. I think it is fair to say, though, that the Premier of Ontario does not feel that way. The hon. member for Don Valley made reference, by way of analogy, to the impact on the province of Ontario in regard to other commodities. I take it that the Premier of Ontario has considered this question, and he has arrived at a similar conclusion to that of the federal government, namely, that ultimately if a price is to be set the price should be set by a national government which is responsible to a national electorate, and which has to take into account the interests of the nation as a whole as opposed to that of any single province or region. I believe that this is the point of disagreement between the official opposition and the government.

The opposition takes the view that a particular province should be entitled to exercise a final veto in these questions. We do not agree. We feel that on the question of interprovincial and international trade it is clear under the constitution that the provinces do not have this right and that the federal government does, and from time to time should exercise it.

Let us consider the terms of the amendment. If there is an agreement between the federal and provincial governments as provided by division one of Part II of the bill, then the provinces are not forgoing anything. In effect they are entering into an agreement, which they have the authority to do, with the federal government to arrive at a particular conclusion.

Just as we presume that the province agreed last year that it was in its own interest to arrive at an agreement with nine other premiers and the Prime Minister, so in this case, in the event of an agreement, there is no jurisdiction being forsaken. There is nothing being given up by the provinces. They will take the decision in their own best interests. Then, if there is no agreement, I think it is also fair to say that the province is still not forgoing anything, as the Crown is exercising the jurisdiction given to it under the constitution to create a marketing scheme, a plan for the national marketing of this product, on an interprovincial or international basis.

On that basis I think it is fair to observe that the amendment does not add anything to the law, or anything in a practical sense to the determination of the issues involved. We therefore feel it is not an effective amendment. As the hon. member will agree, the rhetoric in the amendment represents a statement on the constitution of Canada, which we regard as a misstatement. For that reason I will counsel my colleagues, when the time comes, to vote against this amendment.

Mr. Gillies: What position does the government take with respect to the fundamental constitutional position that resources are the property of the provinces and therefore come within their jurisdiction in connection with pricing? I do not think one can dispute inter-commerce or interprovincial trade, but on the fundamental issue of ownership, what position does the government take?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): We have been on this debate for a long time, pre-dating the days when the hon. member undertook his present responsibilities. But I think it is useful to repeat that there is no contest at the federal level. For example, we have no hesitation in saying that with regard to the development of the oil sands, this is a resource totally within the Province of Alberta, and that if the province chooses not to develop those resources—to use a Biblical parable; if it chooses to leave that talent in the ground—then I think the hon. member will recognize that it is the decision of the province in that regard.

However, when a resource is developed and commodities are produced which the private sector or a provincial marketing commission then wishes to sell, either interprovincially or internationally, at that point it is no longer a question of ownership by the province; it comes into a broader market than that of the province alone. On that basis account has to be taken of the constitution which provides for this aspect of economic policy.

If the province chooses to misallocate its resources the federal government cannot do much about it; or if the province chooses to develop a resource in a certain way or not develop it at all, that is a reality which the federal government, in our system, must live with. But if at the point they are developed and the products involved in that development become the subject of interprovincial or international commerce, then the federal jurisdiction applies. I cited to the House earlier the judgment of the judicial committee of the Privy Council in Attorney General of Canada versus Attorney General of B.C., in which the point was made by Lord Tomlin that, no matter what may be the regional jurisdiction over the pricing of a product, when that product becomes the subject of trade in a broader market, at that point the jurisdiction of the federal government seizes and takes effect.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Chairman, I wish to address myself to a remark of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who dismissed the amendment proposed by my colleague from Don Valley as mere rhetoric. Let me read that amendment again. It proposes:

> That clause 21 on page 10 be amended by deleting line 42 and substituting therefor the following:
> "international markets, in co-operation at all times with the provinces of production which, in the interests and for the protection of consumers in other provinces, have foregone to the degree necessary to this purpose their constitutional autonomy over crude oil as a natural resource and are therefore entitled, so far as compensation may answer, to be restored to a position of equality with other provinces with respect to the administration and control of one of their natural resources."

The minister dismisses that as rhetoric. He might be interested in knowing that that language came from the 1930 amendment to the British North America Act, sometimes known as the Mineral Transfer Act, which says in part, and I quote:

> And whereas it is desirable that the province should be placed in a position of equality with the other provinces of Confederation with respect to the administration and control of its natural resources as from its entrance into Confederation in 1905:

I will not quote any more. In other words, this amendment seeks to confirm that the government still holds the constitution of the country, the British North America Act as amended in 1930, as being valid in law. In find it somewhat disturbing that the minister should dismiss as mere rhetoric the wording of an amendment to the British North America Act, as contained in the Mineral Transfer Act if 1930. That amendment came about as a result of 25 years of political agitation by the people of western Canada, who asked to be treated as equals in confederation and not as colonials living in colonies of central Canada. After 25 years of agitation, under a Conservative government they were able to bring about that amendment to the British North America Act which made Saskatchewan and Alberta the equals of the other provinces in Confederation. I don't think that was any act of great benevolence but, certainly, it was an act of justice.

Now the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources seeks to turn the calendar back to before 1930 and to dismiss as rhetoric the very language of the law. Surely, if any doubt the minister's motives, what the minister has said should put their minds at rest.

Of course the minister went beyond the scope of this clause in his discussion and talked about the necessity of a veto clause. It is argued that under that veto clause, in the absence of agreement the federal government could, or would, in considering its national responsibilities impose an agreement. In his argument he conveniently dismissed two relevant facts. Perhaps we can discuss those when the appropriate clauses are discussed. Let me remind the minister that, for some 18 months, we have been under a price control regime in this country through which the federal government, at its own initiative and without discussion, has controlled the price of crude oil in this country. It has done this without the benefit of this veto clause, without the benefit of this legislation, and without legislative muscle.

Mr. Caccia: What do you mean by saying it was done without discussion?

Mr. Andre: This regime was imposed on September 4, 1973.

Mr. Caccia: But it was done after consultation, and you know it.

Mr. Andre: The hon. member opposite is playing fast and loose with history. He knows that this decision was arrived at after a certain cabinet meeting, after which the cabinet felt compelled to make a statement about inflation because of the noise the previous leader of the NDP had been making that summer throughout the country. The fact remains that a price control regime has been in place for one and a half years. Certainly it has been in place with the co-operation of producing provinces, even though they were aghast, alarmed, and angered by the federal government's taking such unilateral action without the slightest consultation. Nonetheless they co-operated, and co-operate to this day.

No province has given the slightest indication that it will not co-operate. On the contrary the minister has indicated already that his government is prepared to take unilateral action without consultation. No province has yet said it will not go along with the government. They have said, "We will go along." The minister, however, says he must have this veto clause in case agreement cannot be reached. What kind of agreement can you reach in the face of that veto clause? How can you negotiate staring down the barrel of a gun? What sort of negotiations will go on? The argument is completely ridiculous. Armed with this legislation the government can go to any meeting and say, "We suggest this." If any province dares to disagree, the government could claim there is no agreement. This is how it will be.

My friends of the NDP would never accept that sort of situation in labour-management negotiations. They would never agree to one side having that sort of veto clause. I mean, how can there be consultation and negotiation when one side has that sort of authority? Mr. Chairman, it is patently absurd. The existence of that veto clause would mean that the federal government could unilaterally decide on the price of crude oil and natural gas in Canada. The rest of the bill might as well not be there. The government might as well say, "We are going to control the price of natural gas and crude oil in this country, period." The law gives the provinces no assurance that there will be meaningful negotiation and consultation. After all, consider the assurances the government gave the provinces in the past.

I said a few moments ago that on September 4, 1973, the federal government, unilaterally and without consultation, introduced a price freeze. It was imposed two months after the publication of a document by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources called "An Energy Policy for Canada—Phase I". On page 9 the document asserts that no national policy can be contemplated without the fullest intergovernmental consultation and consensus. On page 58 these words are to be found:

> That there can be no effective set of national energy policies developed without the participation of the provincial governments is readily apparent . . . Obviously, policies developed in isolation in Ottawa hold scant hope for success.

We were assured there would be the fullest consultation, that the government understood the constitution of this country, that it recognized the provinces have jurisdiction over natural resources, and that it intended to consult the provinces before taking action. Then, two months later, without the slightest consultation, the minister unilaterally imposed the price freeze and the export tax. We know the whole sorry history after that. Now he says he needs this veto clause, because there might not be agreement. Balderdash!

The existence of this veto clause will guarantee that there will not be discussions, that there will not be negotiation, and that the minister will decide unilaterally, for political reasons rather than for reasons of national security, what the price shall be. That is just plain unacceptable.

In the hope of improving this bill somewhat, we would like added to the bill a short paragraph that might at least remind future ministers and bureaucrats that at all times there must be co-operation with the provinces of production. Under the British North America Act 1930, the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan were guaranteed equality with the other provinces of Canada with regard to the administration and control of their natural resources. We would like to see that incorporated in this bill.

I do not think it is acceptable advice to those on the opposite side, who are thinking about their vote and not just reacting in an automatic manner to the minister's directions to reconsider, that they should vote against this amendment on the basis of it being mere rhetoric. It is not rhetoric. It is the constitution of Canada, the British North America Act 1930.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, one of the predictable things about the hon. member for Calgary Centre is that as he rants on, he defeats his own argument.

The Chairman: Order, please. I do not think the amendment has been put to the committee. Maybe I should put it before the minister speaks. It is moved by Mr. Gillies:

That clause 21 on page 10 be amended by deleting line 42 and substituting therefor the following:

"international markets, in co-operation at all times with the provinces of production which, in the interests and for the protection of consumers in other provinces, have foregone to the degree necessary to this purpose their constitutional autonomy over crude oil as a natural resource and are therefore entitled, so far as compensation may answer, to be restored to a position of equality with other provinces with respect to the administration and control of one of their natural resources."

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): As I was saying, Mr. Chairman, one of the things about the hon. member for Calgary Centre is that if you give him enough rope, he will defeat himself in his particular proposal. In his final few words he really answered the main thrust of his argument.

The federal statute, which was the Alberta Natural Resources Act of 1930, and the other federal statutes in that regard do not purport to give to the province of Alberta and the other provinces any higher right in confederation than have the other provinces under Section 109 of the British North America Act. They of course gained responsibility for developing the natural resources in their provinces. Ontario and Quebec, and Nova Scotia and New Brunswick came into confederation subject to the overall responsibility of the federal government for trade and commerce. Therefore Alberta is on exactly the same basis. The observation is as relevant with regard to Alberta as it is with regard to the rest of the provinces.

The fact is that the province can decide to develop the resource it wishes. However, when it seeks to introduce the products of that development into interprovincial or international trade, it becomes subject to federal jurisdiction. I refer only to the wording here. It adds nothing to the constitution, it subtracts nothing and it adds nothing to this particular bill. It in no way detracts from the 1930 statute. The province has its right, but if it seeks to market its products outside its own boundaries it is subject to this particular jurisdiction. That is just not my viewpoint or the viewpoint of the federal government.

The hon. member indicated it was not a higher claim he was making for Alberta than Ontario. Premier of Ontario insisted to this government that to look after the broader interests of the country as a whole we should indeed have these powers. This was put before the first ministers at their last conference. Indeed it was put before the electors of Canada at the time of the last election that, in a moment like this, when it is not possible to arrive at an agreement, the level of government that should take the ultimate responsibility is the national one. It should not be left to any provincial government to have the final say. The point has been well made.

The only point I would add is that the hon. member sought to base an argument on some higher claim than the Alberta Natural Resources Act. This is the same claim Ontario would make. Ontario clearly recognizes that in interprovincial commerce it is the federal government which should take this final responsibility.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I am deeply sorry that my friends to the left are not taking part in this interesting argument. I know they are in a difficult position. Their natural desire, indeed the urge which possesses them is to seek great chunks of power vested in the government. It is part and parcel of their philosophy. I understand that. This is indeed in conflict with their responsibility to their respective provinces.

If the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, a former premier, were still in power at this time, he would be burning the wires with his protestations against the powers which the government of Canada is seeking here. He would be most unhappy about this.

I hope the members of the NDP will come to a full realization of their responsibilities before the bill is disposed of finally. As for the minister, we have given up hope on him on this particular issue. However, there is a larger audience beyond him. We will bounce our arguments off him in the belief they will be heard by others in the country and in due course the issue will be decided as to what extent the federal government has the right to trample on the constitution. They use as the sole criterion that when there is a genuine dispute as a result of the constitution, and our constitution is particularly difficult, they can over-ride the constitution and decide—

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): That is what the Premier of Ontario says.

Mr. Baldwin: I do not care what the Premier of Ontario says or what the Premier of Alberta says. I am here as a federal member of parliament, responsible to the people in my constituency.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Your disdain for the Premier of Ontario is noted.

Mr. Baldwin: I take my responsibility a little more seriously than does the minister. He reminds me of a judge I appeared before as a young lawyer. I had great respect and veneration for the courts, which I still have, although it is a little dimmed over time.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): That is not the only thing that is dim.

Mr. Baldwin: That judge made a manifestly improper decision on the law. When counsel got up and objected, the judge said "When I don't like the law, I jump over the law." The minister has become a great jumper. He jumps over the law a great deal. He is certainly taking a very high jump at this time.

I know this is difficult. We have a situation with regard to energy, that exists in Canada as well as in many other parts of the world. If all consultation fails it may be desirable to have some supreme authority. If we do not have any divine providence to fix the price, the government, having the attitude that they are the agents for the Lord, are going to fix it themselves. This would be all very well if we were a unitary state, but we are not. We have a constitution that provides for these divisions of powers. Difficult though it may be, and hard though it may be, I say that we should all thank the Lord that that is the case. I am sure a lot of members from the province of Quebec have genuine reason to bless the constitution for the powers it gives that province, and I am amazed that they sit idly by, merely because the minister is a member of their own party, and watch him mutilate and virtually destroy part of the constitution in this way.

I say it is not good enough for this minister or any other minister to say that the government is trying to get agreement on a multilateral basis, but that if it cannot do so it will get agreement on a bilateral basis, and that if it cannot even get that it will fix the price and to hell with the constitution. Certainly that is the attitude the minister is taking. If some hon. members opposite are offended by my language, then they should take a serious look at what is involved here.

The minister said earlier that he contemplates that the effect of this legislation, if it passes the House unchanged with all these repugnant clauses in it, would be that the provincial Crown agency for any of the producing provinces would be able to purchase oil at the wellhead as a transaction within the province and not be subject to the prescribed price. If I am wrong in my interpretation of what the minister said, would he correct me?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, the law really speaks for itself. If it is a transaction to export from a province, then the bill applies. If it is not such a transaction, then there is no such application of the bill.

Mr. Baldwin: I hate to go around the old merry-go-round again but I have pointed out to the minister—I am sure his officials have filled him in on the facts of life in this regard—that crude oil coming out of the wellhead is automatically a mixture. This is a fact of life, so that when oil leaves the wellhead part of it will be consumed in the province and part will be exported outside the province, and it is impossible to identify these parts.

I did make that point previously, but the minister said, if I understood his response to a question from the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands correctly, that irrespective of that a purchase made at that time is considered to be a transaction entirely within the province. Therefore the minister said that situation is not covered by the legislation.

If I am wrong, then the minister can deal with the matter later. However, if that is the case, then let us say that the province of Alberta, or for that matter the province of Saskatchewan or the province of British Columbia, fixes the price at $8.75. This bill has been passed, and the federal government fixes the prescribed price at, say, $8.25. If the provincial Crown agency, for the purposes of the intraprovincial transaction, has purchased at the price of $8.75 and that transaction has not been challenged by this legislation, then I ask the minister to consider what would be the result. Does it mean that, as a matter of practical economics, the people involved in the next leg of the transaction, namely, those who purchase from the provincial Crown agency, must pay only $8.25? What is the position of the provincial Crown agency? Must it be compelled to sell at $8.25, despite the fact that it paid $8.75 at the wellhead? These are the practical problems that I am sure the minister must contemplate.

We have been talking about crude oil and have already been through the definition of crude oil. The minister made it plain that a great many commodities of a commercial nature that are derivatives, that have crude oil as their feed stock, can be covered by this particular legislation. My hon. friend from Calgary Centre went so far as to say that panty hose was covered. There may be other items, but certainly that is one. Hundreds of items may be covered by the bill. What is the situation with regard to these derivatives which are based on crude oil as the feed stock?

It is all very well for the minister to say that he has no intention of making the bill apply to such items. But we are not concerned with his intentions; we are concerned with the powers given by this legislation. If there is an industry in the province of Alberta, or the provinces of Saskatchewan or British Columbia, that produces a commodity based on crude oil, and which is defined as crude oil within the interpretation that the minister has fastened upon us by the amendments that have been brought in, then how does the prescribed price apply? Does the minister reserve the right, if there is a sale of the commodity, to fix the price at the factory? Is the minister saying that if this commodity is sold to a wholesaler who takes delivery at the factory, the wholesaler must pay the prescribed price even though it is a transaction that takes place entirely within the province?

I suggest that these are not fanciful ideas but are difficult and intricate problems that are created when government, without regard to what is the law not only as laid down in the constitution but as fixed by judicial decision, decides to enact legislation of this kind. Certainly these are problems we will have to deal with if this bill is passed. Perhaps the minister has answers now, perhaps not, but I should like to hear him in any event.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, the only question the hon. member has posed that has not been dealt with already is with regard to action that the marketing commission may take. The prescribed price on an export contract will be the prescribed price set out in the statute. Therefore whatever the marketing commission may have chosen to pay within the province, on any export transaction it will be bound by that price.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Peace River seems to be somewhat upset that I have not taken part in the debate on his amendment. It is certainly not from any natural modesty or any reluctance to pontificate, which a politician can generally do at the drop of a hat. I learned a long time ago that if you have two small men in the ring with one big fellow, it is a waste of time for both small men to punch away at each other; they should punch the big man. So whenever I think I can be of assistance to the hon. member for Peace River I try, and offer what assistance I can.

I must confess that any intervention by me with regard to this particular amendment is certainly not helpful. We have been over the ground a number of times and I have expressed my point of view. However, I do take exception to the fact that the hon. member is suggesting that the reason we are not supporting the idea of the provincial right to set prices, and the reason we are not vehement about the fact that the federal government is seeking to set the price of petroleum products that enter inter-provincial and international trade, is that we are anxious to see big government, big controls and centralization. As a matter of fact that comes strangely from a political party which campaigned up and down, and over the length and breadth of Canada last year advocating wage and price controls. Except for 10 per cent of the labour force which comes under federal labour law, 90 per cent of the wages and a very large part of industry in this country comes under provincial jurisdiction.

At no time did I hear my Conservative friends telling the people of Canada how they proposed to fix either wages or prices. Constitutionally the only way they could have done so would have been to ask each province to pass enabling legislation delegating to some federal agency or tribunal the power to set prices and wages.

This party has not been inconsistent. One of the first things we did when the last parliament was elected in 1972 was to introduce a motion calling for a two-price system for petroleum products. If my memory is correct, on January 25, 1973, I, on behalf of this party, moved a motion on an opposition day calling for a two-price system in Canada, and in October, 1973, I moved a further motion on an opposition day calling for the kind of system we felt would protect Canadians against the exorbitant prices that were being charged by OPEC countries on the international market, and to cushion the Canadian people against these unprecedented and unjustified increases in the price of oil.

When the government moved belatedly, I think it was on December 13, 1973, we supported it. Our position has not altered in any way, shape or form. We believe that in Canada there has to be some control by the federal and provincial governments in concert, if possible, on a commodity like this which on world markets has quadrupled in price. If the federal and provincial governments cannot agree, someone must have the authority to prevent the Canadian price from going to the world price.

There is no reason why the Canadian people should pay $12 or $15 a barrel for their own oil which only two years ago was worth $2.75 a barrel. The Canadian people have no right to be ripped off because of some constitutional argument that the federal government has not the power to establish the price. Very clearly it does have the power. It had the power in the matter of wheat.

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

When the price of some classes of wheat and rapeseed went up to $8 a bushel on the Chicago market the government imposed a two-price system through the Wheat Board and kept the price down to the Canadian consumer, the livestock producers and feed purchasers in eastern Canada. This was done so they would not have to pay unjustified prices to western grain producers just because the world market had temporarily gone insane. When copper prices went out of line only a few short years ago the government stepped in and fixed a domestic price for copper as compared to the international price. There is nothing unusual about that.

I want to say in all kindness in respect of the amendment proposed that one of the reasons I did not get up and talk about it is that to me it is simply an expression of opinion that really does not relate to the clause at all and has no legal power whatsoever. I am not a lawyer, but I have rubbed shoulders enough with lawyers for a number of years so that I know even less about law now than before I began to rub shoulders with them, but I would invite anyone to explain to me how adding these words in the amendment to Clause 21(c) would have any legal effect whatsoever.

The hon. member for Calgary Centre said this was taken from the legislation having to do with the resource transfer legislation and the British North America Act. Of course it did, and it made sense in respect of that legislation. Under the British North America Act the original provinces that went into confederation in 1867, and those in 1871, had control of their resources. When Saskatchewan and Alberta became provinces in 1905 they were not given control of their resources. The hon. member was quite right when he said that was a very sore point with the people of the prairie provinces for a long time.

When the Bennett government brought in the legislation which gave the resources back to those provinces that did what this clause suggests. It restored to the position of equality with other provinces those provinces in respect of administration and control of one of their natural resources. Of course that was done.

As an aside, in addition to restoring that right to them the government was supposed to pay those provinces for having control of those resources all that prior time. I do not know how Alberta fared on that, but we never did get paid in Saskatchewan. The government under Mackenzie King agreed to cancel some old relief debts that it was never going to collect anyway to offset the $55 million the government owed Saskatchewan for the resources that had been used up from 1905 to 1931.

The words used by the hon. member for Don Valley have some relevance in the meaning of the resource transfer legislation, but I suggest they have no meaning added here, and that is why I did not intervene in the debate. I really think they would add nothing, except perhaps an editorial comment which is hardly of value in a piece of legislation like this.

May I say one further thing before I sit down. I think all of us recognize that, if it were at all possible, the best way to agree upon the price which should be charged the Canadian consumers for petroleum products is to reach an agreement between the producing provinces and the Government of Canada which has the responsibility for the national economy. We all hope that will still be done.

I must say also to the minister, and I do not say it to him as an individual but as a member of the government, that the possibility of reaching such an agreement was sadly reduced last year when the federal government, after getting an agreement with the provinces which cost those provinces $5 a barrel, in that they got that amount less than they would have received from the international price, turned around and said all resource companies had to pay income tax on royalties paid to the provincial governments. For the first time to my knowledge that expenditure by the resource industry has been treated as income and not deductible for income tax purposes. That is a good part of the reason why it is so difficult now to reach any agreement between the federal and provincial governments.

Mr. Andre: You can't trust them.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): My friend says that we cannot trust them. I suggest for very good reason; once bitten, twice shy.

Mr. Gillies: You are speaking better now, Tommy.

● (2050)

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): My friends in the Conservative Party only like me when I am giving the Grits hell. My job is to point out when they are both wrong.

An hon. Member: You are good at it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He has a two-edged sword.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I think a good deal of the resentment and hostility present today in the relations between the federal government and the oil producing provinces could have been resolved, and could still be resolved if the federal government were prepared to drop its unjustified and unwarranted intervention into the management of the resources of the provinces through a tax measure which I think was a scandalous intervention by the Minister of Finance in his budgets both of May 6 and November 18 last. At the beginning of the discussion I made a suggestion in respect of the bill. The minister, I am sure, would not want to accept it although he may as time goes on give some thought to it.

I think this legislation could pass much more quickly if the federal government were prepared to take out of the legislation the mandatory clauses, particularly clause 36 having to do with oil, and I believe clause 52 having to do with natural gas, the two clauses which give the federal government the power to set the price once it happens that an agreement cannot be reached with the provinces. But I do not stop there. I do not agree with my friends that this is satisfactory because, if the federal government does not have the final power to intervene, this would mean that the provinces would be able to set the price.

An hon. Member: Not necessarily.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The provinces could set the price in their interest rather than in the national interest. If the provinces are not prepared to enter into a joint agreement with the federal government then I am prepared to support the idea of the federal government having power to set the price. If the minister and his colleagues cannot reach a compromise with the provincial governments they can always introduce in the first, second or third week in June, an amendment to this legislation to include the mandatory provisions.

So far as this party is concerned we would support those mandatory provisions because otherwise we cannot have two-price systems in our country. In the final analysis the government must have the authority to fix the price after the temporary voluntary agreement ends on June 30.

Mr. Gillies: Why not a federal-provincial commission?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I would not worry about a federal-provincial commission because the federal government, operating under the constitution, is given the power to set the price within provinces and across provincial boundaries and it ought to exercise that authority. My criticism is not of the federal government exercising the power that the constitution gives it but that it has taken too long to use that power, and now that it is using it I propose to support it in doing so.

Mr. Gillies: Do you want in or out?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I want if possible to get a voluntary agreement and, if not, I want the federal government to have the power to impose an agreement because otherwise we would not have price control in this country. My friends who supported price control ought to be jumping with joy because finally the federal government has proceeded to fix the price of one commodity. If in the next few weeks before the federal minister brings down his budget the federal government and the provinces could reach some compromise with regard to the taxation of the resource industries so that all or part of the royalties paid to a provincial government will be deductible for income tax purposes, and if they could reach some agreement concerning the price, this mandatory power may not be needed.

I believe we would get this legislation through much more quickly if this mandatory power were not there, but if there is no agreement we think this mandatory power must be given the government, and we will support the government if it brings that measure before the House.

Mr. Bawden: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member to my left has had something to say about the elements that might be a factor in the resolution of our current energy problems in Canada. Certainly the national press is now stirred up about this, and the Financial Post has a special section on energy this week which leads off by saying:

> One of the least attractive characteristics of the federal government is its current preoccupation with talking a problem half-to-death, but doing next to nothing about resolving it. And nowhere is this clearer than in the energy sector.
> Despite the recent two-day federal-provincial summit meeting here, Canada seems no closer to any kind of comprehensive energy policy than it was a year ago after the last meeting of first ministers.

I am afraid that if we look at the history of energy matters and negotiations in this country during the past two years it becomes evident unfortunately that all these negotiations and relations between the federal government and the provincial governments, and between the federal government and the industry itself have been in an atmosphere of distrust, principally distrust of the federal government.

There are some obvious reasons for this which have been raised on numerous occasions in the past. I shall not go into them at the present time. I wish to deal with the three elements which might have brought the energy problem to a conclusion and which might have resolved this important matter for Canadians when the premiers met here in Ottawa with the Prime Minister. I cannot understand why at that time the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Prime Minister and the government did not come forward with a proposal to the provinces which might have resolved this matter without the need to return at a future time, probably in June, to try all over again. I say that had a resolution been possible we would not be here at the present time debating Bill C-32. We might look at what the various parties to these agreements want.

In the first place the provinces, including the province of Saskatchewan, are very interested in having provincial royalties, or the amounts paid by way of provincial royalties deductible for federal income tax purposes. This is one of the things the federal negotiators should have recognized as a carrot to hold out to the provinces.

In the second place one of the inhibiting factors in the development of future reserves in this country—and surely to goodness the Prime Minister and the Minister of Energy, Mines, and Resources have had enough to say about their concern for future resources of oil and gas—is the non-deductibility of the provincial royalties for income tax purposes, which is an important factor in the present disincentive program provided for explorers in this country. This is prohibitive when combined with the disincentives added by provincial royalties in the provinces of Saskatchewan and British Columbia.

The third element in the total mixture is price. If the federal government had really wanted to resolve the question of energy once and for all it should have made a proposal at the first ministers' meeting—I for one was very surprised it did not—which put forward a price for crude oil that was acceptable to the federal government but which was conditional on a reduction at least to a certain level of provincial royalties, and in turn the federal government could have provided as a further incentive, as the key incentive, to the provinces the deductibility of the provincial royalties for federal income tax purposes. Had this been the case, the deductibility of royalties would have provided the incentive for industry to get on with the job.

In the provinces of British Columbia and Saskatchewan where the present most severe factor is the high rate of provincial royalty, a reduction to an acceptable level which might have been proposed in the package by the federal government would have removed the other important element in the disincentives and in the current rules that are inhibiting exploration in those provinces. An increase in the price of crude could have compensated the provinces for their losses.

The Minister of Finance, in response to a question that I put to him on the cost of deductibility up to 25 per cent of provincial royalties, pointed out to me that the cost to the federal treasury was in the order of $300 million a year. This is a very modest and small amount to kick back into the mix to provide the provinces and the oil and gas industries with the incentives which they need. I might say that it is a paltry amount as compared with the $500 million of capital in the total proposed expenditures of some $1.5 billion in Petro-Can, proposed by the minister to achieve the goal of self-sufficiency in energy in this country in the future.

The other fact as it relates to Bill C-32 is that if the government had resolved the question of price at the first ministers' conference along with the other elements in an energy policy, we would have had the principal ingredients for the budget proposed by the Minister of Finance. But since the Minister of Finance says that he will bring down a budget before the end of May—that is, if he returns in time—one wonders how he will resolve the price of crude oil by that time. The Premier of Alberta has made it clear that there would be no agreement, so far as he is concerned, on the price of crude oil until he knows what is in the budget, simply because last year the government pulled the rug out from under the premiers in its May budget after an agreement had been reached on price at the first ministers' conference in March.

Now there is a high degree of urgency on the part of the government to pass Bill C-32 so that it can choose in advance all the key elements in the price of oil and gas for purposes of preparing its budget. The government will have prepared and delivered the budget with all the key elements chosen internally as a result of the fact that Bill C-32 will give the federal government the power to impose the very prices which it selected for the purpose of preparing its budget.

What is the reason for bringing the premiers back in June to discuss and finalize the whole matter of oil and gas prices? I believe that the meeting of the first ministers here earlier this month and the call to these first ministers to come to the capital were undertaken with the full intention on the part of the government that this meeting should be a failure. Thus we are launched into the passing of Bill C-32, which would not have been necessary if genuine and honest efforts had been made by the government to present to the premiers positive suggestions and recommendations that included the key elements of provincial royalties, and deductibility of provincial royalties for tax purposes, and combined with the price of oil and gas.

Mr. Baldwin: Before we leave this exciting issue, Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. Although he was a little unkind, I think he acted as a catalyst. Although he said he is not a lawyer, he has rubbed shoulders with quite a few, and a lot has worn off on him. I think he has consciously gone to the root of the issue. He has said, I believe, that in this particular situation and with this particular commodity the federal government should, all else failing, have the right to fix the price. He said that because there is a very unique and difficult situation. I think he has almost come to our point.

If the hon. member remembers, when we were dealing with the energy allocation supply bill, under clause 11 the government, with a little more understanding of the law than it has now, said that only when there is an emergency, or what is described as a national emergency—and it gave an indication of what kind of national emergency it had in mind—could it immediately invoke the provisions of the act and the right to allocate.

I think that is the situation here. The government will probably admit that it does not have the right to move in and fix prices unless the situation is so serious as to warrant it, or else following federal provincial arrangements, discussions, delegation of powers, and so on. But the situation with regard to crude oil derivatives is so difficult and unique at this stage in the economic history of this country and of the world that it would only require a little push to send it over into the area of being an emergency.

An emergency is contemplated in only two situations where that section of the BNA Act has been invoked successfully, that is, in the two world wars. As I tried to point out earlier, we have changed, because of the economic practice which prevails, and it will not take as much as a war, it would take something much less than a war or apprehension of a war or a revolution, although we did have an apprehended riot in Quebec, if I remember correctly. It takes much less than that to trigger off the peace, order and good government clause in terms of which the government would have the right to invoke this provision. In actual fact the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands and I are really pretty well on the same wavelength. I just want to get him up a little bit further with me on this issue.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Amendment (Mr. Gillies) negatived: Yeas, 10; nays, 30.

● (2110)

The Chairman: Shall clause 21, as amended, carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Clause 21, as amended, agreed to on division.

On clause 22—Provincial agreement on prices.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Chairman, I would like to move the following amendment to clause 22:

That clause 22 on page 11 be amended by adding thereto, next after line 17, the following:

"(3) Inasmuch as it is desirable that a producer-province should be placed in a position of equality with the other provinces of Confederation with respect to the administration and control of its natural resources, an agreement entered into pursuant to subsection (1) or any regulation made under section 36 shall be subject to the proviso that the amount, if any, remaining when the amount of import compensation paid pursuant to Part IV is deducted from the amount collected by charges imposed under Part I shall be paid to the producer-provinces in the respective proportions that the number of barrels of oil from any producer-province on which the charge is collected is of the number of barrels of oil from all the producer-provinces on which the charge is collected."

I believe that the minister is familiar with this amendment. Its purpose is to be certain that after payments are made to equalize the price across the country, if any funds are left over from a tax which is charged, these funds should be returned to the producer provinces in the ratio of the contribution of each producer province to the amount of oil upon which the original export tax was originally collected. The reasoning behind this amendment is self-evident and supports the proposition that oil is a resource of the province, and that any tax revenue earned from the sale thereof, which is not needed to fulfil the original purpose of the bill to equalize prices across the country, should not accrue to the general revenue of the federal government.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I wish to raise for the consideration of the Chair the question of whether the amendment proposes the appropriation of part of the public revenue for a purpose which has not first been recommended to the House by the Governor in Council contrary to the provisions of Section 54 of the British North America Act, which reads as follows:

It shall not be lawful for the House of Commons to adopt or pass any Vote, Resolution Address, or Bill for the Appropriation of any Part of the Public Revenue, or of any Tax or Impost, to any Purpose that has not been first recommended to that House by Message of the Governor General in the Session in which such Vote, Resolution, Address, or Bill is proposed.

There not having been a recommendation for this appropriation in the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Don Valley, I raise the question as to whether the amendment should be received by the House at this time.

The Chairman: I am grateful to the minister for raising the question. The Chair did not put the amendment when the hon. member for Don Valley took his seat because I wanted to have time to consider the amendment.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Chairman, I venture into an area in which I am admittedly lacking in expertise. However, since the minister has quoted from the British North America Act in support of his point of order that the funds which might be derived from the sale of oil surplus to that which might be used by the federal government should go back to the provinces contrary to the provisions in respect of royal recommendation, I will contribute in debate reference to another section of the British North America Act (1930) which states that:

—the interest of the Crown in all Crown lands, mines, minerals (precious and base) and royalties derived therefrom within the Province, and all sums due or payable for such lands, mines, minerals or royalties, shall, from and after the coming into force of this agreement and subject as therein otherwise provided belong to the province—

It seems to me that the British North America Act of 1930 states clearly that all sums due or payable for such lands, mines or minerals, including crude oil and natural gas, belong to the province. In a sense this amendment is merely saying they shall receive what belongs to them, in keeping with the BNA Act of 1930. I submit that therefore the amendment is in order.

The Chairman: The concern I have is not only related to the recommendation, but also to the notice of a ways and means motion. Of course the amendment does not seem to impose a charge as such but seems to give a direction as to the distribution of moneys or surplus moneys which will be collected by the charge imposed by the government under this bill, and which is a condition which is not really identified or related to the recommendation to the notice of ways and means. I refer hon. members to citation 246 of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition, at page 207, paragraph (3) which says:

> The guiding principle in determining the effect of an amendment up on the financial initiative of the Crown is that the communication, to which the royal demand of recommendation is attached, must be treated as laying down once for all (unless withdrawn and replaced) not only the amount of a charge, but also its objects, purposes, conditions and qualifications.

I think the first part of that paragraph provides grounds to disallow the amendment as not procedurally acceptable, unless hon. members have other points I might have missed. This is a complicated piece of legislation. The implications of such legislation are not always easy to identify. I take into account the amendment as it is now worded, its objective, and the points raised by the Minister which are quite valid. Perhaps other hon. members have arguments which would lead me to another decision. I see the hon. member for Peace River is prepared to say a few words.

Mr. Baldwin: I do have a brief comment to make, Mr. Chairman. I think it would be quite correct if the wording of the recommendation had been more specific, but this is one of those more sensible recommendations, both from the point of view of the government and of the opposition, which simply says that His Excellency the Administrator has recommended to the House of Commons the present measure within the terms set out following in the bill itself. It goes on to provide for:

> —the administration of interprovincial, export and import trade in petroleum and petroleum products; to provide in the manner prescribed out of moneys appropriated by parliament for the payment of import compensation to eligible importers—and to provide in the manner prescribed out of moneys appropriated by parliament for petroleum supplies—

Clearly, a question of distribution is involved. If we were prohibited from making our amendment, it would follow, logically, that we should be prohibited from making almost any other type of amendment, because it could be argued that an amendment in effect goes beyond what is contained in the legislation and is therefore in conflict with the recommendation. Surely amendments are moved: to alter legislation being considered by a committee or the House.

The hon. member has proposed a certain method of distribution. We dislike the government's proposed method and want to see distribution carried on another way. If he were to attempt to add to the extent to which there could be a contribution out of revenues, or to add to the charges imposed on the taxpayers of this country, he would be completely out of court. But he is not doing that. He is saying, "We are taking this amount, which the bill contemplates will be raised, and this is the way we want it to be distributed." Clearly, that falls within the wording of the recommendation. We say, "We do not like your method of distribution." We want the committee to be given the opportunity to change that method.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, the recommendation, far from being general, is specific about the appropriation of funds. The wording of the recommendation in part is as follows:

> —to provide in the manner prescribed out of moneys appropriated by parliament for the payment of import compensation to eligible importers for defined petroleum . . . and to provide in the manner prescribed out of moneys appropriated by parliament for petroleum supplies transfer compensation in respect of petroleum to defined suppliers.

Surely the principle has long been established that, when a recommendation is as specific as this one and a decision has been taken by the Governor General in Council with respect to public funds, the impost to be raised, as under this statute, shall be applied in limited and specific ways.

We are up against the principle set out, for example, in citation 249(1) in Beauchesne's Fourth Edition which says, in part:

> No principle is better understood than the constitutional obligation that rests upon the executive government, of alone initiating measures imposing charges upon the public exchequer.

This bill provides arrangements for filling the public exchequer with money paid under the export tax, and the recommendation is in most specific terms as to how this shall be applied. Of course, the hon. member's amendment goes well beyond that.

The Chairman: I thank hon. members for their comments. Perhaps I should not commit myself in advance, but I have received notice of two similar or comparable amendments to be moved to clauses 23 and 36 by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. The hon. member's proposed amendments would provide for the distribution of moneys in a certain way. Part of the money would be spent on research and development.

If I were to let the committee decide on the amendment because I might feel it is a borderline case, as the hon. member contends, I should be opening the door to many other possibilities involving the use of moneys. This shows, I think, that my first impression was right and the amendment, to my mind, seems to go beyond the terms of the recommendation. I do not intend to read it, as the minister and the hon. member referred to it.

The hon. member for Peace River contends that the recommendation is not a limiting one and that the amendment has to do with the distribution of moneys. One must also consider that the hon. member for Don Valley is proposing something new which is not meant to be included in the recommendation preceding this bill.

I regret to say that the remarks of the hon. member for Peace River have not succeeded in changing my previous position. I feel strongly that accepting the hon. member's amendment would be contrary to principles set out in reference books such as Beauchesne's and May. As I said, it would open the door to more extreme amendments dealing with distribution which would go very much beyond the recommendation and the objective of this legislation. I cannot, therefore, accept the amendment at this time.

Shall clause 22 carry?

Mr. Baldwin: On division.

Clause 22 agreed to on division.

On clause 23—Prescribing maximum.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, clause 23 seeks to give the federal government power to set the price of crude oil entering into interprovincial and international trade, once the federal government and the producing province have reached an agreement. Of course my party agrees that such a price should be set, particularly in today's chaotic situation respecting petroleum prices around the world. What concerns us, however, is what the price will be. We may agree with the government when it says that the price must be set, but I am not sure we shall agree with the government as to the price which it will eventually set. We may not even agree on the price which the federal government and the provinces may agree to set.

I find the federal government's position with respect to the price of oil difficult to understand. At the first ministers' conference the Prime Minister opened his speech by saying that the price of oil would be going up. Actually he said that the price for the year beginning in July will have to be raised higher than it is now, and how much higher is something we should discuss. That statement seemed to be specific and clear.

When we began discussing Bill C-32 in committee of the whole, the minister surprised me and many committee members by saying that he was not committed to raising the price at the end of June. I have some difficulty reconciling those two statements. The Prime Minister said that beginning in July we must have higher prices. The minister said that he is not committed to raising prices at the end of June.

When I asked if that means that if the producing provinces did not raise prices the price may stay at $6.50 a barrel, I understood him to suggest that that might be the case. It is difficult to know the government's intentions. I suspect it intends to raise the price. I suspect that the Premiers of Alberta and Ontario and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources are doing a black spider mating dance, each wondering who is going to go first, each hoping the other will go first. In spite of the fact the head of the government said the price is going up at the beginning of July, the minister does not want to commit himself to raising the price in the hope that the provinces will raise the price and, if this legislation passes, the federal government will intervene and set a lower price.

This whole thing is a rather shabby sort of exhibition, regardless of what they are going to set the price at. When the minister was speaking the other day, he said that Premier Blakeney of Saskatchewan talked about an increased price of $2.50 a barrel. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said he had something else in mind. I take it he wants $2 a barrel. The producing provinces probably want to set a somewhat higher price.

The position of our party has been made very clear. We do not think any increase in price is justified, either on the basis of increased operating costs or on the basis of earnings of the multinational oil companies. The breakdown of the cost per barrel at $6.50 a barrel made by the Petroleum Association of Canada last September shows that the actual production costs are very minimal. Certainly on the basis of what it costs to produce a barrel of oil, there is no justification for an increase. There can certainly be no justification on the ground that the oil companies are hard up. Their profits have doubled over the past two years. The only possible justification for raising the price of oil is to get sufficient money to stimulate exploration and development.

If the federal government allows the price to rise, as the major beneficiary it will collect about 80 cents a barrel on a $2 per barrel increase in taxes. The provinces will collect some royalty. In turn their consumers will have to pay higher prices for oil products. The main beneficiaries will be the oil companies.

The federal government will be saying to the consumers of Canada that they must pay eight cents or more per gallon for their gasoline, more for their farm heating fuels, and more for their diesel fuel, not because it costs more to produce, but because it is hoped that some of this money will be used by the oil industry to find more oil.

An hon. Member: It goes into royalties for Saskatchewan.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): If the hon. member will look at the breakdown of the Petroleum Association of Canada of last September he will see that before the new tax system that came in, out of every $6.50 a barrel they paid operating costs, taxes to the federal government, royalties to the provincial government, 40 cents a barrel for interest on money owed, and there was $1.55 a barrel for future development. Under the old tax system, they levied $1.55 a barrel on the $6.50 price. It will now be cut to $1.02 a barrel under the new tax system, unless the government changes its mind.

In spite of the exorbitant profits they have made in the past two years, oil drilling has been going down. In the past 12 months 93 drilling rigs left Canada. There is no guarantee that giving the oil industry more money will necessarily result in more exploration.

Mr. Gillies: Why did they leave?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I will tell the hon. member for Don Valley why they left. Nobody knows this better than he because he has had contacts with the business community for a good many years and is a very learned man in the field of business administration. I wish to quote from an article in the 1973 edition of the Globe and Mail. In an appearance before the National Energy Board, Mr. John Hardie of Gulf Oil Canada Limited is quoted as having said the following:

> It must be remembered that the oil business is not confined to Canada. To keep the people interested in exploring for and producing oil in Canada, the investment climate and the prospect of returns on investments in Canada will have to be competitive with oil investment opportunities elsewhere in the world, he said.

Mr. Gillies: True.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The hon. member says good.

Mr. Gillies: I said true.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Of course, in terms of the market economy, that is good. No matter what cash flow we have, no matter if we raise the price to give them more money, they will go where the investment opportunities are best. They will take the money they made in Canada through the multinational corporations and use it to drill in the Middle East, the North Sea, Africa or South America. There is no doubt they will do that. In their market economy that is naturally what they will do.

We have been saying that if the Canadian people are going to be asked to pay more for their oil products and the purpose of the increased price is to stimulate production and development, then the money which the Canadian consumer contributes to that end ought to go into a Canada resources security fund, administered by the federal and provincial governments on a 50/50 basis. The money should be used either in joint ventures with private industry or by the provincial governments on their own. It could also be used in joint ventures between the federal and provincial governments.

We have no right to allow the oil industry to put a further levy on the Canadian consumer in order to explore for oil in other places in the world. They have enough of a levy on now. We have a right to hold on to any increase in price. The producing governments and the federal governments should have the right, power and responsibility to see that any increase in price is used for exploration and development in this country. There is only one way we can do that, and that is to have that extra price, assuming it is $2 or whatever it may be, collected in the form of a charge by the Government of Canada, 50 per cent of it to into a Canadian resources security fund, 50 per cent of the fund to be controlled by the producing provinces on a pro rated basis, and 50 per cent of the fund to be controlled by the federal government. Therefore, I move:

That Bill C-32 be amended by renumbering section 23 as subsection 23 (1) and adding thereafter the following subsections:

(2) Where the Governor in Council has established maximum prices under subsection (1), there shall be imposed, levied and collected on each barrel of crude oil to which this Part applies a charge in the amount of that part of the prescribed price which exceeds the maximum selling price for a similar quality and kind of crude oil as of the 16th day of April, 1975.

(3) The Governor in Council shall collect such charge in accordance with regulations which may from time to time be promulgated.

(4) Where a producer-province has established a Crown agency to undertake the exploration and development of hydrocarbons in that province, the Governor in Council shall remit to that agency one half of any monies derived from the charges levied on crude oil produced in that province.

(5) Any monies not remitted to the producer-provinces under subsection (4) shall be used by the federal government, through the national petroleum corporation or otherwise, for the exploration and development of hydrocarbons in Canada.

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, as you may perhaps have anticipated this is a corollary to the point of order I raised on the previous clause, namely, that by his amendment the hon. member is seeking to impose a further tax in this country without the advance sanction of a ways and means resolution or recommendation of the Crown. The tax to be imposed by the hon. gentleman is not confined, as the ways and means resolution is, to petroleum to be exported from Canada, either from December 1, 1974, on, or in the previous period April 1 to December 1, 1974. It is intended to apply to all oil, whether moving in international trade, as the ways and means resolution describes, or oil moving in interprovincial trade. The ways and means resolution does not go that far but applies itself to export only.

On that basis I submit that the hon. member's amendment comes within the terms of a number of inhibitions which have been recognized in our parliamentary practice. If I can refer to citation 263(2) in Beauchesne's Fourth Edition:

The principle that the sanction of the Crown must be given to every grant of money drawn from the public revenue, applies equally to the taxation levied to provide that revenue. No motion can therefore be made to impose a tax, save by a Minister of the Crown, unless such tax be in substitution, by way of equivalent, for taxation at that moment submitted to the consideration of Parliament; nor can the amount of tax proposed on behalf of the Crown be augmented, nor any alteration made in the area of imposition.

Equally, citation 266(1) provides as follows:

A ways and means resolution is a necessary preliminary to the imposition of a new tax, the continuation of an expiring tax, an increase in the rate of an existing tax, or an extension of the incidence of a tax so as to include persons not already payers.

I submit that the hon. gentleman's amendment creates an additional tax on a group of taxpayers, and that, not being within the terms of the ways and means resolution and not being authorized by a governor in council recommendation, it is not in order at this time.

The Chairman: Order. While the minister was commenting on the acceptability of the amendment I examined the implications of the amendment and I must say I have come to about the same conclusion as the minister. As the Chair already said on the previous amendment put forward by the hon. member for Don Valley, the amendment of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands is also unacceptable on two counts. One relates to the fact that it imposes a tax that has not been provided for in the ways and means motion; the second reason is that it goes beyond the recommendation in regard to the distribution of money in that the hon. member's amendment seems to recommend that the excess be oriented toward the exploration and development of hydrocarbons in Canada. Although this might be a very commendable and desirable proposition, it would have to be included in another piece of legislation or government measure supported by a recommendation of the Crown.

For these reasons, unless other hon. members have arguments they want to bring to the attention of the Chair in regard to some point I might have overlooked, I would have to refuse the amendment in its present form.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, I am not rising to argue with you or with any member of the committee regarding the amendment that I moved. I think the major mistake I made was to send the Chair, the minister, and the official opposition a copy of it well in advance, which gave them the chance to look up all the authorities.

Admittedly there are some difficulties about the amendment. However, I presented the amendment because I hoped that the minister, who has the power to ask for a wider royal recommendation to widen the terms of reference, would do so. I point out to the minister, and I think time will bear me out, that if there are substantial increases in the price of petroleum products which will have an inflationary effect in this country, particularly so far as farm products are concerned, and there is no justification for this other than the fact that we are going to increase the profits of the oil companies in the very shadowy hope that they will use the profits to look for oil, and it transpires that they do not look for oil and we have to come to their rescue, as we did with the Syncrude consortium, then there will be a very bad reaction in this country.

I think the minister will find that the Canadian people, who have always been fair and reasonable, will understand a government that says to them: "$6.50 is a good price for oil, the companies are doing very well on it, and we, the government, are getting a fair amount of taxation out of it; but if you want to have oil ten years from now, you will have to put some money into a fund to search for oil and to develop the oil resources of this country". I think people would understand that, providing the government can guarantee to them that it is for this the money will be used.

I think most people know that if the government does not take some steps along this line, this money will not be used, in the main, for increased exploration and development in Canada, and once again we will simply have ripped off the consumer. The government will get far better co-operation in the very difficult days that lie ahead in respect to the whole inflationary miasma in which we find ourselves if it gives the kind of leadership that is suggested in my proposed amendment.

Mr. Baldwin: Clause 23 refers to an agreement, and I notice that by subclause (2) of Clause 22 the agreement need not be expressed in any formal document executed on behalf of the parties if the expression of the agreement is contained in reciprocal orders in council. Is it the view of the minister that a condition precedent to the governor in council fixing maximum prices by regulation is that there would have to be two orders in council passed, one by the province and one by the federal government?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, I think the correct interpretation would be that there are really two routes by which an agreement could be signified. The first is by a formal document executed on behalf of the parties; the alternative, as the hon. member suggests, is an act in council at the provincial level and an act in council at the federal level.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, before clause 23 passes I think a few words should be said to make it abundantly clear that there was a great deal of error in the rationalization of my hon. friend from the NDP. First of all he said his party was not in favour of any increase whatever in the price of oil. He then went on to suggest that oil company profits are exorbitantly high now and we cannot stop some of those profits from going out of the country into world exploration. He then sort of admitted that Canada must be considered in the world oil context. He then quoted from a document which oil company officials had placed before the National Energy Board and suggested he understood what was being said in the statement he read from the Globe and Mail. He agreed with it, but he wondered how to go about making certain that this money would be reinvested in Canada.

To encourage more exploration in Canada we will have to increase the price of oil. The minister and the government owe it to the oil companies, Canadian or otherwise, to set out a formula in respect of how that price will be established under this bill, or under some other piece of legislation. These companies must know when that formula will be adopted for setting the price, if ever, in order that they can have confidence. The people involved in this industry in Canada, whether Canadians or otherwise, want a climate in which their investment can be secure. In other words, they want a climate in which they can estimate reasonably accurately what government action will be.

In recent years we have seen continuous intervention by one government or another, specifically by this government in disallowing royalities as a deductible item, by freezing prices, adjusting prices and changing the pricing system. This piece of legislation, particularly Clause 6, does not state what kind of a formula the government intends to use to bring about a climate of relative security which will encourage exploration in Canada.

There is a more secure climate in Great Britain under a socialist government for oil companies investing their money in exploration in the North Sea than there is in Canada. This is an odd situation. There is a better climate of security in the oil exploration field in countries like Indonesia than there is in Canada. This fact must weigh heavily on the shoulders of the minister, because he is the one person who has caused havoc in respect of the climate of security in the oil exploration field in Canada.

The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands stated that in the oil pricing allotment something like $1.50 is set aside as a depletion allowance because the cost of replacing oil today is extremely high, actually something in the neighbourhood of $4 to $6 per barrel. Surely even the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands realizes that we have more than likely found all the easy oil, and the hard to find oil is still to be found and brought to market.

The fact that the United States is having great difficulty in getting Prudhoe Bay oil to market in the United States when it desperately needs it is an example of some of the difficulties and costs that lie ahead, even after the exploration has been carried out and the oil is found. It is ridiculous to suggest that we will encourage Canadian exploration, and Canadians generally to invest money in this country, when we know of the difficulties involved in getting some of the Arctic oil that has been found to our own market. It is ridiculous to suggest that an increase in the price of oil is not necessary even in respect of conventional oil still to be found in the Arctic, or just in that area north of the 60th parallel for that matter.

The cost of extracting oil from the tar sands is very high. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands is an old politician from the province of Saskatchwan. While he does not represent that province here he is well versed in respect of oil exploration difficulties experienced by that province, and the difficulties facing the possible development of the tar sands in the province of Saskatchewan. There is that possibility, but not if he and his party steadfastly state that no price increase is necessary.

Oil extracting from tar sands is a labour-intensive project requiring extremely heavy machinery. The oil and sand mixed is a sticky, abrasive substance and the machinery wears out very quickly. I am sure the hon. member and his party must realize that with an inflationary economy the price of oil should fluctuate, particularly that price in respect of tar sands oil.

It is not good enough to say that we suspect that oil companies and those involved in the industry will take their money and run from Canada. The government must devise a system of inducement in order to encourage oil companies to invest their money here. This can be worked out very easily through an accelerated rate of depreciation. Such rates have been worked out with regard to manufacturing plants, and the same could be done for the oil industry. When profits are being taken from Canada to be used for exploration elsewhere the government should take action through taxation to discourage that. It is not good enough for the government to say it does not know how much of an increase in price is required, and therefore no increase should be allowed. We will eventually run out of oil and become a net importer. This is much like an ostrich hiding its head in the sand. May I call it ten o'clock?

The Acting Deputy Chairman: It being ten o'clock, it is my duty to rise, report progress, and request leave to consider the bill again at the next sitting of the House.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

[Mr. Horner.]

NATIONAL DEFENCE—PROPOSAL FOR ESCALATION OF PENSIONS OF RETIRED PERSONNEL BEFORE AGE 60—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, on Tuesday, April 15, 1975, as reported at page 4814 of Hansard, I put a question to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) in these terms:

● (2200)

When we were dealing in the latter part of 1974 with the estimates of the minister's department he said he would look into the matter of the unfairness created by the fact that retired armed services personnel have to wait until age 60 before their pensions are escalated. Is he now in a position to report on this matter?

The rest of the exchange, as recorded in Hansard on the page I indicated, is as follows:

HON. JAMES RICHARDSON (MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE): No, Mr. Speaker. I have no further report.

MR. KNOWLES (WINNIPEG NORTH CENTRE): Mr. Speaker, will the minister continue the study in the hope that he will have a report soon?

MR. RICHARDSON: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to do so.

My reference to last fall had to do with Thursday, October 24, 1974, when we were dealing with the estimates of the Department of National Defence. On page 744 of Hansard for that date there is a record of my reminding the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) about what some of us regard as an unfairness in respect of the pensions of both retired armed forces personnel and retired RCMP personnel.

The pension plans affecting these two groups are similar to the Public Service Superannuation Act, but there is one difference, namely, that armed forces and RCMP personnel can retire earlier than is the case for public servants generally. Having retired early, armed forces and RCMP personnel find that the escalation of pensions which takes place annually due to the rise in the cost of living is denied them if they are under 60 years of age. In other words, if they are under 60 they have to wait until that age before the escalation begins. There could be some cases in which this might not be a hardship, but judging by my mail there are many cases where it is a hardship that National Defence retired personnel and RCMP retired personnel have to remain on fixed pension rates until age 60, especially in these times when the cost of living is escalating so rapidly.

The point is made, particularly in the case of National Defence personnel, that there is an element of discrimination in this against those of the lower ranks. This arises by virtue of the fact that one can get the escalation at an age younger than 60 if he is 55 years of age or over and has 30 full years of service. However, it is only those in the senior ranks who can put in that many years of service in the full-time armed forces. Junior ranks in most cases cannot accumulate 30 years of service and so there is a discrimination against them in this matter.

This is a subject that some of us have raised a good many times. It was a victory some years ago when we got the escalation of pensions of retired public servants, retired RCMP and retired armed forces personnel and all others who come under the aegis of the federal government, but it seems to be a shortcoming that those who have served their country in the armed forces or in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police find that, although they retired regularly under the provisions of their contract, they have to stay on fixed pensions, even in times of rapid inflation, in some cases for a number of years.

When I raised this matter on October 24, 1974, I asked the Minister of National Defence if he would lock arms with his colleague, the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand), who is responsible for the RCMP, and for the two of them to have a conference with the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien). I recognized the fact that these plans all hang together and that there would have to be concerted action, and so I expressed the hope that the minister would consider this matter in concert with the Solicitor General and make the necessary representations to the President of the Treasury Board. My hope was that the two ministers on behalf of their respective employees would go to work for a better deal for both groups.

The minister's reply on that occasion was the same answer that I received on April 15, 1975. He said, "Yes, I will be glad to do that". I hope that by tonight there is a favourable report.

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, the amendments to the legislation governing escalation of annuities for retired members of the forces were approved by parliament after careful consideration of all the classes of retired persons involved, bearing in mind the cost to active members of the forces, the public service, and others, as well as the views of taxpayers, many of whom are covered under less generous pension plans. At that time there was substantial agreement that similar contributions and similar benefits should apply for retired members of the forces, the RCMP, the public service and former members of the House of Commons.

The determination of the age at which payment of annuity increases would begin for retired members of the forces and RCMP who had reached age 55 with 30 or more years of pensionable service was designed to remove the anomaly created by earlier amendments to the Public Service Superannuation Act, which permitted public servants to retire on unreduced annuities after reaching age 55 with 30 or more years of pensionable service. Because under the armed forces plan an individual can retire generally between age 44 and 55 and receive an unreduced annuity, it was considered equitable to begin payment of cost of living increases to the military, the RCMP and former members of the House of Commons at the same age as the public servant can receive an unreduced annuity.

Under the provisions of the Act, serving members of the Canadian forces, the RCMP, and the public service since 1970 are required to contribute equally with the government toward the cost of the supplementary cost of living benefits available to their annuities. Although the government assumed the full cost of increases for all those who benefit from annuities who retired prior to 1970, and the cost of the escalation for those retired since 1969 which is not covered by their contributions, it is evident that the contribution rate required to provide immediate escalation on retirement for members of the forces who retire between age 44 to 55 would be so much higher to support the program as to be prohibitive.

The legislation is subject to continuing review to determine whether further liberalization of the qualifying provisions can be made for all those concerned, bearing in mind the cost of further liberalization. I wish to assure the hon. member that it is the minister's desire to improve to the maximum possible the forces' superannuation plan, and some improvements that have been recommended are included in Bill C-52 now awaiting second reading.

While I am sympathetic to the complaints of those receiving annuities who would like immediate escalation, any change in benefits for their group must be assessed by priority in relation to the many other demands for improvements in social legislation, such as providing allowances for spouses of old age security recipients, lowering of the age at which old age security payments and Canada Pension Plan payments can be made, improving Canada Pension Plan benefits, providing a guaranteed income, assisting home ownership, and other social programs which would have a more universal application. For this reason the government is unable at this time to propose an earlier starting date for the escalation of annuities.

ALLEGED DIFFERENCE BETWEEN STATEMENTS BY MINISTERS ON INTEREST RATE ON LOAN TO CUBA

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my point of debate tonight arises from questions regarding the tortuous policies of CIDA and what appears to be careless and unrestricted waste of the Canadian taxpayers' money in many parts of the world, mostly in countries which the government likes to term the third world or the emerging countries of the world. My point tonight pertains to the government's $10 million loan to Communist Cuba as announced by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen).

I brought this matter up first of all on February 20 during the CIDA debate, when I rose on a point of order. I quote from page 3408 of Hansard of that date:

—I rise on a point of order. Having listened to the minister's comments with interest and heard him speak about the Cuba loan, may I ask what is the interest rate on this loan?

MR. MACEACHEN: Mr. Speaker, I have the press release here. It contains all the details. I will be happy to send it to the hon. member.

As stated in Hansard, the minister sent me his press release revealing that the rate of interest was 3 per cent. That is now the established truth. This government is lending Communist Cuba $10 million for 30 years at the ridiculously low interest rate of 3 per cent, with no repayment required for the first seven years.

Just previous to that I had asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) during the question period how he could justify charging the Canadian taxpayers 9¾ per cent on a recent Canadian bond issue while lending this money to Communist Cuba at 3 per cent. The Minister's answer is to be found on page 3395 of Hansard for February 20, in which he admitted that the loan was being made, but that 3 per cent was not the rate of interest.

So, as you can see, Madam Speaker, I received two clearly different answers from two ministers. Which one was the Canadian public and this House to believe? Someone was misleading the House.

On February 21, 1975, the next day, at page 3439 of Hansard, I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) what the correct answer was with regard to the rate of interest on this soft loan to Communist Cuba. Although I worked hard at it, you will note, Madam Speaker, that I received no answer from the Prime Minister. His reticence arouses suspicion and builds up more doubt in the minds of the Canadian public regarding the worthiness of this give-away program of CIDA to Communist Cuba. Why this policy of perfidy and deception? What is the affinity between Trudeau Liberal socialism and Communism?

Why is it so easy for Communist Cuba to obtain a $10 million loan from Canadian taxpayers? We have no business lending money in this way to any country, especially Cuba. As a nation in its own sphere in the Caribbean, it is probably as well off as any, and better off than most Caribbean nations. It is rolling in sugar wealth because the price of sugar is high. It is well financed by Communist Russia. Moreover, it is a totalitarian state, and when dealing with a totalitarian regime, the spirit of charity toward the people is soon cooled and extinguished by the greed and totalitarian power of their dictators.

I know there are other Canadian trade pacts with Cuba which have nothing to do with CIDA, and these trade arrangements and other temporary loans connected with them are calculated to pay off for Canada. I hope and trust that they will, but this soft loan and give-away program ought not to be allowed. I call upon the Prime Minister to put a stop to it. There are people in our own country who need help but are not getting it. Our native people are dissatisfied. A great percentage of them are destitute, distracted and poor. How the government can give Canadian tax money to Communist Cuba on such easy terms I cannot understand. I, and millions of Canadians tonight, want to know the answer.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, with reference to the alleged differences between statements by ministers on interest rates on a loan to Cuba, the statement by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) on February 20 that Cuba was not receiving CIDA loan funds bearing interest at 3 per cent was a simple statement of fact pertaining to the situation at that time.

On February 6, 1975, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) had approved a $10 million loan by CIDA to Cuba at 3 per cent interest. This was the first time such a loan had been approved for Cuba. As of February 20, however, no funds had been disbursed against this loan.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—INCREASES IN COMMUTER FARES—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PREVENT

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Madam Speaker, the first thing I want to do is to correct the Hansard version of my question last Friday to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), in both English and French. In the French translation the inclusion of les mots "le chemin de fer" avant les mots "Canadien Pacifique" is necessary in order to distinguish between my question, which dealt with commuter fares, and the problem in the minister's mind having to do with increased air fares. My original question should have read:

> Is the minister aware of the outcry that has followed the announcement by Canadian Pacific Railway yesterday of major increases in commuter fares from Montreal and is he prepared to intercede immediately to stop the May I implementation date for this exorbitant public transportation fare structure?

I would underline the words "major increases in commuter fares" which, by the admission of CP Rail, are of the order of 26 per cent.

Let me make it clear at the start that I am not contesting the statement by Canadian Pacific that the costs of providing the Montreal commuter services totalled $5.6 million in 1974, that the revenues were $3 million, and that the loss was $2.6 million. Any discussion of the method of compilation of these figures is irrelevant to the main issue. The railway loses money. There are fewer trains than there were 25 years ago. The destination-to-destination time is longer; and many persons, myself included, maintain that trains are not as comfortable as they were. Few will dispute that there has been a deterioration in service.

The minister, in his response, spoke of a special appeal he was making to the airlines to exercise restraint, because some of the increases are really exaggerated and he does not believe the public can absorb those increases. We know that the airlines have been finding it hard this past year, but the problem of passenger rail traffic has been with us for many more years. The requests for increases in rail fares and the protests that follow come up with monotonous regularity.

I will now quote a paragraph from Town Train News of April, 1975. It says:

> In 1970, the CTC began a comprehensive investigation into the revenues and costs of rail commuter service in Canada, to determine what assistance, if any, need be provided respecting commuter service operations. To date, the results of this investigation have not been made known.

The article goes on to say:

> Montreal area commuter services have operated at a loss since shortly after World War Two.

CPR further goes on to maintain that, even with the suggested increases, the yield will be only enough to prevent an increase in 1975 of the amount of the loss sustained in 1974. According to Town Train News of April, 1975:

> Losses are calculated according to the method used by the Canadian Transport Commission and thus exclude fixed costs and only allow for replacement of equipment at its original cost, rather than what it would cost today.

As CPR clearly points out:

> Commuter services are not economically viable but they do provide certain social benefits beyond the value of revenues generated from the fares paid by the users themselves. There is therefore a legitimate need for financial support from public sources to ensure the viability of such services—

> Urban transportation planning must examine important social and ecological aspects as well as technical and operational factors. Traffic congestion, pollution and fuel economy must form a growing part of any planning process.

May I deal for a moment, Madam Speaker, with a cost comparison of rail versus automobile commuting between my home town of Hudson and Montreal. A return trip by rail under the new rates would cost $2.30. By car the cost of the return trip is between four and five times the amount of the rail fare, when insurance, depreciation and maintenance are apportioned on a mileage basis. Parking costs alone for an automobile can exceed the rail fare.

I could deal at length with the pollution problem of automobiles, but prefer to underline another aspect. The automobile uses subsidized, imported gasoline. The government contributes, through price equalization, about $10 per month to reduce the gasoline cost of each car commuting from Hudson to Montreal. There is no comparable subsidy with regard to rail fares.

In reply to a question I recently placed on the order paper, the Minister of Transport confirmed that there is no federal financial assistance to the Montreal CP rail commuter routes.

Mr. A. R. Campbell, CP Rail's general manager of passenger services said:

> Urban transport systems can no longer be provided in isolation from each other. Moving people in and out of cities has become a special kind of challenge that requires the integration of different modes of travel. The kind of integrated planning necessary is a big and essential job which will help shape the kind of over-all communities we have in the next decades and in the next century.

● (2220)

Mr. Robert Bandeen, president of the government owned Canadian National Railways, says that nationalization of privately owned CP Rail would be disastrous for transportation. It is my firm conviction that an efficiently, economically priced transportation system is an essential service.

I am aware of the examination of public transportation presently being undertaken by the department. Please do not let it take as long as the CTC comprehensive investigation which started in 1970 and still has to be concluded. In the meantime, as a gesture of faith and interest in public transportation, will the minister stop the May 1 implementation date for the major commuter fare increases on CP Rail Montreal lines?

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, further to the question asked in the House by the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) on April 18 with respect to the increase in commuter fares that has been announced by CP Rail in the Montreal area, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) has contacted CP Rail to make the necessary inquiries.

As you know, the size of the increase is 26 per cent across-the-board, that is, for all types of fares such as one-way, ten trips, flash-cards, and irrespective of the distance travelled. The commuter routes involved are the following three routes: Montreal to Rigaud, Montreal to Farnham, and Montreal to Ste. Therese.

The principle behind the increase has been well explained. The rapid increases in operating costs for the railways have made it mandatory that an increase in fare be imposed. However, the principle that CP Rail has used in determining the extent of the increase appears to be quite reasonable. What, in fact, has been done is to ensure that the size of the deficit incurred in 1975 will not be greater than the one incurred in 1974. In other words, the increase in revenues provided by the increase in fares should compensate for the increase in costs for 1975. There is no attempt on the part of CP Rail to reduce the existing deficit.

It should be noted that the deficit incurred by CP Rail in 1974 was $2.6 million. It is hoped by CP that the 1975 deficit will be of the same magnitude because of the fare increase. It should be pointed out that the railway is not compensated for this loss by any government in any way.

It would be good to point out that the federal government has always considered that commuter services are a municipal and provincial responsibility. In the near future it can be expected that the federal government will be providing some help to these levels of government to meet their responsibilities in this respect.

The hon. member said he was aware of the task force study taking place at the present time. It is for that reason it is going on. The federal government is quite aware of it. Many reasons would work in favour of such an action by the federal government; improving the quality of urban environment, energy conservation, and so on.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10:26 p.m.

VIET NAM—PROPOSED INQUIRY INTO CLOSING OF EMBASSY IN SAIGON AND PROVISION OF IMMIGRATION SERVICES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. I am prompted to do so out of a sense of shame felt by Canadians over the events unfolding in Viet Nam arising out of the closing of our embassy in Saigon which is being besieged by Vietnamese citizens who wish to come to Canada. I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp):

That the government order an immediate inquiry into the circumstances surrounding the decision to close the Canadian embassy in Saigon.

And further:

That the government take steps to provide immigration services to those Vietnamese citizens who wish to come to Canada and especially to Vietnamese citizens who were in the employ of the Canadian embassy in Saigon.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This motion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, cannot be presented without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: Shame.

HOUSING

SUGGESTION FUNDS BE MADE AVAILABLE TO CMHC AT REDUCED INTEREST RATE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion dealing with a very urgent issue.

Since the high interest rates discourage home builders as well as eventual buyers, thus paralyzing the economic sector of construction, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That this House very seriously consider that funds available to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation be provided by the Bank of Canada at an interest rate not exceeding administration costs in order to help more effectively to spur the construction industry.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such a consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore, the motion cannot be put.

AUDITOR GENERAL

SUGGESTED REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF REPORT OF INDEPENDENT REVIEW COMMITTEE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a motion under Standing Order 43, the urgent and pressing circumstances of which are the immediate need to provide the Auditor General with adequate authority to perform his duties and the vested interest of Parliament in this office. If leave is granted I would move:

That the Government House Leader be requested to forthwith consult through the usual channels on a reference to an appropriate parliamentary committee of the report of the 'Independent Review Committee on the Office of the Auditor General of Canada', and the draft bill prepared by the internal committee; the reference to include recommendations as to legislation to be brought in by the government and any consequential changes in Standing Orders.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion is proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43 and cannot be presented without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—CLOSING OF EMBASSY IN SAIGON—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO AID VIETNAMESE DESIRING TO COME TO CANADA

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Can he tell the House what steps the government is taking to correct the unfortunate situation in Saigon where many South Vietnamese, including many who worked faithfully for our government, seem to have been sadly deserted by the Canadian government. Vietnamese people have been told to return to our embassy for visa processing only to find that the embassy is closed. Will he in general declare today that in this grave situation Canadian compassion will be stronger than the administrative inhibitions of an apparently collapsing regime?

● (1110)

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have no information to confirm the report that there are Vietnamese who have permits to leave Saigon issued by the Vietnamese government and who would be able to get to the airport in order to come to Canada. I find this, as do members of the House of Commons, to be an extremely difficult and tragic situation.

Some hon. Members: Shabby.

Mr. Sharp: The Canadian government, like the governments of all countries except France and the United States, decided to withdraw our mission from Saigon because of the threat to the lives of the members of the missions. This was not a decision taken in isolation; it was taken in consultation with all our friends and allies.

An hon. Member: Except the United States and France.

Mr. Sharp: The United States, of course, is in a very special position in Viet Nam as an ally of that country once engaged in its military operations. They have armed forces in or near Viet Nam; we have nothing like that nor have any of our other allies. The French have made a decision to stay for quite different reasons. So, I do not believe that the Canadian government has been in any way callous, and my colleague, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, will be very happy to give the facts as to the numbers of Vietnamese who were able to get out, and our willingness to take more if they can obtain permission and have some way of getting to the airport.

Mr. Macquarrie: Since the minister is not informed, will he activate the forces of our government to find out what the situation is? Will he find out if it is now the advice of Canadian personnel to tell the suffering Vietnamese to try the Americans because they have been able to cut through the red tape; and further, will he find now some use for the aircraft sitting in Hong Kong which, having delivered the pianos, the people and the cars, might now go back and get some more people?

Mr. Sharp: The information that I have from the United States government is that they are also observing the laws of Viet Nam. Moreover, I want to make it quite clear that there was plenty of space in our aircraft to carry other personnel if they had been able to get through the checkpoint at the airport. I do not think that the members of the House quite realize that there were police, there were military forces, guarding the airport who would not permit Vietnamese to go through the airport to board the planes because they did not have the permission of the Vietnamese government.

[Mr. Speaker.]

VIET NAM—SUGGESTION CANADIAN ACTION TO AID VIETNAMESE DESIRING TO COME TO CANADA SHOULD BE SIMILAR TO THAT OF UNITED STATES

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): My question is for the Acting Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Why did Canada not take the more humanitarian approach of the United States? According to reports, Americans have slashed through the red tape of the local government and are pulling out hundreds of Vietnamese who have worked with them. Why did we not take that approach rather than complying to the "T" with the restrictions, so unnecessary at this time, that the local government in Saigon is putting on us?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): I know that the U.S. government would not appreciate the kind of comments being made by the hon. member. So far as I know, they are obeying the laws of Viet Nam.

VIET NAM—ALLEGED DIFFERENCE IN TREATMENT OF CHILEAN REFUGEES COMPARED TO VIETNAMESE

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Why has the Canadian government adopted such a double standard with regard to refugees? In the Chilean situation, much pressure was put to have Chilean refugees come to this country, but the same standard is not being applied in South Viet Nam.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Exactly the same standard has been applied. The difference is that the Chilean government gave permission for the Chileans to come to Canada. We have not been able to obtain the permission of the government of South Viet Nam.

FINANCE

INCREASE IN MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES BY BANKS—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO REDUCE

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Minister of Finance, but in his absence, perhaps I can direct it to the Acting Prime Minister, who is a former Minister of Finance. Several major banks seem to have increased their mortgage interest rates in the last few days in response to the increase in demand for mortgages arising out of the demand for resale housing. Since such a move on the part of the banks to increase their interest rates will, in effect, wipe out all the benefits the government is trying to inject into the housing market—things like reduction in sales tax, assistance on down payments, subsidized mortgage rates—can the Acting Prime Minister say whether the government is approaching the banks in order to get them to lower their interest rates so as not to nullify the existing programs?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of State for Science and Technology): If I may, Mr. Speaker, I will take that question as notice.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, I would much rather have an answer than have my question taken as notice. It is an important question. Perhaps I might direct this question, then, to the very interested Minister of State for Urban Affairs, if I can get his attention. I ask the minister whether he is speaking to his colleagues and bringing to their attention the fact that this increase in mortgage interest rates by the banks will destroy his whole program of Assisted Home Ownership.

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we are vey much concerned about mortgage interest rates. I have not spoken to my colleague the Minister of Finance. He is in the Middle East, and I was not invited. I will be consulting with him on his return, but I can assure the House that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is in direct contact with the banks. The president has been in direct contact. I am meeting with other representatives today. This is a situation we are monitoring closely. We do not want to see the effects of the interest subsidy nullified. We want to see a realistic mortgage market which works to help build homes.

Mr. Saltsman: Since people from CMHC are in touch with the banks, as the minister has indicated, could the minister inform this House whether they are simply going there to find out what is happening or whether they are going with instructions to tell the banks to lower interest rates?

Mr. Danson: The corporation does not have the power to instruct the banks. We are discussing the situation to encourage more low interest money into the market and into housing. The important thing now is to see that that money is flowing under the new legislation, which was just passed, at the lowest possible rate, and that is what we are trying to negotiate, but we cannot instruct.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

DANGER FROM FLOATING LOGS ON OTTAWA RIVER—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of the Environment.

Can the minister say whether her department is watching over the environmental situation of the Ottawa River, especially in this period of thaw, because the floating of logs which is about to begin may endanger the lives of both tourists and sportsmen who are using these waters. Is the department taking the necessary steps to ensure the safety of users?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, this would be normally a provincial responsibility, but as this is within the National Capital area, I have taken the initiative of having the past record of the Ottawa River opened a few months ago to examine this question of logs floating down the river. I shall probably be able to table a report on this in the near future.

FILES IN POSSESSION OF DR. SHULMAN—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION—SUGGESTED ACTION AGAINST DR. SHULMAN

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. I appreciate that because of the experimental rules under which we are working, perhaps the Solicitor General may not have had the chance to do what I thought he was going to do. He was to correct an answer that he gave me yesterday in regard to the most recent allegations of Dr. Shulman. This matter was discussed in the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs last night but because it was a very direct answer in the House yesterday and, I suggest, an incorrect answer which I thought the minister wanted to correct, I wonder if he would tell us now what he knows about the allegations in regard to documents in Dr. Shulman's hands that involved political and union leaders in the land, one of the documents having been sent to the minister.

● (1120)

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I wanted to correct an answer I gave in the House yesterday. Unfortunately, I did not hear the question properly, I suppose due to the noise that was going on around me.

An hon. Member: Use your earphone.

Mr. Allmand: I always use my earphone.

An hon. Member: Turn it on.

Mr. Allmand: I apologized to the hon. member in committee last night. I did correct my answer with respect to the question he put. Of course, we are not aware of what files Dr. Shulman has, but I can tell the House there is no policy to keep files on political or labour leaders. They may be investigated like everyone else if they are suspected of crime or subversion. Dr. Shulman did send me part of one file that had been stolen and leaked to him. That file was from criminal intelligence files and it was not with respect to a political or labour figure but with respect to a person known in organized crime. I do not know what other files he might have but there is no policy of keeping files on political or labour figures although they may be investigated if suspected of an offence.

Mr. Nowlan: I appreciate the minister's answer which tied in pretty well with what he said in committee. The Commissioner of the RCMP, who was also in attendance at the committee, admitted an internal inquiry indicated that a certain number of files of a criminal intelligence nature were missing from police offices. Because of the gravity of the allegation involving potentially union and/or political people in the land, does the minister not feel that he should take some initiative to put Dr. Shulman on the spot—if this is possible—and meet with him to see just what he has rather than sending an officer of the RCMP to his office to start talking about the Official Secrets Act?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I would love to put Dr. Shulman on the spot. I might say that these files which were stolen were stolen in the years 1969 and 1970 approximately and not from an RCMP office in Toronto but from an Ontario government office, the criminal intelligence office of the Ontario government.

We sent an RCMP officer to Dr. Shulman to find out what information he had but he would not give the investigator any further information. I have asked the RCMP to look into this again and, following the meeting last night, I asked them to conduct an investigation into this whole matter. The RCMP told me they recommended that the files on this operation should not have been in that particular building but should always have been in a police building with proper security. So far, the Ontario government has not acted on that recommendation.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I also have a question for the Solicitor General who was talking about files being stolen. In light of the fact that under the Criminal Code we can issue search warrants, has the minister considered having a search warrant issued to find out if Dr. Shulman has such stolen files in his possession and so protect the individuals in question and then lay charges under the Criminal Code against Dr. Shulman if necessary?

Mr. Allmand: Following the meeting last night, Mr. Speaker, I spoke with the Commissioner of the RCMP and told him that this was a very serious matter because nobody was really protected as long as criminal record files and tapes of wire taps and so on were being leaked. I asked him to take whatever action was necessary to stop this sort of thing.

Mr. Woolliams: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I agree, it is a serious matter. Any crime is serious. Here is a person, as admitted by the Solicitor General, who is in possession of stolen property. I suggest he be charged, and I would ask the minister this: Has he given any thought to obtaining an injunction from the High Court of Ontario to prevent the use and publication of private files relating to individuals who have never been charged with any crime. I ask this because that information should not be disseminated across this land by the publication of a book for money purposes.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. member. I think, when files like this can be distributed and made public by a man in such a light way, that this is a severe threat to the civil liberties of individuals. I am not the Attorney General. I have no responsibility for prosecution, but I will certainly take under consideration these suggestions made by the hon. member.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—PERSON RESPONSIBLE FOR CLOSING EMBASSY IN SAIGON

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Acting Prime Minister relating to Viet Nam. Can the minister answer a simple question: Who gave the order to evacuate the Canadian embassy?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the order was given, or the authority was given to the ambassador to consult with friendly governments in the area and to co-ordinate his movement with theirs. He took responsibility, finally, for the decision and I think he exercised it correctly. At that time it was quite clear that the only embassies which would remain in Viet Nam were the French and the British. I believe that in the interests of Canada and our Canadian mission, the correct decision was taken.

Mr. Reynolds: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. After the consultation, did the ambassador ask for final authority, or did he assume the final authority on his own?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult for me or for the hon. member, sitting here, to understand or appreciate the local situation. In the circumstances we gave authority to the ambassador to exercise his judgment, within the instructions. As I said, I believe he acted correctly. It is the decision we would have made in the circumstances.

VIET NAM—REASON FOR URGENCY IN CLOSING EMBASSY IN SAIGON—POSSIBILITY OF NAMING CANADIANS WHO REMAINED AS IMMIGRATION OFFICERS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister? As we already have some kind of relationship with Hanoi, what was the urgency, then, for disbanding the embassy in Saigon?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, I do not understand the purport of the question. In my view it is very likely that if Saigon is overrun and that government does collapse, authority will reside not with North Viet Nam; it will reside with the provisional revolutionary government that has aspired to be the government of South Viet Nam.

Mr. Friesen: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since several Canadians volunteered to stay behind in Saigon, why did not the Canadian government authorize them to become immigration officials, in order to aid those Vietnamese who were abandoned by the Canadian government?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for St. John's East.

VIET NAM—SUGGESTED ACTION TO AID VIETNAMESE DESIRING TO COME TO CANADA

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. As a number of Canadians volunteered to stay behind and as a Canadian Hercules aircraft is in Hong Kong, will the minister show the same humanitarianism he showed in similar situations, such as the Chilean one, send that aircraft back to Saigon with Canadian personnel to discharge our obligation to the Vietnamese in Saigon who worked for Canada and eliminate some of the shame we have covered ourselves with in this situation.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the situation is clear. There is a list of 14,000 sponsored or nominated relatives of Canadians of Vietnamese or Cambodian origin. We dispatched the information to our officials, to our immigration officers in Saigon. Over the last several weeks they have been making a sincere effort to get in touch with the people whose names are on this list. Some of them they found, and those people were issued Canadian visas. That meant that we had cleared their entry to Canada without any red tape, on the basis of that information which had gone over. The problem was that the South Vietnamese government would not grant authority for those people to leave South Viet Nam; and if the hon. member will explain to me how Canadian officials in Saigon could force the South Vietnamese government to issue those visas, and we put all the heat, all the pressure on that we could, and we were as persuasive as we could be in getting visas for those people—

An hon. Member: How come the Americans did it?

Mr. Andras: Don't talk about the Americans until you know the facts.

Mr. Andras: My understanding is that the best information available to us is this. On the last day when that aircraft was leaving Saigon, any effort to take Vietnamese people out, even with our full blessing in terms of entry to Canada with Canadian visas, would have been stopped by the Vietnamese authorities who had check-points set up at several points along the road to the aircraft and were in fact searching and taking people out of cars. They have the military force and police to do it, if those people do not have exist visas. Consequently, I would like the hon. member to explain how we could have done more.

I might say that in so far as immigration presence there is concerned, we did contact these people. We sent out 1,908 letters to the heads of families on that list, which to the best of our knowledge includes all the names sent over to us. They have in their hands that authority to come to Canada. However, we cannot force the issue in so far as the ability of their getting out of Saigon is concerned.

Mr. McGrath: In view of the fact we have nothing to fear from either the PRG or the Viet Cong, and in view of the fact this is a rapidly changing situation and the authority of the Saigon government is rapidly diminishing, does the minister now intend to despatch immigration officers to Saigon, Hong Kong or elsewhere in the area to discharge our obligations to the Vietnamese? I ask this in light of the changing situation in that place.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, if there were an arrangement by which those people could get out of Viet Nam, the people to whom I am referring, particularly the sponsored and nominated relatives and Vietnamese working for the embassy, we would not need an immigration officer, although I would be quite prepared and have been discussing on a contingency basis sending back an immigration officer. That is not the problem. The problem is how do you collect them, get them to the airport and get them out without Vietnamese authority because that government still exists. That government is preventing people from getting to the airport.

VIET NAM—ALLEGATION MIKE DUFFY OF CBC HELPED VIETNAMESE LEAVE COUNTRY

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration whether it is true that Mike Duffy of the CBC has been able to get certain persons out of Saigon since the embassy was closed? If so, will he be named an immigration officer or chargé d'affaires?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in the last week or so some Vietnamese to whom we have issued visas were able to get out on commercial flights. However, whether it is Mr. Duffy or anybody else, and I have no criticism of him, it is one thing to get people out on a commercial flight. It is quite a different thing for our embassy in Saigon to try to fight their way through check-points with military personnel of the South Vietnamese government and the police preventing them from taking people to aircraft, if they do not have exit visas.

VIET NAM—REASON FOR FAILURE TO WITHDRAW CBC PERSONNEL—POSSIBILITY OF VOLUNTEERS FROM EXTERNAL AFFAIRS RETURNING TO SAIGON

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, I will address my question to the Acting Prime Minister. In light of the fact the government believes the threat to the lives of Canadians is so acute in South Viet Nam that our embassy personnel had to be withdrawn before attending to a number of Vietnamese who are fearing for their lives and are anxious to immigrate to Canada, why have reporters of the CBC, who have fulfilled their job with courage and efficiency, also not been withdrawn to Canada?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is the responsibility of the broadcasting companies. I am sure the hon. member will agree they are there on a voluntary basis. Our embassy officials are there on instructions. We have a special responsibility toward our personnel not to expose them to unnecessary danger.

Mr. Beatty: As the CBC is a government owned network, does the government not feel it has a peculiar responsibility for the lives and well-being of its employees? In light of the minister's answer that it seems to be quite all right if people volunteer to stay behind in Viet Nam, does the minister intend to get in touch with employees of the External Affairs Department to ask whether volunteers will return to South Viet Nam to keep our embassy offices there open?

Mr. Sharp: On the first part of the question, Mr. Speaker, I do not think we have any greater responsibility for the employees of the CBC than we have for other Canadians. This is a decision that they make. If they want to go there in the interests of providing news for the Canadian people, I respect that and I rather admire it. In so far as the operation of the embassy is concerned, like other countries such as Britain, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Thailand and every other country with the exception of France and the United States, all the embassies have been withdrawn. I think it was a wise decision.

AIR CANADA

ESTEY INQUIRY—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF TERMS OF REFERENCE

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister indicate if he has discussed the terms of reference of the Air Canada inquiry with Judge Estey? If so, did he also discuss the proposals offered by members of the opposition regarding the terms of reference and will he be in a position today to table the agreed-upon terms of reference between himself and Judge Estey?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I hope to have that before the end of the question period.

FISHERIES

USE OF CANADIAN FORCES VESSELS TO INTERCEPT FOREIGN FISHING VESSELS IN CANADIAN TERRITORIAL WATERS

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State (Fisheries). Due to the problems caused by distant fishing fleets off the west coast of Canada, will Canadian Forces vessels with fisheries' officers be used to intercept foreign vessels which enter our 12-mile territorial sea, a practice which has been followed off the east coast of Canada with considerable success?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, in the case of our territorial waters, there is no problem. The protection act gives us clear authority. In the case of international waters, however, according to the reciprocal arrangements which we have—and we have these arrangements with Japan and the United States—fisheries' officers can board other vessels within the framework of international agreements. In fact, recently the destroyer Gatineau, with a fisheries' officer on board, came across a Japanese fishing vessel. It was asked to leave the area, which was Canadian waters, and it complied. There was no violation reported.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED CHANGE IN ROUTE OF TANKERS TRANSPORTING ALASKAN OIL TO CHERRY POINT—PROGRESS OF DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. In view of the fact that several days ago the Canadian government abandoned any further attempts to have the American government admit responsibility for the Cherry Point oil spill of several years ago, will the minister advise what steps are being taken between the government of Canada and the government of the United States with respect to negotiations aimed at persuading the Americans to change the destination point for Alaskan tankers, taking them out of the confined waters of the Strait of Juan de Fuca?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, we have not abandoned the case as the hon. member has stated. We still feel there is a responsibility there for that accident. With regard to the more general question, I discussed this with my counterpart in Washington three weeks ago. The hon. gentleman has never believed that we were looking at alternate options for the transportation of oil in that area. The hon. member has always chosen to interpret the negotiations we have undertaken with officials in the United States for developing vessel traffic schemes as an indicator that we did not have any feeling about these problems. However, the matter of an alternate port for these vessels is progressing. I am very satisfied with the fact that there is a law before the United States authority to provide a fund for building a pipleline in order that an alternate site can be chosen for the delivery of oil. All along, we were negotiating traffic schemes which were indispensable. We were working on other possibilities and I am happy to tell the hon. gentleman that I think we shall be successful.

POSSIBILITY OF AGREEMENT WITH UNITED STATES ON RESPONSIBILITY FOR OIL SPILLS AND PAYMENT OF COMPENSATION

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): I am very pleased, as all members will be, by the minister's answer. I hope we are successful. Can the minister advise the House whether, in conjunction with these discussions, any attempt is being made to establish a treaty or other arrangement between the Canadian government and the government of the United States whereby each government, depending on whose nationals cause a spill, would be responsible for payment to the other in respect of damages caused by that spill.

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of the Environment): These discussions already deal with contingency plans in case of accidents or spills. They relate to traffic schemes, the protection of the environment and compensation in case of accidents.

Mr. Fraser: Can the minister tell us specifically whether those discussions, aside from contingency plans to combat the spill itself, take into account the payment of damages after a spill has taken place?

Mrs. Sauvé: The answer is yes.

STUDY OF OKANAGAN WATER BASIN—DATE OF PUBLICATION OF REPORT

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. In view of the fact that the implementation task force set up in connection with the Okanagan water basin study completed its report last December, and in view of the concern felt by the people of the Okanagan that action be taken on this study, may I ask when the minister intends to release this report?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of the Environment): I am not sure whether the implementation report is finished yet. In general, I favour the release of these reports. However, it might be some time before discussions are completed between DREE, the provincial authority and ourselves as to what exactly will go into that report. I think I can say in a general way that this report will be released at an opportune time.

Mr. Whittaker: The report was completed last December. Is it because the federal government is not prepared to assist in funding the projects recommended by the study that the report is not being released?

Mrs. Sauvé: No, we are looking at a joint program for enhancing that region. The report of last December was a study. It was released.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED EXECUTION OF MIKHAIL LEVIEV BY SOVIET AUTHORITIES—SUGGESTED PROTEST BY CANADA

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs—the hon. gentleman may have had notice of this question, not from me but from someone else. Will the government remind the USSR, through its embassy, that the intended execution of Mikhail Leviev for economic crimes will harm that country's international reputation?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): I will take that suggestion under sympathetic consideration.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

SUGGESTION PROPOSED LAY-OFF OF EMPLOYEES SHOULD NOT AFFECT MAINTENANCE WORKERS—INTERVENTION IN PROPOSED RATE INCREASE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport? Last week, the President of CNR announced that because of a reduction in traffic, about 2,500 employees of that railway company will be laid off. In view of the fact that of this number more than 1,500, it is estimated, are workers involved in the operation of maintenance services, and in view of the fact that as a result of an increasing number of railway accidents, derailments and so on, the CTC has called on the railways to upgrade the work done on track maintenance, would the minister discuss with the President of CNR the desirability of not laying off any of the people engaged in maintenance?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): I will surely discuss this matter with pleasure with the President of the CNR.

Mr. Orlikow: Since a proportion of the decrease in traffic may be due to an increase in railway rates earlier this year, of between 25 and 30 per cent and to proposed further increases of 20 per cent, will the minister pursue with the railways and the CTC his expressed opposition to these rate increases?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): It might be one of the reasons. I know there are other reasons, but this is a matter I would like to discuss with Mr. Bandeen.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL FUNDS TO STIMULATE CONSTRUCTION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, for whom I have the highest esteem.

Because public demand for the construction and purchase of houses is very high, the funds available to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation have already been committed for the summer, at least with regard to the Quebec area, and because Canada has just granted a $10 million loan to Cuba for a term of 30 years and an interest rate of 3 per cent, can the minister tell the House whether additional funds will be made available to the CMHC, and this, on the same terms as Cuba, to meet the demand, to give new impetus to the building industry and to fight against unemployment?

[English]

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I want to assure the hon. member that while the AHOP program is moving extremely well, there are still other funds available. I would urge all Canadians who are interested in securing loans to contact their CMHC offices, also, to contact the banks and private lenders from whom they can borrow under the new legislation. There should be adequate funding available. I cannot comment on the availability of funds which might be diverted from Cuba into Canadian housing. That would have to be taken up with my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister tell the House why loans are granted to foreign countries at lower interest rates than those charged to Canadian taxpayers, and will he make representations to his colleagues in the Cabinet to get funds for his department at the same conditions?

[English]

Mr. Danson: I fully support the policy of the government in helping developing nations. I think we must look at these two issues separately. I am certainly anxious to get as much funding for housing as possible, but I do not relate the two questions directly.

FINANCE

ALLEGED STATEMENT BY MINISTER CANADA WOULD WELCOME ARAB MONEY—POSSIBLE CHANGE IN POLICY

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): A question to the Acting Minister of Finance. Reports from the Middle East in the last few days suggest the Minister of Finance is telling the countries he is visiting that Canada would welcome Arab money. Does this represent a policy change on the part of the government?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Acting Minister of Finance): I do not think so, Mr. Speaker. Canada has generally been receptive to investment from abroad. The House is well aware that the means by which we have successfully financed our balance of payments account for a number of years is through the inflow of capital from abroad. The Minister of Finance is simply reiterating a statement which has often been made here.

POSSIBILITY OF USING ARAB MONEY FOR HOUSING—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): A supplementary to the Secretary of State for Urban Affairs. Given the fact the Minister of Finance is now saying that Canada would welcome Arab investment in this country, will the hon. gentleman renew his request to the Minister of Finance that he be allowed to negotiate a loan of one billion dollars from the Arabs to help finance housing in Canada?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I would expect the Minister of Finance to use his wisdom as he has done in the past to make certain there are adequate funds available for our housing program.

● (1150)

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, does the Minister of State for Urban Affairs then think that when the Minister of Finance turned down the request to use Arab funds to finance housing he was using the wisdom to which the minister refers?

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any question of turning down funds. I should like to point out, however, that there appears to be adequate funding in Canada from the national money lending institutions at this time. I would urge Canadians to take advantage of the legislation we have passed. I think this is rather important in this case because there were a number of important legislative items passed. Perhaps this was a month or two too late, because of the length of time it took to get these through the committee and the House, but it is important that we take advantage of the funds which the banks are prepared to lend.

As the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge has indicated, we are doing everything possible to make certain that these rates are brought down to the lowest possible level. There are funds available. I have spoken with the lending institutions and with CMHC, and I am satisfied at this time that there are adequate funds in Canada for Canadians to build the number of homes we need this year.

AIR TRANSPORT

AIR STEWARDESSES—INQUIRY AS TO ARRANGEMENTS RELATING TO PREGNANCY

Mr. F. A. Philbrook (Halton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether he is making any progress with the problem regarding pregnant airline stewardesses and their right to work, at least on ground duty if not on flight duty, or being entitled to full financial compensation. I address this question to the Minister of Transport although it might also be of interest to the Minister of National Health and Welfare and perhaps even the Minister of Labour.

An hon. Member: Obviously, there has already been some progress.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I know we are making some progress because there are fewer pregnant hostesses than there were a month ago.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Without joking, I think we can make some arrangement. We have found out that it is very difficult to have a general rule covering all these cases. We know that many of them can keep active for sometime before they have to be released.

An hon. Member: Tell that to the airline pilots.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): There have to be judgments made in each of these cases, and with the help of the Department of National Health and Welfare I think we can solve the problem.

PUBLIC SERVICE

NURSES—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON CONTRACT NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the medical service nurses and federal nurses that staff remote nursing stations and hospitals in Manitoba are extremely alarmed regarding the delay in contract negotiations. These nurses have been working without a contract now for the past three and a half months. Due to the increase that provincial nurses in Manitoba have received recently, many of these—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a question would he put it directly.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the President of the Treasury Board what advice he can give me about the stage of these negotiations and when a new contract will be signed with these nurses.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Let me put my question to the President of the Treasury Board again, Mr. Speaker. The nurses working for the medical service and federal nurses working at hospitals in remote areas of Manitoba have been working without a contract for the past three and a half months. Due to the increase granted nurses working in the province of Manitoba—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the minister can answer the question now.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the situation is that a conciliation board is investigating the situation and we hope to receive a report any day. If that report is acceptable to the parties we will have a contract. This is a choice the nurses have taken. If one of the parties does not accept the conciliation report we could have a strike. I hope we will not have one and that we can settle with the nurses very quickly. They should not be worried anyway because the contract will be retroactive to the date of expiration of the old contract.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

REQUEST FOR INCREASED RESEARCH TO CREATE JOBS AND ASSURANCE NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL CONDUCTS RESEARCH IN CO-OPERATION WITH INDUSTRY

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that Canada had a net trade deficit of almost $7 billion in the field of high technology products last year, which is three times the loss of four years ago, and there is every indication that this year's figures will be even worse, I should like to ask the Minister of Science and Technology what steps the government plans to take to increase research and development in order to create the challenging jobs presently required by Canadians?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, in general terms there has been a substantial increase, as an examination of the estimates will show, in the various incentives designed to increase Canadian activity and capacity in the field of high technology. In addition to that, we have underway a series of studies in high technology fields, for example the programs being launched by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and perhaps also by the Minister of Communications in the field of satellites.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, will the minister and his government encourage the National Research Council to conduct all its future research in co-operation with the 20 odd industrial sectors in Canada, to ensure that research and development in future is for the improvement and development of Canada for Canadians?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, this is the main thrust and purpose of what is known as the "make or buy" policy, and I think the National Research Council is actively co-operating and seeking wherever it can to contract out research rather than expand its own facilities to do it internally.

OLYMPIC GAMES

SECURITY FOR SAILING EVENTS AT KINGSTON—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON MEASURES AND INVOLVEMENT OF LOCAL AUTHORITIES

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question relates to security at the olympic games, and I direct it to the Minister of National Defence, although he may wish to pass it on to one of his colleagues. Because no arrangements have been made to date with the local organizing committee regarding security measures for the olympic sailing events at Kingston, and because the on-shore and off-shore boundaries for these events encompass such a wide open area, will the minister say what security measures are being planned and when the local officials will be involved?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the security arrangements for the games in Montreal and the sailing events at Kingston are being moved forward in the department at the present time, but I cannot give details on this occasion.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, will the minister undertake to involve the local organizational committee at the earliest possible time so these measures can proceed much more co-operatively than they are now?

Mr. Richardson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, the local committee will be consulted.

FISHERIES

POSSIBLE CONTAMINATION OF FISH RESOURCES BY MYXOSOMA CEREBRALIS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, I undertook to obtain some information for the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka. I can tell him that the possibility of the myxosoma cerebralis disease coming into Ontario at the moment appears to be not as serious as had been earlier indicated by press reports. However, in co-operation with the Michigan authorities and the provincial authorities, we are monitoring this very closely. We are also watching very carefully the importation of fish or fish eggs into Canada.

Mr. Darling: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the answer to that question, but I now have a question for the Minister of Transport and I wonder if I might ask it.

Mr. Whittaker: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I should like to make reference to a report last Friday regarding a time when the Liberal and Conservative members from British Columbia were in caucus. The report on the television indicated that there was only one member from British Columbia in the House. I should like to point out that there is a majority of Liberal and Conservative members in the House this Friday, which is the usual situation.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Oh!

● (1200)

Mr. Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. For the second time this week I find myself in the position of having been assured by ministers that they would be producing answers to questions asked in the normal routine of the question period, on the following day. On Monday the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) failed to respond, as he said he would, and now the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury) has failed to respond. He said on Wednesday he would bring his notes "tomorrow", which was yesterday, and it is already "today" and he has not brought them yet.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Dick: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am wondering whether, through you, it could be ascertained from the government House leader whether the government has reverted to a policy of rotation, because we had no more than 50 per cent attendance by ministers at any time during the question period today. We need a better attendance record or we will not be able to get replies to our questions.

[English]

Mr. Paproski: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would hope the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) would now table the terms of reference in accordance with what he said during the question period.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I did not hear the question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Paproski: Would the minister table the terms of reference between himself and Air Canada?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I do not have it at the moment. As soon I have it—probably in a few minutes—I will be able to table it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Len Marchand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 568, 2,135, 2,136, 2,139, and 2,165.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Question No. 2,139—Mr. Herbert:

1. Is the Post Office Department considering the use of cluster boxes as used in the United States and, if so, are any being used on an experimental basis?

2. Has the Post Office Department considered discontinuing the rental charge for a post office box for those who do not have or are willing to give up direct delivery?

Mr. Raynald Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): 1. No.

2. Yes. No change in existing policy is planned at this time.

CANADIAN BIRTH CERTIFICATES

Question No. 2,165—Mr. Brisco:

What are the reasons, if any, that a person born in Canada and residing in Canada cannot obtain a certificate of birth?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): This is a provincial matter as the provinces alone have jurisdiction over the issuance of birth certificates.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PETROLEUM ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING THE ADMINISTRATION OF INTERPROVINCIAL, EXPORT AND IMPORT TRADE IN PETROLEUM AND PETROLEUM PRODUCTS

The House resumed, from Thursday, April 24, consideration in committee of Bill C-32, to impose a charge on the export of crude oil and certain petroleum products, to provide compensation for certain petroleum costs and to regulate the price of Canadian crude oil and natural gas in interprovincial and export trade—Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale)—Mrs. Morin in the Chair.

[English]

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: When the committee rose on April 24, clause 5 was allowed to stand and the committee was studying clause 23. The hon. member for Crowfoot.

On clause 23—Prescribing maximum.

Mr. Horner: Madam Chairman, last evening when the question of clause 23 came up for discussion I listened to a long dissertation by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands in which he attempted to point out that any price increase would merely go to the oil companies. He attempted to suggest that they had a good deal of money already and that it was not the profits of the oil companies in Canada about which we should be concerned because those profits would only be enhanced by a price increase and they would not spend additional money on exploration in this country.

In a speech on this general subject in the House on April 17, I said that because of the tax structure and its effect on the oil industry a price increase would not bring about any more money in the hands of the oil companies so that they could explore for more oil. It is interesting to note that there is an article in this morning's Globe and Mail which states, "Gulf urges no oil increase until laws revised". It goes on to say:

> Mr. McAffee said that for each dollar the price of Alberta crude oil might increase, Gulf would retain only about 1 cent.

So the argument made by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands that profits would only increase if oil prices were allowed to increase is certainly, under today's structure, not correct. Mr. McAffee went on, according to this article, to say that an increase would probably cost an integrated company money because of today's soft market. He said that the oil companies would be blamed for the increase while, because of the tax structure, they would still have no more money to spend on exploration in Canada.

I think it is becoming very clear to all Canadians that we must be concerned about oil supply. We are the only industrial nation in the world which in the last two or three years created a climate in the oil industry which in fact turned off oil exploration. I would hope that some kind of pricing mechanism could be devised in this bill to encourage exploration. As I said last evening, I believe the minister has caused more havoc in the whole question of energy than anyone before him, and it will take a person of stature to create as much chaos in the future.

The chaos the minister has created has discouraged exploration and caused a taxation fight with the producing provinces. Now the minister asks for the ultimate authority from parliament to, in essence, price energy commodities. If the minister had a better track record, I am sure this parliament would be eager to give him the authority for which he is asking in this bill. In this morning's Globe and Mail we find an article headed, "Major finds needed to meet oil estimates". So, we are in need of major finds to meet and to keep up to our estimates. Certainly, this should be encouraged. The argument that if we allow the oil companies to make more profits, those profits might escape Canada and be spent on exploring for oil somewhere else, is not valid because it is within the power of this government to prohibit the outflow of money from this country if it so decides, and it can use the carrot approach which I mentioned to encourage money being spent in Canada for oil exploration.

Last evening the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands stated that the oil companies, because of their huge profits, have a great deal of money to put into oil exploration. We have created in this country such a degree of uncertainty in the oil and gas industries that both Canadian and multinational oil companies have left Canada: their profits have not been sufficiently rewarding to encourage them to stay. But that has been only one aspect of the problem. The security of their investment certainly has not been very good. This is why one reads reports that oil company profits have been high yet the stock market is uncertain and many Canadians have lost substantial amounts on the stock market.

One would think that if profits were high, shares and stocks would be increasing in value, not decreasing. Why have they decreased, when world prices have gone up? The uncertainty in the oil exploration industry and in the marketing climate that this government has caused has created havoc in the stock market and meant losses to thousands of Canadians across the country. Yesterday's issue of the Montreal Gazette contained an article in which the following words appeared:

> If big profit increases are a sign of what is called the "corporate rip-off", Canada's big integrated oil companies can be dropped from the critics' black list.
> It looks as if first quarter profits for the majors will be about the same as last year. And unless there is a political agreement on higher oil and gas prices, their profits for the full year may actually decline.

The article goes on to suggest the reported profits for the first quarter of this year. It states that they are no higher than they were last year. In debating this bill one cannot overemphasize the question of royalties and the need to straighten out the muddle that has been created between the producing provinces and Ottawa. As I said on April 17, the Minister of Finance would be well advised to talk to the producing provinces rather than to tour the world talking to oil producing nations. Surely we have not given up, and surely, on the question of exploration, we believe that we can find more oil in the Canadian Arctic and even in Alberta. Certainly we can encourage greater investment in the known supplies in the tar-sands, an area where extraction is very costly.

I said the following on April 17, but it bears repeating. Before an increase in price results in greater exploration, an agreement must be reached with regard to royalties and taxation. Double-taxation cannot be imposed on an industry, whatever it may be, whether agriculture, transportation, manufacturing or energy, in the hope that it will encourage expansion of that industry. It does not work that way. So the Minister of Finance must speak to the producing provinces prior to bringing in his budget and he must bring in a budget which will remove double-taxation from the energy industry. Only if that is done can we go along with the Prime Minister's suggestion, made at the energy conference, to increase oil prices. It would be expected that the money resulting from increased prices would go into exploration for more oil, so that we would be relatively certain that after 1982 we would not run out of our known resources. I believe that more oil can be discovered in western Canada and in the Arctic. The Mackenzie River delta shows promise and we must encourage exploration there.

I hope the minister will make a statement before this bill is passed as to the policies he will be announcing under the legislation. Will he continue in this jerky manner of setting a price in July, adjusting it up or down at Christmas, and then again moving the price up or down next July? That kind of action, without rhyme or reason, does not create confidence in the energy industry. I would like to say again what I have said before, that what the minister must do under this bill if it passes—and even if it does not pass, because the industry wants some assurance from him—is to say how high Canadian oil prices will be allowed to go.

He should tell us what the price will be in relation to the world price, and when Canadian prices will be allowed to reach the maximum. If he says that they will be allowed to go up to within 80 per cent of the world price, he should tell us when he will allow them to go that high. If he wants to keep them within 50 per cent of the world price, he should tell us when that formula would be adjusted. The oil companies in Canada would then know what to expect: no matter whether the world price went up or down, our price would follow. I have said that we should accept the world price for tar sands oil. I think the minister should state that for conventional oil we should try to reach as closely as possible the world price, in a series of stages.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 23 carry?

Clause agreed to.

On clause 24—Prohibition.

Mr. Baldwin: On clause 24(c) I should like to ask the minister a question going back to the proposition I have advanced for the minister's consideration about a provincial or federal agency or corporation acquiring crude oil, within the definition of the act, at the wellhead or at the next stage from the wellhead. The minister indicated in his reply to the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands that the price which the corporation can require need not be the prescribed price, as I understand it. The crude oil which will be acquired will be, obviously, oil for consumption within the province or outside the province of production.

Can the minister say whether such action by a Crown corporation or government agency in the acquisition of crude oil will be considered an offence under clause 24(c), which provides that no person shall acquire any quality or kind of crude oil for consumption outside its province or production, bearing in mind that the crude oil the agency acquiries will include some for consumption outside the province? Can the minister say whether, if the government agency pays for the oil a price higher than the prescribed price, it will be liable under this clause?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): If there is a specific contract within a province, whatever the parties may be, as paragraph (c) says, they can acquire any quality or kind of crude oil for consumption outside the province of production. Then the limitation on price would apply. If that provision is not stipulated in the contract of acquisition, then of course the clause does not apply and the prescribed price does not apply.

Mr. Baldwin: Having in mind that petroleum resources are initially the property of the people of the province acting through their government, if the government of a province sees fit to take its share in kind rather than purchasing, and it acquires the property in kind to what it considers its share, worked out through a rental or a royalty agreement, is the agency then free to dispose, within that province, of the resource at a price it sees fit to charge?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The stress is on the words "within that province", and expressly by the provisions of clause 24 the answer is yes. The royalty oil taken by the province for use within the province—which, as I understand the Alberta law, is the situation—would not be affected by the clause whatsoever. It is at the point where an arrangement is made by the express consent of the parties to transfer ownership in oil for consumption outside the province that the clause applies.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 25—Evidence required.

Mr. Baldwin: I wonder if the minister could advise whether this clause is intended to apply to a common carrier. Is it the purpose of the clause that any common carrier of the commodity has an onus cast upon it to obtain documentary evidence as to the price otherwise there is an infraction of the clause.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, Madam Chairman.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 26 to 28 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 29—Idem.

Mr. Andre: Clause 29(2) gives us on this side of the House concern which is different from that which we have exhibited on other aspects of the bill. This concern arises primarily from our feeling that clause 29(2) may be in violation of the Canadian Bill of Rights. As this clause is worded, it would be in violation of, I believe, section 3 of the Canadian Bill of Rights. Clause 29(2) provides:

> Where a corporation is guilty of an offence under this division, any officer, director or agent of the corporation who directed, authorized, assented to, acquiesced in or participated in the commission of the offence is a party to and guilty of the offence and is liable on conviction to the punishment provided for the offence whether or not the corporation has been prosecuted or convicted.

It is the last phrase in particular which gives us some concern—"whether or not the corporation has been prosecuted or convicted". The immediate question from a layman who is concerned for justice and civil liberties would be: How can this statement be reconciled with the Bill of Rights and with Canadian common law, in that a person, whether he be a corporate person or an individual, is innocent until proven guilty? This clause says that where a corporation is guilty, whether or not that corporation has been prosecuted or convicted, any officer, director or agent who has acquiesced in, participated in, assented to, authorized or directed activities related to that supposedly illegal aspect is guilty.

On April 7, the Minister of Justice reported to the House that under the provisions of the Standing Orders of the House of Commons he had examined a Senate bill, under section 3 of the Canadian Bill of Rights, which contained a clause which although not identical to clause 29(2) of this bill is quite similar. After examination it was the judgment of the Minister of Justice that the clause put into Bill S-10, an act to amend the Feeds Act, was in fact contrary to the Bill of Rights and therefore had to be disallowed. That clause provided:

> Where a corporation has been convicted of an offence under this act, the chief executive officer of the corporation shall be presumed to be guilty of an offence under subsection 10(1) unless he establishes that the offence was committed without his knowledge or consent and that he exercised all due diligence to prevent its commission.

I am surprised, yet not surprised—considering from whence the bill emanated—that reasonable Canadians would in fact acquiesce to that kind of language in the law of the land, which clearly puts the onus on the person accused to prove his innocence and is totally out of step with any of our Canadian traditions and, obviously, totally contrary to the Bill of Rights. The Minister of Justice did the right thing in disallowing it.

I ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources whether he has received the judgment of the Minister of Justice in respect of clause 29(2), where a director, officer or agent of a corporation who has merely acquiesced in some activity is guilty of an offence of which the corporation is guilty whether or not the corporation has been prosecuted or convicted. I cannot understand how there can be a situation where a corporation is guilty and a corporate person is guilty without there having been a prosecution or conviction. How does one establish guilt if there has been no prosecution or conviction?

The statement that an employee of a corporation, because he in some way participated in an activity, might be presumed guilty, and on the statement that the corporation is guilty when it may not have been prosecuted and convicted, is at least bad language. I feel that I must reiterate, as a layman, that I think this clause is contrary to our traditions and the Bill of Rights. I ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources if he has obtained from the Minister of Justice a legal opinion on this clause and if he can explain to the committee how a corporation could be found guilty, with no prosecution or conviction, and therefore an employee immediately found guilty as a result.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I would refer to questions raised by hon. members with respect to the Deputy Attorney General or the Attorney General of Canada sitting down and writing a long opinion-letter on a bill submitted for consideration by parliament. This bill represents the considered opinion of the legal advisers of the Crown. I do not use the term "law officers of the Crown" but, rather, "legal officers of the Crown". In their judgment, it is constitutional. The Deputy Attorney General has examined it, and in his judgment the bill does not in any sense violate the Canadian Bill of Rights; therefore it has been introduced in parliament.

The hon. member's second question suggests that in some way the standard onus in criminal cases has been shifted to the accused to prove that he is innocent, rather than the Crown having to prove his guilt. Of course, the onus is not shifted; it continues to rest with the Crown to prove the particular officers guilty of any of the offences set out in the bill.

The next question is, how it is possible for an officer to be guilty of an offence, and the corporation not guilty? This is related to the vicarious liability of corporations. There could be a situation where a corporation could establish, in its defence, that the officer in question was acting beyond the scope of the authority given to him by his responsibilities: for example, against specific instructions that he was to abide by the direction of parliament in this particular statute.

In those circumstances, the corporation could well establish its defence against prosecution under the statute. Under those circumstances, there might not be a prosecution but the officer in question could be found guilty in an action corresponding to the offences here but which he was not authorized to engage in by the corporation: in that sense he would have been acting beyond the scope of his authority—acting illegally—and the legal liability would be his, not that of the corporation.

Mr. Baldwin: I understand, Madam Chairman, that this question is raised in connection with the examination of bills for the purposes of the Canadian Bill of Rights Act. I should like to call the attention of the minister to the terminology of the offensive clause which the Minister of Justice filed when an amendment was brought in at the other place. It was not in the bill originally produced by the minister but was put in by the other place. I would ask the minister to put this wording side by side with the wording in clause 30, which is the clause that has to be read in conjunction with clause 29 of the bill we are considering. Section 10(1.2) of Bill S-10 reads:

> Where a corporation has been convicted of an offence under this act, the chief executive officer of the corporation shall be presumed to be guilty of an offence under subsection 10(1) unless he establishes that the offence was committed without his knowledge or consent and that he exercised all due diligence to prevent its commission.

The parallel there is too striking to be allowed to pass. Clause 30 of the bill before us reads:

> In a prosecution for an offence under this division, it is sufficient proof of the offence to show that it was committed by an employee or agent of the accused whether or not the employee or agent is identified or has been prosecuted for the offence, unless the accused establishes that the offence was committed without his knowledge or consent and that he exercised all due diligence to prevent its commission.

Those words are nearly identical, Madam Chairman. Of course, there is obviously the difference that where there has been a conviction under Bill S-10, the Feeds Act, it is predicated on the fact that there is a conviction of the corporation. When one reads the reasons advanced by the Minister of Justice for bringing in his declaration, in a report to this House, that the particular amendment was inconsistent with the Bill of Rights, some of the words used are of interest. A press release issued by the Minister of Justice on April 7 states as follows:

> One of the amendments reported on by the minister in the House today was designed to tighten the enforcement of the Feeds Act where offences are committed by corporations.
> This clause would presume the chief executive officer of a corporation to be guilty of an offence under the act where his corporation was convicted under the act.
> This would not apply if he established that the offence was committed without his knowledge and consent and that he exercised all due diligence to prevent its conviction.

I think the final words should have been "to prevent its commission": I think these are the operative words. We must give some attention to the fact that there is a difference in the conviction of a corporation. As I understood it, the Minister of Justice said the onus was cast upon an individual to establish by a preponderance of evidence in a criminal proceeding that the offence was committed "without his knowledge and consent and that he exercised all due diligence to prevent its commission". I suggest the parallel is too close. It may well be that if the Deputy Attorney General had his attention directed to this, he might be able to make a distinction. It seems to me, at first blush, it is too close a parallel to allow the clause to be passed at this time. The minister might wish to stand the clause in order to seek an opinion and, if so, we could consider it if we find there are good reasons for it. The words used, that a person charged with the offence must show that he "exercised all due diligence to prevent its commission" are very far reaching and we must consider them very carefully.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Madam Chairman, I have not had the advantage of seeing this particular opinion. While I am sure that the Department of Justice tries to act in a consistent fashion, I would not advance the proposition that they could not have delivered an inconsistent opinion. I suggest we might stand clause 29, and clause 30—which is related to the same subject matter—and go on to clause 31.

Mr. Orlikow: Before the clause is stood, Madam Chairman, speaking as one who is not a lawyer and may not appreciate all the fine nuances of the law, I am concerned about the differences that seem to take place in this country when we consider corporate prosecutions compared to the prosecution of others. For a whole host of other crimes such as robbery or assault, it is not unusual for the people who commit them to go to prison. I am not particularly an advocate of sending people to prison, because I do not think it helps persuade them or others not to commit crimes, but that is the system under which we live. When it comes to corporations, however, and actions relating to anti-combines law and a host of other laws, it appears that a different view is taken.

Under our system, a corporation is treated as a corporate person. We will see what will happen to those charged with rigging dredging bids. In the past, when a corporation has committed an offence and has been convicted by the courts, it has been fined even though it has been convicted several times. I agree that fines have become progressively larger. They ought to be larger. My hon. friend suggests that seldom have officers of a corporation convicted of breaking the law suffered the penalty of imprisonment. I think he suggested this has seldom happened, if at all. As the hon. member for Calgary Centre suggested, it is almost as if the corporate person is some kind of mythical being who can only be punished with a fine. I suggest that we apply a different set of value judgments, a different set of rules to corporate crimes, committed by corporate officers than we do to other types of crimes committed by other people.

Although I do not object to these clauses being stood, I certainly object to the inclusion in this bill of a principle which encourages courts, prosecutors and other court officials to look upon corporate crimes as different from crimes in general. I submit that officers of a corporation or of any other organization should be treated in the same way as other individuals when the law is broken. They should be subject to the same kinds of penalties whether they be fines or imprisonment. In short, they should be treated exactly as other individuals are treated who have broken the law.

Mr. Andre: Madam Chairman, I concur with the minister's suggestion to stand these clauses or to stand one of them at least. I think that if justice department lawyers look more closely at these clauses they will suggest amendments.

I want to correct an impression left by the hon. member for Winnipeg North, who said that we suggested lesser penalties should be imposed by the law on corporate officers or corporate officials than on other people. Our position is quite the contrary: we suggest that there should be identical treatment of persons who have committed a crime either while sitting behind a desk and working for a corporation or standing behind a gun in a service station.

It is a well established principle of our common law, and this principle is further enshrined in the Bill of Rights, that a person is presumed innocent until proven guilty. If the hon. member for Winnipeg North were to read clause 30, he would see that it says a person is guilty of certain offences unless he can prove his innocence. Surely he does not suggest that a person employed by a corporation should not be accorded the same protection under our common law and the Bill of Rights as is accorded to any other citizen. That is why we think this clause should be amended. Perhaps the Department of Justice will suggest an amendment.

Under our system of justice, all persons, whoever they may be, are presumed innocent until proven guilty. Although it might suit the convenience of those who seek to enforce the law—be they police officers or government officials—to have it the other way around, I do not think that we, as parliamentarians, should permit that to happen. That is why we are seeking an amendment.

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Chairman, I agree completely with the hon. member for Calgary Centre who says that it is a basic principle of our system of justice that a person is presumed innocent until proven guilty. I support any proposal which will spell out this right in cases where the law is unclear. This right is well known to the courts and to officers of the courts. Not only am I interested in what the law says; I am interested in how the law works. I suggest that the laws of this country have not always worked in the way the hon. member for Calgary Centre suggests.

Until various provinces introduced their legal aid systems a few years ago, poor people, I think most will agree, who could not afford a lawyer were not treated in our courts in the same way as people who could afford a lawyer. The establishment of the legal aid system went a long way to ensuring fair treatment for all. Similarly, as I said earlier, some people who are convicted of certain crimes go to jail but people who have been involved in corporate crimes often have not gone to jail. I want to be sure that no provision of this bill will allow the continuation of what I consider to have been discrimination in favour of the corporation which has transgressed the law.

Mr. Baldwin: Madam Chairman, basically I think there is little to be added to what the hon. member for Winnipeg North and the hon. member for Calgary Centre have said. Let me make it clear that we do not want to do anything which would lessen the responsibility in law of officers, agents or servants of a corporation. Our position with respect to individuals who happen to be involved with a corporation which is charged with an offence is the same as our position with respect to any ordinary person charged with an offence. We do not like a provision which says a person who is charged is automatically guilty of an offence unless he can prove his innocence. We object to that principle being applied to anyone who is charged with any offence.

This is not a question of lessening the liability of a corporation. We say, first, that we do not like the way in which the onus has been turned around and, second, that there is a reasonable doubt in our minds—we are not saying we are positive—which could easily be resolved if the minister were to seek the opinion of the Deputy Minister of Justice.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Madam Chairman, I think the hon. member for Peace River has put with precision his party's position on this matter of the reverse onus. Since the matter is contained in clause 30 rather than in clause 29, perhaps we could pass clause 29, stand clause 30 and move on to clause 31. As the hon. member for Peace River suggested, it is the last four lines of clause 30 which give rise to objection, rather than the provisions of clause 29.

Mr. Andre: Madam Chairman, I would prefer both these clauses to be stood. If the minister plans to ask the Deputy Minister of Justice for his opinion, perhaps he could ask the deputy minister to look, also, at clause 29(1)(b). I concede that the most offensive aspect of these two clauses, as indicated by my colleagues from Peace River, is contained in the last four lines of clause 30 which provides for the reverse onus under which a person is presumed guilty until proven innocent. All the same, clause 29(2) presents difficulties. Apparently the minister at this point prefers not to give me a detailed explanation of clause

29(2). I would prefer both these clauses to be stood until the Deputy Minister of Justice can give an opinion.

I remind the committee of the provisions of Standing Order 82(2) which reads:

● (1250)

> In order to give effect to the purposes and provisions of section 3 of the Canadian Bill of Rights, it is the duty of the Clerk to cause to be delivered to the Minister of Justice two copies of every bill introduced in or presented to the House of Commons, forthwith after the introduction in or presentation to the House of such bill.

I do not see it anywhere else in the Standing Orders, but I understand from those in whose opinion I have confidence that after this process it is in fact the duty of the Minister of Justice to cause these bills to be examined under section 3 of the Canadian Bill of Rights and to certify that this examination has occurred. It would be useful to the committee to have this certified copy of the bill made available, if for no other reason than to alert members of the committee, officials in the Department of Justice and the Minister of Justice that the screening system set up to ensure that the Canadian Bill of Rights is honoured is somehow not working.

In fact, the screening function was somehow missed in this case. Were it not for the diligence of a few of us examining this bill in more detail than we sometimes do with other bills—although I admit we should do it with each and every bill—this clause would have been passed and become the law of the country, in violation of another law. The onus on anyone who might have been prosecuted under this law would have been to pursue the matter right through the legal system, with all the expenses involved.

In connection with standing these two clauses—I am not sure whether the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is the appropriate person—the committee should be given some verification of the fact that the screening process called for under the Standing Orders of the House has in fact been carried out.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Madam Chairman, the point raised by the hon. member for Calgary Centre with regard to clause 29(2) is quite different from the point raised by the hon. member for Peace River, in respect of which he read an opinion presented to a committee and in connection with which I undertook to stand the clause. I will repeat the explanation I have already given to the hon. member for Calgary Centre. It is possible for an officer or an agent of a corporation to knowingly commit one of the offences provided by this clause. However, if he had done so entirely beyond the authority given to him by the corporation, the corporation could legitimately establish that it should not be convicted. Indeed, under those circumstances it might not even be prosecuted. However, the individual who committed the offence should, very properly, be subjected to the judgment of the courts. That is the provision of clause 29(2).

With regard to the point raised by the hon. member for Peace River with regard to clause 30, I wonder if we might pass clause 29(2), stand clause 30 and then proceed.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that clauses 29 and 30 be stood?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Madam Chairman, I suggest we pass clause 29 and stand clause 30.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 29 carry?

Clause agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that clause 30 shall stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 30 stands.

Clauses 31 to 33 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 34—Definitions

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Madam Chairman, on re-examining clause 34, the judgment has been arrived at by the draftsmen that the provisions of clause 34(2) are not necessary for the purpose of the statute, that they are really extraneous to the statute and that there would be no real purpose in having them in there. Therefore, I suggest that the amendment which the Minister of Public Works has been patiently waiting to put to the committee could now be moved. The amendment reads:

That Bill C-32 be amended

(a) by renumbering subclause 34(1) on page 14 thereof as clause 34; and

(b) by striking out lines 27 to 30, inclusive, on page 14 thereof.

Mr. Drury: I so move.

Mr. Gillies: Madam Chairman, I wonder if the minister could give an explanation as to why the change is to be made.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I just did, Madam Chairman. On re-examination of the bill it was found that this particular provision would not involve anything; it would not add anything to the law. Since it was extraneous, it was determined that it should be taken out.

Mr. Gillies: Do I understand the minister to say that the Yukon Territory and Northwest Territories will come under the jurisdiction of this bill with regard to pricing policies, and so on?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, Madam Chairman.

Mr. Andre: Madam Chairman, I have a question for the minister respecting the definition of "licensee." Yesterday in committee we had some discussion respecting the interaction of clauses 20 and 43. Clause 43 reads:

No licensee shall purchase any crude oil originating in an exporting province except at a price that does not exceed the prescribed price—

May I call it one o'clock, Madam Chairman?

Mr. Sharp: Madam Chairman, before calling it one o'clock I wonder if we could have permission to report progress for the purpose of reverting to the House in session so that I can table a copy of the terms of reference of the royal commission that has been appointed in connection with the investigation into Air Canada.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that I rise and report progress?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

ESTEY INQUIRY—TABLING OF TERMS OF REFERENCE

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I ask permission of the House to revert to motions for the purpose of tabling, in English only, a copy of the terms of reference of the royal commission under Mr. Justice Estey. I hope to be able to provide copies in French at about four o'clock this afternoon.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): By leave, is it so agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Paproski: Madam Speaker, may I ask the Acting Prime Minister one question before we adjourn?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Paproski: Can the hon. gentleman tell us whether any definite time limit has been set in connection with the work of this inquiry?

Mr. Sharp: The relevant words are as follows:

That the commissioners be authorized to submit interim reports to the governor in council from time to time and be requested to submit a final report to the governor in council with all reasonable despatch, if possible within two months.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

PETROLEUM ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING THE ADMINISTRATION OF INTERPROVINCIAL, EXPORT AND IMPORT TRADE IN PETROLEUM AND PETROLEUM PRODUCTS

The House resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-32, to impose a charge on the export of crude oil and certain petroleum products, to provide compensation for certain petroleum costs and to regulate the price of Canadian crude oil and natural gas in interprovincial and export trade—Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale)—Mrs. Morin in the chair.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: When the committee rose at one o'clock, clause 34, with an amendment proposed by the Minister of Public Works, was being considered.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Madam Chairman, I am in the hands of the committee, but I am now in a better position to respond in respect of clause 30 than I was before lunch. If the committee would revert to that clause, I can deal with it, or we can carry on with our consideration of clause 34.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that we revert to clause 30?

Mr. Baldwin: Yes.

On clause 30—Proof of offence.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Madam Chairman, I have had a chance to consult with the Department of Justice on the point raised by the hon. member for Peace River. As he said, the minister did have occasion to deliver a report to the House of Commons pursuant to section 3 of the Canadian Bill of Rights in respect of Bill S-10, to amend the Feeds Act. It was passed by the Senate on March 6, 1975, and returned to the House of Commons.

I think it is important in this regard to have regard to the terms of Bill S-10. It will be apparent, I suggest, that the provision we are dealing with here is not the same as the one dealt with in that bill. I think it might be useful to quote the opinion of the Minister of Justice, as undoubtedly the question will be raised again and again in our proceedings and it might be worth while to have it on the record. The Minister of Justice said:

> Properly construed and applied, the said subsection 10(1.2) could deprive persons of the right to a fair hearing in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice for the determination of their rights and obligations, in that a conviction recorded against a corporation, in proceedings against the corporation to which the chief executive officer of the corporation was not a party, would cause the chief executive officer to be presumed by law to be guilty of the offence of which the corporation was convicted, although the conviction recorded against the corporation could not subsequently be questioned by the chief executive officer in proceedings that would lead to his own conviction if he were unable to establish that the act giving rise to the offence was committed without his knowledge or consent and that he exercised all due diligence to prevent its commission.

In referring to the terms of Bill S-10—and I will take the liberty of abbreviating the terms of the clause—there is provision that where a corporation has been convicted of an offence, the chief executive officer is to be presumed to be guilty of an offence unless he has established that the offence was committed without his knowledge or consent and that he exercised all due diligence to prevent its commission. I maintain that we have a rather different situation here. This is not a situation where once a conviction is obtained against a corporation, the officer will be presumed to be guilty unless he establishes these things. In the bill before us, we have a situation where the officer in question himself would have to be the subject of prosecution in the courts, in which case he would have the full right to make his defence.

The defences he could raise on the matter would not only be a defence against the substance of the offence, but also the defence that he did not know of the offence and took all appropriate steps to prevent it; in other words, he did not know the offence had been committed by another officer or agent of the corporation and for that reason should not be found guilty. That is, there is no presumption against him, as there was in Bill S-10, and in that respect the two provisions are different.

I take it this is the reason the Minister of Justice was able to certify to the House of Commons, with regard to Bill C-32, that all the requirements had been met under the Canadian Bill of Rights. I think there have been some discussions between the hon. member for Calgary Centre and the table and the hon. member has had an opportunity of examining the draft copy of Bill C-32 as transmitted by the Department of Justice to the Clerk of the House, bearing on the face of it the stamp that it has been examined and certified in accordance with the Bill of Rights.

On that basis I would argue that clause 30 is different from the provision referred to in Bill S-10. Clause 30 is the same as a provision that may be found in a number of other statutes—for example, the Oil and Gas Production Bill, which is chapter 0-4 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, and the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, which is chapter 2 of the 1970-71 statutes, which has a similar provision in section 20(1). In other words, the procedure has been before parliament previously. Also, this clause has been certified by the Department of Justice, pursuant to the Bill of Rights, as being not contrary to the provisions of the Bill of Rights. What I am suggesting to the committee, therefore, is that there is legal authority for the provision in clause 30, and for that reason I would seek the support of the committee.

Mr. Andre: Madam Chairman, we recognize that clause 30 is not identical to the clause in Bill S-10 which the Minister of Justice correctly ruled as being in violation of the Bill of Rights; but there are certain similarities. The minister has based his argument primarily on the fact that the provisions are not identical. We have not claimed they are identical, but that there are similarities and that the principle is similar.

Clause 30 of Bill C-32 reads:

> In a prosecution for an offence under this division, it is sufficient proof of the offence to show that it was committed by an employee or agent of the accused whether or not the employee or agent is identified or has been prosecuted for the offence, unless the accused establishes that the offence was committed without his knowledge or consent and that he exercised all due diligence to prevent its commission.

So, far from that passage providing a means by which someone who might be charged under this bill could put forth an argument in his defence, it can be read—and indeed states—that circumstances are possible where an employee acting in a way that is in violation of the legislation could do this on his own without the knowledge of his superior, and on this basis the superior of the employee, presumably an officer of the company, could be charged under this act. In such case the onus would be on the superior to prove he was innocent, because once charged he would be presumed guilty.

The onus is on this superior to prove that he exercised all due diligence in advising the employee on the facts of the law, and the employee may not be identified to him. So I submit that this may not be identical to the section in Bill S-10, but there are some similarities. From what I know of the law, it is wrong to have a law which states that a person is guilty unless he proves his innocence. The effect of this provision is that a person is guilty, once charged, unless he can prove his innocence. That is what this clause says.

Even worse than that, the clause says a person is guilty because of the activities of someone in the company subservient to him who may not even be identified. The person accused may not even have the right of cross-examination or of being informed who the individual is who broke the law. In examining the report of the Minister of Justice, it would seem that there is much similarity in terms of the rationale and reasons given by the minister in this regard. I concede to the minister that this clause and the offending clause in Bill S-10 are not identical, but I ask him point blank why he thinks it is right to have a law which states that a person is guilty of an offence unless he proves he used all due diligence in warning an employee who committed the offence, which employee may not be identified to him. I submit that is not right and proper under Canadian law. It is a law which facilitates matters for the law enforcers, but it is abhorrent under the British system of law and it is abhorrent to me. I think the wording of the clause should be amended to make it more in keeping with the traditions of this country.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Quite the contrary; under the common law, as under the corporate law, the senior officers of a corporation responsible for the conduct of a corporation could be held liable for acts of the corporation falling under their general responsibility if—and this is not an additional responsibility put on him—this defence provided by clause 30 were not in there. So the clause provides a defence in addition to the common law which but for this legislation he would not have.

Mr. Baldwin: I shall not detain the House on this, but I must take exception to the last statement of the minister that the common law really is not applicable to corporations; they are creatures of statutes and the provisions with regard to liability. I accept ungrudgingly that the minister has his legal opinion. He showed us the statement of the Minister of Justice. We may disagree with the statement of the minister, but we cannot challenge it legally in parliament; it would have to be done outside parliament. I refer to someone challenging clause 30 as being an abridgement of the Bill of Rights.

Despite the opinion of the Department of Justice, clause 30 as it reads now is quite unacceptable. To put it in the simplest terms, as I understand it, if employee A should commit an offence, employee B could be charged and all the prosecutor would have to do in respect of employee B would be to show that employee A committed the offence and then the responsibility would fall upon employee B, the one charged, to bring himself outside the scope of the clause by affirmatively establishing that the offence was committed without his knowledge or consent, and also that he exercised all due diligence in preventing its commission. That, of course, is completely unacceptable.

Without in any way contravening the right of the government to insert clauses which place responsibilities upon the servants, agents or officers of a company, this clause is not acceptable. I therefore move:

That clause 30 of Bill C-32 be amended by deleting all the words in the said clause after the word "accused" in line 24.

I hope, Madam Chairman, you can read my handwriting. At this time of day on a Friday my writing is not what it is on a Monday.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I would just remind the hon. gentleman that what he is doing is taking something away from corporate officers, and that therefore his amendment is making the situation more difficult rather than easier.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is it the pleasure of the committee to adopt the said motion?

● (1420)

Amendment (Mr. Baldwin) negatived: Yeas, 9; nays, 26.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 30 carry?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Clause agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The committee will now proceed to clause 34 and the amendment proposed by the Minister of Public Works.

On clause 34—Definitions.

Mr. Andre: Before one o'clock I was discussing the relationship between the definition of "licensee" as it appears in clause 34 and the interaction with clause 20, which states that all crude oil that at one time might have come in contact with export crude oil or crude oil for sale outside the province of production is affected by this bill. I combine that with clause 43 which states that any person—which might mean corporate person, or individual or, indeed, Her Majesty in right of the provinces—must become a licensee in order to sell oil for consumption outside the province of production. When I presented these arguments earlier, the minister indicated that "licensee", rather than being a general designation, is a licensee for the purpose of the transaction; whereas looking at this definition, one finds a licensee defined as a person who is licensed under this division, "person" meaning individual or corporate person or, as a result of other provisions in the act, Her Majesty in right of the provinces. I wonder whether a more concise definition of "licensee" might not be required in support of the minister's earlier arguments.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I am not sure whether the hon. member is quoting me correctly, but rather than have doubts on the matter, let me say that it is clear that a licensee could be licensed for more than one transaction.

The Chairman: Is the amendment agreed to?

Amendment (Mr. Drury) agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

On clause 35—Proclamation.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I have a fairly lengthy amendment to this clause and I have given it to the minister. I will send a copy to the chair. First, I will read it and then explain it. I assume that after my explanation there will be ready acceptance of the amendment.

Clause 35 is the clause which brings into effect this division of the bill and it is where, by following clause 36, the government takes unto itself the right unilaterally to fix prices either when there has been an agreement which has been terminated or when a new agreement is entered into. Even if an agreement has been entered into, if in the opinion of the governor in council it is not effective, the governor in council may, by regulation, establish maximum prices unilaterally.

As we have argued—and I will repeat it with a new twist—this permits the federal government to reach into provincial jurisdiction and fix the prices not only of crude oil and gas but of derivatives, which I say cannot be done under the constitution. However, we will come to that in a minute. The amendment I move is:

That the bill be amended in clause 35 by striking out lines 1 and 2 of page 15 and substituting therefor the following:

"Commencement of Division

Proclamation

35(1) This division shall come into force on a day to be fixed by proclamation but no day shall be fixed except the House of Commons adopt the motion to concur in an order under subsection (2)

Declaring national emergency

(2) where no agreement is entered into pursuant to section 22 with the government of a producer-province, or any such agreement is terminated by the declaration of the parties, or, in the opinion of the Governor in Council, is not effective or is not capable of being effective, and where a national emergency exists in fact, the Governor in Council may, by order, declare that a national emergency exists by reason of such circumstances.

As members of the committee will recall, that is the clause which permits an agreement to be entered into between the federal government and the provincial government of a producer-province which can be symbolized by order in council. That is the meat of the argument I am making with regard to jurisdiction. From thereon the clause proposed in the amendment goes on to establish a procedure which is copied almost verbatim from the procedure contained in the bill on energy allocation which was passed by the House and is now a statute. Clause 11 of that bill contains a procedure which I have added to subclauses (1) and (2) which I have read. My amendment goes on to read:

> (3) A notice of motion to concur in an order made under subsection (2) shall be laid on the table of each House of Parliament by or on behalf of a minister of the Crown within seven days after the order is made if Parliament is then sitting.

Then there is a procedure for debating in the House of Commons the particular notice of motion; it gives the House the opportunity to survey the situation and to permit the government to establish that it has made a case and to justify its action in this regard. If it does not, of course, the House can defeat the notice of motion and the proclamation then falls to the ground.

In addition, there is a provision that the matter shall be laid on the table of the Senate. Of course, apart from one or two members of the House, we do not propose to try to elaborate on what should be the procedure of the other place. That is what we propose in this regard. It seems to me that I should review briefly, with some additions, the ground upon which the amendment is based and what we propose. It is our view that the government has no right to move into a province and fix the price of a commodity in the way that is being sought in the bill before us.

We can go right back to the genesis of legislation of this kind. In 1907, the then Liberal government, under that very distinguished Canadian, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, enacted the measure referred to as the fluid export energy and electricity bill. This is chapter 16 of the statutes of 1907: an act to regulate the exportation of electric power and certain liquids and gases. In 1953 that bill led to the export-import act, chapter 27, 1953-54. That bill was brought about because in the preceding two or three years the government had lost the powers it had gained under the emergency regulations during the Second World War and was driven to obtain this legislation in order to cover its practices with regard to the regulation of trade and commerce.

It has been possible for the Government of Canada, acting first under the original bill, chapter 16, followed by the law passed in 1953-54, followed in due course by the law passed by the Diefenbaker government in 1962, through the licensing system, through the use of conditions attached to licences granted, to in fact regulate the price of petroleum and natural gas to consumers in Canada and also in the international market. It is very simple; it is done through the issue of licences and attaching conditions to those licences. There has been no complaint about it and it has worked effectively. There is no reason why it could not have continued to work.

With some very minor amendments to the National Energy Board Act, the minister, if necessary, would be able to obtain in constitutional fashion the capacity to fix domestic prices using legislation already in existence. We contend that it is not necessary to legislate as the minister and the government seek to do under this clause. At one time I suspected there was some conflict between the minister and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The other legislation, with the exception of the Export and Import Permits Act, fell under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and I can understand that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources felt that as petroleum and natural gas were matters falling under his control, he would have preferred his own legislation. We probably would not object to that, but we must object to the extent to which the government seeks, in an unconstitutional and improper way, to reach into a province and fix prices with regard to commodities which are covered by legislation.

If I had the time and the opportunity I would read the remarks made by Sir Wilfrid Laurier and by the then leader of the opposition, R. L. Borden, who was later prime minister, in which they agreed and accepted the fact that the right to fix prices to the consumer throughout the country was a right achieved by the licensing system set out in this first bill, a right carried on when the Export and Import Permits Act was passed and a right, in a different form, obtained by the government in the National Energy Board Act. These rights were granted and exercised from 1962 when the energy board act was passed.

The government has been able to exercise this proper constitutional responsibility; there is no question about that and I do not think it has ever been challenged. Because of that, and the powers the government seeks in this bill, we must exercise our responsibility as an opposition, challenge the government and put to this committee and this House the opportunity to have the bill dry-cleaned so that we can expunge from it those things which are not right or constitutional. If we fail to do that, I do not think we are exercising our duty as an opposition.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, as the hon. member just indicated, this amendment supports the constitutional interpretation the hon. gentleman tabled with regard to the oil and natural gas business in Canada. The wider proposition which has been put, to the effect that the federal government has no authority over interprovincial or international trade except in the case of a national emergency, is totally mistaken in my opinion, and I say so for reasons I have cited in the past. On that basis, we do not accept the amendment.

The Chairman: The minister gave me the impression that he was rising to speak to a point of order in regard to the acceptability of the amendment. I hesitate to put the amendment to the committee at this time. It has such important implications, although I would listen to argument as to its acceptability, that my first reaction is that in its present form the amendment seeks to bring about a new legislative procedure. I feel that it would be going beyond the power of our committee to move in that direction on an amendment which, to my mind, seems to go far beyond clause 35 which it proposes to amend. I invite the comments of hon. members if they wish to enlighten the Chair at this time.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I think there is a great deal being made of this amendment. The gist of the amendment is very simple. Clause 35 seeks to fix the time when the proclamation comes into effect. Clause 35 provides:

> This division shall come into force on a day to be fixed by proclamation.

This amendment only seeks to define, with more particularity, what day that shall be. There is no question of constitutionality arising on this amendment. We say just what the government said on clause 11. Because it had some doubts as to its constitutional position, the government wanted the right to submit to the House any declaration of national emergency. But this is simply a mechanical matter. All I am saying is that instead of the bill coming into effect on a day to be fixed by proclamation, and leaving it in those simple terms, there should be a day fixed by proclamation, but this is the way the day is fixed: then I outline a fairly complicated procedure by which that day is established. It does bring into existence proceedings in this House to establish that date.

I cannot see how, in the name of heaven, one can say that that is provoking a constitutional argument. Under certain conditions, the proclamation should be made: once the proclamation is made, the government must bring it into the House and into the Senate and it can be discussed. If Your Honour will refer to subclause (1), it reads:

> This division shall come into force on a day to be fixed by proclamation but no day shall be so fixed except the House of Commons adopt a motion to concur in an order made under subsection (2).

From there on, all we do is establish the mechanics of how that day is fixed. I suggest we are restricted to a very, very narrow interpretation under an amendment to a clause in a bill where the recommendation is as follows:

> His Excellency the Administrator has recommended to the House of Commons the present measure respecting the administration of interprovincial, export and import trade—

If, in the royal recommendation, there had been the precise mechanics by which the proclamation was to come into effect, then I might have been out of order; but it is left to the government to bring in the royal recommendation which simply refers to the present measure. With the greatest respect, I would caution the Chair that if we are restricted to the kind of amendments which the Chair would seem to envisage, it would leave members of the House almost no opportunity to offer amendments when we want to develop a position such as we are trying to take with regard to this particular clause. We would in effect be restricted to voting for or against. I suggest that is too narrow a view on such an important measure, and the Chair should not restrict this committee in considering what its position should be on the measure. I therefore ask Your Honour to review the situation.

The Chairman: The hon. member must keep in mind the responsibility of the Chair. It is not for the Chair to guide hon. members as to the possibilities in moving amendments to legislation before us at this stage of our legislative process. The Chair has to try to apply the rules of the House of Commons and at the same time see that the action of the committee abides by the long established practices and rules of the House.

To my mind, the hon. member's amendment seems to be substituting this House for parliament whereby the coming into force of the legislation would be subject to a resolution of the House. At the same time, the legislation could become inoperative if one of the parties involved refused agreement. That is the point which is not clear to me and I have some doubt as to its effect. If the hon. member can enlighten the Chair on the implications and effects of subclause (2) of the amendment, the Chair might have some grounds for accepting it. At this time I have great difficulty with it.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, it is my recollection that this is precisely what the government did on the energy allocation bill. The minister can correct me if I am wrong. There was some discussion about the bill in committee and then the minister and I got together and considered certain amendments to be put in the House. It is my recollection that at report stage in the House the minister brought in amendments which were along the same lines. In fact, the amendment I have drawn up is, with the exception of a few words, precisely the same as the amendment the minister brought in on the energy allocation bill. I think it was the minister's decision that it could not be done in committee, so it was done in the House: one of his colleagues moved the amendment.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, this is the first time in the eight years we have been dealing with these matters that the hon. member for Peace River has agreed with me on anything. I am quite unprepared to respond on the question of procedure, however. Certainly, amendments were made to terminology at that time, but I cannot recall how they compare with this one. I think I would have to leave it to the Chair to decide, as I have no advice to offer on procedure at this time.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, the minister at least has not opposed me, which is the first time this has happened in eight years. Possibly we might take some time to review this. I think I would be able to find the Hansard which would affirm that an amendment along the lines of this one was brought in by the government. Your Honour has not ruled that this amendment is in order and it is not before the committee. One of my colleagues has another amendment to the same clause, which he intended to move in the unlikely event that this one was not accepted. While we review the likelihood of this happening, perhaps we could entertain the amendment to be offered by the hon. member for Don Valley.

The Chairman: Of course, I can let it stand but this might present a difficulty. If we stand the amendment moved by the hon. member for Peace River, and if by any chance the second amendment were accepted by the committee, that would have the effect of eliminating the first proposition.

Mr. Baldwin: I would be perfectly willing to accept the elimination in that case, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Chairman, I move:

That clause 35 of the bill be amended by striking out lines 1 and 2 on page 15 and substituting therefor the following:

"35. This division shall come into force on a day to be fixed by proclamation but any such proclamation shall be subject to affirmative resolution of parliament.

The reasons for this amendment are much the same as those advanced for the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Peace River. The argument we have made constantly and continuously with respect to this legislation is that we believe the government alone should not have the right or the power to put this division into effect. We have argued as strongly and as constantly as we can that this is a joint proposition between the provinces and the federal government, but this argument has been rejected by the minister over and over again.

We now believe, as the very least proposition, that if this division is to come into effect it should only be proclaimed by resolution of parliament. I hope the minister will accept this amendment and indicate that the government is willing to discuss a very complicated situation, one which can and will bring forth great feelings of concern across the country. It could even bring about division in the country or exacerbate division. If there is a procedure by which some of these problems can be alleviated and yet not subtract from what the minister wants to do in this legislation, I hope he will see fit to support my amendment.

I think it is unnecessary to restate the arguments put forward in this debate. The minister knows how strongly the members of my party feel about this issue and how strongly the various regions of this country feel about it. Surely it would be only wise to accept the amendment. Surely that would make sense. Acceptance would add to one's belief that we can govern this country with conciliation, not confrontation and that we can work out solutions to difficult problems in a positive fashion.

If the government supported the amendment it would make possible discussion before any new price is put into effect. It would ease some of the strain that has always been evident in this sort of situation. It would lessen the divisions throughout this country which this sort of legislation is bound to bring about and which have been created in the past. We should be operating more effectively.

Further, by so doing, the government would involve parliament in the consideration of something which affects everyone in this country significantly and importantly. The government would lose little by accepting the amendment but the country would gain much. I hope that parliament will be involved in making a decision which will affect all Canadians in a variety of ways. We should make sure that parliament is involved in that sort of decision. I think that as the coming into force of this legislation will depend on compromise, and as that sort of decision may not be reached in the normal course, there is every reason to involve parliament in the matter.

We think this amendment is important, significant and will add to the willingness of people across our country to accept this bill. We hope the minister will see fit to accept the amendment.

The Chairman: I might say that the Chair is ready to put this amendment. Of course, hon. members may feel that it tends to do what the previous amendment tried to do. However, to my mind the amendment we are discussing is more relevant to clause 35 of the bill. At the same time, it does not, to my mind, affect the legislative process, as the other amendment would do that. That amendment, if accepted, might delay proclamation on the legislation. I am therefore ready to put the amendment at this time. The hon. member for Don Valley moves:

That clause 35 of the bill be amended by striking out lines 1 and 2 on page 15 and substituting therefor the following:

"35. This division shall come into force on a day to be fixed by proclamation but any such proclamation shall be subject to affirmative resolution of parliament.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, may I ask for clarification of your ruling. I take it that you have now accepted the second amendment proposed to clause 35.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Woolliams: I am not supposed to refer to your ruling, but I congratulate you, sir. The amendment merely seeks to change the decision which the cabinet would need to make: we want to make sure that parliament makes the decision, and in that sense it is a safeguard. May I say something about the amendment, its relationship to clause 22 which has already been passed and to clause 36. Am I in order in speaking on clause 36? I wish to speak on that clause; my argument will be germane to this amendment. I should like to ask, sir, whether I may talk on clause 36 as you have accepted the second amendment to clause 35.

The Chairman: The hon. member is asking the Chair to rule on something he has not yet said. That is difficult. The hon. member may refer to clause 36 as it relates to clause 35. If the Chair feels the hon. member is going beyond the latitude permitted, I shall caution him. I think the hon. member can give it a try. I do not think there will be much difficulty.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, first may I ask if the minister is ready to accept the second proposed amendment. I suggest that his acceptance would expedite passage of the bill. The minister knows that in the debate on the allocation bill he himself moved a similar amendment. If he will now accept this amendment to this bill, an amendment which will apply in the field of price-setting by the federal government when there is no agreement between the provinces and the federal government, I suggest passage of the bill will be expedited. Debate on the bill has been going on for some time now.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I agree with the hon. gentleman; debate on this bill has been going on for some time. I am interested in the hon. member's comments about expediting passage. I take it that the converse of his argument is this: if I do not accept the amendment, then I can expect prolonged debate. It seems to me that the hon. gentleman has just provided the best reason why the government should not accept the affirmative resolution procedure. The affirmative resolution procedure would mean that the operation of the law to restrain price for the protection of the broader Canadian community could not take effect until this House and the other place had acted affirmatively to approve the proclamation.

That would mean this: if the hon. gentleman's political friends in Alberta were to decide it was in their interest to go for a price which in the judgment of the Government of Canada was not a fair price, or a price which we felt would not be in the interests of the economy of the country to impose, and if the hon. gentleman's friends insisted on that price, there would be no way for the national government to take action to protect consumers nationally until this House had debated the proposal. The present bill has been before this House for about one year now. Off and on, we have debated it since the autumn. I cannot say how many days of debate there have been altogether on the bill.

This morning the hon. member for Crowfoot suggested it could take us a long time to get this bill through. I therefore ask myself this question. In the event we feel that it would be prejudicial to Canadian consumers to have a price increase go into effect, what assurance can we have that the hon. gentleman and his friends will not do this again; that they will not delay, as they have so far, for month after month? As I say, the present measure has been before parliament for 12 months.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, nobody on either side of the House can say I delayed this legislation. I think it is important legislation and an important principle is involved. It affects not only the setting of energy prices but the setting of the price of other commodities. The minister may have a valid point. I think we always try to see each other's points of view. I suggest that if the proclamation must be approved by the House, debate could be limited. Of course, I cannot speak for my colleagues but I am sure, as they are reasonable men, they would go along with a time limit on debate in the House of Commons. If they agree, I suggest that the minister's argument falls flat because there is nothing about which he need be concerned. I suggest debate could be limited to two days.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member made some reference to an amendment, similar to the one proposed, being moved in the debate on the emergency supplies allocation bill. At that time a negative resolution had been included in the bill. What the hon. member for Don Valley would do is put in there that the intervention would not be successful without an affirmative action being taken by this chamber. What assurance can we have that there will not be a repetition of the experience which we have already had with this bill, namely, a prolonged debate? That is one of the things that might be considered in this regard if we think the government should have the responsibility of protecting the consumers in Canada.

If hon. members are interested in a parliamentary occasion we might look at something like the provisions of Section 87(4) of the National Energy Board Act, or perhaps even the provisions of Section 11 of the bill I just referred to with regard to a negative resolution. I am not saying that would necessarily be acceptable, but we might consider something along this line. An affirmative resolution of this kind, which could be a continuing block on the action that might be taken in this regard, would be against the interests of consumers in Canada. What could well happen is that this kind of decision might have to be made at a time when parliament is not sitting. In that case there would be no way the government could, by executive act, follow whatever time limit the hon. member suggests.

I am not agreeable to the amendment as put. I would be prepared to consider the possibility of a negative resolution of the kind that has been adopted elsewhere in our statutes. My suggestion might be that while we reflect on that particular proposal, we let this clause stand for the moment and move on to some other clauses of the bill.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, as I said yesterday, I would like to pour a little oil on troubled water. If we limit the time to a two-day debate, surely that ends the minister's argument. The minister says that parliament might not be sitting. These economic trends—and I will have something to say about them in a few moments—do not happen overnight. There is a time lapse. If parliament is adjourned for July and August, the minister would have known about the trends since May or June. It does not become an emergency. Even if an emergency did occur, it would not be the first time parliament was recalled. For the past few years with this government we have been recalled pretty well every year to come to grips with some problem between management and labour. We end strikes as though we were an arbitration board.

If we put on a time limit of two days' debate you have that protection valve. Parliament has two days in which to express itself. Consumers could read in the newspapers, hear over the radio, or see on television whether there was a crisis. We saw the government implement the War Measures Act. We never did get all the facts, and there was a resolution that died on the order paper, but we know today that there probably never was a crisis.

This party is not only concerned about the price of crude petroleum and its products, but also about the price of other products. We are establishing a dangerous precedent. According to clauses 46, 21 and 22, if you do not have an agreement with the provinces, the federal government can come along with a big club and set the price. What kind of conference can you have if the provinces sit down with the federal government, the Prime Minister, and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, when the government has clause 36 up its sleeve? Cabinet can make a proclamation and, whether the provinces agree or not, the government will just run slip-shod over the whole thing. How can you have any consensus or meaningful conference with that kind of legislation? That is the point.

I ask the minister to be reasonable. We are being reasonable this afternoon. I ask him to agree to this and set two days. We will then expedite this legislation which the minister thinks he needs, and which I think the country may need in the future.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member talks about a conference not being meaningful if one party can in effect take this action and put up the price. That is the kind of situation we now have. We have been operating under that kind of threat for the past 18 months to two years with regard to pricing in Canada. For example, the Premier of Alberta said, "No more gas for our consuming provinces in this country unless I get the price I want". That is the kind of threatening situation under which we have been operating. It is on the basis of that we have come to parliament to get this kind of authority.

I again go back to my proposition. The hon. member is really arguing for the provincial veto. I am saying on the contrary that the ultimate responsibility on a national issue of this kind should be taken by the national parliament.

Mr. Gillies: By the government or parliament?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): By the government under legislation passed by this parliament. We are prepared to consider other procedures. The amendment put by the hon. member for Don Valley is not acceptable. If hon. members would like to stand the question, we are prepared to consider that. If they would like to put this to a question now, we are equally prepared to have a decision on it.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I wish to reply to the minister. He talks about arguing a provincial veto. I am not arguing for any provincial veto. I am not defending any provincial government. We are dealing with federal legislation. I say to the minister that setting the price where there is no agreement cannot be approved unless it is brought before parliament and we have two days debate on it. Surely the minister can see that is a safeguard on a government running slipshold over parliament and the people of Canada. I am not just talking about Liberal governments. Any government is capable of doing that. The minister knows that.

We are simply asking for something reasonable. The minister wants to get this legislation through. This afternoon we are handing it to him on a platter. The minister seems to have the mental makeup that he cannot say yes. I say the minister should listen to one particular song from the show "Oklahoma!". I say we are not arguing for a veto. I ask the minister to give consideration to this, say yes, and let's get on with the job.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the hon. member for Calgary North realizes he would have to amend his colleague's proposition in this regard. Is he moving a subamendment?

Mr. Woolliams: My colleague would be willing to do that. We can do this by consent. We on this side agree. I think the minister's colleagues want to agree with it. It is only the minister who is saying no. Will the minister agree to the two days if they are included in that amendment? If he agrees to that, we will get on with the job.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, for the reasons I have indicated I do not think the country should be held up in this way. I would be prepared to consider another procedure, but not that one.

Mr. Schumacher: Mr. Chairman, the minister could very well have listened to the suggestion of the hon. member for Calgary North. I feel the hon. member for Calgary North is being a bit generous today. In fact, I am happy his offer was not taken up and I do not have to feel bound by it.

The attitude of the minister indicates how careful we should be in giving to him and his government this very powerful tool to interfere with the constitution of the country. The hon. member for Calgary North stated he was not arguing the provincial side. I suggest this party is not doing that. We are arguing the constitutional side of this question which is much more fundamental than any particular province or part of the country. If the British North America Act is going to be abrogated by Bill C-32, a certain amount of consideration should be given to the consequence of this legislation.

I personally feel that the bill when passed—and no doubt it will be passed—will be found to be unconstitutional, and that other arrangements will have to be made. The basic premise, at least of division I, is that the federal government will exercise leadership in bringing the provinces together to agree on a price for oil and natural gas. This is a proper function for the federal government to exercise. But I do not think it is a proper function for the federal government to act like big daddy by clubbing provinces into submission.

At the first ministers' conference the federal government appeared to be saying there should be a price increase. The Premier of Ontario said there could be no price increase. It would seem to me that if this legislation had already been passed, the interests of Ontario as expressed by its premier would certainly have been adversely affected since the producing provinces and the federal government could have imposed a price unilaterally on the largest consuming province. So it could work both ways.

As it happens, the minister only mentions the consumers; he never at any time mentions the interests of the producers or the importance of security of supply of petroleum products to the country, a subject which should be of great concern to any hon. member who is called Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

At any rate we are considering how we should rewrite that part of our constitution which deals with the ownership and sale of our natural resources. Though the legislation before us deals with oil and gas we can readily think of other products in various regions of the country in which the federal government would be equally interested. I am amazed by the attitude of the minister when he says he needs a proclamation available at the snap of his fingers. Surely the basis on which the bill is presented envisages a period of negotiation between the federal government and the other parties which are interested in the price of oil and gas. This is vital to the interests of the consuming provinces as well as to those of the producing provinces. If there is to be any degree of meaningful negotiation between the parties, this process will take some time. If there is any validity to Division I, time will surely not be an important factor.

Consider the situation in which the minister now finds himself. The hon. gentleman says he has been suffering for the last 18 months because this legislation has not been passed. I cannot see how the people of Canada as a whole have suffered, though possibly the people of my province have suffered to the extent that by reason of the policies followed by the government they have contributed two or three billion dollars over the last couple of years toward the welfare of the rest of the country. I do not see how the minister could say he had suffered in this situation.

It is clear that the owners and consumers of energy resources have acted in the spirit of confederation, and acted accordingly without a club hanging over their heads. This, to my mind, is the way in which things should proceed. However, the government believes it has to rewrite the constitution, leaving the owners of the resources with no say in the matter.

I believe my hon. friend from Calgary North has shown himself to be in a very generous and expansive mood this afternoon; it is a serious mistake on the part of the minister not to take him up on his offer. What are two days of debate anyway? What point of view can one get across in Canada in two days? But it does allow something to be said about the relative merits of the arguments, and it will oblige the government to offer some justification for making the proclamation. It is only reasonable that the minister should accept the amendment as proposed and as further amended in an unofficial way by the hon. member for Calgary North. It does not say much for the bona fides of the government and its respect for the idea of co-operative federalism if the minister continues to ignore these proposals. Division will not be used if the government is just given a loaded gun in Division II to use in any way it likes.

We have been talking for the most part about actions which are adverse to the producers of the resources. In different circumstances this weapon could be used to the detriment of the consumers of Canada since in terms of population there are a great many more consumers than producers. Serious consideration should be given to the matter before this clause is approved. The merits of the amendment should be carefully weighed. The matter should not be dealt with in too great a hurry.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I wonder if I could put on record a conversation between the hon. member for Peace River and myself? Since the hon. member for Calgary North did not put his suggestion in precise terms it might be useful to look at an appropriate form of words in this regard and, in order to do so, we might stand not only this clause but clause 36, to which several hon. members have put down amendments.

Mr. Woolliams: Thank you very much.

Mr. Baldwin: The minister seems to accept that there might be some way in which parliament might intervene between the beginning of the situation envisaged by this clause and the time it came into effect. It is a matter of how this is done and the length of time involved, so I think we might stand these two clauses.

The Chairman: Is it agreed that clauses 35 and 36 be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clauses 35 and 36 stand.

Clauses 37 to 40 inclusive agreed to.

● (1520)

Clause 41 agreed to.

An hon. Member: On division.

Clause 42 agreed to.

An hon. Member: On division.

On clause 43—Purchase price.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, I had an amendment which was circulated to hon. members, and I have a second amendment which I will circulate that arises from the remarks made yesterday by the hon. member for Calgary Centre. The first amendment is:

That Bill C-32 be amended by striking out lines 38 and 39 on page 17 thereof and by substituting therefor the following:

"the purchase is made"

The effect of the amendment would be to delete the final phrase of the subclause, and by so doing we would hope to remove an area fertile for ambiguity. The sub-clause prohibits certain purchase transactions except at a price that does not exceed the prescribed price at the time the purchase is made. The original text allowed an alternative "or the contract to purchase" to be entered into. These two transactions are to be distinguished both as to substance and as to time, and could allow of different "prescribed prices". With the amendment the subclause looks only to the effective date of the purchase, and so removes the ambiguity.

The Minister of State for Urban Affairs, with his usual perspicacity, has detected that shortcoming and has insisted that he might have the opportunity of moving this amendment.

Mr. Danson: I so move.

The Chairman: The minister has given notice of three amendments.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I could put the three, if you like, but I thought I should put them seriatim.

Amendment (Mr. Danson) agreed to.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, the object of the next amendment and the rationale are exactly the same as those in the one to 43(1), except that in the former the subject is "purchase" and here it is "sale". So the amendment is:

That Bill C-32 be amended by striking out lines 43 and 44 on page 17 thereof and by substituting therefor the following:

"therefor at the time the sale is made"

The Minister of State for Urban Affairs, I am sure, would love to propose that one.

Mr. Danson: I so move.

Amendment (Mr. Danson) agreed to.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs was also forcibly struck by the argument of the hon. member for Calgary Centre yesterday, particularly in making certain that this does not deal with intraprovincial transactions. I therefore understand he would like to move:

That Bill C-32 be amended by adding immediately after line 44 on page 17 thereof the following:

"(3) This section does not apply in respect of any purchase or sale of crude oil originating in an exporting province when the crude oil is being purchased or sold by a licensee for consumption in that province."

Mr. Danson: I so move.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the minister is prepared now to move some amendments bringing some of the provinces into this.

Amendment (Mr. Danson) agreed to.

Clause 43, as amended, agreed to.

On Clause 44—Evidence required.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, upon examination of the wording of Clause 44 it was suggested to the government by the National Energy Board that the wording was too narrow. An amendment is suggested that would require that either the sender or the recipient of the oil be a licensee under the bill. In the original words the pipeline companies had some difficulty in identifying at any time what oil was the property of a given licensee since the accounting and apportionment procedures take some time.

It has also been suggested that subclause (2) of Clause 44 be amended. The amendment here would remove the requirement on the pipeline companies to keep records, for example in respect of prices, although they do remain liable under Clause 40(c) not to move any oil unless a licensee is a party to a transaction. The present amendment is intended to remove from the pipeline companies the requirement to keep records of prices in contracts to which they are not parties; that is, contracts for purchase and sale of oil. All that the pipeline companies do is move the oil for a fee, and it is their position that they never have or may never have access to information on prices. They would therefore not be able to comply with the original text.

The amendment suggested is as follows:

That Bill C-32 be amended

(a) by striking out lines 7 and 8 on page 18 thereof and by substituting therefor the following:

"the movement or delivery of the crude oil out of"

(b) by striking out lines 12 and 13 on page 18 thereof and by substituting therefor the following:

"engages in a transaction described in paragraphs (a), (b), (d) or (e) of Section 40 shall keep records and books of"

Mr. Danson: I so move.

Amendment (Mr. Danson) agreed to.

Clause 44, as amended, agreed to.

Clauses 45 and 46 agreed to.

● (1530)

On clause 47—Definitions.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, this is similar for natural gas to the definition of "consumption" used in clause 19 for oil. The definition is necessary because there is a reference to consumption in a later clause, clause 53. For this reason I suggest that my colleague might like to move the following amendment:

That Bill C-32 be amended

(a) by adding thereto, immediately after line 27 on page 19 thereof, the following definition:

"consumption" means, in relation to gas, the action of using it as a fuel or energy source or consuming it in the manufacture of products of trade and commerce."

Then there is a second part of the amendment which would read as follows:

(b) by striking out lines 30 to 32, inclusive, on page 19 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

"Under this Part for that gas on or for delivery in any area or zone in Canada and outside its province of production or at any point on the international boundary of Canada;"

This amendment does two things. It relates the definition to the price prescribed for gas "on or for" delivery. The words "or for" are necessary because although in the normal case gas pipelines are owners of the gas which they transport, there are exceptions to these rules; sometimes the gas pipelines are carriers, not owners, just as in the case of oil pipelines. In certain cases gas is sold within a producer province to a utility serving a consumer province. The Saskatchewan Power Commission is an example. That utility takes title to the gas in the producer province, thereafter having it transported by the pipeline company to the consumer province. Another example is that of the greater Winnipeg Gas Company which buys Alberta gas in Alberta and has it transported by Alberta Gas Trunk Line to Empress and by TransCanada Pipelines to Winnipeg. Under the original definition this transaction would not have been regulated.

A second aspect of the amendment is that the area or zone in Canada is specifically related to those outside the province of production, thus making it clear that it is interprovincial trade which is being regulated.

The third part of the amendment to this clause is:

(c) by striking out lines 34 and 35 on page 19 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

"quality of gas,"

The amendment in effect removes some words which are irrelevant. The definition of "price" is not meant to be the same as "prescribed price", and the deletion of the words now removed avoids a possible confusion.

At this point perhaps I should ask my colleague, the President of the Privy Council, to move this amendment:

Mr. Sharp moved:

That Bill C-32 be amended

(a) by adding thereto, immediately after line 27 on page 19 thereof, the following definition:

" "consumption" means, in relation to gas, the action of using it as a fuel or energy source or consuming it in the manufacture of products of trade and commerce;"

(b) by striking out lines 30 to 32, inclusive, on page 19 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

(c) by striking out lines 34 and 35 on page 19 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

"quantity of gas;"

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Amendment (Mr. Sharp) agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 47, as amended, carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 47, as amended, agreed to.

Clause 48 agreed to.

On clause 49—Purpose.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Chairman, I should like to move an amendment to clause 49.

I move:

That clause 49 on page 20 be amended by deleting line 25 and substituting therefor the following:

"Prices of alternative fuels in Canada, in co-operation at all times with the provinces of production which, in the interests and for the protection of consumers in other provinces, has foregone to the degree necessary to this purpose its constitutional autonomy over gas as a natural resource."

The purpose of this amendment is precisely the same as that of the amendment moved earlier in respect of oil. I need not repeat the arguments made at that particular time. The point is that we believe the pricing of these natural resources should be done by the federal and provincial governments working in co-operation and consultation, rather than having something imposed by the federal government. The arguments have been made. I would hope the minister would accept our amendment, although I am not very sure that he will.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): No.

Amendment (Mr. Gillies) negatived on division: Yeas, 14; nays, 30.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): At this same point, with regard to oil may I say at the suggestion of the hon. member for Calgary Centre that certain wording has been added to the bill. I think it might be desirable to move an amendment in this regard, and perhaps the President of the Privy Council would do so.

Mr. Sharp moved:

That Bill C-32 be amended by striking out lines 21 to 25 on page 20 thereof and by substituting therefor the following:

"Producers in Canada;

(c) to protect consumers in Canada from instability of prices for gas and to preserve a reasonable balance between the prices of alternative fuels in Canada; and

(d) to encourage the discovery, development and production of a supply of gas adequate to the self-sufficiency of Canada."

● (1540)

Amendment (Mr. Sharp) agreed to.

Clause 49, as amended, agreed to.

Clause 50 agreed to.

On clause 51—Prescribing prices.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The Minister of Public Works has inspired another amendment, this time to clause 51. He will move:

That Bill C-32 be amended by striking out lines 1 to 4, inclusive, on page 21 thereof and by substituting therefor the following:

"by regulation, prescribe prices at which the various kinds of gas to which this Part applies that are produced, extracted, recovered or manufactured in that province are to be sold on or for delivery in any areas or zones in Canada and outside that province or at any points on the international boundary of Canada".

This amendment does for clause 51(1) what the amendment to the definition of prescribed price does in clause 47, that is, it introduces the concept "or for deliveries" and two words to define the area of delivery as being outside the province of production, thus ensuring that interprovincial trade is regulated and not intraprovincial. The province stated in the previous amendment is the province of the pipeline company.

Mr. Drury: I so move.

Amendment (Mr. Drury) agreed to.

Clause 51, as amended, agreed to.

Oil and Petroleum

On clause 52—Where no price agreement effective.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I think that Clause 52 should stand because the same amendment which we applied to crude petroleum should apply to natural gas. Clause 53 would similarly be affected.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I accept the general proposition of the hon. member for Calgary North but I would point out that we have an amendment to clause 52 which has been previously circulated. Again, it is the Minister of Public Works who will move:

That Bill C-32 be amended by striking out lines 31 to 34, inclusive, on page 21 thereof and by substituting therefor the following:

"at which the various kinds of gas to which this part applies that are produced, extracted, recovered or manufactured in that province are to be sold on or for delivery in any areas or zones in Canada and outside that province or at any points on the international boundary of Canada."

I agree that, subject to the adoption of that amendment, we might stand the clause.

Mr. Drury: I so move.

Amendment (Mr. Drury) agreed to.

The Chairman: Is it agreed that the clause as amended be stood?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 52, as amended, stands.

On clause 53—Prohibition.

Mr. Woolliams: We ask that Clause 53 be stood also.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I have a number of amendments to be moved to that clause. The first is as follows:

● (1550)

That Bill C-32 be amended

(a) by striking out lines 38 to 41, inclusive, on page 21 thereof and by substituting therefor the following:

"(a) move any gas outside its province of production for consumption elsewhere unless the price paid to acquire that gas is a price approved by special or general orders of the Board;"

and

(b) by striking out lines 44 and 45 on page 21 thereof and by substituting therefor the following:

"side that province unless the price paid therefor is approved by the Board; or"

Mr. Drury: I so move.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Amendment (Mr. Drury) agreed to.

[Translation]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, I have before me an amendment also moved by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury):

That Bill C-32 be amended by striking out lines 5 to 8 on page 22 and substituting therefor the following:

"(2) Paragraph (1)(c) does not apply in respect of a sale of gas in a province for consumption therein if the gas was not purchased from"

[Mr. Drury.]

[English]

Mr. Drury: I so move.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Drury) agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall clause 53, as amended, carry?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I think there is agreement that it be stood.

The Chairman: Is it agreed that clause 53, as amended, be stood?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 53, as amended, stands.

Clauses 54 and 55 agreed to.

On clause 56—

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, the text as originally drafted would have required the retail customer in a consuming province to keep records as called for in clause 56. The amendment will remove this requirement from the retail consumer. The amendment to be moved by my colleague is as follows:

That Bill C-32 be amended by striking out line 33 on page 22 thereof and by substituting therefor the following:

"production from the person who brought the gas out of its province of production or caused it to be brought therefrom shall keep records and books of"

Mr. Drury: I so move.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Drury) agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall clause 56, as amended, carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 56, as amended, agreed to.

Clauses 57 and 58 agreed to.

On clause 59—Proof of offence.

Mr. Gillies: On clause 59 we wish to raise the same argument raised on previous occasions about the wording, which seems to indicate that it is putting an undue burden upon the innocent contrary to the general common law of the country. We want again to record our protest. I regret that the minister did not see fit to accept the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Peace River to strike the last four lines in that phrasing.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I am pained that I cause the hon. member regret. The feeling is that this would impose a responsibility on employers to make certain that their employees obey the law.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, this is the kind of legislation we see in the Income Tax Act and other Statutes. It is putting the onus in reverse, which is not our understanding of the jurisprudence of the land. To me it is a great mistake, and I am shocked that the minister, who is by profession a lawyer, insists that this clause remain in the bill.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, this clause reminds me of several which were in a bill sent over to the Senate a few weeks ago. The other place struck out this wording, and the government supinely accepted the Senate amendment. I hope this time the government will stand firm.

The Chairman: Shall clause 59 carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Clause 59 agreed to: Yeas, 28; nays, 15.

The Chairman: It being four o'clock it is my duty to rise, report progress, and request leave to consider the bill again at the next sitting of the House.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, before we move on to other business I should like to raise a point of order at this time in connection with Bill C-58, which is the bill concerning Time and Reader's Digest. The order for consideration of Bill C-58 provides that, in accordance with Standing Order 74(3), the bill should be referred after second reading to a committee of the whole.

As hon. members are aware, many persons and corporations have indicated their interest in making representations on this bill, and discussions through the usual channels have indicated that there is a general agreement that I should now ask for unanimous consent to propose:

That notwithstanding the provisions of Standing Order 74(3), when Bill C-58 is read a second time, it shall be referred to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

● (1600)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members have heard the suggestion and the request of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp). Is there unanimous consent to the proposal made by the hon. minister?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Carried.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, before the government House leader escapes to draft more motions on Bill C-32 perhaps he could indicate what we will be doing on Monday.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, it would be the desire of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to continue with Bill C-32 on Monday. On Tuesday we will revert to the favourite of the House of Commons, Bill C-44.

Old Age Security Act

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I do not rise just for the purpose of dissenting from a comment made by the government House leader, because my position on Bill C-44 is well known. I should like to ask the government House leader what the business will be for the remainder of Monday if we finish Bill C-32 during the day.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, in announcing the business for the forthcoming days yesterday afternoon I said I should like to call upon my colleague, the Secretary of State, to proceed with Bill C-20. I am not quite sure whether he will be well enough, but that would be my intention.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills, notices of motions, and private bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

RESIDENCY REQUIREMENT AMENDMENT

On the order:

Second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs of Bill C-235, an act to amend the Old Age Security Act—Mr. Whittaker.

Miss Campbell: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps it is a little premature and I should have allowed Your Honour to call the bill number before rising on a point of order.

Mr. Lefebvre: I think Your Honour will find that there has been discussion in the usual high places and there is agreement to discuss Bill C-235 today, which stands in the name of the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Am I to assume there is agreement to discuss the bill on which there is some disagreement otherwise?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed at least that we try to proceed with Bill C-235 standing in the name of the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker)?

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, I have risen on this matter before, voicing my objections to the procedure we are following on private members' business. On the order paper since October 15, 1974, is item No. 3, put on the order paper by the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson), and dealing with loansharking. Item No. 4 was put on the order paper by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid), and it deals with the office of ombudsman. Item No. 10 dealing with the protection of domestic animals was put on the order paper by the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. O'Sullivan). Item No. 24 dealing with extending the limits of the capital of Canada was put on the order paper by the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle). Item No. 32, dealing with proxy voting, was put on the order paper by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner).

All these items were put on the order paper on October 15 and I think it is time we received the reasons why they have been passed over in the intervals. It is six months or more since they were put on the order paper, and I should like to see them proceeded with.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has the right to raise this point of order again. I should like to refer him to Standing Order 18(1) which reads:

All items standing on the Orders of the Day, except Government Orders, shall be taken up according to the precedence assigned to each on the Order Paper.

By the rule book this means that the House should call item by item those that appear on the order paper. The only problem is that if they are not proceeded with they go down to the end of the list, and the hon. member directly concerned loses his turn. The practice in recent years has been to ascertain ahead of time the availability of members to proceed with their bills.

If the hon. member does not give unanimous consent I will call each of the bills on the order paper, one by one. Of course he did not say that he would not give unanimous consent if he received the explanations requested. I am not in the position to give that explanation, however, but if any hon. member in the House can give the answer to this request we are ready to listen; otherwise we will proceed in the normal way as the Standing Order directs.

Miss Campbell: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the bill before us on private members' hour—

An hon. Member: No bill has been called yet.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Because of the dissent of the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) I have to say that the bill in front of the House at this time is Bill C-208, an act respecting National Heritage Day, standing in the name of the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan), to be proceeded with at third reading stage, unless there is consent to go directly to Bill C-235.

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to be difficult. I just want to point out that this is the fourth occasion I have raised this matter. I think we should be given reasons why these bills are left on the order paper for six months. I am not going to carry on further with this procedure today. The normal process should apply, but from here on members should be ready to proceed when their bills are called.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to proceed today with the consideration of Bill C-235 Standing in the name of the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker)?

[Mr. Herbert.]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: And that all other bills preceding this bill retain their place on the order paper?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Miss Campbell: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I regret my inexperience in presenting this point of order but Bill C-235 now before the House, under the provisions of Section 54 of the BNA Act needs a resolution. If this bill should pass the House today it would mean that a private member has been able to ask for an appropriation of funds. Under the BNA Act this is virtually impossible. I submit this bill is out of order because it has no royal resolution accompanying it. According to Beauchesne money bills should have royal recommendation and be introduced by a minister of the government.

Mr. Macquarrie: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should like to observe that if this bill is standing on the order paper after the scrutiny of Mr. Speaker and others, its credibility is somewhat in order. Having studied the bill very carefully I see that what it intends and proposes is the extension of a development for recognition of certain citizen groups, and it does not in any way impose upon the national treasury. En passant, in reference to the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert), I think he is unaware of the great progress made on a bill in respect of National Heritage Day through committee. That is why there has been great agreement on this matter.

Mr. Whittaker: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, I think it is terrible to use the rules of this House in this manner against old age pensioners and I do not subscribe to the statement that the bill is out of order, or that it would add excess expenditure. The bill is attempting to provide a qualifying period for overseas service and to treat that time as time spent in Canada for purposes of qualifying for the old age pension.

Surely the government is not going to argue that there is no money for old age pensions. In this bill we are only talking about the qualification for an old age pension. In many instances people have served in this country in the armed forces and not gone overseas, and they have qualified. We are talking about people like that, and about people who were stationed outside Canada. I hope members of the government have not come here to say that there is no money for old age pensions. This bill, if passed, does not necessarily mean anybody is going to qualify. It merely sets out certain conditions they must meet if and when they do qualify. Once again this shows how selfish and self-centred is the government with which we are dealing here.

Miss Campbell: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, if the intent of the bill before the House is to include a new category of persons eligible for old age security, it would be adding to the Old Age Security Act as it presently stands. I don't think anyone can say that the government is not concerned about the old age security of people in Canada. The record speaks for itself. If Bill C-235 were to make even one new person entitled to money under the Old Age Security Act, it would increase the scope of the act. I remind the House that there is a recent decision right on that point.

Mr. Young: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I suggest, as the parliamentary secretary said, that it is not open to a private member to propose a bill which increases the amount of money to be spent under a law of this country. Otherwise, for example, it would be open for a private member to propose a bill which would double pensions paid to senior citizens. I think that was the parliamentary secretary's point. I submit that money bills must be preceded by the royal recommendation. Of course if the number of senior citizens in the country were doubled or if the age of eligibility were altered, more money would be paid out of the national treasury. I think the point made by the parliamentary secretary is valid.

Mr. Poulin: Mr. Speaker, I commend the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker) for bringing forward this bill. I think it makes a major suggestion which ought to be considered at the proper time, in the proper way. The parliamentary secretary has defined the position. If this bill passes it will become a charge on the treasury of this country. Such a charge can only be proposed by the treasury benches, as the recent decision of Mr. Speaker makes clear.

We, on my side, are most interested in seeing that all senior citizens who would be included in the new classification are given the benefits to which they are entitled, but we know this must be done within the rules established by parliament. In my view this bill is out of order, for the reasons given by the hon. member for South Western Nova (Miss Campbell).

Mr. Reynolds: Mr. Speaker, listening to the last speaker say how great the bill is almost brought tears to my eyes. The hon. member opposite suggested that this bill would add to the provisions of the Old Age Security Act and that this could only be done at the proper time, in the proper way. I suggest that the proposal of the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker) would not add any new money to be spent on people in this country. There is already in existence a law under which we pay old age pensioners money they so well deserve. Certainly this bill would provide pensions for some people who fought for their country. There is something wrong with a government which will not agree to passing, in less than an hour, a bill which will provide benefits for people who fought for this country and made it great. There is something wrong with a government which challenges this kind of bill. After all, Mr. Speaker must have seen it and agreed to its inclusion on the order paper, or it would not be in the list of bills on the order paper.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, certainly members do not intend to discredit the idea behind the hon. member's bill. I think the parliamentary secretary, however, wisely pointed out that a bill involving the expenditure of funds is beyond the realm of a private member.

I sincerely compliment the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Reynolds) who spoke so eloquently about senior citizens. Nevertheless, no matter how worthwhile the bill is, it must conform to the rules. I am afraid I agree with the parliamentary secretary. This bill does not fall within the prerogative of private members.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the points of order raised in connection with Bill C-235. Like my colleague for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Reynolds), I listened with amazement at some of the remarks from across the way. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Anderson) made, as he does from time to time, a logical and constructive contribution to this House. Apparently there is some procedural difficulty with Bill C-235, even though it has cleared the hurdle of the Table. Surely remarks like that constitute a vicarious insult to Table officers, and to those responsible for seeing the bill placed on the order paper. Members of the government have been standing up and saying that they are in sympathy with the subject matter of the bill. The eye which looks at the bill that way has a tear in it. But the other eye, with its narrower vision, sees some misty, hazy, procedural objection, which will deny to senior citizens who are or should be qualified benefits for which they fought so hard.

I was surprised to hear the remarks of the hon. member for South Western Nova (Miss Campbell), the parliamentary secretary. I know of her interest in certain problems affecting the health and welfare of Canadians at large and, it is to be hoped, of her own constituents. I was absolutely amazed to hear what she said, in view of her interest shown in the people of South Western Nova before she became a member, and that she would be a party—

Miss Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I have listened for long enough to comments against my constituency in connection with this matter. It should be remembered that this proposed provision may apply to a few Canadians only, and not, as the hon. member suggests, to my constituency.

● (1620)

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to prolong this because I am going to come up with what I think will be a very constructive, healthy compromise to resolve the dilemma. The fact is that the subject matter of the bill in effect gives credit to those who fought outside the country for their pension entitlement. I would think that with the humane interest of the hon. member for South Western Nova (Miss Campbell) as a member, she would find support for that proposition, but unfortunately, donning the cloaks and robes of parliamentary secretary, she has to look at it from another point of view. I know this means running counter to her fundamental interest.

In order to resolve these problems and wash away the crocodile tears so that people can have clear vision, I do not see why this House, because of the fundamental interest in the humanity of the bill, cannot by unanimous consent refer the subject matter of the bill to the appropriate committee for due deliberation, in order that we do not run into any narrow procedural rule which would put this on the side tracks.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. The hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan) has raised a very interesting point. We have adopted the practice in the House of allowing the subject matter of certain private members' bills to go to committee. The reason that practice has crept in is to avoid the possibility of a bill that would not be in order passing second reading stage in this House and going on to committee. The inference there obviously is that private members' bills, and quite rightly so because it would certainly overtax the Table, do not receive the same scrutiny as bills emanating from the treasury benches. For that reason I submit that the point raised by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley is very valid.

In the spirit of private members' hour I am sure the House would be disposed to allow debate to take place on this very important subject. I also feel there would be sufficient sympathy for the aims and objectives of the bill to allow the subject matter to be referred to committee.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I notice a number of eyes looking in my direction. I am not surprised at that. I wonder if the last speaker and the one before him are aware that when they suggest having the subject matter discussed in committee, this House of Commons has already passed a motion in the name of the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker) urging the government to take the very step that is in this bill. Passing on another pious wish would be of no help. We have already passed a motion, which was amended, asking the government to bring in legislation to do precisely what is set out in this bill.

On the point of order I really do not think many members are going to accuse me of being against old age pensioners, or of being unwilling to support any move that improves the old age pension in any way, shape or form.

In previous debates on this subject I have supported strongly the position taken by the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary. However, in all conscience I cannot argue on Tuesday that a money bill, or even amendments to a money bill, must have a royal recommendation, and then on Friday say it is not necessary. The point that came out of the procedural debate on Tuesday and Wednesday was that amendments to a certain bill made by private members in committee could not be considered, but that the mistakes there could be corrected by a minister bringing in the necessary amendment and the royal recommendation.

What ought to come out of the debate in January, and out of the discussion this afternoon, is a plea to the government to do what the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary means to do. In other words, the government, through the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), should bring in a bill along these lines, or a bill including this proposal, as the House unanimously has already asked the government to do.

Let us not get tied up in arguments to the effect that the side you take on a procedural point decides the side you are on in the issue itself. What is before us is a point of order. Your Honour may decide to let the House discuss it, but I do not see how Your Honour can let the House come to a vote on a bill about which there is a procedural question.

With regard to the point that two or three members have raised, I wish members would be aware of what has gone on before making wild assertions. The assertion that because the bill is on the order paper it has the approval of the Table and the Chair, is really not correct. When all these bills were brought down on October 15—and I am grateful to the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) for bringing the date to my attention—Mr. Speaker entered a caveat. There were 158 bills and he did not have time to check to see if they were all in order. His Honour said that would be done as and when the bills were called.

I am not going back on the argument I made on Tuesday, and which the Speaker supported on Wednesday. I think Your Honour would make a mistake if you allowed this money bill to proceed to a vote without the royal recommendation being attached to it. Perhaps some way can be found by unanimous consent to spend the rest of the hour discussing the substance, but not a bill that is not in order when moved by a private member.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, along the lines of the suggestion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), could I ask whether the Chair would be disposed to getting the unanimous consent of this House to discuss the subject matter of this bill and hopefully have it disposed of by reference to the committee.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, this is a momentous occasion because it is the first time that I rise to speak on a point of order. With regard to the comments just made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), possibly this suggestion might be of some help.

There seems to be a very serious question as to whether this House is correct in continuing discussion on this private member's bill for the reasons put forward by the parliamentary secretary and others. I wonder whether the substance of what the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker) is after has not been achieved in the debate that has gone on since four o'clock, and whether he is not anxious to see the government move certain amendments to the Old Age Security Act which might encompass the kind of suggestion he is proposing. I suggest this particular debate might put that emphasis on his proposal.

Miss Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the new point of order raised by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) raised a point that was before the House on January 31, 1975, and before that. Once amended, there was unanimous consent at that time to bring it forth. I remind this House that the Speech from the Throne stated there would be amendments, particularly with regard to those who at some point had been resident outside Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The parliamentary secretary is engaging in debate.

Miss Campbell: No, Mr. Speaker. This is a new point of order to discuss the substance. I just want to say that this will be brought before the House.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) made a proposition. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is perfectly correct. We cannot discuss this unless there is some form of unanimity. But in a matter as important as this, despite the fact that there was a motion of the House passed unanimously, the kind of motion which affords some protection by way of anonymity to those members who are here, the only way we can get anywhere on this is to put some pressure on the government.

If there were a willingness to give unanimous consent to discuss the subject matter, my hon. friend, or someone acting on his behalf, would have to move an amendment, and a debate could take place in the remaining half hour which would smoke out those who might piously indicate that they are in favour of the measure but, that unfortunately, they cannot discuss it because it is out of order. I hope none of them are, in fact, present in the House at this moment. This would give an opportunity for us to reflect and offer the government an indication of our views between now and five o'clock. If unanimous consent is not given, that would, of course, settle the matter.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I thank hon. members for their interest in the problem the House is facing at this time. I am sure they will agree with me that we should deal with first things first and consider the point of order which was raised by the parliamentary secretary before we see if there is unanimous consent to any other action the House might wish to take in the rest of the time available.

The point raised by the parliamentary secretary is well taken, and hon. members need hardly go to the trouble of reminding the Chair of Standing Order 62(1), which is very clear and says:

> This House shall not adopt or pass any vote, resolution, address or bill for the appropriation of any part of the public revenue, or of any tax or impost, to any purpose that has not been first recommended to the House by a message from the Governor General in the session in which such vote, resolution, address or bill is proposed.

The Standing Order is very clear. Hon. members who take the trouble to read some of the material around Citation 265 of Beauchesne will find precedents which confirm the application of this Standing Order over the years. It is very difficult for the Chair to overlook this restriction as far as our proceedings are concerned.

Of course the objective and the principle involved in the proposal made by the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker) are not questioned at this time. What the Chair is concerned about is whether or not this proposed Bill C-235 has a money implication and whether or not it might impose a financial burden on the public treasury. This is the main point which has been raised by hon. members.

The hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) and the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan) were concerned about the involvement of the Chair, with regard to the point of order raised by the parliamentary secretary. But I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) gave an answer to that when he reminded us that Mr. Speaker did make a reservation when all these bills were presented—that he warned hon. members by entering a caveat that the Chair was reserving its decision as to the acceptability of the hundred or so measures which were presented to the House all at the same time.

I am, of course, concerned about any legislation which may be of benefit to the population of Canada, and I was hoping that some hon. member might be able to prove to me that there is no money implication in the bill proposed. While hon. members were fighting their way through the procedural points I was trying to see whether or not it was possible for an armed forces veteran to reach the age of 65 and be entitled to old age security before the period of ten years. I was not in a position to establish this, and so as far as I am concerned I still have a doubt in my mind as to whether it is possible for a Canadian, maybe not in peacetime but in wartime, to come out of the armed forces and be eligible for old age security pension by reaching the age of 65, which is in the act at this time. So there is, to my mind, a money implication in this bill.

I myself have been in the chair on two occasions in this House within recent weeks when there was unanimous agreement to consider proposals which had money implications so as not to lose the time available for private members' hour. Although I did make a caveat I did let the House debate such proposals.

But I feel that after giving this warning, and inviting hon. members not to put the Chair too often in this kind of situation, at the same time, in the light of the decision rendered by Mr. Speaker on Bill C-44 this week, which I think gave more importance than ever to the need for a royal recommendation to be attached to a piece of legislation, or to be presented at the same time an amendment is presented either in committee or in this House, at report stage or at any other stage, I feel that if there is to be a recommendation to be attached to this bill because of its money implications, it should be done now. I would be surprised if the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary had such a recommendation available. Because of all these considerations I cannot allow the bill in its present form to be debated at this time.

As far as another suggestion is concerned that there might be unanimous consent to discharge the order and then allow the hon. member to withdraw his bill, can the House then decide to debate the subject matter? I do not see too much difficulty about that. I feel there is no real precedent, but there are a few minutes left before the House adjourns for the weekend, and if there is unanimous consent to debate the subject matter, after we have taken the bill off the order paper, I would have no objection and I would be ready, by unanimous consent, to allow the subject matter to be debated.

Mr. Lefebvre: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, could you inform us what you are asking us to do between now and five o'clock? I did not quite get the end of it.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, you would permit the hon. member to withdraw his bill with the understanding that the House would give leave to have the subject matter of the bill discussed during the time remaining.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps I made a mistake. I did not realize that the bill had never been in front of the House; so the hon. member cannot withdraw the bill from the House at this time. But let it be ordered that the bill be struck from the order paper, which it would be in any case following this decision from the Chair. Is the House prepared by unanimous consent to debate the subject matter of this bill between now and five o'clock?

● (1640)

Mr. Lefebvre: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that is agreed as long as the parliamentary secretary and others have equal time to reply to the statements the hon. member wishes to make.

Mr. McGrath: That is totally unfair, and I am surprised at you.

Mr. Lefebvre: I was surprised at you years ago.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Apparently there is not an indication of unanimous consent, so unless there is another item of business I will have to call it five o'clock.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, let the record show that the government whip has refused uanimous consent to proceed with this debate.

Mr. Lefebvre: No way.

Mr. McGrath: We will keep this in mind when other bills come up, such as the bill standing in the name of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) which calls for the appointment of an ombudsman, and definitely involves a charge on the Crown. We will treat it in the same way.

Some hon. Members: Five o'clock.

Miss Campbell: Mr. Speaker, let it appear on the record as well that the government whip asked that there be equal time.

Mr. Dick: In an out of the normal way.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that I should call it five o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock this House stands adjourned until Monday at 2 p.m.

At 4.44 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

WELCOME TO MEMBER FOR PRINCE ALBERT ON RETURN TO HOUSE FOLLOWING ILLNESS

Mr. Speaker: I know that despite our haste to demonstrate our willingness to see the new procedures remain effective, hon. members would not begrudge one moment out of the time set aside for motions pursuant to Standing Order 43 to make note of the return to active service amongst us this afternoon of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Despite the reforms and the efficiency, with which we now conduct our question period, there has been something missing of late which, I am sure, we will see promptly return to the question period.

VIET NAM—PROPOSED INQUIRY INTO FAILURE OF EMBASSY TO EVACUATE VIETNAMESE MEMBERS OF STAFF—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity concerning the deplorable stance assumed by the Canadian government in its refusal to expedite the evacuation of the Vietnamese employed by its embassy in Saigon on the premise that exit visas were unobtainable. In light of the successful efforts on the parts of both Pan-American airways and the British embassy in Saigon to evacuate Vietnamese members of their staffs, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander):

That the government order an immediate parliamentary inquiry into the failure of the Canadian Embassy to evacuate its Vietnamese staff.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This motion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, cannot be debated without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SUGGESTED REDUCTION OF MORTGAGE INTEREST RATE TO STIMULATE CONSTRUCTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the recent increase in mortgage interest rates, an increase which can only have the effect of further depressing housing starts as we enter the peak of the building season, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent):

That the House instruct the Minister of State for Urban Affairs and the Minister of Finance to immediately reduce mortgage interest rates to increase funding for the Assisted Home Ownership Program, non-profit and public housing programs of CMHC and having a target of 400,000 starts in housing for 1975.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This motion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, cannot be debated without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROPOSED INQUIRY INTO BANKING PROCEDURES OF CIDA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. I am prompted to do so by Neil Overend's statement in Committee on April 24 that some $2.7 million of CIDA's money has been sitting in a non-interest account in a Kenyan bank for over five months, which is either an under-handed way of granting Kenya hard foreign currency or a matter of gross incompetence. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie):

That the government order an immediate inquiry into the banking procedures of CIDA and other government agencies to see what other sums of Canadian taxpayers' money have not been earning interest over long stretches of time.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This motion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, cannot be debated without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF APPROVAL OF TAKEOVER OF BUSHNELL COMMUNICATIONS BY STANDARD BROADCASTING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity which relates to a meeting that is planned for three o'clock this afternoon. In view of the announcement over the weekend of the acquisition of a substantial ownership by Power Corporation in Argus Corporation, and in view of the previous approval granted by CRTC for the acquisition of a controlling interest in Bushnell Communications by Standard Broadcasting, a subsidiary of Argus Corporation, I move:

That the Minister of Communications request the CRTC to review the approval given to Standard Broadcasting to determine whether or not the takeover of Bushnell Communications is in the public interest.

AIR CANADA

PROPOSED AMENDMENT OF TERMS OF REFERENCE OF ESTEY INQUIRY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43 respecting the recently announced inquiry into certain aspects of Air Canada's management and operations. Since the order in council P.C. 1975-963 appears deficient in that it does not authorize Commissioner Estey to make recommendations arising out of his fact finding powers, as is usually the case under the Inquiries Act, and since this defect could seriously curtail the effectiveness of the commission, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall):

That this House urges the governor in council to amend order in council P.C. 1975-963 by adding to the specific powers of the commissioner the following additional power, as paragraph (d): "(d) to make recommendations to the government as to possible measures to be taken in respect of and arising out of the findings of the commissioner".

NATIONAL PARKS

REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF DOCKAGE FEES TO ST. LAWRENCE ISLANDS NATIONAL PARKS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to propose a motion on a matter of extreme concern to my constituency of Leeds, and to other constituencies along the St. Lawrence River area. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

● (1410)

That in regard to the recently announced dockage fees for the St. Lawrence Islands National Parks located in the Thousand Islands region, in view of the fact that such application is impractical and collection costs in manpower and boats would likely exceed the amount collected, and in view of the heavy costs such tolls will place on residents in the area, the House requests the government to take steps to withdraw the announced charges.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is moved pursuant to Standing Order 43 and cannot be debated without unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity, and the motion cannot be put.

VIET NAM—ALLEGATION VIETNAMESE STAFF MEMBERS LEFT BEHIND WHEN EMBASSY CLOSED—METHOD OF OBTAINING INFORMATION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister, who told the House on Friday last that the government had no information to confirm reports that when the embassy was closed in Saigon there were left behind Vietnamese who had permission from the Vietnamese government to leave the country. Has the Acting Prime Minister yet been able to check this situation out? If so, what is it?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the inquiries made by the Department of External Affairs confirm that we took out of Saigon all those who had permission to leave. We have no reason to believe that there were any others who could have come aboard. Indeed, when the ambassador was going to the airport, five Vietnamese were removed from the car because they did not have permission.

Mr. Stanfield: The Acting Prime Minister has directed his response to the time at which that flight took place. My question really deals with whether there are Vietnamese there now who have such permission and, specifically, how does the Canadian government obtain reliable information now from South Viet Nam since the embassy has been closed and all diplomatic and immigration personnel are withdrawn?

Mr. Sharp: We put a question to the government of the United States, which still has a mission in Viet Nam, and the information we received was that up to the time we had made the inquiry, which was yesterday, there had been no change. Permission was still being denied.

Mr. Stanfield: So, the government of Canada is now dependent on the United States government for information from South Viet Nam?

Mr. Woolliams: It always has been.

Mr. Stanfield: The embassy of Great Britain has made strenuous and apparently successful efforts to obtain permission for members of their staff who are Vietnamese citizens to leave the country. Has the Acting Prime Minister any explanation for this in view of the apparent failure of the government of Canada to obtain similar permission?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, our embassy has made very strong representations to Vietnamese authorities and had been doing so over a period of many days before the withdrawal. I understand that the British government has a different arrangement with respect to their locally employed staff: after the locally employed staff has been working some time with the British government, they are provided passports. That is not possible under Canadian law.

VIET NAM—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO AID VIETNAMESE WISHING TO COME TO CANADA

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, according to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration some 1,908 Vietnamese families have authority to come to Canada. My question to the Acting Prime Minister is: what is the government doing at the present time to find out exactly how many of these people are now in receipt of permission from whatever is left of the Saigon authority to leave the country?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Before the Canadian embassy was withdrawn, we had made representations on innumerable occasions on behalf of relatives of Canadian Vietnamese in Canada or who are here on landed immigrant status, to such a point that Vietnamese authorities asked us not to issue authority for these individuals to come to Canada because the Vietnamese authorities said that we were just raising false expectations. They did not intend to give exit permits.

Mr. McGrath: A supplementary question. In view of what now appears to be the total breakdown of what is left of the government of South Viet Nam and in view of the fact that there are almost 2,000 Vietnamese with permits to come to Canada, is the government going to use its good offices in Hanoi and with the PRG—by virtue of our experience with the truce commission—to make an appeal to have these people come to Canada in anticipation of the total collapse of the South Vietnamese government?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, in these circumstances I think we would have a greater chance of success if we could establish relations with whatever government takes power in South Viet Nam. One of the great problems we face, and I am sure this will be understood by members of the opposition, is that we have to conduct ourselves in such a way that if and when a change of government takes place we will be in a position to make successful representations.

Mr. McGrath: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Acting Prime Minister if during the interim the Canadian government has made any attempt whatsoever to have a Canadian immigration officer attached to either the United States legation in Saigon or the French legation in Saigon to process the papers of those South Vietnamese who may very well have permits to come to Canada?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, we made representations to the American government some days ago. We said that if any of these people to whom we have given letters or visas, and we provided the Americans with a list of them, did manage to get out of Viet Nam in any evacuation that the Americans may be able to enforce, we would be responsible for them financially, for their passage and so forth. It seemed to us that this was the most effective thing we could do on behalf of these people if they managed to get out.

HOUSING

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO REDUCE MORTGAGE INTEREST RATE AND INCREASE NUMBER OF STARTS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs and concerns mortgage interest rates. Considering that mortgage payments for the average family are now in the neighbourhood of $350 to $400 per month, and considering that the legislation which the House passed about a month ago had the effect, through its indirect subsidy to the banks, of driving up the interest rates which is what the New Democratic Party said would happen, can the minister tell the House what steps he intends to take, other than moral suasion, to get the banks to bring down the mortgage interest rate?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wish the hon. member would consult an economist and see the relationship of the subsidy to low income people who are buying housing under the existing scheme which is affected by the entire interest rate. This rate has not had any effect in increasing rates. There are many other factors at work which are being examined and discussed. We are doing everything possible to make sure that rates are kept as low as possible to enable those Canadians who need low cost housing to get it.

Mr. Broadbent: In short, nothing new. Considering that housing starts for 1975 are down by almost 50 per cent over last year and will run at an annual rate which is probably the lowest for ten years, will the minister tell the House if he has some new program that will significantly increase housing starts for the rest of the year, particularly as we are approaching the busiest time of the year for house construction?

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, when I have new programs to announce, I will announce them. I think it would be unreasonable to announce what we intend to do and have it held up by parliamentary committees as the last legislation was, thus creating uncertainty. When the market drops we expect to see an improvement and we will announce it at the appropriate time.

Mr. Broadbent: A supplementary question. Considering the serious need for housing in the country and the high and increasing unemployment, could the minister assure the House that whatever is done—and preferably before budget time—will have as its objective for 1975 not 210,000 housing starts but a minimum of 400,000?

● (1420)

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, we are going to work within the realm of reality and realism.

SOCIAL WELFARE—CONSULTATION WITH QUEBEC ON AMOUNTS TO BE PAID

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

As the Quebec Minister of Social Affairs is in the process of revising the standards to be used in determining the amount of assistance to be paid monthly in the future to the needy in that province, and as the federal government pays part of this payment, can the minister tell us whether he has had consultations with his opposite number in Quebec in this regard, and can he give the House some information on the whole matter?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it may be that my officials have had consultations, but I have not had any personal exchanges with my Quebec colleague. However, a federal-provincial conference of welfare ministers is scheduled for next Wednesday and Thursday, at which time I may have the opportunity of discussing the matter with him.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—REASON FOR EARLY EVACUATION OF EMBASSY

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. As members of the Canadian news media have had the courage and ability to remain in the South Vietnamese capital and are now our only link with that capital, and as other countries have left their embassy staffs in Saigon, and these staffs are doing their job—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Hees: My question is, why did the Canadian government find it necessary to order our embassy staff to evacuate from that capital so early.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we took the decision for the two reasons which have already been announced. They are: There was nothing the embassy could now do, if it had remained; secondly, there was the increasing danger to personnel. My hon. friend should bear in mind we would not want either of two things to happen. We would not want to have our evacuation dependent on the Americans. Secondly, we would not want to have our employees held hostage while we complied with the regulations of the new government.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I understand the embassy staff of Australia are still in that country. If it is possible for the courageous members of the Canadian news media to remain in that country and have confidence in their ability to get out, why would there be any greater difficulty in evacuating the members of the Canadian embassy staff?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I think the situation is quite different because, as may be the case, members of the Canadian media are dependent upon the Americans for their evacuation plans; but I, as the acting foreign minister of Canada, would not want to have Canadian officials in that position.

VIET NAM—REQUEST FOR ACTION TO AID VIETNAMESE MEMBERS OF CANADIAN EMBASSY STAFF

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): It's nice to have you back.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I need not to say how deeply touched I was by the message you sent to me on behalf of the members of this House, and the many letters and messages I received from all parts of the House. This shows me, once more, what wonderful comradeship the House of Commons always exemplifies. From the bottom of my heart I thank all hon. members who got in touch with me. It meant a great deal.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Having said that by way of preliminary, I now wish to ask a question about something which is being discussed, namely, those members of the Canadian mission in Saigon who are South Vietnamese. One, two, or possibly three, come from the north and are North Vietnamese. Unless something is done on their behalf, they face almost certain extermination. Although there was plenty of notice that the situation was worsening, and although it was known that action would have to be taken, it was not. I now suggest that the Canadian government should get in touch with the American government, even though the minister displays an aversion to having the Americans look after our interests, ask it to get in touch with the American embassy and have the American embassy communicate with those South Vietnamese who stood with us in the dark hours.

I have seen them there. Months ago they feared an ultimate victory of the North. Will the government request the United States embassy to get in touch with these several employees of the Canadian embassy and endeavour to arrange for exit permits for them? The conscience of Canada is asking for action. Press reports to the effect that these people were denied transportation while two automobiles and some vases were loaded in their place, is something that ought to be clarified. The government should now get in touch with the United States and ask for its co-operation in bringing about the preservation of the lives of those who gave their all for Canada by remaining on duty.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the government, I would express my delight at seeing the right hon. member for Prince Albert back in his seat in his usual form and, more than that, in such good health.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: I will now attempt to deal with the questions that have been put by the right hon. member. We made many efforts to get exit permits granted to the staff of our embassy in Saigon. I should first make it clear that not all of them want to leave. I rather regret the implication of the right hon. member's question that association with Canada is going to put their lives in jeopardy because I do not think that is so. Canada has always acted in Viet Nam in a very objective way. We were members of the International Control Commission. I do not believe it can be said that we became involved, as did the United States, in the war between the North and the South.

On the second point, as evidence of the problem that we face, I said in reply to a previous question that our ambassador did attempt to take to the airport five Vietnamese who were relatives of Vietnamese in Canada. They were taken out of the car and refused permission to proceed. I do not think the House quite realizes it is not that we want a piece of paper. That is not our problem. The problem is that Vietnamese who wanted to get to the airport without a permit from the Vietnamese government were denied access. Their progress was impeded. We had no armed forces. We had no way of running such a blockade.

I say to my right hon. friend that we did as much as we could do under the circumstances. We have provided the American government with lists of relatives of Vietnamese in Canada. We were successful to a limited extent. On the plane that came out, we brought some dependants of Vietnamese. I forget the number. There were not many. However, we brought as many at that time as were given permission to leave.

We are doing what we can to help in the situation. However, as I said previously, we have to act in a way that we can be successful. Even though we get some out now, there are going to be a great many who will remain. We want to be able to act on their behalf in affecting reunification of families in the future.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I was not dealing with the general group in South Viet Nam. I was speaking specifically of the six or eight in the Canadian mission there. I am not speaking of the larger group. I asked whether the minister would reconsider and get in touch with the Americans. After all, these people who were employed there have some diplomatic rights. They should be entitled to leave. If the Americans get in touch and are successful, will the government of Canada provide a plane to bring to Canada these people who, despite the minister's optimistic statement as to their future, face almost certain death?

● (1430)

Mr. Sharp: May I deal with just one of those cases? The driver of the automobile which took the Chargé d'Affaires out to the airport for the evacuation got through, of course, because he was driving the car. He boarded the plane and it was then discovered he was the father of nine children; he was persuaded it would be better if he did not abandon them in Viet Nam. So, he left. We do have a responsibility toward these people, but I want to say to the right hon. gentleman that not all of them want to leave Viet Nam. I believe we have more of a responsibility for the dependants and relatives of Vietnamese in Canada than we have for these people, because they have no special ties with Canada and it does not necessarily follow they would wish to come to Canada.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A most evasive answer.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT OF AHOP PROGRAM TO INCLUDE LAND SERVICED BY SEPTIC TANKS

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs; it arises out of the statement made on Friday by the hon. gentleman to the effect that there are still funds available for the AHOP program. In view of the high demand in my area for funding under this program—no doubt there is a similar demand in other areas of rural Canada where people live in small communities—and in view of the fact that under present policy the program is not available to them, would the minister consider amending government policy so as to make land serviced by septic tanks eligible under the program?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I am pleased my hon. friend has noted the success of the program, as hon. members opposite have always done. I would point out that 40,000 NHA loans have been made in rural areas, mostly in respect of property served by septic tanks. Nevertheless, the regulations may be overly rigid in some areas, and I am in the process of studying the policy at the present time to make certain it is realistic and that while maintaining the high standard which I am sure all members wish to maintain, it results in a little more freedom of action.

Mr. Blais: While it is good to learn the minister is reviewing the policy, can we encourage him to reach a decision before May 31?

Mr. Danson: I hope a decision will be made well before May 31.

TRANSPORT

FREIGHT RATES—REQUEST FOR ACTION TO PREVENT INCREASES COMING INTO EFFECT ON MAY 5

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister arising out of the 20 per cent across-the-board increase in class freight rates filed by the Canadian railways and due to come into effect on May 5? In view of the fact that on February 24 the Minister of Transport, along with four western provincial ministers of transport, announced that there had been a break-through with respect to this matter and that he—the federal minister—was opposed to this increase in rates, what action is the government taking to ensure that the commitment made by the federal Minister of Transport is carried out and that this increase in freight rates will not come into effect on May 5?

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): I will take that question as notice, Mr. Speaker, and get a reply for the hon. member.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Since the minister is not here, and since the Acting Prime Minister is not able to make any statement on government policy, may I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether he will assure the House that either he or the Minister of Transport will make a statement to the House within the next few days before this increase in freight rates comes into effect so that we may have some idea of what the policy of the government is, and whether or not the commitment made by the minister on February 24 is to be carried out?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): The Minister of Transport will be here tomorrow and I hope the hon. member will direct this inquiry to him. I am sure he will be prepared to answer it.

[Mr. Danson.]

STRIKE OF LONGSHOREMEN IN QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ENFORCE COMPLIANCE WITH BACK-TO-WORK LEGISLATION

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, the House has been informed of the considerable damage being done by the continuation of the strike in the Port of Montreal. My question to the Minister of Labour is this: since only two of the 2500 Quebec longshoremen ordered back to work have decided to go back, thus disobeying the back-to-work legislation, is the government taking immediate action to make sure that the law is complied with in this instance?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, we are having officials of the Department of Justice examine the entire situation with a view to taking appropriate legal action.

Mr. Grafftey: Because of the gravity of the situation, will the minister inform the House precisely what action is contemplated? Will it be taken immediately? What specific action is contemplated to help the Quebec farmer whose supply of feedstuff is being shut off?

An hon. Member: You were not here when we discussed this.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): As to the question about the supply of grain, there is no doubt this is a grave situation; we intend to do whatever we can in that particular area. As to the first part of the hon. gentleman's question, legal action will be taken just as soon as we can.

Mr. Grafftey: Will the Minister of Justice elaborate on this aspect and tell the House what immediate action we can expect in an effort to remedy the situation?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): As hon. members may appreciate, in a case like this we will be investigating the facts and the application of the law to those facts with the object of taking whatever action we can to carry out the intention of the House as expressed in its recent enactment and, more particularly, to make sure that feed grains are made available to those who desire access to them in the terminal facilities.

STRIKE OF LONGSHOREMEN IN QUEBEC—INQUIRY WHETHER BACK-TO-WORK ORDERS ISSUED

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Has the government yet taken steps to seek a compliance order under the terms of the act which was passed the other night? While he is on his feet to reply, would the minister also tell us whether, to his knowledge, back-to-work orders by the companies or by MEA have, or have not, been issued?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): These dispatch orders were sent out last night in Montreal. The basis of the investigation is to determine whether or not there has been disobedience to the order. It is precisely the factual situation we are looking into now. Having established the fact, we intend to take the appropriate legal action as I and the Minister of Justice have already indicated.

GRAIN

PROPOSAL THAT AGRICULTURE COMMITTEE TRAVEL TO OBTAIN VIEWS OF FARMERS ON BILL C-141

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. Because of widespread confusion in western Canada with regard to Bill C-141, the grain stabilization bill, introduced into the House not long ago, can the hon. gentleman assure us that the Agriculture Committee, if it wishes to do so upon completion of second reading, will be allowed to travel into western Canada to hear the views of farmers directly in the three prairie provinces?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): I do not think I would accede to that request on the basis that there was any confusion, but I would be glad to discuss the matter with the leader of the House on the basis of more general principles.

AIR TRANSPORT

ALLEGED DANGER IN USE OF FRENCH LANGUAGE IN AIR TO GROUND COMMUNICATIONS IN QUEBEC

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, a question for the Acting Prime Minister. According to the International Air Agreement, English is the universal language of communication between ground and air in take-offs and landings. In view of the fact that the Canadian Air Pilots Association has issued a statement condemning the use of French in air-ground communications in Quebec as being dangerous to the travelling public, leading to potential disaster, why has this practice been permitted? Will the Acting Prime Minister take steps to ensure that this policy is discontinued?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will take this serious question as notice and try to provide an answer tomorrow.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

INVESTIGATION INTO SEAFARERS' INTERNATIONAL UNION BY MINISTER OF JUSTICE—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Justice. It is related to the SIU and charges imputing violence, intimidation, black-listing and so on. Last Monday the Prime Minister indicated that the Department of Justice was considering whether a broad, sweeping inquiry should be invoked. My question is: has the minister reached a decision as to whether the Ontario government, its police and the municipal government, are able to conduct this inquiry themselves or whether it is an area where the federal government should step in? If the government has reached a decision, what is it?

● (1440)

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, some further information related to this question has come into my hands and I will be having discussions with some of my colleagues in the very near future with a view to seeing what further steps should be taken.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SUGGESTED INQUIRY UNDER CANADA LABOUR CODE INTO ACTIONS OF SEAFARERS' INTERNATIONAL UNION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Labour. The minister knows that under section 196 he can take initiatives in order to instigate an inquiry to bring about industrial peace, which I think we can all appreciate is required at this time. Would the minister advise whether under the Canada Labour Code he and the Minister of Justice will look into the possibility of such an inquiry and, if so, is he personally involved in an attempt to reach a decision with the Minister of Justice?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Minister of Justice was referring to his colleagues when he said that he would undertake certain consultations on the basis of information he has now received. This type of consultative process has not yet taken place. If it should indicate, in a hypothetical situation, that further action is required—I cannot say whether it is required at this stage—I think the Labour Code is one option to which we can resort.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

SUGGESTION CORPORATION STOP FINANCING CONTRACTS CONTAINING CLAUSE BOYCOTTING TRADE WITH ISRAEL

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. Will the government have the Export Development Corporation immediately stop guaranteeing or otherwise financing contracts involving sales to Arab countries by certain Canadian firms, knowing that these contracts contain terms whereby these firms agree to abide by provisions of the Arab boycott and not trade with Israel? Does he realize that if this is not done it could appear that an agency of the federal government is condoning the acceptance of the Arab boycott by certain Canadian firms, which would mar the generally constructive record of achievement by the Export Development Corporation over the years?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I begin by saying to my hon. friend that the government is extremely concerned about this matter. My colleague the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has instructed the Export Development Corporation, in the context of its legislative mandate, to review the Arab boycott clause as it applies to both insurance and direct lending operations.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN AMOUNT OF LOAN UNDER AHOP AND REDUCTION IN MORTGAGE INTEREST RATE

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In view of the fact that the price of homes has moved beyond the reach of most families, would the Minister of State for Urban Affairs increase by at least 50 per cent the direct lending allowance of CMHC for AHOP non-profit and public housing to at least provide housing for people of low or moderate income at a reasonable price?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will consider any suggestion the hon. member makes.

Mr. Gilbert: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the Minister of State for Urban Affairs and his officials have been in touch with the financial institutions concerning the recent increase in mortgage rates by the banks, has the minister persuaded the banks to roll back the interest increase by accepting their social responsibility to solve the housing crisis?

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, we make regular contacts to keep tuned in to the mortgage situation. I am not at all satisfied yet that mortgage rates have stabilized and I am continuing to watch them carefully. I am not so much concerned whether the banks are aware of their responsibility in this regard; I am more concerned at the moment that mortgage money comes onto the market at the lowest possible level in view of the cost of money, and that it is coming in sufficient quantity to provide housing that Canadians can afford.

SUGGESTION CMHC PREPARING NEW MEASURES TO DEAL WITH EMERGENCY SITUATION—REQUEST FOR CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In view of reports over the week end that CMHC is proposing new measures prior to the budget to deal with the emergency situation in housing, would the minister say whether these reports are indeed correct and whether they form part of the consensus program that the Minister of Finance has been seeking?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, without evading the question, which I appreciate is a frank one, I would rather not comment on newspaper reports that are speculating on what I might do, which might unnecessarily cause more uncertainty and confusion.

[Mr. Sharp.]

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister assure the House that prior to the announcement of any such proposal these measures would include consultations with his provincial counterparts to allocate more funds to the provinces for socially assisted housing?

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, I have assured my provincial counterparts that there will be consultations—

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): You had not as of this morning.

Mr. Danson: I have been in touch with them as recently as the last two weeks to give that indication, and that will be the case.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

ALLEGED DIFFICULTY OF FARMERS IN PROCESSING APPLICATIONS FOR LOANS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Ken Hurlburt (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the ministers directly responsible I therefore direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. In light of the fact that many farmers are experiencing difficulty in having their applications processed through the Farm Credit Corporation, and in view of the fact that many farmers' plans for spring work have come to a complete stop until these applications are processed, would the Acting Prime Minister inform the House whether or not a directive has been sent to all farm credit offices to alleviate this serious situation?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer the question directly, but I know my colleague the Minister of Agriculture will give very sympathetic consideration to that representation.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY OF OIL SPILL ON WEST COAST—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): If I have enough energy left in my voice, I should like to ask a question to the Minister of Environment.

Considering her reply Friday to a question asked by my colleague for Vancouver South concerning the routing of tankers from Alaska, and especially her satisfaction with regard to the alternative destination of such tankers, could the minister explain how construction of a pipeline from the town of Port Angeles, located at the south east extremity of the Juan de Fuca Strait, at Cherry Point, could avoid the possibly disastrous effects of an enormous spill of hydrocarbons from a 150,000-ton tanker into the Juan de Fuca Strait prior to the arrival of the tanker at Port Angeles?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, these super-tankers are capable of navigating in the waters of the Pacific, which, by the way, are international waters. I firmly hope that in our negotiations with the Americans, we shall be able to establish routes that are adequately distant from the coasts involved, so that the magnificent coasts of British Columbia are properly protected. However, to guarantee such new routes a greater degree of security, the solution that would consist in setting up a port for the delivery of oil to Port Angeles would be, in my view, the most amenable one.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Is the minister satisfied with the progress the Minister of Transport has made in the development of a guided navigational system for the dangerous Juan de Fuca and Georgia Straits waters, and what has her own department done, if anything, to stock the cleaning material which would be necessary in case of a possible oil spill in such rich waters?

Mrs. Sauvé: I am very satisfied indeed with current negotiations. The Department of the Environment is also taking part in these negotiations. As I stated last Friday, these negotiations deal with vessel traffic schemes, navigational aids and storage of the equipment we would need in case of possible mishaps.

PUBLIC SERVICE

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON REGIONAL PAY FOR AIRPORT FIREFIGHTERS

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. With regard to the treasury board's submission concerning airport fire fighters, did the government advocate the implementation of regional pay principles?

● (1450)

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter under negotiation with the union at the present time. Of course, as you know, in last year's dispute in Vancouver, where the strike was illegal, there was a great deal of tension within the union. Some parts of Canada are in favour of regional rates while others endorse national rates. As far as we are concerned, to avoid useless pressures on the regions, we prefer the implementation of regional pay rates.

[English]

Mr. Muir: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the minister's reply. He said they have not. Would he not agree that any suggestion by the government or any agency of the government in favour of regional pay rates would be a retrogressive step, particularly in areas of regional disparity.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the answer is not as clear as the hon. member would like it to be. A few days ago, for instance, the finance minister of an Atlantic province blamed the federal government for paying too high a salary to its employees, so that he was losing provincial employees to the benefit of the federal administration.

An hon. Member: Which minister?

Mr. Chrétien: The finance minister of a Tory province, New Brunswick.

SUGGESTED INCREASE IN REGIONAL PAY RATES IN DISADVANTAGED PROVINCES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the fact that regional pay rates in have-not provinces are lower than anywhere else in Canada, and in view of the fact that the cost of living is now higher in the Atlantic region than anywhere else in Canada, would the minister consider reversing the basis of regional pay rates because of this fact and increase the regional rates in the have-not provinces where the people are suffering?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, it is precisely one of the important elements determining why, under certain circumstances, it is much preferable to have a regional rather than a national rate. In certain parts of the country, the cost of living is higher than in others, and I think we should act accordingly.

PUBLIC WORKS

DREDGING—GOVERNMENT POSITION IN VIEW OF FACT ALL COMPANIES UNDER INDICTMENT

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. Has the minister's department been able to come up with a satisfactory solution so that the Minister of Public Works and the Department of Public Works can get on with some dredging in harbours which need it very badly? I ask this because the Goderich Harbour is in immediate need of dredging.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, we have been in touch with the Department of Public Works so that they can take steps where necessary.

GODERICH HARBOUR—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF POSSIBILITY OF HAVING DREDGING DONE

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of the Environment. Would the Minister of the Environment have this situation investigated so that her department would be able to give the go-ahead for this harbour to be dredged as soon as the Department of Public Works sees its way clear to hire a dredge to do the job.

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of what dredging the hon. gentleman is speaking about. I was engaged in reading at the time of his question. However, I will look at the question and if it is under my responsibility I will certainly have it looked into.

INCOME TAX

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF DEADLINE FOR FILING

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Revenue my question is addressed to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the fact that accountants across Canada are still experiencing massive delays in the receipt of T-5's which are still coming into their offices, in view of the fact that many RRSP slips are still coming in over 30 days late, and in view of the enormous backlog of mail in post offices across Canada, will the Acting Prime Minister now indicate to that vital arm of the Revenue Department, Canada's accountants and taxpayers, that the government is prepared to extend the tax deadline beyond April 30.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will not give that undertaking but I will discuss the situation with my colleague. Generally speaking, we find that these reports are exaggerated. I am sure the hon. gentleman would want the government to bring in the revenue to which it is entitled on time.

ALLEGED DISCRIMINATORY TREATMENT RECEIVED BY QUEBEC POTATO GROWERS

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture, but in his absence, I will put it to his very able parliamentary secretary.

Could he tell us whether the Department of Agriculture intends to correct very soon the different treatment given to Quebec potato growers who cannot take advantage of the subsidies recently announced by the Department of Agriculture with respect to potato sales for animal consumption?

Mr. Léopold Corriveau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I would like to elucidate the situation. As the result of various pressures made by government members, the Department of Agriculture has decided to grant what it had already granted to New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island producers. We will announce this afternoon a policy for eastern Canada, that is the same formula available to Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick.

PUBLIC SERVICE

NEW FORMULA FOR ESCALATION OF PENSIONS—SUGGESTED APPEARANCE OF MINISTER BEFORE COMMITTEE ON BILL C-52

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the assurance the minister gave me on Tuesday, March 18, that he would take good note of my request for improvements in the formula in respect of the escalation of pensions of retired public servants, retired RCMP and retired armed forces personnel, and in view of the fact that Bill C-52 is now before the House of Commons, may I ask if the President of the Treasury Board will be prepared to appear before the committee to which this bill is to be referred and come forward with the improvements he has thought out in the meantime?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as all ministers, I am at the disposal of the House and when a committee summons me, I am pleased to appear before it.

ENERGY

OIL—GOVERNMENT ACTION RELATED TO INTERNATIONAL PRICING ARRANGEMENTS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question regarding the Paris Conference which did not exactly work out is directed to the Acting Prime Minister or the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Now that Canada is becoming a very substantial net importer of oil does the Government of Canada intend to take any initiative concerning international arrangements related to the price of oil? I know the Acting Prime Minister said the opinion he expressed in the House would reverberate around the world, but I wonder beyond that whether the Government of Canada is doing anything more here that it is in respect of South Vietnam?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, if I might answer, the standing committee has of course completed its study of the international energy program agreement and we will be proceeding in the very near future to indicate our participation in the International Energy Agency. I think I would have to concede to the analysis of the Leader of the Opposition about the breakdown in the Paris discussions. One of the initiatives we will be taking will be within the International Energy Agency to see if that particular discussion can be reopened and, as a substantial exporter of a number of primary commodities, to see what agreement there would be on expanding the discussions so that they could find some agreement among the developing countries and other primary exporters.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—REASON FOR WITHDRAWAL OF CANADIAN AIRCRAFT FROM AREA IN VIEW OF DESIRE OF SOME VIETNAMESE TO COME TO CANADA

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, a few minutes ago the Acting Prime Minister stated he has provided selected lists of Vietnamese personnel to the Americans asking the United States to accept these people and divert them to us. If the Acting Prime Minister is to be taken seriously with regard to this plan, why was one of our two Hercules aircraft in Hong Kong withdrawn from that area today?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any contradiction between these two actions. It appears to us to be unlikely that there would be an opportunity to lift the Vietnamese who would be permitted to get to the airport or, alternatively, if the regime had collapsed and there were general chaos of course the airport would be unusable. I believe it was very prudent for us to have done what we could on behalf of these Vietnamese who might be able to get out one way or another by methods that we could not choose because we do not have armed forces to support our particular views in Viet Nam whereas the Americans do, potentially if not actually. So, I do not think there is any contradiction.

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): In so far as the National Capital Commission is concerned: 1. Without prejudice to the purposes for which these rights-of-way were acquired, NCC planning for the construction of parkways beyond those which already exist, or are currently under construction, is temporarily being held in abeyance pending consideration of proposals by the regional municipality of Ottawa-Carleton. No dates on which construction will commence have been established.

2. The National Capital Commission has acquired land for right-of-way.

DEPARTMENT OF SUPPLY AND SERVICES—INVENTORY LEVELS

Question No. 2,020—Mr. Reynolds:

What are the established guidelines for minimum safe inventory levels within the Department of Supply and Services' warehouses?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): The point at which action is taken to increase inventory levels is based on anticipated usage over the time it will take the supplier to deliver the materiel to the department's warehouses. Due to variations in both the anticipated usage and delivery time, a safety stock is required in addition to the above to ensure that the majority of customer demands can be filled. In so far as DSS is concerned, a safety stock level of 28 days of anticipated sales based on historical usage data is maintained for each stocked item in the inventory.

Order Paper Questions

POSTAL CODE

Question No. 2,143—Mr. Herbert:

1. Has consideration been given by the Post Office Department to the use of the Japanese zip code system whereby the digits of the postal code must be written in boxes printed in the appropriate area?

2. Has consideration been given to the use of optical scanning devices that can read addresses and zip codes?

Mr. Raynald Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): 1. This system was considered during design and implementation of the Canadian postal code and the associated mechanized processing system which were designed to avoid the extra cost and effort required of the mailer.

2. Optical reading equipment is now operational at Ottawa and is being procured for installation at other major centres.

TRANSFER OF PARKS CANADA OFFICE FROM CORNWALL

Question No. 2,187—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Is the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development aware that his predecessor was described in the September 5, 1974 issue of the Montreal Gazette in an interview with journalist George Radwanski as "having resisted pressure to put a regional office of the Indian Affairs Department in Toronto, having put it instead in Cornwall"?

2. (a) What are all the reasons that this decision was reversed by the present Minister as contained in the answer to Question No. 1,266 (b) was pressure applied in this regard on the Minister or his Department and, if so (i) on what date (ii) by whom?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Yes.

2. (a) The office will not be relocated to Toronto but rather to a smaller centre closer to the agencies with whom we deal most frequently and more centrally located in the Province. At the time the office was originally created, it served both the provinces of Quebec and Ontario. With the creation of a separate Quebec Regional Office this is no longer the case. The relocation now proposed does not conflict with the previous statement on the subject. (b) No. The need to ultimately relocate was obvious when the Region was split into two separate operations.

*INCOME REDISTRIBUTION

Question No. 1,475—Mr. Herbert:

Did the Minister of National Health and Welfare state that, in 1972, the top 20 per cent of Canadians received more of the wealth produced than they did in 1967 and that the bottom 20 per cent received less in 1972 than in 1967 and, if so, what measures are under consideration to augment the programmes of income redistribution so that the trend can be reversed?

Return tabled.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to do this, but would the parliamentary secretary note starred question 2,284 in my name? It has to do with a former parliamentary colleague, in the world sense, who is in jail in the Philippines. I hope that the government will soon respond to my request for action.

Mr. O'Sullivan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I should like to draw to the attention of the parliamentary secretary the fact that it is now over two months since starred questions 1,738 and 1,739 were placed on the order paper. In view of the very serious nature of the questions, I think all members of the House would want them answered as soon as possible.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I wish to refer the parliamentary secretary to questions 1,686 and 1,687 in my name. The only reason I raise this point of order again is not because these questions have not been answered and they are two months overdue, but because the public service gave the answers publicly despite the fact that apparently they have not been given to parliament.

On February 18 I asked for details of the involvement of the president of CMHC, or of CMHC itself, in the construction of a swimming pool at 24 Sussex Drive. This information has been denied to the House, yet last Thursday, William Teron, president of CMHC, stated publicly, when asked by a newsman, the details of this matter. It seems to me to be an affront to parliament that when a member of the House asks a question, whether on this matter or any other, an answer is continually withheld from the House for a period of two months or more, and sometimes as long as six months, yet information is leaked outside the House.

I think I have more than a point of order; I have a question of privilege. I also suggest, with regard to question 1,686 which asks about the involvement of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources in the same matter, that this information is also being withheld when it could easily be given. I ask the parliamentary secretary whether I could have some assurance that these questions will be answered forthwith.

PETROLEUM ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING THE ADMINISTRATION OF INTERPROVINCIAL, EXPORT AND IMPORT TRADE IN PETROLEUM AND PETROLEUM PRODUCTS

The House resumed, from Friday, April 25, consideration in committee of Bill C-32, to impose a charge on the export of crude oil and certain petroleum products, to provide compensation for certain petroleum costs and to regulate the price of Canadian crude oil and natural gas in interprovincial and export trade—Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale)—Mr. Penner in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: When the committee rose on April 25, clauses 5, 35, 36, 52 as amended and 53 as amended were allowed to stand. The committee is now considering clause 60.

On clause 60—Continuing offence.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order with regard to the matters we are considering. There have been some discussions across the floor in committee and outside the committee with regard to clauses 35 and 52, and there has been some indication of willingness on our part as well as on the part of the minister to accept a form of amendment which would be agreeable to both sides. The minister might want to comment on that. If it is likely that some arrangement can be worked out, it would permit us to look at the rest of the bill in a more relaxed way, in a less jaundiced way. Also, it might well facilitate the passage of some of the clauses because if, in our view, it is likely that these amendments will be discussed in the committee, it would make us feel somewhat more comfortable about the rest of the bill.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, I would like to confirm that indeed there have been discussions about possible amendments to the two clauses with regard to the proclamation. I think it is fair to say that there is some agreement in principle involved here. What we have been doing is taking a look at the specific wording. The legal advisers of the Crown have looked at the wording, a text of which will be available a little later in the afternoon. I wonder if we might proceed with clause 60 and the following clauses, then return to the clauses that have been stood after the new wording has been circulated and agreement to it confirmed.

The Deputy Chairman: Is clause 60 agreed to?

Clause agreed to.

Clause 61 agreed to.

On clause 62—Regulations.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, I would like to suggest to the committee an amendment to clause 62, a copy of which was circulated previously. Clause 64 provides a regime with regard to the determination which, I am advised by my advisers, would be better adapted to meet the situation. Clause 62 would provide an alternate paragraph (d) which would be consistent with the clause as amended. My colleague, the President of the Privy Council, is moving the following amendment:

That Bill C-32 be amended by striking out lines 29 to 36, inclusive, on page 24 thereof and by substituting therefor the following:

"(d) respecting the approval by the board of prices paid to acquire gas from within its province of production for movement out of that province; and"

The President of the Privy Council has come back specifically because of his firm conviction about this amendment.

Mr. Sharp: I so move, Mr. Chairman.

● (1510)

Amendment (Mr. Sharp) agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

On clause 63—Conflict.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister a question about this clause, for my own satisfaction. The clause reads as follows:

In the event of a conflict between any price prescribed under this part and any price established under part IV of the National Energy Board Act, the prescribed price under this act prevails.

I assume that involves an admission that under the National Energy Board Act there is provision for fixing prices of petroleum or natural gas.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, sir.

Mr. Baldwin: It might be useful in some court action later.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 64—Distributing excess.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, there is a rather lengthy amendment to this clause. It is put forward after some consultation, particularly with transmission companies. We think this amendment will provide a simpler regime for dealing with the question involved under this section.

Mr. Sharp moved:

That Bill C-32 be amended by striking out clause 64 on page 25 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

"64. (1) Where in any month gas that is purchased or otherwise acquired in or from its province of production is transported and resold by the purchaser thereof in any area or zone in Canada outside its province of production, or at any point on the international boundary of Canada, the purchaser shall, in respect of each such month, distribute to producers, in accordance with such regulations as the Governor in Council may make in that behalf, an amount equal to the excess of

(a) the total revenues received by the purchaser for the gas so resold in that month;

(b) the purchaser's cost of service, as determined by the Board, in respect of the gas so resold in that month, including the purchaser's cost of gas.

(2) Where in any month gas that is purchased or otherwise acquired in or from its province of production is transported from that province for delivery in any area or zone in Canada outside its province of production or at any point on the international boundary of Canada by a person other than its purchaser, the purchaser shall, in respect of each such month, distribute to producers, in accordance with such regulations as the Governor in Council may make in that behalf, an amount equal to the excess of

(a) the total value, as determined by the Board, of the purchaser's gas delivered in that month in that area or zone outside its province of production or at that point on the international boundary of Canada;

over

(b) the purchaser's cost, as determined by the Board, in respect of the acquisition and transportation of that gas to its point of delivery in that month.

(3) For the purposes of this section, "cost of gas" shall be computed, if approved by the Board, by using prices payable at the wellhead to producers of gas or shall be computed by such other means as the Board may prescribe."

Mr. Baldwin: While I am sure that the President of the Privy Council has grasped in an instant the interpretation of this amendment, there may be some hon. members to whom it is not quite so plain. Would the minister be willing to explain the purpose behind the amendment?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, Mr. Chairman. As indicated, believe it or not, from having read the terminology, the considered opinion is that this is a simpler mechanism for determining the flowback of certain moneys to the producer of gas. Clause 64(1) deals with the case in which the pipeline is the owner of the gas transported from the producer to the consuming province. Much of the gas transported by TransCanada PipeLines is in that category. Gas transported and sold in the consuming province is, of course, sold at the prescribed price. The total revenue is computed and from this is deducted the purchaser's cost of service as determined by the board. The difference is then distributed, in accordance with such regulations as the governor in council may make, among the producers.

The intention is that it prescribes prices more closely approximating commodity value, that is, the equivalent value of petroleum, to improve the return to producers and so provide a means for encouraging exploration and development of gas. The distribution will be made in the manner best calculated to achieve this, which would not necessarily be on a pro rata basis.

Clause 64(2) provides for the case in which the pipeline, as opposed to being the owners, is only a carrier of the gas. A similar calculation is carried out mutatis mutandis and a similar flowback would occur.

In Clause 64(3) the expression "cost of gas" is defined in terms of prices payable at the wellhead to producers of gas or by such other means as the board may prescribe. This is necessary to cover the situation for a company like Westcoast Transmission. Westcoast Transmission does not itself buy from producers. The purchases are made by the British Columbia Petroleum Corporation which, having bought from the producers, immediately transfers it to Westcoast Transmission which in turn pays BCPC according to a formula by which the price is determined ex post facto. It is necessary for purposes of calculation to use the price paid by BCPC and not the calculated price paid by Westcoast.

I hope that is helpful as an explanation. It is obviously a rather complicated regime.

Mr. Baldwin: I have the general idea.

On clause 70—Reports.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): This may not be the best place to deal with the matter, and if the minister prefers to leave it until his report to the energy committee, I would be perfectly satisfied. But since we are dealing with cost compensation in part IV of the bill, I wonder if the minister would like to make any statement with respect to the basis upon which these cost compensation payments have been made. Some newspaper reports have indicated that in the past 12 months there has been a switch by the oil importing companies from Venezuelan oil to Middle East oil.

Prior to the cost compensation program coming into effect, my recollection is that about 60 per cent of our imported oil came from Venezuela and about 40 per cent from the Middle East and Africa, and now it has been reversed. Reports indicate that the reason for this switch is that it is financially advantageous for an oil company to bring in Middle East oil, to the extent of some 95 cents a barrel, and sell their Venezuelan oil in another market. One day in the question period I asked the minister if he would look into the matter, and I am sure he has. I wonder if the minister wants to comment on the steps that are being taken to plug this loophole—if there is a loophole—or to leave it until his report to the energy committee? He may want to deal with it at that time, but we ought to have an explanation reasonably soon.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Perhaps I could do both. The energy supplies allocation board will be before the committee on Thursday morning and it might be appropriate then to go into this matter at greater length. But perhaps I could make some comments at this point. This has been a matter of some concern in the administration of the provisions of the compensation program. It will be recalled that the program was founded on the oil price costs as they were in November, 1973. The purpose was really to compensate for increases beyond the prices that were established as of that date. There was an adjustment of 90 cents per barrel to reflect the April 1, 1974, Canadian crude oil price increase, the price of imported oil having previously risen by some $2 a barrel while western prices were frozen. As of April 1, 1974, the prices domestically came into balance.

It is quite true, as was pointed out in a number of press stories and in the House, that at the moment Middle East oil does receive more compensation and is cheaper in relation to Venezuelan oil after compensation. This reflects the fact that at the time the November, 1973, provision went into effect, Venezuelan oil was actually ahead in price. Prices were frozen at that time for the base, so compensation has been laid on top of that difference. That reflects the 1973 competitive relationship which has been embodied in the compensation program.

I think it is fair to say that it is now indicated to us that there should be a change to try to make the system neutral as between Venezuelan and Middle East oil. Indeed, the officials of my department and of the Energy Supplies

Allocation Board have been attempting to arrive at some amendment in the regulations for the purpose of making the system neutral with respect to the source of oil.

The judgment I am given from the department is that the differential has not so far led to a switch from Venezuelan to eastern hemisphere oil greater than that which would have occurred without the compensation to them. That is not to say that a switch has not occurred from Venezuelan to Middle East oil but, rather, that a switch had been anticipated from Venezuelan to Middle East if the events of a year or so ago had not occurred and if the compensation program had not occurred.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In the minister's opinion, is that switch due to a lessening of supply in Venezuelan crude? Is that the reason for the switch?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, Mr. Chairman. It is really a question of production cutbacks in that country which have occurred primarily because of conservation practices by the Venezuelan government. I think one could argue, however, that some of the more recent cutbacks have reflected the general OPEC policy of the desirability of cutting back production.

The amount of Venezuelan oil that is available has declined and Canadian imports are down proportionately. As I have indicated, we are working on this program that we hope will secure a proper balance of equity as between companies and overseas supply sources which could be implemented with minimal impact on the consumer of the product refined from imported crude oil. The Energy Supplies Allocation Board is the primary agency for this purpose. Rather than going further into this at the moment, I think it might be useful for members of the committee to address questions to members of the board, when they are before the committee on Thursday, regarding some of the complicated problems involved in moving from the existing system to what we hope is a more equitable one.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): That will be satisfactory, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 70 carry?

Clause agreed to.

Clause 71 agreed to.

On clause 72—Application.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, there is an amendment to this clause as well. The amendment would provide for the insertion of the words "in Canada" to qualify the importation of "petroleum into Canada for processing, consumption, sale or other use". This limits compensation to fuel for consumption in Canada and follows both the practice under the import compensation program and the actual wording of Bill C-18. Perhaps the Minister of Communications would move that one. I have another one as well.

Mr. Pelletier (Hochelaga) moved:

That Bill C-32 be amended by striking out line 34 on page 27 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

"other use in Canada is eligible under this division to"

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment to clause 72 carry?

Amendment (Mr. Pelletier, Hochelaga) agreed to.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, I have a further amendment to clause 72(2) which is required merely because of the time that has elapsed since the bill came before the House. The amendment is in the following terms:

That Bill C-32 be amended by striking out line 10 on page 28 thereof and by substituting therefor the following:

"lendar year 1974 and the first half of the calendar year 1975, and has or have given"

Again, the Minister of Communications would move that one.

Mr. Pelletier (Hochelaga): I so move.

Amendment (Mr. Pelletier, Hochelaga) agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

Clause 73 agreed to.

On clause 74—Time of payment of compensation.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to clause 74 further to the one that was previously circulated. It will cover both the substance of the previous amendment and a further amendment. It is as follows:

That Bill C-32 be amended by:

(a) striking out line 35 on page 28 thereof and by substituting therefor the following:

"Canada before the occurrence of the later";

(b) striking out lines 39 to 44, inclusive on page 28 thereof and by substituting therefor the following:

"leum under the purchase arrangements; and"; and

(c) striking out line 1 on page 29 thereof and by substituting therefor the following:

"(b) the date the petroleum was delivered,"

Mr. Pelletier (Hochelaga): I so move.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I am sure the significance of the amendment will immediately strike all members.

Amendment (Mr. Pelletier, Hochelaga) agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

Clauses 75 and 76 agreed to.

On clause 77—Regulations.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which would allow the designation of derivatives of both crude oil and natural gasoline or condensates as petroleum products, much along the lines noted earlier with respect to Canadian source crude in the context of the oil export charge. As hon. members will recall, there are some circumstances in which liquid petroleums are produced in connection with natural gas and used as feedstock. This would permit compensation to be paid for this purpose.

The Minister of Communications, who has much concern about this matter, proposes an amendment as follows:

● (1530)

That Bill C-32 be amended by striking out lines 38 to 42, inclusive, on page 30 thereof and by substituting therefor the following:

"(k) designating any hydrocarbon or mixture of hydrocarbons resulting from the processing or refining of hydrocarbons described in paragraph (a) or (b) of the"

Mr. Pelletier (Hochelaga): I so move, Mr. Chairman.

Amendment (Mr. Pelletier, Hochelaga) agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

On clause 78—Transitional.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, clause 78 provides statutory authority for compensation payments which are made or authorized by the imported oil products compensation regulations made pursuant to vote 11B of Appropriation Act No. 1, 1974, which applied between January 1 and March 31, 1974; secondly, for the petroleum products compensation program guidelines which were made for the purpose of Governor General's special warrants for the period, April 1 to October 31, 1974; and for the oil import compensation regulations made pursuant to vote 52 of Appropriation Act No. 3, 1974, for imports on or after November 1, 1974.

One of the more important provisions of the bill, which by virtue of the deeming provisions of clause 78(1) and (2) will now apply to earlier compensation, is section 76 which permits the recovery or set-off of overpayment or non-entitled payment. That is to say, if we find that an importer has received an overpayment or a payment to which he is not entitled, the administration will be entitled to recover such payment or set it off against any future payment.

Mr. Baldwin: Is the position with respect to Governor General's special warrants the same as the position with respect to other payments under the act?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes. I have circulated an amendment to the committee. The Minister of Communications moves:

That Bill C-32 be amended by:

(a) Striking out lines 35 and 36 on page 31 thereof and by substituting therefor the following:

"Act No. 3, 1974, Statutes of Canada 1974-75;

(c) pursuant to Energy Supplies Allocation Board vote No. 53c of Appropriation Act No. 5, 1974, Statutes of Canada 1974-75; or

(d) pursuant to Energy Supplies Allocation Board vote No. 65 of Appropriation Act No. 2, 1975, Statutes of Canada 1974-75"

This is included for the purposes of catching up with elapsed time, as there are now specific statutory references to these particular provisions. I continue reading the amendment:

(b) striking out line 1 on page 32 thereof and by substituting therefore the following:

"on the day immediately preceding the commencement of this part that is delivered to"; and

(c) Striking out lines 9 and 10 on page 32 thereof and by substituting therefor the following:

"tion authorized to be made before that day."

Mr. Pelletier (Hochelaga): I so move.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Chairman, may I ask a question along the lines of one asked earlier by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands? If it were discovered—I am not suggesting this has been done—that because of changes in the conditions under which oil is imported from abroad, some organizations had taken advantage of the allocation situation, which is something we will consider in detail next Thursday morning, would this provision allow the recapture for the people of Canada of any overpayments made under those circumstances?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, the answer in general terms is yes. If there were found to be an improper diversion of some kind, or if someone had taken advantage of the system, there would be authority to claim back.

Amendment (Mr. Pelletier, Hochelaga) agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

On clause 79—1st January, 1975, to 31st March, 1975.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, the cornucopia of amendments has produced another unheralded amendment. I am advised that this amendment is necessary because of the effluxion of time since the introduction of the bill. The Minister of Communications brought it to my attention.

Mr. Pelletier (Hochelaga): Mr. Chairman, I move:

That Bill C-32 be amended by:

(a) striking out subclauses 79(1) and 79(2) on page 32 thereof;

(b) renumbering subclause 79(3) on page 32 thereof as clause 79; and

(c) striking out the figures "1974-75" on line 22 on page 32 thereof and substituting therefor the figures "1975-76".

Amendment (Mr. Pelletier, Hochelaga) agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

Clauses 80 to 86 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 87—Regulations.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, the amendment to be proposed is similar to previous amendments. It is to include derivatives, that is to say, crude oil, natural gas as condensates in the compensation program. The Minister of Communications will also move this amendment.

Mr. Pelletier (Hochelaga): Mr. Chairman, I move:

That Bill C-32 be amended by striking out lines 19 to 25, inclusive, on page 35 thereof and by substituting therefor the following:

"(g) designating any hydrocarbon or mixture of hydrocarbons resulting from the processing or refining of hydrocarbons described in paragraph (a) or (b) of the definition "petroleum" in section 80, as a petroleum product; and"

Amendment (Mr. Pelletier, Hochelaga) agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

Clauses 88 to 94 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 95—Commencement.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I wish to move an amendment, not to amend clause 95 but to add another clause, clause 96. As I have given notice of my intention, perhaps the committee could carry clause 95 and then consider my amendment.

Clause agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Peace River is recognized on proposed clause 96.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I am afraid the Minister of Communications has left the chamber. I was hoping he might move my amendment. However, I suppose I must move it myself. I am not going to go back over the ground that has already been covered. Hon. members ought not to have any doubts concerning the validity of this bill. I have read into the record extracts of some decisions of the Supreme Court and the Privy Council and I have given my interpretation of them. For these reasons, before the bill leaves this place there should be some reference to these matters. I therefore move:

● (1540)

That the bill be amended by adding thereto, immediately following clause 95 on page 39, the following:

"Reference to Supreme Court 96. (1) Forthwith after this Act is assented to in Her Majesty's name, the Governor in Council, under section 55 of the Supreme Court Act, shall refer all questions of law and fact concerning the constitutionality of this Act and every provision thereof other than this section to the Supreme Court.

(2) Until the Supreme Court has certified to the Governor in Council its opinion upon each such question, no provision of this Act, other than this section, shall come into force at the time of commencement provided therefor under this Act or the Interpretation Act and then only to the extent, if any, such provision is in the opinion of the Court within the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada.

(3) The attorney general of each province shall be notified of the hearing under this section in order that he may be heard if he thinks fit."

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, I would counsel the committee against adopting the amendment, principally on the basis that has been argued all the way through the debate on this bill, that in the judgment of the government and, perhaps more significantly, the legal advisers of the government, the provisions of Bill C-32 are entirely within the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada. In their opinion, no doubt exists with regard to this jurisdictional question. On this basis, it does not seem appropriate to delay the matter for the time of the Supreme Court reference. Indeed, if there was a delay it might be impossible for the government to act, if there was any threat of a substantial increase in the prices of oil or natural gas.

I should make it clear to the committee that the fact we do not accept this amendment does not in any sense make it any less possible from a legal standpoint for a private person to raise a question with regard to the statute. It would not, of course, oust the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in any way. We feel there is a legal basis under the constitution for the action we are proposing to parliament. For that reason, it does not seem to be necessary to seek this particular amendment.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I have only one word on the question of timing. If this country can survive this government for a year and a half or an energy crisis, it can survive a few more months waiting for a Supreme Court decision.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Thank you for those kind words.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it the pleasure of the committee to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Amendment (Mr. Baldwin) negatived: Yeas, 11; nays, 30.

The Deputy Chairman: By agreement, the committee will revert to clause 35 of Bill C-32.

On clause 35—Proclamation.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, as I mentioned to the committee earlier, there have been some discussions about a possible amendment to this clause. I think we might have a form of words which will be found generally acceptable. The essence is that while the bill is to be proclaimed as provided under clause 35, there would be added to the clause, by way of amendment, five subclauses. The amendment is as follows:

That Bill C-32 be amended

(a) by renumbering clause 35 as subclause 35(1); and

(b) by adding immediately after the renumbered subclause 35(1) the following:

"(2) A proclamation under subsection (1) shall be laid before the House of Commons not later than fifteen days after its issue, or, if Parliament is not then sitting, within the first fifteen days next thereafter that Parliament is sitting.

(3) Where a proclamation has been laid before the House of Commons pursuant to subsection (2), a notice of motion in the House of Commons signed by ten members thereof and made in accordance with the rules of that House within seven days of the day the proclamation was laid before that House praying that the proclamation be revoked, shall be debated in that House at the first convenient opportunity within the four sitting days next after the day the motion in that House was made.

(4) At fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for government business on the second sitting day following the commencement of consideration of a motion of which notice was given under subsection (3), or at such earlier time as the House of Commons is ready for the question, the Speaker shall put the question forthwith without further debate.

(5) If the House of Commons resolves that the proclamation be revoked, this Division, except this section, shall cease to be in force with effect forthwith but without prejudice to the previous operation of this Division or anything duly done or suffered thereunder or any offence committed or any punishment incurred thereunder and without prejudice to the making of a further proclamation of a like nature to bring this Division into force."

In other words, if for a number of months the proclamation were in operation and subsequently ceased to be operative, any legal rights or obligations created in the interval would not be interfered with thereafter. This division of this part would be brought to an end. I would like to ask the Minister of Labour to move, on my behalf, this amendment to clause 35.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I so move.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I have one question. We had some discussion about this question when dealing with another bill. Subclause (4) reads:

At fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for government business on the second sitting day following the commencement of consideration—

I would like it clear in my mind that this means the second sitting day must immediately follow the first day, and within a period of four days. It would not be competent for the government to initiate such a debate and then put it off for six months. Is it the intention that the debate must be concluded forthwith on the second sitting day following the commencement of consideration? If there is any doubt, I would like the word "consecutive" or some such word put in there. It is not that I do not trust the minister.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, it is certainly the intention that we have a two-day debate, or two days back to back. No other item of government business would be called in those two days in between any part of the motion.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment is a decided improvement. It will mean that if the government decides to use the mandatory powers it has under clause 36 by virtue of the fact it has not been able to reach an agreement with the producing provinces, the government will be required to file a notice of its proclamation. If ten members wanted a debate, there would be a two-day debate. I think that is a good idea. If the government decides to use mandatory powers to set the price of a commodity as important to the economy as oil and, later, gas under clause 52, there ought to be some opportunity given for the House to express an opinion. Subclause (5) reads:

If the House of Commons resolves that the proclamation be revoked, this division, except this section, shall cease to be in force with effect forthwith but without prejudice to the previous operation of this division or anything duly done or suffered thereunder or any offence committed or any punishment incurred thereunder and without prejudice to the making of a further proclamation of a like nature to bring this division into force.

What about any future application of this division? Let us assume the government brings down a proclamation setting the price at $8.50 and that this proposition is defeated, the general feeling being that it is too high, whereupon the government decides to bring in a new proclamation setting the price at $7.50. Would that still be within the powers of the legislation, should this division have been annulled by virtue of the fact that the proclamation was negatived?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I must say the hon. member has raised a valid point. In effect, the division would have been in operation for a certain period of time, but it would be annulled from that point onward. Since the clause continues to operate, including the provision for proclamation, there could be a subsequent process in this regard which would, of course, then be subject to a further parliamentary decision.

Mr. Baldwin: That is how I understand it.

[Mr. Munro (Hamilton East).]

Amendment (Mr. Munro, Hamilton East) agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it the wish of the committee to revert now to clause 5 which was allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 5 carry?

Clause 5 agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it the wish of the committee to revert to clause 36 which was allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 36 carry?

Mr. Baldwin: On division.

Clause 36 agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it the wish of the committee to return to clause 52 as amended?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On clause 52—Where no price agreement effective.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, I should like to suggest to the committee that an amendment be made here of the same kind as we have just made with respect to clause 35, namely, an amendment to make it possible for the House, provided ten members wish to do so, to review any such proclamation within a stipulated period of time. The amendment is in substantially the same terms as the amendment to clause 35, though there are some slight changes in the wording. My colleague the Minister of Labour will move:

That Bill C-32 be amended

(a) by adding immediately after the renumbered subclause 52(2), the following:

(3) A proclamation under subsection (2) shall be laid before the House of Commons not later than 15 days after its issue, or, if Parliament is not then sitting, within the first 15 days next thereafter that Parliament is sitting.

(4) Where a proclamation has been laid before the House of Commons pursuant to subsection (3), a notice of motion in the House of Commons signed by ten members thereof and made in accordance with the rules of that House within seven days of the day the proclamation was laid before that House praying that the proclamation be revoked, shall be debated in that House at the first convenient opportunity within the four sitting days next after the day the motion in that House was made.

(5) At 15 minutes before the expiry of the time provided for government business on the second sitting day following the commencement of consideration of a motion of which notice was given under subsection (4), or at such earlier time as the House of Commons is ready for the question, the Speaker shall put the question forthwith without further debate.

(6) If the House of Commons resolves that the proclamation be revoked, this division, except this section, shall cease to be in force with effect forthwith but without prejudice to the previous operation of this division or anything duly done or suffered thereunder or any offence committed or any punishment incurred thereunder and without prejudice to the making of a further proclamation of a like nature to bring this division into force.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I so move.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the further amendment to clause 52 carry?

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 52 as amended carry?

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): When shall the bill be read the third time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, even those of us who favour this bill must face the fact that a great many amendments have been made to it, and in all fairness to the operation of this House I believe we should see the bill in its reprinted form before third reading.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): At the next sitting of the House, then.

OCEAN DUMPING CONTROL ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR CONTROL OF DUMPING SUBSTANCES INTO THE OCEAN AND TO ESTABLISH A BOARD OF REVIEW

The House resumed, from Tuesday, April 22, consideration of the motion of Mr. Sharp (for the Minister of the Environment) that Bill C-37, to provide for the control of dumping of waste and other substances in the ocean, be read the second time and referred to the standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, while my voice holds out I propose to make a few further comments on this bill without in any way wishing to hold up its passage.

As I mentioned in the course of the debate which took place on April 22, this is legislation for which we have been waiting. It is good legislation. However, there are just a few comments that need to be made about the proposal. I know, for example, that the United States Congress considered a similar measure more than a year ago, in March, 1974. Why have we had to wait so long? The legislation has to do with an act of a United Nations organization, the final act being concluded in London in 1972. Therefore, I think it is appropriate that we ask ourselves here and now why it has taken 2½ years to implement this enabling legislation. However, it is with us now; let us pursue it, make our comments on it and get it into committee.

● (1600)

During question period today I raised a question with the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Sauvé) about the stock of clean-up equipment in the Strait of Juan de Fuca and off the coast of British Columbia. I asked the minister whether she was satisfied with the amount of material in stock and available. I suppose I should not have been surprised by her answer because, after all, she has to be satisfied with, and uncritical of, the work that goes on in her department; but I feel we should push more forcefully for this clean-up material.

In a starred question which I placed on the order paper in February, I asked about the stock of clean-up equipment in this particular area which right now is threatened with spills. There have been spills at Cherry Point. Indeed, my colleague for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) asked a question on Friday about the financial responsibility for a spill that occurred there a year ago. We have had spills further north in the area of my hon. friend from Comox-Alberni (Mr. Anderson) who is also concerned about these matters. If I got him outside the House, I fancy he would not be satisfied with the answer to the question which I put on the order paper and which is recorded. Although it was a starred question, it was asked to be reported as an order for return.

I find that in this whole area, through which pass hundreds of thousands of tons of oil each year, we have six skimmers that are designed to lick off the surface any oil that has happened to escape from a ship. There is no stock of absorbent material nearby, though we were assured in the answer that was tabled on March 12, 1975, that the commercial enterprises in the area are holding sufficient inventory. The reply is completely inadequate. The stock is not there; there is not sufficient material to contain a major spill in the area, should it occur in the near future.

Another reply that I received from the minister today upset me. The minister seemed to be satisfied with a decision to offload oil in Port Angeles to avoid a spill in the Strait of Juan de Fuca. I suggest that the minister take a look at a geography book; she would then realize that Port Angeles is at the southeastward end of the strait—away inland from the sea. You have to go through the Strait of Juan de Fuca to get to Port Angeles; so how, by offloading at Port Angeles, you prevent a spill in the Strait of Juan de Fuca I am at a complete loss to understand.

Another matter I want to take up with the minister in a question, but which I will record here, is this: Over the weekend a number of my colleagues from all sides of the House attended a meeting of the Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group in Quebec City to discuss the problems confronting our two nations. One problem raised was this very matter of a tanker route into the Strait of Juan de Fuca and on into the Strait of Georgia. As all hon. members know, I have been very anxious to keep these ships out at sea.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I thank hon. members for their support. I shall go on urging this. However, this notion about Port Angeles was given a new and dangerous twist at this meeting, one that I had not known about before and which I want all hon. members of the House to know about. One of the representatives in the American House of Representatives, a member from the state of Washington who is responding in our exchange of views on this question, told me that the offloading facilities that are being proposed for the state of Washington in Port Angeles are to be built only in the event that the facilities at the Cherry Point refinery are increased. Meanwhile, all the oil that the present refinery capacity at Cherry Point can deal with that cannot come overland through the Trans-Mountain pipeline will be brought there by sea; so that we will have ships of Panamanian registry, Liberian registry, a lot of them crocks, coming down the Strait of Juan de Fuca and going up Rosario Strait to feed the refinery at Cherry Point. This is going to continue even when the new United States ships are built.

If the decision is taken—and it is a big "if"—to increase the refining capacity of Cherry Point, new facilities at Port Angeles will be constructed so ships can offload and the oil pipelined from there to the refineries at Cherry Point. I do not think that is satisfactory. I do not know whether the minister has been hoodwinked. Perhaps she has; perhaps all the facts have not been brought out during the course of these negotiations. In any event, I hope she will inquire more deeply into this matter and get it squared away. I hope I am wrong, but this was the clear, straightforward impression that I got from the representative of the House of Representatives last weekend.

The minister also indicated that she was happy about improvement of the guidance facilities being developed by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), and I think that is good. There is a lot more to be done in this area. We should have a starboard in-starboard out system in the straits so we can avoid head-on collisions between ordinary merchantmen. We should keep the tankers out and ordinary merchantmen should be made subject to a guidance system. One does not exist at the moment but one is, happily, in process of being developed. I hope the minister will urge the Minister of Transport to further this particular enterprise.

At page 5099 of Hansard I had something to say about definitions and the competence Canada would have under this law to control, regulate and prevent dumping. I have to use those words because some dumping is permitted under licence. I notice that, basically, page 3 of the bill concerns the territorial seas of Canada, the territorial seas 12 miles off the base line and the internal waters of Canada other than inland waters with the inland waters being defined as waters that are not internal waters. It is very confusing wording, but we must accept it.

One other term cropped up recently which has me puzzled. I am very pleased to see the minister appear for the continuation of this debate. I received a reply, I believe from the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand), when we were talking about the strange saga of the ship Answer as it zigzagged its way through the ice from Montreal reaching for the high seas to avoid capture. This took place in February. Part of the time the RCMP got close, then backed off, and in fact the RCMP went on board and were taken off because there was some question whether the ship was in Canadian waters. I do not believe, and I am sure from the look on the minister's face that she could not believe, it was outside Canadian waters. The term used in that particular instance was "historic waters". This is a good term, but I do not think it has much meaning in law. I think Canadian territorial seas or Canadian territorial waters, and the writ of Canadian law, runs out the St. Lawrence to the straight line, or 12 miles beyond the straight line, joining the southeastern tip of Newfoundland and the tip of Nova Scotia, with the exclusion of one little, strange anomaly off the coast of Newfoundland which centres at Saint Pierre and Miquelon. Those are Canadian territorial waters. This, again, is water within which this dumping legislation will apply.

But I ask myself why there is no specific provision in this bill to extend the jurisdiction into that area which Canada may very well be assigned, or claim—I am not sure which—as a result of the Law of the Sea Conference. In the 188 miles beyond the 12 miles, I hope Canada will have jurisdiction over matters of pollution. I hope that somewhere is this bill there is provision for the extension of these regulations into that area. I suspect there is; perhaps it is cloaked in some sort of vague terminology. I think this provision is probably in the bill, and if it is not I am sure the minister will want to make certain it is put in, because I am as satisfied as I can be that the Minister of the Environment is as keen as I am about this particular law and in ensuring that the regulations under which it will operate will have as broad an application as possible within national and international law in respect of the waters off Canada's shores.

The penalties are mentioned on page 10 of the bill. I think they are good; they are stiff penalties and I like them. They deserve consideration. Perhaps we ought to increase them to make it quite clear that Canada is serious when it imposes regulations governing the dumping of wastes in the territorial seas or any other part of Canada's waters over which Canada has jurisdiction. A fine of $100,000 is the penalty for an offence involving a substance specified in schedule I. A fine of $75,000 is the penalty where the offence involves a substance specified in schedule II. Then there is a fine of $50,000 where the offence involves any substance not specified in schedules I or II.

When speaking of dumping there is another aspect we should look into: this was discussed at Quebec. I refer to sluicing out the tanks of tankers once they have off loaded their cargo. The amount of oil which clings to the sides of the tanks inside a tanker varies, naturally, according to the viscosity of the product being carried. If it should be heavy oil, of course more will be left on the sides of the tanks and on the bottom. If it should be a volatile product, such as one of the refined products, it will probably disappear or there will be very little left.

The tankers involved in international trade which bring oil to our ports must be cleaned. If accounts are to be believed, as much as 2,000 tons of unrefined product can be left behind by a 200,000-ton tanker. This is a great deal of oil. In these energy-poor days, 2,000 tons of oil is worthy of being saved.

Coming as you do, Mr. Speaker, from an inland constituency, you may not be aware that when tankers offload, go to sea and clean out their tanks, the 2,000 tons goes into the sea, whether it be 2,000 tons of petroleum or of crude oil. These are matters that were mentioned by Thor Heyderdahl. He brought this to our attention years ago, just as Rachel Carson did in her book "The Silent Sea". We are getting close to having a silent sea these days.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It is "Silent Spring".

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): We cannot afford to have the resources of our seas diminished through lack of effort on our part. In my opinion, the sluicing of tankers will have to be arranged at the time of offloading, so that the material will be dumped into a holding or settling tank, the waste recovered, the water used to wash down the walls of the tanks filtered, cleaned and put into the sea as clean water. Not only would we in this way save another 2,000 tons, but we would be preserving the resources of the sea, protecting them from contamination and related dangers which are threatening them.

In my earlier contribution to this debate I think I mentioned some of my recent reading, including the book by Noel Mostert entitled "Super Ship". I cannot speak too highly of that book. It is a frightening and an awakening book. Those of us who are concerned about the world environment and our coastal environment should read it. It presents between its covers a new idea of the dangers and threats which these huge new tankers bring to our seas. It is unbelievable that ships of this size, weight and cargo-carrying capacity should be powered by a single screw. Their manoeuvrability is obviously limited for this reason; their ability to pull up is limited; the momentum that they have once they are under way is almost beyond the calculation of man. These are deep-draught vessels; they do not respond in the same way normal ships do to the buoyancy of the water. Most of an ordinary ship is above water, but most of a tanker is well below water; one sees very little of it. They do not ride out the waves as does a passenger liner.

● (1620)

In addition to all the other things that this bill will do, I hope the minister will ensure that proper rules are enforced to allow the admission of ships in international trade into our ports. She will have to involve the Minister of Transport in this. These ships must be properly built and properly crewed; they must be properly equipped and properly flagged, because one of the problems confronting us in this bill—as I am sure the minister recognizes—is the legal pursuit of the offender. It is the flag state that is responsible. There is one recourse. If the offender happens to belong to a flag line, when the next member of that line comes into your port you can arrest the ship and charge the company by holding it. But if it is an ordinary tramp that makes one call and then is off to the South Seas and you never see it again, there is very little chance of arresting the offender. So flags of convenience have become flags of great inconvenience in these days, and I would like to see them run out of our waters so that they will not endanger them.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): There are one or two further comments that I should like to make in conclusion. On page 15 of the bill I notice a most extraordinary provision in clause 20 which reads:

> The minister may designate any person as an inspector or analyst for the purposes of this act.

I thought that all defeated Liberal candidates had been found employment. Here is a suggestion that if there are some around, the minister is planning to have them named as inspectors or analysts. Surely some qualifications should be required for inspectors or analysts other than "any person". We have people who have been in the pilotage service on our coasts. They would be appropriate persons for these positions. Let us not have "any person", please. I think we might ask the minister to amend this bill, or perhaps we could bring in an amendment when we come to the committee stage, suggesting that it not be just "any person" but that qualified persons shall be nominated. I think we must be more specific in this respect.

On page 22 of the bill reference is made to regulations. Here again, as is so often the case, we see that the governor in council may make regulations for carrying out, for prescribing the form or for specifying the information required, etc. Since these regulations need not be incorporated in the act, surely another schedule to the bill would be appropriate in which the minima and maxima criteria might be listed for the regulations that will flow from this legislation. We have seen it in a number of committees. I remember that we were trying to obtain a draft of the regulations governing the use of small airports. I am sure they were ready, but we were not allowed to see them. Here we need to see a draft of the criteria that will be used in drawing up these regulations.

In the broadest terms, although I would like to say something about the international act, of which I managed to get a copy, we agree that this is legislation which should be on the statute books. We do not propose to delay it unduly, but merely to comment upon it and see that it gets to committee.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, before this bill is sent to committee I want to say a few words first to congratulate the minister for introducing it.

This bill has been expected and overdue for several years. Since I have been sitting in this House there has been talk of setting up an environment monitoring agency, and the speeches made here, the nice words spoken, never gave results. Today, the purpose of this bill is simply to establish a monitoring agency that will, hopefully, have powers proportionate to today's needs. It will be able to monitor, and impose fines to enforce compliance with the legislation. It is not enough to pass regulations, vote legislation. Compliance with the legislation is primordial, starting with merchant ships, small ships. Reference was made earlier to large cargos, oil tankers. In fact, we have been trying for years to deal with those ships that dump waste, as the hon. member who spoke before me said earlier, as they proceed on their course. Of course, it is difficult to monitor all those ships, particularly when they leave territorial waters. I think it is as serious within as without the 12-mile limit because the effects of that dumping are necessarily felt. I think that agency will have to be able, either under an international agreement or otherwise, to extend its jurisdiction beyond those limits and monitor much further so as to be able, once again, to spot those who will contravene the legislation we are about to vote.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that if we do not take extreme measures to stop pollution which is growing ever worse—and navigation is necessarily on the increase—if we fail to do so to protect our waterways, I think, within a few years it will be the end of our vegetation, or our marine life.

Mr. Speaker, I would again like to draw the attention of the House to our new supercargoes plying our seas. The garbage they dump all along their passage is getting much greater.

When accidents happen to these ships, Canada will need water cleaning systems. The minister indicated that we have a few, but I believe they are not adequate. The government certainly will have to invest in this field. When human lives are involved, the main consideration is not money. We will have to meet today's requirements to protect the sea, animal life and the men who live from the sea.

We were told there are approximately six cleaning rigs to cope with emergencies arising out of shipping accidents. I am totally aware of the protection system extent on the Atlantic coast, but I believe that if the act is really going to be implemented, if it is going to be effective, modern apparatus will have to be constructed. If there is an accident, and accidents will happen in view of the present maritime traffic, up to date, maximum-capacity systems will have to be provided.

Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to discuss the bill longer than needed, because it is going to be analyzed in committee, and members of the committee will do an adequate job. It is my hope that this will not be an ineffective statute on our books. It is stated the ministry will be entitled to name responsible people on the board. This is the government's responsibility, but I hope those people will be most competent. I hope, as the hon. member said before me, that these nominations will be based on qualification rather than political considerations, in order that the appointees may act directly on any ship and on any offence. I believe this will be the best way to protect the Canadian people.

[English]

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the minister for introducing Bill C-37, because I feel that this is one more armament in our arsenal to protect the environment. Perhaps I am jumping the gun, but I must also congratulate the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) on his very reasoned and intelligent remarks regarding the threat of tankers off the west coast of British Columbia. It gives me great pleasure to discuss this matter on a non-partisan basis because I feel that many members of this House are concerned about the environment and especially about the dumping of waste and other substances into the ocean. I believe the government has gone a long way toward protecting the environment, particularly the ocean, under bills such as C-25 which is now before committee, under the Canada Shipping Act, the Fisheries Act and now with the introduction of Bill C-37.

I am very pleased that besides fines—which I agree are high and which will act as a deterrent, or should act as a deterrent because $100,000 is a large sum of money for a large company, a small company, a large fleet or a small fleet—there are detention, seizure and forfeiture clauses. These clauses bring a double edge to this bill and I feel that the deterrents are adequate. In the past there has been criticism that some legislation has not had enough teeth, but I think hon. members will agree that there are very strong deterrents in this bill both of a financial nature and, as I have said, the detention and seizure clauses.

I am concerned that in the Arctic there are situations where there has been no legislation to cover dumping, not only of waste in the ocean but also on the ice. I would like to congratulate the minister for including in the bill provisions with respect to dumping wastes on the ice. Hon. members realize that the Arctic is a very important part of our country, and because of the delicate ecology, there has to be special legislation such as ice hazard coverage to protect this important part of Canada. I feel that the scheduling of prohibited and restricted substances in Bill C-37 is commendable. There can be no question as to which substances can or cannot be put into the ocean from ships and aircraft because there are schedules laid down and they are there to be followed.

I express only one concern. This is not in regard to Bill C-37 but the shipping of oil from the Prudhoe Bay area in the Alaskan fields to the refineries in Washington. I believe there has been a long, hard fight by hon. members presently in this House as well as by former members to find a means of transporting oil from Alaska to American refineries. I understand the problem with which the United States is faced. Since it is deficient in oil, it is using every means possible to explore for resources in the United States and Alaska, to have them available as soon as possible and to inject them into the economy as soon as possible. In view of the world price of oil the United States is facing a tremendous balance of payments deficit because it is not self-sufficient in oil. Notwithstanding this argument, I feel that there must be some other method of transporting this oil to the American market. We in Canada have suggested several alternatives. We have considered the Mackenzie Valley. The Premier of British Columbia has suggested building railroads to bring oil down from the North Slope through the Northwest Territories and into Alberta.

I suggest that the government should do everything in its power to find an alternative method of bringing this oil down to the American refineries. If it is environmentally better to move it by a landlocked route, then we should do everything in our power to make sure that is the way it moves. I know, as does the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich, that if these supertankers go down the coast of British Columbia, one day there will be spills. I do not think there is any doubt about that. The only question is when it will occur, because the ocean off the west coast is known to be treacherous. There are many severe storms in winter and some squalls during the summer, so it is only a question of time until one of the supertankers comes apart. We should try our best to prevent such destruction to the west coast of British Columbia. Our ecology cannot stand this type of damage. I support the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich in his effort to find another way, but the answer is not to extend wharfage at certain Washington ports. We should be trying to keep it out of those ports. It behooves us to find a better environmental path for oil coming from Alaska. A landlocked route would not destroy the ecology for the fishing industry which is so important to British Columbia, nor the beaches which are so important to the pleasure of our citizens. I think Bill C-37 is going in the right direction, Mr. Speaker, and I support it. Let us hope we can find an alternate route for the tankers.

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to make a few remarks on the bill now before the House. After studying the bill and reading the comments of members who have spoken, I cannot help but think of a 1,000-year old fish travelling the oceans of the world. Imagine the tales it could tell! It would tell about the advancement of our technology, and the advancement of our ocean pollution. It would probably tell of the agonies of the thousands of fish that have died as a result of the man-made pollution of recent years. Not too long ago, in a statement to the press, Jacques Costeau said that unless the governments of the world took steps immediately, the seas of the world would be dead within 25 years. That is a short span in which to witness the total destruction of marine life. What a long time it has taken to reach the present state of pollution, and what a short time there is left to rectify matters.

I should like to move on to discuss the content of this bill, Mr. Speaker. Basically, it is a good bill. The other day the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark) unintentionally made a spoonerism when he referred to something "seeping through a leakhole". I think this is a very accurate description of some of the clauses in this bill. I am particularly concerned about one matter that has been drawn to the attention of the House by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) and others, and that is the minister's authority to appoint any person to the duties and responsibilities of an inspector.

Mr. Alexander: That is the catch.

Mr. Brisco: Yes, that is the catch. I am almost, but not quite, convinced that this might be an abuse and I think it is incumbent upon the government to alter the clause so that it will not be an abuse. The other matter that gives me considerable concern is the schedules. Schedule I refers to high-level radioactive substances. I think it is up to the government to spell out precisely what a high-level of radioactivity is. I hope the experts can resolve this question in committee. It is not spelled out here, and it should be if the bill is be implemented properly.

Schedule II lists prohibited substances and includes chemicals pertaining to the mining industry and smelting. I know the minister is concerned because provincial laws are different and some are weak, but as things stand these industries are in a position to dump their wastes from the land into the oceans, rivers, lakes and streams. The purpose of the bill is to control dumping in oceans, lakes, rivers and streams of waste from ships, platforms and aircraft; but there is nothing in Canadian law to control the dumping of these substances from the shore. This could result in calamity. I suggest to the minister that while some provincial laws may pertain to these substances, the control should be federal, it should be all-encompassing and it should spell out the details.

The bill refers to allowance for dumping in times of danger to life, ship or aircraft; but I do not see any reference to accidental dumping. There is no indication of the action the department could take in a situation such as now exists off the coast of British Columbia. In British Columbia there are railway cars loaded with chlorine. Chlorine is stored at a depth of so many thousand feet. That chlorine will seep into the ocean. There is no indication as to how this bill will prevent such an eventuality. Accidents at sea happen, and will continue to happen. This is "after the fact" legislation, Mr. Speaker. This bill ought to deal with problems we shall need to face if there is accidental dumping.

I support the position of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Anderson) who is concerned about what will happen on the west coast if oil tankers carry their cargoes down that coast. Nothing frustrates the people of British Columbia, or all of Canada, more than knowing that oil will be carried along the west coast of Canada down to the United States. I have never heard a greater degree of frustration expressed than has been expressed on this issue in recent years by the people of British Columbia. I endorse what the hon. member said: some other way must be found. We can only help our ecology and environment by the establishment of a pipeline to guarantee supplies to the United States. I see the minister nodding her head in agreement. I know, she knows and every member of this House knows that her hands are tied, that she has little to say about the ocean route of these tankers.

Inevitably, despite man's modern technology, despite the efforts of all governments to secure safe passage for ships, catastrophes will occur. Considering the enormous volumes of oil which tankers now carry, any spill may be considered a catastrophe. We may hope that winds and ocean currents will take the oil offshore, but that only solves part of the problem as the pollution will show up somewhere else. Every member of this House will support the minister's efforts to resolve the difficulty. True, I am not speaking precisely on the terms of the bill except in so far as it applies to ocean dumping.

There are those in this House who are concerned about what will happen if a west coast oil tanker route is firmly established. They have voiced their concern in the past and will voice it in future. The bill refers to emergencies, to risks unacceptable to human life and human health, but it provides for no solutions. I find that strange. What are those risks to human life and health which will not lend themselves to solution? Why was such language included in the bill in the first place? When does the department imagine it would be invoked?

Adjournment Debate

Some time ago a newspaper article about Great Lakes pollution upset me so much that I put a question on the order paper which asked the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Sauvé) the following question: What is the estimated tonnage of human waste that will be dumped in the next five years from vessels plying the Great Lakes? The response was that estimated quantity of human sewage, including the usual three gallons of flush-water per person per day, is seven million tons for the next five years. I then asked: To what degree, in percentages, does the dumping of human waste from such vessels contribute to the pollution of the Great Lakes? In other words, how great will be the proportion, in percentage terms, of human pollution dumped from vessels plying the Great Lakes in relation to the total volume of pollution which will be dumped into the Great Lakes in the next five years? The answer, Mr. Speaker, is .3 of 1 per cent.

On that basis we are talking about 2⅓ billion tons of pollutants which will be dumped in the Great Lakes in the next five years. The discharge regulations under the legislation may resolve this problem in five years, but I suggest that will be too late. I urge the earlier resolution of this problem; let it be done before five years. Why should we allow this condition to continue? The cost of curing it is really not that great.

May I call it five o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Is the minister rising on a point of order?

An hon. Member: Five o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Order, please. It being five o'clock, it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hn. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall)—Housing—Neighbourhood improvement and residential rehabilitation assistance programs—request for increased funds; the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie)—Air Canada—Possible inclusion of Winnipeg finance branch in terms of inquiry; the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie)—Social Security—Suggested increase in old age pensions—government position.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions and public bills.

[Mr. Brisco.]

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

CANADA PENSION PLAN

SUGGESTED MEASURE TO ENTITLE SELF-EMPLOYED FARMERS AND FISHERMEN TO AVERAGE INCOMES OVER FIVE-YEAR PERIOD

Mr. John Wise (Elgin) moved:

That in the opinion of this House, the government should introduce a measure to entitle self-employed farmers and fishermen, for the purpose of receiving benefits under the Canada Pension Plan, to average their incomes over a five-year period.

● (1700)

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am grateful for this opportunity to place before the House a motion which I attempted to introduce some time ago in the form of a private member's bill. Upon receipt of some good advice from the House officials that the substance of my desire and concern might be regarded as a money bill, thus contravening the rules and spirit of this institution, I did not proceed in that manner but, rather, elected this opportunity in House business to express my concern.

The motion, which is self-explanatory, would assist a percentage of farmers and fishermen in this country and would remove one of the many difficulties these Canadians suffer because of a frequently fluctuating year by year income. If members will read through the volume of minutes of the special joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Bill C-136, the Canada Pension Plan bill, 1964 to 1965, on page 1163, appendix A15, they will see an excellent statement on this subject presented to the committee at that time by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. The last paragraph in the federation's statement deals with this situation very accurately. It reads:

One other specific point we wish to raise has to do with the calculation of the pensionable income of self-employed persons. Section B of the bill seems to us to define income according to the terms of the Income Tax Act. We take it that this means that when a farmer adopts averaging, then his averaged income will be, also, his income for pension purposes. If this is not so the act should be revised to make it so. With the extreme variability of many farm incomes, there will be many farmers whose income will fluctuate above and below the maximum pensionable earnings figure. If averaging, for pension purposes, is not permitted, the farmer who experiences such fluctuations will certainly end up with a considerably smaller pension.

In the process of preparing this presentation I was advised that considerable assurance was given to the federation, if not publicly then privately, that this inequity would be dealt with. However, if one reads the information booklet for the self-employed produced by the Department of National Revenue, Taxation, by authority of the minister, on page 3 one finds that farmers and fishermen, who are dealt with in like terms in the Income Tax Act, will contribute on their actual self-employed earnings and cannot average their income for Canada Pension Plan purposes. On page 3 of the booklet "Information for the Self-Employed", it reads:

A farmer or fisherman will contribute on his actual self-employed earnings and cannot average his income for Canada Pension Plan purposes. Losses incurred in other years are not deductible in computing self-employed earnings for a year.

The Canada Pension Plan which began to operate on January 1, 1966, requiring every self-employed person residing in Canada between the ages of 18 and 70 who has self-employed earnings amounting to $800 during the year, is certainly a milestone in Canada's social security program. I realize there have been a number of amendments and regulatory changes since that time. I have a list of them. However, in order to save time I will not go into them. Perhaps my case might best be presented by an actual illustration of an example I dealt with recently. The particular individual on whose behalf I have been working and will continue to work will be referred to as Mr. X.

In the year 1966, Mr. X's income was $78.17. Consequently, his Canada Pension Plan payment was nil. His income in 1967 was $664.34. Again, his contribution was nil. In 1968, his income was $2,849.74. This qualified him to pay $80.99 into the Canada Pension Plan. His income for 1969 was $3,037.18 and his Canada Pension Plan contribution $87.74. For the year 1970, his income was $5,637.19 and his Canada Pension Plan contribution $169.20. In 1971, his income was $2,355.38 and his contribution to the plan was $60.40. In 1972 he received interest income only of $1,054.48; consequently, he was not permitted to contribute to the plan. In 1973, he received interest income only of $905.65; therefore, he again was not eligible to contribute to the plan.

If you examine the foregoing closely, you will recognize the very real hardship illustrated for Mr. X. Because the averaging provision is not allowed, only four years of contributions were made. It is not the five-year qualifying period that I dispute but, rather, the absence of the averaging provision in the Canada Pension Plan Act. I could not let the opportunity pass while speaking on this particular case without making some reference to another difficulty, namely, that income of an investment nature such as dividends and, in Mr. X's case, interest on bonds, are excluded from self-employed earnings.

In 1971, Mr. X became seriously ill. He relies on a dialysis machine for survival and is confined strictly to a wheel-chair. Consequently, because of the present terms of the Canada Pension Plan he is unable to secure disability benefits from the plan. Numerous examples could be cited, particularly by those engaged in both the farming and fishing industries whose incomes for one year are below the minimum and indeed are above the maximum the very next year. I am certain that much could be said against the Income Tax Act, but that act does recognize this very problem and has a provision for averaging. If the government could develop some incentives, establish some stability and create some effective long-term programs and policies in these two basic and important food producing segments of our economy, this problem would be greatly overcome. Unfortunately, I do not see this happening.

I sincerely appreciate this opportunity to present my motion to the government. I earnestly request that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) and his colleagues give equally serious consideration, and some assurance, that at an early opportunity the Canada Pension Plan Act will be amended to overcome this inequity, in an effort to develop and improve the Canada Pension Plan to the paramount position that not only the minister but all Canadians desire.

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Mr. Speaker, some might be surprised that a member representing an urban constituency should wish to speak on a motion which appears to relate to the interests of rural and seafaring communities. Nevertheless, I assure the House that those of us who live in urban communities do recognize the difficulties which farmers have had to face. We acknowledge that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) was right when he said that Canadians have enjoyed good food at a cost lower than that which people in most of the other nations of the world have to pay.

● (1710)

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): The farmers have enjoyed the lowest incomes, too!

Mr. Collenette: In fact, I believe Canadians spend the smallest proportion of their disposable incomes on food. I am glad to speak on this motion for another reason. It has to do with the Canada Pension Plan, and in York East a large segment of the population is made up of people who have retired or who are nearing the age of retirement. Of course, they are interested in anything which has to do with the Canada Pension Plan or old age security.

Essentially, what this motion proposes is that self-employed farmers and fishermen be allowed to use the Income Tax Act's five-year averaging technique to determine their annual contribution under the Canada Pension Plan. The basic assumption, then, must be that what makes sense for the Income Tax Act also makes sense for the Canada Pension Plan. There are some serious flaws, though, in making such an assumption.

The Income Tax Act works in year-tight compartments and provides that the rate of tax depends directly on the amount of annual income. While the Income Tax Act does provide special averaging arrangements to modify tax inequities created by wide fluctuations in income, the application of the averaging arrangements does not change the one-year time dimension. The Canada Pension Plan, on the other hand, works on a career lifetime basis; that is to say, benefits are based on the contributor's earnings averaged over his entire working lifetime. In other words, the CPP is not based on one year of earnings, as with the Income Tax Act, nor even on a five-year average of income, but is upon earnings through the participant's whole career. This, of course, means a potential 47-year average; that is, from age 18 to age 65.

This averaging feature has been part of the plan since its inception and was specifically designed to smooth out wide differences in annual earnings and to produce a benefit which bears a relationship to career experience. Another significant point of difference between the two acts is that under the CPP fluctuating incomes do not affect the participant's rate of contribution. An example may demonstrate these points more clearly: an individual may have earnings in five successive years of $1,600 in the first year, $7,400 in the second, $4,500 in the third, $1,600 in the fourth and $7,400 in the fifth. Tax payments can be very different if the earnings are taken as the average annual rate of $4,500 rather than as the actual figures.

This, of course, is the very purpose of the special averaging provisions of the Income Tax Act, and presumably why the motion proposes the same technique for the Canada Pension Plan.

However, such an arrangement is not necessary for the CPP: under the plan, the contribution rate is the same whether actual or average earnings are used. Then, for CPP benefit purposes, these five years of earnings will automatically be averaged along with all other years in the contributory period and so, apart from the updating of earnings feature of the benefit formula, the year to year fluctuation in earnings' level will be negated. In order to appreciate just how the CPP benefit formula does affect various earnings patterns, it is useful to examine the formula a little further. The general formula for a retirement pension—which is also the basis for the earnings-related component of a survivor's or disability pension—is 25 per cent of the participant's updated earnings, averaged over the period during which he was required to contribute to the plan. Before taking the percentage, the following steps are performed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Carry on.

Mr. Collenette: I thank hon. members for their encouragement. It is always nice to be encouraged at this hour. As I was saying, the following steps are performed: First, the individual's contributory period is established; this is generally from January, 1966—or reaching age 18, whichever is later—to the month before the retirement pension begins, (which is age 65 or later); second, the individual's actual contributory earnings for each month in his contributory period are updated. This updating or adjustment operation is designed to give a current value to the actual contributory earnings and involves restating the actual earnings in terms of the average of the maximum earnings levels under the plan for the year of retirement and the two preceding years. Third, the total updated earnings are averaged over the individual's contributory period.

If the fluctuations in an individual's earnings are such that each year's earnings are between the yearly basic exemption—the amount to be earned before contributions can be made—and the yearly earnings ceiling, the averaging and updating processes which are carried out before the benefit is established will smooth out the fluctuations which throughout the career are in this range. Because most people fall into this category, the net effect of the proposal would be a great deal of effort to no real avail.

The plan in its original design also provided for an adjustment in this earnings averaging process to allow for years when earnings would be very low, or even below the basic exemption. The first such special provision applies to the contributory period, where the plan provides that a participant's contributory period is reduced if he receives a disability pension under the Canada or Quebec Pension Plan, that is, the averaging period does not include any month during which the participant received a CPP or QPP disability pension.

There are, in addition, two provisions dealing specifically with periods of low earnings which come into play on January 1, 1976, upon completion of the retirement pension transition period. First, an individual who continues to work past 65 and continues to contribute to the plan will, if it is to his advantage, have his earnings for the months after he reaches age 65 replace lower earnings for any months before he reached age 65. In other words, high earnings are substituted for low earnings, and this is clearly to the contributors' advantage; it is obviously better to substitute $6,000 for $1,000 than to average the two. In addition, an individual can drop out up to 15 per cent of the remaining months of his contributory period; this drop-out provision is, of course, applied to the months of lowest earnings. An overriding condition attached to both these provisions is that they cannot serve to reduce the contributory period below ten years.

As an example of the combined effect of these two provisions, we can take the case of an individual who comes under the plan in 1966 and retires at the age of 66 in 1977, and who during that 12-year period has experienced two years with no earnings and ten years at maximum earnings. Because he contributed to the plan for a year after reaching the age of 65, that year of maximum earnings replaces one of the years of zero earnings. The drop-out feature is then applied and this provision serves to eliminate the other year of zero earnings. In this hypothetical example, then, the operation of the over age 65 earnings substitution and the drop-out provision mean that the individual will receive a maximum pension, even though he had two years of nil earnings during his working career. The elimination of low earnings via the drop-out provisions means, in the example, a 100 per cent pension rather than an 83 per cent pension; if low earnings were not dropped but diluted via an averaging process, the result would not be a 100 per cent pension.

To summarize this point, the career-long averaging of earnings provided for in the plan and the special earnings adjustment features to provide for years of low or nil earnings mean that by far the majority of different patterns of earnings have already been provided for in the plan. Adoption of the motion would involve the contributor in a great deal of record keeping and complex analysis which would likely result in no real advantage. Indeed, exercise of the option could work to his disadvantage.

One worrisome pattern that became so with the new technique for accelerating increases in the plan's yearly earning ceiling is where the individual has a number of years below the annual basic exemption. That is, up until January 1, 1975, an employee had to earn over 12 per cent of the annual earnings ceiling in order to contribute to the plan in that year. The self-employed contributor had to earn over 1⅓ times the basic exemption before he could make a CPP contribution for that year. With the earnings ceiling increasing at the rate of 12½ per cent a year, these qualifying formulae could well have kept a number of people from contributing to the plan in respect of low income years.

Accordingly, when the new technique for establishing the annual earnings ceiling was introduced, the plan was also changed to have the basic exemption dropped to 10 per cent of the earnings ceiling and the extra one-third threshold for self-employed contributors deleted. Without these changes, a self-employed person would have had to have earnings in excess of $1,000 in order to make valid CPP contributions in 1975. As it is, the 1975 basic exemption for both employee and self-employed contributors is $700. With all these plan design features, it is hard to understand the reason for proposing the further—and, indeed, perhaps unnecessary—linking of two statutes when each on its own is already extremely complex, and particularly when there are fundamental dissimilarities both in the time dimension contemplated and the rate structure.

Even if the desirability of this mixed marriage could be established, the motion does not treat of some very important particulars. For example, under the Income Tax Act all forms of income are included in the averaging formula. The Canada Pension Plan, on the other hand, covers only earnings from employment. What adaptation, if any, is to be made? Another question unanswered is the timing for the exercising of an option in favour of a five-year averaging. The CPP already provides for an averaging period that ranges from 10 to 47 years: at what point in this averaging period should a further averaging be allowed? The best time is obviously at the time the benefit is being calculated, but a proper choice could not be made without a careful examination of up to 47 years of earnings and a full understanding of the way earnings are averaging and adjusted, and then the decision could involve a reconciliation of all the contributions made over those 47 years. On the other hand, any choice made before retirement time would of necessity be a blind choice, and accordingly there would seem to be reason for remedies when an unwise choice resulted in either overpaid benefits or the loss of benefits altogether.

In summary, the proposition contained in the motion is built on a faulty assumption of the empathy between the Income Tax Act and the CPP. It does not take into account the earnings averaging and adjustment provision already in the plan. It would involve a complicated effort on the part of both the individual contributor and the plan administrators. Finally, it would have no real effect in the great majority of cases and indeed could operate to the disadvantage of some. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I think I have given just reasons why I oppose this motion.

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I should like very much to compliment the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise) for bringing forward this motion today. He did not have to speak very long: he only spoke ten minutes because his presentation was so realistic and logical.

An hon. Member: Say that with a straight face.

Mr. Whittaker: The hon. member asks, can I say that with a straight face? I certainly can say it with a straight face, especially after the presentation we have just heard, lasting a full 20 minutes; a dissertation, you might call it, written almost right out of book by some city slicker and read by the same, not really knowing or understanding the problems of the farmers. There is an old saying that farmers live poor and die rich. But that saying is very fast changing and very fast leaving, because not only are they living poor but they are dying poor, especially when we see the rate of inflation that we have in Canada today, and the government opposite doing very little or nothing about it.

When you talk about averaging for such things as the CPP for farmers, it is realistic. It is realistic when you know and understand what farmers go through, the differences in their earnings year by year, and when you know that they cannot always make a good earning. One year you could be in almost a loss position and the next year you could be doing very well.

There is not much stability in agriculture in Canada today, although I am happy to say that our government in British Columbia is trying to put some stability into the industry—much more than this federal government is doing. It is because of this that we have to ask for such things as averaging for the farmers with respect to CPP.

I am sure the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is going to support this motion. Not like he did last Friday, when the government opposite came in and challenged a motion that would allow people who had overseas service to count it as presence in Canada so they could get an old age pension. When this motion was brought into the House it was challenged by the government opposite because it was going to a money bill. Funny money, I say. There was not much to it, but I was very sorry to see that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre saw fit to support their challenge. I am sure he will not see anything that will cost the government any money in this motion today. I sit here quite often when private members' motions and bills come up, and listen to the crocodile tears from the members opposite.

An hon. Member: Shame!

• (1730)

Mr. Whittaker: Shame is right. The hon. member speaks of shame. I say "shame" when they cry crocodile tears and then spend the remaining time talking out a bill.

An hon. Member: Who is talking now?

Mr. Whittaker: I shall not take long. I am sure this motion will not be talked out and will pass. I shall not take much more time because I do not want to see too many crocodile tears but rather some action. I want to see the members opposite pass this motion rather than give us dissertations such as the last 20 minute dissertation from the hon. member opposite. These farmers are the backbone of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whittaker: They are not receiving any help from this government. The hon. member asks about the Stabilization Act. It is a disaster. I suggest that he take a look at what the provinces are contemplating doing about stabilization for farmers. He should understand what is going on because the federal government is not placing the proper base under farming. So, as I said, I support very strongly this motion of the hon. member for Elgin and hope that members opposite will not spend the next 25 minutes or longer talking it out.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I did not rise on a point of order when the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker) was speaking because I realized I could probably get the floor before very long. However, I want to object to his suggestion that because I took a stand on a point of order on Friday I was therefore against the substance of his bill which related to the Old Age Security Act. He knows very well that I support 100 per cent the point he is trying to win, both in his private member's motion and in his private member's bill. I believe there is support on all sides of the House and that we will win the point very soon. I hardly think it is appropriate to say that one's stand on a point of order reflects where he stands on the substance of a measure.

I wish to commend the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise) for bringing down this motion and for raising the discussion we are having this afternoon. I must say, however, that the problem is one which calls for a very thorough study. I wish to say also that it is a problem that applies not only to self-employed farmers and fishermen. I hope, therefore, that this debate this afternoon will provoke more study of the whole question of the losses some people can sustain under the Canada Pension Plan because of years of low income or of no income at all. Essentially that is the point raised by the hon. member for Elgin. He has applied it to self-employed farmers and fishermen, but it applies to many others as well, and it raises the whole problem we have not yet solved concerning what to do about women in the home and others who are not in the labour force. The two groups to which the hon. member refers include people who receive incomes in some years and do not receive incomes in other years and who are affected by not being covered by the Canada Pension Plan at certain times, but there are many others as well.

The hon. member for Okanagan Boundary took an appropriate crack at the hon. member for York East (Mr. Collenette), but I believe the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary, before he goes too far with that, should study the workings of the Canada Pension Plan. It is true that there is an averaging characteristic in it by virtue of the fact that the pension one receives depends upon the level of pensionable income in the last three years before he retires. That level is applied to the percentage of the YMPE one has had through his working years. I suggest it is a fair question to ask which is more beneficial to a self-employed farmer or fisherman, to have an averaging of earnings when he is 35 or 40 years of age, or to have some improvement in the formula with regard to the pension he will receive when he retires at age 65. So I agree with the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary that this is not something to be talked out because I hope the very discussion of this resolution will highlight the fact that, good as the Canada Pension Plan is, there are improvements which need to be made to it.

The hon. member for York East referred to the drop-out provision which, after one has been in the plan for ten years, is 15 per cent of the months or years one is in the plan. I remind the hon. member that when this bill was before the special committee to which it was referred, I believe in 1965, in that committee we made a very strong recommendation that that 15 per cent should be 20 per cent. I think that should be looked at again in the light of experience. Indeed the provision of 20 per cent in respect of drop-out years instead of 15 per cent might meet this problem in respect of self-employed farmers and self-employed fishermen even better than the system of averaging their incomes. At any rate I am attempting to outline my contention that, good as the Canada Pension Plan is, there are improvements to be made to it.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

The hon. member for Elgin is on the beam when he says an area which must be looked at is the loss suffered by some individuals because they have years of low income. But, as I said a moment ago, this raises almost immediately the whole question of housewives and all persons, male or female, in or out of the home, who have years in which they are not covered by the Canada Pension Plan. I know that quite a bit of thought has been given to this. I know that papers have been presented to various committees and by various committees, but the answer does not yet seem to have been produced.

I have suggested, two or three times in the past year or so, that a closer relationship between the Canada Pension Plan and the Old Age Security Act might be thought out. Maybe we should provide that for years when contributions are not made to the Canada Pension Plan, there should be a special bonus with respect to old age security. I hope something like this will be considered carefully. I shall keep my promise not to take very long. I think the whole problem has to be thought through, and that we must find ways and means to protect all our people so that they might get the best possible benefit under the Canada Pension Plan. This includes farmers and fishermen, but also many others, married women in particular. In the sense that this motion raises this whole issue this afternoon I commend the hon. member for Elgin for having put it down.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): The hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell.

Mr. Denis Ethier (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Merci, monsieur l'Orateur. I should like to tell the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker) that it will not be a city slicker addressing you. On the contrary it will be one who represents a rural agricultural riding and is very proud of it.

[Translation]

If I am eager to take part in this debate on the motion introduced by the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise), it is in part because, as the elected representative of a rural riding, I make it a point to intervene whenever the future security of my constituents is at stake, as it is the case with Bill C-33, and in part to indicate the areas of possible injustice which this motion contains.

There is no doubt the hon. member for Elgin moved this motion with the very best intentions, perhaps even for the purpose of helping a limited group of individual fishermen and farmers. If such is the case, I should have liked to hear the hon. member specify the particular groups of farmers and fishermen who are the object of his motion, even to the point of identifying each and every one of them by names.

Mr. Speaker, we are being urged to change the administration of the Canada Pension Plan to benefit all Canadian farmers and fishermen. I am sure most of these are quite satisfied with the Canada Pension Plan as it exists now.

When the plan was first introduced in 1965, the reaction from the Canadian public was generally favourable, as is the case for all legislation submitted under a Liberal administration. As I was saying, the pension plan was very well received, because Canadians were quick to understand that when their age fo retirement will arrive, they will proudly claim their pension.

I said that they will proudly claim their pension, because they will not be asking for social security allowances or financial assistance from their government, they will simply be asking for what is theirs, a pension that they shall have paid for under the Canada Pension Plan. After ten years of existence, it could be, as was expressed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), that some changes might prove necessary, but I am sure that if amendments or changes are made, they will only improve the legislation. Certain changes have been brought to the legislation in recent years, and I must reiterate that this was accomplished once again thanks to the sound administration of a Liberal government.

First of all, the number of Canadians able to contribute to the retirement plan was considerably increased. Second, the amount of monthly benefits was raised and it is estimated that by 1980, upon retirement a citizen will be able to receive as much as $250 a month in addition to his old age security, and even as much as $350 a month by the year 1985. Third, citizens aged 65 to 70 will be able to continue to work, if they so wish, while continuing to receive their retirement pension from the pension plan.

In studying the motion before us one must single out the possible inequities in Bill C-33. For instance, the motion proposes that for the purpose of receiving benefits, self-employed farmers and fishermen be entitled to average their income over a five-year period. In essence it seems that the proposition is predicated on the belief that it would be to the individual's advantage under the CPP if the plan were to incorporate certain of the provisions of the Income Tax Act. The underlying assumptions then must be that the implications of wide fluctuations of income are the same for both acts, and that the effects of the Income Tax Act provisions would remedy any inequities under the CPP. There are, however, strong reasons for suspecting that neither the implications nor the effects of the remedy are similar, and indeed the reverse can be the case.

For example, because of the way income tax rates are developed, an even pattern of earnings is nearly always more beneficial to the individual taxpayer. The same principle does not apply to the CPP contributor. To illustrate let me point out that the best CPP earnings for the years 1973, 1974 and 1975 are, respectively, $5,600, $6,600 and $7,400, that is, maximum earnings in each year. If we were to consider the average earnings for these years, that is $6,533, the individual's income tax position would be good, but he would not benefit under the CPP at all since his earnings for 1973 would be too high and would fall below the maximum for 1974 and 1975.

The second way in which identification of the two acts falls down is in the upper limits of each or, rather, the rising annual maximum earnings ceiling under the CPP as compared to the indefinite ceiling for income tax purposes. For the CPP ceiling the absolute amount of earnings in any given year is not as important as the relationship of those earnings to the CPP ceiling for that year. For example, earnings of $5,000 in 1966 have greater value for purposes of a CPP benefit calculation than earnings of $7,300 in 1975, because the $5,000 equals the 1966 earnings ceiling.

Yet another factor in assessing whether adoption of the motion would provide advantages to contributors has to do with the minimum contributory qualifications for some of the plan benefits. That is, just one valid contribution entitles a participant to a retirement pension under the plan. However, in order to provide for the plan's other benefits, an individual must make valid contributions to the plan for a certain minimum period of time. In order for a survivor's pension, orphans' benefits or a lump sum benefit to be paid under the plan, it must be established that the deceased contributor made valid contributions to the plan for a minimum period, which ranges from three to ten years, depending upon when the contributor became subject to the plan.

So far as disability pensions and the disabled contributor's child's benefit are concerned, the minimum period of contributions in order to qualify for these benefits ranges from five to ten years, with a further recency qualification that five of those contribution years must be within the ten years before the onset of the disability.

With these qualifications in mind, consider the situation of a self-employed farmer or fisherman whose annual earnings might be $1,000 in each of the first two years, and who had no further earnings for the next three years. Under present law he would have contributory earnings for two of the five years. However, if his earnings were to be averaged over the five-year period, he could not be considered as having contributory earnings in any of the five years. This loss of contributory years could be critical in terms of qualifying for either disability or survivor benefits.

This is all by way of demonstrating that, for some of the key provisions of the act, it may be crucial to preserve a given year as one in which contributions are made, regardless of the level of the earnings in that year, so long as the figure is higher than the annual basic exemption.

Both the Income Tax Act and the CPP recognize that the most usual earnings curve is one which starts low and ends high, yet both also provide special arrangements for deviations from this usual pattern. There is, however, a necessary distinction to be made in these special arrangements. Because the CPP operates over each participant's whole career, the special provisions for fluctuations in income are applied generally and are not restricted to a given class or classes. Moreover, because the special CPP arrangements serve to ameliorate many different variations in earnings patterns, there may be little use in superimposing the averaging arrangement provided in the Income Tax Act. The superimposing of the five year averaging option would complicate the plan, which is not now known for its simplicity, and would demand the talents of an actuarially trained prophet to decide whether or not the individual's best interests would be served if indeed the option were exercised.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, this motion would not serve the best interests of our farmers and fishermen mentioned in this motion, but would indeed complicate matters for them. Representing as I do a farming community, I cannot support such a motion.

● (1750)

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by commending the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise) for raising this very important question. It is important to keep reviewing the very complex Canada Pension Plan to ensure that people are not penalized for periods of low earnings, and that as people age they receive the maximum benefits.

I am sorry that the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker) chose to try to make a distinction between the needs of senior citizens in urban areas and in rural areas. I am sure he is well aware that major changes in the Canada Pension Plan are only made by agreement with the provinces, and that they require the consent of two thirds of the provinces having two thirds of the population before they can be implemented. Experience generally seems to show that what is a problem for one section of the community may also be a problem for another. For example, the change which came into effect January last which deleted a special provision which had applied to self-employed persons, that is, the requirement that they must earn at least one and one third of the Year's Basic Exemption to qualify as a contributor, was an amendment which certainly benefitted fishermen, farmers, and also many other self-employed persons in cities. So I think when one is looking at this legislation one needs to consider the needs of all Canadians, whether they be farmers or city dwellers.

I am very much in agreement with the hon. member for Elgin that one wants to see this plan as inclusive as possible and to see that people get the maximum benefits and are not penalized for periods of low earnings, but I have some difficulty with the technicalities of the motion and whether the five-year averaging would really add anything to the existing provision for a 47 year averaging. In fact I can see some situations where five year averaging might work to the detriment of the contributor.

The motion before us does not deal with the key question of when that option would be exercised, and as one looks at the way the plan is constructed it seems that the best decision can only be made shortly before the pension is received, and that an earlier decision might put a person at a disadvantage.

The beginning phase of the plan is, of course, the paying of contributions and, unlike the Income Tax Act, the level of earnings does not change the contribution rate. As long as the individual's earnings in any given year are over the basic exemption, the participant pays the standard contribution rate on his or her earnings between the basic exemption and the earnings ceiling. The contribution rate in 1975 is 1.8 per cent on all earnings subject to the plan.

A five year averaging of income for CPP contribution purposes, as I see it, works two ways. The averaging of the earnings can mean that a year or years become contributory years when such was not the case for the actual earnings. However, the reverse can happen with a period interspersed with low earning years and no earning years averaged out, so that none of the years in the average period would be assigned annual earnings in excess of the exemption, and thus all the years would be lost for contributory purposes.

As one considers the way the Canada Pension Plan formula works, a simple statement of this formula is that a retirement pension is equal to 25 per cent of the contributer's average monthly pensionable earnings. However, as previous speakers have said, the simplicity stops there. It is quite a complex formula, and the process involves four steps.

The process used to establish the average monthly pensionable earnings is, first, determining in each individual case the contributory period. There is a basic contributory period of 120 months for payment of the full pension, but this is a basic period. The normal contributing period runs from January 1, 1966, or on reaching age 18, whichever is later, to the month before the contributor begins to receive his retirement pension, which can be no earlier than the month after reaching the age of 65. From this period, however, are deducted any months during which the individual received a disability pension under either the Canada Pension Plan or the Quebec Pension Plan.

The second step involves looking at each month of the individual's contributory earnings which are those actual earnings in each month on which he made a valid CPP contribution, and these are updated. All the actual earnings are revalued in accordance with the movement in levels between the plan's earnings ceiling in the year of the earnings and the average of the earnings ceilings for the year of retirement and the two preceding years.

Third, once all the earnings have been revalued, then the special adjustment provisions come into play. These provisions will take effect January 1, 1976. The first deduction allowed is for an individual who contributes to the plan after reaching age 65. Any higher earnings for this period will replace months of lower earnings before reaching 65. The second adjustment is the drop-out provision which allows a participant to drop out at present up to 15 per cent of the number of months in his contributory period. Obviously the drop-out will be applied to delete months of low earnings. For both the over age 65 substitution of earnings provision and the drop-out provision, there is an overriding proviso that the total period cannot fall below the basic 120 months.

Fourth, once all the earnings have been adjusted, the total is averaged over the contributory period as established in step one, and 25 per cent of that average equals the monthly retirement pension.

This is the current method of averaging and adjusting contributory earnings. Considering this structure it seems that the advantage or otherwise of allowing the five year averaging will not be known until the end of the working career, which is the only time when it can be absolutely determined how many months are in the individual's contributory period, how the drop-out provision and the over 65 substitute earnings provisions will work, and how the earnings adjustment feature affects the benefit calculation. One can foresee situations where averaging of income for contribution purposes could have an adverse effect on the pensions paid to many low and middle income earners, if it were done in the shorter period.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. It being six o'clock p.m. I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

OCEAN DUMPING CONTROL ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR CONTROL OF DUMPING SUBSTANCES INTO THE OCEAN AND TO ESTABLISH A BOARD OF REVIEW

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Sharp (for the Minister of the Environment) that Bill C-37, to provide for the control of dumping of waste and other substances in the ocean, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, continuing my remarks of earlier today with reference to Bill C-37, I should like to draw the attention of the House to the last paragraph on the last page of the bill, that is, Schedule III 3.(4). As I read this I am moved to observe that the first should be last and the last should be first because this paragraph provides for earth dumping rather than ocean dumping. I believe that every effort should be made to satisfy the provisions for dumping those substances recorded in Schedules I, II and III in the proper facilities on shore rather than in the ocean.

In reviewing the bill I notice that some concern is expressed for the ocean bottom where the various substances to be disposed of will be dumped. There is an indication that a survey must be done to determine the ecology of the ocean floor at the location of the dump. I take it that the precise location of the ocean fill and its effects on marine organisms, fish and shellfish, will be of particular concern.

I wonder if the departments concerned know where dumping has taken place in the past and how much has been done, for how long, and whether on the Pacific coast, the Atlantic coast, or in inland waters? These questions are directed particularly to Canadian ships because I am sure we have no idea where foreign ships may have dumped garbage in the past. Before the international accord that is implied in the passage of this bill takes effect I think it is important to determine where dumping has occurred, how much, what kind, and with what effect?

We must take into account what has happened in the waters off New York city. A vast section of the ocean there will not sustain life. It is a sea of sludge, a sea of death, a sea totally lacking in oxygen. Some may believe that could not happen here but just a couple of weeks ago, Mr. Speaker, we learned about a river in Manitoba where over half a mile of water was found to be totally lacking in oxygen. So we cannot say it could not happen here.

Another question that must be answered, Mr. Speaker, is which department will enforce the bill. It is all very well to say the bill is sponsored by the Department of the Environment and to expect that department to enforce it, but by what means will it do so? RCMP patrol boats? Argus aircraft? Coastguard search and rescue? National Defence? Or is it going to be a rowboat manned by a government appointed inspector?

I cannot help but be facetious when I talk about our coastal patrol, Mr. Speaker. It is a mass of inefficiency, and is inadequate for a maritime nation the size of Canada. It is a disgrace to a country with a maritime history such as ours. It is time the government realized that it has a responsibility to the seamen of the nation in terms of protection of the nation and its coastline. This bill cannot be discussed without reference to the manner in which it is to be enforced. It is the government's duty to tell parliament and the people of Canada how the law is to be enforced. How effectively will it be enforced? If the law is to be only as effective as Maritime Coastal Command, forget it.

I now wish to speak about vessels flying flags of convenience. Such vessels which ply our waters are often ill kept, ill manned, and have an infamous history in all oceans. I hope that such international flags of convenience will become a thing of the past as a result of the work of the international congress.

I am also concerned about the amending of schedules listed on the back of the bill by order in council. There are three schedules. Some of the substances dealt with are highly toxic and dangerous and are now allowed to be dumped. Some substances may be dumped, if certain qualifying conditions are met; other substances may be dumped if permits are obtained. The fact remains that the schedules can be altered. I suggest that any such alteration should be brought to the attention of members of this House by the Ministry of the Environment, which should send each member a written memorandum regarding alterations. We ought to be kept well informed on how the government is carrying out its environmental responsibilities with regard to the ocean.

I will not belabour my concern for this bill. Some of its provisions may be necessary, and others are important. I understand and appreciate the concern of the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Sauvé), who wishes this bill to be referred to committee and returned to the House for quick passage. I endorse the basic intent of the bill and echo the concerns of other members regarding the provisions of Bill C-37.

Dumping at Sea

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, many years ago Joseph Conrad wrote in his short story "Typhoon" that the sea never changes, and its works, for all the talk of men, are wrapped in mystery. This may well have been true at the beginning of the present century. It most certainly was true when Lord Byron 100 years ago wrote:

Roll on, thou deep and dark blue ocean, roll!
Ten thousand fleets sweep over thee in vain;
Man marks the earth with ruin,—his control

Stops with the shore.

Today we know that the oceans do change; that, like the land, they are vulnerable to ruin at the hand of men. Lord Byron said, "Ten thousand fleets sweep over thee in vain." But today one supertanker can destroy half an ocean. Man's control stops with the shore, said Lord Byron; yet we pollute our rivers, and in turn, the oceans; we desecrate our air, and in turn the seas.

Times have changed. Concern for the environment is widespread. The Club of Rome's "Limits to Growth" suggests that the limits of the world's water resources will be reached long before the land limits become apparent. The World Food Conference received briefs and expressions of concern to do with the impending water shortage. According to these briefs there is to be a 24 per cent increase in water use during the next five years.

The world focused its attention on the Law of the Sea Conference. That conference in Caracas assembled the largest group of ocean scientists ever brought together in one conference, and reports tabled before that conference clearly pointed to the fact that the greatest danger before humanity today is that the oceans of the world are polluted, and the threshold where plankton can be killed by chain reaction of this pollution and never be regenerated is not known. If this threshold is crossed and the ocean plankton dies, then life on this earth as we know it will also die, because it is the plankton in the oceans of the world that provide the major part of the oxigen needed to sustain life.

Questions of the use, abuse and conservation of water resources, both inland and at sea, will be world issues, outgrowing concerns and issues of the past. Our position will move from one of negative concern regarding pollution to one of positive concern for the environment. It will move from concern for the environment to the larger question of consumption and growth; then, from growth, to questions involving energy. The next major concern of the world will be over water resource consumption, contamination, and conservation. Consequently I commend the departmental officials who had the foresight to draw up this legislation. I might even have a small, qualified word of praise for the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Sauvé). I am a little hesitant, but I give credit where it is due. Perhaps I ought to give credit to her speech writer who wrote the speech which I am about to quote. Or perhaps she herself wrote it.

Mrs. Sauvé: I wrote it.

Mr. Wenman: Great! I like the part of the speech I am about to quote. I hope the minister meant what she said in her idealistic statement:

[Mr. Brisco.]

To wreck the environment, you need only wreck the sea. And that is not as difficult as it might seem. You need only destroy a milimetre or so of the surface—the aquatic topsoil so to speak—where the plankton, the essential first building-block of aquatic life lives. If we destroy this layer, the sea may continue, but we will not. It will be a dead sea—and as far as we are concerned a dead planet. As the sea goes, so goes mankind.

I should like to see idealistic statements of that kind considered by the Law of the Sea Congress. I commend the minister for the statement. However, let us pause a minute. Under all those frilly words, under all the perfume, flowers and scented similes, I detect something which gives rise for concern. I wonder if the minister's glowing words of concern are little more than a women's year special Don Quixote tilting at European windmills. I wonder is she ignoring the rust in her armour, or was it asbestos in her tea.

An hon. Member: Or is she catching butterflies with a torn net?

Mr. Wenman: We shall discover what sort of butterflies she has been chasing when we hear what she has to say in committee. In committee we are not concerned so much with fine speeches; we deal with practical realities. We shall ask the minister just how concerned she is about preserving the quality of our water. Let me quote to the House what she said in answer to my question on November 25, 1974, as recorded at page 1621 of Hansard. My question to the minister, to do with water quality, we recorded in Hansard as follows:

A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister suggested that studies are being undertaken. Can she tell the House under whose authority those studies are undertaken, in order to assure Canadian people that Canadian water supplies are safe and uncontaminated. To which studies was the minister referring?

What did the minister say? Did she say yes, we are undertaking water studies, to assure the people of Canada that their drinking water supplies are safe? She said, in answer to my question, as recorded in Hansard:

Mr. Speaker, numerous studies are undertaken. Water quality and possible harzardous effects on health are looked after by the Department of National Health and Welfare—

I took her at her word and directed my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) at a committee meeting on April 17. What did the minister say? He said, "I am afraid this matter is at the present time more a matter for the Department of the Environment . . ." We are back to the environment. When it comes to water policy, where does the minister stand? Where does the minister of National Health and Welfare stand? Where does the government stand?

● (2020)

An hon. Member: You have not caught her yet.

Mr. Wenman: I caught her in a contradiction. She is passing the buck. Where does it stop?

I want to know what is our overall water policy. While we are espousing these fine words and bringing forth these bills, which are just pieces of paper, virtually raw sewage from British Columbia cities is spewing forth into the Fraser River and on into the Pacific Ocean. It is flowing from Quebec cities into the St. Lawrence and on into the Atlantic Ocean. The sludge runs down the rivers of Manitoba. A couple of weeks ago there was concern about a big slick. There is black oil all over the beaches of White Rock in British Columbia.

An hon. Member: Black Rock.

Mr. Wenman: They are now calling it Black Rock. In spite of all this we still have no over all water policy.

I have always wanted to know how all this piecemeal legislation fits into the over all plan. When I questioned the minister in the House about our over all policy and how this all fits together, the minister said there is no over all water policy. Surprisingly, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) agrees. He says it has not yet been decided. It is time the Prime Minister and the minister decided what is to be the over all policy for Canada. They should lead the world in this way. After all the glowing words and magnificent speeches across Canada and throughout the world, they come home to a country which has no water policy.

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Why don't you stick to the bill?

Mr. Wenman: The hon. member knows there is no policy and it bothers him. I enjoy his glowing remarks. I also look foward to hearing the minister's response.

The basic weakness of this bill is that it is piecemeal legislation. It does not tie in with an over all policy. I have only been here since last July 8, but since then I have been trying to find out from the minister how this all fits together. She will not tell me.

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Read the Arctic waters pollution bill.

Mr. Wenman: I know the member from British Columbia is concerned. British Columbia has one of the longest coastlines in the world. We have the most to lose. However, we have the most to gain if this bill becomes more than just a paper tiger.

The good member from British Columbia talked about the problem of tanker routes. Is this legislation an admission of defeat with regard to tanker routes on the west coast of Canada? Is it a softening of the resolve of the minister and the government to stop that tanker route along the coast of British Columbia? Have we stopped making representations? Will this be regulated in some other way? I hope not. I hope that this legislation was born out of the resolve and ideals expressed by the minister in the speech from which I quoted. I hope it is this kind of motivation which drives her on, rather than a concern that it falls short. I hope this is more than an expedient sop to those asking the minister for action with regard to the tanker route. I hope the minister's resolve will continue.

The minister heard two members from British Columbia express concern regarding tanker routes. How does that relate to the bill? Will the bill give the minister authority to stop those tanker routes? We want an answer from the minister.

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question.

Dumping at Sea

Mr. Wenman: I would be very pleased to answer a question.

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Can the hon. member give us some idea how to stop these tankers from going down the coast in international waters? If he can answer that question, he will be telling us something.

Mr. Wenman: I would say that at the present time we are working for an international law at the Law of the Sea Conference. I hope that will eventually be acceptable. The control will come that way. I like to think the Government of Canada has some impact in the Congress in Washington. Canada will be supplying energy resources, be they coal, oil or whatever, to the United States. We are currently selling, will sell, or will share these with the United States, as expressed in their continentalism policy, which I do not like. As we share those resources, the United States has an obligation and a responsibility. I believe this government has negotiating power to gain what is right for Canada.

There are diplomatic tools. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) should be involved in some way. We need a government policy that goes beyond the piecemeal approach of this legislation and the piecemeal approach of the cabinet. Ministers are not co-ordinated to work together on issues such as the tanker route.

The minister was recently in Washington. What pressure did she bring to bear with regard to these tanker routes? Perhaps she will tell us this evening what she said to the American environmental officials and to the President of the United States. What have the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs had to say about this? It has been too little to satisfy the British Columbia members in this House.

The tanker route question is very significant. The parliamentary secretary stated in his speech that it in some way relates to this bill. I believe it was the parliamentary secretary who said that even when these tankers are unloaded, there are still 2,000 tons of oil in them which have to be flushed or washed out and dumped somewhere.

This kind of legislation is sort of related to sin. Prior to the Reformation people would pay and their sins would be forgiven. This legislation is similar to that. You pay to pollute. You buy the permit and are able to pollute. Another thing wrong with the bill is that there is no authority under international law to enforce this law. Even if we pass this bill it will not have international support. It will not apply to the high seas unless there is some accord. There is no authority for policing at the international level.

If this cannot be policed at the international level, how are we going to police it at the local level? We must rely on our national sovereign authority. However, how can we rely on that when we do not have an adequate force to police the three-mile limit? We cannot protect our own fishermen inside that limit. Therefore, how are we going to protect 12 miles or 200 miles? When we ask the Minister of National Defence about this, we are told that the military is being cut back. This is being done at a time when we should be increasing surveillance.

I have talked about some of the limitations of this bill and the concerns I have for it. I commend the authorities who drew up the bill and who are pushing the minister. I have talked to some of the officials in the minister's department. I am impressed with their keenness and desire to do what is right for the environment of Canada. However, the minister is kind of pulling back and saying, whoa, not so fast. She is trying to push the Prime Minister and the cabinet. I suggest the Minister of the Environment should take a leaf out of the book of President Nixon and start kicking a bit instead of pulling and pushing. I support this bill in principle.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wenman: I will even put my cynicism aside for a minute and give the minister the benefit of the doubt. I shall assume, at least during second reading, that the bill is a product of idealism rather than merely a convenient sop to those who are concerned about the pollution of the oceans, even though I know the minister does not possess the authority necessary to back up this legislation.

● (2030)

When the time comes for amendments to be made we intend to make sure that this bill is capable of being enforced, unlike the contaminants legislation which could not be enforced. I have not obtained a legal opinion as to whether the bill before us can be enforced, but I am nevertheless concerned about this aspect. So I commend the minister, and accept the measure as being put forward on an idealistic basis at this point. I look forward to examining the bill, clause by clause, during the committee stage, and I hope that in the end we can produce an act which is evidence of some leadership, hopefully something which will bring us closer to the over all water policy which I demand of the minister for Canadians and for the world.

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): I rise to make a brief intervention in this debate. My interest is mainly in the danger of pollution on the west coast.

First, I would like to make a few comments about the question period this afternoon. I may have missed something in the translation from French into English of a reply by the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Sauvé). I attempted, unsuccessfully, to get an early copy of the Hansard report, but it appeared to me that this afternoon the minister indicated she thought the danger of oil spills from oil tankers in the Strait of Juan de Fuca had been eliminated with the projected movement of the harbour from Cherry Point to Port Angeles, where it is presumed they will have an offshore loading point.

Port Angeles is not outside the Strait of Juan de Fuca but is some 50 miles inside the entrance to the strait. While the danger is not as great if the tankers come only to Port Angeles as it would be if they come as far as Cherry Point, there is still considerable danger—there is a danger of collision in the confines of the Strait of Juan de Fuca. So, while it is an improvement over the Cherry Point location, it is not as good as if the harbour were located at Neah Bay or at Gray's Harbour, which would take it outside the restricted waters of the Strait of Juan de Fuca.

I hope the minister will do what she can to see that the movement of the offshore loading point toward the ocean is accelerated. She will then be able to answer truly in the House of Commons that the danger is, to the best of her ability, now removed.

My second reason for rising in debate this evening is to call attention to the difference between the proclamations of the government concerning anti-pollution measures and what happens in practice. For example, the following appeared in the Vancouver Sun on May 4, 1973, quoting a statement made by former environment minister Jack Davis:

> "Up to $20 million a year in federal government loans is available to clean up pollution in the Straits of Georgia and Juan de Fuca and their tributary waters", Environment Minister Jack Davis said today.

It would appear that such a fund would help out the people on the West Coast without any great strain on the administrative facilities. However, an oil spill occurred a short time later, and at that time there was nothing but confusion in the handling of the clean-up operation, the problem appearing to be who should do the cleaning up. Should it be the Ministry of Transport or the Department of the Environment? They just didn't seem to know who should do it. The view of one spokesman for the federal environmental emergency service was reported in the Vancouver Sun as follows:

> Put in what Chris Hatfield, federal environment emergency co-ordinator, calls simple terms, it goes like this:
> "If a spill originates with a ship within the Vancouver harbor boundaries, the take-charge guys will be the National Harbours Board.
>
> Outside the harbor, the federal ministry of transport.
>
> From the land into the inlet, the federal environmental department.
> From land to land, the municipality and the province."
> As Mr. Hatfield says, this doesn't mean that the level of authority assigned to any specific area is solely responsible for clean-up.

If an oil spill occurs in the middle of the night, a more confusing policy than that set out by the government would be hard to conceive. A few days after the article appeared, the municipality of Oak Bay had the misfortune to be affected by an oil spill which happened during the hours of darkness.

No one knew what ship the spill came from, and for the benefit of the minister I would like to point out here that when a spill does take place speed is of the essence in dealing with pollution caused by oil washing up on beaches. If you wait for as much as a day the problem is multiplied.

The Oak Bay municipality got right to work and cleaned up the oil spill—a very small one. They then sent their bill to the Department of Transport. It was referred back to them and they were told it was somebody else's responsibility. There the runaround started.

On March 4, 1974, as recorded at page 121 of Hansard, I rose in the House and asked the then minister of the environment, he having just completed a long speech on fisheries, if he would mind telling me his policy on the clean-up of oil spills. I asked my question in the following words:

> Will the minister assure the House that when oil spills occur from ships and when the federal government, whose responsibility it is, is unable to identify the source, the federal government will at least pay for the cleanup rather than expecting the municipal governments to assume what could be enormous costs?

The minister, Mr. Davis, said:

Mr. Speaker, I think I can assure the hon. member of that. Several years ago amendments were made to the Canada Shipping Act which provided for the collection of large sums of money. That money is available for compensation to those who are affected by oil spills.

MR. MCKINNON: Would the minister then explain to the House why the Department of Transport turned down the request of the municipality of Oak Bay for compensation for cleaning up an oil spill there some two months ago on the grounds that they could not identify the ship which spilled the oil?

MR. DAVIS: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the hon. member have a chat with me. Perhaps our departmental people can do something about it.

Surely to goodness, having heard this from a minister of the Crown, one would assume that the government did indeed intend to reimburse the municipality for the costs involved in cleaning up an oil spill which occurred at night on one of its fine beaches. But such was not to be the case. Mr. Davis was approached by the municipality, but their request was turned down. An election ensued and Mr. Davis was turned down. He did not return, and the ministry changed hands.

We tried once again to get payment of this very small sum from the new minister—I think it was only about $463—but it is not the amount of the sum that is of concern. That makes it even more disgraceful, that they would not even consider paying such a small sum. They turned it down on a technicality. First, they said it was because they could not identify the ship. The other objection I will come to in a moment.

I do not rise here because of the smallness of the sum or in the hope they will find it in their petty cash, or make a LIP grant or an OFY grant from sources where money is easy to find. I rise because this kind of occurrence could happen to any municipality with a coastline. Indeed, it is more likely to happen in the future than it has in the past. Next time the sum might not be small but might be rather large.

● (2040)

In any event, on February 6 I had occasion to write to the minister and ask her if she would stand by a commitment made by Mr. Davis, when he was minister, to pay for the clean-up of that oil spill. I received a letter in reply via the mayor of Oak Bay, which disturbed me. It was a complete disavowal of the statement made by the minister's predecessor; indeed it was stated that there would be no payment forthcoming.

At the same time there were some objections taken in the public press to the amount of money that has been collected in this fund to be used presumably to fight oil spills, and I understand shipping companies are no longer willing to pay their contribution, particularly as it appears the money is not going to be spent to clean up oil spills except under very specific circumstances.

I wrote to the minister again and was favoured with a reply dated March 11, some six weeks ago. At this time the minister took advantage of another technicality. It was now agreed that not being able to identify the ship would not keep you from collecting from the fund. I should like to quote the minister's letter of March 11:

In order to claim against the fund for cleanup costs of an oil spill, "Her Majesty in the right of Canada or a province or the other person that incurred that loss or damage" must first be able to establish that the spill came from a ship—

If there is oil on a beach that has been brought in by the tide you assume that it did come in from a ship, but it is kind of hard to prove. The second reason given, which is the case the minister has made for not paying this just debt, is:

—and secondly, must have obtained authorization by the Governor in Council prior to commencing cleanup (section 734). The claimant may then proceed in Admiralty Court against the administrator of the MPCF.

Now I ask you, Mr. Speaker, if you were mayor of a small municipality and someone told you that a small oil spill was drifting on to one of your beautiful beaches, would you feel like getting authorization by the Governor in Council before you started to clean it up? For one thing, it would be too late; the time to stop an oil spill of that nature is before it gets on to the beach. I think it is outrageous that the minister should hide behind this technicality and avoid paying just dues to clean up this spill, particularly in light of the platitudinous statements that are made at regular intervals by the minister's department to the effect that they are interested and are willing to help in the maintenance of the environment in Canada.

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on this interesting bill which concerns the whole country, and certainly the province I represent with its long and lovely coastline, and its connection with the greatest of all the oceans. We have come to realize that even the vast scope and size of that ocean are not sufficient to prevent it from damage of all kinds, damage that has become commonplace in recent years.

At first glance the bill seems to cover more than it actually does, and I appreciate the explanatory words of the parliamentary secretary in his address at the commencement of the deliberations on it. It does not apply to most situations one would have thought it would apply to—it does not apply, we learn, to the dumping of garbage or to the kind of dumping that ships do when leaving port, such as discharging various waste oil products into the harbour. That is not the sort of situation we are talking about here.

Some years ago we in this place used to receive notice almost weekly of some vessel that had been fined for discharging oil into a harbour. It was obvious from the fines levied that this was simply a licence to continue the practice because it was cheaper to dump and pay the fine than to dispose of the material in some other way. This is one of the thoughts that strike me as I read the bill, that the penalties laid down as maximum fines, considering the products involved, are not all that great, even if the maximum fine were applied every time.

We are really talking about a limited range of activity involving production of materials which are frequently byproducts of processes that are in themselves very expensive, where the gain from the sale of energy or such products could be very large indeed. Even if there were an insistence on the maximum fine being levied, one wonders whether we would not find a situation where it would be cheaper to commit the offence and pay the fine than to dispose of the material to be dumped through some other system. In this regard a likely offender could be a government department.

The bill provides for the application of a permit before action. Here again one wonders how difficult it would be to obtain a permit, particularly if one of the government's own creations were involved, one of its semi-autonomous organizations that could very well have a real problem of disposal. We also know there are various projects under way involving use of atomic power. There are waste products here that could be very damaging, and which in some instances have been dumped at sea by certain countries. Possibilities of land disposal along the British Columbia coast are somewhat limited by the terrain.

I think there would be a real suspicion in the minds of many people who read this bill that, in one sense, the bill is not so much against dumping but rather is a bill that legitimizes the whole business. It makes dumping permissive. It speaks in terms of the issuance of a permit to dump if it can be established that there is a risk to health or something like that.

There are also escape clauses to prevent loss of life. The west coast of British Columbia is notoriously stormy. If anyone were going to do some dumping, obviously the time to do it would be during the winter season when storms were more severe. It would be a relatively simple matter to file a report stating that the seas were high and the risk to life was great, and that the cargo that was to be disposed of on land had to be dumped overboard. There are extensive possibilities along this line. Then there is the policing aspect. Here again our patrolling is notoriously weak and we have an inadequate coastguard.

In British Columbia through the recent winter we knew how restricted we were in terms of finding lost cars that contained highly volatile substances. These cars were lost off a barge and were not located for some length of time. The whole search machinery on the Pacific coast is not too accurate. One suspects an offence could be committed and the offending ship could return to port without being found at all unless there is considerable contribution by the Department of National Defence, which department, the bill assures us, would be involved. However, knowing the restricted budget in that area and the utter lack of capability by that department to fly over the Arctic any longer, much in the bill about the Arctic Ocean surely is nothing but brave words and a pious hope that in passing this bill we will have accomplished something.

We should realize also that a good deal of the preamble to the remarks of the parliamentary secretary dealt with the fact that this is a convention of the United Nations and that 90 or 92 nations gathered together to debate it. We also know that the powers of this international organization are fading literally by the day and that its powers to intervene in disputes verging on war are very slim indeed. One suspects that the power of the United Nations to intervene for the purpose of preventing a nation which is determined to choose the cheaper way of disposing of its waste would be very slender indeed. The principle of the bill is one which I think we can welcome, but its application, both to this country and internationally, is something about which I think we could well maintain an extremely healthy skepticism.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Order, please. Before recognizing the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Sauvé) I should remind the House that if the minister speaks now this will close the debate at this stage of the bill.

[Translation]

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great interest to all the interventions concerning Bill C-37, an Act to provide for the control of dumping of wastes and other substances in the ocean.

Mr. Speaker, I would like simply to give the reasons for the introduction of this bill. As we all know, the seas are only a single body of water, and coastal countries should not make improper use of the sea in general, or even of their own coastal waters. As the sea goes, so goes mankind, as the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) said in quoting one of my recent speeches at the Law of the Sea Conference.

The sea used to be considered a purifier with unlimited capacities, but today, with a better knowledge of the oceans and the capacity to measure the quality of its waters, we have to question whether the sea will be able to keep forever its purity and its quality. A number of member countries of the United Nations, concerned about sea pollution, tried to develop what has been called the Oslo Convention, which suggests that coastal countries unite to protect the sea.

Wishing as ever to protect the environment, Canada, which, in passing, became one of the fore-runners in this field by creating its Department of Environment and introducing its environment policy, wanted to be among the first 15 countries to sign this convention. But for this, we must pass an act to make our standards and regulations compatible with those of other countries.

This is the basic reason for this bill. We already have in Canada several acts which allows us to protect oceans against pollution, but this legislation had to be added to these acts, to make them compatible with those of the other countries who will sign the convention.

I am very pleased with the co-operation of the House in referring this bill to committee where we can, at leisure, study it in detail. I shall limit myself to answering some of the questions, perhaps the most urgent, brought up by hon. members, notably their concern about the possibility of radioactive substances being disposed of in the oceans. Must I remind then, Madam Speaker, that a Canadian policy forbids categorically the dumping of radioactive substances into the ocean? Disposal of those substances is governed by the Atomic Energy of Canada, Limited, according to extremely severe regulations that are constantly up-dated.

Another hon. member spoke of inspectors or analysts, whom I could appoint and whose appointments could give jobs to all the Liberal candidates who were not elected.

I think, Madam Speaker, we shall have to be more concerned with Progressive Conservative members, for most members on this side of the House were elected. Consequently, there is little to be done to do them a favour. Anyway, I believe it will be realized on closer examination that when I say "every analyst or inspector", I do mean, Madam Speaker, to provide every government department whose ships are sailing our oceans with the necessary authority to stop and examine ships that might fail to comply with our regulations or statutes.

This bill does not deal with a number of problems which were raised by hon. members opposite. I guess they took this opportunity to raise questions which are of concern to them. I am also concerned about those questions, especially the matters of sailing and supertankers. I tried my best to answer their questions at a different time and I will do so again in the future, but tonight is not the right time to tackle those problems which, although they are not totally unrelated to this bill, are are not exactly the subject of our debate tonight.

This bill bears a certain relationship to the Law of the Sea Conference which was mentioned by some members although the Oslo Convention was initiated a long time before the law of the sea discussions. It even took place before the Stockholm conference, which brought to the attention of the whole world that great problem of ocean pollution which is a due cause for concern for every country.

This bill, the Stockholm conference and other events too, are steps from a total freedom of oceans towards a certain limitation of that freedom and an identification of the interests of countries with a seafront in order to protect and develop oceans, and also towards the necessary development of sea management principles and, in a more significant way, the realization that we have to bring countries with a seafront to exercise that management duty in areas off their coasts which might fall under their jurisdiction.

The necessary protection of environment is one of the strongest and most significant arguments at our disposal to demand that the management authority of maritime countries be extended to a 200-mile limit for instance. Such is the character of the request made by Canada and other countries at the Law of the Sea Conference. That bill, however, goes quite beyond that 200-mile area which could be covered under this new jurisdiction granted to coastal states. It goes quite beyond that, applying as it does to an area where the sea is quite deep, an area which formerly was supposed to belong to everyone.

Grotius who proclaimed total freedom of the seas is severely challenged nowadays. The sea, which is a common heritage of mankind, must henceforth be submitted to regulations governing its use. Consequently, even if it is claimed that oceans are the common heritage of mankind, some countries must take charge of their management so we will not make ill use of them as in the past on the plea that they were entirely free.

This bill deals with the practice of dumping waste in the sea without worrying about the effects of such a practice. As the sea once belonged to everybody, all those who wanted to get rid of their waste, dumped it into the sea.

And it was believed, as I mentioned earlier, that the sea had the ability to purify everything; some substances however cannot be eliminated, and there is a point of no return beyond which the sea might not be able to rejuvenate itself.

A number of the problems which my hon. colleagues have mentioned—need I remind them—are already covered by such other legislation as the Shipping Act and the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act. There are also regulations which govern the activities of ships within ports, and prohibit the discharge of waste waters in areas which are in the immediate vicinity of ports. Bill C-37 supplements a number of existing legislative measures in Canada which permit us to administer the oceans. This measure will be characterized by the fact that in so doing, we are joining other countries in the signature of an agreement to protect the oceans of the world.

This act will succeed. Its concept reflects the efforts and reflexion of many countries. It is not, as suggested an hon. member, a licence for polluting the sea. Surely the hon. member is aware that if we make it compulsory that an application for a permit is made before anything is dumped into the sea, it is because we have every intention of checking the nature of the substance to be dumped, the manner in which it will be discharged, and the place where it will be disposed of. The permit is an instrument allowing us to control the activity.

Several countries have expressed their intention of ratifying the convention, but ten countries of the world have already enacted the required legislation for consistency among them. The convention will be effective as soon as fifteen countries will have signed it. We are seeking for Canada the honour of being among the first fifteen signatories to the convention. We should like to be among the first who will co-ordinate their administrative measures for the enforcement of a legislation of this extent.

Therefore, Madam Speaker, I support the motion that Bill C-37 be referred to the committee for consideration.

Western Grain Stabilization

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING THE STABILIZATION OF NET PROCEEDS FROM THE PRODUCTION AND SALE OF WESTERN GRAIN

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice) moved that Bill C-41, respecting the stabilization of net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain and to amend certain statutes in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

He said: Madam Speaker, I am very pleased indeed that the House has now been able to take up the legislation respecting the stabilization of net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain. It is now quite a few years since this government placed a very high priority upon the problems of the grain industry in western Canada. In 1968 and 1969 we recognized that there were grave difficulties which persisted and recurred in the grain industry and that it was time to have a most thoroughgoing examination of the whole range of problems relating to production, marketing, and particularly to the income of farmers throughout the prairie region in connection with their grain operations.

It was necessary for us as well to begin a massive examination of the nature of the handling and transportation systems which showed some problems in terms of cost rather than simply in the capability of marketing or carrying to market of the enormous prairie crops.

In 1969 we put together a new form of administration within the government to try to concentrate the attention of government on the problems relating to grain. We brought together, in the grain administration, part of the governmental operations which had dealt with grain in the various departments, such as the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and the Department of Transport as well as in other departments, according to the type of problem which was being handled. We did that in order to concentrate on this problem, although of course within government there is always the dilemma of keeping the various parts of a problem as a unity in searching for solutions to it without pulling the parts away from other aspects of their own system where they also have significant relevance. In this way we gave the grain problem our concentrated attention.

The stabilization program which is before the House now is one of the several remaining very important measures which we tackled in those days. We recognized that the income of the farmer was our fundamental objective in dealing with the problem in the grain industry. The consumers of this country are of course extremely interested in the production of grain. There has not been much problem in terms of shortage but there have been significant problems in terms of the way the system operated to serve the farmer and the way it managed to obtain income for him.

We have in the years since then moved on many extremely important fronts in ways which have not only improved the lot of the farmer in his production of grain, but which have tended to assure that he will be better served by the apparatus of government and the rest of the structure within the grain industry which is so important to him. Some of our first approaches were to try to make sure that the marketing of his product was improved.

[The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin).]

We moved to give the Canadian Wheat Board additional facilities by way of credit and guarantees so that it could market wheat into traditional markets which had been lost and which, therefore, it was able to regain. We encouraged it to enter the feed barley business, where the Canadian producer had really not been before in terms of the export world. We set some targets, and achieved those targets of over 200 million bushels of export barley to help create an environment where, in other years, that market would be sustained to produce good returns for the farmer.

We set up a market development fund with a flexible ability to attempt to support projects of all kinds which might further the sale of Canadian grain products abroad. Some very interesting initiatives in the development of foreign markets have taken place as a result of that market development.

With these various efforts we obtained some important selling achievements. In years when the world market conditions had not yet changed, and our buyers were not yet much more receptive to the purchase of grain, we set three successive records in the export of grain, rising in 1972-73 to some 831 million bushels of all grain produced in the prairie region.

We also moved into some interesting additional projects in order to improve our ability to sell, projects which are still developing or coming to fruition at the present time, some which were accomplished with improvements in research through the regular program of the Department of Agriculture and with assistance in the creation of a crop science centre at the University of Saskatchewan. Also to be located at that university is a protein oil starch plant, which is a joint effort between government and industry, with the emphasis on industrial participation. It is designed to move research forward into production so that new ways may be found to market our grain and new markets found by having a variety of products with which to gain access.

We did not neglect the cash position of farmers in the interim period. We introduced the two price wheat program at a time when it meant many millions of dollars from the treasury to the western farmer. At that time international prices for wheat were in the order of $1.70 a bushel, and our two price wheat program was based on a domestic price equivalent of $3. For several years, therefore, large sums of money were transferred to supplement the prairie farmer's income when he needed it so very badly.

We have been facing the income problem in other ways as well. The cash advance program has been constantly improved. From the time of our beginning this work to now, a fivefold increase has effectively taken place in the maximum cash advances, to a present limit of $15,000 per permit holder compared to $3,000, which was the figure in 1968.

An hon. member has mentioned the transportation and handling system. That is one of the other major areas which require further attention in the next number of months, in an effort to assure that the large amount of work which has gone into analysing the various costs of the components of the system may be now brought together by those who manage those components, but more particularly, by the community as a whole for the best advantage to prairie farmers and the communities upon which they depend, and which depend upon those farmers.

We did not stand idly by in regard to handling and transportation. The block shipping system assured that we could meet some of the challenges of the export levels which were being achieved.

We are now faced with the major challenge of the new investment which is required in the system. At this point we have ordered a further 4,000 hopper cars; this in recognition of the fact that these cars are an important part of the handling and transportation system, no matter what kind of solution is developed in terms of the total system. It is not the capacity of the existing system which is so much a challenge as the cost of that system as it exists, and as it would exist as labour and capital costs grow, and as so much of the system, which requires replacement, is in fact replaced.

The purchase of hopper cars at a cost of $46 million for the first 2,000, the repair of some additional boxcars and keeping them in the grain service at a cost of $5 million, are other examples of measures taken to assure that we could move the grain with the existing handling and transportation system. Co-ordinators were appointed at the terminals for the same purpose, to make sure that maximum advantage was taken of the available cars in the service of grain.

One of the major other methods which we are using in attempting to put the grain industry of Canada, and therefore particularly the prairies, in sound and solid shape, is this stabilization program which is now again before the House of Commons.

When we began to examine the grain industry and to consult—as we have done so widely with farmers throughout the prairie region—we found that, alongside the income problem, there was constant concern about the problem of stability, about the problem that good years and bad years could follow so closely, and that the bad years which a farmer saw were not necessarily related to his level of production. We were at the same time developing crop insurance programs which could deal with the specific problem of difficulties in production with individual farmers.

But so often on the prairies, because of prices and, more particularly, export opportunities, even when a good crop was being produced, income problems were suffered in days gone by. Because this product is so much more dependent upon export than most of our agricultural products, the ordinary approach of stabilization acts, which were known before that to this House and to this country, in stabilizing by trying to protect the price of the product, seemed to us on examination to be an inadequate technique in the case of grain. Price alone was only one of the factors which affected farm income.

The volume of product which could be moved into international markets could be even more significant. Often the difficulty in moving the product and low prices might accompany each other, but any program attempting to stabilize income had to take both of these factors into consideration. This is what first led us to the conclusion that the right kind of stabilization program for the grain industry was one which tied the level of production to the flow of cash into the grain industry, and in years when that flow of cash declines either because of price, volume, or a combination of the two, there should be support from a stabilization fund.

The bill which is before the House includes a levy from producers on the sale of their grain. This levy is initially and ordinarily set at 2 per cent of the sales value of the grain products. In the ordinary course it will be matched by a payment of twice that size from the federal treasury—in the order, therefore, of 4 per cent of gross sales.

The importance of this, Madam Speaker, is that once again the stabilization program, while aimed at the illness of instability, is at the same time another form of assistance on the income side to the prairie grain farmer. The stabilization fund will receive the levy from the farmers and the 4 per cent, with variations possible, from the federal treasury. As the pattern of past income levels has shown, these amounts will be paid out to the prairie farmer in such a way that he will receive the money he needs in the years he needs it most.

In summary then, on this basis of historical pattern the contribution from the federal treasury will mean an additional 4 per cent compared to what the market would otherwise produce. This is in addition to other programs which have been put in place which add income in one way or another to farm income, such as the program to pay part of the cost of storage of grain which was contained in the feed grains policy. We are prepared to pay up to $40 million for storage of grain in connection with the obvious need of the producer of that grain for security and, therefore, the logical obligation to attempt to have someone other than the producer bear the cost of that security.

If this stabilization plan had been in effect in 1974, for example, the levy would have produced approximately $90 million from the federal treasury on the basis of present estimated gross sales of grain. If the plan had been in effect in some of the difficult years, 1968 to 1971, for example, and if there had been full participation by prairie farmers, there would have been payouts of $97 million in 1968, $237 million in 1969, $230 million in 1970, and $50 million in 1971 when cash positions were beginning to show an improvement in the prairies.

In this bill we have introduced the protection of the prairie region grain farmers on the basis of net cash flow. Net cash flow is the cash remaining when the gross receipts for grain have had substracted from them the cash costs of producing grain in that year. This means that the plan will be sensitive to changes in the cost of production as well as changes in receipts where based on volume. In theory at least, and indeed in fact, if the total receipts from grain remain the same in a good year compared to the previous five year average, when the rise in cash costs of producing grain occurs, the payment out of the stabilization fund could be triggered by that narrowing of net cash as a result of this production cost increase.

The significance of this to the individual farmer may be examined in more detail when the bill is in committee. As an example, however, I should like to take the case of someone who farms a medium sized operation in the black soil zone of the prairies, and who has attributed to him an average of the production for such a size in that area. If the plan set out in the bill had been in effect in the years 1965 to 1975 this farmer would have shared in the payouts made in the years 1968 to 1971. In 1968, when his gross receipts would have amounted to $20,771, the stabilization payment to him out of the prairie total of $97 million would have amounted to $1,939.

In 1969 that same farmer, with gross receipts of $13,254, would have received, out of the prairie stabilization payments of $237 million, a payment of $4,406. Hon. members can see the significance of that kind of payment to someone on a medium sized farm in the black soil zone.

In 1970 his payment would have been $4,137, in a year when his gross receipts had totalled $14,033. In 1971, when his gross receipts would have risen to $18,288, he would have received a stabilization payment of $880. When one considers that this farmer had to try to meet his obligations—or more likely arrange his obligations—with the cash which he had available from his gross receipts, one can see the importance to him of payments like this, particularly in the difficult years 1969 and 1970.

This stabilization plan is based on receipts throughout the prairie region. There will be some who will think it should somehow deal with crop insurance problems as well as the stabilization ones I have described. That is not the case. A good crop insurance plan such as that which my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), is trying to encourage his provincial counterparts to develop, with his financial support being an important part, is still extremely important for individual farmers. We are delighted to see the widespread availability of crop insurance plans throughout the prairie regions now. We believe those plans can still be made to meet the particular needs of individual farmers and reflect more fully the value of grain on their own cash costs of operating.

Crop insurance will still be a desirable feature for individuals to deal with in circumstances where it can affect the individual crop. The stabilization plan deals rather with the over-all problems which can affect the grain industry as well, particularly those international market conditions which have such tremendous effects on volumes and prices.

The only relationship between crop insurance and this stabilization plan lies in the fact that crop insurance benefits may be brought into the plan by the person who receives them as though they are grain receipts, so that the level of his benefits may be maintained through a difficult crop period. The better the crop insurance plan is, the better will that objective be met.

This plan, like its predecessor, is based on a five-year average preceding the year in question. The net cash receipts in this plan, therefore, unlike the simple gross receipts of the previous plan, will be the base upon which the payment out is to be calculated. When payment out is made, it will be made to all participating producers on the prairie provinces basically in proportion to their recent participation in the grain market. For this purpose this bill uses the current and two preceding years to determine the level of participation of that producer, according to the value of his receipts from grain.

There will be some who will argue that this plan would be more sensitive to the needs of farmers in the prairie provinces if it were calculated and triggered on a regional basis, or an area by area basis, rather than on the figures of the prairie region as a whole. We have given a great deal of thought to the question of whether it would be possible to regionalize the plan in that way at this time. We have accepted the proposition that, in theory, it would be desirable to introduce a certain degree of regionalization, but we found it difficult, indeed I might say a practical impossibility, to obtain cost of production figures in particular on a regional basis at this time. We therefore propose to ask the House to approve the bill on the basis of a prairie-wide calculation, and will attempt to introduce regionalized data as soon as adequate figures based on those regions can be obtained.

We have, in this bill, introduced a further feature, the right of individual producers to opt out. In our many discussions with organizations and the western provinces this, among other features of the stabilization program, has been discussed, and there are still some differences of view as to the desirability of this particular right to opt out. There is some fear on the part of some organizations that those who should least do so may be the ones who will opt out and lose the protection which this stabilization plan will give them.

The protection of the stabilization plan is evident in this calculation: if the plan had been in effect for the 20 years 1954 to 1974, for every dollar of farm payments into the plan, farmers on the prairies would have received from it $3.53. The basic value of the plan as income assistance therefore must be clear. We thought, therefore, that we could count on the assistance of leaders of farm opinion and the provincial governments, as well as on our own discussions about the value of the plan, to persuade those who are eligible to remain in it and, at the same time, give them the right to opt out. The bill as it now stands gives that right to those who are farming at the time the law comes into existence.

There has been some further comment about the extension of this right to new farmers who may be coming into operation hereafter. I am prepared to consider with hon. members in committee whether this opting out feature ought to be extended to them as well.

The bill, Madam Speaker, is a major further form of protection to the grain farmer. It is income assistance in the sense that it involves a contribution from the treasury. It is stabilization in the sense that it will make payments out in those areas where those payments are most likely to be required. It is not stabilizing in the sense of limiting the amount of income which the market may bring to grain producers. It remains a fact that the market, both international and domestic, will provide the chief form of income for our farmers engaged in the production of grain.

We have in this program, and in the others to which I referred earlier, added forms of assistance to those farmers, to help assure them that their incomes may be adequate. We have done this as part of the government's over all policy of attempting to make sure that farm incomes are adequate. We want to ensure that the farmer obtains a reasonable return for his labour in agriculture from two sources, from the market place, and from the treasury where required, because we are convinced that our agricultural production is important at home and abroad. It is important for our own needs and is important in terms of our obligation to assist others in the world.

We are convinced, as well, that those who are engaged in the production of agricultural products must have, as a result of provincial and federal government policies, adequate returns so that they will be encouraged to produce as effectively as they can. I therefore commend this bill to the House. I hope it will soon move to committee, where it can be further discussed. Without doubt, some of its provisions are complex.

I should like to see the bill become law in time to be operative in 1975. It can be an extremely important form of protection to our grain farmers. It is one further extremely important building block in the protection and assistance we are creating in order to assure the farmers of this country a reasonable income, so that they can earn the kind of livelihood they and their families want. We want to see as many farms as possible continue their existence in this country.

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, will the minister permit a question? I do not think his time has expired.

Mr. Lang: Yes, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, the minister said he hopes this bill will move forward quickly. As it was among the six or seven most important bills before the House just before Christmas, and as we have not heard about it until today—it was brought on at three hours' notice—may I ask the minister, once we finish with the bill this evening, how soon will we see it again? When will it be called again?

Mr. Lang: Madam Speaker, the exact ordering of business in this House depends on a number of things. Matters as important as this are sometimes drawn aside by the rather lengthy list of speakers from the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lang: They are members of the party supported by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin), and members of the official opposition. Questions concerning the order of House business should be directed to the government House leader, who is concerned about items which must be dealt with by the House. I am also sure that the agricultural committee is occupied at the moment with the other important stabilization bill before it. I hope this one can soon join the work of that committee, for the good of the prairie region.

● (2140)

Mr. Frank Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Madam Speaker, I can certainly agree with the minister that this is a complex bill. There is no way that it can be rushed through the House even though an N.D.P. member says we have been waiting for this bill since last Christmas.

The minister gave us the whole load tonight. He placed a lot of stress on everything that has been done to help the marketing situation as far as western grain is concerned. All I can say is that the minister is making the best of a bad situation because we now have the lowest export position of the past five years. We are some 150 million bushels below two years ago.

The Western Producer of April 17, in a black border on the front page, headlines "Grain Marketing at Five-year Low". I quote from the article.

> For the crop year to date both the marketings of grain and oil-seeds by Canadian farmers as well as the total exports stand at the lowest levels since the 1969-1970 crop year, according to official notices.
>
> Latest reports from the Canadian Grain Commission indicate farmers marketings at 388.3 million bushels for the crop year to date, the lowest for this 35-week period since 1969-70.
> Likewise, total exports to date in this crop year—314.1 million bushels—represent the lowest volume for this period since 1969-70.

One of the first things we must question is why the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board is introducing this bill rather than the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). The Canadian Wheat Board Act stipulates that the objectives and powers of the wheat board are confined to only that of a marketing role. This bill deals with six principal grains, three of which are not under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board.

The purpose of Bill C-41 is to provide for stabilization of the net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain, and to protect the producer from the ups and downs of the prices and the quantities that move into commercial market.

It is generally conceded that by confining ourselves to practical farming methods already used by the good farmers in different parts of the world, the world's cultivated and pasture lands could feed something like ten times our present population; not at a subsistence level but on a Canadian style of diet. They can do this if the profit incentive for farmers to take the risk inherent in agriculture and to increase their output and productivity is not limited by the actions of government.

To be very certain that we have a clearer understanding of the effects of this bill, it will be necessary to look at all aspects of it. The hope is to find ways for improvement, so the first question we have to ask is: do we really need this new scheme for western grain at this time, or is there some alternative course that we should take?

The concept may be valid and it may be needed for products such as eggs, fruit, and Ontario corn, and potatoes, but will it be administrable for grain without creating a bureaucratic structure that could overwhelm us? Will the existing PFAA group be the base upon which stabilization will rise? It is not the concept of the grain stabilization plan that is complex and unattractive. It is the operational and administrative features that require understanding.

In its notes on the western grain stabilization working paper put out by the government, it seems that the main selection criteria used was the cheapest plan for a given level of stability, and a plan that is actuarially sound. It is stated on page 11 of that booklet that the net cash flow plan gave the most significant increase in stability over the base plan per dollar of incremental cost to the government.

This, however, in no way argues that it is an optimun plan to either government or producers. The key question becomes: what stability is really provided to commercial western grain producers, and at what cost? That is, what are the costs and benefits from such a program compared to alternatives?

From the latest figures I have looked at, we can expect that about one half of the commercial grain sales in western Canada will be covered by the $25,000 gross sales limitation. There is no evidence that farms with sales of $25,000 or less are in greater need of grain stabilization as opposed to larger grain farmers. Clearly, under a continued inflationary environment it is unlikely that the degree of coverage would rise from depressed prices. Rather, one can only expect that the volume of grain output covered would decline by 5 to 10 per cent per year. Therefore, the statement that the "$25,000 limit is subject to change so that it accommodates trends in price levels and in farm development" on page 14 of the government working paper is vitally important to confirm.

The bill appears to take the narrow view that the government is giving out money benevolently to provide some stabilization, and the level of the gift is the key focus. There are, however, direct and indirect benefits that the government receives, as well as the farmers. For example, if a stabilizing net cash flow payment occurs, there is likely to be a four to five times multiplier effect on the prairie economy.

Assuming standard tax levels, it would seem that the federal government would get back anywhere from $1 to $1.50 for every dollar it pays out, and that the federal financial authorities might attempt or be able to deduct such payment from federal transfer payments to the provinces.

The point is that the program is unlikely to have a net cost to government at all. Therefore, why have the $25,000 gross sales limit? Larger farm spending could be expected to have similar multiplier effects, so the question becomes; is the middle-size farmer the appropriate structural objective for western grain stabilization?

There will be lots of questions raised about entry, reentry and getting out later. Who administers the program, and who pays the administrative costs? There is also the question about the three-year system of calculating individual pay-out that penalizes those producers who are expanding outputs as compared with those who are stable or who are reducing output. Hence the plan would seem to be biased against young farmers.

We go back to the first question: do we need this scheme, this whole new ball game for grain now, and will it be administrable? It seems that the economists who worked up this plan may have been looking backwards too much. Certainly this scheme was needed 20 years ago. When we look to the future, I am not so sure. We need a list of priorities, and right now. I suggest labour disputes, transportation, high taxation and high interest costs should be right at the top. What alternative is there to this plan? We have the basis for a good crop insurance program administered by each of the western provinces. I would much prefer to see more stress placed on improving the crop insurance program at this time.

We need a plan to take account of regional differences in the Canadian Wheat Board area, such as climate and soil type. Bill C-41 deals with the prairie economy as a whole. One of the dangers to a plan such as Bill C-41 is that it tends to shelter the farmer from the marketplace. It is another block between the producer and the realities of the marketplace. The government could be doing much more to bring about a meaningful international grains agreement.

● (2150)

There should be some means of reassessing this program after it has been in operation for four or five years. It seems to me it will reward those whose production is declining, but do nothing for those whose production is expanding. We might ask if farm to farm sales are to be excluded. What about the eastern grain growers? Are they not interested in this scheme? Should they not be treated in the same way as western grain growers? What about grain used for feeding on the farm?

If, as I suspect, this scheme is based on the experience of the last 25 years, surely we may reasonably expect the next 25 years to be better for agriculture. Thus, I very much question the actuarial basis which has been used, especially when the two key factors are mother nature and people.

I hope the administration of the bill will be looked after as a separate entity, and that it will be kept completely outside the Department of Agriculture. There is one thing the bill will do: it will serve as a perfect red herring to cool the whole transportation and grain situation for the government. Farmers will be kept busy all year trying to figure it out.

Grain exports are presently at their lowest point in the past five years. This stabilization plan will be understood by perhaps one out of every 1,000 producers. It ought not to be rushed through parliament. I am not aware of any producer pressure for it. We seem to be beset by any number of pressing problems affecting the grain industry. Let me mention some of them—grain transportation, rail line abandonment, the need for improved facilities at Churchill and the Pacific seaboard, a system for payment on the basis of protein content, the need to develop a soft white wheat for export, the need for a government grain storage program, the need for a measure of tax relief, the increase in labour strife and industrial disputes, the importance of developing an effective chemical designed for insect and wild oat control—

Mr. Alexander: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Measures are needed to arrest the decline of the rural population. Surely the government should consider using the taxation system for this purpose. When we consider the magnitude of past errors in judgment affecting the western grain industry, there is room for a lot of research here.

Great advantages may attach to the stabilizing of other products but I question the need with respect to grain at this time. We need to continue to improve crop insurance schemes in co-operation with the provinces. If not properly understood and carefully administered, Bill C-41 could displace the centre of gravity of the whole western grain industry. If the government wants to stabilize income out there, the taxation system might be used to that end. I hope the agricultural committee intends to hold meetings in the wheat board region to hear evidence in connection with this measure, since the bill before us is a complicated and important one.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I appreciate your patience in waiting a few moments until I had arrived in my place. I shall endeavour to mind the store until ten o'clock so that on another occasion we may consider this bill at greater length.

We were told at about 5.15 this afternoon that this bill would likely be called today. I am mindful, too, that in mid-December we were told by the government House leader that it was among five or six bills which were to be given top priority and that it would be dealt with on an urgent basis. It seems to have got lost in the shuffle since then. I do not know whether the minister in charge of the Wheat Board is bringing it in now because it is my birthday—at least it will be tomorrow—but I cannot think of any other reason for the length of the delay.

The minister, in the course of his speech, went over the history of grain stabilization. I shall not review what he said because I do not wish to revive certain sore points or refer to what happened in days when the hon. gentleman's skin was somewhat thinner than it is today. I would only remind hon. members that the history of grain income stabilization proposals shows us that while all parties could probably agree on the principle that some form of income stabilization or guaranteed prices is desirable, the government has never been able to come forward with legislation which the opposition was capable of understanding or supporting, or both.

As we have already heard, this is an extremely confused piece of legislation. One has only to read pages 9, 10 and 11 to realize that no farmer, certainly no member of this House with the possible exception of the minister in charge of the Wheat Board, will be able to understand how the bill will operate or how it will be applied. That is why we should like to spend some time on it during second reading.

We believe the legislation to be sufficiently important as to justify the Standing Committee on Agriculture holding hearings in two or three dozen places in the region of Canada covered by the Wheat Board, in order that farmers may appear, both as individuals and through their organizations, ask their questions, and obtain a thorough understanding of these proposals. Close examination of the legislation suggests to me that the government will put less into this program than into others, in fact that in most years it will take more away from western farming than it will put into it.

May I call it ten o'clock?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

HOUSING—NEIGHBOURHOOD IMPROVEMENT AND RESIDENTIAL REHABILITATION ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS—REQUEST FOR INCREASED FUNDS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): I see we are honoured to have the minister himself here. The question which I am again debating tonight has to do with the residential rehabilitation program, a subject which I have sought to bring to the minister's attention many times before. I can only repeat in the interests of the part of Canada I represent, that the program is ideally suited to my district, one which unfortunately includes thousands of low income families to whom such a program should be directed.

The program is divided into two areas—the neighbourhood improvement program, and the rural and native housing program—under which citizens receiving incomes of $6,000 or less can borrow up to $5,000 to bring their homes up to a reasonable standard while taking advantage of a forgiveness factor of $2,500 which they would not have to repay. It is almost two years since these programs were announced, and yet at this moment little or nothing has been done to direct the advantages to those who would benefit.

All I seem to get in reply to the many representations that I have made is a reiteration of the answer that it is up to the various provinces to designate the areas that would qualify under neighbourhood improvement, or rural and native housing programs; or, to further aggravate the situation, it is said in turn that the various municipalities have to declare occupancy standards. The other aggravating answer that I continually receive is the notion of a great decision that has to be made over the matter of declaring areas of designation as to population on some basis of priority.

The simple solution to the problem, in so far as my district is concerned, is that the whole of the province of Newfoundland should be designated, because statistics support the fact that the condition of accepted standards for homes is far below the national norm, when taking into account the numbers of homes lacking the most basic services in the province of Newfoundland.

In taking advantage of the opportunity afforded me tonight to make a plea again to the minister, since it becomes increasingly obvious, after the length of time that the programs have been in effect, that something is wrong in the thrust to initiate such a worth-while program which would help so many Canadians and most particularly those living in rural Canada, and rather than criticize the minister for the apparent lack of attention, I offer an alternative as a responsible idea to give Canadians the opportunity to take advantage of the relief features which could be to the advantage of low income Canadians. I suggest that on a national basis a program exists which can be directed directly to the low income Canadian under the home improvement loans plan, whereby homeowners can apply for loans of up to $4,000 for home improvements.

I suggest to the minister that, rather than having to go through the provinces and the municipalities, the home improvement program be extended to Canadians under the following conditions. First, that homeowners be given the opportunity to apply for home improvement loans directly to CMHC under present conditions. Second, that the present program be amended to raise the amount to $5,000. Third, that in addition the program be amended to provide the forgiveness factor under present conditions of rehabilitation, commensurate with the national code. Fourth, that the staff at CMHC offices across Canada be enlarged to take care of the added workload, and that the present capability be decentralized to take in the provision of service to rural populations.

It is obvious that the minister is having some difficulty in providing relief to low income Canadians who require decent and acceptable accommodation, and I offer that with such a thrust thousands of Canadians would be afforded the opportunity to continue to live in decent and upgraded accommodation and shelter in the locality they wish, thereby relieving the housing crisis which exists in Canada today. I would appreciate a sympathetic response from the minister, and I know I can expect some sympathetic consideration.

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Madam Speaker, I have been impressed by the continued interest of the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) in the NIP and RRAP programs. I was particularly interested in his reference to the home improvement loans program and the specific suggestions that he made, suggestions which I can assure him I will take into consideration in reviewing the programs as I promised the provincial housing ministers I would, and as we look for new ways to assist the hon. member's constituents and other low income Canadians across the country.

The hon. member suggested that there have been undue delays in the implementation of NIP and RRAP, the neighbourhood improvement program and the residential rehabilitation assistance program. We have made tremendous headway in bringing in these new programs.

First of all, with respect to the Neighbourhood Improvement Program, we signed the necessary agreements with all ten provinces for 1974 and are in the process of negotiating the 1975 agreements now. In 1974, $48½ million was allocated for grants to municipalities, and $50½ million has been budgeted for 1975. So, we are seeing increases as it comes on stream.

Following the signing of the 1974 agreements, the provinces designated 86 municipalities in which neighbourhood improvement areas were to be selected. These municipalities have selected 87 neighbourhoods, and activity has proceeded to the implementation stage in 34. The other 53 are at the planning stage. The selection of an additional 20 neighbourhoods is in process. The people who reside in these neighbourhoods are actively engaged in determining the needs of the neighbourhoods for assistance under the legislation. I think we can be proud of these achievements. I am delighted with the support we have had from the provinces and municipalities and I am sure, as we move through 1975, that this program will show further very positive results.

We must not overlook that it was this House that passed the legislation that required municipalities to adopt bylaws of minimum maintenance and occupancy standards. All the municipalities participating in the program have had to enact these bylaws, and this in itself is a most important achievement.

Turning next to the implementation of the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program, as hon. members know, the legislation prescribes that grants and loans for the rehabilitation of substandard property can be made available in NIP areas or in areas especially designated by Order-in-Council. Now that we have 87 areas designated under the NIP program, it is possible for CMHC to apply the benefits of RRAP, and I am very happy to be able to inform the House that rehabilitation loans and grants have been made in 22 municipalities, and a similar number of municipalities will shortly be in a position to benefit from this program. I should mention that it would be inappropriate for me to take all the credit for these programs since this more properly belongs to my predecessor, and to the provinces and municipalities which have so wholeheartedly co-operated with us.

It has been suggested that the rural and native housing program announced last year by the federal government has been slow in getting started. No one is more anxious than I to get this program moving. I would like to assure the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe, and other members of this House, that we are proceeding as quickly as possible with the delivery of homes and the rehabilitation of dwellings under this program. Under agreements which we signed some years ago with the provinces of Saskatchewan and Manitoba we have provided 848 units for low income residents in remote northern areas. Agreements have been signed with Newfoundland, P.E.I., New Brunswick, Manitoba, Alberta and British Columbia, and signings with other provinces are expected shortly.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the minister, but the time allotted to him has expired.

AIR CANADA—POSSIBLE INCLUSION OF WINNIPEG FINANCE BRANCH IN TERMS OF INQUIRY

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Madam Speaker, I would like to begin by commending the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), through you and the parliamentary secretary, for initiating a public inquiry into Air Canada's management with regard to the payment of $100,000 to McGregor Travel Agency of Montreal. The Minister looked objectively at the situation, saw the problem, and made an appropriate and accurate response. Now he must extend his objectivity and sincerity to the equally serious problems at the Air Canada finance branch in Winnipeg. There are a number of reasons why this situation is even more serious and in much more desperate need of a full public airing of the facts.

The labour-management dispute at the finance branch has been going on for almost two years. Winnipeg members of parliament have received countless telegrams and letters from employees during that period, pleading for some help in resolving the dispute.

During the last session of the twenty-ninth parliament and up to this point in the thirtieth parliament, this issue has been raised 28 times in the House of Commons, by members from both sides of the floor. The fact that this has resulted in no government action is in itself ridiculous.

The employees of Air Canada in Winnipeg cannot reasonably be expected to work in the present atmosphere. The general manager of the Winnipeg finance division, in a circular to all employees two months ago, stated that he hoped to "return the Air Canada work place to a satisfying and efficient place of employment". By his own admission it is not that now. From the company's point of view also it is imperative that the situation be resolved.

As of late 1974 the accounting service division had over 100 man years of work backlog. The billing schedule is presently eight weeks in arrears, amounting to a sum of $127 million. The manager of Air Canada audit services estimated the cost of the late billing to be in excess of $1 million as of November, 1974. This cost has risen since then, and this is money from lost interest charges, which is actual lost revenue for the airline. Can Air Canada afford this? Its 1974 deficit was blamed on rising fuel costs. How can this contention be justified when millions of dollars in bills go uncollected?

There is another major cause for concern as a result of the present situation. Air Canada's flight performance quality control recording is done in Winnipeg, and with an eight week backlog in billing one might reasonably suspect that this is being neglected as well. Several recent events have supplied potential evidence for this suspicion, such as the emergency landing of a DC-9 at the Ottawa airport on April 22 after one of the plane's two engines suddenly reversed thrust and, according to newspaper reports, blew up.

On March 25, flight 154 from Edmonton to Toronto taxied out to take off, only to have the aircraft rocked by the right engine following a compressor failure, after which it stalled. After this happened a second time, another Lockheed 1011 was flown in from Calgary to transport the passengers. The second aircraft taxied out, only to have the same malfunction repeat itself. By this time people were telling the pilot to let them off at the end of the runway and they would walk back. Two successive aircraft suffered the same flight-stopping engine malfunction.

It has been reported that on February 11, 1975, there were two cases of accidental depressurization aboard Air Canada DC-9s. These happened on aircrafts 732 and 735, and are added to a number in 1974 that Air Canada management claims not to know about, even though the airline's own maintenance documents prove the events.

You have probably noticed, Mr. Speaker, that I have not mentioned the facts in the actual dispute in Winnipeg. I do not pretend to know who is right or wrong on the various bargaining points. But I know of no one else who can give an objective critique of the situation or offer any solutions to the dilemma. That is the reason why an independent, objective group must be assigned the job before the situation becomes completely hopeless and the airline is permanently damaged.

A group of MPs in a committtee meeting questioning two or three witnesses cannot possibly ascertain the underlying feelings that have prevented a settlement in almost two years of negotiations, or hope to offer a solution.

The facts that I have outlined show very clearly that a solution must be found and the Winnipeg finance branch must be made efficient once more. I submit that the most effective way of doing that is to include the finance branch in the terms of the management inquiry as well as the Dorval maintenance base.

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) has brought forward several very important questions, and I will try to deal with them as best as I can in the short time allotted to me.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) pointed out to the hon. member on April 22, in response to his question, that:

> Anyhow, I think we will carry out that inquiry, see its results and whether it would be advisable to go further and take further action. I am not going to launch three or four inquiries on Air Canada one after the other.

As the hon. member is aware, the terms of reference for the inquiry into the financial administration of Air Canada were tabled last Friday. As I understand it, nothing prevents Judge Estey from investigating the financial activities of Air Canada in Winnipeg, if he decides that this is necessary.

I believe that the labour-management relations question in Winnipeg is a valid one but should be dealt with by the proper forum, namely, the labour-management negotiation process. It is true that the job reclassification issue for Air Canada employees in the financial branch has yet to be resolved. However, since the old contract expires in August of this year and some of the union demands would require changes in the collective agreement over and above reclassification, both parties decided to reopen negotiations early on a new contract. The Canadian Airlines Employees' Association and Air Canada management started negotiations for a new contract on April 8.

In closing I would like to comment briefly on the construction of the Air Canada Winnipeg hangar facility. I think it is important to point out that the facility will be built as quickly as possible and will be of great value to Winnipeg and Air Canada, and that delays in such a major undertaking can be expected. The promises made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson), and the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) prior to the election will become a reality.

Adjournment Debate

SOCIAL SECURITY—SUGGESTED INCREASE IN OLD AGE PENSIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Madam Speaker, many years ago Robert Browning wrote these lines:

Grow old along with me,
The best is yet to be,
The last of life for which the first was made.

He could not truthfully have written that the best is yet to be for elderly people in Canada today, where so many of our senior citizens are subsisting at a level of income well below the poverty line.

Because of a weak and vacillating attitude toward inflation and recession, dodging important issues behind the guise of a so-called consensus, the government will now and then shyly approach the vital issues of today and then back away. In all this indecisiveness those who suffer the most and those who deserve most of our concern are receiving the totally inadequate old age security pension.

The government has been told by its advisers that the poverty line is an income of $4,898 per year for families in Atlantic Canada. Despite this fact, it is paying those retired people, whose efforts helped build the present economy, the niggardly sum of $123.42 per month plus, in certain cases, a guaranteed income supplement which averages $66.48 per month.

To say that this paltry sum is reasonable because it is indexed to the cost of living is a pious hypocrisy. The cost of living index covers a broad spectrum of living costs, related to the average family of four. It cannot be realistically compared to the cost of subsistence incurred by senior citizens forced to live on such a limited income where the first and essential expenses of food and shelter are subject to the highest individual increases.

Additionally, the index is published after the changes occur, and the increase in pension, paid quarterly, does not reach the recipient for at least a month after that. It is not made retroactive, although retroactive payments are not unknown to this government.

The people of whom I speak, all 1,892,454 of them, have passed the age of 65 years. This means that they have lived through the hungry thirties as employable adults and in the years of prosperity which followed. In their productive years they made a great contribution to the prosperity and growth of this country. They toiled and paid their full share of taxes. Now we treat them as second class members of society they helped to create.

The old age security pension and the guaranteed income supplement must be raised to a level which will enable these people to live their lives in decency and self respect.

In my view a tax free old age security pension of $200 per month now would be a giant step forward in recognizing the need of our senior citizens, and it cannot wait until the minister develops a new system or scheme. It is indeed an imperative element of any structure of social justice.

I conclude with a quotation which I am sure is familiar to most of my hon. colleagues. They would do well to keep it in mind when this issue comes up for debate, as it most assuredly must in the name of common decency and in the fullness of time: "Honour thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long in the land."

● (2220)

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, one cannot look at the proposal of the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie) to increase old age pensions, in isolation. It must be examined in the context of the whole set of economic relationships.

There are at the present time approximately 1.9 million persons in receipt of old age security pensions. Any substantial increase in the basic pension would add significantly to the approximately $4 billion we are now spending annually on the Old age security and guaranteed income supplement programs.

The federal-provincial review of social security in Canada has been examining the needs and incomes of all disadvantaged groups in our society. We must be equally concerned about pensioners, the spouses of pensioners, the disabled, single parent families, as well as persons working whose incomes are inadequate to look after their family needs. At the present time many of these groups have incomes which are much lower than the incomes of the elderly. We must correct this inequitable situation by bringing these groups at the bottom up to the higher level.

The federal government is concerned about the financial needs of our elderly population and over the past several years has increased pension benefits substantially. In the last three years the old age security pension has increased by $60 per month. As well, this government has introduced the guaranteed income supplement for pensioners.

I should also like to point out that the old age security pension is now fully escalated every quarter according to increases in the consumer price index, to protect pensioners' purchasing power. This also applies to the guaranteed income supplement.

Today a married couple, both over age 65, are guaranteed an income under OAS and, if in receipt of the guaranteed income supplement, of $4,807. These improvements together with the recent amendments to the Income Tax Act providing more generous treatment to elderly persons, show this government's commitment to the financial security of our senior citizens.

SOCIAL SECURITY

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ASSURE DELIVERY OF PENSION CHEQUES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I request unanimous consent of the House to present a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

As the postal conflict is very detrimental to our society owing to the delays in the delivery of old age security pension cheques, and as rotating strikes or others cause serious harm to the Canadian economy generally, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise):

That the government take immediate steps to settle this conflict which seems to drag on interminably.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, the motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: As there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REASON CORPORATION PERMITTED CANADIAN LIBERATION MOVEMENT TO USE ITS FACILITIES TO EXPLAIN OBJECTIVES OF ORGANIZATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the terms of Standing Order 43 arising from the anti-American activities of an organization calling itself the Canadian Liberation Movement, and from the considerable publicity of an unfortunate and questionable nature given this movement by the CBC last night on the program "As It Happens". I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, that:

In consideration of the fact that Canada enjoys excellent and friendly relations with the United States, and in view of the anti-American activities of an organization known as the Canadian Liberation Movement operating in various Canadian cities, including Ottawa, and with headquarters in Toronto, the House deplores the placing of printed stickers by this organization on cars bearing the United States licence plates reading "Yankee Go Home" and the House requests the Secretary of State responsible for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to make a statement on motions as to why the facilities of CBC radio yesterday permitted this organization to outline its disgraceful plans for harassment of American visitors to this country and for defacement of their property while on Canadian soil.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion is proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43, and therefore cannot be presented to the House without unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

An hon. Member: The Liberals said no.

Mr. Speaker: The motion cannot be put.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I call attention to the fact that the government is again in a state of disarray with only about nine ministers here to answer a number of questions. What we see is an example of "ministers, stay away from home".

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

POSSIBLE DISOBEDIENCE OF BACK-TO-WORK LEGISLATION BY QUEBEC LONGSHOREMEN—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Justice, who told the House yesterday that his department was investigating whether the legislation affecting longshoremen in St. Lawrence river ports has been disobeyed. Has the minister now determined if there has in fact been disobedience, and can he inform the House what course of action the government is following?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, it is our intention to proceed as quickly as possible to take whatever steps are available to ensure that the legislation is obeyed, and that the work of longshoring is undertaken again in these three ports.

Mr. Stanfield: Is it the position of the minister, as was indicated yesterday, that investigations are continuing, and is it the intention of the government that if it is found on the evidence that the law has been disobeyed, the government will proceed on the basis of such disobedience, or is there some other course of action the government intends to follow?

Mr. Lang: It would be our intention to obtain the necessary information and to proceed to make the law as effective as possible.

Mr. Stanfield: I wish the minister would give a straightforward answer to a very simple question. Is it the intention of the minister to proceed on the basis of what has taken place? In other words, if there have been breaches of the law, is it the intention of the minister to prosecute, or is the government seeking some other way of securing compliance with the law?

Mr. Lang: I could almost have answered the first part of the previous question with a simple yes, but it was because the Leader of the Opposition went on to add a contradictory portion, which I could scarcely handle in one answer, that I had to choose my own answer. It is, of course, our intention to see that the law is made effective. It may well be that injunctions are the logical method at this stage. Questions will arise as to whether there is enough material for other proceedings, and our general policy is to proceed in whatever way the evidence available suggests is permitted.

AGRICULTURE

FEED GRAIN—SUPPLY SITUATION IN QUEBEC AND GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ENSURE CONTINUITY OF SUPPLY

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): I have a supplementary for the Minister of Justice. In view of the uncertain response from the minister yesterday, can he advise today whether Quebec farm producers are obtaining sufficient feed grain and for how much longer supplies of feed grain will be available?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, according to the information I have, they are getting grain from Montreal and from Quebec City.

Mr. Fraser: I have a further supplementary for the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of Justice or the Minister of Labour. In the event that longshoremen continue to defy the back to work legislation, what plans does the government have to ensure necessary feed grain deliveries?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, we said that we would do our utmost in the last instance, and we did that. As far as I know, no livestock or poultry went without food during that trying time.

● (1410)

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, the question is, what plans has the minister got in the event that the longshoremen do not do back to work?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, if we announced our plans now they would not be much good when they were needed.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

HOUSING

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON REDUCTION OF MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON NEW MEASURES TO STIMULATE CONSTRUCTION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Since the minister was described on CBC radio this morning as being in a state of anger when he heard that another lending company in Toronto increased its mortgage rate by a percentage point, and since the minister says he has been in that state about mortgage rates since last August when he became minister, can he tell the House when the government will be announcing concrete legislation or a course of action to lead to an early reduction in mortgage rates?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member is aware that there are a number of pieces of legislation already in effect which are helping people, especially low income groups, cope with the housing problem to the extent that AHOP is again at unprecedented levels of success. This helps lower income people reduce their interest payments. I do not set interest rates, Mr. Speaker, but we respond to them in the form of low, direct interest payments or subsidies and we are continuing to do this.

Mr. Broadbent: A supplementary question. Subsidies leave the vast majority of Canadians out of the picture, and I would ask the minister to keep that in mind when he answers this question. He said in the House yesterday that when he had new programs to announce he would do so in the House. While he was speaking, however, his parliamentary secretary was making a speech in British Columbia during which he announced that some new programs would be forthcoming. My question to the minister is, what are those new programs and when can we expect the details to be announced in the House?

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, I will make announcements as soon as I possibly can. I still have some consultations with my provincial counterparts. We are examining; not new programs specifically, but the reinforcement of those which are already showing a high degree of success.

Mr. Broadbent: That should not involve many programs, Mr. Speaker. My final supplementary relates to the level of unemployment in the construction industry in Canada. Since 25 per cent of those normally employed in the construction industry are currently unemployed, would the minister ensure that these new programs will have as their ultimate objective double the proposed number of units he originally planned for 1975 and set a minimum objective of 400,000 housing units rather than the 210,000 housing units?

Mr. Danson: As I said yesterday, Mr. Speaker, on the government side of the House we deal in the realm of reality. Our wishes would not be confined to the 400,000 the hon. member mentioned yesterday. The ability of the economy and the industry to deliver is the governing factor. If we went to the numbers the hon. member suggested there would be an uncontainable inflationary spiral. Nevertheless, I fully appreciate the employment consequences on the construction industry which are probably higher than any other segment of the economy, with a job spinoff of at least three to one from on site to off site, plus those which are created in other sectors of the economy. That is part of my thinking and, I am sure, that of the Minister of Finance.

SUGGESTION LOANS BE GRANTED AT REDUCED INTEREST RATE

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

Can the minister explain to the House why the government cannot extend loans to Canadian taxpayers at the same rate as to foreign countries, including Cuba which has been granted a $10 million loan at 3 per cent interest over a 30-year period?

[English]

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think the two problems are unrelated. I appreciate that we have an obligation to countries less fortunate than we are; while our problems are great, they do not compare with those of other countries. I think we approach each in a different way.

[Translation]

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Considering that these loans are for extended terms nearly 40 years and that when this period is over, most of the houses are mortgaged to the hilt, to the extent that their owners are even unable to repair them, does the minister find it normal that in addition to that, homeowners must pay in interests as much as three times the value of their houses, not to mention maintenance expenses?

[English]

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member raised the interesting point about the amortization length of mortgages. That is something we are examining. In addition, I believe he mentioned repair provisions within our rehabilitation programs. Those are receiving very high priority as well.

TRADE

INCREASE IN DEFICIT—SUGGESTED INTRODUCTION OF PRODUCTION INCENTIVES TO INCREASE EXPORT SALES

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, but, in view of his continued absence, I will direct it to the Acting Prime Minister. As Canada has just experienced its largest quarterly trade deficit in history, and the trade deficit on manufactured products, which are the ones that produce the jobs, having increased from $6 billion in 1973 to nearly $10 billion last year, may I ask the Acting Prime Minister if the government has finally come to the conclusion that the introduction of incentives to induce greater productivity is long overdue, as is more research and development to lower costs and selling prices, and thus make Canadian products sell more readily on export markets and in Canada.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should inform the hon. member that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is today meeting with his business advisory committee and, I am sure, pursuing the sort of discussions the hon. member would want him to pursue. On the question in general, as the minister said and as I have said, one of the reasons for our growing deficit is the fact that we are relatively more prosperous than our customers and suppliers and our imports tend to go up more quickly than our exports.

Mr. Baldwin: Let's not have any commercials.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As the minister has been giving the House the same story for the past year to try to explain his pathetic performance, while our trade went from bad to disastrous—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member will ask his question.

Mr. Hees: I ask the Acting Prime Minister, who is a former minister of trade and commerce, to point out to his colleague that the motto of his once great department used to be: When the going gets tough, the tough get going!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRANSPORT

LOSS OF GRENADES DURING TRANSIT BY RAILWAY—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF SAFETY PRECAUTIONS

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. On Tuesday of last week I asked the Minister of National Defence what security measures are taken by his department or by the Department of Transport when transfers of explosives are being carried out. In view of the reply given and as ten hand grenades were stolen, eight of which were found in a sand box in a school playground in Chilliwack, I ask the minister to describe to the House the precautions that are taken by the Departments of National Defence or of Transport in connection with shipments of this type.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure, despite the very important and urgent nature of the question, the question period is not really the time for the minister to outline that kind of information.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Speaker, may I direct this question to the minister. I wonder if the minister would agree to carry out a thorough investigation into the circumstances surrounding this particular incident which caused much concern in the city of Chilliwack, in my constituency.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yes, part of the responsibility is that of the military, and the other part is that of CN. In the meantime they still do not have these things under lock. There is something here which is nonsense. I am trying to understand how these things happen.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON ADMISSION OF PLO REPRESENTATIVE TO UNITED NATIONS CONFERENCE IN TORONTO

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of reports that the PLO intends to send official representatives to the United Nations meeting in Toronto, this year, on criminology, I wonder if the minister would be good enough to tell the House whether it is the policy of this government to admit or not to admit such official representatives.

● (1420)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the conference to which the hon. member refers is, of course, under sponsorship of the United Nations. When Canada undertook to host this particular conference, it also assumed an obligation to receive those members invited by the United Nations. That is the present situation. Each person coming into Canada will be expected to meet normal admission requirements. That system will be in vogue in this particular situation.

Mr. Lawrence: Bearing in mind that there are other international terrorist organizations in the world today, will the minister advise, for example, if the IRA wanted to come over whether it would be given official representation also.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, that would be entirely up to the invitation list of the United Nations. To my knowledge, the IRA has no such standing in the United Nations.

VIET NAM—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE COMMUNIST GOVERNMENT WILL PERMIT CANADIAN ORGANIZATIONS TO CONTINUE HELPING ORPHANS

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that Canadians supported Viet Nam orphans through various organizations prior to the communist takeover, has the government been assured of their wellbeing, both under present circumstances and in the future?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether I understand the question. Does it refer to orphans of Vietnamese origin now resident in Canada?

[Mr. Patterson.]

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, I am referring to those orphans being sustained by various organizations such as the Foster Parents plan. To enlarge on this, I would ask the following question: If Canadian contributions continue to be forwarded to Viet Nam for orphan maintenance, is there any guarantee that these funds will be used for the purpose intended or would Canadians be well advised to cease making these contributions?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the aid which we have made available has been channelled or directed through international organizations such as the Red Cross and the United Nations High Commission for Refugees. I am satisfied that these organizations will ensure that the funds reach their proper destination.

EXPULSION OF PRESS ATTACHÉ FROM REPUBLIC OF CHINA EMBASSY—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Can he confirm to the House the expulsion by the Canadian government of a press attaché at the embassy of the People's Republic of China for security reasons and could he specify what are those security reasons?

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government did ask that a member of the Chinese Embassy in Ottawa be withdrawn from service in Canada. The reason was that in our view his activities were incompatible with his status as a diplomat in Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

Subject to more explicit details from the minister, does he not agree with a statement by former RCMP commissioner W. L. Higgit, according to whom the establishment of diplomatic relations with the People's Republic of China would likely increase subversive activities within our country?

[English]

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Speaker.

FISHERIES

SEALS—INQUIRY WHETHER DEPARTMENT PLANS TO PREVENT FUTURE HUNTS

Mr. Gus MacFarlane (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of State (Fisheries), I will direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. Since the seal hunt is now concluded, and by an act of God the ice did not come in so less seals were taken and we were spared that brutality, has the fisheries department any plans for the future to prevent this kind of slaughter re-occurring?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State (Fisheries) has examined this question from time to time. It would not be Canadian government policy to abolish the seal hunt.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: I, myself, have spoken with the minister and there is another side to the issue that is not often raised in this House.

TRANSPORT

FREIGHT RATES—POSSIBILITY OF INTERVENTION BY MINISTER TO PREVENT INCREASE—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. As reported in Hansard on April 15 at page 4806, in reply to a question by myself about a 20 per cent increase by the railways in class rates to be effective on May 5, the minister stated he was still opposed to what the railroads were trying to achieve in the way of an across-the-board increase and that he would get in touch with the Transport Commission to see to it that what he said was really accepted by the companies. Did the minister get in touch with the CTC and the railways? If so, what was the response, and have the railways, in fact, really accepted what the minister said? If not, what does he intend to do about it?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Yes; I understood the hon. gentleman underlined the fact he was referring exclusively to the class rates. I met yesterday with the ministers of transport of the Atlantic provinces and I am supposed to get in touch with both railways today or tomorrow in order to see that what I said in Calgary is carried out.

Mr. Benjamin: The minister also said on April 15 that he would get in touch with the CTC and the railroads. In view of the fact that the Montreal Gazette of last Friday, April 25, reported the intention of CP Rail to raise its rates in other rate categories such as agreed charges and specific commodity rates, and since this appears to constitute further across-the-board increases which the minister says he is against, may I ask what action the hon. gentleman proposes to take to prevent these additional increases and to live up to the commitment he made to the western transportation ministers on February 24 last?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I do not intend to discuss the laws as they exist—the statutes as they were passed by this House. The hon. member knows what kind of legal authority I have: the only authority I have over the railways is a moral authority and I am trying to use it as far as possible in order to maintain the rates as low as possible.

Mr. Benjamin: We are still waiting for the minister to bring in legislation which will give him some authority. In view of the commitment by the minister to remove anomalies between short and long haul rates and between raw and finished products, what action is being taken to ensure that the recent across-the-board increases, as well as proposed future across-the-board increases are applied in such a way as to eliminate such anomalies and inequities, thus implementing the commitment to the four western provinces?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): As to the anomalies, we are working with the four western ministers on this aspect. We have a report in hand now, and next time we meet we hope we shall find a solution, or a justification for these anomalies.

SOCIAL SECURITY

GUARANTEED INCOME SUPPLEMENT—REQUEST CHEQUES BE SENT ON TIME

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Since a significant amount of mail has accumulated at the central post office in Montreal, would the minister tell the House whether he intends to take measures so that old age security pensioners will not be penalized by delays in mail delivery caused by the labour dispute in Montreal, and that pensioners receive in time the guaranteed income supplement they are entitled to?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member has specific cases to bring to my attention, I shall be pleased to discuss them with the Postmaster General. I have to inform him, however, that to the best of my knowledge, all family allowance and old age pension cheques have been distributed in the normal and regular fashion this month.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. Is the minister aware that all the basic pension cheques have been distributed, but the guaranteed income supplement was not included, because application forms submitted by pensioners were locked in the Montreal post office?

Mr. Lalonde: On this point, Mr. Speaker, we have been making a number of requests to pensioners, as early as January last, that they send their guaranteed income supplement application forms in time, so that they would receive their supplement as early as April 1. Unfortunately, some pensioners have yet to answer that request. We are waiting for application forms, and as soon as they arrive the adjustment will be paid retroactively under the guaranteed income supplement. Unfortunately, it is impossible both for the Postmaster General and myself to fill in such application forms for the people who are now late. If there are forms stuck in the mail, we shall do everything possible, as soon as service is reinstated, so that the people involved get their supplements.

AUDITOR GENERAL

REPORT OF INDEPENDENT REVIEW COMMITTEE—POSSIBILITY OF LEGISLATION TO IMPLEMENT REPORT

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. Now that the government has had several weeks to brood over the report of the Independent Review Committee on the office of the Auditor General, does the government intend to introduce legislation this session to implement that report?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have no plans to introduce legislation in this session, but it really depends on how long the session lasts.

Mr. Baldwin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I will carefully avoid the last part of the answer; it might provoke me. Are there any cogent reasons why this parliament, through a parliamentary committee, should not indicate its position on behalf of the people of Canada with regard to the proposals which have been made in this and other legislation which is now in the safekeeping of the government?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, we have two alternatives. We could follow the suggestion of the hon. member for Peace River, or we could take our responsibility and bring a bill before parliament for discussion. In either case, the opposition will have plenty of opportunity to discuss the issues. I believe that the government ought to take some responsibility and introduce a bill.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

ALLEGED STATEMENT OF PRESIDENT THAT COMPANY FORCED TO FOLLOW STANDARDS SET BY CANADIAN PACIFIC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport, who seems to be playing musical chairs. If he would return to his throne, I should like to ask him this question. In a recent interview the president of the CNR stated that the CNR is forced to adhere to the standard of the CPR or to try to better it. Can the minister state if it is government policy that a government-owned railway take the view that it is not number one but number two in the field of rail transport and, if not, would the minister inform the president that the CNR should strive for leadership in this area and that private enterprises should follow the standards of the Crown corporation?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will excuse me, but is the hon. gentleman referring to the speech made by Mr. Bandeen, the president of the CNR? If he is, then I think Mr. Bandeen did not mind his business when he stated that.

[Mr. Lalonde.]

Policy is supposed to be stated by the government in the House of Commons.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PORTUGAL—DISCUSSION WITH MINISTER CONCERNING POSSIBLE INVOLVEMENT WITH NATO

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Was Portugal included in the minister's stopovers during his trip and, if so, did he meet the foreign minister and discuss Portugal's involvement in NATO?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I did have an opportunity to stop over in Lisbon and on Sunday evening I had dinner with the foreign minister. I should express to the House the feeling of almost exuberance that exists in Portugal as a result of the successful election in which a very high percentage of the electorate participated and which resulted in a very massive support for the moderate parties within that country. I expressed to the foreign minister on behalf of the government, and I am sure this parliament, our congratulations on the success of the election.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: I expressed the hope that the result would be a major step in the further democratization of Portugal.

With respect to the latter part of the question, the foreign minister advised me that the head of state will be attending the summit meeting at the end of May, and that the foreign minister himself will also attend. I did express to the foreign minister our desire to co-operate fully with the government of Portugal, and hopefully we will be having discussions at an early date to explore ways in which we can co-operate.

HEALTH

POSSIBLE LINK BETWEEN CANCER OF THE LIVER AND TRICHLOROETHYLENE—REQUEST FOR ACTION TO PROTECT WORKERS

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the possible link between cancer of the liver and the industrial chemical trichloroethylene, I wonder whether the minister could inform the House whether or not he has taken any action with regard to this particular chemical?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, my department is aware of the progress of studies being conducted in the United States on this subject, and we are also keeping a close watch on the situation, but no decision has yet been made in this regard.

[English]

Mr. Yewchuk: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the minister could assure the House that his department will also do studies into this chemical and its inherent dangers in order to protect Canadian workers who are exposed to it in large numbers in their daily work?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, the health protection branch has studied this particular chemical since 1968. There are also current investigations being carried out concerning the relative toxicity of the ingested and inhaled chemical and its potential mutagenic activity. I might point out that the results of recent studies conducted in the United States have indicated that massive doses of the chemical ingested for 462 days produced tumours in one strain of mouse. Officers of this department are in communication with the U.S. scientists who made these observations.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

BANISHMENT OF PRESS ATTACHÉ OF EMBASSY OF REPUBLIC OF CHINA—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF REASONS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question arising out of the question asked by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe in connection with the banishment, as it were, of the communist attaché whom the government of Canada requested to leave. In view of what took place in 1945 when, as a result of the action taken with Igor Gouzenko, revelations were made as to what had occurred and prosecutions took place thereafter, would the minister say whether or not the reasons for ordering this attaché to leave indicate that there has been a breach of security to this nation? If so, was he in any way involved with Canadians, and how many were involved in this regard if there were such? Without going into further detail, I think Canadians as a whole have a right to this information, as it was furnished by Mr. King in 1945.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will attempt to answer as much of the right hon. member's question as I can. The activities involved did not include the collection or attempted collection of classified information affecting Canadian security; and there will be no charges laid with respect to any Canadian citizens.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Then, on what basis was he ordered out of this country? Why the enigma? Why was he ordered out if he did not do anything that was detrimental to the security of Canada?

● (1440)

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, he was asked to withdraw because his activities were, in my view, incompatible with the role of a diplomat in Canada.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What activities?

Mr. MacEachen: I will come to that by telling the right hon. gentleman that in my view it would not be in the best interests of Canada-Chinese relations to discuss this aspect of the case.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We have heard everything now, Mr. Speaker. We have a government afraid to answer because it might annoy communist China, yet it orders this man out.

ALLEGED DIFFICULTY OF TORONTO IN RECRUITING BRITISH POLICEMEN—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ALLEVIATE

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact it has been reported that the Toronto Police Department is having difficulty with the Department of Immigration over the recruitment of British policemen, I should like to ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration what steps his department is taking to expedite the granting of landed immigrant status to these individuals who are required to assist in the control of domestic crime and violence?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, if there are definite job offers available we will do everything in our power to expedite the recruitment of these people. The fact of the matter is that there has not been a formal job offer made by the Toronto Metropolitan Police, and until that situation is clarified the immigration regulations are not being met. We will be glad to expedite things when there is a formal job offer made.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, in view of the minister's answer to the effect that the Department will do everything possible to expedite these applications, am I to understand that if steps are taken today by Toronto Police Department officials to make formal requests for the landing of these individuals, and after the necessary security checks have been made by the department, these individuals may be allowed into Canada in an expeditious way?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, if there is a formal job offer, and if the security and other checks of eligibility to which the hon. member has referred are satisfactory, then the answer is yes, we will do everything to expedite the matter.

CRASH OF PANARCTIC AIRCRAFT—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE MINISTER WILL HOLD INQUIRY

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might enlist the co-operation of the Minister of Transport in assuring that there will be an inquiry at the earliest possible date into the fatal crash of the PanArctic aircraft on the islands, in view of the fact that there has been a sort of impasse reached between the inquest and the minister's statement to the effect that he would not hold an inquiry until the inquest had been completed? There are many relatives and immediate members of the families of the victims of this crash who are quite frankly being prejudiced by this sort of official stalemate.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think it is only reasonable that I first receive and read the report before taking any other action.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): But there is a stalemate.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

REASON FOR FINANCIAL COMMITMENT TO MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE BEFORE BERGER COMMISSION REPORTS—JUSTIFICATION FOR COMMITMENT

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact the government-controlled Canada Development Corporation has indicated to the Arctic Gas consortium that it is prepared to provide $100 million for the Mackenzie Valley pipeline, would the Acting Prime Minister explain why such a financial commitment was made prior to the Berger inquiry completing its findings on the advisability of the pipeline?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Canada Development Corporation acts under the directions of its board of directors. It is an independent and autonomous organization. If it has made that decision, it is a decision which has been made in the interests of its shareholders.

Mr. Symes: Mr. Speaker, since the Berger inquiry and the studies of the National Energy Board have not been completed, I should like to ask the minister what report or information the CDC received to justify the $100 million investment in Arctic Gas, and will this information be made available to Justice Berger and the National Energy Board?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I will pass this inquiry on and see whether the information can be provided. However, as I say, this is an organization which operates on commercial grounds and I am sure the House of Commons would not want the government to interfere with such operations.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Who are the shareholders but the government?

OLYMPIC GAMES

COIN PROGRAM—POSSIBILITY OF ISSUING SPECIAL GOLD COIN

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact the olympic coin program under the jurisdiction of the Postmaster General has evidently not become the success the government led us all to believe, and because the minister just last week indicated the government would be advancing legislation to supplement the present deficit, would the Postmaster General indicate whether the minting of a special gold coin will in fact be part of such legislation?

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, without commenting on the preamble as to whether it is successful or not, in answer to the main question as to whether we are considering the minting of a gold coin, this is one of many variations we are considering.

COIN PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE GOLD TRANSFERRED FROM TREASURY AT MARKET PRICE IF GOLD COIN ISSUED

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, in view of the minister's answer and the possibility of the minting of a gold coin I would direct my supplementary question to the acting Minister of Finance. Because it seems obvious that a gold coin will probably be minted, would the minister assure this House that the government will not directly or indirectly transfer gold from the federal treasury at a price other than true market price, which today is approximately $165, compared to the official rate put on by the government of $42?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that is a rather complicated question based on a hypothetical premise.

VAILLANCOURT CASE—DATE OF DECISION ON WHETHER OR NOT TO COMMUTE SENTENCE OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Solicitor General and I want to emphasize the time limit. Now that the Solicitor General, his department and other members of the cabinet have had time to study the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in relation to one case that involves capital punishment, when will a decision be made by the government, if the matter is under consideration, and will it be made soon in light of the time element involved?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is referring to the Vaillancourt case. This will go to the cabinet for consideration this week.

HOUSING

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF FEDERAL MORTGAGE EXCHANGE CORPORATION—TYPE OF ACTION SUGGESTED BY BUILDERS TO STIMULATE CONSTRUCTION

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, in view of the desperate housing situation which is reflected in high unemployment, high costs and high mortgage rates, will the Minister of State for Urban Affairs at least move to set up the federal mortgage exchange corporation, in respect of which legislation was passed in this House over a year and a half ago, and which the minister's predecessor claimed would do so much to improve liquidity in the mortgage market?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think this matter would fall within the responsibility of the Minister of Finance who will be back shortly.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, would the minister take it upon himself to make these representations to his colleague, and will he also report whether there has been any consensus reached in his meetings with developers and builders regarding the kind of action needed to put residential construction back on the rails?

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, I should also add that the Minister of Finance and I have had discussions on this matter. He is deeply concerned about getting the federal mortgage exchange corporation going as quickly as possible. Certainly, I have had discussions on this in the minister's absence as recently as this morning. With reference to meeting with developers and builders, of course we are trying to meet with them and other groups regularly in an attempt to obtain the necessary responses. I have also been meeting in this regard with my provincial counterparts. This is an on-going and aggressive program that I am sure will result in—

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, in answer to my question last week concerning an investigation by the Minister of Public Works of a call for tenders for office space in Vancouver for the district taxation office the minister said he would bring his notes next day. Having heard nothing further I should like to ask the minister what were the results of his investigation into this call for tenders?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, there, there was a call for tenders which produced unsatisfactory results in economic terms. As a result, the call for tenders was reissued, enlarging the area of availability of space and the results were equally unsatisfactory. No contracts were awarded as a consequence of either of these two calls. We are now looking at the demand for accommodation on a consolidated basis to see whether a rather larger project can be put on foot.

DATE WHEN INFORMATION ON TRANSPORTATION COSTS WILL BE SUPPLIED ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): My question is for the Minister of Transport, whom I welcome back from his meeting with the four Atlantic transportation ministers, particularly noting that he returned on the inaugural flight from Prince Edward Island to Ottawa. Can the minister indicate, having agreed with the provincial ministers that there is a need for a rail rate policy and agreement on a regional development policy and a desperate need for accurate information on transportation costs on the national carriers, when he would offer to supply that information to the Atlantic ministers?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as soon as I get it from the Canadian Transport Commission.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): The minister indicated that he was bringing in an act having to do with transportation information. Can he indicate how soon that might happen in order that such information could be on the table?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I think the House leader is the one who should answer this question because I am not the one who introduces the bill to the House.

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a brief question for the Minister of Supply and Services. Is that an accurate figure?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly have to check the figures; but considering that we have a very important contract with the Corps of Commissionaires, such figures could possibly reach $20 million.

Mr. MacKay: Can the minister also confirm that, with reference to Securex, one of these companies from the private sector, grave reservations and warnings were expressed to him in the past by the special security department of the Montreal police respecting the awarding of a contract to provide security services at the Montreal international airport, and that despite these warnings the contract was awarded, although since that time the company has been replaced?

ALLEGED USE OF REGIONAL PAY RATES TO KEEP PAY RATES LOW IN ATLANTIC REGION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. The Sydney airport firefighters, most of whom are in my riding, have notified me that the Treasury Board intends to force regional rates of pay as opposed to national rates of pay in the Atlantic region, based upon the assumption that the psychic income derived from physical, social and cultural environment there is superior to the rest of the nation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member put his question directly?

Mr. Hogan: Is this true or not? Since the first language of the minister is French, may I advise him that "psychic income" means the general cultural environment. Are these in general the criteria which the union is accusing the Treasury Board of using in order to keep the rates of pay low in the Atlantic region as against the rest of Canada?

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

SUGGESTION DEPARTMENTAL PROGRAMS NOT HELPING ATLANTIC REGION WHEN TREASURY BOARD PAYS REGIONAL RATES

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Economic Regional Expansion. How can the minister claim that DREE is really helping to close the income disparity gap in this country when the Treasury Board operates on such a discriminatory basis with regard to federal employees in the Atlantic region, not only firefighters but GLT workers, national park workers and everybody who works for the federal government?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. MacKay.]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I think the common response to that is that the question is argumentative. However, I am discussing the whole question of regional rates frequently with my colleague in the Treasury Board and I think he is responsible for the government's position.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

POSSIBILITY OF LEGISLATION TO PERMIT MEMBERS TO FORM ASSOCIATION OR UNION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): My question is for the Solicitor General. In view of reports of persistent efforts by certain members of the RCMP to form an association for the purpose of negotiating on matters of pay and other things, can the minister advise the House as to whether discussions have been going on with the association or any of its representatives? In order to avoid the necessity for a supplementary question may I ask the minister if he could advise the House as to whether or not it is contemplated that the government will bring forward legislation which will have the effect of removing the provision in the present law prohibiting the organization of trade unions in the RCMP, and what are his comments with respect to the right to strike?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, no petition or application has come before me at this time with respect to a union or association in the RCMP. I have investigated the reports that were in the newspapers and I understand that the association to which reference has been made has so far enlisted about 100 men, most of them in the Ottawa area. Therefore, the association cannot be considered representative of the RCMP at this time. I imagine that if at a certain period of time the association becomes widely representative of the force, I will be pleased to take this under further consideration.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. In light of the allegations made by Mr. Stoner recently that the government is not a good employer, can the minister tell us what steps he is taking to investigate this statement to see whether or not it has any basis in fact, and whether there is a serious morale problem within the public service of Canada?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the only comment I have from my deputy minister is that the title that appeared in the Journal was not in accordance with his thinking and with what he really stated publicly.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Would it be breaching confidence if I asked the minister to say what his deputy minister did say with respect to this particular matter?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, first of all there is no chance that we can fill our pork quotas because we do not have enough pork. Mr. Gaston Clermont (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. Three export permits have been issued for the export of military equipment to Turkey since July 20, 1974. SUPPLY AND SERVICES—PURCHASE OF RUCKSACKS

Question No. 1,941—Mr. Reynolds:

1. Were two purchases made totalling $546,680 for army rucksacks within two months of one another and, if so, will the Minister of Supply and Services provide the reason the quantity purchased was not made at the same time?

2. Is it the Department of Supply and Services' procedure to forecast market price increases and consider inflationary spirals when making such purchases?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. Yes. The second purchase resulted from a DND decision to authorize the issue of rucksacks to militia units of Mobile Command. The covering requisition was received after the first contract had been awarded.

2. DSS provides market trends on a commodity group basis to materiel managers of federal departments and agencies. When making the actual purchase, it is DSS policy to establish a contract price through competitive tendering. In this instance, each requirement was tendered separately and the resulting two contracts were awarded to the lowest bidder, which in both cases was Manitoba Tent and Awning.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—PURCHASE OF POSTAL CARTS

Question No. 1,942—Mr. Reynolds:

1. Was a contract awarded on January 29, 1975, to E.K. Neuser Machine Co. Ltd., of Downsview, Ontario, for the supply of 2,550 postal carts valued at $1,226,843?

3. What is the difference in design of this cart compared to a supermarket's grocery cart?

4. Were tenders called for on this contract?

5. What companies tendered?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. Yes.

2. $479.64 (Note: 2,550 × $479.64 = $1,223,082. The balance of $3,761.00 between this amount and the contract award amount of $1,226,843 covers the supply of Spare Parts and Maintenance Manuals).

3. These carts are 5 feet (1.52 m) in length and 3.5 feet (1.07 m) in width. Each is four-wheeled, flat bedded, open sided with closed ends, weighing 450 pounds (204.5 kg) when empty. Each is designed to carry up to 1800 lb. (818.2 kg) of mail, loose, in bags or monotainers. There is, therefore, no direct comparison with the supermarket grocery cart.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—CONTRACT FOR CEMENT

Question No. 1,967—Mr. Reynolds:

1. Was a contract awarded by the Department of Supply and Services on May 9, 1974 to Saint Lawrence Cement Co., Montreal, Quebec for 110,000 tons of cement at a cost of $35.62 per ton?

2. Were tenders requested?

3. What were the names of companies who tendered?

4. What was the price of cement as offered at that time by Canada Cement Lafarge Ltd. of Montreal?

5. (a) For what reason was Canada Cement Lafarge Ltd. not given the contract earlier in the month for the same destined place for which goods were contracted May 31, 1974 and delivered (b) what saving would have accrued from such purchase?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. Yes, however, date of contract award was April 23, 1974; the news release was dated May 9, 1974.

2. Eleven firms were invited to tender.

3. Canada Cement Lafarge Ltd, St. Lawrence Cement Co.

4. Canada Cement Lafarge was unable to quote on the supply of cement for delivery in 1974 because of previous commitments. Their tender for supply in 1975 was to be the list price in effect at time of delivery.

5. (a) Firstly, Canada Cement Lafarge was not prepared to quote on the 1974 requirement and secondly, the firm did not provide a firm price for the delivery of cement during 1975. Consequently, the company's tender for the supply of cement for the construction of cargo aprons was considered non-responsive. (b) Not applicable.

4. Did the Department of Supply and Services provide incentives to Bristol Aerospace Ltd. for the construction of their paint shop?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. Yes.

2. Tenders were not invited since the repainting was carried out at the same time and in conjunction with a major repair and overhaul modification program. Significant cost savings were achieved by not duplicating the dismantling, reassembling and testing, as well as ferrying costs, necessary to a separate contract. The out of service time for the aircraft is also considerably reduced.

3. Not applicable, see 2 above.

4. No incentives were given to the contractor for the construction of the paint shop.

Order Paper Questions

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—SECURITY DEPOSITS

Question No. 1,996—Mr. Reynolds:

1. Is it the practice of the Department of Supply and Services to hold the three lowest tenders, together with a ten per cent security deposit, until a contract is awarded?

2. How long do the three low tenders, including the two unsuccessful ones, have to wait before refunds are made?

3. To the Department's knowledge, has this practice ever resulted in the reluctance or refusal by potential suppliers to tender?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. Security deposits are rarely required. During the past fiscal year (ending March 31, 1975) seven tender calls required security deposits. Normally all security deposits are held until a contract is awarded.

2. When called for in the tender security deposits are held until a contract award.

3. Yes. On rare occasions firms have refused to tender.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—CONTRACT FOR PURCHASE OF CLOTH

Question No. 2,003—Mr. Reynolds:

1. Was a contract awarded to Leach Textile Ltd., Huntington, Quebec for 18,000 yards of cloth at $11 per yard on March 12, 1974?

2. Were tenders requested for the provision of this cloth?

3. What companies tendered and what were their respective prices?

4. Is it a purchasing prerogative to maximize on dollar savings through the purchase of large quantities of goods and, if so, what is such prerogative?

5. How much does a RCMP constable's blue serge trousers cost?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. A contract was awarded March 1, 1974 to Leach Textiles Ltd. for 18,000 yards of 16 oz. wool whipcord, 56 inches wide, at a cost of $10.72 per yard, f.o.b. destination. The news release was dated March 12, 1974.

2. Yes.

3. Two companies tendered: Leach Textiles Ltd.—$10.72 yd delivered; Textile Sales Ltd.—$10.86 yd delivered.

4. It is a departmental objective to work towards minimum PROC (Product, Resource, Operating and Contingency) costs. Where opportunities exist for savings on the purchase of large quantities of goods, this is considered with the other factors to optimize cost vs benefit relationship.

5. The last purchase of RCMP blue serge trousers was for 12,312 pairs at $15.12 each, inclusive of material, sales tax exempt, delivered to destination. The contract was awarded by competitive tender. The last purchase of blue whipcord trousers was for 2,400 pairs at $32.50 including cost of fabric. This trouser contract was also awarded by competitive tender.

PUBLIC SERVANTS IN RECEIPT OF $25,000 OR MORE PER ANNUM

Question No. 2,085—Mr. Orlikow:

With reference to the answer to Question No. 1,345, of the 3,307 public servants earning $25,000 or more per annum, were those in the Research-Scientist field included and, if not, how many are in such classification?

3. What is the total cost of salaries paid to the teachers?

Mr. Herb Breau (Paliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): In so far as the Canadian International Development Agency is concerned, the reply is as follows: 1. There are 13 teachers of the French language in Africa under CIDA auspices.

2. One.

3. $196,605 per annum.

PETROLEUM AND NATURAL GAS

Question No. 2,193—Mr. Neil:

Since the passage of the amendments to the Indian Oil and Gas Act (a) how many new petroleum and natural gas leases were entered into (b) how many new oil and gas wells were drilled or are in the process of being drilled?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): (a) None. (b) Three.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I draw the attention of the parliamentary secretary once again to the fact that question No. 636, which was originally put on the order paper by myself in the last parliament, has still not been answered. This question deals with the Olympics and the executives who are handling the Olympic coins program, particularly their experience in the financial field. I think it is very relevant because the Olympic coins program seems to have gone off the track. I urge the parliamentary secretary, once again, to answer this question.

Mr. Paproski: Now that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) is back from his excursion during which he visited all the various CIDA projects, I wonder if perhaps each week he can answer one or two of the questions standing in my name on the order paper.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, I have never done this before, but I put some written questions on the order paper last October 23 relating to very simple questions regarding the Olympic Games, the number of coins which have been sold to date, and so forth. They are questions Nos. 549 and 551. I would appreciate the government's getting off its seat and answering them.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Today a question was directed to the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Sharp) in the absence of the Minister of State (Fisheries) (Mr. LeBlanc). My point of order is based on the Government Organization Act which defines the Minister of the Environment as the Minister of the Environment and Fisheries. As such, I submit that questions directed in the House to the Minister of Fisheries in the absence of the Minister of State (Fisheries) should properly be directed to the Minister of the Environment who, according to the law, is still the Minister of Fisheries.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would ask the government to expedite the answering of starred questions which are placed on the order paper, so that pressure can be removed from the present situation which forces hon. members to ask, in the oral question period, questions which might satisfactorily be answered as starred questions if there was any assurance that such questions would be promptly answered.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a related point of order, having called the attention of the parliamentary secretary to questions Nos. 2,184, 2,185 and 2,186 standing in my name on the order paper for over a month. These questions were answered in detail in the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence about a week ago, and I wonder when I might expect a response on the order paper.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT, THE SALARIES ACT AND THE PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARIES ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING SALARIES AND ALLOWANCES

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-44, to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act, the Salaries Act and the Parliamentary Secretaries Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates and as reprinted in accordance with Mr. Speaker's decision of Wednesday, April 23, 1975.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has had an opportunity to consider the amendments filed to see if there is some order in which they might be grouped for today's discussions. Perhaps for a moment we could direct our attention to that question and to the question of the deferring of divisions if they occur. I have asked the House leaders to give some consideration to this problem.

It is the suggestion of the Chair that motion No. 1 be debated individually and that any division thereon be deferred. In like manner, motions Nos. 2, 3 and 4 might be grouped for debate but each disposed of by a separate vote and deferred division, if necessary. Third, motions Nos. 5 and 6 could be grouped for debate but, again, a separate vote called on each motion and division deferred, if required. Finally, motions Nos. 7 and 8 could also be grouped for debate but, again, a separate vote and division, if necessary. During the course of discussion of the several amendments, if it appears that a number of divisions have developed, rather than deferring all of them and having too many at one time the House may want later to direct its attention to the possibility of disposing of perhaps four divisions, if they have accumulated, and there are approximately that number remaining. But for the moment perhaps this might be an acceptable way to begin the proceedings.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I say, on behalf of my party, that the groupings you have made seem eminently fair and sensible. We are happy to accept the direction you have suggested. I wish simply to indicate that it is my intention, under the provisions of Standing Order 75(8), to move an amendment to motion No. 4 which is on the order paper in the name of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp). I mention my proposed amendment now because this may have some bearing on when votes are taken. Since my amendment is one which will be made on the floor, it might be desirable to take a vote on it when the debate thereon is ended, so that the vote on motion No. 4, either as is or as amended, could be amongst the votes which are deferred.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw your attention to motion No. 2 standing in the name of the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman). Your Honour will probably have noted that it contains two separate and distinct propositions. I think it would be helpful to the House if Your Honour could split that motion into two, so that the question of retroactivity could be debated with and voted on with motion No. 7. The second part could be debated with motion No. 4, with separate votes taken on each motion, that is, that part of motion No. 2 which would be debated in the course of motion No. 4 standing on its own.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise simply to say a word or two on the point of order raised by the Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council (Mr. Reid). It seems to me that the contention that there are two separate propositions in the proposed motion does not make it automatic that it should be voted on separately.

If one looks at the motion in the name of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) he will see that it has in it several distinct and separate propositions. If we are going to apply the rule just suggested to one motion, it would have to be applied to others as well. It so happens that there are portions of the motion in the name of the President of the Privy Council which I find more offensive than others and I shall be moving an amendment for a separate vote on the portions of the motion which I dislike the most. It seems to me that if anyone is really anxious to have separate votes, that is the way it can be achieved, rather than asking Your Honour to split a motion into separate votes. This has been done on occasion, but it is very rare and it is an extremely complicated procedural proposition.

● (1510)

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, while the parliamentary secretary has a point, we in this party are willing to overlook the lapse of the rules by the NDP party and take just one vote on the matter.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is true that more than one amendment suffers from the disability that the hon. parliamentary secretary has described. If the Chair were disposed to split the amendment of the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman), it would certainly have to be very sympathetic to the same kind of argument on the amendment standing in the name of the hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp). For the moment, it would not be the intention of the Chair to do that. If discussion on that particular amendment develops in a way that might reopen that point of procedure when we are on a particular motion, the matter can be considered further. On the basis of the discussion to this point, however, I think we ought to go ahead with discussion on the amendments.

Again I say that if the Deputy Speaker or one of the Assistant Deputy Speakers is in the chair for discussion upon motion No. 2 and it appears that further consideration might be given to that point of order, there is no reason why it cannot be raised and discussed at that time.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. For obvious reasons, I think it best that I be replaced promptly before discussion on this motion begins.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka) moved:

Motion No. 1.

That Bill C-44, an act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act, the Salaries Act and the Parliamentary Secretaries Act, be amended in clause 1 by deleting lines 12 to 14 inclusive at page 1 and by substituting the following therefor:

"(b) to the Speaker of the House of Commons, the sum of twenty thousand dollars per annum; and".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Darling: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to see such unanimity. I brought forward this motion in the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, where it was defeated. With all due deference to the 29 cabinet ministers, I feel that the Speaker of the House of Commons, who is the fifth ranking person in Canada after the Governor General, the Chief Justice, the Prime Minister and the Speaker of the Senate, should be paid at the same rate as cabinet ministers. I am delighted to know there will be unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, although I am a fairly well known opponent of this bill as a whole, I rise to support the amendment that has just been presented.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I shall be voting against the bill as a whole if and when we reach that stage, but in the meantime when we are discussing individual salaries I agree with the mover of the motion that the Speaker of this House ought to receive a salary equal to that paid to members of cabinet.

I also congratulate the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) on being in the unusual position of being able to move a motion that seems to involve an increase in expenditure and yet being in order. That comes about because when Bill C-44 was first brought down last December, it included a provision for the salary of the Speaker of the House of Commons to be $20,000 per year and therefore the Governor General's recommendation supported that proposition. The salary was reduced to $16,000 in the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, but because the original Governor General's recommendation still stands the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka is in order.

I believe he is expressing the view of the House that if any increases are going to take place, the Speaker ought to receive the same salary as members of cabinet.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support this amendment. When the recommendations were made for the salaries of ministers, the Speaker and other functionaries, it was decided that the government should not depart from the general principle proposed in the Beaupré commission report. I certainly believe, as do the other members who have spoken, that the Speaker should receive the same salary as members of the cabinet even though the Beaupré commission found otherwise.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I simply rise to say I concur.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Motion No. 1 (Mr. Darling) agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House will now proceed to the consideration of motions Nos. 2, 3 and 4.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge) moved:

Motion No. 2.

That Bill C-44 an act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act, the Salaries Act and the Parliamentary Secretaries Act, be amended (a) in subclause (1) of clause 2 by deleting from lines 5 and 6 at page 2 the words "July 8, 1974 and ending December 31, 1975" and by substituting therefor the words "July 1, 1975" (b) by deleting subclause (2) of clause 2, being lines 11 to 49 at page 2 and lines 1 to 20 at page 3 of the bill.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka) moved:

Motion No. 3.

That Bill C-44, an act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act, the Salaries Act and the Parliamentary Secretaries Act, be amended by deleting lines 4 to 10 inclusive in subclause 2(1) at page 2 and by substituting the following therefor:

"34. (1) For the portion of the said Parliament commencing January 1st, 1975 and ending December 31, 1975, there shall be paid to every member of the Senate and the House of Commons a sessional allowance at the rate of twenty-two thousand, five hundred dollars per annum."

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council) moved:

Motion No. 4.

That Bill C-44, an act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act, the Salaries Act and the Parliamentary Secretaries Act, be amended by striking out lines 11 to 49 at page 2 and lines 1 to 20 at page 3 and substituting the following:

"(2) Section 34 of the said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following subsections:

"(3) For the twelve month period commencing January 1, 1976 and for each twelve month period thereafter, there shall be paid to every member of the Senate and House of Commons, for the sessions of Parliament in each such period, a sessional allowance at the rate per annum that is obtained by multiplying the sessional allowance payable to each such member for the twelve month period immediately preceding the twelve month period in respect of which the sessional allowance is to be determined by the lesser of

(a) the percentage that the Industrial Composite for the first adjustment year is of the Industrial Composite for the second adjustment year; and

(b) one hundred and seven per cent.

(4) For the purposes of subsection (3)

(a) in relation to any twelve month period in respect of which the sessional allowance is to be determined,

(i) the "first adjustment year" is the last twelve month period preceding the commencement of the period in respect of which the sessional allowance is to be determined for which the Industrial Composite is available on the first day of the period in respect of which the sessional allowance is to be determined, and

(ii) the "second adjustment year" is the twelve month period immediately preceding the first adjustment year; and

(b) the "Industrial Composite" for an adjustment year is the average weekly wages and salaries of the Industrial Composite in Canada for that year as published by Statistics Canada under the authority of the Statistics Act.

(5) The salaries and allowances payable to members of the Senate and House of Commons pursuant to sections 33, 41 and 42 and subsection 43(3) of this Act, sections 4 and 5 of the Salaries Act and subsection 4(1) of the Parliamentary Secretaries Act shall, for the twelve month period commencing January 1, 1976 and for each twelve month period thereafter, be adjusted in the manner provided by subsection (3) as if they were sessional allowances.

(6) a sessional allowance or other allowance determined for a twelve month period pursuant to subsection (3) or (5) that is not a multiple of one hundred dollars shall be rounded to the closest multiple of one hundred dollars that is lower than the sessional allowance or other allowance so determined.

(7) Within two months after the day fixed for return of the writs at each general election the Governor in Council shall appoint commissioners to inquire into the adequacy of the annual variations of sessional allowances payable to members of the Senate and House of Commons and other allowances payable to them and to report thereon to the Governor in Council, with such recommendations as they consider appropriate, within six months after the time of their appointment.

(8) Every report to the Governor in Council made pursuant to subsection (7) shall be laid before Parliament on any of the first fifteen days after the report is made that Parliament is sitting."

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, in view of the rare mood of co-operation that the House seems to be in this afternoon, giving unanimous consent to the amendment of the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling), I hope hon. members will look with the same favour upon the amendment being moved in my name on behalf of the New Democratic Party. I might take this opportunity to point out to the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), since he is such a stickler for accuracy, that I would appreciate it if in future he would refer to the New Democratic Party in that way, or by saying "NPD", but not "NDP party". That is not correct, and I am sure the hon. member would be the first to correct this error.

Mr. Baldwin: Send me a memo.

Mr. Saltsman: I will send you Hansard tomorrow. This amendment seeks to do three important things: it seeks to remove the retroactivity provision in clause 34, to remove the indexing provision and to remove that part of the bill dealing with increases in expense allowances.

● (1520)

There are a number of reasons for this proposal. We take the position that the increase in members' salaries is probably acceptable and necessary, and we do not quarrel with the new salary of $24,000: we think it is adequate and will allow members' salaries to catch up. The new salary is $6,000 greater that the old salary of $18,000. That part of the bill we want to leave alone: we think it is satisfactory even though the increase is far greater than the sort of increase other members of society have enjoyed during the last number of years.

We part company with those parts of the bill calling for an escalation formula. We do this because the government has indicated that it is working on a general formula of restraint which it will ask the people of Canada to accept. We have heard it hinted that the government will ask the people of Canada to accept something less than it is asking members of parliament to accept. A serious situation is developing connected with how we are to ask Canadians to accept restraint in future. It almost seems as if the government has been saying to the more powerful elements in society, "We will overlook what you are grabbing. Go ahead. Once you have taken what you want, we will bring in restraint for those who are not so powerful."

It seems almost as if the government intends to wait until the powerful groups have finished their negotiations; then it will move in on the weaker sectors of the economy who do not have the same bargaining power and cannot disrupt the economy as effectively as the powerful groups. It will impose restraints on the weaker groups if they do not go along with the government. In the meantime, the strong and powerful will have taken what they can. Included among the strong who to some extent can dictate their income increases are members of parliament and, of course, members of the other place. This is wrong. If we seriously want the Canadian people to accept a policy of restraint, we should apply that policy to ourselves. Surely, this is the place to start. If we do not do this, any government policy of restraint will be suspect. As it is, much damage has been done to the government's credibility.

I think there is still time to do something; that is why I urge members of the House to consider the importance of this question and to support this amendment. It will be argued that we are not taking as much, in percentage terms, as other sectors of the economy have taken. Let me point out that increasing by 14 per cent the salary of a man earning $9,000, $10,000 or $11,000 is not the same as increasing by $6,000 the salary of a member already earning $18,000. The increase in the present instance is to apply right across the board. While it may be difficult to justify such a salary increase, it is even more difficult to justify an increased expense allowance and the inclusion of an escalator clause.

Let me deal with the salary question by itself. As I said, we accept the proposed salary of $24,000 although that is going further than the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) would be willing to go. I think his position is that there ought to be no increase at all. We have agreed that we are prepared at least to accept an increase in salary. We do not want to stand pat and say "nyet" to everything. We think the increase is necessary although we know that one could argue against it. But, Mr. Speaker, I point out that the cost of living does not go up equally for all. For those at the $18,000 level, the increased cost of living is less onerous than it is for those at the $10,000, $9,000 or $6,000 level. It does not cost us that much more to eat than it costs a family trying to live on $8,000 or $9,000.

An hon. Member: Especially in the parliamentary restaurant.

Mr. Saltsman: Especially in the parliamentary restaurant, as my colleague says. I brought a young relative of mine to parliament. I thought he would be terribly impressed by the buildings, the procedure, the debate and the distinguished people in the House of Commons. I made the mistake of taking him to the parliamentary restaurant. The only thing that young man remembers is that he had never seen food that was so cheap and so good. That was his total impression of parliament. We will try to correct this impression over the years. I merely give this example to show that our costs are not as high as some make out.

I know there are many disadvantages to being a member of parliament: one incurs expenses which others do not incur, and so on. But we tend to gloss over the benefits we receive and not to set off our benefits against costs. A significant portion of the income of those receiving $18,000 a year, or $24,000, does not go to consumption. Almost all the income of those earning $7,000, $8,000, $9,000 pr $10,000 goes to consumption because a family in Canada of any size cannot live on much less. But when you earn $18,000 a year, although much of your income goes to consumption—to consumption at somewhat higher levels than average—part of your income goes to savings. I know members of parliament will tell you—I have no reason to doubt them—that they have no savings, that they are in hock to their bank manager and that they find it hard to get along. I am sure there is truth in what they say. But they tend to overlook the fact that a substantial part of their $18,000 salary goes toward retirement savings plan, which is certainly an excellent form of saving. The pension plan of members of parliament is better than any other pension plan I have seen.

Mr. Peters: It is not better than the judges' plan.

Mr. Saltsman: My hon. friend says that it is not as good as the judges' plan. Perhaps that is the only exception. Certainly, the members' plan is superior to the public service plan and superior to any plan in industry. It is much better than any general pension scheme I have seen. If we increase salaries to $24,000 we shall increase our ability to consume and to compensate for the effects of inflation. We shall also increase our level of savings because much of the increase will go to savings. Statistics show that those in the higher income brackets—we, obviously, are in the top 10 per cent of income earners, even at our present salary levels—apply less of their incomes to consumption and more to savings. When you are living at the margin on an income of $7,000 or $8,000 you do not save.

When you want to index an income, you must first choose the index which is to apply. You may choose the industrial composite index. That index, the ICI, may at some future time be lower than the CPI, although I doubt it. Traditionally, it has been higher than the CPI. We use the CPI as the general index when we want to adjust family allowances or old age pensions. It is evidently a cause of great dissatisfaction in this country that we tie old age pensioners to the lower index, yet when we apply indexing to ourselves we use the industrial index which provides some benefits. The government has tried to get around this by saying we are not going to take the entire amount, only 7 per cent or some other figure, depending on what amendments may be introduced. It is, nevertheless, wrong to have two standards, one for society in general and another for members of parliament and a few others. It seems we are going out of our way to aggravate society and discredit parliament by our behaviour.

In our view, the indexing should not be retroactive: there is no justification for that. When retroactivity is negotiated in a labour contract, it is based on the fact that there is a large overlap. If there is an argument for retroactivity, surely the period of retroactivity should go no further than the point at which we started discussing this bill, which certainly is not back to July 8, 1974. Therefore, it is our view that the retroactivity section should be struck out. It should be sufficient to increase our salaries from $18,000 to $24,000.

Our final objection is with regard to the expense allowance. That, more than anything else, is offensive to the public. There are only a few elements in society which have this and they seem to have taken their cue from federal behaviour. Everyone has to account for expenses. I receive letters from businessmen and trade unionists who are reasonably sympathetic with the idea of a salary increase. Other people have had their salaries increased and they feel that members of parliament are entitled to some increase. However, no one agrees there should be an unaccountable expense allowance. There should not be any increase without some accounting being made. Up to this point, no one has provided evidence to persuade me that there is any justification for increasing our expense allowance.

A number of things have happened in the past few years that have in fact reduced my expenses. For many years I sent out newsletters to my constituents. I carried the cost of printing and the cost of postage out of my expense allowance. For many years the cost of maintaining constituency telephones in the constituency offices came out of my expense allowance. Admittedly, my expenses were somewhat more than my expense allowance, but not much.

We now have certain additional benefits. Four times a year we are permitted to send out newsletters at public expense. That is a tremendous benefit and something we should take into account when talking about expense allowances. We are now allowed a very substantial amount for a constituency office and constituency officer. That also has to be taken into account. This is why I see no justification for increasing the expense allowance and certainly not for indexing it. If there is going to be any increase, it should be based on members of parliament accounting for the use of that money.

I want to say a few words about accounting for expense money. During the committee hearings, three members took exception to the position which I have outlined in the last few minutes, namely, that there is no need to increase the expense allowance and, if it is increased, it should be accountable by evidence that the money was spent in certain ways. A number of arguments arose in the committee. The first member who took issue with me was the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). I said that he is one who in fact has a grievance.

We have met that grievance by making special allowance for people who live in remote territories. Even though that special allowance is greater than that received by most members, it still may not be enough. If it is not enough for members who represent these large constituencies that are peculiar to Canada, they could submit their expenses. Even if they are twice as great as the amount allowed under this or the previous bill, I am sure most people would agree they are acceptable expenses.

I did not hear any member from Ottawa say that he has expenses far in excess of those permitted under the old legislation or this legislation. In fact, they do not. Members who live in Ottawa receive a windfall benefit from something that is really organized on a kind of mutual ground. Certainly they do not have the double-housing problem or the transportation problem of most members of parliament. They may not even have the same constituency office and constituency telephone problems of most members. We should try to be fair.

Members who live in or close to Ottawa should receive less than the amount now in the legislation. Those who live in the northern parts of Canada should perhaps receive substantially more than is provided for in the legislation. As long as some evidence is provided to show how the money is used, I am sure that would be acceptable to the public. The public understands that you cannot have the same population measure for representation in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. They know that because of the nature of this country it is more expensive to maintain democracy in the northern areas of Canada: they accept that and are happy to do so.

One member in committee was quite outraged by what I had to say. He said that he attends many weddings and has to give many gifts. He pointed out that the cost of those gifts sometimes exceeds $2,000 a year. Was the hon. member trying to suggest that somehow the public has a responsibility to ensure that he has enough money to make gifts so that he can be a great fellow and be re-elected? We do a lot of that anyway. The public pays for a great many things to help members of parliament become re-elected.

While newsletters, ostensibly, are reports of members of parliament, surely they have some political connotation attached to them. Certainly, newsletters are a way of reinforcing the work of a member of parliament. This is also true of constituency offices: they certainly enhance the ability of a member of parliament to get himself re-elected. Do we also have to start paying for wedding gifts out of the public treasury? I always thought that generosity was something one did not indulge in under certain circumstances, and it is true that if you have less money, if the expense allowance does not go up, you may not be able to give so much to the United Appeal, to the Red Feather, to Cansave or to other kinds of organizations. But then we would not be in a position any different from that of any other citizen in this country who gives according to his ability to give.

It should not be a source of shame to a member of parliament to say, "We are not the highest paid income earners in this country. We can't count these contributions as deductions as if we were corporations; therefore I am going to give in harmony with my earnings." Everybody will understand that there is not some kind of bottomless pit. But what people will understand is an MP saying, "I need to be generous. Give me the money so I can be generous with it." Therefore, this whole business of saying we have terrible expenses, we buy raffle tickets and give to all kinds of organizations and therefore these expenses should be included in the expense allowance, strikes me as not being a legitimate argument at all. These things should come out of one's income and should not, in my opinion, come out of a separate public fund.

When the President of the Privy Council appeared before the committee and urged certain amendments, I put to him this question of the justification of expense allowances. I thought I was being fair when I told him that I had come to the conclusion that an increase in expense allowances was not justified. I also told him that other members of this House had reached the same conclusion. I asked him to demonstrate to me that we were not correct in our assumption.

I told the President of the Privy Council that I would be prepared to change my mind if he provided some substantial evidence to the committee justifying such an increase. His answer was that he had not conducted any research into this aspect and that he was not in a position to give the kind of answer I sought. I asked him why he had come to the conclusion that the increase was justified. He replied that other members had told him the increase was justified and that they required it. Surely, Mr. Speaker, on something like this which has aroused so much public anger, this provision more than any other is what sticks in the craw of the public—that we can not only vote ourselves an unaccountable expense allowance but that we should now be asking for an increase in that allowance.

It does not stop there, Mr. Speaker. Because we do it, municipal councils now do it, provincial governments now do it and heaven knows who else now does it. I think it is incumbent upon us at the very least to draw the line here.

If we are not prepared to go in the direction I think we should go, that is, to eliminate this business of unaccountable expense allowances completely and say there are certain things in respect of which members should submit accounts—we should at least not increase the allowance unless there is some evidence placed before us and before the public to show that an increase is justifiable.

If the amendments we are proposing, or something similar to them, are not acceptable to the government, perhaps the government would propose something of the same substance in their own wording. If so, we would be prepared to support it. In the absence of such amendments, enormous damage is likely to be done to any restraint program that parliament tries to institute. We have already done a certain amount of damage, although I do not believe it is irreparable. If nothing is done, though, I think we will increase that damage and the credibility of members of parliament will come seriously into question. That is terribly important, Mr. Speaker. A democracy depends upon people having a high degree of confidence in the men and women they elect to serve them in the parliament of their country. If that credibility is diminished, if that confidence is reduced, then democracy itself is diminished and reduced.

While the money is always nice—and I am no different from anyone else; I never have enough money to do the things I want to do, and in some cases people have persuaded themselves that they desperately need this kind of money—we have to balance this against our special role as members of parliament. We are different from other people. We are not better—I am not suggesting that for a moment—but we are different. There are 264 of us, out of a population of 22 million in this country, and there is a special responsibility laid upon us. This special responsibility is not only laid upon us; it is one we have accepted as members of parliament.

Had we wished to make money, there are much better ways of making it than by being a member of parliament. Had we wanted fame or success, there are probably much better ways of achieving them than by being a member of parliament. Had we been seeking security, there are better ways to find it than by becoming a member of parliament. But we have chosen this special responsibility, and I therefore appeal to members to consider this aspect and to weigh it against the benefit of receiving a higher income, which is what anyone would like. That is really the question which has to be decided when determining our attitude toward these amendments.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not need half an hour in which to speak on this occasion, because everything has been said, everything has been written. We have all received, I don't know how many letters or how many newspaper clippings telling us what should be done, and so on. Standing on my feet now, I am well aware that members from both sides of the House would prefer me to sit down. Nevertheless, I should like to say a few words.

When this bill was first brought in, setting the increase at 50 per cent, I was shocked. I said so then and I say so today in no uncertain terms. I said then that we must set an example. When the amount was reduced to 33⅓ per cent, I stated that if this amount could be justified I would support the proposition. As the previous speaker has told us, we are in a unique position. As members of the highest court in the land, we are here to set an example.

I believe I was quoted as long ago as December 19 as saying that if 50 per cent was asked for, we would be further ahead if we took 25 per cent, apart from the fact that it would look better in the eyes of the public. This is the reason I put down my amendment. I do not need to go on giving the reasons for it. It amounts to $4,500 in hard cash. I am not good at the intricacies of fractions, and so on; but I think the House should give consideration to this amendment on the basis of setting an example to segments of labour in other parts of the country which are asking for outrageous salary increases. If we accept something which is pretty high, then, of course, all they will do is point the finger of scorn at us. I hope the House will consider my amendment favourably, and I trust we shall be able to get along on what is proposed.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp), whose motion we are discussing, should not be here.

An hon. Member: Oh, come on! Be reasonable. He has just stepped out for two minutes.

Mr. Peters: I am simply curious.

An hon. Member: You were not here last week at all.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Why doesn't the minister speak to his own motion?

An hon. Member: That is very mean.

● (1550)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Why doesn't he speak to it?

Mr. Peters: I am curious as to why he is not here.

Mr. Lefebvre: He is here more often than you are.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Then why doesn't he speak to his own motion?

Mr. Peters: I hope the Hansard reporters are able to get some of these comments from members who cannot make speeches from their feet but do so from their seats. At least it will be noted in Hansard that they have done something, which is more than they are likely to do in other instances.

I am concerned with the way parliament handles our salaries. I was interested to hear the comments of the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman), some of which I agree with. I think members of parliament, and perhaps members of the public as well, should give consideration to a remark that was made this afternoon by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) which I think is apropos this debate. When someone mentioned his deputy minister and asked whether the minister intended to do something about him, the minister said—I am paraphrasing him—that he was doing the job he was supposed to do and was getting well paid for it, that he was getting considerably more money than the minister and he was glad his deputy was able to do so.

It has always surprised me that in our structure a cabinet minister gets less money than a deputy minister. In some cases a cabinet minister gets less than half what a deputy minister gets, which seems to me a rather odd situation for a government that is supposed to be democratic. Although parliament makes the decisions, we are willing to pay the mandarins in the civil service considerably more than we pay the boss, I know of no other field where this happens.

I am also surprised that some members of parliament believe they can increase their prestige by being highly paid. It is certainly true in society in Canada today that the man who is paid the most is obviously the boss of the enterprise. Cabinet ministers receive something like $60,000, members of parliament receive considerably less, yet we are supposed to be on an equal footing with cabinet ministers. I am not sure how the rate structure in the civil service has been developed but I have always been very concerned that the same system prevails in this House.

I think this is the fourth time we have increased our salaries since I have been here. The last time I said I would not support an increase in salaries and allowances unless a continuing formula was worked out that was related to the increase in the cost of living, or increase in expenses or some such criterion. Since that time we have been able to increase the amounts paid to those for whom parliament is responsible, such as the old age pensioners and war veterans, including federal payments to the provinces for the care of those whom the state looks after. We have done this fairly effectively on the basis of a cost of living escalator clause. Yet when we come to examine our own indemnities we have a different kind of escalator.

I do not care so much about the money involved. I do not think it really matters if we increase our salary to that of a deputy minister; I am not sure that it would make very much difference to the economy of this country. Paying 265 members of parliament a salary that puts them in the top 20 category in the civil service is not going to bankrupt this country. However, there does seem to be a need for legislators who want to increase their salaries to do so, in light of what other people are receiving. If we are going to move to the industrial composite index, then we should immediately tell all the old age pensioners, war veterans allowance recipients, all pensioners and those on fixed incomes, that instead of tying their pensions to the cost of living index we are going to tie them to the industrial composite.

I am sure most members of parliament would agree that it would be difficult to establish a classification for MPs. Each member's role is different from that of his neighbour. It differs from area to area. I am not prepared to argue whether the Ottawa members need more money than Toronto members because I think both play different roles. Therefore, I find use of the industrial composite wage index somewhat unusual. Whether we use the cost of living index or some other index, if we put a limit on any increase of, say, 7 per cent when the increase in the cost of living this year has been 12 per cent, it seems to me we are being schizophrenic.

Hon. members who were here when this question was discussed in 1970 or 1971 will recall there was considerable discussion between myself and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), who at that time was president of the privy council, over whether or not we should use an escalator. Obviously, we had to face the problem again and now we are facing it. I do not think we as members of parliament are competent enough or able in any way to decide what our own requirements are when we look at members of parliament as a class, since each member performs his own distinct role. For example, an Ottawa member will have an office that is easily accessible to people in his area. I may have to drive 200 or 300 miles over the weekend in order to see eight or ten people, whereas an Ottawa member can perhaps see 200 people and not need to drive anywhere. This is why I say it is very hard to arrive at some sort of classification for all of us.

I would much rather see some sort of permanent index written into the bill, and I see nothing wrong with using a cost of living index that has been built up over a long period of time, one which is used for other programs in order to maintain the standard of living of other people. This would mean going back to the suggestion I made in 1970-71 in respect of a cost of living bonus. I would be willing to have it at that level, as that is exactly what I wanted then. There is nothing inconsistent about that. I agree that this will be a considerable amount of money because the cost of living has been rising rapidly throughout this period. This would mean we could do for ourselves now what we are willing to do for everyone else.

I think this government will find itself in extreme difficulty if it is not willing to change the indexing formula as it applies to others, thereby applying one formula to them and a different one to ourselves. Almost every labour agreement negotiated this year has included a cost of living escalator clause, or an amount of money equivalent to that cost of living increase, plus an additional amount to keep those workers on par with others in our society. In many of these contracts the cost of living factor has been more important than the increase in wages. Many of these contracts have called for a 10 per cent increase each year for the duration of a three-year contract, amounting in total to 30 per cent. They have called for a 5 per cent increase in respect of the standard of living, also per year for the term of the contract, so without taking any other benefits into consideration this amounts to a 45 per cent increase. This in fact is an inflationary factor in our economy.

We will find it very difficult if we set our own standards above the formula we are asking the country generally to accept. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) is asking labour, business and all segments of our society to hold wage demands to 7 per cent per year, or less. It will be difficult for the Minister of Finance to justify that kind of restraint when we are not willing to apply it to ourselves. Any formula that allows for renegotiation of a basic salary increase will not solve the problem I should like to see solved.

There has been some discussion about the allowance we receive. For most people, this allowance is mixed in with their wage structure. I, personally, have one current account into which I put all my money and from which I make all my payments, and I do not worry about whether the money comes from the wages or allowance side. When that money is gone, I have to look for more.

An hon. Member: You draw on another bank.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: The one in Switzerland.

Mr. Peters: It is not quite that drastic, but I always have found that when you do not have the money, you cut down on something and very often it is the commitments you make on the basis of the allowance. I agree with the remarks of the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge in this regard only up to a point. I differ from the hon. member in that I prefer that the allowance be non-accountable. I was in a business for some time, operating on a salary plus an expense account and the expense account was considerably higher than the salary. I found that I could write off almost anything on the basis of expenses, but this involved a great deal of accounting. For this purpose one needs an accountant and a financial structure. One also needs to be as crooked as hell about a lot of things. Many of these things are legitimate expenses. For example, I operate a mobile office in my constituency because of its size. I know it would be possible to sell that unit to someone else who is not a member of my family, and rent it back, charging the cost against expenses. Whoever I rent the unit from has to carry insurance, pay for the licence and set up a bona fide accounting system.

Many of these expenses are legitimate but they must be accounted for by the individual for the purpose of his income tax. I know from experience that this never works out, so I have decided to operate the unit myself. From my point of view it is better to buy the unit, operate it yourself, carry your own insurance and licence and forget about the assistance provided by the government. I know that I could probably operate in a different way at a considerable saving, but this would involve a lot of monkey business and a lot of expenses that are honest in a business sense but morally irresponsible. For that reason I do not want this expense allowance on the basis of having to account for it. It is not that my expenses are anything but legitimate, but this involves hiring an accountant in order to write off all the legitimate expenses for the purpose of my income tax return.

I am the representative of the people who elect me and I am happy to make the expenditures necessary to represent them. When I have no more money, I spend no more in respect of that representation. I have in mind the cost of flowers for funerals as well as the cost of wedding gifts and other such expenditures. I would not enter the cost of the wreath for someone I knew as an expense or a deduction on my income tax. When I start providing wreaths for people who are not my friends and using the cost as a legitimate expense, I will quit buying them. Quite frankly, I do not want to see this allowance put on the basis of an expense account because I consider most expense accounts to be factually correct and acceptable to the Income Tax Department, but morally dishonest. They are legitimate as far as the Income Tax Department is concerned, but in my opinion they are often morally wrong.

There are other expenditures that could be added to those which we now consider normal. We, as members, no longer have to pay for our own stationery. I remember when we had to buy our paper. When I first came here I think we received 2,000 sheets free, and if you wanted more you had to pay for it: if I remember correctly, the wholesale cost to a member was $2.75 per 1,000 sheets. We had such a lousy bookkeeping situation at the time that I always ended up paying twice before getting my account settled. We also had to hire extra staff. Many of us bought mimeograph machines. This place used to have many such machines out in the hallways because there was not room in one office for two members, two secretaries and a mimeograph machine. So the mimeograph machine was put out in the hall, where one often saw two or three people and a bunch of kids stuffing envelopes and sometimes working in the evenings and on Sundays. That has been stopped and we now serve our people better.

I think there are additional advantages we can obtain that will be of advantage not to us but to our constituents. I am pleased to note that there is a royal commission travelling around the world looking at the way in which other parliamentarians serve their constituents. I am awaiting their report with great interest. In the meantime, unless we are willing to do the same for all those for whom we are responsible, that is, provide a cost of living index which goes back to the last increase, then I am not prepared to support such a program for us.

Hon. Robert Stanbury (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, here we are again, engaged in one of parliament's periodic exercises in self-flagellation. It is quite unnecessary. We could have done as several other countries have done quite sensibly, that is, provide for a system of regular, independent reviews of remuneration for parliamentarians. My bill, C-335, would have established such a system, according to which every four years a review would be made not only of the salaries of parliamentarians but of those of federal executive and judicial officers, and adjustments made as a result of its recommendations at the time of the following general election.

I have no objection to the salary levels proposed in this bill and I disagree with those hon. members who tell us that they are excessive. I think that any reasonable person, in looking at comparable salaries in the professional, academic or business world, or for that matter in the trades, would agree that the proposed salaries are quite reasonable. However, I take exception to the approach and the timing of this bill. With all due respect to those who have proposed it, both on the back benches and the front benches, let me say that there has rarely been a more tanglefooted effort in the history of this parliament.

I oppose the principle of indexing. I think that parliament should decide on the basis of independent review and recommendation. It should take the responsibility for fixing what the appropriate remuneration should be for the members of the next parliament. I do not believe we should be incorporating in this bill a provision for the indexing of parliamentary salaries. I do not believe that we should be, ideally—although there has been so much neglect in this respect that it is hard to avoid it—legislating a change in our remuneration without having received an independent recommendation in this respect.

I believe we should have taken the recommendations of the Beaupré commission to heart and implemented them at the time the commission's report was received. One of the recommendations in that report was to do away with the non-taxable expense allowance and to make the salary a reasonable one. I think that if members will inspect the recommendations of that commission with respect to expenses, they will find those recommendations eminently sensible and reasonable.

I do not want to take up much time on this matter. I cannot beat my breast and appear here in sackcloth and ashes and tell you that I think the proposed salaries for members of parliament and others provided for in this bill are excessive, because I do not think they are. But I object to the process we are adopting and I deplore the neglect of the government over too many years to establish a sensible system of independent review and adjustment of remuneration for federal executive, legislative and judicial officers. I believe that we should attempt in this bill, if we do nothing else, to establish such a system.

I welcome the amendment of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) to provide for a commission of sorts, and I welcome the change in his amendment which would leave the decision as to the implementation of the recommendations of the commission to parliament and not to the cabinet; but I still object to the manner in which the commission is to operate. It is my suggestion that a commission should be appointed in the middle of a parliamentary term, not at the beginning.

We can see now how difficult it is for brand new members of parliament to face the prospect of awarding themselves an increase in remuneration. Surely such a commission should be appointed in the middle of a parliamentary term and it should report as promptly as possible. Parliament should have the opportunity to act on its recommendations, but any variations in remuneration which may be enacted as a result of those recommendations should take effect after the next general election.

Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Philbrook):

That motion No. 4 be amended by deleting therefrom the words "within two months" from subclause (7) and substituting therefor the words "within one year after this act comes into force and within two years", and by adding subclause (9) as follows:

"Any variations in remuneration which may be enacted in any parliament shall take effect on the day of the next subsequent general election".

This would have the effect of requiring the commission to be appointed within a year from this act coming into force. There would be time for the commission to report, to have its report tabled, for the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council to make his contribution as to what he thinks is reasonable in the recommendations, and for other members of parliament to do so. We would then make a decision as to what would be reasonable remuneration, not for ourselves, unless we happened to be re-elected, but for members of the next parliament. I urge hon. members to give serious consideration to this proposal.

● (1620)

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak to motions Nos. 2, 3, and 4 which are before the House. I wish to move another amendment to motion No. 4 but I am awaiting direction from the Chair. Are we now debating motions Nos. 2, 3, and 4, or are we debating the amendment proposed by the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Stanbury)? If we are debating them all and there will be a whole series of deferred votes, I am prepared to speak now; but I await Your Honour's direction.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): The decision of the Chair in this regard is to defer all votes until the debate is concluded. Then, when motion No. 4 and its amendments are called, the division will take place on motion No. 4 and the two previous motions, along with the amendments to motion No. 4.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It struck me that there were two or three ways to do it, but your way is very sensible. I rise also to move an amendment to motion No. 4 dealing with other subclauses besides the subclauses which the hon. member for York-Scarborough seeks to amend. My amendment will deal with what I think is a most dishonest step the House is taking if it passes motion No. 4. But before I come to that may I say just a few words about the matter as a whole.

Hon. members are fully aware, I trust, that I am opposed to our raising our salaries and allowances at this time. I think it is far too soon after we sought election at the polls at rates we knew were in effect. I think the economic situation in this country is very serious. It is so serious that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) has promised to bring down another budget within a month. It is likely that he will have something to say about restraint practices and for us to be exercising no restraint, but to be doing the very opposite with respect to our own salaries and allowances, at this time is utterly irresponsible. I earnestly hope that despite all the emotion and feeling which exists about this measure, hon. members will yet agree that action by us on this question should be deferred.

My hon. friend from Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) has made a point which I feel is very cogent. We have before us a proposal that the salaries and expenses of members of parliament should, in a sense, be related to the industrial composite index. I realize that there is a 7 per cent ceiling, but nevertheless it is the industrial composite index which is cited for us, whereas we have refused to give the benefit of that better index to old age pensioners, veterans, recipients of family allowances, retired public servants, retired RCMP and armed forces persons, retired railway workers and all the rest. What kind of beings are we to say no to this for everyone else, but to take it for ourselves?

An hon. Member: Greedy.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I plead with hon. members to do some thinking about this. I know there are hon. members who keep citing what other persons receive. I received a memo from one of my colleagues in the House which shows what top public servants receive and the increases they have had, and I am reminded of what teachers, longshoremen and all sorts of other people receive. I am not concerned about the people who make as much as I do, or more. There are not very many in the latter case. We are among the top 2 per cent or 3 per cent of the income earners of Canada. Statistics vary; sometimes it is the top 1½ per cent and sometimes the top 2 per cent, but certainly we are in the top 3 per cent or 4 per cent.

Mr. Sharp: We're in the top ten.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) says "the top ten." I question his figure, but I am prepared to accept it. If we are already in the top 10 per cent, we have no right to be improving our economic position at this time. I am not concerned about the relationship between what I earn and what is earned by others receiving as much or more. I am concerned about the 90 per cent or 95 per cent of the Canadian people who earn less than I, particularly the 40 per cent or 50 per cent who earn a great deal less than those who make up this House of Commons and the other place. For us at this time, when there is so much need and distress in the country, to be improving a position which is already very good, in my view is not the mark of responsible statesmanship and I hope we will give some more thought to it.

I want also to say that I think the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) are right when they complain about the inequalities in our society and in our world. One of the best statements about world inequality yet made was made a few weeks ago overseas by the Prime Minister. One of the best statements on the evils of inequality in our Canadian society was made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare in Toronto last fall, and he made another good speech a few days ago in Toronto on the necessity of our doing something about poverty in this country. That is what I came to parliament for, more than three decades ago. It has been the concern of my life to minimize the inequalities, to move in the direction of an egalitarian society, and I think for those who are in the privileged position we are in to use that privileged position to worsen the inequalities in our own favour is not the mark of responsible statesmen. Therefore, I hope we will think a little longer about this matter.

I confess that I take some pride in the fact that this bill has been around for a long time, that it has been delayed several months. It was brought in last December and the hope then was to have it through before Christmas. Here we are, almost into the month of May, and it is not through yet, and those of us who have caused the delay have done a service. The result is that in the intervening time some thinking has been done. Even the point of order I raised last week, on which Mr. Speaker ruled favourably, has had one substantial effect. The amendment to the bill regarding the commission which was before us last week when Mr. Speaker ruled three amendments out of order and to which the hon. member for York-Scarborough has referred was set up in such a way that once the commission reported to the cabinet in future parliaments, the cabinet could put increases into effect by order in council.

I found it offensive beyond understanding that this House would consider giving to the cabinet in future parliaments the right to make increases in the indemnities and allowances of members of parliament. Thanks to the ruling made from the Chair last week, there have been a few days to think it over. The amendment put in today in the name of the President of the Privy Council still includes commissions to be set up after each general election, but there has been withdrawn from it—and I commend the government for this—the right of the government to put the recommendations of such a commission into effect by order in council.

If there have been several changes since last December, and if there has been this further change since a week ago tomorrow, I suggest that a little more time might cause the members of the government and the members of this House to give a little more serious thought to the enormity of what we are doing. I have in mind the fact that we are in the very top income earning bracket of the people in this country and this separates us, as the elite, from the people we are supposed to represent. In my view, we should not be doing it at all.

● (1630)

The several amendments now before the House, both those that were on the order paper and those moved on the floor, deal with several things. I can see the voting getting a bit complicated when the time comes, because all those things have been put together, the question of the amount of the indemnities—is it to be $24,000 or is it to be $22,500 as proposed by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling)? I understand the reason he arrived at that figure is that it would represent a 25 per cent increase over what the pay is at the present time.

Then the question of the effective date is involved. Is it to be retroactive to last July 8, the day of the election, is it to be retroactive to January 1, 1975, or is it to come into effect on July 1, 1975? The various votes will have to deal with these various issues.

Then there will be the question of the commission. I am glad the President of the Privy Council has dropped the impossible idea in permitting increases in future parliaments to be brought in by order in council. But now from the hon. member for York-Scarborough we have a real improvement in the idea of a commission. The commission in motion No. 4 is simply a commission appointed after each election to consider an increase in the pay for that immediate parliament. But the proposal of the hon. member for York-Scarborough is that we set up a much more independent commission with authority to review the whole matter of what happens to members of parliament and to make recommendations which could only be put into effect for the succeeding parliament. I think he is to be commended for the proposal, and his amendment will certainly have my support.

The other thing that is done in this batch of motions and votes now before us, concerning which I intend to move an amendment, is something that I regard as a piece of gross dishonesty. I refer to the 7 per cent compounding escalation that is provided in motion No. 4 moved by the President of the Privy Council. That 7 per cent does not sound very bad when you say it fast. I want to say a couple of things about it, but I had better get to the reason I am calling this a piece of dishonesty.

When the proposal was made for an across the board 50 per cent increase last December, I think it is a truism to say there was a howl about it in the country. We vocalized some of that howl here on the floor of this House and the government, within a matter of days, recognized that and said, "All right, we will come down. We will come down from a 50 per cent increase to a 33⅓ per cent increase". The country was given the impression that members of parliament had pulled in their horns and were willing to settle for 33⅓ per cent instead of 50 per cent.

If it had stopped there, perhaps one could commend it. But when you add an escalation in January, 1976, another one in 1977 and another one in 1978 of 7 per cent on the salary and allowances that were in effect the immediately preceding December, you produce a compounding effect. The result is that by 1978 the increase will be 63 per cent over what we are now receiving. So it is not just 7 per cent simple addition; it is 7 per cent compounded. If you take the 33⅓ per cent and compound it by 7 per cent, by 1978 the increase will be 63 per cent over what we are now receiving.

This is the reason I respond so warmly to the amendment of the hon. member for York-Scarborough. Under the present bill the 7 per cent compounded goes right on. We do not need to raise the issue again. By 1982, presumably the time of the election after the next one, the increase will be 113 per cent. Members vote the 33⅓ per cent and then tell the country what fine people we are, settling for that instead of 50 per cent. But we add on 7 per cent compounded, so that by the time of the next election it is up to 63 per cent, and by 1982 it is up to 113 per cent.

This is completely indefensible, Mr. Speaker. I am quite prepared to agree with the hon. member for Timiskaming, all of those ideas do not tally exactly with mine, that salaries, accommodation and all the rest for members of parliament needs to be reviewed; but surely we should not act before a review in a way that would provide these increases that become so outlandish as the years go on. Of course, 7 per cent sounds simple, but once you get our pay up to 100 per cent of what it was, then a 7 per cent increase of that amount is really 14 per cent of the base you started from. I really think the House should slow down, Mr. Speaker, and give further consideration to this whole matter.

I said a few moments ago that within a few weeks the Minister of Finance is going to be bringing down a budget. My hon. friend from Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) asked, and so do I, what right we have, in anticipation of a budget that is going to talk about restraint, to act now? Maybe what is being proposed will be within any restraints proposed by the Minister of Finance. I doubt that, but it could be. If that is the case, why can we not wait? We are going to look awfully greedy, as members of parliament, when the minister brings down that budget proposing restraints, if the people of the country can ask how the Minister of Finance can propose restraints which are so much more severe than members of parliament accepted when they passed their pay bill at the end of April or the beginning of May.

There are other amendments on the order paper and I will have a chance later to say something about expense allowances under motions Nos. 5 and 6. I shall also have something to say about giving more money to the Senate under one of those motions, and about the effective date. So perhaps I have said enough at this stage of the debate, Mr. Speaker.

I therefore, move, seconded by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan):

That motion No. 4 be amended by deleting therefrom the proposed new subsections (3), (4) and (5).

The effect of this amendment would be to leave the salary at the $24,000 figure or, if my friend's amendment carries, at $22,500 for the balance of this parliament. We would wipe out the dishonesty of saying we are giving ourselves only a 33⅓ per cent increase and then letting it go up to 63 per cent at the end of this parliament. We would conform to the suggestion of the hon. member for York-Scarborough that this sort of thing should not happen and that there should be a commission to review it for future parliaments.

I suggest very strongly that a combination of these amendments would make this parliament look a lot more responsible than it has thus far. If my amendment can be adopted, accepting whatever salary we decide on for the balance of this parliament and providing for no escalation until it has been reviewed, and then if we can pass the amendment of the hon. member for York-Scarborough and get a commission to review the matter on an independent basis with a view to making changes for the next parliament, I think the position of this institution would be much more responsible that it now is. We might get back some of the credibility that we are losing because of the demands that we seem to be making on the public treasury because of our privileged position.

● (1640)

I hope, therefore, that the House will consider seriously the amendment which I have proposed, namely, that motion No. 4 be amended by deleting therefrom the proposed new subsections (3), (4) and (5).

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Before putting the amendment, I remind hon. members, as I am sure the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) knows, that it is irregular to have two amendments to a motion. However, I believe the Chair bears some responsibility for the situation. We are following a somewhat complicated procedure involving a number of motions and deferred divisions.

In order to carry out what was suggested earlier by the Chair, the second amendment will be put. The question is on the amendment to motion No. 4 proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. All those in favour of the said amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on the proposed amendment stands deferred. The question is on motion No. 3 standing in the name of the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling). All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred. The question now is on motion No. 4.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Is it not necessary for Your Honour to put first the questions on the two amendments, the one moved by the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Stanbury) and the one moved by myself? Should not the question for the vote on motion No. 4 be called after we find out how the votes will go on the amendments?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): The main motion will be called and then the two amendments to the main motion in the order of presentation to the House.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, is there not a simple rule of procedure which says that if there is a motion and an amendment before the House, the amendment must be voted on first? I think you will find that not many in the House will argue about that. Surely the amendment must be voted on first. There are two amendments. I submit that the votes on those should be taken first.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): The first amendment to motion No. 4 is the amendment in the name of the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Stanbury). The question is on the amendment to motion No. 4, in the name of the hon. member for York-Scarborough. All those in favour of the said amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): All those opposed to the said amendment will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner).]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on the amendment to proposed motion No. 4 stands deferred.

The question is on the second amendment to motion No. 4, in the name of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. All those in favour of the amendment to the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Call in the members.

● (1710)

After the ringing of the bells:

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to the terms of Standing Order 75(11), the House has considered and disposed of motion No. 1, has deferred divisions on motions Nos. 2 and 3, and on two amendments to motion No. 4. I therefore propose to call the division on motion No. 2.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I believe the votes on motions Nos. 2 and 3 were deferred. Motion No. 4 had two amendments put to it and it was the votes on those amendments that were to be taken now. I make the point that those votes were called for before five o'clock. We are now in private members' hour, and I do not think it would be proper to take votes on motions 2 and 3 in the private members' hour.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Unless, of course, there is unanimous consent.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not want to use any more time than is necessary, but the rule leaves it open to either interpretation. I might refer to the rule specifically. Standing Order 75(11) provides:

> When a recorded division has been demanded on any amendment proposed during the report stage of a bill, Mr. Speaker may defer the calling in of the members for the purpose of recording the "yeas" and "nays" until any or all subsequent amendments proposed to that bill have been considered. A recorded division or divisions may be so deferred from sitting to sitting.

So it is obvious that we can proceed with this division, having deferred discussion on some or all of the amendments. Simply for the purpose of neatness, it seems to me that at this point, since we have called in the members, we should now dispose of everything that is outstanding.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I recognize the point made by the hon. member that we return to private members' hour immediately upon conclusion of the taking of the divisions.

The House divided on motion No. 2 (Mr. Saltsman) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The vote of the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Béchard) was not counted. I understand that he stood in error. Perhaps it would be best if he refrained from voting on the other side of the question.

I declare the amendment lost. The question is on the amendment to motion No. 4.

● (1740)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost. Presumably when the House resumes consideration of regular business at eight o'clock it will be on consideration of motion No. 4 standing in the name of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp).

Sir John A. Macdonald Day

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker)—Finance—Request for increase in employment in agriculture exemption; the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McRae)—Environmental Affairs—Asbestos fibre count of water in Great Lakes—Request that International Joint Commission conduct independent study; the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Hurlburt)—National Defence—Agriculture—Request government not make change in grades of beef purchased for armed forces.

It being after five o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, private bills, and notices of motions.

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I think there might be agreement to take Bill C-240 standing in the name of the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie).

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed, and is it in order, that the House shall move, without prejudice to the standing of other bills, at this hour directly to the consideration of Bill C-240 standing in the name of the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie)?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD DAY

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH AS LEGAL HOLIDAY

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough) moved that Bill C-240, respecting Sir John A. Macdonald Day, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I regret that we have lost some time for private members' hour, but I could say that it was for a good cause.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macquarrie: For many years I have been endeavouring to direct the attention of this House to the great need in this country for sharpening the awareness of Canadian people and parliamentarians of the great men and great moments in our historic past. I have had some losses and gained some victories.

The beautiful house of Sir Robert Borden was destroyed, we still do not possess the historic home of Sir John A. Macdonald, and I have just heard from the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) that the fine residence of the great and distinguished former prime minister, the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent, is now for sale. I wonder when we will ever learn to stop despoiling historic sites and begin to appreciate some of the great men of our past.

Mr. Dinsdale: Where's Heritage Canada?

Mr. Macquarrie: As a great admirer of Sir John A. Macdonald I agree with him on the importance of compromise, and while I have tried for 12 years to have a Sir John A. Macdonald holiday brought about and never quite succeeded, if I understand the intent of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, one of the days listed as Heritage Day will be designated Sir John A. Macdonald Day, and that will be a great satisfaction. I think if Sir John A. were here he would say that you gather in what you can and make the most of it. So I am satisfied with that, and I pay tribute to the men and women in the committee who worked so well.

I also want to pay tribute to those who, through several parliaments, have tried to develop a better and richer appreciation of our history. The work of the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart), who was the first to introduce a private members' bill to have the likenesses of our prime ministers appear on paper money, has now been realized. Sir Wilfrid Laurier appears on $5 bills and Sir John A. Macdonald on $10 bills. I am told by those who have them that Mackenzie King appears on the $50, and the $100 bills will soon see the likeness of Sir Robert Borden. Some day I may be able to see one of those as well.

It is my hope that the spirit of co-operation will carry through, that this idea will be enforced, and that I will have the privilege of seeing a further spirit of compromise and ask, after all those who wish to speak have spoken, that this bill be withdrawn and the sentiment find its expression in Heritage Day.

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, I must congratulate my good friend, the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie), and thank him for his courtesy in mentioning that it was a private member's bill of mine that suggested putting the likeness of former prime ministers on our currency. I am glad that has come about.

The hon. member is to be congratulated for continually bringing forth this matter of having a day to honour our first prime minister. Although it is a little disappointing for him that the committee did not decide to have a Sir John A. Macdonald Day every year, I am glad that he is at least partially satisfied that Heritage Day will honour Sir John A. on at least one occasion, and perhaps on other occasions in the future. It is good to have things Canadian, and it is good to honour our past. Suggestions, such as the one made by the hon. member for Hillsborough, make us appreciate our past, and help us with respect to the feeling for citizenship in Canada.

There are many other things that we can honour. Although the hon. member would undoubtedly have liked to have a specific day every year for Sir John A. Macdonald Day, this gives us an opportunity through Heritage Day to honour many people and things in Canadian history. I understand that in one year Heritage Day will honour the Canadian flag, which is something that should be close to the hearts of all Canadians.

This desire that many of us have to honour things Canadian calls to mind another matter which is coming before this House very soon concerning the oath of allegiance to Canada. This matter has come up in the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts a number of times concerning matters of citizenship. We have asked for an oath of allegiance that would include our great country in the words, and that other things we hold dear be included as well. This has not been forthcoming, however. As a matter of fact the departmental officials concerned with this matter in the last seven years have chosen to ignore the wishes of many of us in this House, and the wishes of the committee, which specifically asked for an oath that would do more for Canadians and Canada.

Of course, we will be able to discuss this again in committee but I think it well to bring to the attention of hon. members that, unless we are on top of it, it will go through again in exactly the same form as before. The oath of allegiance makes absolutely no mention of our country, our flag, our constitution, the Bill of Rights, or anything that is strictly Canadian. I think it is high time we did something about that, Mr. Speaker.

In conclusion I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Hillsborough. I would suggest that his offer to withdraw his bill in favour of the Heritage Day bill should be accepted by the House before we call it six o'clock.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in 30 seconds, and I mean every word of it, I congratulate the hon. member for having brought in this bill. Certainly he did not get it in the way he put it in, but I commend him for accepting the compromise so that in some way we will be honouring Sir John A. Macdonald and, not just by the 12 minutes we are giving him now.

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I will not be speaking right through until six o'clock. I was asked if I would care to participate in this debate when we expected it to last considerably longer. I accepted with alacrity for two reasons, one being that Sir John A. Macdonald was born on January 11, 1815, and I was born on January 11, some time later. We share a common birthday, but I must say to the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) that January 11 is a pretty poor day to have a birthday. It comes after Christmas when the gifts are all gone, it is one of the coldest days of the year, and this has kept us from celebrating Sir John A.'s birthday in fitting style.

During one low period in his life when he was defeated in Kingston, Ontario, thus blotting what was an otherwise unblemished escutcheon in that era, he came to the constituency which I represent, and in 1878 won a landslide victory with a majority of 358 votes. It is probably the only riding he represented where you can celebrate his birthday in decent weather.

I had a long speech prepared, Mr. Speaker, but the exigencies of time have caught up with me. I should like to commend the hon. member for Hillsborough, given the date he was given for Sir John A.'s birthday, for doing the best he could with it, and now bowing to reason. I am pleased that Sir John A.'s birthday will be remembered as part of Heritage Day.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough) moved:

That the bill be not now read a second time but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The abbreviated hour appointed for consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT, THE SALARIES ACT AND THE PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARIES ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING SALARIES AND ALLOWANCES

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-44, to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act, the Salaries Act and the Parliamentary Secretaries Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates and as reprinted in accordance with Mr. Speaker's decision of Wednesday, April 23, 1975.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The House is considering motion No. 4.

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Madam Speaker, let me make it clear at the outset that I honestly and sincerely felt ever since the introduction of Bill C-44 that I could not support it in any form. I have taken time to study the bill and the amendments as objectively as possible. I am sure all members of the House are fully aware of the economic conditions we face in this country. If members are not aware, it is darned well time they found out about unemployment and how it is affecting some parts of the country, particularly the region from which I come.

Day by day the evidence becomes clearer. Last fall the government indicated that among its goals, was, inter alia, that of government restraint in spending. I suggest strongly that this restraint should apply to members of parliament as well as to members of the public generally. Members of parliament should set an example by restraint. The history of this bill, its introduction, and the manner in which it has been proceeded with through its various stages, reminds one of a tiger. Well, we still have that tiger by the tail. Maybe parliamentarians deserve a salary increase—maybe. But I suggest to you that from the beginning, the wrong road was followed, the wrong path taken. An independent body should have been set up long ago to consider salaries and allowances to which parliamentarians ought to be entitled.

The odd thing about this bill is that possibly parliament has spent more time considering this matter in the present session, since September 30 last, than it has spent considering most other important pieces of legislation which come before the House.

Mr. Sharp: That is not so.

Mr. Jones: Where are our priorities? I detect just a bit of selfishness on the part of parliamentarians—just a bit. I don't like it, and citizens generally do not like it.

Furthermore, parliamentarians should realize—I suppose they all know this now—that if this bill becomes law they will move into a higher tax bracket, and a good portion of that so-called increase will be retained by the government, or returned to treasury coffers, to be spent and wasted by the government in some other form. That rule applies to members just as it applies to ordinary taxpayers and wage earners.

Being a member from the Atlantic provinces I find it difficult to understand why the government adopts a policy of regional disparity in its payment of wages for federal government employees across this country but does not adopt that policy with members. The government has presented a bill providing for increased salaries and allowances; the bill practises regional disparity in reverse. Actually, earlier today a maritime member asked a question on this same point.

An hon. Member: That was the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan).

Mr. Jones: I am told the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond asked the question. In all good conscience I cannot support a pay increase in any way. I look at the attitude adopted—

An hon. Member: Don't take it.

Mr. Jones: Stand up when your turn comes, sir. I might inform the hon. member that my income tax is greater than the salary I am paid in this place.

An hon. Member: But you are an Independent.

Mr. Jones: If the hon. member wants my job and wants to run as an Independent, he is welcome.

The evidence is clear. In a democracy it is incumbent on a government to consider others. Consider, for example, the attitude toward those on fixed incomes. I am talking about people like CNR employees in the Atlantic region and other regions of Canada, and other pensioners. They, generally, are also looking for benefits. I must be guided by the collective majority conscience of the constituents of Moncton. They do not favour a pay increase for parliamentarians at this time. I suggest that all members of parliament should, in all conscience, be guided in the same manner.

Members were elected to this House on July 8 last. At that time, or even before then, they ought to have known what the salary, allowances, and other benefits would be. This bill has created, yes, and increased cynicism and distrust. There is increasing disrespect on the part of the public and the citizenry for parliament. I think this House would be well advised to give this bill a complete hoist. Let us establish an independent body now to consider this matter, and let us get on with the important business facing this country. Let us set an example with our restraint, and show a sense of stability at this time.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is the House ready for the question? The question is on motion No. 4. All those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The House will now consider together motion No. 5, standing in the name of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), and motion No. 6, standing in the name of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent). First we will take motion No. 5.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre), seconded by Mr. Peters moves:

That Bill C-44, an act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act, the Salaries Act and the Parliamentary Secretaries Act, be amended in sub-clause (1) of Clause 4(a) by deleting from lines 45 and 46 on page 4 the words "five thousand three hundred dollars" and by substituting therefor the words "two thousand dollars"; and (b) by deleting from lines 14 and 15 on page 5 the words "ten thousand six hundred dollars" and by substituting therefor the words "eight thousand dollars".

Next I will put motion No. 6.

Mr. Broadbent, seconded by Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moves:

That Bill C-44, an act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act, the Salaries Act and the Parliamentary Secretaries Act, be amended by deleting sub-clause (1) from Clause 4 being lines 41 to 48 at page 4 and lines 1 to 18 at page 5 of the Bill.

● (2010)

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, these two motions, Nos. 5 and 6, are being debated at one time as directed by the Chair. Both relate to the question of the tax free expense allowances provided to members of the Senate and the House of Commons.

As we have indicated many times, whatever argument there might be for an increase in the indemnities of members of parliament, we see no case whatsoever for an increase at this time in the expense allowances of the members of either of the two Houses. When arguments are made for an increase in what is called our salary, it is put forward that there have been increases in the cost of living for members of parliament as there have been increases in the cost of living for others. It is on that basis that that case is made. I do not agree with it, as I hope I have made very clear, and most of us in this party feel very strongly that whatever arguments might be made with respect to the indemnity, those arguments do not apply to our tax free expense allowance.

My leader, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), and others in this party have pointed out that since the expense allowance was last fixed at its present amount, which is $8,000 for members of this House and $4,000 for members of the other place, a great many things have been added to the list of those things that enable members of parliament to do their work, and which are paid for out of the public treasury. I wish to remind hon. members of a few of those things.

It used to be that the amount of printing we could get done free of charge was very little. The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) pointed out this afternoon in another debate that there was a time when there were a number of mimeograph machines in various corridors in this building. Members joined together to purchase those machines to do some of the printing they wanted in order to send material to their constituents. The quantities of printing we can now get done free are voluminous.

The provisions regarding free mailing have been enlarged so that we are entitled to send to our constituents, free of charge, four household mailings a year. This means four times a year every member of this House can get a piece of printing done free, in the thousands, and the nature of that printing seems to be getting more and more elaborate as time goes on, and have it sent to the entire constituency free of charge.

Our telephone facilities have been increased. I am not complaining about these things, I am just pointing out that these are things that are now being paid for that were not paid for when the expense allowance was fixed at $8,000 a year. We can telephone to almost anywhere in Canada; anywhere there is a seven digit telephone number. We also have certain facilities for telephoning to Ottawa when we are in our constituencies or in a number of other cities in this country.

Our travel arrangements have been greatly enlarged. If members opposite think that by chatting and cat-calling they are deterring me, I assure them they do the opposite. They encourage me to keep going. I was talking about the increase in travel. I hear members complaining about there not being enough in some cases. I remind hon. members that when I first came to this place we had railway passes that entitled us to travel on any railway train in Canada, anywhere at any time. However, we had to pay our other expenses such as berth and meals on all trips that we took, except for two round trips a year. That was the situation. We got our berth and meals twice a year from the constituency to Ottawa.

An hon. member says we were not here all the time. Others say that as a result of that we were here all the time. Members should make up their minds. I am not complaining about progress. However, I suggest that members who have had so many improvements in their travel arrangements that now we can have 52 air tickets a year, either to use between Ottawa and the constituency, or to use ten of those for trips anywhere in Canada, or six of those trips for one's spouse—

An hon. Member: What if you have two spouses?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): There are no provisions for two spouses, and not for 52 spouses either. The hon. members can carry on with interruptions. However, the point I am making is that there have been these tremendous improvements in the facilities that are made available to members and that are paid for out of the public treasury.

There are improved facilities in our offices. There was a time when in most cases two members shared one secretary. After a while it was one secretary per member. Now there are two per member, and in many cases there are three.

There has recently been added the provision for up to $6,000 for rental space for a constituency office, and money toward the salary for a person working in that office. These things are all good. They enable members to do their job better than used to be the case. I submit that because we have these more frequent contacts and these means of communication, we are able to do a better job than was done 20, 30 or 40 years ago. I suggest it also means we work a lot harder. I do not need to argue that point in this place. Everybody agrees we work hard. However, these things having been provided for us out of the public treasury, we do not feel that at this time we should be increasing the tax free expense allowance which in effect is part of our income.

I also make the point that in the public eye the idea of tax freedom for an amount of money for which we do not have to submit vouchers or make an accounting, is a form of discrimination in our favour and against the general public.

I remember when this tax free allowance idea was first brought in by that master craftsman, the Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, back in 1945. At that time the total income of members of parliament was $4,000 a session. There was pressure on Mr. King and the cabinet of that day by the backbenchers for an increase. One can understand that. It goes on all the time. The increase that was sought was rather substantial. Mr. King did not like the idea of meeting the demand for a substantial increase so he came up with a clever notion that if the increase were only $2,000 instead of a larger sum, but were made tax free, it would mean more to the members than if it were a larger sum and would have the advantage of sounding less offensive to the public.

Originally this tax free allowance was proposed for members of the House of Commons only, but there was a hue and cry in the other place about it and Their Honours let it be known that they would not pass the bill if it contained provision for a $2,000 allowance for members of this House and nothing at all for those in the other place. Mr. King's solution was to redraft the bill so that it provided $2,000 for members of the House of Commons tax free, and a $2,000 expense allowance for Senators and for cabinet ministers, this amount to be taxable in their case. It solved the problem for the moment. It got the bill through both Houses. It secured what then seemed to be a substantial total increase for members of parliament. But it was one of those clever solutions to a problem of the moment which has left us bedevilled ever since with this concept of a tax free, unaccountable allowance to members of parliament.

The only time this was ever considered thoroughly was during the sittings of the Beaupré Commission and, as the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Stanbury) said this afternoon, that commission said in its report that the time had come to get away from the tax free allowance idea. Of course the higher the amount goes the more difficult it is to get rid of it because, if it is to be replaced by an indemnity which would be worth as much, it would mean adding a larger and larger indemnity. I submit that the hon. member for York-Scarborough was right, and that the Beaupré Commission was right, and that some day the clever idea which Mr. King adopted in order to solve the problem of 1945 should be corrected. At least we should not make the situation any worse.

Some of us think the tax free element should be removed, even if in order to do so it is necessary to increase the indemnity. But if this course is not to be followed, the least we should do is leave the allowance where it is. That is the position that is taken by most, if not all, members of this party, and these two motions, Nos. 5 and 6, deal with this aspect of the matter.

When we were considering motions Nos. 2, 3 and 4 this afternoon the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) quite properly commented on the tax free allowance aspect because in motion 4 there is a provision which refers to the tax free allowance and says it is to be escalated by the same 7 per cent as the indemnity We are now at the substantial part of the bill as far as the tax free allowance is concerned—the clause which provides for the allowance. At the moment it is $8,000 a year for members of this House and $4,000 a year for members of the other place. We think it ought to stay where it is, that there should be no increase at all. That would be the effect of motion No. 6 standing in the name of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby. That motion, if carried, would rule out any increase in the tax free allowance and leave things exactly where they are now.

The reason we have put down two motions, No. 6 in the name of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby, and No. 5 in my own name, is to give members two choices. If they do not like the idea of leaving the allowances exactly as they are, or if, on the other hand, they want to have something to say about the position of the senators, or if they want to have something to say about the justifiable claim of those who represent northern constituencies, my motion gives them a chance to express their views.

My motion differs slightly from that of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby in that it would leave the $8,000 expense allowance for members of parliament generally right where it is; it would accept the increase in the expense allowance provided in the bill for those who represent the northern constituencies—the Northwest Territories, the Yukon and a number of others; I doubt whether anyone would argue that the members concerned are not entitled to an increase. That is the second thing my motion does.

The other thing my motion does is to alter the amount of the allowance to be paid to members of the other place. There is a notion around that I do not approve of the Senate.

Mr. Benjamin: Who said that?

Mr. Sharp: Shame!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I hear a question about that coming from the Tory benches, but what is my friend doing over there? I accept the charge. I think parliament would be far better off without the other place. I contend that the Senate ought to be abolished.

Mr. Peters: It would save some money.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My hon. friend from Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) says that would save some money. Yes, it would. And it would obviate a lot of other difficulties around here. Well, since I say the Senate should be abolished I suppose that when I move an amendment touching the incomes of the senators I could move to reduce them to one dollar. I believe I have some takers. I even went down the list of cabinet ministers who are getting $20,000 with the idea that I might pick out some of my favourite targets and move to reduce their salaries to one dollar. But it is now too late to do that; the amendments had to be in by last night.

Seriously, though, whatever comments we may wish to make or whatever fun we may have, there is no case whatever for increasing the total income of senators. At the moment they receive $18,000 by way of salary and $4,000 by way of expense allowance for a total of $22,000. Under the bill before us that $18,000 will become $24,000, and their expense allowances will go up to $5,300, making a total of $29,300. Can anyone in this House tell me there is any reason at all why senators who are now receiving a total of $22,000 should receive a raise, effective last July, which would bring them to $29,300? In my view they should not get one cent of a raise.

It was difficult to draft an amendment which would cut senators' salaries to a figure less than our own. However, on the clause we are now considering, under motion No. 6 we can cut the amount of their allowance, and that is what I am proposing to do. I am proposing that instead of their tax free allowance being raised from $4,000 to $5,300, it should be reduced to $2,000.

My friends over in the Senate will be impressed by my generosity. The result of this would be that they would get an increase. They are now getting $18,000 salary plus $4,000 allowances, for a total of $22,000. Under my proposal they will get $24,000 salary and $2,000 expense allowance, for a total of $26,000. All I really have to say about that is that it is too much, but at least I am not suggesting something so far out, outlandish and penurious that I could not expect any support for it. I have arrived at this figure on a responsible basis. I swallow my notion that they should not get anything at all; I am prepared to give them that much of an increase, so that they will receive $24,000 salary and a $2,000 expense allowance. But $24,000 salary and a $5,300 expense allowance is just unthinkable.

Let us remember, Madam Speaker, that a great number of Their Honours in the other place have other incomes. The number of presidents, vice-presidents, and directors of corporations in the other place is rather lengthy. They have incomes of other kinds, and the kind of money that really means something to them is money that is tax free. The salaries they receive in many cases result in their having to pay quite a bit in income tax; the money that they like is the tax free allowance, and I think it is at that point that we should make this difference. That is the intent of my motion.

We should now start moving in the other direction, looking toward the elimination of the tax free expense allowance. In our own case we could leave it where it is at $8,000, with the thought that perhaps another Beaupré will come along and recommend to us that we reduce it next time; and we should start the reduction process right now as far as Their Honours in the other place are concerned and put the expense allowance back to the $2,000 figure, which is what it was when it was first introduced in 1945 under the direction of the Right Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King.

We are terribly aware of what goes on and of what does not go on in the other place. This is not the occasion to debate the question of abolishing the Senate, but I think it is worth noting, as some writers have pointed out, that it is largely the centre of Liberal party organizational activity. It seems to be a rule to have over there, with a salary and all that goes with it, the persons who head up the organization of the Liberal party. I think it is enough that they have offices, and staff, and the money they receive, without our giving them still more money. The Conservatives do not have sufficient members over there to set up any organizational activity, so they can be pure in this House on that issue, and I hope they will be. But, as I say, to provide at this time for increases in the total income of Their Honours in the other place is unthinkable.

If I had taken the position that I want an increase but I am not prepared to give one to them, then, of course, certain criticisms could be directed at me. But, as you know, Madam Speaker, I feel that this whole bill has been brought in at the wrong time. I do not just mean that it might be better to introduce it a month from now or to have introduced it six months ago; I mean that in these days of economic trouble in this country, a time when so many of our people are in need, it shows the most abject lack of leadership I have ever seen around this place for us to take this action of raising our own incomes beyond any limits that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) can possibly have in mind when he brings down his budget at the end of May.

I regard this whole bill as offensive. I regard the whole bill as something to which the members of this House should have what it takes to say no. But if hon. members have not reached that point yet, we should at least say no to any increase in our expense allowance, and we should say an absolute no to any increase at all in the expense allowance of Their Honours in the other place. Instead we should say it is time for their expense allowance to be reduced, and this is what my motion does. It lets members for northern ridings get the increase set out in the bill; it provides that our allowances generally stay at $8,000; and it provides that allowances for the Senators be reduced to $2,000 a year.

If members are not prepared to go for this adjustment set out in my motion, then I hope they will go for the proposal set out in the motion of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby, namely, that there be no changes whatsoever at this time in the amount of these expense allowances.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): All those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Pursuant to section (11) of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Is the House ready for the question on motion No. 6?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): All those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Pursuant to section (11) of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved:

That Bill C-44, an act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act, the Salaries Act and the Parliamentary Secretaries Act, be amended by deleting clause 7 at page 7 and substituting the following therefor:

"7. This Act shall come into force on July 1, 1975."

He said: Madam Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I am to put motion No. 8 also.

● (2040)

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka) moved:

That Bill C-44, An Act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act, the Salaries Act and the Parliamentary Secretaries Act, be amended by deleting Clause 7 at page 7 and substituting the following therefor:

"7. This Act shall be deemed to have come into force on the 1st day of January, 1975."

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, although my motion comes ahead of the one moved by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling), perhaps he might be permitted to speak first and I would be happy to follow.

Mr. Darling: Madam Speaker, I hope this evening in respect of motion No. 8 standing in my name, on which I had some difficulty in getting a seconder, hon. members will give serious thought. I have put forward various ideas and have spoken on a number of occasions, both in the committee and here, about this proposed increase. It would certainly seem that hon. members will receive an increase of 33⅓ per cent when this bill receives third reading.

This bill in its present state will make this increase retroactive to July 8, 1974. This is something with which I take great exception. I have said that a pay raise is in order, but the idea of picking the pockets of the taxpayers retroactively for nine or ten months does not sit well with me. I have said this before. When I spoke in committee I said I would be perfectly agreeable to a pay increase that was effective when the bill received Royal Assent, but I expressed doubt that the House would go along with that.

In all fairness, and in all humility, members of parliament should at least say to themselves that they have the pay increase and the least they can do is make it effective on January 1 of this year rather than retroactively to July 8 of last year. This bill did not come in until December. There might be some rhyme or reason for making the effective date January 1 of this year, but if the bill is made retroactive for six months it will cost the taxpayers another $1,480,000 to be distributed among members of this House and the other place.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Darling: Some hon. members applaud, but to me this is absolutely unconscienable. If the bill makes the increase retroactive for the entire nine months, this will amount to an extra $2,600,000 in back pay for members of parliament. I can see a lot of them with their eyes lit up. I suppose they have most of it spent already.

I hope members will say that, now they are sure of a pay increase they should not be greedy, and make the increase effective only to January 1 of this year. I would go along with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) in making it effective on July 1, 1975. If his motion happens to carry, I would agree with it. If it does not carry I hope hon. members will seriously consider January 1 of this year as the effective date, leaving about $1,480,000 in the treasury to be spent for some needy purpose.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) has just pointed out, it is extremely hard to make a case for the size of the increase being voted.

An hon. Member: We hear again from Stanley.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, there does seem to be something in the name of Stanley. It is even more difficult to make a case for making that pay increase retroactive to July 8, 1974, the date of the last election. I hope even at this stage the House will re-think this question and support one or other of these proposals either that the effective date be January 1, 1975, or, in my view, preferably July 1, 1975.

The fact still remains that when we ran in the election campaign in May and June of last year we knew what the salary was going to be if we were elected on July 8. I think it is unconscienable on our part to try to make this increase retroactive to that date. The same thing applies to all other items in this bill including the salaries of cabinet ministers, the Speakers of both houses, the parliamentary secretaries, and all the rest who are covered by this bill.

The least this House should do on this occasion is make these changes effective either January 1 or July 1 of this year. If I may put in another plug for July 1 as preferable to January 1, let me remind the House again that in a few weeks the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) will be bringing down a budget, and indications are that the budget will relate to the problems of our time and the need for restraint. This House is going to look pretty ridiculous a month from now when talking about restraints that are more severe than we were prepared to exercise for ourselves.

Members of the House may think they will get away with this because it will be an accomplished fact, but the public will be terribly aware of what has happened. I suggest the Minister of Finance and other members of the cabinet will have real trouble in trying to get co-operation for any program of restraint in view of the complete failure to exercise any restraint so far as members of parliament are concerned.

I suppose we are just about at the end of the report stage. There does not seem to be many members around who want to speak to these motions. No one today has spoken for Bill C-44. I am surprised the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) has had nothing to say today. Motion No. 4 was his, and the guts of the bill are in that motion. He allowed it to be put in his name, and has not said a word.

I am surprised that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) has been able to sit out this whole debate. He did not take part in the debate in December or in April. Is that leadership? The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has taken no part in this debate either. My heavens, leadership just does not exist on this particular issue. There is one more day, tomorrow or whenever, when the government

At the moment we are dealing with the question of when this increase is to come into effect. Hon. members seem to have decided by votes on other amendments that they want this massive increase, that they want this 7 per cent compounded annually until we get up into the stratosphere—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I hope, Madam Speaker, that Hansard has recorded the applause that members gave in that regard. Members are admitting without any shame, that they want this money. I hope they will yet have the decency to say they are prepared to wait, preferably until July 1 or, if not, that it should be effective January 1 of this year rather than last July 8. If they do not, then on third reading we will have to try again to get the matter put off for another six months.

I deplore the failure of members to debate this issue and to take it seriously. They think they can just sit and the money will fall into their laps. All I can say is that there is an old Spanish proverb I sometimes used years ago when I was in the pulpit. It goes like this: "Take what you want," said God; "take it and pay for it."

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The question is on motion No. 7. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): In my opinion the nays have it.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

FINANCE—REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN EMPLOYMENT IN AGRICULTURE EXEMPTION

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak to the question that I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) the other day about the exemption of $250 and 25 days for farm workers. I welcome the opportunity because I should like to explain the situation further; I do not really believe too many understood the question that I was asking.

A farmer does not have to collect income tax from anyone who works for him who makes less than $250 or works less than 25 days. Nor does he have to make out a T-4 form for such worker. The reason I bring this matter to the House is that these regulations were made a few years ago, at a time when farm workers were paid between $10 and $15 a day. Today wages and piecework rates on the farm are much higher, and therefore I am requesting that this exemption be raised higher than the $250. I do not think 25 days makes that much difference because a worker on a farm can make $500 in 25 days quite easily now, especially if he is on piecework.

We realize that there can be abuses of any of these regulations and I do not really believe that anyone wants intentionally to abuse these regulations. Certainly the farm workers are upset about such a regulation. I say this because the worker comes to the farm, and when he gets close to earning $250 he wants to leave and go to another farm. What has happened, and what is happening, is that it is making these workers much more mobile. They are not staying long enough on a particular farm. In many instances, within five or six days they are coming close to $250 and they know there is a job down the road so why should they stay and have to pay income tax? In many instances the farmer is accommodating them, because why should he go through all this exercise of making out a T-4 form? So I am asking that this amount be raised to $600 and maybe the days to 30 days. I do not think the 25 days requirement is too critical.

I know from experience of this regulation, and because of the fact that some workers do not want to have to go through paying income tax, that when they do pay, when it is deducted at source, because their earnings are not that high they have to make out an income tax form, so they do things to make sure that they are not kept on. In some instances it could be picking apples; they know how to have themselves released by bruising or doing other things with the apples that are not really the way they should be handled.

We also realize that there is a shortage of seasonal farm workers today. We know that many people on welfare can and should be working at these seasonal jobs, but why should they go off welfare and go out and spend 25 days, or 20 days working and then have income tax deducted? They are not going to make enough wages or money during the year to have to pay income tax at any rate.

The same thing applies to UIC. We know that the people in the unemployment insurance offices are reluctant to say to a man who is on unemployment insurance, "You must stop getting unemployment insurance, go and work on the farm or do seasonal work, but when you come back the regulations say you cannot go back on again, you have to get enough days".

The whole thing is very confusing and it leads to not giving us a big enough work force for seasonal types of work. We should take way as many roadblocks as we can to get these workers on to the farms. We hear quite a lot today about production of food, so this is the reason why I should like to ask the Minister of Finance to consider raising this exemption to at least $600 and probably to 30 days.

Mr. Jack Cullen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am advised by the Department of National Revenue that this matter has been raised frequently over the past years, but usually in reference to the Canada Pension Plan and Unemployment Insurance Acts, both of which contain provisions exempting workers in the primary industries from coverage provided they earn less than $250 and work for less than 25 days with one employer.

However, what is being recommended tonight, in my view, would be most discriminatory in that it would be difficult to provide a certain segment of farm employees with an exemption of $600 for purposes of reporting on T-4 returns and at the same time to justify such exemption to employers of casual workers in other industries where deductions for CPP and unemployment insurance are required from their salaries or wages without exemptions of any kind.

Furthermore, the present policy for income tax purposes requires a reporting on T-4 returns of all amounts in excess of $250, or if tax, CPP or unemployment insurance is deducted, any amount paid as income from employment. Changing the reporting limits to the level suggested by the hon. member would result in a very substantial tax loss when applied to all workers. It is submitted that the limits would have to apply to all employees if the government is to avoid being accused of discrimination in applying the tax laws.

I made reference at the beginning to the fact that this advice came to me from the Department of National Revenue. Of course any representations made by the hon. member will be considered by the minister.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—ASBESTOS FIBRE COUNT OF WATER IN GREAT LAKES—REQUEST THAT INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION CONDUCT INDEPENDENT STUDY

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Fort William): Madam Speaker, I rise to discuss a question which I asked the acting minister of external affairs last week regarding the IJC and my hope that it will investigate more thoroughly the whole business of asbestos fibres in Lake Superior, particularly in the area of Thunder Bay.

● (2200)

There have been three distinct results concerning the number of fibres in Thunder Bay harbour and in the drinking water of South Ward, Thunder Bay. The Ontario Water Resources Commission recently did a test which showed .08 or 800,000 particles of asbestos fibres per litre; the Lakehead University did a similar test which showed 12 million to 15 million fibres per litre, about five times as great; and McMaster University did similar tests with results comparable to those produced by Lakehead University.

In 1973 the same Ontario Water Resources Commission had results of .08 or 800,000 particles per litre. Research in 1973 gave four sets of results which varied from .06 or 600,000 particles to 12 million particles per litre.

It is very important healthwise that we find out what the correct readings are because there is a great variation between the lowest reading of .06 or 600,000, to 12 million particles per litre, and this variation is very pertinent from a health point of view.

Concentrations of about 7 million or 8 million particles per litre are likely to be very injurious, and I think it is important that we obtain accurate results through the IJC, or the CCIW; that is, the Canadian Centre for Inland Water Studies.

Most of the testing done by the Ontario Water Resources Commission was conducted by the Ontario Research Council, a body funded both by private industry, including Public Steel, which owns the taconite plant which is dumping some tailings which contain asbestos into Lake Superior, and funded or supported by the Ontario government.

There are two types of asbestos fibres Amphilab and Chrisotile. Apparently the amphilab fibres are similar to those from taconite at Silver Harbour where asbestos is being dumped into Lake Superior. The amphilab type appears to be particularly dangerous. According to Lakehead University and McMaster University the results they are getting at Thunder Bay at this particular time are similar to the results which are being found at Duluth, and the city of Duluth has warned its householders not to drink the water.

There is strong evidence that asbestos fibre counts of the order that are appearing, according to Lakehead University and McMaster, can have very serious results including carcinogenic or cancerous effects. It is thought in Japan, for instance, that the high rate of stomach cancer may be due to the heavy ingestion of rice containing talc, which in turn contains asbestos.

I would ask the government to undertake three or four things. First it should carry out a real study to find out exactly what the situation is, and to find out what the fibre counts actually are. Asbestos fibre counts can vary depending on weather conditions, winds, tides and so on. I think we have to establish norms, and we have not done so to the extent that they have done this in the United States in their studies.

I have also asked the Canadian government, and do so again, to accept a certain responsibility because of our position in respect of inland lakes and the Great Lakes, and also because there is strong evidence that these fibres may be coming into the water from the taconite plant at Silver Harbour on the United States side. I would also ask the Canadian government to make a concerted effort, through the National Research Council, and I understand the IJC has done the same, to determine the possible effects, and to set out tolerable amounts of asbestos fibres in our waters.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Len Marchand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, first of all I want to thank the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McRae) for raising this important subject this evening. I can certainly understand his concern in view of the alarming reports that have appeared recently.

Officials of the Department of the Environment have been monitoring this situation carefully. The Canada Centre for Inland Waters has carried out water sampling and analyses in the Thunder Bay area specifically, and the Lake Superior area generally, in order to evaluate the possibility of trans-boundary movement of asbestos fibres in Lake Superior.

It has been found that the north shore of the western arm of the lake showed concentrated amounts of cummingtonite fibres associated with the mining operation at Silver Bay, Minnesota. However, at Thunder Bay, Ontario, no cummingtonite fibres were monitored. Chrysotile fibres, however, were found and these are normally associated with the natural processes involved in the weathering of rocks in the area. As well, the general circulation of the water in Lake Superior is a counter-clockwise action, tending to carry any material from the Silver Bay mining operation towards Duluth, Minnesota, and the south side of the lake, rather than towards Thunder Bay on the Ontario side.

The variation of sample analyses mentioned by the hon. member is quite possible because the behaviour of suspensions of fine particles in water is such that wind agitation of the lake could re-suspend fibres which had settled to the bottom, and analytical results would thus vary depending on the wind and the weather, and this was mentioned by the hon. member.

The Department of the Environment, the Department of National Health and Welfare, and the Ontario Ministry of the Environment are continuing to carry out research with respect to asbestos fibres.

The Great Lakes Research Advisory Board which reported to the International Joint Commission will also continue to monitor the progress of ongoing research as it relates to the Great Lakes, report it to the commission, and recommend directions for future research.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—AGRICULTURE—REQUEST GOVERNMENT NOT MAKE CHANGE IN GRADES OF BEEF PURCHASED FOR ARMED FORCES

Mr. Ken Hurlburt (Lethbridge): Madam Speaker, on February 24 I asked the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) a question about the new tendering policy being followed when purchasing beef for use by the Canadian armed forces. This question is recorded at page 3499 of Hansard. At that time I asked the minister why the new tenders call for grades A1 and A2, since the previous tenders called for grades B1 and B2. This change in tendering is costing the taxpayers of Canada an additional $60 to $70 per carcass.

The minister replied to my question by saying:

Mr. Speaker, I will certainly examine with interest the impact of that policy and check with my colleague, the Minister of National Defence, what were the department's requisitions.

I have yet to receive a reply from the Minister of Supply and Services. Since the new grading system has been adopted, absolute chaos has resulted in the cattle industry. First, the industry has been paid off with a price differential as high as 37 cents per pound on the same grade animal. Second, the buying public has been led to believe that they are purchasing better quality beef when buying grades A1 or A2. To the contrary, grades B1 and B2 carry a higher degree of marbling and finish.

The previous policy of the Department of Supply and Services had been to purchase grades B1 and B2. When these grades were in short supply, the department then purchased A1 and A2. This policy did a great deal to facilitate the feeding and processing industries in Canada by allowing a choice in grades, which helped to alleviate congestion in the processing plants across Canada.

● (2210)

I directed a supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). At that time I asked the minister whether he would make a representation to the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer), and ask him to revert to the previous tendering policy in order to help not only the beef producers but consumers as well. The answer given by the minister, which can be found at page 3,500 of Hansard, was as follows:

Mr. Speaker, I am given to understand that Canadian meats are always used when they are available, regardless of the department to which they are supplied.

When talking to members of the staff in the Department of Supply and Services they informed me that beef purchased for use by the Canadian armed forces in Europe is purchased from the United States government.

Questions are being asked, not only by myself, but by cattlemen in every province in Canada. First, why does the minister not know the formula for purchasing beef? Second, why does the Minister of Supply and Services not know the difference in cost between grade A and grade B beef? Third, why does the minister not know the amount of space available for cargo in the armed forces Boeing 707 jets used in their weekly flights to Lahr, Germany? The next question Canadian cattlemen would like answered is: why it is that after the astronomical losses which have been experienced by the beef industry during the last 18 months, the Minister of Agriculture does not know that Canadian servicemen are not eating Canadian beef?

In conclusion, I feel that my only hope now to obtain a satisfactory answer lies with the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson), who has promised me that an investigation by his department would be forthcoming.

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, may I first say that the Canadian Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) and the Canadian Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) are very interested in having the Canadian Armed Forces well fed.

By way of background information, the percentages of beef by grades raised in Canada in 1974 were as follows: grade A, 74 per cent; grade B, 3.7 per cent; grade C, 2.8 per cent; grade D, 17 per cent; grade E, 2.5 per cent. The figures since January 1, 1975, are not much different in that only 4 per cent of total beef killed in Canada for the period January 1 to March 15, 1975 was grade B beef.

The Department of National Defence in its requisitions for beef supplies in Canada has in the past stipulated grade B beef, but that if grade B beef was not available, grade A would be supplied. Grade B beef has not been available in the large quantities required by the department, particularly from the smaller packing plants, and as a result most of the orders were filled by grade A beef.

Also, because the smaller packing plants could not supply grade B beef, only major plants such as Canada Packers tendered bids for contract which eliminated competition for bidding to a great extent.

In view of this situation it was decided, in consultation with the Department of Agriculture—

Mr. Paproski: The coolers are full.

Mr. Hopkins: The hon. member's colleague wants an answer, Madam Speaker; hon. members had their chance to speak.

In view of this situation it was decided, in consultation with the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, to change the specification for beef purchased by the Department of National Defence from grade B to grade A to increase competition by opening the door for smaller regional packing plants to participate in bidding for national defence beef contracts. However, this decision did not apply to all types of beef. Ground beef contracts are continuing to be specified as grade B beef, and veal as grade C.

The cost factor was considered prior to reaching a decision on the change of specification. The price differential between grade A and grade B beef averages 3 cents per pound which, on a carcass of 550 to 600 pounds, results in a total price difference of $16.50 to $18 per carcass.

In summary, the change of specification from grade B to grade A beef for only certain types of beef, was made to stimulate competition and to permit smaller regional packing houses to participate in bidding for National Defence contracts and also because the smaller packing plants did not supply grade B beef. Only the major plants such as Canada Packers tendered bids on contract, which eliminated competition for bidding to a great extent. The policy was changed to prevent this from happening.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.17 p.m.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

STRIKE OF LONGSHOREMEN IN QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ENFORCE COMPLIANCE WITH BACK-TO-WORK LEGISLATION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of Justice, or to the Acting Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister of Labour? Could we be given further information about the situation concerning the longshoremen in the St. Lawrence ports following the meeting yesterday between representatives of the unions and the Minister of Labour?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Labour is continuing a series of meetings in connection with the longshoring operations of the ports. At the same time we are taking steps to proceed with applications under the special Act of parliament adopted last week, to obtain an order to ensure compliance with that Act.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister be more specific as to what measures he and his associates are proceeding with to ensure compliance with the Act?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the application to which I referred is an application for an order under the Act to secure compliance on the part of the employees' associations. In our view the facts supporting the order had to be established and, thereafter, appropriate notice has to be given to the parties involved. That is now in process.

Mr. Stanfield: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Who are the parties involved? I do not mean, by name, but by description.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I was speaking particularly about the five unions involved.

STRIKE OF LONGSHOREMEN IN QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT VIEW OF FAILURE TO COMPLY WITH BACK-TO-WORK LEGISLATION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister? As parliament last week passed legislation ordering the members of these unions back to work immediately, is it the opinion of the government that when parliament passes such legislation and union members are ordered to return to work, that it is satisfactory if they do not return to work?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Justice has outlined the steps the government has taken to see that the Act is complied with.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION AGAINST NATIVES AT BANQUET FOR PRINCE OF WALES—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION AND RESIGNATION OF COMMISSIONER OF NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the report that appeared originally on television last night, and was repeated in the newspapers this morning, to the effect that among the 350 guests invited for a banquet organized for the Prince of Wales by the Commissioner of the Northwest Territories there were only 22 native people, and as native peoples constitute some two-thirds of the total population of the Northwest Territories, can the Acting Prime Minister tell the House whether the government has conducted an investigation into the accuracy of this report?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have not conducted any particular investigation. I expect that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development will be back in Ottawa shortly. He has been meeting with native peoples in the north. All I saw, of course, was what was on television. Everyone, including the native peoples, seemed to be having a good time celebrating the visit of the Prince of Wales.

Mr. Broadbent: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As usual, the Acting Prime Minister seems to have missed the point. Is it the government's view that such a representation of native peoples of the Northwest Territories was adequate? Does the minister think that 22 members of the native community can be considered as a fair and adequate representation of the population of that part of our country?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker. I was saying that from what I had seen on television, it showed the Indians, both in the audience and those performing, were having a good time. I am not aware of the actual numbers who were invited in various capacities. I am sure the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development will be here and will give adequate answers. If necessary, the government will have an inquiry made.

Mr. Broadbent: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would ask the Acting Prime Minister to have confirmed by investigation if the principal role of the native peoples was to provide entertainment for the white population? Even so, the entertainers were kept in a hall, sitting on the floor between two washrooms. Is this the general approach or attitude with which the guests were invited and the entertainers treated? If that is confirmed, will the Acting Prime Minister assure the House the government will take steps to remove the Commissioner of the Northwest Territories from his position?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, my acquaintance with the Commissioner when I made a visit to the north confirmed that he was treating all citizens and all of the native peoples in a non-discriminatory way. However, if it were discovered that he had been acting in some different manner, appropriate steps would be taken. I cannot accept the statements that have been made by the hon. member without investigation. I was not there. The minister will be here and he will give a reply.

TEXTILES—THE ALLEGED TRANSFER OF PLANTS TO OTHER COUNTRIES

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Is he aware that the Robin Brothers Clothiers Co. Ltd., and Utex Corporation textile companies at Victoriaville are in the process of moving their plant equipment and setting up new plants in Rumania and Colombia, thus endangering employment at Victoriaville even in the textile industry? Is his department aware of that extremely dramatic situation, and is it doing anything to prevent the loss of stable jobs in the textile industry at Victoriaville?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of that particular situation. I will look into it immediately.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I will have to make inquiries on that subject as well.

FINANCE

EFFECT OF INTERVENTION OF BANK OF CANADA TO PROTECT EXCHANGE RATE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO REDUCE INTEREST RATES

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Minister of Finance. It is clear government policy that, as the Prime Minister stated on April 19, and I quote:

—the dollar respond to market forces and that any intervention ... would be only to assure that the float does not have any dirt in it.

It is also clear that the Bank of Canada's recent interventions in support of the Canadian dollar include the selling of securities, which has had the effect of driving up our interest rate levels. Can the minister advise whether such a rise in domestic interest rates is viewed by the government as an acceptable market force at the present time in relation to stabilizing our Canadian dollar exchange level with the American dollar?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, as the Acting Prime Minister pointed out yesterday in response to a question, rising interest rates are not regarded with favour, as a favourable symptom or a favourable response to our general actions. However, it does reflect the competition for available capital in an expanding active economy.

Mr. Stevens: As the minister has confirmed that the interest rate levels are rising, will he now advise if the government has any plans to relieve high interest rate charges against borrowers in Canada, particularly those who have mortgage funds they are now carrying or seek to carry? Are there any plans to ensure that the trade deficit method of financing or high interest rates in Canada will not be carried on the backs of Canadian borrowers?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure whose interest the hon. member is advocating, whether it is the borrowers who must be protected or the lenders. As I say, in this instance the rise in interest rates reflects a greater demand for capital—hence, greater economic activity—than there is capital available. There are ways of providing additional capital: it can be imported, or the money supply can be increased with consequent adverse inflationary effects. Or money could be provided, as has been frequently suggested by the opposition, through some form of government subsidy. We believe at the moment that it is not unreasonable to hope for a suitable accommodation by balancing all these forces. This is a question to which the Minister of Finance is presently addressing himself and undoubtedly he will have some comment to make at the time of the presentation of the budget.

● (1420)

Mr. Stevens: The Acting Minister of Finance has indicated that subsidization is at least part of the government's thinking. Bearing in mind that current interest rates on mortgages in the United States are running at approximately 8.5 per cent whereas in Canada even the NHA rate is more than 10.5 per cent, will the minister tell us whether the government has any plan in mind to subsidize interest rates on behalf of borrowers in Canada?

Mr. Drury: The government would be remiss if it did not explore all possibilities including some which have been suggested and which, on the face of it, appear to be rather impracticable. We are engaged in this assessment and given the usual practice of governments in Canada not to announcing budgetary plans and intentions prior to the presentation of the budget, the hon. member will have to be patient.

MONTREAL—ABILITY OF MARITIME EMPLOYERS' ASSOCIATION TO MEET LOAN COMMITMENTS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is intended for the Minister of Labour but in his absence perhaps I might direct it to the Minister of Transport or the Acting Prime Minister. It relates to the government's guarantee of certain loans secured by the Maritime Employers' Association in respect of programs initiated at Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec. Can the Minister of Transport tell us whether there have been any discussions between his department—perhaps the Acting Prime Minister will deal with that aspect—between the government and the Maritime Employers' Association with respect to the ability of the MEA to meet its commitments to the two principal banks where these loans have been secured and in respect of which the government has given certain guarantees?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The question has been addressed to me: I will have to take it as notice and give an answer tomorrow.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—NUMBER OF CANADIANS REMAINING AND GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO ENSURE SAFETY—RECOGNITION OF NEW REGIME

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Now that the war in Viet Nam has ended, will the hon. gentleman tell the House how many Canadians, including media men, embassy staff, missionaries and aid officials are still in South Viet Nam? How many Vietnamese relatives granted Canadian visas are still there and what measures is the government taking to ensure the safety of these Canadians and relatives?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The information I have is a day or so old and possibly out of date, but on April 24 there were known to be 31 Canadians still in Saigon. This group included a number of journalists and a number of Canadians who planned to leave within a short time. There were 13 Canadians who intended to remain in the country indefinitely, and of these 13, 11 were missionaries. With respect to their safety, it is probable that the territory in which they live is now under PRG control. The PRG has stated that once these foreigners are identified they will be allowed to leave the country if they wish. My hon. friend knows that all Canadians who were in the area were repeatedly warned and given an opportunity to leave before the events culminated yesterday.

Mr. Wagner: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister tell the House whether the government plans to recognize the new regime in South Viet Nam, and when?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, it is really not yet clear exactly who the new regime is. Once it becomes clear, then there will be an opportunity for the government to decide what action to take. But it is much too early to know exactly what the political situation is to justify recognition.

IMMIGRATION

POSSIBILITY OF GRANTING REFUGEE STATUS TO VIETNAMESE IN UNITED STATES CAMPS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Would the minister grant refugee status to some of the thousands of Vietnamese who are now in camps in U.S. staging areas in the Pacific and permit them to come to Canada and, if so, how many?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, my current information, which is still somewhat obscure obviously because of the situation, indicates that between 50 and 100 relatives of Canadians who will sponsor them may have reached Guam. Some others are apparently showing up in places like Bangkok. We are in communication with the Americans in order to get the most current information as to names of people who are on the list that we supplied to them, and I think that later this day, and certainly later this week, we will have a clearer picture and will be proceeding with all reasonable measures to clear their passage to Canada.

With regard to people from Viet Nam who are not relatives but might be claiming refugee status, we will deal with these, as I said the other day, on an individual basis. We have been in touch with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, but there has been no declaration or decision by that agency to declare a mass refugee situation. I think the situation will clarify itself a bit within the next few days when we know where people are gathering and what their status is.

ENERGY

NATURAL GAS—ALBERTA AWARD OF PRICE INCREASE TO TRANS-CANADA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in regard to the report that an Alberta arbitration award has been handed down in a dispute between Gulf Oil and Trans-Canada setting a price for natural gas of $1.15 per thousand cubic feet. Has the minister been in touch with the premier of Alberta as to whether or not this price is now going to be the price for all gas exported from Alberta to Canadian consumers, or what steps does the government propose to take to deal with an increase of from 60 cents per thousand cubic feet to $1.15?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The hon. gentleman will recall that this decision was not unanticipated, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, it was referred to by me in the debate on the Petroleum Administration Act. It would be the government's view that an increase to $1.15 at the wellhead should not take place at this time. Indeed, officials of my department have already met with the Albertan officials to talk about some agreement on an increase, but to a much lower level than that proposed by the arbitration board. I am anticipating meeting the Alberta minister of energy this coming week to have further discussions along this line, and we hope that this will lead to an agreement on a price for natural gas, as of November 1 this year, which could then be made subject to orders in council as provided for in the Petroleum Administration Act, assuming, of course, that that bill comes into law.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of this decision whether it stands or not, in regard to the domestic price of natural gas, may I ask the minister what effect it will have on setting the export price of gas? In view of the fact that it is generally conceded that the minister has in mind a price of $1.60, allowing for transportation, a price of $1.15 would mean that Canadian consumers would be paying a higher price for gas than American consumers. Will the minister be making an announcement within the next few days on the export price, and can he give us any idea whether the action in Alberta will have any effect on the federal government's decision in respect of the export price for natural gas?

● (1430)

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Strictly speaking, Mr. Speaker, it would not have a direct effect on the determination of the export price. I anticipate being able to make an announcement within the next several days in respect of the next step upwards in the export price of gas, but I just confirm again that my efforts will be directed toward keeping down the price of gas to the Canadian consumer very much below the $1.15 level.

AIR TRANSPORT

PROPOSED MONETARY COMPENSATION FOR PREGNANT FLIGHT ATTENDANTS IF REFUSED PERMISSION TO FLY

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South): Mr. Speaker, in view of the important medical facts pointed out in a letter dated April 7 from Dr. Lise Fortier to the vice-president of the Canadian Airlines Flight Attendants Association, will the Minister of Transport assure this House that if his department does succumb to the chauvinistic pressure of the pilots' association and refuses pregnant flight attendants the right to fly it will also legislate due monetary compensation in line with the benefits enjoyed by their pregnant sisters in every other branch of industry?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have asked Mr. McLeish, the Director General of Civil Aeronautics, to meet with the association of the stewardesses and flight attendants in order to have a new look at this problem. They are supposed to meet on May 12 and have discussions about the new regulations which are not going to be adopted before we reach some kind of an agreement with this association.

Mr. Fairweather: And with your own low.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Of course, at the same time we have a joint commitment with labour so we have to reconcile our own regulations with the labour standards of the Minister of Labour.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ALLEGED CANCELLATION OF UNITED NATIONS MEETING BY AUSTRALIA BECAUSE OF ATTENDANCE OF PLO REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, will the Secretary of State for External Affairs advise the House whether Australia recently cancelled a United Nations meeting to be held in Australia because it would have involved the attendance of representatives of the PLO and, if so, did such action jeopardize the membership of Australia in the UN?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have no information on this subject.

UNITED NATIONS CONFERENCE IN TORONTO—CONSISTENCY OF ATTENDANCE OF PLO REPRESENTATIVES WITH CANADIAN ATTITUDE TOWARDS TERRORISM

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the minister to look into that. Could he advise whether the decision to go ahead with the hosting of the UN congress on crime in this country was taken after consideration of whether the presence of PLO representatives in Canada is consistent with the official position of Canada regarding terrorist methods?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the decision of Canada to host this particular conference was taken some time before the PLO was granted observer status at the United Nations. Of course, as my hon. friend knows, Canada voted against granting the PLO observer status at the United Nations.

An hon. Member: You abstained.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I would like to take it that the minister's answer is that this is inconsistent with our policy, but is the minister satisfied that such a decision is in the best interest of this country, in view of the fact that our people overwhelmingly condemn terrorist activity?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, that is not a question related to policy, it is a way by which the hon. member is expressing his own opinion.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

FINANCE

SUGGESTED REDUCTION OF SALES TAX ON AUTOMOBILES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, in view of the serious drop in our automotive and automotive parts trade, will the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce recommend to his Cabinet colleague, the Minister of Finance, that he consider reducing or eliminating the federal sales tax on automobiles and light trucks in his forthcoming budget?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to place that representation before the Minister of Finance. While I am on my feet, it might be of interest to the hon. member to know that investment in the parts industry in Canada has not been as depressed as it has been in recent years. Indeed, there is now a trend indicating some pickup, and the investment in 1974 was the third highest on record.

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Speaker, will the minister consider recommending that where Canadian companies are willing to give their employees a bonus for purchasing a new automobile, that bonus will be allowed as a tax deductible expense?

AGRICULTURE

BEEF CATTLE—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF MINISTER'S STATEMENT CANADA IN DEFICIT POSITION WITH REGARD TO BEEF PRODUCTION

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture and arises from an answer he gave yesterday concerning the status of beef, in which he stated that Canada was in a deficit position. How can the minister reconcile this deficit position with the low price of beef, and when does he expect that beef producers can recover the cost of production?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the fact is well known that we do not produce all the beef we eat in Canada. We have normal exporters to this country that we allow to ship beef on a quota system based on 100 per cent of a five-year average. These include Australia, New Zealand, the United States and Argentina. The stabilization price we have established may not provide all beef farmers with an adequate return, but it does give most of them an adequate return on their productivity. This is a "stop loss" program and is something the beef industry requested.

ENERGY

NATURAL GAS—POSSIBILITY OF FEDERAL INTERVENTION IN APPLICATIONS OF ARCTIC GAS AND FOOTHILLS PIPELINE COMPANIES

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Justice, and it relates to the line of questioning in regard to the cost of natural gas. Is it the minister's intention to have his department intervene at the pipeline hearing before the National Energy Board with reference to the applications of Canadian Arctic Gas Pipeline and Foothills Pipeline Companies? If that is the case, what is the reason for that intervention? Before the minister answers I might mention that the deputy minister of his department has suggested there will be an intervention in a communication with the Canadian Consumers' Association.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I think the Deputy Attorney General indicated that the question of an intervention was being considered, and that consideration is still continuing. The point of that intervention which is being discussed involves the matter of putting before the board a view concerning the public interest.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, the phrase "public interest" could cover a lot of good things and a lot of sins. What public interest in the minister referring to? We are dealing with the law of supply and demand and with pipelines to bring gas out of the Arctic. Does the public interest have relation to considerations of the Department of the Environment or the Department of Indian Affairs? Just what is the public interest?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the consideration would involve all these departments and the questions that have to be resolved in deciding whether we should intervene, as well as the kind of approach we can properly take before the National Energy Board, and the position we might be in when putting that approach before the National Energy Board in view of the other role the government plays in connection with National Energy Board decisions.

AGRICULTURE

POTATOES—POSSIBLE HAZARD TO LIVESTOCK IF USED AS FEED

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture and it arises from his announcement a few days ago that the federal subsidy on potatoes was being extended to those potatoes destined for the livestock feeding industry, particularly cattle feeding. I should like to ask the minister whether he was aware, when this announcement was made, that these potatoes, particularly in western Ontario, are not in cold storage? Was he also aware of the fact that large quantities are either green, rotting or sprouting, which could result in the production of the toxin solamine, which according to the Ontario Ministry of Agriculture, the veterinary branch, is a serious hazard to livestock?

● (1440)

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we are fully aware of that. There are publications probably in every agricultural affice which tell the farmers how to feed them to make sure that there are no sprouts and so on on them. I want to make it pretty clear that we offered this program in the first instance to all the provinces but, because of the normal marketing conditions and the normal supply situation in Quebec and Ontario at this time of the year, they did not think that they would have any to feed the livestock. We have said they should be cautious in feeding cattle to make sure that if there are a tremendous number of sprouts these are removed. The potatoes should be introduced gradually into a feeding program, and the livestock should not be put on a complete diet of potatoes all at once. In addition for swine they should be cooked.

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, in the light of the fact that the cattle producers, particularly in western Ontario, have not been feeding potatoes over the last few years to their cattle would the minister, rather than rely simply on the government publication which I believe is No. 1527, issue a press release or some kind of information bulletin so that these producers are aware of the dangers and are also aware of the availability of this information, either through their provincial or federal Department of Agriculture offices.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, most of the cattle producers I know—and I am sure the hon. member would not want to insinuate that cattle producers in Ontario do not know how to feed cattle—are amongst the most expert in the cattle industry in all of Canada. I will check with my officials to see whether we think it is necessary to do this, but the people I spoke to who want to feed this are expert cattle feeders.

Oral Questions

AIR CANADA

SUGGESTED ENLARGEMENT OF TERMS OF REFERENCE OF ESTEY INQUIRY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. During the adjournment debate on Monday, April 28 I requested that Judge Estey's inquiry cover the Air Canada finance branch in Winnipeg. The parliamentary secretary, in answer to me, stated that nothing prevents Judge Estey investigating the financial activities of Air Canada. Will the minister now direct the judge to investigate the billing and labour problems at the finance branch in Winnipeg.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think I stated in the House that before the terms of reference were finalized we met with the judge and asked him if he had all the powers to do what he intends to do and what we wanted him to do and he said he had. So, he will decide. I will not tell him to do anything. He is a free man. I think he is intelligent and strong and I do not see how I could decently tell him to go here and there or do this and that.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I cannot accept all the explanation of the minister. In light of the serious mechanical problems Air Canada is having with its aircraft, such as depressurization problems, engine failures on DC-9's and L10-11's and recent emergency landings, will the minister have Judge Estey inquire into these serious mechanical breakdowns before there is a major fatality.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is in accordance with the facts to infer that the safety of Air Canada aircraft is weaker than that of the aircraft of other companies. I think sometimes some of these things are probably for the better. For example, it has been said I think in the House, I do not know whether or not by the hon. gentleman, that there was an engine explosion over Ottawa. This was not true at all. It was a reverter which fell down and this happens very often. I do not think there is any need to do what the hon. member asks. I invite the hon. gentleman to visit Air Canada with all the technicians he wishes and visit the repair maintenance shops, so that once and for all he will be either satisfied or dissatisfied with the work.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

ALLEGED FALSE ADVERTISING BY NATIONAL CITIZENS COALITION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Fernand E. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

As the minister is responsible for false, deceitful, misleading and fraudulent advertising, could he tell this House what steps his department intends to take against the National Citizens Coalition Inc. for a false, deceitful and misleading advertisement published today on page 13 of the Globe and Mail concerning Bill C-44?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I saw the advertisement. That organization has no commercial interest and cannot be prosecuted for misleading advertising. However, it could be examined by the officials of the Department of Justice to see whether it violates Criminal Code provisions on hate propaganda. Such advertising, Mr. Speaker, is closely related to the comments made by a CBC reporter in Ottawa whose professional ethics and qualifications should be checked, because for the second time in a few weeks, he made a report last night on the salaries of federal members which was also misleading, unfair and hateful.

STRIKE OF LONGSHOREMEN IN QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MINISTER'S MEETING WITH UNION OFFICIALS

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I want to put a question to the Minister of Labour.

Since the minister was supposed to meet yesterday with the representatives of the International Longshoremen's Association, can he tell us whether the meeting has taken place and if so, can he explain to the House the results of the meeting?

[English]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Yes, I can, Mr. Speaker. I can advise the hon. member that I did meet with the union leadership of the longshoremen yesterday. I indicated to them that before any meaningful discussion could take place with regard to any of the grievances they had against their employers or with regard to the legislation they would have to desist in defying the law, obey the law and go back to work; then such discussions could take place in the normal course of events.

INDUSTRY

MICROSYSTEMS—METHOD BY WHICH GOVERNMENT TRYING TO RECOVER INVESTMENT AND AMOUNT EXPECTED TO BE RECOVERED

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Would the minister outline for the House the way in which he is personally attempting to recover the more than $37 million invested by the Canadian government in Microsystems. Also in view of the fact that Northern Electric will, as it turns out, not lose a penny on its investment in Microsystems, will the minister tell the House how much of the more than $37 million the government expects to recover from Northern Electric.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is aware that he cannot ask a question worded in that manner.

[Mr. Leblanc (Laurier).]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

NEWFOUNDLAND—REASON FOR DELAY IN APPOINTING JUDGE TO SUPREME COURT AND INTRODUCING LEGISLATION ESTABLISHING APPELLATE COURT

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. I should like to ask the minister when he proposes to appoint a judge to fill the vacancy on the Supreme Court of Newfoundland, considering that vacancy has been in existence for almost seven months, is causing a severe workload on the three judges and making it very difficult for this court to sit in on appeals against one of its members judgments.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I look forward to the possibility of doing this very soon.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the minister if he can explain the delay and, secondly, tell the House when he intends to proceed with the legislation which has been on the order paper for sometime now to create an appellate court for the province of Newfoundland.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, part of the delay relates to the reorganization of the courts and the impact this might have upon appointments. However, as usual the search for well qualified persons to receive these appointments is a significant matter and not one taken lightly and adds to the over-all delay.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ENSURE SAFETY OF NORMAN AND JEAN JOHNSON

Mr. Sean O'Sullivan (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The minister today advised the House that the PRG had given the Canadian government assurance that Canadians held captive in Viet Nam would be freed as soon as they were identified. As the acting minister last week advised that Norman and Joan Johnson, two missionaries from Hamilton, had been located in a POW camp, can the Secretary of State for External Affairs tell us why these Canadians have not been given their freedom and what specific action the government is taking to ensure that the communist forces do not make that assurance another of their broken promises?

● (1450)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we are making representations through channels which are available to us, and we will continue to do that with respect to the missionaries to whom the hon. member refers. My latest information is that both persons are in good health and that Mr. Johnson himself is permitted to conduct missionary activity within a certain area.

AIR TRANSPORT

USE OF FRENCH BY AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLER—DATE OF REPORT OF TASK FORCE

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, on April 28 I raised the question of the possible danger to the air travelling public as a result of other than the English language being used in air to ground communications in Quebec, and the Acting Prime Minister at that time promised an answer yesterday, which I did not receive. Today, I would like to ask him or the Minister of Transport, in light of the fact that the Ministry of Transport has itself investigated and reported on two recent Canadian aircraft accidents in which English-French language usage and confusion were contributing factors to the accidents, when we can expect the report of the federal government's task force outlining definite regulations concerning this important matter.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I know that people in my department, and certainly those in charge of security, are supposed to meet with the pilot association, CALPA. They have produced a brief, and immediately after this we tried to reach some conclusion.

[Translation]

USE OF FRENCH BY AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS IN QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Transport.

In view of the fact that last week, if I am correct, a meeting was held between representatives of the Quebec Air Traffic Controllers's Association and officers in charge of air communications within his department, could he give us some idea as to what extent French will be used in different areas of the province of Quebec and tell us the results of the meeting?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the department and a group from Quebec had agreed that on a temporary, transitional and experimental basis, French could be used in some airports. However, this did not apply to Montreal and was valid only with French-speaking pilots. Now the whole situation will be subject to an overall review as a result of the meeting to be held with the national pilots' association.

SERVICE FOR SOUTHWESTERN MANITOBA AND SOUTHEASTERN SASKATCHEWAN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Southwestern Manitoba and southeastern Saskatchewan communities have been without air service for over a year now. Can the Minister of Transport inform the House, and the people of this particular area when air service will be provided?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I could be mistaken, but I think I wrote to Mr. Evans of the government of Manitoba yesterday saying that we are ready to buy two Saunders aircraft and to pay part of the maintenance and operation costs of a line between Brandon, Yorkton and all the other cities. There is agreement. There was disagreement on the share of each government. I am not sure, but I think this point has been settled.

POSSIBILITY AIR CANADA WILL PROVIDE SERVICE TO BRANDON—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Arising from the minister's statement on March 10, as recorded in Hansard page 3964, that one month from that date Air Canada, at the request of the government of Saskatchewan, was going to produce a plan for a regional air carrier which would include Brandon airport, and also in view of the fact that the third level carrier the minister has just referred to will be quite uneconomic until it is supplemented by this proposed regional jet service, when will the report be available, and will it indicate that Air Canada will be the designated carrier to provide this additional service?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker, Air Canada is not the carrier which will deliver this service. The government of Manitoba will decide which carrier will provide the service in that particular case. This is part of our transportation policy. We know that we have many things to correct in the field of regional services, and I hope that I can soon be in a position to inform the House what this policy is.

DATE OF LEGISLATION TO PROTECT CONFIDENTIALITY OF COMPUTER-STORED INFORMATION—SUGGESTED LACK OF SAFEGUARDS AT POLICE INFORMATION CENTRE

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. Does the minister still intend to introduce enabling legislation which will allow the government to regulate federal computerized data banks to ensure the preservation of the civil liberties of Canadians on whom the federal government has computerized files, and if so, when?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the intention of the government is to deal with information it has on citizens in connection with a bill dealing with the Human Rights and Interests Commission.

Mr. Beatty: Is it consistent with government policy that the Canadian police information centre computer has at present some 6,556 files on Canadians who are under surveillance but who have not been charged with any offence, that these files can remain open indefinitely until the local police decide to close them, that no provision is made at all for notifying a person on whom a file was opened and who is ultimately not charged with any offence and that these computerized files can be assessed by any one of 668 terminals across Canada and the United States?

Mr. Lang: I understand the representation by the hon. member, and I will also discuss this matter with my colleague the Solicitor General in the context of forthcoming bills.

HOUSING

MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO REDUCE AND INCREASE NUMBER OF STARTS

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): My question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. The banks increased their mortgage lending rates last week, which will have a serious effect on the housing market this year. In view of the fact that the minister and his officials have contacted bank officials regarding the effects of the increase, will the minister report the results of his consultations and assure the House that the banks will roll back the rate increase?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I certainly cannot give the hon. member such an assurance. Discussions with lenders, builders and client groups is a regular process on my part and the part of my officials. We are watching the situation very carefully and doing everything possible to make certain that a stable mortgage market exists and that housing is available for Canadians.

Mr. Gilbert: Peter Carter, the assistant general manager of the Royal Bank, in a speech yesterday said that mortgage interest rates are probably at their lowest level right now and that they will rise sharply during the year. He estimated there would be about 180,000 starts this year. What does the minister intend to do with regard to controlling interest rates and increasing housing starts?

Mr. Danson: I do not control interest rates. We respond to the money markets as they are, and we make it possible for Canadians to buy housing. We are trying to do that and to find rental accommodation under extremely difficult circumstances and in an uncertain economic climate, but I can assure the hon. member that, in a situation which might be relatively short-term in its consequences, I will not panic by introducing long-term measures.

POSSIBLE TAKEOVER OF ARGUS CORPORATION BY POWER CORPORATION—ALLEGED CONFLICT OF VIEW BETWEEN CABINET MINISTERS ON APPROPRIATENESS OF ACTION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. Could he tell the House whether the Prime Minister was expressing government policy regarding the proposed takeover of Argus Corporation by Power Corporation when he said he did not know whether it was a good thing, or whether the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce was expressing government policy when he told his constituents that he was against it? Does the government pay any attention to the views of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the second part of the question, the Minister of Industry, Trade of Commerce is a valuable minister who contributes greatly to the strength and stability of the Canadian economy.

On the first part of the question, because there is some difference of opinion and some uncertainty, we have appointed a royal commission to investigate the general subject.

DEPARTMENT OF MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION—TRAVEL EXPENSES

Question No. 705—Mr. Stevens:

1. In each fiscal year ending March 31, 1972, 1973 and 1974, and for the six month period ending September 30, 1974, what was the aggregate expenditure by the Department of Manpower and Immigration for travel abroad by (a) the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and his immediate staff (b) departmental staff (c) the staff of boards, commissions, tribunals, Crown corporations or other similar agencies reporting to the Minister (d) others whose expenses were paid in part or in whole directly or indirectly by the government?

2. In the case of an expenditure in excess of $200 (a) what was the purpose of the foreign trip (b) what was the furthest destination (c) what is the name of the person(s) who took the trip (d) how long was the person(s) outside the country (e) what was the nature of the expenditure (f) how many others were in the party making the trip?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. The aggregate expenditure by the Department of Manpower and Immigration for travel abroad by: (a) The minister and his immediate staff for the fiscal year: 1971-72, $7,214.75; 1972-73, $2,667.52; 1973-74, $8,494.87; and 1974-75, for period ending Sept. 30/74, $3,051.80; (b), (c) and (d): Requested information is not readily available. To provide an accurate reply would entail a lengthy and costly examination of departmental records at all offices in Canada and at headquarters, as well as the hiring of additional staff to carry out the research.

2. See below.

CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN UNITED NATIONS VOTES

Question No. 1,224—Mr. Cossitt:

1. (a) In how many votes has Canada participated at the United Nations since April 30, 1968 (b) how many times did it vote (i) in the affirmative (ii) in the negative (c) how many times did it abstain?

2. In the case of each abstention, what was (a) the specific question involved (b) the reason Canada abstained (c) the name and job designation of the highest authority in the government deciding upon such abstention?

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): It would be a task of considerable magnitude to reply in full to the Hon. member's question. As he will be aware, there are literally thousands of issues that have been dealt with by the various institutions, committees, organs and agencies of the United Nations system in the period in question. In the belief, however, that the main thrust of the question has to do with voting in Plenary meetings of the annual General Assembly, the focus of the response set out below is upon resolutions coming before that body for discussion and voting. 1. (a) Number of votes Canada has participated in since the April 30th, 1968 (excluding all resolutions etc., adopted without vote), 725; (b) (i) affirmative votes, 496; (ii) negative votes, 49; (iii) abstentions, 180.

2. (a) The titles or a text of each of the above 180 resolutions on which Canada abstained can be provided to the Hon. member if he so wishes. (b) Many of the 180 resolutions are long and complicated, and to provide a meaningful explanation of every abstention would require a substantial examination of each in its proper context. The important point, however, is that an abstention does not represent failure to take a position. Like a positive or negative vote, it reflects a decision to take this particular position that has been arrived at by the government after consideration of all the relevant factors. Among the circumstances which can influence the government to register an abstention are the following: the government may favour a resolution generally but cannot support a particular part of it; it may wish to express dissatisfaction with a proposal rather than outright opposition; it may not wish to appear to be favouring one party or another so as not to prejudice the possibility of playing an eventual mediating role. (c) Under the authority of the minister or the cabinet as appropriate.

FEDERAL ASSISTANCE TO SABLE FISH PACKING

Question No. 1,457—Mr. Hogan:

2. Who is the operator of the service to which the Camille Marcoux has been supplied?

3. For what reason was no mention made of such subsidy in the answer to Question No. 1,128?

4. Has the government had a request from the Government of British Columbia for financial subsidies in support of the ferry service forming part of the Trans Canada Highway, namely the Nanaimo-Horseshoe Bay service and, if so, will the government Table the exchange of correspondence?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Transport and the Prime Minister's and Privy Council Offices as follows: 1. None.

2. Société des Traversiers de Québec, 25 Place Marché Champlain, Québec, Québec.

3. No subsidy was paid.

4. The government of British Columbia has requested the federal government to provide financial support for the ferry service between Nanaimo and Horseshoe Bay. FEDERAL ASSISTANCE—PROMOTION OF FARM MACHINERY MANUFACTURING IN WEST

Question No. 1,584—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

1. Is the government considering financial or other assistance such as stockpiling raw materials to promote farm machinery manufacturing in the West?

2. Is the government considering setting up emergency repair parts depots in major centres so that farm machinery repair parts may be available within 72 hours?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Regional Economic Expansion and Industry, Trade and Commerce as follows: 1. The Department of Regional Economic Expansion continues to support actively the establishment of new farm machinery manufacturing facilities and the expansion of existing operations in designated regions of the West under the authority of the Regional Development Incentives Act. The department is also undertaking new initiatives in both Saskatchewan and Manitoba to investigate problems and opportunities existing in the industry. In Manitoba, a joint federal-provincial committee has been established to identify areas where joint action between the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and Manitoba could lead to new initiatives in the manufacturing and servicing sectors of the farm machinery industry. Under a Canada-Saskatchewan Subsidiary Agreement on Iron, Steel and Other Related Metal Industries, Canada and the provinces are actively supporting and promoting the establishment of new farm machinery manufacturing facilities as well as the expansion and diversification of the existing industry base.

2. The federal government is not considering the establishment of emergency parts depots for farm machinery. In this regard, it should be noted that the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta already have legislation in place intended to ensure that spare parts for farm machinery are available within a reasonable time period and that no additional measures are considered appropriate at this time.

CHANGES IN REGULATIONS CONCERNING ADVERTISING

Question No. 1,588—Mr. Herbert:

1. Is it intended that announced changes to the regulations concerning magazine advertising, to be effective January 1, 1976, contain regulations affecting the Canadian subsidiaries of those foreign parent companies that advertise in foreign magazines distributed in Canada?

2. Does the advertising of the foreign parent effectively give the subsidiaries a Canadian advertising presence?

3. Will any changes be proposed to tax regulations affecting the advertising for trade purposes of Canadian companies which advertise in foreign magazines that are also circulated in Canada?

4. Will tourist agencies and tourist attractions be permitted deductible expense advertising after January 1, 1976 in American magazines that also have a Canadian circulation?

5. Will Canadian merchandising outlets be permitted deductible expense advertising on American television outlets after January 1, 1976 if their advertising is directed at the American market for export purposes?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of National Revenue): The answers to this question will depend upon any changes in regulations concerning advertising expense which will be determined by the nature of amendments to section 19 of the Income Tax Act approved by parliament.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

[English]

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

CABINET COMMUTATION OF COURT SENTENCES

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of debating a matter of grave concern requiring immediate and urgent consideration, namely:

1. That several convicted murderers have been sentenced to hang very shortly;

2. That, in certain defined circumstances, the Governor in Council has power to commute the death penalty;

3. That the application of this power may be exercised, as in the past decade;

4. That the Canadian Police Association and other police associations oppose the commutation of the death penalty, particularly where clemency has not been recommended;

5. That a recent study in the United States has proven that capital punishment is a deterrent;

6. That this matter is a grave and urgent matter because the Governor in Council must make a decision on at least one case tomorrow, and others soon.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In accordance with Standing Order 26 the hon. member has given the Chair notice of his intention to seek, under the emergency provisions of that order, to set aside a specific time for debate beyond the regular hours of the sitting of the House of Commons.

I have said before, on virtually the same subject on other occasions, that the emergency provisions pursuant to Standing Order 26 ought to be distinguished, or their use ought to be distinguished from those items which, in a regular legislative program of the House of Commons and regular legislative consideration, can come before the House by way of amendments to existing statutes, or in any case will come before it in other ways.

The importance of capital punishment and the timeliness of the topic is not denied. The fact of the matter is, however, that under almost no circumstances can a review of that law be regarded as an emergency provision rather than a continuing legislative concern of this House. In my opinion, therefore, it does not constitute a proper subject for debate under Standing Order 26.

THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT, THE SALARIES ACT AND THE PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARIES ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING SALARIES AND ALLOWANCES

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council) moved that Bill C-44, to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act, the Salaries Act and the Parliamentary Secretaries Act, be read the third time and do pass.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I had expected that the minister would have endeavoured to explain some of the circumlocutions in connection with this matter that he indulged in on the other occasions that he spoke. That is not to be, however.

All the explanations given by him so far have about them an uncertainty that is difficult to comprehend.

I must tell you at once, sir, how I have missed the House. There is something about the drama of the House of Commons that has always had a magnetic influence upon me regardless of whether this institution touches the heights or sometimes the nadir of debate.

I have read Hansard day by day, and I find after my absence that we are back to about the same place we were when I left which indicates that, despite the changes in the rules, expectation is a long way from achievement. I intend to give my views. I am not carried away by sentimental considerations. I have an affection for this institution that does not dim with the years. I happen to be the only Canadian alive who is a member of Her Majesty's Privy Council, earlier called the Imperial Privy Council and today the Privy Council of the United Kingdom. Mr. Pearson, who passed away, left me as the sole Canadian survivor of an institution that has meant so much through the years to the unity of the commonwealth.

As one who has received an expression of views in respect of this bill I am not going to go into detail, but these views go right down to the schools of the nation which are asking themselves where this parliament is going. I received in the mail yesterday, as did many other members, a message from the Grade 13 students of Nepean High School on a matter which deeply concerns them. They said the real issue is what is happening to Canada. The letter reads in part:

> There is a frantic race for enormous increases in salaries and wages which, as the Governor of the Bank of Canada has pointed out, will give only momentary advantage until the resulting increases in costs push prices still higher and the end result is worse than the original condition—
> No labour union will stop, even our teachers will not, and now it appears that parliament will not.

The letter goes on to discuss the general situation of the inflationary trend. It reads:

> At the present rate the Canadian dollar will be totally wiped out in less than ten years. Is it the intention of the present generation to hand on to us, the rising generation, worthless savings, a wrecked economy and a complete barrier to our making our own start?

In addition to that there have been advertisements. I am going to read them all. There is one which one thinks the minister would answer. It appeared in Saturday's Globe and Mail and is entitled "Ouch." It sets out in detail what will happen in respect of pensions. It speaks of retirement with security for life, at 40. It shows that at the end of year ten after this plan is to come into effect, excluding the amount on which income tax is not payable, a member's salary will be $53,675.95.

Many here do not appear to realize that public opinion has been aroused as I have never known it to be aroused before. I am speaking because I am concerned. In the United Kingdom parliaments have been called various names. One such parliament was called the "Breeches Parliament," and another the "Do Nothing Parliament." I only hope that this parliament, because of what is taking place, will not be known in history as the "Golden Fleece Parliament."

I realize that all around me are those who disagree with me. I do not expect others always to be in accord with the views I express, because that is the essence of parliament. Speaking as an ordinary member of parliament having no responsibility or position here, I find it difficult to understand how a political party, which ran an election in May, June, and up to July 8 last on the basis that what was needed to save this nation was a freeze in prices, wages and incomes in general, should now change its position.

Things are much worse today, much worse than they were then. When the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) advanced that concept, I did not like it. He described it as a price freeze. Speaking on behalf of the Conservative Party I said, on May 8, in the constituency being contested by Mr. Madill, that "if the party stands on this price freeze policy without utilizing the other seven or eight devastating criticisms which can be used against the government, we will freeze out one million votes." I will not say it would have been different, but I do say this: if we were right in April, May, June and July of 1974, are we not right today?

What is the position? Have things improved? Has inflation been controlled? Two and a half years ago the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) announced with great bravado—he was in this country—that he had great news for us, "Inflation is no more." Last June he said, "Well, there is some inflation, but if my government is returned, I will wrestle it into the ground." I have not noticed many falls since last July.

Go across this country. Speak to the average Canadian. He is deeply concerned and disturbed over the way things are going. There is loss of confidence in our society. Watergate has contributed to that, even though our system comes under the monarchy. If Nixon had been a prime minister under the monarchy, he would have been out as soon as the earliest revelations were made.

People are asking, what is parliament doing? What has it done? Today we heard the sorts of answers given by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) and one or two other ministers. They say, "We are looking into it." There are strikes in Montreal. The law is being totally defied. And what is the government doing? This is not restricted to Montreal. There are other cases across the country. And what is the government doing? The law is broken. Parliament made an order, and what has been ordered is decried and defied. And the government, in its gutless way, answers, "We are looking into it." The Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) looks utterly pious when he says to this House, "We are looking into this." Well, look into it, look into the absolute defiance of the law, and the total disregard of an order of parliament.

Sir, parliament is under suspicion. The use of lewd words in the House nas not added to the dignity of the institution. I suppose this has become part of our way of life. Sir, today I am speaking in a way which is not acceptable to many of my colleagues. I have been in that position before. I think back to 1963, to the condemnation heaped on my government in connection with its devaluation policy and its stand with respect to the propogation and extension of nuclear weapons. Some said that position was heresy. It is not so today. These things today are accepted. Successive Liberal governments have continued that devaluation which greatly increased our trade. They kept it for six or seven years. When they got rid of it, our trade was greatly reduced.

I cannot understand the minister. He is an experienced man. He held a top position in the civil service; possibly that is why he is uncertain. The barrenness of his explanation of the 50 per cent increase proposed originally is almost unbelievable. Public opinion was aroused, and the alternative proposal was brought in. In some ways the alternative is worse than the original. This question has been dealt with; I will not repeat the arguments which have been advanced.

Sir, it strikes me as passing strange that the reason given for this legislation is this: it was felt that members were receiving insufficient reward for their services. When I and the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) first came in the House, we had $4,000 a year. I came in during the days of war. We had none of this ancillary assistance which now costs added thousands of dollars. But today there is a demand for more, and the explanation given is this: the government wants to assure the average member a reasonable compensation for his work. I agree with that. I agree to this extent—there must be an addition to meet the increased cost of living. We should not find ourselves discriminated against.

• (1520)

This increase is 33 per cent. Never in our history have we had as many labour strikes as there are now and have been in the past few months. In 1974, 93 million working days were lost in Canada, three and a half million more than in 1973. We have the highest labour strike situation of any country in the world with the exception of Italy.

Wage demands go up and up. I can understand that as living costs go up. On the other hand there are corporations that are making unconscienable profits. There is open season on the Canadian consumer. The Combines Investigation Act is only touched. There has been no action by this government that was going to wrestle the problem.

This is supposed to benefit the private members. Most of them are having difficulty here with their families. I then ask why this bill provides the most terrific increases for the Prime Minister and the ministers of the Crown. This is their own legislation which they have introduced. It is a bill for which the government is responsible.

Surely ministers of the Crown have a solicitude for the average Canadian. Charity begins at home. Why, in addition to the regular increase in indemnities, have they added an extra $15,000 a year for themselves? Why that? Is that to benefit the Canadian people? Is it because the various ministers who constitute this government are irreplaceable at present rates? I have only to ask the question to get the reply.

Is this participatory democracy? It certainly is participation in a grab by the ministers, from the Prime Minister on down. I can just see them sitting there saying, "If we can get some kind of agreement with the opposition, find out what they think, we can bring it in and slide in an extra allowance for ourselves."

I think this is a wonderful government. I think any government is wonderful that has members connected with some departments for which they are totally unqualified, and I would have no difficulty in filling those names in. They will receive $15,000 or more a year in addition to the increased indemnity.

I was away when this legislation was brought in, but I made my position very clear the next day. The minister who is responsible smiles. I do not blame him. I can just see his eyes brightening as he sees this additional amount which is retroactive to July 8. What an example for the Canadian people. There was no inflation. There is now. The government said it would wrestle it, but nothing whatsoever has been done to bring about any restoration of a reasonable price in our country.

What about the Conservative party? As a Conservative I find it hard to understand. This party raised the standard all over the country, "Inflation is destroying us." The leader was right. A few months later this party, with the exception of a few I am going to refer to, joined together with the government and other members in the House to bring about a situation that can only add to the fires of inflation.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Everywhere across this country the working man will say, "You complain when we ask for a 35, 40 or 50 per cent increase. What about the parliament of Canada, the custodian of the Canadian conscience?" What about it? How they rushed in order to secure the benefits and emoluments of a vast increase in indemnity!

I mentioned the freeze policy a moment ago. This salaries' policy means that gasoline will be added to the fires of inflation everywhere in this nation, for what parliament does, why should labour be denied? I simply ask it.

Is the parliament of Canada to become the pacesetter of salaries? The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien), who has done very well in his position, said the other day that the government must not become the pacesetter of salaries. He said Canada will not go bankrupt as a result of pay raises for civil servants, but the government must avoid becoming a pacesetter for industry. To me, it is beyond anything that this party would permit itself to support. It will simply add to the fires of inflation everywhere in the nation.

This legislation is inflationary. It is also imitationary. Unlike other Prime Ministers who preceded me, and I am not speaking of them in any disrespectful way, I have no wealth. When I pass away, no part ever having been removed and no assistance having been given at any time to me by any fund, it will amount to about 12 per cent of the lowest of the amounts of the last three Prime Ministers.

Provision was made that former Prime Ministers should be entitled to a pension. That was brought in by the Pearson government. Then there was a little addendum. Every other country in the world said a pension is paid no matter where its out going Prime Minister goes. In Canada provision was made that it should not be paid so long as a person remained in politics or in public life. Isn't that a strange situation?

Members of parliament are in a secondary position with regard to the Order of Canada. I will never have that order, so I am not speaking as one who will be included. The only people who are excluded, with the exception of a very limited number, are members of parliament. They do not have that practice in the United Kingdom. Why do they have it here? Civil servants have said that those who contribute to their country in the House of Commons or the Senate shall be denied any award. There is discrimination on every hand.

I followed the debates here. I built up great admiration for many who sit in opposition. I know it may be unusual to say so, but I am thinking of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). He came to parliament in 1942, I think it was in December. After the election of 1958 there was a hiatus—he was out for a period of almost five years. The stand he has taken in this House on this issue will live for a very long while.

• (1530)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I say that with deep admiration for those who stand, and sometimes with a feeling of deep compassion for those who don't. It was his greatest hour. I was very surprised, when he brought up the question about those amendments which were made in the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, that any of our people would argue that those amendments could be made in derogation of every principle of parliamentary government.

I cannot go further than to say that the ruling made by Your Honour adds lustre to the Speakership in this country.

I shall not get applause for saying these things, but there is a day coming. Do not say the people of Canada will forget. To me, it is difficult to understand.

I look over the vote. Everyone is entitled to vote as he pleases. I do not think sufficient attention has been given to those who stood. While I was abroad I endeavoured to find out through the press which members stood against the bill. All I could find was that some 17 members did so. I think honour should be done to those members in my party who took their stand.

I am told there was consultation. Mr. Speaker, they never came near me—they would not take the chance. Never a word! I have been in parliament for 35 years and I love the institution. Not once was any suggestion made to me that the party would take the stand it ultimately did. Every honour should be given to those who opposed this bill, for example, the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Bawden), the hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo (Mr. Beatty), the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt), the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling), the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga), the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen), the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies)—one of the greatest economists in the country. I continue: the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave), the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn), the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington), the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon), the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro), the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan), the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. O'Sullivan).

Isn't it interesting that the two youngest members of the House should have taken that stand—the members for Hamilton-Wentworth and for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo? Then there was the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers), and the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker).

I shall not stop there. I shall refer to others. The hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) showed he had courage; he does not run away from things; when there are difficulties he does not go to Europe; when his party is in difficulties he does not disappear as some did in 1963. Then there were the NDP members—the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin), the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman), the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes). Sir they stood.

Now I go back to 1963 when Mr. Pearson, following the election, decided to get support from the other parties and bring in a measure to increase the indemnity. I have made it clear that I would have no objection to an increase equivalent to the rise in the cost of living—none whatever. But I would stand to the end against back-dating it to election day, months and months before. Just imagine the grab-bag. Thousands of sheckels! How many of you were conscripted? How many of you said there should be an increase in the indemnity? There was not a word said by the Prime Minister of Canada on that subject. Things are worse today than they were then. The first thing I say is this: whatever the increase might be, it should not apply until the next election so that the people might have a word to say regarding it.

Now I shall quote from a statement I made in the House of Commons on July 29, 1963. The person to whom I was referring said:

> My position, in a word, is this: I think the indemnities should be increased, and that the salaries of the ministers and of the leader of the government and the allowance to the Leader of the Opposition should be increased. I express myself more freely in this because what I say in regard to the salaries of the ministers, I wish to apply equally to the salary of the Leader of the Opposition. I think that while these increases are justifiable on the merits of the case, they should not take effect during this parliament but should come into effect after a general election, when the country has had an opportunity to return to parliament members in whom it has confidence under the new legislation as passed.

Do you know who said that? It was William Lyon Mackenzie King who, until recent years, was regarded in Liberal circles as worthy of credence and worthy to be followed. He said that on June 29, in the year 1920. I adopt his views. It is nothing new to accept them. They represent a principle which must be accepted. Otherwise, what does it mean? We go through an election. We raise our standard, endeavouring to change the government because of inflation and the failure of the government to act. Then, lo and behold, the negatives of May, June and July become the affirmatives of today. To me, that is difficult to understand.

Naturally people ask: what about yourself? Well, I have never accepted the old age pension because the contribution made by me at the time I became eligible was so out of proportion to the amount I would receive that I refused to take it.

Second, in 1963 I returned over $12,000, being the amount of the increase which would be in effect until the next election. Because I believe in this institution, I suggest to the members of the government party that they follow the same course, even though the Prime Minister and his cabinet made the recommendation that these vast increases should be given to them.

• (1540)

I do not want to take very much longer; I simply ask, where are we going? I have studied this bill, and the Prime Minister will get about $79,000. That is not peanuts even for a millionaire.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is $69,000.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, $69,000. Then we are to be given a 7 per cent increase each year to cover inflation. This means that the government believes that we will be in this inflationary trend for some time, and we will as long as this government is in power. In a period of ten years, according to the estimates of economists, under this plan the Prime Minister will be securing $156,585. Where is the government wrestling inflation? There is no answer.

Let me go back to the days when I was Prime Minister. We had to pay $5,000 a year rent for 24 Sussex Drive; that is to say, Mr. St. Laurent did, I did when I followed him, and Mr. Pearson did after me. This rental payment has been done away with. Neither did we have any armoured dreadnoughts; we supplied our own cars and received the same amount that all members of the cabinet received—$2,000 a year. We had to pay part of the chauffeur's fees and allowances, because part of the time he did some work around 24 Sussex Drive. When I went on holidays the Government of Canada and the people did not pay the expenses. I suppose that was wrong, but that was our idea of responsibility. We kept the expense of operating 24 Sussex Drive down to a few hundred dollars.

This government is profligate with the Canadian taxpayers' money. I need only recite some figures that have come out to tell the story clearly. There have been fabulous expenditures to make the Prime Minister's office attractive so that a person with artistic taste will feel at home. In 1970-71 the total expenditure on the Centre Block office was $1,042. It was one of the finest offices in Canada. The President of the United States came here and said what an attractive office it was. But in 1971-72 renovations cost $28,319 and refurnishings $41,733, for a total of $70,000.

Just what is going on? Whose money is this? By 1974-75 the total amount spent on renovations was $45,907 and on refurnishings $41,838, for a total of $87,745. What does this mean? When the cabinet spends in this way, there is encouragement to all parts of Canada to do the same. As far as the East Block is concerned, very little has been spent; total expenditures from 1968 to 1975 amount to only $6,000 odd.

I come now to 24 Sussex Drive. I am told that some would like 24 Sussex Drive to have all the attractiveness of an Arab sheik's home. The total amount spent on renovations and refurnishings between 1968 and 1975 is $286,503, comprising $199,146 for renovations and $87,357 for refurnishings. Were these expenditures ever discussed in the House? They were not, because there is no control today on the part of the House of Commons over expenditures—though there is some hope in some of the changes that you, Sir, have in mind.

I now come to Harrington Lake, the summer place. During my period of office we saved it, and I think total expenditure was about $50. But since 1968 the amount spent on renovations has been $20,953 and on refurnishings $4,608, for a total of $25,561. Such an orgy of expenditure on the part of the leader of a government leads to a looseness that has no regard to the effect it has on inflation within the country.

If there is any doubt up to now about what I have in mind, let me say I intend to vote against this bill, and to do so proudly. However, I know the bill will carry because of the silence that accompanies my remarks. Truth hurts, Mr. Speaker. It sometimes takes a long while to travel to some minds, but truth does hurt. I hope that at this time there will be a realization of what this bill is going to mean. No one need tell me that the Government of Canada had in mind the interests of private members. In giving them an increase, the increases for ministers of the Crown are out of all proportion, and for the Prime Minister it is totally unjustified.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on third reading in this debate to do two things. One is to pay tribute to one particular member of the House; the second is to state briefly our reasons for opposing this bill and to outline an alternative salary increase which we think would be justified.

Before I do that I want to point out that I deliberately waited in my seat for a few seconds to see whether the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Sharp) would get to his feet to reply to an extremely serious and, if it is not inappropriate for me to say so, extremely able speech by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). Today we heard a former Prime Minister of this country take part in a very important debate in terms of its real and symbolic significance in the country, yet we have heard no reply on the part of the government to the serious points raised by that right hon. member. Obviously the Acting Prime Minister and other Cabinet ministers have decided to sit the whole issue out.

Yesterday we were at the report stage of the debate, and no minister of the Crown spoke even to the government's own amendments. They were introduced and moved without any speeches to justify the position on what is, after all, a government bill. I hope this afternoon to hear a minister of the Crown, particularly the Acting Prime Minister, outline as best as can be done the government's justification for this bill, and also respond to the serious points raised by the right hon. member for Prince Albert. Surely it is an ultimate admission of shame on the part of the government if ministers do not reply to that right hon. member's serious contribution in this House, a contribution, if I may say so again, by a former Prime Minister. If that speech is totally ignored, surely that is the ultimate condemnation of the government's position on this bill.

In the course of my comments at this third reading stage I want to make two points. I want to pay tribute to one of the most distinguished members in the history of the House of Commons, and he does not know I am going to do this. I refer to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

I would say this of any member of any party in this House who had provided the kind of parliamentary leadership that has been provided in respect of this issue by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. The House has rarely witnessed a performance by a member, on any issue, such as that displayed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. That hon. member was deeply moved and deeply committed in respect of this issue, and in respect of which he so ably demonstrated his knowledge of the rules and procedures of this House. His contribution grows out of a basic commitment to equality and a basic sense of redistributing income in our country in an equitable way. Arising from that commitment was an opposition to an unjustified level of increase as provided for in this bill.

The hon. member added to his contribution a profound knowledge of the rules of this House. This combination of commitment and knowledge of procedure enabled him to provide us with what I think is one of the finest contributions ever made to any debate in the history of this House. I want again to pay tribute to that exceptionally fine member of parliament.

The NDP has opposed this bill basically because the amounts of money are simply too much. That is really what is at stake here. If we take the increase for members as a whole we find that we are going to get an additional $8,600 in one shot. I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, and hon. members of the House, to keep in mind that the average income of the average family, not just the poor families in Canada, was below $8,600 last year. Here we are providing ourselves with an increase in one lump sum that exceeds the total income of the vast majority of the population of this country.

Surely this is what is moving the people of our country from coast to coast to a profound opposition to the MPs' salary bill. It is not that the people of Canada object to any increase. The people of Canada at all income levels were quite prepared to say that members of parliament who have not had an increase since 1971 are entitled to some reasonable increase. What they are not prepared to concede, and what my party is not prepared to go along with, is that we are entitled to an increase of $8,600 across the board, an increase which, I repeat, exceeds the total level of income of the vast majority of Canadians.

It is on that general ground of inequity that the NDP in this debate has opposed the bill. We opposed the original proposal before Christmas, the proposal brought back some 48 hours later, and we oppose the final version of this bill we are now debating.

It has been our position that members of parliament should set some kind of example in terms of the distribution of income in Canada. It has also been our position that an increase was justified, but only an increase on that part of our income other than the non-taxable portion. That is, we take the position that an increase is justified in respect of the $18,000 but not in respect of the $8,000. We take that position for two reasons. We want the increase to be a reasonable one which bears directly and exclusively on the increase in the cost of living since 1971.

We have put forward arguments showing that the expenses the $8,000 tax exempt portion was intended to cover have been provided for in recent years by other means at public expense. These means were outlined by myself at earlier stages of the debate, as well as by other members of my party. There is no justification at all for an increase in that $8,000 part of our income. We are prepared to say that an increase of the $18,000, equivalent to the increase in the cost of living, would be justified, but even that, from the point of view of equity, could be argued against.

We believe in the principle, which I think would find acceptance in the country, that the people in Canada who are at the upper income levels, and have been for many years, should be prepared to say they have had enough and will wait for any future increase until the average and the poor of the country catch up. If we apply a cost of living increase only in respect of the people at our income level then at least we will not experience a decline in our standard of living, and we will be able to go on living as well with our families as we have in the past, and the benefits accruing from the increase in our productivity can be passed on to the people in the lower income levels. In this way we can provide an opportunity for the poor to get out of that status of poverty in which so many people are living today.

It is the failure on the part of members in supporting this bill that has caused my party to be most disturbed. We are not indulging in self-denial, but we want to indulge in some self-restraint in the hope of setting an example to the people in private industries and at other government levels. Those of us in the upper income positions who are, relatively speaking, wealthy, ought not to be getting more and more as long as we have so many people living in poverty, and as long as we have an inequitable distribution of income.

The second point that has led us to oppose this bill is related in part to the same point. It relates to the government's incomes policy, or the so-called consensus. This has been labelled differently at different times. We know we are to have a budget before the end of May, and we know the government has been meeting with representatives of the trade union movement, representatives of provincial governments, and representatives of the private sector.

We know the government has made some proposals in respect of some kind of an incomes policy. It has been difficult to obtain details of those proposals, but there are certain basic assumptions one must make about them. I should like to suggest an assumption I made. If there is to be substance to this incomes policy it must set a limit in terms of guidelines in respect of increases in salaries which it thinks will be acceptable to the economy as a whole.

Probably the government will take a certain percentage level of income and tie all future incomes to that percentage and/or it will take some fixed amount. It might say that there may be increases up to a certain level, and place a ceiling on an appropriate dollar figure, or it might even have a floor level and say that no increases should fall below a certain amount. If that kind of policy is to have any relevance at all as a guidelines instrument in Canada, it cannot provide guidelines that would establish within their framework this kind of increase that the members of parliament are now voting for themselves.

The government cannot say to the people of Canada as a whole that they are entitled to a 33⅓ per cent increase now, with a constant 7 per cent increase on top of that each year indefinitely in the future. If it does that the policy will have no relevance as an anti-inflationary policy, assuming such an approach has validity in the first place. I am saying that we have in this legislation a wage package, a salary proposal, for ourselves as members of parliament, which will far exceed any kind of proposal the government will introduce in the next few weeks and want the rest of the people of Canada to accept. I say that that amounts to a kind of hypocrisy. It really amounts to saying, "Let us provide for ourselves now very abundantly before we tighten the belt for everyone else in the country." I say that kind of policy is not leadership at all, but is just the opposite.

I wish to conclude on that note. My party, I believe, has fought a good fight on this measure. With the exception of one or two members, who in good conscience disagree with us, on the whole our party by an overwhelming majority has been opposed to this measure because we do not think it is equitable or shows the kind of economic leadership required in this country, and which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) have been called upon to give. I think it is a bad bill and will vote against it at third reading.

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise to place briefly on the record the reasons why I cannot support this legislation. To me this is not a case, and it should not be a case, of whether members of parliament need an increase in salary. Instead, it should be an occasion for parliament to set an example for the Canadian people. It should be an occasion when parliament, in the interests of the country, and at a time when the cost of living is galloping forward completely unrestrained, puts first and foremost on its agenda the setting of an example in restraint.

If parliament, despite its personal needs, cannot set an example for the Canadian people then, Mr. Speaker, who on earth can do this? If parliament goes to the public till to draw out more funds for itself, then how can we ask others across the country to keep down their demands in the interest of bringing inflation under control? How can one support this bill when old age pensioners are crying out against high prices and their inability to buy some of the ordinary every-day things that so many of us take for granted? How can one support this bill when we know that one of the most important things is for government expenses to be curtailed, and yet parliament is prepared to do just the opposite for itself?

The government has failed utterly in its approach to attacking the problems of inflation, and it has failed utterly in its approach to the curtailment of government expenses. It is essential that first things should come first, to make use of an old saying. By dealing with this legislation we are most certainly not placing first things first. The first thing we should be doing is taking measures to slow down the rapid growth in the cost of living, and when we have progressed well along such a road then, and only then, would be the time for parliament to look at the matter of its own salaries.

I have been surprised to note in the press on several occasions that some members of this House have said they have received no complaints on this legislation from their constituencies, or perhaps it is the fault of the deteriorating mail service. I have found that this is one subject which concerns the people of this country far more than many other subjects. I have received, on this subject, far more mail and telephone calls than on most other subjects since I was elected a member of this House.

I should like to read for the record some excerpts from letters I have received both from my constituency and elsewhere. One gentleman from Gannanoque included in his letter this most appropriate expression and question:

> I ask you how you can conscientiously vote for this pay increase in your salary when there are so many poor in Canada who need help, and will this not contribute to inflation?

From another constituent in the city of Brockville we have these words:

> When industry and labour is being asked to exercise restraint, when Canada is in the midst of very serious inflation, how can you seriously consider a one third increase in salaries for Members of Parliament and indexing them for the future in such a way that the increase in the next few years will amount to far more than the original proposal of fifty per cent?

Another letter I received contained these somewhat emotional words:

> Surely to God there is some semblance of decency left in the House of Commons. Surely the aged and the less fortunate should not be forced to suffer in misery and silence while Members of Parliament stick their hands in the public cash register.

Another letter read:

> My own personal view is that all members knew the pay structure when they decided to stand for election and it seems like dirty pool to then turn around and look for an increase in pay immediately.

Another letter contains the following paragraph:

> I can think of no measure that any government could take that would invite run-away inflation that would be more effective than this legislation on salaries. If this bill is passed and if it receives the support of all parties, then one must reach the conclusion that the whole parliamentary operation is a charade.

There are many other similar phrases in other letters I have received. I am sure they are nothing more than an echo of the letters received by probably everyone on every side in this House.

I should like to read one final quotation from a letter which I think puts the situation quite clearly:

> Mitchell Sharp's arguments are full of holes and resemble a sieve. This apparent lack of good judgment on the part of the government is something I protest in the strongest possible terms. The very thought of our elected representatives considering such an increase in these times of economic distress leaves me saddened and disillusioned.

I think the last word in the sentence that I have just quoted says it all. That word is "disillusioned". The people of this country have expected something better from parliament than what has been received. The people of this country expected us to set an example here in Ottawa and to press that example forward across this country by following it up with measures to really fight inflation. The government has not done that. Anything short of this in my opinion is shirking our responsibilities to the Canadian people and abandoning our principles.

Previous speakers have dealt with particular items in this legislation that are disagreeable and, rather than repeat many of the arguments already stated, I would simply like to comment briefly on two particular points.

The first is that the retroactive clause seems to be badly out of place. I do not believe that this legislation, when passed, should be made retroactive to last July 8 because we all knew at the time of that election exactly what the salaires would be, and if we did not like those salaries we did not have to become candidates in the last general election. If parliament insists on an increase, I think it should equally insist on applying the increase as of the date the legislation is passed, and not last July.

Another feature of this bill which I find disturbing is the fact that it applies increases to the salaries and expense allowances of members of the Senate. If it is difficult to accept the idea that this is the proper time for members of the House of Commons to increase their salaries, I suggest that it is impossible to consider this an appropriate time for members of the Senate to receive similar treatment.

With the greatest of respect for the dozen or so Senators who actually do a day's work, I must honestly say that the Senate seems to be nothing more than a worn out appendix still attached to the body of government, which has so long escaped necessary surgery. To avoid such surgery, and to go even further and say that we should pay higher salaries and increased expense allowances to the Senate seems to be not only utterly unjustified but completely ridiculous.

The Senate has become a pasture for the sacred cows of the Liberal Party. The present government has followed the practice of appointing to the Senate worn out members of the cabinet, Liberal Party bagmen whose successful collections on behalf of the party must be rewarded for their services, apparently at government expense, and defeated Liberal candidates who, despite the fact that they have been rejected by the voters, must somehow be retained on the public payroll as a reward for services rendered.

Should we really be considering raising salaries and expense allowances of a group composed predominantly of persons in the categories to which I have just referred? What work does the Senate do, for which it is entitled to any raise? Indeed, if one were to measure the work and the importance to this country of the Senate, it would seem that a heavy salary decrease should be applied or, better still, the institution simply should be allowed to fade into history.

Before departing from the subject of the Senate I would like to add that I do not in any way mean to insult or criticize in my remarks those few members of the Senate who do perform some service to that body and to Canada, but that number of Senators is limited. Indeed, since I came to this chamber in 1972, a period now approaching three years, I have found that it is a rare day you actually see a Senator in the flesh. Now and then one or two are visible here and there, but it almost seems to have come to a situation where those who come into the Centre Block on guided tours should specifically ask the guides to point out a living Senator, if they can find one. Indeed, if they do manage to glimpse a Senator passing by, I suggest that they should remember the occasion because they will have seen a species which, for all practical purposes, has become almost extinct.

I have heard the argument advanced that this House must include in the bill raises for the Senate; otherwise that chamber will not pass the bill when it clears the House of Commons. Surely this is a very poor excuse, and indeed if the Senate were to turn down such a bill by this House, it would force the logical and inevitable final decision which must some day come. Only the elected representatives of the people should be making the decisions which govern this country, and such decisions should not be subject to the approval of those who are responsible, in most cases, to nobody and, regrettably, in many cases only to their godfather, the Liberal Party of Canada.

I have listened with great respect to the words this afternoon of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). He has spoken out clearly and forthrightly against this legislation, and his voice in many ways has been the conscience of parliament because he has said publicly what so many sitting here think in silence. To speak out is not popular, but surely none of us come here to win popularity contests.

An hon. Member: You have, Tom.

Mr. Cossitt: I recall the words of our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on May 27, 1974, in Etobicoke, Ontario, when he said that he would wrestle inflation to the ground. The wrestling match has never begun, and now it appears that it never will. Perhaps the Prime Minister has revised his statement and now says that we should all raise our salaries first and look at the problem of inflation later.

While the Prime Minister collects fancy $80,000 Cadillacs, thousands and thousands of dollars worth of antiques, and a lavish and luxurious swimming pool at the expense of Canadian taxpayers, the government asks parliament to follow his horrible example by thinking of ourselves first and placing the Canadian people and their serious economic problems last.

A few moments ago the right hon. member for Prince Albert mentioned some of the expenses our Prime Minister has accumulated at taxpayers' cost, and I would like, as a small footnote, to add an answer to an order paper question which I received just this afternoon in regard to Harrington Lake, which shows that the latest expenditures just for this current year by the Prime Minister at taxpayers' expense on his summer cottage total $47,749. There is included a contract of $17,000 for something, and I wonder what. This extravagance, in face of the need for restraint and the need to fight inflation, is typical of the government and something which we should all feel is reprehensible.

In conclusion, as I said a few moments ago, to speak out on this matter is obviously not a popular thing to do, but I believe it is the right thing to do. If the provisions in this legislation were reasonable and this legislation had been brought in for consideration after the problems of the people of Canada had been dealt with, it might be possible to support it, but in all conscience the provisions of this bill are too extravagant, and they resemble too much of the "let them eat cake" attitude of the Prime Minister and the present Government of Canada. They are provisions which no member in his right mind can seriously support. For that reason I can do no more than, having registered my vote on second reading against this bill, speak against it and vote against it on third reading.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would be something less than human if I were not extremely grateful to the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) and to my leader, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) for their very kind words this afternoon. I extend my very warm thanks to both of them. It was a pleasure for me on Monday to join in the applause when, from the Chair, a welcome back to this House was extended to the right hon. member for Prince Albert. Some of us are happier than others to see him back.

We seem to be just about at the end of this debate, and as one who has spoken a number of times, I do not intend to make extended remarks at this stage. However, I would like to emphasize the point that the issue with respect to this pay raise bill is not whether as members of parliament we need an increase. The issue is not how our incomes compare with the incomes of other persons in Canada, be they in the public or the private sector. The issue at this time is the leadership that parliament gives to a country which is experiencing a time of trouble.

There is no denying the fact that we are in trouble, particularly in the economic sphere. If there is anything that is needed now from the leaders of the country it is leadership in the economic sphere, and we do not give that leadership if even before the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) brings in a budget and makes certain proposals, we protect ourselves by the kind of increase that is set out in Bill C-44.

I say again, Sir, that the issue is not whether we need more salary or more expense money; the issue is the kind of persons we are. Are we here to act on the basis of principle with respect to the needs and the problems of our people, or are we persons who, having come fresh from an election, are prepared to push through a measure that is in our own self-interest? Our job is at least to set an example, and this House is setting a wrong example if it gives final approval today to Bill C-44.

This was an offensive and indecent piece of legislation when it was brought in last December with the proposal for a 50 per cent increase in both our salaries and our allowances. I suggest, as I did yesterday, that in addition to being offensive and indecent this measure is now becoming a piece of dishonesty. The word has gone out that members of parliament were prepared to cut back from a 50 per cent increase to an increase of 33⅓ per cent. But there is added to that 33⅓ per cent increase retroactive to last July a formula under which, starting January 1, 1976, there will be compounding increases of 7 per cent per year, so that by the end of this parliament what we draw will be 63 per cent more than we are receiving at the present time.

This is not setting an example. That is not giving leadership. This is being dishonest with the people who sent us here to represent them.

[Mr. Cossitt.]

I have pointed out that there are a number of things about the legislation, especially in its amended form, that I dislike very much. I refer again in particular to the long battle that some of us have waged for pensions and other benefits, particularly pensions for senior citizens, retired public servants, retired armed forces personnel and RCMP personnel and for veterans generally, to be escalated in accordance with the rise in the standard of living. The best way to do that is to adopt the industrial composite index. But we have been turned down every time, Mr. Speaker.

All of these other groups have to settle for an escalation based on the consumer price index. The escalation is set up in such a way that all of these other groups are always behind—yes, Sir, even behind the rise in the cost of living. What the government is not prepared to give to everyone else, this House is prepared to take for its own members and the members of the other place, for this bill applies to our salaries and expense allowance the benefit of the industrial composite index which pensioners are denied.

Sir, I find this offensive, I find it indecent, I find it degrading to the status of those who were elected to do the business of the country and to meet the needs of our people. Those needs today are great, the problems to which we should be addressing ourselves are many, and I hope that even yet, especially after the appeal made today by the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert, this House will agree that this matter should be put off at least for a while if hon. members are not prepared to turn it down completely.

I regret that so little has been said on the government side of the House in this debate. All day yesterday we had the report stage debate, and with the exception of the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Stanbury) who was critical of the bill, there were no speeches from the government side at all. There has been no defence yesterday or today of the terms of this bill. There is no effort even to fight back as we attack it. Is that parliament? Is that leadership? Is that the cut and thrust of debate, trying to decide what is best for the country? No, it is just a case of scores of members sitting and waiting for this extra money to fall into their laps, plus the escalation that will come in the years that lie ahead.

We presented several amendments yesterday. We tried to get the House to consider the retroactive date, the exact amount, the question of the future escalation, but all those amendments were turned down. This House seems to think of only one thing—when can this bill be got through, when are the cheques of hon. members to be fattened by the amounts set out in this legislation?

So, Mr. Speaker, I hope that even yet if this House is not prepared to say no to the bill, it will agree to put it off for a little while. That implies that in just a moment or two I am going to move an amendment generally known as the six months hoist. I do that today with particular emphasis because of the fact that the Minister of Finance has announced that he will be bringing down a budget within the next four weeks. Presumably, and I think it is a reasonable presumption, the speech attached to that budget will deal with the problem of inflation and what to do about wage levels and incomes policy.

An hon. Member: Don't hold your breath.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My hon. friend says not to hold my breath. He may be right—the Minister of Finance may not come up with much to solve these problems, but I suspect there will be suggestions in that speech as to what Canadians generally should do. If there are going to be proposals to Canadians generally on what they should do regarding their incomes, Mr. Speaker, in all decency, in all honesty, we should wait. I do not think there is any formula for a one month hoist or I would move that, but let us not have any procedural problems at this point. That is why I am going to move the six months hoist.

Before I do so, Mr. Speaker, and I am just at the end of my remarks, I want to say again, as I have tried to say several times, that one of the main reasons some of my colleagues and I have fought so hard about this legislation is that the thing we most dislike about Canadian society is the inequality that there is in it. When we hear of attacks on that inequality by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) overseas, and by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) in Toronto, we applaud. Many of us came into this place, came into a political life, because we wanted to do something to lessen inequalities, to create a greater chance for equality of life for all of our people. We do not achieve that when we use our position to put ourselves in the top 2, 3, 4, or even 5 per cent of the income earners of Canada.

This bill runs directly contrary to the social philosophy of this party, and that is the fundamental reason why we have taken our stand against it. That may not be understood by some other members of the House, but the record is clear that over the years we have been here we have fought hard for pensions, housing, health care services and the things that achieve some measure of equality for the people of Canada. We intend to carry on that fight, and we are not going to be sidetracked by supporting something that runs in the opposite direction. So, Mr. Speaker, I state again my unqualified opposition to this bill. I say, on behalf of my party, that the least this House should do is to delay consideration of it for a further period.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin):

That Bill C-44 be not now read a third time, but that it be read a third time this day six months hence.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): The question is on the amendment to the main motion, moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Call in the members.

PETROLEUM ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING THE ADMINISTRATION OF INTERPROVINCIAL, EXPORT AND IMPORT TRADE IN PETROLEUM AND PETROLEUM PRODUCTS

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that Bill C-32, to impose a charge on the export of crude oil and certain petroleum products, to provide compensation for certain petroleum costs and to regulate the price of Canadian crude oil and natural gas in interprovincial and export trade, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I will not detain the House very long, but I want to say that this bill was somewhat improved in the committee, which is the function of a committee. We moved some amendments which were accepted, and we moved others which were not. We feel that while there has been some delay, from the time this bill was first a gleam in the minister's eye until the time it becomes law, that time has not been wasted.

We have fought on substance and on the law. This was a fight not tainted by demagoguery. Under the circumstances, and while we feel the bill has been improved and we are not going to force a vote, we still feel it constitutes an intrusion into provincial rights and an unnecessary waste in dealing with a matter in respect of which the provincial and federal governments do have power at the present time. So, as far as we are concerned the bill will go through, but it will be on division at the time the question is put.

● (1720)

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the members of the New Democratic Party have supported this legislation. We would have liked to have seen some changes. We did move an amendment when the bill was in committee of the whole to ensure that any increase in the price of oil would be used by the federal and provincial governments on the exploration and development of new sources of energy. That was not accepted by the committee but we feel we ought not to hold up this legislation. This is particularly true in view of the announcement by the minister who said today that he intends to see that the price increase which has just been announced of $1.15 per thousand cubic feet for Alberta gas is lower. It could be very serious for the gas consumers of Canada to have such a substantial increase imposed upon them.

I think, therefore, the government requires the power in the event there is no agreement with the producing provinces to set both the price of oil and natural gas. We express the hope, however, that in setting the price the government will keep in mind that the position this party has taken for a long time, and which we emphasize now, is that there is no justification for increasing the price of crude oil on the basis of operating costs or the financial position of the oil industry.

The only possible reason for asking the Canadian people to pay more for oil and gas is to provide funds for the public exploration and public development of the oil and gas resources of this country. Therefore we are prepared to support the bill and see that it receives speedy passage.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Baldwin: On division.

Motion agreed to on division and bill read the third time and passed.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING THE STABILIZATION OF NET PROCEEDS FROM THE PRODUCTION AND SALE OF WESTERN GRAIN

The House resumed from Monday, April 28, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lang that Bill C-41, respecting the stabilization of net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain and to amend certain statutes in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, this bill was called on short notice the other night and the minister made his second reading speech. The hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Hamilton) also got his words on the record, and I had the floor at ten o'clock. At this point I am somewhat at a loss concerning where to begin. I suppose one must speak first of the principle of guaranteeing and stabilizing incomes for farmers and, in respect of this legislation, particularly for grain producers.

There has been a demand for some form of guaranteed income program from farm organizations and farmers since the "dirty thirties". My party has been proposing and demanding a system of guaranteed prices relating to the cost of production for some time. This has been the policy of our party, again since the thirties. In the years since then the Government of Canada has brought in various kinds of programs to protect farmers in general, and in many instances the grain producers in particular, from the hazards of weather, the marketplace, prices, and the condition of world markets with their violent fluctuations which on occasion drove farmers by the thousands out of farming. Coupled with that, since the Second World War the costs of farm production have risen repeatedly annually.

With the exception of this last two or two and one half years, prices received by the grain producers did not reflect any increase to compensate them for the increased costs of production. When the minister proposed his original grain stabilization bill in 1971 it received little if any support from the grain producers of western Canada. It was opposed by all the farm organizations.

An hon. Member: Even with the $100 million carrot.

Mr. Benjamin: Yes, even with the $100 million carrot which they were going to take away by repealing the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. It was one of the rare cases we have seen when the farm organizations united in their opposition to a program. I believe they are still of two minds concerning this bill. We recognize there have been some significant changes in this legislation compared to the first attempt of the minister, but I want to remind the House that we are now getting this bill at greater cost to the grain producers of western Canada because, when the minister brought in his first bill, there were two or three hookers in it. One was the repeal of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act which would save the federal treasury anywhere from $20 million to $60 million a year. He did not succeed on that occasion, but has succeeded since then.

The minister succeeded by requiring the grain trade and the Canadian Wheat Board to make certain that there was less than a certain amount of grain in store in the terminals at the end of the crop year so there would be no pay-out by the federal treasury under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. As a result of that happening, in two successive crop years the act automatically lapsed. So, he found another method to get rid of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act which, with all its inadequacies, at least implemented the principle that the nation as a whole should share in the cost of storing our grain and that this load should not fall just on the backs of the farmers.

The nation as a whole benefits from what is probably our second or third largest export commodity. One of the largest foreign exchange earners we have is the export market for grain. The nation as a whole benefits from that. We say, therefore, that the nation as a whole should share significantly, at least to the tune of 50 per cent, in the cost of storing grain. That was part of the cost the grain producers suffered in arriving at the stage at which we are now in respect of this legislation. The minister also at that time attempted to repeal the provisions of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. He did not succeed at that time. However, he has now succeeded by having the act repealed in recent months.

We did not strongly oppose this in recent months because in this instance the minister came some distance toward meeting our objections of 1971. We insisted at that time that if he were to do away with the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, which was a form of crop insurance which protected grain farmers from the hazards of drought and low-crop yields, he must replace it with something as good or better than the PFAA, and to us that meant a substantially larger participation by the national government in a much improved crop insurance program.

The results of those demands and the fight we put up in 1971 are that the government has come round to some significant degree. The additional moneys it was putting into crop insurance meant that premiums for grain farmers in western Canada were cut to a point where something over 60 per cent of them were covered by the crop insurance program.

On this point there is another bill before the House which relates to this one. In the repeal of the Prairies Farm Assistance Act the government wants to take the funds which remain under that legislation, somewhere in the order of $8 million to $10 million, which belongs to the farmers of western Canada and which was largely collected from them compulsorily by deductions from their cash tickets at country elevators. It is their money. It was meant for their use when they had crop failures, drought or low yields, but when the government repealed the PFAA, it wanted to take that $8 to $10 million and put it in trust for the grain stabilization fund.

To me that is another sneaky way of endeavouring to save money. In spite of all the claims of the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board about the increased amount of money which has been put into the agriculture, and particularly the grain industry in western Canada, by the federal government, much of that money comes from funds which were already paid out in other ways. There have not been, in total, increased costs to the federal treasury. The money the government has been saving on grain storage and the money it wants to use from the PFAA account can be subtracted from any amounts it claims it is putting into the support and assistance of the grains industry in western Canada.

This is one of the most complicated pieces of legislation I have seen in the almost seven years I have been here. I confess that having gone over the bill on a number of occasions and having discussed it with people in farm organizations, researchers, committees and statisticians, I have a great deal of difficulty understanding all the provisions in the bill, how well they will work, how they will be applied, and the reasons for them.

But I do not feel lonely, because some of the statisticians, researchers and committees are also puzzled. This leads me to believe that it will be extremely difficult, if not impossible, for a majority of grain producers to understand the legislation, to appreciate how it will affect them, and what its pluses and minuses are. I think it is essential that before this legislation becomes law the government make the most searching and thorough examination of any legislation we have dealt with in a long time.

It is essential—and this request has come from many farmers individually and farm organizations—that the agricultural committee hold meetings, as I said the other evening, in at least two or three dozen places in the three prairie provinces and the Peace River country of British Columbia, the area under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board, in order to hear briefs and submissions from those farmers and organizations, and for the committee and its staff to answer their questions. It will be the responsibility of the committee to obtain the answers to any questions it cannot answer, from the minister and his officials, and relay them to those farmers and organizations. That will take some doing and some time. In dealing with this legislation I think it is a must. I know that there is support for that proposition from many quarters.

This bill attempts to use the principle of stabilization, guaranteeing income or guaranteeing net cash flow in a manner which will be so difficult to administer and to fairly apply that it is an extreme possibility that, after a few years of its being in effect, it will destroy the confidence of grain producers and thereby set back the principle of some form of guaranteed income, guaranteed prices, stabilizing, or whatever term one wishes to use. While we agree with this in principle, there is an easier, better and more simple way of doing it. I think the government, in its effort to make improvements on its first attempt, has complicated it more.

The minister said that the bill is intended to stabilize net cash flow. I submit that there are provisions in the bill which prevent that. We can get into that in more detail when we are in committee, but it is intended to stabilize net cash flow from the sale of western grains through the mechanism of a stabilization fund to which contributions are made by both the producer and the federal government, and that when a net cash flow in the total grain industry of western Canada in any year falls below the last five year average, the shortfall is supposed to be paid out of the stabilization fund. I see some danger in the sense that the payouts, whenever they occur, will be unfairly applied just because of the difficulty of dealing with every farmer fairly.

More serious, there will be many years when there should be payouts in various regions of that wheat board district because of sharp reductions in net cash flow, but there will not be any payouts because the legislation says that can only be done for the total area under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board. The plan is compulsory for all, initially. Grain producers will have until January 1 of 1978 to opt out.

My party supports programs such as this, whether they deal with health care, support for the agricultural industry, or marketing boards. This kind of plan should be universal. The opting out provisions can only weaken the program. The larger the participation in such programs, the greater the benefits can be to the people involved. If there is any significant amount of opting out, I submit it will be because of anger and disgust by those who participated in the plan in the way it is being operated.

The levy of 2 per cent which is imposed on the grain producer is on all eligible sales to a maximum of $25,000 in grain sales. This means that they contribute to a maximum of $500. The levy will be a maximum of $500 per year, and the contribution of the federal government is to be 4 per cent. If the stabilization fund is in a surplus position, and if any interest earned for two successive years exceeds one third of the annual levy, the levy drops to 1½ per cent for the producer and 3½ per cent for the government. I am not sure that that is a good idea. It seems to me that one would want to build the fund up as much as possible, if for no other reason than that in the event of some calamity or disaster in the grain industry, there would be something there to take care of it.

If the surplus position is maintained for four consecutive years the levy drops, and as soon as the fund balance is restored for two consecutive years when interest earned ceases to exceed one third of the annual levy, then the levies return to their normal 2 per cent and 4 per cent levels.

On the other hand if the fund is in a deficit position, if interest paid on loans through the Consolidated Revenue Fund exceeds one third of the annual levies for two consecutive years, the levy increases to 2½ per cent for producers and 4½ per cent for the government. I would think that if the government is going to be putting in double what the producer puts in, the levy should be 2½ per cent for the producers and 5 per cent for the government. If the deficit remains after an additional year, then the support level under the plan should be reduced to 90 per cent of the five year average of net cash flow.

It should be noted, Madam Speaker, that when the fund is in a deficit position the federal government's contribution is reduced, and after three years of deficit the level of support decreases. When the need is greatest the support is the least. The levy is paid in good years and bad, and the various levels set out may be actuarially sound, but they tend to reduce the stabilization effect of the plan. Perhaps there should be a variable rate level based on variations on grain sales proceeds rather than on the financial balance in the fund. I leave that for the minister's consideration.

The issue of the plan being based on net income rather than gross income was thoroughly fought the first time, the legislation came before us in 1971. One of the main arguments we put up at that time was that it should be based on net income and not gross income, and there should be provision for accounting and for increasing costs of production—some form of escalation to provide for increasing costs of production.

I want to say here that the minister has come around some distance, and this is not usual for him when dealing with this parliament or previous parliaments. He came around to the view that the plan would be better if it were based on net income rather than gross income, and that the matter of costs of production has to be brought in. It is almost a 180 degree turn. As I recall the speeches made on the government side in 1971, we were told that it was impossible and could not be done, etc. I wish the minister had come all the way though, because in arriving at net cash flow, when you look at the eligible expenses that are considered as deductions from the gross cash income, there are some legitimate cash expenses that are excluded from the legislation.

The bill includes only cash expenses incurred in the production and sale of grain as eligible expenses. It excludes depreciation on farm machinery, it excludes interest on equity, and it excludes the labour and management of the producer. I am particularly unhappy to see that interest on indebtedness is excluded because that is a cash expenditure that grain producers have every year. In particular, interest on indebtedness for buildings and farm machinery is a large expenditure for grain producers in western Canada.

I think the minister errs in at least not allowing the interest on indebtedness for things like buildings and farm machinery to be included. The price of farm machinery has reached heights that were not imagined five or ten years ago, and most farm machinery purchases are financed at interest rates of 10 per cent or 15 per cent. The farmer has to make cash payments on that machinery every year, and of course the payments include interest on the loans.

I can see that there might be some argument against allowing interest on land indebtedness since land usually appreciates. There may be temporary drops in land values, but I do not see any significant permanent drop in the near future. An argument could be made that interest on payments for land should be excluded, but I think there is no justification for excluding interest payments on buildings and machinery, both of which are depreciating assets.

The minister has excluded depreciation from the bill. Since the facilities I have mentioned on grain farms are not going to appreciate in the way that land will, surely depreciation on buildings and machinery should be allowed as an expense. I appreciate it is not a cash expense. That would be a departure from one of the main features of the bill which reflects cash income and cash expenses, but I hope the minister will look at it again.

I am happy to see that income received under the crop insurance program will be calculated as part of the total gross income and that this will allow farmers to contribute more to the fund. I submit there are too many exclusions, however, and the bill should be amended to allow the inclusion of interest on at least farm buildings and machinery, and to allow the depreciation on buildings and machinery.

There are many implications in the aggregate calculations of payouts over the entire Wheat Board region. Because the plan operates on an aggregate basis, all regions and all grains are lumped together in the calculation of aggregate payouts. This offers little or no protection on a regional or on a commodity basis.

For example, Madam Speaker, if rapeseed producers experience a badly depressed market but all other grains do very well, there is no payout for rapeseed producers from the plan if the aggreagate proceeds from all the other grains remain at or above the five year average level. Similarly, an individual producer's share of the aggregate payout when a stabilization payment is made is determined in proportion to his share of contribution through the levies in that year and the immediately preceding two years. In other words, a producer who has had good sales, and therefore has made a relatively substantial contribution to the fund, will receive a proportionately higher payout, whereas a producer who has done less well in sales will receive proportionately less. It seems to me that as the bill stands now it rewards good fortune and penalizes misfortune. The one who needs the most gets the least, and I think that is a fundamental weakness in the legislation.

The minister mentioned on a previous occasion the possibility of paying out on a local or regional basis rather than on the aggregate of the entire grains income over the entire Wheat Board area. Having listened to the minister and read his speech, I am under the impression he will be willing to look at these things until he has had time to become experienced in the administration of the legislation and devise ways, administratively and technically, of paying out on a regional or local basis. I do not think that difficulty is insurmountable. It can be done.

I am thinking of a particular situation. Say that in a large area of northeastern Saskatchewan, northwestern Alberta, or in the Peace River country, farmers raise abundant, but low grade crops in one year. Let us say the demand for high grades of grain is strong, that the demand on domestic and export markets is strong for Nos. 1, 2 and 3 wheat, for example. What will happen? The farmers in a large area where low grades of grain are grown will have low sales; but there will be no payout for them, because if the aggregate of all sales is at or about the five-year average, it means the people in the large area who have raised poor or low grade crops will not get any payout. Again, the ones who need help most will get least. In the circumstances I mentioned they may not get anything at all. I suggest that the minister, his officials, the committee, and other organizations must put their heads together and devise ways to change the legislation so that payouts on a regional or local basis can be made.

The stabilization effect of the plan is reduced by a number of other factors. In a period of decline the five-year average would become progressively lower; net income would show a progressive decline and producers would continue to contribute the levy. Payouts would occur during periods of relatively high but falling commodity prices, but no payouts would occur during periods of relatively low but rising prices. I submit that the cost of the plan to the federal government is overstated and the stabilization effect reduced, because a portion of federal contributions, around 15 per cent, would be recovered through taxation when a payment is made. What they give with one hand, they take back with the other. At least they take back a good chunk.

[Mr. Benjamin.]

Because the stabilized margin, the net cash flow, as the minister puts it, is not indexed to inflation, net income would decline in terms of real dollars at a rate approximately equal to the rate of inflation with no support payments being made.

Stabilization payments themselves are not included as proceeds in calculating the five-year average. This I do not understand. The levy is based on the financial position of the stabilization fund, and not on ability to pay. The levy could actually increase in a bad year. Further, the support level drops to 90 per cent of the five-year average after the fund has been in a deficit position for three years. Surely that is exactly when support should increase. Obviously grain farmers will be in difficulty at that point in time.

The assumption underlying the plan is the continued operation of a free market, which makes one laugh, and the need to protect producers from its fluctuations. That is understandable. Production surpluses and deficits will continue to exist. The government is to play no active role in determining the allocation of productive resources.

I return to what I said at the beginning of my speech. My party thinks there is a simpler and better way of doing this. I admit, without hesitation or sorrow, that our plan would require higher expenditures from the federal treasury than the present plan. I think it is only fair that there should be some contribution by farmers in other ways, such as through crop insurance, and so on. In other words they should pay some kind of premium.

The most effective way of stabilizing income, it seems to me, is to establish a system of guaranteed prices for all grains. These prices should be related to costs of production. As well, an escalating factor should be included to take care of annual increases in production costs. Such guaranteed prices would assure farmers of a certain level of income. There will be years, obviously, when prices will be down and the federal treasury may need to inject up to several hundred millions of dollars into the scheme in order to maintain guaranteed prices for producers. No doubt from time to time commodities other than grain will be affected.

If the guaranteed price imposes hardship on certain segments of the public, on consumers, the government should look at the other side of the coin and come in with a form of consumer subsidy. We are doing this with two-price wheat and there is no reason why this cannot be extended to cover all grains. Frankly I think it should cover all agricultural production. That, surely, would be administratively easier than what is contemplated under this bill. Surely such a scheme would do a better job in providing for farm income security.

I know the idea is somewhat socialistic, but this has been done by countries with so-called free enterprise governments, or governments operating under variations of that principle. Surely that would be an easier and better way. Under such a system we could guarantee the farmer a price for his grain, a price that would return to him his full costs of production and a decent living. That guarantee would come from all the people of Canada. That, I think, would be a system far more effective than any system contemplated by this legislation, which is so complicated, so full of legal gobbledygook. I suspect that we shall need to hire quite a few more public servants to administer this legislation. We shall need more than we needed to administer PFAA and other programs like it. I am afraid this will become an administrative nightmare, largely because of the way the minister has chosen to implement the grain stabilization plan.

I repeat, that we think it essential for this bill to receive the most thorough scrutiny by the committee. The committee must hold hearings in two or three dozen places at least in the Wheat Board area. It must receive briefs and submissions from grain producers and organizations representing them. They should be allowed to ask their questions, although I doubt if we will be able to answer them all, because it is still difficult to understand how this bill is to apply. Further, I hope the minister and his officials will use the simplest English possible when giving answers. I am not hopeful on that score, but I hope that his officials will work on this idea.

I know my time has all but expired. I fully expect that much more will be said on this bill. I hope the minister will be agreeable to improving it and changing it, or more agreeable to doing this than he was on the previous occasion. I hope more attention will be paid to the views of farm organizations who represent grain producers in western Canada. Again, I hope that more attention will be paid than was paid on the prior occasion, Madam Speaker.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On a point of order, Madam Speaker, may I inquire if we are to be told what the business will be tomorrow and on Friday?

Mr. Reid: Madam Speaker, we will continue with Bill C-41 tomorrow and, if it is not concluded tomorrow, also on Friday.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): And if it is?

Mr. Reid: If it is, there will be discussions through the usual channels to decide what to put forward.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair. This House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At 6 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

SUGGESTED UNILATERAL ACTION TO EXTEND ECONOMIC ZONE TO 200 MILES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move a motion under Standing Order 43 which I hope will commend itself to the House.

In view of the failure of the Law of the Sea Conference at Geneva to reach agreement on a 200-mile economic zone which is of vital importance to the survival of the fishing industry in the Atlantic provinces, I move, seconded by the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse):

That this House supports the stand taken by the Minister of State for Fisheries at Geneva and calls upon the government to reaffirm its intention to take the necessary unilateral action in the absence of an agreement at Geneva.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43. It cannot be presented without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

FRENCH CANADA

GREETINGS TO CITIZENS ON 200TH ANNIVERSARY OF QUEBEC ACT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, it is with pride and in a spirit of solidarity that on this first day of May I request the unanimous consent of the House under Standing Order 43 to move a very special motion concerning the survival of the French culture in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, 200 years ago today, the Quebec Act, which officially recognized the French language and culture in Canada, was proclaimed. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner):

That this House unanimously rejoice at this historical event and eagerly wish all French Canadians in this country happiness, long life and prosperity.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is certainly an important question and a very good idea, but unfortunately it is not an urgent matter.

PROPOSED INVESTIGATION OF FEDERAL WAGE POLICIES AS THEY RELATE TO VARIOUS REGIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes):

That this government immediately set up a task force comprised at a minimum of an economist from the western region of Canada, the central region and the Atlantic region, to investigate the philosophy, politics and economic criteria of present federal wage policies as they relate to federal employees in these different regions of Canada and determine whether and to what extent the federal government is discriminating against any region by such policies.

The urgent and pressing necessity lies in the strains on the unity of the country which prevailing federal wage policies are causing.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43 cannot be presented without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

INDUSTRY

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY MINISTER ON SITUATION IN TEXTILE INDUSTRY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I request unanimous consent of the House to present a motion dealing with a matter of pressing necessity.

As the textile and clothing industry in Quebec is now in great danger of declining or even disappearing because of the high rate of imports, and as the recommendations of the Canadian Textile Board have not been applied or have had very little effect, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise):

That the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) make, in the nearest future, a clear and comprehensive statement on the situation of the textile and clothing industry in Quebec and in Canada, which industry is now threatened by uncontrolled imports, and on what the government intends to do to protect the workers in that industry.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, the motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: As there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LAW OF THE SEA CONFERENCE—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF STATEMENT OF FISHERIES MINISTER CONCERNING 200 MILE ECONOMIC ZONE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Acting Prime Minister or the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It relates to the speech made at the Law of the Sea Conference by the Minister of State (Fisheries). Does the contingency plan indicated by the minister represent the policy of this government? In general terms, what is this contingency plan? Does it relate to unilateral control of the fisheries extending out 200 miles or over the whole continental shelf?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when the Minister of State (Fisheries) spoke, he of course spoke on behalf of the Canadian government. He went there as a delegate of Canada for this purpose. I have not yet had an opportunity of seeing the text of what he said. Hence, I do not think it would be appropriate to comment on the particular point raised by the Leader of the Opposition at the present time.

Mr. Stanfield: Does the Acting Prime Minister not find it a little extraordinary for him to give the assurance that the Minister of State (Fisheries) was stating government policy but he, the Acting Prime Minister, does not know what the policy was?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, we have confidence in our ministers to state government policy. All I was saying to the Leader of the Opposition was that I have not yet seen the text of the minister's speech and, therefore, I think it inappropriate to comment on it.

Mr. Stanfield: Will the Acting Prime Minister or the Secretary of State for External Affairs state that it is the policy of the government of Canada to exercise unilateral control of our fisheries over the continental shelf in the absence of an international agreement? Is this the policy? If so, in general terms how does the government propose to implement it?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the policy of the government on this point has been stated a number of times, namely that one of the policy options open to the government of Canada is unilateral action. However, in light of the continuing progress being made at the Law of the Sea Conference, we have not reached any conclusion as to the adoption of that particular option. It certainly would not be the intention of the government to consider any such option until the full results of the conference have been assessed by the government.

LAW OF THE SEA CONFERENCE—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OUTLINING GOVERNMENT PLANS IF CONFERENCE FAILS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that several ministers have stated on a number of occasions that Canada would take unilateral action, will the Secretary of State for External Affairs make a statement on motions outlining the plan they will follow in the event the Law of the Sea Conference fails?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will consider the suggestion made by the hon. member. It may be possible to make a statement at some time following the conclusion of the conference, which is not very far distant.

Mr. Marshall: Should agreement at the Law of the Sea Conference not be reached, will bilateral discussions be held with any of those nations which agree to a 200-mile limit. If agreement is reached, would the government then take action along with the nations that want to extend the limit to 200 miles?

Mr. MacEachen: Any such decision would certainly be premature at this point. We certainly wish to wait to see the results of this conference; my information is that real progress has been made on each of the major policy issues in which Canada has a real interest. In my opinion it would be unwise to prejudge the results at this point.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Why does the Minister of the Environment prejudge them, then?

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ALLEGED INCREASE IN WAGE DISPARITIES BETWEEN MEN AND WOMEN—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Since this is International Women's Year, and taking into account the fact that today is May Day, a day which has important symbolic significance for those who believe in the notion of equality, may I ask the minister what steps he and his department are taking to reverse the trend which was revealed in the most recent report of the women's bureau in his department to the effect that wage disparities between men and women in Canada are actually increasing rather decreasing?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The women's bureau in my department conducts these studies and brings these matters to the attention of the Canadian public generally. We then forward the findings to the various provincial jurisdictions in the hope that through legislative measures there, plus provisions in our own labour standards code, action can be taken on the basis of these facts. As the hon. member is aware, in terms of labour standards, the vast majority of the work force is under provincial jurisdiction. We shall be discussing this type of thing at the next federal-provincial conference of labour ministers.

PUBLIC SERVICE

ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION AGAINST WOMEN—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I have a supplementary for the President of the Treasury Board. Considering the fact that 10 per cent of the labour force in general, as well as the whole of the federal civil service, are the responsibility of the federal government, and since the latest report of the Public Service Commission points out that in the federal civil service 69 per cent of the women as opposed to only 20 per cent of the men earned less than $7,500, and considering that only one per cent of all the executive positions in the civil service are occupied by women, will the hon. gentleman tell us what concrete steps he is taking to change this situation?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as hon. members know, a special section of the Public Service Commission is dealing with that problem. I think considerable progress has been achieved in recent years, but a continuing effort will have to be made to increase the number of women within the public service.

HUMAN RIGHTS

DATE OF INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION ESTABLISHING HUMAN RIGHTS AND INTERESTS COMMISSION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): A question to the Acting Prime Minister. In the light of the statement made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare last October to the effect that legislation establishing a human rights and interests commission which would be responsible, among other things, for enforcing non-discrimination on the basis of sex in terms of employment practices would be introduced before the end of 1974, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister why, at this point in 1975, such a measure has not even been brought forward for first reading?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): The bill in draft form is now before cabinet. It is proving to be an extremely complicated measure, and this is the reason for the delay, not because the government is not anxious to introduce the legislation.

AIR TRANSPORT

DATE OF INSTALLATION OF RADAR EQUIPMENT AT VAL-D'OR

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

As a result of my recent interview with the minister last Tuesday concerning the problem created by air navigation at the Val-d'Or airport since the departure of the armed forces, could the minister tell us whether a radar will be set up again at that airport, as the problem is extremely urgent and must be settled as soon as possible for the security of air passengers?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): I do not know, Mr. Speaker, whether a new radar will be set up in Val-d'Or, but I know that my department is considering the opportunity of providing more modern equipment so that air navigation may be safer in that area.

Mr. Caouette (Villeneuve): I should like to put a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Following the minister's answer, since there is a danger of accident in foggy weather due to the lack of radar at the airport, could the minister tell us when the aforementioned aids will be set up?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): The only thing I can say, Mr. Speaker, is that my department is investigating and will eventually report to me.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LAW OF THE SEA CONFERENCE—POSSIBILITY OF BILATERAL DISCUSSIONS WITH COUNTRIES APPROVING ECONOMIC ZONE CONCEPT IF CONFERENCE FAILS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to that which was asked a moment ago by the Leader of the Opposition, and I direct it to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Since the Law of the Sea Conference cannot succeed on any basis other than a convention founded on a concept of the economic zone coupled with that of the common heritage of mankind—and obviously this concept has not been accepted—is it the government's intention to wait until this matter is further debated at the next Law of the Sea Conference suggested for next year, or will bilateral discussions be held with the United States and other countries who approve of the economic zone concept in the hope that early unilateral action may be taken by Canada to protect our marine and our mineral resources on our continental shelf?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I regret to advise the hon. member that I differ with the premise he has established, namely that all is lost at the conference. I do not take that attitude at this point. I believe there may be, and probably still is, some ability to cope with the problem that he has raised. Certainly the delegation is at work, and although I cannot say for certain it may be that there can be progress, particularly with respect to the continental margin.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the vital importance of Canada obtaining at least management rights to marine resources on the continental shelf, and in view of the apparent failure at Geneva, which I submit is due to lack of an aggressive stance by this government, have preliminary negotiations on a bilateral basis been held with a view to agreeing on quotas as a preliminary step to whatever unilateral action the government will eventually have to take?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the Canadian delegation is operating in good faith at the conference and it would certainly be in conflict with that position to commence bilateral deals which imply the collapse and failure of the conference.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

STRIKE OF QUEBEC LONGSHOREMEN—EFFECT OF FEED GRAIN SUPPLY—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON COMPLIANCE WITH BACK-TO-WORK LEGISLATION

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. Can the minister tell the House whether or not the crisis which led us to sit all night to bring in legislation to end the strike at the three river ports has passed? I want specifically to ask the minister whether the concern that engaged us all that night, which was grain supplies to Quebec farm producers, has been remedied to the point where supplies are now sufficient to meet their needs, which apparently was not the case last week.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, my information is that grain supplies are adequate to meat the need and that there is no interference with the movement of grain, as was not the case prior to this House passing the legislation. So that particular element which contributed finally to the emergency has by and large been removed. However, the very disturbing element of apparent defiance of the law is still there.

Mr. Fraser: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister tell the House exactly what steps are being taken today, and what steps are proposed for the next few days to make sure that the law is going to be enforced?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Officials of the justice department are in Montreal examining the facts of the situation, which hopefully will establish what I strongly suspect is defiance of the law, and we will take the appropriate legal remedies. Once having ascertained those facts, although I think this question might be more properly put to the Minister of Justice, I believe there will be an application for an injunction on Monday.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, is the minister telling the House that some days after the legislation has taken effect and the men are not back to work there is still a necessity to have officials gathering factual information of the situation, or is the minister saying that what the officials are doing is gathering the necessary evidence to make the necessary application?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): That is essentially what I meant, Mr. Speaker. They are gathering the necessary evidence.

HARBOURS

MONTREAL—ABILITY OF MARITIME EMPLOYERS' ASSOCIATION TO MEET LOAN COMMITMENTS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Transport if he has a moment or two, but I would not want to interrupt anything. Can the minister now answer the question I put to him yesterday in respect of the level of loans that have been guaranteed by this government for a Canadian association of foreign interests, namely the Maritime Employers' Association? I would ask at the same time whether the minister has had any conversations with his colleague, the Minister of Labour, in respect of his conversations last night with officials of the Maritime Employers' Association and, if so, did he discuss whether the MEA is in a position to continue to honour its commitments to the bank, or will the government have to step in and exercise this guarantee?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is something I am discussing at the present time. The total amount of money loaned to the MEA, not by the government alone but by the banks and the government, is about $11 million. I think the government is guaranteeing $2.5 million, as well as loans from the National Harbours Board of $2.5 million. Those are the figures I remember.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I would direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Labour. If in fact the minister did meet with management or officials of the Maritime Employers' Association last night, or sometime yesterday, as we understand, I should like to ask if this question of the MEA loans from the two banks was discussed, and was there any indication from the officials about the ability of the association to meet its commitments? Was the question of the government's guarantee of a portion of the total loan, which is somewhere in the order of $18 million now, discussed at the meetings, and were there discussions in respect of a request for additional funds or additional help in relation to the current dispute at the river ports?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the entire question of the financial situation of the MEA was not discussed at a meeting with me.

IMMIGRATION

VIETNAMESE REFUGEES—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON REQUESTS BY OTHER COUNTRIES THAT CANADA ADMIT CERTAIN NUMBER

Hon. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration whether the United States, other governments or international institutions have requested the Canadian government to accept a certain number of Vietnamese refugees with whom they are unable to cope and, if so, what is the government going to do about it?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): As of this morning, Mr. Speaker, the government has agreed to accept up to 2,000 Vietnamese refugees who have been airlifted to the United States or United States territories—this is in response to a request of the United States government—and up to 1,000 refugees who have gathered at points outside Viet Nam. I am thinking of places like Bangkok and Hong Kong. There are some people turning up there now who have escaped to Thailand and other countries.

I might say that this 3,000 is over and above the commitment we have made in respect of sponsored and nominated relatives of Canadian citizens or landed immigrants in Canada, although frankly and unfortunately in the latter case it is very doubtful that very many of these people in fact got out of Viet Nam and will be coming forward. I do have information now that there are some 82 at Guam and 10 at Wake Island. We are dispatching an immigration team with medical assistance to work in co-operation with Americans in these locations, particularly in respect of relatives of Canadians who have indicated they have arrived at these places.

Mr. Haidasz: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether the government of Canada has or will be approaching the new government in South Viet Nam with a request that the relatives of Canadian Vietnamese be allowed to come to Canada?

● (1430)

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I would have to defer a response to that question to my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

INDUSTRY

MICROSYSTEMS—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO RECOVER AMOUNT OF INVESTMENT—SUGGESTED INVESTIGATION OF RELATIONSHIP WITH NORTHERN ELECTRIC

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Would he outline to the House whether he is presently attempting to recover the more than $37 million invested in Microsystems by the Canadian government?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we are making efforts to get repayment of the loan of nearly $7 million which was secured, but the balance of some $30 million involved conditional grants—that is, they were repayable out of profits. As the hon. member knows, the Microsystems Company lost some $45 million and it is very unlikely that we will ever obtain any part of that.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the minister. In view of the fact that Northern Electric will, as it turns out, be picking up the assets and will not lose a penny on its investment in Microsystems, will the minister tell the House whether he hopes to recover any of the money from Northern Electric?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated I would expect to negotiate and obtain a substantial part, I hope all, of the outstanding loan of nearly $7 million.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge on a final supplementary.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, in view of the large sums of money that have been invested in this company and the rather disastrous way in which this money has been lost, I wonder whether the minister would investigate, or set up a committee to look into, the entire affairs of Microsystems and its relationship with Northern Electric, perhaps both as a way to find out why this money went down the drain and to make sure that this does not happen again.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, we have of course been in conversation with the officials of Northern Electric and Microsystems and have attempted to ensure that the Canadian public's interest will be fully secured. We are, of course, on a continuing basis trying to learn from this experience, but I think the hon. member will realize that when you are supporting an advance in technology you do so for two reasons, either because of the risk or the amount involved or both. In other words, the projects would not otherwise be undertaken by the Canadian private sector without government assistance. In companies of this size, heavy risks clearly are involved and you do not win them all.

ENERGY

NATURAL GAS—POSSIBLE DISCUSSIONS WITH ALBERTA PRIOR TO PRICE INCREASE—EFFECT OF PRICE INCREASE ON NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Did the minister or any official of his department have a discussion with the Alberta government or the Energy Board in Alberta before the announced increase in the price of natural gas of about 70 per cent which came forward yesterday.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I should make it clear that the decision was made by an arbitration tribunal appointed by the two private parties to the contract and not by the Alberta Energy Resources Conservation Board. The officials of the two governments did indeed meet a week ago and discussed the price of gas. This question will be discussed again, I hope, when I meet with the Minister of Energy for Alberta this coming week.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary again is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Does this decision that was announced yesterday have in the minister's opinion any major ramifications for the settlement of the negotiations between the federal government and the provinces in respect of energy prices.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I think it gives a pretty clear indication that the most useful thing would be for the governments to arrive at a mutually acceptable price very much below the arbitration tribunal award.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSALS INVOLVING COMMONWEALTH IN AFFAIRS OF NON-COMMONWEALTH COUNTRIES—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of statements from some leading personalities at the Commonwealth Conference regarding proposals that would involve the Commonwealth in the affairs of non-Commonwealth countries such as Mozambique, Rhodesia and Southwest Africa, could the minister indicate what position Canada is adopting toward these proposals?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of more information on the exact nature of the proposals I have no comment to make. I have no doubt, however, that the question of southern Africa and the regimes existing there will be a matter of great concern to the Commonwealth leaders and on that point Canada will of course support strongly principles that would lead to majority rule and racial equality in all parts of Africa.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, considering the extent of our aid to various members of the Commonwealth, what steps then would Canada take to prevent the diversion of Canadian funds into questionable political and possibly military ventures?

Mr. MacEachen: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have aid programs with quite a number of countries. In the absence of specific details that funds are being diverted to military purposes I have no comment to make. I do not believe, nor have I any evidence to suggest, that such funds are being diverted for military purposes in any part of the world.

[Mr. Gillies.]

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

GAP BETWEEN KNOWLEDGE OF NUCLEAR AND OTHER NATIONS—POSSIBILITY OF PROHIBITING SALE OF CANDU REACTORS

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I apologize to him for not having given him notice. I attempted to get in touch with his office. In view of the treaty meeting in Geneva on May 6 based on the gap which exists between scientific and technological knowledge of the nuclear nations as opposed to the rest of the world, which is now proven by the advent of India into the nuclear club, I should like to ask the minister whether an alternative has been worked out and whether Canada is prepared to abide by this alternative and if necessary stop the sale of CANDU reactors?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Well, Mr. Speaker, the question is quite complicated. My colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in December last announced the system of safeguards that would be required for the sale of nuclear materials to other countries.

These safeguards are in place and will be observed. In the case of India we are still conducting discussions with the Indian Government with a view to overcoming the difficulties that have arisen as a result of the exploding of a nuclear device in that country.

PUBLISHING

PROPOSED LICENSING OF NEWSTANDS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State but in his absence and in the absence of his parliamentary secretary I would direct it to the Government Leader. A recent Canadian Press statement reports the minister as saying that a licensing system may be the next step to ensure that newsstands carry a certain amount of Canadian material. Could I ask the minister whether the guidelines of this proposal would be similar to those the government has suggested for Canadian periodicals which is 80 per cent Canadian content?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think this question should be directed to my colleague.

Mr. Friesen: He is not here.

Mr. Sharp: He was here yesterday and could have been asked the question at that time. He will be back in a few days.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

POSSIBILITY OF INQUIRY UNDER CANADA LABOUR CODE INTO ACTIVITIES OF SEAFARERS' INTERNATIONAL UNION—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. In view of the reported statement made outside the House by the Minister of Justice to the effect that he is not ordering a broad inquiry into the activities of the SIU but that there is enough evidence to form the basis for an inquiry under the Canada Labour Code to look into certain labour activities of the SIU, I wonder whether the Minister of Labour could tell us if he is ordering such an inquiry?

● (1440)

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the statement made by the Minister of Justice. The material upon which he came to that conclusion has just very recently come into our possession. We are considering the possibilities the hon. member is suggesting. There are several possibilities under the Labour Code. There is the inquiry and, I believe, under section 196 we have another option in terms of conducting further examinations.

An hon. Member: Snowball.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): There is no suggestion of snowball here at all. We just received the material.

An hon. Member: Stonewall.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): There is no question of stonewall, either. We just received the information, and if that information justifies appropriate action being taken to correct abuses, we will take that action.

SUGGESTION CABINET COMMITTEE CONSIDER NEED FOR INQUIRY UNDER LABOUR CODE INTO ACTIVITIES OF SEAFARERS' INTERNATIONAL UNION

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): My supplementary is to the Acting Prime Minister, and I want to put it as delicately as I can. In view of the relationship of the Minister of Labour in the past to the SIU, along with some of his cabinet colleagues, and in view of the fact that technically it falls exclusively under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Labour to call for such an inquiry, will the Acting Prime Minister consider the possibility of setting up a cabinet committee composed of colleagues who have not been involved with the SIU to consider this matter?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): You won't get a quorum.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): I will answer as delicately as possible that I do not think my hon. friend would be satisfied with that sort of inquiry. I have confidence in the Minister of Labour, and I would suggest that questions of the kind which have been put which insinuate something wrongful are contrary to our rules.

AGRICULTURE

BEEF CATTLE—SUGGESTION MINISTER JUSTIFY STATEMENT QUOTAS WORTH $100 MILLION TO PRODUCERS

Mr. Bert Cadieu (Meadow Lake): My question is to the Minister of Agriculture. As the minister has been stating that the imposition of quotas on beef has been worth $100 million to producers, will he make public the calculation by which he arrives at these figures?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I received a letter from the secretary-manager of the Canadian Cattlemen's Association, and he said—if I can use the word—that I was being rather conservative when I said they had gained $100 million by the program, and he can present figures which show that it was much more than $100 million.

BEEF CATTLE—ALLEGED REDUCTION IN SALES OF BREEDING STOCK

Mr. Bert Cadieu (Meadow Lake): Is the minister aware of livestock sales on breeding stock in western Canada? Almost 50 per cent are going back home rather than going through sales. Is the minister aware of this?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, all I know is that all the sales of breeding stock, British breeds, held at Calgary and Regina have been better than they ever expected, and some of the best they have had for years. A vast majority of that stock from those purebred breed sales went to the United States of America.

Mr. Cadieu: If the minister would check these figures, he would find that this average represents only the cattle that were sold, not the ones which went back to the farm.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Moncton.

AIR TRANSPORT

LACK OF SERVICE BETWEEN NEW BRUNSWICK AND OTTAWA—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Leonard Jones (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Is the minister aware that at the present time there is no direct, regular air service from any point in the province of New Brunswick, and in particular, from the city of Moncton, to the nation's capital, resulting in a very unjust situation for New Brunswickers? Will the minister take immediate steps to rectify this situation?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will make an inquiry and tell the hon. member what we are doing about it.

Oral Questions

TOMATOES—EFFECT OF IMPORTS ON CANADIAN GREENHOUSE TOMATO PRODUCERS

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Is the minister aware that the imports into the Canadian market of Florida field tomatoes and Cleveland greenhouse tomatoes have so far despressed the price on the Canadian market that Canadian greenhouse tomato producers are being forced to sell their produce, which is only now reaching the height of its season, at a price below the cost of production? If so, what steps is he taking to protect the Canadian greenhouse industry?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we are well aware of the fact that tomatoes from Mexico and the United States have been brought into Canada. There is no substantial increase in the amount of tomatoes which have come here. We think the present situation is temporary because of crop conditions in Mexico and Florida, and we think the market will alleviate itself of this problem.

AIRPORTS

PICKERING—DATE OF OFFER TO RESIDENTS OF STOUFFVILLE TO PURCHASE HOMES

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works. In view of the minister's statement last week with regard to the future Pickering airport noise disturbance that an offer has been made for those residents in Stouffville who want to leave to regard the government as purchaser of last resort, would the minister indicate when the offer was made, to whom it was extended and in what form? It now appears no one in Stouffville has heard of the offer, including the mayor of that town.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the indication I gave in the House was, perhaps, imprecise in that the details of the offer have not been worked out, but the government will be prepared, as a purchaser of last resort to offer to purchase houses from citizens who wish to move away by reason of noise levels.

Mr. Stevens: Could the minister be more precise as to exactly when the government will be making this approach to the residents of Stouffville?

Mr. Drury: I think perhaps more in the way of details and more in the way of knowledge as to possible noise levels in the future should be worked out before the offer is communicated. Those who wish to avail themselves of this will want to know against what kind of test they will be operating.

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

MANPOWER

REASON MINOR HOCKEY LEAGUE PLAYERS INSTRUCTED TO OBTAIN SOCIAL INSURANCE NUMBERS

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. The Ontario Minor Hockey Association has instructed all its affiliates to instruct their minor league hockey players next year to obtain social insurance numbers. Some of these kids are only seven years of age. I would like to know the minister's rationale behind this situation and whether he will ask them to pay into the Canada Pension Plan, UIC and the others.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): It would be pretty difficult for a minister to know the rationale. This is the first I have heard of this matter, so I will have to look into it and find out what is happening. I am not sure what they are up to.

PUBLIC WORKS

DREDGING—POSSIBILITY OF DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN MINISTER AND MR. McNAMARA

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. I would like to ask him if he took advantage of the recent visit to this city of Mr. McNamara and other members of his band to discuss with them the interesting question of dredging.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I did not take advantage of the recent visit of Mr. McNamara and his band to Ottawa to discuss the dredging question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

DREDGING—REQUEST FOR OUTLINE OF SAFEGUARDS BEING CONSIDERED FOR NEW CONTRACTS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Public Works. On April 22 and, I believe, again on April 29 the minister indicated that he is pursuing the awarding of dredging contracts, but prior to that time he would have to devise some standards in order to protect the public interest. Can the minister advise today whether those standards have been devised and have been submitted to cabinet for approval in order that the nation can know of them prior to entering into any contracts with dredging companies?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I undertook to make an announcement tomorrow, which I intend to do.

● (1450)

DREDGING—REASON MINISTER DID NOT CONSULT RCMP AND SOLICITOR GENERAL ON SAFEGUARDS FOR NEW CONTRACTS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. In view of the importance of the matter, and I do not have to elaborate on that, why did the Minister of Public Works not take the RCMP and the Solicitor General into his confidence with respect to the procedure and safeguards which would be required, as was revealed this morning?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure of this revelation this morning. I have been in close consultation with my colleague, the Minister of Justice, however.

Mr. Alexander: I will repeat it. Why did the minister not contact the Solicitor—

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Speaker: One supplementary. The hon. member for Hamilton West.

Mr. Alexander: Why did this minister not contact the Solicitor General and the Commissioner of the RCMP in order to determine what type of safeguards would best serve the public interest? That is a simple question; may I have a short answer?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I think that the centre for knowledge in respect of these matters should be properly within the Department of Justice which maintains contact with police forces.

IMMIGRATION

POSSIBILITY OF VIETNAMESE BEING DECLARED INTERNATIONAL REFUGEES

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, my question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration is supplementary to the question asked by the hon. member for Parkdale. Can any statement be made in respect of the negotiations that have taken place between officials of the minister's department and officials of the United Nations, specifically the High Commissioner for Refugees, about whether there is any possibility of Vietnamese refugees being declared international refugees in order that the international community can place representations before either the PRG or Hanoi in respect of allowing those people who received exit visas, such as were given by Canada, to be reunited with their families?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there has been no decision to declare an international refugee movement as a result of discussions with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. When people are in a country other than their own as a result of the persecution of their country, they become refugees in the eyes of those countries that have signed the covenant, of which Canada is one, and are to be dealt with on an official basis.

The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees subscribes to this and at the moment is concentrating on potential moves to generally alleviate the situation within Viet Nam, whether it be north or south, on a day by day basis. We are in constant communication, and if there is a change in the decision we will be prepared to subscribe to the conditions. In answer to an earlier question about what we are doing on our own, I said that we would join in any movement the High Commissioner would be disposed to announce later.

INDUSTRY

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF NEW TEXTILE POLICY

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Given the serious situation of Quebec's textile and clothing industry, does he intend to make a statement soon in the House in order to set up a new national policy of textile and clothing in Canada?

[English]

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have made a number of statements in respect of the government's response to reports of the Textile and Clothing Board. I am awaiting a report with respect to the recent hearings on apparel that took place in Montreal. I should advise the House that I have asked my department to conduct a review of the policy and the Textile Act and this has already begun.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

In the process of review he has just announced, does the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce intend to have consultations on the matter with the leaders and workers of that important industry?

[English]

Mr. Gillespie: We will be consulting with both the management of the companies and the representatives of the workers, Mr. Speaker. I expect to meet with them very shortly, probably within the next couple of weeks.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR EARLY COMMENCEMENT OF CONSTRUCTION ON LEBRETON FLATS PROJECT

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Ottawa-Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs which relates to the Lebreton flats housing project, within walking distance of this House. It is obvious that since we are in a period of rising unemployment and decreasing housing starts—

Some hon. Members: Question, question.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member has a question would he please put it.

Mr. Poulin: —that this project is one of high priority. Yet despite the fact that the land is federally owned, the planning is in the hands of NCC and CMHC, both federal government agencies—

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Poulin: —and has the approval of the mayor of the city of Ottawa, progress is too slow.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a question would he please put it now?

Mr. Poulin: I am at the question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister advise the House, in view of this concentration of authority and promised co-operation, that he will endeavour to advance the commencement of construction on this site in order to demonstrate that this government with this much support can move projects in an exemplary manner, provide much needed housing and reduce unemployment?

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Brandon-Souris.

POST OFFICE

STRIKE OF LETTER CARRIERS—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON PROGRESS OF NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. Now that negotiations on the ratification of the recent contract with the Letter Carriers Union is reaching the critical stage, particularly in the Montreal area, can the minister bring the House up to date on the progress of those negotiations, particularly the steps he is taking to achieve their successful conclusion?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I want to make it clear to the House that the letter carriers who have been off work during the week were entitled to be because they are in a strike position. They went off work when the national executive insisted that the ratification vote be by secret ballot and placed the Montreal local in trusteeship. They are to be commended for this. In a positive vein, the letter carriers met this morning and agreed to go back to work, hopefully by tomorrow morning.

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON NEGOTIATIONS WITH CANADIAN UNION OF POSTAL WORKERS

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): A supplementary question. In view of this obvious success under the new policy of close consultation and the responsibility displayed by both the National Letter Carriers Union and the majority of the employees, can the minister inform the House if these factors are at play in the negotiations under way with the Canadian Union of Postal Workers?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, it would be misleading the House to say that we have reached the same degree of consultation but we are working at it and I must say the climate is much more positive than it was a week or two ago.

HARBOURS

HAMILTON—REQUEST MINISTER OF REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION APPEAR BEFORE COMMITTEE TO EXPLAIN WHAT HAPPENED TO FILE FROM MR. CAMPBELL

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Since the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs stonewalled a very reasonable request to have the minister appear to explain what happened to the Hamilton file from Councillor Campbell, would the minister repeat his earlier assurance to the House that he would be glad to appear at the committee and testify so that this particular aspect of the matter can be clarified.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I must say, although I was phrasing the question to the Minister of Transport, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion heard the question and knew what I was getting at. I will ask him the question that I asked almost a month ago. At that time the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion said that he would be only too glad to appear before the appropriate committee to clarify all uncertainties on the Hamilton harbour problem and the allegations in particular levelled by Councillor Campbell. The Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs is seized with this matter and there was an interesting precedent when the Minister of Supply and Services volunteered to appear. Would the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion agree to appear to help clarify this matter?

● (1500)

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, once again I have to say that in answering that question I would be going against the ruling of the Chair, according to which I cannot be asked questions on this matter. I do not want to avoid the answer. There is a short, one word answer with regard to the substance of the question the hon. member asked me. It is this: I had no awareness of the matter in question and the matter, as far as I know, has been cleared up by the appearance before the committee of the Solicitor General and the Minister of Supply and Services. There is really nothing I can add to that.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Poulin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Ottawa Centre is recognized on a question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege relates to the serious substance of the question I asked of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. He was about to answer. In view of the many powers he possesses and since the NCC, CMHC and the government own the land in question, why cannot we move quickly with the project alluded to? I submit that the minister was prepared to answer, and I rise, on a question of privilege, to ask that he be allowed to do so.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member realizes that the Chair exercises discretion, both as to the context of questions, the length of preamble and the nature of the answer which may be anticipated. On occasion the Chair may have to rule quickly that a question ought not to be answered and ought not take up the time of the question period in that particular form. That is the discretion the Chair exercised at that particular time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the government House leader about the business for this week and next week? While he is answering, could he tell me, now that Bill C-32 has almost passed through parliament, if he intends to set aside six days for a budget debate in the month of May?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, may I first deal with the immediate program which I suggest should come before the House. This afternoon we will continue the second reading debate on Bill C-41. That debate will continue tomorrow. If it is concluded either before or during tomorrow's session we will take Bill C-57. If we dispose of that bill, we will take Bill S-15 in the name of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. As to the period beyond that, I should like to have consultations with the other House leaders to discuss the possibility of a budget debate and the claims this will make on our time, also the allotted supply days which have not yet been allocated but which we must allocate before the end of June.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I bring to Your Honour's attention the fact that while the House will be discussing Bill C-41 the Standing Committee on Agriculture will be meeting. This will prevent members involved in that committee participating in the debate in this House. I draw this to Your Honour's attention as it seems to be an infringement of the right of members to attend to the business of the House and participate in this debate on agriculture. I ask Your Honour to indicate that in future there is to be no interference with the rights of members to deal with the business before the House. I ask that the agriculture committee not meet at the same time as an agricultural bill is being debated in the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think there is much point in allowing this point of order to go further. The fact is that the Chair does not exercise any authority whatsoever over the scheduling of standing committees.

PUBLIC SERVICE EMPLOYEES

Question No. 782—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

1. Does the government know the names of individuals who worked in the Office of the Prime Minister, in the Privy Council Office or as a Research Assistant, Special Assistant, Executive Assistant, Secretary, Advisor, Consultant or in any other capacity in or for the office of any Minister or Minister of State from 1963 to the present?

2. What is the (a) name (b) position (c) job description of each of those individuals who are presently in the Public Service or employed by (i) Atomic Energy of Canada Limited (ii) the Bank of Canada (iii) the Canada Council (iv) the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation (v) the Canadian Commercial Corporation (vi) the Canadian Dairy Commission (vii) the Canadian Film Development Corporation (viii) the Canadian International Development Agency (ix) the Canadian Radio-Television Commission (x) the Canadian Transport Commission (xi) the Canadian Wheat Board (xii) the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation (xiii) the Office of the Chief Electoral Officer (xiv) the Defence Research Board (xv) the Economic Council of Canada (xvi) Eldorado Nuclear Limited (xvii) the Federal Court of Canada (xviii) the Food Prices Review Board (xix) the Foreign Investment Review Agency (xx) the Fresh Water Fish Marketing Corporation (xxi) Information Canada (xxii) the National Capital Commission (xxiii) the National Energy Board (xxiv) the National Farm Products Marketing Council (xxv) the National Film Board (xxvi) the National Gallery of Canada (xxvii) the National Harbours Board (xxviii) the National Research Council of Canada (xxix) the Representation Commissioner (xxx) the Science Council of Canada?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): The information requested is not readily available to provide an accurate answer to this question. The costs in manpower and time to undertake the very large amount of work which would be required to gather such detailed data as is obtainable for the period covered by the question, would be prohibitive.

DIRECTORSHIPS HELD BY CABINET MINISTERS

Question No. 889—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

1. Are any Ministers who are members of the present Cabinet directors of any companies or corporations and, if so, which Ministers, of what companies or corporations are they directors, and at what date were any directorships presently held by such Cabinet Ministers assumed?

2. Did any Ministers who are members of the present Cabinet resign any directorships on being sworn of the Privy Council and, if so, which Ministers, on what dates and from what companies or corporations?

3. Did any Ministers who are members of the present Cabinet resign any directorships during the twelve months immediately prior to being sworn of the Privy Council and, if so, which Ministers, on what dates and from what companies or corporations?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): 1. It is government policy as stated in the House of Commons by the Prime Minister on July 18, 1973, that ministers cannot hold directorships in commercial or other profit-making corporations.

2. Yes. See Order for Return of March 14, 1966 and October 18, 1973; Debates of the House of Commons for October 7, 1968; Hon. Robert Andras: Gibson Motors (1962) Limited, Resigned: September 18, 1969; Gibson Lease and Rentals Limited, Resigned: September 18, 1969; Andras Hague Limited, Resigned: November 1, 1969, and Stratwin Limited, Resigned: November 1, 1969; Hon. *CUSTOMS BUILDING, WANETA, BRITISH COLUMBIA

Question No. 1,539—Mr. Brisco:

1. (a) Is the national average for a house of wood frame construction $23.25 per sq. ft. (b) does a one-storey wood frame building 50'x25' contain 1,250 sq. ft. (c) what is the cost per sq. ft. of a customs building to be constructed at Waneta, British Columbia?

2. How does the Department of Public Works justify such a high cost per sq. ft?

3. Are there very high temperatures in the Waneta area during the summer months and very low temperatures and heavy snow loads during the winter months and, if so, for what reason are sky-lights called for in the construction of this building?

4. (a) How will this building be heated in the winter months and at what cost per year (b) how will it be cooled in the summer months and at what cost per year?

5. (a) Is there provision in the basement of this building for a well (b) has provision been made in the plans for periodical removal of the well casing (c) would the building have to be jacked up in order to remove the well casing (d) for what reason was this well not placed outside the building?

6. What indication has the Department of Public Works received from either Canadian or United States authorities that this port of entry will have increased traffic loads to justify the expense of this contract?

7. Are there several thousands of dollars in extras that can be charged to the Department over and above the contract price and, if so (a) what is the total cost of all proposed extras (b) what comprises these extras?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in view of the length of the response to this question I wonder if it could be printed in Hansard as if it had been read.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

[Editor's Note: The response above referred to reads as follows:]

1. (a) Yes; (b) Yes; (c) The cost per sq. ft. of the building is $41.56.

2. The contract was awarded to the lowest of five reputable bidders. Although the national average for a house of wood frame construction is quoted by CMHC as $23.25 per sq. ft., current costs in the Penticton-Trail, B.C. area are running at $35 per sq. ft. It should be noted that these average costs reflect savings derived from volume construction whereas there is no volume construction involved in the construction of a public building. Also, the Customs Building at Waneta is of steel frame and masonry construction with a ceiling height that varies between 12′ 0″ and 20′ 0″. In addition, the cost includes air conditioning and additional public toilet facilities as well as other characteristics not found in the average house of wood frame construction such as: basement construction completely below grade; reinforced concrete basement walls; insulated basement walls; reinforced concrete main floor; angular shape building; minimum maintenance roof; interior rain water leaders; larger eaves and overhangs; increased window areas; wider commercial type entrances; brick & block interior partitions; better quality heating system; better quality lighting (high intensity). The cost of the Waneta Customs Building compares favourably with that of other similar prestige buildings in the area.

3. Yes. There are no sky-lights in the building proper. Sky-lights are provided in the canopies to provide light for customs inspections.

4. (a) Oil fired hot air heating estimated to cost $590.00 per year. (b) Roof top air-conditioning estimated to cost $200.00 per year.

5. (a) No; (b) Yes; (c) No; (d) The well is outside the building.

6. Traffic loads are taken from a U.S. Environmental Impact Study prepared by the State of Washington and a study of Highway 22A prepared by the B.C. Department of Highways. Both studies indicate a very substantial increase in trans border traffic.

7. No. (a) Not applicable; (b) Not applicable.

CANADA—UNITED KINGDOM TALKS ON SOCIAL SECURITY

Question No. 1,682—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

1. Did talks between the British and Canadian authorities take place last April on a reciprocal agreement between the two countries on social security and, if so, what progress can be reported on these talks?

2. (a) In what areas, e.g. pension payments, medical benefits or whatever, is there disagreement still to be resolved (b) for what reason are these talks so protracted?

3. Is there a date fixed on which talks are to be resumed and, if so, what is that date?

4. Is the scheme for Canada to assume payments in Canada for British pensioners and Britain to assume payments in Britain for Canadian pensioners, or will each country continue to look after its own migrant pensioners?

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Late in March, 1974, the deputy minister of National Welfare had conversations with British officials in London covering the British Green Paper on tax credits as well as social security relationships and developments in the two countries. While better understanding was achieved as to the internal workings of the two systems, it also became clear that the current state of legislation in the two countries precludes the reaching of a reciprocal agreement at this time.

2. (a) and (b). At this stage, the problem in reaching a bilateral reciprocal agreement does not lie with different types of benefits but rather the different provisions of the legislation in the two countries.

3. No date has been fixed for further conversations.

4. As noted in (2) above, the different provisions of legislation in the two countries will require examination of a variety of possibilities.

FISHERMEN—LICENSING PROGRAMME

Question No. 1,782—Mr. Marshall:

With reference to the licencing programme under the Department of the Environment, what are the names of all bona fide fishermen in the following communities in St. George's Bay, Western Newfoundland (a) Codroy (b) Highlands (c) St. David's (d) Jeffreys (e) McKays (f) Robinsons (g) Heatherton (h) St. Theresa's (i) Flat Bay (j) St. George's (k) Barachois Brook (l) Stephenville Crossing (m) Stephenville (n) Port au Port (o) Felix Cove (p) Campbell's Creek (q) Abraham's Cove (r) Ship Cove (s) Lower Cove (t) Sheaves Cove (u) Marches Point (v) Red Brook (w) Degras (x) Cape St. George (y) Mainland (z) Three Rock Cove (aa) Lourdes (bb) Winterhouses (cc) Black Duck Brook (dd) West Bay (ee) Piccadilly (ff) Boswarlos (gg) Point au Mal (hh) Aguathuna (ii) Fox Island River?

Mr. Len Marchand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): It is a long-standing departmental policy not to divulge information, concerning individual persons and companies, which has been obtained in confidence for statistical and management purposes. To do so could seriously undermine the department's statistical system by casting doubt on the department's credibility in its assurances to fishermen and processors that all information secured from them is maintained in the strictest of confidence.

CANADA-UNITED STATES SALMON NEGOTIATIONS

Question No. 1,801—Mr. Reynolds:

3. How many fishermen in the Province of British Columbia will take part in the negotiations?

4. What are the names, departments and addresses of the members of the official Canadian delegation?

Mr. Len Marchand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): 1. The starting date for the next round in the Canada/USA salmon negotiations has tentatively been set at May 28, 1975.

2. It is expected that these talks will last for seven to ten days, depending upon the progress made towards reaching an agreement.

3. Ten commercial fishermen or representatives of commercial fishermen, two representatives of sport fishermen and two representatives of fish buyers and processors will act as advisors to the Canadian delegation in these negotiations.

4. A proposal for the official Canadian delegation has not yet been submitted to government for approval.

DOUBLE TAXATION BETWEEN GOVERNMENT OF CANADA AND SOUTH AFRICA

Question No. 1,804—Mr. Rodriguez:

1. Is there an agreement relating to double taxation between the Governments of Canada and South Africa and (a) if so, does it extend to Namibia (b) if not (i) for what reason (ii) has the government been approached by Canadian corporations to have this agreement extended to Namibia?

2. Are Canadian corporations making payments to South Africa on their operations in Namibia either by way of income taxes, annual fees, royalties or licenses and, if so, do they receive credit from the government for such amounts paid?

3. Has the government advised the Government of South Africa of its support of the International Court of Justice advisory opinion that the Republic of South Africa is in illegal possession of the territory of Namibia and, if so, will the government recognize and allow, as a tax deduction, tax payments, fees, royalties or licenses made by a Canadian corporation operating in Namibia to the UN Council for Namibia?

4. Are Canadian diplomatic consular and commercial relations with Namibia not normal and, if not (a) has the government advised Canadian corporations that they are investing in Namibia at their own risk (b) how was this information conveyed to these corporations in Namibia?

5. Are there any official statements, bulletins or memoranda issued by the government to such corporations and, if so, will the government Table such material?

6. Has the government communicated to Canadian corporations doing business in Namibia, the United Nations Council for Namibia decree on the Natural Resources of Namibia, adopted at its 209th meeting on September 27, 1974?

7. Has the government any intention of asking to be seated on the UN Council for Namibia?

8. Has the government given any financial support to the UN Council for Namibia and, if not, is any such financial support contemplated?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Finance and External Affairs as follows: 1. An agreement for the avoidance of double taxation and the prevention of fiscal evasion between Canada and South Africa was signed on September 28th, 1956 and entered into force in the following year. The agreement does not extend to Namibia—there is no provision in the agreement for its extension. Canadian corporations have approached the government to have the agreement extended to Namibia.

2. Canadian corporations making payments of income tax on their operations in Namibia would be entitled to a foreign tax credit under the provisions of section 126 of the Income Tax Act. That section provides relief for any income or profits tax paid to the government of a country other than Canada including the government of a state, province or other political subdivision of a foreign country. Taxes other than income taxes and fees, royalties and other payments to a government would not qualify for a foreign tax credit under section 126. Such expenditures would ordinarily qualify for deduction as an expense in calculating the income from carrying on a business by a corporation.

3. The government of South Africa has been advised of Canada's support of the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice. Under existing law, the foreign tax credit to which a corporation is entitled is restricted to any income or profits taxes paid to the government of a country or of a political subdivision thereof. The question of providing a credit against the Canadian corporate tax for income taxes paid to the United Nations or any other international organization has not yet arisen. Should such taxes by imposed, the government would be prepared to consider the necessary amendment to the Income Tax Act to permit a credit for such taxes.

4. Relations with Namibia are not normal. (a) Yes. (b) Some of the major Canada based corporations operating in Namibia have been informally advised of the government's policy. Although no formal written advice has been given to them, the government's policies have been clearly enunciated in various public statements by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and other Canadian representatives in Canada, in the United Nations and elsewhere.

5. There are no such documents.

6. No.

7. No.

8. The government has not yet given any financial support but is contemplating doing so.

POLLUTION LEVELS—CANADIAN COPPER REFINERS IN MONTREAL

Question No. 1,830—Mr. Saltsman:

Has the Minister of National Health and Welfare examined the environmental problem inside a subsidiary of the Noranda smelting operations, namely the Canadian Copper Refiners in Montreal, to determine whether the company is exceeding the permissible pollution levels of arsenic hydride (AsH3) or arsine and, if so, did they exceed the permissible in-plant concentrations of 0.050 ppm?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No. The legislative control of the workplace environment comes under provincial legislation.

CONSOLIDATED AVIATION AND SERVICES (PACIFIC) LTD. CONTRACTS

Question No. 1,858—Mr. Reynolds:

Does Consolidated Aviation and Services (Pacific) Limited have any maintenance or any other type of contract for services with the government and, if so (a) on what date were such contracts signed (b) on what date do they expire (c) what is the value of each?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of National Defence, Public Works, Supply and Services and Transport as follows: No.

AIR CANADA EXECUTIVES

Question No. 1,874—Mr. Mazankowski:

Are Air Canada executives required to divulge details of their land, business and investment holdings and, if not, in light of Mr. Yves Ménard's resignation, is Air Canada planning to require their executives to divulge their holdings?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advises as follows: Air Canada

2. For each Subdivision what amount was (a) claimed by the railways under the provisions of the Railway Act (b) paid in lieu of claims by the government?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows: 1. (a, b) CNR, to date has not filed subsidy claims for these lines. (c) CP's Willingdon subdivision extends from Lloydminster at Mile 0.0 through Musidora at Mile 80.8 to South Edmonton at Mile 174.5. 2. What is the total revenue under statutory rates for the line?

3. What is the total mileage from Musidora to Lloydminster?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows: 1. The total revenue derived on any rail line consists of revenue from carload traffic, leases and other agreements. Total revenue from carload traffic on the rail line from Musidora, Mile 80.8, to Mile 1.4 (excluding Lloydminster) was: 1970, $419,316; 1971, $538,607; 1972, $546,894; 1973, $466,342. *DERAILMENT OF MAIL CAR

Question No. 1,888—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. In connection with the derailment at Thunder Bay recently, were empty mail bags found in the vicinity?

2. Was mail stolen and, if so, what action has been taken to recover the stolen mail and apprehend and prosecute the offenders?

Mr. Raynald Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is yes. As for the second part, the answer is that the derailment of train 214 on 9 February 1975 near Caramat, Ontario involved a car containing mail which broke open. The incident occurred in a remote area and it was only possible to provide some degree of protection from the local looters on the following day. Mail bags were cut open and mail scattered by the looters who wanted the bags to cart large amounts of meat, etc. While operating under most difficult and at times violent circumstances, railway and police officials endeavoured to protect the mail and it is believed that most of the mail (including register despatches) was recovered although some of it was badly water damaged. Normal procedure applies where anyone will be liable to prosecution if sufficient evidence is obtained to indicate the theft of mail or possession of stolen mail.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—PRACTICES AND POLICIES RESPECTING BUYING

Question No. 2,017—Mr. Reynolds:

1. What degree of standardization has taken place in the area of purchasing over the past five years within the Department of Supply and Services?

2. What are the practices and policies now in force respecting the buying, delegation of authority and tendering procedure for contracts?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. The number of customer departments and agencies has increased from 125 in 1970 to 141 in 1975. Approximately 15,000 items have been catalogued by the Supply Administration, of which some 7,000 are common items in use by several departments and agencies.

2. The steps in the procurement process which include the tendering procedure have been tabled in response to Question 2,008. Equality of opportunity to compete for government contracts, fair value for the taxpayer's dollar and optimum service to customer departments and agencies are the key policies followed by the Supply Administration. Delegation of authority to Supply Administration Officials is compatible with the level of responsibility. For example, the level for Directors' General approval of entry into competitive contracts is $250,000, Directors' $150,000, Division Chiefs' $100,000 and contracting officers' $15,000.

Order Paper Questions

TRAINING AT NATIONAL INTELLIGENCE ACADEMY, FORT LAUDERDALE, FLORIDA

Question No. 2,034—Mr. Rodriguez:

1. Have any Canadians trained at the National Intelligence Academy, Fort Lauderdale, Florida and, if so, are any Canadians presently training?

2. Where are the Canadians who trained at the NIA presently located?

3. Who paid the costs of those Canadians who have trained at the NIA?

4. Have any Canadian governments or police departments purchased goods from Audio Intelligence Devices, whose headquarters are in Fort Lauderdale and, if so, where are they being used?

5. Were any Canadian dignitaries escorted to the school by Secret Service agents?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of National Defence and the Solicitor General (Royal Canadian Mounted Police) as follows: 1. No.

2. Not applicable.

3. Not applicable.

4. No. (National Defence) Yes, for evaluation purposes only at Headquarters, Ottawa (Royal Canadian Mounted Police).

5. No.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR—COST OF OPERATION OF PARLIAMENTARY RETURNS OFFICE

Question No. 2,052—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

In the last fiscal year, what was the cost of operation of the Parliamentary Returns Office of the Department of Labour?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): There is no Parliamentary Returns Office as such in the Canada Department of Labour. The Department is a small one with correspondingly small requirements for responses to Parliamentary inquiries. For this reason Parliamentary returns are handled on a part-time basis by several members of the Deputy Minister's Secretariat.

GRANTS UNDER DEVELOPMENT OF MANAGEMENT COURSES

Question No. 2,073—Mr. Rodriguez:

With reference to the answer to Question No. 414 (a) what methods of evaluation were used by the department to determine the effectiveness of such gifts (b) if evaluations were done, who did them and will the government Table them (c) are trade and/or labour unions eligible for such grants or contributions and, if not, for what reason?

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): (a) Evaluation of particular contributions is made accordingly to the following criteria: 1. There must be an identifiable need, not currently being met, for enhancement of the management capabilities of the applicant association's membership.

2. The management course for which assistance is sought must be capable of making a significant contribution to improving the management competence of a large proportion of the association's membership.

3. The proposed course must deal with subject matter not covered by existing courses or must promise a significant improvement in quality over similar existing courses.

4. The proposed course must represent a significant departure from, or increase in, the normal educational activities of the association to date.

5. The applicant must be a non-profit professional, industry, business or management association that can contribute significantly to the improvement of managerial competence in the industry sector or activity it represents.

6. The applicant must be able to implement the course successfully.

7. The applicant must submit a plan for the proposed course, covering the developmental and operational phases of the course. (b) The evaluation is made case by case by officials who prepare the information on the applicant and his application. The recommendation to accept or refuse an application is made by a committee of officials. The contract with the successful applicant imposes on the association the obligation to report regularly over a period of three to five years on the effectiveness of the course developed. In the government's view, it would not be appropriate to table these evaluations. (c) Labour unions meeting the criteria under (a) could be eligible to apply to develop management retraining or upgrading courses of a type and quality not currently available for their management or for their members who are managers in industry. To date, no such case has arisen.

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND WELFARE—EMPLOYMENT OF MR. DON GREEN

Question No. 2,077—Mr. Bawden:

2. (a) What are his (i) duties (ii) qualifications for the position (b) who else was considered?

3. Was the fact that he was a Liberal candidate taken into account in a positive way?

4. (a) What are the terms of his contract (b) what is his annual salary or contract salary per month and is this more than the annual basic salary of a Member of Parliament?

5. Does he have an expense account of any kind and, if so, how much in meals, entertainment and air fares has he used in performance of his duties since his appointment?

6. On what date was he appointed?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Yes

2. (a) (i) As Special Assistant to the Minister, Mr. Green performs duties assigned to him by the Minister. (ii) Master of Social Work and experience running a community health clinic and community development projects. (b) The choice of candidates is at the discretion of the Minister concerned.

3. Answered under 2 (b)

4. (a) This is not a contract position. (b) The salary of a Special Assistant is up to $21,000.

5. As of March 18, 1975 the total expenses amount to $1,089.95.

6. October 1, 1974.

[Mr. Clermont.]

Lieutenant Colonel	23,160	26,400
Major	19,260	22,620
Captain	14,160	19,200

May a Member of Parliament receive a copy of all the regulations on the Unemployment Insurance Act and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Yes. A copy of the Unemployment Insurance Act and Regulations was sent to every Member of Parliament on August 14, 1974.

UIC—NUMBER OF TEMPORARY EMPLOYEES

Question No. 2,157—Mr. Gauthier (Roberval):

1. How many "temporary" employees are employed by UIC in (a) each province (b) each regional office in Quebec?

2. How many man-hours are devoted to employee training?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1974 1. (a) Newfoundland, 42; Prince Edward Island, 10; New Brunswick, 94; Nova Scotia, 40; Quebec, 490; Ontario, 1,310 (Head office included—144); Manitoba, 77; Saskatchewan, 28; Alberta, 75; British Columbia, 396; (b) One regional office, Montreal: 103.

2. 98,531.5 man/hours were devoted to employee training in 1974.

TRANSPORT—TENDERS FOR PICKERING AIRPORT

Question No. 2,199—Mr. Jelinek:

1. Has DOT called for tenders for the design and construction of the proposed Pickering airport and, if so, to whom were such contracts awarded?

2. Has there been approval or opposition to the proposed Pickering airport from the Councils of the (a) City of Toronto (b) Borough of Scarborough (c) Town of Markham (d) Town of Stouffville (e) Town of Pickering (f) Town of Richmond Hill?

3. How many residents within N.E.F. 30 noise contour are presently affected at Malton?

4. How many residents within N.E.F. 30 noise contour will be affected at Malton (a) without (b) with F.A.R. 36 retrofit by 1980, without a second major airport in Toronto?

5. Have major airlines expressed their agreement to use a second airport in Toronto and duplicate their services and, if so, which ones?

6. How much was spent on the Pickering airport project up to March 31, 1975?

7. What is the projected cost of a completed Pickering airport?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. No.

2. (a) Yes; (b) Yes; (c) Yes; (d) Yes; (e) Yes; (f) No.

3. Malton, 1973 (latest year for which information is at present available): 30 NEF, 33,000.

4. (a) Malton 1980 with no retrofit or refanning: 30 NEF, 61,000; (b) Complete retrofit by 1980 is not considered to be possible. Evidence was given before the Airport Inquiry Commission on this subject and the Commission's comments were as follows: "The commission is of the opinion that if the retrofit and refan programmes are undertaken the effect will be to prolong the use of the retrofitted and refanned aircraft in order to recover the costs of investment. This, in turn, will result in an inclination by the airlines to meet growth demands by greater use of the retrofitted and refanned aircraft rather than by the introduction of widebodied aircraft. This will result in greater aircraft movements. This, in turn, will negate some of the benefits to be gained from the programmes. As previously noted, an increase in aircraft movements has the effect of expanding NEF contours and thereby increasing the number of people affected by noise from aircraft operations. It should also be noted that as the number of wide-bodied aircraft, which are regarded as quiet aircraft, are increased, the noise from these aircraft will increase. It should be mentioned that while the 747's, DC-10's do meet the requirements of FAR 36, on approach and take-off, they do so only marginally. It should also be noted that as the size of an aircraft is increased, airframe noise will be a significant problem. The commission hesitates to express an opinion as to the date the entire United States fleet will be required to meet the requirements of FAR 36. However, as a result of the determined effort demonstrated by the United States to reduce the level of noise generated by aircraft operations, it is reasonable to assume that by 1985 the entire American fleet will meet the present requirements of FAR 36. The commission is of the opinion that the jet engine and aerodynamics are very complex subjects which will require continued research for an understanding and control of the resulting noise. As a consequence, the present noise levels generated by jet aircraft operations will realistically be with us at least until 1985. While it is difficult to estimate the noise levels which will be generated by aircraft operations after 1985, it is fair to say that they will never be comparable to the noise level generated by a glider, as some people would have the commission believe. However, it is probable that after 1985, the then noise level from aircraft operations will increase gradually with the probable increase in aircraft movements."

5. Under the role envisaged for the Minimum International Airport, both international scheduled and charter traffic could be assigned to Pickering. An airline consultative committee has been formed and will be meeting in the near future.

6. The total expenditure to March 31, 1975 in the planning and development of the Toronto Area Airports System is $92,156,000. Of this amount some $75,003,000 has been paid to those parties who held a financial interest in the land expropriated at the Pickering site. Included in the balance of expenditures are costs relative to consulting and other professional work to evaluate many alternative sites, develop traffic forecasts, and prepare economic and ecological studies, etc. It would be impractical to maintain separate accounting systems for each site evaluated. Expenditures for the Pickering site are therefore included in the total given.

7. The authorized cost for the construction of the Minimum International Airport, related facilities, and land, approved by the government on February 20, 1975, is slightly in excess of $200 Million. No airport construction at Pickering in addition to this has been approved.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING THE STABILIZATION OF NET PROCEEDS FROM THE PRODUCTION AND SALE OF WESTERN GRAIN

The House resumed, from Wednesday, April 30, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lang that Bill C-41, respecting the stabilization of net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain and to amend certain statutes in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on Bill C-41 I cannot help reflecting on what happened to the forerunner of this piece of legislation—Bill C-244, the prairie grain stabilization bill which was introduced in 1971. To put it mildly, the bill had a torrid history. It generated bitter debate and animosity in the minds of western Canadian farmers. It is fair to say that it united prairie producers in their extreme opposition to the measure. That opposition was stiff, and eventually the government withdrew the bill. The Edmonton Journal wrote, in an editorial in October, 1971, that the legislation was a disaster. I quote from the editorial:

● (1510)

The withdrawal of the grain stabilization bill is not, as Otto Lang suggested, "a major defeat for the farmer."

It was a defeat for the Trudeau government and for Mr. Lang, who was the federal minister responsible for the bill. It is understandable that he should feel bitter. But there is no reason why the farmers should suffer.

If the Trudeau government is still convinced that it had a good plan for stabilizing prairie grain income, there is no reason why the bill cannot be reintroduced, in a modified form to take into account the criticism the original received in western Canada.

The experience in which we were engaged during that period of time brought forth a better product; the bill is considerably improved. While there are still a number of areas which require clarification and changes, nevertheless it is an improvement over the original legislation.

What were some of the features of the bill to which there was opposition when it was first introduced? The major objection was the $100 million carrot that was dangled in front of the producers. It was an attempt to coerce them into buying the stabilization package. It was made up of money which was due to the farmers at that time under the provisions of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. That created a great deal of hostility in the minds of producers across this country.

The second major objection at that time was that the bill failed to take regional considerations into account. That area still requires improvement. I am encouraged by the fact that the minister indicated he may be receptive to some changes in this regard. I hope that in committee some way will be found to take into account the aspects of a failure in any given region. The third major objection to the bill at that time was that it was mandatory for a producer to belong to and pay into a fund. That issue created a great deal of hard feeling. The fourth objection was the fact there was no provision for taking into account increased production and inflation costs.

The fifth major objection was that, based upon the previous five-year prairie grain income, the bill would do nothing more than stabilize grain income across western Canada at the poverty level. We know that at that time the price of grain was very depressed. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) shakes his head in the negative. I say to him that was the opinion of every major farm organization in the country at that time. It was certainly the opinion of the hon. member's predecessor and many other members of this House. That was perhaps the major reason for a great deal of the animosity and bitterness that was generated over the bill.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Another area of objection was the fact that payments from the fund were based upon gross, rather than net, income figures. This bill is based upon the same principle as the original stabilization bill, but I think we must give credit to the minister and those who drafted the bill for taking into consideration some of the issues that were raised when it was first considered.

We have objections to this bill: I have already referred to some of them. The bill appears to be very complex in nature. It takes into consideration some of the objections registered against the original bill and some improvements have been made. However, some of our major objections, such as taking into consideration the regional aspect, have not been met. As I said previously, there will have to be some provision for a major failure in a given block. I referred to a snowed-under condition in the Peace River block. This is a common occurrence. An area may be subjected to a drought. Members opposite will suggest these situations can be covered by crop insurance; however, there is the prospect of a whole province suffering a severe calamity, with no hope of drawing a penny from the stabilization fund.

When dealing with this bill it is a good time to take into consideration these problems and, if possible, to incorporate in the legislation a mechanism to deal with them. This bill seems to contain a great deal of legalistic jargon. The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) stated yesterday that it could conceivably become an administrative nightmare. Even the best legal minds find it somewhat difficult to decipher the content and purport of some clauses of the bill. If it does become an administrative nightmare, I suggest that will be good for the minister; it will enable him to provide employment opportunities for prairies Grits.

Mr. Lang: It will be very simple.

Mr. Mazankowski: I hope the minister explains it better than he did in his speech, because there is in the bill a great deal which should be explained much more thoroughly. I hope the minister will do that in committee.

Mr. Benjamin: The farmers want to know.

Mr. Mazankowski: As the hon. member says, the farmers want to have a better understanding of the legalistic jargon contained in the bill. There is room in this bill for a fair amount of streamlining. Hopefully, the minister will be open-minded and will accept some of the suggestions that will undoubtedly be made by members on this side of the House. There are some uncertainties and we want clarification of them. For example, I am somewhat confused about the statement that it is voluntary, yet it is really not voluntary. That statement requires clarification. There are penalties and there are some discriminatory features when one wants to withdraw from the program.

The major objection, however, is the fact that this bill lumps together the whole prairie region. The minister indicated that the regional aspect has been seriously considered and that it is difficult to comply with. However, I feel it should be the subject of further serious consideration. There are areas within the prairie region which could suffer a very severe setback. Under a program like that, if an area suffers a major disaster there should be the option of seeking assistance from the fund. That view was put forward by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, a respectable and reliable farm organization, in its presentation to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the cabinet on April 7, 1975. It indicated that the proposed grain stabilization program should be changed to benefit regional geographic areas rather that the whole aggregate Canadian Wheat Board area. With the backing of members of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and, I am sure, other farm organizations, there is good reason for reconsidering this aspect of the bill.

With regard to achieving stability, the individual producer is very important. In order to be effective in bringing about over-all stability in the grain industry we must concern ourselves with the stability of the individual producer. I might compare this legislation to the beef stabilization program to the extent that those who suffer most in terms of loss do not really get any more than those who are able to sell at a reasonable price. In times when markets are seriously depressed and farmers are forced to sell off their animals, it is somewhat unfair that a person who has received, say, 10 cents a pound for his culled cow should get the same amount under the stabilization program as the person who sold his cow for 25 or 30 cents a pound. In addition, there may be a tendency here to protect farmers who have enjoyed good fortune over the past three years, and penalize those who have been unfortunate over that period. For example, a farmer who has experienced three years of crop failure would get only a very small share of the pay-off. It seems to me the plan could be adjusted so as to take this aspect into consideration.

Turning to the provisions for calculating expenses, it is important to note, as has been pointed out already by some speakers, that certain important items are not included, namely, depreciation of capital, interest on debt and interest on equity, as well as costs of labour and management. Surely these items should have their place in any consideration of expenditure. This is an area which warrants further attention.

The Canadian Federation of Agriculture has put forward a number of suggestions which I should like to place on the record because I believe them worthy of consideration. New farmers starting out should have the same privilege of opting out of the program, if they wish to do so, as other farmers will be given over the three-year period. Also, since the question of interest income and interest costs is left to the discretion of the Minister of Finance, as the bill is presently drafted, the federation recommends that interest rates be tied by formula to the rates of government bonds. Further, having suggested that the $25,000 eligibility level may be too low, they point out that it stabilizes the level of net revenue at a figure probably between $15,000 and $22,000.

There may or may not be provision for taking this into consideration, but if there is not there should be. I notice that in the last stabilization bill, provision was made whereby any losses in the Canadian Wheat Board pool account were to be covered out of the stabilization funds established at that time. I have looked through this bill and cannot find any reference to that matter. I raise it now with the idea in mind that the minister may wish to clarify the position when he rises to speak.

A good case might be made for bringing the bill and its administration under the aegis of the Department of Agriculture. I say this bearing in mind that the legislation before us may well prove to be an administrative nightmare. After all, it involves the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the Department of Agriculture, the Wheat Board and the Grains Commission. Moreover, any program aimed at stabilizing returns to farmers is traditionally administered by the Department of Agriculture.

Not unnaturally, the federal government will boast about this legislation and call it a great step forward, designed to improve the lot of the western farmer. We must remember, though, that the bill replaces a number of previous measures which have been discontinued. We know that under the provisions of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act and under the previous act, PFAA, western farmers received payments amounting, under the former, to $56 million over the last three years in which it was in effect, and in the case of the latter, PFAA, to an amount in the order of $6 million.

Mr. Lang: There is crop insurance in effect now.

Mr. Mazankowski: Yes, there is crop insurance, but I have no figures as to how much the federal government is contributing in that regard. Nevertheless, we are talking in terms of a figure of some $60 million: that is what those two programs represented. When the minister tells us that, had this new program been in effect for the year 1974, it would have meant a pay-out of some $90 million on the part of the federal treasury, I would remind hon. members that we are not looking at that amount of money as new expenditure. The bill is a step in the right direction but it certainly does not justify the minister boasting about it at any great length in terms of additional funds from the treasury.

The minister spent a great deal of time telling us about the bold initiatives his government had taken to assist the grains industry, drawing particular attention to the provisions of the bill we are now considering. In my view, the producers of Canada would be far happier if we were being asked to consider a bill in this House designed to overcome one of the most serious problems we face, that is to say, inability to move their grain effectively. I am talking about labour disruption, labour chaos. The situation facing us today as far as labour is concerned can only be described as a state of anarchy. Producers are frustrated by the continual disruption of the movement of grain as a result of labour unrest and breakdowns in the transportation system.

I know the minister will say that returns to farmers are still better than they have been for the last five years. That is true, but it is little comfort; it does not make up for the waste which has occurred as a result of the government's failure to deal with this question. It is not only the dollars which have been lost as a result of liability for demurrage payments; it is the embarrassment which has been caused to our nation. We are now being classified as an unreliable shipper of grain. Demurrage charges for the 1974 crop year totalled some $17 million, and we are told the figure will be substantially greater in the crop year which will end this July.

We have lost millions and millions of dollars as a result of failure to ship our grain at a time when prices were high, and the resulting depression of the market has cost producers very heavily. Customers have been lost that will never be regained. The port of Vancouver is a big question mark. It seems that most western producers are now looking to the port of Seattle as a logical substitute. I was talking to members of the Wheat Board this morning and was told that a huge vessel has been in the port of Vancouver since February 11, taking on cargo for Bangladesh under our foreign aid program. It has been there for close to three months being loaded. This is nothing but sheer waste.

I must say that since I have been a member of this House, never before have I sensed the frustration, anger and feeling of anxiety that now exists on the part of western grain producers owing to failure to move their products to market because of strikes and work stoppages, with seemingly no recourse for them. Moreover, I believe the anxiety is compounded by the fact that the producers feel that the federal government hasn't a handle on the situation. We seem to be going from bad to worse. The gentleman in charge of the Canada-Japan Trade Council, Colonel Houston, speaking to the Palliser Wheat Growers Association on January 9 last had this to say:

> Canada is now an enigma to many foreigners. On the specific question of Canada as a trading partner, a business partner, she is now looked upon by many as an unreliable supplier and an uncertain place in which to invest. It should not be necessary, especially before this audience, to stress the degree of our national dependence upon export markets. For Canada, exporting is the very breath of life. All our hopes for an ever-rising standard of living, for remaining in the forefront of developed nations, depends directly upon our ability to maintain and expand our overseas markets—
> One of the most frequent causes of disruption in our distribution system lies in the area of labour-management disagreement. In my opinion, this is due to an archaic concept of labour-management relations which has become entrenched in the thinking of government, of labour and of management. This system, involving as it does confrontation, is sadly out of tune with the times and with the circumstances prevailing in this country.

I think that sums up the situation very well. I know that the producers of this country would be very much happier if we were considering legislation to deal with this issue, this crippling enigma, rather than being sidetracked by this bill. No wonder the producers of Canada are angered and frustrated, subjected as they are to the whims of 30 to 35 labour unions involved in the movement of grain. Any one of these labour unions can tie up indefinitely the movement of grain bound for export, with no protection being given to the farmers: they become the sole victims of the irresponsible actions of other groups.

Surely it is time the government recognized that they have a major responsibility in this area to come up with some kind of new mechanism to protect farmers and alleviate financial losses attributed to labour disputes and disruptions, which in turn cause not only lost sales but direct out of pocket expenses on the part of producers. As reported at page 4198 of Hansard, the minister in charge of the Wheat Board was asked this question by the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Malone):

> Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct this question to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. Inasmuch as I know of no business where two parties can incur an expense and charge it to an innocent third party, has there been any investigation by the Ministry of Justice as to the legality of charging demurrage to farmers or will there be any investigation as to the farmers' right to sue in relation to demurrage charges?

The minister replied as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, I am sure those against whom demurrage charges are sought are fully aware of their rights with regard to civil liability and will defend accordingly.

I wish the minister would explain in more detail precisely what he means. I am no lawyer, Mr. Speaker, and certainly I am not a dean of law; but if what the minister is saying is true, then the Canadian Wheat Board, being a trustee or custodian of the farmers, should have the option of initiating legal action in the courts against those who are responsible. I am not sure what the minister is saying, but the Canadian Wheat Board is supposed to act on behalf of the farmers, as it does in terms of selling and handling grain. This is why I suggest the Canadian Wheat Board should take the initiative against those who cause disruptions in the movement of grain which result in millions and millions of dollars lost by the producers.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if the minister is not prepared to do something along those lines, then perhaps he should be prepared to recommend to his cabinet colleagues that the federal treasury pick up the tab for these demurrage charges, because that is what the farmers are asking for. In conclusion, if legislation were brought before the House at least to lay the groundwork for dealing with the disruptive effects of strikes and proposing a new mechanism to improve the collective bargaining process, it would be heralded with a great deal more enthusiasm than this legislation.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, while I was not here when the Prairie Grain Stabilization Act was brought forward, I have studied the debate and some newspaper reports of that time. I have also listened very carefully to the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), who took part in that debate. I should like to say someting later in my remarks about that act. I can only echo the sentiments of the hon. member for Vegreville regarding labour strife in this country. As I travel across my riding, farmers raise the subject over and over again. They feel, for proper reasons, that they are being done out of income that is properly theirs by the number of unions that are striking in one way or another, thus preventing their product from getting to market and obtaining the best possible price.

I am pleased to take part in this debate on the western grain stabilization bill. Few people today would argue that there is not a great need for stabilization. Rather than lopping off the peak of the prairie farmer's income, we need something that will take into consideration the low prices that many farmers receive for their products. They must obtain the best possible price because of the high input costs they are facing.

As has been said by many members, the bill itself is exceedingly complicated and it is doubtful whether many farmers will fully comprehend its provisions. Because of that, they may be wary about taking advantage of its provisions. I should like to make some comments regarding amendments that we should perhaps move to the Crop Insurance Act, putting into it many of the stabilization benefits contained in this bill. Farmers on the prairies are familiar with crop insurance and are happy with the provisions which have been put forward through which the federal and provincial governments are taking part in respect of payments on crop insurance. Because of this familiarity, I think farmers would be much more open to that type of stabilization than to the complicated procedure put forward in this bill.

It cannot be disputed that stabilization is the only way we can mitigate this roller-coaster type of situation that we have in the agricultural economy. The question is, what kind of stabilization do we need? Let me make some points consistent with those put forward by the notable agricultural economist, Dr. Philip Thair. In 1974 there was a significant increase in realized net farm income over the 1973 farm income level; and the 1973 net farm income was 39.2 per cent higher than that for 1972. In the five years from 1955 to 1960, the average annual change in realized net income over the previous year was 10.3 per cent. In the 1961 to 1965 period, this was 10 per cent, and in the 1966 to 1970 period it was 10.7 per cent.

Suddenly, in the 1971 to 1974 period the average annual change was 36 per cent. There was a consistent average annual increase of around 10 per cent up to that time, and then there was a dramatic increase of 36 per cent. These figures are the Canadian aggregate and do not take into account the variability between regions or commodities. The annual variability in Saskatchewan was almost double the Canadian figure. No industry can endure such changes without suffering severe repercussions.

The virtually inordinate changes in the past two years have served to increase the farmer's vulnerability. Heightened price levels necessarily entail escalating cost commitments which are locked into a fairly rigid upward trend. This means that the farmer becomes more greatly exposed to decreasing product prices, not simply because of profit loss but, more importantly, because of high-priced, fixed input commitments. His entire operation can be jeopardized when product prices slip.

This is certainly true of the cow-calf feedlot industry today. Prices a number of years ago were increasing and reached a peak of over $50 per 100 pounds. At that time farmers made substantial outlays. A number of farmers were enticed into the industry, in some cases by provincial governments and the federal LIFT program. We saw that peak reached and then prices declined to where they are today, somewhere between $35 and $40 per hundred. This has severely jeopardized the position of the farmer who made this capital outlay because of increasing product price, because he now finds himself facing these high capital costs and low product prices.

The proportion of operating and depreciation charges to realized gross income gradually increased from approximately 60 per cent in the mid-1950s to about 70 per cent in the 1968 to 1971 period. Because of the unprecedented and unpredictable market situation in the last three years, this has fallen back to about 60 per cent. However, we must remember that product prices have risen phenomenally and that when these prices soften or fall the proportion, because costs have remained at higher levels or have inflated, will be far in excess of the 60 per cent figure. In fact, prices need only fall slightly in order for the proportion of costs to exceed 70 per cent or 80 per cent on an aggregate basis.

What I am trying to say is that land values are inflating, and machinery prices are escalating rapidly, as is the price of fertilizer and energy. Many input costs are increasing. In fact, we know that the input costs of a farmer are increasing at approximately the rate of 10 per cent, or at a greater rate than product prices have increased in the industry. This is a very serious situation for many farmers with heavy financial commitments who are now facing lower prices.

In the past few weeks we have brought forward legislation in an attempt to entice young people into agriculture. I refer specifically to amendments to the Farm Credit Act. Many hon. members have echoed the words of others who have expressed ideas as to how we should get young people into agriculture. This is very important, but it is also important that these people have their incomes stabilized in order that they can expect a certain end product in 10 or 15 years. The situation must be stabilized or these young people will virtually be thrown out of business.

We must not overlook the fact that the agricultural boom in the last few years has not served to lessen the economic gap between the rich farmer and the poor farmer. The wealthy producer still reigns supreme in the sense of total capital, and being in a stronger position he is able to grow even larger by bringing together the land in his area.

Because of present agricultural instability, the current declining trend in farm enterprises is likely to be perpetuated. Many young men wish to get into agriculture, but this tendency will not greatly moderate the decline in the number of farm enterprises. Many of those who do not commence farming will merely be replaced by older farmers who consider it expedient to increase their profitability by increasing their land holdings. Given the fact that larger farms are now in a more propitious capital position to effect consolidation, I still believe we will be witnessing an ever widening decline in the number of small farming units in Canada, particularly the small family farm units. Stabilization can help the young farmer plan his production cycle so he can see the entire profit picture and know that he will be able to pay back the interest on his principal. Again I would ask, what form of stabilization would be the best?

A great number of the predictions by agricultural economists and people in the Department of Agriculture have been of a shortrun nature. It has been recognized in the past that shortrun forecasts are not extremely reliable because of unpredictable world trends and events, as well as the acts of nature which farmers must face. In order for a farmer to make a relatively accurate decision regarding capital input expenditures, longer run projections are necessary. Yet forecasting in times of great change is naturally difficult, if not impossible, because the major variables are virtually unknown within certain areas of agriculture.

In summary, we can conclude that farmers are indeed victims of a see-saw economy. Their operations are becoming increasingly more vulnerable and subject to jeopardy because of escalating costs and capital commitments. Distribution income of rich farmers is definitely not equalizing the difference between rich farmers and poor farmers. There is a marked decline in the number of farming units. The most important factors concerning farm enterprises are, essentially, unpredictable.

● (1550)

There is great need for stabilization, but what form should it take? Yields and markets have proven to be, and still are, highly unstable. It would be unwise to stabilize agriculture beyond the point where it could respond to fluctuations in yields and markets. For example, according to this bill, in order to determine whether or by what method stabilization payments are to be made, the minister will calculate the amount of net eligible grain sale proceeds of all producers for each of the five years immediately preceeding the year under review and base his decision upon the average of these proceeds and the average of the proceeds of the relevant year. Surely, given current fluctuating market and yield factors, this basis for determining possible payments is somewhat inaccurate and unreasonable. It is certainly unresponsive to major variables in agriculture. This legislative provision is only one of several which I think should be scrutinized closely and re-examined at the committee stage.

All things taken into consideration, it would seem that a policy based on the insurance principle is the best type of stabilization today. Insurance against low yield and low income is the most logical form of stabilization. The crop insurance program, based on income guarantees, is highly successful. Farmers understand it and are extremely familiar with its benefits. Therefore, would it not be advisable to incorporate the provisions of Bill C-41 into the crop insurance program, with parliament amending the program as required, thereby eliminating the need for new legislation and a new administrative process which would otherwise come about? It is my feeling that following this suggestion would be of great benefit to farmers and it warrants consideration.

I have made a number of points as to why I feel the crop insurance program should be brought into stabilization. Let us go back to the increased administration which will be necessary if this bill is passed. If the minister does not see fit to accept the suggestion of taking another look at the question of whether the Crop Insurance Act can be amended in order to, in effect, stabilize farm income and include within its bounds the variety of proposals contained in this bill, hopefully he will allow an amendment whereby the crop insurance machinery could be used at least with respect to checking inventory on the prairies. This would allow the crop insurance people, who have to go out into the area, to gather this information while they are on the farms and it seems to me it would keep costs down within the government.

[Mr. Schellenberger.]

Let us consider what this administration has been set up to do. It will maintain individual producer records on a calendar year basis for the purpose of calculating levies refundable, prepare an annual statement for each producer, calculate each participating producer's payment, if there is a stabilization payment, and maintain a three-year summary file. The records would have to contain the producer identification number, the name and address of the producer, the cumulative gross grain sale proceeds of the producer, the levy contributions of the producer and the levy refunds paid to the producer.

The administration would be established in Winnipeg as part of Agriculture Canada. The function of this administration will be to receive voluntary levies from producers, effect liaison with the Canadian Grains Commission on levy deductions of licensees, register designated producers, maintain the stabilization fund, maintain producer records, perform public relations matters for the program, answer producers' inquiries, calculate and make stabilization payments and calculate and pay levy refunds.

The minister calls this a simple program. Considering other departments which have been set up, I am sure this would be a large administration, requiring many people, and would cost the government a large amount of money to set up. Perhaps we could use the administration already in existence under the Crop Insurance Act to do many of the things the minister proposes in this bill.

If this bill passes second reading, there is a strong point to be made for allowing the agriculture committee to travel. The precursor to this legislation, the prairie grain stabilization bill, was introduced in 1970 for first reading, did not reach second reading until May of 1971 and was withdrawn from parliament. The reason for the withdrawal was heavy producer opposition. The bill did not allow the farmer to become voluntarily involved, and it involved the government putting $100 million into the fund which, in effect, was perhaps just stabilizing low incomes. Because of the interest of prairie farmers, I think it is essential that the agriculture committee travel and obtain the opinions of farmers in at least 20 or 30 locations in the area under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board. I think this is a very important point. I hope the minister will be persuaded to allow the committee to travel, to feel out the proposals of prairie farmers and to learn whether they believe this legislation would adequately stabilize their incomes.

There is a point being made by a number of hon. members which should be dealt with briefly, but dealt with nonetheless. This bill, which deals with the income of prairie farmers, should be under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Agriculture. The Canadian Wheat Board was only set up to deal with the marketing of the product of producers and not with their income. I think it would be consistent of this legislation were under the administration of the Minister of Agriculture. I believe that a very strong case could be made for an amendment in this regard, and it should be brought forward in committee for perusal.

I conclude by saying that I hope a number of the points which have been made will be considered by the minister; that he will consider using the Crop Insurance Act as a vehicle to administer this legislation; that he will consider the possibility of allowing the committee to travel when the bill is at committee stage; and that the legislation will be brought under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, it does not seem very long since we were debating the old grain stabilization bill in this House. We were involved with all the emotions and protests which were apparent at that time. As written, the bill was withdrawn because of farmer opposition. It remains to be seen whether farmers in western Canada are in favour of Bill C-41, the western grain stabilization bill, as it has been reintroduced.

It would be fair to say that the present bill is a better piece of legislation than that brought in some years ago. But there are still many questions to be answered in connection with the grain stabilization bill; there is still the very real question of whether we in the grain growing areas of western Canada really need this program at this time or whether there is an alternative course we should be taking. In saying that, I suppose it could be said that it comes after the fact, because the government has brought in this legislation. However, I think the question is still valid.

We in the opposition are concerned whether to support this kind of legislation on second reading and, more specifically on third reading. Other than raising various questions on the legislation, I am basically neutral: my judgment will be based on the reaction we receive from farmers across western Canada. I echo all the comments of previous speakers about travelling and having the agricultural committee go across western Canada to take a good, in-depth look at what farmers are thinking with regard to grain stabilization. I believe this is necessary and that in some respects it will expedite the work of the committee. It could travel for about ten days and hear all the witnesses, whereas it could take three or four months to hear them if the committee has to conduct all its hearings in Ottawa. That is something we must take into account. Provided the time is ripe politically—in one province of western Canada at least—I hope the minister in charge of the Wheat Board will give consideration to this suggestion.

● (1600)

I started out by asking whether we really need such a scheme for grain. The concept may be valid for produce such as eggs and potatoes, but farm leaders in western Canada will be asking whether such a scheme for grain will not create a very large bureaucracy which would be difficult to stop or even to slow down. The complexity of the bill is somewhat frightening, with its maze of facts, figures and numbers, although the basic concept of grain stabilization is not difficult to understand. It is the operational and administrative features of the bill that are difficult, and this is another reason why it should be considered in depth when it goes to the Standing Committee on Agriculture after second reading.

It would seem, from the notes on western grain stabilization working paper published in August, 1974, by the government, that the main criterion on was the cheapest plan for a given level of stability, a plan that was actuarially sound and based on the production the government wanted at that time. This, of course, in no way argues that it is the best plan for the government or for the producers; all it says is that it is actuarially sound and, possibly, one of the cheapest plans that could be devised for a given level of stability.

The key question in this debate must be: what stability is really provided to commercial, western grain producers, and at what cost; that is, what are the costs and benefits of such program, compared to the alternatives that could be considered? From the latest figures I have seen and to which other hon. member have alluded, we can expect that about one-half of the commercial grain sales in western Canada would be covered by the $25,000 gross sales limitation imposed by the legislation. There is no evidence that farmers with sales of $25,000 or less are in greater need of stabilization than larger farmers, and if the plan is actuarially sound, why the limit of $25,000? This limit is unrealistically low and should be increased.

The bill appears to take the narrow view that the government is giving out money almost through the goodness of its heart to provide some stabilization, and the level of the gift is the key to this whole aspect. There are, however, direct and indirect benefits that the government receives, as well as the farmers. This is something that the minister responsible for the Wheat Board seldom refers to, namely, that the government also receives some benefit, direct or indirect. For example, Mr. Speaker, if a stabilizing, net cash flow payment occurs there is likely to be a four or five times multiplier effect on the prairie economy. Assuming standard tax levels, it would seem that the federal government would get back anywhere from $1.25 to $1.75 for every dollar it pays out.

There is also the question of whether the federal financial authorities might be able to deduct such payments from federal transfer payments to the provinces. Of course, this is another question which will have to be dealt with at the committee stage. The point is, Mr. Speaker, that the program is unlikely to have any net cost to the government at all. As I said before, why impose a limit of $25,000 on sales? The limit is unrealistically low and should be raised. Clearly, the spending by larger farmers in western Canada could also have a multiplier effect. Is the middle-sized farmer which the legislation talks about the sort of farmer which the western grain stabilization program ought to be concerned about? Should the government be assisting the middle-sized farmer under this plan, because that is exactly what the legislation will do unless there is a more realistic ceiling?

● (1610)

As I have said, I have no real quarrel with the legislation. I am not on one side or the other of the argument. We shall not know for some time how the people affected by the legislation feel about it. Of course, one can ask many questions about it. What will be the situation with regard to farmers who decide to opt out, come back to the plan and then opt out again? Who is to administer the program? Who is to pay the administration costs? We must also consider the question of the three-year system for calculating individual pay-outs which seems to penalize producers who are expanding as against those who are stable or are reducing the size of their operations. The legislation seems to be aimed at the middle-sized prairie grain farmer and ignores anyone who is smaller or larger than the optimum size contemplated by the bill.

I return to my first question: do we need this scheme in the first place? It could be argued that it was needed perhaps 20 years ago. It was not needed three or four years ago. Now we must ask, what are the government's priorities? Perhaps this particular grain stabilization bill is not high on the list of priorities. We have heard much talk of priorities. The minister spoke about priorities in Saskatchewan last week.

The hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) said that labour disputes are among our most pressing problems and these disputes affect farmers. He was quite right. Transportation generally is in confusion: we must solve our transportation difficulties. At present the whole question of transportation is, so to speak, in a state of suspended animation. We should also consider present high levels of taxation. Farmers are concerned about this. The matter of high interest rates should be close to the top of any list of priorities. In addition, the difficulties of the beef industry should be considered. Instead of dealing with these questions, we are spending our time debating this piece of legislation.

Some people have argued—I will not argue one way or another—that we do not need the kind of grain stabilization plan proposed by the legislation; we need a plan which will take into account all the different elements, all the regional differences in that area served mainly by the Canadian Wheat Board. I am talking about differences in soil, climate, and so on. We ought to consider such matters. Some argue that this is a matter of high priority. I suggest that the grain stabilization bill presently before us does not deal with any of these aspects. It deals with the prairie economy as a whole, in total. That is where this legislation falls down.

Another danger if that the legislation may tend to shelter farmers from the marketplace. That is how it appears to many farmers in western Canada with whom I have spoken. Incidentally, almost without exception those to whom I spoke do not understand the legislation. They understand the basic concept of stabilization—it is not hard to understand—but do not understand the peculiarities of this legislation. Farmers have said to me they are afraid this will be another law which will come between the marketplace and the farmer. Whether that fear is justified may be a matter for debate. Nevertheless, farmers in some parts of western Canada have expressed that fear and it ought to be considered.

We should consider reassessing the grain stabilization program after it has been in existence for three or five years. This would help to allay fears which have been expressed by some in western Canada. Also, we should ask if farm-to-farm sales are to be excluded. Eastern grain producers are wondering about the benefits of this plan. The committee, in considering this bill, will consider whether eastern grain producers are interested in this plan. I wonder why the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has not been making noises in this regard. Also, will feed grain on farms qualify? That is another question we must ask.

It is possible that discussions connected with this bill will have a depressing effect on transportation in western Canada. At least the bill will keep the farmers busy all summer; they will be trying to figure it out. Perhaps there will be explanations in committee. I hope that people from grain organizations and others will be made fully aware of the provisions of this bill. The bill will also ensure western members of parliament a job for some time to come—indeed, for as long as the legislation is in force. The law will be complicated and farmers will find it difficult to know how to opt in, opt out, or do whatever else may be done.

So far as I am aware, the minister in his speech opening the debate did not mention any producer pressure for moving this bill forward in a hurry. As I said before, grain stabilization is not a matter of high priority for the government. Let me digress for a moment. There are some matters which the House of Commons ought to consider. We should look at improved facilities on the Pacific seaboard and Churchill, the situation vis-à-vis strikes, the whole aspect of the protein payment on wheat, the government's grain storage program, if in fact they have one or are thinking of one, and possibly tax relief. It has already been said that it would be a good idea to have a registered retirement savings plan for farmers and ranchers. This is another area the government should be looking at from a tax point of view. We should be very much aware of these problems which are more serious than those we are dealing with at the present time.

I hope that some of the questions we have raised about this legislation will be sufficiently dealt with in the Standing Committee on Agriculture. I repeat, it is essential for the agriculture committee to travel in connection with this legislation. Before taking a hard and fast position on the legislation, I think it is necessary to get a reaction from those who will be affected, namely, the western grain producers.

If it can be pointed out that this is not the best kind of stabilization legislation, and it will act more as a deterrent than helping western farmers, I will have no qualms about voting against it, as was done a few years ago. I will conclude by saying I look forward to a thorough clause by clause discussion on the whole aspect of grain stabilization when the bill is before the committee.

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to at last take part in this debate. This legislation was one of the first things I heard about when I became actively involved in politics during the election campaign. A lot of publicity was given to statements by the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board to the effect that the western grain stabilization bill would be brought forward within seven days of the opening of the first session of this parliament. I looked forward to that.

All of us from western Canada, especially the prairie region, realize the importance of the agricultural industry, grain in particular, to our economy. We looked forward with anticipation to the introduction of this legislation. First, we wanted to see what the minister had in mind. Second, it was to be an opportunity for western Canada to have some input into the legislation to ensure that this time it would be of the highest possible calibre and benefit in the interests of western grain producers. We waited a considerable time for this second reading debate, because the bill was not introduced until December 4 of last year and has now only been brought forward for second reading; therefore, I hope the minister has no intention of having this legislation become effective before seeding begins. Under the circumstances, that is very unlikely.

Mr. Goodale: It is still snowing.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I realize it is still snowing in Assiniboia.

An hon. Member: It has been snowing there since July 8.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I would not go so far as to say that. I want to deal with some of the provisions of Bill C-41, "an Act respecting the stabilization of net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain and to amend certain statutes in consequence thereof." That is possibly the shortest sentence in the bill. It reminds me of another rather infamous act on our statute books, the Income Tax Act. Anyone who reads these two pieces of legislation will understand that we humble western farmers are going to have a very difficult time interpreting this incredibly complex piece of legislation.

An hon. Member: That's humility!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Humility comes naturally to any westerner. I am glad to see two or three Liberal members of the agriculture committee sitting in the back row. We should give particular attention to this bill because there is still considerable uncertainty in the minds of western grain producers with regard to the operation of the legislation. Since it was first suggested that this bill should be reintroduced in this session of parliament, it has been my contention that it should receive very close examination by the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

I support the suggestion that has been made by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger), the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta) and the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), that the agriculture committee should take this bill to the grain producers in western Canada. The western grain producers sometimes feel a certain remoteness from people in Ottawa. I feel it would have a therapeutic effect if the members of the agriculture committee travelled to those people as opposed to having only those who can afford to come to Ottawa presenting their points of view. This type of legislation requires input from western grain producers. It must be explained to the man on the farm. It is imperative that the members of the agriculture committee travel out west. In addition to seeing some of God's country, they can explain this bill and receive opinions as to whether the western producers feel it can operate in their best interests.

Reference was made by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin to some of the background of this legislation. I was not here the first time this bill was introduced. Initially, there was an attempt to bring forward a stabilization bill with respect to western grain under the so-called prairie grain stabilization act. The bill was withdrawn because, as has been pointed out many times, there were some fairly substantial objections to its terms. It has also been pointed out that this opposition has been somewhat allayed by improvements to the bill.

Notwithstanding this, questions have been raised. I am in receipt of communications from constituents and producer groups pointing out that there are still substantial questions to be taken into account. For this reason, the agriculture committee is likely to be called upon to spend a fairly long time considering the legislation before us today. In my opinion, this is an inopportune time to be launching upon this work, to be carrying out an inquiry and inviting witnesses to come forward. We know that seeding time is just beginning in western Canada; the farmers whom this measure concerns will be on the land; they will not have time to make representations with respect to these proposals. The legislation should have been introduced last October at the beginning of the session. It should have been debated on second reading then, and put forward for consideration by the agriculture committee so that there might have been an opportunity during the winter months to canvass the ideas of those who are directly affected.

Mr. Lang: Would the hon. member permit a question? I should like to ask whether he is aware that the reason for the delay in the introduction of the bill was the extensive consultations which were going on with the various farm organizations and our desire to incorporate positive suggestions into the bill. I hope the hon. member agrees that this was a desirable thing to do.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I appreciate the point the minister has made in the guise of a question, and I accept his sincerity when he says he has been trying to obtain suggestions from producer groups. But that still does not explain the delay. There was no smile on the minister's face when he made the promise that the legislation would be introduced within the first seven days of the new session. Those were the minister's words. It was the minister who said the legislation would be introduced almost as soon as we got back to this chamber. Instead, we have waited until seeding time on the prairies, and parliament is apparently being asked to rush the bill through. I think this is bad timing on the minister's part.

The hon. member for Wetaskiwin commented on the fact that it is the minister in charge of the Wheat Board who is in charge of this legislation. The primary aim of the stabilization bill is to even out the income of grain producers. Some may contend that the aim is to stabilize the industry; but the industry is composed of people and it is the farmers who will receive financial benefit. It is, therefore, questionable whether the minister responsible for the Wheat Board should be the minister in charge of this bill. The Wheat Board legislation does not deal with the incomes of farmers. The role of the Wheat Board is, essentially, a marketing role and its powers are defined accordingly.

I could go over the provisions covering the powers of the Wheat Board; those sections and subsections refer to marketing concepts, marketing powers. They are quite distinct from the concepts dealt with in the legislation before us. It is the Minister of Agriculture who traditionally and by statute should ensure that producers receive a reasonable income. What, in fact, the Wheat Board is performing under the stabilization act is the carrying out of the mechanics of the act. The licensed elevators and feed mills serve as the collectors of a levy and the permit books of the Wheat Board serve as a verification unit for the levy. In other words, the Wheat Board is a catalyst to help in the working of the stabilization act; but in principle it is the Minister of Agriculture who should have introduced the bill to the House.

Then, again, we often hear the minister responsible for the Wheat Board referred to as the minister for everything in western Canada. If, as we understand, he is looking after transportation, it is not surprising that he should also be looking after legislation dealing with incomes of farmers. If the government puts forward other legislation which may peripherally affect the western farmer, the minister in charge of the Wheat Board will, no doubt, be given that responsibility as well. Nevertheless, it seems logical to me that the minister responsible for this legislation should be the Minister of Agriculture, and the time has come for the minister responsible for the Wheat Board, who is also the honorary minister of transport—

Mr. Benjamin: Anything but that.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I am sorry if that remark caused some alarm. I am simply saying that the logical place for this legislation is with the Department of the Minister of Agriculture, and I hope the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), when in due course he carries out a cabinet shuffle, will dispose of the matter accordingly.

I turn now to another aspect of the bill, the question of compulsory membership. The original bill of 1970-71 contained a compulsory aspect. We are told that under the present bill there is no compulsion and that farmers may opt out of the program if they wish. Clause 5 contains provision for opting out, but I suggest the wording is disguised so as to give only an appearance of avoiding compulsion; that in fact it is compulsory to an extent. Also, I would add, it discriminates against one particular genre of producer, making it compulsory for him to join. Under clause 5(1) a person who is an eligible, active producer—a producer who is actually working on the land as opposed to a producer recorded in a permit book—has three years to decide to cease to become a participant. This decision must be made at the time the act comes into force. Thus, between 1975 and 1978 a producer may elect to withdraw.

On December 4, 1974, the minister responsible for the Wheat Board issued a press release dealing with the stabilization act. On page 7 appeared the title "Participation Voluntary" and the sentence "No farmer will be forced to participate in the plan". The minister is incorrect when he says participation is voluntary. Webster's Dictionary defines "voluntary" as "brought about by one's own free will or choice". A producer does not have the luxury of free will or choice if a time limit of three years is imposed upon him. Voluntary withdrawal should mean that a producer can decide to abandon the plan at any time. Here we find a limitation imposed upon voluntary withdrawal; it is restricted by a time period. It is difficult to understand why the minister is imposing this time-frame. It cannot be because the plan would not be actuarially sound if a large proportion of producers dropped out. The fund only affects those producers who have contributed to it; the producers who put the money into the fund will receive money when the circumstances call for such action.

● (1640)

At page 9 of the same press release, the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board said that the federal treasury "will guarantee the solvency of the western grain stabilization fund". Also, the producers are paying only for this special kind of insurance and not for the administration costs that accrue to it. At page 8 of the press release the following statement appears:

> The costs of administering the plan will be borne entirely by the federal government. No administrative costs will be deducted from the fund.

Clause 5(2) of the bill provides that once a producer has withdrawn, he may elect to join the plan again. Clause 5(4) adds that the producer is allowed to come in only once, and no more. But under clause 5(3) this producer will be classified as a conditional participant for three years. In effect, a penalty is associated with this category; if a payment is to be made within those three years, the conditional participant will receive only 90 per cent of the benefits. This is a form of discrimination. One part of the bill provides that a producer may voluntarily withdraw; another part provides that if the producer returns to the plan, he must face a penalty. The bill is really providing that voluntary producers do not exist but that coercion of the producer does.

It must be emphasized that only existing, actual producers have this option for a one-time withdrawal from the plan. Clause 6 of the bill provides that new producers will automatically be in the plan once the legislation is implemented; but there is no option for the withdrawal of new producers. To allow an existing producer a rather haphazard option to withdraw, and to prevent any new producer from having equal opportunity to do the same, is discriminatory. One is left with the conclusion that the federal government does not believe that new producers can fend for themselves but, rather, must be quickly swept under the protective fold of the federal plan. Hence, I suggest that the voluntary aspect of this legislation will have to receive the closest attention of the committee and the representations of people in western Canada.

I should like to deal with one or two other aspects of the bill. I realize the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) wants to say a few words this afternoon, and I do not want to curtail him unduly; but since I have this captive audience which seems to be most attentive, I shall continue with my informative remarks.

An hon. Member: We feel obligated.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: My hon. friend always does me the honour of being in the chamber when I speak. I do appreciate it. He shows great discrimination by listening to me. With regard to protection for the individual producer, one of the major remaining objections to the bill, which is a carryover from the proposed 1971 legislation, is that the plan will not take note of the major differences in various regions. The minister was reported in the Toronto Globe and Mail of September 9, 1974, as saying that the federal government was studying proposed changes to its grain stabilization plan that would fix incomes on a more regional basis. That statement was attributed to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) who is responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board.

Under the legislation as it now stands, payment to producers will take place only if the totality of the prairie provinces suffers from severe crop damage or depressed markets. The lumping of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and the designated areas of British Columbia prevents an individual producer or a localized region within a province from obtaining compensation if crop damage occurs.

The minister has responded to this criticism by saying that the plan is not a form of insurance but is a stabilization program. It was reported in the Globe and Mail of December 7, 1974, that the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board said at a press conference that he would propose continued study to see whether more regionalization could be put into the program. He added that too much regionalization, however, would make the plan little more than normal crop insurance. The minister said the plan was not a crop insurance scheme but was meant very much to complement existing insurance schemes.

Because this aspect of the bill is of great importance, the minister should confirm in the House if his proposal for a study into regionalization of the legislation has been initiated and, if so, when this study will be tabled, or possibly presented to the committee. Department officials have stated that serious and frequent meetings took place among producer groups, bureaucrats and government officials before the final drafting of the bill was completed. Also, localization of the stabilization program, was I understand, a contentious issue in 1970, judging from my observations out west and in the House. It seems that the minister is responding somewhat late at this point in time. After the bill was given first reading, the proposal was then announced by the Minister. I should like the minister to tell the House what has transpired and when we will receive information about the regionalization aspect.

In conclusion, I want to deal with the administrative costs of the plan. I want to give the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville the fullest possible time to tell the House what he knows about agriculture, so I will allow him five or ten minutes.

An hon. Member: One minute will do.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: There is an old saying, "Beware of Greeks bearing gifts", and I want to put that in the context of the administrative costs of this plan. One very appealing part of the legislation is that which provides that the producers will not pay any of the administrative costs involved in the program but that, rather, the costs will be borne by the federal government. I presume most producers will receive this particular proposal gladly and will accept the proposition that they will not be charged for any specific administrative costs under this legislation. But the question then arises, where will all this money come from? Once the legislation is passed, opposition members will not know the actual costs until the annual report of the stabilization fund is tabled and the estimates come before the committee.

I think it is a belief generally held even by members on the government side that since this government has been in office, government spending has reached almost uncontrollable proportions and shows no sign of easing, despite promises to that effect. Since the stabilization program is a new concept and therefore lacks experience, I am concerned about the cost of administration. I fear—I hope this will not be the case—that costs will reach epidemic proportions.

Although the bill provides that the producers will not be asked to pay the costs, I hope the producers themselves will be very observant and keep a keen eye on the cost to the general treasury of administering this plan. I think a new body of civil servants and bureaucrats will be required to operate this legislation, so there is a possibility that Parkinson's law will be put into place and there will be an increase in the size of the agency, branch or department seized with the responsibility of administering this legislation.

● (1650)

We only have to look back into the very recent past to see what happened in respect of the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency. During the committee proceedings, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) refused to accept responsibility for CEMA's difficulties and tried to lay the blame on the producers. In view of the fact that this particular administrative facet is being taken from the producers and adopted by the government, I hope the minister will publicly state his responsibility for this stabilization fund in order that the producers will know that they will not be blamed in the event that something goes wrong with the administration of the program.

I have spoken a little longer than I anticipated, Madam Speaker, and I appreciate your attention and the attention of hon. members in this chamber.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, Bill C-41 which is before us today has really been before this House for four or five years. It has quite a fascinating history. I see the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) sitting at the back; I am sure he followed this matter many years ago when he was a university student in Saskatchewan. In the fall of 1970, or in the spring of 1971, this bill was first introduced to the House. There was quite a debate at that time and the minister tried to push the bill through. It was a bill that virtually all farm organizations and farmers in the west disagreed with violently, and they made their points of view known very clearly to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board.

As a matter of fact, we fought a by-election campaign on this bill in the riding of Assiniboia. I remember the results of that by-election very well; the government party dropped from first to third place. I thought maybe the government had learned something as a result of that by-election. Also, the election results in Saskatchewan in 1971 probably stemmed in part from the fact this bill had been before the House. One would have thought that with all these setbacks to the Liberal Party during these years, it would have learned a lesson.

The bill before us today is an improvement over the 1971 bill, but it does have many deficiencies. Again, I believe the minister is trying to stay away from some of the input that farmers wanted. I would refer to the statement by the government House leader, in December, to our leader—and I believe to the House—that Bill C-41 was a priority matter and should be dealt with as soon as possible. He said we should set aside other legislation in order to deal with it.

This bill came into the House for first reading on December 4 and we were supposed to deal with it right away. Suddenly, other legislation got in the way and the government House leader had other priorities. One of those priorities was Bill C-44, which apparently was more important than this bill to establish a grain stabilization fund. If the minister in charge of the Wheat Board had really thought this was a priority item, we would have had second reading before Christmas, and during the months of January, February, March and April we could have heard from the farmers across the prairies who were able to attend hearings, rather than waiting until now when they are going into spring seeding. These are the things I believe could have been done had the government been serious about putting this legislation before the House.

It is very amusing to go back to some of the statements made by the minister in charge of the Wheat Board in 1971. I am sure a number of Saskatchewan members will remember them very clearly. The minister at that time said the bill could not be based on net farm income but had to be based on gross farm income. Now we have a bill before the House that is based partially on net farm income.

The minister also said in 1971 that there was no way to take into consideration the cost of production when calculating payments from a farm income stabilization fund. We have a clause in the bill that does take this into consideration to a major degree. These are things that could have been done back in 1971 and we might have had a good stabilization bill at that time. Instead, we had a by-election, with the government being forced to withdraw the legislation from the House.

This party has made it clear over the years that farm income must be stabilized. Farmers, more than any other persons in our society, are subject to fluctuation in the price of their products. The farmer is affected not just by weather conditions and by the crops of other countries but also by the free, open market in this country. This minister and this government have been responsible for promoting open marketing in Canada so that farmers now have the option of selling certain grains on the open market, an option they did not have a few years ago. When the farmer is faced with all kinds of difficulties such as the ones I have mentioned, he needs stabilized farm income. Our party has long advocated a stabilization plan based on the cost of production. Our party has also advocated a strong system of marketing boards in this country through which all farm commodities could be marketed.

We need a strong system of marketing boards in this country in order that we can have planned production and planned marketing, and in order that the farmers can have some say and some clout in respect of what they are to get for their products when they sell them in the fall of the year or at other times. These are some of the things that should be done. Our country should have, as an objective in agriculture, the mechanization of food production. We can only have that if we guarantee farm prices, and only if we have a grain stabilization plan that gives farmers an absolute guarantee. If we had marketing boards, with the farmers having some clout, then the farmers could make the decisions that are so important to planning.

The bill before the House today goes part way in that direction but by no means far enough. There are a number of clauses in the bill that we feel discriminate against the small producer, against regions and against those farmers who have the misfortune of having low yields or low prices over a series of years. For this reason, we intend to move certain amendments to the bill. At this stage, the most important thing we should do is to make sure that all members of this House realize the importance of holding public hearings so the farmers of this country who are to be affected by this bill will have the chance to present their case. A request has been made of the minister by a number of organizations, including the National Farmers Union, the Flax Growers Association of western Canada, as well as by a number of individual farmers, to hold such hearings before passing this bill. We should go across the country and have the farmers appear before us to tell us what should be in this legislation. That would be democracy at work.

There are many things in this bill that I believe must be changed. There must be input from the farmers, rather than from bureaucrats and technocrats sitting in their ivory towers in Ottawa. There are a number of things that should be changed, and I want to get to just one or two of them before five o'clock. At that time I will call it five o'clock and continue later.

One thing that discriminates against the producer is that payments from the fund are to be made in a general sense to all people who come under the Wheat Board area, and are not to be made in a regional sense. I feel that provision contains potential discrimination. For example, there may be a crop failure in an area such as northeastern Saskatchewan where we often have poor crops or crops with low protein content. Often our export commitment is in respect of grain of high protein quality. There is no provision in this bill for pay-outs to farmers who suffer because of poor quality grain. This involves one amendment to which I think we can all agree and I hope such an amendment will be acceptable at the committee stage. Participation in this fund should be universal. All producers should participate if this measure is to be effective and the fund worth while.

Perhaps at this point I might call it five o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTION TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the question to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment is as follows: the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark)—Indian Affairs—Alleged failure of minister to deal with grievances of Treaty Seven chiefs—Government position.

The House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills, notices of motions (papers), public bills. There being no item under the heading of private bills on the order paper, the House will proceed to notices of motions (papers).

● (1700)

Mr. Herbert: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The point of order I raise again today concerns the manner in which we deal with private members' business. I want to use as an example in explanation of the points I have been raising the conduct of private members' business on Tuesday of this week.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, how can the hon. member raise a point of order when nothing at all has been raised or is before the House? One cannot make a point of order out of the blue. My contention is that the hon. member has no right to raise a point of order until something has been done which might be out of order.

An hon. Member: Hear him out.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The understanding is that the first item on the list for today is the one being called. I do not think that this is the day for the hon. member to raise that kind of point of order.

Mr. Herbert: If I may reply to that, Madam Speaker, I am referring to what happened in this House on Tuesday of this week.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is too late.

Mr. Herbert: That is why I raise the point of order at this time.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): That is not a proper point of order. It is the wrong day.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Today is Thursday.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): I would like to remind the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) that he should raise this point of order at the appropriate time, which is Monday night.

Mr. Herbert: I rise on a question of privilege, then, because there were happenings on Tuesday of this week which affected my privilege as a member of this House. I was going to raise them on a point of order, but since it involves my own rights in this House I will use this opportunity to raise a question of privilege. On Tuesday of this week—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I think the question of privilege should be raised when the Speaker is in the chair after the question period.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

REQUEST FOR CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN GOVERNMENT AND UNITED AIRCRAFT AND CONTRACTS RELATING TO FEDERAL GRANTS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby) moved:

That an order of the House do issue for copies of all correspondence between United Aircraft and the government over the past year and copies of contracts relating to federal grants accorded to United Aircraft over the past five years.

He said: Madam Speaker, the issue I speak of this afternoon concerns one of the most vicious and tragic strikes in recent Canadian history. I refer to the United Aircraft plant at Longueuil, Quebec. The strike at that plant is still in progress. The issues involved are many. There has been injustice inflicted upon the workers at that plant in the past.

Mr. Blais: On a point of order, Madam Speaker, I suggest that we are dealing with a notice of motion for the production of papers and I trust we will not be dealing with the substance of the Longueuil strike at United Aircraft. Surely, if we are to deal with a motion for the production of papers, that is what we should be dealing with.

Mr. Benjamin: Wait for it.

Mr. Broadbent: I would have thought that even a member of the Liberal Party would have been bright enough to conclude that an argument is needed to justify the motion. What I am about to do is try to provide, even for the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais), some grounds for the motion we are debating which led to my moving it in the first place. I hope he will have read that I am calling for copies of contracts and correspondence. The contracts and correspondence refer quite directly to the labour situation I was about to discuss when I was interrupted.

If I may continue, Madam Speaker, the strike which is in progress involves many issues. It involves federal funding to private corporations at a level of hundreds of millions of dollars. It involves the right of Canadian workers to a just settlement and to have appropriate and fair working relationships with their employers. It involves the question of whether the federal government should have dealings with any corporation without that corporation meeting certain minimal standards of good corporate citizenship.

In short, the United Aircraft situation is a highly particular but highly symbolic case illustrating many of the problems we face in Canadian society, and more particularly, labour problems and the issue of federal incentive grants to corporations. The United Aircraft Corporation, as I have documented in another speech in the House in a more systematic way than I will this afternoon, has received millions of dollars in assistance from the government in recent years in the form of outright grants and in the form of repayable loans.

The reasons for those grants and the purposes for which they were to be spent were entirely laudable. They were to be spent to do research and development, and ultimately to produce first-rate aircraft engines; and this is what in fact occurred: there was developed by Canadian technicians and skilled workers at Longueuil a very successful aircraft engine which gained widespread acceptance in world markets. It was a first-rate project from that point of view.

The workers in that plant began negotiations some time before, but just some 16 months ago, in January of 1974, the strike resulted and it is still in progress. What were the demands at that time, and were they reasonable? It seems to me they wanted wage levels comparable to other workers in the same industry. They wanted the Rand formula to be applied in industry, something which has been accepted by good corporate citizens throughout—

Mr. Blais: On a point of order, Madam Speaker, I simply want to reiterate the original point I made. Evidently the hon. gentleman is attempting to make a speech about the Longueuil strike at United Aircraft. He is not at all interested in the production of documents; he is attempting to make a political speech. He has the right to make political speeches, but now is not the time to do so.

He is sitting beside a gentleman who is most knowledgeable of the rules of the House, so surely he could seek counsel about whether it is proper for him to make comments on the desirability of the strike without even once mentioning what he is seeking to have produced, or the purpose of the production.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I would say there are times when that point of order is justified in this five o'clock hour, but surely it is recognized that if my hon. friend is seeking to persuade this House to call for the production of certain papers, and it happens that those papers are copies of contracts and correspondence, he has the right to make the case as to why they should be tabled. It will then be a matter of judgment for the Chair as to whether he is straying too far from the facts needed to justify his case. It seems to me, however, that he is trying to make a case for his proposition, which is that certain papers should be tabled. As long as he is doing that, I believe he is in order.

Mr. Blais: Madam Speaker, I agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). He has indicated what the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) did not indicate when he launched into a political speech.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I will read again the motion as it was put:

That an order of the House do issue for copies of all correspondence between United Aircraft and the government—

Perhaps the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) would address his remarks to that subject.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, that is precisely what I am addressing myself to. For a normal set of reasonable, intelligent and conscientious human beings, an explanation could be given in three minutes; but for members of the Liberal Party a minimum of 20 minutes is needed. I am trying to provide an argument that even an average member of the Liberal Party could understand—and that takes a lot of effort.

We have a motion for the production of papers that says the government should provide the contracts so that this House can understand what kind of obligations were entered into between the government and the company. Did they deal with the labour situation, or did they not? Did they entail certain obligations for production in Canada so that it could not be transferred back to the United States and so adversely affect our workers? Did the contracts make provision for dealing with what is known as scab labour in a strike situation? I should have thought these things were almost self-evident to a normal, intelligent human being but I understand that for a Liberal it takes more time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Cut the interruptions; I have had two interruptions in five minutes. If I could now address myself—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) on a question of privilege.

Mr. Blais: I want to say that this poor, simpleminded Liberal knows the distinction between jurisdiction which is—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. Would the hon. member please resume his seat? This is not a question of privilege. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, I shall try to ignore the noise over there and deal with the issue. I was saying that the original demands of the workers at the time of the strike beginning early in 1974 were those widely accepted by the labour movement and employers elsewhere in Canada for many years, but apparently were not accepted by this company. I sought the contracts they signed with the government which provided them with millions of dollars of the taxpayers' money. I wanted to see those contracts to find out if the workers were given any protection at all. We have had partial revelation of the contracts but we have not seen all of them. I wanted to see the correspondence between the federal government and the company concerning these contracts, but that was denied me.

During the course of the strike, production was transferred from Canada to the parent company in the United States, thus depriving our workers of jobs which were paid for by the taxpayers of Canada. It seems to me that members of parliament have a legitimate obligation in a case like this. Even Liberals might be interested in finding out if public funds were being used to subsidize private corporations, and if the contracts concerned made it mandatory that the companies receiving those funds did all the work in Canada or if they were to be permitted to transfer employment to the United States or some other country.

Those parts of contracts that were provided after I asked for them in the House made some things clear. They made it clear that in providing millions of dollars to United Aircraft Corporation the government did not insist on written guarantees that work on these engines would be done in Canada. There was no provision to prevent United Aircraft Corporation shifting production from the province of Quebec to New England, which is what took place during the past year. The strike is still in progress and men have been out of work for 16 months. In my view, this is because the company did not fulfil its moral obligation to its employees, even if it did meet the letter of the law in terms of contracts signed by the federal government and United Aircraft Corporation.

During the course of this strike, the government signed additional contracts worth $14 million. I should like to know, from whoever will speak for the government, if there are any contractual arrangements that made this mandatory. Not only has the government permitted this company to abuse its workers through previous contracts, but they have entered into new contracts fully aware of the reprehensible attitude of this corporation toward its employees.

I asked the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) if the government should not require acceptance of the Rand formula as a minimum condition of good corporate citizenship. It could do that. Of course, enforcement of the Labour Code for most privately-owned industry lies within the jurisdiction of the provinces, but there is nothing to prohibit this government from setting minimum standards for its contracts with private corporations. I was anxious to see if this was discussed in correspondence between the company and the government. I suspect it was not. I suggest that kind of forceful declaration of principle outlining certain minimal standards should have been forthcoming from the federal government, and I want to see the correspondence to know exactly what is in it.

If the government is going to deny our right to see the correspondence, as I am sure it will, I want a spokesman for the government to tell us why. I want to know why in the future there should not be standards of good corporate citizenship, principles, and behaviour. I want to know why the government does not feel it appropriate that this company should be taken over as a Crown corporation and integrated with the other parts of the aircraft industry owned by the federal government, to establish a competitive, progressive aircraft industry in Canada under public ownership.

● (1720)

I should like the government spokesman to suggest why that should not be done in this particular case, from the point of view of rationalizing the industry, especially as it is known that the very success of United Aircraft in Canada is dependent on funds provided by the taxpayers of Canada via the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand E. Leblanc (Laurier): Madam Speaker, motion No. 17 dated February 12, 1975 and moved by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) can be discussed today pursuant to Standing Order 48. I think it is important to talk about that rule which provides for the discussion of such problems.

The rule deals with the production of papers and allows a member who was not satisfied by the reasons given for refusing to produce the paper or papers requested to discuss the matter for one hour and forty minutes. The debate can be followed by a vote and according to the results of the division, the government either is forced to produce the papers requested by the hon. member and to do so as soon as possible, or is confirmed in the position it took about the problem raised by my hon. friend. Incidentally, I wish him good luck in his campaign for the leadership of his party.

To recall the chronology of events related to motion No. 17 proposed by the hon. member, one may refer to page 346 of Hansard for October 11, 1974, when he asked his first question about the United Aircraft Company to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie). The question read as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce concerning the United Aircraft Corporation in the Montreal area. Would the minister inform the House as to the discussions that have been reported to have taken place between his officials and that corporation concerning obtaining a guarantee from that company that it will place in Canada the amount of work to which it is committed by virtue of getting some $70 million worth of assistance from the federal government? I refer to replacing in Canada work that has been transferred to the United States in recent months.

The hon. member said the same thing this evening. The reply was as follows, and I quote:

> Mr. Speaker, I and my officials have met with senior officials of UACL and the United States parent corporation to determine and to clarify the longterm plans of the firm respecting both the repatriation of work that has been transferred from the Longueuil plant to East Hartford and the expansion plans of the Canadian company in Canada. I hope to have more to say on this point by next week.

Later on, early in 1975, the hon. member gave notice of motion for production of papers concerning the whole problem posed by United Aircraft. In the meantime, I was advised that United Aircraft had mentioned to the government, through the minister in charge, that during a strike it would give temporary sub-contracts for the construction of engines in the United States, essentially to continue deliveries and protect its position as major supplier on the international scene of gas turbines for small aircraft. The company assured the government of the temporary nature of that step and of the repatriation of labour to Canada in due course.

During the strike, an increase in the demand for engines forced the company to give out sub-contracts. It endeavoured to give them out as soon as possible to Canadian firms. Still, it had to resort to the traditional American sub-contractors because of their capacity to meet an increase in demand. The parent company took over the work the traditional sub-contractors do not normally perform. Canadian sub-contractors were entrusted with a considerable amount of additional work and the company is now endeavouring to rely further on their co-operation.

Let us refer now to the tabling of parliamentary papers and more especially the reasons which have prompted the government not to provide the papers requested by the member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent). They deal with privileged data which the department has obtained from trade information concerning manufacturing issues as well as contracts and sub-contracts. The information was freely given, but under the seal of secrecy. In this connection, it is pointed out that the industrial expansion role assumed by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce mostly depends on the discretion shown by the minister in the use and distribution of highly confidential trade data received from different Canadian corporations.

The publication of such data by the department would be prejudicial to the raison d'être and aims of the department to such an extent that the Canadian economy could eventually suffer. In addition, the foreign competitors of United Aircraft would gain access to information which they could use at the expense of that corporation, thus impending its efforts on international markets. Such a situation could certainly cause a loss of jobs and, in view of the present economic conditions, I believe that this is not the time to create a loss of employment for Canadians.

● (1730)

An hon. Member: Agreed.

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): As concerns the production of papers, on March 15, 1973, the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso (Mr. MacEachen), who was then President of the Privy Council and House leader for the government, tabled a document which has been added to Hansard, at page 2288; this document, Appendix "B", entitled "Notices of Motions for the production of papers", established a general principle for the production of papers, which principle reads as follows:

> To enable Members of Parliament to secure factual information about the operations of government to carry out their parliamentary duties and to make public as much factual information as possible consistant with effective administration, the protection of the security of the state, rights to privacy and other such matters, government papers, documents and consultant reports should be produced on Notice of Motion for the Production of Papers unless falling within the categories outlined below in which case an exemption is to be claimed from production.

Then follow 16 exemptions, Madam Speaker. I believe that the request of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby comes within the definition of at least four exemptions which I shall now quote. Exemption 5 reads as follows:

> Papers containing information, the release of which could allow or result in direct personal financial gain or loss by a person or a group of persons.

This means that when this exemption applies, the papers cannot be produced.

The 10th exemption reads as follows:

> Papers relating to negotiations leading up to a contract until the contract has been executed or the negotiations have been concluded.

Here is exemption 12:

> Cabinet documents and those documents which include a Privy Council confidence.

This is exemption 16:

> Papers requested, submitted or received in confidence by the government from sources outside the government.

And I believe that the request of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby comes within the definitions of the exemptions that I have just read, that is exemptions 5, 10, 12 and 16.

It must be recognized that the issuance on March 15, 1973, of guidelines on the publication of parliamentary papers, was a significant step forward. No criteria existed before that, and although ministers of the Crown did not often do so, they could refuse to produce documents requested by opposition members, without giving any reasons. This in my view was a positive effort, and it was endorsed by the current government leader.

This problem is of the utmost importance, and the government did not hesitate to face it. The whole issue was also the subject of an in-depth study by the joint committee on statutory instruments. That committee's co-chairman is a highly qualified member of the opposition, the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave). It is also my privilege and pleasure to be a member of the committee. We try to study the production of documents without any partisanship, if this is possible to the politician working on this kind of issue with widespread political implications. I believe that all hon. members sitting on the committee deserve commendation for their totally unprejudiced effort.

The government's main reason in establishing these exemptions is to give the widest possible information, not only to the public, but also to members of this House, for the proper understanding of Parliament's operation.

It seems that not all hon. members agree, and the contrary, of course, would have surprised all the people. The government established a procedure to get to this objective. Furthermore, this is the reason of the reference to this committee of the study of the production of documents, which was established precisely to meet the demands as the one being made now with motion No. 17 standing in the name of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

Madam Speaker, you know it is very difficult to make a judgment on the relevance of the questions asked and that it is also very difficult for a parliamentarian to appraise the balance between the expressed will of the government to supply as much information as possible and the obligation to provide sound administration and to ensure at the same time the security of the country. In my view, it is a good thing to insist on the fact that in the past, the government had no firm established policy for its part as a supplier of information. That part was played every day "by ear" depending on the type of question, without any guideline whatever, and the whim of officials and ministers alike. Undoubtedly such a situation, that was bound not to last, had to be remedied, in a condition where modern ways of communication are more and more available and in ever growing demand.

It is obvious, Madam Speaker, that guidelines are criticized by the opposition, whose role it is to do so, since they must force the government to account for the exercise of its mandate, not in an evasive but a concrete manner, by providing the greatest amount of information possible so as to justify its political action. In fact, the idea is to try and find a middle-of-the-road policy between unacceptable total secrecy and acceptable partial disclosure. The discussion concerning the production of documents is between these two extremes.

On the one part, certain civil servants and politicians are jealous of their papers and fear the principle of complete disclosure and, on the other hand, some refuse total and absolute secrecy. Between those two extremes surely there is room for a happy medium that could most often satisfy everyone—In medio stat virtus. We all know that there are now rules concerning the production of papers, and I mentioned it earlier—Standing Order 48.

I want to come back to the fact that the government having issued guidelines on the availability of all government papers, unless they fall within clearly defined categories for exemption, as is the case now, represents a very commendable effort, as I mentioned in my opening remarks.

I am convinced there is room for improvement, and that is the primary reason for the examination undertaken by our committee whose name I mentioned earlier. I think surely the open and candid attitude of the government in that respect should draw the opposition's approval.

Before undertaking to reform those guidelines it must be borne in mind that the government spent a lot of time preparing the list of exemptions released on March 15, 1973, There is no doubt that all aspects were carefully weighed before that list was produced. But since it is the nature of man to make mistakes the government does not pretend to have reached optimum conditions. On the contrary, being aware of possible mistakes and weaknesses it set up a committee to examine carefully all aspects of the problem precisely to reach, if possible, perfection in this area.

The fault that seems to exist, and in that I think I am consistent with certain members of the opposition, is the fact that the government now considers its own actions without appeal by the opposition. Perhaps an organization such as the one recommended by a member of the opposition should be created to enable an independent body to determine the validity of the government's position, or of the opposition's request. In democracy, the rules of the game call for—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time is now expired.

United Aircraft

[English]

Mr. Gus MacFarlane (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I am sure the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) is wondering why someone from Hamilton Mountain is speaking on this matter. I think that can be easily clarified by giving my background in the good city of Verdun.

Verdun was a very residential area. We always became concerned with the surrounding corporations, for the good of the corporations and for the worry of the workers who lived in Verdun. The people of Verdun, looking at the suburbs around it, such as Montreal, realized that it was necessary to be concerned because we were mainly the workers in that area. I think we share something in common in that at least.

The best way for me to approach the problem in the hope that I will be relevant in speaking to the question, and since we have mentioned the United Aircraft of Canada Limited and certain factors of the corporation's operation, is to establish in a few short moments something of the character of United Aircraft of Canada Limited, then immediately move on to the minister's actions in relation to documents which he has tabled, and then go directly to the correspondence requested and my feeling concerning the motion.

In establishing the character we should recognize that United Aircraft of Canada Limited has never officially approached the department requesting permission in writing to transfer work from Canada to the United States. When the department became aware that UACL was transferring some work from Canada, it asked the company for a statement outlining the details. Through these consultations which took place during May and June, the department obtained a picture of the actual transfers that were taking place. UACL's justification was that it had to protect its markets from its competitors, and that its customers had indicated that they would switch their business from UACL to competing manufacturers of aircraft if UACL were unable to supply from some source.

When the department became aware of the magnitude of the transfers it called in the Canadian president and senior officials from the international parent, and informed them that the work must be returned to Canada as quickly as possible. Furthermore, the minister informed top company officials that he wished to be made aware of the company's plans for its future in Canada, including new investment. As a result of these pressures the company immediately took steps to repatriate the work to Canada, and since the consultations employment has increased to near record levels and production volume in Canada now exceeds previous record levels.

● (1740)

Because of the government's participation in the development of the PT 6 and the JT 15 families of engines, UACL has developed from a minor supplier of replacement parts employing about 400 people to an internationally renowned developer and manufacturer of the most advanced types of small and medium-sized turbine engines having a wide variety of applications. The government's share of the financing—$73 million—is much less than the investment by UACL and UAL at $250 million.

Mr. Gilbert: You are reading your speech.

Mr. MacFarlane: That is right.

In the absence of the government's participation it is very likely that UACL would still be a minor supplier of replacement parts of obsolete piston engines and an employer of a few hundred relatively unskilled workers. At the present time UACL employs several hundred highly qualified graduate engineers, and provides outstanding opportunities for the talent of Canadians in the development of advanced technology engineering products. It is one of the few major establishments in the province of Quebec which employs engineers in such substantial numbers on this type of high technology endeavour.

I think this establishes the character of the company, also its shortcomings in the transfer of the work, but its reasons for doing that.

Further, it ought to be said that United Aircraft contributed more than $94 million to the Canadian economy in 1974. The company's expenditures averaged $1.8 million a week for wages and salaries of Canadian employees, employees' benefits, federal, provincial and municipal taxes, and purchases from suppliers and sub-contractors throughout the country. Wages and salaries laid by UACL to its Canadian employees last year amounted to $49.4 million. At the end of 1974, 4,855 people were working with UACL in Canada. Purchases of goods and services from Canadian businesses and industry rose to the amount of $37.8 million in 1974. In addition, UACL spent $3.8 million in capital investment in that year, and is planning to commit more than $7 million to increase its production.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I would remind the hon. member that the motion deals with correspondence between United Aircraft and the government.

Mr. MacFarlane: That is why I summarized initially, Madam Speaker. I said I would establish the character because it seemed that somehow the aircraft company was involved in this. If you wanted the papers, I think I said in my first statement that it is writing, written words, that are required. I was referring to what was in that writing, as released by the minister. That seems rather reasonable.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Sit down!

Mr. MacFarlane: Having moved away from the character of the company I think I would like to move into the area of exactly what the minister said when tabling the document.

An hon. Member: Oh, no!

Mr. MacFarlane: On January 27, 1974, he said the government's contribution of some $73 million to the company was a good investment. He made that statement after copies of all development agreements between the Crown and United Aircraft had been tabled in the House of Commons. All agreements were tabled, with the exception of three amendments to them. These were excluded on legal advice because they contained classified engineering and cost information which violates industrial security if made public to the company's competitors.

The minister is being quite clear. He is emphasizing that the joint venture between the government and company, starting in 1960, has resulted in the development in Canada of a high grade technical capability to produce small gas turbines for world markets. Coming directly to the point, I think the relevant part is Appendix E, to the notices of motions regulations, although there are many other areas we could touch. It says in paragraph 5:

> Papers containing information, the release of which could allow or result in direct personal financial gain or loss by a person or group of persons.

If indeed the minister, with the legal advice he had, and in his wisdom really was convinced that the release of this information could jeopardize the company's future financially, or indeed could jeopardize the workers who work there and cause a further transfer of business, then indeed he was acting in absolute good faith and was following the regulations in not tabling the documents.

Copies of all agreements covering development assistance by the federal government to United Aircraft of Canada Limited were tabled, as I mentioned, on January 27. Correspondence between the Government of Canada and United Aircraft of Canada Limited over the past year continues to be of a confidential nature and, if released, would disclose information which is private to the company and would be detrimental to Canadian production and exports.

The main reasons for continued confidentiality are that United Aircraft has provided complete access on a privileged basis to its financial records, to its market analyses, and to its long term plans for product and market development. Disclosure of this data to international competitors could destroy its competitive advantage in the small aircraft engine field, and would be inimical to the Canadian interest.

Similarly, United Aircraft's dealings with its sub-contractors and suppliers in Canada and abroad could be adversely affected by disclosure. Moreover, the department must retain its neutral stance between Canadian companies having dealings with United Aircraft, many of which are privately owned, and would not wish their commercial affairs to be indirectly disclosed.

Finally, releasing the data could inhibit the flow of future information between the company and the government to the detriment of our objectives for industrial and trade development of this high technology product sector.

I really think the reference to paragraph 5 fits pretty good. It speaks of papers containing information "the release of which could allow or result in direct personal financial gain or loss by a person or group of persons." The minister is clearly on firm ground in this matter.

One of the hon. members on the other side has said he does not like my using notes although, after all, I think it is important sometimes for the record to say the words as written down. So I would like to use an analogy. The analogy is very simple. If you have ever been involved in the school system, you know that for a long time they used to write records on record cards, and these cards would go to the principal's office. As a result some teacher would receive a record that Johnny So-and-So was indeed a very bad boy, an incorrigible. And so the teacher already had the answer to all the questions before he ever dealt with that child in class. That system is not supposed to be in force any more.

It is considered bad, really bad, to have that information which is secret and unavailable to the person concerned, but it is equally bad if you reveal the information which makes it no longer secret, because people make judgments that are not the judgment that teachers made when they wrote that correspondence.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): So Johnny So-and-So became a Liberal M.P.!

Mr. MacFarlane: I can give another example. As a dean working in the students' area in university I know I quickly came to this conclusion with respect to the loaning of student finances from the university. Sometimes I found it very necessary to make notes on paper which would indicate what the problem was, whether it was something that existed at home, whether it was something that existed in the person's own life, whether it was of a moral character, or whether it was of a criminal nature. It really was a very incorrect thing for me to put that on the correspondence file for someone else to read it at a different time, and in a different way.

● (1750)

Indeed, I remember that at the end of each year I would destroy each and every such file personally, leaving only a record for the accountant of what was owed, be it $300, $450 or whatever, because somebody else reading what I wrote at that time, reading what my assessment was, would not read my comments in the same light, or have the same information that I had. So this kind of privileged correspondence is important. Certain things are said in relation to the events at the time.

I think the time has come, if we are to get along in the field of industrial labour relations, when we must think of companies within the corporate image as a corporate family. Companies, in the same way as labour unions, are people, not inanimate objects. Their character can be smeared. They can be set up for attack by people, and maligned if what is stated in one simple sentence is extracted and presented in the wrong way.

Therefore I am proud to associate myself with those who have spoken against the production of these papers. However, I am also pleased to associate myself with concern for the workers along with the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby, who I know is sincere. But like the person who calls for another person's record to clear that person, sometimes the presentation of the record is detrimental to the parties concerned.

Mr. Broadbent: Would the hon. member permit a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The hon. member is rising to ask a question. Would the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain allow a question?

Mr. MacFarlane: No, Madam Speaker; I never open my mouth in front of self-styled experts.

United Aircraft

[Translation]

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Nipissing): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to join in the last comments addressed by the hon. member for Hamilton-Mountain (Mr. MacFarlane) to the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), when he refers to his interest in labour relations. I also want to join in the compassion expressed by both the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain and the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby concerning the problem at United Aircraft in Longueuil. This problem has lasted too long and I want to endorse the desire of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby to see the end of this dispute.

Unfortunately, I do not think I can agree with the motion presented by the hon. member. Obviously, he tried very hard to find a justification for the production of the papers but, Madam Speaker, he has not been able, to, because the papers he was asking for contain information which he claims he has already obtained from the minister.

[English]

You will recall, Madam Speaker, that the two main arguments that were made by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby were, first that he supposes that the correspondence between United Aircraft and I.T. and C. would indicate some pressure coming from I.T. and C. with reference to labour matters; secondly, that the contract which there allegedly was between I.T. and C. and United Aircraft would contain a prohibition preventing United Aircraft from transferring work from Canada into its United States plants.

With all due respect to the hon. member, so far as those two arguments are concerned he already has the information. He asked a question in the House of the minister regarding whether there was any correspondence that referred to the labour matter, and he was given a reply that implied that it was none of the business of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) what the labour relations might be between the workers at Longueuil and United Aircraft.

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is very conscious of the jurisdictional obligations of the federal government, much more so than the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby, who evidently does not understand that when there are labour conflicts between workers in a province and a company within that province, those relations must be dealt with by legislation enacted by the provincial legislature. Effectively the conflict at United Aircraft is one involving workers who are completely within the province of Quebec and a company that operates within the province of Quebec; ergo the whole problem is one that falls within that jurisdiction.

When we were debating Bill C-32 we heard a lot clamouring from that corner of the House about protecting provincial jurisdiction. One of their Saskatchewan members said that the federal government was poking its nose into provincial jurisdiction and matters that did not concern it. I am amazed that the leader of that party should attempt to stick his nose into something that does not concern him, and which does not concern the members of this House.

United Aircraft

Sympathetic as I am to that particular conflict, I know that the province of Quebec has a responsibility for labour relations within the province. It is not for me as a member of this House to indicate to them how they should discharge that responsibility. I can understand that the leader of the NDP, or rather the potential leader of the NDP, has no party in the province of Quebec and has to use this chamber to indicate what they ought to do at the provincial level. But that is not my role, or the role of any member of the House.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member recalls the gist of the point of order that he raised about 50 minutes ago.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): As a matter of fact I was just about to call the hon. member to order. Perhaps I should let the hon. member know that the motion deals with correspondence between United Aircraft and the government.

Mr. Blais: I fully agree, Madam Speaker, and I am not one to abuse the rules of the House. If I was carried away, it was because of the persuasiveness of my own argument. I might indicate to the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby that he actually has the information he is seeking, in an answer given him in the House.

I had three other arguments I wanted to put, Madam Speaker, but I think the most viable one is this. We are dealing with a clause in a contract that allegedly prohibits United Aircraft from transferring work to the United States. I point out to the hon. member that there have been $92 million worth of federal funds invested in this corporation. In order to protect that investment a judgment was exercised by the federal government, and was provided in the answer. That judgment was to permit United Aircraft to keep its competitiveness by transferring work to the United States, with the assurance that the work would come back. I suggest to the hon. member that had that assurance not been obtained, that strike would have destroyed United Aircraft. Thank you for your patience, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock tonight.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING THE STABILIZATION OF NET PROCEEDS FROM THE PRODUCTION AND SALE OF WESTERN GRAIN

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lang that Bill C-41, respecting the stabilization of net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain and to amend certain statutes in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, before the dinner hour I was suggesting that this party supports the principle of stabilizing incomes for farmers because farmers, perhaps more than anyone else in our country, have to live with the open market system, with existing weather patterns, and are subject to international markets which they can no longer control, and in addition they have to live with the Liberals, never knowing what they are going to do.

The farmers have to meet many uncertainties in respect of income from what they produce. The time has long since passed when the government should have taken the responsibility of stabilizing the income of farmers. This has been the foundation policy of this party and of the CCF before it. We have always said that we should have a farm stabilization program with marketing boards, so we can market farm products in an orderly fashion. These are things this party has advocated for years. There must be guaranteed prices. When the farmer plants his crop in the spring he has no idea what he will get for that crop when he sells it in the fall. This discriminates against the small farmer and squeezes him out of business because he is the guy who has to compete with big agribusiness and the big producer.

This bill is an improvement over the 1971 bill. I thought the minister had learned a few things since then, but perhaps he has not learned enough. When this bill goes to committee there are a number of changes that I and others in my party would like to see adopted. I am sure the farmers would like to have these changes made in the bill as well.

The most important thing we must do as members of parliament is make sure that the agriculture committee holds public hearings throughout the country so that the farmers' union, the Federation of Agriculture, and any other grain group will have the opportunity of contributing some input to this grain stabilization program.

This piece of legislation will fundamentally change the income status of many grain farmers. It is important that the changes are made in their best interest rather than the best interest of anyone else. There are a number of other things that should be changed. I referred earlier to the fact that pay-outs are to be made on a total or global basis, and this is discriminatory.

Let me give an example. There may be a poor quality crop in my area with wheat of grade 5 or lower, yet the average may be grade 1, 2 or 3, so the farmers in my area would not receive pay-outs from the stabilization fund. That is unfair. Likewise the average income for a particular year might be lower than the average for the previous five years across the board, but you might still have farmers who are getting grades 1 and 2, with others getting inferior grades, yet they would all receive the same pay-out. That is very unfair to the farmers who have inferior grades of wheat or other grains.

This is the type of amendment I think we can all agree on, and this is the type of amendment that will make a better and more equitable bill for farmers all across the prairie grain region.

There are a number of other things in the bill I feel are unfair. I referred earlier to the fact that this measure should be universal in participation. If it were universal I believe it would be stronger and much better.

Under the bill there is to be a levy imposed on the producer of 2 per cent on all grain sold up to a maximum of $25,000, which means a maximum levy of $500 per year. The government will contribute 4 per cent. If there is a deficit, then as I read the legislation the levy on producers will increase from 2 per cent to 2.5 per cent, and the contribution by the government will increase from 4 per cent to 4.5 per cent, and so on. If there is a deficit in the fund for more than three years the pay-outs to the producers will not remain level or static but will decrease, and that too strikes me as something that is really unfair. When the need is greatest for the farmers on the prairies, if there has been a general pay-out for three or four years, the benefits will decrease because there is less money in the fund.

There should be an amendment so that the government will contribute more if there is a serious situation on the prairies for a number of years when income is down, otherwise this measure will not be as effective as it should be, and it will not be much of a stabilizing fund.

I note also a clause that says that if the fund is in a deficit position for three years or more the income of farmers will not be stabilized at 100 per cent of the average for the previous five years, but rather at 90 per cent. Again this is a downward trend in stabilization of farm income if we are unfortunate enough to have several consecutive years in which farm income is dropping instead of going up. That is another amendment I think we should consider when this bill reaches the committee stage.

I note also that all types of grain will qualify in respect of the farm income stabilization fund. That strikes me as rather strange when we know that the government has put so much grain on the open market. We have many people who advocate a free enterprise system in the farm community, and who say that marketing boards are not good and that the power of the Wheat Board is too strong. If these people feel that way and believe in the open market, why should they be allowed to qualify for stabilization? If they believe in free marketing, and the floor drops out from under the price of barley, rapeseed, wheat, flax, oats or any grain, then why should they be covered by this plan? Surely this plan goes against the principles those people advocate when they talk about a free market. I do not believe we should be covering the grain that is sold on the open market. We should not be supporting off-board grain sales under the grain stabilization bill.

Most of us will agree that grain which is sold by one farmer to another, or to a feed mill or a feed lot, should be covered. We can move an amendment so that this type of transaction is covered. This represents a small transaction made between the farmer and someone else, probably in his own community.

However, when it comes to selling grain off the board on the open market, then I suggest those grains should not be covered. If these people want to play the free enterprise game with Richardson and Sons or the grain exchange, then let them play that game, but why should we have a government that comes forward with an insurance plan that will subsidize those people if the floor drops out of the market? This, to me, is another form of subsidization of those involved in grain exchange and private grain trade. We do not need that in this House. If I am to be consistent, that is one part of the bill I cannot support. That is a typical, Liberal free enterprise tactic, where there is free enterprise for the rich, but, boy oh boy, when those free enterprisers get into trouble, there has to be a little socialism to bail them out. Surely to God if they believe in their philosophy, they could follow it through. And why should it be followed up with public funds?

I think there should be marketing boards for all farm commodities and guaranteed prices when there is planned production where the objective is the maximization of food production. We should not be fooling around with food in the open market. We should not be gambling with flax, rye and rape seed on the open market as if gambling with dice in a casino. There is no need for that in Canadian agricultural policy.

Deep down in that big, warm, congenial heart I have a hunch that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) agrees with me, but he is probably having a hell of a fight in cabinet with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) who is responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. I think the time has come when we should move on the recommendation made, I believe, by the Department of Agriculture to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), namely, that the Wheat Board come under the authority of the Minister of Agriculture. It makes more sense to me to have all farm jurisdictions, departments and agencies under the Minister of Agriculture. What does wheat have to do with the Minister of Justice? I believe that this is a political move.

I do not think politics should be played in regard to the livelihood of farmers, their futures, destinies and incomes. I think the Minister of Agriculture was right when he suggested to the Prime Minister that he should have the Wheat Board under his authority. That makes more sense, and I think hon. members in this House would give the minister support in that regard. We sometimes sympathize with the minister in his fight with the academic from Saskatoon-Humboldt, and I think we can give him support there as well.

There are several other areas of this bill which should be amended. I notice that when the expenses of a farmer are calculated under this legislation, a number of important areas are excluded. It excludes, for example, depreciation on buildings used in farm operations. Whether they be grain bins or whatever, they are necessary to produce grain on the prairies. This legislation also excludes machinery. Why should machinery be excluded? There is nothing which depreciates more rapidly on farms than machinery.

Machinery prices have been skyrocketing in the last number of years. This bill ought to be amended so that it will really stabilize income and make sure farmers do not get behind year after year. There should be a formula to include things like machinery and farm buildings. Interest on debts should be included. Interest accumulates for farmers buying machinery and building materials to put up buildings. The interest on such debts is not included in the bill before us. If this bill is to be one which will in a genuine way stabilize farm income, these things should be included.

Another matter which strikes me as being unfair to small farmers is that the pay-out from the fund in an aggregate manner is determined on the proportion of the farmer's share of contributions he has made to the plan. In other words, if a small farmer has had the misfortune of having low quality crops or poor crops for a series of years, and his payments into the fund have been small, when there is a pay-out from the fund, he receives a small pay-out. The small farmer, or the farmer with the bad quality crop, cannot help what kind of crop he achieves, and if there is a fund which will penalize him for being a small farmer or for having a poor quality crop, that will help push them out of the market. That will not stabilize the western grain industry, and we should be doing that at this time.

These are five or six things which should be rectified in the bill which is before us. There are a number of items which should be mentioned, and which our party and other hon. members will be bringing to the attention of the committee when we get to that stage, but I think, that the most important item we have to resolve at second reading today is that if this bill is to be effective, it must be discussed across this country by farmers at open meetings of the agriculture committee. There has to be input from the farmers, be it from the farmers' union, the wheat pool, the federation of agriculture or any other group.

This is a complicated bill. One or two lawyers in the House have said that it is one of the most complicated bills. In many ways it is similar to the income tax bill we debated a few months ago. I think even the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn) would say that in certain respects the bill is rather complicated. We do not know what the minister means in some of the clauses of this bill. These clauses have to be clarified.

Farmers have to know what this bill will cost, what it will be giving to them in terms of pay-outs and benefits, and this can only be achieved through public hearings. Surely to goodness, that is democracy. We in this House when we draft legislation are delegates of the people, but before we pass any bills into law which fundamentally affect the livelihood of people, the least we can do is have public hearings extensively where all affected people will have a chance to appear with briefs, if they so wish, to suggest amendments and to recommend to us whether to support the bill in its present form or in an amended form.

[Mr. Nystrom.]

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, it is a great privilege for me to have the opportunity to participate in this debate, and particularly to follow the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom). I will take this opportunity to welcome him back to the House of Commons after his road show.

An hon. Member: Was he sick?

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): He always makes an energetic contribution, which he did on the road show when he was travelling across the country. I understand that he was recently in my own province and had the opportunity of meeting the one supporter of his party who lives there. I want to congratulate him on that, and welcome him back.

I am also pleased to speak in the presence of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). I want to congratulate him on overcoming what was obviously the design of his colleague, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang), responsible for everything under the sun, in arranging for this debate to be held tonight, the same night the Minister of Agriculture was to appear as a witness to discuss one of the few pieces of agricultural legislation which still comes under his jurisdiction. I am pleased that the minister was able to have that standing committee cancelled and that he is able to be here tonight. I imagine this is the closest the Minister of Agriculture will come to Bill C-41, which should have appeared under his sponsorship.

We are all very pleased that this bill is finally back in the House for second reading and that we have an opportunity to discuss a measure which has been of great concern, to western Canadians in particular, for nearly five years since the predecessor to this bill first appeared in 1970. It casts a peculiar light on the priorities of the government when one remembers that this has been an urgent bill ever since December when it was first introduced by the Minister of Justice, responsible for everything under the sun. At that time he said it was a priority matter, yet it has been an priority now for almost five months. Several other bills which are clearly not of the same importance to western Canada, or to the country, have taken precedence over it, but we are pleased that it has now found its way on to the agenda of parliament to be considered at second reading.

I must support an observation made at the beginning of the remarks of the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville when he suggested that the timing of consideration of this bill is unfortunate from the point of view of many of the farmers most directly concerned. It would have been preferable to have had this bill for second reading at the time when the minister said it was a priority, and to have had the opportunity to have the standing committee travel through the country to hold public hearings. This would have encouraged a contribution from the people most directly concerned at a time when they were relatively free to express their concern and not preoccupied with seeding or other problems of the busy season.

I want to return to the procedural question of public meetings of the standing committee, Mr. Speaker. We on this side of the House believe that it is absolutely essential that the standing committee go across the country, particularly to the prairie regions, so that it will have the benefit of the advice of the people who will be directly affected by the bill.

It is curious that this bill is sponsored by the minister in charge of the Wheat Board when clearly it should have been introduced in this House by the Minister of Agriculture. Since the minister was elevated from the back benches to his present position he has presided over a diminishing department. On one side is Beryl Plumptre picking away at him, and on the other side is the minister responsible for everything under the sun, picking away too. My colleague points out that he is even having difficulties with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet).

The Minister of Agriculture often tells us in this House that he is one of the most popular ministers in the government—in fact in any government known to man! It has to be admitted that he is popular with his colleagues because they all come to him to take away responsibilities that should properly be his. This bill, for instance, should have been brought forward by the Minister of Agriculture but instead came in under the sponsorship of the law professor from Saskatchewan.

A meeting of the Standing Committee on Agriculture was cancelled tonight in order to allow the minister to be here to get as close as he ever will to this grain stabilization bill. The standing committee was to have considered Bill C-50, the agricultural stabilization bill. That quite dramatically raises the question of why two bills dealing with agricultural stabilization should come before the House with different sponsors. Why should the agricultural stabilization bill be introduced by the Minister of Agriculture, and the grain stabilization bill which is before us now be introduced by the Minister of Justice?

I think it is important to underline that the matters for which the Minister of Justice is presumably responsible relate to the Wheat Board. The activities of the Wheat Board in relation to grains, however, are by legislation restricted to and concentrated upon marketing. The Wheat Board has nothing to do with the income of farmers or the stabilization of their income. That responsibility properly lies with the Minister of Agriculture.

It is very important to raise the question of the government's determination to strip the Minister of Agriculture of a responsibility which belonged in that portfolio when others held it. If there is any sense or reason to the direction of agricultural policy in Canada today, that responsibility should still belong to his portfolio.

Why does the Minister of Justice introduce legislation dealing with income stabilization in relation to grain? It is quite clear that for some of the grains included in the bill such as rye, flax, and rapeseed, the Wheat Board has only a limited responsibility related to quotas. The sponsorship of this bill by the Minister of Justice responsible for the Wheat Board will only lead to an expansion of the interest of the Wheat Board instead of curtailing its activity.

There is a parliamentary reason for worrying about this sponsorship. The relationship of this bill to the Canadian Wheat Board may make it more difficult for parliament to keep tabs on what is going on. We are all acquainted with the frequent practice of the Minister of Justice in charge of the Wheat Board of ducking criticism of that body by saying, "That is a Wheat Board responsibility," and accepting responsibility only when things turn out well. Everyone who has attempted to read the bill agrees that it is a highly complicated piece of legislation, so it may turn out to be difficult for parliament to get answers.

The simple answer to the question of why the Minister of Agriculture has been stripped of a responsibility which should properly be his may be that the Minister of Justice is more influential in the cabinet, and that this bill is another piece of the personal political empire that he is attempting to accumulate.

I suppose it could be said that the Minister of Justice does not have much to do. His activities seem to be limited to denying inquiries into activities which clearly demand them, and to offering unsolicited legal advice to the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) when that minister wants to extend assistance to organizations in the constituency of the Minister of Justice. He does not have much to do in his own portfolio and, being an ambitious man, reaches for responsibilities which properly belong to the Minister of Agriculture.

We have a certain sympathy for the dilemma of the Minister of Justice because he cannot decide which other portfolio he wants to have—is it Minister of Justice responsible for agriculture, or Minister of Justice responsible for transport? He has just returned from a whistle stop pogo stick jump of the prairies, grabbing at the jurisdiction of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand). The Minister of Transport was so alarmed that he took the unprecedented step of going out west himself to see what the Minister of Justice was up to, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Justice is entitled to his ambition, of course, but we must seriously examine his attempts to take over the functions of the Department of Transport and whole programs of the Department of Agriculture. These ambitions portend confusion and a lack of co-ordination of agricultural policies.

An hon. Member: I hear he wants to take over CEMA.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): That is one that he has been content to leave to the Minister of Agriculture—if he has it and not Beryl Plumptre.

The serious problems are the capacity of the Government of Canada effectively to co-ordinate agricultural policy, and the right of Canadian farmers to know that the programs being devised and the structures being established are in their interests, and not designed to further the ambition of a particular minister, such as the Minister of Justice. There are very real concerns. The bill before us deals with the incomes and security of countless numbers of Canadians who make their living in one of the most unpredictable professions, agriculture. The confusion about who is responsible for the co-ordination of agricultural policy makes things even more difficult for them.

There is another aspect to this which concerns many members of this House, and it is that the duplication involving competition among ministers for jurisdiction over agriculture may substantially add to the costs of government. Certainly the structures that were established to deal with agricultural problems and that were evolved to deal with agricultural policy should not be shaped simply to suit one man's ambition. There should be a much more rational inspiration behind the development of agricultural policy in this country than is presently the case with the Minister of Justice reaching out for everything he can grasp.

There is no rational reason for having this bill introduced in the name of, and proceed under the direction of, the Minister of Justice. Yet we are building into the legislation a reliance on Wheat Board proceedings. We are building in, by having the Minister of Justice responsible for this agency, the suggestion that there will be a continuing relationship between this program, which has to do with the incomes of grain farmers, and the Wheat Board, which to this point and under the act, has had to do exclusively with the marketing of grain products. There is no rational reason for that. The simple reason is that it happens to serve the interests of a particularly ambitious and influential minister.

The problem is that strong though the Minister of Justice may be, he is not going to be there always, and the program and legislation we are designing at this time will almost certainly endure after the minister has gone. The structures we are establishing will almost certainly have to be dealt with by Canadian farmers after this particular minister has gone; yet we are establishing structures and evolving a policy shaped simply to serve the ambitions of a transitory minister. I think that ought to be a matter of concern to all of us.

I must admit that perhaps one of the reasons why this bill has not been sponsored by the Minister of Agriculture, who has always identified himself in this House and elsewhere as being a simple farmer, is that he cannot understand it. We sympathize with him. Even my distinguished legal colleague from Saskatoon-Biggar expressed a certain difficulty in understanding the complexities of this legislation. The complexities of formulas set out in Bill C-41 make the filling out of income tax forms seem relatively easy.

This is complicated legislation and leads me to suspect that the Minister of Justice, who is responsible for the Wheat Board, harbours some continuing interest in the job prospects of the graduates of the law school of the University of Saskatchewan. Certainly, he is introducing here a piece of legislation which will keep them busy for a long time to come, as farmers try to figure out how to deal with this legislation and what it means. It is a bonanza for lawyers, but it may turn out to be something considerably less for grain farmers. It will also keep several other groups busy, too, because this legislation in all its complexity cannot possibly be carried out without a substantial bureaucracy. Clearly, tonight, in considering Bill C-41, we are being invited to establish an even greater bureaucracy to deal with this complex legislation.

As I said earlier, the concept inspiring this bill was first introduced in parliament in 1970, and was given second reading in 1971. The bill then before the House received such universal criticism and condemnation that it was simply battered down by public opinion. There was overwhelming, universal opposition by farm spokesmen, individual farmers and members representing agricultural regions in this country, and for those reasons, because of the extensive opposition, the government withdrew the predecessor bill. There were three features of that predecessor bill which were particularly objectionable. One was its compulsory nature; the second was the failure of any willingness to engage in indexing; the third was that there was no regionalization. Once again the bill dealt with the whole area of the prairies. It was universally attacked, and withdrawn, and in the replacement that has been brought forward at this time there is evidence showing that the government has learned some lessons.

The question of indexing, of course, has continued to be of embarrassment to the present government. Most of us in this House remember what has become enshrined in history as the Truro speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner). That minister, after admitting that his most recent attempts at developing an economic policy for the country have failed, has departed for another round of mysterious economic conferences which keep him outside this House. The Minister of Finance, when the concept of indexing was introduced by the leader of my party, attacked that concept all out as the worst possible thing which could happen. As we know, a little later he embraced it as his own. That has become, of course, a favourite practice of that whirling dervish, the Minister of Finance. I will not be surprised if, when the budget comes down at the end of this month, we find that prominent in its contents are policies which he attacked with such roundness and vigour in the election campaign of ten momths ago.

As I say, indexing was the matter he opposed in the period of the first introduction of this bill. For that reason, among others, there was no inclusion of an indexing provision in the first version of the bill that we received. But now there has been a change and the bill before us involves an indexing of a sort, an indexing of some of the costs of production. Yet, as several of my colleagues have indicated and as some Canadian farmers know to their great concern, indexing is not to be applicable to all the costs of production which Canadian farmers will face. It is to be a partial indexing; but a partial indexing is better than none at all. There are still serious difficulties that we will want to examine more fully at the committee stage, and I am sure individual Canadian farmers will wish to ask questions about the bill if they are given the opportunity to attend public meetings of a standing committee which has a mandate to travel.

The second element of that first version that was objectionable was the compulsory element. Now it is not completely compulsory; it is only partly compulsory for a farmer to become involved in this stabilization program. The minister delights in calling this a voluntary program, but this, I suggest is a highly misleading description. For one thing you are, in effect, locked into this program. You can only opt out of it. There is no provision to opt in, only a provision to opt out. Unless you take the initiative, you are involved in this program. That is a peculiar feature among Canadian government programs.

Many programs are said to be voluntary and give the right to individuals who may be affected to decide on whether they want to be in the program. In this case the situation is reversed and the participants must make the decision as to whether they want to be out of the program. In addition, that provision to opt out exists only for farmers, as I read the bill, who happen to be engaged in grain farming at the time the act is proclaimed. If you come in later, you have to live with the program. You do not have an option. If you happen to become engaged in grain farming after this legislation is passed, you do not have an option.

One again, under this partly compulsory, partly voluntary measure, if you opt out and then in again, you suffer a penalty. So, it is voluntary in that sense, that is to say, voluntary at a price; and while the price may not amount to a great deal in dollar terms, certainly it detracts from the claim that it is a purely voluntary program. It is not voluntary if you must pay a penalty for exercising your will.

I want to deal for a moment with the fact that people who become involved in grain farming after this bill comes into effect are to have no option. They are to be locked into the program. You know, it is a fact of life that there are certain certainties you must expect when you become involved in farming. You can expect to face drought, rain, and other problems including, I suppose, a special species of pestilence which can be called "Otto's army". If this bill is proclaimed and put into effect, once you get into grain farming you will be subject to the provisions involving the inspections, bureacracy, and the Liberal party in prairie Canada on wheels, that will flow out of this legislation. You will not have a choice.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Otto's army worms.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) suggests "Otto's army worms". That is probably a more descriptive phrase. If you get into agriculture after the proclamation of this bill, three things are certain: death, taxes—and Otto Lang. That is a matter to give very serious cause for concern to anyone either considering or engaged in the occupation of grain farming which would make them subject to the bill, once proclaimed.

The third major weakness in the original version of this bill is a weakness which remains. It has to do with the fact that the bill is applicable only across a broad region. Others who have spoken have made the point that in cases where there might be continual poor crops, or in cases such as the Peace River area which might suffer frequently from problems of either drought or too much rain and a loss of crops, this legislation we are now establishing does not come into effect. It comes into effect only if the whole region is affected.

The minister of—I keep forgetting what to call him. It is so improbable that a Minister of Justice should be responsible for this bill. He is the Minister of Justice responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, the grain stabilization bill, and everything else he can get his hands on. In a press release last December he stated that he recognizes there is a weakness in the fact that the bill applies only across the board and does not allow any more specific application. He said he would undertake a study on regionalization to see if the bill could be made effective in particular locales that suffer particular problems. However, we have seen no evidence of that study.

The bill is back with the same fault that marked its predecessor. Perhaps we can get the Minister of Agriculture involved in this legislation, at least to the point of carrying a question to his colleague who runs everything. He might ask his colleague what happened to the study into the possibility of regionalization of this program. That is certainly a matter we will want to go into at length during the committee stage.

This is a very serious matter in many parts of the country, including part of my constituency which is liable, to an unusual degree, to crop problems and crop failure. This bill will not be of much help to farmers there if they suffer difficulties which are not shared across the whole of the region. It is a better bill than its predecessor. It has to be because the predecessor inspired such outrage in the agricultural community that it had to be pulled back quickly. However, it still has some faults in that there is only partial indexing, not the complete or fair kind of indexing that allows taking into account all the costs of production faced by grain farmers. There are still several compulsory aspects to membership in the program. There is still the refusal to let it apply to areas which have special problems as well as the requirement that it applies across the board.

I want to deal for a moment with the costs that are involved here and with the size of the staff for the operation that we are establishing. It has been made clear that the contributions of grain farmers will not go into the administrative fund. In other words, Treasury Board is going to meet the administration costs. That, in effect, gives a free hand, a carte blanche to the Minister of Justice who is responsible for this bill.

We know from a very unhappy experience how agencies established for apparently limited purposes can grow and grow. We have seen it with the CBC, which has sent more people than most governments to cover the conference of Commonwealth Prime Ministers in the Caribbean. We have seen it with Information Canada, which was established for a particular function which it promptly abandoned. It has continued to grow. We have seen it with several agencies.

There is the very real danger that by providing a kind of carte blanche funding from the Treasury Board, not from the program, and without adequate means of scrutiny or any clear indication by the minister as to the dimensions of the staff and cost, this could run into a very expensive venture. That is particularly true when you bear in mind the capacity to build the administrative machinery of this bill into a 1974 version of the Jimmy Gardiner machine. We on this side of the House would be less than frank if we did not express a very real concern that part of the purpose of the Minister of Justice responsible for winning seats in Saskatchewan is to turn the administrative machinery of this bill into a political arm of the Liberal party.

Mr. Nowlan: Like the Senate.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): My colleague aptly says, "Like the Senate". This will be an agency allowing a much broader membership than the Senate. If you look at the duties that have to be carried out under this bill, there is a very substantial requirement for staff and money.

The administrators of this provision will have to look into cases of individual farmers, and process and deal with them. That takes staff. They will have to send endorsements to individual farmers. That takes staff. They will have to work out their refunds that will have to be paid when they make mistakes, as inevitably they will. That takes staff, both to make the mistakes and prepare the refunds.

There is a requirement that they have to penalize people who are called conditional participants. It is a wonder of the English language how you can have a conditional participant in a voluntary plan. That is what we have here. They will have to police that provision to make sure that those who have the audacity to opt out of the program in the first instance are penalized. That will take staff and money. In order to make this work in individual cases, we will require large staffs, computers, Einsteins and mathematicians housed somewhere in western Canada. They will be required simply to make calculations of the way this works. Reviewing the records of individual farmers will take staff and cost money.

There is a reference in one of the explanatory notes to this bill about a public relations function that will be undertaken by the administrators of this program. From what we know about the way the government handles its public relations, that will certainly cost a lot of money. We have here, among other things, an undertaking to have the Treasury Board of Canada fund an administration program that could be very large.

When we get to the standing committee we will want answers about the kinds of activities that are going to be carried out in administering this program, and what guarantees there will be on limits on the growth and staff and cost of this program.

I come from a province where there are not many Liberals. That is one of the advantages of Alberta. My concern is that under this provision the Minister of Justice, responsible for extending comfort to Liberals in western Canada, could hire every Liberal in Alberta as an administrator of this program. That is a matter about which we have to be very careful and concerned.

There are a number of other matters with which one could deal when discussing this legislation. It is particularly ironic that we should be considering a bill having to do with income derived from grain at a time when the real problem is not stabilizing grain incomes but the movement of the grain. My hon. friend from Vegreville dealt with this aspect, and drew attention to the failure of the ministers concerned with agriculture to confront directly this serious situation, one which causes more concern than any other to western Canadians engaged in agriculture. They are worried most of all about the increasing difficulty of moving their crops to export markets. This is where the priority should lie. Having delayed this so-called urgent measure for five months between first and second readings, surely the government could have taken some action in the interim to improve the grain transportation picture.

There are specific questions raised by this bill, and they need to be answered. One of them is of interest to a good many of my constituents who are just entering the agricultural industry. What is meant by an actual producer? Who will be eligible? Is a hobby farmer, for example, eligible to become involved in the grain stabilization program? What about the homestead farmers, perhaps someone in the Little Smokey region of Alberta who works in the oilfields to build up a farm, but who is only spending part of his time in agriculture? Is such a person an actual producer, eligible to take part in the program?

Why does the calculation of costs not take into account the interest farmers have to pay on debt? Why does it not take into account the depreciation of capital? Another question: whatever happened to this mythical study of regionalization to which the Minister of Justice alluded in his brief statement in December? Is it simply to remain a study? Has such a study in fact been conducted? And, if so, will the minister tell us what it contains? Is there a chance that the legislation we are dealing with will be changed because of the impact of that study?

Why is the only option available to farmers under this program an option to go out? Why should the system not be reversed so that the option would be to come in? That would be a genuinely voluntary approach, whereas what we find in the bill is a highly qualified example of the exercise of voluntary will.

I have another important question while the Minister of Agriculture is here. What will be the tie-in, administratively or in terms of policy, with the Department of Agriculture? Will the system being set up here continue as an empire of its own under the Minister of Justice, or will machinery be established to ensure that activities carried out under the grain stabilization program are consistent with other policies? What is to be the role of the Minister of Agriculture in this piece of agricultural legislation which has been removed from his jurisdiction because of the insatiable ambition of a Minister of Justice who wants to be responsible for whatever he can lay his hands on?

What will be the cost of administration, money which will have to be found by the Treasury Board? I am interested in the size of the staff which will be required. Will the Minister of Justice be able to go out and hire every Liberal in Alberta, or will more than 11 people be needed to run this scheme?

An hon. Member: The filibuster is getting entertaining, anyway.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): There are a great many other questions which some of my hon. friends will be raising as the debate proceeds. We are pleased the bill is back in the House in a form which has been considerably improved. Apparently the government has learned a lesson; it is a better bill than the one it started with. Though it gives rise to a number of problems and there are a great many questions to be asked about it, this legislation is of importance to the part of the country from which I come. It is essential that before we get to third reading, before we conclude the committee stage, an opportunity be provided for grain farmers to contribute directly to the consideration of this measure and that the government, which has the power of life and death over committees, committees which are not merely its creatures but its tools, should give the agriculture committee authority to travel through Western Canada and hold open hearings.

An hon. Member: Another jaunt.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): It is particularly important that this process be carried out at a time when those directly concerned by the legislation are able to participate. It would be foolish to send the committee out to hold hearings while farmers are too busy earning a living to appear before it to make representations. Before this bill becomes law it is essential to seek the advice of Canadians who make their living growing grain.

Mr. Whelan: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I want to reassure the hon. member and the House that there are still Canadians who have confidence in the Minister of Agriculture. This letter comes from Picture Butte, Alberta. I should like to read just one sentence:

I should like to thank you again for the help you have given to the industry. It is more than any previous Minister of Agriculture has achieved.

Need I say more, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. McKinnon: Would the minister table that letter so that the rest of us might benefit from reading it?

Mr. Whelan: Following the usual procedure, I can only table it with the consent of the writer.

An hon. Member: Your brother will agree.

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased and proud to be able to say a few words this evening in the debate on Bill C-41. It is a bill of great significance, and I believe this debate will prove to be an historic one not only for this House but for the part of Canada which most of the speakers who have participated represent, that is, Western Canada.

I am interested in the peculiar debate which has been taking place as to the importance of this legislation. The hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark), I am glad to note, has finally concluded that it is a very important piece of legislation for Western Canada. Earlier this afternoon I listened to the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). He began by pointing out some of the difficult situations existing in the grain industry. The years 1969 and 1970 were a time of crisis in the industry, and it was that very crisis that prompted the original proposal. The hon. member spoke of Bill C-244 and referred to the strenuous debates we had on that bill. There seemed to be approval in principle but a great deal of discussion about the precise details of the original stabilization proposal.

It seemed to me that the hon. member was saying that the whole idea was an important one, but he questioned whether or not it was now appropriate to deal with it by this legislation. He said we should deal with a good many other things, and he referred to transportation and labour problems. I agree that they are serious and deserve the attention of the House, but I suspect, Madam Speaker, that western farmers will be very interested in this debate and anxious to see it proceed.

Continuing in the same vein, I listened with interest to the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta). He said it was crucial to travel with the agriculture committee to provide farmers and organizations with information about the bill and to receive their representations. I should like to discuss this aspect a bit further. It seems to me that in making the proposal the hon. member is saying that the whole idea is a very important one and that the farmers should be given an opportunity to discuss it. On the other hand, the hon. member questioned whether this legislation is really important, something that we should write home about", so to speak.

Thus I am a little confused whether or not hon. members opposite think the legislation is important or not. I am happy for the odd unequivocal statement of the kind we heard from the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn), and the hon. member for Rocky Mountain, who said specifically that it was very important and that they were glad to see this kind of provision once again before the House of Commons.

This bill, or I suppose more particularly its predecessor, has a rather special association with the Assiniboia constituency. A grain stabilization plan for western farm incomes and for the general economy of the west was first proposed in specific terms by the present wheat board minister in October of 1970 in a document entitled "Proposals for a Production and Grain Receipts Policy for the Western Grains Industry" dated October 29, 1970. At that time the minister discussed a whole variety of problems in the grains industry and proposed solutions to those problems, ways to attack them.

One of the proposals that was made was the western grain stabilization idea. That concept developed not easily but was the product of a lot of work in many quarters, both inside the House and in the Government of Canada, as well as among farmers and farm organizations. All of this work was directed toward attacking that age old problem in western agriculture, which I am sure is also common to members in this House who represent constituencies outside of western Canada that have a rural background. I refer to the problem of the recurrent, jolting bust years that come time and time again. Farmers are never able to enjoy the good years, the good years when they are at their peak, for fear of how low the next valley will be.

This is the problem that the grain stabilization concept was directed to four or five years ago when it was first suggested, and it is the same problem that we are trying to attack today. Many farmers and farm organizations contributed to the development of this concept at the beginning.

In connection with that landmark proposal that originally came before the House five years ago, it would be particularly appropriate this evening to acknowledge the concern, hard work and tireless effort of a previous government member for Assiniboia in this House. I refer, of course, to a most distinguished Canadian and member of parliament, the late A. B. Douglas of Weyburn, who represented Assiniboia from 1968 until 1971. His dedication to solving this problem is one reason why I say this bill has a very distinct connection with the Assiniboia constituency.

Another reason I say Assiniboia has a peculiar interest in these proposals was alluded to earlier today by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom). After Mr. Douglas's untimely death in 1971, a by-election was called and fought in Assiniboia. The campaign was based largely upon the 1970-71 stabilization proposals; they played a major role in the discussions at that time. I was a little saddened at the attitude that I detected was taken by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville, indeed by others in the House today, who seemed to express a great deal of glee, patting themselves on the back, that the 1971 proposals were not successful.

It seems to me that that is not a particularly good reason for any member of the House to rejoice, and I wonder whether their priorities are not a little twisted. If they are happy with that sort of result, then I wonder whether they are showing genuine concern for grain producers or rather are merely exhibiting political expediency. I think the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville gave himself away when he spent a great deal of time on the question of the Assiniboia by-election and the provincial election in Saskatchewan, both of which were fought that year. In both campaigns members opposite went out of their way to explain, or to mis-explain, if you like, what the stabilization idea was all about.

As you might suspect, Madam Speaker, I was not particularly elated at the result of the election in Assiniboia in 1971, but as I pointed out to the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville this afternoon, since that time we have corrected that particular problem. I was not particularly elated either when in 1971 the stabilization proposal was ultimately withdrawn. I do not say it was a perfect plan. It was not a perfect plan and no one at that time pretended it was. But it was a good beginning, a place to start.

Never before had any government in this country pioneered this particular field. They paid a lot of lip service to it and we heard much rhetoric about how nice it would be to solve the problem, but no one got around to putting a specific proposal before parliament or before farmers which they could examine in an effort to try to solve the problem.

It is interesting to note that we did not see this kind of magic solution to the stabilization issue even 15 years ago when hon. members opposite sat in this House with the biggest majority any government in this country has ever had.

Bill C-244 in 1971 ploughed a lot of new ground. Indeed it is no exaggeration to say that it laid the foundation for the new major proposals we have before us this evening in Bill C-41.

I was interested in the figures that the minister reviewed in his remarks to the House on Monday evening when he spoke on the consideration of this bill on second reading. Those figures demonstrate quite clearly the kind of value in pure dollars and cents that Bill C-41 will have for western Canadian grain producers. He demonstrated how much cash would have flowed to the pockets of western grain producers over the last ten years had this proposal been in effect during those years. It seems to me that this kind of result in terms of dollars and cents is what we should concern ourselves about so as to ensure that the farmers of this country will not in the future have to worry about these jolting periods when their incomes fall to rock bottom as a result of problems over which they have no control at all.

In 1971 we listened to different criticisms, different depending upon where that criticism came from. We heard much criticism from members of both parties opposite, and we received some very legitimate suggestions for improving the bill from farm organizations in western Canada. But let me compare the difference in emphasis here, Madam Speaker. Why were the parties opposite criticizing? The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville spelt that out very clearly: they were criticizing for the purpose of an election in Saskatchewan and by-election in Assiniboia riding.

On the other hand, the farm groups had an entirely different emphasis. They were talking about putting in place a plan that they believed was in their best interests, one that would operate in the long term in their best interests. I do not think they wanted to see the stabilization proposal postponed for one year, two years, or five years; they wanted a plan in 1971 that they could regard as being in their best interests. They put forward proposals for changes and suggestions for improvement and that, indeed, has been the basis for the kind of work that has gone on since 1971 within the grains administration of the Government of Canada; putting this kind of suggestion for improvement in place.

These are constructive suggestions that have come forward from farm groups and farmers in this country, and particularly western Canada, and not the kind of negative, nit-picking, partisan criticism we heard from members opposite in 1971, and again today. That kind of criticism has not contributed one iota to improving the situation in western Canada.

That story dating back to 1971 is an interesting one. It is one that I suppose has some happy times and some sad times, but it is history, and some of it may be characterized at this stage as ancient history.

But in the interests of farmers of western Canada in 1971, when he withdrew the grain stabilization bill at that time, the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board made one very firm commitment. He said he would return with it in an improved form to take account of the suggestions from farmers and farm organizations, and so tonight we come to consider Bill C-41 in principle and, later on, I hope very quickly, in committee in some detail.

I think the minister's explanation of the principle of the bill is very well set forward in his remarks of last Monday. There is no real point in going through the bill clause by clause at this stage because that is the function of the committee. There are some very interesting and important but minor points, if you like, that should make this program in its entirety very attractive to western Canadian grain producers.

First of all there is a small but important aspect, and that is that the levies that will be paid by farmers will be tax deductible as a farm expense. This is written into the legislation. Again I say this is a small item, but one of those things that can mean a lot in terms of making the program function smoothly.

Members today have discussed the question of "voluntariness" and the series of combinations and permutations of that. I will discuss that in a moment in more detail. In moving toward this voluntary concept or feature of the stabilization plan, this is not an easy thing to do it you want to make the plan totally effective, but it is the kind of thing I think western Canadian farmers will appreciate.

In addition we have as part of the stabilization plan the creation of a five-member advisory committee composed of farmers or farm representatives who will advise on the administration of the plan.

We have heard some reference tonight about the administrative costs of the plan. I know the minister will want to say more about that, probably in his concluding remarks or before the committee, but it is clear that the cost of administering this plan will not be borne by the farmers of western Canada out of their stabilization fund, but rather by the federal treasury.

Another interesting thing, and I am sure this will be of interest to the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar, is that payments to the producers will be exempt from legal process.

Again, the solvency of the stabilization fund, another small but interesting point, is guaranteed by the federal treasury. In addition, whenever the fund is in a surplus position the federal government will be paying interest to the fund. This is a series of small features, if you like, but features I think farmers will be interested in knowing about as they become more familiar with the stabilisation plan; features which should make this bill in some measure at least attractive to them.

I have listened very carefully to most of the debate we have had in the past two or three days on Bill C-41, and it seems to me there have been three main criticisms coming from people across the way. The first one, and the one that seems to have occupied the most time during the comments we have been hearing, is that the proposal is complicated. Well, Madam Speaker, so is the problem. We have had a longstanding and recurrent pattern of grain incomes in the west being up one year and down the next. As I said earlier, you cannot be happy about the good times for fear of how bad the bad times will be. You only have to look at the pattern of grain incomes for the past quarter of a century, since the second world war, to see that gyrating line going up and down and up and down. As the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) pointed out, this issue of how to deal with that has been on the minds of farmers and western Canadians generally for years. That is so because when farm incomes go up and down so does the entire economy of that particular part of Canada.

This problem has been on the minds of western Canadians not just for the past five years or 15 years or 20 years. The problem goes back many decades. It is one that I suppose in a way has compounded itself over time. So we have a serious problem with this fluctuating pattern of incomes in western Canada, and it is difficult to attack it effectively. We have had piecemeal proposals in the past that, on the periphery, have attempted to do something, but there have been no quick, simple or easy solutions.

It is important, as hon. members opposite and members on this side of the House have suggested publicly and privately, to provide information on the complexities of the program to farmers in order to get their reaction, and explain the details to make sure that everyone who can be affected has an adequate understanding of what the proposal is all about. However, simply to say it is complicated and complex, or that you have not had time to read the lengthy bill, is not a valid criticism.

I suppose we could say that if the answer had been quick, simple and easy, even that administration of 15 years ago, which sat in this House with the biggest majority of all in history, might have been lucky enough to stumble onto the solution, but it did not because the problem was a little bit beyond it.

The other criticisms that have been mentioned tonight, which I think are more logical and more interesting, and ones I want to give rather considerable attention to as we go through the committee work, involve the matter of dealing with the voluntary nature of the plan and its greater regionalization.

The voluntary aspect seems to have two sides, and they were alluded to at least indirectly by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar. First of all there is the matter of the producer who comes into the program after it is in place, whether two years or five years from now, or two weeks after the bill is proclaimed. What is his position? As the bill stands at the moment it would indicate that he is included in the calculations.

There seems to be some logic in looking at the suggestions that have come forward from farm organizations, and others, that under the proposal the new farmer starting out after the plan has been put into place should have some option to decide to opt out of the program. I would very much want to look at that particular suggestion in more detail when this will no doubt be put to us by farm groups appearing before the standing committee, and when it is discussed by members around that table. There seems to be some substantial argument for extending the voluntary aspect of the plan to include that particular person.

There is another aspect to which the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar referred, and which was passed over as well by the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark). This aspect relates to the fellow who is in the plan one year, out the next, then wants back in, then wants out, and then wants back in again. He is the "inner and outer", the fellow who, I suppose, would want to take advantage of the stabilization plan when it suits his income position, but really does not want to contribute to it or have any investment in its future when things are going well, because at that particular moment in time he does not feel the necessity for a stabilization program.

I will want to look at that latter proposition very carefully before moving toward any kind of concession on that point. I think it is important to allow the producer to change his mind if he has decided to opt out, and to make application to come under the plan, but whether we should continue indefinitely so that the producer can decide to be in one year and out the next seems to me to be something that we would want to question very seriously before adopting.

As I say in respect of the voluntary aspect, I am rather sympathetic toward the suggestion about the new producer, but in respect of the proposition that people should be able to fly back and forth at will, if you like, without any regard to the continuity of the plan, I am not persuaded that that would be a particularly good idea.

● (2120)

The second aspect, which I said is more substantial than the rather weak criticism that this bill is complicated, seems to have more merit. That is the question of regionalization. It is important to make this plan the best we can put together. It is important to make it sensitive, if we can, to provincial, or perhaps even smaller regional variations. It is important to recognize the very practical differences between one region on the prairies and another and between one part of a province and another.

Earlier this evening I saw the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Cadieu) in the House. His part of Saskatchewan varies rather drastically from mine. There are real substantial and practical differences. As far as statistically possible, it would be useful to move toward a greater regionalization in the concept of the stabilization program.

I am happy that in his remarks back in December when he introduced the bill for first reading, and in his comments earlier this week, the minister clearly indicated that, if at all possible, work would be proceeding toward this worthwhile end, and hopefully in the future we will see that, based upon greater sensitivity to regional differences.

There is an important question we should be asking, and that deals with how far we should go with this concept. I want to be very careful before recommending a reduction of a grain stabilization plan to the absolute individual non-averaged basis. It seems to me that there is a danger there, and that we should be careful before we proceed to it. The danger is simply that a plan of that nature would serve to reduce the incentive for good farming practices and dampen a producer's personal initiative.

I do not believe farmers generally would want to see a program which would render it rather irrelevant as to whether they followed good production practices and properly exercised their personal judgments regarding how their own farming operations should be run. That is a problem, if we are talking about what really amounts to an individual kind of calculation. This is a consideration which I think we should bear in mind when we consider the general question of making the plan more sensitive to regions, or perhaps going beyond that.

Over the last four months or so since the grain stabilization plan was introduced in this House last December, I have been spending a good deal of time around my part of Saskatchewan talking to farmers at dozens of meetings, public and private, and invariably the question of the stabilization plan for grain came up. I have found, in my discussions with producers, a great deal of curiosity about the plan, and an anticipation to hear what the full scope is and to hear the full detail. They have many questions, but above all in my discussions I found a very broad and general measure of support for the stabilization plan introduced by the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board.

We all have to be involved in the informational process, because before producers, either in a political sense or in the economic sense, can make a judgment about this bill, they will want to understand clearly and fully the total implications. There is a responsibility on every one of us in this House to engage in that information process, and to assist farmers in western Canada to understand what the stabilization bill stands for, what it will attempt to do, and how it will effect individual producers.

I am looking forward to serious consideration for this bill and parliamentary approval at a very early date, at least in time for application of the stabilization plan to the 1975 year. I think western farmers are looking forward to the same thing.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Madam Speaker, I have been interested in listening to this debate, but I have not enjoyed any speech more than the one just made by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale). When the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) does not look back, he is not really sure whether the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) is making the speech or whether he made it the other day. I noticed he was interested in both speeches and in their similarity.

The hon. member for Assiniboia made a statement, which I thought was very amusing, about how wonderful the stabilization plan was when it was first introduced in 1970, and about how much farmers would have benefited from it. He is repeating an argument the Minister of Justice made the other night by saying that if the plan had been in effect back in the late 1960's, farmers would have benefited much from it. It is probably safe to say that by killing the stabilization bill as it was proposed in 1970-71, we probably saved western Canadian farmers something in excess of $500 million.

The government was in a position to do a number of things which were involved in the original stabilization plan, which it did. It dropped the storage grain reserves act after it retained very little storage for a two year period. That provided western farmers with the ability to store grain without having to pay exorbitant costs for a long period of time. I think it would run into hundreds of millions of dollars over a period of time. Of course that is no longer available to western Canadian farmers.

In another piece of legislation now before parliament we are again dropping the prairie farm assistance bill, which has within it $7 million or $8 million. If we had dropped that in the 1970-71 year, I presume the farmer would have benefited from that fund in those intervening four years at least $10 million a year and probably more, which means another $40 million or $50 million.

That indicates to me one of the weaknesses of this stabilization program because that assistance which was provided to western Canada for many years, and which was used by farmers, is no longer available to them. Substituted for that is a new proposition which will stabilize the shortfall in income, if that shortfall takes place, over the whole area. This is being done in a very complicated way, despite the remarks of the hon. member for Assiniboia. I would like him to explain to the Minister of Agriculture—who I hope will gain control of this eventually—the three formulas. I do not think it is complicated, but I think hon. members will agree that it is confusing.

The Canadian Federation of Agriculture explained it to the members of the agriculture committee in a letter recently, when it wrote this:

> The legislation therefore contains a formula for calculating the ratio which first of all adjusts for inventory changes, but also reduces the marketings and inventory changes to numbers of acres based on the average five year yields.

Of course the minister is familiar with that because he used that part of it in some other legislation. This letter goes on to say that:

> These are compared to the numbers of acres of grain seeded, to give the marketing to production ratio. Table I gives a simplified example, using only two grains, of how this ratio is arrived at. Table II, which follows, shows how the stabilization payments are calculated.

I will read from Table 1. There are, of course, six basic grains in the index that have to be administered. The table is as follows:

● (2130)

Table 1—Marketing to Production Ratio (example—not actual figures and as if only two grains are involved—wheat and barley)

	Wheat	Barley
Production	675 million bushels	532 million bushels
Marketings	500 million bushels	250 million bushels
Inventory change	+ 25 million bushels	+ 25 million bushels
5-year av. yield	25 bushels/acre	40 bushels/acre
actual yield in yr.	27 bushels/acre	38 bushels/acre
acreage seeded	25 million acres	14 million acres

That is not difficult, Madam Speaker. Those are just the actual figures. But the table continues:

(1) marketings ÷ 5-yr. av. yield: $\frac{500}{25}$ = 20 million acres; $\frac{250}{40}$ = 6.25 million acres

(2) inventory change ÷ 5-yr. av. yield: $\frac{25}{25}$ = 1 million acres; $\frac{25}{40}$ = .625 million acres

(3) Adjustment

$$\frac{\text{seeded acreage} \times (\text{5-yr. av. yield} - \text{actual yield})}{\text{5-year average yield}}$$

$$\frac{25 \times (25-27)}{25} - 2 \text{ mill. ac.} \quad \frac{14 \times (40-38)}{40} = .7 \text{ mill. ac.}$$

Marketing/Production Ratio

$$\frac{1 + 2 + 3 \text{ for each grain}}{\text{total of seeded acres}} =$$

$$\frac{20 + 1 - 2 + 6.25 + 6.25 + .7}{25 + 14} = \frac{.26.575}{39} = .6814$$

That is very simple, Madam Speaker. That is only the marketing production ratio, and the minister understands that.

It gets more complicated in Table II, however, which follows:

Table II—Calculations of Aggregate Stabilization Payment—Simplified Example—not actual figures

	Example
A. Marketing to Production Ratio (see Table 1)	$ .6814 (ratio)
(1) area gross expense	$ 1.5 billion
(2) area net expenses ($(1) × A) 1.5 × .6814	$ 1.0221 billion
(3) aggregate gross grain sale proceeds	$ 2.0 billion
(4) aggregate net grain sale proceeds [(3)−(2)] ($2.0−1.0221)	$ 0.9779 billion
(5) aggregate gross eligible grain sale proceeds	$ 1.8 billion
B. Ratio of $\frac{5}{3}$ $\frac{1.8}{2.0}$	.9 (ratio)
(6) aggregate gross participating eligible grain sale proceeds	$ 1.7 billion
C. Ratio of $\frac{6}{5}$ $\frac{1.7}{1.8}$	9.44 (ratio)
(7) net eligible grain sale proceeds [(4) × B] $0.9779 × .9	$ 0.88011 billion

That is "not complicated," Madam Speaker. We heard the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) quoting the Minister of Justice who says it is not really complicated. I can go on.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Are these figures seasonally adjusted?

Mr. Peters: Not yet.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. Will the hon. member for Timiskaming allow a question?

Mr. Peters: Yes.

Mr. Goodale: The question is simple, Madam Speaker. In my remarks a few moments ago I did not say the program was not complicated, I said it was in fact complex. The question is whether that is sufficient reason in itself for not going ahead with the plan to assist the incomes of western grain producers. Is it complex enough to say "scrap the whole thing"?

Mr. Peters: Madam Speaker, I was not trying to indicate that the complexity would necessarily be against the plan, but the hon. member for Assiniboia indicated that this was a simple solution for western Canada, and I must say I am pleased he can understand it.

Mr. Goodale: I said it was a good solution; I did not say it was simple. If it was simple even you could understand it.

Mr. Peters: The last plan was simple but it was not operative, and it was not acceptable. This one is so complicated that I do not know whether it is acceptable or not. I have read it, studied it, looked at all the figures, and it is very complicated. It is going to be very difficult to explain to the average farmer in western Canada how this works. He wants a simplified program. You will notice that the payment is to be made over the whole grain area of western Canada, including western Ontario and British Columbia. Maybe we should keep in mind what the farmer actually wants to accomplish.

The federation indicated that they were in favour of income stabilization, and I think they shocked me and a number of other members of parliament when they said so at their appearance before the agricultural committee on Bill C-50. They said that some provinces were going into the stabilization field and that they were particularly pleased with the British Columbia stabilization plan. One of the reasons they were so interested was that they were being asked to help develop and administer it. One of their objectives was a guaranteed price based on the cost of production during times of unfavourable market conditions. This bill does not offer that but it will create such complexity as farmers have never known.

Farmers in western Canada are familiar with regimentation. For years they have had permits, quotas, restrictions on grain delivered to the elevators, the time of delivery; initial and final payments have been set for them; there have been restrictions on how they can operate on their own land, or as a tenant on rented land.

Under this legislation a farmer's social insurance number will be fed into a computer and the calculation will be automatic. Farmers will be able to contribute a maximum of $500 on the basis of sales of $25,000. Do farmers wish to be regimented in this way? The hon. member for Assiniboia and the hon. member from Saskatoon should remember that if this program had been in effect, say, back, in 1971, there would have been no payouts in recent years. Certainly most areas would not have benefited from it. I say that because grain crops in western Canada seldom vary much.

There have been disasters of various kinds in western Canada, but most of those have stemmed, not from an inability to produce grain, but from ability to meet other conditions. There have been difficulties with delivery, with price, with markets and sometimes with the weather. But this bill does nothing about such things. What will happen if any one area suffers damage, say, from cutworm, or from other factors which reduce the grain crop? Farmers from one area may not be able to market any grain. Yet, because the Wheat Board may market large quantities of grain produced elsewhere, total revenues may be higher than normal and, because the program is based on the national average, the farmers in the afflicted area may not obtain compensation. Remember, farm organizations want stability of farm incomes so that farmers can stay in business.

This measure is complicated, and reminds me of the unemployment insurance structure. Farmers will be governed by a computer in much the same way as workers are governed by the unemployment insurance program computer. The machinery is inhuman and many farmers who ought to receive benefits will not.

Some hon. members have suggested that this program ought to apply on a regional basis, so that if one region suffers a disaster the farmers there can be compensated. Really, the government is not contemplating a program of income stabilization; it is concerned about stabilizing an industry.

I submit, also, that we should give serious consideration to including off-board grain in calculations. After all, many farmers have decided in the past to withhold grain from the Wheat Board and use it to produce livestock. Sometimes this has increased net farm returns. Generally, the availability of grain has been reflected in market prices and has affected other segments of agriculture. When grain prices are low one sees more red meat produced.

I suggest that grain consumed on vertically integrated feed lots may not have been included. On the other hand, if we include off-board grains under the stabilization bill, we shall subsidize the commodities exchange in Winnipeg as well as guarantee the floor to the farmer we intend to assist. Frankly, this problem admits of no easy solution; but then, there are no easy solutions in agriculture.

Although I am not offended by the minister's giving attention to the stabilization of farm income, I think the program ought to be the responsibility of the Minister of Agriculture. I do not think you can divorce the problem of grain from that of beef, livestock, milk, or of any other agricultural commodity. Each of these areas is deserving of attention.

Furthermore, it is no longer necessary to drum up political support for the program by using the sort of tactics used by Jimmy Gardiner. Anyone who is honest will concede that it is no longer necessary to sell political policies as he sold them. Today there is television. Today it is not necessary for politicians to knock on doors in western Canada and say, "Here is a little handout; in return, I want you to vote for Jimmy." This may have happened in years gone by, but I do not think it is necessary today.

In addition to looking at the stabilization of incomes, the minister should also consider the storage of western grain. I submit that we should be storing grain. I remember a story in the Old Testament. As I remember it, Pharaoh sent for Joseph and told him to interpret a strange dream; Pharaoh had seen seven fat cows, followed by seven lean cows, and wondered what the dream meant. Joseph interpreted the dream, saying it signified seven fat years, to be followed by seven lean years. I submit that we should be wise to consider that story. It is quite possible that lean years are ahead. We have spent much money developing markets for wheat; in the last 40 or 50 years we have built up our markets. We need to guarantee our supplies of grain. Crops have failed in western Canada once or twice.

I understand that snowfall this past winter has been below average in many parts of western Canada. Perhaps we are at the beginning of a cycle of smaller crops. The Canadian government would be wise to look ahead. We should guarantee our supplies. After all, the Minister of Agriculture did pledge the countries attending the World Food Conference that we would provide a certain quantity of grain. It is very nice when he can say that. It is nice when the farmer has that grain on his farm or in his own elevator. However, if the cost of keeping the grain in the elevator becomes too much, and it is no longer to his advantage to have that grain on his farm, then we will not be able to meet that kind of commitment.

• (2150)

I got a real charge out of the callousness of the Minister of Agriculture when he said, "Produce all the wheat you can produce, seed all the acres that can be seeded." How does he know how much should be seeded? We really do not know. This is what the farmers are now asking. To be fair to the minister, we are only talking about four or five million acres, because we run very close to the maximum of our seeded acres in western Canada. It would not be good business practice for the farmer to take the stubble and use that for a double crop. If he does not pay some attention to conservation he will not have any good land left. The farmer learned that lesson the hard way.

When the program was introduced the Minister of Justice said the government would pay farmers to take their land out of production. There was absolutely no justification for that program. That stupid piece of advice probably cost the farmer hundreds of millions of dollars.

Wheat has become very important to this country. Many raw materials have also become important in the past five or six years. However, wheat is a renewable resource, one which we have become excellent at producing. We have good wheat and we have good markets. We should be providing a storage facility that will guarantee those markets against any kind of situation that may develop. It need not be a disaster in this country but one that may occur in any part of the world. We should be able to guarantee two full years of supply of wheat at any given time rather than the haphazard system we now have, where we are not sure what kind of wheat is in storage because much of it is stored by the individual farmer.

The farmer wants stability. It is foolish for the farmer to divide his production between grain and some other area of agriculture. If stabilization of income is good for one farmer, it should be good for all farmers. The only way that can legitimately be done is for the Minister of Agriculture to demand from the government that he get back control over that field. The whole industry must be stabilized. A farmer's income must be stabilized at a level that will cover all his costs of production.

Many years ago we recommended a guaranteed forward parity price for all agricultural commodities. This does not mean that you boost the prices of commodities. Before the farmer plants his crop, he is told how much the government is willing to take and at what price. If he can get more for it, that is fine. If not, he has that guarantee from the government. The amount will cover his costs of production; labour, interest on investment, some allowance for depreciation and wages. Surely nothing less than that is satisfactory today for our farmers whether they are in the maple syrup industry, grain, or any other field. We ask that the Department of Agriculture provide this stabilization for farming.

There is another factor that is not only important to Canadian consumers but to the world. We are in a position where we can greatly increase our production of almost any agricultural commodity. It is in everyone's interest that we provide two things, stability of income for those on the farm and an ability to go into farming for those who are not fortunate enough to inherit farms from their relatives.

We are negligent if we do not provide for another generation of agricultural producers. We have not given any real assistance. Any assistance that has been given has been by the provinces, and most has been detrimental. All across the country provincial governments encouraged young people to go into the cow-calf operation. The bottom fell out of the market and they were stuck with very large debts.

When we travel across the country to meet the farmers I hope the minister will be reasonably open-minded. The cabinet and members in the House are treating the hon. member for Assiniboia very poorly. I am sure that he has all the responsibility and does all the work connected with the wheat board. If we are not willing to have this back under agriculture, the hon. member should be appointed the secretary of state for the Wheat Board.

Mr. Reid: Minister of State.

Mr. Peters: That is an operation that demands some responsibility. I have always been shocked by the flippant way in which the Minister of Justice handles his responsibility for the Wheat Board. He does not know the difference between his responsibilities and those of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand). He gets them confused. He has now reached the stage where I expect him to be making a housing proposition for farm women in western Canada. However, he does not give any attention to those areas that warrant it.

When the western Canadian farmers provide the agriculture committee with the information they require, I hope the government will be more flexible than last time. Mr. Douglas of Assiniboia might have lived a lot longer if the government had not been as unfair to him as it was in the requests it made of him, and the unreasonableness of some of those requests.

I suggest that a lot can be learned by travelling across the country to meet farmers. Stabilization could probably be a workable tool for western farmers if the government would adopt the attitude of allowing input from the farmers in a just and reasonable way instead of being dogmatic, as the Minister of Justice has been with every bill he has introduced.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Ten o'clock.

Adjournment Debate

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain).

Mr. McCain: Madam Speaker, I presume you will want to call it ten o'clock at this time.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

INDIAN AFFAIRS—ALLEGED FAILURE OF MINISTER TO DEAL WITH GRIEVANCES OF TREATY SEVEN CHIEFS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): On April 15, as reported at page 4813 of Hansard, as one of a series of questions addressed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Buchanan), I asked why the minister had not responded to a single major suggestion or request put forward by the Treaty 7 Chiefs of Bands and whether he intended to continue to ignore their legitimate grievances and concerns, or go back and deal with them directly.

The minister responded:

Mr. Speaker, the statement is absolutely incorrect.

On November 28, 1974, treaty Indians from throughout Southern Alberta occupied the offices in Calgary of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. They did so to protest inadequate services provided to Indians living in the City of Calgary. It was done as an act of frustration after everything else had failed. The Government of Canada had pulled back on a major commitment to assist the urban Indians of Calgary to begin to develop programs which would help them meet the special and peculiar problems of native Canadians living in a modern metropolitan centre. A commitment had been made to help them, but the government turned its back on its own commitment.

Out of frustration, the occupation took place. This led to the Minister of Indian Affairs laying criminal charges against two of the native people involved. Unfortunately the question of the laying of criminal charges became the focus of attention arising out of the incident, and it has taken attention away from what are the major issues—first, the bad relations between the Indian people and the public servants who are in Alberta to try to serve them; second, growing evidence that economic development and social assistance programs for status Indian are not working and need improvement.

Finally, and most important, is the fact that urban Indians, treaty Indians living in cities, now find themselves in limbo without either the provincial or the federal government assuming responsibility for helping them meet the special difficulties of adjustment they must solve.

[The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin).]

After the charges were laid several respected chiefs of tribes in the Treaty 7 region submitted detailed proposals to the Minister of Indian Affairs asking for a change in various programs and in certain personnel. They sought a meeting with the minister. On April 7 the minister replied by meeting with the Treaty 7 chiefs, buying them a steak dinner in a hotel in Banff and, as the meeting ended, by handing them sealed envelopes which contained his response to their recent proposals. There are hardly words to describe the disappointment which was felt when the chiefs opened those envelopes and found that the minister had declined to respond to the suggestions they had made. I would like to quote from a respected spokesman for the Blackfoot Band, Chief Leo Pretty Young Man, who said:

We are dismayed by the lack of thought and interest displayed in the minister's return to us. We raised new concepts and ideas—We got back a letter which describes present programs and refers us to existing staff. It wasn't much of an answer.

Chief John Snow, respected chief of the Stoneys, called the minister's response, and I quote: "irrelevant, meaningless and unbelievable," adding, "Our problems began with the district office and now the minister has referred us back to them."

This indicates the severity of the problem which exists in Alberta with regard to Treaty 7 Indians both on the reserves and in the city centres. The minister's response to my question indicates that either he does not appreciate the seriousness of the problem or else he refuses to respond to it.

The question of treaty Indians living in urban areas is a major and menacing new social problem for Western Canada. It affects all the major cities of the prairies. The incident discussed here happened to occur in Calgary, but it could have occurred in Edmonton, Regina, Saskatoon, or Winnipeg. It is complicated by the fact that no government, federal, provincial, or local, has addressed itself to the problem. No government in Canada has a right to feel proud of its response to the new and menacing situation of treaty Indians trying to live in urban areas.

What makes the problem more dangerous is that a climate of hostility toward our native Indians is developing across the country. It has not become large scale yet, but it is developing. We have militancy among our native people in response. It is not enough, in face of this problem, simply to lay criminal charges and deny that the problem exists. There has been—I will admit this to the minister and his representative—some very good work done on economic development and other things, but most of this has been done in-house without the involvement of the people most directly affected.

What is most critical, and what I wish to draw to the attention of the House of Commons tonight, is the fact that no attention is being given to the serious and growing problems created by the movement of more and more status Indians into urban areas that they are not equipped to live in, and which are not equipped to respond to them. This is a social problem of already serious proportions, with a capacity to grow. It is a problem that is occurring not in any one province or region but all across Canada.

What is required is a national response, and I raise this matter tonight to ask the representatives of the Government of Canada when they are going to start realizing the very serious and menacing problem that is being posed by the growing movement of treaty Indians into urban centres that are not equipped to receive them.

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, we were treated tonight to the eloquence of my good friend from Rocky Mountain for the second time. I appreciate very much the points he made in his reference back to his question to the Minister of Indian Affairs some time earlier last month.

I can well appreciate the hon. member's concern. I think he also indicated that he appreciates the difficulties faced by the minister and the government, no matter who the minister is or which government it may be, in dealing with the very legitimate grievances of the Indian people in this twentieth century. We must remember that the problems of the Indians today were not foreseen, and could not have been foreseen, at the time the treaties were written a century or more ago.

The question of who is responsible for band Indians who leave the band and go to the cities has been with us for the last decade to a much greater extent than ever before. I am sure the situation in Alberta is not much different from that in Saskatchewan. Through the years I have had something to do on the provincial side with finding solutions to this situation. It is regrettable that to some extent a federal-provincial jurisdictional squabble has arisen from time to time. Here again some of the representatives of the Indian people have themselves generated some of the difficulties, and this does not help resolve the situation.

In a brief sentence or two, may I support the present minister. He has been in my riding and is doing his level best to deal in a calm and rational manner with these problems. I am advised by departmental staff that in the particular situation referred to by the hon. member the minister's responses to the Treaty 7 Indians bands were, to the best of my knowledge, fair, direct and very positive ones.

I might add that the preparation of the various responses to some 20 briefs was done within a period of a month or so by officials in the minister's department as well as by himself, and a great deal of serious consideration was given to these briefs at the band meetings.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.11 p.m.

SOCIAL SECURITY

ALLEGED DELAY OF FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE AND HIRING OF CONSULTANTS TO DETERMINE COST OF PROGRAMS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Would one be right in stating that the federal-provincial conference on welfare had to be postponed to prevent the collapse of his welfare policy review program?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanfield: Is it true that even after the six meetings the minister had with his counterparts on the review and all the preparations, a proposal was made to them to retain the professional services of a group of consultants whose task would be to assess the cost in each province of the new programs proposed by the federal government? The purpose of the study would also be to determine to what extent the government is better able to supervise those new programs and many other elementary matters.

Mr. Lalonde: No, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of National Health and Welfare make a statement on motions at his earliest convenience to inform the House precisely where matters stand? I ask this in view of reports coming out about the difficulty the minister is having and in view of the vast importance of this whole question to not only the taxpayers of Canada, but the people of Canada who may need to benefit from this program.

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: No, Mr. Speaker, but I shall be pleased to table the communiqué of the conference as soon as I can.

[English]

GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME—REASON FOR NEED FOR CONTINUING STUDY OF SUBJECT

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. After some six conferences over the past two years costing some $2 million to $3 million, why did this week's conference have to instruct officials to get back to work on some concrete proposals?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would not want to accept as accurate the figures mentioned by the hon. member. As for the second part of his question, we have agreed at each level of government that the work performed on the general formula for the guaranteed income supplement discussed at the last conferences did meet the objectives of all government levels; we agreed to proceed immediately within that general framework. We have thus agreed to examine specific proposals concerning the cost of the proposed program, especially the kind of recipients covered by such a plan and various other technical questions which we will be in a position to consider at least partly at the next conference to be held, I hope, in September.

GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME—AREAS IN WHICH NO AGREEMENT IN CABINET—POSSIBLE USE OF OUTSIDE CONSULTANT

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. It appears to me there is no agreement as to cost, no agreement concerning the administration of the program, no agreement with respect to income, no agreement with respect to an appropriate time period, no agreement with respect to taxation, and no agreement with respect to what constitutes a family unit. Has the minister been able to reach an agreed position with his own colleagues on these specific matters and, if so, have proposals been submitted to his provincial counterparts?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, officials from both government levels have been working on various hypotheses in the past two years, especially over the last six months; numerous alternatives have been considered by them. Efforts now remain to be made with a view to agreeing on a specific proposition or a very limited number of alternatives in respect of which the ministers could make much more final and specific decisions than those arrived at so far. That is the normal evolution of the reviewing process. This corresponds to the approach to the situation that we had proposed two years ago, and we are still within scope of the objectives we had set in the working paper submitted in the House two years ago. I have no reason to believe that we are not meeting all the objectives we had laid down when the paper was submitted in the House two years ago, and I sincerely hope that the programs whose implementation we had proposed within a certain time schedule mentioned in the working paper will be ready on time. I must also inform the hon. member that yesterday we reached complete agreement with all provinces concerning an extremely important aspect in the review of social security, and more specifically social services. This represents a major step forward in the social security review.

[English]

Mr. Alexander: It is certainly amazing that after two years work the minister has not been able to arrive at an agreement with his colleagues with respect to the matters to which I have just referred. Is the minister now telling us that after 600 studies—and if he believes it or not, these are the figures I throw out—and after spending $2 million, the orange paper is a bust and that the situation now requires an outside consultant to come and advise the minister what to do?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, the answer is negative, as negative as can be. Furthermore, I shall send to the hon. member a copy of the communiqué of our conference which will prove, once again, to what extent the hon. member is ill-informed.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—POSSIBLE INDICATION OF GOVERNMENT'S INTENTION TO REDUCE UNEMPLOYMENT BY FIXED AMOUNT IN ATTEMPT TO REACH CONSENSUS ON RESTRAINT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. Since Mr. André Raynauld, the Chairman of the Economic Council of Canada, yesterday forecast, before Senate Committee increasing levels of unemployment during the coming year, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether in the government's consensus-building discussions with business, labour and other groups he and his colleagues have indicated any intention to reduce levels of unemployment by certain fixed percentage points, say by 2 per cent per year for the next two years, in the same way as they have proposed specific targets for the reduction of levels of inflation?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): One of the main purposes of the exercise which is now proceeding to obtain a consensus is so to create stability in the Canadian economy that levels of unemployment are reduced.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Acting Prime Minister. Since the government has, I understand, set not general targets but specific targets for the reduction in the level of inflation, would the minister explain to the House why, in light of the Minister of Finance's claims recently that we are experiencing inflation because of increasing labour costs—that is a view I do not share, but that is his assessment—the government does not think it appropriate to indicate specific targets for a reduction in the level of unemployment?

[Mr. Lalonde.]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I must repeat what I said before. It is the view of the government, and particularly of the Minister of Finance, that a continuation of the recent rate of inflation would jeopardize employment opportunities in this country. I do hope we have his support for that point of view.

INFLATION—POSSIBLE STUDY OF EFFECT OF INCREASE IN PRICE OF NATURAL GAS ON EMPLOYMENT AND EXPORTS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): A final supplementary question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Since the recent decision of the Alberta arbitration board on gas pricing will lead to a doubling of the field price of natural gas and will have a major effect nationally, and particularly in Ontario both on consumers and industry, increasing the cost, for example, over-all of the product by some $920 million, has the minister's department, concerned as it is directly with employment and exports, made an assessment of the impact of this kind of increase in the price of gas upon the industrial community of Canada, particularly in terms of its effect on employment?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we have not completed an assessment of that impact and I can assure the hon. member that it is the kind of thing we are looking at very closely. We are concerned about its impact on particular parts of the country, on particular industries and on the potential for particular industries.

PUBLIC WORKS

DATE OF ANNOUNCEMENT OF NEW POLICY FOR CONSTRUCTION OF RETAINING WALLS ALONG ST. LAWRENCE

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Public Works.

The minister will doubtless remember that some two months ago he told the House that his department was looking into the possibility of changing the regulations with a view to erecting retaining walls along the St. Lawrence river to protect its banks from the effect of navigation and erosion. Having made this commitment, is he now in a position to announce a new policy on the building of those retaining walls which protect riverside properties?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): No, Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to make any statements, at this time, on retaining walls.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Can the minister advise the House whether he will make public a new policy, since riparian owners are seriously threatened in early spring; even landslides are occurring in Deschaillons, Napierville, Lotbinière and St. Antoine de Tilly. The department is always late sending its inspectors. Can he assure the House that necessary steps will be taken to protect these landowners?

Mr. Drury: Because of the rainfall and the resulting erosion, I must advise the hon. member that this is not a federal responsibility. The federal government is mainly concerned with the effects of navigation on erosion. Although we are looking for solutions, the cause he is talking about does not exist at this time.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a final supplementary question.

If the minister wanted to go into politics, he would certainly have an excellent future, for he is very good at evading the issue. He knows what I mean. The rainfalls did aggravate the situation, but that does not settle the matter of the erosion caused by navigation, since ships have a much larger tonnage now and their speed is not the same as when the regulations were passed. I shall ask the minister when those regulations will be changed as regards the prescribed distance of 3,000 feet from the shore, a question he refuses to answer now. So I ask him again. Will he change these regulations, in order to take into consideration the tonnage and speed of ships, and to protect the property on both shores of the St. Lawrence River?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I accept what the hon. member said. We are reviewing the regulations as rapidly as possible.

AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS FOR CONSTRUCTION OF RETAINING WALLS

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Chambly): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Can the minister assure us that his department has the necessary funds to build the walls required under current standards? I shall not criticize the fact that these standards have been increased, such as the 3,000-foot limit, but I would like to know if the walls which are to be erected where the shores are less than 3,000 feet from the channel will indeed be built.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, some credits have been approved by Parliament, but unfortunately all the funds required for this purpose, this year, were not allocated.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTION UNITED STATES REQUESTED EXPULSION OF PRESS ATTACHÉ OF PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I would direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs which has to do with an attaché in the Chinese embassy who was expelled by our country. This matter was before the House on April 29 at which time the minister indicated that because of the possibility of relations with mainland China being exacerbated as a result of any revelations he would not go into detail. I now ask whether he has had brought to his attention a broadcast last night over the CBC in connection with this matter in which the CBC reported that this man was expelled from Canada at the request of the United States administration because he was engaged in activities detrimental to the United States. Now that this statement has been made by the CBC in its news, and whatever criticism there may be of the CBC there has never been criticism of the factuality or objectivity of its news items—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: —is the minister prepared to go further than he went the other day before these revelations were made?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I certainly congratulate the right hon. member for his sense of humour. I certainly appreciate it in this context. I am afraid I cannot go much further than I did the other day, even as a result of further speculative reports by the CBC. I will say, however, that the action taken by the government of Canada was not taken at the request of any other government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Could the minister not go a little further as there apparently is no danger to security in what was done. Surely there is no reason that this should be covered up in this way, otherwise it would appear that the government has the sense of humour in evidently trying to keep from parliament that which has become public knowledge?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I have stated that the particular member of the embassy was asked to withdraw because of activities which were considered to be incompatible with his status as a representative in Canada. I believe I am obliged to deal with the matter in a way that will maintain the good relationship between Canada and China and I think further disclosure of details would certainly not be in the public interest.

EXPULSION OF PRESS ATTACHÉ OF PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA—METHOD BY WHICH ACTIVITIES CAME TO KNOWLEDGE OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I gave the minister's office notice that I would pursue this today so I hope the minister can be a little more forthcoming than he was to the right hon. member for Prince Albert. How did the matter first come to the attention of the government of Canada and under whose auspices? Who first informed the Government of Canada that the actions of the Chinese diplomat were incompatible with his status here?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that conclusion was reached by the Canadian Government—

An hon. Member: That is not the question.

Mr. MacEachen: —and not at the request of any other government.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, did the process result from osmosis or did somebody initiate some warning? Surely, candour would assist the government in its relationship with the People's Republic of China rather than a cover-up.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for South Shore.

LAW OF THE SEA CONFERENCE—GOVERNMENT PROPOSALS AND ATTITUDE TOWARDS SHARING REVENUE FROM OFFSHORE RESOURCES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Secretary of State for External Affairs will shortly be going to the Law of the Sea Conference in Geneva and we on this side of the House wish him every success in his efforts.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crouse: Since the legal regime and the international machinery that would be required for the national management of offshore resources could affect the thinking of people and governments on the whole problem of utilizing increasingly scarce international resources, has the minister discussed revenue sharing with the Minister of National Revenue and will he be taking new proposals to Geneva regarding the establishment of revenue sharing.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the question of so-called revenue sharing will be discussed at the conference. Our delegation has been authorized by the Government of Canada to explore the possibility of a system of revenue sharing under certain conditions, one of which is that the sovereignty to the end of the continental margin would not in any way be jeopardized but that Canada would be prepared to consider the possibility of revenue sharing under specific conditions.

Mr. Speaker: One supplementary by the hon. member for South Shore.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, will proposals of revenue sharing of income from resources be confined to resources outside the 200-mile economic zone or is this to be within the 200-mile economic zone as well, and will the minister be going to Geneva authorized by the government to make firm, specific proposals to the conference with regard to this very thorny problem which is very important to many of the conference delegates.

Mr. MacEachen: Certainly, the proposals will not cover any area within the 200-mile economic zone. That is not part of the suggestion. I will be authorized, as the delegation is authorized, to explore the concept of revenue sharing within certain conditions, one of which I have already mentioned. The purpose, of course, is to attempt an accommodation at the conference as the hon. member realizes with regard to the difference of opinion between countries like Canada and other countries on the question of the area beyond the 200 miles. It may be that some accommodation can be reached through exploring the concept of revenue sharing. This is what the delegation and I will be attempting to do.

● (1130)

LAW OF THE SEA CONFERENCE—AUTHORITY OF MINISTER TO COMMIT CANADA TO PROPOSALS ON SHARING REVENUE FROM OFFSHORE RESOURCES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the very crucial nature of the final week or so of this conference if the Government of Canada is to achieve the objective it is seeking of recognition of Canadian interests as far out as the edge of the continental slope and the 200 mile limit, and in view of the possible necessity of Canada making some kind of proposal with regard to revenue sharing to get some agreement with other countries with regard to that, is the minister authorized by the cabinet to make a proposal or to commit Canada to a proposal on revenue sharing in that zone beyond the 200 mile limit when he goes to Geneva or is he simply authorized to discuss, listen and report back?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, at the present time the Canadian delegation has not been authorized to engage in discussions with respect to revenue sharing. It is a changed position for the Government of Canada to agree at this point, in the interests of over-all settlement, to undertake the exploration of revenue sharing, which implies in principle that the Canadian government will accept that concept under certain conditions. The Government of Canada has not authorized the details of specific offers. That would have to be considered by the cabinet in light of further discussions at Geneva.

LAW OF THE SEA CONFERENCE—POSSIBILITY OF PROPOSAL THAT NATIONS CUT FISHING QUOTAS BY 40 PER CENT

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the Minister of State (Fisheries) made a request to other nations to cut their quotas by 40 per cent, when the Secretary of State for External Affairs visits Geneva will he be furthering those overtures and has he a definite policy to propose?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker I must confess that I am not informed about that proposal of the Minister of State (Fisheries). If it is a matter that involves ICNAF, then it would really have to be dealt with apart from the Law of the Sea Conference.

LAW OF THE SEA CONFERENCE—POSSIBILITY OF BILATERAL AGREEMENTS ON SHARING REVENUE FROM OFFSHORE RESOURCES IF CONFERENCE FAILS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): My supplementary question is for the Minister of State for External Affairs, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister if his proposals for revenue sharing, in addition to being presented to the conference as a whole, will also mean that Canada is prepared to take advantage of the presence in Geneva of countries that have historic and traditional fishing rights off Canada's east coast and will he meet on a bilateral or multilateral basis with those countries to form the basis of what could be a revenue sharing agreement in the absence or breakdown of agreement at Geneva?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian delegation will be exploring this concept with other delegations. There is a particular working group, as I understand it, that will be dealing with questions of the continental margin and revenue sharing. It is presumably within this particular group that the major discussions will take place. Naturally, when I go to Geneva I expect to hold bilateral discussions with other countries as well as engaging in multilateral discussions.

ENERGY

NATURAL GAS—AMOUNT OF PRICE INCREASE MINISTER INTENDS TO PERMIT

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. At page 5329 of Hansard for last Wednesday the minister said he would use his best efforts to see that the price for Alberta gas moving out of the province was kept well below the $1.15 per thousand cubic feet which was just given in an arbitration award. The press now reports the minister as saying that he has in mind to raise the well head price from 45 cents per thousand cubic feet to 70 cents or 80 cents per thousand cubic feet. I should like to ask the minister if he intends to have this price range in mind when negotiating with the Alberta government, and can he give the House an assurance that this is the price range that will obtain either as a result of negotiations or of exercising the power he will have when the Petroleum Administration Act is given Royal Assent?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, if I could correct one element, the current prices vary in range. Some contracts are as high as 60 cents per thousand cubic feet, so we are talking about a range of prices. I do not think it would be desirable at this point, when I am hoping to negotiate with the producing provinces on this question, to set out figures in advance that would be targets—

Mr. Horner: Do you still believe in fair market value?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I still believe it is useful to have a discussion with the provinces and not in effect to lock in that discussion in advance by setting a specific price. I think the hon. member for Crowfoot would agree with me on that.

NATURAL GAS—DATE OF ANNOUNCEMENT OF EXPORT AND DOMESTIC PRICES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the minister has already named a price to the press, I cannot see why he would not name a price to the House of Commons.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is par for the course.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Read the story again.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The minister was going to make a statement some time ago regarding the export price of natural gas and this was delayed because of the visit of American officials who were requesting that the price increase be phased in. I want to ask the minister now how soon he will be able to make a statement regarding the export price. Does he hope to be able to make a statement regarding the domestic price at the same time and on what date does he anticipate making a statement with respect to the two price ranges?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should distinguish between an informed press speculation and what I may have said. I think it would be desirable not to set a price in advance and I refused to do so. With regard to the export price, I hope to be able to make an announcement on Monday. This is not related in any sense to the domestic price, of course. I expect the decision on the domestic price will take place after full discussion with provincial governments and an announcement certainly will not be made next week.

NATURAL GAS—REFERENCE TO STATEMENT ON PRICE ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER IN "GLOBE AND MAIL"

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A further supplementary, Mr. Speaker. The statement contained in the Globe and Mail of May 1 reads:

> In an interview, Mr. Macdonald said he thinks an increase to a well head price of 70 cents or 80 cents—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member please put his question.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I will ask the minister if such an interview took place. If so, this could hardly be described as a speculative story.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Such an interview took place, Mr. Speaker, but I would say that the report does not do justice to what I said.

NATURAL GAS—DATE ON WHICH STAGING OF PRICE INCREASE BEGINS

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources following the line of questioning raised by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. Since the province of Alberta has said it is willing to stage increases in natural gas prices, if an arbitration award of $1.15 is to come into effect on November 1, has the minister been able to ascertain from the government of Alberta whether it is thinking of staging that arbitration price after November 1 or before?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in general terms the discussions have been with regard to a price change effective November 1 and it is for a staged increase some years thereafter rather than between now and then.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR OUTLINE OF CONTINGENCY PLAN

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. I should like to direct his attention to the contingency plan he intends to present to cabinet. Having allowed four months to pass before recognizing the need for such a move to combat the housing crisis, can the minister now inform the House when this contingency plan will be presented to cabinet, how long he anticipates it will take to gain approval and when we can expect government action to deal with this critical situation?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is no dramatic contingency plan.

An hon. Member: That is for sure.

Mr. Danson: This is a process to which I committed myself with the provincial housing ministers at the conference in January. Our own programs, which were instituted by my predecessor, are going extremely well. Regrettably, those which are in provincial hands are not moving as quickly as I would like, so we have to find ways to get them moving faster.

● (1140)

POSSIBILITY OF NUMBER OF STARTS THIS YEAR REACHING 230,000

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): I was hoping the minister would report as to how successful he had been in persuading his cabinet colleagues of the need for action. In light of the minister's statement in his speech yesterday that he remains optimistic that the number of housing starts this year will meet the demands of new households, and in view of the fact—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: On a supplementary would the hon. member be good enough to put the question.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Since CMHC has predicted that 230,000 new households will be formed, I am wondering if the minister is now optimistically predicting that there will be 230,000 new housing starts this year. Can he relate these two statements emanating from his department?

[Mr. Gillies.]

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I do not have to convince my colleagues of the importance of housing in our society. They are deeply committed to that and have shown it in many ways. With reference to the other question, I think it will be a very difficult year in which to reach the target of 210,000 starts—

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): 230,000.

Mr. Danson: —but I am convinced it can be done. With reference to the 230,000 figure, there are family non-formations as well. I am not familiar with the two statistics. My information, resulting from studies I have done, indicates that 210,000 starts meets family formations, less those family formations that do not take place.

CRIMINAL CODE

ALLEGED STATEMENT MINISTER WOULD RESIGN IF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT REINSTATED

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. Can the minister advise the House whether he has ever made a statement that he would resign if capital punishment were reinstated or whether he would have to consider resigning if capital punishment were reinstated?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, when I met privately with the leaders of the Atlantic police associations on Monday in Moncton, I was asked certain questions about what parliament might do in this regard, and I said privately to some of those policemen that I could not be associated in any way with an execution, with capital punishment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Allmand: After that meeting one of the policemen from the meeting, in answering questions to the press, repeated what I had said and I was asked later to confirm this by the press. In fact, I did state publicly something to that effect to the press, but it was not put in the terms reported in the press. It was not a threat; it was just a statement of my position.

REQUEST FOR DEBATE ON ABOLITION OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): In view of the minister's personal viewpoint on this subject, would he consider bringing back a debate to this House to abolish capital punishment entirely, so that the country will know what the law will be and so that the minister and the cabinet will not have to worry about the problem in the very serious decisions they will have to make in the next two or three months?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): That is under consideration. As the hon. member knows, the present law will expire in 1977, and this parliament will have to deal with the issue by then, so we will have to make a decision as to when such a bill or such a debate will take place.

TRANSPORT

CROWSNEST PASS RATES—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE NO CHANGE

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. There have been very vague statements made by the Minister of Transport in which he said that there will not be any change in the Crowsnest Pass rate for 1975, but that he would not commit himself after that time. The minister responsible for the Wheat Board made statements in which he said that the "Crow" rate will remain as long as farmers want it. In view of these statements and other statements circulated by various levels of government and farm organizations, I would like to ask the Acting Prime Minister if he is prepared to give the government's unqualified commitment to the effect that the Crowsnest Pass rate will remain in force.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would want to see whether there is such a conflict as suggested by the hon. member. Certainly, we have no legislation in contemplation which would change the situation.

FREIGHT RATES—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MINISTER'S INTERVENTION TO PREVENT INCREASES

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I will also direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister on the subject of freight rates. Last Tuesday the Minister of Transport said, in reply to my question about across-the-board increases in class freight rates effective next Monday, that he would get in touch with both railways that same day or the next day to see if what he said in Calgary was carried out. I would like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the minister did in fact get in touch with both railroads, whether the cabinet is aware of what response the railroads made and whether the railroads will see to it that what the minister said in Calgary is carried out in regard to across-the-board freight rate increases.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport has not yet reported to his colleagues on the discussions he has had. I will inquire of him. It might be appropriate, however, that he report to the cabinet before any announcement in the House.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LAW OF THE SEA CONFERENCE—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON POSSIBILITY OF AGREEMENT ON OBJECTIVES

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue, but first I would like to welcome him home after attending the Law of the Sea conference in Geneva.

Due to the vital interest of many Canadians in the Law of the Sea conference, can the minister advise the House whether in his opinion there will be any draft articles approved by the conference, and if not would the minister comment on whether he sees any appreciable progress toward achieving a consensus on establishing an international law for the world's oceans and seas?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, one of the reports I received in Geneva concerned the very substantial work the hon. member for Comox-Alberni had performed as a member of the delegation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Basford: It is really too early to answer the hon. member's question in any definitive form. The Canadian delegation has been pressing and working very hard for the Canadian position at the conference. My colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs will be present at the conference next week, and he will be able to report definitively at the time of the conclusion of the conference on how successful we have been.

HEALTH

POSSIBILITY OF FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AGREEMENT ON INTERMEDIATE HEALTH CARE

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to a number of questions directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare earlier. Could the minister inform the House whether the conference of first ministers of health and welfare of the provinces addressed itself to the dilemma of the ever increasing cost of delivery and maintenance of acute hospital beds and other hospital services, and in light of that, has it been possible for the conference to reach a consensus on the need for a cost sharing program in the field of intermediate health care?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, again at the last conference of health ministers, I sent a copy of the press release to all hon. members and this has been fully reported by the press. The two levels of government agreed to make an intensive review of the various services as they exist now, to provide citizens with health services at a lower cost than the one imposed by institutions such as hospitals, which are certainly very expensive. Meetings of federal and provincial officials already took place during the last weeks, and a report is to be submitted for consideration of ministers next fall.

[English]

Mr. Oberle: Since it has been the objective of the federal government for the last three years to enter into such a program, has the minister now proposed to the provincial ministers a program which would be less rigid and more conducive to the real need within the provinces so that the provinces could make use of it?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: That is what we are doing now, Mr. Speaker, but, of course, we remain within the provisions of legislation adopted by Parliament in that field in the last years.

HOUSING

NUMBER OF APPLICATIONS FOR LIMITED DIVIDEND PROJECTS—SUGGESTED EXTENSION OF PROGRAM

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs? Will the minister inform the House how many applications were received for limited dividend housing, a program which I understand closed on April 30, and if he is satisfied with the number?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have some preliminary figures. There have been 246 proposals for projects from across the country, for a total of 22,623 units involving $540 million. The call was for $200 million. The over-all cost of the units is between $20,000 and $25,000. These will have to be assessed as to value. From all indications, it looks as if we received proposals for more than double the number of units we called for. This is encouraging and it can be done, hopefully, under the new legislation, with private lenders. I am delighted with the size of this response. I am interested in seeing the breakdown by region and by city, to make certain that all parts of Canada participate.

Mr. Darling: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder, because of the great need for housing, if the minister would not consider re-opening the program and allowing additional proposals, which will provide much needed housing for the country.

Mr. Danson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will certainly do that and use the recent legislation which allows private lenders to put up the money, which we will subsidize, so that more low-cost rental units can be built.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

METROPOLITAN AREA GROWTH INVESTMENTS, NOVA SCOTIA—INQUIRY WHETHER CORPORATION ACTIVE AND EXECUTIVE POSITIONS FILLED

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. I should like to ask the hon. gentleman if there has been any recent development in the long saga of Metropolitan Area Growth Investments Limited in Nova Scotia, whether this $20 million experimental corporation has become active after a three-year gestation period, and whether all executive positions are now filled and the company is ready to report progress?

[Mr. Lalonde.]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, considerable progress has been made. I believe I advised the hon. member that the nominees of both the provincial and federal governments have actually been appointed. The present situation is that a federal and a provincial nominee are active as interim co-chairmen until such time as a recommendation goes forward with regard to a permanent chief executive officer. In the meantime, there is quite a bit of work being done. I was talking to the Minister of Finance of Nova Scotia recently and he is satisfied that the plan is moving ahead at a reasonable pace after, regrettably, a number of unfortunate delays.

Mr. MacKay: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. For the record, is the minister saying that the company is actually in operation now and that projects are under way?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I would not want to be that specific without obtaining further information. My impression is that it is not, in terms of projects, other than looking at them in a general way. The primary aim at the moment is to get a chief executive officer. As I said, this is proving somewhat difficult.

SOCIAL SECURITY

POSSIBILITY OF LEGISLATION RESULTING FROM AGREEMENT WITH PROVINCES—POSITION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE ON GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a couple of questions to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, with further reference to the conference of the last couple of days? The minister having indicated that there was agreement on one matter, the extension of certain services, will there be early legislation on that matter? While I am on my feet may I ask the minister if, with respect to the continued consideration of the guaranteed annual income, he is in a position to report to his provincial counterparts that he has the backing of the federal Minister of Finance?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, the legislative program of the House is extremely heavy, and I cannot anticipate the possibility of introducing a new bill in this area before the next session. We have discussed this matter with my provincial colleagues and they agree on this.

Moreover, I can assure my hon. colleague that the whole Cabinet is at one about the major priority to give social security and I think the government action during the last few years stands as clear evidence before the whole population.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the minister's reference to the heavy order paper, I wonder if he has looked at it recently and seen how light it is, and does he know that there is only one item on it in his name?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, it is not a question of knowing how many items are on the order paper in my name, but of thinking about the legislative program which the government has tabled in the House.

POST OFFICE

ALLEGED LACK OF AUTHORITY FOR SALE OF NON-POSTAL ITEMS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Postmaster General. Since the Auditor General has again criticized the Post Office for selling non-postal items to the public without parliamentary authority, a practice which continues today, will the minister tell the House why this program was entered into without proper authorization and why suitable accounts had not been established to determine whether or not the program was profitable?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, a better authority on the subject is the deputy minister, who has appeared before the miscellaneous estimates committee to explain precisely the reasons for this. I assume the minutes are available. If I am wrong, I will find out for the hon. gentleman and report back on Monday.

IMMIGRATION

ALLEGED REDUCTION OF FUNDS FOR ENGLISH LANGUAGE TRAINING—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, may I direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister? Can the minister tell the House whether the government intends to diminish or has diminished funds for second language training in English at Algonquin College, Ottawa, bearing in mind the importance of the college to the area in which it is located and to the teachers involved? Also, does the minister's department intend to implement this withdrawal, if it is going on, in centres like Toronto, Hamilton and other places in Canada?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am unaware of this but will make inquiries. If the minister is here, he will answer, or I will endeavour to get the information.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSAL TO COMPENSATE MOZAMBIQUE FOR LOSSES FROM BLOCKADE OF RHODESIA—AMOUNT OF CANADA'S CONTRIBUTION

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and follows on the question I asked the minister yesterday. In light of reports that Canadian officials have said that no specific funds are being discussed in terms of compensating Mozambique but that Canada has agreed in principle to contribute to any general fund for the purpose, can the minister estimate how much will be earmarked as Canada's share of the fund being set up at the Commonwealth conference to compensate Mozambique, a non-Commonwealth country, for losses incurred in blockading Rhodesia.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give that detail. I will attempt to obtain more details and provide them later.

PROPOSAL TO PROVIDE FUNDS TO AREAS WISHING TO BREAK AWAY FROM SOUTH AFRICAN CONTROL—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister, in the interests of candour, tell the House if Canada has agreed to involve itself in providing funds to encourage forces within southwest Africa with plans to break away from South African control?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker.

OLYMPIC GAMES

COUNTERFEIT OLYMPIC COINS—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PREVENT ISSUANCE

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Postmaster General. As high quality counterfeit Olympic coins are being produced and distributed abroad, can the minister advise the House as to the steps the government is taking to end this activity and how can Canadians be assured that these or other counterfeit coins will not find their way into our markets?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is quite accurate in his description of events. There is obviously some indication of an international ring of counterfeiters working primarily on the continent of Europe. We are aware of this and our police force is working closely with Interpol. It is also true that, in all probability, some of the principals involved are Canadians. There is little evidence, however, that these imitation Olympic coins are a threat to Canada. I suggest that people who want to buy these coins should protect themselves by buying from authorized dealers, such as chartered banks and other reputable firms, and we are prepared to provide the list of dealers to people. In other words, let the buyer beware if somebody is offering him a bargain in this field.

OLYMPIC COINS—POSSIBILITY OF ISSUANCE OF GOLD COIN

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As the minister earlier this week neither denied nor confirmed that gold coins will be minted in order to supplement the sagging coin program, and as Simpson's of Toronto are already taking orders for just such Olympic gold coins, will the minister not take the House into his confidence and let us know whether gold coins will be minted, as Simpson's obviously already know.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the coin program is not sagging, which is good news. Actually, now that the uncertainty as to whether there are to be Olympic games next year has been cleared up, the coin program is going along very well. As to whether there is to be a gold coin, I will take the House into my confidence. I assure the hon. member that such a decision has not been made by the cabinet. In so far as people taking orders in Toronto, they take them at their own risk. They will be quite red in the face if they are unable to deliver the orders in the event that we determine not to issue gold coins, but proceed in some other manner.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HERBERT—CONDUCT OF PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, I request your indulgence while I explain the various incidents that lead me to raise this question of privilege at this time. I had attempted to raise the matter in private members' hour, where it would be more appropriate, but our rules do not permit that procedure. I have risen in private members' hour in this House on several occasions, on points of order, to protest the procedure allocated for private members' business. The daily correction procedure does not cure the recurring problem which affects the rights of all members.

On Tuesday of this week, private members' business was not called until 5:45 p.m. due to preceding votes. The item called was No. 40, which was the thirtieth item on the list of public bills which are presently before the House. Speeches by the introducer of the bill and by others acknowledged that this bill, C-240, had effectively been superseded or made redundant by another bill, C-208, which had passed second reading, committee discussion and report stage and was awaiting third reading. The first item of business listed on the order paper that day was Bill C-208, an act respecting National Heritage Day.

[Mr. Mackasey.]

It is my understanding that Bill C-208 was not called because the government is to introduce a comprehensive bill dealing with all holidays. Recognizing that the Department of the Secretary of State is not progressing as fast as many of us would like, I agreed on March 14 in this House to an amendment to the Canada Day bill, Bill C-231. An intervention by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) on that occasion suggested that a member could not propose, himself, that the subject matter of his own bill be sent to committee. This point of order was upheld by the Chair. On Tuesday last I was advised that an agreement had been reached that the bill under discussion would be withdrawn and that unanimous consent would be requested for the withdrawal. Thus, when the member sponsoring the bill rose at a half-minute to six and was recognized, I assumed it was for this purpose. I was also under the impression, from the procedure followed on the previous point of order, that the sponsoring member would be out of order in making the proposal to send the subject matter to committee. Mr. Speaker, I called "No" on Tuesday at 6 p.m. and was prepared to speak at that time. I was not heard or recognized, in the noise, as everyone rose to leave the House.

I would like to make five points. One, the first item of business, Bill C-208, was not called and there was no indication from the government that it wished this item of business to remain at the head on the list. I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that such an indication is very important, since National Heritage Day has already been incorporated into labour agreements and members receive many letters from workers who maintain that they are being deprived of an assumed benefit due to the lack of progress of this House on a measure that would receive all-party support if it were called.

My question deals with the procedure that was followed at precisely 6 p.m. on Tuesday last. The amendment by the member was out of order. Why was it not so ruled? Why was that member permitted to stand again and be recognized for a second time, when at least three other members had risen and had not been recognized?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member ought to proceed to develop a question of privilege if he feels that in some way the procedures that were adopted in respect of private members' business treated him unfairly. However, there is certainly no point in the hon. member carrying on a discussion as to whether or not any decision or action taken by the Chair was consistent with the circumstances at that time or was in order or out of order. That simply constitutes an appeal to the person now occupying the chair against the person occupying the chair at that time. The hon. member ought not to use his time on that question.

Mr. Herbert: I apologize, Mr. Speaker. The point I want to make is this: when we have already reached six o'clock, would it not be a preferable procedure for the Speaker to ask if there is agreement that he should not see the clock, in order that noise and confusion that often occurs at that hour should not hide from the Speaker the wishes of the members? "Unanimous" means every member present, and if there is in fact unanimity, then nothing is to be gained by rushing our procedures just because the hands of the clock have passed 6 p.m.

My last item in this question of privilege deals with the way we proceed at 5 p.m. on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays and at 4 p.m. on Fridays. It is my understanding that the responsible minister is required to indicate the willingness of the government to allow a measure to retain its position on the order paper if that measure is not to be proceeded with at that time. In order to have that specific indication, it is essential that the measure be called.

My several interjections on this subject arise from the difficulty we experience in finding out precisely what business is to be brought before the House. With so much committee work, it is obviously impractical for each member to be present at all times and therefore ready at all times to debate a specific measure on which he or she has an interest. The government House leader is rarely in a position to determine precisely when debate on a government bill will terminate and, under these conditions, must maintain some flexibility as to the next item that he will call.

However, the calling of private members' business is an entirely different matter. A start is made at a specific hour. Our rules require that we follow the order as it appears on the order paper. The member, therefore, has a right to assume that the first item of business will be called unless there has been an indication from the government of a reason to allow the measure to stand. It is agreed that the House must retain flexibility; however, the rights of members to participate in subjects of interest to them must also be respected.

Mr. Speaker, I would request your comment, at your convenience, on the various points that I have raised so that a judgment can be made on whether a motion is necessary to attempt to bring some order to private members' business.

Mr. Speaker: I will, of course, take the matter the hon. member has been dealing with under advisement. However, I should say at once that there are two obvious comments. The first is that the government, as such, really has no particular control over the conduct of private members' business. An indication of consent or otherwise from the government as to the ability of a bill or any other measure to stand and retain its priority is no different from the indication of any other member of the House. Private members' business is exactly as it is described, an hour set aside in which it is the business of all members of the House to participate in those measures. The consent given at any time for a measure on the order paper under private members' business to retain its priority would be quite valid during that time with or without the consent of anybody on behalf of the ministry.

The second point is that the procedures which have been adopted are matters of convenience. They are a departure from the strict interpretation of the rules which would require calling, seriatim, at every private members' hour, all such items on the order paper. Initially, the very filing of private members' bills and their selection for consideration is a departure from the strict interpretation of the rules. Those departures are a matter of custom and are for the convenience of members so that we can operate with reasonable smoothness and not waste too much time on a number of technical interpretations of the rules. The Chair can do nothing more than implement that kind of custom. If it turns out that this kind of custom is not universally accepted, the Chair will have no recourse except to go back to the technical arrangements that have been described by the hon. member.

It seems the Chair ought to let the matter stand, in the hope that the hon. member and others who are concerned about the problem might work it out internally by speaking to the parliamentary secretary to the government House leader and, if necessary, to the other House leaders in order to ensure that there is understanding as to how the business ought to operate.

PUBLIC WORKS

DREDGING CONTRACTS—STATEMENT ON GOVERNMENT POSITION IN VIEW OF PROSECUTIONS UNDERTAKEN

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, in reply to a question asked in the House by the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) earlier this week, I stated that I would make an announcement on the subject of dredging on Thursday or Friday. I am now in a position to make that statement. Let me begin by saying that we are faced with a situation in which the individual companies making up practically the whole of the dredging industry are facing prosecution in the criminal courts with respect to dredging contracts. We are also faced with a situation where dredging must proceed or continue in order to ensure continued public safety and to avoid major economic disruptions.

Let me first advise the House of the measures the government intends to take immediately in order to protect the public interest in future dredging contracts. I will discuss existing dredging contracts later.

● (1210)

First of all, action has been taken to strengthen the terms and conditions in the new contracts by requiring the contractor to agree to full disclosure of all factors on which his bid is made, and the nature and extent of any communication relating to the work or the cost of the work between the contractor and any other person. This requirement will provide the Crown with additional information for use in determining the validity of the bids. An interdepartmental committee under the chairmanship of Public Works will analyse and review bids. This committee is composed of those departments and agencies involved in the administration of dredging contracts that is, the departments of Public Works, Transport, the National Harbours Board and the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority.

Second, Mr. Speaker, the invitations to tender, and new contracts will require the contractor to warrant that there has been no collusion whatsoever—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Drury: —between the contractor and any other person in respect of the tender or the contract or the work under the contract. Future contracts will provide that should these conditions be breached, payments under each contract will be limited to the lesser of 90 per cent of the contract price or the audited cost of the labour, plant and material to the contractor, excluding profit and overhead. Furthermore, new contracts will require contractors to retain all related documents for a period of five years rather than the two-year period now required.

With respect to existing contracts, hon. members are aware that under dredging contracts progress payments are made for completed work and a percentage of the contract price is held back until a certificate of completion of the work has been issued. One obvious means of protecting the public interest where companies have been charged under the Criminal Code is for the government to withhold both progress payments and holdbacks, but the legality of this procedure is currently under challenge in the courts.

We recognize that the dredging work must continue and that there are third parties involved who may suffer if payments are withheld. Keeping in mind the above considerations, we will seek guarantees equal to a minimum of 10 per cent of the value of the existing dredging contract from those companies charged under the Criminal Code.

By these means, Mr. Speaker, we expect to attain our two objectives of protecting the public interest and of ensuring that the necessary dredging is carried out, while leaving to the due process of law the problems which have arisen from contracts already concluded.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I note the minister has taken three or four minutes in which to make his statement, and I would suggest that opposition comments should certainly not be longer.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, the fact that the minister could make such a statement with a straight face stretches even the substantial credibility he enjoys in this House. We understand and appreciate the government's position. Yesterday, the president of one of Canada's major dredging companies said, and I quote him: "They are in a bit of a quandary mainly because no one else is able to do the dredging work but the companies charged". I do not accept this, and I am surprised the minister accepts it.

The steps the minister now proposes in his statement should have been taken when he was president of the treasury board and was faced with six different reports from the Auditor General, going back to 1963, suggesting there were serious irregularities in dredging contracts in Canada. What does the minister mean, for example, by his statement that warranties will be required from contractors to ensure that there will be no collusion? What about the ordinary business practice of bonding? To ask these companies for warranties is tantamount to the FBI asking Bonnie and Clyde for a warranty to keep the peace. It is incredible. It is beyond me how the minister could make such a statement.

We are not at all satisfied with the guidelines announced by the minister. In my view, he has merely compounded the embarrassment in which he finds himself. There was a simple, logical and sensible solution and he should have announced it today, namely, that the biggest dredging company in Canada, the only company in Canada, the only company that has not been charged before the courts—that is to say, the Department of Public Works—would carry out this work at least until these charges had been disposed of.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the gist of the minister's statement amounts to the kind of logic one would follow if one said to a man recently convicted of robbing a bank of $100 million; "we are going to solve that problem in the future. There will be no problem at all with this man; we will just get a signed statement from him promising not to do it again."

The procedures the minister outlined do represent some technical improvements over existing laws under which virtually all the major dredging companies are presently being prosecuted for defrauding the people of Canada of millions of dollars. Although it is important to tighten up the law and the investigative procedures to make certain that contracts are honoured, if one is dealing with a group of individuals or corporations that are basically dishonest, if such turns out to be the case—if they are convicted; and there are certainly strong prima facie grounds for believing this is the case—then no matter how tight the procedures are, they are still going to take the chance if their basic inclination is to indulge in criminal activity.

We in our party do not believe that this kind of activity should be left to the private sector at all. Surely, if a case ever existed for public enterprise, this is it. There is only a handful of companies. Even if they are honest, every economist knows that no effective competition takes place in a sector of the economy where only a few firms are operating. So there is no effective competition there.

The NDP believes the Department of Public Works should be doing this work itself. There is no need to contract it out. All the work is being done for the public or for public agencies; it is a continuing operation for which the government should assume responsibility. If in marginal cases private individuals or companies want service, they could go to the government and hire government dredging operators. There is concern for those employed by these private dredging companies. It is our view that should the government take over these operations, the employees now working for the private companies should be hired by the Department of Public Works.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I first wish to express my regret that only an English copy of this statement was made available to us, not that I have particular separatist or nationalist feelings, but rather because I think the minister does not in the least try to respect both official languages in this House when he issues those statements. That is indeed shocking.

Mr. Speaker, this statement by the minister today is meant to give the impression that his department will take the necessary steps to restore public trust in the dredging contracting out system, although this is by no means achieved in spite of the government's good intentions. We should be aware that the companies concerned in that statement now have legal troubles, but that those troubles finally amount to very little. The companies have been organized and clearsighted enough in the past to set up subsidiaries which would not ruffle the political feathers of the government of the day. Dredging contracts were awarded to different series of companies according to government colour. Just remember when Prime Minister Bennett was in office for instance. I was reading a document to that effect no later than yesterday. When government change occurs, other companies get the contracts. What is more amazing is that we are realizing today, through revelations in this House, that companies in both cases belonged to the same people: that was a case of collusion.

Mr. Speaker, the assurances or intentions stated today in the House by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury) show that he cannot take any step or that he is not interested anyway in taking any step to prevent the collusion of dishonest companies and to prevent those companies from ripping off public funds and depriving people of their interests. May I remind the minister once again that in the future, if he had the kindness and the regard to issue his statements in French or keep them in his office, we would reach approximately the same point. I think, Mr. Speaker, the minister should be scolded a little more by his party so that he would respect that entity, for it is one. As I said, such unilingual statements are an outrage.

● (1220)

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I should like a little information from the minister regarding the practices followed by the Department of Public Works. Is it the practice of the Department of Public Works, when tendering a dredging contract, to develop its own bid? I do not mean simply to develop a rough estimate, but to put in a bid of its own—as is common practice, for example, in the department of highways in my own province—as a means of having a really solid check on the competitiveness of any bidding put forward?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. gentleman has reference to the quality of the estimates made. We have some direct experience, particularly on the west coast and with the Mackenzie River, of the elements of dredging contracts, such as overhead, transportation, equipment costs, and so forth. These are tested against the bids that are put in. Under the new system, all the elements making up the total bid will have to be spelled out, and these will be compared with own our government experience of the various elements. So that what the hon. gentleman is suggesting will be done.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I do not want to misinterpret what the minister has said, but am I to take it that to date, in terms of asking for bids before letting a dredging contract, there has in fact been no accurate or precise computation of the costs of the project by the department which could by any stretch of the imagination be regarded as a sound method of comparison by which actual bids could be judged?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman used the term "by any stretch of the imagination". There have been, and there will continue to be sound estimates made. Certainly, they are not "off the top of the head" bids. The hon. gentleman will appreciate that there will be, in the Department of Public Works alone, some 75 contracts for dredging in various parts of Canada. Some are quite large; others are very small indeed and may be done entirely from the shore. I cannot assure the hon. gentleman that this rather elaborate procedure has been applied to every single contract, but in the case of the larger contracts a serious analytical appraisal has been made in order to arrive at a valid over-all price.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister this question? Most dredging operations are done for the federal government. I do not know what the percentage is, but I am sure that substantially 80 or 90 per cent of dredging is done for the federal government. In view of the fact that there are very few firms now in the field, and that quite apart from the question of honesty in this sector of the economy, it is widely accepted that there is very little competition but there is what economists call price leadership—which means implicity that the biggest firm sets the price and the others fall in line—would the minister tell the House why the government did not decide to take over dredging operations and get the Department of Public Works to do them?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman has a slightly incorrect picture of the dredging industry. What he says is true of very large contracts, such as the port of Vancouver, the Fraser River, the Mackenzie River and the St. Lawrence River, but in this country a very considerable number of relatively small ports require a limited amount of dredging for a relatively short period. A great many small contractors in the past have effectively and efficiently been doing this work.

To suggest that the dredging industry in Canada is comprised of only four or five firms is really not correct. For large contracts there are relatively few contractors who have the necessary equipment. But there are a great many small contracts for dredging for a relatively short period of time in the year, and their services are usable for other purposes at no cost to the Crown.

Mr. Broadbent: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I will accept the minister's description of the operation in Canada, but it seems to me he is locked in to part of my argument anyway, so I want to see what his answer is. Assuming there are few big firms available to deal with the major operations under the control of the federal government, why not create within the Department of Public Works a section that would be exclusively concerned with doing dredging work in the large contract areas the minister referred to, leaving smaller private firms to do the smaller, private projects?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. member is asking me to point out the disadvantages of pure socialism in the dredging industry. I think an equal case could be made for nationalizing all the railways, the assumption being that government can do things better than anybody else. That is not an assumption I am prepared to accept.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a rather brief question to the minister.

When his department calls for tenders for a specific dredging job, does it check the financial structure of the companies, to see if there are ties, by association, financial arrangements or otherwise between them, and whether the companies are associated or really truly different? What guarantees does his deparment have that there is no collusion of the type we have witnessed in the past?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, in brief, the answer is yes. An endeavour is made to obtain, seek and receive such information; that is what is meant when we say that information will be given the government on all ties or relations of the company tendering for the job.

● (1230)

[English]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, the minister has said that one of the improvements in the procedures is to be obtained by the establishment of an interdepartmental committee composed of people from the Department of Public Works, the Department of Transport, the National Harbours Board and the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, who will screen these contracts. Will he kindly advise who screened or examined these contracts in the past? Also in what way does he feel this interdepartmental committee or interagency committee will improve matters?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, in the past each agency, whether it be of the federal government or of some other level of government, has done its own screening. In the case of some of the public agencies, they have little direct experience in dredging. The Department of Public Works carries out substantial dredging operations, mostly on the west coast and in the Mackenzie River areas, and consequently it has direct experience in costing. The National Harbours Board and the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority do not carry out dredging operations themselves but merely have it done by contract, and we will be able to make available to them the experience of the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, is it a natural conclusion from this, that notwithstanding many years of exposure to dredging work which these people have, the National Harbours Board and the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority for the past number of years have been uninformed and, therefore, incompetent.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, they have been operating on the thesis that the competitive system was not afflicted, if I can use that term, with collusion; and if there is bona fide competition, then a competitive tendering system will produce the kind of results one seeks. The Department of Public Works is in a better position than the agencies I have mentioned to carry out tests as to whether these are valid or perhaps unreasonable bids.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. At the moment I see four hon. members who wish to ask questions. I propose to recognize the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), followed by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) and then the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander), with the hope that this will cover the subject matter.

Mr. McGrath: Perhaps to facilitate the timing I will ask my two questions at once, Mr. Speaker. Considering the fact that by the minister's own admission a considerable lobby of professional expertise exists within his own department, I should like to ask why the minister did not exercise the option to carry out this dredging work in whole or in part through his department by making use of the dredging equipment already owned by these companies or perhaps by renting or hiring it. When the minister replies, perhaps he could explain to the House what he means by the word "warrant". What does that mean, and why did the minister not demand some kind of financial bond from these companies to ensure that collusion practices were not taking place?

Mr. Drury: If one looks at the history of current problems, he will see there has not been any complaint that the work being done is inefficient or badly performed. The problem here has been the result of alleged collusion among the principals, having nothing to do with the managers or the subcontractors failing to do the right thing in the best way or in terms of efficiency. There have been charges which allege collusion in making representations to the government. These measures will enable us to test the validity of those representations. Full and complete disclosure as to the various elements making up the bids will enable us to examine them and apply to each of the elements the kind of procedure the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) has suggested.

It has been asked why we did not hire the dredges and services rather than the total services of the contractor. Had we been more suspicious of them at an earlier time, and had these companies come under the new provisions of the Combines Investigation Act, then I think the hiring of the equipment and managing it ourselves would not necessarily have been a more efficient operation than that which has taken place in the past. This would not have served to cure the problem in respect of alleged collusion.

In relation to the required warranty, I am advised by law officers of the Crown that this explicit warranty against collusion will be helpful in establishing a case where there is suspicion or a charge of collusion. The fact of the warranty having been given will enable us to invoke more easily and more effectively the law in respect of agencies who are subsequently found or suspected to be guilty of that practice.

Mr. Alexander: Noting that strange explanation about the warranty, Mr. Speaker, and with all due respect to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury), I wish it were possible to ask questions of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang). I hope there will be some form of statutory declaration in respect of these bid warranties, because to me a warranty means absolutely nothing when you remember that every Tom, Dick and his brother can give a warranty.

The establishment of an interdepartmental committee seems to make sense. I appreciate the reason the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) is not involved, because that would also involve the RCMP. However, because of the importance of this matter I wonder why there has been no reference to the Department of Justice being represented on this interdepartmental committee. I ask this question because of the modus operandi of which we are not yet completely aware. I am sure the Attorney General is aware of it through the RCMP, and I am sure the information is subsequently passed on to the Department of Justice. Why is it not spelled out here that the Department of Justice shall play an initial role through direct representation on this interdepartmental committee?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, before this morning's session I explicitly suggested to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang), and he heartily agreed, that one of his senior officials should be on this committee. It is taken for granted that this basically technological committee will be supported by adequate legal advice. It goes without saying that the Minister of Justice will through his representative participate in respect of legal questions, and he has explicitly agreed to do so.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, if the Minister of Justice is to be involved, and there is no doubt about that, why cannot this be spelled out in the terms of reference by just adding the Department of Justice to this list which includes the Departments of Public Works, Transport, the National Harbours Board and the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority? I do not understand why there is hesitation in this regard.

● (1240)

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, if it would help the hon. gentleman, I would be quite glad to see it done.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Speaker, in view of the massive evidence of collusion in respect of competitive bidding by the major dredging companies across the country, going back to 1963, what evidence has the minister that they ever indulged in real, competitive bidding? That is the first question. In view of what has happened in the past, what evidence is there that they ever indulged in real, competitive bidding, and what assurance has the minister that they will now participate in real, competitive bidding? Also, why is the minister convinced that the private sector can do a more effective job, in view of its past record, than his own department setting up a public agency to do the necessary work?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, the last question is doctrinaire and I should not attempt to answer it. In respect of the earlier one, it is quite clear that the prima facie evidence at the moment is that there has not been competitive bidding.

Mr. Stanfield: Why did you not find out?

Mr. Drury: We perhaps will be faced with collusion in the future; but at least we will have some tests against which to examine payments in the future to see whether we should be suspicious of further collusion. Not only that, there will be a number of explicit sanctions in the new contracts which will make it very much more chancy or difficult to invoke legal technicalities in avoiding sanctions in the future.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Charles Turner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of Public Works): I ask, Mr. Speaker, that all questions be allowed to stand.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING THE STABILIZATION OF NET PROCEEDS FROM THE PRODUCTION AND SALE OF WESTERN GRAIN

The House resumed from Thursday, May 1, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lang that Bill C-41, respecting the stabilization of net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain and to amend certain statutes in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, we seem to have before us today a bill which promises something which is to be desired by a segment of agriculture. However, it becomes merely another section of the ad hoc group of policies which have been introduced by this government in the field of agriculture. It is another inconsistency in the basic policy which agriculture has been seeking, in the sense that it limits itself to a particular sector of agriculture and does not apply in general terms the very principles upon which a healthy agriculture in Canada can be established.

I should like, first, to draw the attention of the House to the rather unkind remarks of the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale), inasmuch as he implied that everything said by anybody other than a member of the government had to be interpreted as being purely political and, therefore, inconsequential and something for which nobody in Canada should have any concern. I submit that nothing could be further from the truth. Probably no group in the political life of Canada has spent more time in considering what should be agricultural policy for this country than the members of the opposition. No party, by virtue of the number of seats it holds in agricultural areas—this should be evident even to the hon. member for Assiniboia—has more agricultural support than the opposition. Therefore, there is a very important element of confidence in the opposition in respect of agriculture. This fact has been evident over a great many years.

So far as I am concerned, the field of agriculture should not be exploited as a political game. However, it should be discussed and from that discussion should evolve programs which can perhaps establish a healthy and viable agricultural industry in this country. I submit that this bill is but another piece of evidence of the lack of understanding by the government of a multitude of aspects of agriculture, and a reflection of agricultural input by an urban-oriented group of people who do not have the understanding of agriculture which is necessary to create policies which would be satisfactory and successful.

I find it very difficult on occasion to agree with the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), but I would have to say that in his remarks last night he illustrated beyond any question the idiocy of the formula which is to be the base upon which payments shall be made to those who will benefit under this legislation. Certainly, I think anybody who is familiar with agriculture would be quite capable of coming up with a simple formula based on the earnings of the farmer rather than based upon all the indices which have been dreamed up by somebody far, far away so far as his knowledge of agriculture is concerned.

Basically, everything that has been proposed from this side of the House has been completely rejected, out of hand, as being unrealistic. I wish to give an example of one error of the bill in specifying the expenses a farmer may have as part of his cost of production. There are two very important items deleted; I submit, perhaps by intent. The first is the rental cost, of which there is no mention. The second is the interest cost of the farmer who does not at this moment in time, or will at the moment in time of his application for assistance, have his farm paid for. The bill is designed to help the established, self-financed individual and it is prejudicial to individuals who do not have this healthy financial position. It would be very simple indeed, as a simplistic interpretation of the bill, to say that costs which will be taken into consideration in the filing of an income tax return shall be costs contributing to the cost of producing grain. That would cover the field. Often when we just listen, we delete, by oversight, some of the obvious things which are part of the cost of farming.

● (1250)

I submit this bill looks like the product of somebody who has dwelled too long in the marble halls of the autocractic structure of a government which has perhaps become a little bit egotistical in respect of its knowledge of agriculture and agricultural needs. This does not mean, Madam Speaker, that I am in any way opposing the principle of supporting the income of every farmer in Canada who has a reasonably sized unit. Such person is entitled to a good income, as is any other member of our society. This is something that was recognized until this government came to power some ten years ago. Since then we have been moving farther and farther away from the realities of a healthy agricultural industry.

[Mr. McCain.]

This bill is a further example of the fragmentation of the government's approach to agriculture. This government has the audacity to say to farmers in western Canada that the Minister of Agriculture is incapable of administering their affairs. The government says "We shall pick at random somebody whom we think is more capable. We do not trust the Minister of Agriculture, so we will not put this stabilization program in his hands but will reserve the right to name someone else". This is an insult to the Minister of Agriculture and to agriculture itself. Once again we are to have an interdepartmental committee. I suppose that means it will comprise of somebody from income tax, somebody from statistics, somebody from transport, but no one agriculturally orientated and capable of understanding the problems of agriculture. The bill does not spell out who shall be on the committee, nor does past performance indicate that this government will put agriculturalists in charge of it.

In several places the bill leads me to believe that full consideration has not been given to those who may not be eligible to participate in this plan. For instance, if the minister decrees that a farmer is not eligible, and at a later date that farmer is reinstated as a result of an appeal to the Federal court, he may find himself in the second-rate position of an individual who has chosen, for the first time, to participate. I believe such person would be covered by clause 5 (2) of the bill, but his participation in the plan would be delayed and limited. This is not in line with the ordinary principles of justice which any citizen of this country has a right to expect.

The bill also overlooks regional requirements. Grain growing areas may be hit by strikes, by transportation problems, and so on; but there is nothing in the bill to cover such contingencies. Let us suppose that because of transportation problems it was impossible to move western wheat to Vancouver and the eastern outlets were already loaded to capacity. What would happen to the grain growing areas which might not receive any income because the grain could not be moved? There is in this bill no provision for relief to such an area.

The Minister of Agriculture has made derogatory remarks about Canadian marketing in general and has said some unkind things about potato marketing in New Brunswick in particular and the Atlantic area. I think this is another area in which the marketing of the crop will be a very important factor as to whether the producer of the grains referred to in the bill may or may not need help. One might wonder if this plan is intended to replace crop insurance. There does not seem to be any relationship between an individual who receives compensation through crop insurance and an individual who may have suffered a couple of years of hail damage and who applies for help under this plan. If I am wrong, I stand to be corrected. I see the minister responsible for the Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) shaking his head. A declining payment is available under crop insurance; it does not remain static. But a farmer whose crop is hit by hail or flood for two or three years in a row may find he is not eligible for stabilization payments.

May I call it one o'clock, Madam Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p. m.

Mr. McCain: Madam Speaker, though the formula is somewhat confusing to a layman in the English language, as I am, one of the factors which is not given much consideration in the determination of what shall be part of a stabilization program seems to be capital cost. Capital cost is a very significant part of a business operation in any democratic country, yet in the formula described under this legislation I fail to see where there is any allowance for such cost.

I mentioned earlier that there was no allowance for interest charges. This is another factor which is apparently omitted but which must be taken into consideration if one is to arrive at a proper figure of cost for any agricultural product. It may vary from region to region of Canada, as the same product is produced in different areas and may not always have the same bearing upon the unit cost of the crop, but it is there as part of that cost and, as in every other business, it is a fundamental part of a sound operation and should be considered.

In principle, as I said earlier, virtually every individual concerned about agriculture would be prepared to support this bill, but it is legislation which by its very nature in meeting a specific purpose is extremely discriminatory. It may be said that this is an unkind statement from a politician on the left of Mr. Speaker, but let me cite, for instance, the treatment CEMA has received from the Government of Canada. Farmers under CEMA have been asked—as farmers under this legislation will be asked—to contribute to their own support. CEMA collects, through its producers, large amounts of money for support. So it will be with grain producers of western Canada, but they will have more than a matching contribution from the federal government which is intended to assist them in times of economic trouble.

Everyone knows the woeful position in which egg producers of Canada, under CEMA, found themselves; yet there has not been a suggestion by the government that it is prepared to match in any way the contributions which egg producers may have made for their own support. I submit that this is gross discrimination against the egg producers of Canada organized under CEMA, and they should certainly be parked at the minister's door—who knows which minister; he is yet to be appointed—asking for comparable treatment. I say it is discrimination and that this principle should apply to other agricultural items wherever they may be produced in Canada.

Another thing which is left completely uncertain in this legislation is this: there is no apparent room for provincial participation. At least, there is no mention of it. It does not, of course, preclude provincial participation. It is interesting to note that the Cattlemen's Association, in presenting their brief to the agricultural committee, made it a specific point to ask that the provinces not participate in the relief of agricultural economic problems anywhere in Canada. It is certainly to be hoped that under this act the provinces will not only be asked not to provide relief, but will be encouraged to abandon responsibility for the support of this agricultural program. Let us hope that the same philosophy, the same policy, will be extended to other agricultural products.

The discretionary clauses of this bill allow the minister to determine what the levy shall be when the fund is in surplus, and what the levy shall be when the fund shows a deficit; but in no instance do they impose a limit. The bill suggests that in normal times there is to be a 2 per cent contribution by the producer; that is, 2 per cent of sales should be the producer's contribution. Yet when it comes to the discretionary power of the minister, he is not bound by the limitation of the 2 per cent levy. How will those discretionary powers be used? Will they be used one way in an election year and another way after the election? Is this a particular political ploy aimed at attracting the votes of a particular segment of Canada's population, while leaving the rest at a loose end? Some people in agriculture, particularly in eastern Canada, are inclined to think that it might be.

The government's concern as evidenced in this bill for the western farmer is in sharp contrast to its lack of concern with respect to the cost of feed grains and regularity of the delivery of feed grains to eastern Canada from the west. Certainly, the government's concern for western farmers is in sharp contrast to its concern for the agricultural feeding sector in eastern Canada, the ability of which to produce has been impaired to the extent that in many instances producers can no longer produce eggs, beef and pork products for Atlantic provinces' consumption as cheaply as producers in other parts of Canada can produce and deliver them to Atlantic provinces' points of delivery.

If we are to be concerned about the welfare of the western farmer, why should we not extend our concern to all farmers across Canada by not introducing ad hoc pieces of legislation such as this which are designed to fit particular situations such as the one we are discussing? Instead, let us bring in a blanket piece of legislation which will look after the whole field of agriculture. All agricultural producers are crying for this.

For the benefit of the hon. member for Assiniboia, I suggest that such a policy has been proposed many times in this House. I ask him to read the statements on policy which have emanated from the opposition in election after election, stating that security of income of the farmer is of primary concern to this party. We say that agriculture should be treated as one industry and not fragmentized. Our policy would not pit one part of Canada against another but would be all-inclusive in its coverage.

I sincerely hope that under this legislation the grain farmer will not experience the problems which the potato producer, apple producer, grape producer and other producers all across Canada have faced when applying to the government for assistance. I hope that the discretionary power which is to be placed in the hands of the minister and his staff will be exercised in such a way that all who are to received aid will receive it equally. I hope their markets will not be categorized. Rather, I hope that their needs will be measured by the yardstick of lack of income alone.

I bemoan the fact that when the potato program was implemented in the Atlantic area, it was implemented in one fashion for those who shipped to the fresh market and in another fashion for those who sold to the processing market. It left those selling to the processing market in a position of disadvantage. If the discretionary powers in the bill allow the minister to be unkind to some and kind to others, they should forthwith be struck from the legislation.

This bill, Madam Speaker, is in support of a principle to which I subscribe wholeheartedly. However, it seeks to provide income maintenance for a sector of agriculture. I submit that the principle of sector by sector help is unacceptable, although the concept of income maintenance for agriculture as a whole has been accepted and always supported by the members on my side of the House. I appeal to the government to look on the industry of agriculture through a farmer's eyes and not through an urban dweller's eyes, and to quit frigging around with a policy of aiding the industry on a piece by piece, ad hoc basis. The time has long since passed when western members can stand in this House, grin and say, "We are being looked after, but the rest of agriculture in Canada is to be treated in a different light."

I have referred to the case of CEMA and of the potato industry. I beg this House to adopt a rational approach. Let there be more farmer input in the decision-making process. Let us use statistics of cost as our guide as to what is needed by a particular farmer in a particular region to maintain his income. Let us throw in the wastepaper basket, where they belong, all the complicated formulas in this bill which must have emanated from one of the best mathematical minds in Canada—a mind highly qualified in mathematics but without any knowledge of agriculture. Let us make the legislation program easy to understand in its aims and income maintenance program. Let us put it into simple language which a farmer can understand. Let us get rid of all the gibberish in the bill; it will do nothing but confuse and establish an additional bureaucracy in this country.

There are three arms of government which are capable of administering this bill as it is presently constituted. It could be done by the prices stabilization board, perhaps it could be done by the Wheat Board, or perhaps it could be administered by the marketing arm of the Department of Agriculture. According to the way I read the bill, the program is to be administered by a minister to be named, together with a new bureaucracy which is to stand at his elbow and help him. Considering all the data which will need to be accumulated, the program should be in the hands of the Minister of Agriculture, otherwise that minister will not be doing his job: that is all we can assume.

The principle of the maintenance of farm income is good, Madam Speaker, but the fragmentation of the industry under different administrative bodies and interdepartmental committees is abhorrent to us.

[Mr. McCain.]

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, this is the most complicated piece of legislation I have seen in my 17 years as a member of this House. Anyone who can understand this bill can understand how the CPR arrives at its freight rate formula, which is certainly complicated. I will not deal with the complexities of the bill; I want to deal more with the principle underlying it. It has been suggested that this bill is much improved compared with the previous bill on this subject, submitted in 1971. I am not sure this bill is an improvement. Certainly, it is far more complicated. Some of the obvious loopholes of the 1971 bill are to be plugged by this bill. Yet when you try to plug loopholes in poorly drafted legislation, you are bound to establish more and more regulations and qualifications. Certainly, this bill does that.

Some call the bill calamity insurance, but I say it is calamity insurance for the government. It is not calamity insurance for the farmer; it is calamity insurance for the government. Any government of any province or of any country will from time to time be confronted with emergencies. When a national emergency is declared, whether it be a hurricane in Texas, a flood in the Ottawa Valley, or a drought in the prairies, the government in charge must concern itself with the problem and try to bring about just treatment for the people affected. There must be just treatment for these people because of the emergency situation they have suffered through no fault of their own. This is often referred to as an act of God: it is out of the hands of both the individuals and the government.

This bill sets up a fund for the government, to be used in the event of a national emergency. The fund is contributed to at the rate of 2 per cent of gross sales by the producers, and 4 per cent of gross sales by the government. That concept is all right. Where, then, does it break down? There are many calamities that could occur in respect of which this fund could not be drawn upon. The government will be able to say to the people in those areas, "Sales have been good: this area does not qualify for assistance this year under this proposal and therefore we cannot make a payment." The government will have an excuse for not meeting the moral obligation it has when it takes office. I do not want to give this or any government any excuse for not assuming moral obligations they take on when they say they have the power, will and desire to govern.

The contributory fund is calamity insurance for the government; it is also insurance for the salesmen: however, it is not insurance for the producer. The producer may have a poor crop which may or may not be compensated for under this bill. He may have a good crop and it may or may not be affected by this bill. What will be affected by this bill is the situation when sales drop. When the Wheat Board or the agents of the Wheat Board fail drastically in selling six major grains, income will drop off and this bill will come into play. I want to make it abundantly clear that this is calamity insurance for the government and the salesmen. When the government takes office, it assumes the responsibility of looking after the citizens who elected it. From time to time those citizens are confronted with national emergencies which have been caused by acts of God. Grain producers are sometimes confronted with problems such as floods, hail, drought or insects which compound the difficulties of agricultural production. This bill does not provide any insurance against those conditions.

It can be argued that this is an income stability bill and, therefore, it must protect the producer when he has a poor crop or when his rapeseed is set upon by beetles. The criticism of the original bill in not being regional also applies to this bill. The region constitutes the whole Wheat Board area which stretches from the Manitoba border into British Columbia. Any part of that vast area can have a crop failure, whether it be the desert in which I live, south and east of Hanna, the Peace River area, southern Saskatchewan or northern Saskatchewan. The interlake region of the province of Manitoba has often suffered drought and flood conditions. The regions to which I have referred will not be covered by this bill because stabilization payments are based on a percentage of the total sales. Therefore, those farmers would be better off buying crop insurance than putting their trust in this bill.

Another interesting question is, who can qualify? In the previous bill it was mandatory: in this bill it will be voluntary up to January 1, 1978. If you have not registered by that time, you cannot do so without the permission of the minister. The Minister of Justice who is in charge of Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) has often been accused in this House of setting up political machinery in western Canada comparable to nothing in the past. Clause 16 of this bill and its relation to clause 5 contributes to the political machinery the minister is attempting to set up on the prairies.

An hon. Member: Shame on the minister.

Mr. Horner: I am glad to hear that comment from a member on the government side. It gives me some hope that they will see the light. It is normally thought that we should have income stability to shore up the small producer. The basic concept of legislation presented to this parliament over the years has always been that the large producer can look after himself and we should do what we can to bolster the hopes and aspirations of the young farmer or small producer to keep him in business. Why has this been done? In the dairy industry we are continually losing farmers. In the hog industry we are continually losing hog producers.

When this legislation is examined in committee it will be clearly seen that it is more beneficial to the large producer than the small one. I do not think the federal government should contribute 4 per cent of the gross sales revenue to a fund to help the big producer. It would be more reasonable to expect the government to contribute to a fund which will shore up those who need shoring up. Every producer aspires to have a bigger operation.

How does this fund shore up the big producer more than the small one? The minister put it this way: he said, "You have to reward success; you cannot reward failure." That was his excuse when he was asked in the committee whether it was not true that this bill would help big producers more than small producers. To my mind, that is not good enough. The legislation before us will be of benefit to the big farmer, to the older farmer who is well established and who can keep up his sales in the five years preceding a calamity year. When a calamity year comes along, he gets by far the larger payment. And we are not talking, now, about $100 or $200 a month such as old age pensioners get; we are talking about payments running into thousands and thousands of dollars. As a person involved in agriculture, I want to encourage younger men to enter the business and take the risks that go with it. Farmers are confronted with hail, drought, floods, and so on, and I should like to see legislation enacted which would result in the degree of security which I believe the small farmer, the young farmer, needs today.

The previous speaker quite properly pointed out that the cost of capital was not provided for in this bill. Some time ago we passed legislation which will allow young farmers to borrow up to $150,000 under certain conditions. Having borrowed such a sum, a farmer must of necessity sell his crops every year before he can make repayment. If he hits two or three bad years in a row, he is bound to find himself in serious financial difficulties since he has not been able to build up a reserve. The well established farmer who has paid for his land and who has no need to buy new machinery is able to stockpile against eventualities.

From time to time, farmers do not sell all their grain in a crop year or in a calendar year. They may feel they will be obliged to pay too much income tax if they do otherwise, so they build up an inventory. In a bad year, their sales remain constant and they will be able to establish a far better average in the five years leading up to a calamity year. Young farmers will not be able to do this. The bill before us fails to give him the assurance which he is seeking and which parliament should be able to give him when we entice him to borrow $150,000 or more to get into the business of producing food.

Canada is a country likely to be beset by severe economic troubles later this year and in the years to come. However, we do possess certain abilities and one of them is the ability to produce agricultural commodities. In the past, sales of grain have favourably affected our balance of payments situation and no doubt this will continue to be the case in the years ahead. Looking at things from that aspect alone, I say the government has an obligation to ensure that sufficient numbers of young farmers get into the business. We are often told that the average age of farmers today is about 58, so there is obviously a need to encourage more young men to take on the debt load and to carry that load for the good of Canada. In the bill we are considering, I see nothing which would encourage hope in a young farmer and lead him to believe that if he does come up against a calamity year he will be shored up in any way by these proposals.

This having been said, I suppose one is led to wonder how the bill could be improved. Well, Mr. Speaker, before it can be improved it has to be understood in all its ramifications, and I do not think 5 per cent of the farmers in western Canada understand the mathematics or the mechanics of the measure.

Mr. Gillies: Five per cent of the members of the House of Commons don't understand it.

Mr. Horner: One of my hon. friends has said that not more than 5 per cent of those who sit in the House of Commons understand it. I think he is right. If anybody believes he understands it, let him read clause 12 which deals with the calculation of individual stabilization payments, or let him look at page 5405 of Hansard and read the tables which the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) put on record, and try to determine what this complicated equation is leading up to.

It is my contention that the bill should be subject to exhaustive study to determine whether it benefits Canada. I have no doubt at all that it will benefit the federal government. It will give them an excuse; it will not have to measure up to its moral obligation to look after the farmers should a calamity take place. It will give the salesmen a sense of added security to the extent that if they do not sell the crops, the farmers will not be on their backs so badly.

The minister will admit that there are years when we have not gone out and sold out crops. I rarely give the minister in charge of the Wheat Board a pat on the back; I rarely think he deserves it. But he was instrumental in selling barley a few years ago. Mind you, Mr. Speaker, I think he sold it 50 cents too cheaply, so his intervention was really costly for the western farmer. But he knows what I am talking about when I say this bill will encourage the complacency which salesmen are inclined to feel when they are not obliged to make sales; and as a western farmer, I do not want my salesmen to feel such complacency—I want them to know that they have to sell, sell, sell. Also, as a taxpayer, I do not want the government to feel that it can avoid the moral obligation of aiding a region which has been beset by calamity or disaster.

The bill takes the place of two legislative enactments, one of which is the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. Prairie farm assistance payments would be applicable where there was a township with crops below an eight bushel average, but anything less than a township did not qualify. Finally, this was broken down to half a township, 18 sections, because they found out there were many pockets within a township that could not get a payment. Eighteen sections turned out to be too big a block and this was broken down further to 12 sections.

● (1440)

This bill deals with the whole of the prairie region right from the Ontario side of the Manitoba border clean through to the interior of British Columbia. Anyone who is seriously concerned with the plight of agriculture and the farmers, in view of past experiences with PFAA which this bill replaces, will realize that the bill will not apply one year in 20, and that it is no good. In 1971, passage of a bill similar to this through the House of Commons was prevented. This is a long story which other members have gone into, so I shall not do so; but its passage was prevented because the government of that day had broken the law. I am not going to make any wild accusations; the Prime Minister of that day admitted publicly that the government had broken the law. It just happens that the Prime Minister of that day is the Prime Minister today. The Minister of Justice, whose legislation broke the law in 1971, is today now trying to get through the House an even more complicated bill.

[Mr. Gillies.]

If there are some members on this side of the House who are slightly suspicious, can you fault them for that, Madam Speaker? I think the track record of this kind of legislation in the House of Commons bears very careful examination. For example, it is not regional enough. The equation relating to the accountable year is, in my opinion, inadequate. One simple change that could be made, if the government insists on this salve for their conscience, is to allow a producer to take the best three years out of the last five, rather than to insist on the last three absolutely in equating what payment will be made to him.

It is often said of some of the dryer parts of western Canada that crop cycles come once in seven years. Some people even say once every ten years. I would not like to see dry conditions for seven years, but I suggest that there are many parts of the prairies that could easily have seven years of dry conditions. Certainly, they can have three years of dry conditions. I can go back to recent history and recall that the years 1961, 1962 and 1963 were poor years. The year 1964 was not much better, and crop production improved a little in 1965.

If this simple change of letting a producer take the best three years out of the last five in equating his payment were made, it would allow some tolerance to take into consideration drought conditions from which particularly young farmers might suffer. It would not make any difference to a large, well established farmer because more than likely he has been able to build up the reserves on his farm and his sales will show greater continuity than is the case with a young farmer who is just starting out. So although my proposal would not affect, either plus or minus, large farmers, it may well be of benefit to small producers who have to sell every year and thus cannot build up any reserves.

Talking of building up reserves, it is of interest to note conditions today on the prairies. The Wheat Board has stated that on May 15 it is closing out all delivery permits for wheat. That is, at best, a threat. Why is the Wheat Board doing this, Madam Speaker? It is because 30 to 40 per cent of the grain is still on the farms and the farmers do not appear to be in any rush to deliver it. They are busy with seeding problems, road conditions, bans on roads, and the Wheat Board has commitments to meet and wants grain delivered.

I point this out merely to prove beyond a shadow of doubt to any of the non-farmers in the House this afternoon that it is accustomed practice for a well established farmer to build up the reserves on his farm, whereas a young farmer does not have that opportunity. He has a capital debt to meet, a family to raise and feed, and machinery to buy and pay for. He is the person we should be encouraging today, and this bill does not encourage him enough.

I trust this bill will be very thoroughly examined, with every opportunity given to witnesses to appear before the committee so the farm organizations and indeed the farmers themselves are made aware of its exact implications. I say that in view of the cut-off date of January 1, 1978. If you do not voluntarily come into the plan before 1978, under clause 16 of the bill you have to write to the minister and get his permission to come into the plan.

If I were a young farmer today who was starting out, I would see no security in the bill or any income stability either, and I would not be keen to join this plan. However, 15 years from now when I had built up my farm I might well think the measure would give me a little stability and that I should join it. But then I would have to have the approval of the Minister of Justice, and the Minister of Justice might well look up my track record and say, "That fellow's name is associated with an old political family of a different stripe from mine, and I am not going to let him come into the plan". As I read clause 16, I cannot qualify for the plan unless I do so before 1978; otherwise it would be a matter for the minister's prerogative. While he has been Minister of Justice, the minister's prerogative in many cases has not gone beyond his own personal feelings. I am sure, Madam Speaker, you recognize that, being a woman and knowing something about women's groups bringing problems before the Minister of Justice at the present time. They feel that his own personal opinion is interfering with his reason and logic. I, as a wheat farmer, might well suspect that his own personal political views might keep young farmers who do not join this plan before 1978 from joining it afterwards.

Mr. Gillies: Shades of Jimmy Gardiner.

Mr. Horner: I think the hon. member is right—shades of Jimmy Gardiner. I think Jimmy Gardiner was a great westerner who did his best for western agriculture. But in doing so he attempted to gerrymander nearly every seat in Saskatchewan for his own political benefit. The point I am making, Madam Speaker, is this: in view of this provision about joining the plan before 1978, and in view of the complications of this bill, I think parliament would be very remiss if it were to pass the bill speedily. If the bill goes to committee, we would be very remiss if we did not spend a lot of time examining the bill thoroughly.

● (1450)

I have noted that some members advocate that the committee should travel. I am not one to suggest that members of parliament should go on junkets across the country, but I do know that some of these trips can be very beneficial. There is nothing like moving into a city where there is knowledge of the subject matter you are going to discuss and confronting the people there with the problems at the time of the committee's visit. That happened in respect of Bill C-176: I was delighted by the educational program the members of that committee undertook in respect of Bill C-176, and I was delighted by the desire of the people to participate in the discussions.

This bill is far more complicated. I know it pertains only to the Wheat Board region, but a committee travelling in that region would meet very knowledgeable and concerned audiences who I am sure would want to present briefs to the committee so that members might better understand this bill and the problems on the prairies.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, when the minister responsible for the Wheat Board introduced this legislation at the second reading stage on April 28, he engaged in an historic review of recent events in dealing with agricultural problems. He took us back as far as 1968 and told us about the wonderful things that had taken place since then. Let me read one of the things he said, as recorded in Hansard of that day:

> The consumers in this country are of course extremely interested in the production of grain.

I should like to begin my remarks by adding to that statement of the minister that the producers of Canada are also very interested in the production of grain. One of the omissions in the minister's historic review was the Lower Inventory for Tomorrow program which was introduced during the period to which the minister referred. The farmers on the prairies, who above all else want to produce grain to feed the hungry millions of the world, immediately dubbed that the "lower income for tomorrow" program, because it was absolutely inconceivable to them that a minister who had been given responsibility for the welfare of the grain producers in western Canada should have deliberately brought in a program designed to curb the capacity of western grain producers to do that which they know how to do best.

I do not know why the minister did not include a reference to that in his historic review, because I think that is one of the major facts of agricultural life in western Canada, or was during that period. I think it is also one of the reasons there has been growing instability in the prairie farm economy.

Shortly after the introduction of the LIFT program, the export market improved dramatically and, of course, the minister and the government took full credit for the booming market, completely oblivious of the fact that they had failed completely to anticipate it and had deliberately attempted to get wheat growers out of the wheat growing business.

The fact of life in terms of world food is that there is always a market for food and for grain which can never be met by our present productive capacity and techniques. This is the theme the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) has hammered on from time immemorial. When you have over half the world's population starving, there is obviously a need for Canadian production of all the grain it is possible to produce. It was this constant demand for grain, combined with growing famine, that brought about the booming exports to which the minister referred during his historic review.

There was also another interesting omission from the minister's remarks. He neglected to indicate that, currently, exports of grain are at a five-year low. This does not mean the market is not there. Canada, particularly the western part, has an obligation to meet the demands of the growing world market for foodstuffs.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) who is responsible for the Wheat Board, and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), have been out on the hustings during recent days. This is always an indication of something going badly awry with the dialogue between farm producers of western Canada and the Government of Canada. Even though the minister responsible for the Wheat Board suggested in his presentation of this legislation that it had been warmly received by the producers in the west, the fact that both he and his colleague have been out on the hustings is an indication that they are getting a different message from the grassroots producer.

The Minister of Agriculture was out in the west last weekend and a headline appeared in the Brandon Sun, that great journal, on Monday, April 28, as follows: "Whelan says opposition delaying farm legislation".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dinsdale: Under that heading and the byline of Garth Stouffer, who is the associate editor of the Brandon Sun and a man very knowledgeable of agricultural matters, we find these words:

Arguing that opposition members of the House of Commons are afraid Liberal farm legislation might be "too good" and denouncing the media and others who made large of the egg scandal of last summer, Hon. Eugene Whelan rode through rainy Manitoba on Saturday praising farmers and calling on the rest of Canadian society to match the efficiency and productivity of the people on the land.

"If all other walks of life were as efficient (as producers) as the farmer," he told a meeting in the high school auditorium at Minnedosa, "there would be no inflation today."

He went on in like vein, telling the farmers what fine people they are. I think, in the words of Shakespeare, that he doth protest too much. When you see that sort of approach being made to the farmers, it is an indication that there is something badly amiss in communication between the government and farm producers.

● (1500)

The report goes on to stress in the following terms the fact that the minister was exceptionally cordial in trying to win friends and influence people:

About 45 minutes late for the meeting at Minnedosa, Mr. Whelan made up for his tardiness by standing outside the gym door after his address, shaking hands with most of the 200 who listened to him, in somewhat the manner of the parson saying goodbye to his parishioners on a Sunday.

Perhaps we could have added somewhat like the politician who shakes hands to win friends and influence people. The story says that he went further:

In addition to just shaking hands, the plain-spoken farmer who represents the urban riding of Windsor, also answered questions.

In fact, when particularly challenging arguments were thrown his way, Eugene Whelan appeared willing to spend the rest of the afternoon in man-to-man debate—

He really wanted to get his point home to each individual farmer.

—but his aides—who knew he had to return to Brandon, to catch a government jet for a trip to Portage la Prairie and then drive to an agricultural society meeting at Macgregor—urged him along to the front door and into a car for the trip south from Minnedosa.

What I want to stress here is the point that was repeated in the headline, "Whelan says opposition delaying farm legislation". In specific terms this is how he put it during his speech:

'The House is not moving on legislation as fast as possible,' he told the meeting, referring to legislation designed to set up an income guarantee subsidy program for agricultural producers and legislation designed to make for easier access into agriculture for young people, through changes in farm credit.

'It is taking too long,' he said. 'I feel there are people in the House of Commons—on the other side—who are afraid the legislation will be too good . . . not that it will not be good enough . . . and because they feel it will be too good they are holding it up so they can blame the minister of agriculture.'

[Mr. Dinsdale.]

As a matter of fact we are not blaming the Minister of Agriculture this afternoon. We are blaming the Minister of Justice who has some responsibility for the Canadian Wheat Board. It is passing strange to me that the Minister of Agriculture should be carrying the torch on the hustings for this legislation that is now being debated in the House of Commons when he has absolutely no responsibility for carrying that legislation through the House of Commons.

Incidentally the headline in the Brandon Sun is very similar to a press release by the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board when he ran into difficulty with the predecessor to this legislation in his attempt to stabilize paririe farm incomes. On May 7, 1971, the hon. gentleman issued a press release in which he said that the opposition was holding up that valuable piece of legislation. It sounds like the same old record, over and over again.

The minister was doing this even though it was becoming abundantly clear that the bill would subsidize the incomes of prairie producers at the poverty level. As a result of the debate in the House of Commons, and as a result of the strong and growing protests from the producers that bill finally was withdrawn, and now some four years later it is turning up in a slightly modified form. Again the grain producers of western Canada are beginning to respond and point out some of the weaknesses in the legislation.

I think it is important that an extended debate be held in this House of Commons so that ultimately the producers will be able to make a judgment concerning whether this legislation does in fact do what it is purported to do rather than stabilize, as was the case in the former legislation, the income of prairie producers at the poverty level. I say the fact that the two ministers who are closely involved with agricultural matters have taken to the hustings is an indication that they are receiving a message somewhat similar to that which came from the farmers and producers back in 1970 and 1971.

I mentioned the appearance on the hustings of the Minister of Agriculture. The minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board was in the same area about five days earlier. I guess he was the John the Baptist announcing the coming of the Minister of Agriculture. Actually it is the Minister of Agriculture who should have responsibility for these matters. Not only should he be discussing them on the hustings among the farm community and attempting to unload the propaganda—and I use the word "unload" for obvious reasons—that this legislation is being delayed in the House of Commons, he should be carrying the legislation here in the House of Commons, because essentially it is a problem which comes under the jurisdiction of the Department of Agriculture and the Minister of Agriculture. The fact that it has been carried by the Minister of Justice who has some responsibility for the Canadian Wheat Board is an indication of how confused the government approach is to agricultural matters. I shall deal with that in greater detail in a moment.

In this bill the line of demarcation is made crystal clear, even though it is confusing here in the House of Commons. The minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board was at a meeting in Brandon at which he dealt exclusively with his area of responsibility, which is transportation and grain handling. As I read the report, again published in the Brandon Sun of April 23, under the byline of Mr. Garth Stouffer, there is not one reference to the stabilization bill which is now before the House of Commons, and which was introduced for second reading by the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board following his return from the hustings.

I wonder why the government does not recognize that, at long last, if it is to get its agricultural house in order it must make clear lines of delineation and demarcation concerning areas of responsibility. If it sends the Minister of Agriculture out to the hustings to discuss the western grain stabilization bill it must give that same hon. gentleman the responsibility of piloting that legislation in the House of Commons, and also of administering it under the jurisdiction of the Department of Agriculture.

As an indication of how the jurisdictional lines and the area of responsibility are being obscured in the government's approach to these matters, we might look at the responsibilities of the minister who administers the Canadian Wheat Board under the Canadian Wheat Board Act. He has, exclusively, a marketing role and has nothing to do with helping grain farmers maintain their income. The Canadian Wheat Board Act, Part I section 4, states as follows:

● (1510)

The Board is incorporated with the object of marketing in an orderly manner, in interprovincial and export trade, grain grown in Canada, and possesses the following powers:

(a) to buy, take delivery of, store, transfer, sell, ship or otherwise dispose of grain;

(b) to enter into contracts or agreements for the purchase, sale, handling—

(c) to enter into ordinary commercial banking arrangements—

(d) to acquire, hold and dispose of real and personal property—

(e) to employ such technical, professional or other officers, clerks or employees as may be necessary—

(f) to establish branches—

There is nothing there about the area of responsibility that the minister responsible for the Wheat Board has assumed in conducting this bill through the House of Commons. If we are really going to come to grips with the long delayed programs for agriculture, Madam Speaker, the government must decide once and for all where the responsibility lies.

In his historic review the minister spoke as if everything wonderful had happened since 1968, but I should like to remind him that some of the programs he referred to came before 1968 under an administration that was closely geared and sensitive to the needs of the agricultural industry. I mention cash advances, ARDA, crop insurance, improvements to PFAA legislation, the pioneer bill in price stabilization for agriculture, the Farm Credit Corporation, and many other pieces of legislation which are now in need of up-grading but were not introduced by the present government.

I was pleased to learn that a former federal civil servant who has spent some years in Manitoba will return to Ottawa to look after the Farm Credit Corporation. I refer to Mr. Baldur Kristjanson who has had considerable experience in agricultural problems and understands them. I am sure he will be able to make a positive contribution toward resolving some of the all too obvious problems of the agricultural industry.

Perhaps I can relate some of the problems of the present bill to those of the bill that was first introduced in 1971. The matter of compulsory membership was one of the points in the earlier bill that was criticized. That bill made it compulsory for farmers to join the program, and the present bill seems to be disguised to give the appearance that the plan is voluntary. In effect, however, it is compulsory to an extent for some producers. It also discriminates against one particular group of producers by making it compulsory for them to join.

Under clause 5 (1) of the bill a person who is an eligible active producer, that is, a producer actually working on the land, as opposed to a producer recorded in a permit book who is a landlord or who holds a mortgage on land, of a producer, will, at the time the act comes into force, have three years to decide to cease participating under the act. Thus, between 1975 and 1978 a producer may elect to withdraw from the plan.

On December 4, 1974, the minister responsible for the Wheat Board issued a press release in regard to the stabilization plan. On page seven of that press release the title reads: "Participation Voluntary" and the release states that no farmer will be forced to participate in the plan.

I believe the minister is incorrect when he says that participation is voluntary. The dictionary definition of voluntary is that it is something brought about by one's own free will or choice. It is obvious that a producer does not have the luxury of free will or choice if a time limit of three years is imposed. Voluntary withdrawal from the plan should mean that at any time a producer can decide to abandon it. The minister's view of voluntary withdrawal as indicated in his press release is couched in terms of a restricting time period.

We had some acquaintance with the minister's press releases when he was piloting the earlier bill through the House. In reply to the accusation that we are delaying this legislation and all the wonderful farm legislation that the minister has in store for farmers in Canada, I would point to the minister's interjection in the speech made by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn) in debate yesterday, as recorded at page 5383 of Hansard.

The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar referred to the press release issued by the minister responsible for the Wheat Board, which had said that the legislation would be introduced within seven days. The minister interjected as follows:

Would the hon. member permit a question? I should like to ask whether he is aware that the reason for the delay in the introduction of the bill was the extensive consultations which were going on with the various farm organizations and our desire to incorporate positive suggestions into the bill. I hope the hon. member agrees that this was a desirable thing to do.

I hope the minister responsible for the Wheat Board will communicate that information to the Minister of Agriculture who just a week ago on the hustings was trying to blame the delay on members of the opposition. But here we have the minister responsible saying that the delay was deliberately engineered so that they could have closer consultation.

Mr. Lang: But that was a reasonable time; this is just a filibuster.

Mr. Dinsdale: Everything the government does is reasonable—in its eyes alone. We leave the decision in this regard to the people of Western Canada who have demonstrated in no uncertain terms how they feel about the government's circumlocution in this respect.

● (1520)

In view of the matter I was discussing with respect to compulsory membership, I hope that not only will the ministers responsible go out and communicate with producers, but also when this legislation gets to the committee stage that there will be some direct consultation between the committee in the field and farmer producers of western provinces, because this was one of the major issues the last time the matter of compulsory membership came up, and it is still not completely clarified in the legislation as it has been reintroduced.

I wish to deal with another matter which should be brought to the attention of farmers of Canada as they contemplate this bill—it has already been said that this is a very complex bill—and that is the problem of regionalization. Several hon. members have referred to it, and because it has already been discussed I can be brief in my treatment of this subject. It is one of the major objections to the bill, and it is a carryover from the 1971 legislation.

This is one of the objections which forced the government to withdraw the bill in 1971, after the minister responsible for the Wheat Board indicated that it was great legislation and that the members of the opposition were negligent in their duty if they did not allow its quick passage through the House.

As I read the new legislation, payment to producers will only take place if the totality of the prairie provinces suffers from severe crop damage or depressed markets. The lumping of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and some parts of British Columbia prevents an individual producer or localized region within a province from obtaining compensation if crop damage occurs. The minister has responded to this criticism by saying that the plan is not a form of insurance, but is a stabilization program. In the Globe and Mail of December 7, 1974, it was reported that the minister said at a press conference that he would propose continued study to see whether more regionalization could be put into the program. He added that too much regionalization, however, would make the plan little more than normal crop insurance.

Some hon. members have put forward the suggestion during this debate that perhaps this would be a more effective approach to the problem, and certainly that is an issue which can only be resolved by direct consultation with farmers. As reported in the Globe and Mail on December 7, the minister said, that this is not a crop insurance scheme, and that it is meant very much to complement existing insurance schemes.

Because this aspect of the bill is of great importance I feel that the minister should confirm in the House if his proposal for a study into regionalization of the legislation has been initiated and, if so, when this study will be tabled or, possibly, presented to committee. Perhaps we will hear spokesmen from the government side who can respond to that point this afternoon. The government has been strangely silent in the House during this debate. It does not have much support in western Canada, that is true, but I think it has an obligation to speak in this House as well as on the hustings, as has been the case for the past few weeks.

Some departmental officials have stated that serious and frequent meetings took place among producer groups, bureaucrats, and government officials before the final drafting of the bill was completed. Also, localization of the stabilization program was a contentious issue in 1970, and it seems that the minister is responding too little and too late to this problem. Only after the bill was tabled in the House for first reading did the minister announce a proposal to study regionalization of the legislation.

These are just two examples of the kind of criticism which can be directed at the bill. It is similar to criticism which came forward in growing crescendo as the debate proceeded back in 1971. At that time spokesmen for the government complained that opposition members from western Canada were conducting a filibuster. We are hearing the same comments today. It is not a filibuster at all. We are pointing out specific problems in the proposed legislation as it is now enshrined in Bill C-41, and I suggest that it is incumbent upon the government to respond to those specific observations rather than just to make blanket charges as it is doing on the hustings. There have been some rumblings about it this afternoon, but in the main charges that opposition members are delaying the progress of this legislation have been made on the hustings. The government claims that this bill is so good that it would immediately establish the government's reputation once and for all in western Canada. That, of course, is patent nonsense.

The last word I want to say at this stage is that when the bill goes to committee there should be a dialogue, not only between the government and the people and between the bureaucrats and the people, but also between the elected representatives of the farmers serving on the agricultural committee and the people, so that we can deal with some of the obvious weaknesses, and many of the hidden weaknesses which can only appear as the debate on the subject continues.

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Madam Speaker, I am delighted to take part in this debate. It was my privilege to be in my riding for most of last week and I had an opportunity to discuss with feed grain producers and wheat grain producers some of the aspects of this bill and Bill C-50, which is still at committee stage, and is the responsibility of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan).

I will refer to some of the comments and reactions of my constituents, but I want to start out by reading what I think is the best one liner which presently describes this most important new bill. It is taken from the February 1 issue of the "Rural Councillor", which is the official publication of the Saskatchewan Association of Rural Municipalities. Anyone from the west knows that that is a very influential and auspicious organization, for which there is no counterpart in Alberta or some of the other provinces. It is unique to Saskatchewan. Most of its pronouncements are worth reading and listening to.

I think it is worthwhile repeating in this debate how the Saskatchewan Association of Rural Municipalities described this bill:

> Whenever the net cash flow from grain sales drops below the previous five-year average, the fund will trigger a payment large enough to keep the total flow to the prairies of net cash from grain sales at the five-year average. Each participating producer will share in the payment in the ratio of his contributions in the current three-year period (the current year plus the previous two) to the total contributions of all participating producers.

I am sure all of us will admit that this is a very complicated bill and that it introduces formulae which will scare most farmers to death when trying to understand them, but I think the above quotation is a pretty concise statement of the intent of the bill. Certainly the bill's title is simple enough and gives no hint of the complicated formulae which are an integral part of it. Nevertheless, it is useful to ask what are the intentions of the bill.

I think it is appropriate to go back in history and comment on the first prairie grain stabilization bill introduced in 1970, and debated in 1971. Incidentally it was introduced by the same minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. I hasten to point out that I was not a member of the House then, but was keenly aware of the controversy surrounding the bill because of the personal involvement of my predecessor from the Medicine Hat constituency, the former minister of agriculture. That first attempt at grain stabilization, as we know, was withdrawn at the second reading stage. It is fair to ask why. Perhaps we can learn a lesson from history, now that we are debating the same topic five years later.

It seems to me that the first and foremost reason was that there had been a lack of meaningful communication with prairie grain producers—I am not speaking of grain producers' organizations such as the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the wheat pools, the National Farmers' Union and other provincial grain organizations, although I am sure their views were made loudly known. I am speaking about individual grain producers. I suggest there was a lack of communication with individual grain growers. There was no opportunity to meet them at public meetings, which should have been held in farm communities, to enable those in authority to hear some genuine discussion regarding the bill which was proposed some five years ago.

There were some other drawbacks. The compulsory aspects of that first bill must have been a real factor in the opposition of farmers to the bill. Originally farmers were to be compelled to join the scheme. That, at any rate, was the proposal. In addition, the bill was not to be regional in application; it did not take into account crop failures arising from drought, for example.

If this new bill is to gain widespread support in this House and on the part of farmers, we should learn from our experiences and the lessons of history which show why the first prairie grain stabilization bill of five years ago was not acceptable. I suggest that our first responsibility is to take the bill to the farmers. We cannot expect them to come to Ottawa and appear before our standing committee. I know that various farm organizations will indeed be in Ottawa. They have been here recently, making representations on Bill C-50, the agricultural stabilization bill. But that is not enough. You cannot expect individual farmers to come here and tell it "like it is", in their own words. It is right and proper for various farm organizations to come here but, as I say, that is not good enough. There should also be provision for public meetings at which an issue as important as this can be discussed.

I spoke about my chief concern relating to the new bill. I am concerned because in the bill there is lack of provision for a regional approach to problems. Surely this is necessary, despite obvious administrative difficulties which a regional approach may entail. I make this point even though some, probably the minister included, will argue that this aspect can be covered with crop insurance.

Why do I feel so strongly about the need for a regional approach? Let me tell the House a story relating to my constituency in southeastern Alberta. What I will say will apply as well to southwestern Saskatchewan, as both areas are in the same geographic weather belt. Without question, the No. 1 hazard in the area is not grasshoppers, is not hail, is not frost;—

Mr. Benjamin: It is Liberals.

Mr. Hargrave: —is not insects; it is drought. Drought is an occupational hazard which has been with us ever since the first sod was turned. Like it or not, that corner of southeastern Alberta and southwestern Saskatchewan is known as the drought belt of Canada. Medicine Hat is often called the drought capital of Canada.

Let me tell an interesting story which members may want to hear. Many years ago the late Professor Evan Hardy was Professor of Agricultural Engineering at the University of Saskatchewan and I well remember how he said, in his large booming voice, why he came to the prairies from Iowa, his native state. He told the class that one day he had seen the map of North America, and across the southern portion of the prairies, where Canada is, was written the expression, "The Great American Desert." Obviously it was an old map; it may have been patterned after Palliser's work; I don't know. He said, "I must go and see the great American desert." So he visited the southern prairies and he said he was right under the "D" in the desert marked on the map. The way he told the story I have never forgotten. For those who live in the area, drought is an occupational hazard. In many respects we live in the great American desert and we are right under the "D".

I suggest that there is a connection between the hazards of grain growing in my area and conditions which give rise to the short grass ranching country in that same area. This is an area in which we produce cattle, because it is dry and semi-arid. If we had four or five inches more precipitation and ten inches less evaporation, we would be growing grain everywhere except where it is too rough. Grain growers face an extra hazard, in that spring seed bed cultivation and preparation brings about a severe loss of soil moisture, a loss that is not duplicated in the production of our native grass crop, a crop that in many years is produced almost totally from snow moisture, or late fall moisture from the previous year. True, we face risks of hail and frost, but these risks are minor compared with that of drought. These risks have been somewhat alleviated in recent years by various forms of technology. I am thinking particularly of the use of herbicides, much better mechanical cultivation, seeding and harvesting equipment, and of the benefits of large-scale farming. The fact remains that drought is still our No. 1 problem. I suggest that is why some regional concept ought to be introduced in this bill.

Although we face the problem of drought, we enjoy the benefits of our chinook winds in the winter. They give us the chance to graze our cattle outside for much of the winter. Those chinook winds, of course, bring about a fantastically high evaporation rate. The evaporation rate from water surfaces of sloughs, dams, and other water basins in the area is between 36 and 44 inches per year. That is the effect of these intensely hot winds. They dry up the moisture. That evaporation rate is equal to four times our normal total precipitation per year, which is between ten and 12 inches. That precipitation includes both rain and the snow equivalent.

It is important to appreciate the background for my concern. That is why I have just told the House this little story. Let me now digress again and make some more comments about the short grass ranching country.

● (1540)

The short grass ranching country, that semi-arid country for grain growing, is the original home on the prairies of the museum piece, the grain header. That was a very special harvesting machine that was designed to cut grain almost at ground level. It was designed for that area because the grain never grew tall enough to harvest with the traditional grain binder or the combine that came into use later.

The grain header, which was pushed by horses, was unique. It simply clipped off the heads, sometimes with stubble no more than one and a half or two inches tall, collected it in a header box pulled by horses, dumped it into piles, and so on. It was a great feat for a teamster to drive the six or eight horses which pushed the machine, at the same time steering it by means of a paddle in between the teamster's knees. That was a unique approach to that semi-arid short grass country that I represent.

I want to make a brief comment about the weather, as it is now a current topic of some considerable interest in hat part of the country. Until the third week in March we had one of the mildest and driest winters that I can remember. There were no severe snowstorms. We had very little snow. There was not enough moisture in the soil to freeze. It was a very pleasant winter to farm and run cattle. In effect we had a winter drought. That is not unusual in our area.

By mid-March there was absolutely no moisture in the soil. The ground was not frozen as there was nothing to freeze. The run-off from the snow, what little there was, was almost over. Conditions were so dry I estimated that approximately 75 per cent of my range for my cattle would not even germinate and turn green. That is a rather extreme condition. I suggest it was as severe as the years 1936, 1973, and 1938, the low point of the thirties.

In the past six to seven weeks, some time after March 20 until at least yesterday, we had a fantastic amount of snow in the form of spring blizzards and rain. At one point we had between three and five feet of heavy wet snow in the area adjacent to the Cypress Hills. Most of that snow moisture has already soaked into the top soil. Very little has run off. We now have some grass and there are extremely good prospects because of these conditions.

In a period of six weeks we moved from a condition of extreme drought to one of well above average moisture. Our conditions are now such that we have enough moisture to grow a whole crop of native grass to produce the necessary feed, hay, feed grains and so on. However, one fact remains. Our growing season is almost one full month short.

There have been some serious new calf losses from exposure to the storm and calf scours. Even some mature cattle were killed in that storm in the Cypress Hills. However, on balance it was a good snowstorm in that it will do many, many times more good than the losses it caused because of its severity.

I come back to the bill to make a few further comments. There are some fundamental considerations we should note of when debating this bill. First, there is no question that both stabilization bills, Bill C-41 and Bill C-50, would me much better for all concerned if they were under one minister. It is the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) who is responsible for ensuring that the farmers and producers will obtain a reasonable income from their operations. It is the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) who is responsible for this agricultural stabilization bill. Whether we agree or not, I am sure there are interlocking features in those two bills and it would be much better if they were under one minister.

I suggest there should be no limitation on size with respect to grain producers either as to acres, bushels, or dollars. By putting on a limitation we are inviting production inefficiencies. The $25,000 eligibility level is too low, especially with today's high grain prices. This figure no longer represents a large prairie grain farm.

As the Canadian Federation of Agriculture brief on this bill points out, the plan seems to reward good fortune or good luck, and penalizes misfortune or bad luck. The prime example of bad luck is the drought hazard.

It is fundamental that governments cannot treat one agricultural commodity different from another, particularly when the commodities concerned are those of surplus producers who depend on exports to market their surplus produce. That is fundamental. It applies to grain, cattle, and even potatoes. We are involved in an export of our surplus. It is fundamental that the stabilization approach for different commodities across Canada must be reasonably the same.

The voluntary aspects of this bill or the lack of them are of serious concern to us. In this bill it starts out with a voluntary approach, and reverts to compulsory participation later. If the plan is as good as the minister feels it is then surely it will sell itself, especially with the two to one financing ratio involving the government and the taxpayers' money. Why is the compulsory feature necessary?

The various formulae required will be a major factor in selling the bill to farmers. Can it really be explained to farmers? Will the bookkeeping requirements be so immense that farmers will give up before getting started? The requirements are a bit scarey to me. What bothers the farmer is not so much the detail of keeping his books, but the matter of personal liberty infringement. No matter how often you assure the farmer that his books are not for public inspection and that no other use will be made of them, he is inherently suspicious of what use might be made of those records that he is required to keep.

One other failing relates to the producer of feed grains who is feeding them to his own cattle or hogs. Up until this time there is no provision for these grains to be included for the contributions. This feature is reported to be taken care of in the livestock stabilization plan, but so far I am not aware of this provision being allowed. This surely must be recognized. We must realize what a high percentage of feed grains are fed right on the farm and never go through the formal market, or a formal pricing agency on the prairies.

● (1550)

In concluding these remarks I should like once again to refer to two aspects which are of particular importance to me as the representative for Medicine Hat. First, I would stress the need for more attention to be given to the recognition of the hazard of drought. Some form of regional approach is obviously required. It has become evident that crop insurance is not the answer in the case of farmers who are exposed to extreme drought hazards. The premiums necessary to insure against them are so high that farmers would prefer to accept the risk.

The other point I want to emphasize is that surely the topic we are debating today, along with the agriculture stabilization bill presently in committee, should be taken to the farmers in the Wheat Board area of western Canada. Farmers should be allowed to appear in person, or through smaller organizations attend public meetings, hear explanations, and tell it like it is.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton.

Mr. Lang: Well, well!

An hon. Member: Farming in the Green Belt!

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have listened carefully to the debate in the last two days, and I hope the cries of derision when a member from Ontario stands up to discuss a bill which relates basically to western agriculture do not indicate that those members concerned, who come from various parts of the country, feel in their hearts that the prosperity of western farming has nothing to do with the prosperity of our country as a whole. I believe, as do many other people, whether they are directly connected with the industry or not, that agriculture is of the greatest importance to the future of our country and, indeed, to the future of the world.

What could be more important than the continuance in the bread basket of the world, of which Canada is one, of a strong and progressive grain growing capacity? The debate ought not to be limited, in my judgment, to those who have the honour to represent wheat producing areas. There is nothing which happens in the agricultural industry which, ultimately, does not affect us all.

We all know this to be true in the case of the oil industry whose affairs have occupied the House lately for a good many days. Attention is now being drawn to the natural gas industry, because suddenly what we have regarded for so long as an inexpensive fuel is becoming an expensive fuel for us. So we realize that what happens in one part of the country can deeply affect the lifestyle, the quality of life, and industrial progress in other parts of the nation.

Sometimes it seems to me that a failing among Canadians is the tendency to think too much along regional lines when we ought to be thinking of the nation as a whole. When I listen to my hon. friend from Medicine Hat, my hon. friend from Crowfoot, and others, and even to members on the other side when they decide to speak on agriculture from time to time, I do so with great respect because the agricultural industry is the foundation stone of progress in this country.

We are dealing today with a complicated piece of legislation. When I considered speaking on this bill I read it through from one end to the other and, having done so, I must say I shared the view expressed by my hon. friend from Don Valley that it is one of the most difficult bills with which we have been faced in the thirtieth parliament. This does not surprise me very much because its proponent is one of the most complicated and difficult ministers we have faced in this parliament.

I am sure that something as fundamental as this could not possibly be done in a more complicated way unless, instead of one lawyer looking after wheat in Canada there were two. It is an interesting thing—when you bring together a lawyer, a former law school dean, a Queen's Counsel, a Minister of Justice and put a plough in his hands, he does not know how to run it. The great difficulty he will encounter with respect to this bill will be to explain it to the agricultural community.

If the laws of the country are to mean anything, they should be understandable by the person who is engaged in the field. This applies equally to the thrust of government policy—not necessarily understandable by the druggist or by the teacher, but certainly by the farmer—and here I am thinking specifically of the bill before us. I am beginning to wonder whether the minister, with all his reputed wisdom, took this into due account and whether, with all his skills, he is likely to be able to establish in the minds of those who are intimately engaged in agriculture what this bill means, how it will operate, and what the benefits will be.

May I call it four o'clock, Madam Speaker?

PERPETUAL BONDS, 1936

SUGGESTED REDEMPTION BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should reconsider its decision not to redeem the 3 per cent perpetual bonds, issued in 1936, through a scheme whereby (a) original purchasers would receive full face value for their bonds (b) all other holders would receive payment for each bond according to the market price for the year in which the bond was purchased (c) that an immediate freeze be placed on the market value of the bonds to prevent speculation.

He said: Madam Speaker, since I first proposed this motion over a year ago the government has in fact put a redemption date on perpetual bonds, which will require me to make a slight change in my motion. However, it does not change the substance of the material I want to present today.

By way of introduction to this topic I would like to stress that my purpose here today is twofold. Under the strictest definition of parliamentary procedure I am here to exercise my option of introducing a private member's motion on perpetual bonds. But on a different level, and in a humanitarian spirit, I am here to do the government a great favour. I intend to give the government the opportunity to discredit its nationwide reputation for inaction by calling on it to rectify an injustice that has loomed too large for too long.

On March 18 of this year the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) announced that on September 15, 1996 that the $55 million worth of Government of Canada 3 per cent perpetual bonds will be redeemed at par. The minister went on to say that these perpetual bonds issued in 1936 are unique in the federal government's debt structure. They were a relatively small issue, they are rarely traded, and they represent a method of financing that has not been used by major western nations in the postwar period.

What that announcement failed to mention, of course, was the plight of many holders of perpetual bonds who would receive only a fraction of their original investment if necessity compelled them to dispose of their bonds before the 1996 maturity date. What that announcement further failed to mention was that the government has been in a legal position to pay back these bonds since September 15, 1966, but that it has refused to do so.

In copies of many letters which I have on file, the Minister of Finance has responded to the urgent inquiries of holders of these perpetual bonds by quoting cold, hard economic facts. Read in chronological order, the substance of these letters becomes oppressively repetitious. To those Canadians who are original holders, many of whom are old age pensioners living on embarrassingly modest incomes, the minister seems to have turned a stone ear.

Throughout the form letters sent to those who are anxiously awaiting some encouragement that their investments will be honoured, there is the frequent reference to "setting a dangerous precedent by agreeing to protect bond holders from the vagaries of the market". There is, too, the verbal shrug that tells these people they must have misunderstood the purpose and meaning of these perpetual bonds when they were first offered. They may have believed they were buying a retirement annuity, but that mistake has cost many people dearly.

The saga of these perpetual bonds tells its own story. In 1936 the government of this country placed an ad in the September 10 edition of the Toronto Star announcing a wonderful new concept in financing, which read in part:

No one has ever lost a dollar of principal or interest by investing in Dominion of Canada bonds. From the standpoint of security of principal and ready marketability, there is no type of security available in this country that can compare with these Dominion of Canada bonds. We recommend these bonds for investment. The yield, approximately 3.11 per cent, is an attractive one.

Put an advertisement like that in the context of the year 1936 and it is easy to understand why Mr. Mackenzie King's government would have sold a total bond issue of $55 million. These bonds were sold at a time when most Canadians had lost their savings to the depression. They were sold at a time when a worker making $50 a week was considered highly paid. These bond holders were sold on the idea that a government bond was the highest security you could possibly own. Think of the general mistrust that people held for banking institutions, and you can realize that even with bank interest paying out 3 per cent these people had no logical reason, except fear for their savings, to buy these perpetual bonds. They were putting their faith in this country's future at a time when such faith was an expensive and rare commodity.

What is the record, Madam Speaker? Current market prices for the bonds, which sold in 1936 for $96.50, stand at between $36 and $40 today. That, I remind you, is in terms of today's dollars, which compared to the dollars of the 1930's is something quite different. In 1936 $1 would pay for five pounds of sugar, one dozen eggs, one quart of milk, one pound of butter and a pound of high grade hamburger. If the government pays these bonds back in today's dollars, you might be able to see some change after a dozen eggs and a package of chewing gum. In the simplest of terms in which I can phrase it, I am asking the government to repay the original holders of these perpetual bonds without shrinking behind technicalities.

My motion No. 29 should be slightly changed to read as follows:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should reconsider its decision to redeem the 3 per cent perpetual bonds issued in 1936 on September 15, 1996 and redeem them instead through a scheme whereby (a) original purchasers would receive full face value for their bonds immediately—

Then (b) and (c) remain in the same terms.

What we call for with this motion is the simple application of commonsense and justice. For the many original holders of these perpetual bonds, redemption in 1996 means nothing whatsoever. These people should be allowed to redeem these bonds right now so they can get their money when they need it.

In the past, members of this chamber, such as the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), the hon. member for York North (Mr. Danson), a representative from the Social Credit party, and myself have met with the Minister of Finance in order to try to get something done in terms of justice for these people who bought these bonds in 1936. We are not here to pave the way for speculators who could easily profit should the government decide to give blanket recall to this $55 million issue.

However, what should be remembered and never be forgotten is that many Canadians currently holding these perpetual bonds are senior citizens who must surely be bitter about sinking their hard earned money into an apparently lost cause. I urge the government to help dispel the feelings of these Canadians who must surely sense a certain hypocrisy on the part of the government which only last election promised to take better care of its senior citizens. Many of these people feel that if the government were in fact serious it would make these perpetual bonds redeemable at face value, not in 1996, when unfortunately many of them will certainly be dead, but now when they need the money so badly.

This surely becomes a matter that is more than just dollars and cents. It is simply a matter of justice, a matter of honour. Even with the March 18 announcement to redeem these perpetuals in 1996, there are many original holders of these bonds who not only feel cheated out of their money; they must also feel a little foolish for investing the fruits of their labours in such an obviously futile exercise.

● (1610)

Surely this is not the only means we have at hand to reward these senior citizens who have worked for years, played an active role in Canada's development, and who now deserve a fair measure of the life to which all Canadians are entitled. Is it in fact fair to throw back into their faces the years of productivity and faith which they gave unquestioningly to the Government of Canada, by refusing to help them in this way?

I feel certain that the government recognizes its obligation to those who cared enough to invest in their country's future in the depth of the depression of the 1930's to do something now to assist them in their present position of adversity.

I realize the complex problems and difficulties of a government commencing on a program of assuring the value of bonds in an inflationary situation, and all the difficulties this would bring about in terms of debt refinancing and management. What we are asking for is simply to recognize the importance of taking that small portion of the outstanding debt of the Government of Canada today out of its portfolio. It is a minuscule portion, practically nothing. It amounts to only $55 million out of the total portfolio. These bonds were sold to a great many Canadians who really believed they were buying security that they could use to help support them in their old age.

Three per cent perpetual bonds have no place in the portfolio of the Canadian government's bond holdings. I urge the government to take some action, in the name of justice and equity, without in any way upsetting the whole pattern of government financing, to remove these perpetual bonds from its holdings, thereby rewarding these people and allowing them to recover their investment of 1936 in the form of security. I am sure these would never be used today, and will probably never be used again. The government should get these out of its portfolio by allowing these people to redeem their bonds at face value. This will assist them to deal with the problems they face when living in this inflationary economy.

Perpetual Bonds

[Translation]

Mr. Serge Joyal (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Madam Speaker, I listened very closely to the motion of the hon. member on the perpetual bonds, and was surprised to note, in the light of his statement, that his main arguments in support of the motion concern the protection of the senior citizens who bought those bonds in 1936. I shall come back to that aspect of his arguments shortly.

The government has always been concerned about ensuring, throughout the period of inflation we have known and unfortunately still persists, that our senior citizens have sufficient income to meet their needs with regard to housing as well as to current consumer goods. That aspect of his statement, if it were as solid as he endeavoured to prove, should suffice to convince the government to accept the motion he presented.

However, if we try to recall the situation when these bonds were issued in 1936, we realize that the situation was not exactly as he described it, and that the importance he gives to the quality of the holders of these perpetual bonds is not as crucial as he seems to suggest.

Before coming back to this aspect, I would like to remind the House that on March 18, 1975, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) published a press release announcing that the $55 million of perpetual bonds of the Canadian government, which had been issued at 3 per cent, would be redeemable at par value on September 15, 1996. The Minister of Finance went on to say: —that the perpetual bonds issued in 1936 were a unique form of financing in the debt structure of the federal government. In fact, it was a relatively small issue which resulted in few transactions. No other western industrial nation has used this method of financing since after the war. This decision to redeem the perpetual bonds on a precise date, thirty years after their maturity date, makes these bonds comparable to any other current bond issue of the Canadian government.

It is noteworthy to try to describe the political and economic situation of the period when these bonds were issued, and particularly to compare this with the situation in England at that time since the practise of issuing perpetual bonds in that country then seemed on the uprise. I will come back to this later by using a few figures to support my argument. In 1936, the Canadian government issued $55 million worth of perpetual bonds bearing interest at 3 per cent at a cost of $96.50. Those bonds, as I mentioned earlier, were perpetual. Consequently, they were eternal on the stock market and cannot be directly redeemed at maturity. This issue was offered either for cash payments or in exchange for some bonds which had reached maturity in 1936 and which had been issued for a 4-year period.

On the $55 million worth of bonds available, a number of bonds valued at $11.3 million were exchanged by bond holders, as I said earlier, whose bonds had reached maturity. Therefore, the people who have directly made some outlays and paid their bonds in cash in 1936 have bought $43 million in bonds.

According to original certificates, interest coupons should have been semi-annual and covered a period of 30 years, that is enough semi-annual coupons had been issued for 30 years, and the last of them was to become payable on September 15, 1966.

[Mr. Gillies.]

When those bonds were issued, their attraction on the Canadian market was strong enough since at that time they offered a fairly important yield, considering interest rates, all the more so as they had been widely distributed on the Canadian market. That was the first issue of perpetual bonds, and it aroused the interest of Canadian buyers so that an important section of Canadian investors decided at the time to invest in those bonds.

It should be noted however that at the same time, in the United Kingdom, that was a very important means of redeeming the national debt. In 1935, over 60 per cent of the United Kingdom national debt was financed through perpetual bonds whereas in Canada at the same time such bonds accounted all in all for only a limited fraction of the aggregate debt.

That is not without interest, and we should keep it in mind. As a matter of fact, as I said earlier, over 60 per cent of the United Kingdom debt was financed through that type of bonds, and I should specify what happened to them in the context of this period. Indeed both financial agencies and investors in the United Kingdom were perfectly aware of the implications and character of that kind of financing. Perpetual bonds were issued for the first time in the United Kingdom in 1853. That issue yielded an interest of 2½ per cent and was redeemable at par at government option at any time.

That issue was redeemed afterwards, and it can be remarked that in the whole history of the financing of the British debt, the 1883 issue was the largest ever. As a matter of fact, $257 million worth of bonds were issued in 1883 at an interest rate of 2½ per cent, redeemable at any time after April 5, 1923, and, of course, with an option or at the government's convenience, and I insist on the "government's convenience", because, Madam Speaker, that was one of the simplest ways of financing the public debt. In fact, when the bond bears a surrender date, the government may decide, depending on the fluctuation in interest rates, to redeem or not to redeem it. If the interest rates decline while the option is open, the government may choose to redeem the bond and refinance it at a lower rate. On the contrary, if the interest rate is very high, the government may simply leave the bond on the market and wait for a more favourable stock market situation.

It is thought that more than $3.5 billion in this type of bonds are still circulating on the financial market of England and are redeemable by the government at any time, whereas I pointed out earlier that the Canadian issue totals only $55 million. Immediately, Madam Speaker, one considers the different emphasis that we in Canada have laid over the years on this type of public investment to finance the public debt.

In the United Kingdom, as I mentioned a while ago, the most interesting of these issues are those that were floated to finance the war debt bearing interest at 2½ per cent, as well as another issue whose actual objective was to finance the war effort and which bore interest at 3½ per cent, transacted on the financial market bearing interests at the relatively high rates of 16½ and 23 per cent. Anyone can realize, Madam Speaker, that such a form of investment in England was truly popular.

And it is here that attention must be paid to the remarks of the mover. All the bonds involved are redeemable at the option of the government. All English financial institutions that are still dealing with such bonds know perfectly well that the holders of these obligations are subject to having their bonds redeemed as soon as the government considers that the rates of interest are diminishing and that it is in a position to refinance its debt at a lower cost.

Because of the historical principle which is involved in the bargaining of bonds in the United Kingdom, it is always advantageous to redeem these bonds the moment the interest rate starts going down. I should like to quote one of the factors of this institution which I feel perfectly characterizes the action the government took in its news release dated March 18. The principle is as follows:

● (1620)

[English]

The underlying rationale of this was to minimize public debt charges in the interest of taxpayers in general. In other words, it is absolutely clear that options to redeem undated or perpetual bonds were there to protect taxpayers and not investors.

[Translation]

What I mean by that, Madam Speaker, is that the interest in the government buying back those bonds is primarily to protect the taxpayer. Indeed, if the government decided to buy back the bonds for which it has a purchase option at a time when the interest rate is very high, the taxpayer of this country would be paying for the higher cost of refunding the debt. British institutions always recognized that that element was not the bjective pursued in the issuance of perpetual bonds. It was rather to bring relief to the taxpayer who has to pay a higher interest to refund the public debt. I think that element is very important. I do not mean to say that the mover was not aware at the element, quite the contrary, he gave it an extension which I think does not exist in this case. That element is represented by the holders of those obligations.

We did some research to try and determine what type of people on the Canadian market still hold perpetual bonds today so as to know, s the hon. member pointed out, whether those holders were small savers, small investors, and whether they were actually suffering any real damage from the government's decision to buy back those bonds.

It became evident, Madam Speaker, early in 1974—those are the latest figures we have—that 41 per cent of bond holders hold bonds payable to the bearer, meaning that it is rather difficult to determine exactly what is the quality, the income or the financing position of the holder. It also became evident that out of the $55 million worth of bonds $33 million were held by 3,946 investors. So, $561,000 or about 1 per cent, are owned by the same investors who bought in 1936. So, only $561,000 out of $55 million are still in the hands of the same investors. I think the possibility that a majority of those bonds being held by older people is quite questionable, Madam Speaker, since as the records seem to show only 1.7 percent of holders are the same people who bought those bonds in 1936.

Moreover, it has been established that only four people own over 50 per cent of the total amount of $561,000, that is, nearly $260,000. These may be their only savings or financial resources, Madam Speaker, but in view of the importance of the amount, it is very unlikely that their circumstances are those which the hon. member described a while ago.

Finally, it has been established that out of the $33 million I mentioned earlier, $9 million have been held by the same investors since 1966, which means that two thirds of the total $55 million have been held by the same people since 1966. It is therefore very unlikely that these are senior people who are in the difficult circumstances the hon. member described a moment ago.

Therefore, I would like to stress that considerable changes have occurred since 1936 in the nature of perpetual bond holders. It is highly improbable these holders are elder people in a difficult revenue situation and therefore that they might suffer considerable loss when the government implements its decision to redeem the bonds in 1996.

Further, I would emphasize for the hon. member's benefit that the yield of these bonds since April 1974 compares favourably in my view with the prevailing market rates.

To illustrate, the interest rate was 8.33 per cent on April 30, 1974. It had decreased to 7.79 per cent in November 1974, it was up again to 8 per cent on February 28, 1975, that is three months ago, and since April 25, 1975 it has been 9 per cent.

Therefore, the return on these bonds to Canadian holders is in no way inferior to that on comparable bonds on the market. So it is highly improbable Canadian taxpayers will lose if the decision is implemented, as announced by the minister.

Quite the contrary, I believe that, according to the principles applied by British financial institutions, the government should take the opportunity of slumping interest rates to redeem bonds and refinance public debt, to the benefit of every Canadian taxpayer rather than that of one class of investors only.

[English]

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, I wish to add a few words to the debate in support of the motion of my friend and colleague, the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies), who was referred to in the House the other day by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) as one of the outstanding economists of Canada. I should like to support this motion not only because I share the high opinion of the hon. member for Don Valley as expressed by the right hon. member for Prince Albert, but also for humanitarian reasons.

● (1630)

I should like to say to the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Joyal), who has just spoken so eloquently, that I am not interested in the proportion that is being held by contractors and used as security by banks, and I am not interested in that proportion held by people who know what they are doing in today's shifty financial world; rather I wish to speak for the original holders. I consider it quite unfair for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) to say, as he did on March 19 when speaking of these bonds, that the yield is now 8.52 per cent, compared to 9.5 per cent on current government bonds.

The hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont is trying to peddle the same line, but he should know there is no such yield to the original purchaser. The yield to the original purchaser is 3 per cent, and when the bonds were put on the market in 1936 the purchasers bought them in good faith. If you were old enough to buy a bond in 1936, without doubt you are now old enough to be an old age pensioner. They bought the bonds believing in the financial credibility of the government, and I believe this government should be fiscally responsible even though 40 years have elapsed.

These poor people who are now drawing their old age pension have supplemented their income with this miserable three per cent return on their original investment. But the original investment was made with very hard dollars indeed. As pointed out by the hon. member for Don Valley, in those days a dollar was something to behold as far as purchasing power was concerned, compared to today's super inflated dollar.

An old age pensioner would need to hold $50,000 worth of bonds before realizing any net gain from having entrusted the government with that money. In 1936 almost no one had $50,000. Everyone who bought bonds in a lesser amount is now receiving no material benefit whatsoever. The reason is that 3 per cent of $50,000 comes to about $1,500 a year. An old age pensioner with an income of $1,500 a year does not receive the guaranteed income supplement and would have been just as well not to have bought the bonds at all. Some of them gave up a tremendous amount in real money because they trusted the government of the day. For the past nine years, since it became legal for the government to pay off these bonds, these people have been waiting for some action.

This spring the Minister of Finance did finally agree to do something but the measure he took was of little value to the people about whom I am concerned. That is why the hon. member for Don Valley divided his motion into parts in order to make a case for the original purchasers of the bonds. Surely we can do no more than give them back their original money's worth. I would strongly recommend to the members of the government that for once in their long reign over this country they treat these old age pensioners with equity.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I wish to say a few words in support of the plea made by the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies). I found it rather amazing to listen to the argument put forward by the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Joyal). If he could persuade the people who own these bonds that they are really getting 8 per cent or 9 per cent, he should go into the public relations business. Of course if he could get the government to depress the value of those bonds to $10, then $3 would be 30 per cent, and if he could get the government to depress it to $3, the interest would be 100 per cent. That sounds ridiculous, but I suggest that the arguments put forward by the hon. member and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) are just as ridiculous.

The plea made by the hon. member for Don Valley, and supported by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon), is not that a bonanza be given to speculators who picked up the bonds in recent years but rather that we protect the position of the original purchasers. There are others who purchased in the years shortly after 1936 who deserve some protection as well, and I think the hon. member for Don Valley has covered that very well in part (b) of his motion.

It seems to me that when the problem of these perpetual bonds finally became apparent to the Minister of Finance and he realized that he had to do something about them, there were two aspects to be considered.

One of the problems was that of the government itself. It is true that the bonds were perpetual. By all the dictionaries that means they would go on forever. But no government can rest easily with the idea of having bonds around forever and a day and a thousand years after that, so this government tried to find some way to get rid of the proposition.

The other aspect of the problem was the rights of the original holders and of those who obtained the bonds shortly after 1936.

Those were the two problems; one to get the government out of the business of perpetual bonds and the other, meet the needs and the rights of the holders of the bonds. The Minister of Finance came up with a clever idea to meet the first problem and get the government off the hook, but he has done nothing to meet the needs of the people who in good faith put their money in government bonds many years ago.

All the government has done is get itself out of the business. The other problem, namely, what to do for the people who hold the bonds, still stands. I think the hon. member for Don Valley is quite right in proposing this motion this afternoon.

I know we are continually fed the idea that when those people bought these bonds it was in the nature of a contract. That argument is advanced as well on the matter of government annuities. But, Madam Speaker, there are other bonds and investments concerning which the terms have been re-written. We have escalation of pensions of all kinds; Canada savings bonds have been improved so that there is more interest than was in the original contract. So I think it is unfair to discriminate against the holders of annuities and against those who bought these perpetual bonds in 1936.

Accordingly, Madam Speaker, I want to indicate full support for the position taken today by the hon. member for Don Valley.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt).

Mr. Dinsdale: The voice of the little people now.

Mrs. Simma Holt (Vancouver-Kingsway): That's right; Madam Speaker.

The motion in the name of the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) embraces proposals which have been enunciated in the House for some time. Were it possible to find the original investors and authenticate those people who invested in Canada in its time of trouble, I would say certainly we should redeem these bonds immediately, or in 1976, 30 years later, instead of 60 years later.

● (1640)

If the argument the hon. member put forward was on humanitarian grounds, I suggest that there are other ways of using this $55 million. I would go even further and perhaps disagree with hon. members on this side of the House, and eliminate OFY grants and LIP grants, and use that money for the aged to travel and to make their golden years rich. I agree that they did invest, but we must remember that they invested at a time of doubt, when Canada was not secure and when, as the hon. member for Don Valley said, there was distrust in banks. At that time people took risks and gambled.

I would very much like to find other ways of using Canadian dollars for housing for the aged and for those who gambled in Canada's future, for travel, marketplace subsidies, and many more practical and realistic things, but it is virtually impossible for the fiscal agents of the government to determine the original purchasers. Those are the ones about whom we should be concerned. It is impossible for many reasons.

Only about 41 per cent of the issue is held in bearer form. Some original purchasers may have opted for bonds in registered form subsequent to their original purchase date. The date of registration would then have to be regarded as a date of purchase unless proof could be provided to the contrary. Some original purchasers could have switched from registered to bearer bonds, and have traded subsequently in the market. Bonds currently held by them could therefore have been purchased at prices below issue price.

There is another reason that it would be impossible to find the original purchasers. A requirement for proof of purchase would discriminate against investors holding bonds in bearer form in comparison with registered bond holders who have retained their bonds in this form since 1936. Many of the original bond holders are no longer alive, with the obligations being presently held in their estates, or with ownership transferred to their beneficiaries. Since these beneficiaries have not held these obligations since the issue date and have not personally suffered any hardship due to the low level of interest income or reduced market value of these securities, it would be necessary but invidious to determine whether such bonds should be redeemed at full face value.

Another difficulty is that the proposals will not compensate investors who sold or were obliged to sell at recent price levels below cost, although they may have held bonds for many years.

If compensation were to be paid, investors who purchased subsequent to the issue date—and in the words of the hon. member for Don Valley, "according to the market price for the year in which the bonds were purchased"—it would require proof of date of purchase and of price, since the records do not contain such information. Many investors would not now have purchase invoices and could therefore justly claim discrimination in favour of those investors who have retained these records, which would need corroboration in any case. If investors were not able to prove date of purchase it would be exceptionally difficult to determine on what basis compensation should be calculated.

Perpetual Bonds

The government may offer to purchase bonds at prices below par value, but it cannot compel a holder to redeem the bonds at any price below par value.

It would not be possible to compel bond holders who purchased their bonds after the issue date to redeem their bonds at some level based on the market price in the year of purchase. Bond holders wishing to retain their investment would, in effect, be obliged to accept a price which has been frozen should they wish to sell at a later date. This would be unacceptable to a large number of investors.

There are many investors who have purchased perpetual bonds in recent years because of their attractive market yields. These investors may not wish to redeem these obligations. A sudden freeze in price, and consequently the reduced marketability of the bonds, will therefore be discriminatory.

Various governments have from time to time reviewed their policies with respect to the 1936 issue, but all have consistently reached the conclusion that it would not have been generally in the nation's best interest to redeem or to fix a maturity date on these obligations. The sharp increase in the level of interest rates has again necessitated a reconsideration of this matter and, in particular, the reconsideration of possible ways in which the alleged hardships by a minority of investors could be alleviated.

Although the 1936 perpetual bond issue is unique, a change in yield or an offer of immediate redemption will contain the undoubted implication that holders of marketable government securities ought to be and are protected from the vagaries of the market. The encouragement or acceptance of such a principle, even in circumstances designed to alleviate hardships, would lead to demands for similar treatment by other investors in marketable securities of the government, the vast majority of which are now trading well below issue prices.

It may be argued that the adjustments in the rates on Canada Savings Bonds have already breached this principle. This is not, however, the case, since one of the essential features of the Canada Savings Bonds is the unfettered right conferred upon the holder to redeem the bonds for cash in full at any time.

Having regard to all the circumstances and, although not necessarily to the current advantage of taxpayers, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) announced on March 18, 1975, that the 1936 issue of perpetual bonds would be redeemed at par on September 15, 1996. Legal process will be completed by June 7, at which time the Government of Canada will be irrevocably committed by law to redeem the bonds in 1996. Prior to the announcement, the bonds were quoted at $37.25 per $100 for a yield of 8 per cent in perpetuity. At the present time the bonds are trading at a price of about $45.25 for a yield of 8.67 per cent to maturity. This yield is now comparable to any other long term Government of Canada marketable issues. I therefore stand against the proposal, and I wish that this money and other moneys could be used to better benefit pensioners, if that is truly the concern of the hon. member for Don Valley.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Madam Speaker, I certainly do not want to be the one responsible for talking this matter out. There are only one or two points I wish to make.

I think the measures announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) do not meet the problem. The real difficulty lies in the fact that the big, sophisticated investor and those who had bonds and securities, have unloaded them. The people holding bonds are the little people, and those are the people who should be helped. I think the motion is a good one.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Francis: I would like to make one suggestion which I hope the Minister of Finance will consider. In addition to the redemption date there should be an annual sinking fund. I think the Government of Canada should go into the open market and buy a certain number of these debentures each year. The effect will be to improve their price and reduce the supply on the market. As the debentures and perpetual bonds reach maturity, they would come much closer to their face value. It would be a very inexpensive measure compared with the figures dealt with in the budget of the Minister of Finance. But it would be a simple equity to the people who are deprived of their confidence in the government. Those people are mostly elderly people who did not know enough about the operation of financial markets to unload these bonds before they reached the disgraceful point at which they are now.

● (1650)

Mr. Ross Milne (Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I should like to make a few comments on this question.

An hon. Member: Why don't you sit down?

Mr. Milne: Madam Speaker, I wish to speak on this subject, not because I have a financial background, nor because I am possessed of financial wizardry, as is the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies), nor because I have established a reputation in the financial world, as has the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), but because I am concerned about it. This concern has been communicated to me in a number of letters. I think most members have received letters in response to the advertisement which was placed in the newspapers and which announced that the government will redeem these bonds in 1996 at par.

The point I make is this: where does one draw the limits, if one wants to be fair? I have listened to a number of solutions put forward by hon. members who spoke in support of this motion. Although their suggestions, if followed, might help to solve the problem for a number of people, they would only create problems for others. Unless the government could buy out the issue, I do not see where the difficulties could end. As I say, I have no background in finance and I am not a lawyer. But I have talked to a number of people knowledgeable in this subject who have practised law and who have settled the estates of rural people. Actually, I think we are talking about only some relatively small investments which many of our senior citizens possess.

[Mr. Francis.]

If you talk to lawyers who deal with people's estates, particularly in rural areas, you will find that people possess a number of bonds which relate to utilities on which the interest rate is even lower than on the bonds we are considering. Certainly people many years ago bought bonds associated with railway projects, and with projects in which the government participated. Many of those bonds are almost worthless now. How are you to deal with such people? Some of them have been hurt badly as a result of investing in the investment climate of those days. They were hurt when they tried to reach for a star in a period of economic hardship. Are we to ignore this large group and show concern only for 148 people? I do not think anyone has said so far that there are only 148 bond holders left of the original number in 1936 who bought these bonds. Only 148 people hold these outstanding bonds. Suppose you do redeem these bonds, as some suggest, what are you to do about those who purchased bonds in 1937 and 1938?

It is difficult to define limits. For example, I suggest that members who have met constituents in their ridings in connection with the $500 first-time housebuyer program announced in this House and the $1,500 Ontario program which is aimed at the same end will know how hard it is to define the date on which the program was to start and the conditions which limit the program.

How would the proposal of the hon. member for Don Valley be carried out? How can we do what he suggests and be fair with other people? How can we deal fairly with people who held these bonds in the 1930s and the 1940s?

Mr. Gillies: Look at section (b) of the motion.

Mr. Milne: Frankly, I do not know how you can validate the period in time at which these people purchased these bonds. Perhaps the difficulty would not be so great if the date of purchase could be verified, if it had been recorded—

Mr. Gillies: Read section section (b) of the motion.

Mr. Milne: I have read it. I suggest that the hon. member, in his argument, did not say how he would handle this problem. I find that difficult to understand. I have all the sympathy in the world for those affected by the motion, and I agree with much that has been said on this subject, but I have yet to hear clearly how this suggestion is to be implemented.

I think the argument was advanced by the mover of the motion that, essentially, you would deal with the original purchasers. Again I say there are only 148 of those original purchasers left. Then it was argued, subsequently, that this provision should be extended to those who have held these bonds for nearly as long as the original purchasers. That is the point. How can you determine this?

Mr. Gillies: Will the hon. member permit a question? Does the hon. member not think that section (b) of the motion deals with that particular problem?

Mr. Milne: That is the very point I was making: how does one validate the dates and the length of time for which people have held these bonds? Are you to take their word? How are you to do this? That is the entire problem.

Mr. Gillies: All you need do is look at the bond register.

Mr. Milne: With respect, I do not think so. If there were some way of accurately knowing for what length of time people held these bonds, in the late 1930s or early 1940s, I could accept the hon. member's argument. We do not know for how long present holders have held the bonds.

I understand the hon. member for Vancouver Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) argued that there is no register, that there is no way to validate who held these bonds, and for how long. I am just arguing the case. I merely want to know how you are to treat fairly those people who held the bonds in the 1930s and 1940s.

There was also some question as to how good a value these bonds are. I was advised not long ago that there have been some sales, that there had been some movement of these bonds, and this puzzles me. If they are as bad a buy as some say, why would people given present day economic conditions be buying them?

Mr. Gillies: They are speculating.

Mr. Milne: If they are speculators, that is fine.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): They are paying 38 cents on the dollar.

Mr. Milne: I am merely trying to argue that perhaps the yield is not over 8 per cent. I do not follow the mathematics of this business and do not know if I am correct. I think the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) has looked at this problem; I think perhaps more than half the members of this House have talked to him about this particular problem, or they have written to him. Some have met with him, in the company of other members.

Perpetual Bonds

Let me indicate that I am in favour of some solution to this problem. I should be only too happy to respond favourably to my constituents who have written to me about this matter if there were some way—I am sure the Minister of Finance has said this too—to deal equitably with all those people who today hold those bonds, the maturity date of which is, as set out in the advertisement, 1996. To this day I have not heard how this problem is to be solved, except for those 148 previously alluded to. What are you to do with regard to the people who have held these bonds for almost as long as the original investors, who have incurred as great a penalty in their investment portfolio as the original investors, but whose length of possession cannot be validated?

I sympathize with those who mean well. But I suggest that many who bought investments in those days gone by may well have misunderstood the nature of these bonds.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Question.

Mr. Milne: Some may have thought that the bonds had no maturity date but were recallable. Probably a number of Canadian investors incorrectly assumed that the bonds would mature after 30 years. When the government decided not to exercise its call option, new certificates were issued, and now of course we have 30 years to wait before the government will call them.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please.

Mr. Prud'homme: Madam Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The hour set aside for private members business having expired and it being five o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.
