Debates of the Senate

OFFICIAL REPORT

Thursday, May 16, 1963

OPENING OF FIRST SESSION TWENTY-SIXTH PARLIAMENT

Parliament having been summoned by Proclamation to meet this day for the dispatch of business:

The Senate met at 10 a.m.

NEW SENATOR INTRODUCED

The Clerk of the Senate: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform the Senate that I have received a certificate from the Secretary of State of Canada showing that has been summoned to the Senate.

Hon. Maurice Bourget, of Lévis, Quebec, was introduced between Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford) and Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt, and presented Her Majesty's writ of summons, which was read by the Clerk Assistant, and took the legally prescribed oath, which was administered by the Clerk.

The Clerk of the Senate: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform the Senate that the Honourable Maurice Bourget has made and subscribed the declaration of qualification required of him by the British North America Act, 1867, in my presence, as the Commissioner appointed to receive and witness the said declaration.

SPEAKER OF THE SENATE

READING OF COMMISSION APPOINTING HON. MR. BOURGET

Hon. Maurice Bourget, having taken the Clerk's chair, rose and said:

(Translation):

Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform you that a Commission has been issued under the Great Seal, appointing me Speaker of the Senate.

(Text):

The said Commission was then read by the Clerk.

The Hon. the Speaker then took the Chair at the foot of the Throne, to which he was conducted by Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford) and Hon. Mr. Brooks, the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod preceding.

Prayers.

COMMUNICATION FROM GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SECRETARY

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have received the following communication:

GOVERNMENT HOUSE
Ottawa

16th May, 1963

Sir,

I am commanded to inform you that the Honourable J. R. Cartwright, M.C., Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber to open the Twenty-Sixth Parliament of Canada on this day, Thursday the 16th May, 1963 at 10.30 a.m.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient Servant,
A. G. Cherrier
Assistant Secretary
to the Governor General.

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate.

NEW SENATORS

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform the Senate that the Clerk has received certificates from the Secretary of State of Canada showing that the following persons, respectively, have been summoned to the Senate:

Hon. David James Walker, P.C.
Doctor Orville Howard Phillips

NEW SENATORS INTRODUCED

The Hon. the Speaker having informed the Senate that there were senators without, waiting to be introduced:

The following honourable senators were introduced; presented Her Majesty's writs of summons, which were read by the Clerk Assistant; took the legally prescribed oath, which was administered by the Clerk, and were seated:

Hon. David James Walker, P.C., of Toronto, Ontario, introduced between Hon. Mr. Brooks and Hon. Mr. Willis.

Hon. Orville Howard Phillips, of Alberton, Prince Edward Island, introduced between Hon. Mr. Brooks and Hon. Mr. MacDonald.

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the honourable senators named above had made and subscribed the declaration of qualification required by the British North America Act, 1867, in the presence of the Clerk of the Senate, the Commissioner appointed to receive and witness the said declaration.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

Hon. J. R. Cartwright, M.C., Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated,

The Hon. the Speaker commanded the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod to proceed to the House of Commons and acquaint that House that it is the Honourable the Deputy of the Governor General's desire that they attend him immediately in the Senate Chamber.

Who being come,

The Hon. the Speaker said:

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General has been pleased to cause Letters Patent to be issued under his Sign Manual and Signet constituting the Honourable John R. Cartwright, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, his Deputy, to do in His Excellency's name all acts on his part necessary to be done during His Excellency's pleasure.

The Commission was read by the Clerk.

The Hon. the Speaker said:

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

I have it in command to let you know that His Excellency the Governor General does not see fit to declare the causes of summoning the present Parliament of Canada until a Speaker of the House of Commons shall have been chosen, according to law; but this afternoon at the hour of three o'clock His Excellency will declare the causes of his calling this Parliament.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

COMMUNICATION FROM GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SECRETARY

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have received the following communication:

GOVERNMENT HOUSE
Ottawa
16th May, 1963

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Administrator of the Government will arrive at the Main Entrance of the Parliament Buildings at 3.00 p.m. on this day, Thursday the 16th May, 1963, and when it has been signified that all is in readiness, will proceed to the Chamber of the Senate to open formally the Twenty-Sixth Parliament of Canada.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Esmond Butler,
Secretary to the Governor General

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate

On motion of Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt, the Senate adjourned until 2.45 p.m.

SECOND SITTING

The Senate met at 2.45 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At three o'clock His Excellency the Administrator having come and being seated upon the Throne,

The Hon. the Speaker commanded the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod to proceed to the House of Commons and acquaint that House that it is His Excellency the Administrator's pleasure that they attend him immediately in the Senate Chamber.

The House of Commons being come,

Their Speaker, the Hon. Alan Macnaughton, said:

May it please Your Excellency,

The House of Commons has elected me their Speaker, though I am but little able to fulfil the important duties thus assigned to me.

If, in the performance of those duties, I should at any time fall into error, I pray that the fault may be imputed to me, and not to the Commons, whose servant I am, and who, through me, the better to enable them to discharge their duty to their Queen and country, humbly claim all their undoubted rights and privileges, especially that they may have freedom of speech in their debates, access to Your Excellency's person at all seasonable times, and that their proceedings may receive from Your Excellency the most favourable construction.

The Hon. the Speaker of the Senate answered:

Mr. Speaker, I am commanded by His Excellency the Administrator to declare to you that he freely confides in the duty and attachment of the House of Commons to Her Majesty's person and Government, and not doubting that their proceedings will be conducted with wisdom, temper and prudence, he grants, and upon all occasions will recognize and allow their constitutional privileges. I am commanded also to assure you that the Commons shall have ready access to His Excellency upon all seasonable occasions and that their proceedings, as well as your words and actions, will constantly receive from him the most favourable construction.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

His Excellency the Administrator was then pleased to open the First Session of the Twenty-Sixth Parliament with the following speech:

Honourable Members of the Senate:

I welcome you to the first session of the Twenty-Sixth Parliament of Canada.

I am honoured today to act for His Excellency the Governor General, whose place in the respect of the Canadian people is second only to that of Her Majesty the Queen and whose early recovery to full health is sincerely wished by us all. I know that all members of this Parliament would wish to join in expressing to Her Majesty the sentiments of loyalty which were recently conveyed to her by the Prime Minister.

You are deliberating the course of our country in times of great change throughout the world. These are times that test old virtues. They are times that open up new opportunities. Familiar ways of thought and action are becoming less certain guides. Many old paths are no longer open to us. The task before us is to seek out, with wisdom and imagination, those new paths that will lead us surely forward.

As Canadians we can work with hope. Our country has a proud history. Now there are expanding opportunities open to us. But they depend on our overcoming serious problems. It is only with courage and perseverance and hard work that we will achieve the better life that is within our power, for ourselves and for our children.

Our progress is the work of all the people. In a free country, we are all responsible. The determination of my Ministers is that the Government through its policies will contribute the leadership, the purpose, the decision that are its responsibilities to the people.

The character and strength of our nation are drawn from the diverse cultures of people who came from many lands to create the Canada that is ours today. The greater Canada that is in our power to make will be built not on uniformity but on continuing diversity, and particularly on the basic partnership of English-speaking and French-speaking people. My ministers are determined that the partnership shall be truly equal. For that high purpose they are establishing, in consultation with the governments of the provinces, a commission charged to study, thoroughly but urgently, how the fundamentally bicultural character of Canada may best be assured and the contribution of other cultures recognized.

To make us a more united people, the Government will in all things strive to strengthen and to give new direction to our Canadian confederation. It will foster the spirit of co-operative federalism, fully respecting the rights of the provinces while safeguarding and extending the equality of opportunity which properly belongs to all Canadians in all parts of our country. In these purposes, as in others, my ministers will seek frequent consultation with the governments of the provinces.

The principles of Canadian external policy are those of the United Nations Charter, to maintain peace with justice and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms; and to promote the welfare of all peoples by international co-operation. My ministers will seek solutions to international problems by diplomacy and negotiation. In particular, my ministers will strive to lessen international tensions and halt the arms race by seeking measures of controlled disarmament, including a treaty to end nuclear tests under reasonable safeguards.

Meantime, my ministers believe that there is no alternative to the maintenance of the defences of the free nations as a deterrent to war. In particular, a strong North Atlantic Treaty Organization, including adequate defence on the North American continent, remains essential to Canada's security. For this purpose, the armed forces of Canada should have available the modern weapons necessary to perform effectively the defensive tasks which Canada has undertaken in the alliance. Next week, we will take pleasure in welcoming to Ottawa the Ministerial Council of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. My Government is convinced that on the foundation of the present alliance a true community of the Atlantic peoples will one day be achieved.

In recent weeks the Prime Minister has had friendly and constructive discussions with the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom and with the President of the United States of America. By such visits and other means the Government will continue to improve political and economic relationships with other countries. It is my ministers' intention to assist in enhancing the unique value of the Commonwealth partnership in international relations.

Canada's economic progress is vitally dependent on vigorous economic expansion throughout the world. We must expect continuing rapid changes in international trading relationships, changes that face Canada both with problems of adjustment and with new opportunities. My ministers believe that the nations can best achieve economic progress through policies that steadily reduce the barriers limiting trade. It is equally important to pursue active policies for the economic development of the newer nations, for the expansion of trade in primary commodities at reasonably stable prices, and for the improvement of international payments.

Canada will take a constructive part in trade and other economic negotiations. In order to increase employment and production in Canada, it is the purpose of my ministers to expand Canada's export trade, to strengthen our payments balance with other countries, and to ensure increasingly high confidence in our economy and currency.

Steady work is the basic need on which men and women depend for the well-being of themselves and their families. Unemployment, on the serious scale of recent years, is therefore the most urgent of our domestic problems. To provide the many new jobs that are needed every year, we must create new industries. The fiscal and monetary policies of the Government will give priority to the encouragement of soundly-based industrial expansion.

Provision will be made to assist labour and management to make manpower adjustments required by technological and other industrial changes. The special assistance for technical training will be extended in co-operation with the provinces.

Other measures will be put before you to assist in increasing production and employment in Canada.

You will be asked to provide for the early establishment of a Department of Industry, which will foster industrial expansion and provide a central point to which industry can look for consultation, stimulus and assistance. It will be proposed that, within the new Department, there will be established an Area Development Agency. This agency will work with the provincial governments and other organizations to co-ordinate programs for parts of the country where, because of chronic unemployment, a special thrust for development is needed.

Amendments to the Atlantic Development Board Act will be proposed, to strengthen the Board and to provide for a capital assistance fund through which it can promote basic projects in the Atlantic region.

You will be asked to establish a Municipal Development and Loan Board, through which municipalities may obtain, with the approval of the provinces, loans and grants to carry out projects which will increase employment and improve services. Amendments to the National Housing Act will also be proposed.

A measure will be placed before you to establish a Canada Development Corporation, by means of which Canadians can more readily direct their savings to the building of new Canadian industries and to increasing the Canadian ownership of existing industries, which is one of the important objectives of the Government.

A measure will be placed before you to establish an Economic Council of Canada, in order to assist the Government, industry and labour to develop means of ensuring in Canada the highest possible levels of employment, of efficient production, and of sustained growth for our economy.

My ministers will pursue constructive policies for the development of Canada's great resources for the benefit of Canadians.

The Government will undertake discussions with the government of British Columbia and with the United States, aimed at securing action on the development of the Columbia River.

A new Department of Agriculture Act will be placed before you, to provide for two ministers in order that the needs of agriculture in both eastern and western Canada may receive closer attention. My ministers will institute new programs to make farming as a whole more stable and more prosperous. They will strive to expand markets for Canadian farm products both at home and abroad, with special attention to dairy products.

The Government is initiating consultation with the provinces to work out a program for national fishery development. My ministers intend to secure the establishment of a twelve-mile limit for the use of the Canadian fisheries, taking proper account of treaty and historic rights.

You will be asked to continue the existing payments to the railways, pending the approval of long-term measures concerning transportation. You will be asked to provide additional assistance for the completion of the Trans-Canada Highway.

My ministers have undertaken to establish a comprehensive system of contributory pensions. The new pensions will be co-ordinated with the existing provisions for old-age security, for the purpose of enabling all Canadians to retire in security and with dignity. While the arrangements required for this great advance in the social security of our people are necessarily complex, the legislation submitted to you will be designed to make the new pension plan operative as soon as possible.

Legislation on unemployment insurance is under consideration and in the meantime you will be asked to ensure that the fund is sustained to meet the claims on it.

The redistribution of electoral districts is overdue. You will be asked to authorize the establishment of a commission to undertake this important task.

A change in the Citizenship Act will be proposed to ensure full equality of rights for all Canadian citizens wherever they were born. Immigration policy will be reviewed.

Members of the House of Commons,

You will be asked to appropriate the funds required for the services and payments authorized by Parliament.

You will be invited to establish a special Committee of the House to examine defence problems.

It will be proposed that the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections review the Canada Elections Act.

You will be asked to agree to the establishment of a Committee on Procedure, over which the Speaker will preside, with the aim of strengthening Parliament and making it more effective.

Honourable Members of the Senate,

Members of the House of Commons,

In addition to the measures already specified, you will be asked to consider other legislative proposals.

May Divine Providence guide you in your deliberations.

The House of Commons withdrew.

His Excellency the Administrator was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

BANKRUPTCY ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford) presented Bill S-2, to amend the Bankruptcy Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

EXPORT AND IMPORT PERMITS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford) presented Bill S-3, to amend the Export and Import Permits Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

NEWFOUNDLAND SAVINGS BANK ACT, 1939

BILL TO REPEAL—FIRST READING

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford) presented Bill S-4, to repeal The Newfoundland Savings Bank Act, 1939.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

ONTARIO HARBOURS AGREEMENT BILL

FIRST READING

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford) presented Bill S-5, to approve an agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of the Province of Ontario respecting public harbours.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: May I ask the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford) when these bills received first and second reading in the other place?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): The last bill that I presented was considered in the House of Commons last session, received second reading there, was sent to committee and was reported back from committee, but Parliament was dissolved before there was an opportunity to complete consideration of it.

Is the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) interested in the other bills?

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Perhaps a similar explanation might be given with regard to them.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): With respect to Bill S-2, to amend the Bankruptcy Act, honourable senators will recall that that bill was considered by this house. My friend, the present Leader of the Opposition, will recall that he presented the bill to the Senate, that some substantial amendments were made to it in committee, that it was reported back to the Senate and received third reading here. Then it was sent to the other house, but the dissolution of Parliament prevented further consideration of the bill in that house.

The bill that I have presented to the house today is the bill as amended by the Senate, and honourable senators will be familiar with it. The other two bills, respecting the Export and Import Permits Act and The Newfoundland Savings Bank Act, I believe, have not been considered by either house. They will be considered in due course.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Were they on the Order Paper of the other house when dissolution took place?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I am not sure whether they were or not. They may have been. I was too occupied keeping myself up to date on what was on the Order Paper in the Senate to know what was before the other house. I have put these bills on the Order Paper for second reading next Thursday because, in accordance with the rules, forty-eight hours must elapse before they can receive consideration; however, I doubt if they will be considered on that day. I understand the honourable Leader of the Opposition has intimated that I should give some information about the business of the house this week.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I should like to ask for some information as to these bills, and whether they are in the same terms as the bills that were before the other house, or if they are new bills.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I have explained Bill S-2, to amend the Bankruptcy Act, and the Bill S-5, to approve an agreement between the Government of Canada and the Province of Ontario respecting Public Harbours. I do not know if the other two bills have been considered by the other house. However, it is unlikely that any of the bills will be considered by this house this week.

It has been suggested, subject to the pleasure of honourable senators, that tomorrow should be occupied by the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, and that on Thursday the Leader of the Opposition may wish to speak. I understand that he will let us know about that tomorrow. It would seem that those matters will occupy the balance of this week. Whether I will speak the following Tuesday or whether we will consider one of these bills on that day, I will intimate to the house at the end of this week.

Motion agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON ORDERS AND CUSTOMS

APPOINTMENT

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford) moved, seconded by Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt:

> That all the senators present during this session be appointed a committee to consider the Orders and Customs of the Senate and Privileges of Parliament, and that the said committee have leave to meet in the Senate chamber when and as often as they please.

Motion agreed to.

COMMITTEE OF SELECTION

APPOINTMENT

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford) moved, seconded by Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt:

> That pursuant to Rule 77, the following senators, to wit: the Honourable Senators Aseltine, Brooks, Choquette, Fergusson, Lefrancois, Macdonald (Brantford), Macdonald (Cape Breton), Monette, Reid, Smith (Kamloops) and Taylor (Norfolk) be appointed a Committee of Selection to nominate senators to serve on the several Standing Committees during the present session; and to report with all convenient speed the names of the senators so nominated.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Can the honourable leader tell us when the committee will have its first meeting?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): The honourable Leader of the Government has asked when the committee—

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I mean, the honourable Leader of the Opposition has asked—

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: You are bound to do it once.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I am beginning to feel at home on this side. The honourable Leader of the Opposition has asked when the committee will sit. In order to proceed with all convenient speed I would suggest that the committee sit immediately after the house rises this evening. It will then be able to bring in its report tomorrow.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, May 22, 1963

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald tabled:

Report of the Department of Public Works for the year ended March 31, 1962, pursuant to section 34 of the Public Works Act, chapter 228, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Copy of a letter dated May 15, 1963, addressed by the Prime Minister of Canada to the Premiers of the provinces, concerning bilingualism and biculturalism, together with a copy of the proposed terms of reference to a Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism. (English and French texts).

BILINGUALISM AND BICULTURALISM

PROPOSED COMMISSION OF INQUIRY—DOCUMENTS PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, I wonder if it would be possible to have the letter from the Prime Minister to the premiers of the provinces and the proposed terms of reference, which have just been tabled, inserted in Hansard. If so, I would be glad to second a motion of the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford) to that effect.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: I will be glad to move, seconded by the honourable Senator Brooks, that a copy of the letter, together with the terms of reference, appear as an appendix to Hansard.

Motion agreed to.

For text of letter and terms of reference see Appendix "A", p. 21.

FINANCE CHARGES (DISCLOSURE) BILL

FIRST READING

Hon. David A. Croll presented Bill S-6, to make provision for the disclosure of information in respect of finance charges.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill is identical to the one that the house endorsed in principle during the Twenty-Fifth Parliament, and I am taking this opportunity to express the hope that within a very short time this bill can be sent to committee, where its predecessor was stymied when the last Parliament was dissolved.

Bill read first time.

28906-6—2½

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Croll moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next.

Motion agreed to.

STANDING COMMITTEES

REPORT OF COMMITTEE OF SELECTION

Hon. William H. Taylor presented the report of the Committee of Selection.

The Clerk Assistant (reading):

The Committee of Selection appointed to nominate senators to serve on the several standing committees for the present session, make their report, as follows:

Some Hon. Senators: Dispense.

For text of report see Appendix "B" pp. 22-24.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Norfolk): Honourable senators, I move that the report be considered at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

INQUIRY WITH RESPECT TO MEMBER COUNTRIES

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question which comprises three sub-questions.

Here is my first question: What are the member countries of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization?

Secondly: What has Canada done for each of those countries since the creation of that organization?

Thirdly: What has each of those countries done for Canada since the creation of that organization?

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with may I refer to a question asked last night by the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) with respect to two bills, one to amend the Export and Import Permits Act and the other to repeal The Newfoundland Savings Bank

Act, 1939. The honourable Leader of the Opposition asked me if these bills had appeared on the Order Paper of the other house and, if so, what progress had been made with respect to them. On looking up the records I find that both bills were presented to the other house and received first reading which, as honourable senators understand, was automatic; then they appeared on the Order Paper of the other house for second reading but were not proceeded with.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: I also asked if the bills presented to us now are in the same terms as the bills that were presented to the other house.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I have not compared the bills now before us with those that were presented to the other house. May I suggest to the honourable Leader of the Opposition that he or his secretary make the comparison and inform the house at the next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: You have been at the Cabinet, and I have not.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

MOTION FOR ADDRESS IN REPLY—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of His Excellency the Administrator's speech at the opening of the session.

(Translation):

Hon. J.-Eugène Lefrançois moved, seconded by Hon. Austin C. Taylor:

> That the following Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General of Canada:
> To His Excellency Major-General Georges P. Vanier, Companion of the Distinguished Service Order, upon whom has been conferred the Military Cross and the Canadian Forces' Decoration, Governor General and Commander-in-Chief of Canada.
> May it please Your Excellency:
> We, Her Majesty's most devoted and loyal subjects, the Senate of Canada, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Excellency for the gracious speech which His Excellency the Administrator has addressed to both Houses of Parliament.

Honourable senators, I should like to express my regret that illness should have prevented His Excellency the Governor General of Canada from opening the first session of the Twenty-Sixth Parliament, on May 16 last. On behalf of all of us, I wish him a full and speedy recovery.

Mr. Speaker, I must congratulate you on your appointment to the high office you hold in this house.

In spite of your youth, your past record fully justified your appointment as Speaker of the Senate of Canada. This appointment not only is a well-deserved reward for your past work as member for Lévis for over 22 years, but also for your activity as a prominent citizen of our great country.

Everyone knows that through your influence you were able to bring jobs to Quebec city and other areas, particularly in shipbuilding, when you were a member of Parliament and also when you became parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Public Works. Both the eastern and western shipyards are most thankful to you for the many contracts you obtained for them. Because you were a professional engineer you were destined to play a significant role as a member of the House of Commons and you played that role with competence and dedication.

Politically, you filled important positions especially in the Quebec city area. Your presence in this house will be a renewed opportunity to strengthen the ties of a long friendship in and out of parliament.

Honourable senators, I would be remiss if I did not also congratulate the senator from Brantford (Hon. Mr. Macdonald), on his appointment to the Cabinet and as Government Leader in the Senate.

His long experience as a member and Speaker of the House of Commons, his appointment to the Senate in 1953, his position as Leader of the Government from 1953 to 1957 and Leader of the Opposition from 1957 to 1963, were obvious qualifications for the important office he has been called upon to fill. I wish to offer the honourable senator my most sincere co-operation.

I also wish to thank him for the great honour he bestowed upon me when he asked me to move the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

(Text):

Honourable senators, I want to congratulate the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford) upon his appointment to the present Cabinet as a minister without portfolio, having been sworn in as such on April 22. I also wish to congratulate him for the way he has personally put biculturalism into practice in this country which was founded by two great European nations, the French and the English. The Speech from the Throne underlines this bicultural character of Canada in connection with the plan to establish a commission on biculturalism.

(Translation):

Honourable senators, on this same subject, I am pleased to underline the precedent just created by His Excellency the Administrator of the Government, the Chief Justice of Canada, when in reading the Speech from the Throne he alternated between the two languages instead of repeating the whole text. That, in my opinion, is another fact which sanctions biculturalism.

The Speech from the Throne is most explicit in this regard when it says, and I quote:

> The character and strength of our nation are drawn from the diverse cultures of people who came from many lands to create the Canada that is ours today. The greater Canada that is in our power to make will be built not on uniformity but on continuing diversity, and particularly on the basic partnership of English-speaking and French-speaking people. My ministers are determined that the partnership shall be truly equal. For that high purpose they are establishing, in consultation with the governments of the provinces, a commission charged to study, thoroughly but urgently, how the fundamentally bicultural character of Canada may best be assured and the contribution of other cultures recognized.

One of the main features of the policy of the new Government is its desire to give a new direction to Confederation, apart from the major fact that it wishes to expedite our economic recovery in the emergency which has now lasted a few years.

The head of the present Government said a few days ago that the new team was acting swiftly, and that is apparent in all fields of activity, both domestic and international. The sixty days of decision will remain famous in our country's history.

I find it appropriate to quote another passage from the Speech from the Throne:

> To make us a more united people, the Government will in all things strive to strengthen and to give new direction to our Canadian Confederation. It will foster the spirit of co-operative federalism, fully respecting the rights of the provinces while safeguarding and extending the equality of opportunity which properly belongs to all Canadians in all parts of our country. In these purposes, as in others, my ministers will seek frequent consultation with the governments of the provinces.

These consultations with the provincial authorities will bring back to the fore some problems which are peculiar to my province, Quebec. I am thinking now of those trouble-makers who are spreading terror in the city of Montreal. Their philosophy is that of the communists and they are seeking to overthrow the established order and to set up a new regime through violence. Experience taught us that those who resort to violence often are the victims of violence themselves.

I do not know who are the ones responsible for those dangerous deeds, but I do know, as the premier of Quebec said himself, that they are causing the greatest harm to our province. Not only will they hurt us economically and industrially, but they will also jeopardize the good will between the various groups in Canada.

At the present time we have reached the point where English-speaking Canadians are ready to co-operate with us so that the terms of Confederation will be respected. It has been said on many occasions that it is our last chance, but some people do not even want a last chance and they try through violence to prevent that last chance from being given to the people of Canada. They want to undermine the Constitution.

We must take the necessary measures to fight and suppress immediately those individuals who are working against our province.

But the legal rights of the province of Quebec must be respected, as the Prime Minister said in the house on May 20:

> Quebec, which is a province different from other provinces because it is a motherland to people who live in other provinces as well as being a province of Canada, needs the means to remain Quebec.
> The government of Quebec must have the resources to meet the needs of today as well as to fulfil the aspirations of centuries.

Honourable senators, I still feel that it is unthinkable that Quebec, as a whole, should dream of separatism. We, in Quebec, have been by tradition the truest Canadians and most loyal to the British Crown. Twice our ancestors fought back victoriously against attacks from the Americans, in 1776 in Quebec city, and in 1812 at Chateauguay where de Salaberry distinguished himself. History has shown that if the Americans have not conquered Canada it is on account of the opposition of the French Canadians. The Premier of Quebec repeated it in London a few days ago. The French Canadians are still the most effective defence against the Americanization of Canada. Our country is constantly subjected to the influence of the republic to the south through radio, television, movies and literature. On account of the language spoken in Quebec, it opposes more readily such cultural invasion, together with the U.S. capital invested in our industry.

We can be sure that the inquiry on biculturalism in Canada will reveal the reasons for that certain uneasiness prevailing in our country and will allow the implementation of the proper remedies.

The problem of nuclear weapons for Canada has been widely talked about during the last election campaign, and it aroused wide differences of opinion among the Canadian public.

In this regard we find in the Speech from the Throne, and I quote:

> The principles of Canadian external policy are those of the United Nations Charter, to maintain peace with justice and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms; and to promote the welfare of all peoples by international co-operation. My ministers will seek solutions to international problems by diplomacy and negotiation. In particular, my ministers will strive to lessen international tensions and halt the arms race by seeking measures of controlled disarmament, including a treaty to end nuclear tests under reasonable safeguards.

The leader of the present Government, winner of the Nobel Peace prize, remains essentially a man of peace. Consequently, the Speech from the Throne reflects the Government's policy. It says:

> there is no alternative to the maintenance of the defences of the free nations as a deterrent to war.

NATO must be strong and the North American continent must be well defended.

Therefore, we must, until peace is definitely established, be ready to defend ourselves, if need be, and to respect our commitments to the free nations of the West. The Speech from the Throne mentions specifically that the Canadian forces must be provided with modern weapons.

With respect to Canada's economic recovery, the Speech from the Throne states that it is important to reduce trade barriers. We must strive to develop a primary products trade at comparatively stable prices.

To this effect, the Government proposes to expand our export markets and to strengthen our balance of payments.

Still in the economic field, the Speech from the Throne emphasizes the fact that unemployment is the most instant problem in our country. To create new jobs, new industries will have to be established.

On that matter the Government wants to stimulate sound industrial expansion. So, with the provinces, the federal authority will extend assistance for technical training.

Among the other practical steps to ensure our economic recovery, the Speech announces the setting up of a Department of Industry and an Area Development Agency.

Several areas of the country suffer from chronic unemployment because of the absence of industries, and that is where the Agency will be able to operate, in co-operation with the provinces.

The Atlantic areas suffer especially from certain delays in their development. The Government plans to amend the Atlantic Development Board Act.

In order to increase employment, the Government plans to establish as soon as possible a municipal development and loan board, through which municipalities may obtain, with the approval of the provinces, loans and grants to carry out projects which will increase employment and improve services.

On the other hand, the Government plans during the present session to propose amendments to the National Housing Act.

It is projected to establish a Canada development corporation, by means of which Canadians can more readily direct their savings to the building of new Canadian industries.

Thanks to the establishment of an economic council of Canada, Canada will be assured of the highest possible levels of employment and of a sustained growth of its economy. The Pacific region will benefit from discussions aimed at solving the delicate problem of the development of the Columbia River.

In days gone by, the eastern farmers complained about the privileged treatment meted out by the federal Government to the western farmers. Henceforth, Canada will have a Department of Agriculture for the eastern region.

The Speech from the Throne did not only deal with wage earners, the unemployed or the farmers; it mentioned our fishermen from the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. The Government is initiating a program for national fishery development, and intends to secure the establishment of a twelve-mile limit for the use of the Canadian fisheries, taking proper account of treaty and historic rights.

The additional assistance for the completion of the Trans-Canada Highway will help some of the provinces which have fallen behind in their plans, including the province of Quebec. The previous Union Nationale Government would not take part in the joint federal-provincial project. As a result of that refusal, the work could not start until 1960, when the present Quebec premier assumed office.

The Speech also mentions the establishment of a contributory system of old age pensions which will enable all Canadians to retire in security and with dignity.

Several other important measures that it would take too long to mention, form part of the Government's program for the present session and are designed to give new impetus to the Canadian economy.

Before closing my remarks, I should like to point out that well before the setting up of the proposed inquiry on biculturalism, the Leader of the Government acknowledged the French fact in Canada. On April 22, His Excellency the Governor General presided at the swearing-in ceremony of ten French-speaking ministers in the federal cabinet, of which seven are from the province of Quebec, one from New Brunswick, one from Ontario, and another from Manitoba. This constitutes a proper acknowledgement not only of Quebec, but also of French-speaking minorities in three other provinces.

Mr. Speaker, for all those reasons, it is an honour for me to move the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

(Text):

Hon. Austin C. Taylor: Honourable senators, in seconding the motion for an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, I deem it a great privilege and a distinct honour to be called upon to perform this traditional function of Parliament. I recognize fully my limitations, and I approach this time-honoured task with deep humility. I, therefore, solicit your tolerance and understanding in the performance of this duty. While I regard it as a very great honour to myself, I look upon it more as a recognition of the province of New Brunswick and of her citizens, more particularly of the good people of my own constituency of Westmorland, whom I represent here in the Senate of Canada.

At the outset I wish to join with others who have already expressed regret as to the absence of His Excellency the Governor General on the opening day, due to ill health. I know I express the sentiments of all honourable senators in wishing him a speedy and complete recovery.

Coming as I do from New Brunswick, the picture province of Canada, I trust that I may be forgiven if I outline some of the beauties of that province. Those who have travelled through my province will endorse the correctness of this statement when I refresh their memories of the beauties of the Saint John River Valley from the Quebec border to the Reversing Falls approaching the harbour of Saint John, the picturesqueness of the valleys of the Kennebecasis, the Petitcodiac, the Miramichi, the Nashwaak, and the Tobique, the Fundy park, and many other beauty spots, more particularly the famous Magnetic Hill and the renowned tidal bore, both within the confines of my own constituency.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Don't leave out Grand Lake.

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): Oh, yes; and I could name many more places of beauty.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: In fact, you could name the whole province.

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): Yes, indeed. All these beauty spots are unsurpassed in any part of Canada, and it would be difficult to discover their equal anywhere.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): Among the institutions of learning in New Brunswick there are in my constituency of Westmorland two famous universities that are known throughout this nation as a result of the magnificent contributions made to society by many of their outstanding graduates. I refer to Mount Allison University and St. Joseph's University. But, of course, the most valuable asset of all, not only in my own constituency but in the province as a whole, is the greatness of her people, and to them all I wish to pay a high tribute for their efforts and determination in developing our part of this great nation under very serious and distinct handicaps. The honour that may be extended to me in the performance of this duty I proudly accept in their names. I trust that our present Prime Minister's declaration of equality to all, as evidenced by a number of proposals in the Speech from the Throne, will remove many of the inequalities that have existed for years in our part of the nation.

Honourable senators, I am indeed happy and proud to welcome my leader (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford) back in the important role as Leader of the Government in this house, a position which he held with such distinction, competence and dignity when I first entered this chamber and throughout his term. I am sure he will perform his arduous duties in the same capable and distinguished manner as he has done in the past.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate you on your appointment as a member of the Canadian Senate, and further to congratulate you on your appointment as Speaker of this house and as referee-in-chief of our deliberations. Your long experience in the other house particularly qualifies you for this important office. I am sure you will maintain the high traditions which have been set by your predecessors. I, therefore, wish for you a long and happy experience in this chamber. I wish also to welcome the new senators who are sitting for the first time in this chamber.

I should also like to pay tribute to the former speakers under whom I have served since my appointment early in 1957. I refer to Senator Robertson, Senator Drouin and Senator White. While Senator White held office for a very short time, I am sure that I speak for all honourable senators when I say that he endeared himself to all who sat under him.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): I wish also to pay a tribute of respect and honour to the new Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks), one who has had wide experience in public service, first in the provincial legislature of New Brunswick and then as a member of the House of Commons. In 1960 he was summoned to the Senate of Canada, and in 1962 was appointed Leader of the Government in this chamber, a position he held for only a short time, but with distinction and fairness. Now he is Leader of the Opposition, a position I trust he will enjoy for many years, and one I know he will also serve in with equal distinction.

Coming now to the Speech from the Throne, my first impression is that it is the type of speech that over the years I have admired, not only in this chamber but in my own legislature of the province of New Brunswick. It is brief and to the point, without going into detail in connection with the various matters that are raised in it, particularly in reference to proposed legislation. While it is true that a new government is now in office and therefore cannot point to governmental achievement in the last six years, the tradition of the members of the Liberal party is that they look forward and devote their time, talent and energy to improving the economic status of the nation as well as to improving the position of the Canadian people. I believe it is true to state that the Liberal party has always been recognized as the party of reform, and in these rapidly changing times there is much need for that recognition. I am proud to belong to a political party whose views are always forward looking. One has only to recall that in the field of social services it has always been the Liberal party that took the initiative and introduced the original legislation. Wanting to give credit where credit is due, I think it is also true that in many instances the Conservative party, while in the past opposing many of these measures when they were introduced, have by popular demand accepted and improved them in some instances.

The particular subject matters in the Speech from the Throne which I wish to refer to are, first, the provision for the early establishment of a Department of Industry, whose particular function will be to foster industrial expansion and to provide a central point to which industry and the several provinces together can look for consultation, guidance and assistance. What to me is most important is the announcement that within that new department there will be established an area development agency; and I have in mind that since the Atlantic area is considered one of the less-developed areas in Canada this agency will prove tremendously valuable in the expansion of industry in that area. The establishment of a Department of Industry is long overdue, and I am confident that it will work closely with and help to guide the operation and functioning of the provincial departments of industry and industry generally.

Closely allied with this is the announcement that amendments to the Atlantic Development Board Act will be proposed. The proposed amendments are to strengthen the board and, what is most important, to provide for a capital assistance fund through which it can promote basic industrial projects in the Atlantic area. Those of you who sat here during the last Parliament will recall that in speaking to the bill establishing the Atlantic Development Board I criticized the legislation because it did not provide a capital assistance fund for the development of the Atlantic area. I said that unless this were incorporated in the act, or complementary legislation were provided establishing such a board or commission with funds available to carry out projects recommended by the board, the legislation would be useless. I, therefore, support this idea in principle in the fullest possible measure.

Honourable senators will recall that during that debate I indicated that a number of recommendations had already been made to the then national Government by various organizations, including the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council, as well as joint recommendations by the premiers of the four Atlantic provinces. These recommendations, honourable senators, were only made after long and detailed study had been completed and needed only financial backing by some national board or commission to carry them out. I trust, therefore, that when the proper amendments are introduced and passed, immediate action will be taken to implement many projects that will help to revitalize the whole Atlantic area.

Honourable senators, I would be remiss in my duty and false to my honest convictions if I failed to plead again for the completion of the St. Lawrence Seaway. I refer specifically to the Chignecto Canal, and even at the hazard of being repetitious I am compelled to advocate in the strongest possible manner some of my previous recommendations. While I realize that a recent Minister of Public Works declared this project was not feasible strictly from a transportation point of view, no one has declared that it is not feasible from a combined transportation and power development viewpoint. At the same time let it be remembered that the Chignecto Canal has been recommended as a feasible project more times than any other project in Canada. I would repeat some information I gave to the last Parliament. As late as 1958 the president of the Foundation of Canada Engineering Corporation stated as follows:

> The key to development of the industrial economy of the Atlantic provinces is low cost transportation and, I should like to add, power, and there can be little doubt but that the provision of the facilities suggested would have a very favourable impact on the economy of the Atlantic provinces. Therefore, in studying the Chignecto Canal scheme we should not think simply in terms of what portion of present traffic could be diverted through the canal but rather we should base the studies on increased traffic which would be generated by new industrial developments in the whole region which would follow in the tracks of the construction of such a waterway and power producing facilities.

Honourable senators, I am fully convinced that this project is as feasible as any part of the St. Lawrence Seaway or the South Saskatchewan Dam. I am not criticizing either; as a matter of fact, I supported both —and I trust it will be given the support and action it so richly deserves.

Because of my interest in hydro-electric power development and my life-long interest in the good earth, another paragraph in the Speech which interests me greatly is this reference to the Columbia River development:

> The Government will undertake discussions with the government of British Columbia and with the United States, aimed at securing action on the development of the Columbia River.

Honourable senators, I have been much concerned about the proposal in the present treaty which provides for the building of what is commonly known as the High Arrow Dam which, if finally approved by Canada, will mean the flooding of one of the richest agricultural valleys in British Columbia, if not in the whole of Canada. This is one of the projects opposed by General McNaughton and all members of the Canadian Section of the International Joint Commission. As a matter of fact, in sequence, the first ten projects recommended by the Canadian group did not include the building of the High Arrow Dam. If the present arrangement goes forward in relation to the High Arrow Dam, a valley approximately 150 miles long, containing at least 40,000 acres of the best soil under the sun, and many more thousands of acres now producing high quality lumber, will be flooded. Six thousand citizens in eighteen communities will be forced to evacuate. Many industries will be disrupted and practically all forest operations will be wiped out. This means that the agricultural potential of the area, which is unlimited, together with existing industries and what could be the greatest tourist potential in Canada, will be lost to this country forever, and any payment received by Canada from the United States will never begin to compensate for the loss Canada will be forced to endure.

As opposed to this, I am told on good authority that the Mica Dam project will provide more power and more storage of water. It is a self-liquidating and self-supporting development scheme, destroying no existing communities or adversely affecting any agricultural land. As a matter of fact, engineers estimate that nine billion kilowatt hours could be provided at a lower cost than by the High Arrow Dam.

I trust, therefore, that all of these matters will be given due consideration and that the recommendations of General McNaughton and his Canadian group will be implemented in a renegotiated treaty.

Honourable senators, what I, as an eastern agriculturist, consider to be probably the most important announcement in the Throne Speech is that referring to agriculture, and I think it is of sufficient importance to quote the clause in full:

> A new Department of Agriculture Act will be placed before you, to provide for two ministers in order that the needs of agriculture in both eastern and western Canada may receive closer attention. My ministers will institute new programs to make farming as a whole more stable and more prosperous. They will strive to expand markets for Canadian farm products both at home and abroad, with special attention to dairy products.

Honourable senators, a new Department of Agriculture Act which will provide for a minister for eastern Canada as well as western Canada will, I am sure, be welcome news to the farmers of eastern Canada. I for one cannot see any possible conflict between the two portfolios, because I am sure we all recognize that eastern farmers are anxious that western farmers should prosper, as are western farmers anxious that their counterparts in the east should prosper and, while agricultural problems are reasonably uniform throughout this nation, remedial measures will of necessity vary from zone to zone. A good illustration of this is the fact that one of the major problems of the western farmer is the selling of his grain, whereas one of the serious problems facing the eastern farmers is the purchasing of grain.

Honourable senators, I am sure you will realize that for many years, under both governments, the ministers of agriculture have come from western Canada, and I am convinced that they have worked hard and have given much in the interests of all Canadian farmers. I include in this group the last minister, the Honourable Mr. Hamilton, for I am sure all honourable members recognize that he introduced and had passed many good measures, some of which were recommended to the Government by the Senate Land Use Committee. Other measures introduced were not, in my opinion, applied in a manner to deal adequately with the problem. An example of this was the dairy policy of the last government, to which I shall refer a little later.

Further proof of the need for an eastern minister of agriculture is evidenced by a statement made by the then minister just prior to the last election to the effect that he had improved the position of the western farmers and had done a lot for them, and that now it was his intention to devote his time and energy to the problems of eastern farmers. That, honourable senators, was an admission that the eastern farmers had not been recognized to the same degree as had their counterparts in western Canada.

There are two schools of thought in Canada today, if one is to believe what one reads in the daily press or hears on radio and television, with respect to the surest and soundest method to be adopted to provide food for mankind. On the one hand, we are presented with statistics which show that unless the population growth is controlled, we will eventually perish from starvation. On the other hand, we are told that we have at present too many small units producing food, and that if production were organized along the lines employed in industry we would be assured always of plenty and everybody would be better off.

In order to reach a compromise between these two schools of thought there are certain factors that should be seriously recognized: first, while it is true that agricultural production is destined above all else to satisfy the primary food needs of man, at a price that should be within the reach of all consumers, this cannot be used as an argument that the producers of this food should be compelled to remain in a state of economic insecurity because they cannot be organized along the same lines as industry. And, secondly, that while such industrial organization has been successful in the manufacturing fields, this is no guarantee it would be equally successful when applied to much of our food production programs.

In organized industrial operations you have human control of almost every element entering into the operation, whereas with food production such control is impossible over one of the most important factors of all, the weather. The year 1962 is a prime example of this characteristic as applied to eastern Canada, where 90 per cent of the hay harvested was practically ruined by bad weather, thousands of acres of hay were not harvested at all, and in some instances 50 per cent of all grain produced remained in the fields until late November and many thousands of acres were not even harvested.

To those who may think that the Government of Canada is subsidizing the farmer to a greater extent than is either deserved or justified, it is well to remember that over the last eight years Britain has spent an average of 260 million pounds sterling per year in support of her agriculture, and in 1961 because of special conditions this was increased to a sum in excess of 339 million pounds sterling. It should also be remembered that this is being done in a country that has a smaller percentage of her people engaged in farming than has Canada. It is also significant to note that most of this money was paid under a deficiency payment program.

It may be hard to define exactly what is a family farm. It is not merely a question of size; it is an agricultural unit owned and operated by a family—it is the bulwark of our whole rural economy, and I feel that a satisfied and contented agricultural population is one of the greatest stabilizing influences in our nation.

In a well-balanced economy, and with a prosperous agriculture, this group of people would provide one of the strongest domestic buyers' markets in the country. To prove this statement one has only to compare the goods and equipment required to be purchased by a family farm unit to that required by a similar family living in an apartment in a city.

It should always be remembered that two of Canada's most valuable assets are her people and her food-producing land. The man who farms his land for a lifetime and leaves it more productive than when he took it over has, in my opinion, made a more significant contribution to the future of Canada than the man who has exploited some of our natural resources, made a fortune in the process, and at the same time exhausted that resource.

I now come to what I consider the most serious problem facing Canadian agriculture, namely, the present position of the dairy industry. To indicate the importance of the dairy industry to agriculture generally and to Canada as a whole, it is well to note that in the year 1960 the total value of dairy products as estimated by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics amounted to $518,900,000, or 18.1 per cent of the total farm cash income. This does not include beef and veal sold from dairy animals, which in itself is a very large amount.

It is well, I think, to make a slight comparison with the total cash income from wheat and coarse grains from Canada, which amounted to $684,100,000. I do this to point up the importance of the dairy industry to our whole agricultural economy.

For the fiscal year 1958, which is the last year for which I have definite figures, it will be noted that milk used in the manufacture of butter together with that sold as fluid milk amounted to 75 per cent of the total milk produced in Canada. Therefore, any policy pursued by the national Government for the relief of the present distressed position of the dairy industry should be concentrated on these two products.

The chief reason why the dairy industry should be given special government support is that it is national in scope, being important to every province of Canada. Unless some sound method of applying the support is found, there is the danger of a collapse which could seriously affect the livelihood of many people in all areas of the country, and eventually the whole Canadian economy. Since this industry is worth over a billion dollars per annum to Canada, some drastic remedial measures will have to be applied if such collapse is to be averted.

With our increasing population the solution of our dairy problem rests on our ability to sell to our own Canadian people sufficient dairy products whose total milk equivalent would equal what we had five years ago.

Coming to the present dairy situation, I am pleased to note the announcement by the present minister in relation to some changes recently made in the dairy support program. This, however, was after consultation with the National Dairy Council and the Dairy Farmers of Canada. I realize this decision was reached hurriedly by reason of the fact that the former policy or formulae terminated on April 30. The minister did, however, indicate that further study would continue and every effort possible made to improve even more the dairy support program of the present Government. It is because of this that I want to present my views again in an effort which I believe will assist in solving this serious agricultural problem.

To be more specific in relation to finding a solution to this difficulty I suggest the following measures:

(1) Change the present support program for butter and bring it under a deficiency payment plan by establishing a minimum price for butter, and letting it find its own price-level between such minimum price and the producers' support price, the Stabilization Board to reimburse the producers through the medium of the organized creameries and other manufacturing plants.

Honourable senators, I realize that this would cost a lot of money, but we have in storage today over 200 million pounds of butter and this is going to cost some government some day a lot of money. I do not think the plan I have recommended and am now urging will cost more than the present plan.

Hon. Mr. Reid: What about giving milk to the children of Canada?

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): I am coming to that.

(2) The early establishment of a joint nationwide school milk program in co-operation with the provinces.

(3) A nationwide program to encourage the greater use of milk in the diet of Canadians.

I think the former prime minister gave an example of this when he advocated that all Canadians should drink more milk.

Such a policy as this must be supported by an all-out advertising campaign at both levels of Government and by the two major dairy organizations—the Dairy Farmers of Canada and the National Dairy Council—together with the full support of all other dairy manufacturing organizations. In this respect I would just say that if, when the 12½ cents consumer subsidy was established last year, the federal Government and the provincial governments had joined in an all-out advertising campaign we would not have nearly as much butter in storage as we have today.

If a policy similar to the one I have suggested were adopted, I believe the chief problem of the dairy industry would be solved because, as I see it, when one considers the gradual increase in population together with a gradual reduction in the number of dairy farmers in Canada, it may not be long until we find ourselves in a deficiency position as far as milk and other dairy products are concerned.

Honourable senators, I will close my remarks by saying I believe the program outlined in the Speech from the Throne is a courageous one, and it is only the beginning of a vast new program of national development which will apply to all sections of Canada. May I mention again briefly what I consider the key items of this new vision of development.

The first, of course, and foremost will be to improve Canada's good reputation and relations throughout the world; to expand Canada's trade with all nations; to enlarge Canada's productive capacity so that there will be work for all who are willing and able to work; to establish a Department of Industry within which an area development agency will be established; to give teeth to the Atlantic Development Act; to establish a Municipal Development and Loan Board; to bring into being a contributory pension plan for Canadians; to provide, in co-operation with the provinces, a plan so that young people will be able to stay in school for longer training periods, and to assist the provinces in a retraining program; and in the field of agriculture to assist farmers to establish more efficient co-operatives and provide for better national marketing facilities; to institute a more equitable and satisfactory price support policy and to develop new sources of income for rural people. These, and many others, are but a part of the new concept of a great Canadian who is now the Prime Minister of Canada.

I believe the Canadian people are indeed fortunate in having at the head of the Government the present Prime Minister: a great statesman, a world figure, and a man of integrity, determination and high honour.

Recognizing all of these features that I have mentioned, honourable senators, it is indeed a great pleasure for me to second the motion now before the house.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Brooks, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

BILINGUALISM AND BICULTURALISM

(See p. 11)

(The following letter was sent to the Premiers of all Provinces)

PRIME MINISTER

CANADA

Ottawa, May 15, 1963

My dear Premier:

In a speech I made in the House of Commons on December 17, 1962, on the problems posed, and the opportunities offered, in Canada by the duality of language and culture established by Confederation, I suggested that a broad and comprehensive inquiry should be conducted, in consultation with the provinces, on bilingualism and biculturalism. That proposal received widespread support in Parliament and, I believe, in the country.

I am now writing to ask whether your government would favour such an inquiry by a Royal Commission with terms of reference such as those annexed to this letter.

Any recommendations from the proposed Commission would, of course, not be binding on governments; nor would approval by your government of such a Commission with these terms of reference imply any commitment to accept any recommendations that it might make.

I would be most grateful for your early consideration of this matter.

Yours sincerely,

Lester B. Pearson.

COMMISSION OF INQUIRY ON BILINGUALISM AND BICULTURALISM

To inquire into and report upon the existing state of bilingualism and biculturalism in Canada and to recommend what steps should be taken to develop the Canadian Confederation on the basis of an equal partnership between the two founding races, taking into account the contribution made by the other ethnic groups to the cultural enrichment of Canada and the measures that should be taken to safeguard that contribution; and, in particular,

1. To report upon the situation and practice of bilingualism within all branches and agencies of the federal administration—including Crown Corporations—and in their communications with the public and to make recommendations designed to ensure the bilingual and the basically bicultural character of the federal administration;

2. to report on the role of the public and private cultural organizations, including the mass communications media, in promoting bilingualism, better cultural relations and a more widespread appreciation of the basically bicultural character of our country and of the subsequent contribution made by the other cultures; and to recommend what should be done to improve that role; and

3. having regard to the fact that constitutional jurisdiction over education is vested in the provinces, to discuss with the provincial governments the opportunities available to Canadians to learn the English and French languages and to recommend what could be done to enable Canadians to become bilingual.

CANADIAN PARLIAMENTARY GUIDE

REQUEST FOR SUPPLEMENT TO 1963 EDITION

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Mr. Speaker, since the latest edition, that of 1963, of the Parliamentary Guide does not contain the names of the new members of Parliament elected on April 8, I wonder if the Government could, directly or indirectly, or through some publisher, put out a supplement containing biographical sketches of those new members elected on April 8 and whose names do not appear in the 1963 Parliamentary Guide.

Otherwise, we shall have to wait until March of next year to obtain information which would make it easier for us to get acquainted with the new members.

(Text):

(Later)

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: May I refer to the inquiry which has been made by the honourable Senator Pouliot?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I do not know whether the matter which the honourable senator brought up should be referred to the members of the other house, and handled by Parliament. If he was referring to the members of this house only, it might be a question to be considered by the Committee on Internal Economy.

I shall look into the matter, and I would be glad to discuss it with the honourable Senator Pouliot.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Thank you. All I wanted was to make a suggestion and if it is considered I will be satisfied.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

INQUIRY RE MEMBER NATIONS

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Yesterday, the honourable Senator Pouliot asked me a question with regard to NATO. The question was divided into three parts, the first of which I could answer, but the other two parts are a bit more difficult. Therefore, I would ask the honourable Senator Pouliot to allow it to stand.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Thank you.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, May 28, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate resumed from yesterday consideration of His Excellency the Administrator's speech at the opening of the session, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Lefrançois, seconded by Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland), for an address in reply thereto.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, I may say at the outset that I find it difficult to know just what to say at the beginning of a session when there is a new Parliament and a new party in power.

The Speech from the Throne is, of course, an outline of the plan that the new Government has for its future undertakings. They are untried, but I may say that, for the sake of the country, we wish them and their program success. Only time will tell, and we are willing to wait and see what happens.

The Speech from the Throne, near the beginning, contained one very interesting item which, I am sure, interested all of us. It said:

> Next week, we will take pleasure in welcoming to Ottawa the Ministerial Council of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. My Government is convinced that on the foundation of the present alliance a true community of the Atlantic peoples will one day be achieved.

The day has come, of course, and the delegates from NATO have arrived. May I say, honourable senators, how pleased and honoured I know we in Canada are to have now in our capital city and in our midst representatives of the fifteen NATO countries and their foreign ministers. We have here some of the most outstanding men in the world and, of course, the work they are doing is of the greatest importance. Our feelings have already been most eloquently expressed by the Prime Minister and others. I feel that the holding of this meeting in Canada is a recognition of the high place our country has attained in this great organization for peace in the western world. We have been proud indeed of the accomplishments, particularly of our soldiers who have spent many years in Germany. I was very pleased not so long ago to hear the remark of General Norstad, the former commander of the NATO forces, when he said that of all the troops in Germany, or in the NATO forces, Canada's men in both the air force and the army stood at the top.

May I also at this time join with others in expressing regret that His Excellency the Governor General was unable, due to illness, to attend the opening of Parliament. I know we are not supposed to criticize Her Majesty or Her Majesty's representatives. However, I am going to do so. My criticism is this, that her representative in Canada works too hard. I doubt if there are any two people in Canada who take their duties and responsibilities more seriously than do Her Majesty's representative and his gracious lady. They have achieved great success, and they have set a wonderful example to the people of Canada, who admire and love them for it.

Honourable senators, there have been many changes since we last met in this chamber. The most obvious, of course, is that the members of the Government and of the Opposition have changed sides. While there has been a change of government, there has not been a change of the type of government, for unfortunately we still have in Canada a minority government—different personalities but the same type of government. However, I think we can rejoice that no matter what changes may come and go, in democratic countries like our own, whether a government be a minority or a majority, the business of the country can be carried on without trouble such as occurs in other countries.

I wish to congratulate my good friend, the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford), who is well qualified for that position. He has had vast experience in public life. I remember him well in the House of Commons, where he took a most active part in the debates. I remember him as Speaker in that chamber—he was regarded as one of the best. I remember him as Leader of the Government in the Senate, and of course I remember him in his recent position as Leader of the Opposition. May I take this opportunity of thanking him for the advice and help he gave me while he held that office. Perhaps it is not out of place for me to say that he and I belong to the same class. We entered the House of Commons in the same year, 1936. I do not think it is boastful to say that from the group of members which came to Parliament in that year have come some of the most outstanding members of the cabinets of Canada. Even at this late date we have in the Cabinet four men who came to Parliament at that time. I refer to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, Honourable Mr. Martin; the Minister of Justice, Honourable Mr. Chevrier; the Postmaster General, Honourable Mr. Denis; and, of course, as I said a moment ago, the Leader of the Government in the Senate, Honourable W. Ross Macdonald.

I am not going to speak about the other men who have taken part in Cabinet work since then, but I would like to mention a great friend of mine who is not in Parliament today, and I think Parliament is the loser for it. He was one of the outstanding men in the Diefenbaker Cabinet. I refer to the former Secretary of State for External Affairs, Honourable Howard Green.

Speaking of the Cabinet, honourable senators, it is too early to criticize the members individually or personally. We shall see how they make out with the different tasks they are called upon to perform. One outstanding fault which I would point to at the outset is that there are too many ministers in the Cabinet. The business of this country was carried on for years with fewer than eighteen ministers. In the last Cabinet I think twenty-one was the most there were. The number has now been increased to twenty-five. Personally, I think it is not necessary, and I believe the people of the country will also feel that it has been greatly overdone.

I have good authority for making that statement. I remember that when the Right Honourable Mr. Diefenbaker established the Department of Forestry, the Honourable Paul Martin, who was then in Opposition, criticized the bill and said there was no necessity for it, that we had enough Cabinet ministers, and that the Department of Forestry could very well have been tied in with the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys. He pointed out that Parkinson's law takes over immediately a new cabinet position is set up, that a great increase in the civil service follows, and that he did not think anything was being accomplished other than to add expense and increase the number of officials.

With a new Parliament a change has also been brought about in the Speakership of this house, and I should like to take this opportunity to personally congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, on your appointment to this high office.

I have known you for many years, ever since you came into the House of Commons in 1940. You always took an active part in the affairs of that house; you participated actively in debate, and you were always friendly, never bitter. As for your qualifications as Speaker, you are perfectly bilingual—which is one of the first qualifications—you have a most gracious wife, a courteous manner, and you are fair in judgment. I would point out to you that being Speaker in the Senate is an easy assignment compared to being Speaker in the House of Commons. I think the honourable Leader (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford) will bear me out in this.

Very few contentious matters arise in the Senate—no one even raises his voice. I look over at Senator Pouliot, who sat in the House of Commons as the honourable member for Temiscouata, where he had a reputation—it was not fair, I am sure—of being one of the bad boys of that house. But today the honourable senator is one of the mildest members of the Senate, and he seldom raises his voice. I merely mention these things, Mr. Speaker, by way of comparison to show how much easier it is to be Speaker of the Senate than of the House of Commons.

I cannot pass on without saying a word regarding our former Speaker, Senator White. As was expressed yesterday by the honourable seconder of the motion for an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, Senator White has been most successful. Though his term was very short, both he and Mrs. White are to be congratulated because they won the highest regard of all members of the Senate and of those connected with it.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: It is a pleasure to congratulate the mover and seconder of the motion for an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. The appointment of the mover and seconder is usually given to new members. In this instance, it was given to members of the Senate who have been here for some time. We must all agree that their speeches were good. The mover of the address, the honourable senator from Repentigny (Hon. Mr. Lefrançois), spoke mostly of his own province and the problems confronting it, but he discussed them in an interesting way and we enjoyed his address.

The seconder of the motion, the honourable senator from Westmorland (Hon. Mr. Taylor), who is from my own province of New Brunswick, pointed out its virtues, and I am sure he thrilled the honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris) when he mentioned Grand Lake and the Saint John River. He made an excellent speech. He is well qualified; he has had an outstanding career in the province of New Brunswick; he was Minister of Agriculture in the legislature for quite a number of years, and a good minister. He has been a senator for a number of years, and is well informed on the problems and needs of our province. However, as the honourable senator was speaking the thought occurred to me that besides making a good job of seconding the motion for an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, he also prepared and made a very good speech from the Throne of his own. I hope that he will be able to prevail upon the Government to implement some of the excellent ideas which he expressed here yesterday.

The newly-appointed members, Senators Walker and Phillips, who were introduced on Thursday last, are welcome additions to this house. It has been a pleasure in the short time that I have been a member of the Senate to note the many capable and able men from all parts of Canada and from all walks of life who have entered this house; and as I look around this Chamber I cannot help but think that here there is indeed a wealth of talent, and that perhaps there is no other body of men to be found anywhere in Canada with so much ability, brains and experience.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): And women.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Yes, certainly, and women. As in the law, when one says "him" and "he" one means both sexes.

An item in the Speech from the Throne has to do with a committee which is being set up in the House of Commons. It states:

> You will be asked to agree to the establishment of a Committee on Procedure, over which the Speaker will preside, with the aim of strengthening Parliament and making it more effective.

On reading that item from the Speech from the Throne, I thought that a similar item might well have been included with regard to the Senate. As I mentioned before, we have so much ability and experience in this chamber, which I have noted in the few years I have been in the Senate, that I cannot help but think it a pity there has not been more work and responsibility given to men and women of this type. While the Commons committee is operating, I would hope that a similar committee might be set up in the Senate as well, because there is no group of people anywhere who are better informed on the needs of the Senate and, let us say, if you will, the reform of the Senate, than honourable senators themselves and I think they would do an excellent job.

Honourable senators, before reviewing any further items contained in the Speech from the Throne—and I intend to make only brief comments—I would like to comment on the economic condition of the country at the time of the recent election and when the administration of affairs was taken over by the present Government. I am sure the public has been amazed at statements made by the Prime Minister and others to the effect that our economy was not in good order. The Prime Minister said he would "get the economy going again," that he would "restore confidence." Surely, he must have had tongue in cheek when he made that statement, or else he was greatly misinformed.

In the Speech from the Throne the Government includes this statement:

> ...it is the purpose of my ministers to expand Canada's export trade, to strengthen our payments balance with other countries, and to ensure increasingly high confidence in our economy and currency.

These are excellent and proper ambitions of any and all governments. They were not only the ambitions but also the achievements, might I say, of the former Government. One should stop to consider the progress there has been in the past year, 1962, and the succeeding months of 1963. When we think of national progress, especially in a comparatively new country such as this, we think of expansion of trade, which we have indeed experienced; we think of the gross national product, which has never been higher; we think of trade balances, which are excellent; of price stability, which is sound; of our gold reserves, which today are very high; and of the improved condition of our people.

Let us then, for a moment, further review some of these important points, in order to reach a conclusion as to whether or not Canada made substantial progress in the abovementioned period.

Honourable senators, I would like to quote from the Letter Review, published by the Review Publishing Company of Fort Erie, Ontario. It commented, in the April 29 issue, as follows:

> With the general election out of the way it will not be considered partisan to remark on the economic state of the nation. The gross national product, at market prices, is going ahead. The total for 1963, barring a disaster, will be more than $40 billion, up from $30 billion in 1956. The increase has been steady, almost spectacular, and suggests that, while further advances are desirable, it is hardly optimism to utter the thought that "The economy should be got going again". It has not stopped for many years.

I am sure all honourable senators will be familiar with an excellent editorial entitled, "A House Left in Good Order", which appeared in the Ottawa Journal which, in my opinion, has one of the best and most frequently quoted editorial pages to be found anywhere in Canada. The Journal wrote that Mr. Diefenbaker "left Mr. Pearson with a house in good order".

Let me review this statement for a few moments. It is indeed true that the new Government has inherited "a house in good order". The national productivity in 1962 had climbed 8 per cent to a peak of $40 billion. This is the biggest income earned in history by a country with a population of twenty million people. Another fact which should be mentioned is that after years of trade deficits we achieved consecutive trade balances in 1961 and 1962, the first surpluses in a decade. We also consider that this new Government has further inherited an economy which, according to advisers to the President of the United States, has achieved greater price stability and a slower rise in the cost of living than any western industrial country. Honourable senators, these are facts which cannot be controverted.

The new Government has inherited a country whose reserves of gold and United States dollars stand at $2.7 billion, the highest in many years.

The new Government has inherited a country in which, during 1962, trade had reached an all-time record high; in which manufacturing had jumped by 8 per cent, construction by 8.2 per cent, business capital investment by 4.8 per cent, outlays for new machinery and equipment by 8.6 per cent, and consumer spending by 5 per cent.

> In short, Mr. Diefenbaker left Mr. Pearson with a country whose people were producing more, selling more, earning more and saving more than ever before in history.

And the Prime Minister now says in the face of these facts that he will "get the economy going again". If the Prime Minister can get the economy going beyond an increase of 8 per cent in gross national product in a single year, I am sure all Canadians will rejoice and be grateful to him; they will, in fact, be grateful if he keeps it going as it is.

I would like also to read a short paragraph from the periodical Industry, which is the official publication of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. This is an extract from its year-end review:

> In terms of economic growth and general prosperity, 1962 was a decidedly good year for Canada and most Canadians.

Some honourable senators may think I am over-emphasizing this, but these are facts which I do not think can be over-emphasized.

> As a people, we earned, spent and saved more in 1962 than in any previous year. The value of goods and services we produced reached a record of 40,000 million dollars, for an estimated increase of around seven per cent. Not least important, there were more jobs and fewer unemployed. All this provides a pretty healthy foundation for the coming year, and, in truth, the outlook is bright.

Buchanan's Bulletin of April 26, 1963, reports that in spite of the tremendous growth the full beneficial effects of the dollar pegging have yet to be fully experienced.

Besides this generous inheritance, the Government has fallen heir to a further legacy, namely, the backlog of legislation on important matters which I am pleased to see they are wise to adopt at least in part. I should like to mention just a few: the Atlantic Development Board—they are making some amendments to this of which I will speak later—redistribution, and a national pension plan. There is a long list but I will not take the time to refer to all of it. As a matter of fact, the most outstanding and progressive proposals of the present Government are those which have already been recommended and expressed in bills and resolutions which were before the last Parliament and which should have received approval at that time.

We have indeed lost six months in furthering the business affairs of this country, and I repeat my question, what have we gained? We do not have a stable government; we have a minority government just as before. What a disappointment this must have been to the Liberal party who had everything and everybody, the press, the radio, even Tory Toronto, working for them. Even the United States was supposed to have given them a leg-up. They were going to sweep the country. We heard that everywhere. Nobody gave Mr. Diefenbaker a chance. And after all that, what happened? We come back with a minority government, and Mr. Diefenbaker, despite the fact that all these forces were arrayed against him, almost won the election.

Now I should like to say a few words on defence. This I consider to be such a confusing matter, and has been for the last five or six months, that I rather hesitate to speak about it because the situation is changing all the time, almost daily, as a matter of fact. But the new Minister of National Defence lost little time, in my opinion, in further confusing the issue. During the election it was said by Opposition spokesmen that Canada had "commitments" with the United States. We do not hear much about those commitments, but we do hear now about "permissive agreements".

In one breath the Government talks of acquiring nuclear warheads as soon as possible, and in the next breath it speaks of "permissive agreements" which will not bind

Canada to anything. In other words, Canada will have no "commitments". The minister has said publicly that he expects a Canada-United States agreement on custody and control of nuclear weapons to be signed in about a month's time. After the agreement is signed, he said, the Bomarcs and the Voodoo jets could be fitted with nuclear hardware. This, he said, would take some months.

It would therefore seem, as the daily Colonist of April 24, 1963, editorialized:

> Mr. Hellyer has now at last discovered that an agreement between the United States and Canada is necessary before Canada becomes obligated to accept nuclear weapons—an agreement which requires both parliamentary ratification and congressional approval as well as the signatures of the contracting parties.
> As his former government had never been a party to such an agreement, Mr. Diefenbaker's assertion still stands unchallenged. It was, after all, he who told the truth.

Speaking of NATO, I think perhaps it is well to withhold comment until the present NATO session is over, but you will recall that the former Prime Minister said that Canada's role would be decided at the NATO meeting. It looks today as if that were true and that this is in fact now being decided by agreement among the nations whose representatives are meeting in the West Block. Canada's part is being determined along with that to be taken by other nations, not on the basis of past commitments but on the basis of agreements being reached at the present time. As I say, I will not now comment further on that but shall wait until we see what happens.

The honourable senator from Westmorland (Hon. Mr. Taylor) also mentioned agriculture in his fine speech. I do not suppose there is anyone in this chamber, and very few in Canada, better qualified to speak on agriculture than is the honourable senator from Westmorland. He spoke about the appointment of another Minister of Agriculture, as proposed in the Speech from the Throne. I must say at once, honourable senators, that in that respect I cannot agree with him. I find it difficult to become enthusiastic over the Government's proposal to appoint a second Minister of Agriculture.

It has long been evident that certain problems which confront the eastern farmer are different from those which confront the western farmer. The honourable senator pointed that out yesterday. But, let us look at fisheries. The fisheries on the east coast of Canada are entirely different from the fisheries on the west coast. Having regard to that fact are we going to appoint two ministers of fisheries? The same thing applies to forestry. Forestry in the Maritime provinces and in Quebec mostly concerns pulpwood and small lumber, and the forestry of British Columbia is, of course, an entirely different thing. For that reason should we have two ministers of forestry?

I could quote examples with respect to other departments. As I said before, it is just a waste of the people's money to multiply departments of Government. In the United States there is one Secretary of Agriculture for the whole of the country.

This proposal will do nothing more than to point up the differences that already exist between east and west. The country should not be divided along agricultural lines, or any other lines.

No matter how devoted to duty are the two Cabinet ministers, there would always be political considerations, and divided responsibility can only lead to two distinct areas of interest. One minister will be pressing for policies that will be beneficial to the areas that come under his jurisdiction, and the other minister will be doing the same with respect to his areas.

These are times when the interests of the nation as a whole must be served even at the risk of some slight gain to one section of the country or of some slight loss to another section. There will be times when agricultural policy will work to the better advantage of one particular area of the nation, but the decision as to what is best for Canada as a whole should rest, in my opinion, with a single Minister of Agriculture.

We have ten provinces, nine of which have a minister of agriculture. I am not sure whether or not Newfoundland has such a minister.

Hon. Mr. Baird: Surely, it has. Why not?

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Well, nothing is too good for Newfoundland, but I thought perhaps that the Department of Agriculture was joined with another department.

Then, we have at the present time eleven ministers of agriculture. When we speak of agriculture we do not speak of teaching farmers how to produce. There is no difficulty in this country with respect to production. As a matter of fact, there is a superabundance of production. That is our trouble. We grow more wheat than we can sell. We grow more fruit than we can sell. New Brunswick sometimes grows more potatoes than it can sell. We certainly have more butter at the present time than we can sell. It is not a matter of production that is a problem to this country so far as agriculture is concerned; it is a matter of markets. It is a trade problem, and not a problem of production for the Department of Agriculture. We need markets.

The honourable senator from Westmorland spoke about assisting the dairy industry. I come from the finest dairy section of the Maritime provinces, as my honourable friend well knows. They call Sussex the buttermilk town, but we like to call it the cream town. We know what it is not to be able to sell dairy products. The Government was paying a subsidy of 25 cents per hundredweight on fluid milk. What happened to that? Just a few days ago this subsidy of 25 cents per hundredweight was taken off fluid milk. I think that is one point that my honourable friend could very well take up with his Government at the present time. We know that there is a surplus of powdered milk, and there is also a huge surplus of butter, some 200 million pounds of it. If the subsidy is taken off fluid milk because there is an over production of powdered milk then you could use the same argument to take the subsidy off butter as well.

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): Honourable senators, may I interrupt the honourable Leader of the Opposition? There was no subsidy on fluid milk as such. The only subsidy paid on fluid milk was on that part of it that went into concentrated milk.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Yes, but that part that went into concentrated milk was fluid milk when it came from the cow, just as was the milk that went into the butter and cheese.

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): There are two different classifications.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Anyway, a subsidy of 25 cents per hundredweight was taken off.

The honourable senator from Westmorland mentioned that the eastern farmers had not received attention. I do not think that is correct. Hon. Mr. Hamilton was a good Minister of Agriculture, and there were good ministers of agriculture before him. I remember Mr. Gardiner was considered a good Minister of Agriculture, as was also Mr. Harkness. Those men did not neglect any part of the country.

One of the great boons to eastern Canada is ARDA. We in eastern Canada will get more benefit from ARDA than will the west. It was intended that money would be poured into programs under ARDA, and it has been done.

Honourable senators, that is all I intend to say at the present moment on the subject of agriculture. I should like now to speak for a minute or two on fisheries. The 12-mile limit is an old problem for Canada as, indeed, it is for nearly every nation of the world. I hope that we obtain the 12-mile limit. I am all for it. But I realize that it is not as easy as saying, in an arbitrary fashion, that we are going to have a 12-mile limit. We have treaties with the United States, and with France, Portugal and Spain, all of which must be observed. We are not the only country concerned in this.

Great Britain has decided that she unilaterally will attain the 12-mile limit, but she is calling in 12 other nations that have treaties with her in order to discuss the matter.

Besides the question of these treaties, I point out that Canada has a tremendous coastline. The Russians have started fishing in the Bay of Fundy—perhaps my honourable friend Senator McLean can tell us more about that. We are continually having trouble at the present time around the coast of Newfoundland. The problem of defending a 12-mile limit is going to be tremendous so far as this country is concerned. Denmark has a similar problem and is very much concerned about it although she is on June 1 declaring a 12-mile limit off her coast. Iceland has had trouble with Great Britain.

So, honourable senators, just to say that we are going to have a 12-mile limit does not exclude the necessity for work and negotiating with other countries before it can be accomplished.

I was pleased to hear my honourable friend Senator Taylor speak of the Atlantic Development Board. We of the Atlantic provinces were pleased last year when the bill was passed by Parliament and the Atlantic Development Board was established. I think we had a good board. The chairman, an outstanding citizen of the city of Fredericton, has made a study of the problems of the Atlantic provinces, and he has with him four outstanding men from other parts of the Atlantic provinces.

A board of five members seemed to be sufficient and, in my mind, it was sufficient, but what has the Government done? It has increased the membership from five to eleven. Someone has been unkind enough to say that that was done for a purpose, and has pointed out that six is one more than five, and in matters of that kind it might be well to have the six over the five. I am sure there was nothing political in so far as the original appointments were concerned.

Then, the honourable senator became enthusiastic over the sum of $100 million being set aside for this purpose, and 1969 being set as the time limit—

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: For how many provinces?

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Four provinces.

Then, in the next breath, he mentions things that must be done, one of which he and I have been in favour of for years, the Chignecto Canal. This in itself will cost anywhere from $100 million to $200 million or $250 million for development, for both navigation, and the production of power. Why, $100 million would not look after the one matter which the senator brought up. He mentioned many others, and I could, too. The people of the Atlantic provinces will be greatly disappointed—make no mistake about that—over this limit of $100 million. They have talked of a billion dollars, according to the papers down there—over a period of years, of course. I believe that, if it is intended to do anything to assist the Atlantic provinces, $100 million is a mere bagatelle.

There was a considerable comment in the Speech from the Throne about trade, about industry, and about employment. These three go hand in hand. I am pleased that the Government is following in the footsteps of the previous Government and taking an interest in these matters.

Canada has been doing well in the past year. We shall watch and hope for the best. World trade is a ticklish problem at the present time. I do not suppose that even in the long history of the world trade has been such an acute problem as it is now. We hope that our statesmen will be meeting with those from other nations. We hope that we will be able to make treaties and so on which will redound to the benefit of Canada. We hope that we will be able to increase our production, not only in the centre of Canada but in the Maritime or Atlantic provinces which the honourable member from Westmorland and I love so much.

There is a trade war in progress at the present time. I suppose it is the greatest trade war that has ever taken place.

I have a long list here, honourable senators, of things which were promised and which were not in the Speech from the Throne. There will be time later on to discuss these matters.

Turning to another subject, I propose to take just a few more minutes. The Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford), who was Leader of the Opposition in 1957, went to great lengths during the debate on the Speech from the Throne to express his ideas of the attitude which the Opposition should take to legislation which came from a minority Government and which did not have behind it the mandate of the people. He wisely said that it should be most carefully scrutinized. As a matter of fact, all legislation should receive such care. Undoubtedly, this was done over the past six years, and the legislation must have been found good, as it was passed. We made our scrutiny, the legislation was found good, and it was passed.

We still have a minority Government. My attitude is that while the Government may not have been elected by a majority vote, or have a majority of members, nevertheless, when legislation comes before us from the other place, it does so with the majority vote of the House of Commons, hence it is supported by the majority of people whom that vote represents.

I think the honourable Senator Roebuck objected to that theory or attitude of mine, but I still contend that that is true. If it is good legislation, it should receive the support of the Senate, as long as it does not interfere with the liberty of individuals and does not transgress the rights of the provinces.

May I say that we, the Opposition, shall receive legislation in the spirit in which this honourable body is traditionally accustomed to receive it, that is, with the intention of giving it a sober second look and inspection. In this chamber, there is no doubt we have made and should make a careful effort, common to both sides, to review carefully and to improve legislation, for the benefit of the people of Canada and for the good of the country as a whole.

From reading and reviewing volumes of Senate Hansard of past years, I have found in that connection there has been the continuous co-operation of most honourable senators who have taken an active part in promoting and assisting the passage of legislation. The present Leader of the Government is a good example.

It is our intention, as the Opposition, to abandon any slight prejudice we may have —I doubt that there is any—and deal with legislation entirely on its merits. It will be our desire that as little partisanship as possible enter into our deliberations. I feel assured, honourable senators, that I am speaking in this regard the minds of all those who sit behind me.

Honourable senators, there are many other subjects. I have discussed but a few. There will no doubt be many other speakers in this debate; there will also be the implementing of the legislation which is projected, and this will take some time.

I turn now to an item in the Speech from the Throne:

> My ministers are determined that the partnership shall be truly equal.

This referred to biculturalism and bilingualism. I might say that I approve, as does our party, the principle of biculturalism and bilingualism. One is part and parcel of the other.

I do not understand altogether what is meant by "biculturalism", but after the committee sits and studies the matter we will get a better idea.

There are many things to be considered, but I do understand what we mean by being bilingual in this country. It means our people learning and speaking both English and French. Frankly, I do not think we have too much reason to be discouraged in the progress we have made in this connection.

We are a big country, a scattered country, and we have made in my lifetime rapid progress. One does not find today, as one did some years ago, any great antipathy; one does not find people particularly opposed to learning French in the English-speaking sections, nor does one find any great antipathy amongst the French-speaking people in regard to learning English. It is an educational problem, a provincial problem.

We all remember the little school house we attended. I remember the red school house I attended, a little one-room building, with a little teacher who, I do not think, ever heard a word of French in her life. Most of the boys and girls who grew up there never heard French. One could not expect such a teacher to teach French, nor could one expect the children coming from such a school to know French.

The same analogy would apply to English in the little schools in the back districts in the province of Quebec and other places. Today there is a different attitude. We now have different schools in our country. I returned to the little red school I attended in New Brunswick and found that it had been closed up. Today there is a large regional high school in that section. There are many other such new schools in our province and throughout the rest of Canada. These schools are teaching French. They can afford to hire French teachers. The situation now is entirely different. In our day, many of us did not have any opportunity to learn French, just as many of the French-speaking population did not have an opportunity to learn English. Our children had better opportunities, and our grandchildren now have much better opportunities. I do not think bilingualism is the big problem which many people think it is. I have seen members of Parliament come to Ottawa from all across Canada and one of the first things many of them try to do is to learn French. Many of them do acquire a faculty in the use of the language, and they deserve credit for it.

I am sure, honourable senators, that all true Canadians are anxious that all steps be taken to ensure equality by these two great races which built this country, both English and French. I express the hope that in 1967, the year of Canada's hundredth anniversary, we shall from one coast of Canada to the other rejoice and say that the intention of the Fathers of Confederation has indeed been fulfilled, or at least that a firm foundation has been established for such fulfilment. This I believe firmly can and will be accomplished, as the honourable mover of the Address in Reply (Hon. Mr. Lefrançois) well said, not by hare-brained fanatics exploding dynamite endangering life, acts of vandalism destroying public and private property, but by people of good common sense, good will, good intentions and good purposes, working together with that aim in view.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford) debate adjourned.

STANDING COMMITTEES

REPORT OF COMMITTEE OF SELECTION ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the report of the Committee of Selection, which was presented yesterday.

Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien, for Hon. Mr. Taylor (Norfolk), moved the adoption of the report.

He said: Honourable senators, although the Committee of Selection has now chosen the various senators to serve on our Standing Committees during the present session, should any senator on either side of the house wish to serve on a particular committee to which he has not been named, a change in membership may be arranged by the Whips and become effective upon a motion to this house.

Report adopted.

APPOINTMENT

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford), with leave of the Senate, moved:

> That the Senators mentioned in the Report of the Committee of Selection as having been chosen to serve on the several Standing Committees during the present Session, be and they are hereby appointed to form part of and constitute the several Committees with which their respective names appear in said report, to inquire into and report upon such matters as may be referred to them from time to time, and that the Committee on Standing Orders be authorized to send for persons, papers and records whenever required; and also that the Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts have power, without special reference by the Senate, to consider any matter affecting the internal economy of the Senate, and such committee shall report the result of such consideration to the Senate for action.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILL

THE PHARMACY EXAMINING BOARD OF CANADA—FIRST READING

Hon. John J. Kinley presented Bill S-7, to incorporate The Pharmacy Examining Board of Canada.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Kinley moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

BANKRUPTCY ACT

BILL TO AMEND—MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Salter A. Hayden moved the second reading of Bill S-2, to amend the Bankruptcy Act.

He said: Honourable senators, a bill proposing some amendments to the Bankruptcy Act was presented in this chamber last session, was considered and discussed on second reading, and was referred to the Banking and Commerce Committee. In due course I will tell you what happened to the bill and how similar the present bill is to the one which was then introduced.

May I point out that the earlier bill had two main features. First, it proposed the repeal of the sections of the Bankruptcy Act which dealt with summary administration of a bankrupt's estate. The authority for the provision for summary administration is to be found in subsection 6 of section 26 of the Bankruptcy Act. Summary administration under the act is available only to individuals. Subsection 6 provides:

> Where the bankrupt is not a corporation and in the opinion of the official receiver the realizable assets of the bankrupt, after deducting the claims of secured creditors, will not exceed five hundred dollars, the provisions of the act relating to summary administration of estates shall apply.

The bill which was introduced last year proposed the repeal of subsection 6 of section 26, and also the administrative sections, namely, sections 114 and 115. Secondly, the bill also provided for a new Part X, entitled "Orderly Payment of Debts". Part X outlined procedures by which a debtor might under certain conditions apply to the Clerk of the District Court in the case of Alberta, and to the Clerk of the County Court in the case of Manitoba, for a consolidation order. Then there were procedures as to what happened in connection with that application and the respective rights of the debtors and creditors. Those were the two main features.

The reason for Part X was that apparently in 1952 there came into operation in Manitoba a provincial statute which proceeded along these lines, that if in a particular case a creditor had a claim against a debtor not in excess of $1,000, or a judgment was issued not in excess of $1,000, the debtor might, if he wanted to secure an orderly payment of his debt or debts, go to the Clerk of the County Court and make an application, and in a proper case a consolidation order would be made.

These provisions were incorporated into the bill which was before us last year. The reason given was that the province of Alberta in or about the year 1959 had introduced similar legislation provincially, and there was the question of the constitutionality of that bill, which ultimately the Supreme Court of Canada decided was unconstitutional. In other words, the province did not have the necessary authority to enact legislation of that kind.

The bill containing Part X, entitled "Orderly Payment of Debts", was an effort by the federal authority to reinstate the operation of the orderly payments and to give it a constitutional base. When the bill came before us there was considerable discussion on some features; I would say more so in relation to the repeal of the summary administration sections than substantially in relation to Part X. Discussion on the bill in committee took five morning meetings. We heard a number of witnesses, including Mr. T. D. MacDonald, Assistant Deputy Minister of Justice; Mr. John Larose, Superintendent of Bankruptcy, Department of Justice; representatives of the Board of Trade of Metropolitan Toronto, the Credit Grantors Association of Canada, and the Montreal Board of Trade.

There was not by any means unanimity of opinion with reference to the repeal of the summary administration sections, because it was felt that there had been abuses in connection with the administration by some sort of collusion between trustees and some people who wanted to get rid of the embarrassment of their debts, and they could fit into subsection 6 of section 26 of the Bankruptcy Act so as to go for a summary administration procedure. There was even a provision in the summary administration procedure under which in many cases the trustee, when he was sending out a notice of the position of the debtor, might also enclose with that material a notice of application for the discharge of the debtor from his bankruptcy.

The evidence before us showed that there had been very substantial abuse of the provisions.

The opinion of the committee at the end was that there was value in having the summary administration provisions retained, and that the way to deal with the matter was to tighten up the provisions so as to give the creditors more control over the procedures. Therefore we changed the provisions of the bill in that regard by retaining section 26 (6), and by striking out some of the administrative provisions contained in sections 114 and 115, and by amending others. The effect of this was to tighten up the procedures.

I think I should tell you now that one of the reasons we did this was that section 198, which is also in the bill which you have before you now, provided that Part X would only come into force in any province upon the issue, at the request of the Lieutenant Governor in Council of that province, of a proclamation by the Governor in Council declaring it to be in force in that province. There was no assurance that any province other than Manitoba and Alberta would take the necessary steps under section 198 to bring Part X into force, and, if we did not leave in the Bankruptcy Act some provisions with reference to summary administration, provinces other than those which applied to bring Part X into force would be left without any summary administration procedures. Therefore, we felt that they should be retained.

We did make some changes in connection with Part X, but I would say that most of the changes were made on recommendations put before us by witnesses who were heard in committee. We were assisted to some extent in drafting by representatives of the Department of Justice, the Assistant Deputy Minister, and the Superintendent of Bankruptcy.

So, honourable senators, the bill now before you is in the form in which it received third reading in the Senate last December. It then went on its way to the Commons, but Parliament was dissolved before it was considered in that house.

The report of the Senate Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce recommending these changes appears at page 446 of our Hansard of the last session. At page 462 will be found the explanation which was given in connection with the changes and their purpose, as incorporated in the report of the committee.

I want to point out to the honourable senators who were not here last year, and to remind those who were, that we had five morning sittings, we heard many witnesses and we resolved the two points in the earlier bill in the manner in which they now appear in this bill before you. On balance, I think we have achieved a very satisfactory result.

I do not propose tonight to point out in detail, for instance, what the procedures are that must be followed under Part X. I did indicate earlier how a debtor starts the ball rolling under Part X, if he meets the conditions which entitle him to the benefit of the provisions for the orderly payment of debts. He may go to the clerk of the court in the province where Part X is in operation and apply for a consolidation order. The material he must submit is set out in the bill. There are certain prohibitions; that is, there are certain types of claims with respect to which the debtor would not be entitled to apply for a consolidation order. These are listed on page 3 of the bill, which deals only with the provinces of Alberta and Manitoba.

Then in paragraph (c) of section 174(3), on the same page, you have the provision that would deal with any other province that might elect to follow the procedures of section 198, to have this Part X come into force in that province. Paragraph (c) says:

> in any other province, any debt of a class designated by the regulations to be a class of debts to which this Part does not apply.

So, I think the drafters of this bill had in mind that it was quite likely Part X might, in the foreseeable future, only come into operation, or might more immediately come into operation, in the provinces of Alberta and Manitoba. So they spelled out the exclusions with reference to these provinces.

I should point out to you, if I have not already done so, that the condition under which a debtor may apply for a consolidation order is that there must not be a creditor who has a claim or a judgment for more than $1,000. Of course, there can be any number of such claims; and, furthermore, if there is a claim in excess of $1,000, or if there is a judgment in excess of $1,000, that may be brought into the consolidation order if the creditor consents. There you have the machinery.

I am told by my friends who practise law in the province of Manitoba that this provincial legislation in that province has worked very well; and they have had a good run at it since 1952, if I am not mistaken. I believe it was at the request of the province of Manitoba and also, I should think, at the request of the province of Alberta, that this Part X was included in the bill which we had before us at the last session.

It is up to the Senate to decide what course it is going to take in relation to this bill, as and when it receives second reading. What more could be added by way of enlightenment in committee, I am not aware at the moment, because we really thrashed out every phase of it thoroughly and completely, and the Hansard record of the five committee meetings is available.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Is the bill exactly the same as that of last session?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: The bill is exactly the same as that which passed here on third reading. It differs substantially from the bill that was introduced because we did not repeal the summary administration provisions which are in the Bankruptcy Act. The changes which we made in Part X, "Orderly Payment of Debts", are not, in my view, substantial. I think they are what you would call good working condition changes, with a little more availability to the public to know what is going on in relation to consolidation orders and things of that kind.

There is nothing more I can add, unless I were going to give a detailed explanation which, I think, is entirely out of place having regard to the past history of this bill in the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Pratt: May I ask the honourable senator a question, because I did not have the opportunity of attending the committee hearings last year when this bill was discussed. Except with respect to the two provinces that are mentioned, has there been a thorough examination as to whether there is any conflict between existing provincial legislation and this proposed legislation?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: We have one honourable senator, and maybe more, who can answer that more clearly than I, and I think that he is going to speak on the bill. However, when the Supreme Court of Canada declared the Alberta legislation unconstitutional, the Alberta legislation and Manitoba legislation were so similar that both fell, in the sense that you would not contemplate taking proceedings under the Manitoba act, and certainly not under the Alberta act having regard to the pronouncement of the Supreme Court of Canada. So I would suspect that Part X was encouraged and sponsored, and maybe even its form was suggested by the provincial authorities as a method of getting into operation a procedure which they had found to be very advisable and helpful. I would suspect too that Part X follows reasonably closely the form of the Manitoba legislation. But I am sure the Senator from River Heights (Hon. Mr. Haig) can tell us more about that.

As to what my friend from St. John's West means by "conflict", I am not too clear, because when this bill first came before us there was no conflict anywhere since there was no legislation anywhere to give rise to conflict. What happened was that the Alberta legislation had been declared ultra vires by the Supreme Court of Canada and the Manitoba legislature could not proceed in the face of that judgment. What is happening now is merely that the federal Government is attempting by this Part X to give constitutional validity to a piece of legislation which a province formerly used and now desires to continue.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Haig, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

FINAL COMMUNIQUE OF NATO MINISTERIAL MEETING

The North Atlantic Council met in ministerial session in Ottawa from 22nd to 24th May, 1963.

2. In their review of the international situation, ministers emphasized that in the world of today peace is indivisible. The enduring character of the North Atlantic Alliance, founded on the principles of interdependence and common defence, constitutes a basic guarantee for the maintenance of peace.

3. The council noted with regret that the Soviet Union had so far shown little interest in seeking equitable solutions for outstanding problems.

4. With regard to Germany and Berlin, the threat has not disappeared. Thanks to the firm attitude maintained by the west, however, developments detrimental to the interests of Berlin and the alliance have been effectively discouraged. In this connection, the alliance abides by the terms of its declaration of 16th December, 1958, on Berlin.

5. Outside the treaty area too, tensions and difficulties continue to exist which have a profound effect on the alliance. Soviet military personnel remain in Cuba; and the situation there, with its repercussions in the region generally, still gives cause for concern. Ministers also expressed their disquiet over recent events in Laos, and stressed the importance of sustained efforts to secure respect for the Geneva agreements.

6. Ministers reaffirmed the importance, in building a peaceful world, of progress toward general and complete disarmament by stages and under effective international control. In this connection, they noted that agreement in principle had been reached between the United States and the U.S.S.R. on measures to improve communications designed to reduce the risk of war by accident or miscalculation. They expressed the hope that the Soviet Union's attitude would evolve sufficiently to permit genuine progress to be made on key disarmament questions.

7. The growing scope and complexity of the problems facing the alliance make it imperative for the council to ensure that its political consultations are as prompt and effective as they can be made. Ministers noted the progress already achieved in this direction and expressed their determination to secure still further improvements.

8. Ministers discussed NATO defence policy and approved the steps taken to organize the nuclear forces assigned or to be assigned to the supreme allied commander Europe (SACEUR).

These include notably:

(a) assignment of the United Kingdom V-bomber force and three U.S. Polaris submarines to SACEUR;

(b) establishment by SACEUR on his staff of a deputy responsible to him for nuclear affairs;

(c) arrangements for broader participation by officers of NATO member countries in nuclear activities in allied command Europe and in co-ordination of operational planning at Omaha;

(d) fuller information to national authorities, both political and military.

Ministers welcomed these measures to increase the effectiveness of the nuclear capability at the disposal of the alliance and to improve co-ordination and control of its nuclear deterrent forces.

9. Ministers recognized the need to achieve a satisfactory balance between nuclear and conventional arms. They directed the council in permanent session to undertake, with the advice of the NATO military authorities, further studies of the interrelated questions of strategy, force requirements and the resources available to meet them.

10. The council noted progress made in the implementation of earlier resolutions concerning the defence problems of Greece and reaffirmed its interest in the effective application of these resolutions.

11. The North Atlantic Alliance seeks peace. It deplores the diversion into the military field of resources which might be used for the betterment of mankind, and in particular for increased efforts to raise living standards in developing countries. But the free world remains faced with a continuing threat and the members of the North Atlantic Alliance have both the right and the duty to protect their freedom and independence.

12. The next ministerial meeting will be held in Paris in December 1963.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, May 29, 1963

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald tabled:

Copies of Statutory Orders and Regulations published in the Canada Gazette, Part II, of Wednesday, May 22, 1963, pursuant to section 7 of the Regulations Act, chapter 235, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

ESTIMATES TABLED

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Honourable senators, I have just received copies of the estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1964, together with the supplementary estimates (A) for the said fiscal year, English and French texts, which I now table.

May I remind honourable senators that the Government will be out of funds on the last day of this month, namely, Friday next, and that an interim supply bill will doubtless be introduced in the House of Commons before the end of this week. I believe it is the intention to introduce it on Friday. Just when it will reach this house depends on the progress which is made in the other house. If I get any definite information, I will be glad to let the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) know as soon as I get it.

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, may I ask the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford) if the estimates just tabled are those prepared by the late Government supposedly for submission to Parliament last year, or are they a new set of estimates altogether?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I am informed that the estimates are those which were prepared by the former administration.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: They were found good.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: They have just been found.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): There has not been time for the present administration to prepare estimates. I may say, however, that my information is that the supplementary estimates which I have tabled were authorized by the present administration.

PRIVATE BILLS

QUEBEC FIRE ASSURANCE COMPANY—FIRST READING

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt presented Bill S-8, respecting Quebec Fire Assurance Company.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next.

Motion agreed to.

CONFEDERATION LIFE ASSOCIATION—FIRST READING

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard presented Bill S-9, respecting Confederation Life Association.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Leonard moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next.

Motion agreed to.

THE GREAT-WEST LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY —FIRST READING

Hon. J. Campbell Haig presented Bill S-10, respecting the Great-West Life Assurance Company.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Haig moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next.

Motion agreed to.

DIVORCE

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's first report:

1. Your committee recommend that they be granted leave to sit during adjournments of the Senate, and also during sittings of the Senate.

2. Your committee also recommend that they be granted authority to appoint as many subcommittees as deemed necessary for the purposes of considering such divorce matters as may be referred to them by the committee and to set the quorum thereof, the subcommittee in each case to report their findings to the committee.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, this is the usual report presented by the standing committee each session; there is no change from similiar reports which we have adopted year after year.

I move that the report be considered at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

EMERGENCY SITTINGS

AUTHORITY TO CONVENE SENATE DURING ADJOURNMENT—NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I rise to give notice of a motion for tomorrow. It is a motion that is passed in this house at each session and gives His Honour the Speaker power to recall the Senate should an emergency arise during an adjournment of the Senate. I think honourable members are familiar with this procedure. It is my intention to move this motion tomorrow, seconded by the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks).

Hon. M. Wallace McCutcheon: Could the honourable Leader of the Government tell us what the emergency is about?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I am neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: It is the usual motion.

STANDING ORDERS COMMITTEE

CHANGE IN MEMBERSHIP

Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien, with leave of the Senate, moved:

> That the name of the Honourable Senator Vien, P.C., be substituted for that of the Honourable Senator Bishop on the list of Senators serving on the Standing Committee on Standing Orders.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate resumed from Thursday, May 23, consideration of His Excellency the Administrator's speech at the opening of the session, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Lefrançois, seconded by Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland), for an address in reply thereto.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, my first words must be to thank the mover and the seconder of the motion for an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, and also the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks), for the complimentary references made to me upon my assuming the position of Leader of the Government in the Senate. They referred to the positions which I have held since I came into Parliament and to the manner in which I handled them. May I say that if I have had any success whatsoever in any of the responsibilities which I have assumed it has always been on account of the co-operation which I have received from members of both sides in both Houses of Parliament.

I should like to refer to the days when I entered the Senate ten years ago as Leader of the Government. At that time the late Senator John T. Haig, whose son is here with us now, was Leader of the Opposition, and we co-operated in all matters that came before us. We enjoyed four wonderful years. He was succeeded in office by the Honourable Senator Aseltine, whom we are all glad to see with us again in high spirits, full of enthusiasm and good health.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Senator Aseltine served during a difficult period. He was Leader of the Government in the Senate with a minority, and I was Leader of the Opposition in the Senate with a majority. It presented not an easy task for either one of us, but I feel that all senators can look back over those years with satisfaction and with the knowledge that we conducted the business of this chamber with a sense of responsibility becoming to the Upper House.

Honourable senators, in thanking the mover, the seconder and Senator Brooks for the remarks they have made about your humble servant, may I assume that they were speaking for all honourable senators, and I will absolve any honourable senators who speak and do not make similar reference to me during this debate.

I am happy that Senator Brooks has taken the seat which I recently vacated to the left of the Speaker, and which, I may say, I was glad to give up to him when I took his seat to the right of the Speaker, which he probably relinquished with much less enthusiasm. I am sure that his sojourn in his present position will be happy and fruitful, and I join with all honourable senators in wishing him well.

On Thursday last Senator Brooks referred to our long association in Parliament. As he said, we were elected in 1935. I like to think of those elected in 1935 as the "class of 1935", and I am glad to say there are more than two of us in the Senate today. Senator Isnor, Senator Tremblay, Senator Turgeon, Senator Kinley, Senator Sarto Fournier and Senator Grant all came into Parliament with us in 1935, and I am sure we all hope that we shall be with you for many years to come.

Honourable senators, may I now make a few remarks about our new Speaker, and this I do in the French language.

(Translation):

Your Honour, it is with a deep feeling of sincerity that I welcome you and congratulate you on your appointment to such an important position.

Several among us have known you for years, and we are all familiar with your experience in the House of Commons. We know that you are quite familiar with the rules of the House of Commons and that before long you will also be familiar with those of the Senate.

We are also happy to see that Mrs. Bourget is accompanying you, and we look forward to the pleasant relations we will have with you and Mrs. Bourget during this Parliament.

(Text):

Honourable senators, the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks), when referring to His Honour the other day, stated that the duties of the Speaker of the Senate are not as onerous as those of the Speaker in the other house. He was quite correct with respect to the directing of the proceedings and presiding over the sittings of this house. However, on special occasions, particularly at ceremonial functions, I believe there is an equally great, and perhaps a greater, responsibility resting on the shoulders of the Speaker of the Senate. Such an event was the recent opening of Parliament, when we were all proud of the manner in which Mr. Speaker rose to the high standards set by his predecessors, and of the way in which he upheld the dignity and decorum of the Upper House amidst the colourful setting of this beautiful chamber.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): We missed His Excellency the Governor General on that day. May I say a few words in French with respect to his absence.

(Translation):

Honourable senators, I wish to express the hope that the health of His Excellency the Governor General will keep improving so that he will soon be able to discharge entirely the duties and responsibilities of his function, as he has done with so much distinction and honour during his mandate.

(Text):

Honourable senators, I would also like to welcome the new senators and congratulate them upon their appointment. We shall look forward to hearing them participate in the debates of this house and in the work of various committees. I am sure they have already found a very friendly atmosphere here; some of them may have been surprised to find an absence of severe partisanship. We all seem to get along very well together regardless of the party to which we belong.

I am not going to refer to the new senators individually, with the exception of my friend Senator Walker. He and I met for the first time many years ago during a lawsuit. We were on opposite sides then, and we are still on opposite sides in this chamber. However, we were not always opposed to each other, for I recall as one of my happiest memories of the Twenty-Fourth Parliament the 8 a.m. lectures that he and I, along with Mr. Speaker Michener and Mr. McCleave, attended in order to perfect our French.

I would now like to refer to the mover (Hon. Mr. Lefrançois) and seconder (Hon. Mr. Taylor, Westmorland) of the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. The mover spoke in French, and I open my remarks in that language to show that the lessons which I took in company with Senator Walker were not in vain.

(Translation):

Honourable senators, I wish to commend Senator Lefrançois who moved the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. It is always difficult to open such a debate but our colleague did it with ease and eloquence and deserves our congratulations.

(Text):

Honourable senators, I should like to refer to the seconder of the motion for an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. The honourable Senator Taylor has taken a prominent part in the debates of this house since his appointment in 1957. Before becoming a senator he was a member of the Legislature of New Brunswick, where he was Minister of Agriculture, and on that subject he is a recognized authority. He has taken a prominent part in the proceedings of the Land Use Committee of this house. He is generally well informed, not only on all that goes on in his own province but also on what is taking place throughout Canada. I wish to congratulate him upon his speech on this occasion. I am sure you will agree with me that the speeches made by the mover and seconder were among the finest we have heard in this house at openings.

Now, honourable senators, I should like to make reference to Senator Burchill, who recently was the recipient of the national Wood Award. I have a copy here of the North Shore Leader dated February 15, 1963, which carries a picture of Senator Burchill, and an article from which I should like to quote an extract.

> The Canadian Lumbermen's Association Tuesday named Liberal Senator G. Percy Burchill of South Nelson as 1963 winner of the "wood award" for outstanding service to the industry. The C.L.A. met in Montreal this week.

Senator Burchill is a former president of the association, the Canadian Forestry Association, the New Brunswick Forest Products Association and the Maritime Lumber Bureau.

He is also chairman of the board of New Brunswick Telephone Company and a director of Bathurst Power and Paper Company and Montreal Trust Company.

He heads the family firm of Geo. Burchill and Sons which has been engaged in the lumber business at South Nelson for over 100 years.

I am sure we all join in extending to Senator Burchill our congratulations.

I should like to make reference to one other member of the Senate who has received honours during the recent recess. I refer to Senator Wallace McCutcheon, who now sits on the Opposition side of the house, and who has taken a prominent part in public life in Canada, especially during the last two years, and even more especially during the last two or three months. I am happy to inform the house that Senator McCutcheon received an honorary degree of Doctor of Laws from St. Francis Xavier University, and also from the University of Western Ontario. I am sure we all join in congratulating him.

Honourable senators, with the change of Government there must of necessity follow some changes which do not bring about general rejoicing. One such change was the abrupt termination of the term of office of Mr. Speaker White. He carried out his duties in a capable, non-partisan and friendly manner, and we were at all times most graciously received by him and by his charming wife in the Speaker's suite. His term of office lasted seven months; but, comparatively speaking, he is still a young man, and it is not beyond the realm of possibility that in 10 or 12 years' time he will be called upon to complete his appointed task.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Make it four years.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Honourable senators, I should like to make a few references to the remarks made by the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) on Thursday last. It is not my intention to go over his speech paragraph by paragraph, nor am I going to be too critical of it. In fact, I thought it was a pretty good speech, and I congratulate him upon it. I must, however, offer some criticisms, although I should not be too severe because he had a difficult task.

There was very little in the Speech from the Throne of which he could disapprove. Although he does not say it in so many words he must regard the Speech as mainly good—that which is bad is not very bad, while that which is good is not quite good enough. He likes the reference in the Speech to the 12-mile limit. That is a good thing, but it is not good enough. His Government did not establish it, and this Government has not done so yet, and doubting Thomas—or should I say doubting Alfred?—that he is, he doubts very much whether it can be done.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I did not say that.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Well, the honourable Leader implied that. I will put it in that way.

Let me tell the honourable Leader of the Opposition and all honourable senators that our new Prime Minister, whom I predict will go down in history as one of the greatest Prime Ministers that Canada ever had, did not make any reckless promise to the fishermen in this respect. He knows the international implications involved, but he knows that they are not insurmountable, and I am confident that before long the fishermen of Canada will have the benefit of the 12-mile limit.

The honourable Leader of the Opposition took exception to the statement by Mr. Pearson that he would get the economy going again. Apparently this is one of the statements that is bad, but is not too bad. What makes it bad in the mind of the honourable Leader is that Mr. Pearson said he would get it going again. It is the word "again" that is objectionable. Mr. Pearson, in the mind of the honourable Leader of the Opposition, I take it, should have said merely that he would get it going.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Keep it going.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): In any event, the honourable Leader did not like the word "again", and if he does not like it I will not use it again. The fact is that the economy has dropped off, and it is necessary to get it going. The new Government is doing just that.

There has been, undoubtedly, over the past few years a loss of confidence in the Government by the business community. I will not take up the time of this honourable chamber by dealing in detail with all of the reasons for the dropping off of the economy and this loss of confidence, but it was not caused, in my opinion at any rate, so much by what the Government did as by what it did not do. I would like to mention just a few things.

Honourable senators, I feel that the Government did not call Parliament together soon enough after the election last year. The election was held on June 18; Parliament could have been, and should have been, called on July 19; and when it was not called by that date, the country began to question why, and from that moment confidence began to drop.

The fact is that Parliament was not called until September 27. What happened then? The estimates which I have tabled today were not considered. If Parliament had been called on July 19 the estimates could have been considered between that time and September 27. The result was that the estimates were never considered by the last Parliament, and that too contributed to the loss of confidence.

The last thing I will mention, honourable senators, is the neglect of the Government to bring down a budget. It is no use saying that they were prevented from bringing down a budget. It is impossible in the House of Commons to prevent any government from bringing down a budget. All the government has to say is that on a Tuesday or Thursday, or whatever day they wish, at 8 o'clock the house will go into Committee of Ways and Means. Nobody can prevent that. But for some reason or other the Government did not do that, and from then on the loss of confidence continued.

I said a moment ago that the present administration is doing what the former administration did not do. They have tabled the estimates—

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Our estimates.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Yes, they have not had time to get their own. I am sure they regret that they have to table these estimates, but there are no others to table. The fact is that they have tabled estimates.

Honourable senators, I would point out that the election was held on April 8 and the new administration did not take over the reins of government until two weeks after that date.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: On April 22.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Yes, on April 22. And yet Parliament was called this year on May 16. That is an action that the former Government should have taken, and which this Government has taken. Also, the Government has tabled the estimates, and we have been assured that before the month of June is out a budget will be presented to Parliament.

I am not going to belabour the fact that the country had lost confidence in the Government, and that that lost confidence is now being restored, apart from reading an article which appeared in the Toronto Globe and Mail on April 30 under the heading, "Hawker Credits Election in $42 Million Expansion". It reads:

> Hawker Siddeley Canada Ltd. plans $42,000,000 of capital spending in the next two years, T. J. Emmert, president, told the annual meeting yesterday in Toronto.
> Mr. Emmert said later he doubted the spending plans would have been as large had the Federal Government not changed in the April 8 election.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Honourable senators, I have a letter from Mr. Emmert denying that quotation.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Well, it has not been denied in the Globe and Mail.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: You would not expect the Globe and Mail to deny it.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I certainly accept the word of the honourable senator that he has such a letter, but I will continue to read what the Globe and Mail had to say about it.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Our great friend!

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): The report continues, quoting Mr. Emmert, as follows:

> The company's plans have become a good deal more solid since the election, he added.
> A new feeling of buoyancy has been created in Canadian business with the government change, he said.

Honourable senators, that is what an article from the Globe and Mail has to say. I am sure I could have looked up other articles to prove that there has been a renewed confidence in Canada since the new Government took over.

I will leave that subject and refer to a few remarks of the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) with regard to a certain inheritance that he told us the present administration received from the former administration. He told us only of the good things, and, of course, they were not all good. He did not mention the staggering deficit that the new administration inherited. I do not know how much it is. Some newspapers—not only the Globe and Mail—predict that it will be at least half a billion dollars. The honourable Leader of the Opposition did not tell us anything about that inheritance.

He did not mention the staggering unemployment problem that was bequeathed to us. He did not tell us that when the new Government took office it assumed the responsibility of creating a favourable economic climate in Canada that would make it possible to reduce the enormous army of unemployed which in April numbered 462,000, or 7.5 per cent of our Canadian labour force. He did not tell us anything about that inheritance.

The honourable Leader of the Opposition did not tell us about the Unemployment Insurance Fund which the new Government has inherited, a fund which had gone down from nearly $1 billion to less than nothing during the years of the last administration. I say "less than nothing" because $23,102,674 had to be paid into the fund in April, and in May about $30 million will have to be put into it to meet the claims of those who are insured under it. That is another inheritance this Government received, and I can quite understand why the honourable Leader of the Opposition did not mention it.

The Leader of the Opposition was also critical of the fact that the cabinet has been enlarged. Honourable senators, this country is developing. The population has become larger, and the business of government has become more complicated. Moreover, I would emphasize that the present administration is not, and never will be, a one-man government. In this administration, as far as possible all provinces are represented in the cabinet.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: There is a blank.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): There is one blank, unfortunately, but I would like to assure the honourable senator that the absence of that province from representation in the cabinet does not mean that it will be neglected by this Government. Its interests will receive as close attention from this Government as will any province in the dominion. This administration is not a party administration: it is an all-Canada administration, and all Canada will be given equal treatment. The Prime Minister has done his best to realize this in the selection of his ministry.

In Manitoba, two Liberal members were elected, one of them was selected for the ministry. In Alberta one Liberal was elected; that member was selected for the ministry. Saskatchewan, Yukon and Northwest Territories did not elect any Liberal members but, as I said before, their interests will not at all be neglected.

It is also interesting to note the number of cabinet ministers who have been appointed from those parts of Canada which have little Liberal representation in Ottawa. The Minister of Agriculture comes from Alberta, the Minister of Forestry from British Columbia, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources from British Columbia, and the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys comes from the western end of the province of Ontario. That is all I intend to criticize in the speech of the honourable Leader of the Opposition.

I should like to refer now to the statement in the Speech from the Throne concerning biculturalism; and I trust honourable senators will bear with me as I open my remarks on that subject in the French language.

(Translation):

Honourable senators, there is a way for all Canadians to contribute to the bicultural character of our country. Everyone can endeavour to speak our two languages. French Canadians seem to appreciate the value of that bilingualism more than their English compatriots. I sincerely congratulate them. As for me, honourable senators, I can assure you that the efforts we make to learn the French language add a new interest to the daily routine; it becomes a pleasant diversion and develops our comprehension of Canada.

(Text):

I believe that the people of Canada have indicated that they will welcome the efforts of the new Government to shore up the Anglo-French foundations of our country, while recognizing that Canada is now made up of people representing many great cultures and races.

Honourable senators all know the degree to which Canada has been enriched over the years, and more particularly in recent years, by the addition of the music, the arts and the crafts, the professional and technical skills of many people having their origin in countries other than England or France. These are facts which we must neither ignore nor neglect. At the same time, we have an obvious responsibility to ensure that the Anglo-French partnership, without which there would have been no Confederation, is a real and equal one. We must also do all that is in our power to strengthen the unity of Canadians from sea to sea.

To this end we must make certain, first, that we fully understand the precise nature and extent of any fissures, strains or stresses in our Anglo-French foundations. Secondly, we must make sure that the workmanship and material used will be such as to guarantee that the restored foundation will support permanently the complex superstructure which is Canada. This may not prove to be an easy task but it is not one from which the new Government will shrink; nor, in my view, is it one which the new Parliament should resist. Indeed, the very survival of Canada as we know it, and as the Fathers of Confederation conceived it, may well depend upon the discovery and adoption of sound and statesmanlike solutions to this problem.

I would now like to make reference to the words in the Speech from the Throne respecting trade:

> Canada's economic progress is vitally dependent on vigorous economic expansion throughout the world. We must expect continuing rapid changes in inter> national trading relationships, changes that face Canada both with problems of adjustment and with new opportunities. My ministers believe that the nations can best achieve economic progress through policies that steadily reduce the barriers limiting trade.

And further:

> Canada will take a constructive part in trade and other economic negotiations. In order to increase employment and production in Canada, it is the purpose of my minsters to expand Canada's export trade...

Those passages clearly reflect the determination of the new administration to play an active and not merely a passive role in the frontal attack on trade barriers now being waged by many nations, largely on the initiative of the United States of America.

I am sure that honourable senators will support this intention and also the budgetary and other measures which will emerge.

The Honourable L. Dana Wilgress has written a report for the Private Planning Association of Canada, from which I would like to make a short quotation. As honourable senators know, Mr. Wilgress is a Canadian Trade Commissioner who was seconded to important posts in Europe and Russia. He was also a member of several Canadian economic commissions to explore trade opportunities in various parts of Europe and Russia. He served as a diplomatic representative from Canada to several countries, including the United Kingdom and Russia. He was also Under Secretary of State for External Affairs for a time. In the final chapter of the booklet entitled Canada's Approach to Trade Negotiations, he refers to the interest which Canadian Governments, starting in 1932, have taken with respect to trading proposals made by the United States of America. This is what he says:

> Whenever in the past the United States has enacted legislation providing for reductions of up to 50 per cent in the United States duties existing at that time, Canada has responded with vigour and in a positive manner. In 1934, the Bennett Government showed commendable courage and imagination by being one of the first governments to propose negotiations with the United States under the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. This Government—

He is referring to the Bennett Government.

> —was not deterred from considering the extension of the Intermediate Tariff to the United States, although at the time many were contending that this would undermine seriously the protection accorded Canadian industry.

Again, still quoting Mr. Wilgress:

> After World War II, the Mackenzie King Government decided upon a leading and active role in support of the United States in its frontal attack on trade barriers. It was due to this decision in 1945, together with the attitude of the St. Laurent Government at Torquay in 1951, that Canada came to play a leading role in GATT. This was a reflection of a strong Canadian desire that the negotiations should be successful in their over-all results.

Honourable senators, today a further challenge and opportunity faces Canada in the realm of world trade. The new Government is now—and you can be assured it will continue—co-operating actively and fully in trade negotiations, to the end that the concessions granted in the Canadian tariff will be commensurate with the benefits received. I am confident that this will result in substantial progress in the direction of increased trade opportunities for all sectors of our economy and to all sections of our country.

There are several clauses in the Speech from the Throne which refer entirely to the House of Commons. One of them reads as follows:

> You will be asked to agree to the establishment of a Committee on Procedure, over which the Speaker will preside, with the aim of strengthening Parliament and making it more effective.

When I read those words, it occurred to me that they might apply with equal force to the members of the Senate. The same thought occurred to the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks), which, if I may be permitted to say so, proves that sometimes great minds do think alike. In any event, I agree entirely with what he said in that respect. We do indeed have in this chamber men and women of outstanding ability and wide experience, and I am sure that their talents could be put to greater use than they are at the present time. Our standing committees are rendering a valuable service to Parliament. Anyone who appears before a Senate committee goes away with a high appreciation of the thoroughness with which we review the legislation which comes before us. This is particularly true of the Banking and Commerce Committee and the Transport and Communications Committee. I should also mention those who appear before the Divorce Committee and have their cases heard and disposed of with a thoroughness and an understanding which is unsurpassed by any court in the land.

Over the past few years special committees of the Senate have also contributed much to the work of Parliament. I refer to the Manpower and Employment Committee, the Land Use Committee, and the Committee on the Traffic in Narcotic Drugs in Canada.

I would also refer to the subjects especially assigned to some of our standing committees. For instance, the Finance Committee, after making a study, suggested that the Government's financial statement should include a summary of the standard objects of expenditure and special categories. The result was that the Government acted on the recommendation of that committee. You will also notice in the estimates of this year, and of every year, a summary containing most valuable information about financial transactions of any department of Government. That came about as a result of the work of the Standing Committee on Finance. The Finance Committee also made a study and presented an excellent report on the subject of inflation.

I must not overlook the Banking and Commerce Committee, which drafted what is now the Income Tax Act, and also reviewed and amended, both by additions and deletions, the present Criminal Code. I can mention other examples of the assistance which the Senate has been to Parliament. However, honourable senators, as the Leader of the Opposition said, we are not doing enough. I am of the same opinion: we could and should do more.

At the present time, there are several subjects which are pressing for inquiry and which we could handle if it were possible to organize our work differently. The honourable Senator Croll has given notice today of an inquiry which he feels the Senate could deal with. I hope we shall be able to do so. Also we could assist the already overburdened House of Commons if more legislation were introduced in the Senate. I realize that there is a constitutional difficulty with respect to financial measures, but I do not think it is insurmountable. The House of Commons has ever-increasing demands on it from a growing country, and we should endeavour to find a way to relieve that house of some of those responsibilities. Investigations which are at times referred to royal commissions could, in some instances, be undertaken and inquired into by the Senate.

I am bringing these suggestions to the attention of honourable senators in the hope that a review of the procedure and other matters relating to the Senate will be undertaken by us and, if so, I am confident that such a review would result, to use the words of the Speech from the Throne, in "strengthening of Parliament and making it more effective".

Honourable senators, having referred to what the Senate might do in the future, may I indicate in a general way my appreciation of the position of the Senate having regard to the situation as it exists in Parliament and throughout the country. When I did this last October, at the commencement of the Twenty-Fifth Parliament, I was Leader of the Opposition in this chamber. Possibly it may be suggested, now that I am Leader of the Government, that what I had to say on that occasion would return to haunt me, or that in some way I would have to "eat my words". Let me say at the outset, and in the strongest possible terms, that I stand firmly behind what I said last October, namely, that where there is a minority government in the House of Commons and where there cannot be said to be a popular mandate for any specific legislative or other proposals, there is an added onus on the Senate to scrutinize with the utmost care all measures emanating from the House of Commons. When I made that statement I did not intend it to be of a provocative political character, and I hope that what I say now will also not be so regarded. However, in October it seemed to be so regarded, and although it provided an abundant opportunity for strenuous rebuttal by certain newly-appointed senators on the other side of the house, today my feeling is that if the senators in question did not agree with me then, they will surely agree with me now when the shoe appears to be on the other foot.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: No, no. The rule is still the same.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Indeed, the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) is already almost a convert, and I am grateful to him for his remarks on Thursday last in which he referred to what I said in 1957, which carries the same implication as what I said last October, as having been wisely said. However, he did leave the impression that in his view there is no difference between the present minority government and the minority government which preceded it. There is no doubt that the present Government is a minority one; I will grant that.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: That is the point, of course.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): But I think you will agree that there are minority governments, and minority governments, and that the differences are not merely of degree.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: One is Liberal and the other is Conservative.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): That is one great difference, and very favourable to the Liberals.

What then is so different about the present minority Government from the one which preceded it? I suggest that there are three significant differences.

In the first place the present Government is almost a majority government. I personally regret that it is not; but it will be obvious to all honourable senators that a few more seats would have transformed it into a majority government. In any event, it has by far the largest number of seats won by any one party, and by far the greatest share of the popular votes cast in the recent general election, in which more people voted than ever before in Canadian history. It is the largest minority government in the history of the Parliament of Canada.

More important perhaps is the fact that it is the declared intention of the present Government to proceed as if it were a majority government. I am sure that the Canadian people would want it that way, and indeed, the leaders of at least two other parties have indicated that the new Government should proceed on that assumption. It will not be looking over its shoulder for support with respect to the measures it introduces.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Just look south.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): My next proposition is that for most of the important proposals in the Speech from the Throne there is a general mandate, in principle, from the people of Canada, no matter for which of the parties their votes were cast. In these matters the Government alone may not have a mandate in the traditional, numerical sense, but this Parliament has a popular mandate for them, and indeed, in my opinion, a public duty to support these measures in principle.

What are some of these measures as now envisaged in the Speech from the Throne? There is the Government's undertaking—and I shall now read from the Speech from the Throne:

> . . . to establish a comprehensive system of contributory pensions.

What party was against this? My recollection is that no party was against it. One party doubted that it could be done—I am not saying which party it was. Another party said that the proposal did not go far enough; another did not have very much to say about it. My point is that all the parties were in favour of it.

In the same category is the proposal to which I have referred with respect to the bicultural inquiry. During the election all parties agreed with the principle of the proposal, although not in accord with the suggested method of procedure. One party wanted it to be done by Parliament. Another party wanted it to be done by conference with the provinces. Still another thought it should be done by a royal commission. But all parties were in favour of the proposal.

The same applies to the following proposals mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, and again I quote from it:

> . . .to assist in increasing production and employment in Canada.
> . . .the development of Canada's great resources for the benefit of Canadians.
> . . .a program for national fishery development.
> . . .to make farming as a whole more stable and more prosperous.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I think we are all against sin.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): The mandate for the implementation of these measures, honourable senators, is stronger than a party mandate, stronger than a Government mandate—it is a parliamentary mandate. I am convinced that the Senate can best act in the interests of Canada during the new Parliament by facilitating the passage of these measures which have manifestly received a large measure of public support as a result of the recent general election. There may be room for argument on details, procedures, wording, and ways and means, but not, I suggest, on principle. The Senate may indeed be able to contribute to the improvement and refinement of the various measures envisaged in the Speech from the Throne. All honourable senators should, of course, take a sober, second look at each piece of legislation as it reaches this chamber. The Senate must, and certainly will, continue to exercise its historic role as a constructive critic. The Senate never was and never will be a rubber stamp for the House of Commons, and if it were only that, as Sir John A. Macdonald wisely said on several occasions, its usefulness would be at an end.

Honourable senators, I have now come to the end of my remarks. Whether or not you agree that there is a parliamentary mandate in respect to most of the measures mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, I trust you will agree with my closing words when I say that Canadians generally expect us all, Commoners and Senators alike, and have indeed given us a mandate, to get on with the administration of public affairs in a business-like and decisive manner.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Reid, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

CANADA PERMANENT TORONTO GENERAL TRUST COMPANY—FIRST READING

Hon. Mr. Choquette presented Bill S-14, respecting Canada Permanent Toronto General Trust Company.

He said: Honourable senators, the sole purpose of this bill is to change the name of the company in English and in French.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Choquette moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald tabled:

Statement of Expenditures and Financial Commitments made under the Veterans' Land Act, for the year ended March 31, 1963, pursuant to section 42 of the said act, chapter 280, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Report of the Department of Defence Production, for the year ended December 31, 1962, pursuant to section 34 of the Defence Production Act, chapter 62, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I move, with leave, that when the Senate rises this day it stand adjourned until Monday next, June 3, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

May I say that the purpose of the adjournment until Monday instead of Tuesday, as is the custom, is that the interim supply bill is likely to be before us on Monday; in that event, it will be the first order of business, with the consent of the house.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Are you expecting royal assent to take place Monday night?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): If the bill reaches us Monday I expect that royal assent will probably take place Tuesday afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

STANDING COMMITTEE ON DIVORCE

ADDITION TO MEMBERSHIP

Hon. John M. Macdonald, with leave of the Senate, moved:

That the name of the Honourable Senator Robertson (Kenora-Rainy River) be added to the list of senators serving on the Standing Committee on Divorce.

Motion agreed to.

EMERGENCY SITTINGS

AUTHORITY TO CONVENE SENATE DURING ADJOURNMENT

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald moved, seconded by Honourable A. J. Brooks:

That, for the duration of the present session of Parliament, should an emergency arise during any adjournment of the Senate, which would in the opinion of the Honourable the Speaker warrant that the Senate meet prior to the time set forth in the motion for such adjournment, the Honourable the Speaker be authorized to notify honourable senators at their addresses registered with the Clerk of the Senate to meet at a time earlier than that set out in the motion for such adjournment, and non-receipt by any one or more honourable senators of such call shall not have any effect upon the sufficiency and validity thereof.

He said: I believe honourable senators are familiar with the reason for this motion, which I move, seconded by the Leader of the Opposition.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVILEGE

NEWSPAPER ARTICLE—NORRIS COMMISSION REPORT

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, may I ask your indulgence for a few moments while I refer to a matter of personal privilege. I may add that it is a matter that affects not only myself but, I think, indirectly reflects on some other honourable members of this house.

In the Globe and Mail of yesterday there appeared an article which, by the way, did not come to my attention until after the house rose yesterday afternoon. It appeared under the black headline:

SIU Enlisting Support of Senior Liberal MPs

And the sub-heading reads:

Lobbying to Forestall Ship Report

This has to do with the report that is expected to be brought down for our attention within a reasonable time from this date. The body of the article goes on to indicate that Mr. Banks—who is, I believe, the head of the Seafarers' International Union of Canada—is organizing a lobby in Parliament to offset any adverse comments that may be made about him and his union when the report of Commissioner Norris is brought down.

As everyone knows, Commissioner Norris is an eminent judge, a man of probity and a man of ability. This article conveys the impression that some senior Liberal members in Parliament are sympathetic to Mr. Banks and his union, and the inference is that they might withhold support from any report that the commissioner brings down.

Coming more directly to the matter which I wish to place before you, the report contains this paragraph:

Senator Thomas A. Crerar, a member of the Board of Directors of Canada Steamship Lines, a firm with which Mr. Banks has had friendly relations, is said to be favourably inclined to Mr. Banks and the S.I.U.

Now that, honourable senators, is a complete distortion. I do not know where the writer of the article gets his information. It is true that I am a director of Canada Steamship Lines, and I may add that, like my honourable friend who sits opposite me, I am a director of several other companies. Perhaps I should say he was a director of several companies. But so far as my knowledge goes, Canada Steamship Lines had the same relationship with Mr. Banks and his union as did other shipowners operating on the Great Lakes.

Coming back to the reference to myself, I can only repeat that this is a complete misrepresentation, and I may add that, based on the evidence submitted to the Norris Commission, as reported in the newspapers from time to time, Mr. Banks has brought dishonour to the great body of labour, which is an honourable body in this country. As far as I am concerned, I would not support Mr. Banks' candidacy for the job of dog-catcher! I trust that makes my position completely clear.

AMENDMENT TO OFFICIAL REPORT

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, may I refer to certain remarks which I made in the Senate yesterday. I referred to the fact that I entered Parliament in the same year as the Leader of the Opposition, and I mentioned our belonging to the class of 1935. At that time I named other senators who entered Parliament with us, but inadvertently omitted to mention the names of two distinguished senators in this house, who I am very happy to say also belong to this class. I realized my omission as I was leaving the chamber yesterday, and I had the names added to the list I gave.

The names I neglected to mention yesterday, and which were later inserted in the official report are, the honourable Senator Gray Turgeon, and the honourable Senator J. J. Kinley.

The Senate resumed from yesterday consideration of His Excellency the Administrator's speech at the opening of the session, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Lefrançois, seconded by Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland), for an address in reply thereto.

Hon. Thomas Reid: Honourable senators, in rising to speak to this debate, may I point out that I have only a few subjects to deal with, some of which may be rather lengthy. First I am going to speak on the Columbia River Treaty, and the second subject will be the 12-mile fishing and sea limit, a matter which is agitating the minds of many of our people from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Regarding the Columbia River Treaty, I am not going to deal with the details of the treaty because it will come before us officially at the appropriate time, in the committee stage, when we will have an opportunity of discussing its various clauses. It is necessary that we have the treaty before us, otherwise anything which I might say as to details might not be clearly understood.

Referring further to this matter, an item appeared in the paper to the effect that Premier Bennett, Dr. Gordon Shrum, Dr. Hugh Keenleyside, Attorney-General Robert Bonner, and Honourable Ray Williston were coming to Ottawa and that the Prime Minister has agreed to meet them. I quite realize that the Prime Minister knows something of the treaty, and it is not for me to advise him, but having some knowledge of the personnel of this delegation that is coming, I suggest he would be wise to have some of his smartest aides with him, otherwise this delegation is likely to put something over on him.

He has some able supporters in the House of Commons, men with engineering qualifications and experts who have studied this subject. For instance, there is Mr. Jack Davis and the Honourable Arthur Laing, and there are others who are well versed in the history of the treaty.

Something has been said about the matter being taken up before Parliament met, but I was pleased to read the statement of the Prime Minister to the effect that he intends to submit the agreement for study to the Standing Committee on External Affairs of the House of Commons, and that after ratification by Parliament the treaty will then be submitted to the Kennedy administration. I have only one comment to make on that. Personally, I would like to see it studied by a joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons. I expect that when the committee sits it will hear dozens of witnesses. Of course we will be able to read their testimony, but I think it would be far better if we were represented on the committee.

There is a history of the Columbia River Treaty that I have not heard mentioned lately in the house, and which was a prelude to the present treaty. I have in my hand a copy of the first agreement, which was argued out before committees of Parliament. The Columbia River Treaty emanated from an approach made by the Kaiser Aluminum interests to Mr. Bennett for the building of a dam, and later a bill entitled, "An Act Respecting the Construction, Operation and Maintenance of International River Improvements", was introduced in Parliament and debated in committees of the House of Commons. I am not going to say that politics entered into the matter, but I do know that it was not long until that bill was placed before Parliament and I think I am safe in saying that it was designed to block the agreement entered into between Mr. Bennett and the Kaiser interests.

The sum of $125,000 was put up to the province, and I have always wondered what happened to that money after that part of the bargain fell through. Mr. Bennett was asked by one of the Opposition members last year why the cheque had not been sent back to the aluminum company, and his rather naïve answer was, "Well, they have never asked for it." I believe he still has that cheque. I hope that our Prime Minister will ask him whether he still has it and, if so, why he is holding on to it. Those of us who were close to the subject in those days realized that there was a real fight on between the aluminum interests of Canada and the United States against Kaiser. It was assumed that if Kaiser got that dam built and he was supplied with Canadian water he could generate more power in his plant, which was the only reason for the bill, and he could then perhaps undercut the other interests in the selling of aluminum.

The Prime Minister has summed up the problem. Before he became Prime Minister he was interviewed, and I am going to take a few minutes to read into the record a few sentences from the report of that interview. Mr. Pearson was asked these questions by a reporter and he gave these answers:

> INTERVIEWER: But if we approach the Americans and ask them to renegotiate the treaty does this not give them a bargaining advantage, and would we not be likely to come out worse at the end of renegotiation rather than better?
> MR. PEARSON: I would certainly think not. I think the treaty is unduly favourable to the United States now. I think changes could be made which would improve the treaty from our point of view but which would be satisfactory to the Americans.
> INTERVIEWER: Do you believe that the treaty was signed in an unseemly rush at the end?
> MR. PEARSON: I think that that has been shown to be the case; that this effort to get the treaty signed before President Eisenhower went out of office was mistaken haste, something we don't often accuse this present Government of being guilty of.

This was last year, mind you, not today.

In my opinion—and I have also said this outside the Senate—Prime Minister Diefenbaker's rush at that time was also for political purposes. He had fixed up the Maritimes with electrical energy, the St. Lawrence projects were completed, the South Saskatchewan Dam was under way, and the then Prime Minister wanted to add another laurel to his crown and was willing to settle for almost anything.

I think we are now going about it in the right way. Mr. Bennett and his aides are coming to Ottawa, and the discussion will be aboveboard, before we go to the United States.

Let me say further, as one who has made some study of this matter I am not altogether sure that the federal Government has the right to interfere as they seem to be doing in provincial powers. I have noticed since I came to Parliament in 1930 that bit by bit the powers of the provinces have been gradually taken over by the federal authorities. Honestly, I do not like it; I view it with some misgiving.

Mr. Pearson—now the Prime Minister—was asked by the same reporter about downstream benefits. He was inclined to support the sale of these downstream benefits for a fixed period, under certain conditions. That is all past history regarding the export of power or water. However, I have always wondered, and could never understand, why we have had no compunction at all about pouring our oil across the border. We are sending oil and gas and fuel of all kinds across the line. There is a gas pipeline which passes close to where I live, and the Americans are getting gas from it cheaper than the Canadian people who live around the area. It is one of our wasting heritages. One has to admit that the heritages of oil and gas are dwindling, but the heritage of water is not. I could never agree that the federal Government had the right to step in and prevent an agreement of that kind being entered into between the province of British Columbia and the United States of America.

The negotiations are now coming to the proper level, because the premier of the province and his associates are coming here in an endeavour to clean up the negotiations before the treaty comes to the house for thorough examination.

I am not going to pursue that matter further, as I have another important subject to deal with. I wish to supply honourable senators with information which perhaps may be useful to them in regard to the 12-mile limit. The question of the 12-mile limit came before the United Nations in 1960 and the Canadian proposal was lost by one vote—due, of course, to the way they do things there. In order to pass, the proposal had to have a two-thirds majority of all those who voted and, as I say, it was lost by just one vote.

I do not think I am talking out of turn when I say I have an idea that when the United Nations meets again that decision will be reversed, particularly if the Prime Minister, the Right Honourable Lester B. Pearson, goes in person to the meeting. Lobbying has to be done fairly cleverly. We must not overlook the fact that 88 nations attended the United Nations meeting in 1960. It is interesting to note that 38 countries have fishing limits varying from ten to 200 miles and some people wonder why we are fighting over a 12-mile limit.

From my information the question of the 12-mile limit is one of the most complicated we have to face. It seems to be a simple question until we get the views of other countries. Great Britain and France are rather against the 12-mile limit proposal, because they say that 12 miles would take in the whole of the English channel and if that limit were adopted they would stand to lose something. I do not know whether they would or not, but that is the contention of France and Great Britain.

Honourable senators, perhaps this question could be explained more clearly if I put on record an article from the External Affairs Bulletin of June 1960. It reads:

> THE CANADIAN PROPOSAL. The problem of agreeing on a rule of law that would set a breadth for the territorial sea acceptable to most countries of the world has remained unsolved since the failure of the Hague Conference in 1930. Countries have not agreed because they have diverging interests. . . . . Canada made a series of representations to some 60 countries on behalf of the Canadian "six-plus-six" proposal and prepared a pamphlet that was distributed to most nations of the world. In this way, Canada helped to generate interest in the subject and tried to acquaint various countries not only with the terms of the only proposal that seemed likely to succeed but also with the chaotic conditions to which a failure of the conference could expose the world . . .
> VOTING ON THE PROPOSALS. When the 18-Power and the joint Canada-United States proposals were voted on in committee on April 13, the former was rejected by a vote of 36 in favour and 39 against, with 13 abstentions, while the latter was adopted by a vote of 43 in favour and 33 against with 12 abstentions. Because the joint Canada-United States proposal was therefore the only major proposal to succeed in committee, it was the only one referred to the Plenary Session, where it attracted further support. On April 26, the proposal received 54 votes in favour and 28 votes against (with 5 abstentions—Lebanon not being present), thereby being defeated by only one vote.

For that reason, I personally have great hope that the next time this matter comes up the prospect of its being defeated by one vote will be overcome by a little more direct lobbying. Because of the Prime Minister's wide experience and influence in diplomatic circles, I think that on the next occasion the proposal will succeed and we will obtain this 12-mile limit.

Honourable senators, I wish now to put on record another document for the information of all members. This is a pamphlet which was issued in January 1960 by the Fisheries Association of British Columbia. Later on I shall have something to say about fishing in general and in particular about what some countries are doing, the amount of fish caught by certain countries and the per capita consumption of fish. This information may come as a surprise to many senators. Reading from the Fisheries Association of British Columbia pamphlet:

> Fisheries scientists generally feel that control over the continental shelf would provide the best zone for conservation. The continental shelf is usually defined as that part of the sea bed adjacent to shore and less than one hundred fathoms in depth. Since there is considerable variation in the width of this shelf in the oceans of the world, such a definition would not be uniform. However, a 12-mile zone is a fair average, and so was initially advocated by many of the coastal states who wanted improved conservation.
> Canada has for years given concrete evidence of support for a 12-mile limit in the interests of conservation. On the east coast, the large Canadian trawlers are by law kept 12 miles out, so as not to destroy the inshore nursery grounds with their heavy trawls.
> Big trawlers of numerous nations, however, fish right up to our 3-mile limit, and on occasion have had the gall to call up the Canadian patrol boats when they saw Canadian trawlers fishing closer than 12 miles, and ask that they be arrested.

That is what I call unmitigated gall.

> The 12-mile limit has been strongly opposed by such nations as the United Kingdom, France, United States, and Japan, both on the grounds that it would exclude their fishing fleets from areas now used, and would also interfere with both defence and transport.
> Adoption of a 12-mile limit would close off any channel between nations...

That is one of the drawbacks which is causing some nations to hesitate agreeing to the proposed changes.

> ...or between adjacent parts of one nation, which was less than 24 miles wide. The whole English Channel between Dover and Calais, for example, would become territorial waters of the United Kingdom and France.
> International law provides for the right of innocent passage of civilian vessels through territorial waters, but most nations prohibit the passage of foreign naval vessels, except under special agreement or permit, and foreign fishing vessels, unless all fishing gear is stowed below decks.

Countries with a 3-mile limit are Japan, the Netherlands, United States and Canada. Countries with a 4-mile limit are Denmark, Norway and Sweden. Countries with a 6-mile limit are Greece, India, Italy and Siam. Countries with a 12-mile limit are Ghana, Guatemala, Mexico, Saudi-Arabia, Venezuela and the Soviet Union. Believe it or not, there is one country with a 200-mile limit, namely, Peru. I understand they picked up American fishing vessels which were fishing 200 miles out. I do not think they will be able to get away with that indefinitely, but at least it is an interesting point. The problem of fixing a limit with Britain and France concerns the English Channel; these two countries come under the Treaty of Utrecht, passed in the year 1880.

I come now to a subject with which I feel fairly familiar, that of the salmon fisheries. I wish to point out to honourable senators that the 12-mile limit will do nothing at all to save the British Columbia salmon.

An interesting feature of the research made by the International Pacific Salmon Fisheries Commission is that we have reached a point in our investigation and research where, by an examination of salmon caught in the open seas or coursing down the rivers, we are actually able to tell their point of destination. There are six or seven different locations in British Columbia to which these salmon go to spawn. Some at sea go 2,000 miles distant. Yet when they are caught we can tell exactly where they are heading for. This is determined by taking the scales off the fish when they are about four or five inches in length. The scales of a fish are somewhat like the rings on a tree. As you know, you can tell the years of growth of a tree by the number of rings. The scales of a fish, like the rings of a tree, may differ widely, but nevertheless the scale is the means of identification by which our biologists are able to tell us exactly where the salmon are born.

There are many headaches in connection with fishing limits. Japan, the United States and Canada, have been doing considerable fishing, under the North Pacific Fisheries Act, sometimes catching fish 1,000 miles out from shore and 2,000 miles up from the province of British Columbia. They have found a choice spot in the middle of the Pacific which might well be the continental shelf, where salmon from Alaska and all other fishing areas abound. Fraser River salmon are often to be found 2,000 miles away from their habitat, and they will head back to these distant points when the proper time comes to spawn. How they find their way back is one of the miracles of nature.

Many people believe that a settlement of the 12-mile limit will solve all difficulties in fishing, but may I point out that although a lot of bottom fish within the 12-mile limit will be protected, the two varieties of salmon, pink and sockeye, found in the far distance I have mentioned, will not be protected. Japan has been very uneasy under the present treaty she signed with the United States and Canada under the North Pacific pact. Perhaps some honourable senators have read of the terrific row in British Columbia over allowing Japanese to fish along the west coast, three miles off the Queen Charlotte Islands. One has to attend the meetings which are held to realize how tough these fishermen can be. I attended one, at which there were at least 1,500 persons present, and I must say that the cat-calling, the interruptions, and the things said to the members of the North Pacific pact were anything but cordial.

What can be done to protect our fish? I think we would do well to consider what is being done by the Russians, whose large fleets are beginning to head down. Soviet Russia is acquiring some of the world's largest and most modern fishing vessels, more modern than even our own. They have vessels equipped to handle the fish as soon as it is caught: it is cooked and put in cans, it is fresh or frozen, and returned to the Soviet Union. That nation might well be approached to see if it would join us in an effort to protect our fishing waters. The Japanese have threatened to pull out of the North Pacific pact, and if they do so they have intimated that they will fish the Pacific, and the Russians have indicated that they will support the Japanese. Our fisheries could be placed in a very serious position if Japan dropped out and the Soviet Union moved into the Pacific.

Honourable senators, I have before me some figures on quantities of fish from a few of the leading nations of the world, the latest figures being for 1961. The information is given in metric tons—a metric ton being 240 pounds more than the ton weight by which we measure—and is as follows:

WORLD FISHERIES CATCH
(In Metric Tons)

	1957	1961
U.S.S.R.	2,377,000	3,250,000
United States		2,874,000
Great Britain		897,000
Canada		1,004,000
Japan	4,828,000	6,711,000

I shall now give a figure for China—and it is a toss-up as to whether Japan catches more fish than China. Perhaps it will come as a surprise that I should mention China, because that country is never in the news when fisheries are mentioned. The catch for China in 1959 was 5,020,000 metric tons. One reason we do not hear much about figures for China is the fact that she has an extensive system of pools throughout the country for raising fish. China is a fish-eating nation and it is doubtful whether her people could survive without fish as a food. Figures of consumption, therefore, may only be regarded as an estimate.

It may be of interest to note that the United Kingdom is a heavy consumer of fish, the per capita consumption being 22 pounds per annum. Canada's consumption is 12½ pounds per annum; the United States, 10½ pounds, and the Soviet Union, 15 pounds. There is no data of consumption per capita for China and Japan because, as already pointed out, not only do they get fish from the seas but they raise them in large ponds and lakes throughout the country in order to meet the great need of their people for food.

I am now going to deal with an entirely different subject. However, before doing so, and while on the subject of the Japanese, I want to mention that there is a strait north of the Hecate Strait, the property of the United States, called Shelikof Strait. It is 25 miles wide, measured from the mainland. Just a few weeks ago the State of Alaska—not the United States government—sent ships in there and took some Japanese fishermen back to Alaska for trial on a charge of fishing in American waters. I do not know what the outcome will be because it was not the federal government at Washington that took the step. There will likely be some conflict as between the rights of the state and the rights of the federal government.

We might have a similar conflict of interest here too. Even now there is a fight on between the provincial Government of British Columbia and the federal Government at Ottawa with regard to oil leases. I have in my room a map which I should have brought down to the chamber to show you. It is worth seeing. It is a large map of the waters between the Queen Charlotte Islands and the mainland, and in connection with it there are listed on three pages the names of leaseholders, most of the leases being held by the Shell Oil Company of Canada. These leases were granted to various companies and individuals to drill for oil under that body of water. The map is divided into little squares showing the numbers of the leases, and there is not one vacant area on it. It is filled with the names of oil companies having the right to drill for oil in that area.

I can see some serious problems arising on this question. Bear in mind that that body of water is 60 miles wide. Can you imagine granting leases covering a width of 60 miles? The province contends it has the same right to grant leases and is doing so. I am inclined to support the province, of course, and I think it has been understood that the Senate should support the provinces more than the federal power because the provinces at times need a champion. That is a question we had better have settled.

What amuses me in a way is that the federal Government shows no compunction about granting oil exploration leases to big oil firms to the extent of 2,800,000 acres in 60 miles of sea, and yet when it is asked to change the offshore fishing leases involving certain nations it is very reluctant to take action. I do hope that before the session is over we will be able to get some answer from the Government on this question. I am not criticising the past administration but I am just mentioning as an item of interest that these leases should have been granted in 1960 and 1961.

Honourable senators, there will have to be some solution because the province is going to carry out the same sort of thing, that is, the granting of leases, and I suppose the Shell Oil Company is anxious to have leases from both jurisdictions so that they will be on the right side when a decision is made as to whether the dominion has the right to grant leases. It seems to be an extreme situation when you look across that extensive body of water, 60 miles or so to the other shore, to think that we are granting leases to search for oil in the bed of the sea.

The charge or fee is $250 but I am not sure whether that is for each lease or for a number of leases. There are in all seven companies, five private individuals, and one private individual with one lease. The Shell Oil Company has 148 leases, which were granted in 1960-61.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: For what period of time were these leases granted? Is there a definite time?

Hon. Mr. Reid: I am glad you asked that question because I omitted to give the information. It is for a period of 10 years.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Are the leaseholders required to do certain exploratory work in that time?

Hon. Mr. Reid: To be candid, I do not know what the agreements provide. I only know that permits for drilling were granted. The information I have is as to the number of leases. Looking at the map and noting the number of leases that have been granted to drill for oil, one wonders how it will all end.

Honourable senators, I hope you have been interested in this story I have told regarding fishing. I am greatly interested in fishing and the effect of the establishment of the 12-mile limit. I know it will help our bottom fish 12 miles out. I have taken this occasion to warn the Government that if Japan breaks her agreement I believe we will be up against a most difficult situation. Russia intimated two weeks ago that there should be no restriction on the catching of salmon in the Pacific Ocean.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: May I just ask one question of Senator Reid? What was the date of the last agreement between the United States, Japan and Canada regarding fishing rights in the Pacific Ocean?

Hon. Mr. Reid: Do you mean in the North Pacific?

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Reid: I think the North Pacific pact was signed in 1958.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: For a period of how long?

Hon. Mr. Reid: The North Pacific pact stipulated no period of years. Like the life of the Commission on which I serve, there is no specified period of years. It is just set up. However, provision is made for a revision now and then; this is the year for revision, and, if they want to, they can apply to revise it. Possibly that will answer your question.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Phillips, debate adjourned.

PRIVATE BILL

THE PHARMACY EXAMINING BOARD OF CANADA—SECOND READING

Hon. John J. Kinley moved the second reading of Bill S-7, to incorporate the Pharmacy Examining Board of Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, the title of the bill that I am about to discuss is the same as one that was introduced in this house at the previous Parliament, and its purpose is the same.

The bill, after being introduced in this house on November 14 last, received second reading, was considered by the Senate Standing Committee on Public Health and Welfare, received third reading and was passed. In the House of Commons it received first and second readings, and got preference over other private bills at the time it was discussed. It was then referred to the Standing Committee on Private Bills in that house, where it became a casualty on dissolution of Parliament. It is therefore necessary for me at this time to ask that the bill be again considered in this house.

The purpose of the bill is to incorporate The Pharmacy Examining Board of Canada. It is the same bill as was sent from this house to the House of Commons at the previous session. It is a simple bill, one to create a Canadian pharmacy examining board, having to do with the sale of drugs and medicines in Canada and, of course, having certain functions with regard to the activities of its members. When the former bill was under consideration in this house, with the help of the clerk I went carefully over the sections with the incorporators and they agreed to such amendments as were thought proper. They were accepted by the Standing Committee on Public Health and Welfare, and subsequently passed this house without division.

I do not know that I need go over the bill again, except perhaps to mention certain points in it. Our reason for its close inspection was to ensure that provincial rights were protected. I may say that those who are asking that this board be established want to establish a course that will provide the best qualifications in Canada. This has already been done for the medical and dental professions, which have legislation governing Canadian registration.

This board, in important matters, will be almost completely controlled by the provincial authorities. The participating bodies are those which say what shall be done with regard to certificates and qualifications.

Section 4 reads:

> The head office of the board shall be in the city of Toronto, in the province of Ontario, or at such other place as the board may determine by by-law from time to time.

Section 5 sets out the purposes of the board:

> (a) to establish qualifications for pharmacists, acceptable to participating licensing bodies and recognizable as the highest in Canada.

The participating licensing bodies are representative of the provinces.

Section 5(b) reads:

> to provide for fair and equitable examinations, for the issuance of certificates of qualification to, and for the registration of, applicants therefor—

Section 5(c) reads:

> to promote, with the consent of the appropriate licensing bodies—

That is, those of the provinces.

> —the enactment of such provincial legislation as may be necessary or desirable in order to supplement the provisions of this act.

Section 6 sets out the composition of the board as follows:

> (a) one member appointed as its representative by each participating licensing body;
> (b) two members appointed by the Canadian Conference of Pharmaceutical Faculties, at least one of whom shall be proficient in both French and the English languages;
> (c) one member appointed by the Canadian Society of Hospital Pharmacists;
> (d) the general manager for the time being of the Canadian Pharmaceutical Association; and
> (e) the president for the time being of the Canadian Pharmaceutical Association.

A special proviso follows, and this was dealt with last session. In this bill there is a provision, if any of the appointing bodies fails to appoint a representative to the board, that the board shall still be properly constituted, and within a reasonable time after a vacancy occurs the registrar-treasurer of the board shall notify such appointing body by registered mail of such failure. That question was considered by the sponsors of the bill and officials of the Senate, and I think it has been settled that it rests with the province.

Section 8 reads:

> Each appointed member of the board shall continue in office until his successor is appointed, or, if his successor is appointed before the expiration of his term, until the expiration of such term.

Section 9 provides that:

> No person shall be eligible for membership on the board unless he is a qualified pharmacist registered under this act: Provided that the requirement of registration shall not apply to the members of the first board established under this act.

Section 10 reads as follows:

(1) A participating licensing body may by resolution withdraw from participation in the activities of the board upon giving the board six months' notice of its intention so to do and in such event the term of office of its representative on the board shall expire at the end of such period of notice.

Section 11 provides that:

(1) The board shall have power to (a) issue certificates of qualification in pharmacy to applicants therefor; (b) establish, maintain and revise from time to time a register...of all persons who have been granted certificates of qualification by the board; (c) establish the terms and conditions under which persons may obtain certificates of qualification and, subject to this act, the terms and conditions under which their names may be placed on the Register, removed therefrom or restored thereto; and (d) establish and maintain a panel or panels of examiners to conduct examinations and make recommendations to the board concerning the issuance of certificates of qualification to, and the registration of, applicants therefor.

(2) Nothing in this act shall authorize the board to interfere with or otherwise affect the rights or privileges of any licensing body under provincial law.

In the bill introduced last year the wording was:

(2) Nothing in subsection (1) shall authorize...

We thought the amendment helped to preserve the provincial rights.

With regard to the by-laws, the board may alter or appeal all or any of them, but section 14(3) provides that:

No such by-law or regulation shall be enacted, altered or repealed except with the concurrence of two-thirds of the members of the board appointed by participating licensing bodies.

That means that at least two-thirds of those who represent, and are appointed by, the provinces must concur; that any change must be approved by the pharmaceutical societies in the provinces.

Section 15 is in the form usually used when changes are made and when things are done that affect persons long in the business. This section reads:

Any qualified pharmacist licensed or registered in any province prior to the coming into force of this act shall, after ten years from the date when he became so licensed or registered, be entitled to be registered under this act without examination upon payment of the prescribed fees.

This is the usual procedure concerning new legislation, that those who are well established in business are admitted without examination.

Then there is the usual section concerning the holding of property by the board. And, finally, section 17 deals with the powers to borrow money. That is a brief summary of the bill.

We have read in the newspapers and have heard discussed in this house the difficulties affecting the health and welfare of our people, and therefore we feel that this bill is a timely one. The bill represents a step forward, and I commend it to the house for favourable consideration on second reading.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I ask the honourable senator a question? Does the obtaining of a certificate, in accordance with this act, qualify an individual to practise in any of the provinces? Is that an essential qualification to practise?

Hon. Mr. Kinley: Unless a future arrangement is made whereby they accept this higher examination, by reciprocity, it does not give them any benefit in any province, except that it affords a higher grade certificate to better qualify the individual pharmacist. It is like a post-graduate course.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: So it is purely honorary, as I understand it.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: That is it: it is purely honorary—until such time as other arrangements may be satisfactorily made with the provinces.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The right to qualify under the certificate to practise which this board might issue, and the authority to issue such a certificate, would come from the province?

Hon. Mr. Kinley: Yes, it comes from the province, and not this board. The individual can only practise pharmacy by being registered in the province where he passes his examinations. That is his primary privilege to practise pharmacy.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I continue for a moment? In section 11(2) I see these words:

Nothing in this act shall authorize the board to interfere with or otherwise affect the rights or privileges of any licensing body under provincial law.

Is that not rather restrictive? Should this act ever interfere with the privileges of the individual or of the province? Why does that restrict it to the licensing body? Should it not include the province, and perhaps the provincial legislature, or something of that kind, and the individual?

Hon. Mr. Kinley: Which section is my honourable friend quoting?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I am speaking of section 11(2).

Hon. Mr. Kinley: Section 11(2).

> Nothing in this act shall authorize the board to interfere with or otherwise affect the rights or privileges of any licensing body under provincial law.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I am not objecting to that: I am asking why that is so restrictive. Should not it say, ". . . interfere with or otherwise affect the rights or privileges of any individual resident of the province . . ." or indeed of the province itself?

Hon. Mr. Kinley: Well, I must say that the individual in the province is controlled by the provincial authorities, because it is a provincial act which controls him, and if the provincial body is not allowed to interfere with him I cannot see that he has anything to complain about. I think this is the situation in the act concerning dentistry, and I think it is the same in other acts dealing with professional people in Canada. This bill says the board cannot interfere with the rights and privileges of any licensing body. We are not interfering with the rights of individuals, but with the rights of licensing bodies to grant a certificate.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: May I ask the sponsor of the bill why clause 9 is included. I will read the clause:

> No person shall be eligible for membership on the board unless he is a qualified pharmacist registered under this act: Provided that the requirement of registration shall not apply to the members of the first board established under this act.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: The first board is the Board of Incorporation, and perhaps a lawyer may be engaged to carry it through. The board of directors on incorporation are not usually the ones who control the body. I think this provision applies to those who are carrying out the work.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Kinley: The predecessor of this bill was before the Standing Committee on Public Health and Welfare, but if it is considered necessary to refer it again I would not object.

Hon. Walter M. Aseltine: The rule, as I understand it, requires that private bills go before a standing committee, and although I would like to see this measure put down for third reading at the next sitting, it is impossible to do so.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: Thank you. I therefore move that the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Public Health and Welfare.

Motion agreed to.

DIVORCE

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the first report of the Standing Committee on Divorce, which was presented yesterday.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Committee, moved adoption of the report.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the report?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Before we adopt the report, I would like to give some figures in relation to the subject of divorce. We now have pending 1,001 cases. We reached the thousandth case yesterday, and another case has come in today bringing it to this figure.

Hon. Mr. Reid: May I ask the honourable senator what period of time this covers?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: This goes back to 1962. In the session of that year there were 321 cases sent by this body to the Commons, and they died on the Order Paper of that house at the end of the session. In the session of 1962-63 we sent 173 cases to the Commons, and they suffered the same fate.

This means that there are now on our hands 494 cases which have been heard but which have not been passed by Parliament. When we are ready to proceed again these cases, while they will not have to be heard over again, will have to be dealt with from the point of view of determining that the offence upon which they were based has not been condoned. We must ascertain that the spouses are not living together again and that they wish to proceed with the petition for divorce.

Some 48 petitions were heard but not disposed of because there was some reason for delay, and the balance of the petitions presented but not heard by the committee in the 1962-63 session amounted to 340, to which number we have added to date this session 116.

Therefore, of the 1,001 cases before us, approximately 500 were heard by us and sent to the Commons and subsequently died on the Commons Order Paper. That is about one-half of the total. So far as the new cases are concerned, and those remaining from last session, the committee hopes to receive some assurance from the Commons that they will be properly dealt with during this session of Parliament before we proceed to hear other cases.

Hon. Mr. Baird: In other words, I presume you do not intend to proceed unless you get an assurance from the Commons that they are going to do something about this subject?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: We feel that the Senate should not proceed to ask litigants to come to Ottawa with their lawyers and witnesses and all the paraphernalia for a trial, as they have done in the last two sessions, without some assurance on our part that their cases, if approved, will be carried to a successful conclusion. I think I speak for every member of the committee in saying that to proceed to hear cases at this time would not be honest, having regard to what has transpired. However, I am reasonably assured that some action will be taken in the Commons in the very near future which would untie our hands and allow us to go on with this very important work.

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, May 28, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Hayden for the second reading of Bill S-2, to amend the Bankruptcy Act.

Hon. J. Campbell Haig: Honourable senators, on October 16, 1962, in the last session of Parliament, Senator Higgins explained a bill to amend the Bankruptcy Act. That bill was subsequently referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce and, as Senator Hayden has said, after a long and arduous discussion there it was reported back to the chamber and received third reading and was sent to the Commons. However, for reasons over which no member of this house had any control, Parliament was dissolved and the bill died on the Order Paper.

The purpose of that bill—as is the case with the present bill—was to add Part X to the act. That amendment would incorporate into the federal Bankruptcy Act legislation which was in force in Manitoba from 1951, until a similar act introduced in Alberta was declared ultra vires by the Supreme Court. The result was that no further proceedings were taken under what we call the O.P.D. act in our province.

As the honourable Senator Hayden said on Tuesday last, this bill in its present form was amended somewhat by the Banking and Commerce Committee of last year, after a thorough discussion in that committee. The committee did make certain procedural changes in the original bill as introduced in October, 1962, but retained the summary administration provisions.

Now under section 198 of the present bill, the legislation comes into force in any province only by that province declaring itself desirous of having it, and bringing it into force by order in council of the province.

While I was in Winnipeg a few weeks ago I was asked about this bill, and whether Parliament was going to proceed with it at the present session. The officials there assured me that Manitoba wants this bill passed in its present form. To my knowledge they have not indicated any disagreement with it. From conversations I have had with the Attorney General of Manitoba and with the officials of the court who will administer it, I understand they want its provisions retained.

I suggest, therefore, that this bill satisfies the Province of Manitoba, which had the O.P.D. provisions and indicated last year the success it had with them. The proposed new Part X also satisfies the other provinces which do not want this section to be continued under the summary provision sections of the Bankruptcy Act.

Honourable senators, I would suggest that there is no reason for sending this bill to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce because it was reported back from the committee in its present form, and passed third reading in the Senate. I have much pleasure in supporting the measure on second reading.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck, for Hon. Mr. Croll, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, June 3, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Monday, June 3, 1963

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

HIS HOLINESS POPE JOHN XXIII

TRIBUTES

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, before proceeding with the business before the Senate this evening, may I refer to the passing of His Holiness Pope John XXIII.

The word that His Holiness had passed away this afternoon did not come to us as a surprise. For a number of days we had known to the passing of His Holiness Pope John has cast a shadow across the world.

His Holiness was often called the "People's Pope", because his unremitting efforts to realize the most urgent and fundamental aspirations of man—peace and brotherhood—had a personal meaning for people of all faiths. His leadership and example led others to search anew for ways to realize the cherished goals of Christian unity and universal peace.

He loved all men in word and deed, and his death is a loss to all men of all faiths everywhere.

Hon. Lionel Choquette: Honourable senators, the world mourns the loss of one of its great leaders, and the Church of Rome mourns the loss of one of its outstanding Pontiffs.

Pope John XXIII will occupy a place in history as one who has contributed much to the causes of world peace and Church unity.

His simplicity, his determination, his perspicacity, and his initiative have done much to advance the brotherhood of man.

John XXIII devoted his entire life towards the goal of peace and harmony. His first thoughts were for others.

Even at the hour of his death his thoughts turned unselfishly towards others. His last moments were an example of serenity and abnegation.

(Translation):

The world mourns the loss of one of its great leaders, and the Church of Rome the loss of one of its outstanding pontiffs.

From the very first hours of his pontifical reign, he proved his deep concern for the lowly and the oppressed.

This morning's Gazette reminded us of the first of the innumerable charitable deeds which he did in so short a time: his visit to the Regina Coeli jail where Romans keep their common law prisoners, when he said:

> You could not come and see me, so it is only just that I should come to you. . .

(Text):

The goal of his life is summed up eloquently in the closing words of the Holy Year prayer of his immediate predecessor Pius XII:

> Peace in our days, peace to souls, peace to families, peace to our country and peace among nations.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I join with Senator Macdonald (Brantford) and Senator Choquette in their expression of deep and profound sorrow on the death of Pope John XXIII.

The bond between us can be stated in these words:

> What doth the Lord Thy God require of thee but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God.

Today Jews and Christians share a common sorrow for a noble spirit who was a world voice for peace and brotherhood and who was deeply concerned for people of all religious faiths.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, John XXIII was the successor of a remarkable group of contemporary holders of the office of the Papacy. These men who date back to the time of Pius IX, about a century ago, I believe have established this office primarily as a spiritual one. Up to that time the Papacy was often the pawn of princes and the desired of the politician. But from the time Pius IX became the voluntary prisoner of the Vatican as a result of the spoliation of the Papal States, the Papal office has emphasized its essentially spiritual character. Many Popes contributed to this development. They included Leo XIII who wrote so effectively on the problems of labour, the saintly Pius X, the disillusioned Benedict XV. Then came Pius XI, he who concluded the Lateran Treaty which established an adequate territorial position for the Papacy and who did so much to revive the teachings of Leo XIII in respect of labour. Finally there was Pius XII who, in spite of current controversies in some sectors, did great work on behalf of peace in the late war. These were the immediate predecessors of this great man, John XXIII.

Through the calling of the Vatican Council he made an appeal not only to all Christians, but to men of good will everywhere. He identified clearly the magnitude of the problems that beset the world. He urged that men of good will develop a knowledge and a sense of spirituality. He pointed out that they had a great duty to perform one with another, not emphasizing differences but rather stressing their community of belief. The very fact that in the Council he made provision for people of denominations other than his own to attend as observers—indeed he arranged also that at the meeting of the World Council of Churches his own church, after years of isolation, would be represented —I think developments of this kind were welcomed by people everywhere.

John XXIII will be remembered also for two of his great encyclicals. The first, called Mater et Magistra, dealt with the social teaching of his church and was found by many people not of his church to coincide with their own views in the same field. It dealt not with theology, but with economics, sociology, and agriculture and all the great problems, in the context of the institutions we have, both national and international, to deal with these matters.

Then too, in his most recent encyclical, Pacem in Terris, once again instead of talking as a theologian, Pope John talked as a philosopher. He discussed the problems of the citizen and the state in the evolving political order, based on the natural law which is the law that applies to all men. I think that he, more than anyone in generations of Popes, has really opened the window. Certainly, he has opened the door to all people.

I hope I am not offending against amenities if I tell of a personal experience with Pope John. A couple of years ago I visited Rome with my wife. We were privileged to have an audience with him in the Vatican and to see at first hand how warmly human a person he was. He had been in the diplomatic corps in Paris when the present occupant of Rideau Hall and his lady were there representing this country. When we were leaving, normally one would expect a man like His Holiness to say, "Would you please tell General Vanier that I send my blessing". Instead he said, "Will you be kind enough to convey my kind regards to General Vanier and to Madame Vanier." To me it meant much to hear him say it that way because it illustrated the great humanity of the man.

(Translation):

Hon. L. M. Gouin: Honourable senators, I think it is fitting that a voice from the province of Quebec should also pay tribute to the memory of a great pontiff who has just left us. All mankind tonight mourns the death of that great man of God. All Christians, not only Catholics, men of all creeds, of all races, and even nonbelievers, unanimously agree that John XXIII was the best friend of peace. He will go down in history as the Pope of kindness and also the Pope of the people. Of modest origin, born on a farm, he liked to mingle with the people and he resumed, after centuries, the tradition according to which the Pope was the father of the Roman people who cheered him every time they had the opportunity to see him or to venerate him. He was the Pope of peace and his encyclical on the subject will truly remain a lasting document because it is the voice of a truly inspired man; we find there the voice of a soul very close to God, speaking not only to its faithful but truly to all men of good will, and once again not only to believers but even to those who do not believe. We witness tonight the end of a life that was truly remarkable because, when he ascended the throne of St. Peter, it was believed that John XXIII would be a transitionary Pope; but, on the contrary, he gave new life to the Church which, although eternal, must also learn to adapt itself to new circumstances in the 20th century, and must also adapt itself to the difficult conditions that prevail at the present time on our poor planet. Unceasingly, John XXIII called on all men of good will, unceasingly he repeated to them: love one another. Those are the words on which I will end the tribute I want to pay him.

The Senate resumed from Thursday, May 30, consideration of His Excellency the Administrator's speech at the opening of the session, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Lefrançois, seconded by Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland), for an address in reply thereto.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, my first words must be an expression of thanks for the very kind welcome you extended to me on entering the Senate. The warm welcome received from all sides was very much appreciated and will be long remembered.

Mr. Speaker, I congratulate you on your having been summoned to the Senate and having been appointed Speaker. It was my pleasure to know you and to observe you as a member of the House of Commons, and it seems rather strange to see you in your new position. I still expect to see you rise to take part in the debate and to renew your representations as to certain protection works along the St. Lawrence River. When we recall your love of debate and your ability to give a political barb at certain times, we realize that your present position is not an easy one for you. However, your task will be made easier by the assistance of your charming wife.

I offer my congratulations to the mover (Hon. Mr. Lefrançois) and to the seconder (Hon. Mr. Taylor, Westmorland) of the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. Both senators made worthwhile contributions to the debate. It is most interesting to note that, while Senator Taylor was making a plea for the construction of the Chignecto Canal, my good friend, the honourable member from Cumberland in the House of Commons, was at the same time making an equally sincere plea for the construction of that canal. This shows that, despite our political differences, we all have in our own way, as a common objective, the development of Canada and increased benefits for our citizens.

On my entering the Senate several honourable senators reminded me that the Senate is, in essence, nonpolitical and nonpartisan. It is difficult to leave the partisan atmosphere of the House of Commons, especially during the last two sessions, and suddenly adjust to the attitude of the Senate. In order to do this, I decided to observe the leaders of the two parties represented in the Senate.

The honourable leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) was of particular interest to me. When he was delivering his excellent address, my mind went back to a Progressive Conservative nominating convention in Summerside during the 1958 election campaign. Senator Brooks was at that time the very capable Minister of Veterans Affairs. He threw away the notes he had prepared for his address and he delivered one of the finest speeches I have had the pleasure and privilege to hear. I am sure you will understand if I say I prefer him in that role.

The speech of the honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford) was also most interesting to me. I enjoyed his easy flowing manner, and the content of his speech was also of interest. The leader began by pointing out that he was going to be nonpolitical but in retrospect I find that he was able, in a very pleasant way, to introduce the viewpoints of the Government of which he is an able member. He referred to a lack of confidence in the former Government by the so-called business world. I was rather disappointed that he did not go on to refer to the May 18 issue of the Financial Post, which devoted some considerable space to the fact that businessmen are now beginning to bite their nails and wonder if they were wise in giving such wholehearted support to the present administration. It is my belief that, after the forthcoming budget, there will be many regrets expressed among the business community.

The Leader of the Government in the Senate, ignoring the figures of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics which pointed out that Canada last year had the greatest industrial expansion of any country in the western world, went on and painted a picture of economic drought in Canada. Then he added that all this would be corrected now that we have a new messiah. He portrayed the Right Honourable Mr. Pearson as possessing the devotion of a Christian martyr, the wisdom of Buddha and the zeal of Allah. To sum up the leader's speech, I had the impression that he felt our new national anthem should consist of the Hallelujah Chorus or some similar song of rejoicing at the return of the Liberal party, to be followed by "three cheers and a tiger" for Mr. Pearson.

However, as I said a moment ago, I found his speech most pleasing in its manner and I hope that at some time it will be my good fortune to be able to deliver a speech in the same easy manner and with the same charm as the honourable leader. His speech will be read and re-read, not only by me but, I am sure, by other junior senators, and it will be used as a guide on how to be political in a nonpolitical and nonpartisan speech.

Earlier, I made reference to the difficulty of transferring from the political atmosphere of the House of Commons to the calmer and more judicious atmosphere of the Senate. It is my hope that honourable senators will forgive me if my few remarks appear to be more political and more partisan than perhaps has been the custom in this distinguished chamber.

The Speech from the Throne traditionally gives the broad outline of Government proposals. Any detailed examination of these proposals must, of course, wait until the legislation arrives from the other place. However, this does not prevent the making of a few remarks on the legislation as outlined in the Speech from the Throne.

The rural area which I represent makes me turn naturally to two points, namely, the proposal of a second minister of agriculture, to serve eastern Canada, and the 12-mile limit for fisheries. The proposal for a second minister of agriculture is the result of a promise made during the election campaign, one that was supposed to obtain votes among the eastern farmers. Quite frankly, I doubt if it had any appeal.

The Canadian Federation of Agriculture, while divided into ten provincial institutions, is still a national organization and maintains one national headquarters in Ottawa. Many farmers look upon the provision for an eastern and a western minister of agriculture as a means of weakening and, in effect, destroying an organization which they have built up over the years by voluntary labour on behalf of a great many people from both eastern and western Canada. While it is true that western agriculture does to a large extent concentrate upon the production of wheat, it must not be forgotten that the problems of hog production, cattle raising, and other phases of agriculture common to all of Canada are very much the same. It will be very difficult to develop a truly national agricultural policy while we are dividing the country into eastern and western sections.

Agricultural activity in my province is, to a large degree, concentrated upon potato production. We produce the world's best potatoes, both seed and table stock. While we still enjoy a large market for seed potatoes, increased potato production in central Canada has taken a large share of our traditional markets. Therefore, our farmers need assistance in transferring to other forms of agriculture, and we also need assistance in obtaining foreign markets. Such assistance must, of course, come from the Department of Trade and Commerce. A second minister of agriculture would be of little assistance there.

The problems of fishermen on the Atlantic coast are different in many respects from those on the Pacific coast. Yet the Department of Fisheries is maintained under one minister, and no proposal is contained in the Speech from the Throne to recognize these differences. If there is a need for an eastern and a western minister of agriculture, surely there is an equal, if not a greater need, for two ministers of fisheries.

The 12-mile limit has been an item of concern to all members from the Atlantic and Pacific coasts for many years. As honourable senators know, a proposal presented by the Honourable Howard Green and the Honourable Angus MacLean, members of the previous administration, was almost accepted by international conference, and after failure to obtain agreement we found that many foreign trawlers, especially from Spain and Portugal, concentrated and increased their activities in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and along the Atlantic coast. Perhaps this resulted from the impression gained that Canada would accept a 12-mile limit, while recognizing traditional and treaty rights in fishing on our coasts. If a 12-mile limit is to be established, then we must watch carefully the attempts of foreign nations, especially European nations, to claim historic fishing rights along our coasts. It is going to be of little value to exclude fishing vessels from Australia and the Congo if foreign vessels presently depleting the fisheries are allowed to continue on the basis of historic rights. I would suggest to honourable senators that legislation in this regard, if and when it is forwarded from the other place, be studied with care.

As a resident of the Atlantic provinces, my attention was naturally drawn to the proposal to amend the Atlantic Development Board Act. The proposal to strengthen the membership of the board is in reality an effort to make sure that the appointees of the present Government outnumber those of the previous administration. This may be fair ball in politics. However, it should be remembered that a great deal of care was taken in selecting the previous appointees. In my opinion, they are extremely well qualified and it is my hope that the new appointees will be selected on the basis of their ability and experience, not merely on the basis of their political affiliation with the Liberal party.

The proposal to provide a capital fund for the Atlantic Development Board is, in my humble opinion, an extremely dangerous precedent to establish. It is one of the most cherished principles of our form of government that all expenditures must be approved by Parliament. The granting of a certain sum of money to a board operating outside of Parliament is one that should receive the sober second look of the Senate.

Another objection I have is that a limit has been placed upon the amount of money that can be spent by the board, plus a time limit of five years, and then the board is to be discontinued. The granting of $100 million is, I think, going to raise a very special problem. The $100 million in the original Atlantic Provinces Adjustment Grant was, as honourable senators know, divided on the basis of $7½ million to each of the larger provinces, and $2½ million to Prince Edward Island.

Honourable senators can rest assured that the provincial government of each of the Atlantic provinces will be watching the board to ensure that its province receives a sum equal to that received under the Atlantic Provinces Adjustment Grants. This is going to make it extremely difficult for the board to function and will, I am afraid, produce friction within the board. It will be an action that the Government will regret in the days ahead.

As one who takes a sincere interest in the Department of National Health and Welfare, I must express a certain amount of surprise at the scheme to establish a national contributory pension plan as soon as possible. Throughout the last election campaign, Liberal speakers and Liberal advertisements emphasized that the Liberal party would establish an old age pension of $75 a month, effective immediately. This increase was not to be based on contributions but was to be a straight increase effective immediately. It was my hope that this would be one of the first decisions taken during the sixty days of decision. I am sure that many of our senior citizens will be bitterly disappointed in this regard.

The idea of a contributory pension plan does have certain merits. It has many features that appeal to me, but it also has certain difficulties. When the contributory plan was first introduced in the United States it was impossible for farmers and fishermen to contribute to it, and for a number of years they did not enjoy the same type of social security as did their fellow citizens who were employed in the vast industrial complex of that country.

The reason for this, I understand, was that many farmers were unable to produce accurate records, and I suppose American legislators, like our own, did not wish to be put in the position of forcing farmers to produce their farm accounts.

To avoid all that I would suggest to the honourable senators that we follow the pattern used by fishermen in the purchase of fishermen's unemployment insurance stamps. The fishermen present their total sales slips for the week, a certain percentage is deducted for expenses, and it is on that basis that they purchase their stamps. I believe we could follow a pattern similar to this and avoid a lot of inconvenience and irritation that would result from inspecting farm accounts.

The province of Prince Edward Island, by virtue of its position and its peculiar soil conditions, must, to a very large extent, depend upon the Canadian National Railways for movement of its products. This is especially true during the spring months when, because of heaving and breaking up of pavement due to frost, we must apply rigid load restrictions on our highways. I was therefore pleased to see a proposal for continued payments to the railways pending the introduction of long-term measures. This pleasure was greatly reduced, however, when I realized that since this Government took office the Canadian National Railways made two announcements of reduced railway service or abandonment of rail lines in Prince Edward Island. The amount thus saved is extremely small; in fact, it will about pay the salary of the new Minister of Agriculture and his executive assistant. I am sure that our rural people living along the railway lines would rather have continued rail service and would be perfectly content with one Minister of Agriculture.

Another unfortunate aspect of the announcement of railway service curtailment is that in the western part of the province an economic survey is being conducted under the ARDA program. As honourable senators know, any attempt to locate industry in this area will face the problem of curtailment and abandonment of railway service, and management will say they are not interested in locating in that part of the province.

Any reference to our transportation problems would not be complete if I did not mention the Prince Edward Island-New Brunswick causeway. I know that the newly-elected Government requires a certain amount of time to study plans to see if they are satisfactory. It has now had considerable time to study the proposed plans for a causeway linking Prince Edward Island and the mainland, and it is my hope the Government will see fit in the near future to declare its intentions in regard to this project.

The item in the Throne Speech forecasting additional assistance to complete the Trans-Canada Highway is most interesting. It is my understanding that this will benefit particularly the provinces of Quebec, New Brunswick and Newfoundland. By a rather strange coincidence these three provinces have Liberal administrations and this proposal is, in effect, subsidizing the inefficiency of provincial Liberal administrations. All provinces should receive equal treatment under any federal-provincial agreement. The Roads to Resources program introduced by the former administration is an example that the present administration could well follow. What will happen, honourable senators, if these provinces lag behind in the Roads to Resources agreement and then approach Ottawa and expect to receive increased assistance in order to complete the program? The provinces that have completed or nearly completed the program are not going to be happy with this proposal.

To illustrate my point I would refer to a recent statement made by Premier Shaw of Prince Edward Island in which he pointed out that that province had paid 50 per cent of the costs and he felt that his government should receive a rebate of 40 per cent on the portions that the province completed. He also felt that the agreement should be opened up to permit the province to include areas that were not already included in the program. I feel that Premier Shaw has a just claim in this regard, and that we can expect to hear from other provinces in the future.

The Throne Speech placed great emphasis on bilingualism and biculturalism. In the Atlantic provinces this is not as much of a problem as it is in central Canada. The two founding races have always got along well together in the Atlantic provinces; perhaps that is due to the fact we are more concerned with the continued development of that area. There, as honourable senators know, for many years the average income per capita has been below that of the average national income, and both the English-speaking persons and those whom we like to refer to as Acadians have worked in harmony to overcome these difficulties. I am sure we have benefited greatly from the assistance we have received from Acadians such as the Honourable Senator from L'Acadie (Hon. Mr. Savoie) who is highly respected by his own people and equally respected by the English-speaking people in the Maritimes.

Perhaps our attitude in the Atlantic provinces could best be described as "bi-financialism", if one is to follow the popular trend.

The previous administration will always be remembered as the first administration which really recognized and attempted to meet our needs in the Atlantic provinces. The Atlantic Provinces Adjustment Grants, first established in 1957, have done much to develop that area. In fact, I have always felt that these grants were mis-named, that perhaps a more appropriate name would have been, the Atlantic Provinces Development Grants. To illustrate this point, the present provincial government in my province has been able to provide financial assistance to various industries, including the establishment of two large frozen food plants. This assistance would have been impossible had it not been for the Atlantic Provinces Adjustment Grants. It is only natural, therefore, that the residents of the Atlantic provinces, including many Liberal supporters remember with a great deal of gratitude the action taken by the Right Honourable John Diefenbaker and his government.

Federal-provincial relations under the present administration will receive close scrutiny from representatives in the Atlantic provinces. We view with apprehension the demands of the province of Quebec, not that we wish to deprive that province of any of its rights. These demands became public following a breakfast meeting between Mr. Pearson and Premier Lesage. It is our view in the Atlantic provinces that this will prove to be the most expensive breakfast in history, and we have no particular inclination to foot the bill. If the formula proposed by Premier Lesage of 25-25-100—that these percentages of income tax, corporation tax and inheritance tax, respectively, be returned to the province—is adopted, it will operate to the detriment of the Atlantic and western provinces. We feel we support the corporations in central Canada and that we are entitled to a share of the corporation taxes paid by those firms. On the other hand, if the 25-25-100 formula were varied, and the money were paid into a central fund to be divided among all provinces, this would receive more support from the premiers of the Atlantic provinces. However, I am not so sure that the present Minister of Finance would be too keen on that. We expect the present administration to continue the assistance granted the Atlantic provinces by the Diefenbaker administration, and we do not wish to lose any of the advantages gained under the previous federal-provincial fiscal arrangements.

One item that particularly surprised me was the reference in the Throne Speech to providing funds for the Unemployment Insurance Fund. I realize, honourable senators, that, despite the many attacks on unemployment launched by the previous Government, it has remained a problem in Canada, and consequently the fund has become depleted. On the other hand, the Liberal party, and particularly the present Prime Minister and the present Minister of Finance, have repeatedly promised full employment in Canada. If the Government is sincere in its promise to provide full employment, then I fail to see the necessity for adding to the Unemployment Insurance Fund. We are at the season of the year when employment is normally at its highest, and it is difficult to understand why we should be adding to the fund at this time. In fact, if everyone is enjoying the benefits of full employment, then surely the Unemployment Insurance Act must become a redundant measure. When one reads between the lines in the Speech from the Throne it is quite evident that the Government, even with all its economic planning, is going to continue to be faced with unemployment for some time to come.

Before closing, honourable senators, I would like to discuss for a moment two items not mentioned in the Throne Speech. There is in the area which I represent a very large air force base, and as a former member of the air force I have naturally taken an interest in the welfare of its men and their families. The recent pay increases granted the members of the armed services were a great shock to them and, I think, to the general public. A leading aircraftsman, private, or an ordinary seaman, received an annual increase of $48 per year, or less than a dollar per week. With coffee becoming 15 cents a cup, this does not provide a cup of coffee per day, and if we are to be practical we must realize that many of these men prefer something a little stronger than coffee. This group, unlike the civil servants with their Civil Service Association, have no organization to present their claims and their viewpoints, and when we consider the rather generous increases that have been granted the members of the civil service in the past, we can readily understand the disappointment of some members of the armed forces at receiving an increase of 90 cents per week.

The other matter is one which gives me much pleasure. Next year we in Prince Edward Island will take great pride in opening the Confederation Building in Charlottetown. This building, which adjoins the Legislative Buildings, the birthplace of Confederation, is a gift from the people of Canada to commemorate the birth of Confederation. It is my hope that all honourable senators will be able to attend the opening and spend some time in our province next year.

Honourable senators, I again express my thanks for your kind welcome, and I shall do my best to carry out my duties in a manner worthy of this distinguished chamber.

On motion of Hon. Mrs. Inman, debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, before coming into the house this evening the acting Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Choquette) asked me about the business for tomorrow. As honourable senators know, the intention was to proceed with the interim supply bill this evening. However, it is still being debated in the other house. If it reaches us tomorrow afternoon, I would ask leave of honourable senators to consider it upon its arrival.

The estimates for the year were distributed to all honourable senators last week. The interim supply bill will provide supply for the past two months in this fiscal year—that is, April and May—and also for June and July. Particulars of the bill appear at page 502 of the House of Commons Hansard. So with the information appearing there and with the estimates, each honourable senator will be informed of the contents of the bill which will be coming before us. As I say, if it comes before us tomorrow, I hope we will be able to proceed with second reading at that time.

The other business on the Order Paper for tomorrow consists of the items not disposed of today, together with five private bills. If we do not proceed with the interim supply bill tomorrow, we shall likely consider the five private bills.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, June 4, 1963

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

APPROPRIATION BILL No. 1, 1963

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-69, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1964.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read a second time?

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move second reading now.

Honourable senators, there have not been sufficient copies of the bill printed—

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: There never are.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): —to give a copy to each member. We have about sixty copies, and if these are distributed, one to each pair of desks I think we will be able to get along fairly well.

I wish to thank honourable senators for giving me leave to move second reading of this bill today. May I say now that if the bill receives second reading today I hope it will receive third reading tomorrow, and that royal assent will take place tomorrow afternoon at a quarter to six.

Honourable senators, the bill is in the usual, if not the exact, form of interim supply bills of the past. May I point out for the benefit of new senators—though I am sure they are all aware of this—that the Government cannot spend any money unless it is voted by Parliament; and "by Parliament", of course, means both by the House of Commons and the Senate.

As honourable senators know, the fiscal year begins on April 1, and this year Parliament was not in session until the middle of May. It is now June and no money has been voted for this fiscal year. The purpose of this bill is to provide funds for the Government for the months of June and July.

The bill is different from the first appropriation bill of previous years except in those years when it followed immediately upon a general election. This being the first appropriation bill after an election, it is necessary to provide for the moneys which have been spent in April and May as well. So that this bill provides for four-twelfths of the total items, instead of the usual two-twelfths.

The bill goes further than that. Honourable senators will no doubt have noticed that in many instances additional amounts are required. In one instance there is an additional amount of five-twelfths, and in another an additional four-twelfths. Where such additional amounts are required over and above the four-twelfths, the particulars are set forth in the schedules attached to the bill.

The bill contains a clause which sets forth that the total amount authorized in this bill includes the amounts that have already been authorized by special warrants in this fiscal year.

I probably should bring to the attention of honourable senators another section of this bill which differs generally from previous bills. I refer to clause 4. This is not a completely new procedure. What has been provided for in this clause has been carried out by governments in the past; indeed, it has been traditional for governments to proceed in this manner, and therefore it was thought advisable at this stage to put it into legislative form. It has long been assumed that commitments could be entered into in the current year up to the limitation prescribed by the wording of an item. The purpose of clause 4 is merely to clarify the situation.

Probably I can best explain this change by referring honourable senators to the estimates tabled earlier this session. I refer to the estimates for the Department of National Health and Welfare where there is authorization to provide general public health grants to the provinces, the Northwest Territories, and the Yukon Territory up to a certain amount, but with the stipulation that commitments can be entered into up to but not exceeding the sum of $38 million. So, provision is made not only for the expenditure by the department of $31 million, but also that it may enter into commitments not exceeding $38 million.

Section 5 of the bill makes provision with respect to contracts that have been entered into since Parliament was dissolved. As honourable senators know, under the Financial Administration Act these contracts can only be authorized by Comptroller of the Treasury certificates, but upon dissolution on February 6, 1963 the departments had little or no 1962-63 appropriations remaining, and upon dissolution it could not be said that there were 1962-63 estimates before Parliament. No estimates or supply for 1963-64 existed either. The period from February 6 last, when Parliament was dissolved, to May 29, when the estimates were tabled, was one in which all necessary contracts had to be let without authorizing certificates of the Comptroller of the Treasury. For that reason section 5 has been included in this bill. I may say that a similar provision was in the act passed in 1958-59.

I shall refer to just one more section that is new—in any event, it is new as compared to the bill that was passed last year—and that is section 6. This section deals with the special warrants that were obtained from the time Parliament was dissolved until the end of the last fiscal year. As I said before, the amounts that were obtained by Governor General's warrants since April 1 are included in this bill, but those obtained in the previous fiscal year are not contained in this bill, and will be dealt with in detail in a report of supply for 1962. This report will be tabled later this session, and will be the subject of a special appropriation bill.

Honourable senators, I think that fully explains the bill. I trust the bill will receive second reading today, and third reading tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Power: May I ask the honourable Leader of the Government if the financial estimates for 1961-62, as well as those for 1962-63, have been passed by Parliament?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): No,—

Hon. Mr. Power: In other words, I am asking if there was an appropriation bill for each of those years.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I believe the 1961-62 estimates were passed, but the 1962-63 estimates have not been passed. The estimates before us today are the estimates for 1963-64.

Hon. Mr. Power: My honourable friend says that the 1961-62 estimates have been passed, but I am not sure. However, the 1962-63 estimates certainly have not been passed?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): That is correct.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The honourable Leader of the Government said that a government can spend only money that is passed by Parliament. Does that apply to a Conservative administration as well as to a Liberal administration?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Oh, yes, that applies to any administration. Money spent by one government is just as good as money spent by another government.

Hon. M. Wallace McCutcheon: Honourable senators, we are engaged here this afternoon in what I might almost call the ritualistic procedure of passing an appropriation bill which we can consider only in totals and as to which we have no opportunity of discussing any details.

It is rather like granting your wife housekeeping money without her really telling you what she is going to do in detail with it over the year, or the full amount that she is going to spend. I suspect that we have not been told the full amount that is to be spent.

Hon. Mr. Power: Did she not tell you what she spent last year?

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Do not goad me into going into last year.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I am sure no one is more generous to his wife than the honourable gentleman.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Honourable senators, I am sure you realize that that is inevitable under the parliamentary system under which we operate; but I am not sure that we cannot effect some improvements even under this system.

I was very much impressed, as I always am, by the words of honourable Senator Hugessen, as reported in the 1962-63 volume of Hansard, at page 507, when he was speaking on a similar occasion. He said then:

> I suggest to my honourable friend, the Leader of the Government, that it might be well for us to revert to the practice which existed some years ago when the honourable Senator Crerar was chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance. In those days the practice of this house was to refer the estimates for the year to that committee so that it could make such inquiries as it felt necessary with respect to any particular items, and, indeed, call for witnesses from any particular department in cases where it thought investigation might be required. I think if we did that now we should be fulfilling our functions more adequately as one of the branches of this Parliament, in seeing that expenditures are not made without our having acquainted ourselves at least in some respects with what is proposed to be spent.
> I make that suggestion to my honourable friend—

He was referring to the present Leader of the Opposition—> in all good faith, because I think that during the years when the Finance Committee did perform its functions, it performed a valuable service and we in this house felt we were taking a better and more active part in the administration of the financial affairs of the country.

Similar sentiments were expressed by my honourable friend Senator Lambert, on the occasion of the consideration of a previous appropriation bill. His remarks are reported in the same volume of Hansard, for the last session, at page 311. I commend the views of these senators of long standing and long experience to my friend the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford), and I hope that the estimates for this year—when we probably will have more time to consider them than we had in the previous session—will in due course be referred to the Finance Committee, if that is the appropriate committee.

As honourable senators know, there is complete freedom in discussing this bill; one can discuss anything on it. In the other place there were some very interesting discussions about the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and about other subjects which bore little relevance to the bill itself. I do not propose to enter into that type of discussion this afternoon, but there are a few comments I would like to make.

It was gratifying that the Minister of Finance, when tabling his estimates in the House of Commons, referred to the report of the Glassco Commission. I believe that was the first official reference made to that commission in the other place since the new Government took office.

The minister referred to one of the main recommendations in the first volume of the Glassco Commission, that the form of the estimates might be improved. The recommendation, as I recall it, was that instead of listing the amount that will be spent for postage, clerical services, and so on, the estimates be set up on a project or program basis. The minister implied that this matter was under review, but that he was unable—and I can understand this—to put any of those recommendations into effect in connection with these estimates. I suggest that it may well be that if the Government adopts this recommendation, we will see the matter proceed by stages, and certain departments at least will present their estimates in the revised form at the next session. I hope that this matter will receive serious consideration by the Government and by the Public Accounts Committee in the other place; and I suggest seriously to my friend the Leader of the Government that the recommendation of the committee in that respect might well be considered in connection with the study of the current year's estimates by the appropriate committee of this chamber.

Of course, I do not need to tell honourable senators that the estimates of spending are up considerably from last year; I believe the figure is an increase of 5.1 per cent. Again I suggest that we have not yet heard the end of the spending estimates. It is a little early in the year even for my friend the Minister of Finance to give in detail all that he will be required to spend in order to redeem the pledges that he made on the platform during the election campaign. However, he does suggest that there may be some reductions in the main estimates and the supplementaries which he has now tabled. He suggests that the most fertile field for finding such reductions will be in a broad review of existing Government programs.

With that I agree. However, I was somewhat concerned when I learned that that broad review was being referred to the Treasury Board. I suggest that it will be very difficult for the devoted, efficient, but greatly overworked officials of the Treasury Board, who will be called upon in another few months to start reviewing departmental estimates for 1964-65, to make the broad review of Government programs that might result in some reduction in the minister's estimates this year. I would hope that he might find some other machinery for making that review.

While the minister suggests that the Glassco Commission concerned itself to a considerable extent with what I would call minor savings, I suggest that there are some broad recommendations which could be considered rapidly by the Government, as to which there has already been given considerable study by officials who were charged with that responsibility, and which might have some effect on this year's estimates and a significant effect on next year's estimates. Otherwise, my prediction is that we are going to be faced with more supplementary estimates and we are not going to get any corresponding offsetting reductions. I hope that this will not happen, but the minister's previously avowed intention of moving towards a balanced budget in accordance with the undertaking —perhaps "understanding" is a better word —that the Government had with the International Monetary Fund may have a negative rather than a positive result.

It is patently clear from what we have before us today that increased revenues will be needed if we are to move towards a balanced budget, and by moving towards a balanced budget I mean that the deficit in the current fiscal year is to be less than that in the immediately preceding or two preceding years.

Now, that statement, which has been made elsewhere, has been erroneously interpreted as meaning that we would require higher taxation. I am not suggesting that for a moment. It may well be that if the Government can keep the economy going at the rate at which it was going when it took over, that will provide the additional revenues which will obviously be required if it is to achieve this very desirable objective.

While we are all gratified with the minister's references to the Glassco report and the indications that the Government is pressing forward to a review of those recommendations, and that those which will result in greater efficiency or economies will be implemented as quickly as possible, we cannot help but be a little disturbed by the evidence before us that seems to fly completely in the teeth of what I suppose might be called the major underlying basic philosophy of the report which, as I interpreted it, was that the commission was concerned with recommendations to simplify Government organization, not complicate it or compound it, with consequential increase in efficiency and reduction in cost. Now what do we find? We find that the Orders of the Day of the other place—

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to interrupt the honourable gentleman but we in the Senate are not carrying on a debate with the other house. It always has been regarded as completely out of order to refer in this house to what is currently taking place in the other house. If we ignore that rule now we will find ourselves engaged in a debate between this house and the other house, which I do not think any honourable senator would want to take place. I did not interrupt the honourable gentleman before as to what was said about the Glassco Commission, for there was no controversy there; but I do not think we should enter into debate with any member of the other house.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the remarks of the honourable leader, I was not attempting to enter into debate with any member of the other house. I was about to refer, and I am in your hands, Mr. Speaker, to the resolutions which appear on the Order Paper of the other house, not to what any member said.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I have no objection to the honourable gentleman referring to a resolution on the Order Paper of the other house, if debate on that resolution has not yet taken place.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Mr. Speaker, I am proposing to refer to one or two resolutions on the Order Paper of the other house on which no debate has as yet taken place, and if you agree I will proceed.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Perhaps it might be better if the honourable gentleman referred only to what is in the resolution, without making reference to the other place.

Hon. Mr. Power: Just refer to what we can read in the newspapers.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I am sorry I have not got the newspapers here.

May I put it this way, honourable senators? It has been forecast in the Speech from the Throne and there have been reports in the press to the effect that we are to have a Department of Industry with the purpose of assisting manufacturing industries. As part of that new department we are to have an area development agency. Just what is the purpose of that agency is not spelt out clearly, but one might assume that its purpose is to give special attention to certain areas in Canada. What I am suggesting is that, far from this simplifying Government procedure, it is merely compounding it.

There is already a Department of Trade and Commerce. Over recent years that department has been paying special and increasing attention to the problems of our secondary manufacturing industries, the area to which, of course, we must look to absorb newcomers into the labour force, as well as some of those who are in the labour force now but who unfortunately are unemployed. I am wondering who is going to resolve the differences that will inevitably arise between the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Industry. Matters will be compounded further by the fact that the Department of Industry is to have an area development agency. There is already an Atlantic Development Board. Do we visualize the area development agency of the Department of Industry ignoring the problems of the Atlantic provinces, or if it does not will there not be further overlapping and duplication?

It may well be, as one press commentator said, that the one thing lacking in this respect was a bureau of information at the front door of the Centre Block of the Parliament Buildings to direct harassed businessmen as to which of these three departments they should approach. I suggest that what will happen will be the application of the now familiar Parkinson's law, whereas all that is necessary is to clothe the Minister of Trade and Commerce with whatever powers he does not now have—and I do not know what powers he is lacking—so that that one capable person, with the knowledge and background and experience that he has, can deal with the overall problems in this field. I think that would be much more acceptable in the view of businessmen.

I touch on this question now, for it seems to me that obviously it is going to have budgetary implications. As a matter of fact, there are three ministers involved. The information one gathers from the press is that the Atlantic Development Board will report to the Secretary of State; the area development Agency will report to the Minister of Industry, whose name we will know only as a result of press releases; and the Minister of Trade and Commerce will still have the overall responsibility which he has had in the past.

I wish also to mention item No. 25 of the supplementary estimates, where we see an increase in loans, investments and advances of some $118 million, up approximately $100 milion to $218 million. Honourable senators should bear in mind it has been forecast that the Atlantic Development Board will be provided with $100 million. It has been forecast that the Municipal Development and Loan Board will be provided with $400 million, and no forecast has as yet been made as to what funds will be provided for the Canada Development Corporation.

It is true that resolutions leading to bills to establish these various boards or to make funds available to them have not been discussed, and it is understandable therefore that no provision has been made in the estimates for the very substantial advances, if the forecasts we have are correct.

It is also possible, of course, that decisions cannot be taken quite as readily as we were led to believe a few months ago, and that the full amounts of the funds indicated for these various purposes may not be required in the current fiscal year.

But having said all that, it seems apparent that the Government this year is going to have to go to the market—unless it takes some steps of which we have no indication —for something over $1 billion of new money as compared to some $800 million that was borrowed last year. With the U.S. short-term rates pressing very closely on our own rates, and with the further suggestion this morning that the U.S. rates are going to further increase, we may find ourselves in a very difficult position in going to the market for these large amounts, particularly when we read of other governmental bodies who propose to enter the same market. We may find the paradox of a rate in the United States which will attract money away from this country and which, in the light of that country's balance of payment problems, might not, from its point of view, be unreasonable.

It is therefore interesting to note the statement of the Parliamentary Assistant to the Prime Minister—and I do not want to transgress, Mr. Speaker—with reference to Polymer Corporation. I shall say no more.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): You have probably said too much already.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I do not think so. I will say no more than to suggest that the gentleman in question was really quoting from the Glassco report, volume 2, page 349, where it says:

> The Corporation...

That is the Polymer Corporation.

> ...cannot be regarded as an instrument of public policy. Its ownership by the Crown is in no sense essential, on security or other grounds, to any of the programs of the federal government. Your Commissioners recognize, however, that the transfer of this undertaking to private ownership presents certain practical problems...

What I say is disturbing is that the Prime Minister, in a press conference and not in another place, immediately stated that his Parliamentary Secretary was not stating Government policy. I am not quarrelling with that, but I suggest that this is a matter which might be given serious and quick consideration by the Government. I would hate to think that the Prime Minister's statement to the press meant that there was no Government policy on this matter, or that this was a matter which the Government was not going to review.

> But as a government-owned company, it has not been permitted to use its available funds to diversify its activities or carry on active exploration. Such a proscription promises at best a lingering death. In these circumstances, there is need for a decision as to Eldorado's future, in the absence of which its value as an investment cannot but decline.

It is not my intention, honourable senators, to suggest what the Government policy should be in this matter. The Government has the facts and information available. However, I was concerned, at the mere suggestion that some action might be taken on the question raised—because the Glassco Commission makes no recommendation one way or another but raises very serious questions as to the future of these two companies under Government auspices—to note the very quick reply which almost seemed to close the door to consideration. If my friend the Minister of Finance is anxious to reduce his market requirements he might wish to look seriously at the questions raised by the Glassco Commission respecting these Crown companies.

Honourable senators, I shall take your time no further at the moment. We on this side of the house will look forward with a great deal of anticipation and interest to the details of the Government's legislative program, to some of which I have referred.

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, if I should not have disappointed the house by refusing to take part in this debate I should have certainly disappointed myself.

The first comment I have to make is a criticism that when I was sitting over where my honourable friend from—usually we do not refer to our colleagues by name, but I shall do that in my straits this afternoon—Senator McCutcheon.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: From Gormley.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The rule has been changed.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I may say to him that when we were sitting on the other side of the house, and when my genial colleague from Rosetown (Hon. Mr. Aseltine), and later his successor (Hon. Mr. Brooks), was leader on the Government side, we had a complaint to make at all times when interim supply was brought down.

Interim supply, of course, is a device for enabling the Government to obtain the money to pay its bills before the main supply is passed in the other house and by Parliament. But it was invariably the practice of the late administration to bring these interim supply bills down at the last possible moment, and then we were met with the urgency that the bills had to be paid and the Government must have its money. And while the Government leader gave all sorts of assurances that it would not abridge in any way, in future, the right of the Senate to criticize, nevertheless the matter was of the most urgent character.

I want to say to my honourable friend who is leading the Government on this side (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford), that I hope we shall not continue that bad practice, because it is a bad practice. I can understand the position of the Government at the present time. It has recently arrived in office: it has to familiarize itself with the legislation required, with the finances of government generally, and it takes a little time to do that. If you will pardon a personal reference, honourable senators, I discovered that fact a long time ago when I first came to Parliament, but I do hope that this practice will not be repeated.

There is no reason on earth why a government cannot bring down its interim supply ten days before the end of the month. Perhaps that was impossible to do on this occasion because the debate on the address was still in progress in the other place. Interim supply is necessary. It is now June 4. Bills may have to be paid and there is no warrant for paying them because the Government's authority to issue a cheque for even a load of coal does not exist beyond the end of May. Consequently, this interim supply must be voted. But I would like to see some order brought into it.

This is a rather important measure. I have not had time to examine this bill closely because I received it only a few moments ago, but there are some things in it about which I think some questions should be asked. For instance, by clause 7 we are giving the Government authority to borrow up to another billion and a half dollars. Now a billion and a half dollars, to my old-fashioned way of thinking, is a substantial sum of money. This is in addition to the authority presently outstanding to borrow money. What is this money going to be used for? I think we should be told of the need for this. How does this occasion arise? I might add that the late administration also failed to produce information upon which the members of this house could form an intelligent judgment.

Now that situation should not be. Surely we can conduct our business in an intelligent fashion, and when one ranges into these huge sums of money, indeed I might call them mountainous sums of money, the need for doing so is all the greater. I have no doubt that honourable senators are aware of this. We take, for instance, the estimates brought down in the Blue Book, which were those of the late administration, and the supplementary estimates which are the product of the present administration; we put those together and add to them the $755 million estimated expenditure for old age pensions, plus the sums under the item for loans, investments and advances, and we reach a total of $7½ billion. Now is that not a serious question?

It is a matter of grave importance that our spending and the requests made to this house for appropriations are increasing at a faster pace than this thing which we call the gross national product. If we were assured that the gross national product would expand at a certain ratio, then it would be quite practicable and perhaps defensible to increase our spending in a like ratio, but studies indicate that the gap between them is narrowing.

In 1962 we had rather a remarkable growth in the gross national product, which will not be continued this year. I do not want my honourable friend from Gormley (Hon. Mr.

McCutcheon) to get the idea that because we had a high gross national product in 1962 we shall increase in the same ratio in 1963. If we do not get a similar increase it will not be due to any change in the administration, but because we are in the economic grip of forces over which we have a comparatively small measure of control.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: It is unfortunate that that was not said during the 1962 and 1963 elections.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: We are not dealing now with the 1962 or 1963 elections; we are dealing with these estimates. I want to be moderate in my statements, but I think, having regard to the public attitude and the governmental attitude to the spending of money—and this applies to practically all levels of government irrespective of party—we are in grave danger of running into serious trouble. We had an example of this last June when we suddenly found that our foreign exchange reserves had been dissipated and stringent measures had to be taken to rehabilitate them.

The first task of statesmanship is to look ahead and avoid these situations as far as possible, and that is what I, perhaps mistakenly, in my feeble efforts try to bring before the house.

I sometimes wonder in my fanciful moments—and like my old friend and colleague the honourable senator from Carleton (Hon. Mr. O'Leary), I occasionally have fanciful moments—what kind of a result we could achieve in the whole vast ambit of government administration if we could apply the same principles and the same type of management one finds, for instance, in a successful corporation like the Canadian Pacific Railway, or a successful bank, or in the corporations with which my honourable friend from Gormley has been associated, or even in the corporations with which I have been associated. If we could bring that character of administration to bear, I sometimes speculate how much might be saved in the total cost of government operation. But when I mentioned this not very long ago to a friend he said it was impossible because you cannot apply to a government the same principles you apply to a private corporation; public opinion won't let you do it. Governments and opposition parties have to seek votes, and in the process the whole theory is knocked to the ground.

Now I have only a little more to say because I see my leader is looking at me rather dubiously.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): No—rather approvingly.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I am glad of that. I thought he wanted to get on to something else and that I should sit down.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): No, no.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: If the theory I have put forward could be adopted we would save an immense amount of money. I think one of the good things that the late Government did was to appoint the Glassco Commission and I consider the report of that commission to be worth the study of every honourable senator. If we are facing a situation where additional taxation is necessary, where the alternative is either more taxation or decreased expenditure, and since that is the only choice we seem to have, then I think we should go about the business as intelligently as possible.

The more I think about it the more certain I am that government is becoming a very complex business. Government seems to have an itch to get into everything, no matter where or what it is, and we are not allowing people to do the things they can best do for themselves without someone standing over them and advising them how to go about it. I do not for a moment believe in that philosophy; I think it is all wrong. If we are to saddle government with additional responsibilities, and in particular additional financial responsibilities, then sooner or later we must give government the power to deal adequately with the situation, and that power means the power to regulate and regiment. When that time comes, freedom flies out of the window, and I do not want to see that happen. That is why I am speaking as I am at the present time.

I do not wish to impose on your time any further, but I trust that when the next interim supply bill comes down we will have sufficient time, at least twenty-four hours, to study its provisions before it is brought before us in this house. I repeat that I can see no reason why the last administration should have failed to bring down these interim supply bills at least ten days before the end of the month, nor why the present administration should in future fail to do so. I excuse them on this occasion because of the particular circumstances under which it is done.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: It was done that way during the twenty-two years before I took over the leadership of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I am not disputing that at all, but it was not so when I first came to Parliament. Interim supply was brought down much earlier, but the tendency has been to let it drift to the end, and that is what I am protesting against at the moment. Let us have the supply bill in time so that we can look at it and understand it and, if necessary, criticize it.

I would like to ask the honourable Leader of the Government a few questions about this authority to borrow an additional $1½ billion. What is to be done with that amount? What is the purpose of it? Is it a refunding operation, and if it is, to what extent is it so? These are vital matters; they are matters of importance about which this house should be informed.

I apologize to the house for taking so long. When I came into the chamber this afternoon I had not the remotest idea that I would be saying anything.

Hon. John G. Higgins: Honourable senators, I think we ought to take judicial notice of Senator Crerar's absence during the last session. To see his six-foot four-inch frame rising and hear him uttering those words caused me to be amazed that a man of his age could pour forth eloquence for so long a time without a single note.

The honourable senator perhaps ought to be reminded that at the last session a rule of this house was amended to allow senators to refer to a colleague by name rather than by designation.

It is a wonderful thing, particularly for the younger senators like myself—I am still a young member of this house—not to have to remember the designation of each senator. It is difficult enough for the newer senators to remember the names of 101 other senators, but to have to remember their designations as well makes the task all the more difficult.

Perhaps the next time Senator Crerar rises to speak he will remember that he need only refer to a senator by name. However, by that I do not mean that he has to call me "John", and that I have to call him "Skipper Tom". However, I did think it only right that I should remind him of this change in our rules.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Honourable senators, may I say just one further word? I was not sure about this change in procedure last session. I will now have to set myself the task of memorizing the names of all senators. My discomfort in that is mitigated slightly by the knowledge that each one of you will have to do the same thing.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: You may use either a senator's name or his designation.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I rise for just a moment to say that I think all of us are very pleased indeed to hear the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) speak once again in this house. I should remind honourable senators that since we last met, Senator Crerar became the senior Privy Councillor of Canada, so it is particularly gratifying for all of us to see him back in his usual health and vigor.

I think, too, that we all agree with what he said about the desirability of bringing these interim supply measures to us sooner. When I was a very small boy, the first time I was brought to the Senate was on the occasion of the introduction of an interim supply bill. I can still hear the senators—and this was 40 years or so ago—getting up and saying: "We get these bills too late". That speech has been made in this house by generation after generation of senators. It is time, in my opinion, that something is done about it, and I hope it is done as soon as possible.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I wish also to say that I am in agreement with the honourable senator from Gormley (Hon. Mr. McCutcheon), who quoted two very good authorities to the same effect, namely, the honourable senator from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) and the honourable senior senator from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Lambert), that as soon as possible we adopt again the practice of referring the estimates to the Standing Committee on Finance.

Under the chairmanship of the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) there have been many improvements made in the form of the estimates, particularly in respect to the summary which is given at the end of the book. That was done many years ago. There have not been many improvements made since.

It is my opinion that members of this chamber faced with the estimates year after year, and usually the main estimates in the last hour of the session, are really in no position to pass them. We cannot give them the kind of attention that we should. I believe that the practice of referring the estimates to our Standing Committee on Finance for study is a valid one. It is really a necessary practice for all of us here. I do not say that we have to examine each individual item, but some of the studies which have been made have been helpful. Perhaps some of the ideas that the honourable senator from Gormley (Hon. Mr. McCutcheon) appears to have in mind about places where economies could be effected in government could also be disclosed at a meeting of such a committee. It would be difficult to do that kind of work in this chamber, but in committee it could be done most effectively.

Hon. Malcolm Hollett: Honourable senators, I do not intend to take up much of your time. I am not a financier, but I have before me on this side of my desk the Speech from the Throne and on this side a copy of the revised estimates and, personally, I can see no connection whatsoever between them except perhaps in the authority to borrow $1.5 billion.

If honourable senators will look at the Speech from the Throne they will see that the Government is going to do all sorts of things. There is to be a national fishery development program, and that has to be financed in one way or another. I find nothing in the estimates to take care of that. I find nothing in the estimates to take care of the proposed Department of Industry.

I must say that I am happy to have heard what Senator Crerar has just said. He has probably forgotten things that happened last year, or the year before, but he has spoken words of wisdom. There is no explanation whatsoever given to the Senate, yet this is supposed to be a body of men and women who will give a sober, second look at legislation that comes before us. I agree with Senator Crerar that we cannot give a sober look at such legislation in such a short time. There is no explanation whatsoever given for many things, and particularly this authority to borrow $1.5 billion. We are not given an inkling of how that money is to be spent. I personally dislike, as I am sure every senator here dislikes, the idea of consenting to the borrowing of $1.5 billion without having some idea as to just what that money is to be spent on. We are sure it is going to be spent on good causes. I have no doubt about that. But we ought to know, and our people ought to know, precisely what that money is to be used for.

I just wanted to say these few words, honourable senators, and to congratulate Senator Crerar for the excellent contribution he has made to this debate.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Honourable senators, I think we have spent a very profitable hour and a half, and I am sure the Government will take notice of the advice that has been tendered it. I can assure honourable senators that I will take note of the advice that was indirectly tendered me.

The first suggestion was that the interim supply bill should come to us sooner. I cannot guarantee that it will always come to us sooner, but I can probably guarantee that no senator will come here and be surprised to find the bill on his desk. I think I can arrange that in future, when the bill is presented in the other house, I will obtain as many copies as I can and distribute them to honourable senators.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I tried that, but I never could get enough copies.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I will make another effort. Probably the Government in the past did not have enough printed. I will endeavour to have an extra 100 copies printed, so that we will have the bill before we come here. Honourable senators will then have the bill and the estimates, and will be able to debate the contents of the bill in a more intelligent—if that is possible—manner than you find you are able to do today.

We are indebted to the honourable senator from Gormley (Hon. Mr. McCutcheon) for the advice which he tendered us. He is a man of wide experience as a barrister and as a solicitor, recently in the business world, and more recently still in government. I am glad he spoke here today. I can frankly say that I was rather disappointed during the last session that he did not speak more often. I hope that we can look forward to seeing him on his feet more frequently during the present session.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Although I did not agree with much that he said in his speech last session, I can say that I agree with a great deal of what he has said today.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I am improving.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Both he and Senator Crerar referred to the work the Finance Committee had done in the past on estimates. My recollection is that the committee considered the estimates of previous years, rather than the estimates of the current year.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: That is not so.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Is that incorrect?

Hon. Mr. Lambert: No, that is not so. May I suggest that the answer is that as soon as all the estimates are available they should be referred to the Finance Committee at once and not wait for a supply bill to come in.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): It may be possible to do that, but I do not know whether the Senate is prepared to spend the days and days required to go through the estimates one by one. I think that in the past the Finance Committee has been concerned with one particular reference, rather than a rambling look at all the estimates. I am sure that the committee, when it met under the leadership of Senator Crerar, considered the estimates from the point of view of how they could be better explained by a short perusal, rather than by spending days and days going through them one by one. I have in my hand a copy of the leaflet which now appears in the back of every copy of the estimates. It is a comprehensive statement of the expenditures of all departments. It is summarized on one page, and you can get all the information without spending hours searching through the estimates. That was brought about by the committee under the leadership of Senator Crerar.

The honourable senator from Gormley (Hon. Mr. McCutcheon) also referred to the report of the Glassco Commission. I will see that his references are brought to the attention of the Government, and I am sure it will appreciate the suggestions he has made.

Furthermore, I have noted his reference to a committee to consider reductions in expenditures. If I followed correctly what he said, he is under the impression that it should be done by a committee other than the Treasury Board. I will see that that suggestion is also brought to the attention of the Government.

He also referred to the move towards a balanced budget. I thought for a while he was going to suggest an increase in taxation; but he did not allow that impression to stay in our minds very long. I would impress upon him that at no time has the Government suggested that a balanced budget would be brought about overnight. It will take some time to achieve that objective.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I said "a move" towards a balanced budget.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): The words which he used are the correct ones, that there will be a move towards bringing about a balanced budget. I do not know whether the budget will be balanced this year or not. I know no more about the budget than any honourable senator in this house, but I would be very much surprised if there is any more than a move towards a balanced budget.

The honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) and one other honourable senator referred to the authority contained in the bill to borrow up to $1½ billion to provide for authorized payments out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund. I have some information on that. Clause 7 of the bill makes that provision.

Honourable senators, over the years it has been customary to have a similar clause in the supply bill. Each year supply bills contain new authority to borrow money for public works and general purposes of the Government by the issue of Canada Savings Bonds, other types of bonds, and treasury bills. The amounts which were authorized in previous years are as follows:

1957-58	1
1959-60	1½
1960-61	1½

In earlier years, before the exchange fund had a significant influence on the Government's cash position it was customary to seek this borrowing authority only once or twice a year and in large amounts; but in recent years, notwithstanding all the unknown and often large requirements for the exchange fund, the borrowing authority has been sought in smaller and more frequent steps.

Debt management has been complicated by the ever-present possibility that borrowing authority would be used up before the next supply bill. It is the Government's intention, I may say, to revert to the earlier practice of seeking borrowing authority only once or twice each year.

In view of the large annual sale of Canada Savings Bonds which takes place in the early fall, other borrowings which stem from the normal cash requirements of the Government, and the unknown course of the exchange fund needs, it is considered desirable at this time to request authority for $1½ billion.

Honourable senators, I have nothing further to say except to express once again to all senators who have taken part in the debate my thanks for the information which has been given. As I said at the beginning, I feel that we have spent a very useful hour and half.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford) moved that bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald tabled:

Report on the Department of Transport Air Services Needs (1962-1972) entitled: "Canada in the Jet Age". (English and French texts).

BOUCHERVILLE ISLANDS BRIDGE AND TUNNEL BILL

FIRST READING

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford) presented Bill S-16, to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge and tunnel across the St. Lawrence river at the Boucherville Islands, in the province of Quebec.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILLS

CONFEDERATION LIFE ASSOCIATION—SECOND READING

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard moved the second reading of Bill S-9, respecting Confederation Life Association.

He said: Honourable senators, the purpose of this bill is to change the existing name in French of Confederation Life Association to La Confédération, Compagnie d'Assurance-Vie. The making of such a change has been approved, both in this chamber and by Parliament, in the case of a number of similar bills in the past, and in particular in the case of a bill identical to the one that is now before us.

Bill S-24, which was introduced in the Senate at the last and only session of the previous Parliament, received first and second readings and was referred to our Banking and Commerce Committee. It was reported by that committee without amendment on that fateful day February 6, and before the report of the committee could reach the Senate Parliament was dissolved. Therefore, it is necessary to reintroduce the bill.

On the motion for second reading of Bill S-24 on January 30 last, I did say something about the company. Without dealing with the present bill at the same length, I shall briefly give some facts about Confederation Life Association.

It is one of the oldest and most respected of our Canadian life insurance companies. It was incorporated in 1871, some four years after Confederation, and no doubt that fact had something to do with the choice of name. The company also had some other links with Confederation, since its first president was Sir Francis Hincks, who was Minister of Finance under Sir John A. Macdonald. Sir William P. Howland was vice-president of the company at its founding. It is the fourth oldest Canadian life insurance company and the first one to be established in Toronto. It was founded by John Kay Macdonald, who served the company as managing director and president for the remarkably long period of fifty-seven years. His son, Mr. C. S. Macdonald, became president; and the current president is Mr. John K. Macdonald, grandson of the founder.

The company is just completing mutualization. Over 97 per cent of its shares have been bought in by the company, so that it will be completely mutualized, I think, by the end of this year. The entire board of directors is comprised of policyholders. The company does business throughout the whole of Canada, and has been doing business in Quebec since it was incorporated. At the present time 23 per cent of its business is in Quebec and 21 per cent of its policies have been issued in the French language.

The name of the company in French at the present time is derived from the French translation of the original statute of incorporation of 1871. The French translation in that statute named the company as Association d'Assurance sur la vie dite de la Confédération. That is a long and awkward name and one which is not practical for the company to use. The company therefore asks that the name be changed to what I think is the more appropriate one, La Confédération, Compagnie d'Assurance-Vie.

Honourable senators, as I have said, such a change in name has been approved by this house and by Parliament in the case of other companies, nevertheless I think it is only proper for me to suggest that if the bill receive second reading today it should be referred to the Banking and Commerce Committee, in view of the fact that the committee's report in the case of Bill S-24 did not reach this chamber before Parliament dissolved last February.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Honourable Mr. Leonard, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

THE GREAT-WEST LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY —SECOND READING

Hon. J. Campbell Haig moved the second reading of Bill S-10, respecting The Great-West Life Assurance Company.

He said: Honourable senators, this is a simple bill. Its purpose is to add a French name to the English name of the company.

It is probably of interest to this house to know that the company was formed in the year 1891, and issued its first policy on August 18, 1892. The head office of the company has always been situated in the city of Winnipeg.

Within five years of its incorporation, The Great-West Life Assurance Company was represented in every province of Canada, and by 1907 it had offices in every province. It is also licensed in twenty-three states of the United States of America.

The company is managed by a board of directors of eighteen members, all of whom are Canadians but one, who is an American.

May I inform the house that the Honourable Senator Crerar of Winnipeg, whose designation in this house is Churchill, is a director of this company and has the longest record of service among the present directors.

With regard to the province of Quebec, this company opened its first branch office in that province in the year 1896 and now has some eleven offices and 200 agents and employees there. The company has about $600 million of its business in force in that province. To indicate the extent of its business there I may say that in 1961 the premium income from Quebec amounted to $16 million; furthermore, in the same year the company made investments of some $20 million in that province.

Honourable senators, by way of summary I cannot do better than to read from a memorandum given to me by some of the officials of that company:

> The company has long used the French language extensively in Quebec. This applies not only to such printed matter as notices, reports, correspondence, sales promotion literature and so on, but also to its contracts of insurance and annuities. The company maintains a separate department at its head office to prepare this material in French, but, of necessity, the one item which does not appear in French is the name of the company. The Great-West Life is seeking approval of this bill in order to remedy that situation, and in so doing, enable its large French-speaking organization and policyholders to use a French version of the corporate name rather than requiring them to use the English name.

Honourable senators, if this bill receives second reading, as I trust it will, I shall move to refer it to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Haig, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

STANDARD TRUST COMPANY—SECOND READING

Hon. Lionel Choquette moved the second reading of Bill S-13, to incorporate Standard Trust Company.

He said: Honourable senators, this is another bill which was given first, second and third readings in this house last session. It was referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, and the report of that committee was adopted.

Unfortunately, however, the bill did not pass the other place.

On December 19, 1962, this bill was fully explained and given second reading in this house. The explanation appears in Senate Hansard of that date, at page 484. I might, however, give honourable senators a brief explanation as to why a similar bill sponsored by the late Senator Brunt in 1959 has to come before Parliament again. The company had to apply again to Parliament because subsequent to 1959 it had failed to conform with section 13(4) of the Trust Company's Act, Revised Statutes of Canada 1952, chapter 272, which states:

> No certificate under this section shall be given unless application therefor is made within two years after the passing of the company's act of incorporation, or within such extended period not exceeding one year as the Governor in Council before the expiration of such two years allows.

Following the expiration of two years the company applied for and was granted an extension of one year, but it was required to open its doors sometime prior to July 18, 1962. Failure to do so because it could not secure proper management by that date made this re-application necessary.

I am told that the company now possesses the requisite capital. The petition is exactly the same as the 1959 one except that in that petition the company sought approval for an authorized capital stock of $3 million, which could be increased to $5 million, whereas in this petition it asks for the whole $5 million.

The 1959 bill was passed by both Houses of Parliament and became an Act of Parliament on July 18, 1959.

That, honourable senators, explains why a new application has to be made on behalf of this company.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Choquette, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

CANADA PERMANENT TORONTO GENERAL TRUST COMPANY—SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. Choquette moved second reading of Bill S-14, respecting Canada Permanent Toronto General Trust Company.

He said: Honourable senators, the explanatory note to Bill S-14 is very clear: the sole purpose is to change the name of the company in English and in French. I introduced a similar bill—Bill S-23—in the Senate last session, and it received second reading on January 30, 1963. The full explanation appears in Senate Hansard of that date, at page 552. That bill and the one before us today, known as Bill S-14, contain the same provisions.

The English name of the company is Canada Permanent Toronto General Trust Company, and in French Compagnie de Fiducie Canada Permanent Toronto General. The company has realized that this name is too cumbersome, that people are now fully aware that there was an amalgamation of The Toronto General Trusts Corporation and Canada Permanent Mortgage Corporation, and it now asks leave to use the following names: in English, Canada Permanent Trust Company; and, in French, La Canada Permanent, Compagnie de Fiducie.

The bill last session was given first and second readings, was referred to committee, and was reported out of committee with just one change. Instead of spelling "compagnie" with a small "c", it was agreed to follow the practice in the case of this and similar bills that had been passed of using a capital "c". That was the report of the committee, but the bill never went to the other house.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: As a matter of interest, why does this bill contain the provision in its last clause that the act should come into force on the thirtieth day after the passing of this bill?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: That was explained at the time I introduced the bill during the last Parliament:

> In view of the company's relationship to Canada Permanent Mortgage Corporation, it is felt that a short name similar to that of the parent company would be appropriate and desirable for purposes of advertising and general convenience. Both the French and English names are stated in the bill, and it is my understanding that there will be a period of 30 days after the passing of this bill before it comes into force in order to give the company time to adjust its letterhead and to do all other things connected with the new names.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Choquette, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, before moving the adjournment of the house, I think I should let honourable senators know what I expect to be the business of the house tomorrow, because I am anxious that honourable senators should not be taken by surprise when they come into the house. I believe it advisable, wherever possible, to intimate the day before what the following day's business is likely to be.

I would appreciate it if we could proceed with item No. 9 on today's Order Paper, intituled:

> An Act to amend the Export and Import Permits Act.

The honourable Senator Hugessen will be introducing that bill.

I understand from Senator Croll that he wishes to proceed with item No. 8 on today's Order Paper, intituled:

> An Act to make Provision for the Disclosure of Information in respect of Finance Charges.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, June 5, 1963

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

(English text).

PRIVATE BILL

THE PHARMACY EXAMINING BOARD OF CANADA—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Clarence J. Veniot, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Public Health and Welfare, presented the following report:

The Standing Committee on Public Health and Welfare to whom was referred the Bill S-7 intituled: "An Act to incorporate The Pharmacy Examining Board of Canada", have in obedience to the order of reference of May 30, 1963, examined the said bill and now report the same without any amendment.

A similar bill in this matter was passed by the Senate during the last session of Parliament, but owing to the sudden dissolution of Parliament in February last, the proceedings on the bill were not completed.

Your committee recommend that the Parliamentary fees paid upon the bill of the last session apply to the bill of this session. It is noted that the promoters have again paid the printing costs.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Veniot: With leave, now.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Kinley moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for the third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

INQUIRY RE MEMBER NATIONS—ANSWERED

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: On May 22 last Senator Pouliot asked the following three-part question:

First: What are the member countries of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization?

Secondly: What has Canada done for each of those countries since the creation of that organization?

Thirdly: What has each of those countries done for Canada since the creation of that organization?

I now have the answer to the inquiry and would ask that it be placed on Hansard.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): The text of the reply follows:

(1) Apart from Canada, the members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization are:

Belgium	Luxembourg
Denmark	Netherlands
France	Norway
Germany	Portugal
Greece	Turkey
Iceland	United Kingdom
Italy	United States

(2) As part of her contribution to the North Atlantic Alliance, Canada has made direct donations of military equipment and supplies to various members of the Alliance under her Mutual Aid Program which began in 1950-51. The approximate value of this direct assistance up to the end of the fiscal year 1961-62 was as follows:

	million		million
Belgium	—$115.0	Luxembourg	—$ 1.6
Denmark	—$ 43.0	Netherlands	—$106.0
France	—$128.5	Norway	—$ 34.5
Germany	—$ 46.0	Portugal	—$ 82.0
Greece	—$ 87.5	Turkey	—$156.0
Italy	—$185.0	United Kingdom	—$170.5

(3) It is the Canadian view that the defence of the NATO area is vital to the defence of Canada. All members of the Alliance contribute in one form or another to the defensive strength of NATO and, in so doing, make a contribution to the defence of Canada.

(Translation):

UNITED NATIONS ORGANIZATION

INQUIRY WITH RESPECT TO MEMBER NATIONS

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: I wish to thank the Leader of the Government for his reply.

I have another question to ask, which is as follows: What countries signed the United Nations charter? That is the first question.

Secondly: Since 1945, what has Canada done (a) for each of those countries as well as (b) for the United Nations Organization?

Thirdly: During the same period, what has each of those countries done for Canada?

NORTH PACIFIC FISHING RIGHTS

CORRECTION OF STATEMENT

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Thomas Reid: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, may I have the privilege of correcting a statement I made on May 30 in reply to a question asked by honourable Senator Isnor.

The debate is reported at page 55 of Hansard as follows:

> Hon. Mr. ISNOR: May I just ask one question of Senator Reid? What was the date of the last agreement between the United States, Japan and Canada regarding fishing rights in the Pacific Ocean?
> Hon. Mr. REID: Do you mean in the North Pacific?
> Hon. Mr. ISNOR: Yes.
> Hon. Mr. REID: I think the North Pacific pact was signed in 1958.
> Hon. Mr. ISNOR: For a period of how long?
> Hon. Mr. REID: The North Pacific pact stipulated no period of years. Like the life of the commission on which I serve, there is no specified period of years. It is just set up...

This morning I received a communication from Mr. Roger Hager of the Canadian Fishing Company Limited, who is also a member of the Commission. My statement to Senator Isnor should be corrected in accordance with the information received from Mr. Hager. In his letter to me he says:

> The International North Pacific Fisheries Commission was ratified and came into being June, 1953, just ten years ago, and was negotiated for a ten-year period with the proviso that any one of the three contracting parties could give notice by June 12th, 1963 that they wished to terminate the treaty in a further twelve-month period.
> You undoubtedly know that several of us are going to Washington, D.C. this week to meet with the Japanese and Americans on the future of this treaty. I am led to believe that the Japanese wish to have some kind of a treaty with the Americans and ourselves but are bitterly opposed to continuation of the abstention principle, and this of course we think is a dire necessity if we are to preserve our salmon stocks for Canadian and American fishermen, canners, etc. However, each country will probably state its position in Washington over the next three weeks, and then of course it will be up to our External Affairs Department, the American State Department, and the Japanese Foreign Office to negotiate an amended or entirely new treaty.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Thank you.

THIRD READING

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald moved the third reading of Bill C-69, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1964.

Hon. A. K. Hugessen: Honourable senators, I hope the house will excuse me for offering a few remarks on the third reading of this bill. I should not have done so had it not been for certain observations that were made on the debate on second reading yesterday afternoon when my honourable friend, Senator McCutcheon, paid me the compliment of quoting from remarks I made in this house last December, suggesting that the estimates for the year be referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, and also certain observations in reply made by my honourable leader (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford) when he was closing the debate.

I made that suggestion last December when I was speaking from the other side of the house; and I want to assure my honourable friend, Senator McCutcheon, that I do not say one thing when I am sitting on one side of the house and another when I am sitting on the other side. I said last December, and I repeat now, that I think it would be extremely desirable in the interests of this house if the estimates were to be submitted each year, as soon as they are received by us, to our Standing Committee on Finance. The interesting discussion that took place yesterday afternoon on this particular bill, which asks for interim supply in an amount of, I believe, $1¼ billion, rather reinforced the argument that I made last December.

What was the basic problem that was worrying honourable senators yesterday afternoon? Surely it was this, that here we had a demand, an urgent demand, for an immense sum of money in the interim supply bill based entirely upon estimates, and we had not had a chance to consider what the estimates were all about or what the money was needed for. I think that rather indicates the present procedure that we adopt in this chamber with regard to the estimates.

We have no committee dealing with the estimates. At the beginning of the session each of us receives the estimates, this large volume of about 400 pages detailing the proposed expenditures for the current year. I do not know what other honourable senators do, but I must confess very frankly that I do not pay much attention to the document. I suppose if I were really a conscientious member of the Senate I would look through every page very carefully and then be in a position to determine for myself whether and to what extent the proposed expenses for the year were justified. But what I do when I receive these estimates—and I imagine this is what most other honourable senators do—is first of all look at the two summary pages at the beginning, giving the breakdown of expenses by departments and the increases or decreases for the year. Then I turn to this valuable compendium of standard objects which appears at the back of the book, and then perhaps I look at the estimates of one or two departments which particularly concern me, and that is it. I suggest that perhaps that is the normal procedure of honourable senators when they have these estimates placed before them.

Now I suggest, honourable senators, that being so, when in due course we come to an interim supply bill asking for one-twelth, or one-sixth, or whatever it may be, of the estimates for the current year, with that kind of very perfunctory examination made in our own offices we cannot conscientiously say we have any substantial knowledge of the Government expenditures which we are being asked to vote.

I think that situation would be largely remedied if as soon as the estimates were produced in each session they were referred by this house to the Standing Committee on Finance.

Of course it would be quite impossible for the Standing Committee on Finance to conduct any detailed examination of this enormous volume, but it could do work of considerable importance. I should think that the Finance Committee when it meets would begin by considering this general summary at the beginning of the estimates, paying particular attention to those departments which show large increases or decreases of expenditure. Then it would go over the estimates of each individual department—some of them might take only a minute or two—paying particular attention to those in which there are large increases or large decreases proposed for the year. That being done, and having made any observations which might occur to them in the course of their examination, they could report back to this house telling us what the difference was between the amounts proposed to be expended this year and those which were expended last year, and the reasons in a general way for the increase or the decrease.

I suggest to honourable senators that with a report of that kind in our possession we would feel much more able conscientiously to vote for the bills for interim supply when they come to us every month or every two months during the session, knowing that our Standing Committee on Finance has conducted at least a general examination of the estimates and found nothing irregular.

There are other things which I think the Finance Committee could well do in that connection. A number of honourable senators may often have questions of particular interest to themselves with reference to specific items that appear in the estimates, and I suggest that the committee might issue an invitation to all honourable senators to attend one of its meetings. Honourable senators know, of course, that they are all free to attend the meetings of any committee and to ask questions. They could be invited to come to a meeting of the Finance Committee with any particular questions that occur to them with respect to a specific item or items, and the committee would endeavour to obtain the information for them.

That being so, having conducted a general inquiry along these lines, I think this house would feel much happier in voting interim supply from time to time than it does today, and the complaint that was made so cogently yesterday, of being rushed and hurried into voting interim supply, would disappear because the committee would have examined the estimates upon which the interim supply bill had been based.

I think also that the Standing Committee on Finance could go a bit further than that, and in some other directions. I think it would be a good thing if it were to adopt the system which I understand is followed in England, where every year a substantially similar committee examines in detail the estimates of one or two departments of Government. Such an examination by the Standing Committee on Finance of the Senate would be valuable. It was done on one or two occasions when the honourable Senator Crerar was chairman of the committee, and my experience was that it was a good thing because the senior officials and the deputy ministers of the departments under examination rather welcomed the opportunity of appearing before the Senate committee and telling us what they were doing and what their various activities were. It seems to me to be a rather interesting and effective sort of liaison, if I may put it that way, between the executive branch of Government, represented by these officials, and the legislative branch of Government, represented by this Parliament.

The suggestion that I have made, that these estimates be referred to the Finance Committee, under the existing circumstances would require, of course, an active committee with an active chairman. I am given to understand that the Finance Committee has not in fact met for about three years. One cannot blame the chairman of that committee, because nothing has been referred to his committee for consideration. But, honourable senators, I do make this general observation: I do not think it is consistent with the dignity of this Senate for us to appoint committees with high-sounding titles and then give them nothing to do.

It is most unfortunate that the present chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance is ill, and I am told that it is unlikely he will be back this session. Should my suggestion be adopted and the estimates be referred to the Finance Committee, it would be necessary either to appoint a new chairman or an acting chairman to undertake the work to which I have referred.

In that connection two suggestions occur to me. The first is this: when we are considering Government expenditures it might be well if this house were to adopt the policy that was adopted by the last Government in the House of Commons in connection with the public accounts, when it appointed a member of the Opposition as chairman of the Public Accounts Committee. That, I understand, is the policy that is always adopted in England, where they have committees of Parliament dealing with proposed Government expenditures. I understand it is invariably the case that the chairman of the committee is chosen from the Opposition side of the house.

One further suggestion occurs to me in that connection: if the estimates are to be referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, and if the acting chairman of that committee is to be a member on the Opposition side of the house, I can think of no more appropriate member to act in that capacity than the honourable Senator McCutcheon.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: He has the widest and the broadest experience in matters of finance and industry. He has been a member of the Government, and he knows the situation from the point of view of the executive, the cabinet. In that capacity I am sure the honourable senator would perform a distinct service, not only to the Senate but to the people of Canada.

Honourable senators, I repeat my apology for intervening at this stage, but I do think that if we adopt some such suggestion we will not only be doing good to ourselves but we will be performing better and more adequately the functions for which the people of Canada have sent us here

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I am sure we are all indebted to the honourable Senator Hugessen for his suggestion. It seems to me to be a very good one, and I believe it would meet with the approval of this house. Of course, I observed that the suggestion to appoint a chairman from the Opposition side of the house met with unanimous approval from my honourable friends opposite.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: No, no, Mr. Leader; I must correct you on that.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I should say that one member abstained from voting. However, it is an excellent suggestion; it is surely worthy of our deepest consideration, and I am indebted to Senator Hugessen for bringing it forward. I know of the work that has been done in the past by the Standing Committee on Finance, and I see no reason why similar good work should not be done in the future.

Referring to the debate yesterday, I neglected to answer a question asked by the honourable Senator Hollett from Newfoundland. He said that he found nothing in the estimates in connection with the Speech from the Throne. Of course there is nothing in the estimates with respect to the Speech from the Throne. The Speech from the Throne is a forecast of what the Government proposes to do. There has been no money spent yet on what is contained in the Speech from the Throne. These estimates are what the Government considers will be required to carry out the legislation which is already on the statute books; so there can be no relationship between what is in the Speech from the Throne and what is in these estimates.

Apart from that, honourable senators, I think we covered all the questions that came forward yesterday, and I have nothing further to say at this time.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that he had received the following communication:

GOVERNMENT HOUSE
Ottawa

5th June, 1963

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Hon. Robert Taschereau, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 5th June, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,

A. G. Cherrier
Assistant Secretary
to the Governor General.

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

MOTION FOR ADDRESS IN REPLY—ORDER STANDS

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Lefrançois, seconded by the Honourable Senator Taylor (Westmorland), for an Address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to the Speech from the Throne delivered by His Excellency the Administrator at the opening of the Session.—(Honourable Senator Inman).

Hon. Mrs. Inman: Stand.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I should like to state at this time that the honourable Senator Inman has consented to allow this matter to stand. Would it meet with the favour of the house that it appear as the first item of business tomorrow?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Order stands.

PRIVATE BILL

QUEBEC FIRE ASSURANCE COMPANY—SECOND READING

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt moved the second reading of Bill S-8, respecting Quebec Fire Assurance Company.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill is very simple. A similar bill was passed at the last session of the Senate but the dissolution of Parliament rendered it necessary to bring this bill before the Senate at this time. The purpose of the bill is to change the name in English and in French, and to increase the capital of the company from one-quarter of a million dollars to $900 million.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Nine hundred million?

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: I am sorry. It should be $900,000—from a quarter of a million to nine hundred thousand.

This increase in the share capital has been recommended by the Superintendent of Insurance.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

FINANCE CHARGES (DISCLOSURE) BILL

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. David A. Croll moved the second reading of Bill S-6, to make provision for the disclosure of information in respect of finance charges.

He said: Honourable senators, this is the fifth occasion on which I have moved the second reading of a bill similar to Bill S-6. I make no apology for my perseverance, although it might appear that I am creating some kind of record so far as this chamber is concerned. However, I recall that the late Senator Euler persevered in his efforts on behalf of margarine, which efforts were in the end crowned with success. I should also like to quote the words of Shakespeare when he wrote:

> An enterprise, when fairly once begun, should not be left till all that ought is won.

This bill is in identical terms with the bill I introduced at the last session. Therefore, it is unnecessary for me to make any extended remarks on this occasion. However, I do make this plea: that as soon as possible the measure be referred to the appropriate committee of this house for detailed examination, for the hearing of witnesses, and for report. The identical bill received second reading—which connotes approval in principle—on previous occasions, and during the last session by unanimous consent.

I am sure that nearly all honourable senators are in sympathy with the principle of the bill and will be anxious to ensure that it reaches the same stage as it did at the last session, without unnecessary delay. It should be possible for the committee's study of the bill to be concluded before the summer adjournment.

I have often expressed my view that the bill is constitutional on the basis that in its pith and substance it is legislation in relation to "Interest" as that word appears in Head 19 of Section 91 of the British North America Act, 1867. Others have expressed some fears or doubts about this.

As honourable senators know, the Court of Appeal of Ontario has declared the Unconscionable Transactions Act of that province beyond the scope of provincial legislative power, on the basis that in pith and substance it is legislation in respect of interest. The relevance of the unanimous judgment of the Ontario Court of Appeal to the constitutionality of Bill S-6 will be obvious to all honourable senators. That decision is now under appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada.

I have already indicated my willingness, if the standing committee thinks it desirable, to support the inclusion of a clause deferring the coming into force of the bill until the Supreme Court of Canada has passed on the constitutionality of its main provisions. I do not see how I could be any fairer than that.

As for further improvements or refinements in the bill which honourable senators may think advisable, may I say that I know of no body more qualified to deal with such matters than the appropriate committee of the Senate. That committee will have the advantage of hearing witnesses and arguments pro and con, and will be able to ascertain "who is afraid of the big bad truth".

I commend the new senators who may be unfamiliar with the proposed bill, if that is conceivable, to the preamble, and to the explanatory notes which read as follows:

> The sole purpose of this bill is to require every person who carries on the business of extending consumer credit to disclose in writing to the consumer of such credit the total cost thereof, expressed both as a lump sum and in terms of simple annual interest.
> The bill is restricted to the field of consumer credit and has no application to cash loans, mortgages on real estate, etc.
> No criminal liability would flow from non-compliance with the bill but in the event of non-disclosure a credit financier would be unable to recover or retain any finance charges whatever on any unpaid balance in respect of which he has extended credit.

I also draw the attention of new senators to the extended remarks I made in this chamber on November 1 of last year, which appear in The Debates of the Senate for the session of 1962-63, and in particular to page 191 where I said:

> This bill constitutes an important first step in the protection of consumers of retail credit. It is based on the premise that if people knew what they were being charged they would be less likely to make instalment purchases which would leave them hard up or destitute, and at the very least, would enable them to shop intelligently for credit.
> Why do people enter into these instalment arrangements often at grave risk to the financial security of themselves and their families? It is easy to say, "Charge it", sign a piece of paper, and walk away with the merchandise. It is easy to avoid finding out what the finance charges are, not having to face up to them immediately. The sole purpose of this bill is to require credit financiers to tell the truth about these charges. In too many cases the consumer is misled into paying a higher price for credit than he has been led to expect, and indeed a higher price than he can afford.

And further:

> Honourable senators, this bill does not attempt to set a ceiling on finance charges. Perhaps it should, as does the Small Loans Act in respect of cash loans. What it does do is protect the innocent, the unwary, the ignorant and the unsuspecting by requiring that they be fully and accurately informed of the costs they are incurring. As I remarked on an earlier occasion:
> > In this age of credit card mentality the consumer is being sliced up like a piece of cheese and he hardly realizes it.

The growth of consumer credit has been fantastic. There is ample evidence all around us that the bulk of credit supplied to consumers is made available without the consumer having a clear and full knowledge of the alternatives available to him and the cost of each.

Let me try to make it as simple as I can. The law has not kept up with the development of consumer credit. The law has not paralleled the progress in that field. Thus we have—and I can give it to you in capsule form—an anomalous situation which has developed in which the consumer by borrowing money and paying cash is protected by the Small Loans Act, whereas if he finances his acquisition by instalment purchase he has no protection. It is as simple as that. There it is in a nutshell. This bill is an endeavour to set right a situation that has long cried out for some kind of attention.

It is also true that dollar disclosure is not sufficient to allow comparison of credit costs. This bill provides for the disclosure of dollar amounts and simple interest rates, and it is the answer to the proposition that I presented to you. I repeat, because I think it is worth remembering, that the man who borrows money from a loan company and pays cash is protected by the Small Loans Act, whereas the man who goes in and makes an instalment purchase is not protected. This act would protect such a man.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: May I ask my honourable friend a question? Let us assume a young married couple want to buy furniture, and they cannot get credit from the bank. They have no security whatever upon which to borrow from a loan company. If you say to them: "Do you know that after a year and a half you will have paid $150 more than the goods are worth?", they will answer: "So what? We need them, and we cannot borrow the money". I submit that that is the case with respect to eight out of ten users of consumer financing. What does the honourable senator say about that?

Hon. Mr. Croll: All I say to such a couple is: "Good luck to you". As long as they are told the cost in dollars and the interest rate, then it is all right. I am one of those who believe that it is good business for the individual and for the country to have the use of the goods while they are paying for them. All I am asking you to do is to tell such people the truth. When such a man deals with a loan company he knows what he is paying because the amount of interest is limited by the Small Loans Act. Interest at a certain percentage is charged for money up to a certain amount, and the borrower knows exactly what it is. I am asking you to tell the consumer the same truth with respect to consumer financing. It is as simple as that. Let him be the judge. If he does not want to buy then he does not have to, but if he does then he at least has all the information. At the present time the law in that respect is lax. The law has not kept up with the development of consumer credit, and it is about time it did. This bill is a step in that direction.

This measure has been discussed across the country. I think it has captured the attention and the imagination of many Canadians, and I am sure the discussion before the committee will generate a good deal of interest. I seek your endorsement of this bill in principle at a very early date and ask that it be sent on to the appropriate committee.

Yesterday we dealt with four or five bills, and today we dealt with another, all of which were referred to committee during the last Parliament but did not proceed further because Parliament was dissolved. All I ask is that within a short time—and I am not suggesting that there be no discussion at all on second reading; far from it—this bill be put in the same position as those other bills are at the present time, and that it not be postponed for too long a time.

I suggest that this bill is in the public interest. It is one in which the people who are concerned about this matter want to be heard. I am hopeful that you will give this bill second reading at an early date.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt, debate adjourned.

EXPORT AND IMPORT PERMITS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Hon. A. K. Hugessen moved the second reading of Bill S-3, to amend the Export and Import Permits Act.

He said: Honourable senators, this is a very simple bill. All that it does is to extend for a further period of three years the operation of the present Export and Import Permits Act.

The Export and Import Permits Act was enacted in the first instance in 1954, replacing somewhat similar legislation, and it was provided that it should remain in force for a period of three years.

Since, in effect, it is an act which restricts the trade of Canada, I suppose the Parliament of that day in its wisdom thought it should be in force for only a certain period, and that at the end of three years Parliament should have another chance to look at it.

The act was extended in 1957 for a further period of three years, and again in 1960 for a further period of three years. It will expire on July 31 next, and this bill proposes to extend it to July 31, 1966.

Briefly, the Export and Import Permits Act does three things. First, it gives authority to the Governor in Council to control the export from Canada of strategic materials and military equipment by establishing an export control list. Export of any item on this list can only be made from Canada with a permit, and these controls cover shipments to every destination.

The second thing the act does is provide for the establishment of what is called an area control list. Exports of every kind to any country named in that list can be made only under permit. At the present time, the area subject to this area control list includes all the countries of the Sino-Soviet bloc.

The third thing the act does is provide authority for the Governor in Council to establish an import control list for certain specific purposes, relating particularly to the support of agricultural prices in this country. The import control part is not an important element in the act; as a matter of fact, the only commodities now subject to import control are butter, cheddar cheese, dry skim milk, butterfat and turkeys. That, as I say, is in pursuance of the Agricultural Prices Support legislation provided in various acts passed by Parliament.

Under section 26 of the act, the minister is required to prepare and submit to Parliament each year a report of the operations under the act. The report for the calendar year 1962 has been tabled and is available to honourable senators.

I am told that an attempt is made to minimize inconveniences for exporters of materials under the act; administrative procedures are simplified from time to time through the issue of general export permits and general import permits, which eliminate the necessity for making individual applications with respect to those particular articles; and the closest attention is paid to representations from businessmen and trade associations who seek to simplify procedure. All details regarding individual transactions are treated as strictly confidential.

With respect to the list of strategic materials, which perhaps is the most important feature of the act—strategic materials, military supplies and so on—that list is revised from time to time as conditions require. The object is always to keep the list to the minimum, commensurate with the needs of Canada's safety.

There is machinery for consultation between the nations of the free world, to define what each and all of them regard as strategic materials subject to control. Regular intergovernmental consultations are held with our allies to ensure that there are no differences in control policies and that our fundamental security interests are protected.

If the bill should receive second reading, I would suggest that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce where honourable senators can make inquiries in detail, if they wish, as to the operation of this legislation.

Hon. M. Wallace McCutcheon: Honourable senators, this bill is in the exact terms of a similar bill introduced in the last session of Parliament in the House of Commons by the Government of that day. On this side of the house we are quite prepared to see it given second reading at this time, on the understanding that it will be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce. I think all honourable senators would be interested in having an up-to-date list of restricted materials and restricted areas.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I move, seconded by honourable Senator Lambert, that this bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Honourable senators, I can speak only for myself. I am quite in favour of the bill. On this side of the house we have complete freedom and no one can speak on behalf of this side of the house. Therefore, speaking only for myself, I agree with the motion.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I speak in exercise of that freedom, as I have always done without having been told about it. In line with the suggestion made earlier by Senator Hugessen, would it not be a good idea to send some of the bills, which would ordinarily be referred to the Banking and Commerce Committee, to the Finance Committee and let its members get their share of work?

Here is an export-import bill, and if it is to be given a fair and complete hearing it will take up most of a morning in committee. I remember the last time a similar measure was before us the officials from the department presented us with a great deal of information, but we had little time in which to ask questions.

For the most part these private bills are not controversial, and I think some of them might be dealt with in the way I have suggested. However, it is up to the leader to decide.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Honourable senators, I have expressed myself in favour of the motion and I am not going back on that. If the house would prefer that the bill go to the Finance Committee, I have no objection. However, it has always been the custom, in connection with this legislation, to send the bill to the Banking and Commerce Committee.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: It is the proper place.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): In regard to what Senator Croll has said about other bills, it is true that the other day when bills were before us to change the names of insurance companies, and where there was no financial implication, they were sent to the Committee on Banking and Commerce. It occurred to me then that those bills should have gone to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: That is quite right.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): There was a bill before us today to change a name, but there was also a proposal of a large increase—not as large as was stated in the first instance—in the capital structure of the company. I suggest that in future we keep in mind that bills which have no financial implication should be sent to a committee other than Banking and Commerce.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, as to the business for tomorrow, the debate on the Speech from the Throne will be continued. I had hoped that we could proceed with the second reading of Bill S-16, with respect to the Boucherville Islands Bridge and Tunnel; however, we will not have sufficient information to do so. The bill will be handled by Senator Bouffard, and he will be prepared to proceed with it on Monday night.

I notice there is a private bill in the name of Honourable Senator Beaubien (Provencher). Probably he will be proceeding tomorrow with that bill.

In any event, I cannot speak as to private bills, but may I suggest to honourable senators who are interested in private bills that if they would let their Whip know when they propose to proceed with them, the Whip could then inform me, and at the close of business each day I could intimate what bills would likely be considered on the following day.

Hon. Mr. Horner: May I ask if the bridge and tunnel specified in Bill S-16 is part bridge and part tunnel? Are they two different undertakings?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): The title of the bill reads "to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge and tunnel...". I take it that there is to be a bridge to the tunnel, that you will go through a tunnel and come out to a bridge. However, I have no specific information on that. Senator Bouffard will have all the information on Tuesday evening.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: May I ask the Leader of the Government if when the house adjourns tomorrow will it adjourn until Monday or Tuesday of next week?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): At the present time it is expected that the house will adjourn tomorrow until Tuesday evening next. However, I do not like to be too definite with respect to that.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Robert Taschereau, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Speaker of the Senate said:

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General has been pleased to cause Letters Patent to be issued under his Sign Manual and Signet constituting the Honourable Robert Taschereau, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, his Deputy, to do in His Excellency's name all acts on his part necessary to be done during His Excellency's pleasure.

The Commission was read by the Clerk.

The Honourable Alan A. Macnaughton, Speaker of the House of Commons, then addressed the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General as follows:

May it please Your Honour:

The Commons of Canada have voted certain supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Honour the following bill:

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1964.

To which bill I humbly request Your Honour's assent.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give the royal assent to the said bill.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, June 6, 1963

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE LATE SENATOR RAYMOND

TRIBUTES

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, it is with deep sorrow that I rise to pay tribute to our late colleague, Senator Donat Raymond, who passed away late yesterday afternoon at the age of 83. Little did we think when he returned to Montreal last week that we had seen him for the last time.

Senator Raymond was born in Beauharnois county, in the province of Quebec, in 1880, and was educated at Valleyfield College. As a young man he went to Montreal and created for himself a long, varied and successful career as a leading figure in Montreal financial and commercial circles. He also had a deep interest in sports and had a lengthy association with the famous hockey team, the Montreal Canadiens.

Senator Raymond was called to the Senate in December 1926, and for many years he took an active part in the proceedings of this house and its committees. Prior to his death Senator Raymond was dean of this chamber.

Honourable senators, I wish to extend to the family of the late Senator, and especially to Madame Raymond and her four daughters, our heartfelt sympathy and condolences, which will be conveyed in person by the Speaker of the Senate and other senators who will attend the funeral at the Basilica-Cathedral of Mary Queen of the World in Montreal on Saturday morning next.

Hon. Lionel Choquette: Honourable senators, I was not closely associated with the late Senator Donat Raymond, though naturally we all knew him. Senator Raymond was a distinguished son of the Province of Quebec, and he brought to this chamber a fine record of service.

Senator Raymond, dean of the Senate, was a very successful businessman, an active sportsman, and a true gentleman.

I join with the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford) in expressing to his widow and four daughters our sincere sympathy, and our appreciation of the honourable service he rendered to Canada as a member of this chamber.

(Translation):

Hon. J.-M. Dessureault: Honourable senators, I concur wholeheartedly in the feelings expressed by the Leader of the Government in this house and the acting Leader of the Opposition, as well as by those of my colleagues who paid an eloquent and richly-deserved tribute to Senator Donat Raymond.

I have lost in the person of Senator Raymond a personal friend and a most valuable colleague for whom I have always had the highest respect and admiration.

He was prominent in the sports, industrial, financial and political circles of Montreal and constantly active in various fields of Canadian life.

He was a founder and former president of the Canadiens hockey team and the Montreal Forum and, until his death, chairman of the board of directors of the General Trust of Canada, of which I was a member for many years. He was also director of many other important companies and he played a leading part in the organization of the Liberal party.

Appointed to the Senate, as mentioned by our leader, on December 20, 1926, he was the only survivor of the Liberal regime prior to the Bennett government.

With the death of Senator Raymond, a great and distinguished figure has passed away. He well deserved his generally recognized reputation of being a gentleman.

In closing I should like to extend to Mrs. Raymond and the members of her family my heartfelt sympathy and my sincere condolences.

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt: Honourable senators, may I add a few words to what the previous speakers have already said to express to the Raymond family my deepest sympathy.

I would like to hold up Senator Raymond as a model for our youth. He left his native village, because at the time he was born Beauharnois was a village like mine, and he came to Montreal where he made a name for himself through hard and steady work.

What I noticed most about Senator Raymond was his great courtesy. When we went to him for advice, he was always ready to suggest the solution he thought best for us. Moreover, the great courtesy he always showed brought him success in life to the point where he became one of our best organizers, one of the most important financiers of the city of Montreal, and even one of our greatest sportsmen. A sporting spirit can lead to many things, especially if we keep in mind the Latin saying:

A sound mind in a sound body.

It follows from that, honourable senators, that he strove to develop a sense of leadership in young people.

May I join with my colleagues in extending to Mrs. Raymond and to their four daughters my heartfelt and deep sympathy.

THE SENATE

AIR CONDITIONING OF OFFICES

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I would like to ask the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford) if it would not be possible to do something about air conditioning this building. The temperature in my office is 88 degrees, almost unbearable. I am wondering if there could not be air conditioning units supplied for use by the members of the Senate, as well as general air conditioning for the building. I understand the difficulty of the proposal, but at the present time it is as hot as it could possibly be, and it is most difficult to work in such a temperature.

I draw this to the attention of the honourable gentleman and I hope he will discuss the matter with his colleagues of the cabinet at the first possible opportunity.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Honourable senators, I shall be pleased to bring the suggestion of the honourable Senator Pouliot to the attention of the Government. I recall that some members have had air conditioning equipment installed in their individual offices. I thought that was what Senator Pouliot had in mind when he rose to speak on the matter, and I was going to suggest that if air conditioning equipment were installed in his office I would be the next to ask for it, for I can assure honourable senators that it is just as hot in my office as in any other office.

I do not know what can be done to relieve the unpleasant conditions, but I shall be pleased to bring the matter to the attention of the Government. The Chairman of our Internal Economy Committee (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) might consider bringing the matter to the attention of that committee.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, June 11, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILL

THE PHARMACY EXAMINING BOARD OF CANADA—THIRD READING

Hon. John J. Kinley moved the third reading of Bill S-7, to incorporate The Pharmacy Examining Board of Canada.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, before the Senate adjourns may I give some information on the business for Tuesday night.

I expect we will proceed with item No. 5 on today's Order Paper, being Bill S-16, respecting the construction and maintenance of a bridge and tunnel across the St. Lawrence river at Boucherville Islands. Then if Senator Vaillancourt is ready, we will continue the debate on Bill S-6, being a private member's public bill respecting the disclosure of information in respect of finance charges. Following that we could go on with item No. 7, Bill S-4, to amend the Bankruptcy Act, and, if Senator Inman feels so inclined, she could speak on the debate on the Speech from the Throne.

I cannot say definitely what items will be taken up, but I think we should be prepared to go on with those four I have mentioned.

Honourable senators, I have just received word from the House of Commons, which I am sure will be of interest to all honourable senators, to the effect that the Honourable Mr. Gordon, Minister of Finance, has just announced that the Budget will be brought down on Thursday, June 13, and that the White Paper will be presented on June 11.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, June 11, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, June 11, 1963

The Senate met at 8 p.m., Hon. Thomas Vien, Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald tabled:

Report of the Custodian of Enemy Property, for the year ended December 31, 1962, pursuant to section 3 of The Trading with the Enemy (Transitional Powers) Act, chapter 24, Statutes of Canada, 1947. (English and French texts).

Report of permits issued under the authority of section 8 of the Immigration Act, for the calendar year 1962, pursuant to section 8 (5) of the said act, chapter 325, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Budget Papers, 1963-1964, for the information of Parliament, as follows:

Part I—Economic Review of 1962

Part II—A preliminary review of the Government Accounts for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1963.

PRIVATE BILLS

CHARTERED TRUST COMPANY—SECOND READING

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard moved the second reading of Bill S-17, respecting Chartered Trust Company.

He said: Honourable senators, the purpose of this bill is to increase the authorized capital of the Chartered Trust Company from $2½ million to $10 million. This company was incorporated in 1905, and has had a very distinguished and successful career. Its last increase in capital was granted in 1929, when it was raised to $2½ million.

Under the general Trust Companies Act there is a limit on the amount of money that a trust company may borrow or of which it may guarantee the repayment, and that limit is 12½ times the paid-up capital of the trust company and its unimpaired reserve. The Chartered Trust Company has been expanding rapidly, and is approaching the time when it will exceed the limitation imposed by the Trust Companies Act; therefore, this bill is brought forward so that the authorized capital may be increased and the company may then proceed with its expansion in its borrowings by way of deposits and guaranteed receipts.

There is a slight error in the explanatory note to which I should call your attention. The note says that the purpose of this bill is to increase the capital stock of the company from $2,500,000 divided into 25,000 shares of $100 each, to $10 million divided into one million shares of $10 each.

The error is as to the present capital stock of the company, which is 250,000 shares of $10 each. In other words, the shares have already been divided. Instead of 25,000 of $100 each, it is 250,000 shares of $10 each. That mistake does not affect the bill itself, and the explanatory note will be corrected, I understand, on the next printing.

If the bill receives second reading, I shall move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce. Mr. MacGregor, Superintendent of Insurance, and representatives of the company will be present in committee to answer any questions in connection with the bill.

I may say that other federally incorporated trust companies have had their authorized capital stock increased to $10 million.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Leonard, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

BAPTIST CONVENTION OF ONTARIO AND QUEBEC—SECOND READING

Hon. Harry A. Willis moved the second reading of Bill S-18, to incorporate Baptist Convention of Ontario and Quebec.

He said: Honourable senators, this is the second time that I have risen in this Chamber to introduce a bill respecting the Baptist Convention of Ontario and Quebec, and I feel that in doing so I should have a text for my sermon. However, I am not going to bother you with that.

I would repeat what I said on November 21, 1962, that in 1889 the Baptist Convention of Ontario and Quebec came to this Parliament and obtained an act permitting them to carry on in those two provinces. That act gave them power to set up certain boards. They now have eight different boards which are sometimes conflicting, sometimes functioning parallel, and often causing confusion for everyone.

This Convention met in June 1958 and decided to set up a committee to examine the whole matter. As a result, in 1962 a motion was adopted to the effect that the present bill be brought before Parliament for enactment.

All that the bill provides for is the doing away with these eight different boards and the setting up of one corporation, to be an umbrella under which all the functions of the present boards will be carried on.

With that explanation, honourable senators, I, as a Baptist, ask that this bill be passed. If it is given second reading I will immediately move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Willis, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

BOUCHERVILLE ISLANDS BRIDGE AND TUNNEL BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Paul H. Bouffard moved the second reading of Bill S-16, to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge and tunnel across the St. Lawrence River at the Boucherville Islands, in the province of Quebec.

He said: Honourable senators, in the province of Quebec the Trans-Canada Highway runs along the south shore of the St. Lawrence River. As it approaches Montreal it becomes necessary to build a bridge and tunnel across the St. Lawrence River in order to reach Metropolitan Boulevard. The federal Government is to contribute part of the cost of building the proposed bridge and tunnel.

The bridge will start at the city of Jacques Cartier, near Montreal, and will extend to Charron island, which is not exactly in the middle of the St. Lawrence River, but is about 1,500 feet from the city of Jacques Cartier. From Charron Island there will be constructed a tunnel of about 4,700 feet, or nearly a mile in length, leading to the south shore of the river.

As this construction might affect the navigation of the St. Lawrence River, it is necessary for the province of Quebec to obtain the consent and authorization of the federal Government. The purpose of this bill is to give the province of Quebec authority to build the bridge and tunnel across the St. Lawrence River according to the regulations that have been put into force by the Governor in Council, and any regulations that may have to be put into force, to ensure that navigation will not be affected on the river.

I may briefly cite chapter 193 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952 concerning the protection of navigable waters. That act requires approval of all plans for work to be done over or under any navigable river. When the St. Lawrence River is involved, approval of such plans is always granted by the passage of legislation by Parliament, presumably because of the importance of that river for navigation. That was done two years ago in the case of the Three Rivers bridge, and also in the case of the Island of Orleans bridge, built in 1932 or 1933. On both occasions a bill was passed by the federal Parliament authorizing the construction of the bridge, by the province in the case of the Orleans bridge, and by the city of Three Rivers in the case of the bridge at that city. This work is done according to regulations put into force from time to time by the Governor in Council. That is the only purpose of the law.

It may not be necessary to have legislation concerning the construction of the tunnel. It is necessary to have that highway completed and both the bridge and tunnel constructed for the Montreal World's Fair in 1967. The completion of this work is an undertaking of such considerable magnitude and urgency that, in order to obviate any doubt whatever, it was decided to request authority for both the tunnel and bridge in the same bill. That is why clause 2 refers to the bridge and clause 3 refers to the tunnel.

As to the plans and drawings, they too have to be approved by the Government before the work can commence. The Government may also prescribe regulations concerning the building of the bridge and tunnel so that navigation on the St. Lawrence will not be affected.

If the bill receives second reading it is proposed that it be sent to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications where any explanations or information required by honourable senators as to engineering work or other matters as to the urgency of completion will be made available. The bridge and the tunnel will each have six traffic lanes.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Is there any financial obligation on the part of the federal Government in connection with this undertaking?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: Not at all, except that the federal Government, since this project is part of the Trans-Canada Highway, will make a contribution for two traffic lanes on the bridge and in the tunnel. As the Trans-Canada Highway is a two-lane highway the federal Government will, according to the agreement, contribute to the construction of two lanes on the bridge and through the tunnel. The rest will be borne by the province.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I ask if the requirement that the plans be approved by the Government is expressed in the bill?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: Yes. Clause 4 of the bill provides:

> The bridge and tunnel described in sections 2 and 3 respectively and the works ancillary thereto shall be constructed and maintained in accordance with and subject to such regulations for the safeguarding of navigation of the St. Lawrence River as the Governor in Council may prescribe, and, for that purpose, the province shall, prior to the commencement of construction of the bridge, tunnel or ancillary works, submit to the Governor in Council for examination and approval plans and drawings thereof and a map of their proposed locations, indicating accurately all relevant soundings and showing the bed of the stream and the location of all other bridges in the area, and furnish to the Governor in Council such other information as is required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the project.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, I wish to make just a few remarks at the present time. This, of course, is a very important project, because both the bridge and tunnel will form part of the Trans-Canada Highway. I am sure we all appreciate the explanation that the honourable Senator Bouffard has given. Yesterday I travelled over that portion of the Trans-Canada Highway between Quebec and Montreal, and I was amazed to see the tremendous amount of work that is being done at the present time.

Senator Roebuck has asked if it is necessary to have an agreement with the federal Government as to the plans. The answer to that question is that it is always necessary to have such an agreement when bridges are built over navigable rivers.

I would like to ask the honourable senator if he knows how much the federal Government is to contribute towards the construction cost. He spoke of two lanes on the bridge and in the tunnel for which the federal Government will be responsible.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: In my own province of New Brunswick when the Trans-Canada Highway crossed the river at Fredericton the federal Government contributed 90 per cent of the cost of the bridge. I have noticed many remarks in recent months to the effect that the Government has stated it would contribute 90 per cent of the construction costs of the uncompleted portions of the Trans-Canada Highway. I wonder if there is such a provision in the agreement between the province of Quebec and the federal Government.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: It would be impossible for me to give you that information. It is in accordance with the contract that exists between the Government of the province of Quebec and the federal Government, which is similar to contracts with all other provinces with respect to the contribution made by the federal Government towards the cost of the highway. I know that lately the law has been amended and the federal Government now makes a contribution of 90 per cent of the cost of a certain portion of the road, but it is a very small portion. I think it is only 10 per cent of the highway cost to which it may contribute 90 per cent. The rest of the highway is on a 50-50 basis.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Of course, we cannot determine it now, but to me it seems very unfair that the provinces which have almost completed their portions of the Trans-Canada Highway should be paid under the old agreements, and the provinces that have not completed as much as 50 per cent should receive special consideration under a new agreement. However, that matter does not arise particularly with respect to this bill.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: I think the only place where you could get that information would be in committee.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Yes. I think we should have that information. As I say, this is important, and I would like to move that this debate be adjourned until tomorrow when perhaps some other senators from Quebec who are interested in this matter will have something to say.

Hon. Austin C. Taylor: Honourable senators, before the debate is adjourned may I say a word with respect to the reference that the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) made to the bridge at Fredericton.

Honourable senators will recall that some years ago a new agreement was reached with the provinces to the effect that 10 per cent of the Trans-Canada Highway in a province would carry a contribution of 90 per cent of the cost by the federal Government. I know that such an agreement applied to the province of New Brunswick. My honourable colleague from Madawaska-Restigouche (Hon. Mr. Fournier) is quite familiar with this. As was quite natural, the provinces elected to apply the 90 per cent federal contribution towards the 10 per cent portion of the highway which would go through the more difficult areas of the province and would be the most expensive to build. In some cases, I think, that contribution applied to diversions made in the Trans-Canada Highway. The Fredericton bridge came under it as a diversion and, therefore, became subject to the 90 per cent contribution by the federal Government.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: It will be pointed out in committee, I am sure, that in this instance there is both a tunnel and a bridge, and the question might be asked: Why not build a 12-lane bridge and no tunnel? Why is there to be both a tunnel and a bridge? I would imagine there is quite a large difference between the cost of the two constructions.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: The officers of the Department of Transport are in a better position to explain that than I, and they will do so when the bill is before the committee.

Hon. A. K. Hugessen: Honourable senators, the bridge is to be built over the southern portion, which is relatively short and where there is no navigation by steamers. The tunnel is proposed for the longer portion over which ships travel to and from Montreal, and where a tunnel is the better construction from the point of view of navigation.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: A tunnel would cause no interference with navigation.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: No.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Brooks, debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, before moving the adjournment of the house, may I ask that the order for the resumption of the debate on the motion for an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne be the first item on the Orders of the Day for tomorrow. It is my understanding that Senator Inman will be prepared to proceed tomorrow.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): We will then continue with the debate on the motion for second reading of Bill S-16, to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge and tunnel across the St. Lawrence River at the Boucherville Islands, in the province of Quebec. Item No. 3 will be the resumption of the debate on the motion for second reading of Bill S-2, to amend the Bankruptcy Act, and then will follow the resumption of the debate on the motion for second reading of Bill S-6, to make provision for the disclosure of information in respect of finance charges.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, June 12, 1963

The Senate resumed from Monday, June 3, consideration of His Excellency the Administrator's speech at the opening of the session, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Lefrançois, seconded by Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland), for an address in reply thereto.

Hon. F. Elsie Inman: Honourable senators, I wish first of all to congratulate His Honour the Speaker on being chosen to fill this high office. I hope that he and his charming wife will be very happy here and enjoy their duties.

I also wish to associate myself with those who have congratulated the mover and seconder of the motion for an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne on their excellent speeches. They were interesting, informative and of high standard.

Honourable senators, this era is one of challenge to individuals and nations. While vast horizons beckon men to explore outer space, complex human problems occupy the mental and physical capacity of others.

The Government in its announced program in the Throne Speech has tangibly shown its determination to provide a progressive and prosperous future for Canadian citizens. I wish to mention especially two departments of Government.

The health and welfare program of the late Right Honourable Mackenzie King, envisioned in his heart and mind and designed to provide Canadians with a better life has, through the years, been accomplished to a large degree. It has been a long, tedious and, at times, a discouraging program for those intimately concerned with providing the detail in workable form without altering the principle. This is a branch of Government that has been, and must be, carried on in a capable and progressive manner as it affects intimately the life and home of the private individual. We know that this department is in excellent hands under the present minister.

The other department I wish to speak of is the Department of Labour. The relative rates of employment and unemployment are always a major concern in any country. Productivity meets a great human need. It is right for people to be gainfully employed because then they are happier and more contented, and they make better citizens. We see already an improvement in the employment situation, and we hope it will continue to improve. But this task is not for governments alone; it is also a personal responsibility, and each individual must accept it as such.

Unity among our people is necessary, and must be nurtured to continue to grow. The problems facing us today can only be solved by solidarity, a deep awareness of our common destinies, and a strong will to stay united. It is people, not territory, that make a nation.

As honourable senators know, one of the interesting public questions in the 1850's was the possibility of forming a union of Upper and Lower Canada. Prince Edward Island was not in favour of the idea, and it refused to discuss the matter officially. However, when Maritime union was proposed 14 years later, a meeting was arranged and the conference opened in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, on September 1, 1864. Quebec and Ontario asked if they might send representatives to the meeting to see if the proposed union could be extended to include Upper Canada. That request was granted, and seven men, headed by John A. Macdonald, afterwards Sir John A. Macdonald, arrived as unofficial observers.

The "Islanders" were not too interested. There was no official welcome. The delegates had to stay aboard the ship that had brought them to Charlottetown, or in the homes of the Island delegates, as the Charlottetown hotels were filled with visitors who had come to see a circus which was performing there at the time.

The meetings were held in the Council Chamber in the Colonial Building, as it was then called, which is now the provincial building. In this historic room the chairs, cabinets, bookcases and the three-in-one table of antique mahogany remain exactly as they were when the "Fathers" met there.

The discussions which took place at that meeting produced three definite results. It was considered that Maritime union was impracticable but that a larger union was feasible, and that another conference should be held to discuss details further. This conference was to be held in Quebec in October of the same year. Perhaps the most important result of the Charlottetown conference was the goodwill and friendly feeling that was created among the delegates. Apart from the formal discussions, the social activities did much to foster good personal relations so necessary to the future negotiations, for this meeting was the prelude to the succession of events that finally led to Confederation. It was at this time that the foundations were laid.

May I be excused a personal reference? It was my privilege many years ago to know quite well the daughter of one of the Fathers of Confederation, a wonderful, intelligent and gracious lady. She had accompanied her father to the Quebec conference, and she often told me stories of the boat trip up from Charlottetown, the gay parties on board, the fabulous entertaining and social functions tendered to the visitors by their Quebec hosts while in that city, and also about those that took place at Montreal, Kingston and Toronto on their continued journey after the Quebec meeting.

At Quebec a number of resolutions were drawn up for a federal union, but were rejected by some of the delegates, with the result that many negotiations and manoeuvers had to take place between that time and the fall of 1866 when representatives from Quebec, Ontario, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia went to England, and in the Westminster Palace Hotel in London drew up the British North America Act to which Queen Victoria gave her assent. Thus came into being on July 1, 1867, the Dominion of Canada.

Prince Edward Island did not send any delegates to London, and refused to become part of the Dominion at that time. However, later, due to economic and political misfortunes and the need to build a railroad which it could not afford to do on its own, the Island sought admission to the union and became the fifth province of Canada on July 1, 1873. Prince Edward Island is the only island province in the Dominion.

All maritimers are proud of the fact that the Confederation of Canada was, to a considerable degree, due to the enterprise and initiative of maritime men who had vision and foresight in organizing the preliminary conference.

The pioneers of the two great nations, France and Great Britain, who together built the foundation of another great nation, now Canada, in the new world, would be amazed if they could see today the anxieties and mental conflicts that beset their great-grandchildren. Canadians must again examine the principles upon which the Canadian way of life was founded. As we are now approaching the centenary of Confederation we must look ahead to the next hundred years and what it holds for Canada. We have no yesterdays—time took them away—but we have today and the future, and today we are interested more in the future than in the past, so in unity we must build that future.

One interesting point from the past is, however, the loss of a Senate chaplain. When the Parliament of Canada was constituted after the pattern of Great Britain's Parliament with a House of Commons, and with a Senate in lieu of the House of Lords, a chaplain was named to the Senate, the Reverend Dr. Adamson. He died in 1868, and was succeeded by the Reverend Canon Johnston who officiated as chaplain from April 1869 until his death in October 1883. The Venerable John S. Lauder was appointed in November 1883 and was in office in 1888. I do not know when the office of chaplain was dropped or why. Perhaps some honourable senators have this information.

I should like to turn now to a more commercial view. In 1934 a tourist committee was set up in the Senate to encourage and stimulate travel from the United States to Canada, and it has helped greatly to make the tourist industry one of Canada's top money-makers. Tourism has been called an important "invisible export", and is the name given to the industry whereby the person who comes to dinner willingly becomes a paying guest.

Few industries have grown as fast as has the tourist industry in the past decade. It is the third largest revenue-producing industry in Canada, but it is still only a start on what can be accomplished.

We have a wealth of attractions for the traveller in this vast country, with its variations from coast to coast in scenery and climate, and in the people and their way of life. Every effort must be made to promote the travel industry that is so vital to our economy and growth. It is essential to keep our visitors longer and sell them our seasonal attractions.

Canada does not advertise herself abroad sufficiently. This is a co-operative field, not only for governments at every level but for individual citizens as well. It means increased spending, of course, but the results would be rewarding.

In 1961 Canadian tourists abroad spent $633 million, but our tourist receipts totalled only $473 million. Reports show that tourist expenditures by citizens of Canada, Britain, the United States and West Germany exceeded the tourist revenues enjoyed by those countries. But more tourist money flowed into than out of Austria, Denmark, France, Ireland, Italy, the Netherlands, Spain, Switzerland and Turkey.

While we are interested in an intensive campaign to encourage Canadians to travel and see their own country which is large enough and varied enough to suit all tastes and preferences, it is very necessary to make the peoples of other lands conscious of what we can offer for a happy, interesting vacation.

One of the most often voiced complaints from tourists to Canada is that we Canadians are not enthusiastic enough about our homeland. Many Canadians who come in contact with our visitors are not familiar with the history of even the area in which they live, nor can they tell anything about the famous historic sites, landmarks or folklore of their own province.

Visitors from abroad like to feel, and be reminded, that they are in a foreign country. They like to be kept interested in the things they see and do. Tourists these days want action. It is a restless age and people are not satisfied now to sit on a verandah and rock all day, even though rocking has become fashionable. Neither do they want to spend a whole vacation lying on the beaches.

In Canada our tourist industry is still too highly seasonal. This should be remedied to make tourism more stable and on a year-round basis. Winter in Canada can be an excellent tourist season for those who enjoy winter sports, such as skiing, skating, ice-boating and ice fishing, among other attractions.

Gone are the days when ice fishing was only for the very hardy and, shall I say, "frost proof" individuals, for now the cabins or huts provide most of the comforts of home around a hole cut in the ice. This type of winter sport has spread throughout every province and is on the increase. And it is fun!

Here I would like to tell you a little story, a true one. At one time we had a young maid who was going to be married. It was winter time. I asked her, "Where are you going on your honeymoon, Kathleen?" She replied, "We are going on the ice to fish." And they did; furthermore, they made money, because they took in as much as $8 a day, she told me.

Worldwide competition for tourist dollars is becoming keener all the time. If Canada is to meet this competition successfully we must put forth every effort to sell the "Canada story".

Honourable senators, I feel the time has come for Canada to have a Department of Tourism, and I would strongly urge the Government to give this matter early consideration.

The Atlantic provinces, the gateway to Canada, constitute a most important region of this great country. Who wants to put a limit on their possibilities in regard to tourism and other industries? Ever since Confederation, maritimers have hoped and looked for a prosperity that never came, but it was one of the inducements held out as a reason for union. After all is said and done, though, we often find that more has been said than done.

We in the Atlantic provinces must foster a closely knit, fully integrated community in order to achieve our full potential. This will call for ideas, education and money, but it is our challenge. We must forget or bury any little differences, if we ever have any. We must look at ourselves broadmindedly and go forward together to progress and prosperity.

Perhaps we have not been aggressive enough in the past. We may have allowed events to overtake us too much. Now it is time for maritimers to wake up and let the rest of Canada know we are around. True, we have little in the way of big industry in the Atlantic provinces but what we have could become bigger.

Canada produces 60 per cent of the world newsprint and a fair percentage of that comes from the Maritimes, especially New Brunswick and Newfoundland. No doubt this percentage could be increased.

Then, of course, we have fish. Those who foresee an expanding world population eating itself off this planet in the predictable future, might revise their thinking if they would look to the sea. In fact, it is not beyond the realm of reason that some people may in a few years' time live under the sea. I was most interested a few nights ago to see a television interview in which a naval officer told of research that is being conducted to explore that possibility. It may be that some day in the distant future our senators will be holding their deliberations under the ocean.

In the sea there is everything to supply man's need for nourishment. Evidence of this can be seen in the studies and experiments that are going on to devise new methods and new types of vessels for catching fish and to find new ways of processing, preserving and utilizing the vast resources of the sea.

One of the new and most notable uses for fish is in so-called fish flour. Experiments on this product have been carried on at the Fisheries Research Board Station at Halifax, Nova Scotia. Fish flour is a rich protein which puts wheat flour pretty much in second place by nutritional comparison. This flour, which is made from cod and haddock—the most abundant species caught in Canada's Atlantic waters—is colourless, odourless and tasteless. It is fine in texture and extraordinarily rich in body-building properties.

This valuable product may be used in a variety of ways. I understand one scientist regularly adds a couple of heaping spoonfuls to his breakfast cereal to aid body tissue. Extremely tasty cookies can be made from it. It is used in milk shakes, and is also added to wheat flour for greater food value and in the diets of post-operative cases as a quick boost towards recuperation. In short, fish protein holds exceptional promise for the future of the human race. The Maritimes could well be one of the largest storehouses of the world for this valuable product.

Fishing is perhaps the oldest industry in man's activity. Even before the end of the Stone Age, evidence shows that fish was preserved in an organized fashion, for bones of sea fish were found in the refuse of the cave dwellers of West Central France, indicating that trade in fishing was carried on even in that era. A Roman writer of about 200 A.D. lists 200 different ways of preparing and preserving fish—more ways than we have today.

Honourable senators, I wish to tell you something more about Prince Edward Island, the smallest province in Canada. How big is "small"? This is a vague, neat, categorical word that can be used relatively.

In area the Island is small, but in importance is big; in fact, very big, since it was there that in 1864 the cornerstone of Confederation was laid. It has sent many of its sons and daughters across this country and to many other lands, where they have brought honour and fame to their beloved Island as well as to themselves.

The beauty of this little province, nestled in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, has to be seen to be appreciated. Each season has its own attractions. The fresh brilliant green against the red soil brings wonder to those who come to us in spring. Summer, with the smell of the sea and soft balmy breezes, has a peaceful soothing effect on those who live in the hustle and bustle of cities, and the scarlet and gold of autumn delights the eyes.

This Island, called "Abegweit" by its earliest inhabitants, the Micmac Indians, is only 140 miles long from North Cape to East Point, the two extremities which reach out into the Gulf of St. Lawrence like long fingers. In width it is only three miles at the narrowest point and about forty miles at the widest. It is crescent shaped with 1,100 miles of coastline deeply indented with hundreds of bays and harbours. There are almost 4,000 miles of highways, and this was the first province to complete its Trans-Canada Highway program. We have one city, Charlottetown, the capital, with a population of something over 20,000. There are seven small towns and many attractive and picturesque villages.

Prince Edward Island was discovered, so history states, by Cabot in 1497. It was ceded by France to Great Britain in 1763 and placed under the government of Nova Scotia. In 1770 it came under a separate government. At this time there were only 150 families and five proprietors living on the Island.

The first militia act was passed on July 3, 1780. Under it all males between the ages of 16 and 60 were called to bear arms and attend musters and military exercises. This law was not taken seriously, and such calls were looked upon as a joke. Often it merely meant a roll call and the appearance of a keg of beer. Thus was peace preserved on Prince Edward Island in those days. Perhaps there is something to be said for that system.

Farming is our major natural resource. Here, honourable senators, let me say that only an amazing character like the Canadian farmer can lose money annually year after year and still not be discouraged.

The Island has now embarked on the ARDA program, with encouraging results. When this program gets well under way it should be of material assistance to the small farms and the not-so-well-off communities.

At the present time, potatoes are the major farm products of the Island. Prince Edward Island potatoes command a top premium on Canadian markets, and on more than one occasion the international seed potato championship has come to our province.

Specialists in the nutrition field, not only in Canada but also in other countries, have come up with the findings that the potato is not fattening—without butter, of course. Not only is the potato not fattening, but some authorities claim it may well help in cutting down heart disease. Potatoes contain a high percentage of potassium, an element essential to a healthy heart. They are also rich in vitamins. I would recommend that potatoes occupy a prominent place on our menus.

Tobacco is a new agricultural crop being experimented with on the Island and is proving to be successful. Over forty farmers are in the business now, most of them in southern King's County where the soil is said to be excellent for the cultivation of this crop. A number of Ontario tobacco farmers have bought farms in this area and settled there. Five hundred acres were planted last year and the returns were most satisfactory. This year the acreage will be increased, and more curing barns will be built. Tobacco may well be one of the Island's major crops in the future.

Fishing is one of our principal industries. Prince Edward Island is, without doubt, one of the best fishing stations in the Gulf of St. Lawrence; but the habits and feelings of its people have become so decidedly agricultural that the fishing potential has not for some time received the attention which it deserves.

A newspaper, published in Charlottetown in 1883, mentioned that the Island had the best fish production in the Maritimes. In 1882, 49 million pounds of sea food were taken from the seas, consisting of mackerel, lobsters, herring, cod, haddock, oysters, salmon, bass, shad, halibut and trout. The present catch of Malpeque oysters in Malpeque Bay represents half of Canada's output. These oysters are considered to be the finest found anywhere in the world.

Another sea harvest that fishermen have been reaping in recent years, and one which means an important supplement to their income, is Irish moss. After a storm, thousands of tons of this seaweed is heaped along the Island shores. The moss must be picked over by hand and after all foreign objects are removed it is spread out and dried. It takes five tons of wet moss to get one ton of saleable product. This commodity is used as an agent to supply smooth texture to such items as ice cream and tooth paste, as well as for many medicinal purposes. It is used in some foods in the same way as is gelatine, and is extremely digestible and nourishing.

In the resort areas, a few steps take you from your hotel or cottage right onto a beautiful, smooth sandy beach. You can eat your meals while overlooking the blue waters of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, if on the north shore, or into the Straits of Northumberland, if you prefer the south side.

If you like to swim, you will find the warmest salt water north of Florida. Why is this so? One reason is that the Island is protected from the cold Atlantic by the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Another is that the shallowness of the water on the long, sloping beaches makes it easy for the sun to warm both sands and water.

In Charlottetown you can buy your suntan lotion, insect repellent and various other things at the oldest drug store in Canada, which has been operating constantly for one hundred and fifty years. There are prescriptions which have been on file for more than one hundred years. Among the rather unusual requests they formerly had were frost-proof tablets, and also a rat poison known as "the last supper". Such a poison did exist, but it was in fact called "the last meal".

The museum at Montague, which is the only one on the Island, contains many interesting antiques, all telling the story of pioneer days when life was not so easy.

A fish hatchery located near Cardigan is a fascinating place to visit. The many pools in beautiful settings can occupy one's attention for hours. A visit to Green Gables in the national park, made famous by an Island author, Lucy Maud Montgomery, is well worth while. The golf course there is considered one of the finest in Canada.

We also have ghosts on our Island: the phantom ship, always on fire; the jilted girl who turned herself into a pig and hounded the man ever after; a flaming casket, and many others. I shall not go into the details of these weird stories, but do come and hear them first hand.

Among the many attractions that Prince Edward Island has to offer her visitors, and one that is a must for people who come to the Island, is a visit to Woodleigh. Nowhere else in the whole world is there anything like the collection of replicas that one may see here. There is a twelve-foot stone model of Glamis Castle, complete as to detail, even to the moat and drawbridge, a wishing well, and Shakespeare's birthplace. Yorkminister is a very beautiful structure and a perfect replica to the most minute details: lights, chimes, stained glass windows and great doors. Much of the material used in its construction was brought from England.

There are also Stoke-Poges Church, Anne Hathaway's Cottage, and Ye Old Blue Dragon Inn, large enough to enter and containing all the articles found in the old stage coach inns of England.

The last addition to this collection is The Mill on the Floss with the huge water wheel. This also is a spacious building and contains a refreshment room where scones and tea are served.

One of the most serious problems faced by Prince Edward Island is transportation; in fact, it is a problem that has always dogged the province. Is a causeway the answer? Time will tell. Talk is being revived again of a tunnel. In 1886 a tunnel was proposed to connect Prince Edward Island with New Brunswick. The premier of our province at that time, the late Donald Ferguson, went to England to consult with an outstanding engineer on this matter. Tunnel stamps were issued and there was a lot of talk and excitement over the idea, but it was thought too costly a project at that time—a couple of million dollars or more—so the proposal was dropped.

I am pleased to hear that a new, large icebreaker will be on the stocks this fall, but it cannot be completed in a short time, so I would strongly suggest that the Government procure one or two car ferries to fill the gap until the new boat is ready.

Honourable senators, next year, 1964, the centennial of the conference at Charlottetown which resulted in Confederation, will see a huge influx of visitors to our province. Last year the tourist industry was worth $9,500,000 to the Island's economy, and next year we expect it will be worth much more.

The new Confederation Building, a memorial to honour the union of the Maritimes and Upper Canada, costing $5,600,000, provided by the federal and provincial governments and private individuals, is to be opened, and a tremendous program is being prepared to celebrate this event.

We look for next year to be our biggest tourist year in the history of the province and we want to be assured of continuous service between Prince Edward Island and the mainland to expedite the movement of traffic coming and going.

We hope many honourable senators will find time to come to the Island for the opening of the Confederation Memorial Building in Charlottetown. We assure them of a warm welcome and real Prince Edward Island hospitality.

Hon. M. Grattan O'Leary: Honourable senators, since it is my clear conviction that the entire nation is waiting anxiously for what I am going to say, I will, with your permission, move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton), debate adjourned.

BOUCHERVILLE ISLANDS BRIDGE AND TUNNEL BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Bouffard for the second reading of Bill S-16, to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge and tunnel across the St. Lawrence River at the Boucherville Islands, in the Province of Quebec.

(Translation):

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, as this the first time that I rise to speak since the beginning of the session, I should like to make a brief digression. It is also the first time that I speak from the left side of this house. I cannot say that this change was fully agreeable but every cloud has its silver lining, and by that I mean the appointment of Hon. Maurice Bourget as Speaker of the Senate.

During the years we spent together in the House of Commons, we were not on the same side of the fence, and I could even add that, as Deputy Speaker, I may have served as a fence at times, but I appreciated the fine qualities of heart and mind of our Speaker and we became fast friends. His parliamentary experience and his humanitarianism made him a logical choice for high office. I wish to pay him my respects.

I should also ask him to convey to his charming wife my best wishes.

Honourable senators, the purpose of Bill S-16 is to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge and tunnel across the St. Lauwrence River, by the government of the province of Quebec, to connect the city of Montreal to a point located at or near the city of Jacques Cartier, on the south shore. The principle of the bill is therefore very simple. The purpose of the bill was clearly established yesterday by the honourable Senator Bouffard.

According to the Navigable Waters Protection Act, no structure can be erected over, under or along navigable waters without prior authorization of the federal Government. But section 11 of the act provides that no approval will be given for the site and plans of a bridge over the St. Lawrence River, probably because the St. Lawrence is the most important waterway in this country.

Consequently, special legislation is needed which is a further assurance of the security and protection of navigation on that important waterway. However, since it is the province of Quebec that is authorized in the bill to build this bridge and tunnel which will be part of the Trans-Canada Highway and since both structures will be part of the approaches to the Island of Montreal, where the 1967 World Fair will be held, I feel that the Senate has all the guarantees it may require and that it should unhesitatingly approve the bill in principle.

(Text):

Hon. L. M. Gouin: Honourable senators, first of all I wish to congratulate Senator Flynn for his remarks and, as an old Montrealer, I wish also to thank him. Yesterday we heard our distinguished colleague from Quebec city, Senator Bouffard, give an explanation of the bill, for which we are all very thankful, and today we have heard a colleague from our ancient Capital give a further explanation of the plan for a bridge over and a tunnel under the St. Lawrence River.

Before expressing my support for this motion I am going to follow the example set by Senator Flynn and by Senator Inman and say a few words to our new Speaker. The only occasion on which I have spoken since the opening of the session was to pay tribute to the memory of our late Pope, and it was not proper on that occasion to pay tribute to our new Speaker, though, in a certain sense, this house may be for all of us the way to Heaven.

Though I was not a member in the other place, I had for many years very satisfactory relations with the honourable gentleman who was then the member for Lévis. I appreciated his qualities and I considered him as one of the most intelligent, most active and hardest working members of the House of Commons. What impressed me most about him was his clear and sound judgment, and for this reason I believe that he is highly qualified to preside over our deliberations. I sincerely hope that he is happy in this house. Speaking for myself, I may say that I was thoroughly delighted with his appointment as a senator and with his nomination as the Honourable the Speaker of this house.

Coming to the bill now before us, I would like to add just a few remarks in explanation as to the site of the bridge and tunnel. Were I to have the honour of travelling to Ottawa with the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks), from his very beautiful and sympathetic province, when driving along the south shore of the St. Lawrence between the old village of Boucherville, which dates back to the year 1600-odd, and the old city of Longueuil, we would reach a place now called the town of Jacques Cartier, where there is a narrow, or what I would call a shallow channel, one which cannot be used by ocean steamers. It is about 1,500 feet in width and separates the south shore from one of the Boucherville Islands called Charron Island. For that part of the construction it is quite logical to have a bridge because the water is not deep, there is no sea-going vessel navigation, and it would be quite inexpensive. But from Charron Island we would take a tunnel under the St. Lawrence River for a distance of about one mile—4,700 feet, I believe—and we would reach the Island of Montreal near its eastern extremity. If my memory is correct, I believe it would be near Boulevard Pie IX, on the east side of which are the botanical gardens, and so on. Trans Island Boulevard runs from the south to the north from the St. Lawrence to what we call, in English, Back River, and, in French, Rivière des Prairies. Our translations are sometimes not quite accurate.

Why do we propose a tunnel? Well, the main reason is that in this part of the St. Lawrence there is a channel in which the current is very swift and it is difficult for navigation. Near Victoria pier, for instance, is the so-called St. Mary's channel, where the current has a speed of about nine miles an hour, and for many ships it is quite a problem to go up the river. Moreover, the water is deep. To build a bridge would require the erection of tall pillars for a distance of one mile, and the spans would have to be high enough to allow such big ocean-going steamers as the White Empresses, for instance, to pass under it. All of this would involve expenses which, I believe, would be higher than those incurred by the construction of a tunnel.

Honourable senators, I want to express a purely personal opinion. I believe that in wartime a tunnel is much less vulnerable than a bridge. We have the Jacques Cartier bridge—and this tunnel would be a few miles to the east of that bridge—which runs over Ile Ste. Helene. We have the Victoria Bridge, the so-called Mercier or Caughnawaga bridge, and the C.P.R. bridge just alongside the Mercier bridge. So, in those circumstances and under certain conditions, a tunnel would be a valuable asset.

Then one might ask, why do we not replace the proposed Charron bridge by a tunnel, because that part of it would be easy to build? And as we saw so often during the war in Europe, there it was easy to build a Bailey bridge. But we could not possibly do so over the main channel of the St. Lawrence.

At all events, as an old Montrealer I am delighted to note that apparently everyone is willing to assist in having this bill duly considered by the appropriate committee, because for us it is a matter of urgent necessity. We are now preparing for the World's Fair, and I believe that as Montreal was founded in 1642, and as this is the first opportunity we have had to hold a World's Fair in Canada, it is only right and proper that it should take place in my own home town. On behalf of the people of the province of Quebec I may say that it would be greatly appreciated if we could have the opportunity of receiving from the experts who will appear before the committee the answers to our questions and the explanations we require. Then I believe we would be satisfied that we should go ahead with this monumental project.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

PRIVATE BILLS

THE EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN SYNOD OF WESTERN CANADA—SECOND READING

Hon. John Hnatyshyn moved the second reading of Bill S-11, respecting The Evangelical Lutheran Synod of Western Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, a bill in the same form as this one went through this house at the last session, and I believe it reached the stage of second reading in the other place when Parliament was suddenly dissolved.

The explanatory notes comprise a concise explanation of the objects of the bill. I would only add that The Evangelical Lutheran Synod of Western Canada was incorporated under special act, being chapter 65 of the statutes of 1953. This entity was one of the synods of the United Lutheran Church in America.

The United Lutheran Church in America and four other branches of the Lutheran Church in the United States and Canada, namely, the American Evangelical Lutheran Church, the Finnish Evangelical Lutheran Church of America, the Augustana Evangelical Lutheran Church and the United Lutheran Church in America, by agreement of consolidation effective as of July 1, 1962, agreed to consolidate under the name "Lutheran Church in America". The Evangelical Lutheran Synod of Western Canada was one of the synods of the United Lutheran Church in America.

The territorial jurisdiction of the Evangelical Lutheran Synod of Western Canada, as set out in the private act of incorporation, included the provinces of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and that part of Ontario lying west of the 86th meridian of longitude, and the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories. Under the terms of consolidation, this synod is to be known as Central Canada Synod of the Lutheran Church in America, and the territorial jurisdiction is to be limited to the provinces of Saskatchewan and Manitoba and that portion of the province of Ontario lying west of the 88th meridian. It was considered that the words "Western Canada" would be somewhat misleading in view of the fact that the provinces of British Columbia and Alberta will be in another synod.

Clause 2 of the bill amends the objects of the corporation to provide that the synod shall, in ecclesiastical matters, adhere to the Lutheran Church in America. This was felt desirable as there are other Lutheran Church bodies in the United States.

With reference to clause 3 of the bill, as I have mentioned, the agreement of consolidation changed the territorial jurisdiction of this synod and it is therefore necessary to request an amendment of the incorporating act in this respect.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn, bill referred to Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

UKRAINIAN NATIONAL FEDERATION OF CANADA—SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn moved the second reading of Bill S-12 respecting the Ukrainian National Federation of Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, the object of this bill is to amend the act of incorporation of the Ukrainian National Federation of Canada, chapter 66 of the Statutes of Canada of 1950. The federation for the most part owns community halls throughout Canada which serve not only as meeting places but do cultural work in the study of music, the teaching of the Ukrainian language and other similar matters.

The object of the present bill is to amend the act of incorporation of the Ukrainian National Federation of Canada, which, as I mentioned, was incorporated in 1950, so as to clarify the said act of incorporation with respect to its power to establish branches of the association, pursuant to section 8 of the said act of incorporation in a manner that would provide corporate status for each of the said branches within the realm of the federal incorporation. Such amendment would extend the association's corporate powers of limited liability and property rights to the existing member branches of the association, which power the said branches of the association, heretofore, did not enjoy. The said branches per se have been unable to comply with the legislation of the various provinces of Canada with respect to property and civil rights, and thereby have been unable to hold property in the name of the individual branches within the scope and by the authority of the original act to incorporate Ukrainian National Federation of Canada, chapter 66, and specifically sections 8 and 9 thereof. And further, the association may establish branches, boards, committees, or other bodies as corporate entities in the manner provided in the proposed new subsection (a) of section 8, with power to manage the various undertakings of the association.

This amendment will enable the association to segregate its various undertakings and specifically permit the existing branches and the future branches of the association to be corporate entities in themselves, but within the power, scope and authority of the original federal incorporation.

If this bill receives second reading, I propose to move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills, where, if additional information is needed, I am sure some person on behalf of this corporation will be able to give us such additional information.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THE UNION OF SLAVIC CHURCHES OF EVANGELICAL CHRISTIANS AND BAPTISTS OF CANADA—SECOND READING

Hon. Harry A. Willis moved the second reading of Bill S-19, to incorporate The Union of Slavic Churches of Evangelical Christians and Baptists of Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, on January 29 last I moved the second reading of a bill similar to the one now before us. It was then sent to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills, and that committee reported on it. However, owing to circumstances beyond our control, nothing further was done about it, and once again I am moving the second reading of such a bill.

To explain the purpose of this bill, I shall repeat what I said with respect to its predecessor on January 29 last.

The Slavic Churches originated in Russia and Poland, and as their adherents emigrated to Canada they formed themselves into two local groups here. These two groups became separate. Having been established here for some time, they formed an agreement five years ago among themselves whereby they would apply to Parliament to have these churches united and incorporated. It took five years to bring this petition before Parliament. The proposers of this union and incorporation come from all parts of Canada.

If the bill receives second reading, I propose moving that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THE GOOD NEWS BROADCASTING ASSOCIATION OF CANADA—SECOND READING

Hon. T. A. Crerar, for Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien, moved the second reading of Bill S-15, to incorporate The Good News Broadcasting Association of Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill was introduced by Senator Beaubien (Provencher) on June 3. Senator Beaubien is unavoidably absent, and I have undertaken to discharge his obligations on second reading.

This bill is also one of the brood of bills that were passed by this house during the previous session and failed to pass Parliament. It was introduced on December 11, 1962 and received second reading on January 29, 1963, but fell by the wayside a few days later when Parliament was dissolved. Consequently, it appears again at the present time.

While I am wholly unacquainted with the origin of this measure, it does appear to me to be in essence a very simple one. The first comment I have to make is that the title of the bill might prove misleading to some honourable senators because it describes the bill as being an act to incorporate The Good News Broadcasting Association of Canada.

Let me make clear at this point that it is not the intention of the promoters to operate a broadcasting station within the generally accepted meaning of that term. The word "broadcasting" is used here in its rather narrower sense of spreading good news around and beyond the community in the traditional old-fashioned way and by the use of broadcasting media as well.

The promoters of this bill reside in the city of Winnipeg. The important thing about the bill is the objects of the corporation. If honourable senators have read the section that discloses those objects, they will have seen that the bill is a measure to incorporate a body to spread religious knowledge, to promote, organize and maintain organizations or facilities for the dissemination of religious knowledge, to render charitable services, and to do such other things as may be incidental to the discharge of these purposes. The purposes might include the establishment of old folks' homes and charitable organizations of other kinds. Consequently, it can be said without qualification that the purposes of this corporation are wholly humanitarian.

It is not a commercial organization in any sense of the word, although it is given powers to do things that commercial organizations require to do, such as owning property and accepting bequests from those who wish to assist the corporation in its charitable work, and will have all the necessary powers for the discharge of these purposes.

I do not think it is necessary to take up the time of this house at any length in explaining this bill. The corporation will have the power to pass by-laws, to create an organization of directors and committees, all in the furtherance of carrying out its objects.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: May I ask the honourable senator if this association has the backing of any particular religious denomination?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: So far as I have been able to determine it has not. It is a body organized by a group of people in Winnipeg to carry on the purposes I have been endeavouring to outline to the house. That is not to say that my information is complete. However, I can assure the house that if the bill goes to a committee all these details can be disclosed there and all the necessary information given, so that honourable senators can form a proper judgment and the measure be weighed and balanced. All I am stating at the moment is that the association is to be incorporated for the purposes already mentioned, and the bill seeks, in its various clauses, to give the necessary authority to the corporation in order that it may carry out these humanitarian purposes.

It is expressly stated in the bill that the corporation will have no power to authorize any person to ordain ministers of the gospel, or to solemnize marriages, or to conduct funeral services.

I must confess, honourable senators, that all the knowledge I have, and that I am disclosing to you, is derived simply from my own conclusions with respect to what is meant by the various clauses of the bill to incorporate this association.

Perhaps that is all I need to say. Personally I think that it is wholly desirable to encourage any body of people who have enough public spirit to try to found a humanitarian organization, and who will rely on their own energies in finding the necessary funds for the carrying out of their purposes without having to go to some government for a grant. For that reason, if for no other, I would commend this bill to the favourable consideration of the house for its second reading.

Hon. A. K. Hugessen: Honourable senators, one point occurred to me in reading the bill and in hearing the explanation of my honourable friend Senator Crerar. As he has quite rightly said, the objects of the bill are set out clearly in the fourth clause. This is to be an organization for the forwarding of charitable and religious objects. The question comes to my mind as to whether under those circumstances the proposed name, The Good News Broadcasting Association of Canada, is a misleading one. The word "broadcasting" has taken on a rather technical meaning, and ordinary people will understand it in a quite different sense from that in which the proponents of this bill mean it.

I merely put that suggestion forward as one that could be considered by the committee when it comes to study the bill.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: "Dissemination" is the word.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: I was surprised to see that the bill was allowed to come forward with the word "broadcasting" in its title.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Crerar, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Beaubien (Provencher), bill referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Honourable senators, tomorrow we will have third readings of a number of bills which received second reading today. Also, if the honourable senator from Carleton (Hon. Mr. O'Leary) is prepared, is in the proper mood, and looks kindly upon the Government benches, he might favour us with the address which he announced today.

We should be prepared to go on with Bill S-6, to make provision for the disclosure of information in respect of finance charges, but whether or not we will proceed with it, I cannot say. I hope that we will get at least as far as resuming the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, June 13, 1963

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

NEW SENATOR

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the Clerk had received a certificate from the Secretary of State of Canada showing that has been summoned to the Senate.

Duncan Kenneth MacTavish, Esquire,

NEW SENATOR INTRODUCED

The Hon. the Speaker having informed the Senate that there was a senator without, waiting to be introduced:

The following honourable senator was introduced; presented Her Majesty's writ of summons, which was read by the Clerk Assistant; took and subscribed the oath prescribed by law, which was administered by the Clerk, and was seated:

Hon. Duncan Kenneth MacTavish, of the village of Rockcliffe Park, in the province of Ontario, introduced between Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford) and Hon. Mr. Lambert.

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the honourable senator named above had made and subscribed the declaration of qualification required by the British North America Act, 1867, in the presence of the Clerk of the Senate, the Commissioner appointed to receive and witness the said declaration.

PROPERTY QUALIFICATION OF SENATORS

RETURN PRESENTED

The Hon. the Speaker presented a return, submitted by the Clerk of the Senate in accordance with Rule 105, listing the names of members of the Senate who have renewed their declaration of property qualification.

MOTION FOR SUPPLEMENTARY RETURN

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, with leave, I move:

> That the Clerk of the Senate be authorized to receive the renewed declarations of property qualification from those members of the Senate who have not had the opportunity to make and file the same in accordance with Rule 105, and to make a supplementary return accordingly.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate resumed from yesterday consideration of His Excellency the Administrator's speech at the opening of the session, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Lefrançois, seconded by Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland), for an address in reply thereto.

Hon. M. Grattan O'Leary: Honourable senators, I would like, even at this late date, to join with the two leaders of this house in their words of grace and good sentiment for His Excellency the Governor General, their praise well deserved, of the mover and seconder of the motion for an address, and their congratulations to you, Mr. Speaker, for your clear consciousness of the high traditions of the office to which you have been called.

I would like to say a word of my own about our two leaders in this house; about Senator Brooks, who leads this side of the house with competence and gentle wisdom, and about Senator Macdonald, now restored to a post which he adorned in the past and which I am sure he will continue to adorn.

Honourable senators, there is one other in this house to whom I would like to say a personal word. When last year I came to this chamber and was received so kindly, there was one face that I missed, the face of a long-time friend, Senator Crerar of Winnipeg. I knew him in those far years when he was a member of Union Government, serving this country with devotion and distinction. I watched him put off his armour and then, like Cincinnatus, return to his fields; and then I saw him come back again, come out of the west, beckoning us all to the uplands where, as he put it lyrically, the air was pure and sweet.

Then, a bit more sadly, I saw him join a Liberal ministry, and watched him standing there like Ruth amid the alien corn. In later years I have followed his career in the Senate, giving it the rich wisdom garnered from long years, almost the lone survivor of a breed now all but extinct, that breed of Liberals who used to know what Liberalism was about. I was delighted the other day to see him standing in this chamber with all his old mental vigour; and I extend to him now that grand old Irish wish, that the good Lord may take a liking to him, but not too soon.

May I presume to be permitted to speak a word of welcome to this chamber to a fellow townsman who was sworn into the Senate this afternoon. Senator MacTavish comes of a family with very deep roots in the Ottawa community. He is a great Canadian in his own right and, except for certain heresies which sometimes he has exercised all too generously, I am sure he will make a worthy member of this chamber.

Now, honourable senators, I have thought that today I might presume, even as a junior member of this chamber, to say something about Senate reform. Many years ago, in what Sir Wilfrid Laurier used to call the young and salad years, I wrote an article on the Senate, far more lively than sensible, and, for some reason not clear to me, Professor MacGregor Dawson included it in his book The Government of Canada. It has haunted me ever since, and all I can say by way of extenuation is to repeat what Joseph Howe said: there was little in the world that he had less respect for than his opinions of yesterday.

Honourable senators, I do feel that some things could be done about this Senate to improve its usefulness. I think I have read every book ever written about the Senate. I have read every criticism of the Senate, and I have read only recently the splendid debate which took place in this chamber, to which men like Senator Hugessen and Senator Roebuck, and my friend Senator Lambert, made very notable contributions.

I shall not go into my thoughts on this matter today in detail, except to say this. Having watched the Senate now for a brief period from what I suppose I could call a ringside seat, I am convinced that this house could improve its usefulness as a second chamber and could do it within this chamber; that Senate reform, so-called, can be brought about more successfully, more sensibly and more effectively by the Senate than by any agency outside the Senate. I myself am convinced that the Senate, in its existing circumstances, with what is known today as "big government" reaching out into our very private lives, is incapable of giving to legislation that second look about which we talk. I am convinced that with legislation coming here, and so much of it coming here, of a highly complex character, the Senate today cannot in the very nature of things give legislation a second look that can be either effective or even meaningful. I shall pass on from this today, because I hope at some future hour or date to come back to it.

I wish now to approach the Speech from the Throne, which is the subject of this debate. I have always been aware that the honourable leader of this house (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford) was a gentleman possessed of many gifts; but not until I heard him two weeks ago in this house tell of the good things he had found in the Speech from the Throne did I realize that his gifts must include that of extrasensory perception. Honourable senators, I have read the Speech from the Throne over and over again; I have read it from its first page of platitudinous inconsequence all through to the last page, where it calls for the protection of Divine Providence, and that, I suggest to honourable senators, was about the only hopeful thing in the whole document.

I hope to deal in a specific way with four things mentioned in the Speech from the Throne. I shall deal with them not as bills, for we have only one bill before us, so far as I know, namely Bill C-72. I shall come to that presently. First, I want to treat these proposed measures by way of their trends. There are two trends. The first is towards continued irresponsible extravagance and expenditure; the second, a trend towards what I shall call the managerial state.

Let us take, first of all, Bill C-72. I venture to say that this bill in its form, in its manner of expression, is one of the most remarkable acts ever proposed in any parliament in the world. Let me read some extracts from it. It is almost unbelieveble that an act of Parliament should contain language of the imprecision that you will find in this document.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): May I ask the honourable gentleman if the bill is before the Senate?

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): Well, I received a copy of it in my mail, whether it is before the Senate or not.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I do not believe the bill has come to the Senate.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): If it has not, all right, I shall drop it. At all events, surely I can discuss the Speech from the Throne?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Oh, yes.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): All right. I shall not mention the bill again, but it is proposed, or suggested, in the Speech from the Throne that there be set up in Canada an economic council. I would like to ask the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford), how many economic councils we need in this country. Canada is literally crawling with economic councils. There is an economic council in Manitoba, one in Ontario, one, or something like one, in Nova Scotia, one, or the equivalent of one, in Quebec, and now it is proposed to have another for Canada as a whole.

I know that the previous government had set up a proposal of this kind. In fact, I believe it came to this house. However, my point is, how many of these bodies are we going to have in Canada? Honourable senators, during the height of World War II when Canada had her forces on every water and every continent in the world, when we were mobilizing our industry as we never mobilized it before, this country had 16 cabinet ministers. Today we have 26, with a provision for or a promise of two more. We now have 26 cabinet ministers, 26 executive assistants, 16 parliamentary secretaries—and all this in time of peace. I ask this honourable Senate, does this not signify that we are allowing the welfare state to pass beyond control of the Parliament of Canada? And does it not indicate a complete trend towards what I have called the managerial state? We have economic councils all about us, boards, committees, commissions, all the apparatus of the managerial state.

The honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford) has objected to my dealing with Bill C-72, and I bow to the ruling to refrain from doing so; but I venture to say that when the bill does come before us it will astonish members of this chamber who have any knowledge of what government is about. I have read it, only to wonder at the ingenuity of people who could devise something so useless. In fact, when the bill comes before this house, and you have an opportunity to read it, I venture to say you will conclude what I have already concluded, that not since James Joyce wrote Finnegans Wake has so much gibberish anywhere been committed to print.

Honourable senators, allow me to go to another point. Here is a Government which tonight will bring down a budget with a deficit which, according to the inspired voices, will range between $600 million and $700 million. Here is a Government faced by a request from one province for 25 per cent of the corporation tax, 25 per cent of the income tax, and the entire succession duties. Yet that Government comes to us now, through the Speech from the Throne, with a proposal to spend $400 million for the muncipalities, $100 million for the Atlantic Development Board, and heaven knows how much for other proposals scattered through this document. Let us take the $400 million for the municipal boards. Where is this money to come from?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): That will be a loan.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): It does not matter if it is a loan or not, Sir; it will have to come from the taxpayer eventually. If the loan is made, the money will have to come either from the people of Canada or the United States market; and that loan will be made at roughly 4 per cent and will add $16 million of debt service charges to the national debt. The cost of servicing that debt now is reaching perilously near $1 billion.

I sat in the Parliamentary Press Gallery when the national debt of Canada was $350 million. Now we spend that much in a month. That loan is to go to the municipalities. I have heard it suggested it would be done through the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Well, that corporation has no money of its own. It already owes the Government $1,600 million. This money will be borrowed in the open market, and it is going to be added to the national debt. We all know what the national debt is at the present time. But more than that, this $400 million is going to be spent by the municipalities, which are already spending more than they can afford. This money may well be spent unwisely, because it will not be raised by the taxes of the municipality itself. Honourable senators, do you realize what the net direct debt of the municipalities of Canada is today? It stands at $4,700 million.

The municipalities have spent beyond their means; the provinces have spent beyond their means; and heaven knows we have spent beyond our means. We are all engaged in a sort of rake's progress. What I cannot understand is why the business leaders of Canada are saying nothing about it.

Only the other night I was reading the Life and Times of John W. Dafoe and one of the things that struck me in that biography was the number of leading businessmen, captains of industry—like Sir Joseph Flavelle—who took an active interest in the political life of the country. Where are the captains of industry now? Where are the people who in the last election cried out so vigorously for, yes, and supported so generously, the party of my honourable friend? Is this what they expected from the party that was going to give them stable government? Did they expect that, despite a budget deficit of some $700 million, they were going to come forward with all these fresh expenditures? Did they believe Mr. Walter Gordon when he suggested in his book Troubled Canada that deficit budgeting was irresponsible, immoral and ruinous?

Honourable senators, this is the trend in the legislation of Canada today which should compel more thought and attention by people. I am not talking in a partisan spirit at all; I am not speaking of extravagances in a partisan sense. Whether you believe in Tory reaction, which heaven forbid, or whether you are bemused by the almost sanctified mythologies of the Liberal party, you must surely realize that this country has been carried along a path of ruinous expenditure. There can be no question about this at all.

Then there is the proposal of the Atlantic Development Act. Last year there was set up an advisory board or commission to advise the Government on expenditures that should be made in the Atlantic provinces. Heaven forbid that I should say the Atlantic provinces are not worthy of special attention—I think they are. I think they have been too long the poor farm of Canada, and do require some special attention. But this Government is proposing to change this act. This board is no longer an advisory board; it is now an executive board, enlarged from five to eleven members, and given $100 million; and though there is some talk about cabinet control of its expenditures, I venture to say that these people have not been made executives merely to hire stenographers and lease office space. They are going to spend this $100 million and, honourable senators, they are going to spend it as they please, when they please, how they please and for whom they please without the Parliament of Canada having a voice in the matter at all. And this is where we are going in the way of building up more and more monolithic bureaucracy—economic councils, boards and committees here, there and everywhere. What in the name of heaven is the Civil Service of Canada going to do?

We have just had the report of the Glassco Commission pay a tribute to the efficiency and competence of the Civil Service of Canada, and here is legislation providing for advice from literally hundreds of people outside the civil service. Who is going to be responsible for government in this country?

And now I come to what is perhaps the most sinister proposal of all. It is the setting up of what is called a Canada Development Corporation, by means of which Canadians can more readily direct their savings to the building of new Canadian industries and to increasing the Canadian ownership of existing industries. But, honourable senators, Mr. Walter Gordon, in discussing this matter with the Toronto Star, on April 3, said the C.D.C. could not do the job without several billion dollars at its disposal. Several billion dollars!

Where is that money to come from? I know that in our banks there are now savings accounts totalling $8,275 million. But, honourable senators, if you examine these accounts you will find that in very great measure they consist of deposits of $1,000, $2,000, $5,000, $10,000—money put there to be used in case of sickness or death, or for all of the other changes and chances of life. Do you think the people of Canada are going to withdraw that money and invest in this development corporation? It is not stated clearly, but it is intimated that this corporation will issue bonds and common stocks. The bonds are to be guaranteed by the development corporation, in other words by the Government, and the common stock is to take chances as other stocks do.

Honourable senators, let me put this to you: If there is an industry in this country whose bonds are held by the Government and guaranteed by it, what about the industry in competition with that particular industry whose bonds are not guaranteed by the Government?

Mr. Gordon said it would be an excellent thing if we could keep the Government out of it. Keep the Government out of business with its guarantee of bonds of certain industries! Let me put this to you: Mr. Gordon in this interview, and in his book Troubled Canada said that if an industry in Canada got into difficulty and it was being taken over by foreign interests—which, of course, meant United States interests—this development corporation would step in and buy control of its stock.

Well, honourable senators, everybody knows that when an enterprise in Canada is going to be sold to outside interests its stock goes up and immediately there are inflated prices for it. That happened when the Shell Oil Company took over the Canadian Oil Companies not long ago. Is it being suggested then that in a case such as this the Government, through this development board, would step in and buy the stock of a company at inflated prices and guarantee its bonds?

What would happen if later on the company failed? The bonds would be guaranteed. But what about the stock? In any event, does this not put the Government of Canada lock, stock and barrel into business? There is no getting away from that. Yet, this is the trend of everything in the Speech from the Throne—bringing the Government more and more into business, more and more into the control of industry. There is no doubt about this. This is what you will find in the minds of those young men, those brain-trusters who are sitting around writing policies, writing things like this—and I do not blame the Government leader for not wanting it read.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I don't mind having it read if it is in order, and I don't think my honourable friend would want to read it if it is not in order.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): I would want to read it very much because it forms a great part of my speech. I do not mind imprecision or looseness in ordinary documents or in newspapers, but to have this sort of thing, this mere jargon in an act of Parliament is, I think, a deplorable thing. I feel sure that in their heart of hearts all honourable senators on the Government benches agree with me.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): No, no. I must object to that.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): Where are the great leaders of the old Liberal party?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Right here.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): Where are the Laurier Liberals and the Gladstonian Liberals? Do they subscribe to the policy of the Government taking over everything in the state? Of course they do not.

I am looking at my friend Senator Power; I am looking at my friend Senator Crerar. Are they telling me, or would they like to tell anyone, that they think this Government should go on spending and spending money which the country does not possess? I am not blaming this Government alone. I know how much the national debt of Canada increased in the last five years; I know how much the Liberal party increased it in the last three years they were in office. They all spend too much, whether it is the Conservative Government in Ontario or Manitoba, or the Liberal Government in Quebec or New Brunswick. We are all spending too much, and this country is on the way to bankruptcy unless a halt is called somewhere. I do not think any sane person in this country questions that.

But the worst feature is that all this spending, all this interference by the state in public business and public activities in Canada, is building up in this country a monolithic bureaucracy, with our boards, our committees, our commissions and our sprawling empire of Crown corporations. We are by-passing Parliament; we are not only taking the government of this country out of the hands of the people: we are taking it out of the hands of the people's representatives in Parliament, whether elected or appointed. There is no question about this.

Honourable senators, in the last analysis, what is involved is liberty. You cannot build up a managerial state without infringing on the rights of the individual. This has been tried again and again, and we all know the sad story. Thomas Jefferson once warned the American people that freedom could be frittered away. We are not merely frittering it away; we are throwing it away with thoughtless abandon, and the end is inevitable. If we in this country, whether under a Liberal, or Conservative, or whatever form of government, continue spending beyond the resources of the country, if we continue invading private rights, and if we continue putting government into business, then the end of the road is inevitable. We shall invite and deserve the tragedy that has come to so many areas of the earth where, because of lethargy, indifference, cynicism and the betrayal of democracy, you see today lands where despair is having the last word, and tyranny crushes down the bodies and souls of men.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Stambaugh, for Hon. Mr. Pouliot, debate adjourned.

PRIVATE BILL

CONFEDERATION LIFE ASSOCIATION—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

REFUND OF FEE

THE RELIABLE LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson, with leave of the Senate, moved:

That the Parliamentary fee paid upon a proposed bill to incorporate The Reliable Life Insurance Company be refunded to the petitioners.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: On what grounds?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, in explanation of this motion may I say that it concerns a petition presented to the last Parliament for a private bill to incorporate a company to be called The Reliable Life Insurance Company. The proposed incorporators of this company, for certain reasons, have decided to withdraw their petition.

I am informed that various problems were encountered regarding the proposed federal incorporation of this company. It had been intended that the company take over a company by the name of The Reliable Life Insurance Society, which is a fraternal society in the province of Ontario. However, as I say, the incorporators of the proposed company decided to abandon their petition to this Parliament, and I believe they intend to seek incorporation under the Joint Stock Insurance Companies Act of the province of Ontario. That is the reason for the request for the return of the fee.

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: Was a bill passed by the Senate at the last session?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: No, a bill was not even introduced at the last session.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I ask if there were any printing costs incurred?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I do not know if there were any printing costs incurred.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: We ought to know that.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I do not believe there were but, of course, if there were that amount should be deducted before any return of fees is made.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Honourable senators, there cannot be any urgency about this matter. It would appear that the petitioners are entitled to a refund, but there may be some outstanding accounts which should be deducted. Perhaps some inquiries can be made, and the house can be informed and we can deal with the matter tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Could this matter not be referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills?

Hon. Mr. Croll: There is nothing to refer to the committee, because there is no bill. If Senator Thorvaldson will undertake to find out whether there are any outstanding accounts to be paid, and so inform us tomorrow, we can deal with his motion then.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, I have been informed that it is the practice in cases like this to refund the fee that has been paid. I am not aware of whether there were any printing costs. I shall find out. Perhaps the matter can be dealt with tomorrow, if it is the desire of honourable senators that it should stand for consideration.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Did I understand my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson) to say that the incorporation fee has been paid?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: The incorporation fee was paid.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I do not know that there is any policy with respect to refunding money. In the Standing Committee on Divorce we recommend refund of the Parliamentary fee when a petition is withdrawn. We are always glad to hand the petitioners back their money and get rid of their petitions. However, we do make a distinction. If the case has been on our boards for some length of time we do not refund the entire amount, and the longer it has been with us the less we refund. So I do not know that there is any firm practice about this.

No doubt it is the proper thing to do if the petitioners wish to be incorporated elsewhere but I think this matter should be left open until tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: I may say that in a good many cases the money has been refunded, especially those involving religious organizations. I understand that this petition is in that class.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: No, this is a commercial corporation, relating to the business of life insurance.

The Hon. the Speaker: Consideration next sitting.

HON. T. A. CRERAR, P.C.

BIRTHDAY FELICITATIONS

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, yesterday was the birthday of one of our most esteemed colleagues, honourable Senator Tom Crerar, whom we all like and for whom we have a great deal of admiration.

I have known him for quite a number of years, and he appears just the same as when I met him first. He has remained alert in mind and body. His mind is as clear as crystal and when he speaks he gives us the benefit of his very wide experience and wisdom. This is so true that, whenever he speaks, words of wisdom flow from his lips.

I offer to Senator Crerar my very best wishes for the years to come, and to his charming wife, the gracious Mrs. Crerar, and to his family. I hope that he will be spared for a great number of years to enliven the Senate and to give us the benefit of his experience and his wisdom.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, may I add a few words of tribute to those which the honourable Senator Pouliot has just paid to a very great Canadian, honourable Senator Crerar. I read of his eighty-seventh birthday yesterday, Senator Crerar having been born in 1876, a long, long time ago. I congratulate him on this happy occasion and trust that he will have many more years of health and happiness.

Senator Crerar has made for himself one of the most outstanding reputations of any public man in the history of Canada. He was a cabinet minister in 1917—that in itself is a good many years ago. Quite recently the honourable Senator Connolly of Ottawa West spoke about the splendid work Senator Crerar had done as chairman of the Senate Standing Committee on Finance.

The Hansard of the House of Commons and the Hansard of the Senate are replete with many of the great things done by our very distinguished senator.

I am happy, indeed, to join with the honourable Senator Pouliot in paying tribute to Senator Tom Crerar, and in wishing him and Mrs. Crerar many more years of happiness.

(Translation):

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt: Honourable senators, I believe that a French-speaking voice should also pay tribute to Senator Crerar.

The senators who rose before me lived with Senator Crerar much longer than I did because I have been here for only 19 years; however, in those years, I learned that experience was quite an important asset in the life of a man.

For instance, I remember that in the proceedings of various committees, after everyone else had voiced his opinion, Senator Crerar drew from his wealth of experience, his sound judgment, and his great common sense, and usually offered a solution to which we could not but agree; experience is a quality acquired through the years. Senator Crerar acquired that quality and he developed it. Sometimes when a person has reached a certain age, it is said that he goes through a second childhood; but as far as Senator Crerar is concerned it is entirely different; he has always shown that his wide experience and his very sound judgment are always present.

Senator Crerar, please accept not only my congratulations but my most sincere wishes; I hope that you will remain with us for many, many years in order that we may benefit from your experience and learn how to gain such a valuable asset.

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, I would indeed be ungrateful if I did not acknowledge the very kind tributes that have been paid to me this evening by Senator Pouliot, my old friend Senator Brooks and my good friend Senator Vaillancourt.

It is true that I have journeyed down through life for a great many years. Just how many years will be left for me, I do not know. However, may they be many or few, I shall endeavour to do as I have done in the past—speak my mind rather freely at times. As a matter of fact, honourable senators, that is something I learned many years ago from my old friend Grattan O'Leary; he set me on the right path, so far as being frank and straightforward in public life was concerned.

Naturally, it is very pleasing to an old man, who has yet considerable vanity in his makeup, to have such eulogies paid to him.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Justifiably paid.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I hope to be around for a while yet, and according to my lights put in a word for the good and welfare of this country.

Once again, honourable senators, thank you very much for your kindness in paying these tributes to me.

PRIVATE BILLS

THE GREAT-WEST LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY —THIRD READING

Hon. Malcolm Hollett, for Hon. Mr. Haig, moved the third reading of Bill S-10, respecting the Great-West Life Assurance Company.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

GENERAL MORTGAGE SERVICE CORPORATION OF CANADA—SECOND READING

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson moved the second reading of Bill S-20, respecting General Mortgage Service Corporation of Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill is now presented for second reading in this house for the second time. The bill was first presented here on January 30, 1963, and the explanation of it on second reading appears in the Debates of the Senate for the session 1962-63, at page 546. Consequently, I shall probably be briefer than I would otherwise be in my review of the purposes of the bill.

This bill proposes an amendment to an act incorporating General Mortgage Service Corporation of Canada, which is chapter 78 of the Statutes of Canada of 1961. The purpose of the bill, firstly, as indicated in clause 1, is to add a French version to the name of the corporation.

Clause 2 of the bill contains five subclauses, namely, 9A, 9B, 9C, 9D, 9E, which are clauses intended to amend the powers granted to the company in its act of incorporation.

The purpose of the corporation, as is indicated by the name General Mortgage Service Corporation of Canada, is that of an investment company for the purpose of investing in mortgage securities. It was granted certain powers in its act of incorporation to raise moneys on its own securities and then it was granted certain powers of investment in mortgages.

The proposed subsection 9A gives the corporation express powers of interim investment of funds received for the purpose of investment in mortgages. In other words, if the company has funds on hand which cannot be placed in mortgage securities immediately, or conveniently at the moment, this amendment proposes to give it the power to invest such funds in the bonds, debentures or other securities of, or guaranteed by, the Government of Canada or the government of any province of Canada, or in any loans fully secured by such bonds, debentures or other securities.

The new subsection 9B authorizes the corporation to issue bonds by way of pledge to chartered banks in Canada.

The purpose of the new subsection 9c is to give moneys received by a pledge of bonds the same legal status as moneys received by the sale of bonds. In other words, moneys that are received by the corporation by way of pledge may be used in the same manner as moneys secured by it from the sale of its securities.

Subsection 9D has for its purpose the giving to the holder of a bond by way of pledge the same legal status as the holder of a bond by way of purchase.

The final subsection, 9E, has for its purpose the authorizing of the directors to use moneys in what is known in the bill as Mortgage Fund A to redeem Series A Mortgage Bonds, which are issued by way of pledge, and to authorize the directors to use Mortgage Fund B to repay moneys borrowed on the security of Series B Mortgage Bonds issued by way of pledge.

Honourable senators may recall in regard to this bill that the corporation was authorized to set up two funds: one of them was named Mortgage Fund A, and the other Mortgage Fund B.

Hon. Mr. Vien: Will the honourable senator tell us why in section 9c it would be necessary to state that if the corporation borrowed money from a bank and gave bonds as collateral security it would be as if the bonds had been sold? That is a most unusual provision, and I would like to understand the reason why it is considered necessary.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I agree with the honourable senator that this is a somewhat unusual provision, and for that reason I would suggest that the explanation of it could better be given when the bill is before the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Mr. Baird: Do I understand that this bill was passed at the last session?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes, this bill in fact was given second reading by the Senate on January 30 last. Some of the questions being asked now were raised at that time. I explained then as I do now, that the original act of incorporation was indeed somewhat unusual and some of the powers being asked in this amending act are somewhat unusual; consequently, I stated that it was more appropriate to give the explanations in committee, and indeed I think it is the proper place to give them.

Hon. Mr. Vien: Would you speak a little louder, please? We do not hear you.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I have said that there are unusual provisions both in the act of incorporation and the amending bill.

Honourable senators who were members of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce in 1960 and 1961, when the act of incorporation came before that committee, will recall that the measure was thoroughly discussed and debated in committee because of its somewhat unusual character. Nevertheless, the incorporation was granted both by this house and the other place, and the bill became law.

Hon. Mr. Vien: Does this explain why, if the bonds are pledged, it should be necessary to say that the moneys received shall be deemed to have been moneys received from the sale of the bonds? Why should that be necessary? If the bonds are pledged, they are pledged to the bank which advances the money. That is the usual course of business. Why should it be necessary in this instance to say that the moneys will be deemed to be moneys received from the sale of the bonds.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Frankly, I agree with the honourable senator that it is a little difficult to understand. I understand the language used in the bill, but I am afraid I cannot give to the honourable senator the reason now.

Hon. Mr. Vien: You cannot?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I cannot give you the reason, and that is why I suggest that a full explanation of the subsection will be given to the Banking and Commerce Committee when the bill is before that committee.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, this bill is similar to many others that we have passed recently in which we have given to corporations power to use two names, one English and one French.

I raised this point in the Banking and Commerce Committee when this bill, or one of similar character, came before us, permitting a company to use either French or English in the transaction of its business, and also allowing the company to sue in either name, the French or the English. It therefore permitted the company to transact its business, say, in French so that the community would know it by its French name, and then to sue in the English name, thus inviting, I suggest, confusion and uncertainty. In the Banking and Commerce Committee recently I suggested that, while it is all right to be sued in either name—there is no possibility of confusion there—when the company sues, it should use both names. It is not sufficient to say it must use the name in which it does business in that section of the community, because actions in court may affect more than just the parties to the action.

Everybody should understand who is suing and who is being sued, and so recently I moved in another matter that while a company may be sued in either name it should sue in both names. I can see no inconvenience whatever in putting both names on the writ or statement of claim. But I was met with the argument that we have given this right to others and, therefore, we should continue to give it; that is, having once made a mistake, we should continue to make it now and forever.

I would suggest that when this bill comes before the Banking and Commerce Committee the sponsors agree to a change of the nature I have indicated. If it is not so amended when it is reported to this chamber by the Banking and Commerce Committee, I will then move that we amend it here to require suit in both names before we give it third reading.

Hon. Paul H. Bouffard: Honourable senators, I do not want to interfere unduly in this matter. I think the clauses are quite helpful, but I do not think they are all absolutely necessary. I want to make this remark, that if the honourable sponsor of the bill wants to have a translation in French, at least it should be a good one. The translation that exists at the present time—Compagnie Générale Mortgage Service du Canada—is not good French at all. There is no such word as "mortgage" in French. "Hypothèque" is a good word, but "Mortgage Service" is not an expression in the French language.

I would not oppose the bill on account of that, but I would invite my friend to engage someone who would give the company a proper French name, if he wants to have the two names. It seems to me that we should not try to translate literally the English name into French, unless it is really a French name and can be understood in French. I am not going to object to the bill on that account, but I think this is an invitation that should be extended to members who promote bills to give two names to a company, that if the name is a French translation it should at least be proper French that can be understood by everyone; there should not be introduced in the French name a word which is not proper French and which cannot be considered as French.

Some suggestions of a proper name in French for this company would be, "La Compagnie générale de prêts hypothécaires du Canada" or, "La Compagnie générale de service hypothécaire du Canada." Either would be a correct French name, but the one proposed in the bill is not. I would invite the promoter to come to the committee with another translation, so that the name of the company will be a true French name.

Hon. L. M. Gouin: Honourable senators, last year when this measure came before the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce I raised the precise point which has been raised with good reason by Senator Bouffard concerning the expression "Mortgage Service". No one with any notion of French would believe that this is a French expression. I consider it an insult to the French language, to its Majesty the French language—sa majesté la langue française—that they would pretend to adopt a translation and to use language which would not be understood by any French-speaking person.

As to the point raised by Senator Roebuck, I am sorry to say that my opinion differs from his, but now is not the time to go into that question. The bill will come before the committee, and then we may decide to continue to give what I would call the option to use both the English and French names or either one of them, because I am convinced that is the right thing to do. The honourable senator and I may differ in opinion but still be the best friends in the world.

Hon. Louis P. Gelinas: Honourable senators, I would like to inform the sponsor of the bill (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson) that another translation has been made, and I am sorry if he has not been apprised of this fact.

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, if I may speak to this matter again, I want to say that the objection which was taken by Senator Gouin is quite valid. The same objection was taken last year. It only came to my attention this morning that this bill was coming up for second reading today, and indeed I thought the translation had been changed. May I read to the house the explanation I made in this regard on January 30 last, when the matter of the French version of the name was brought up? I said:

> The only explanation I can make is that the version of the name given in the bill is in "Toronto French", and, indeed, I am already under instructions by the sponsors of the bill that they have discussed this matter with the Committees Branch and have decided that it will be necessary to move an amendment in committee to change the French version of the name from what I call "Toronto French" to "Quebec French".

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: I am not a lawyer, and I have only one remark to make. We have already stated that the translation is terrible—horrible! Sometimes people speak slang in French, and we say they are speaking joual, a horse language. This is language that is worse than horse language; it is not French at all.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Honourable senators, I got into this kind of discussion when I presented the bill for the Sun Life Assurance Company, and I think that at that time it was made clear that we cannot impose on a company a translation of its trade name. I remember that the Sun Life Company asked the translators here to give them the French name. I think they had nine words as against the English version with three. People kept on saying, "Je suis assuré avec la Sun Life," and the translators had translated "Sun Life" as, "l'assurance vie dite du soleil." The company never made use of it.

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: Would you permit a suggestion, that The Sun have two names, "Le Soleil" and "The Sun" at the beginning?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: We cannot impose a translation on a company. Let us say that a company wants to call itself the North-East Insurance Company. There is an old French expression in France, in Europe generally, and among some French Canadians, "nordais". It is old French. If these people come to us and say, "la compagnie d'assurance nordais," are we going to say that is patois, old French from Europe? This is quibbling. We cannot quibble with them. Let them ask for a French name, and if they think it is going to be popular and people are going to buy their products, we cannot say to our translators, who are experts in translations, that this is not good. If the company wants to sue or is sued in either name, again, we cannot quibble with that.

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: In the explanatory notes it says:

> The purpose of clause 1 of the bill is to add a French version to the name of the corporation.

The company asks the translator to translate.

Hon. Mr. Gouin: May I ask the honourable Senator Choquette a question? Does he believe that "Mortgage Service" is good French?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: It is not French. They do not ask you to pronounce "Mortgage" with a French accent. It is just as it is with the Sun Life. In this instance it is "Mortgage Service". French people will say, "Je suis assuré ou je fais affaires avec la Mortgage Service compagnie d'assurance vie", and that is all.

Hon. Mr. Power: Would my honourable friend look at the explanatory note. It says:

> The purpose of clause 1 of the bill is to add a French version to the name of the corporation.

And they add it. If I were not in this house, in this honourable body, I would characterize it somewhat differently, but it has no bearing in either French or English. We can change the name, amend any clause of the bill, or reject the bill altogether. We do not have to accept the name or any other clause of the bill propounded to us by the promoters. We have a perfect right to call it any name we like. In a bilingual country we should not have such a name such as this one, which is neither French nor English.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

INTERNAL ECONOMY

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the first, second and third reports of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts.

FIRST REPORT ADOPTED

Hon. John J. Connolly moved that the first report of the committee be adopted.

He said: This first report appears at page 102 of the Minutes of the Proceedings No. 14. Perhaps honourable senators would wish me to add that it deals with the retirement of Mr. Clive Watson, Senate Postmaster, and recommends the payment of the customary gratuity. Mr. Watson was first employed as a page in 1910. He was later a sessional messenger and became a permanent member of the staff of the Senate in 1940. He resigned as of May 1, 1963.

Report adopted.

SECOND REPORT ADOPTED

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) moved that the second report of the committee be adopted.

He said: This second report deals with the retirement of Mr. J. A. Laliberte, who has been on the Senate messenger staff for many years. He joined the staff in 1919 and his total pensionable service amounts to something over twenty-five years. I understand he has been in charge of the Senate gallery in the House of Commons. The usual gratuity in accordance with the practice in such cases has been provided.

Report adopted.

THIRD REPORT ADOPTED

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) moved that the third report of the committee be adopted.

He said: Honourable senators, this report deals with the retirement of Mrs. Marguerite Brunet, who has been on the sessional stenographic staff for nearly seven years. She has retired on account of ill health, and the gratuity is based upon her length of service.

Hon. Mr. Reid: May I ask the honourable senator if the staff of the Senate is under the Civil Service Superannuation Act or is it separate and apart like the House of Commons?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): As I understand the situation, the members of the Senate staff are under the superannuation act, and we provide a gratuity in this way when people retire. They have superannuation benefits. We provide for a period of time a certain retiring gratuity, based upon length of service and equivalent to the difference between the superannuation they receive and the salary they received before retirement.

Report adopted.

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, June 5, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Croll for the second reading of Bill S-6, to make provision for the disclosure of information in respect of finance charges.

(Translation):

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt: Honourable senators, in connection with Bill S-6, I shall take this opportunity of explaining the evolution we have experienced in the last few years with regard to credit and consumers' needs.

The remarks I propose to make result from a survey we asked the social research centre of Laval University to make with regard to the economic position of Franch-Canadian wage earners' families. This survey carried out some of the recommendations of the international convention of credit associations which took place in Lévis in 1957, under the slogan: Think before you spend. There are some people who only think afterwards, but then it is too late.

The changes with regard to consumers' needs can be, for the greater part, attributed to the advent of industrialization which made us into a society of city dwellers, while increasing the income of our citizens, which rose from $5 billion in 1940 to $30 billion in 1962. Only a third of the Canadian people, which number 18½ million, live in the country today.

Meanwhile, consumers' standards for city and country dwellers have become practically the same. Means of transportation, facilities for communication and electrification of the farm have given to rural or farm families a possibility of acquiring the same goods and services as city families.

The great modern means of public information, i.e. radio, television, press and film have widely affected the tastes and way of life of the consumer public.

The personal income of Canadian citizens, considering the increase in the cost of living and the increase in population has at least tripled since the beginning of the war. Canadians can today with their available income procure for themselves three times as much goods and services as before the last world war.

The development of mass production and distribution of consumer goods, a better sharing of considerably increased incomes, the shortening of distances between urban and rural areas and the development of mass information have given some uniformity to the taste and habits of consumers.

All these factors have increased consumers' needs and have considerably modified the structure of the expense column on the family budget ledger.

The proportion of foodstuff expenditures in the budget has been reduced with the increased incomes. The proportion spent on appliances and cars has considerably increased. The desire and financial capacity of an increasing number of families to own their own homes have rendered inevitable the development of family housing around the large urban areas where all available land is occupied. The development of such urban areas mostly comprised of owner-occupied family units has increased the need of a car to go to work at the office or at the plant and the need for domestic appliances and equipment in the homes.

The possibility of purchasing single family houses at more reasonable prices due to increased incomes has, furthermore, drawn many families outside the boundaries of the large cities. And many of those families have become owners of automobiles. The development of private home ownership around our industrial cities has brought about the extension of private ownership of automobiles and other durable goods such as household appliances. Nowadays, many families consider it economical to acquire those durable goods which provide right in the home services for which they formerly had to pay outsiders.

I set out this argument in order to prove the definite evolution of credit. Too many people live stingily and say that in their days they did not need this or that. But in the old days, we used to ride in a cart and there was little risk of getting run over or banged up as happens nowadays with automobiles. But today, if you want to ride a cart on the highways, it is so much more dangerous.

So that is why I want to outline the economic situation in our country.

Instead of having their clothes cleaned at the laundry and having to pay for such a service, people would rather buy on the instalment plan an automatic washing machine which provides that service at home. The instalment they have to pay every month for a certain period of time for the machine which provides the service at home replaces the disbursements they had to make every time they had to pay for such a service outside. By the same token, the instalments on a TV set replaces in part the expenses incurred to go to a movie.

In several cases, the acquisition of capital goods is an asset, because nowadays the family finds in his own home the service which formerly it sought outside.

The distribution of this mass production of goods, especially capital goods, increasingly in demand as a result of the increased income and the development of private housing in the suburbs of industrial centres and the progressive decentralization which emphasizes the distances between the home and the factory or office and leads to a growing number of cars, have been made easier by a system of establishments and improved loan techniques.

An essential factor of the production and distribution of goods and services, consumer credit plays an increasingly important part in our modern economy. It has been a thousand times more effective in enriching mankind, according to Daniel Webster, than all the gold mines throughout the world.

Consumer debts in Canada since the end of the war have increased from $297 million to more than $3,664 million as at March 31, 1963.

In 1945, they absorbed 3.5 per cent of the personal income of Canadians, after taxes, while they absorb at present 13.5 per cent of their personal income. Those are only the debts resulting from consumer credit. Consumers' debts exceed $3,600 million in Canada.

This economic phenomenon is probably not peculiar to Canada. As a matter of fact, it developed in much the same way in the United States where consumer debts have increased from $5,665 million in 1945 to $39,500 million in 1956 and to $57 billion, including $45 billion for sales on the instalment plan, $40 billion for cars, at December 31, 1962. Such an increase in consumer debts is likely to give cause for concern to all those who wish to maintain a healthy economy and to promote the welfare of the people.

The economic and social function of consumer credit, which more and more takes the form of instalment buying in our modern economy, raises one of the most serious problems. The main purposes of our economic policy are to promote economic development to the greatest possible extent, a high level of employment, price stability, an adequate distribution of resources and of national income in order to improve the standard of living for everyone, while keeping in mind, of course, the less obvious aims of political and economic freedom and social peace.

With regard to such aims, some may wonder whether the rapid development of consumer credit is an essential and desirable factor to their achievement. Or whether, left to the free play of economic and social forces, without direction or control, consumer credit might, in addition, interfere with the achievement of some of those aims and lead us sooner than later to economic upheavals and social ills.

Politicians and economists are concerned about such questions for, undoubtedly, they all want for Canada "a high level of economy and employment within a structure of firm prices". The brisk expansion of consumer credit these last years may set up conditions that could affect the economic welfare of the nation.

According to our modern language, the words "consumer credit" apply as well to property which can be distinguished by the following criteria: (1) non-durable goods, that is the goods that meet the consumer's needs and disappear, such as food, and (2), durable goods, which outlive the credit used for their purpose.

Capital goods can be divided in two categories: (a) those which depreciate rather quickly and which consist mostly of wearing apparel; and (b) household goods like electrical appliances, goods which are produced either mechanically or electrically, and those which are produced by the automobile industry and which still have a certain market value after fairly long use.

It is precisely in the field of household goods, like electrical appliances, and motor vehicles which have a certain market value after prolonged use, that instalment purchasing has mushroomed in the past few years.

Formerly, the words "consumer credit" were applied especially to non-durable goods such as those which disappear after the first usage. Today, these words mainly apply to capital goods, household and electrical appliances, radio and television sets and automobiles, which last fairly long and which have a certain value after quite long usage. Therefore the expression "consumer credit" has become rather improper since today it applies mostly to the credit facilities for the purchase of non-consumable capital goods.

When the Fédération de Québec des Caisses populaires Desjardins testified before the Banking and Commerce Committee of the House of Commons during the inquiry on the bill to amend the Small Loans Act which was passed in August 1956, it expressed its views on consumer credit and on the nefarious consequences that could result for private individuals and the national economy, if it were used abusively. It urged the qualified authorities to establish certain controls in order to avoid the excess in consumer credit and to protect our economy. The problem raised by consumer credit, it was pointed out in the brief, is to ensure that the use of such credit by the citizens is to their advantage and that a reasonable price is paid for this use.

The advantages of consumer credit should not shield its disadvantages and the cost to the consumers. How many people live in financial insecurity as a result of their misuse of consumer credit?

Too many people have forgotten how to limit their needs or to resist the everlasting solicitations from many advertising media that lead them to take the superfluous for the necessary and they end up by seeing nothing unusual about living above their means.

Under the urging of commercial advertising, citizens gradually become slaves to innumerable needs and look for all kinds of ways, most of them expensive, to buy more and more, giving little thought to what will happen tomorrow. A wife will sometimes have to leave her home and go to work to supplement her husband's salary because they cannot make ends meet. The happiness, the peace of the home is threatened. Large credit facilities can lead to unfortunate abuses and create misunderstanding in the home. Besides, that is the experience we had at the family service on the south shore, at Lévis, where we compiled statistics for five years—and I can say, in passing, that this family service is a kind of heart clinic where people come and tell us their troubles and their difficulties; the husband complains about his wife, and vice versa, and the parents complain about their children who roam wildly out of their control. We collected data, a few years ago, which showed that in 52.5 per cent of cases economic problems were at the root of trouble in homes. These people bought too much on the instalment plan, then payments become too high and they had no money left on which to live; they thought they could buy happiness, but happiness cannot be bought, it is found in the heart.

I know people who have lived in debt for 18 years, when they borrowed a thousand dollars; 18 years later, having made some payments from time to time, having been unemployed, they owe today over two thousand dollars, because of those purchases on the instalment plan on which they paid interest rates of 24, 48 and even 90 per cent—and I know personally of such cases.

Purchases on the instalment plan mortgage the future, tomorrow's salary being already committed to payments on unpaid purchases.

As everyone's purchasing power is limited, a more or less sudden reduction in purchases may well take place some day, then a marked reduction in production, followed by unemployment and a complete collapse of the country's purchasing power, which would be tragic for our economy.

If, on the one hand, instalment plans can stir up production and allow a higher standard of living for our citizens, it can, on the other hand, bring about unfortunate situations, when abuses take place. Too many people forget that down-payments made to reduce their debts due to purchases through instalment plans are really a withdrawal and a reduction from the total amount of their income available for other expenses and that the available income representing their salary might, after such a reduction, be inadequate to meet the essential expenses for food, clothing and housing.

Moreover, the loans for consumer needs are made at high rates of interest, and the people who resort to them are generally those who are in the least favourable position to do so, and very often, these people are not aware of the actual interest they will have to pay. For example, someone needs $300 to buy goods: he borrows at an interest rate of 2 per cent per month, that is 24 per cent per year, for 24 months. The borrower must repay $15.87 a month and, after 24 months, he has paid $380.88, $80.88 being interest. If the same person chose the savings methods, by depositing at his credit union branch $3 a week, that is $13 a month, he would have $333.58 after 24 months, enjoying on his deposit an interest of 3 per cent capitalized every six months.

Let us suppose that this same individual wants to buy the same merchandise valued at $300; if he has the money to pay cash, perhaps he will have the opportunity to obtain a 10 per cent discount; he would take advantage of a $30 reduction which, added to $17.40 that he will have drawn in interest, would enable him to save $47.40 and to buy something else, which he would be unable to do by borrowing $300. Hence the habit of saving results in an increase and not in a decrease of purchasing power.

Please note that I merely choose an interest rate of 2 per cent per month. However, when other charges are added to that 2 per cent, the cost doubles.

If salesmen were compelled by the law to require a substantial amount, that is, 25 per cent of the selling price, as down payment at the time of the sale, purchasers would thus be encouraged to show foresight and to save money; they would have to put aside every week a few dollars from their salary to get what they need. That way they would get used to saving, they would practice economy, they would learn the value of money, they would endeavour to think before spending, they would buy necessary or useful things first, and they would avoid committing themselves beyond their capacity to pay; and, living within their means, they would be free from concern which brings unhappiness to those who are unable to resist the urging pressures of publicity and their insatiable desires.

Several countries have passed in recent years legislation regulating instalment sales and their financing.

One of the provisions of such legislation requires a substantial down payment to be paid in cash by the buyer at the time of purchase.

Another provision to be noted and which is found in most legislation is the obligation to show on the contract the maximum amount of charges, that is, everything that will have to be paid besides the down payment, so that the consumer may know what it actually costs him.

People do not know what interest or other charges they have to pay on their credit or instalment purchases and, often, even on the amount they borrow from small loan companies. As a matter of fact, surveys have already shown that most people do not care too much about that. They only inquire about the amount they will have to pay each month and how long this thing will last.

Canadian consumers, as a general rule, are not familiar with the cost of retail buying.

It is important that legislation be passed to force retailers to indicate clearly in their bills of sale all costs charged to the buyer, whether they be called interest, financing costs, carrying charges or otherwise, so that the buyer may know the total amount he will have to pay, that is, the price of the merchandise, plus the total amount of interest and other charges, and what the financing costs represent in annual interest.

Canadian consumers do not seem to realize how much interest and charges they are paying on their credit purchases; they are not aware that the people who buy regularly on credit in our large retail stores have their purchasing power reduced between 20 to 30 per cent as a result of the interest and additional charges they have to pay with their monthly payments under their budget plan or instalment plan.

I am going to sum up my thinking. We are told that this bill placed before us by Senator Croll is not operative because, on the one hand, the rates of interest are determined by the federal Government and, on the other hand, the charges are fixed by provincial statutes. But this is business. Really it is unfortunate if, in a country such as ours, we cannot pass legislation which would allow the low-wage earners to live decently.

What kind of a country are we living in, I wonder. There must be a way for the provinces and the federal Government to enact legislation which would solve the problem.

We are told that it is impossible to calculate the interest. If financiers who lend at 40 and 50 per cent interest are unable to calculate the cost of their loans, you can imagine how hard it is for the average man to understand anything in that respect. The worst part of it is that our laws protect the strong when they should assist the helpless and small citizens.

Nowadays people are attracted by just about anything. Are we to say that they are wrong? Yes, they are, but let us look at the situation from another point of view. Bridges are provided with guard-rails to prevent people from falling off. Drivers are usually reasonable, except when they are drunk, but still we have guard-rails to show people where they must go. Nevertheless, they are reasonable people.

It is usually small citizens who are faced with financial problems and they are unable to solve them.

I can give you an example from my district. An old man died in Lake St. John and left his farm to his son who was no brighter than I am. If he had been just as bright as I am, I would have said it was not so bad, but he was no brighter. A funeral director said to him: "Your father was most generous. He left you his farm on which there was just a small mortgage of $2,000. He has deserved well. You should give him a first-class funeral." In time of mourning, people cannot resist the temptation to arrange for the best funeral. It costs a thousand dollars to bury a man. Then, one has to borrow a thousand dollars from finance companies, universal loans or some such name. But he will have to refund that amount within two years' time. However, as he did not have very much experience, he was told: "We are going to protect you and take a second mortgage on your farm, in the amount of $1,000, but that will cost you $900 for two years, in charges and interest."

So $1,000 plus $900, that makes $1,900; it is easy to figure out the interest and we do not need machines to do it. Now, what happened? It so happened that, six months later, our good fellow being unable to pay was told: "We are going to take your land and sell it for $15,000 or $16,000." But the son protested and said: "Your loan was only $1,000." Finally, a credit union fortunately intervened and took over the land to try to save it for the grandchildren.

Will you tell me now that this makes sense, that things should be allowed to continue like that? It is nonsensical.

If you wish, and if you have time, I have here hundreds of cases of which I could mention a few to show you what is happening.

Therefore, I want to see that act passed to protect honest people, the small people, who are seduced by such misleading advertising.

Moreover, it is said that there is no way of calculating the interest although it seems easy enough to do to make money. However, when it comes to setting them at a reasonable level, it seems impossible.

That is why I should like to see this bill sent to the committee so that a profitable and final solution can be found. Because it is the people who support industry, as I said earlier and backed up with figures amounting to billions of dollars, who pay at the rate of 30, 40 and 50 per cent to finance companies. Then consider the figures of a few years ago, when the capital stood at $3,900,000 odd and has since increased to over $5 million paid out as interest to the shareholders every year. But that cannot be picked up just anywhere. Therefore, let us try to adopt reasonable legislation, to assist the small people, to save them—not legislation to oppress labour, or ruin our economy.

Besides, if you read what American economists have to say about it, you see that what they fear is exaggerated credit. Credit is fine when there is no abuse, but abuse must be prevented.

That is why I support this motion. If I could endorse this legislation twice or even three times as vigorously, I would do so in order to find the solution which we have been seeking for 63 years in the credit unions. But we have not lost heart, because we know that there is a great deal of educating to do. Five years ago, our credit unions granted $53 million in loans, not like this, not with a mortgage, but on promissory notes. Last year, we granted almost $100 million in loans, while telling the people: come and see what we are doing and then go and see what happens elsewhere, and you will note the difference between all those loans.

A moment ago, I spoke about a $300 loan granted by a finance company. The monthly instalment would be $15.87, so that after two years the interest paid amounts to $80.00. But if you borrowed $300 at a Caisse populaire, you would pay $13.30 per month, instead of $15.87 and your interest total would be $19.20 and not $80.88. This makes a big difference, and we really help borrowers.

The Caisses populaires do not only try to help people with small income, but also strive to help the economy of the country, by persuading Canadians that it pays to be thrifty, for thriftiness insures stability and is based upon common sense. People must be shown that to save properly is not to put money in a drawer, but that their savings should allow them to live as well today as in ten years from now. Then our people will realize what it is costing them now to live and what it will cost them tomorrow. I feel people will finally understand and realize the situation when they find what an awful lot of interest they will have to pay. Then they will stop and think before spending. That is a basic principle. Unfortunately, there are too many people who only think afterwards.

THE EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN SYNOD OF WESTERN CANADA—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Paul H. Bouffard, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills, presented the following report:

The Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills to whom was referred the Bill S-11, intituled: "An Act respecting The Evangelical Lutheran Synod of Western Canada", have in obedience to the order of reference of June 12, 1963, examined the said bill and now report the same without any amendment.

A similar bill in this matter was passed by the Senate during the last session of Parliament, but owing to the sudden dissolution of Parliament in February last, the proceedings on the bill were not completed.

Your committee recommend that the Parliamentary fees paid upon the bill of the last session apply to the bill of this session. It is noted that the promoters have again paid the printing costs.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: With leave of the Senate, I move that this report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for the third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

UKRAINIAN NATIONAL FEDERATION OF CANADA—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Mr. Bouffard, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-12, respecting Ukrainian National Federation of Canada, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

THE GOOD NEWS BROADCASTING ASSOCIATION OF CANADA—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Mr. Bouffard, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills, presented the following report:

The Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills to whom was referred the Bill S-15, intituled: "An Act to incorporate The Good News Broadcasting Association of Canada", have in obedience to the order of reference of June 12, 1963, examined the said bill and now report the same without any amendment.

A similar bill in this matter received second reading in the Senate at the last session of Parliament and was referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills for consideration, but owing to the sudden dissolution of Parliament in February last, the proceedings on the bill were not completed.

Your committee recommend that the Parliamentary fees paid upon the bill of the last session apply to the bill of this session. It is noted that the promoters have again paid the printing costs.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: With leave, I move that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Crerar, for Hon. Mr. Beaubien (Provencher), moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

BAPTIST CONVENTION OF ONTARIO AND QUEBEC—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Mr. Bouffard, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills, presented the following report:

> The Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills to whom was referred the Bill S-18, intituled: "An Act to incorporate Baptist Convention of Ontario and Quebec", have in obedience to the order of reference of June 11, 1963, examined the said bill and now report the same without any amendment.
> A similar bill in this matter was passed by the Senate during the last session of Parliament, but owing to the sudden dissolution of Parliament in February last, the proceedings on the bill were not completed.
> Your committee recommend that the parliamentary fees paid upon the bill of the last session apply to the bill of this session. It is noted that the promoters have again paid the printing costs.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: With leave, I move that this report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Cape Breton), for Hon. Mr. Willis, moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

THE UNION OF SLAVIC CHURCHES OF EVANGELICAL CHRISTIANS AND BAPTISTS OF CANADA—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Bouffard, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills, presented the following report:

> The Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills to whom was referred the Bill S-19, intituled: "An Act to incorporate The Union of Slavic Churches of Evangelical Christians and Baptists of Canada", have in obedience to the order of reference of June 12, 1963, examined the said bill and now report the same with the following amendments:
> 1. Page 1, line 18: Immediately before "Baptists" insert "Slavic".
> 2. In the title: Immediately before "Baptists" insert "Slavic".
> A similar bill in this matter was approved by this committee during the last session of Parliament, but owing to the sudden dissolution of Parliament in February last, the proceedings on the bill were not completed.
> Your committee recommend that the parliamentary fees paid upon the bill of the last session apply to the bill of this session. It is noted that the promoters have again paid the printing costs.

He said: Honourable senators, I wish to add that the two amendments which are set out in the report were passed by the committee last session.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: With leave of the Senate, I move that this report be adopted now.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: May I ask the honourable chairman of the committee why these words were added?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: It is merely a change in the name. I understand that numerous Baptist congregations exist in Canada, and that the petitioners desire to make a distinction between this particular body of Baptists and others. I understand that is the main reason for the amendments.

Hon. Mr. Croll: I understood Senator Bouffard to say that the amendments now proposed were also made by the committee last session.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Croll: When the bill was reported back to the Senate why were the amendments not included? Was there any reason for that?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: Dissolution of Parliament intervened, and the report of the committee was not presented to the Senate. Therefore the bill remained in its original form and was re-introduced this session.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I ask that the report stand until the next sitting.

The Hon. the Speaker: The report stands until the next sitting.

CHARTERED TRUST COMPANY—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. John J. Connolly, Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-17, respecting Chartered Trust Company, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: When shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West), for Hon. Mr. Leonard, moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

REFUND OF FEE

THE RELIABLE LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

The Senate resumed from yesterday consideration of the motion by Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson:

> That the Parliamentary fee paid upon a proposed bill to incorporate The Reliable Life Insurance Company be refunded to the petitioners.

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, when I presented this motion in the house last evening the question arose as to whether any printing costs had been incurred in the matter, and I undertook to ascertain the facts in that regard.

I have been informed by the committees branch that the only action taken regarding this proposed incorporation was as to the petition. No bill was printed, and consequently no printing costs were incurred.

I would add that a refund of fees has been made on other occasions. I would refer honourable senators to at least one precedent which appears at page 294 of the Debates of the Senate of the 1957 session. There in respect of the Co-Operative Life Insurance Company, an intended corporation in the province of Saskatchewan, a petition was presented and then for some reason it was withdrawn by the promoters. Subsequently a motion was made in this house by honourable Senator Cameron for the return of the fees, and the motion passed.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, it was I who raised the question as to whether any printing costs had been incurred, but not because I opposed the return of the fee. I think under the circumstances just now described by the honourable senator we ought to comply with the motion, irrespective of any precedent in that regard. All that happened was the filing of the petition and the payment of the money. There was no reference of the matter to the chamber or to any committee—no work was done on it. I think we are entirely justified in returning the money, and would be unjustified in keeping it.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate resumed from Thursday, June 13, consideration of His Excellency the Administrator's speech at the opening of the session, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Lefrançois, seconded by Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland), for an address in reply thereto.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, my first word today is to offer my congratulations to you, Mr. Speaker, on your appointment which has long been overdue. I remember with great pleasure our association in the House of Commons, and I remember too that you neglected nothing to help your constituents, and your colleagues as well, without showing any political distinction. I remember you particularly in the hot summer days in your office with your sleeves rolled up, listening to the countless problems submitted to you by members from all parts of the country, and you were always in a recipient mood to listen to them. You accomplished a lot towards the solution of their problems and the building up of Canada, both in your capacity as member for Lévis and as Parliamentary Assistant to the then Minister of Public Works.

I remember also that for a time we were together with a friend of ours who has since gone; we were rather isolated like orphans of the storm, and we weathered it for the defence of our convictions. It was a very difficult time, and it was not permited to disagree with anyone. It occurs to me that this beautiful country is not one where differences of opinion are taken for granted. For instance, if on a beautiful day one goes for a walk on the street with a friend and says, "Is it not a beautiful day?" the friend answers, "Yes, but don't you see the clouds there?" The one will then find it rather unpleasant that the other does not agree entirely with him, and agree that it is a beautiful day without mentioning the clouds.

When Senator Power and I, along with several others, were appointed to the Senate nearly eight years ago, he was at that time, in order of seniority, the dean of the House of Commons, with 37 years' parliamentary experience, and I followed him with 31 years in parliamentary life, which meant that in the House of Commons we were the deans. Yet, when we were appointed to the Senate it was a different story. All of our colleagues who were being appointed at that time were sworn in before us; we were waiting at the door, and finally we got in. Senator Power was sworn in and I followed him. Then for some time I was the junior senator, and he was the assistant junior senator, which means that although we had been the senior members in the House of Commons we had become very much younger in the Senate.

That proves also the relativity of age, which leads me to what was said yesterday about Senator Crerar, that perhaps the reason why the atmosphere is so pleasant in the Senate is because of the tolerance that exists here and because here we are freer than anywhere else to express our own opinions.

Be that as it may, I was most grateful to the Prime Minister of the time, the Right Honourable Mr. St. Laurent, for his having appointed me to the Senate, to take my place amongst such a distinguished gathering and to meet again friends whom I had known in the House of Commons, such as the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford), and the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) who was one of the active members of the illustrious Civil Service Committee of 1938-39. It was a pleasure, and I decided that I would try to find some means of proving my appreciation to the Prime Minister who had appointed me to the Senate.

Incidentally, I had a look at the Table of Precedence, and I saw that his rank was in the eighties among the privy councillors who were not members of the cabinet. As you know, the Table of Precedence is an interesting document which sets out the order of procession at a public ceremony, starting with the Governor General, and including parliamentarians and others. This is set out for the very good reason that when we are together and have to be seated it is impossible for all of us to sit on the same chair, one on top of the other, but there is a demarcation line.

As I say, the first person in order of precedence is His Excellency the Governor General, and then His Excellency the Administrator, who has the right to be so called because he substitutes for the Governor General, by right, even if only for a few hours. After the Governor General and the Administrator comes the Prime Minister of Canada, who is the first citizen of the land; and then, after many others, I think in the eightieth position, is the former Prime Minister. Placed before him are the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada and, among others, the Justices of the Supreme Court of Canada, the lieutenant governors and the members of the cabinet. Far down the list, the former Prime Minister is included among the first of the members of the Privy Council.

Then I talked the matter over with our good friend the late Senator Golding, who was one of the noblest men whom I have met in Parliament, and we decided to do something about it. So together we sponsored a motion in the Senate to correct this situation to give former Prime Ministers the rank they should have by order of merit.

In the first place, I saw the then Prime Minister, Mr. Diefenbaker, and told him of my idea. I asked him if he had any objection to it, and he very graciously said "No," and suggested that I should proceed with the matter. I did so, and to my great pleasure the motion was supported by the then Leader of the Government in the Senate (Hon. Mr. Aseltine). Senator Golding spoke on the motion, and it was adopted.

Then the trouble started. It was impossible to have an Order in Council passed in accordance with the unanimous wish of the Senate. I spoke of this to the late Senator Brunt, who was a very influential gentleman, and he said that he would see to it. Then, after Senator Brunt died so tragically, I got in touch with Senator McCutcheon, who had replaced him, and who was a member of the cabinet and a Privy Councillor, and asked him to see to it that an Order in Council was passed to amend the Table of Precedence in order that the former Prime Ministers should appear in that table just after the Governor General, the Administrator, the former Governors General, and the Prime Minister.

I wonder if anything has been done about it recently. There was a revision of the Table of Precedence last fall, and no change was made in that regard. Now it would be a nice gesture on the part of the present Government to pass such an Order in Council, one that has been overdue for a long time.

Before congratulating the Government on another appointment, I wish to congratulate the mover (Hon. Mr. Lefrançois) and the seconder (Hon. Mr. Taylor, Westmorland) of the motion for an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. They did exceptionally well. Senator Lefrançois made a forceful speech in which he indicated the true position of the province of Quebec. He said what the immense majority of the people of that province thinks about the F.L.Q. and separatism; and it is to be noted that immediately after he had spoken with such eloquence in the Senate of Canada about this matter, the proper authorities started to take action and got the help of experienced detectives and policemen from Europe in order to solve the problem, with the result that those who were guilty of criminal offences were apprehended and are now before the Courts, and all the public worry has ended.

The Honourable Senator Taylor (Westmorland) seconded the motion of Senator Lefrançois, and it would be superfluous for me to praise his speech which was, as usual, excellent. However, on this occasion he explained to you once more the needs of the Maritime Provinces, and he did it very well.

There is yet another of my colleagues whom I wish to praise at this time, and that is the honourable Senator Inman. It took a woman with energy to tell the Maritimers "Wake up", and even before receiving Hansard I saw the headline in the Chronicle-Herald of June 13: "'Wake up'—Senator tells Maritimers". She was probably quite right, but of course this admonition does not apply to Senator Taylor (Westmorland) who is always awake to the occasion; it does, however, apply to all the somnambulists who exist in all the provinces of Canada. Fortunately there are not too many, but it was a good thing for the senator to speak as she did.

There are two other appointments upon which I desire to congratulate the Government. This session was opened by the Honourable the Chief Justice of Canada, the Honourable Robert Taschereau, who had just received his appointment. It was due him because he is dean of the Supreme Court of Canada. He is a remarkable jurist, and I am sure he will continue to have the respect and esteem of all of those who come in contact with him.

There have been profound changes in the Supreme Court of Canada. At one time I had occasion to complain of the kind of jurisprudence that was emanating from that Court. I excepted the Chief Justice Rinfret, with whom I worked for some time and for whom I had great admiration. The five reactionary justices are gone and new justices have been appointed, and I hope that what was wrong with the jurisprudence of the Supreme Court will be duly changed for the benefit of the people of Canada.

I congratulate the Chief Justice on his appointment, and I also congratulate the Government. I am the prouder because one of my grandmothers and one of his were first cousins.

Having said that, honourable senators, will you permit me to fulfil a promise that I made to some of my colleagues and to some members of the other house about the books that they can get without personal expense, and which could be of help to them in their work. Ottawa is the loneliest and dullest place unless you have something to do. The best way to inform yourself is to go to basic information, and not take for granted that the bright minds who express opinions difficult to understand are really experts. You must have true documentation. You must have the books on which you can form your own opinion, and whether you are a lawyer or not, your own opinion will be the best; you have good enough sense to form your own opinions on matters of great importance to Canada.

First of all, you should have a complete set of the Revised Statutes of Canada of 1952 which comprises six volumes. Since then, as you know, the laws that we have passed are in the statutes published each year. At the present time the Revised Statutes of Canada of 1952, with the supplement, appendixes and index, comprise six volumes, and statutes of the subsequent sessions make thirteen volumes, for a total of nineteen volumes. These you may have by applying to the Queen's Printer, and you are entitled to an English set and a French set. You may keep one set here and send the other to your home. Some parliamentarians exchange their volumes, giving the set in the language they do not speak to a colleague in exchange for his set in the other language.

This is the basis of all legislation. In the first part of the supplement there are the constitutional Acts, from the British North America Act onwards. The volume is complete and has a very good index.

Secondly, I should like to mention the Canada Gazette. This is published in two parts; the first part contains notices of bankruptcies, divorces, bank dividends, and corporation dividends. It also contains proclamations, notices of various department, notices of vacant positions and lists of appointments to the civil service, etcetera.

Then there is the eligible list. This is Part I which is published weekly and which you can obtain free of charge from the Queen's Printer. There is also Part II of the Canada Gazette. It is also bilingual, and contains statutory orders and regulations and many of the orders in Council that are passed by the Government and which bind the people of Canada. It contains details that one does not find in the statute books.

There is the Canada Year Book, which contains 1,231 pages. It is a big, well-bound book. The latest edition available is that of 1962. The next edition, that of 1963-64, is to be published in June, 1964. Therefore, if you want to have that compendium of information about Canada you may get it in French or English by applying to either the Queen's Printer or the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. In French it is called L'annuaire du Canada.

There is Canada, 1963, a beautifully illustrated book of 315 pages, which is published in both French and English editions. You may get it free by applying to the Queen's Printer, or to the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Then there is the daily bulletin of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. It is a resumé or a summary of several reports that are published on all sorts of things such as population, trade, tuberculosis, employment and so on. It is a useful publication.

There is also a pink leaflet which comes daily from the Printing Bureau indicating all the publications that are available. Do not be alarmed, honourable senators, when you see the prices mentioned on that list because you have the right to have each one of those publications by ordering them and without having to pay anything for them. There are two bulletins; the daily bulletin is a condensation of reports, and the daily checklist contains a list of the publications available. Honourable senators, you would be astounded at the number of publications that come out of the Printing Bureau. This is not extravagance, because we need the information they contain.

I come now to the Parliamentary Debates on the subject of the Confederation of the British North American Provinces, 1865, with an index, which has been published by the Public Archives. That book is indispensable to all those who desire to make a study of the Constitution, and you may get it from the Printing Bureau. In the first place, it does not contain a discussion on the British North America Act as we might expect. It contains a discussion on the Quebec Resolutions that were passed during the latter part of October, 1864.

It is very curious that we are told Charlottetown was the cradle of Confederation. I have visited the Parliament buildings in Charlottetown, and I have seen the room where Confederation was supposed to have been born. There was a large mahogany table in the middle of the room, and many pictures and framed autographs around the room, but it is not true that much was done there. What happened there was that delegates from the Maritime provinces met together, and before they had time to decide anything the delegates from Upper and Lower Canada went to meet them to ask for a conference. All they did at Charlottetown was to shake hands and decide that they should meet again in Quebec City.

They met in Quebec City and at a time, mark you, honourable colleagues, when they were very much concerned about the Fenian raids. They were afraid of an invasion of Canada by the United States, and what they wanted was to save Canada for the British Crown. They met in camera in Quebec City in the latter part of October 1864, and the Quebec Resolutions were drafted in great haste. They were submitted afterwards to the Legislature of United Canada to be adopted.

In his history of Canada, one of the most distinguished members of the Senate, an historian of note, Senator Thomas Chapais, observed that at the Quebec Conference of 1864 nothing of the discussion came out and that it was unfortunate there was no record of what happened there except what we call the Quebec Resolutions. They were adopted, and you will pardon me for being frank in saying I do not believe that Confederation was attained at that time by a pact between the two great races in Canada. It is not true. It was a hurried draft of a constitution made by the Government of the day, and at that time the Prime Minister was an upright Canadian citizen, Sir Étienne Paschal Taché, who was well known and well liked as a family doctor but whose Parliamentary experience and knowledge of the law was not very deep. He had a paper in his hand which he read when he was embarrassed to explain what was the legislative jurisdiction proposed by the Quebec Resolutions.

I wonder if it interests you, honourable senators, but I am telling you my side of the story. They discussed the resolutions, and finally they passed them. I was interested in the matter because my grandfather at that time was a member of the Legislative Assembly of Quebec, and he was opposed to the Quebec Resolutions and voted against them; not only that, but he and several English-speaking and French-speaking members submitted a memorandum to London in an attempt to delay the adoption of the Quebec Resolutions and so give the Maritimes a chance to submit their grievances. They already had grievances at that time.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: And they still have.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: The Quebec Resolutions were opposed by French and English people. It was never a pact between the two great races, as it was said; it was just the will of the Government of the day, in the first place, of Taché-Macdonald and then of Macdonald-Cartier, to impose that form of government upon Canada.

Honourable senators, it will interest you to know that the true debates of Confederation are not found in the so-called Debates of Confederation, although I recommend to you to get them free of charge from the Printing Bureau. They are to be found in Hansard of the House of Commons and Hansard of the Senate for the years 1880 and 1882, when Sir John A. Macdonald discussed the provisions of the B.N.A. Act. In the first place, in the 1864 debates of Confederation, Sir John did not speak much; he left it to others, and especially to Sir Hector Langevin. He said a few words but not many. The real parliamentary debate on the B.N.A. Act of 1867 can be found in Hansard of the House of Commons and Hansard of the Senate for the years 1880 and 1882. Honourable senators will find it on a bill which was sponsored by Hon. Mr. Girourard who was later appointed to the Supreme Court of Canada. The matter was the change of the civil law, under the British North America Act, by the Parliament of Canada, to permit a widower to marry his sister-in-law; then it was changed to permit a sister-in-law to marry her brother-in-law, and to permit an uncle to marry his niece, and to permit a nephew to marry his aunt.

Now it is valid and can be done, not in virtue of provincial legislation but in virtue of federal legislation. The reason is to be found by reading the British North America Act as it is now, and you can find it in the Statutes of Canada. The exclusive jurisdiction over civil rights belongs to the provinces, but there is an exception to that. According to the same Constitution, the Parliament of Canada has exclusive jurisdiction over divorce and marriage and the only exception for the provinces to legislate is with respect to the solemnization of marriage. Apart from that, all legislation that is passed by the provinces—not only the province of Quebec but any province of Canada—about marriage and divorce, is null and void.

Mr. Speaker and honourable senators, may I remind you of a well-known judgment of the Privy Council, which was given by Lord Haldane in 1912, on reference from the Government of Canada to the Supreme Court. The Privy Council upheld the decision of the Supreme Court, which covers hundreds of pages, in one of the three reports of 1912 of the Supreme Court of Canada. This is to the effect that full legislative jurisdiction over marriage and divorce is vested in Ottawa, and it is only by exception that the provinces have the right to legislate on the solemnization of marriage.

Mark, however, that at this time the Civil Code of the province of Quebec had been in force for eleven months. Therefore, when the British North America Act was adopted, when it came into force, the lawmakers of the time knew exactly what the civil law was. My contention is that if you look at the statute book containing the Constitution of Canada, and if you look at the sound interpretation of it by the Privy Council, you come necessarily to the conclusion that the minds of the lawmakers of the provinces were blurred at the time; that is why they encroached upon federal rights, upon the exclusive right of the Parliament of Canada to legislate on those matters.

I could say the same thing about the bankruptcy legislation, which belongs to the Parliament of Canada. Many acts were passed by the provinces and they are invalid; it is unfortunate, because they had no jurisdiction to pass that legislation.

I cannot understand why professors of civil law in the universities have never taken the trouble to go to the source of information in order to find out whether or not the Parliament of Canada or the provinces had jurisdiction in any particular matter. They closed their eyes. That is why, about a year ago, I said that the mortarboards of those professors should be exchanged for asses' caps. Those words are not too strong.

The legislation authorizing the provinces to deal with marriage and divorce is null and void, and the only valid divorces are those which have been granted by an act of Parliament.

Honourable senators, I come now to a serious objection. One may ask: "What about those provinces which had the right to grant divorces before Confederation? Did they not keep the same right after Confederation?" This is a serious objection. If you permit me, I will give you a point of view on that.

Having told you what we find about marriage and divorce in sections 91 and 92 of the British North America Act with the exclusive power of the Parliament of Canada on the one hand, and the exclusive and different powers of the provinces on the other hand, we then come to section 129 dealing with the continuation of the legislation after Confederation. My honourable colleagues, with whom I have had the honour to sit in this chamber for nearly eight years, have done me the honour of following my argument about it, and I appreciate it. What I have said is on record in the Senate Hansard.

Mark you, honourable senators, there was a time when a change was made in the Constitution; and there was an elapse of time between the moment of July 1, 1867, when Confederation came into force, and the first day of the following session. There were to be laws in force at that time. We cannot conceive of any country without laws. The laws must have been continued. But if section 129 has any purpose or any meaning, it means that the powers that the provinces had before, in virtue of section 92 of the British North America Act, were continued after Confederation, and that the powers that were given to the Parliament of Canada by section 91 were continued after Confederation until they were respectively changed by the proper legislative body. I mean by that that it would be absurd to think that the provinces would have more rights in virtue of what the Constitution would do in the future. The article was badly drafted, and it proves my contention that the Quebec

Resolutions were passed in haste in Quebec city, and that the British North America Act was passed in haste later in London, when Sir John A. Macdonald was there with other Canadian delegates. But we are facing a very bad situation. Imagine it: the laws concerning marriage were void, and the laws concerning divorce were void, when they conferred federal jurisdiction on the provinces.

To give an instance of what occurs, honourable colleagues, let us take the case of a woman who is separated from her husband. According to the Civil Code of 1866, a separated woman had to ask permission of the judge to alienate property, to sell it, etcetera. Later on an amendment was passed by the provincial legislature to the effect that it was not necessary to ask for that permission. Otherwise, for women who were separated it would have meant that all transactions made for the sale of their properties, to mortgage them or buy them, etcetera, would be null and void. That is a very sad situation, when we think of it, but it is one we have to face. This is why I find, honourable senators, with due deference, that no provincial premier or prime minister can say that any province has become mistress of her own house, for the very good reason that until that legislative problem is solved, no province can legislate validly on certain matters.

(Translation):

Hon. Mr. Méthot: And what is the result with regard to marriage contracts, or the interdiction of settlements between husband and wife?

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: It is the same thing. I could give many instances, but that is the way things go: a car will not run without gas, except downhill. It is quite a problem; indeed so much of a problem that, ever since it was drawn to the attention of the Quebec provincial government, not a single amendment has been enacted in the last five years with regard to marriage. No, not one!

I have had the honour of working for five years with the honourable Chief Justice Rinfret, who sat for 30 years on the Supreme Court of Canada, after his tenure on the Superior Court; also with Notary Émile Delâge, of Quebec city, who had been president of the Chamber of Notaries; and with Notary Boulanger, who has been a president of the Reform Club in Quebec city. We came to the unanimous conclusion that some articles of the Civil Code were void, and our reports to that effect were sent along to the proper authorities. What astounded me was that the attorney general of the province of Quebec stated that he had received none of the reports that we had forwarded to him by C.P.R. express. Mr. Lapalme stated that he had never received any report from the commission that had been set up by the Duplessis Government. This is rather extraordinary: the ostrich had buried its head quite deep in the sand.

And yet I must say, to the credit of Premier Lesage, that he had unfailingly acknowledged receipt of the reports sent to him jointly by the Chief Justice, by Notary Delâge, by Notary Boulanger and by myself. Our reports are there. Why were they not tabled in the Legislature, instead of it being claimed that they had not been received? Why did he not produce them? What has happened? Why are all our reports kept secret?

The same thing happened when the Quebec Bar met in convention on February 15 and 16 at the Skyline hotel, near Montreal. This time it was about a resolution concerning the abolition of the husband's authorization, something that can be countenanced, provided legislation to that effect is enacted by the proper legislative power, i.e., by the federal Parliament, for in a case such as that, the provinces have no jurisdiction whatever, under the Canadian Constitution.

One may well disagree, on occasion, with Premier Lesage, as does even Mr. René Lévesque, his minister of Natural Resources, and there is also a lady member of the Quebec cabinet who gads about, holding forth on married women's rights. I wish she would make it her first concern to see that our reports are produced, so that they may be discussed in the assembly and by members of the bar.

I had sent in a money order to cover my registration fee at the convention. When I arrived at the hotel, I ran into the secretary-treasurer of the Quebec Bar, but in no time at all he had vanished. The people who were in charge of registration arrangements at the convention had no card for me. At length, the secretary showed up again and instructed them to hand me the indispensable card entitling me to attend the meetings and to take part in the discussions.

Now there happened to be on the agenda a resolution to increase the rights of married women, allowing them greater freedom to transact business. That particular item was called one evening at a time when I was unable to be present.

I waited until a general meeting was being held in two halls of the hotel. And when the resolution in question was called, for the purpose of confirming its adoption on the previous day I asked to be heard. The meeting was drawing to a close. Most obligingly, my colleagues suggested that I take the microphone. And since they wanted to hear what I had to say, I went to the platform which was occupied by the president of the rural bar—a man from my district and a perfect gentleman. I was glad to see him there. Also on the platform was the chairman of the meeting, the Bâtonnier Général, who was like a jumping jack. I have never seen a chairman like him. Very nervous and jittery, he kept bobbing up from his chair, then sitting down again.

I then briefly stated exactly what I have just said about the relationship between constitutional law and civil law. I went no further. That same day, however, on both the French and the English TV networks, I had had an opportunity to express my opinion freely. Not all the reporters understood, but that was of little consequence since people in Quebec and in Ontario had had a chance to find out what it was all about.

And so the resolution carried, on division. I learned later that it had been referred to the bar's committee on legislation. What the decision was is as yet not known.

What on earth are they waiting for to request production of all the reports of the committee for the revision of the Civil Code and of the Code of Civil Procedure of the province of Quebec?

They are serious reports; they were prepared with care and they deserve to be discussed by legislators, by members of the bar and by the Chamber of notaries, particularly when a lady who is now a member of the provincial cabinet and sets herself up as a champion of married women's rights said in her maiden speach in the legislature that the brilliant tin-plate extinguisher from St. James Street, as well as his alter ego and all the self-styled specialists who are drafting the new revision of the Civil Code, "would see that all rights be granted to married women".

Well, that was two years ago, and no report has yet been tabled in the house. If the attorney general has received a report from the new commission, let him produce it, together with ours. The production of all those reports could only establish that Chief Justice Rinfret, notaries Emile Delâge and Benoît Boulanger and myself were right.

And that is not all. There is also the famous commission on the Code of Civil Procedure. The Code of Procedure was badly written and must be redrafted. Well then, what did the judge do who was entrusted with the revision? In the first place, after he had been appointed he went out and spent a whole summer in Germany, to find out if any German procedural provisions could be useful to the province of Quebec. Then a delegation of so-called jurists was dispatched to Hamburg and to various other cities of the Hanseatic League, to look into ways and means of improving the Code of Procedure. There is only one way to go about it, and that is to go back to the original sources and scan the original legislation as the groundwork of pertinent reports. All they did was submit a report, one that contained nothing new. Justice Omer Côté had already delivered a judgment in that regard.

There again I commend the Government for appointing Justice Challies as Associate Chief Justice of the Superior Court. He had been a member of that commission, and must have considered it frightfully boring for he found time to write a big book on expropriations; still there is no report forthcoming from the commission for the revision of the Code of Procedure. They are sleeping on it. Should we not get a report from the commission on the Code of Civil Procedure? But apparently nothing has been done by the extinguishers of St. James Street and of rue Saint-Louis, in Quebec City. After all, one can rightly wonder what use these gentlemen made of their time.

I hope Justice Challies will bring pressure to bear on the provincial government, to have those reports published, if there be any.

Now we are not opposed to married women being granted additional rights, that is to say, the right to transact business as freely as men do, but let such rights be granted by the proper authority, let there be no more of this hoodwinking of the people by promising them the moon and dangling illusory rights before their eyes.

Women who actively engage in politics expose themselves to criticism. Otherwise, if we had to deal with them but gently, and always gave them undue consideration, we would never see the end of it, and they could get away with anything. Let me say, however, that I have much regard for my lady colleagues here in the Senate. One of them has told me that she would never have agreed to be a candidate in some riding because of the trouble and annoyances she would likely have run into, but that she was happy to be sitting in the Senate where she is doing a very fine job.

In addition to the parliamentary debates on Confederation, there is the 1939 O'Connor report dealing with the implementation of the British North America Act of 1867, and the incompatibility between those provisions and their judicial interpretation.

There is also the report by Dr. Maurice Ollivier, Q.C., on the British North America Act and the related statutes from 1867 to 1962, an indispensable work.

All of these are documents that you should have and that you can get at no cost to you from the Queen's Printer—he will be glad to send them to you—so that you may have them handy in your bookcase. You will then be in a position to do interesting work and to find parliamentary life in Ottawa more to your liking.

There are many other reports too. There is, for instance, the five-volume report of the Royal Commission on Government Organization, the Glassco report. A request to the Queen's Printer will get you your copy. It seems to me you should avail yourselves of this tremendous advantage.

For five years, with able and enlightened colleagues, I have laboured in quest of the truth. And while in law there is no such thing as absolute truth, we have carried out extensive research as a result of which we have discovered what can rightfully be described as relative legal truth. And the proper authorities have been apprised of our findings.

We are in an impasse from which we must escape at any cost.

It is not by closing our eyes that a satisfactory result can be attained.

The federal Parliament has the necessary legislative jurisdiction to remedy this abnormal situation. The problem can be solved by means of a bill originating here, in the Senate of Canada.

Honourable colleagues, with your support a bill can be passed right here that will do justice to all married women, and we can presume that the measure would meet with the general approval of the House of Commons.

I have faith in the open-mindedness of the present Leader of the Government, and I am confident that, on a measure such as this, he would allow honourable members to vote as they see fit. What the lady champion of women's rights has not yet managed to achieve, we ourselves can do quietly, without fanfare, and legally.

In a matter of such moment I have steered clear of party politics.

I have thought it advisable to call your attention to an anomaly which is in our power to remove as soon as possible.

Is not the responsibility of professors of civil law greater than that of judges, barristers and notaries? Had they been equal to their task, we would not now be faced with such legal difficulties.

Not very long ago, a noted jurist, Chief Justice McRuer, of the Supreme Court of Ontario, stated at the opening of the courts that lawyers should devote themselves to legal research instead of drifting into pointless and futile discussion.

Having said this, I would have many other remarks to make, but I am glad to support the Speech from the Throne for a very particular reason: because of the fact that recently the present Prime Minister of Canada made what I consider a striking statement, a statement in keeping with his kindly and generous nature. It was entitled:

> Canada-U.S. Role Outlined. P.M. Call for Friendship. Neighbourly Relations Stressed.

I think it makes such sense for Canada, as a nation, to give the world an example of bonne entente that it is the greatest political banner that can be devised. We have, at times, discussed points that are not to our liking, things that have gone wrong, here and there; and yet, provided everything is done in the right spirit, for the progress and advancement of Canada, when everything is done in order to show that we are applying charity and fairness among individuals and among nations—no hesitation is possible: it is the policy that we must follow and to which we must give our undivided support.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald tabled:

Report of the Secretary of State, for the year ended March 31, 1963, pursuant to section 8 of the Department of State Act, chapter 77, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Statement of receipts and expenditures under Part V of the Canada Shipping Act (Sick Mariners), for the year ended March 31, 1963, pursuant to section 321 of the said act, chapter 29, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

BRITISH COMMONWEALTH OF NATIONS

MEMBER COUNTRIES—INQUIRY ANSWERED

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot inquired of the Government, pursuant to notice:

1. What countries are members of the British Commonwealth of Nations and what are the Commonwealth countries which are not members of the Commonwealth?

2. What has Canada done for each of those countries?

3. What has each of those countries done for Canada since "British Commonwealth of Nations" has been substituted for "British Empire" as the designation of them all?

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: The answer to the honourable gentleman's inquiry is as follows:

1. The following 16 countries are members of the Commonwealth:

United Kingdom, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, India, Pakistan, Ceylon, Ghana, Malaya, Nigeria, Cyprus, Sierra Leone, Tanganyika, Jamaica, Trinidad and Tobago, Uganda.

The following countries are not members of the Commonwealth but are considered part of the Commonwealth through some form of association with a member:

Western Samoa, Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland, Kenya, Singapore, North Borneo, Sarawak and Brunei, Malta, British Guiana, British Honduras, Bahamas, Basutoland, Bechuanaland Protectorate, Bermuda, Fiji, Gambia, Gibraltar, Hong Kong, Mauritius, Papua and New Guinea, Seychelles, South Africa Federation, Swaziland, Tonga, Zanzibar.

In addition to the above-mentioned territories there are various small and scattered islands considered part of the Commonwealth through some form of association with a member.

2. As members of the United Nations, Commonwealth countries have benefited from United Nations multilateral aid programs to which Canada has contributed. As far as Canada's bilateral overseas economic aid programs for developing countries are concerned, these continue to be directed in the main to Commonwealth territories through the Colombo Plan for Co-operative Economic Development in South and Southeast Asia inaugurated in 1951; through the Special Commonwealth Africa Aid Program (SCAAP) inaugurated in 1961; and through the Canada-West Indies Aid Program inaugurated in 1958. Canada's total contribution under the Colombo Plan since its inception exceeds $380 million in capital assistance and technical assistance. The aid to the West Indies is expected to reach some $10 million over the period 1958-63 and Canada has pledged aid to Commonwealth countries in Africa through SCAAP to a total of $10,500,000 for the period 1960-63. In 1962 Canada also extended technical assistance to British Guiana and British Honduras amounting to $120,000.

In 1962 Canada gave two other kinds of aid to Commonwealth countries in addition to the economic aid noted above. One took the form of military assistance by providing training programs for the armed forces of Ghana, Nigeria and Trinidad and Tobago; and the other took the form of educational co-operation under the Commonwealth Education Program inaugurated in 1959. By the end of 1962, 219 students from Commonwealth countries were studying in Canada under this plan. At the end of 1962, 119 Canadian teachers were serving under Canadian Government educational aid programs in the less-developed Commonwealth countries of Southeast Asia, Africa and the Caribbean.

3. The Statute of Westminster in 1931 gave legal recognition to the independent status of the members of the Commonwealth. It would be very difficult to enumerate what each of the other fifteen members of the Commonwealth has done for Canada since 1931, but any listing would include the advantage for Canada of a broader grasp of world movements which results from constant consultation with the other members; in particular the close contact with Asian and African members counteracts any tendency to insularity and enables Canada to play a more useful and active part in the world peace-keeping organization of the United Nations. Canada also receives trade preferences in the markets of certain other Commonwealth countries. These cover a large proportion of Canada's exports to the countries in question. The value of Canadian trade benefiting by these preferences in 1962 was approximately $580 million. Canada also receives benefits under the Commonwealth Education Program; just as 219 students from other Commonwealth countries won scholarships enabling them to study in Canada in 1962, so did 84 Canadian scholars win Commonwealth Education Program awards enabling them to study in other Commonwealth countries in 1962. There is a continuing benefit accruing to Canada from the large exchange of scientific and technical personnel which takes place among the countries of the Commonwealth.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, June 25, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

DIVORCE

NEWSPAPER REPORT—INQUIRY

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with I would like to make an inquiry of either the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford) or the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce (Hon. Mr. Roebuck). I note in the press that the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce has had an interview with the Canadian Press. The heading of this report is: "NDP halts divorce procedure—Outrage, Roebuck says".

Before I state my inquiry I should say that we were all greatly pleased at the beginning of this session to learn that our good friend, Senator Roebuck, was again in good health after his slight indisposition.

I have rather hesitated to ask a question regarding the Divorce Committee, but having seen this newspaper report I thought it possible that the chairman would like to give the information to us as well as to the press.

The committee has been very quiet, as we have all noticed. In previous sessions it has been one of our most important and busiest committees. On entering the lower door of the Senate each morning in past years one would see many notices of Divorce Committee meetings. It was, indeed, the busiest committee in the Senate. We also had many reports from the chairman. However, so far in this session we have heard nothing regarding the Divorce Committee.

Honourable senators, I do not intend to read all of this press report. It purports to quote Senator Roebuck, and in part it says this:

> "We are not planning to hear these actions—"

He refers, I think, to the petitions which have been received this session.

> "—or any others until we know that this whole situation is going to be resolved," Sen. Roebuck said.
> He described the blockade as subversive, wrong and possibly cruel.

That is pretty strong language, especially the word "subversive". However, I am sure that honourable Senator Roebuck will explain that point.

The press report goes on later to say:

> Meanwhile, indications are growing that the Liberal Government plans action to get the parliamentary divorce mill going again.

Now, I have known for some time that the chairman of the committee has been very much concerned over the divorce situation. He spoke to me about it on a number of occasions during the last session, and said that something should be done and must be done at once to correct and clarify the situation. He also pointed out the great injustice which was being done applicants for divorce.

Despite what the honourable Senator Roebuck said then, I understood from him last year that it was the intention here in the Senate to continue to receive and consider petitions for divorce, and that the committee here would carry on as usual regardless of what the situation might be in the other place.

I might also say that I was encouraged that the situation might be resolved and clarified, according to a report of what was said by one of the honourable members of the House of Commons who has opposed the passage of divorces for so long. He said that he was prepared to assist in expediting the business of Government, but he did not say that that included divorce bills. However, it occurred to me at the time that if he would assist in getting the divorce bills through instead of holding them up, that would be the greatest favour he could do so far as Government business was concerned.

My question to the honourable chairman of the Divorce Committee is, first, will he bring us up to date, if he can, on the situation as to the divorce committee; and, secondly, will he tell us, if he can, what action the Government proposes taking to clarify this situation?

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: In the first place, may I thank the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) for his very kind reference to me, and also for the pleasant way in which he asked the question.

There was a sort of an aside remark that I should give to the house the information that had been conveyed to the newspapers. I have already done so. If the honourable leader opposite will turn to page 58 of Senate Hansard of this session, he will see there that I stated practically all the things that I have said in the newspaper. I told the house at that time that the Senate Divorce Committee had met and were unanimous in our resolve not to resume hearing divorce cases until we were assured that our recommendations would be properly considered in the other place and the cases would be carried through to a successful conclusion.

I notice that according to the news item I said that the present blockade is possibly cruel. I admit error in using the word "possibly". There is no question about it: it is utter and extravagant cruelty that is being and has been perpetuated on these litigants for the past two or more years. We have changed our mind a little with the passage of time. Our understanding was that although the cases were being held up in the other place by a blockade by two private members, they would probably be passed at the end of the session. Cases had been held up throughout two previous sessions but had been passed at the end of each session. So that while the delay was by no means pleasant, or justified—because justice delayed is justice denied—at the same time, I was not prepared, and I believe my confreres agreed with me, to change our procedure. We went ahead in the hope that the cases would be passed in due season.

It is true that fully 300 petitions died on the Order Paper two sessions ago; but we were doubtful that they would die on the Order Paper the second time. Indeed, we had good grounds for supposing that they would not, that the good sense of the Commons would prevail and they would pass. Therefore, we continued.

But now, honourable senators there are pending nearly 500 cases—I believe the accurate number is 494—that we have heard and decided in committee in the most formal and serious way, and the petitioners are entitled, according to the law of Canada, to divorce. All of these cases have been held up, some of them for as long as two years, and about half of them for at least one year. That is something about which I am very much concerned, just as the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) said.

I have lived most of my adult life in the courts, and I have come very close, as many of my confreres have, to the administration of justice, both in this province and in the federal jurisdiction. This sort of thing offends me to the very quick, that good, innocent people have come here, paid their money to us and to others and then are treated in this way. I am hoping that effective action will be taken by the Commons to clear up this matter in some way and, of course, I have my opinions as to how it should be done.

So honourable senators, I have no apology for the statements I made and which appeared in the newspapers this morning. It is an outrage and I hope the Commons will take the matter up very soon and dispose of it.

I have no knowledge, of course, as to what will be done. I have discussed the matter with various leading members of the Government but I have no information that I can impart. It may be that the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford) can give us some information along that line but I do not feel free to do so.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, I wonder if I might ask the Leader of the Government if he could explain or enlarge upon the statement in the press that > ... indications are growing that the Liberal Government plans action to get the parliamentary divorce mill going again.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That is not in quotation marks.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: It is in the press report.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: But it is not a quotation.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I do not know how the reporter got it but it is here.

What are the indications and what action is the Government planning to get the divorce mill, as the press calls it, going again.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I may tell the honourable Leader of the Opposition that I am quite sure the Government has nothing to do with getting any divorce mill going.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Does the honourable Leader of the Government mean by that that they are not making any efforts to get the divorce—

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): My friend referred to a divorce mill, and I want to inform him that the Liberal Government has nothing to do with any divorce mill.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Those are not my words; those are the words appearing in the press report, which everybody in the country will read and know what is meant.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): My friend should not have used the word "mill".

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I repeat, honourable senators, that that remark is not attributed to me in the report of the interview. I think those are the reporter's words.

Hon. Lionel Choquette: As I recall the honourable senator's last statement, he added that he had every reason to believe the present Government was about to do something to remedy the situation. So I would ask the question: What is that proposition?

Hon. Mr. Lambert: The question is as to the use of the word "mill".

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I withdraw the word "mill". I do not think it is a very offensive word, though it carries certain implications. It is not important anyway.

If the Leader of the Government could give us any indication as to whether anything is being done to get divorces through the Senate committee and through the House of Commons, we would be very pleased to have the information.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Honourable senators, when a decision has been made with regard to divorce procedure, I will be glad to inform this house of it.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Thank you.

HIS HOLINESS POPE JOHN XXIII

REPORT ON FUNERAL CEREMONIES

Hon. A. K. Hugessen: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with I wonder whether my colleagues would think it appropriate if I were to offer them a short report on the funeral ceremonies for Pope John XXIII which took place in Rome last Monday and at which I was one of the delegates from this country.

There were three delegates from Canada: the Minister of Justice, Honourable Mr. Chevrier; our Ambassador to Italy, Mr. Jules Léger, who is the brother of Emile Cardinal Léger, and myself. Both the Minister and the Ambassador are Roman Catholics. Quite apart from any matter of personal feeling I think it was particularly appropriate that one of the delegates should represent Christians of other denominations. Indeed, that was the pattern followed in a number of the delegations from the 74 countries, I think it was, which sent representatives to Rome on this occasion. For instance, the head of the delegation from the United States was Vice-President Lyndon B. Johnson. A member of the British delegation, Sir Peter Scarlett, who is the British envoy to the Vatican, is an Anglican like myself.

I say it was particularly fitting that there should be some non-Roman representatives at the ceremonies for this reason: That great and good man, Pope John XXIII, whom we had come to mourn, had succeeded in the four short years of his pontificate in bringing Christians of the various denominations of the world closer together in thought and feeling than they have been for centuries past. His spirit dominated the proceedings. We non-Romans were made to feel at home. When we were referred to, it was as "nos frères séparés"—our separated brethren. And we did feel at home and at one with our Roman brethren in lamenting the loss of this great Prince of the church.

Mr. Chevrier and I left Montreal by air on the Friday night. On our arrival at Rome airport early Saturday afternoon, we were met by our Ambassador and by a representative of the Vatican, Monsignor Carew, a most charming gentleman and a native of Newfoundland, to whom I spoke as we were leaving the airport and who told me that on two recent occasions when he had travelled by air to or from Newfoundland he had sat beside our colleague Senator Pratt and had had some very interesting conversations with him.

Pope John XXIII's body had been laid to rest a few days before in the crypt under St. Peter's, where all the Popes have been buried since the Middle Ages. On Sunday at noon the Canadian delegation went to the crypt, and we were taken to the tomb of Pope John XXIII, upon which the Minister of Justice laid a wreath on behalf of the Governor General. As some honourable senators may know, General Vanier became a close friend of Pope John XXIII when he, General Vanier, was our representative in Paris some years ago, at which time the late pope was the Papal Nuncio in Paris.

On Sunday evening, at dinner with the Ambassador, we had the privilege of meeting our two Canadian Cardinals—Cardinal McGuigan of Toronto and Cardinal Léger of Montreal—as well as Cardinal Antoniutti who, as many honourable senators will remember, was the Papal Legate in Ottawa for 15 years up to 1952.

The funeral service was held on Monday morning at St. Peter's. It was a day of brilliant sunshine and blue sky. Rome, lovely as it always is, was looking its best, with its shrubs and summer flowers blooming in profusion.

The delegates met at a side entrance to the cathedral. As I have said, there were delegations from 74 countries, but there was none from the countries of the communist bloc. Among the principal delegates one might pick out Vice-President Lyndon B. Johnson of the United States, the Earl of Perth who headed the delegation from the United Kingdom, the Prime Ministers of Italy and of Ireland, the Foreign Ministers of France, Germany and the Netherlands, while the Belgian delegation was headed by the Prince de Liege, the King's brother, and M. Spaak, the Foreign Minister of Belgium.

Preceded by Papal Swiss guards in brilliant red uniforms, we entered in procession through the main door of the cathedral where the service began at 10 o'clock.

Honourable senators who are familiar with St. Peter's know what an enormous building it is. Right in the middle of the crossing, where the two great side aisles come in from right and left, is the huge Papal Throne, made of marble, which towers many feet into the air. The service was held in the east part of the cathedral, in the area between the Papal Throne and the altar at the far east end of the church; that is, in an area less than one-quarter of the whole area of the church, but amply sufficient for the many thousands of people who attended the service.

We delegates were seated close to the altar, on the right-hand side, and had an excellent view of the service. I was unable to fathom the order in which we were seated. It was not alphabetical, as it is in the United Nations. All I can say is that we Canadian delegates had on one side of us delegates from the principality of Monaco and, on the other, delegates from the Congo.

Just before the service began eighty Cardinals entered in procession, clad in their violet robes, each with a red-robed priest in attendance on him, and took their places in two long lines, facing one another down the aisle. The celebrant of the mass was Cardinal Tisserant, the Archbishop of Paris, who is the Dean of the College of Cardinals. Cardinal Tisserant, though over 80 years of age, is a tall and most impressive figure, with a rosy complexion, a snow-white beard and a resonant voice; and he celebrated the Mass with unsurpassed dignity and reverence, while the choral part of the service was sung by the famous Sistine Choir.

The whole service, including an address in Latin giving the salient facts of the life and work of Pope John XXIII and extolling his many virtues, lasted about two hours. It was a spectacle which, in those magnificent and historic surroundings, in its outward appeal to the eye and its inward appeal to the deepest of human emotions, will not readily be forgotten by those who took part in it.

After the service was over, the delegations moved out of St. Peter's and up two long flights of stairs to the reception rooms of the Vatican. In one of these, an oblong room, all the attending Cardinals were sitting behind small tables, each Cardinal's name being shown in large print on a sign on the table in front of him. As we walked past, announced as "la délégation du Canada," we bowed to or smiled at the Cardinals whom we recognized, and at the far end of the room we shook hands with Cardinal Tisserant, and with Cardinal Masella the Chamberlain who is in charge of the Vatican pending the election of a new Pope. That was the conclusion of the ceremonies.

In walking through the Vatican and past the door of the Sistine Chapel, we could see the arrangements that were being made for the consistory which started yesterday evening, in which the Cardinals, shut off from the outer world, are now engaged in the election of a new Pope to succeed John XXIII; and upon their choice much will depend.

I can only conclude by expressing my deep sense of honour and privilege at having been chosen as one of our country's representatives on this great and historic occasion.

The Senate resumed from yesterday consideration of His Excellency the Administrator's speech at the opening of the session, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Lefrançois, seconded by Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland), for an address in reply thereto.

Hon. Olive L. Irvine: Honourable senators, I deem it an honour to take part in the debate on the motion for an address in reply to the Throne Speech. I fully realize that any expression of appreciation on my part may be repetitious. Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, I welcome you to this august body and wish you health and happiness as you preside over the deliberations of this chamber.

My next duty is a particularly pleasant one. I wish to congratulate Senator Macdonald (Brantford) on his appointment as Leader of the Government in this new Parliament. I am delighted to see the vigour and enthusiasm with which he has taken over his new duties.

I believe I express the view of all honourable senators when I say that the mover and seconder of the motion for an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne acquitted themselves excellently in carrying out the important task entrusted to them.

I should also like to express my appreciation of two other honourable gentlemen who held high office in the last Parliament. I speak of the Honourable George White, whose tenure of office as Speaker of the Senate was short, but who endeared himself to all while in office; and of the present Leader of the Opposition, the Honourable Alfred Brooks, who made such an excellent contribution as Leader of the Government. I am sure he will be just as efficient as Opposition Leader.

I wish to extend a hearty welcome to our new senators. I am confident that with their extensive political knowledge and business background they will excel in their contributions to the debates of this chamber.

It is with a sense of deep pride that I place before all honourable senators this afternoon a review of the economy of my native province, Manitoba, which I have the honour to represent. Today Manitoba is awakening gleefully to the booming repercussions of an economic revolution. It is fast undergoing a fundamental transition from a predominantly agricultural and service economy to an emerging industrial economy.

In the year 1961 a serious problem faced our Premier the Honourable Duff Roblin, and his Minister of Industry and Commerce the Honourable Gurney Evans. They realized the urgent need for a survey of the whole economy of the province. If the trend of the times continued, tens of thousands of new jobs would be required to hold Manitobans coming to maturity in the late 1960's and early 1970's. The labour force should increase to 422,000 by 1975, but at the rate the economy has been growing since 1949 the number of jobs available will total only 347,000. This means that 75,000 new jobs have to be found. The question to be answered was: How?

It was a difficult decision to make because there was no real precedent for them to follow. No province in Canada and no state in the United States, so far as could be ascertained, had ever undertaken an economic survey of the scope and magnitude they planned.

What was required was an organization capable of performing three functions: the first was to carry out an expert analysis of Manitoba's economic potential; the second, to put forward a practical blueprint for future action; and the third, to enlist and retain the support and confidence of leaders in every sphere of provincial life. In short, the organization had to be expert and also representative.

On September 13, 1961, 41 Manitoba citizens were asked to serve in a voluntary capacity as the Committee on Manitoba's Economic Future. They were given a period of 18 months in which to carry out their analysis of Manitoba's economic growth, to recommend programs to create the jobs required in the future and to report back.

That committee represented a broad spectrum of leadership in the province: the primary extractive industries, agriculture, the university campus, labour unions, local government, power, transportation, tourism, the service industries, the retail trade, and more.

The Government made only one direct appointment, but it was a key one. Mr. Rex Grose, one of Manitoba's busiest men, Executive Director of the Manitoba Development Authority, Deputy Minister of the Department of Industry and Commerce and General Manager of the Manitoba Development Fund, was made Vice-Chairman and Research Director. His task was not only to direct the research program, but also to make sure that the structure which established did in fact work and did not bog down.

Soon 38 consultants or consulting firms were hired to undertake the research. Most of the consultants were Canadians. Eight who came from the United States and Britain covered such subjects as overseas markets, or United States midwest markets for Manitoba products, or some other specialized studies for which there was no suitable Canadian counterpart. Additional research was contributed by 17 private firms and federal Government agencies.

Sixteen advisory committees were then set up covering the areas of activity of the consultants, and 194 Manitobans were called to serve on them. Each group was headed by a chairman appointed from the committee, who had the power to add members as he deemed fit.

In time each advisory group consisted of from 12 to 18 members from all walks of life. There were geologists, truckers, bankers, fishermen, potato chip manufacturers, educators, union representatives, foresters, grain elevator men, tourist camp operators and many more. Each advisory group made its own independent report of its whole field of study, and also prepared a memorandum of comment, of agreement and disagreement on the consultants' report.

The result of the committee's work was published one day before the expiration of the eighteen-month deadline. I am sure that you will all agree that this is something new for a government project.

The organization and the approach this committee developed in its work will provide, I am sure, a model which might well be followed not only by other provinces but by our federal Government.

Honourable senators, I would like to say that there now is a copy of the report of the Committee on Manitoba's Economic Future in the Library of Parliament. There are many honourable senators who, if they can find a little time in which to digest even some of the things in this report, will be able to help their own provinces when they go back to them.

Naturally you will want to know the cost of C.O.M.E.F.'s effort. It has been estimated at $750,000 but this is a paper figure rather than a cash outlay. The Manitoba Government put up $200,000 from the public purse, and $125,000 was contributed by industry. A further $175,000 came in the form of grants and unpaid studies by such federal Government departments and agencies as the National Research Council, the Industrial Design Council, Agriculture, Mines and Technical Surveys, the National Productivity Council, and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, as well as such organizations as Manitoba Hydro. This is not a high cost for 21,522 man-hours of work designed to change the face of Manitoba and provide 75,000 new jobs by 1975.

Now that we have this committee set up, the responsibility of the Government will be primarily to provide guidance and the creation of the appropriate business climate.

The efforts of all citizens are enlisted to assist in making adjustments needed to provide reasonably full employment for a continually increasing population. There will have to be a continuing advance in technology, new inventions, new processes, new materials and new machinery. Our work force must become ever more specialized and more highly trained, and better management skills must be developed.

Skills and attitudes are the qualitative value of a labour force. In the vast hierarchy of levels of education and skills which can be found in the world today Manitobans are near the top. About 98 per cent of the adult population is literate and the medium level of education is approximately nine years. This is a much higher level than is the case in most nations of the world. However, Manitoba is today in competition with all regions of Canada, with the United States, Great Britain and the nations of Europe. This community of nations has the highest level of skills and education in the world. The comparison reveals that potentially we are capable of being competitive, but our levels of education at present are not adequate.

If our 1975 objective is to be reached it is estimated that at least 50 per cent of our working class must be high school graduates, and 15 per cent university graduates. This will require a long-term program of encouragement and many curricula changes will have to be made in all of our educational institutions from public schools up.

I am happy to say that the late Conservative Government introduced more forward-looking measures to help solve the age-old problems of the Canadian economy than any other government in Canadian history. The present Government took over an inheritance of progress.

The new vocational school system will be of the utmost value. Manitoba took advantage of this generous federal offer, and it is now up to them to make the best possible use of these schools. It has been decided that secondary manufacturing is the key to the future growth of our province and must command prime attention. Naturally, growth of the other sectors of the economy will to a large degree be related to this new development.

With so many farmers leaving the land and young people coming into the labour force, it will be necessary to educate them so that they can take their rightful place in a new field. Courses will have to be set up for management training and better technical training; for the development of a program in the mining and mineral extraction industry; for managerial and supervisory jobs in the clothing and textile industry, in shop level management; and as well apprenticeship courses in the construction industry and courses for extension work and night school courses where such diverse subjects as forestry and tourist management can be taught. These are only a few of the courses that could be introduced to train the personnel necessary for our expanding economy.

Agriculture, of course, will continue to be one of our prime industries. Last year the farmers in Manitoba and as well in the other western provinces struck the dream combination: a big crop and good prices—a great change from the drought of the year previous. Grain crops alone yielded around 211 million bushels as compared to 76 million bushels harvested in 1961. The potato crop increased nearly four-fold, and fodder and hay crops about doubled. Sugar beet and oil seed harvests, with the exception of sunflower seed, produced very substantial increases. This was due primarily to a reduction in acreage sown to sunflower seed, rather than to a decrease in yield.

This bumper crop meant money in everybody's pocket. To eastern Canada it meant more work and higher wages in industrial plants. It meant new cars, new farm machinery, clothes, furniture and all the things westerners needed.

Another forward step for Manitoba was made possible by the previous Government with the introduction of the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act—known as ARDA.

ARDA has been greeted by farmers and farm organizations as the most practical attack yet on the economic problems of Canada's rural areas. Manitoba was one of the first of the ten provinces to accept the offer. It will benefit not only rural areas but urban dwellers whose need for efficiently produced food and for land for recreational and residential purposes makes their stake in the wise use of the resources of rural areas increasingly important.

With the money received from the federal coffers, Manitoba made a detailed investigation of the province's primary agricultural product industries, beverage manufacturing, its water resources, its commercial fishing industry, and its recreational resources.

A splendid start has been made but will mean nothing unless continued action is taken. Studies have an unfortunate habit of gathering dust on office shelves. Concrete proposals must follow if this new project is to be a success. Let us take a look at what has already been done in attracting plants to rural areas which were originally established to serve the needs of agriculture. Their locations were based upon the transportation capabilities of the times. Only towns that possess raw materials in the area have water supply, labour supply and transportation, and regional markets will have the economic conditions necessary to attract new manufacturing concerns or to provide the basis for growth of existing concerns.

The development of secondary manufacturing may look small in size and number of employees compared to that of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, where 80 per cent of all the manufacturing in Canada is done. However, in 1960 Manitoba had 51 new firms established, of which 37 were in Winnipeg and 14 in rural areas, valued at $6,976,500, and these provided 708 new jobs.

In 1961, there were 41 new firms of which 38 were in Winnipeg and 13 in rural communities, representing a capital investment in buildings and equipment of $8,240,000 and providing 704 new jobs. These industries were established to produce such divers items as plastic products, foodstuffs, metal products, furniture and other wood products, building materials, clothing, concrete blocks, ceramics, printed matter and steel products.

Today, of the 171 types of industry listed by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics for Canada, Manitoba firms are represented in 123. Mineral production for the year 1962 was approximately 25 per cent over the $99.1 million record established in 1961.

Manitoba entered the 1962 winter employment season with the highest number of people at work in her history, and with the lowest rate of unemployment—1.7 per cent in September, the lowest in three years. Labour income was up 3.8 per cent and personal income was increased to $1,420 million, an estimated increase of 7 per cent. Retail sales, a good barometer of general economic activity, ran at a level above 1961, and $850 million was expected. Tourism reached an all-time high of over $39 million.

Among the major construction projects that got under way in 1962 were:

(1) The beginning of the five-year $63 million Red River Floodway, the largest excavation product in Canada's history.

(2) Final work stages of the $16 million Winnipeg International Air Terminal and runway extension.

(3) Continuation of the construction of the Whiteshell Nuclear Research establishment, which when completed will be comparable in size and cost to the $165 million Chalk River development.

(4) Work on the $140 million Grand Rapids Hydro Electric project, which may be completed this year, and will take its place among the largest power-generating stations in the world.

Other large projects include the building, on a new location, of an $8 million plant by Labatt's Brewery; and the construction and relocation of Burns and Company Limited's packing house operations from their present site to a new $3¼ million operation in the city of St. Boniface, which centre boasts the largest meat packing complex in the British Commonwealth.

The winter works program instituted by the last Government has contributed much to employment on Government support projects. Up to April 15 of this year employment figures stood at 4,603, compared with 3,271 for the same period last year.

The number of man days of work involved for projects approved this year up to the same date was 218,511, or 35 per cent above the figure of April 15 last year. This past winter 81 Manitoba municipalities had a total of 326 projects approved, compared with 64 municipalities with 237 projects at the same time the year before.

In the fall of 1962, 19 Manitoba businessmen, at their own expense, went on a five-week trade mission to 10 European countries. The mission investigated the new trading patterns in Europe, the economic and political trends, management-labour-government relationship, economic planning projects, and the evolution of the European Economic Community, with particular application to Britain and Canada.

They heard far too many sorry tales about the failure of Canadians to take advantage of trading opportunities in Europe. It all added up to quite an indictment of Canadian initiative and drive. It indicated too great a complacency at home, with many businessmen satisfied with their showing in the domestic market and a lack of will to hit the important export market.

As our hard-driving deputy minister of Industry and Commerce said, and I quote:

> We have something to publicize, but we have to persuade the businessmen in the province to get out of the habit of believing that they can expect the government to do everything.

He went on to say:

> The men who are making money today are the recent immigrants—those who arrived in the past ten years. They have the old-fashioned idea that it isn't wrong to work hard.

Are not these the men who in practically every case were apprenticed to a trade and who are fully-fledged tradesmen?

The result of the investigations showed that the processed food industry in Manitoba might pay dividends in Europe. Manitoba firms could do well with peas and beans in Germany and Britain. Norway would be interested in our regular quality goods. Europe is rapidly developing a taste for frozen foods, peas, potatoes, meats, turkeys and chicken, all of which offer growing opportunities.

In regard to rapeseed, of which we are the world's largest producers, the mission felt that Manitoba could be in a good position to supply the crushing industry in E.E.C. if the price were competitive.

Manitoba honey has been doing well in Britain and the prospects are good in E.E.C. for bulk shipments of clover honey. Manitoba yellow mustard, harvested dry, is considered of highest quality, and yellow peas are in demand. Again, competitive price and continuity of supply are important.

To state it bluntly, we are going to have to stop resting our shovels as much as we are. We are going to have to work a great deal harder in many areas of our economy, and demonstrate a much more impressive trading determination.

Provincial advancement is not always clear sailing. Sometimes we have our federal administration to contend with. The proposed move of the Trans-Canada Air Lines Maintenance and Overhaul base from Winnipeg to Dorval, Quebec, as I am sure all honourable senators will realize, is causing us concern at the present time.

Winnipeg remained the control point for the Trans-Canada Air Lines system throughout the Second World War, but off and on since 1949 personnel have been moved to Montreal. However, we were assured by the president of the airlines that there was no reason to presume that the move marked the beginning of a mass transfer of Trans-Canada Air Lines activities from Winnipeg. Nevertheless, the statement made by the president in mid-November respecting the elimination of major aircraft overhaul and maintenance services from the Winnipeg area by 1966 has created much unrest. The Manitoba Government opposes the proposed policy which, if implemented as announced, would mean the destruction of a key segment of the economy of Manitoba, as well as the loss in the Winnipeg area of a substantial number of jobs requiring skilled and experienced workers.

Our government is aware of the importance of air transport in the future development of the regional and national economics. It has long recognized the potential of metropolitan Winnipeg as a major airport centre of Canada, is anxious to see the growth of the airport industry and will endeavour to encourage such growth.

The elimination of the Winnipeg overhaul and maintenance base would have a severe impact upon the economy of the province of Manitoba and metropolitan Winnipeg, and we therefore urge that most careful and serious consideration be given to this matter as to the true effects of the implementation of the centralization plans before any decision is reached.

In a province with a small population the loss of about 4,300 people is serious, and a significant factor in the Winnipeg operation is the proportion of manufacturing workers in the Trans-Canada Air Lines labour force in the area. Of the nearly 2,000 personnel, 1,000 are engaged in a factory-type operation, equal in terms of employment to 40 average-sized manufacturing firms in Manitoba.

During the election campaign a telegram was sent by the now Prime Minister to the Reverend Fred Douglas, Liberal candidate for Winnipeg South Centre, which stated that his party favoured development of Winnipeg as a strong regional air centre. This was considered a commitment. After the election a Government spokesman denied that the telegram represented a commitment to retain the overhaul base in Winnipeg.

As a result of this latest development, the Manitoba Government wired the federal authorities asking them to meet a Manitoba delegation on June 18. The delegation was composed of representatives from all parties of the legislature, as well as spokesmen from at least 40 organizations in Winnipeg and surrounding municipalities. I have been told that the Prime Minister and the Minister of Transport now fully realize what a move of this kind would mean to the province as a whole and have promised to again review the situation. We trust that the outcome will be to our advantage.

As a result of the wonderful work that the Manitoba Department of Industry and Commerce is doing under the able leadership of the Honourable Gurney Evans, I again wish to point to the shining examples of efficiency, planning and organized effort the department has applied to Manitoba's industrial development campaign. The plan is not only unique in North America but, I believe, has set an example that all provinces would do well to follow.

Recently, the province of Manitoba has been awarded the Professional Trophy Award by the Society of Industrial Realtors of Washington, D.C., for the most effective industrial development program in the United States or any province in Canada. Mr. Evans accepted the award at the National Convention of the Society of Industrial Realtors of Washington, held in New Orleans late in January. This is the first time a Canadian province has ever received the award.

Manitoba was selected for the award by a panel of independent business leaders in the United States. The criteria for the awarding of the Professional Trophy were: scope and balance of the program; progress achieved compared with other years; number and kind of practical and productive program innovations; nature of the program; relations with existing industry in the state or province, as well as concern for newly-imported industry; contribution to the stature of industrial development; the degree of difficulty of local development problems, and the efficiency of the effort of the state, territory or province in relation to budget resources.

We have every reason to be proud of our minister and his entire department for achieving such success.

The question uppermost in my mind is, "Will Manitoba reach its economic goal by 1975?" My guess, supported by considerable practical evidence, and nourished by pride as an admiring native, is that Manitoba will make it.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Kinley, debate adjourned.

PRIVATE BILL

THE UNION OF SLAVIC CHURCHES OF EVANGELICAL CHRISTIANS AND BAPTISTS OF CANADA—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the report of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills on Bill S-19, to incorporate the Union of Slavic Churches of Evangelical Christians and Baptists of Canada.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Halifax North), for Hon. Mr. Bouffard, moved that the report be adopted.

Hon. Mr. Higgins: I notice that the word "Slavic" does not appear before "Baptists" in the bill. Should it not be designated, "An act to incorporate the Union of Slavic Churches of Evangelical Christians and Slavic Baptists of Canada"?

Hon. Mr. Stambaugh: That is explained in the amendment.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Halifax North): That is correct. The chairman of the committee explained to the house yesterday that although this bill was approved by the Senate Committee last session, the report did not reach the Senate before the dissolution of Parliament. He stated that there were two minor amendments, in each case the insertion of the word "Slavic" before the word "Baptists". The amendments were not designated on the original bill, so the committee was required to report these amendments for consideration by the Senate.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Halifax North), for Hon. Mr. Willis, moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

FINANCE CHARGES (DISCLOSURE) BILL

DEBATE ON MOTION FOR SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Croll, seconded by the Honourable Senator Roebuck, for second reading of Bill S-6, intituled: "An act to make Provision for the Disclosure of Information in respect of Finance Charges".

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, I rise at this time only to apologize for asking that my contribution to this important debate be allowed to stand until next sitting. I feel that I owe the Senate an apology, because the debate was adjourned in my name and at my request by the honourable senator from Cape Breton (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) on Tuesday last, and I am not yet prepared to proceed.

In the meantime, I believe an apology is due to the Senate and particularly to the sponsor of the bill who, I am sorry, is not in the chamber today. He has introduced this or a similar bill on a number of occasions, and for various reasons its passage through the Senate has been extremely slow. I am sorry to add to the delay. If he were here I would say to him that I believe it is of the utmost importance to the prestige of the Senate that this bill be carried to a definite and clear legislative conclusion, at least by the Senate of Canada, during this present session of Parliament.

May I add this personal word? At breakfast this morning I happened to say to my two daughters of high school age that I would not be speaking on the bill today. They asked me why, and I was foolish enough to admit that it was because I had not done my homework. In no uncertain terms they told me that was no excuse; that I was not practising what I was preaching, and should not be allowed to get away with it. I agreed with them entirely, and I beg the indulgence of the house.

This is an important bill, and while I do not suggest that my contribution will be a great one, I shall do my homework over the week end and be prepared to proceed, the Senate willing, at the sitting on Tuesday evening next.

Thank you.

The Hon. the Speaker: The Order stands.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, June 25, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, June 25, 1963

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald tabled:

Report of expenditures and administration in connection with the Family Allowances Act, for the year ended March 31, 1963, pursuant to section 14 of the said act, chapter 109, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Report of expenditures and administration in connection with the Old Age Security Act, for the year ended March 31, 1963, pursuant to section 12 of the said act, chapter 200, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Copy of a letter, dated June 20, 1963, forwarded by the Prime Minister to all the provincial premiers with respect to the proposed comprehensive Canada-wide pension program. (English and French texts).

CANADA PENSION PLAN

PRIME MINISTER'S LETTER PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Honourable senators, I notice that when the Prime Minister's letter which I have just tabled was tabled in the other place there was a motion that it be printed as an appendix to Hansard. If it is the wish of honourable senators I shall move, seconded by the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks), that it be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, may I ask the honourable Leader of the Government if the replies from the provinces are being tabled as well? Have we any replies to the honourable the Prime Minister from the various provinces?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I do not think the replies from the provinces have been received as yet.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I doubt very much that they would all have been received.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, it is moved by the honourable Senator Macdonald (Brantford), seconded by the honourable Senator Brooks, that a copy of the letter of June 20, 1963, by the Prime Minister be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent record of this house. Is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Pardon me, Mr. Speaker. Would the Leader of the Government care to reply to my question, that the replies from the provinces be printed if they have been received? I understand all the replies have been received except that of British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): The Prime Minister's letter is dated June 20 and this is only June 25. I would be very much surprised if the replies have been received. I know that in "60 days" a great deal was accomplished, but I doubt if in five days we could hope to get replies to this letter.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: The provinces are not under the same handicap.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: The voice of authority.

Motion agreed to.

For text of letter, see appendix "A" p. 157.

PRIVATE BILLS

THE CANADA BOARD OF AMERICAN MISSIONS OF THE UNITED LUTHERAN CHURCH IN AMERICA—FIRST READING

Hon. Fred M. Blois presented Bill S-23, respecting The Canada Board of American Missions of the United Lutheran Church in America.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Blois moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

THE EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN SYNOD OF CANADA—FIRST READING

Hon. Mr. Blois presented Bill S-24, respecting The Evangelical Lutheran Synod of Canada.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Blois moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

THE BOARD OF TRADE OF METROPOLITAN TORONTO—FIRST READING

Hon. Harry A. Willis presented Bill S-25, respecting The Board of Trade of Metropolitan Toronto.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Willis moved, with leave, that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

CO-OPERATIVE FIRE AND CASUALTY COMPANY —FIRST READING

Hon. Donald Cameron presented Bill S-26, respecting Co-operative Fire and Casualty Company.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Cameron: Honourable senators, may I be permitted to move, with leave, that the bill be read the second time tomorrow afternoon?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Honourable senators, I do not object to giving leave in this instance, but I think it would be bad practice if we automatically allowed bills to be considered on second reading the day following first reading.

Hon. Mr. Reid: It is not usually done.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I think, in the interests of the Senate, when a request is made for a bill to proceed to the second reading stage earlier than the rule requires, some explanation should be given as to the urgency.

Hon. Mr. Cameron: My reason for making the request is that I have to leave Thursday to go west for ten days. However, if it is inconvenient, the bill can stand for second reading later. I would appreciate if I could proceed tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Reid: I hope we are not creating a precedent. Bills are rushed through the Senate sometimes much too quickly. Because a senator will be absent for a time is no reason why the rules of the house should be broken.

Motion agreed to.

KINROSS MORTGAGE CORPORATION—FIRST READING

Hon. John J. Connolly presented Bill S-27, to incorporate Kinross Mortgage Corporation.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I am very much embarrassed about a request I am about to make. Obviously I have chosen the wrong evening to do it. I have to leave the city on official business on Thursday next and I would very much appreciate it if I could have leave to explain this bill on second reading tomorrow.

I may say that this is a bill to incorporate a mortgage company, and is in the form required under the Loan Companies Act. So in that respect it is pro forma. If second reading were received tomorrow it would enable the bill to get to committee, and of course another week or so would elapse before it is considered there. I quite understand that I am asking for an indulgence, but perhaps in the circumstances honourable senators would consider it favourably.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, may I make a suggestion? The rule requires that two days' notice must be given on a motion for second reading, but that does not prevent us from hearing these honourable gentlemen who are in a difficult position and wish to explain their bills. I think we should have an assurance from the sponsors of the bills that they will not be passed tomorrow. In the case of this bill and the previous one we could hear the explanation and then observe the rule by adjourning the debate until two days have elapsed. That is my suggestion.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That is perfectly satisfactory, honourable senators. In any event, this being a private bill, it must go to committee.

Hon. Mr. Cameron: Honourable senators, the same arrangement could apply in the case of Bill S-26 respecting Co-operative Fire and Casualty Company, which received first reading a few minutes ago. I would be quite happy to have it handled in that way.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the honourable Senator Connolly (Ottawa West), seconded by the honourable Senator Leonard, that this bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading next sitting. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Mr. Reid: On division.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): No. Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, I doubt if it can be on division. I think the house has indicated its agreement to allow the bill to be explained tomorrow. It will go on the Order Paper for second reading tomorrow on the understanding that it will be explained but will not get second reading before Thursday. I think all honourable senators agree to that.

Motion agreed to.

THE SENATE

AIR CONDITIONING OF OFFICES

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I wonder if the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford) has some good news to give us with regard to the air conditioning of the offices of the Senate.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, when the honourable senator from De la Durantaye (Hon. Mr. Pouliot) raised this question in the house a few weeks ago I stated that I would refer his remarks to the Minister of Public Works. This I did, and I have now received a reply from the Department of Public Works, which reads, in part, as follows:

> There is much widespread interest in air conditioning for the Centre Block of the Parliament Buildings. Investigation is now underway and information will be obtained and studied in order that a decision can be made as to the best course of action to be followed regarding air conditioning generally in this building.

Honourable senators, that is encouraging, but I think that we shall not have the building air conditioned this summer. All I can say is I hope that next summer Parliament will take a recess and we will not need to sit here during the hot weather.

TABLE OF PRECEDENCE FOR CANADA

INQUIRY

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, as the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford) is in such good disposition tonight, may I ask him what the Government has done with regard to a supposed draft of an Order in Council which was not signed in compliance with the unanimous resolution of the Senate regarding the rank of former Prime Ministers in the Table of Precedence? The matter was discussed in this house on February 14, 1961, and a unanimous resolution was passed.

Whether it is accurate or not, my information is that the previous Government wanted to do something about it, but the matter remains unattended to. I wonder if the present Government will see to it that the former Prime Ministers of Canada have the rank they are entitled to, by reason of their former office, in the Table of Precedence.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Honourable senators, I have no information at hand on that subject, but I shall make inquiries and report to the house in due course.

UNITED NATIONS ORGANIZATION

MEMBER COUNTRIES—INQUIRY ANSWERED

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot inquired of the Government, pursuant to notice:

1. What countries have signed the Charter of the United Nations?

2. Since 1945, what has Canada done (a) for each one of them and (b) for the United Nations Organization?

3. During that period, what has each of them done for Canada?

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, the answer to the honourable Senator Pouliot's inquiry is as follows:

> The Honourable Senator from De la Durantaye on June 5 asked three questions of a far-reaching nature about Canada and the United Nations. Recalling that the honourable senator has had personal experience of United Nations affairs while serving as an observer at the General Assembly, he will be aware that his questions cannot be answered in detail in the space of a short statement at this time. Accordingly, my remarks are intended to indicate in broad terms the Government's position in relation to the questions asked.
> As regards the countries which signed the United Nations Charter, the following are listed as signatory: Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Byelorussian S.S.R., Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, France, Greece, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, India, Iran, Iraq, Lebanon, Liberia, Luxembourg, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Saudi Arabia, Syria, South Africa, Turkey, Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R., United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yugoslavia.

As for the other two questions, I believe that the following remarks are relevant.

> At San Francisco, Canada readily accepted the United Nations and the specialized agencies as a world-wide system for facilitating the process of international co-operation. Above all, Canadians looked hopefully to the United Nations to provide the institutions and methods for safe-guarding the peace which had been so dearly won. Canada has been in a strong position to give leadership to the middle and small powers and to exert influence in the direction of constructive results. We have enjoyed opportunities which are open to few other countries in the world and Canada has sought to use them wisely in order to strengthen the United Nations and to give real meaning to its purposes and principles. In doing so, Canada has found a satisfactory forum for self-expression far beyond any reasonable expectation based on size of population and developed natural resources. At the same time, Canada has been able in the United Nations to establish and strengthen its relations with most states of the world. This is particularly true of the new states of Africa, whose main interest in international affairs is expressed in the United Nations.

Canada's historical background and national experience have qualified it to assist the emerging nations in meeting some of the problems which they face. While we have placed primary emphasis on the United Nations' role in the maintenance of peace and security, Canada fully recognizes the necessary link between stable peace and improved living standards in the less-fortunate parts of the world.

In practical terms, this has meant that Canada has contributed to United Nations programs of economic and social development. Our contribution has taken the form of technical personnel and financial resources and Canadian facilities have been made available for educational and vocational training. Consequently, Canada has sought to ensure that the United Nations and the specialized agencies were provided with adequate financial resources for their operations which, in the Canadian view, should be based on a collective responsibility shared by all member states. To provide leadership and to set an example, Canada has been prompt in paying its regular assessments and in contributing at a high level to voluntary funds such as the ones established for the United Nations Relief and Works Agency in Palestine, the High Commissioner for Refugees in Europe, the International Children's Emergency Fund, the Special Fund, and the Expanded Program of Technical Assistance.

Honourable senators will be aware that, in addition to its varied contribution to the United Nations programs, Canada has become engaged in bilateral programs of direct assistance for the benefit of less-developed countries and perhaps the most notable examples are to be found under the Colombo Plan.

I hope that these remarks will indicate in a general way the replies to the questions raised. If the honourable senator from De la Durantaye would like more detailed information about the various programs and about the size of the financial contribution, this can be provided for him mainly through publications of the Department of External Affairs.

OFFICIAL REPORT

CORRECTION OF TRANSLATION

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I have to complain about the English translation of my speech of Wednesday last. On that day I spent the evening looking over the copy of my speech and making due corrections with regard to names.

In the first place, when we speak in English and when the reporter is not sure of the spelling of a name, usually he sends us the copy with a pencilled note to draw our attention to the matter, and it is not necessary to read the whole draft of the speech to make the necessary corrections. It is possible to answer simply by saying that the spelling is such and such; for example, the spelling for McRuer is M-c-R-u-e-r instead of M-a-c-K-a-y, and for Delâge, it is D-e-l-â-g-e instead of D-e-s-l-o-g-e-s. It is a very easy correction to make. In the city of Quebec there are many people with the name of Delâge in the telephone directory, and here in Ottawa there are only two. Probably the reporter did not know that the Delâge family existed, although it is a very well-known family in the province of Quebec, and he mixed up the names.

There is something else I wish to mention. When I said in French, "brillant éteignoir de fer blanc"—a brilliant tinplate extinguisher —this is how it was translated, and this I find quite difficult to understand—"the sparkling tin wet-blanket of St. James street". I have never heard that before. It is most remarkable.

Then there was a reference to a delegation of so-called jurists which was sent to Hamburg and then on to "all Asiatic cities". That of course should be "Hanseatic cities". I do not see what a Quebec Bar delegation could do in all the Asiatic cities. Then the word "Bâtonnier" was translated as "president general of the bar", and of course "Bâtonnier" is a word that is not translatable. There is something else about "alter ego" and all that.

When I spoke for the first time in the Senate I spoke in French, and had a considerable amount of trouble about it afterwards. When the speech was concluded I saw the French reporter in my office and he asked me to remake the speech for him. He was feeling nervous, and according to him, I would have to write it again.

On Wednesday night last I had an engagement in the Chateau Laurier to pay tribute to a friend of mine who was the guest of honour. I could not go because I had to stay in my office, in the heat, to correct the proofs of my speech; I had not finished at eleven o'clock, and by that time I had had quite enough.

This has been a lesson to me. In future I shall very seldom speak French. I shall speak in English. I am very sorry, because I believe that the French have the same rights as the English to speak here; but I had so much trouble seven years ago, and again on Wednesday last, that I shall, with your permission, tear this up and ask the translators, for their punishment, to make a good translation of the corrected French text for the bound issue of Hansard at the end of the session. Thank you.

PRIVATE BILLS

THE UNION OF SLAVIC CHURCHES OF EVANGELICAL CHRISTIANS AND BAPTISTS OF CANADA—THIRD READING

Hon. Harry A. Willis moved the third reading of Bill S-19, to incorporate The Union of Slavic Churches of Evangelical Christians and Baptists of Canada.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

FIDELITY MORTGAGE AND SAVINGS CORPORATION—SECOND READING

Hon. William H. Taylor moved the second reading of Bill S-22, to incorporate Fidelity Mortgage and Savings Corporation.

He said: Honourable senators, I have accepted the responsibility of explaining this bill, which is to incorporate under federal charter Fidelity Mortgage and Savings Corporation. There are five petitioners. The first four named in clause 1 of the bill are members of an old-established and responsible legal firm of the city of Hamilton. They have practised law for many years and have the confidence of that community. The fifth petitioner named has been a real estate appraiser in the city of Hamilton for many years.

The petitioners have experience in the particular line of business to be engaged in by this corporation because of their association with an organization known as Fidelity Management Limited, which has been in operation since 1958 under a provincial charter. This last-named company deals in mortgages and investments owned by financial institutions and individuals. It also administers a large portfolio of conventional and National Housing Act first mortgages in the area around the western end of Lake Ontario including Oakville, Burlington, Hamilton and extending into the Niagara Peninsula to the Niagara River, and also the counties of Brant and Norfolk.

As I have said, that company has been in existence provincially since 1958. In 1962 it processed about 400 mortgages, and its assets are now approximately $20 million. The mortgage loans it administers are principally on single-family dwellings.

In addition to Fidelity Management Limited, the petitioners have another company called Wenagara Corporation Limited which deals principally in National Housing Act loans. This company was incorporated as a wholly-owned subsidiary of Fidelity Management Limited in July 1961, and in September 1961 it was appointed an approved lender under the National Housing Act. However, it did not commence operations until the spring of 1962. Since that time the company has processed and committed approximately 150 National Housing Act building loans aggregating a principal amount slightly in excess of $2 million.

The petitioners have the ability and experience to manage the proposed company and direct its operations in the fertile field in which it will operate. I may say, honourable senators, that the area of its operations has a population of approximately one million people. I feel that the petitioners are quite justified in asking for a federal charter, and I urge the Senate in its wisdom to give the bill second reading.

The bill provides that the capital stock of the company shall be $1 million, which may be increased to $5 million. The provisional directors may not call a general meeting until $500,000 of the capital stock has been subscribed, and may not commence business until $500,000 of the capital stock has been subscribed and $200,000 paid thereon. The head office of the company is to be in the city of Hamilton, and the company will have the power of conducting business under the provisions of the Loan Companies Act.

If the bill receives second reading tonight I will move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce. Mr. K. R. MacGregor, Superintendent of Insurance, has been fully informed of the situation with respect to this proposed company, and no doubt he will appear before the committee to give his views. Other officials also will be present to answer any questions that may be asked and to give any information that honourable senators desire.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Taylor (Norfolk), bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

THE UKRAINIAN CANADIAN FOUNDATION OF TARAS SHEVCHENKO—SECOND READING

Hon. John Hnatyshyn moved the second reading of Bill S-21, to incorporate the Ukrainian Canadian Foundation of Taras Shevchenko.

He said: Honourable senators, this is the second occasion upon which I have had the pleasure of explaining this bill. During the final days of the last Parliament this bill passed this house and received second reading in the other place and I believe had almost passed the committee stage when Parliament was suddenly dissolved.

As I explained last fall, prior to 1940 there existed among the Ukrainian people of Canada various cultural, religious and other organizations which carried on their particular activities independently of one another. In 1940 leading citizens, representing these various organizations, decided that all activities should be co-ordinated in order that maximum assistance might be given in all fields of the Canadian war effort. At that time the Department of National War Services welcomed this move, and assisted in bringing about the formation of what has become known as the Ukrainian Canadian Committee.

It was this committee that was to a large extent responsible for the very high enlistment of Canadians of Ukrainian descent during the Second World War, an enlistment somewhat higher than that of the national average.

In the initial stages only five major organizations joined to form the committee, which made a substantial contribution to the mobilization of the armed services during the last war. After the termination of the war the committee was charged with the responsibility of rendering assistance in demobilization and rehabilitation, and also in giving assistance and guidance to immigrants in displaced persons' camps throughout Europe and in Canada.

By the time the challenges of war and post-war problems had been met, the name of the Ukrainian Canadian Committee was very well known. Even now it looks after a number of museums and libraries, and does other similar work. In due course, all political, religious, cultural and educational organizations among Canadians of Ukrainian descent, with the exception of the communist group, have become part of this committee This committee probably represents roughly half a million people.

Many members of the various component organizations are convinced of the necessity of united effort and have indicated their willingness to make substantial donations and bequests for such cultural purposes. For that reason, they wish to assure the continuity of proper management of the funds for the propagation of Ukrainian culture in Canada. They would like to become incorporated, and that is the reason for the introduction of this bill.

The idea of becoming incorporated and following this procedure was endorsed by the old Canada Congress of the Canadian Ukrainian Committee in 1959, and was supported by some 40,000 persons who attended the unveiling of the Taras Shevchenko monument in Winnipeg over a year ago.

If this bill receives second reading, I will be pleased to move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills, where honourable senators may ask any questions they wish and they will be answered by people who will appear on behalf of this organization.

Hon. Mr. Gouin: May I ask just one question? Naturally, I will be happy to accede to the request for second reading but I must admit my ignorance. Was Taras Shevchenko a national hero of the Ukraine?

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: He was one of the most noted poets of his race and was well known internationally as a poet.

Hon. Mr. Gouin: Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: Is the headquarters of the foundation in Winnipeg?

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: Yes, the headquarters is in Winnipeg.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, June 18, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Croll for the second reading of Bill S-6, to make provision for the disclosure of information in respect of finance charges.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, in a way, I have already had my say on this bill, as an identical bill was introduced by the honourable senator for Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll) at the last session. I spoke on it then and my remarks appear in Hansard for November 22 last, at page 299. In the meantime, I have given some further study to this matter.

Honourable senators, I have not changed my views. I fully support the principle of the bill. I still believe that it may be impracticable in its present form. I have grave doubts as to whether, in its present form, it could come within the powers of the federal Parliament. I realize, as I know the sponsor of the bill (Hon. Mr. Croll) does, that it is only a first step, perhaps a token step, and I feel, as I believe he does, that this is an area which urgently requires legislative regulation.

Although I have these objections to the form of the bill, I say this, honourable senators, that rather than have no conclusive action taken by the Senate at this session—I emphasize the word "conclusive"—I would support the bill in its present form, even if I were convinced that it is impracticable and with the doubts I have about its constitutionality.

Honourable senators, the reason I say this is that to some extent the prestige of this honourable chamber is at stake in this matter. Bills similar to the present bill were introduced in previous sessions. The honourable senator who sponsored the bill, speaking on the second reading at this session, as reported in Senate Hansard of June 5, page 86, said:

> Honourable senators, this is the fifth occasion on which I have moved the second reading of a bill similar to Bill S-6.

Honourable senators, it so happens that in the other place this same matter is coming under urgent consideration. By what may or may not be a coincidence, nine resolutions, now printed as bills, have been offered in the other place during this session, all dealing with this general area of interest charges and sales financing charges.

It may be of interest just to enumerate the bills, and I believe it is permissible to do so. They are:

> Bill C-6, an Act to provide for the Control of Consumer Credit.
> Bill C-10, an Act to amend the Interest Act.
> Bill C-9, an Act to amend the Small Loans Act (Advertising).
> Bill C-14, an Act to amend the Small Loans Act.
> Bill C-23, an Act to amend the Small Loans Act (Cost of a loan).
> Bill C-31, an Act to amend the Interest Act (Finance Charges).
> Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Interest Act.
> Bill C-62, an Act respecting Relief against Unconscionable Transactions.
> Bill C-33, an Act to amend the Bills of Exchange Act (Instalment Purchases).

Most of these bills were introduced in the other place by different sponsors.

Honourable senators, I believe that public demand will bring about legislative action in spite of all the difficulties which we have to admit there are in this field.

I think the prestige of the Senate is at stake. In view of the work already done in the Senate, in view of the perseverance—to use his own word—of the honourable senator from Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll), I believe it is important that this bill be moved along at this session and that we have some conclusive action.

I have said that I think there is public demand for this legislation. Some of the evidence of that demand is to be found in those resolutions which were introduced in the other place. The demand has been heard on all sides. The honourable sponsor of the bill presented much of the evidence here on other occasions. I believe that not only is there public demand, but that we are at the point of acceptability within the industry itself. If I read aright the presentations which the industry is making to various commissions, the industry itself is convinced that this business of the charges or the cost of financing the purchase of consumer goods is a veritable jungle. As happens sometimes in business—and when it does so, it always brings about regulation—it has reached the point when the only principle that governs universally—I do not say it governs everybody in the business—is to get what the traffic will bear. There is an abundance of evidence of that in the submissions to the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance.

The principle of taking or getting what the traffic will bear can become, and in some instances in this field does become, as cruel, as ruthless and as relentless as some of the practices in other traffics, in the drug traffic, and another traffic which I shall not name as I do not wish to exaggerate.

At this point I should like to give honourable senators an example of what has become a common practice in the automobile industry. For documentation of this point, I again refer honourable senators to the submissions to the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance. Today a sales finance company enters into an understanding with an automobile retailer. It says, in effect: "We will discount the contracts you make with your customers, and it will cost you so much." Let us say for the sake of argument —because the charges by reputable companies are reasonable—the finance company says, "Bring your paper to us and we will discount it at 8 per cent; you charge the customer 8 per cent, and, in effect, he will be getting his money from us". It is common practice, indeed almost general practice, in the industry today for the automobile retailer to set his own charges—not 8 per cent. He is allowed by the sales finance company to put in any amount he likes, and that becomes what is known as the "dealer reserve". The honourable sponsor of this bill mentioned a case some time ago. I can tell him now that was not an isolated case. So, the retailer is now in the position of saying, "All right, I will charge 12 per cent, and I will pocket the difference. This is a lush business, and I want to get in on it". I believe this to be a common practice, and it is only one example of what happens when an industry like this gets out of control.

Honourable senators, we all give lip service to the Good Book. We all say that our lives are governed by it. I think some people in this business have forgotten to look up the word "usury" in a good concordance. I looked it up, and in 13 of the books of the Bible I found 20 references to the word "usury". In the definitions, the word "interest" is sometimes used. As I am not an expert on Biblical exposition, I will not comment on the word. It seems to me that in those days they said something like this: "Now, there is such a thing as usury, but decent people don't do it to their friends." Let me read from Deuteronomy, Chapter 23, verse 20. This is from the Douay version, the Confraternity edition. Although I am not of that faith, I find that for some reason or other the Douay version of the Bible—and the Confraternity edition is a revision of it—does not tone these things down as much as our Protestant translators do. The twentieth verse reads:

> You shall not demand interest from your countrymen on a loan of money or of food or of anything else on which interest is usually demanded. You may demand interest from a foreigner but not from your countryman.

Honourable senators will recall the beautiful Psalm 14:

> Lord, who shall abide in thy tabernacle? Who shall dwell in thy holy hill?

One of the answers is found in verse 5:

> He that putteth not out his money to usury . . . .

Putting out money to usury has been going on for a long time. What is usury? Well, it is difficult to define. I think that whoever wrote the book of Deuteronomy, or whoever wrote Psalm 14, and we do not know, would have had doubts about the legal rate of interest under our Small Loans Act.

Honourable senators, I have given the black side of the picture, but there is a bright side and it is the conduct of reputable companies in this field. I would say that their interest rates are reasonable. I am speaking of the large companies in the field, particularly those financing their own customers.

Here I am going to refer to one company—and I make no apology for doing so, because it has a fine record in this respect—namely, the T. Eaton Company. That company finances the purchases of its own customers. It wants to keep the rates down. Its form of disclosure is a model. When you inquire from that company, a pamphlet is placed in your hand and they say, "Here is what it will cost you to finance your purchase."

I have one of the pamphlets before me. I had a rather interesting experience with it for when I went in to inquire—I just took this firm as a sample—I asked what it would cost to finance about $400 worth of purchases. The sales clerk showed me the pamphlet and said, "Here it is, right here". And it said 5 per cent. I said, "Well, that is better than I can do at the bank." So I went up to the budget office and asked what it would cost. The lady in charge said it was 5 per cent, and showed me the booklet. I looked at it and said, "No, you are wrong. This is the minimum monthly instalment." She said, "If you purchase $400 worth of goods, you must pay 5 per cent." This was a genuine misunderstanding. The company was not at fault. I think the actual rate was about 8 per cent, which in my view was quite reasonable. But here is the point brought out by the sponsor of the bill (Hon. Mr. Croll), the importance of really clear and, if I may use the word, clean disclosure.

Various methods have been suggested. I do not intend to discuss them this evening; rather, I propose to make suggestions as to how this matter can be dealt with in committee.

Sometimes we hear it said that people should not go into debt. In the debate at this session one honourable senator suggested that the people we might be dealing with in this area were the improvident who had to borrow money, people who cannot live without buying things on instalments. The fact of the matter is that the amount of money owed by individuals generally for the purchase of goods is one of the top indicators of the prosperity of the country. The country that has the highest per capita debt in this field is the United States, and Canada comes second. You can practically rate the economic prosperity of nations by the faith of individuals in their own ability to pay later for goods they want to use now. I do not imagine there is much of this kind of problem in Russia. I do not suppose people are very anxious to extend credit to somebody who may have his door knocked on tonight and who will be in Siberia tomorrow. In other words, I think credit is an important part of our economy in a modern democracy, and I am not in any way suggesting that anything should be done to lessen its use.

The honourable Senator Vaillancourt, in his very excellent speech on this bill—and he is one of the best-known experts in this field in Canada—referred to the good old days when you went in and paid cash and got a discount. I am afraid those good old days have gone. I tried it in the purchase of an automobile. I said to a dealer, who happened to be a friend of mine, "I will pay cash." He replied, "If you do that, you will pay more—we make money on it."

However, I offer a suggestion by way of emphasis rather than in extension of my former remarks. I would like to see this bill go to an appropriate committee of the Senate, so that an opportunity could be given to experts in this field to appear and tell us what they think should be done. I think honourable senators would be surprised to discover that some of them are already on record as being in favour at least of dollar disclosure. In spite of the fact that most of us object on principle to the extension of government regulations, I am confident that the leaders of this industry, if they were required to clear the matter up and had a choice between self-regulation and government regulation, would choose the latter, because they know very well that they are unable to do it themselves. I suggest that leaders in the sales finance business, the consumer loan business—they are much the same—should be called before the committee.

I would like to refer to a brief presented by the Industrial Acceptance Corporation, a highly responsible company, to the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance. They presented excellent submissions. They know the business and its problems, and I am sure they would be prepared to come and discuss them. I think we should also have representatives from banks, from the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and Chambers of Commerce. In this way I believe a consensus of opinion would be reached and that a solution could be found.

First of all, of course, there must be the will to do so. I am asking this evening that there be a declaration of the will of this chamber to do something about this problem, so that we will not a year or so from now find ourselves in the position where the honourable Senator Croll will get up and say, "This is the sixth time that I have moved second reading of this bill." It would be a disgrace to the Senate if that happened, and I think that the members in the other place would take the ball and run with it.

Honourable senators, perhaps this will be the last time that I will be supporting so wholeheartedly a motion from the other side of the house. However, I believe that if we really go to work on this measure in committee we can get from the Senate conclusive legislative action in less than sixty days.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Smith (Kamloops), debate adjourned.

OFFICIAL REPORT

CORRECTION OF TRANSLATION

On the motion to adjourn:

Hon. Edgar Fournier: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order.

I am a little bit disturbed about the remarks made by Senator Pouliot about the press, and even though I may be out of order I would like to say a few words on this subject. I do not think our press deserves what was said.

The Hon. the Speaker: Pardon me, honourable senator, but I heard Senator Pouliot clearly and I do not think he made any reference to the press. What he said, I think, had to do with the translators, not the press.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche): I admit I used the wrong word, Mr. Speaker. I had reference to the reporters of the Senate. I myself am one who has language difficulties and I know that sometimes there are problems in translating my language. However, I do feel they are doing a wonderful job and that it is our duty to help them.

The first remark made by Senator Pouliot concerned the fact that he had another engagement. Speaking for myself, I think it is a very poor excuse, because it would take a miracle man to translate what my honourable friend says at times. He tore a sheet out of the Hansard right in front of all the senators, which I think is not in line with the dignity of the house. Then he said in future he would have to speak in English.

This remark worries me very much because I sincerely believe that the reporters are doing a wonderful job and they have, at times, their problems. I am wondering what the reaction will be across Canada when people read that one French senator said that in the future he will speak English because the translation is so bad. I think it will have very serious repercussions across Canada.

The last remark which I do not approve of is when he said something about punishment, referring to another translation they will have to make in English. Honourable senators, I do not believe that we in this house should punish anybody; on the other hand, I think we should assist and help if we can, especially when it comes to this difficult work of translation.

Honourable senators, I am certainly one of those who cannot agree with the comments and remarks made by my good friend Senator Pouliot against the French reporters of this house.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

LETTER FROM PRIME MINISTER TO PROVINCIAL PREMIERS

CANADA

PRIME MINISTER—PREMIER MINISTRE

June 20, 1963

The Government has placed before Parliament a resolution on contributory old age pensions as the first step in implementing a comprehensive Canada-wide pension program. A copy of this resolution is enclosed for your information. As soon as the Bill has been presented to Parliament, copies will be forwarded to you so that you may be acquainted fully with the details of the Canada Pension Plan which the Government hopes will receive the approval of Parliament.

The new plan is designed to overcome shortcomings in existing federal pension provisions. Benefits from this plan, related to previous earnings, combined with the existing flat-rate pension, will enable Canadians to retire in reasonable security. Pensioners will be afforded the option of obtaining an adjusted pension from age 65.

The advantages of a comprehensive federal plan of this kind include, of course, the fact that it alone can assure full portability of pensions and can enable earnings-related pensions to be paid on a full scale after a relatively short transition period.

However, implementation of the Canada Pension Plan will not in itself be sufficient to meet a number of other closely related problems. The provision of benefits for widows below pension age with dependent children, for orphans and for disabled persons are matters of mutual concern for federal and provincial governments. Since the inclusion of these benefits in a federal program would raise jurisdictional questions, they are not a part of the proposed Canada Pension Plan.

While many provincial governments indicated to my predecessor their willingness to have the jurisdictional question clarified, in my opinion this is an area which requires full consultation and discussion between federal and provincial governments, in order that a satisfactory approach can be worked out. Provincial governments will want to know in some detail what the federal government has in mind with regard to such ancillary benefits. The whole question of joint federal-provincial programs in the field of old age assistance and disability allowances is also involved. The time required to explore these various possibilities, however, need not delay immediate steps for the improvement of benefits for our older citizens.

While the benefits under the proposed, new Federal plan will be relatively generous, there will continue to be an important place for private pension arrangements. These pension arrangements now afford many industrial workers a considerable measure of protection. However, the growth of such plans has brought to the fore a number of special problems. The absence of vesting of employer contributions interferes with labour mobility. The lack of assurance that contributions are set aside for future retirement, when an employee leaves a firm, tends to weaken the effect of such schemes in making adequate provision for retirement benefits. The solvency of private pension plans also continues to be a concern.

Questions such as these have led several of the provincial governments to give consideration to supervision of private pension plans in order to ensure that certain basic standards are met.

Ontario now has legislation designed to achieve these objectives for private pension plans within its jurisdiction. The federal government's interest in this field relates to federal employees, to employees of companies coming within federal jurisdiction, and to reciprocal arrangements which may be necessary for any interprovincial and federal-provincial aspects of this question. The Canada Pension Plan which Parliament will soon be considering will complement any efforts of this nature to ensure portability and solvency of private pension plans.

It is apparent that these matters are of special concern to our respective governments and I would like to suggest that they be the subject of federal-provincial discussions as soon as possible. I would appreciate your letting me know, at your earliest convenience, whether such discussion is acceptable. In the light of this information, I hope shortly to suggest the earliest possible date which seems to be generally convenient for a meeting of Ministers.

The development of more equitable programmes of social welfare measures both now and in the future is a matter of mutual interest. We hope that the discussions proposed will be a constructive means of achieving common objectives.

Yours sincerely,

THE SENATE

Wednesday, June 26, 1963

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

HIS HOLINESS POPE PAUL VI

FELICITATIONS ON ELECTION

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Mr. Speaker, before we proceed with the business of the day, may I say a few words?

Honourable senators, on Thursday last, 80 cardinals of the Roman Catholic Church, representing some 25 countries, elected in succession to John XXIII a new Pope in the person of Giovanni Battista Montini, Archbishop of Milan, who assumed the name Paul VI.

All Christians—indeed, members of every faith throughout the world—joined in extending best wishes to him and in expressing the hope that all mankind would be blessed by his wise and sympathetic administration.

The coronation of His Holiness will take place on Sunday next, June 30, in the Piazza of St. Peter's. We are indeed honoured and proud that our Parliament will be represented on that historic occasion by one of our own distinguished and well-beloved colleagues, the Honourable John J. Connolly. I am sure we all want to add the good wishes of this house to those which the Pontiff has already received.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, I join with the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) in the good wishes he has expressed in connection with the election of His Holiness Pope Paul VI.

I also wish to express my appreciation of the fact that we are to be represented at the coronation of His Holiness by our good friend, Senator John J. Connolly. I know that we shall be well represented by him and that he will bring honour and distinction to the Parliament of Canada.

We were well represented a week ago on the sad occasion of the funeral ceremonies of the late Pope John who was loved by all people of all religions throughout the world. I know we shall be equally well represented on this pleasant occasion, the coronation of His Holiness Pope Paul VI. We are very proud indeed that Senator Connolly will represent us at this time.

(Translation):

Hon. Jean Marie Dessureault: Honourable senators, I would like to associate myself with the sentiments so ably expressed by the Leader of the Government and the Leader of the Opposition regarding His Holiness Pope Paul VI. As a representative of the city of Quebec, which is recognized as the centre of the Roman Catholic faith in Canada, I am sure I will be allowed to add my humble tribute to our new Pope, His Holiness Paul VI.

I have a tender recollection of His Holiness Pope John XXIII whom I had the pleasure of meeting in an audience last year, and whose untimely death was a great loss to mankind, but I thank Divine Providence for giving us as his successor a man so eminently qualified, His Holiness Pope Paul VI.

His Holiness Pope Paul VI, we are sure, will continue the task undertaken by his predecessor, especially as far as peace and Christian unity are concerned.

His election was met with happiness and enthusiasm throughout the world and it opens prospects of an era of friendly and successful relations.

In my capacity as Knight of the Holy Sepulcher of Jerusalem, I would like to express to our new Pope, with the utmost respect, my most sincere wish that his dearest desires become a reality during his reign which, I hope, will be long, fruitful and replete with blessings for the greatest good of humanity.

I wish my honourable colleague, Senator Connolly (Ottawa West) Godspeed; he will represent the Senate and Canada with dignity at the coronation of Pope Paul VI.

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt: Honourable senators, I should like to add a few words, not to repeat what was said, but merely to point out that very few honourable senators in this house had the opportunity to meet the new Pope, His Holiness Paul VI.

In 1950 I was in Rome. Monsignor Montini was at that time secretary of His Holiness Pope Pius XII and I had then the privilege to meet, together with Monsignor Montini, His Holiness the Pope and discuss with him for a few minutes the social problems with which the whole world is faced.

So, I would ask my colleague Senator Connolly (Ottawa West)—I am afraid Monsignor Montini, the present Pope, will not remember me—if he would remind His Holiness that I have in my files a letter from him which I treasure as a precious token of remembrance.

I wish our colleague a happy and fruitful journey.

(Text):

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I would be less than grateful if I did not acknowledge the kind sentiments that have been expressed by the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford), the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks), and the two other senators who have spoken here this afternoon.

I am deeply cognizant of the great honour that has been done me by the Government of Canada in asking me to represent the parliamentarians of Canada at this very significant event in Rome on Sunday. I shall certainly do all I can to represent all of you worthily.

I do say that our colleague Senator Hugessen has made it rather difficult for me to contemplate the prospect of my return, because of the most impressive report which he made on the mission that he accomplished just a week ago. It was, in fact, one of the most impressive speeches that I have ever heard in the Senate. One honourable senator described it as equal to one of Macaulay's essays, which I think is true. So, while I do look forward to this mission with pleasure, I am also concerned as to what I shall have to say when I return.

HON. R. B. HORNER

BIRTHDAY FELICITATIONS

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, before the business of the house is proceeded with, there is another matter I wish to mention.

My attention is called to the fact that this is an important day in the life of one of our most distinguished colleagues, the honourable senator from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner). This is his 79th birthday.

I would not undertake to catalogue the many distinguished activities he has pursued in the Senate and outside. They are well known. One of his greatest accomplishments was his marrying some years ago a fine young lady and raising, as I know, one of the most distinguished families in Canada.

I want to wish him many more years with his family, with his grandchildren and, I hope, some, if not many, great-grandchildren.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I would like to join with the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) in extending felicitations to our great friend who sits on the Opposition side of the house. We are always glad to see him in his place, and we hope that he will be there for many years to come.

In consulting the Canadian Parliamentary Guide, I find an interesting feature is that Senator Horner was born in the province of Quebec of an Irish father; but there is a redeeming feature in that his mother was Scottish. So, being born in Quebec, with Scottish and Irish blood tingling in his veins, we can all understand why he is such a full-blooded and red-blooded Canadian.

I am pleased to join with the Leader of the Opposition in his reference to Mrs. Horner. I should also note that distinction has come to the honourable senator from the fact that he has in the other house—and I do not know whether this is without precedent—two sons and a nephew. It is my wish that all good things will be his in the future.

Hon. R. B. Horner: Honourable senators, you are most kind. I find that seventy-nine is what I call an awkward age. I have had a fair time and a fair chance in life, and I cannot complain on that score. On the other hand, I am not old enough to boast of my great length of years, so that is why I call it an awkward age. However, thank you all very much for your kindness.

OFFICIAL REPORT

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I rise with mixed feelings. I have just a word to say in answer to my young friend, the honourable "lecturer" from Madawaska-Restigouche (Hon. Mr. Fournier). He surprised me very much. He is a nice fellow, but I never thought that he was a rigorist. He complained that I had said that I had another engagement on Wednesday night.

The Senate does not sit on Wednesday nights. Even the Divorce Committee, which sits practically every day of the week, as a rule, does not sit on Wednesday nights. He thought that because I am a member of the Senate I am bound to stay all the time in my office. However, I do not wish to conceal that it was a function to pay tribute to a friend of mine. Therefore I do not consider it was my duty to stay over here to please him. Shall I not have certain leeway as a member of the Senate, and who should tell me what my duties are except you, Mr. Speaker?

The honourable senator also said that it would take a miracle man to translate what I have to say at times. It is unfortunate if he does not understand what I say; others can. I stated it was a wrong report and a wrong translation of what I said because it becomes part of the record, and Hansard is my defence when there is any discussion about the debates.

With regard to punishment, I did not suggest that the reporters or the translators ought to write in longhand seven psalms of penance. I just suggested enough time, till the end of the session, to make a good report and a correct translation of what was said.

The report is in fact already made and corrected, and all that remains to be done is a satisfactory translation.

I hate to have to do this, but I shall have to speak in Latin to the honourable gentleman. I wish to cite for him an incident involving the great painter Appeles who lived in the fourth century before Christ. A shoemaker saw a painting of his and had something unpleasant to say about the sandals portrayed, and Appeles said "Sutor, ne supra crepidam", which means "Shoemaker, not higher than the sole".

That is all I have to say now.

PRIVATE BILLS

ALLSTATE LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA—FIRST READING

Hon. John M. Macdonald, for Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson, presented Bill S-28, to incorporate Allstate Life Insurance Company of Canada.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Cape Breton) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next.

Motion agreed to.

THE SOVEREIGN LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA—FIRST READING

Hon. John M. Macdonald, for Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson, presented Bill S-29, respecting The Sovereign Life Assurance Company of Canada.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Cape Breton) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald tabled:

Report on the Old Age Security Fund and of temporary loans made to the fund during the year ended March 31, 1963, pursuant to section 11(4) of the Old Age Security Act, chapter 200, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

PRIVATE BILL

GENERAL MORTGAGE SERVICE CORPORATION OF CANADA—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the following report:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce to whom was referred the Bill S-20, intituled: "An Act respecting General Mortgage Service Corporation of Canada", have in obedience to the order of reference of Tuesday, June 18, 1963, examined the said bill and now report the same with the following amendment:—

Page 1, lines 13 and 14:—Strike out "Compagnie Générale Mortgage Service du Canada" and substitute therefor "Société Générale d'Hypothèque du Canada".

A similar bill in this matter was approved by this committee during the last session of Parliament, but owing to the sudden dissolution of Parliament in February last, the proceedings on the bill were not completed.

Your committee recommend that the Parliamentary fees paid upon the bill of the last session apply to the bill of this session. It is noted that the promoters have again paid the printing costs.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: With leave of the Senate I move that this report be taken into consideration now.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Cape Breton), for Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson, moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE

INQUIRY AS TO ANY REQUESTS OR REPRESENTATIONS FOR AMENDMENT OF BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT WITH REFERENCE TO LEGISLATIVE JURISDICTION RE MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE

On the notice of inquiry of Hon. Mr. Pouliot of March 28, 1962:

Referring (a) to the first seven words of section 129 of the B.N.A. Act, 1867, about the continuance of pre-Confederation existing Laws, Courts, Officers, etc., namely, "Except as otherwise provided by this Act",

—(b) to "the exclusive legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada" extending to marriage and divorce in virtue of subsection (26) of section 91 of the said act, with the exception of the exclusive powers of Provincial Legislatures to make laws "for the solemnization of marriage", in virtue of subsection (12) of section 92 of the said act, and

—(c) the interpretation of the said law by the Supreme Court of Canada and the Privy Council on appeal from the Supreme Court of Canada in the matter of a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada of certain questions concerning marriage, (1912 A.C., p. 880)—

1. Did the Government receive any formal request from any province or any specific representation from anyone to the effect that the B.N.A. Act, 1867, should be amended by repealing subsection (26) of section 91 of the said act?

2. If so, from whom and when?

3. In view of the Statutes of Canada:

45 V., (1882), c. 42;
53 V., (1890), c. 36;
13-14 Geo. V, (1923) c. 19;
22-23 Geo. V, (1932) c. 10;

and the Revised Statutes of Canada:

c. 105 of 1906;
c. 127 of 1927: and
c. 176 of 1952, the latter being intituled "An Act respecting Marriage and Divorce", did the Government of Canada receive any specific representation or any formal request from anyone to the effect that the Parliament of Canada, in virtue of the exclusive legislative authority conferred upon itself by subsection (26) of section 91 of the B.N.A. Act, should repeal article 1301 of the Civil Code of the Province of Quebec and the second paragraphs of articles 1265 and 1422 of the said Code, and amend articles 179 and 180 of the said Code concerning the rights of married women in the Province of Quebec?

4. If so, from whom and when?

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, this inquiry was made for the first time on March 28 of last year. On April 10, I said:

> The expected answer to the inquiry is: 1. Nobody; 2. Answered by No. 1; 3. Nobody; 4. Answered by No. 3. That is the answer I expect, but I would like it from an official source, for then I will be in a position to elaborate on the matter to the satisfaction of honourable senators.

Honourable senators, the 1962 session ended on April 18 of last year without any answer having been given, the Minister of Justice having been running away from his seat in the other house to preside over political conventions. This was apparently why the question was not answered.

However, I was not discouraged, and at the beginning of the last session I put the same question on the Order Paper again. On October 31, my genial friend the Honourable Lionel Choquette, who was acting Leader of the Government of the day gave me the same answer as that which I had expected on April 10.

Now, what I want to know is, what has happened since October 31 of last year when my honourable friend answered the question as aforesaid.

I now ask the same question as to information from November 1, 1962 until the present. I want to know:

> If representations have been made by anyone to the Government of Canada, either for the transfer of the federal jurisdiction over marriage and divorce to the provinces, or,
> If anyone has asked the Government of Canada for a federal amendment to the civil laws on marriage, and if so, who in either case?

PRIVATE BILLS

THE BOARD OF TRADE OF METROPOLITAN TORONTO—SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

> Second reading of Bill S-25 intituled: "An Act respecting The Board of Trade of Metropolitan Toronto". (Honourable Senator Willis).

Hon. Harry A. Willis: Honourable senators, may I ask that this order stand for consideration on Wednesday next, July 3. When I moved yesterday that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading today I did not know that in doing so I was transgressing the rules of the house. Therefore, I would ask to have it dealt with on Wednesday next.

Order stands.

CO-OPERATIVE FIRE AND CASUALTY COMPANY—MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Donald Cameron moved the second reading of Bill S-26, respecting Co-operative Fire and Casualty Company.

He said: Honourable senators, in discussing this bill today I am aware of the agreement reached yesterday, and I say at once that I would be reluctant to break the rules of this house by asking that it be read a second time today. The arrangement suggested by the honourable Senator Roebuck, that the bill might be discussed today and voted on on Thursday, is quite satisfactory. I would ask my colleague honourable Senator Stambaugh to handle it for me if I am not here. I will have to leave by air shortly after 4 p.m. tomorrow and the house may not get to the bill by that time. I would like to have it disposed of, if possible, and therefore I would appreciate your courtesy.

Honourable senators will recall that this bill was given first reading on December 12 last and given second reading on December 18, 1962 just before the Christmas recess. Like so many other bills, it was not put through its final stages before Parliament dissolved on February 6.

Briefly, and historically, it may be said that the Co-operative Fire and Casualty Company was established by special Act of Parliament in the session of 1951. Since that time the company has continued in a pattern of sound growth and development until today it represents an important element in the insurance field in Canada. Present prospects are that the company will continue to grow, and the proposed change set forth in this bill will strengthen the capital structure of the company by converting it from a mutual to a joint stock company.

The present contributors to the current fund of the company, all being members of the co-operative movement in Canada, will be given the opportunity to convert their contributions of approximately $1,100,000 into shares of the capital stock of the company. The resulting shareholders will have exclusive voting rights after the expiry date of existing insurance policies, but surpluses may continue to be paid to the policyholders as before.

One of the main changes to be brought about by the bill will be that control of the company will be in the hands of the shareholders rather than in the hands of the policyholders as at present. However, it should be emphasized that as both policyholders and stockholders are all members of the co-operative movement in Canada there is really not much change in control. The change will simply consolidate control where it already exists, in the hands of the co-operative movement in Canada.

Section 4 (1) refers to the schedule of the bill and converts the presently contributed capital stock in the amount of $919,700 instead of the totally contributed capital of $1,100,000. The reason for the difference between presently contributed capital and converted capital is that there are some original contributors who, because of their present charters or by-laws, are unable to invest in share capital in this way. There are other contributors, mostly small ones, who would rather have their capital paid back as soon as the company is able to do so instead of having the money converted to capital stock. The amount involved in this respect is only $180,300. If at a later time a contributor wishes to convert his contribution to share capital, he may do so under section 4 (2).

Then, under section 4(4), the company can, when able, repay any cash contributions which may have been advanced and not previously converted to capital stock. The directors may pay interest on such contributed cash at the rate of 6 per cent.

Under section 3 the capital stock of the converted company is to be $2 million, and this may be increased to $5 million, divided into shares of $100 each.

If the company should require additional capital in the future it may obtain it in the same way as it obtained the original contributions, namely, from the co-operative organizations themselves.

Under section 8 of the bill, distribution of surpluses will continue to be made to policyholders as it was in the past. This section is exactly the same as the one dealing with this matter in the earlier act. While it is not specifically mentioned in the act, it is proposed that the by-laws will limit dividends to shareholders to a maximum of 6 per cent, in the same way as return to contributors of capital was specified in the old act at 6 per cent. The net result will be that the return of surpluses earned by the company, if any, will continue to be made to policyholders, after nominal return on capital has been made to the shareholders.

Honourable senators, I think those are the main points in the bill. If the bill receives second reading, I shall propose that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it has been moved by the honourable Senator Cameron, seconded by the honourable Senator Woodrow, that this bill be now read the second time. Is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Honourable senators, in view of the arrangement made in the discussion on this bill last evening, I am quite willing to move the adjournment of the debate for next sitting.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Hugessen, debate adjourned.

KINROSS MORTGAGE CORPORATION—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. John J. Connolly moved the second reading of Bill S-27, to incorporate Kinross Mortgage Corporation.

He said: Honourable senators, I do appreciate the indulgence of the Senate in allowing me to explain this bill on second reading today. At the conclusion of my remarks the debate will be adjourned to permit anyone who may wish to speak on it tomorrow to do so.

Kinross Mortgage Corporation will be incorporated as a parliamentary company, or a company incorporated by act of Parliament, but pursuant to the provisions of the Loan Companies Act, which is chapter 170 of the Revised Statutes of Canada.

The bill is a very simple one, because its format is set out in Schedule A to the Loan Companies Act. The incorporators are all Canadians, well-known in the business community of the city of Toronto. The capital stock of the company will be $10 million, and it may be increased to $20 million, subject to the provisions of the Loan Companies Act.

The bill also requires that before a first general meeting of the company is held, $500,000 must be subscribed; and the company will not be permitted to carry on business until $1 million of the capital stock has been subscribed and $500,000 paid thereon.

May I say for the benefit of honourable senators that companies incorporated in this fashion are subject to the supervision of the Superintendent of Insurance, who will of course be present in committee when the bill is given detailed study there.

Perhaps it would be helpful if I said that in 1962 the Senate passed—indeed, I believe Parliament passed—a bill to incorporate a similar company called Greymac Mortgage Corporation, and there was a debate at that time on a measure which was similar to this one.

I am also authorized to say that the applicants do not propose to take over any existing business or company; this is a new venture. They have no plans at the present time to accept deposits, which is a power they could exercise under the provisions of the Loan Companies Act.

The head office of the company will be in Toronto, and in the beginning it will do most of its business there but it does plan to expand to other parts of Canada. It is not contemplated at present that any public offering of stock will be made. Generally, I think it can be said that the proposed undertaking of the company will be to lend money on the security of real estate and leaseholds.

As I said at the outset, the bill will be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce. If there are questions that I can answer today, I will be happy to do so. In any event, the debate will be adjourned this afternoon.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Leonard, debate adjourned.

The Senate resumed from Thursday, June 20, consideration of His Excellency the Administrator's speech at the opening of the session, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Lefrançois, seconded by Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland), for an address in reply thereto.

Hon. Muriel McQ. Fergusson: Honourable senators, when on Thursday last I moved the adjournment of the debate in the name of the honourable Senator Kinley, I expected that he would be here today. Unfortunately, he is not able to be present, and I understand that the honourable Senator Belisle is prepared to speak. I would ask, therefore, that he be heard today, and that I may reserve the right to adjourn the debate on behalf of the honourable Senator Kinley at the conclusion of the honourable Senator Belisle's speech.

(Translation):

Hon. Rheal Belisle: Mr. Speaker, I would like to offer you my personal congratulations on your recent appointment to the Senate and also to the Chair of this august assembly.

Honourable senators, even though I have known His Honour the Speaker for only a short time it did not take me very long to realize that the numerous years he spent in the House of Commons have been an excellent preparation for his noble task here.

May I also offer my congratulations to the mover and the seconder of the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. Both made a noteworthy contribution.

Honourable senators, it is with great emotion and some trepidation that I address this august assembly for the first time since I was appointed to the Senate. In spite of my fruitful experience in the Ontario legislature, I must admit that I feel overwhelmed by the task expected of me. My heart is filled with apprehension at the thought of the great men of today and of yesterday who have added or will add to the prestige of this house.

It was a great honour conferred upon me by the then Prime Minister, the Right Honourable John Diefenbaker, and I owe him an enormous debt of gratitude that I will never be able to repay. It goes without saying that I am honoured and happy; honoured to find myself in such esteemed company and happy to have been chosen to represent northern Ontario. My predecessor, the late honourable Senator Raoul Hurtubise, was one of those Canadians who, by their active faith and their unceasing devotion, contributed the most to the cultural development of northern Ontario. Chairman of the Sudbury School Board for 18 years, member for Nipissing and Sudbury in the House of Commons, Senator Hurtubise added to his illustrious career by many years of service in this august chamber. That is why the Historical Society of New Ontario published this distinguished senator's biography in one of its historic documents.

I humbly accept the signal honour conferred upon me as the successor of such a respected and venerable senator. Honourable senators, I simply ask you to be kind enough to accept me among you as a man who will try to be his worthy successor and who is determined to acquire over the years a few of the sterling qualities which endeared him to all those who knew him.

When I was sworn in I had the pleasure of being accompanied by the leader of my party, Senator Brooks, P.C., and the assistant leader, my good friend Senator Lionel Choquette who, like myself, is a representative in the Senate of the French-speaking people of Ontario. I know that I can always rely on their support and their kind advice.

(Text):

Honourable senators, may I be permitted to say a few words of gratitude about our great leader the Right Honourable John Diefenbaker. He thought it important that the nickel belt of the world, with all its ethnic groups which populate that area, should be represented in this distinguished assembly. As can be seen, throughout his administration the Right Honourable John Diefenbaker enriched the Government by fostering bilingualism.

Mr. Diefenbaker is no summer soldier or sunshine patriot who shirks from service to his country. Here is a man with the courage to stand up and be counted on the contentious issues of the day, a man who has a genius, and this I stress, for espousing with driving force and clarity the aims, the ideals and the record of the Canadian nation.

I know no more persuasive advocate at the bar of public thought than our great and good friend; I know no more dynamic exponent of our system of free enterprise. He is reputed as a man of principle who has brought prestige to Canada throughout the world. Was he not the pride of the Canadian people when he championed the cause of liberty of the oppressed nations at the United Nations Assembly?

I am convinced that it will not be too long before the Right Honourable Mr. Diefenbaker is chosen again as our Prime Minister. I certainly would like to see him Prime Minister for our centennial celebration.

As member of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario for the great riding of Nickel Belt I have had the privilege of officially opening one hundred schools and sponsoring four universities. I would like today to speak on the financial status of our universities in asking the Government for much-needed assistance, as I am convinced that only through government help can the universities meet the present challenge of our cultural relations in Canada.

(Translation):

Honourable senators, may I warmly commend the Laurentian University of Sudbury, one of the two bilingual universities in Ontario, and its three federated denominational universities. To all those who have worked for the materialization of this gigantic project, devoting to it much time and effort, I want to tender my most sincere thanks on behalf of northern Ontario. They include, among others, His Excellency Bishop Alexandre Carter, Catholic bishop of Sault Ste. Marie diocese and chancellor of the University of Sudbury; Reverend Lucien Matte, president of the University of Sudbury, and Reverend Father Emile Bouvier, first president; Dr. Harold Bennett, president of Laurentian University; the Right Reverend Dr. Earl S. Lautenslager of the United Church, president of Huntington University; the Right Reverend L. Wright, Anglican archbishop of Sault Ste. Marie diocese, and chancellor of Thorneloe University. The co-operation of these men was so significant that, without them, Laurentian University would not be what it is today, that is to say, a living example of unity in diversity.

Here is the historic background of the institution. Since 1900, the people and the clergy of northern Ontario wanted a classical college. Because of the many geographical, religious and economic advantages, Sudbury was chosen. In 1913, the Jesuits founded Sacred Heart College. On April 3, 1957, it was authorized by legislation to change the name of Sacred Heart College to that of University of Sudbury.

May I sincerely congratulate the Company of Jesus for having, in the past fifty years, given us such devoted educators who made the development of religious vocations possible throughout northern Ontario, more particularly with regard to the secular clergy, and our prominent professional laity. May I also commend Dr. Earl S. Lautenslager of the United Church who, with his wide and open mind, largely contributed and helped lay the foundations of unity. I am proud to note that his high qualities have been recognized by his own church who appointed him principal of Emmanuel College in Toronto. I tender the same wishes to the Anglican Church and to the Right Reverend L. Wright, who is so much appreciated.

Thanks to the co-operation between representatives of the Roman Catholic, United and Anglican Churches, the Government passed on March 28, 1960, the bills concerning three university institutions in New Ontario.

Laurentian University is a bilingual and non-sectarian institution. Three universities representing three various religious groups are federated: the University of Sudbury (Catholic) Huntington University (United Church of Canada) and Thorneloe University (Anglican). This last institution is still at the organization stage.

The academic structure is quite similar to that of the University of Toronto. The faculties of arts and science give courses leading to a general B.A. with honours; there are courses in commerce and engineering, and university nursing schools. The professional faculties of law, medicine, engineering and others will be established later on.

I had the privilege of attending on May 27 last the third annual commencement of Laurentian University, when it conferred honorary doctors' degrees upon Honourable John Robarts, premier of Ontario, and Reverend Dr. Earl Lautenslager, president of Huntington University, thus repeating the gesture made in 1961 when His Excellency Governor General Georges-P. Vanier was so honoured, and in 1962 when Honourable Leslie M. Frost and Reverend Father Emile Bouvier also received honorary degrees.

(Text):

It was with great interest that I took note of a brief of the Canadian Universities Foundation, presented by President Claude T. Bissell of the University of Toronto and a Foundation delegation to Prime Minister Pearson, asking for more than $300 million in interim assistance in the next three years to help swelling enrolment. Interim aid is needed to help the universities over the period until a comprehensive survey of financing of higher education is completed about 1965.

What is the position of the Canadian Government regarding financial aid to universities?

I was pleased to read in the 1962 Throne Speech that legislation was proposed on university grants which was to include authorization of payment of the higher grants announced early in 1962 to provide alternative arrangements where supplementary provincial grants are made in lieu of federal grants. Unfortunately, there was no mention of any help or any assistance for our universities in the 1963 Throne Speech. What has happened to the Liberal promise made during the last election campaign that some 10,000 bursaries of $1,000 each would be made available to Canadian students?

Today we are witnessing throughout the world what has been referred to as the governmentalization of higher education. What this means, in its simplest form, is that the universities are just too important to be left to flourish in noble and indigent ease. However, universities cannot fit easily into any existing government method of institutional control. In this new age of governmentalization, I think it is important for universities to formulate their own Bill of Rights—the freedoms that they think are basic to their own welfare, the violation of which would threaten their very existence. The three basic freedoms, in my opinion, would be: freedom to determine who shall be taught; freedom to determine what shall be taught; and freedom to determine who shall teach. These are not absolute freedoms, yet a university must never abdicate its right to make the final decisions in any of these areas, for abdication in one means abdication in all.

I understand that under the British North America Act education is the exclusive field of the provinces. But is it not time that a sincere probing be made into this very important but obsolete legislation? If bilingualism is to survive and be established from Bonavista to Vancouver the federal Government, in co-operation with the provinces, should be allowed to find a new formula that would give protection to all minorities and, at the same time, give the federal Government an open door for them to assist education at the university level. Such assistance should be given to all institutions of higher learning that have been recognized provincially, regardless of their denomination or language, for history has shown that it is those very confessional universities which have best championed the bilingual cause, of which we hear so much today from the leaders of all political parties.

Education is a better safeguard of liberty than a standing army. If we retrench the wages of the schoolmaster, and especially if we neglect to provide more generous assistance to our universities, we will have to make way for more recruiting sergeants. As Daniel Webster said:

> Knowledge does not comprise all which is contained in the large term of education. The feelings are to be disciplined; the passions are to be restrained; true and worthy motives are to be inspired; a profound religious feeling is to be instilled, and pure morality inculcated under all circumstances. All this is comprised in education.

I now come to my point. We have in Canada universities which can provide our youth with such an education. But in order to survive, these universities must benefit from much-needed governmental help which would assure their financing.

Generally speaking it can be said that many universities owe their existence to churches, to later on unite into a federation and continue to provide wisdom as well as knowledge through moral training coupled with economic and technical instruction.

It has been said lately that unfairness has arisen due to the professed adherence of certain universities to certain churches. But has it not been proven that religion is a part of man? In 1945 the world powers dedicated to freedom assembled in San Francisco to chart the future United Nations, leaving out altogether God and all religious adherence in order to please materialistic and communist countries. What then are the future prospects of this great assembly?

"Educate men without religion, and you make them but clever devils," said Wellington.

Having witnessed the spending of some $10 million in the Sudbury district on the building of technical and vocational schools, I would like to pay tribute to the work of the Honourable Michael Starr and the Diefenbaker Government. This has proven to be a great boon not only to the Sudbury area but to Canada as a whole. We all know that small communities are in no position to build their own technical schools, and this generous assistance given by the Government of that time permitted them to give their children the same advantages of attaining technical and vocational training as those in large centres. Honourable senators, I would like to emphasize that this was the finest piece of legislation enacted by any government to give the people greater opportunities to achieve a better life.

And now, honourable senators, in view of what has been done and immensely appreciated by the people, I would like to ask what is the intention of the present Government in this field? The people are expecting, and have every right to expect, continued contributions to expand this necessary program of technical and vocational training which should be made available also to other communities throughout our country. However, I consider that the property owners should not be additionally burdened with the high maintenance cost of operating these schools. Surely the federal Government should feel its responsibility with the provinces in this request and should give aid to improve the technical and vocational training at least as a partial solution to the unemployment problem.

French culture in Canada has proven itself to be dynamic and has made a large contribution to the general culture of Canada. This fact must be recognized in a revised constitution. Consideration should also be given to the cultural contributions of all ethnic groups which have helped to build up this great nation of ours.

Canada now needs a group of men and women with the courage, the vision and the leadership to give this country a cultural identity which will include the basic recognition of the two partners of Confederation and provide for the inclusion of the cultural contributions of other ethnic groups.

We must be sensitive to change what is bad; we must be determined to hold fast to what is good, so that our great country can live through not only its centennial but many more such celebrations, and also gain prestige throughout the world as a great democratic nation.

On motion of Hon. Mrs. Fergusson, for Hon. Mr. Kinley, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald tabled:

Report on the Vocational Rehabilitation of Disabled Persons Act for the year ended March 31, 1963, pursuant to section 12 of the said act, chapter 26, Statutes of Canada, 1960-61. (English text).

Copy of the publication titled: "Canada and the United Nations, 1961". (English and French texts).

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. A. K. Hugessen, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, presented the following report of the committee on Bill S-16, to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge and tunnel across the St. Lawrence River at the Boucherville Islands, in the province of Quebec:

Your committee recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 200 copies in French of their proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I move, with leave, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Mr. Hugessen reported that the committee had considered Bill S-16, to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge and tunnel across the St. Lawrence River at the Boucherville Islands, in the Province of Quebec, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Paul H. Bouffard moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, July 2, 1963, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON RESTAURANT

OMISSION OF NOTICE OF MEETING TO MEMBER

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Thomas Reid: Before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, I have a personal matter I should like to place before the Leader of the Government and all honourable senators.

Since being appointed to the Senate I have had the privilege and honour of serving on the Joint Committee on the Restaurant. After examining the new cafeteria which has been installed in the West Block, I was looking forward to a meeting of that committee and I wondered why none had been held. I knew nothing at all of any committee meeting until the other day when I received notification that a meeting had been held. I understand that all members of the committee but myself had notice of that meeting.

I believe the responsibility for this omission rests with the Speaker of the House of Commons. Further, I understand that a copy of the report of that committee has been sent to all its members except myself. Therefore, I am appealing to His Honour the Speaker and am asking him if he would be good enough to take my name off the list of members serving on the Restaurant Committee.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I believe it would be most unfortunate were we to lose the services of Senator Reid on the Restaurant Committee. He has been a member of that committee for many years, and I find that the food and service have improved over the years. I think this improvement is due, in some measure, to the interest which he and the other senators who serve on this committee have displayed in the work of the committee.

I am sure all honourable senators would like Senator Reid to remain a member of the committee. We regret this oversight in the matter of notice of the meeting. I am glad that he absolves the Speaker of this House of any responsibility in this regard. I am certain that such an omission will never occur again. I am sure I speak on behalf of all honourable senators in asking Senator Reid to reconsider his decision to retire from the committee.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

The Hon. the Speaker: Perhaps as co-chairman of the Restaurant Committee I should apologize to the honourable senator because he did not receive notice of its meeting. We had one meeting, as far as I recall, and there was at that time a subcommittee appointed to examine some of the questions raised at the first meeting. I join the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford) in saying that that committee cannot afford to lose such an able member as the honourable Senator Reid, and I hope he will reconsider his request.

PRIVATE BILLS

GENERAL MORTGAGE SERVICE CORPORATION OF CANADA—THIRD READING

Hon. John M. Macdonald, for Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson, moved the third reading of Bill S-20, respecting General Mortgage Service Corporation of Canada.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Cameron for the second reading of Bill S-26, respecting Co-operative Fire and Casualty Company.

Hon. A. K. Hugessen: Honourable senators, I have no comment to make on this bill. The reason I moved the adjournment yesterday afternoon was that the motion for second reading had been made by Senator Cameron and I wished to implement the understanding arrived at in this house that it would not receive second reading yesterday, only one day after its first reading.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, may I make some comments on this bill at this time? I had expected Senator Cameron would be in the chamber, but I believe he had to leave early to catch a plane. However, I told him I would bring forward some of the points that I discussed with him, and I believe he is prepared to have them discussed when the bill goes to committee. I speak at this time because I am not a member of the committee to which I believe this bill will be referred, and I understand that not all these points were brought up in committee before.

The purpose of the bill, as I understand it, is to convert a mutual insurance company into a joint stock company, that is, a company in which the ownership and control will pass from the policy owners to certain shareholders. As I read the bill, the new owners will not be the old owners, and the Parliament of Canada is being asked to take the ownership from one group of policy owners and give it to another group of shareholders.

I am not objecting to that in principle, if the policy owners agree. I do think, however, it is important that in committee we make very certain that the policy owners of this company are well aware of what the Parliament of Canada is being asked to do.

An interesting fact is that this mutual company, which obviously was set up as a mutual company because it operates in the general field of the co-operative movement, has found it desirable or necessary to change its structure from one in which ownership rests with the policy owners or the customers, which I understand is the basic principle of the co-operative movement, to one in which 18 other entities—admittedly, still in the co-operative movement, but as entities which are not customers or policyholders—will have the ownership. I think it should be made very clear whether this is the intention of the wording of the bill.

It is also interesting to know that in this great co-operative movement the other type of structure, the joint stock company or the shareholder company which has served other forms of private enterprise so well, seems to be a desirable form for this particular company. Perhaps there is a lesson in that, but I will not enlarge on it at this particular time.

I wonder also if this change will affect the tax advantages presently enjoyed by this company as a mutual co-operative company. Will it, in its new structure under its new ownership, still retain the tax advantages that it now has as a co-operative?

It is rather interesting to note that according to the schedule to this bill, the new owners will be 18 central co-operatives, as we may call them. By that I mean they are not small, local co-operatives. These are fairly large bodies. Six of them are in Alberta, one in British Columbia, six in Manitoba, two in Saskatchewan, one in Nova Scotia and two in New Brunswick. By geographical distribution this is not, apparently, a small matter.

I do not know whether this particular type of change has been petitioned for before by the co-operative movement, but I certainly think that the reasons for it are worth study and that the petitioners should be asked by the committee to give their reasons and assurance to the committee that the present policyholders from whom we are asked to take ownership are fully aware of that fact, and that they join in the petition which, presumably, comes from the management of the company.

It is quite clear from the bill that this does involve this transfer of ownership. The explanatory note says:

> The purpose of this act is to convert the company from a mutual to a joint stock company. The present contributors to the guarantee fund of the company, being members of the co-operative movement across Canada, will be given the opportunity to convert their contributions into shares of the capital stock of the company.

As I understand it, at the present time they are guarantors to the extent of something close to a million dollars. The explanatory note says that they will be given the opportunity to convert their contributions into shares of the capital stock of the company. It then goes on to say:

> The resulting shareholders will have exclusive voting rights after the expiry date of existing policies,—

In other words, the present policy owners, after their policies expire, will cease to be shareholders. The explanatory note then says:

> —but surpluses may continue to be paid to policyholders as before.

It does not say that surpluses will be paid.

From my reading of the bill I would conclude that if there are surpluses their disposition would be under the control of these new owners. It is fair to say that provision is made for the present policyholders to continue their voting rights as long as their policies are not expired, but the explanatory note does not make it clear whether their voting rights will in aggregate amount to control. I do not think that that is contemplated. I think these 18 central co-operatives will become the new owners. I am not sure of that, but that is my reading of the bill.

Subsection (2) of section 2 of the bill in part reads:

> The converted company shall be composed of the contributors listed in the schedule to this act, together with such other persons as may become shareholders—

And then it makes provision for the present policyholders to continue to have a vote while their policies are in force.

If the bill passes there will then be these 18 new owners, and the surpluses will be, within the law, under their control. What would be the position if, instead of all the policy owners deciding, these new owners decided to use these funds for such a purpose as making a contribution to a political party? What would be the position or the rights of the policy owners?

At the present time, if such a move were contemplated, certainly the policy owners would have to be consulted. If these 18 groups, with specific interests, some of them political interests, and in some cases political bias, should decide to use some funds for this purpose, what would be the position then?

I think these questions should be asked, and I am sorry that the sponsor of the bill, honourable Senator Cameron, is not in the chamber. However, I did indicate to him that I would raise some of these questions and I am quite prepared to leave it at that, with the hope that they will be examined when the bill goes to committee.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I think honourable Senator Grosart has raised an important point in connection with this bill. I have not studied the measure in detail, but I would be very much concerned if a bill of this kind were passed without due inquiry by the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, or some other committee, so that the rights of all parties would be duly protected.

As honourable Senator Grosart says, it is not enough to ask some questions, which may be answered by somebody. In my opinion that is not sufficient. I would not be prepared to vote for a bill which took rights away from one set of parties and gave them to another without the consent in writing of the individuals whose rights are being transferred or obliterated.

I would think—and I speak as a lawyer in this regard—that the Banking and Commerce Committee must see to it that consent is given in writing by everyone who has rights which are to be taken away by this bill. It is not a question of majority decision; each individual has rights, which we have no justification for taking from him without his consent.

Honourable senators, perhaps it would be wise to let this matter stand until honourable Senator Cameron returns. There is no hurry about passing it. I would like to hear what he, as the sponsor of this bill, has to say before we consider it further. If no one else wishes to speak on it, I will move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck, debate adjourned.

KINROSS MORTGAGE CORPORATION—SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Honourable Senator Connolly (Ottawa West) for the second reading of Bill S-27, to incorporate Kinross Mortgage Corporation.

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard: Honourable senators, my position with respect to this bill is the same as that of the honourable Senator Hugessen with respect to the bill with which we have just been dealing.

I adjourned the debate in order that we might carry out the suggestion of the honourable Senator Roebuck to allow the honourable Senator Connolly (Ottawa West) to explain the bill yesterday and then the debate be adjourned until today, in compliance with the rule requiring the regular two days' notice before a bill receives second reading.

Honourable senators, if no one wishes to speak on the bill, I would suggest that the motion by the honourable Senator Connolly (Ottawa West) for second reading be put, and if it is carried I propose on his behalf to move that the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Leonard, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

MOTION FOR ADDRESS IN REPLY—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

> Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Lefrançois, seconded by the Honourable Senator Taylor (Westmorland), for an Address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to the Speech from the Throne delivered by His Excellency the Administrator at the opening of the Session.—(Honourable Senator Fergusson for Honourable Senator Kinley).

Hon. Muriel McQ. Fergusson (for Hon. Mr. Kinley): Stand.

Hon. John G. Higgins: Honourable senators, I claim privilege to speak to this item on the Order Paper. I would ask whoever has authority for the conduct of the debate on the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne to explain why there have been so many adjournments of the debate. Day after day, when the order is called nothing results except the word "Stand". The first speech was delivered on May 22 and there have been only seven speeches since.

I understand that a number of senators wish to speak, but it seems that the end of the session will come before they will have the opportunity to do so. If Senator Kinley cannot be here on Tuesday, some other speaker should be allowed to proceed and Senator Kinley could speak later.

Hon. John M. Macdonald: Honourable senators, may I say that the order of speakers is usually arranged by agreement between the Whips on each side of the house.

Hon. Malcolm Hollett: Honourable senators, if it is a fact that the Whips arrange the order of the speeches on the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, may I point out that I have known speeches to be delayed for three or four sittings. If the Whips can do that, I think we ought to look into the matter. I heartily agree with what the honourable Senator Higgins has just said; I think the manner in which the address in reply is being handled at this time is ridiculous. It is time the matter was disposed of.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I am sure that if any senator wants to speak on the Speech from the Throne there is no one here who would prevent him, and I am sure the Whips would be the last to do so. The Whips have been endeavouring to arrange the business of the house. It is not always easy to get senators to speak at the time which appears to be available. If on Tuesday, after the honourable Senator Kinley has spoken, another senator wishes to rise and speak on the address in reply, surely no one would deny him that right. It is up to the senators themselves.

THE CANADA BOARD OF AMERICAN MISSIONS OF THE UNITED LUTHERAN CHURCH IN AMERICA—SECOND READING

Hon. Fred M. Blois moved the second reading of Bill S-23, respecting The Canada Board of American Missions of the United Lutheran Church in America.

He said: Honourable senators, there is little explanation needed in connection with Bill S-23. If you have read the bill and the explanatory notes accompanying it, you will see that a change of name in Canada is made necessary by similar changes in the United States.

If this bill receives second reading, and honourable senators are agreeable, I shall then move that it be referred to an appropriate committee. There is nothing further I can say at the present time that would be of any assistance to the understanding of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Blois, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

THE EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN SYNOD OF CANADA—SECOND READING

Hon. Fred M. Blois moved the second reading of Bill S-24, respecting The Evangelical Lutheran Synod of Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill is somewhat similar to Bill S-11 which received second reading in this house on March 13, 1962. Bill S-24 is an act respecting The Evangelical Lutheran Synod of Canada, by which it is proposed to change the name to the Eastern Canada Synod of the Lutheran Church in America. It was felt that for the more efficient management of the affairs of the synod it should be divided into three sections, namely, the western section, taking in the western sections under the jurisdiction of this church; the central section, which takes in the central section up to the 88th parallel in Ontario; and the present section, to be known as the eastern section, would have jurisdiction over the section of Ontario east of the 88th parallel, and the provinces of Quebec, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. The purpose of the bill is simply to give territorial jurisdiction. The church feels that in this way it can better handle the affairs of its synod.

If honourable senators agree to the passing of this bill on second reading, I shall move that it be referred to the appropriate committee.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Blois, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, June 25, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Croll for the second reading of Bill S-6, to make provision for the disclosure of information in respect of finance charges.

Hon. Sydney J. Smith: Honourable senators, as several previous speakers have suggested, Bill S-6 is no stranger here. It is the fifth of a series of bills that have been introduced into this house under the identical name. The fact has been called to our attention by previous speakers that two of the bills, the one before us today and the one presented to this house at the last session of Parliament, are exactly the same. However, it is noteworthy that the last two bills are decidedly different from the first three. The changes in the first four bills were made to meet objections voiced by many honourable senators, including myself. So I feel that those of us who have spoken and voted against earlier versions of the bill have been vindicated in our criticism and can claim some credit for a more acceptable bill than was first presented.

In recent days I have reviewed the records of the house debates on Bill S-25 in 1960, Bill S-4 in 1961, and Bills S-2 and S-3 in 1962. I want to repeat what I said in this house during the debate on the last bill, that I give full marks to the honourable senator from Toronto Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll) for having retreated from many of his original objectives and in recognizing somewhat the objections and criticisms that were directed to the bill in previous debates.

He has now given the bill not only a sober second look but also a third and fourth review, each producing improvement. His latest compromise was one I was pleased about; that was his willingness to defer the coming into force of this bill until the Supreme Court of Canada has given a ruling on its constitutionality, which is a point that has been very controversial throughout the debates on previous versions of the bill.

Honourable senators, it is my considered opinion that there remains one major flaw that should be corrected: I refer to the manner in which finance charges should be expressed. I do not object, nor did I ever object, to a frank and truthful disclosure of finance charges in the conduct of consumer credit business.

I am all in favour of the finance charge being spelled out in the contract, and I would not object to it being expressed in a percentage rate based on simple interest per annum, provided there is a proven formula for arriving at that percentage rate in a manner which is simple, quick and accurate.

This, honourable senators, is the key to the major difficulties that have been encountered in connection with proposed legislation of this kind, not only in this Parliament but elsewhere, and no one has yet met the challenge to produce a workable formula for arriving at the desired percentage rate based on simple interest per annum.

There is no regular pattern for time payment contracts. There are irregular amounts of instalments and there are irregular periods between the due dates of instalments. These things are arranged to fit into the particular circumstances under which the purchaser gets his income, and create a problem that is most difficult to deal with.

I am not going to bore the house at this time with details of skip payments, balloon payments and seasonal plans that are used in consumer credit transactions to fit into the irregular income of seasonal workers such as farmers, fishermen, teachers and other seasonal workers. These details can be dealt with if this bill is referred to a committee. It is my submission, honourable senators, that on the grounds of this particular feature which I have drawn to your attention, the bill deserves a detailed study of the possibility of adopting a formula for arriving at this percentage rate. If that is proven possible in such a study, then I suggest that it should be written into the bill.

As the bill now reads, the responsibility for making regulations governing the means of arriving at the percentage rate, as well as the required degree of accuracy, is escaped completely in the bill, and it is passed on to the Governor in Council to provide the regulations that would meet this need.

I feel that after studying the bill throughout the various debates as we have, if it is submitted to committee and given a careful study there, and if we cannot then produce a formula for meeting this need, I do not think there is much hope of the Governor in Council providing such a formula by way of regulations. So, I feel that the bill as it now stands would not produce a good law; it would produce a poor law which would be difficult of implementation and administration, and such a law is worse than no law at all.

I am not going to speak at any length, but having dwelt on this particular phase which is familiar to those who have carried on a business in connection with consumer credit, I feel that there remain two possible sources for solution of this percentage rate problem. One is a comprehensive study such as I have suggested by a committee of this house to which this bill may be referred, and the other possible source of solution is through the study presently being made by the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance. I know from newspaper reports that a lot of evidence has been submitted to that commission bearing on this problem involving consumer finance.

Honourable senators, I am prepared to support this bill to have it put before an appropriate committee of the Senate where persons can be heard who claim that there is a simple, quick and accurate formula for arriving at that percentage rate of a finance charge on the basis of simple interest per annum. If they fail to prove or produce a workable formula, then I would much prefer to have this matter stand over until a report is received from the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance, which is now sitting, than have it become another one of those laws which would fail in its purpose.

In conclusion may I say that I concur with my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Croll) who sponsored these several bills when he says that the growth of consumer credit is fantastic. This does not necessarily mean that because it has become a tremendous factor in the overall economy that it is an unholy, a wicked, or a destructive thing, and is to be dealt with as such. Whether or not we use consumer credit, we must realize that it is an essential factor in the present-day economy and we cannot afford to tamper with it in a careless manner. Consumer credit provides many jobs and much income, and it is beneficial for a lot of people who cannot afford to pay cash on the barrelhead for those things which provide better living, particularly for younger families. Consumer credit provides for the individual what bonded indebtedness provides for the community. We enjoy such things as public buildings and roads and all kinds of public services on the basis of financing by means of bonded indebtedness, which means making the utility or the convenience pay for itself as it is being used.

It is most unfortunate too that the words "consumer credit" have become bad words in the minds of so many people. I think it is largely because of those people who by their own personal circumstances have not become familiar with what consumer credit has provided for many people who are not in a position to get along without credit and to meet their needs and desires on a cash basis.

I believe we should bear in mind it is an accepted fact that the development of the consumer credit system was largely responsible for the economic recovery in the United Kingdom. Furthermore, we have read the reports of many businessmen who have visited Russia in the recent past, and their expressed opinion is that the expansion of consumer credit methods can lead people behind the Iron Curtain into a better way of life which, in turn, would bring them closer to understanding our economic philosophy.

So, honourable senators, let us strive to give this bill careful study, if it is referred to committee. Let us bring before that committee appropriate individuals to give us a fair and equitable picture of all sides of this problem, with the objective of arriving at a solution that could be written into the bill. Then we would be assured that the bill could stand on its own feet and be effective. If we cannot arrive at such a solution, I submit that careful consideration should be given to postponing further action until we receive a report from the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance.

Hon. Muriel McQ. Fergusson: Honourable senators, on three previous occasions I have spoken at some length in this chamber on bills similar in form to Bill S-6, all of which have been introduced by the honourable Senator Croll.

I have no wish to prolong this debate, and if I did so I would be only repeating the arguments I have previously made; but I would like to say that I continue to support the principles of this bill, and I will certainly vote for it. I trust it will receive second reading, and when it does I will follow its progress with close interest.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Cape Breton), for Hon. Mr. White, debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, before we adjourn I would like to say just a word along the lines of Senator Higgin's remarks a few moments ago, with which I agree entirely.

I cannot see why so many items on the Order Paper are allowed to stand day after day when we have the time available to deal with them. I know there are quite a number of senators who wish to speak on the motion for an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

I also feel that in a short time we will surely have more business from the other place. Thus, there is the possibility that some honourable senators who wish to speak on the Throne Speech debate will not have the opportunity to do so. If any honourable senator wishes to speak on the Throne Speech, I feel he should be given that opportunity.

With reference to the three orders we have just allowed to stand, the first has to do with the amendment to the Bankruptcy Act. Honourable senators will recall that this topic was debated extensively last year. It was again explained on second reading on May 28 this year, which is nearly a month ago, and it seems to me that it could and should have been dealt with before now.

Bill S-4, intituled an act to repeal The Newfoundland Savings Bank Act, 1939, was given first reading on May 21. There is no controversy over this bill, and I do know there are some honourable senators, particularly those from Newfoundland, who are anxious to say a few words on second reading of this bill. I see no reason why it should not have been proceeded with earlier.

The same observations might be made with respect to Bill S-5, intituled an act to approve an Agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of the Province of Ontario respecting Public Harbours.

With regard to the "60 days" business, there is not much of that to come, but I hope that the days to follow will provide us with extensive business from the other place. In that case it is possible that honourable senators who wish to speak on the Throne Speech debate and on other bills may not have the opportunity to do so.

I was pleased to hear the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford) tell us a few moments ago that there was no objection to the Whips making arrangements for members to speak on the Throne Speech debate when the one in whose name it had been adjourned was not present to speak. He said there was no reason why it should be allowed to stand, and that other arrangements could be made. Now, with regard to these three bills I have already mentioned, I would ask the Leader if it is not possible to clear up the Order Paper so that we will be prepared for more work.

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): You want to go home.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Who doesn't?

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): The honourable Leader of the Opposition wants to clear up the Order Paper, and I say to him that I share that desire.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I am not speaking for myself at all. I will be glad to stay here until all the business is dealt with. It is not a question of wanting to go home, but of getting the business done in an orderly manner.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: I believe that the business of the house has been conducted in an orderly manner. If it has not been, then that is the responsibility of all honourable senators. One honourable senator passed a remark about wanting to go home. None of us would want to go home as long as there is business before the Senate.

I might point out to honourable senators that there are five private bills on the Order Paper today, and of course we have to be here to consider them. I might also add that the work of the Senate has been arranged so that there will be some private bills, some public bills and some public business before us at all times. Does any honourable senator know a better way of arranging the business of the Senate?

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Could the honourable Leader of the Government tell us why these three bills I have mentioned have not been dealt with? We have had ample time to deal with them, and this would not have interfered with the private bills which we must deal with.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): We have tried to arrange the business of the Senate so that there would be some public and some private bills before us at all time. I do not see how else the work of the Senate can be effectively accomplished. If any honourable senator has any suggestion to make as to how it can better be conducted, I would be glad to hear from him, either in the chamber or in my office, or he could speak to the Leader of the Opposition or the Whips. We have always co-operated in the past, and I have no doubt that we shall continue to do so.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Honourable senators, with regard to the motion for an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, I can see no harm in that debate continuing. Yesterday we heard an excellent contribution made by one of the new members. A week ago we heard a fine speech by the honourable Senator Pouliot. There are other excellent speakers to follow. One senator spoke to me last night about making a speech this afternoon, and I told him I thought Senator Kinley would be speaking today and that it might be better to postpone his speech until next week when there would be a better attendance. This morning I learned that Senator Kinley would not be here and I suggested to the other senator that he might speak today. However, he considered it was too short a notice.

The Leader of the Government is not preventing anybody from speaking, and I do not think the Leader of the Opposition is suggesting that is the case. I welcome speeches; I am always glad to hear them. If any honourable senator wishes to speak, but does not wish to commence when another senator has finished, he has only to see the Whips and I am sure they will endeavour to arrange a suitable time for him. The Whips do not have an easy task, and I would not like anybody to think that their work is routine and without difficult complications. It is not. I personally appreciate and am grateful for the fine work they are doing.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, July 2, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, July 2, 1963

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE LATE SENATOR HIGGINS

TRIBUTES

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, it is with deep regret that I rise to record the passing of one of our colleagues the Honourable John Gilbert Higgins, Q.C.

Senator Higgins was a member of this house for less than five years. In that all too brief period he served this chamber, his province and his country with distinction. That he did so was not surprising for, prior to being summoned to the Senate, his career was marked by loyal and faithful service to the Crown, more particularly to his native province.

Senator Higgins was born in 1891. He was educated in Newfoundland and in England, and was called to the Bar of England and that of his own native province of Newfoundland in 1913. He served overseas with distinction during the First World War and at its close he returned to Newfoundland where he created for himself an outstanding legal career.

I know I speak for all honourable senators when I say that today our thoughts and our sincere sympathy are with his many friends here and in Newfoundland, and more especially with Mrs. Higgins and their family.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford) has said that our meeting tonight is saddened because of the death of our esteemed colleague Senator Higgins.

I must say that I find it most difficult to rise and speak on the passing of a colleague who was active in our midst just a short time ago. As a matter of fact, only on Saturday Senator Higgins came to my office to discuss with me certain business which we anticipated would be coming before the Senate, and he explained to me the interest he had in that particular business and the part he wished to take in the debate.

I did not know the late Senator Higgins particularly well, having met him only after I was appointed to the Senate; but I knew of his family, one which had a long tradition of activity in public life in what was formerly the old British colony of Newfoundland. His ancestors played an honourable and distinguished role in the history of Newfoundland, and the Higgins name, as we know, is greatly honoured in the Atlantic provinces and throughout Canada.

As to the late Senator Higgins himself, the Leader of the Government has told of his remarkable career. He was a Rhodes Scholar; and, as we all know, in his time and now in order to become a Rhodes Scholar one must be an all-round man. As a young man, Senator Higgins showed qualities of leadership when he was the captain of the Canadian hockey team at Oxford University.

The late senator took part in the First World War, serving overseas from 1916 to 1919, and on his return practised his profession as a lawyer, and a very distinguished one, in Newfoundland. As a politician he was a leader of one of the great parties in Canada; and as a senator, he took a leading part in the debates and the work of this Senate. He was at one time president of the Canadian Legion in his own province, and at the time of his death he was an honorary president of that organization. Apart from the great liking which Senator Higgins had for his fellowmen, probably his two greatest loves were, first, for his native province of Newfoundland and, second, for the land of his ancestors, Ireland. Honourable senators will recall the wonderful St. Patrick's Day address he gave in this chamber in 1962.

I wish to join with the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford) in expressing to the late senator's family our most sincere sympathy.

Hon. Calvert C. Pratt: Honourable senators, I wish to join with the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford) and the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) in their tributes to our late friend and colleague, Senator Higgins. His sudden passing was a great shock to us all.

My association with the late senator was more than a relationship in the Senate; we had a very close personal friendship as well. I was probably the last member of the Senate to be with him before he returned to his hotel where he passed away.

There have been many opportunities for members of this chamber, and for the public generally, to recognize the late senator's fondness for Newfoundland, the province of his birth. He had a very sincere and natural loyalty to Newfoundland, which he loved to express not only here but on numerous public occasions in widely-spread areas.

In my travels abroad at various times I have met many persons such as members of the Canadian Bar Association, the Canadian Authors Association and of many other outstanding organizations, who wished to be remembered to Senator Higgins and who spoke very kindly of his association with them.

When listening to the speeches of the late senator in this chamber, I was always impressed with his genuine eagerness to bring out some of the outstanding features of Newfoundland's history, particularly its cultural relations of the past, all of which reflected a warm attachment to his own province.

I am sure we all have strong feelings of sympathy for Mrs. Higgins and the members of the family. I express my own sympathy with great feeling because of my personal association with Senator Higgins and the members of his family.

Hon. Lionel Choquette: Honourable senators, the Senate has lost a valued and devoted member, and we on this side of the house in particular have lost a loyal colleague.

I was perhaps closer to Senator Higgins than many other honourable senators. After his appointment to the Senate on January 15, 1959 he became my deskmate in the third row immediately opposite the desk I am now occupying. This led to a continuing friendship which was all too short. He was an interesting conversationalist and a man of great erudition. He was an admirer of the classics and could quote at length from the writings of the renowned authors and thinkers of the past.

Senator Higgins was also a collector of objects of art, and was a patron of the arts. The many paintings in his office are testimony of his interest; and I am told, although I have never visited Newfoundland, that his home is literally full of historic and artistic objects. He was also a well-known philatelist, and his interest ranged as far as the collection of historic maps and charts. I understand, moreover, that he provided the Public Archives with many items that were missing from its collection.

In addition, Senator Higgins was a distinguished member of the Canadian Bar Association, and his speeches are well remembered for their wit and wisdom.

Above all he was a kind and generous friend to all who knew him well, and his many acts of generosity will be long remembered by the Senate. I know that I personally will miss his companionship, and I take this opportunity of conveying to his wife and family my sincere condolences on their loss which is shared by the Senate and the country.

Hon. A. B. Baird: Honourable senators, I should like to add a word by way of tribute to the late Senator Higgins. I am sure that his memory will ever remain in the hearts of those who had the privilege of knowing him. He had the kindness of heart and the sincerity of purpose which distinguished him and set him apart as a fine Christian gentleman.

In Jack Higgins' death Canada has lost a worthy son. He will be missed by us all. I tender my profound and heartfelt sympathy to his widow, two sons and daughter who survive him. I join them and his many friends in mourning his passing.

BOUCHERVILLE ISLANDS BRIDGE AND TUNNEL

THIRD READING

Hon. Paul H. Bouffard moved the third reading of Bill S-16, to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge and tunnel across the St. Lawrence River at the Boucherville Islands, in the province of Quebec.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

PRIVATE BILLS

ALLSTATE LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA—SECOND READING

Hon. John M. Macdonald, for Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson, moved the second reading of Bill S-28, to incorporate Allstate Life Insurance Company of Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill S-12, to incorporate Allstate Life Insurance Company of Canada, was introduced in this house on November 6, 1962. It received second reading and was referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce. A detailed explanation of that bill appears in the printed proceedings of the committee of November 14, 1962. Subsequently, the bill was passed by this house, but was not passed in the House of Commons.

The present Bill S-28 is similar to Bill S-12 of last session.

As honourable senators know, "Allstate" is the name of insurance companies in the United States owned by Sears-Roebuck & Company. Some years ago, when Sears-Roebuck & Company and Simpson's Limited formed Simpsons-Sears Limited, there was an undertaking that Simpsons-Sears Limited was to obtain an interest in the insurance business in Canada of the Allstate companies of the United States, and in 1960 the Allstate Insurance Company of Canada was incorporated by Parliament. That company was authorized to sell pretty well all types of insurance except life insurance.

The present bill will incorporate a life insurance company. It is the intention, if the bill is passed, that this company will take over the life insurance business in Canada of the Allstate Life Insurance Company of the United States, as well, of course, as seeking new business.

It should be noted it is proposed that three-quarters of the stock in this new company shall be owned by the Allstate Insurance Company of the United States and one-quarter by Simpsons-Sears Limited, which would actually mean a Canadian participation of one-eighth in the ownership. This is not a large participation, yet it does give Simpson's Limited a fixed and definite interest in the life insurance operations in Canada of the Sears-Roebuck organization, where none now exists. It should also be noted that the Allstate Life Insurance Company has been doing business in Canada since 1961.

I do not know that there is anything more I can usefully say at the present time. If the bill receives second reading it is my intention to move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce where it can be examined in detail.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Honourable senators, I thought I heard the honourable senator who explained the bill say something about ownership of stock, but I see nothing in the bill about that. Have I the wrong bill before me?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Cape Breton): It is Bill S-28.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Yes, I have S-28.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Cape Breton): Section 3 of the bill refers to the capital stock of the company, etc.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Yes, but I thought you talked about Canadian participation.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Cape Breton): That is not in the bill. It is proposed, if this bill becomes law, that 75 per cent of the capital stock will be subscribed for by Allstate Insurance Company of the United States, and 25 per cent by Simpsons-Sears Limited, of Canada. Simpsons-Sears, of Canada, is equally owned by Simpson's Limited, of Canada, and by the Sears-Roebuck people in the United States, the net result being that the Canadian participation will be 12.5 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Croll: I am now completely confused.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Cape Breton), bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

THE SOVEREIGN LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA—SECOND READING

Hon. Lionel Choquette, for Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson, moved the second reading of Bill S-29, respecting the Sovereign Life Assurance Company of Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, on behalf of Senator Thorvaldson, who is unavoidably absent—I should say, who was unavoidably absent, for he has just this moment entered the chamber—I propose second reading of this bill.

The Sovereign Life Assurance Company of Canada was incorporated in 1902 by the Parliament of Canada. The head office is in the city of Winnipeg. Throughout the years a large proportion of its business has been transacted in the province of Quebec. The sole purpose of this bill is to add a French version to the English name.

There are only two sections to the bill. It provides that the company may use in the transaction of its business the English name The Sovereign Life Assurance Company of Canada or, in French, La Souveraine, Compagnie d'Assurance-Vie du Canada, or both such names, as and when it so elects.

Unlike some of the bills that were introduced providing for a French version of the company's name, I, as a bilingualist, may say that this name sounds very French-like.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Choquette, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, June 26, consideration of His Excellency the Administrator's speech at the opening of the session, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Lefrançois, seconded by Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland), for an address in reply thereto.

Hon. John J. Kinley: Honourable senators, before speaking to the motion now before the house, may I take a moment to pay tribute to the memory of the late Senator John Higgins who passed away last night.

Senator Higgins was here but a short time, but he brought with him a personality that we enjoyed and which made a deep impression upon the Senate. He loved the things that are beautiful and artistic. He liked to speak of nature, and he was very fond of literature, of which he was a most competent student.

I knew Senator Higgins because I come from Nova Scotia, and he came from the adjacent province of Newfoundland. No place in Canada has a stronger relation with the people of Newfoundland and their industry than does Lunenberg, the county I had the honour to represent in the Commons and which I have the honour to represent here in the Senate.

I think Senator Higgins would have been very interested in what I am going to say tonight, as I intend to deal with a feature of our marine industry. He was a man of simple living and high thinking, a virtue that everybody should emulate. We have lost a man who was valuable to the Senate; we have lost a man who was charming, capable and different.

To the widow and family of the late senator, with the others who spoke, I extend my sympathies. I feel sad because of his passing at this time, because we were very fond of him and would have liked to have seen him with us for a long time.

Honourable senators, I now wish to pay my respects to the leaders of this house, the Honourable the Speaker, the honourable Leader of the Government and the honourable Leader of the Opposition. I wish to associate myself with the many well-deserved compliments that have been paid to them, and to say to them that I am very well pleased to know that they all came from the House of Commons. I think that service in that house is very beneficial experience to a senator. I know of no other way that one can get the experience which makes one useful in public service. They are a trio who will work harmoniously to assist and advise, which is our function in government.

They have a fine record of service and of achievement, and we think the dignity of the Senate and its work is safe in their hands. I congratulate them.

Honourable senators, I would now like to say a word of congratulation to the mover and the seconder of the address. Senator Lefrançois, the mover, is an industrialist. I like that because there are not too many of them in the house. He has a good record as an industrialist both in Canada and in other areas. What he said in his speech was practical and what I would expect to come from an industrialist.

My friend Senator Taylor (Westmorland), who comes from New Brunswick, also made a fine speech. He had a rather rugged experience in the New Brunswick legislature. He was a member of the Government, and was afterwards elected leader of the provincial Liberal party. He carried out his duties effectively and laid the foundations for his party's eventual victory. He is a strong voice for the Maritimes, and we appreciate his efforts. I am glad to know that he made such a splendid speech when he seconded the motion for the address.

I would also like to express my greetings to those who have been appointed to the Senate recently. Among them are Senator Walker, Senator Phillips, Senator Belisle, Senator Yuzyk, Senator Gelinas and Senator MacTavish. That is a fine array. When the wheel of political fortunes turned and the administration was in the hands of our Conservative friends for some years they appointed some splendid men to the Senate, men who have become distinguished senators. Such appointments make the Senate spicier and we enjoy a better standard of debate. The Senate is better balanced now than formerly, and I believe it is in a position to make itself strong. We only need to advertise ourselves a little more and we will be very popular.

Honourable senators, my purpose tonight is to concentrate on one aspect of the Speech from the Throne wherein it says:

> My ministers intend to secure the establishment of a twelve-mile limit for the use of the Canadian fisheries, taking proper account of treaty and historic rights.

On June 4, 1963, the Prime Minister announced in the House of Commons that the Canadian Government had decided to establish a 12-mile exclusive fisheries zone along the whole of Canada's coastline as of mid-May 1964, and to implement the straight baseline system at the same time as the basis from which Canada's territorial sea and exclusive fisheries zone would be measured.

I congratulate the Prime Minister on his decision to do this. Today we hear a lot about the time of decision. I believe our Conservative friends are trying to make a theme song out of the so-called "days of decision". I am reminded of that illustrious evangelist, Billy Graham, who talks of "the hour of decision," and attempts to impress people to do what is right. I suppose that when our Liberal leader on the platform talked about the value of decision he was trying to correct certain things that he thought should be corrected. Some people are now trying to make something out of nothing when they talk too much about "days of decision."

I congratulate the Prime Minister regarding this decision to establish a 12-mile limit. There has been a favourable response to this in newspapers not only throughout Canada but also in the United States. May I refer to an article in the New York Times, and reprinted in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald, which had this to say about the 12-mile limit:

> In an age in which the nations of this world reach for the stars and seek to formulate laws for outer space, they are still, ironically enough, at odds over an ancient law much closer to them: the law of the freedom of the seas, involving the extent of their territorial waters.
> The latter issue has been raised anew by Canada's decision to extend its exclusive coastal fishing area to a 12-mile limit and also by Ecuador's recent seizure of American fishing boats off its coast.
> The same issue has caused many hot disputes before this, including a miniature war between Britain and Iceland.
> The old three-mile "cannon shot" limit no longer meets the requirements of national defence, nor, in the case of countries largely dependent on fishing, the requirements of the national economy.
> More than 40 nations have already extended both their territorial and their reserved fishing waters.
> Some Latin American countries even claim a 200-mile limit for the latter. The United States still clings to the anachronistic three-mile limit.
> However, the United States did join Canada at the abortive Geneva conference on the law of the sea in 1960 in a proposal to extend sovereign territorial waters to a six-mile limit and exclusive national fishing rights to another adjacent six-mile zone, making 12 in all. There is thus no dispute between the two countries over principle.
> A complication may arise because Canada proposes to measure its 12-mile fishing zone on a straight baseline principle from one outer headland to another instead of following coastal contours.

This method would reserve for exclusive Canadian use enormous water off both the Atlantic and the Pacific coasts in which the United States, France and other nations have treaty or traditional fishing rights.

But as Prime Minister Pearson promises to take such rights into account, it should not be too difficult to find an accommodation.

The reason for such measures, reiterated by Mr. Pearson, is the growing depletion of coastal fishing resources by industrialized fishing fleets, in which Russia and Japan are pre-eminent.

But Mr. Pearson also mentioned "other problems", presumably referring to the constant presence of Russian spy trawlers off the American coasts.

The United States might well take advantage of the impending negotiations with Canada to follow the Canadian example.

I have before me a presentation by the Government of Newfoundland to the Government of Canada dated February 1963, entitled "National Fisheries Development", in which the Government of Newfoundland says the following:

> The great majority of fishermen in Newfoundland are dependent on the small-boat inshore fishery. Their livelihood is seriously jeopardized by the encroachment of foreign fishing vessels on their established fishing grounds, especially during the very short season when these inshore fishermen must make their catch. The encroachments not only reduce the fish resources available to Newfoundland fishermen, but they also cause serious damage to gear and equipment.
> We ask that immediate steps be taken to conserve, protect and develop these coastal fish resources by action to establish the twelve-mile limit for Canada's national waters.

Some years ago I was asked by our then Leader, the honourable Senator Robertson, to sponsor a bill in this house in connection with the North Atlantic fisheries. In sponsoring that bill I placed before this house an extract from an address delivered by Dr. W. M. Chapman, Chairman of the International Convention for the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries, when he announced the policy of the United States with regard to high seas fisheries before the State Chamber of Commerce at San Francisco on March 29, 1948. It is claimed that that fishery convention had nothing to do with territorial rights. That is true to a degree, but they were dealing with conservation, and conservation is definitely connected with territorial rights. Dr. Chapman said, in part:

> Canada and the United States by mutual sacrifice, expense, and strict regulation of our fishermen, have built up our Pacific halibut banks so that they are among the richest fishing grounds in the world. If there is nothing under accepted international law that would prevent a third nation from sending a mothership expedition to skim the cream off of these halibut banks, what is the use of building up fisheries resources in this manner?
> There is no sense whatever in sacrificing your present pleasure to build up savings in a bank if other people can come in and help themselves to your money whenever they want.
> To meet this new need President Truman issued a proclamation in September, 1945, to the effect that the United States set up conservation zones to protect its coastal fisheries without regard to the limitations of territorial waters. Where only its own nationals are involved the United States would undertake exclusive jurisdiction (as it might do at any rate under present international law). Where the nationals of other countries were involved with ours those nations might participate in the jurisdiction over the fishery. The United States would recognize similar action by other countries in fisheries off their own coasts.
> Note carefully that there was no mention in this proclamation of extension of sovereignty beyond territorial waters, nor of exclusion of fishermen of any nationality from any fishery.

The question, I think, arises: why do we want the 12-mile limit? In my view we want the 12-mile limit for conservation purposes, because conservation is needed today as never before. The fishing industry is operated with machinery of all kinds, and our fishing grounds are so good that the fleets of all nations who want fish come over here and take part in fishing on the high seas, and our breeding grounds supply the fish they desire. We wish to protect and conserve the fish for future generations. We want also to protect our inshore fishermen.

We have along the coast of Newfoundland and the Atlantic coast deep-sea fishermen who are equipped to go out to catch their fish, but we must also keep in mind the inshore fisherman. He needs protection. The coastline of this country is the longest in the world, being greater in distance than from London to Vancouver, and the inshore fishermen who live in our coastal regions are apt to be forgotten. The opportunity of fishing under the protection of a 12-mile limit will be of considerable benefit to them.

Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland and New Brunswick are all smaller than the other provinces in Canada and do not enjoy the same land resources. Those things in which we have excelled in years gone by have been connected with the sea. We have the heritage of the sea; we need that heritage and we must conserve it as much as possible for the benefit of those who live on our shores.

Another matter to be considered is that of orderly fishing. We want orderly fishing because the inshore fisherman must use nets, traps and trawls, and sometimes these are destroyed or torn away when deep sea fishing boats come too near to the coast. We like to think of everybody having a fair chance.

Then too, we think there is an element of defence in the 12-mile limit. Many nations are now adopting this limit and this is an opportune moment for us to do so. Already we have tried to do something about it because we have on our statute books an act which prohibits larger trawlers coming inside the 12-mile limit. This in itself causes dissension because the Americans are permitted to come inside the 3-mile limit. While we think we should still maintain the 12-mile limit to protect the inshore fishermen, we hope that this legislation will be needed for only a short time. Then when we go to these conventions we can say, "We are not asking you to do anything that we do not do for ourselves; we are doing that now and we think it is in your interest to join us", and here we have every reason to believe that the Americans will do so.

There is another comment I would like to make about the Fisheries Act, which restricts the trawlers to the 12-mile limit. I think it is a bit overloaded with ministerial discretions. The act, which appears in the Revised Statutes of 1952, was amended in 1960 and in 1961. While the statute forbids trawlers from coming within the 3-mile limit, section 55 was amended in 1960-61 by adding subsection (3a), which says:

> (3a) The Minister may also, by order, exempt any class of dragger or trawler defined by the regulations from the operation of subsection (3) in respect of any area that is not less than three miles from the nearest shore on the Atlantic seacoast of Canada.

Well, ministerial discretion is necessary sometimes, but I think it should be gingerly given, and should not be used to the extent that it can destroy the effect of bills passed by Parliament. I feel that when we make agreements with other countries these ministerial discretions will have to be omitted. This ministerial discretion which is the most effective is an amendment to the Statutes of 1960-61, and is not contained in the act in the Revised Statutes of 1952.

In considering this matter I think we have to go back to the convention of 1818, if we are going to protect our traditional and historic rights and treaties with the United States and our country. The convention of 1818 provides that American fishermen have the right in common with British subjects to take, dry and cure fish on parts of the coasts of Newfoundland and Canada, and that they would have these rights forever.

That was a long time ago; it was in the days of sailing ships, when the Americans had a fine fishing fleet and they had to come down to Newfoundland to fish. They had to have this right in order to get bait for their fishing, which bait had to be caught along the coast or bought from Newfoundlanders. In addition, the journey home by sail was a long and difficult one, and they wanted the right to cure and dry fish on this treaty coast where people did not reside.

That treaty was to last forever. It provides for the right to cure and take fish off the coast to Newfoundland and parts of Canada, but any advantage in that respect has long since vanished. The Americans are no longer interested in salt fishing as such. The draggers have everything they need except the ability to carry out repairs and service when in distress. But the right to take fish is another matter. They had the right to take fish right up to the edge of the coast in these waters, and that is something a lot of people are trying to do at the present time. This treaty would eliminate that privilege.

This led to dissension, and finally a convention was held to decide certain matters with regard to these fisheries. After several preliminary discussions there was a meeting at The Hague where certain questions were put forward for consideration.

The first question was, "To what extent are the following contentions or reasons justified?"

> It is contended on the part of Great Britain that the exercise of the liberty to take fish referred to in the said article, which the inhabitants of the United States have forever in common with the subjects of His Britannic Majesty, is subject, without the consent of the United States, to reasonable regulation by Great Britain, Canada or Newfoundland in the form of municipal laws, ordinances, or rules, as, for example, to regulations in respect of (1) the hours, days or seasons when fish may be taken on the treaty coasts.

On the inshore fisheries hours and days constitute a rather important matter. The lobster fishermen have a day when the fishing starts, and it is very wrong for a man to jump the gun. It was an important thing that the British could stipulate what hour and what day.

I remember when our fishermen did not like to fish on Sundays. My grandfather was a fishing skipper off the coast of Labrador, and my grandmother used to say that there was no profit in Sunday work. That is what the fishermen meant when they said they did not want to fish on Sundays.

Another provision was as to the method, means and implements to be used in the taking of fish or in the carrying on of fishing operations on such coasts, and any other matters of a similar character relating to fishing; such regulations being reasonable, as for instance, appropriate or necessary for the protection and preservation of such fisheries and the exercise of the rights of British subjects therein, and of the liberty which by the said Article (1) the inhabitants of the United States have therein common with British subjects.

Well, the Hague arbitration decided the British had the right to do that. There is a solution to the problem of the beam trawler. All you have to do is to say: "You have made the regulation that you cannot fish on the treaty coast areas". Of course, that does not extend beyond the three-mile limit. If we wish to extend to a 12-mile limit then we will have to make further provisions.

This matter was brought up again under the Washington Treaty by which the same privileges were given to the Americans on the coast of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Quebec as were given to us to go down the American coast as far as the 39th parallel of north latitude which intersects the coast just below Atlantic City.

I do not know for sure, but I am advised by people who know that after a while the Americans did not like this treaty. However, the Washington Treaty did contain many things. Honourable senators will remember the Alabama Claims, and the disputes with respect to boundary rights, and that sort of thing. Fishing was considered to be important enough to be taken under consideration in that treaty, which was to continue for 10 years, and two years' notice had to be given to annul it.

It seems it was abrogated, but I am not sure how. We do know, however, that the only thing we have to deal with today is the Convention of 1818 which gives Americans the right forever of taking, curing and drying fish on the treaty coast of Newfoundland and parts of Canada. As I said, the Hague tribunal afterwards decided that this must operate under the control of the British who were a party to the convention.

The Americans at that time claimed they had a sovereign right, and the convention said there was no sovereign right, that there was only a liberty to fish. That is accepted by both countries today.

In the Washington Treaty the Canadians and British complained that the privileges rendered to the Americans did not compare with the privileges received from them because our coast was more valuable with respect to fishing than was the coast of the United States. I do not know just how fertile were the fisheries there, but the Americans followed our fisheries. At that time Canada received $3 million and Newfoundland received $1 million to balance the situation. That is the basis of what is known as the fishing bounties in the Maritime provinces. The interest on this money is used for the payment of the fishing bounty which is, I think, about $8 a year to each man, and $1 per ton for a vessel up to 80 tons. That bounty has been paid for many years. It is not specifically stated in our act. Our act says that we appropriate so much for the improvement of the fisheries and the fishermen, but this bounty came from that source.

We are told that a 12-mile limit is fine and that everybody is agreed to it but that it might imperil our American market. Well, one of our greatest competitors in the American market for fish is Iceland, and they imposed a 12-mile limit. I do not think they have got into too much trouble.

I recall that at the time of the reciprocity election in Canada years ago one of the arguments was that if we had reciprocity it would imperil this fishing bounty which has been paid for many years.

The Americans are our next-door neighbours and we are their best customer. When everything is taken into consideration I think it will be agreed that a long time would elapse before the Americans would imperil our fishing market in the United States. We want to combine with them and preserve the fisheries. That is a splendid thing to do. We are working along those lines and it looks as though we are going to be successful.

Honourable senators, France also has some interest in this. Away back in 1710 there were similar arrangements with France as Britain and Canada had with the Americans, but there were no regulations. However, the French have quite an interest in this matter. The islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon are just at the entrance of Fortune Bay in Newfoundland. They are right in the middle of a good fishing area, and they are the rendezvous for the Spanish, French and other trawlers that come from Europe. The Portuguese fishing fleet also goes there. The Portuguese fleet is mostly a hook-and-line fleet today. They buy bait in Cape Breton and Newfoundland, and are one of the last of the hook-and-line fishing fleets.

The Portuguese are very far advanced with respect to fisheries. They have a fisheries school, and they instruct men by service on the ships and by giving them tuition in school. The men alternate with respect to their functions and the skippers are picked from the best students. They see to it that merit is rewarded, and they operate very successfully.

The Portuguese are great fishermen. I was aboard a Portuguese ship just before it sailed for our fisheries some years ago. It was a wonderful ship, and was named the Alan Villiers after the Australian author who wrote a book about the Portuguese fishermen.

The Portuguese carry on a type of fishing that has not yet been completely extinguished. We cannot get the men to go hook-and-line fishing any more. It is safer fishing in the bigger vessels and I think our men do better. It is a progressive movement. The Americans are in the forefront of it. It is because they carry it on to such an extent and, in fact, interfere sometimes with the inshore fishermen and with the conservation of the fisheries of our coast, that we want to keep them all beyond the 12 miles.

I do not think we have anything to fear from the Americans by way of retaliation, or anything of that kind, because we want to do this thing. I think they will agree with us. It is a splendid movement and is in the interest of the whole of Canada. The three-mile limit was derived from the idea that it was the range of the shore guns, but that distance would not provide much defence today. The sea is international but we want the home front well preserved, and the carrying out of the Prime Minister's announced intention will help to preserve it.

There is much talk today about the Russians. They come over here and fish the high seas and I do not think we can do much about it. We do not like to see them interfering with our men, but I think they do some oceanographic work along our coasts. I suppose their appearance causes us some concern, but they are very efficient. They have their mother ships which have everything aboard that one can think of. They fish for herring off the George's Bank which is approximately halfway between Yarmouth and Cape Cod. They know all about it, and we must preserve what we can so that our offshore fishermen and our deep-sea fishermen are protected.

We are all for the deep-sea fishermen but we have to look after our poorer brothers, the inshore fishermen. When this bill goes through, it will be something that we have long desired.

Hon. Mr. Pratt: May I ask honourable Senator Kinley a question? He made reference to the treaty of 1816—

Hon. Mr. Kinley: 1818.

Hon. Mr. Pratt: The treaty between America and England.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: Do you mean the Treaty of Washington?

Hon. Mr. Pratt: With regard to certain shore fishery rights off the Newfoundland coast, I can say that very much like many of those old treaties—

Hon. Mr. Kinley: Is the honourable sentor asking a question?

Hon. Mr. Pratt: Yes. Does the honourable senator know that that treaty had been abolished, or rather the effect of it had been abolished?

Hon. Mr. Kinley: I do not know that the treaty has been abolished. This is not a treaty; it is a convention.

Hon. Mr. Pratt: Whether it is called a treaty or a convention, the arrangement had been definitely abandoned because some years ago pressure from the fishing industry of Boston and Gloucester brought about a complete revision of it. They applied their tariff to the products from that area, which previously went in duty free. Therefore, it is very much like many of those old treaties—in actual practice they have been abolished, and as to this one that is particularly true.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: I think it was abolished because it was outmoded. It was no good to the Americans. I am told by responsible people in the department that we are back to the convention of 1818. The right to catch fish is the important thing. I am told they still have that right, although I realize they have gone out of the business. They do not want it any more. They have trawlers. They do not want to go in on that rocky shore on the west coast of Newfoundland.

Hon. Mr. Pratt: I happen to know of negotiations of that kind, having followed them through with the Newfoundland Government, and I know definitely that it was simply wiped out quite some years ago by pressure within the United States alone.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: Does the honourable senator mean the use of it?

Hon. Mr. Pratt: Legally it was wiped out.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Savoie, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, July 3, 1963

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald tabled:

Report of the Fisheries Prices Support Board, for the year ended March 31, 1963, pursuant to section 7 of the Fisheries Prices Support Act, chapter 120, R.S.C., 1952. (English Text).

He said: The French text of this document will be tabled later.

PRIVATE BILLS

FIDELITY MORTGAGE AND SAVINGS CORPORATION—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-22, to incorporate Fidelity Mortgage and Savings Corporation, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Norfolk) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

KINROSS MORTGAGE CORPORATION—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Mr. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-27, to incorporate Kinross Mortgage Corporation, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Hayden moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading on Tuesday next.

Motion agreed to.

THE UKRAINIAN CANADIAN FOUNDATION OF TARAS SHEVCHENKO—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Paul H. Bouffard, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills, presented the following report:

The Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills to whom was referred the Bill S-21, intituled: "An Act to incorporate The Ukrainian Canadian Foundation of Taras Shevchenko", have in obedience to the order of reference of June 25, 1963, examined the said bill and now report the same without any amendment.

A similar bill in this matter was passed by the Senate during the last session of Parliament, but owing to the sudden dissolution of Parliament in February last, the proceedings on the bill were not completed.

Your committee recommend that the Parliamentary fees paid upon the bill of the last session apply to the bill of this session. It is noted that the promoters have again paid the printing costs.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: With leave of the Senate, I move that this report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard, for Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn, moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for the third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

THE EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN SYNOD OF CANADA—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Mr. Bouffard, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-24, respecting The Evangelical Lutheran Synod of Canada, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Blois moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

THE CANADA BOARD OF AMERICAN MISSIONS OF THE UNITED LUTHERAN CHURCH IN AMERICA—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Mr. Bouffard, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills, reported that the committee had considered

Bill S-23, respecting The Canada Board of American Missions of The United Lutheran Church in America, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Blois moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

AMENDMENT TO OFFICIAL REPORT

Hon. John J. Kinley: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, may I refer to my speech of yesterday in this house? I read from an article originating in the New York Times, with regard to the 12-mile limit. The paragraph from that article to which I now wish to refer is as follows:

> However, the United States did join Canada at the abortive Geneva conference on the law of the sea in 1960 in a proposal to extend sovereign territorial waters to a six-mile limit and exclusive national fishing rights to another adjacent six-mile zone, making 12 in all. There is thus no dispute between the two countries over principle.

Honourable senators, it is only fair that I should add what I had in my notes, that is, that on this occasion at Geneva, when considering the laws of the sea, the Canadian representative, the Honourable Howard Green, was nearly successful, the proposal having been defeated by only one vote.

The Senate resumed from yesterday consideration of His Excellency the Administrator's speech at the opening of the session, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Lefrançois, seconded by Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland), for an address in reply thereto.

(Translation):

Hon. Calixte F. Savoie: May I, at the outset, associate myself with honourable senators who preceded me in this debate, in expressing my warmest congratulations to the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, honourable Senator Lefrançois and honourable Senator Taylor (Westmorland). Both of them discharged this responsibility very neatly, and with great ability and competence. In their impressive and clear speeches, they referred to most interesting and timely matters. Both of them deserve our praise and our appreciation.

I wish to pay particular tribute to His Honour the Speaker of this house, in the first place for having been recently appointed to the Upper Chamber of Canada, a distinction he richly deserved, and in the second place, for the outstanding honour which has been conferred upon him when he was made Speaker of this illustrious house. Those two important appointments are a tribute to him, and a most eloquent proof of his high personal qualities.

While thus, in my turn, welcoming warmly and fraternally the new senators who have taken their place among us, I am reminded of the cordial and friendly welcome that was extended to me when I came to Senate in January 1956. I shall always remember the courtesy and sincere fraternity I experienced, and I am expressing my heartfelt wishes to the new senators, hoping that they will find in this house all the joy and satisfaction which I found here myself. I trust that thanks to their knowledge and their experience they will make a valuable contribution to this house which abounds in wisdom and efficiency.

I extend my greetings and congratulations to the honourable Senator Macdonald (Brantford) on his appointment as member of the Cabinet and as Leader of the Government in the Senate. I subscribe, with regard to him, to the well deserved words of praise spoken by previous speakers. Having seen him for several years perform his duties, first as Leader of the Government and then as Leader of the Opposition, I have no doubt that he will fulfill the higher functions which have been assigned to him with zeal, devotion, geniality and competence.

I would be remiss if I did not add a special word about the Leader of the Opposition, honourable Senator Brooks, for whom I have had the greatest regard ever since I met him, several months after the end of the First World War, in 1919. After my discharge from military service, I was appointed to the personnel of the Sussex High School in New Brunswick. On his return from overseas, at the beginning of 1919, Senator Brooks had already several years of teaching experience; he became a school inspector in the counties of Kings and Queens in the riding of Royal which he represented at the House of Commons from 1935 to 1960. This is to say that from 1919 to 1922, I worked under him. When I was appointed as principal of the Sussex High School, a young schoolmistress, Miss Edith Lipsett of Centreville, New Brunswick, took over my class. Charming, kind, very distinguished and lovely as well as being very competent, she quickly captivated the young and popular school teacher, Mr. Brooks. As principal of the school, I had therefore the task of keeping an eye on the schoolmistress, Miss Lipsett, and her fervent suitor, Mr. Brooks. Two years later she became the distinguished wife of the present Leader of the Opposition, honourable Senator A. J. Brooks. I have of these two long-standing friends very pleasant memories. At that time, we were far from thinking that some day, we would become colleagues in the Upper Chamber of Canada.

Therefore I wish my honourable friend, the Leader of the Opposition, the best in his new office and I also offer him my most sincere congratulations and the expression of my unbounded admiration.

(Text):

The matter I intend to discuss on this occasion is of reality and of the greatest importance. I intended to use my mother tongue, French, for these remarks, which would have been only natural. Furthermore, as you are well aware, I could more easily discharge my duty if I used my own language. However, because the importance of the issue concerns both partners in the Canadian federation, the French and the English elements, I felt it advisable, after thinking it over carefully, to use the English language. This will enable me to reach more directly and in a friendlier manner, all my colleagues in this house. It would be more difficult to do so by way of simultaneous translation. I know that my Acadian colleagues and my colleagues from Quebec and the other provinces will not be displeased because of that. In any case, as they are all bilingual there is no problem.

A father had ten sons. He and his wife had spared no effort to satisfy all the needs of such a large family. The father was a man of some means, and when he became old he accepted gracefully the burden of his years, because it always gave him pleasure to talk about his children. People were beginning to prepare for the golden wedding anniversary of that venerable couple, and the celebrations were to be the just reward of a deserving life.

However, the family approached that great day with some apprehension. One of the sons was to cast a dark cloud over the festivities. He was not like the others; he was coloured, a throwback to the fourth generation. The birth of this small coloured boy astonished his family, and friends and neighbours were hard put to hide their wonder and their scorn. The different colour of his complexion made the job of educating this small boy very difficult for his parents. Different from others, deprived of his rights, too often scoffed at by his own brothers, the young coloured boy, broken-hearted, vainly sought happiness in his family, where he must endure the worst injustice. His presence was embarrassing. He was as a ghost that awakened the family conscience and a reminder of the misery that has been the common lot of negroes which the passing years have failed to obliterate.

The young Negro I have just portrayed is not a fictional character. On the contrary, the story is authentic—for five million French-speaking people in Canada. At a time when Canadians are preparing to celebrate with great pomp and splendour the centennial of Confederation, certain factions in the province of Quebec, the voice of which proclaims throughout Canada the failure of Confederation, constitute a most serious threat to Canadian unity.

The question of biculturalism and bilingualism has become the great problem of the hour. The various political parties, so as not to underestimate its importance, made it one of the main points of the last election campaign. However, this should not be seen as a new problem purely due to political interest. The question of biculturalism is as old as Canada, as old as Confederation. Far from lessening its importance, the fact that it is old has made it more acute and one of the most difficult problems of our day.

The problem of biculturalism should have been settled in 1867. It was not. As a matter of fact, the British North America Act does not recognize the bicultural character of Canada, and in that respect it is out of date. Why does biculturalism, which is not a new problem, suddenly appear to be emphasized? A brief summary of Canadian history will give us the answer, or at least an explanation.

The years following the conquest were difficult for French-Canadians. They were hard, particularly for the Acadians. I shall refer again to them a little later in my speech. Uncertain of his fate, the French-Canadian kept his own counsel. He felt inferior. Defeat made him suspicious of the conqueror. He looked to the clergy for both material and spiritual guidance. The Acadians did the same. For a long time a return to the land was advocated, but after many years it became obvious that the economic future of Quebec did not lie entirely in agriculture.

During the last century a social phenomenon effected a change in the way of life of French-Canadians. The sudden upsurge of industrial progress brought about urbanization; people left the rural areas and settled in towns and cities. The new city dweller was forced to alter his quiet way of life which was centred around the church steeple. His needs were different. Life in the city changed his social habits. In this new and specialized world, he became aware of his intellectual deficiency. He wanted to become educated.

The clergy set up institutions to meet the spiritual and intellectual yearning of French-Canadians: schools, colleges, convents and universities. Those centres of culture played a major part in the intellectual advancement of the people. Here, traditions were maintained; the French language was carefully preserved, and the purpose of education was to promote French culture.

French culture in Canada reached a record high in Quebec during the last few years. French Canada has often been reproached for having trained only priests, doctors and lawyers. While it is true that in French Canada the educational system guided the young people towards a professional career, it did not neglect the part that the humanities must play in the making of a man.

The spectacular rise of concern for culture in recent years, with the encouragement of the provincial government, has produced in Quebec true artists who have now achieved international fame. The large number of musicians, composers, painters, sculptors, poets and writers is living proof of an intense activity in the field of art and culture. It may be that Quebec has provided Canada with fewer engineers, financiers, scientists and economists than Ontario, but let us not be in too great a hurry to cast a stone at her for having taken the trouble to promote art as a living thing.

History shows beyond doubt how important the arts have been throughout the ages. What remains of the ancient Greek and Roman civilizations, besides the immortal masterpieces of painters, sculptors, poets and writers? And, indeed, history does prove that artists have always been forerunners of things to come. Have they not always been first with new ideas? Above the man of business, whose sole purpose is to collect dollars and cents, soars the philosopher, the thinker, whose thought, far from being commonplace, is commensurate with history and civilization.

In Quebec thousands of young people who have graduated from great universities are finding their place in society and proving themselves competent in all fields of human activity. Those young university graduates, whose ideals have matured by contact with science and letters, are now casting a harsh and critical look at that society of which they are about to become a part. Too often, alas, the young man's enthusiasm will wane upon discovering the astonishing uses to which democratic principles are put. Canada, a democratic country about which he heard so many wonderful things in grade school, in high school and at university, becomes to him a foreign country when he is refused a certain job because he is not bilingual, while his English-speaking fellow-citizen, who does not know French, fills the same position.

The student's sensitive soul is disturbed at the sight of certain tribes in underdeveloped countries being grossly exploited by democratic countries which undertake to give equal rights to all. And yet in Canada, which is his own country, is he on equal terms with his neighbour who has odds in his favour? His love for his own culture and his affection for the fine French-Canadian traditions are the only things that prevent him from wishing to belong to another race.

Democracy does not allow discrimination and owes it to itself to give everyone an equal opportunity. Now Canada is a democratic country. So I will not go through the syllogism, for its conclusions would be false; that is to say, that the premises are false, more specifically the minor one. In fact, I must say that if Canada is a democratic country it should give each of its citizens a fair chance. Any serious-minded and sincere Canadian will recognize the existing conflict between democracy as a theory and democracy as a fact. The French-Canadians have been subject since Confederation to the disastrous effects of such a contradictory duality. What is to be done? Must French Canada lodge complaints with Ottawa? Alas, 96 years of history and of Confederation have already given the answer.

It must find another way. As a matter of fact, changes that have taken place in the province of Quebec in recent years obviously bear witness to the fact that the Confederation pact does not give satisfaction to everyone, and especially not to French Canada. Social Credit's sudden upsurge in Quebec is a sign of discontent. Old patterns are no longer accepted. It is by promising a brighter future that the two traditional parties have shared the leadership of the country with the support of the province of Quebec, but nothing has changed. After 96 years of requests, talks and promises action is wanted. When citizens start voting for a party solely because they want a change of government or because they have nothing to lose, then the least one can say is that Canada's political future is doubtful.

The separatists are clamouring for the independence of the province of Quebec because they feel that this is the only solution to the problem. Their argument is very simple: Quebec has everything it needs to become an independent state. Now, Confederation does not guarantee the fulfilment of French-Canadian culture, it does not give French Canadians the same rights as their English-speaking fellow citizens, and it holds no promise of a better future for the province of Quebec. Therefore, separatists want Quebec to be independent, and claim it will be.

The separatist doctrine and the activities of the F.L.Q. give a strong impression that Quebec will not be satisfied with minor concessions, as it was in the past. Faced with a crisis which will soon reach a climax, the federal Government has announced that a royal commission on biculturalism and bilingualism will be appointed. What is a royal commission? First of all, may I say that such an inquiry would not in itself solve anything. Too often in the past people have felt that the mere appointment of a royal commission would, by some unknown magic, solve a problem immediately. So a commission would be set up and people would forget about the problem. Is it just a political manoeuvre to appease those who threaten to make a scandal? Or is it to be a new democratic process by which politicians wash their hands of the demands of the people, of which they are fully aware?

A royal commission can be most helpful if the report it submits is followed up by legislation which can remedy the situation. I need not tell you how important the work of this commission is going to be and how carefully its members will have to be chosen. The commission must be capable of tackling a most important problem, one which must not be underrated, for it is every bit as important to Canada as is the question of the Canadian Constitution itself. Once the commission's work is done, its report must not be pigeonholed and forgotten.

My personal experience with royal commissions has made me rather suspicious of them. May I quote a single case? For years the committee entitled "Langue et Education de la Société Nationale l'Assomption", an Acadian association, strove to have Regulation 32 adopted by the Board of Education. That regulation called for more French instruction in the elementary and intermediate grades of Acadian schools, at a time when all subjects were taught exclusively in English. Finally, in 1930, the board made up its mind and decided to adopt the regulation. There was an immediate and terrific uproar among some of our English-speaking fellow citizens, and in the end Regulation 32 was rescinded.

The Acadians were up in arms against such a setback from the board. The Premier in office at the time, in order to pour some oil upon troubled waters on the eve of an election campaign, promised to set up a commission of inquiry on public education in New Brunswick.

In May 1931 the Government did create such a commission. It had 21 members, most of whom were educators of some note in the province. I had the honour of being among them, and it took us nearly a year to complete our assignment. The whole educational system was most closely examined, particularly the curriculum in the Acadian schools. All the recommendations embodied in the report were unanimously accepted by the commission, together with the famous Regulation 32. The report was tabled in the house at the beginning of the 1932 session. What was done about the report? Nothing, absolutely nothing; and dust continues to gather on the report which for years has been comfortably lying in a remote corner of our parliamentary archives. Am I not justified in being suspicious?

What will be the terms of reference of the commission? Biculturalism; that is, two cultures. The constitutional conflict which will arise as soon as the central Government interferes with education—an unavoidable consequence of an inquiry on biculturalism—has prompted federal authorities to have the commission approved by the provinces. However, the approval of the provinces does not bind them to accept the recommendations of the commission. In short, this means that the work of the commission might prove useless, at least as far as education is concerned. While the problem was originally restricted to bilingualism, the Gordon affair and subsequent statements by Messrs. Pearson, Diefenbaker and Douglas have given more scope to the matter. Such an investigation will necessarily deal with education.

A federal commission which has to do its investigating in the provinces—while they are free to approve or reject the commission and free to accept or reject its recommendations—is unlikely to succeed. It is useless to tackle the question if it is known in advance that it is insoluble or that the solution would be impractical.

Should we not at the beginning make sure that the commission does not undertake a task which would become, on the constitutional level, an interference in the field of education—a field that comes under the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces, according to section 93 of the British North America Act—which on the purely political level, might deteriorate relations between the central government and the provinces? If it is agreed to any extent that the federal Government cannot assume the right to make an inquiry, and then to legislate unilaterally in the field of education, it follows that an understanding must be reached beforehand between the federal Government and the provinces.

A royal commission on biculturalism must not concern itself only with the question of bilingualism in official documents. The Glassco Commission, which has closely examined that question, has already submitted its report. The proposed commission will study bilingualism in all its aspects, but the problem, in all its aspects, sets the commission's aim far beyond bilingualism.

The commission intends to study the present state of the two main cultures in Canada, that is, French and English. To that end, the commission will conduct an inquiry in all parts of Canada so that its report may be based on clear and verifiable facts. As the proposed inquiry will concern two cultures, each entitled by our Canadian institutions to similar protection, the composition of the commission will have to respect that fundamental privilege; otherwise, equality of the two cultures is denied in principle. But once the principle of equality is admitted, the composition of the commission must be based on equal representation of the French-speaking and the English-speaking communities. Such was the statement made by Hon. Paul Gérin-Lajoie, Minister of Youth in Quebec. Mr. André Laurendeau, of Le Devoir, in the issue of last May 10, added:

> A commission made up of representatives of each province might put us in the situation in which we find ourselves at federal-provincial conferences: one or two facing eight or nine.

There is no question about the legitimacy of the claim that French Canadians should have the same rights as their English-speaking fellow-citizens. I wonder why that feeling towards Quebec, which has resulted in the Government establishing a royal commission, should not apply to other French-speaking minorities throughout Canada.

Canadians, in common with Premier Jean Lesage, now agree that Quebec is not a province like the others: it is now the "state of Quebec"—l'État du Québec. Likewise, New Brunswick differs from the other provinces in that 40 per cent of its population is French-speaking. Is Quebec entitled to a "new deal"? If it is, I feel that the claims of the Acadians in that respect are even more justified.

Faced with the demands of Quebec, the most important spokesman for people of French origin in America, the federal Government, must not ignore the weaker voice of French minorities outside Quebec.

From a national point of view, Quebec represents a certain political power in Ottawa and, to some extent, a certain threat, having as it does 75 seats in the House of Commons. In this respect one only has to recall the 1962 federal election. But the French-speaking people of New Brunswick, the Acadians, are not in the same position. Nevertheless, they should have the same legal rights as their brothers in Quebec.

The measures that will be taken following the commission's report, to guarantee the rights of French minorities, will be motivated by purely political considerations, in so far as they do not apply equally to all French minorities.

French Canada extends beyond the boundaries of Quebec. However, the Confederation Act does not recognize any French entity outside the province of Quebec. That is why the constitutionality of all claims made by French minorities scattered throughout the country is being questioned. In a speech made recently at the University of Western Ontario, Premier Jean Lesage admitted that the demands of French Canadians are the same in Quebec or elsewhere. He stated, among other things, that Quebec is not asking any rights beyond those that should be accorded the other provinces. "We are asking", he said, "that Quebec be free to maintain its position as the mother country of all Canadians who speak our language and share our culture."

If Quebec has serious reasons to claim greater participation in the administration of its own affairs, the Acadians are all the more justified in their complaints. Under the Confederation Act, Quebec has been more favoured with regard to language, culture and economy than any other French-speaking community in Canada, even though it did not get the full share to which it was entitled as of right.

But, if there ever was a people who had to suffer for two centuries, it is indeed the Acadians. I do not intend to review their history today, for you are all familiar with it. It is full of anguish, frustrations, deceptions, contradictions and sorrow. More than that, it is a succession of heroic deeds, indomitable courage, patience and hope. The Acadian people, the oldest French group in America, went through the most distressing exile, saw with deep sorrow their families broken up, their farms confiscated, their future ruined, and their national survival seriously threatened and compromised, but their spirit remained undaunted. They had the will to live their own life and to preserve, no matter what the cost, the heritage of a great and glorious past.

Having inherited a rich and lofty culture, a tongue fertile in thought and subtle in expression, the Acadian, during his long exile had no thought other than that of returning to his native land, of again treading that soil on which he had shed his own sweat and blood and of resuming the peaceful life that had been his since the day De Monts and Champlain at Port Royal erected the cross of Christ and hoisted the flag of freedom. In order to perform so huge a task, the Acadian needed to have deeply anchored in his agonized soul a profound love for the little homeland he had founded and which he had lost. He yearned to go back to it; he wanted to see it again, to rebuild it, to live there and die there. This was truly a magnificent ideal, one that required on his part the practice of all the virtues that a people must possess when it refuses to die, when it wants to survive and reshape its whole life. Facts strikingly show that the Acadian people did possess the virtues of courage, steadfastness, abnegation, faith and hope to rebuild by dint of great sacrifices their mutilated homeland.

Honourable senators, with your permission I wish to take some more time to talk to you about Acadian culture.

French has no official status in New Brunswick. Indeed there is no provision in section 133 of the British North America Act, giving our Acadians in that province the right to speak French before the courts or in the legislative assembly, not to mention the situation as to our school system. If we look at the school situation in Quebec, we see that the state of Quebec is teaching us democracy.

The English minority in Quebec represents only 13 per cent of the people, yet the school rights of the minority are acknowledged by the existence of the Protestant committee of the Department of Education. There is no such thing to protect the rights of the French minority in New Brunswick.

French, having no legal status in New Brunswick, exists only as a matter of tolerance. I hate the word "tolerance". It is undemocratic. According to the dictionary, it means "to suffer with indulgence what is against our feelings, our views, or, a favour granted to some people at certain times." Is that really what the Fathers of Confederation had in mind in 1867? No doubt the word "tolerance" would have amazed Macdonald and Cartier.

While the necessity of compromise between two partners in a common undertaking has to be admitted, the partnership becomes a mockery when one of the partners only tolerates the other, and breaks the rules of fair play when one does not share with the other all the benefits derived from the undertaking. Such a situation certainly does no credit to a country which purports to be democratic and bicultural.

I recalled for you a moment ago the rough years which have seen the survival of the Acadian people, although apparently doomed to die two centuries ago when they suffered deeply. They have recovered but they are not completely cured. Hostilities between the two races have now ceased. It really seems that the hatchet has been buried forever. The English have forgotten the event of 1755 and are asking the Acadians to do likewise. But because the Acadians have suffered so much, they have become cautious; with fear of suffering new injuries, they give in, and in order not to run the risk of losing what they have gained in such a hard way they suffer in silence. Some have attempted to break that silence and by pointing to the regression they have jeopardized the status quo; they have often been condemned for having disturbed the friendly understanding.

That new designation means for the Acadian people nothing less than their submission. It has often been like cold water thrown over active members of a nationalistic movement. That was the irrefutable argument, the true formula. On many occasions it was used to make the few brave and sincere compatriots resist the temptation of speaking out their justified claims for their rights.

The education system never favoured the French culture in Acadian regions. During almost 40 years I was closely linked with the great cause of the education of young Acadians. Indeed, the system has changed since 50 years ago, when the young Acadian had to learn English even before knowing the primer of his own mother tongue at school. All subjects, with the exception of French grammar and literature, were taught in English with English school books. French is taught to the Acadians as a secondary language, as a foreign language. It took us 50 years to achieve the following results: From the first to the sixth grade all subjects are taught in French, which is quite an improvement, but from the seventh grade to the end of high school two subjects only, history and geography, are taught in French. All other subjects are taught in English. At the end of their high school education Acadians have to write all their matriculation examinations in English. Then, the only normal school is English, and it is located in an English-speaking community. The means at our disposal scarcely allow our cultural survival. Changes will be required if we want this culture to flourish. We need institutions in which a French spirit prevails, and where the importance attached to the teaching of the French language denotes an interest in an authentic culture.

We have in our area two kinds of institutions: the English institution, and the bilingual—that is to say the anglicizing—institution. In the English institutions, emphasis is placed on the English language and culture, which is quite understandable, and the French language is taught as a foreign tongue, as are Spanish and German.

Hon. Mr. Reid: What about the Scottish race and the part they played in the development of this country?

Hon. Mr. Savoie: When a student leaves the English institutions he is fluent in English—

Hon. Mr. Dupuis: He is allowed to play the bagpipes.

Hon. Mr. Reid: British Columbia was discovered and peopled by the Scots, and the Scots are proud of it.

Hon. Mr. Savoie: When a student leaves the English institutions he is fluent in English and imbued with an English culture, but cannot speak foreign tongues. The theoretical teaching of foreign languages has given the students no more than a smattering of a different language and culture. This situation is highly deplorable. The Honourable Vincent Massey, former Governor General of Canada and a truly great Canadian, speaking recently at the convocation exercises at Ottawa's Carleton University, said to the graduates:

> If you have not learned the other language, that is, the French language, you have not taken full possession of your Canadian heritage and you are not in a position to take full advantage of it, as you should.

In the bilingual institutions both languages are in current use and practice, French being the vehicle of the humanities and English that of the scientific disciplines. The major position occupied by English in our bilingual institutions, and the preponderance of English in the business and industrial world, lead to a result of which we are fully aware. The language of the Acadians is poor; its vocabulary is limited and it teems with anglicisms. The Acadian culture is in the process of disappearing.

Honourable senators, some alleged authorities in the matter have referred to New Brunswick as an example for the rest of Canada of a province where people of different races live together in perfect harmony, everyone enjoying full recognition of their rights. The so-called harmony exists, but at great cost to the Acadians. That goodwill is submissiveness on the part of the Acadian minority, whose rights have been trampled on so often.

The Acadian people are conscious of their intellectual and cultural want. They are conscious also of their economic weakness. I am not prepared to believe certain statements made recently to the effect that the question of biculturalism and bilingualism does not pose in the Atlantic area the same problem as in the province of Quebec. These statements compel me to set the record straight. The problem is as real in the Atlantic provinces as anywhere else. I have already informed you of the goodwill that exists in our region. It is true that both groups are eager for the full economic development of their area. It is true also that the average income per capita is lower than that of the other provinces and of Canada as a whole. But the general concern in the face of the economic problem does not meet the concept of "bifinancialism", which someone mentioned recently, because the average income per capita of Acadians is still lower than that of the English-speaking people of the Atlantic area. That also stems from the fact that the Acadian people did not have the same opportunity to develop their culture.

In closing, I am sure that I express the feelings of all my people in saying that the Acadian people want full recognition of their rights, but within Confederation. Our people have suffered; they have learned to wait without rushing matters. Ours are a peaceful people; that is perhaps why their partners have learned to respect them. The Acadians do not wish to break up the "partnership" because they too have learned to esteem their partners and to co-operate with them. However, the Acadians would like their partners to be made aware of the issue; they want them to try understanding it.

At a time when so many Canadians are considering the issue of biculturalism the Acadian people are seeing the dawn of a new era in the history of Confederation. The proposed study initiated by the federal Government is in itself the announcement of a closer co-operation between the two races in their trying to reach a common ideal. The importance of the matter to be studied fully justifies the part which the central Government will play in this investigation, and lifts the problem beyond all provincial boundaries.

This investigation will rouse a new national awareness in Canada after 96 years of Confederation. We will have to read our Constitution again, to study it and find its democratic and complete interpretation. In order to meet all exigencies of society, to satisfy all minority needs, to answer their justifiable requests, the Constitution may even have to be amended. What a magnificent task it will be to give all Canadians equal opportunities, whatever their ethnic background.

Canada, as a country, will set for others an example of true goodwill between peoples of different race and culture, an example of close co-operation between two partners who want their undertaking to succeed. Such is the ideal of every Canadian of goodwill, whether his culture and language be English, or whether he be a French Canadian from the province of Quebec or an Acadian from the Atlantic provinces.

Hon. Calvert C. Pratt: Honourable senators, I should like to refer to some matters arising out of the Speech from the Throne, but first I would offer my sincere congratulations to His Honour the Speaker on his high appointment. It is obvious that his appointment has received the unanimous approval and the full co-operation of this chamber.

This debate on the motion for an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne gives us a chance to dwell on public matters that are of the greatest interest to us. I shall at this time refer to a limited number of items of particular application to the province of Newfoundland. As a Newfoundlander I am particularly interested in that part of the Throne Speech which reads:

> The Government is initiating consultation with the provinces to work out a program for national fishery development.

No other province of Canada has such a large percentage of its population identified with the fishing industry as has Newfoundland.

I was greatly impressed by the fact that the proposed consideration of fishery development is to be on a national basis, and it is gratifying to know that the presentation of the need for such a program has come from the Government of the province of Newfoundland. However, I want to say at the beginning of my remarks that by no means must the urgent problems of the fishing industry in any area be allowed to wait over during the long period that will be necessarily involved in a countrywide survey of difficulties and the general adoption of a national policy. Where difficulties are obvious, and where the livelihood of people is involved, action should not be delayed until the whole national problem is analysed and met by legislation.

Now that the Government's intention is announced, speed in instituting and putting into effect a forthright policy with respect to fishery development wherever possible is essential in order to avoid a vacuum being created by industry waiting on government, and government waiting on industry. Off the coast of Newfoundland there is one of the finest areas of the world for ocean fishing, but the development of that area has been at a minimum compared with food production and processing generally throughout the world.

World production of fish on a live-weight basis now stands at 40 million metric tons, and that has to be compared with 20 million metric tons just before World War II. That is an annual increase of 5 per cent to 7 per cent. Newfoundland, being in one of the most prolific fishing areas in the world, had a decreased production in the last ten years of 35,000 tons, or about 11 per cent of its total production. That is a ten-year decrease of 11 per cent, against a world-wide increase of 5 per cent to 7 per cent per year.

The industry in our province has not kept pace with production and processing methods needed to meet competition. Our big competitors come around our coast with a large measure of government participation in fishery development. That participation has been by means of subsidies, vessel ownership assistance and is in many ways based on development programs.

Honourable senators, here is a remarkable fact in this connection. The total tonnage of foreign boats fishing in the northwest Atlantic waters, mostly adjacent to the Canadian fishing grounds, has increased substantially over the Canadian tonnage. For a comparison of tonnage one must of course eliminate the small boats and there is an elimination in this case of local boats under 50 tons. Having made that elimination, we find that Portugal sent ships into these waters totalling two and a half times the tonnage of the Canadian ships; Germany sent nearly double the tonnage; the Russians had in our waters nearly five times more tonnage than the Canadians.

A recent official report states that between 175 and 200 Russian fishing vessels are in the northwest Atlantic waters. This represents about a 30 per cent increase over the Soviet vessels in that area last year. These ships are operating of course in a very wide area off the south and east coast of Newfoundland.

A listing which I saw four years ago reported over 600 vessels fishing in those waters from twelve European countries. That number has increased considerably since then.

Honourable senators, those facts certainly illustrate the need for a forthright policy for development of our fisheries, in ships, processing and marketing. Without an active policy we cannot take advantage of the natural geographical privileges which belong to Canada on the east coast and particularly in the waters adjacent to Newfoundland.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: May I ask the honourable senator a question? All those vessels that he speaks of, are they operating within the 12-mile limit?

Hon. Mr. Pratt: No. This has no relationship to the 12-mile limit. All these vessels are operating in those waters generally.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: Would any of them be within the 12-mile limit?

Hon. Mr. Pratt: Yes. I will make some reference to that later. This is all general tonnage in the areas I am referring to.

Honourable senators, a short while ago, at the invitation of the Newfoundland Board of Trade, a very eminent fisheries authority, Dr. D. B. Finn, came to Newfoundland to deliver an address. Dr. Finn was at one time deputy minister of Fisheries in Canada, and now he is Director of the Fisheries Division of the Food and Agricultural Organization of the United Nations, with his headquarters in Rome.

I feel it would be useful to make reference to some of the points he brought out in his address, based on his world-wide experience. He showed that there was much greater advancement in the technological and engineering schools relating to the products of the land as compared to the products of the sea.

He spoke of the tremendous advancement which has been made recently in meeting fishery problems in foreign countries. While he did not depreciate the value of research that is going on in Canada, he stated that the application of research in production and processing in our country is years behind what is going on in overseas countries. Having listened to him expound on that subject, one could well see why it is that foreign producers are coming thousands of miles by ship to fish profitably in the prolific fishing areas right at our door.

While referring to the increasing need for food for a rapidly expanding world population, he said, "The sea is the last unexplored food frontier." In comparison with many other countries, the fish-producing units that we are using are most uneconomic. Dr. Finn referred particularly to the east coast of Canada, and stated that the changes that have to be made in the fishing industry, to use the prevailing natural resources, are of such magnitude that the outlay for production is much beyond the capabilities of the established industry.

I do not want to give the impression that the backward condition of our fishing industry, as compared to modern industry generally, is a reflection on the enterprise of those engaged in it. In the establishment of fish plants for frozen fillets, and other marketable grades in various products, we have had a greater ploughing back of earnings than is usual in any industry that I know of. During the past decade there have been investments running into very many millions of dollars by industry, using in some instances its entire profit over a very considerable period to extend and modernize plants. At the same time the Government has made loans in many cases to assist in the same way. What is lacking, however, is an overall program that is entirely beyond the scope of industry and provincial Government, but is certainly within the reach of a joint co-operation with the federal Government. It is worth while using an expression used by Dr. Finn, who said that "Newfoundland is situated within spitting distance of one of the richest fisheries of the world."

I want to emphasize this position, that no large sum of money used for well-planned development of this industry is an expense. If it is used properly and economically, it is an investment rather than an expense. It can be a very valuable productive asset to Canada. One of the principal reasons is that the major part of the production will go in exports to countries outside of Canada, which increase the inward flow of money. One may ask: If prospects are so good, why does not private capital come in and take it over? The answer is that the fundamental difficulties are in the required modernization of production by ships and equipment. That involves many thousands of fishermen who have to be trained and adapted to new methods. With adequate production in prospect, I feel that capital at home and from abroad would be available for the huge undertaking of processing and marketing. With the assurance of established production, then what is actually a manufacturing job will undoubtedly come into being.

Another item to which I would like to refer is the establishment of the 12-mile limit for the exclusion of foreign fishing boats.

Honourable Senator Kinley has spoken in great detail on this issue and has brought out many of the fundamental features involved. It is indeed a very useful speech for the record. This matter was previously reviewed and thoroughly examined by the honourable Senator Reid, who in his usual forthright manner dealt chiefly with the problems that exist on the west coast of Canada. My reference will be brief and of particular application to east-coast waters.

Since this matter was brought out in the Speech from the Throne, the Prime Minister has made reference in the other house to a Government decision to have this limit established as of mid-May 1964. I think a definite policy by Canada in this respect is becoming more urgent every year. In no place is it more important to have this applied than in the area off the east coast of Newfoundland. While the great fishing area is on the Grand Banks of Newfoundland out in international waters, the outstanding source of supply for our Newfoundland fishermen is the seasonal inflow of fish towards the shore.

The coastline of Newfoundland is, as you know, almost unique in its numerous inlets and harbours, as well as adjacent islands; so it is most important that the limits set give adequate protection to the Newfoundland fishermen in those waters. Without that protection there cannot be a profitable industrialization of the fishing industry to support its many thousands of fishermen.

With countries all over the world now protecting their fishing industries by applying various coastal limits to meet their needs, Canada is far behind in that respect. Recently, I read an account of some penalties imposed by way of fines and confiscations of fish products in other lands. Canada is amongst the few countries left that are not, in this respect, meeting the needs of modern times.

Penalties for infringing on offshore areas set by countries for their own fishing industries are now of world-wide application. The 12-mile limit, as we know, is becoming very general. I have read of fines imposed on vessels and cargoes in various parts of three continents amounting to the equivalent of from $5,000 to $15,000 per vessel. I mention this to illustrate that the strong enforcement of such protective measures is becoming of a general nature and that we in Canada cannot afford to ignore that trend.

In reviewing our fishery problems, it has to be borne in mind very strongly that there is now a far greater menace to the use of inshore waters than was caused by the previously established methods of fishing. The technical changes in the production industry adopted by competing countries are even beyond the imagination of the average citizen. Electric lights can be lowered into the sea to attract fish to the catching equipment. A method now in practice is the attraction of fish to a hose funnel and the fish are pumped up through the hose for processing on the ship.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Is that cricket?

Hon. Mr. Pratt: Well, it is poor cricket, but that method is used. A single funnel can bring in fish at the rate of a ton an hour. I give that only as an illustration of changes existing and impending. I obtained that information from an official record, which I read some time ago. How general such methods are among foreign ships, I do not know.

Giving our ocean fisheries adequate water space off the shore for economical operations is of first rate importance. There are, of course, many other factors that must be dealt with to create and maintain a successful fishing industry. I repeat that no time must be lost in instituting local improvements that are obviously necessary to meet the highly technical and competitive changes that have come about.

Another matter I wish to refer to is the additional assistance mentioned in the Speech from the Throne for the completion of the Trans-Canada Highway. When the official opening of the highway was celebrated last year, Newfoundland, unfortunately, could not reasonably participate in the function, because only a small part of the highway was completed. In the report of March 31, 1962 the total approved length in the province is given as 540 miles, and at that time the paved portion was only 182 miles. In the same report, the total length of the Trans-Canada Highway was 4,859 miles, of which 4,060 miles, or 83.6 per cent of the total, had been completed. The Newfoundland portion completed at that time was recorded as 33.6 per cent. In other words, by way of comparison, after eliminating the Newfoundland mileage, only 10 per cent of the total mileage across Canada was unfinished, while about 65 per cent in Newfoundland had to be completed. Since that report was made figures have changed, but the relative comparison is not too different.

Honourable Senator Phillips, of Prince Edward Island, in his initial speech of June 3, mentioned that the Premier of his province had suggested that where 50 per cent of the cost of such roads had been paid by the province, their Government should receive a refund of 40 per cent of the portion the province had paid for. If that principle were adopted, then 40 per cent of all completion costs would have to be refunded to each province. However, appealing that principle would be to the provinces, it should have no relation to assistance now forecast for the unfinished portion. The honourable senator was referring to a province with a total of only 71 miles, and with conditions of cost and requirements having little relation to many of the other provinces. As a matter of fact, all provinces have a marked difference in their mileage cost of highway construction. The nature of the terrain in Newfoundland makes road building very expensive. Numerous rivers have to be crossed. Bridge and overpasses run the cost up very high. Surely those conditions should be met by special appropriation.

Referring further to the Newfoundland highway situation, there are special circumstances that naturally should be considered. My province has a population of almost 500,000, living in about 1,200 towns and settlements located around 6,000 miles of coastline. It has a road problem which in many respects is different from any other province. A few years ago the sea provided the chief means of intercommunication. To face up to the problems of modern life, good road communications are absolutely essential.

The necessary centralization of good schools requires more connecting roads than in the past. There is also the matter of medical services, industrial needs, and so forth. As a matter of fact, one strong industrial reason for more adequate road communications is the daily transportation of fresh fish to cold storage centres and processing plants. There is also great mineral development in certain areas, both actual and potential. This requires people to travel from their homes in adjacent areas; if new towns had to be built up it would in some cases make the project economically unsound. The interlocking of local roads with the Trans-Canada Highway is necessary for the life of our people. That of course is a provincial matter. As a matter of fact, during the past decade, the province has, at a tremendous cost, built up about 1,500 miles of these local roads. Newfoundland has used a bigger percentage of its income for roadbuilding than has any other province in Canada.

An eloquent citation was given by Honourable Senator Inman in her speech in this debate, on the tourist attractions of her province, Prince Edward Island. I am not going to dispute one word of what she said. I am sure that neither she nor anyone with a practical knowledge of Newfoundland would argue for a minute against the tremendous tourist potential of my province. However, that tourist trade has been retarded tremendously by not having the basic highway facilities required. As we all know, the value of tourist trade is not reflected entirely in money spent on sightseeing, valuable and interesting as that may be. The bringing of people into a province, even though they come primarily for the pleasure of visiting, is a prelude to the creation of wider interest in industrial and business expansion in that area.

As I have emphasized before, the completion of a through road, such as is planned for the Trans-Canada Highway, is an essential factor in the economy of Newfoundland. This is just one of the many things still required to be done to bring the economy and standards of living in the still new province more in line with other parts of the dominion.

I would like to close on this note. June 24, only a little over a week ago, marked the 466th anniversary of the discovery of Newfoundland by John Cabot. During its long history it has developed its own economy based on supplying needs abroad, first in products of the sea, of the mines, and then of the forests. It went along with its ups and downs as have other countries. With the entry of Newfoundland as a province of Canada fourteen years ago, it brought into the dominion money from other countries by the sale of its products in world markets in far greater proportion than has been the experience of any other province. In recent years those exports have increased tremendously by reason of big capital investment from abroad. The earnings of our people from that expansion have been spent largely in buying our requirements from the other provinces, and very little from abroad where our products are sold. That unique situation in Canada is just one of the many factors which justifies Newfoundland having special consideration in the federal monetary policy.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche), debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

The Senate resumed from yesterday consideration of His Excellency the Administrator's speech at the opening of the session, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Lefrançois, seconded by Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland), for an address in reply thereto.

(Translation):

Hon. Edgar E. Fournier: Honourable senators, I should like to join with other senators who have already had the opportunity to say a few words of welcome and congratulations to our distinguished Speaker, the Honourable Senator Bourget.

I had the privilege to sit with him for some time in the other place. Of those who did not share my views, he was the one I rated most highly in that house. I had great regard for him, first of all, for his fine work and ability, but mostly for the eloquence he showed in the defence of his causes. I was sometimes jealous of his fluency of speech, of his well-founded arguments, of his constructive recommendations and I make no bones about confessing that I would have thought twice before launching into an argument with the honourable member for Lévis, whose great qualities have made him an obvious choice for the distinguished office of Speaker of the Senate.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I should like, in my humble way, first to extend to you my warmest congratulations on your appointment to this august assembly, and then on your elevation to this exalted position.

I ask divine Providence to bestow His blessings on you and on Mrs. Bourget and to keep you in good health so that you may enjoy for a long time the well-deserved honours that have been conferred on you.

(Text):

I also wish to extend my appreciation to the two honourable leaders of our house. I am sure that a novice like me can learn a lot from their wisdom and kindness. The two honourable senators are giving a fine example of true democracy, where differences of opinion are respected and debated in a very friendly manner.

I regret that the wheel of misfortune has commanded our leaders to cross the floor and change seats. I certainly hope that this exchange will be of only short duration, as both leaders are well qualified to work on either side.

To the new senators I would like to say this: I know that you have already felt and appreciated the friendship which exists inside and outside of this house.

Speaking as a new appointee, it is an honour and privilege to be associated with such a group of highly distinguished Canadian citizens.

I wish to congratulate the mover of the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne (Hon. Mr. Lefrançois) and the seconder (Hon. Mr. Taylor, Westmorland), for the way they have carried on their duties. Amidst all their embarrassment, the dignity of the house has been kept at a high level. I can appreciate the difficulty of their task in dressing such a lady for a public appearance, having so little and such flimsy material to work with.

It was only through the good fortune of my good friend of long standing, the honourable Senator Taylor—who has been a "Taylor" for a long time—that the fair lady was attired properly to meet the public. Everything seemed to have gone along as well as could be expected, until the fair lady had a rendezvous with the honourable Minister of Finance. And we all know what happened. No further comment!

I do not intend to be too critical of the Speech from the Throne; I shall try to rise above my political weakness and accept it as a fact that even at worst some good can be found. I am well prepared to stand behind any measures which may be of benefit to Canada.

We have heard many outstanding speeches lately from both sides of the house. However, in the last few days the matter has become somewhat "fishy". The adoption of the 12-mile limit, I am sure, will be a step forward in the right direction.

Last year I had the privilege of being the seconder of the motion for an address in reply to the Throne Speech. I must say that it was an easy and pleasant task, for in those days the Throne Speech really was a Throne Speech—progressive, constructive, and much could be said in its favour. An increase in the economy and welfare of the Canadian people was the aim, and it brought results which no fair-minded person could deny.

The Speech from the Throne mentioned the safeguarding of provincial rights, and we appreciate that. The speech also mentioned the establishment of a Municipal Development and Loan Board. Yet, we find the provinces had not been consulted in this important matter.

The speech mentioned measures to be taken to curtail unemployment. This too we favour and are prepared to support any program if results along this line can be attained. So far there are no indications of any results. The proposed Municipal Development and Loan Board so far has brought nothing but discontent and confusion on the part of the provinces.

The proposed amendment to the Atlantic Development Board Act is not too welcome in the Maritimes. I hope to say a few words on this bill when it is presented to this house, and more could be said.

However, as a Good Samaritan I am prepared to do everything in my humble capacity to support any measures which can be beneficial to Canadian citizens. Opportunities will come later to discuss other proposed measures affecting such matters as national defence problems, the appointment of a second cabinet minister for the Department of Agriculture, biculturalism, extended assistance to vocational and technical institutes, and many others.

Honourable senators, at this point I would like to say a word about a project in New Brunswick which is close to my heart. In every province across Canada, one will find monuments commemorating historic sites such as the landing places of our forefathers, places relating to our heroes, and battlefields. All of them have been erected to the pride of Canada.

A few years ago the Conservative Government embarked on a program of marking such sites. I would like to bring to your attention, honourable senators, what I call the "forgotten site"—that is "The Lazarate of Tracadie"—an institution where the lepers of Canada were taken care of. This would be a rather long story to tell in detail. However, I would like to give you a brief history of this institution.

It dates back to 1758, when a sailing ship called l'Indienne, arriving from the Orient was wrecked at the mouth of the Miramichi River. On the ship were two Norwegians who had boarded it in Norway and the fact that they had a skin disease escaped the captain's attention.

The ship was a complete wreck and the whole crew was forced to spend the winter in the area, sharing with the inhabitants whatever food and shelter was available. Most unfortunately, this skin disease spread rapidly among the families who had volunteered to provide the crew with food and shelter.

The parish priest of Tracadie, Reverend Father LaFrance, took an interest in the afflicted and brought the matter to the attention of the New Brunswick legislature in 1842. From 1758 to 1842 very little had been done to prevent the spread of the disease and the area had become widely affected. In 1842, after Father LaFrance had appealed to the New Brunswick legislature, Dr. Kay of Miramichi was sent to Norway to study this particular disease.

Dr. Kay returned to Canada in 1844. On a small island between Chatham and Newcastle, called Sheldrake or l'Ile aux Becs-Scies, a small shelter was built for those afflicted. Soon after it was set on fire by a desperate patient and was destroyed. It was rebuilt, but living conditions there were no better than they had been in the first shelter. There were no sanitation facilities, food was practically nil, medical care was almost nonexistent. During a short period fifteen of the thirty patients died without receiving any attention.

Under those lamentable conditions, Father LaFrance made another appeal to the New Brunswick Government, and in 1849 a large house was rented from a gentleman by the name of Phileas Losier. The New Brunswick Government ordered that all patients be grouped together, and they were placed under the supervision of Mr. Losier.

A new doctor by the name of Charles Labillois was appointed in charge of the institution. At that time there was no known cure for the disease, but Dr. Labillois saw that proper care and food were provided. In 1852 Dr. Labillois left. He had gained a high reputation and had established a friendly relationship with those unfortunate people. After Dr. Labillois had gone three patients escaped and set the institution on fire. It burned to the last board. They were later caught, but their action caused much hardship the following winter.

In 1853 a new building 60 feet by 20 feet was erected. It had four sections, two for men and two for women. This new institution was placed under the care of Dr. Gordon. According to the records, Dr. Gordon made a very poor name for himself. The place became neglected and the doctor visited the institution not more than six times a year. He was known to be very rude to the patients. The story goes that this building was put up to relieve pain and suffering, but it had become a place of disorder and suffering. Windows were iron-barred, doors were locked, sanitation and food conditions became appalling, patients were unattended and died without medical services. History reports that one day Reverend Gaudreau forced his way into the institution and found the bodies of two patients who had died a couple of days prior to his visit. By that time Father LaFrance had been transferred to Halifax and was replaced by Father Gaudreau who carried the complaints to the New Brunswick Government.

In 1863 the institution underwent reform under Dr. Nicholson, but he died three years later, in 1866, and was replaced by Dr. Smith. Dr. Smith made an appeal to les Soeurs Hospitalières de St. Joseph du Mont Royal to take over the institution.

On June 10, 1866 the New Brunswick legislature decided to build a new wing to the institution at a cost of not more than 400 pounds sterling, on the understanding that the institution be placed under the control of Les Soeurs de Charité de Montreal. Les Soeurs de Charité declined the offer and at the request of Monsignor Bourget, Bishop of Montreal, the institution was taken over by les Soeurs Hospitalières de St. Joseph under the leadership of Mère Paré.

Honourable senators, the sad and heroic history of the Lazaret of Tracadie is that of the sisters who volunteered to work at the institution. They had to sacrifice their freedom and life; they had to live with the diseased, knowing they would become contaminated and die. But nothing stopped them in their devotion to the alleviation of human suffering. Reward for such devotion was not expected in this world. They brought comfort to the patients; they assisted those who had reached the stage of immobility; they attended the dying; and they prayed and prepared those unfortunate people to meet their Creator. Honourable senators, if this is not heroism, then heroism has no significance.

In closing my remarks on this subject let me state what this institution has accomplished since 1868, there being no records previous to that date. It has treated 326 patients: 142 from New Brunswick, 3 from Quebec, 7 from Ontario, 13 from the western provinces, and 3 Canadians who contracted the disease overseas and returned to Canada for treatment. The balance included immigrants to Canada from Russia, China, England, France, Scotland, Ireland, Syria, Malta, Iceland, and one Negro.

Today in the institution there are only four patients. One is a woman from New Brunswick, admitted in 1918. She never had the disease, but was a member of a complete family which was admitted and she has lived in the institution ever since. There is one Russian Doukhobor, admitted in 1926, who is now cured but has no other place to live; one Chinese, admitted in 1937, who is homeless; and one Russian nun, admitted in 1958, who is under treatment and is curable. Consequently, one must conclude that the disease is conquered in Canada. Those patients are now in a separate quarter adjoining the Tracadie Hôtel-Dieu Hospital.

Honourable senators, at the beginning of this topic I said that the last Conservative Government had embarked on a program of assistance to develop such memorial sites. The site I have in mind is the old cemetery where all those unfortunate people, including the many sisters and doctors who devoted and gave their lives to this cause, are buried. It was a forgotten site until 1959, when a prominent and welfare-minded citizen decided to do something about this old memorable cemetery which has become a shambles and a disgrace.

Last year I had the pleasure of assisting the honourable gentleman, Dr. Luce of Tracadie, in his undertaking. We brought this matter to the attention of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, under its then minister, the Honourable Walter Dinsdale, and to the attention of the Department of National Health and Welfare, under its then minister, the Honourable Jay Waldo Monteith. We made considerable progress. Although we did not agree with some of the procedures followed by those departments, at least we finally received notice of approval to rebuild this memorable site.

I would like to show you by the use of this sketch what we have in mind. It is very simple. The burial ground, which is approximately 110 feet by 50 feet, contains 500 or 600 bodies. Our idea is to erect a centre monument in memory of Sister Paré and Doctors Labillois, Nicholson and Smith. This monument will be surrounded by a number of headstones of similar design. It is intended that the stones be carved locally at Tracadie, and our estimated cost of the project is much below $5,000.

I wish to place on record today that this honourable citizen, Dr. Luce, is now writing another page in the history of this memorable institution, the Lazaret of Tracadie, and his devotion to this cause is highly commendable.

It is my sincere hope that this project will be carried out as planned. I am informed now that there are on the site at Tracadie two officials or inspectors from Halifax making a survey of what we have requested. I hope it will not become a political football, as I am afraid that the expenses of those two officials from Halifax may be more than the cost of the project itself. I also understand that this is their second visit. I fail to see why experts or technical engineers are required to set those simple stones and erect a very ordinary fence around this lot. I believe that the old cemetery is of a memorial nature, being the only one on Canadian soil. Its history of suffering, devotion and self-sacrifice should not be allowed to remain in the shadow any longer.

Honourable senators, I thank you for your kind attention.

PRIVATE BILL

THE BOARD OF TRADE OF METROPOLITAN TORONTO—SECOND READING

Hon. Harry A. Willis moved the second reading of Bill S-25, respecting The Board of Trade of Metropolitan Toronto.

He said: Honourable senators, I come from quite close to that vast area known as Metropolitan Toronto.

The old city of Toronto has had a Board of Trade since 1890, incorporated by act of the Parliament of Canada. One section that act, as amended from time to time, permits the present Metropolitan Toronto Board of Trade to hold assets up to $750,000. In the past 10 years, and even more so in the past five years, this Board of Trade has grown by leaps and bounds.

In 1957 the board entered into a leasehold arrangement on the Board of Trade Building, and as my honourable friends from Toronto know, that is a very fine building. That leasehold arrangement has fifteen years to run. In this building there are lounge rooms, committee rooms, and a dining room. Since it was opened in 1957 the membership has increased to a present total of 10,000 members. Ordinarily membership of a Board of Trade increases, I am informed, by two to three per cent annually, but for the last four years this Board of Trade has increased by 10 per cent annually. It serves not only members of large corporations, but the smaller businessman who does not have a club. It provides him with facilities for entertaining and accommodation which he would not otherwise have.

The directors of the Board of Trade of Metropolitan Toronto are still within the $750,000 limit, and they are asking that there be no limit on their permitted holdings and further that they be allowed to decide the extent of their assets. Therefore, the directors are petitioning Parliament to grant them this power.

The idea contemplated by the Board of Trade is to erect other buildings. The first one covered by this long-term project would be a building similar to that on Adelaide street in the city of Toronto, to be located in the Humber area in northwest Toronto, which would provide facilities for the business people in that area and would obviate the necessity of their travelling into downtown Toronto.

Furthermore, as honourable senators from Toronto know, in the Don Mills area there are some large business concerns, such as I.B.M. and Underwood, whose buildings are among the finest in Canada. They are indeed beautifully situated. It is the hope of the Board of Trade of Metropolitan Toronto to provide buildings and outlets for the area south of Highway 401 and along the Humber, to include facilities not now available in the present building on Adelaide street, such as a golf club and a curling club. Anybody who has witnessed the explosive growth of Metropolitan Toronto in recent years knows that curling has become the recreation of more people in the past few years than ever before.

I think the Board of Trade should be lauded for this idea. If they are granted the authority which they seek I know they will not exercise it unwisely. I say this knowing as I do, the directors and the past president, and knowing that they are very cautious and keen financial men. This house would have no reason to regret giving them the powers they seek, to be used at their discretion to provide whatever facilities they consider desirable.

If there are any questions I would be glad to answer them because I have been supplied with all kinds of material.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Willis: Honourable senators, I move that this bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce. I was uncertain as to whether it should be referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills, so I asked my friend the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford) and he was of the opinion that it should be sent to the Banking and Commerce Committee.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: I suggested it should be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce because there is a considerable sum of money involved. At the present time there is a limitation of $750,000 on the permitted holdings of the board, and it is now asking for unlimited powers. For that reason I thought it should go to the Banking and Commerce Committee rather than to the Miscellaneous Private Bills Committee.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, July 9, at 8 p.m.

DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-74, respecting the Department of Industry.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I would like to proceed with the second reading of this bill tomorrow. I believe copies of it have been distributed. May I have the consent of honourable senators to have the bill placed on the Order Paper as the first item for consideration tomorrow?

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Agreed.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald tabled:

Report on the administration of the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act, for the year ended March 31, 1963, pursuant to section 18 of the said act, chapter 329 R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

PRIVATE BILL

THE MONARCH LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY—FIRST READING

Hon. J. Campbell Haig presented Bill S-30, respecting The Monarch Life Assurance Company.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Haig moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

PORTRAITS OF PRIME MINISTERS—COMMONS COLLECTION

On the Notices of Inquiries:

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, in February 1962 there were numerous references to a hidden picture of the late Lord Bennett, a former Prime Minister of Canada. We never knew where it was, and the collection of portraits of the prime ministers of Canada is incomplete. The picture of the late Lord Bennett should be found and hung in its place. The alternative would be to remove the incomplete collection, which is presently worthless, to the attic or the cellar, as a reminder of the ups and downs of politics.

HIS HOLINESS POPE PAUL VI

REPORT ON CORONATION CEREMONIES

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with I should like to make a brief report. As honourable senators are aware, I attended the coronation of Pope Paul VI in Rome on June 30 last. With me on the Canadian delegation were the Honourable Jules Léger, Canada's Ambassador to Italy, and the Honourable Pierre Dupuy, Canada's Ambassador to France. I should like to say that I consider it a privilege to have been associated with these experienced and distinguished representatives of Canada abroad.

I should like to acknowledge the kindness shown to Mrs. Connolly and myself by Madame Léger at her home and during our entire stay in Rome.

The coronation ceremonies were held outdoors in the Piazza San Pietro. Of this place Thackeray wrote:

> Oh, such a noble court; with fountains flashing up to meet the sunbeams; and right and left of you, two sweeping half crescents of great columns.

Indeed, the Bernini Columns surrounding the Square are said to be symbolic of arms outstretched in welcome to the world. That day they seemed to enclose representatives of all humanity. The crowd was estimated at about 300,000. It stretched from the door of the cathedral to the east end of the Via della Conciliazione at the Tiber about a half mile away. In addition, the ceremony was carried to millions of people by press, radio, television and telstar.

Had the ceremony been held within St. Peter's, I am sure it would have been most impressive. However, it was physically impossible to do this so soon after the election of the new Pontiff, because the nave of the cathedral holds banks of seats for use by the Ecumenical Council. The outdoor ceremony, however, made it possible for hundreds of thousands more to participate.

The scene in the Piazza was one of indescribable colour. It began in the early evening sunlight at six o'clock, under a cloudless Roman sky. The crowning itself, some three hours later, came after darkness had fallen and the lights had been turned on. Nightfall seemed to increase the impressiveness and the solemnity of the occasion. To all of this the singing of the Sistine Choir, and indeed the singing of the assembly, heightened the dramatic effect.

There were men and women there of every colour, race and creed; Africans in their tribal robes, Arabs, Indians, Chinese, Japanese, Greeks. There were heads of state—the King and Queen of the Belgians; the Presidents of Italy, Ireland and Brazil; the Grand Master of the Order of Malta.

Even royal houses, no longer reigning, were represented. I thought the presence of the Empress Zita of Austria especially poignant. She is a woman of great dignity, the widow of the Holy Roman Emperor. In another day, her status would have been very great indeed. The reminder given to the Pope during the ceremony, "Sic transit gloria mundi", must have found real meaning with her.

The British delegation was led by England's first peer the distinguished Duke of Norfolk, who told me he was attending his third papal coronation. The Prime Minister of France, Monsieur Pompidou, led the French group. Herr Schroeder, the Foreign Minister, was the chief representative from West Germany. From the United States came a delegation under Chief Justice Warren. With him were Rabbi Finklestein and Senator Mansfield, the majority leader in the Upper House.

Over 70 Cardinals from many parts of the world entered the enclosure in procession. They wore white mitres and over their scarlet tunics the white vestments of their rank within the Sacred College. Among them was His Eminence of Montreal, the distinguished Cardinal Léger. The Cardinal Archbishop of Toronto, Cardinal McGuigan, had to return home soon after the conclave, and he was missed.

The heads of religious orders—hundreds of them—in their habits, were in the procession. The Pope was carried in a ceremonial seat through the crowds in the Upper Square to begin the ceremony. He was accompanied by his red-coated Palatine Guard, the Swiss Guard in its multi-coloured uniform designed by Michelangelo, and by his brilliantly vested ecclesiastical attendants. As he made his progress to the Theatre of the ceremony the acclaim of the crowd of 300,000 people was literally deafening.

In the Theatre a white throne sat under a red canopy in front of the east door of St. Peter's. Behind it hung a priceless tapestry from the Sistine Chapel. About one hundred yards in front of the throne, across a bright red-carpeted area, was the altar, adorned with ancient gilt candelabra and two gilt statues, one of Peter, the other of Paul. To the altar the procession brought the two mitres and the two crowns to be used in the service.

The ceremony of homage by the Cardinals came early. As each Cardinal made his way to the throne and was received by the Pope, the respect and affection of them all for the newly elected Pope was most evident.

As honourable senators know, at Westminster the coronation service is conducted by the Archbishop of Canterbury, not by the Monarch. At a papal coronation, the chief actor is the Pope: he celebrates the sacrifice of the Mass; he delivers a homily, and then receives the triple crown at the hands of the ranking member of the College of Cardinals.

The formula used is ancient:

> Receive the tiara adorned with three crowns and know that thou art the Father of Princes and Kings, Teacher to the world, and Vicar on earth of our Saviour Jesus Christ to whom is honour and glory through the ages.

On this occasion the crown used was not the well-known tiara of Renaissance origin. It was a new crown, but the design had its beginnings in much more ancient times.

In his 25-minute homily, the Pope used nine languages to express a message of greater understanding, charity and peace among all peoples. He spoke readily in Latin, Italian, English, French, German, Spanish, Portuguese, Polish and Russian. He pleaded for Christian unity. He urged the internal renewal of the Church and its adjustment to modern conditions. He warned that this unity and understanding was not to be the work of a day, but said it could come in time, with patience, with charity and with a dedication to truth.

On the following morning, July 1, the anniversary of Canadian Confederation, the heads of 90 national delegations were received by His Holiness in a ceremony in the Sistine Chapel. The setting could hardly have been more impressive: above us, Michelangelo's superb ceiling; in front of us, his sublime Last Judgment; on the walls, the frescos of Pinturicchio, Ghirlandaio, Perugio and Botticelli. There, too, was the splendour of the Papal Court. In fact, beauty, and dignity, and history, all were there.

But what remains uppermost in my mind was the graciousness, the dignity and the warm personality of Pope Paul. In the coronation ceremony the previous day he walked quickly, with a spring in his step, almost athletically. At the reception he was cordial, grateful to those who had come, and hospitable. He has an engaging smile.

The head of each national delegation was presented to him personally. To me, in flawless English, he spoke feelingly of Canada. He recalled his visit here some years ago with evident pleasure. He sent his blessing to our country and to all our people. Mr. Léger was also received.

Late that afternoon, the Cardinal Secretary of State, Cardinal Cicognani, held a reception in the Borgia apartments at the Vatican for the national delegates who had come to the coronation. He made a short address in French in which he stressed the problems of the developing countries of Asia and of Africa. The Cardinal had lived some 25 years in Washington. He, too, had visited Canada and he remembered that the old Papal Delegation building had been on the Driveway. He expressed his pleasure that Canada had sent a special mission to the coronation.

May I now say something of the new Pope. Like Pope John, Paul VI has announced his intention to build upon the work of his predecessors. For this he is well equipped. For 30 years, until 1954, he served in the Secretariat and worked closely with Pius XI and Pius XII. Earlier he had been in Poland.

Pope John appointed him Bishop of the highly industrialized diocese of Milan, the largest in Italy after Rome. There he faced aggressive Marxism and Communism. There his great task was to deal with the position of workers in new, modern industrialized society. His knowledge of these problems is broad. His sense of the numinous—the religious sense—is highly developed. Both of these he has brought to bear upon the problems presented today by industry, technology, science, art, and even politics.

He will continue the work of the Ecumenical Council with its emphasis on aggiornamento—the internal renewal of the Church as it grapples with the new conditions of society.

His own desire for Christian unity, so close to the heart of Pope John, is symbolized by his choice of the name Paul. The first Paul lifted the sights of the infant Church from its national horizons to the broader vista of the known civilized world. Mr. Chesterton said of the first Paul that, "under the influence of the vision which prostrated him on his way to Damascus, he became the Dove who turned back the Eagles—and he transformed the pagan world!"

The call of the new Paul for denominational amity and unity is in the tradition of the first Paul. I believe it will evoke a response like that which John inspired. I think, however, that the appeal of this most modern of Popes to men of all denominations—to the common man—to the little man—lies not in the technical realms of law or theology. Most people know little of these sciences. The appeal lies rather in the hope for peace on earth. This is a concept which men everywhere understand. It is what men everywhere desire most deeply. And they see in the work of simple, humble men of God like John and Paul—men without bombs or battalions—a star to which they can hitch their chariot.

Every courtesy was shown the Canadian delegation by the Vatican authorities, including the Canadian representative in the Secretariat, Monsignor William Carew, and also by the second secretary at the Canadian Embassy, Mr. John P. Schioler from Winnipeg. The personal attention given all of us must have created problems. The crowds were great. So, too, was the heat. The death of Pope John was a blow. The conclave followed. Special arrangements had to be made to hold the coronation outdoors. Despite this, every event was beautifully conducted in an atmosphere of cordiality.

And the pace continued. On the next day President Kennedy arrived to receive a tumultuous reception from the Romans, to hold talks at the Quirinale and at the Vatican. Through it all Rome—Roma Felix—looked its most beautiful. Through it all Rome—Roma aeterna—was magnificently imperturbable.

PRIVATE BILL

KINROSS MORTGAGE CORPORATION—THIRD READING

Hon. John J. Connolly moved the third reading of Bill S-27, to incorporate Kinross Mortgage Corporation.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

The Senate resumed from Thursday, July 4, consideration of His Excellency the Administrator's speech at the opening of the session, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Lefrançois, seconded by Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland), for an address in reply thereto.

Hon. Harry A. Willis: Honourable senators, on your behalf may I be first to congratulate Senator Connolly (Ottawa West) on his brilliant exposition which he has just delivered, and also to congratulate this branch of the Parliament of Canada in having such an able and efficient representative at the coronation of His Holiness Pope Paul VI. Senator Connolly was not chosen for this task by ballot, or anything like that. He was chosen because he is one of the ablest members of this House and, I would say, one of the ablest men connected with the Government of the day. He is a great personal friend of mine and I am proud to call him such. I have never heard a more able speech than that delivered by Senator Connolly tonight. Speaking as a Protestant, I can say that I have almost been converted.

My second duty, honourable senators, must be to congratulate His Honour the Speaker, first, upon his appointment as a senator and, secondly, upon his election to the noble office of Speaker of this chamber. From what others who sat with you, Sir, in the other place have said about you I know that you are a debater of no mean ability. You knew your subject, and you always had the persistence to get what you wanted. I congratulate you upon being such a fair referee in this chamber.

I congratulate also my good friend Senator Macdonald from Brantford. Since I last spoke in a debate on the motion for an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, Senator Macdonald has changed places and has now become the Leader of the Government, a position he had previously occupied. He will fulfill his duties as he so ably demonstrated previously, and he will fulfill them with the same willingness, co-operation and determination with which he fulfilled his duties as Leader of the Opposition.

I congratulate my leader, Senator Brooks, upon the able way in which he is leading the Opposition in this chamber. He is leading it in a way similar to that with which he led the Government last session.

I was not a member of the Senate in 1957 when Her Majesty the Queen opened Parliament in October of that year, but I shall always remember the picture I received as a side-liner of Senator Brooks, then the very capable Minister of Veterans Affairs, escorting Her Majesty to the Cenotaph in Confederation Square which commemorates our fallen. He was magnificent at that time, and he is still magnificent in the duties which he carries out here.

Also, I want to pay tribute to the Deputy Leader of my party in this chamber, Senator Lionel Choquette. I have known him for many years, and he carries out his duties faithfully and well.

Before passing on to other members of this chamber I want to say something about the Whips. I think they are generally overlooked. I notice that the Deputy Whip of the Government, Senator Taylor (Norfolk), who comes from the same province as I do, is not in his place tonight. I know he is a man to be respected, and I like him personally. I have an equally high regard for Senator Macdonald (Cape Breton), the Whip on my side of the house. The only reason I question him at all is that he has lived these many years without being married. I cannot understand the women of Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, or anywhere else in Canada, not having taken a look at him.

Senator Salter Hayden comes from my own province. No one could have been nicer to me and given me more direction and advised me so well about certain matters than Salter Hayden. I do appreciate his kind interest. I have the same sentiments about Senator Croll and Senator Roebuck, and I pay special tribute to Senator Lambert. He is on the other side of the house, but I have had the good fortune of knowing him for a good many years; it is my opinion that Senator Lambert is one of the great citizens of Canada.

Senator D'Arcy Leonard also comes from the city of Toronto. He is a man of business experience, and I know that in following his advice one does not go far wrong.

I must mention next Senator George White, who occupied the office of Speaker of this chamber for much too short a time. He was not bilingual, but he took it upon himself to read the prayers in the French language, and he did an excellent job. He was a wonderful Speaker. He and his wife graced the Speaker's chambers as you, Mr. Speaker, and your wife are gracing them today.

One senator I wish to specifically mention is Senator Thomas Crerar. He did not know me when I was first appointed to this chamber, and I never expected to be a member of one of the houses of Parliament with him. From 1917 to 1921, when I was attending high school, Senator Crerar was a Minister of the Crown, and in the election of 1921 he led the Progressive Party and won, I think, 80 seats in the House of Commons. I have always admired him. I have always felt that he speaks what he thinks, and regardless of party politics I say he is a great Canadian and I pay tribute to him.

The last time I spoke in a debate on the Throne Speech was in October of last year. At that time I was on the other side of the house. Judging from the way things are looking now I am going to be on the other side of the house again very shortly.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Don't bank on it. Don't hold your breath that long.

Hon. Mr. Willis: The honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford) paid a great deal of attention to certain articles in the Globe and Mail about business being against our party. I would like to ask my honourable friend whether he knows where business is today. Has he read the recent articles in the Globe and Mail, and in particular, has he read an editorial in that paper of June 21 last? If my honourable friend would read that editorial and also articles in the various newspapers in Toronto, he would realize that business is changing.

I remember the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford) in October of last year, while speaking in the debate on the Throne Speech, standing up from this side of the house and saying that the leader of the Liberal Party had then created a miracle in raising the standing of the Liberal party in the House of Commons to 99 or 100 seats. But, do my honourable friends opposite realize that one man, and one man alone, with a split cabinet, and with three newspapers in the city of Toronto against him, and with a Buffalo radio station broadcasting daily against him and his policies, won 95 seats in the House of Commons? That is something of a record and a tribute to the Right Honourable John G. Diefenbaker.

Honourable senators, in October last I took part in the debate on the Speech from the Throne and I think I spoke for about three-quarters of an hour. When I read the Speech from the Throne at the opening of this session on May 16, 1963, I could not find very much there to comment on. Therefore, my speech tonight must be a short one.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: The honourable senator should not let that stop him.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): It is disappointing to hear that.

Hon. Mr. Willis: I am disappointed about it. The honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate said two or three weeks ago that the Conservative Government brought down no budget. I say the present Liberal Government has brought down a budget, and I will not say more.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: They brought down the roof.

Hon. Mr. Willis: I know that I cannot talk about it now; but I would love to talk about it and will when the time comes.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: There is not much left of the budget.

Hon. Mr. Willis: However, honourable senators, I want to talk about two or three points in the Speech from the Throne, which is about all there is in it. As my honourable friend and colleague Senator Grattan O'Leary said in his fine speech, the Speech from the Throne started out with platitudes and ended up by wishing the Lord's blessing on us—which indeed we need, after what we have seen.

However, honourable senators, I take exception to the appointment of two ministers of agriculture. I operate a farm near Toronto, and why we would need two ministers of agriculture in this country, I do not know. We might as well have two ministers of fisheries, two ministers of justice, and two ministers for every other department.

An hon. Senator: And two ministers of finance?

Hon. Mr. Willis: I am not saying two ministers of finance.

Honourable senators, I should like very much to congratulate the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. They spoke most admirably, especially the seconder, Senator Taylor (Westmorland), whom I have known for many years. He will not remember where I first met him. When he was Minister of Agriculture in the province of New Brunswick my godfather, the Honourable Thomas Kennedy, who was Minister of Agriculture in Ontario at that time, entertained him at the Parliament Buildings, where we had a delightful conversation.

Moreover, Senator Taylor paid my wife the respect, a short time ago, of calling on her and congratulating her on her father being such a great Liberal. Therefore, I feel I should congratulate both the mover and the seconder, and especially the seconder, Senator Taylor, for his able exposition, although I do not think that down in his heart he would vote for two ministers of agriculture in Canada.

I have been told that the reason for this proposal is that it was put up on the political hustings during the election campaign. However, that does not explain why we would need two ministers of agriculture.

In my opinion, the present Minister of Agriculture, the Honourable Harry Hays, is a very good minister. He happens to be a friend and a client of mine, and I think he is an excellent minister and can handle the agricultural problems of the whole country without any assistance from the east.

If such a division is to take place, where is it to be? One may say the present minister is from the west. Are we to cut his area off at the Manitoba-Ontario border, or at the Ontario-Quebec border, or should it be cut off at the Quebec-New Brunswick border? I do not know where. Perhaps honourable senators opposite know, but I doubt it. I do not think they know what they are talking about when they say they will have one minister from the east and one from the west. If they wished to do what the previous Minister of Agriculture did—that is, sell wheat for the benefit of the Prairie farmers—they should have transferred that function of the Department of Agriculture to the Department of Trade and Commerce. That would make some sense.

It seems to me that to have two ministers of agriculture today in Canada will lead to division and disruption. I do not know where it will end and I see no reason whatsoever for it.

The present Minister of Agriculture has a very able parliamentary assistant. Also, he has the whole Department of Agriculture. Having two ministers of any department has never been heard of before. If this were to be done, perhaps it would be appropriate to have another Minister of Justice, since the Civil Code as administered in the province of Quebec differs from the civil law of the rest of Canada. It seems to me to be just plain stupid to have two ministers of agriculture.

Honourable senators, I wish also to comment on the paragraph in the Speech from the Throne which reads as follows:

> You will be asked to establish a Municipal Development and Loan Board, through which municipalities may obtain, with the approval of the provinces, loans and grants to carry out projects which will increase employment and improve services. Amendments to the National Housing Act will also be proposed.

Honourable senators, do you realize that in the province of Ontario—and I suppose this applies to other provinces—we have such agencies set up right now? The honourable Senator Croll and the honourable Senator Roebuck were cabinet ministers in the province of Ontario and they know what this means.

In the province of Ontario now we have the Ontario Water Resources Commission, which is set up for the purposes of aiding municipalities, with the approval of the province and with the approval of the Ontario Municipal Board, providing loans under the Municipalities Loans Act at very reasonable rates of interest.

In addition, there is the Ontario Municipal Improvement Corporation. This also helps the municipalities. Is this third commission to be superimposed on the boards which the provinces have already? Is it to be superimposed on the boards of Ontario? Is this new board to dictate what the Ontario Water Resources Commission or the Ontario Municipal Improvements Corporation are to do? Furthermore, have the provinces been consulted? My opinion is that the provinces of Ontario and Quebec are as mad as anything about this whole business.

If it were intended to set up something like this, it should not have been introduced in the Speech from the Throne but held over until the Prime Minister of the day had called a provincial conference.

I know that the present Prime Minister has sent a letter to the provincial premiers—my honourable friend the Leader of the Government has tabled those letters—and the premiers of the provinces will be meeting. So why introduce something in the Speech from the Throne which will compete with what the provinces are doing now?

Why not continue the winter works program as it was operated by the former Government? That would help to promote employment. This proposed board is introduced as a red herring and I think the provinces wholly disapprove of it.

Thirdly, I should like to make some comments on the Atlantic Development Board. As a senator from Ontario, I may seem to have no right to talk about that. It may be said that I know nothing about it.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: That is a good qualification.

Hon. Mr. Willis: I do know that the Atlantic Development Board was set up by the former Government as a five-member board. Now the Speech from the Throne indicates that it is to be made an eleven-member board. All one has to do is a little subtraction and addition in order to understand what this means—that it will be a board with six Liberals and five Conservatives on it.

Honourable senators, on behalf of my party may I say that we are very pleased that the Prime Minister the Right Honourable Lester B. Pearson has recovered from his operation and has returned to the House of Commons. We are very pleased also that His Excellency the Governor General has recovered from his recent illness.

I have heard some fine speeches from honourable senators. In particular, I should like to mention the wonderful speech about Prince Edward Island by Senator Inman. I liked very much her illustration of her meeting with the daughter of one of the Fathers of Confederation. I say this in order to indicate that there is not much meat in the Speech from the Throne, since the honourable Senator Inman and other honourable senators spoke about their own provinces. However, I liked very much the exposition by Senator Inman about the province of Prince Edward Island, her meeting with the daughter of one of the Fathers of Confederation, about the parties which they had on board ship and about their having to stay on the ship because there was a circus in Charlottetown at the time and there was no hotel accommodation left. Having had an opportunity to visit Charlottetown, I congratulate Senator Inman on her fine speech.

I should like to congratulate the honourable Senator Phillips, who also comes from that delightful province. He too, talked about Prince Edward Island. I enjoyed very much the exposition by Honourable Senator Pratt of the beauties, the worthwhileness and the attributes of Newfoundland. I say that in all sincerity, for I have been to Newfoundland. As a matter of fact, in 1938 my wife was expecting a child, so I got away. I took a boat from Montreal and finally landed at Corner Brook. We called at a port on the north coast of Labrador, and from there on they started to nail everything down and we wondered what was going to happen next. When we came to Corner Brook I got off the boat as fast as I could, took the narrow gauge railway to Port aux Basques, and then crossed over to North Sydney to where my honourable friend the Whip on our side of the house (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Cape Breton) comes from.

I did appreciate Senator Pratt's speech. It was more than a travelogue. It contained substance with regard to the province of Newfoundland.

May I associate myself with Senator Pouliot in the remarks he made earlier this evening. Among the occupants of the rooms on the sixth floor, the first in line of order is Senator Cameron, Director of the Banff School of Fine Arts. I occupy the next room, which was formerly occupied by Senator Molson, president of the brewing company of that name. Senator Vaillancourt, the maple sugar king of Canada, is next. Then Senator Jean-François Pouliot, the great English and French translator and raconteur of Canada. I heartily agree with Senator Pouliot that it is wrong not to have a portrait of the late Right Honourable R. B. Bennett hung with those of other prime ministers in the halls of Parliament. I should like to see his portrait unveiled. I think it is wrong for Parliament to omit one of the great prime ministers of Canada.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Willis: In closing, I wish to associate myself with those senators who feel that the Senate should become more useful. I think they were right in their submission. Arising from last year's speech from the Throne, a bill was introduced in the other place to put an age limit of 75 years on senators holding office. One of the great Liberal senators said that a bill should be introduced to limit the age to 95 years, but I saw no reference to that in the Speech from the Throne. However, if we are to survive, I think steps should be taken, perhaps by both leaders in this house, to make this chamber more useful and to see that its time is more fully occupied.

Honourable senators, I wish to thank you for your attention.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Hollett, debate adjourned.

PRIVATE BILL

CO-OPERATIVE FIRE AND CASUALTY COMPANY—SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Thursday, June 27, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Cameron for second reading of Bill S-26, respecting Co-operative Fire and Casualty Company.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, although the adjournment of this debate stands in my name, I yield to Senator Cameron.

Hon. Donald Cameron: Honourable senators, if I may make a brief digression before dealing with this bill I should like to comment on the speech which has just been made. The honourable Senator Willis, who is my next-door neighbour on the sixth floor, made a speech from about this location last October. It was one of the most politically partisan speeches I have ever listened to in this chamber. I do not know what brought about the transformation which occurred this evening, as he dispensed sweetness and light upon the entire chamber. Perhaps it is because he has been transferred from one side of the chamber to the other. May I suggest that he should not count too much on his wishful thinking that he be translated back to this side of the house and to his more partisan aspects. We like him better as he is.

In the discussion on Bill S-26 on June 27, a number of points were raised by the honourable Senators Grosart and Roebuck, which I shall endeavour to answer to the best of my ability. In the event that I cannot answer them to the satisfaction of those honourable senators, a further opportunity will be provided when the bill is discussed before the Banking and Commerce Committee, to which committee I shall propose the bill be referred if it receives second reading. I shall endeavour to deal with the points in their order.

Rights of policyholders: The point was raised both by Senator Grosart and Senator Roebuck as to what will happen to the rights of the policyholders who presently control the company when, in the event that this bill is passed, control passes from the policyholders to the shareholders. The answer is, as I indicated in my submission on June 26, that as the policyholders are practically all members of the co-operatives, control of the proposed joint stock company will be in the hands of the members of the co-operatives, who are also the policyholders. The latter are still protected, because they control the policies of the co-operatives who own the shares in the new company.

I should emphasize that before applying for this change in the structure of the company the policyholders were circularized and gave their consent to the charge. I should emphasize also that since this company is in the fire and casualty field, which involves one-year auto policies and three-year fire policies, the policyowner turnover is practically continuous. Policyholders do not build up an equity in life insurance companies as they might be expected to, as, for example, do members of the wheat pools, who market their wheat through the pools. The result is that members of a fire and casualty company have only a passing interest in the management of the companies in which they are insured. In other words, there is no difference, with one exception, so far as the rights of the policyholder is concerned, whether he buys his policy through the Co-operative Fire and Casualty Company or through one of the private companies. The exception would be that in the practice of co-operative principles the benefits of any savings are passed on to the shareholders as dividends. In this respect there is little difference between this and a mutual company.

The question of control raised by the honourable senators is a good one, and one which has always been of concern both to the company and the sponsors of the company. When incorporation of the company was originally applied for in 1951, the sponsors sought to have a delegate system of control. They failed in this attempt, because such a system of control would not work harmoniously with the provisions of the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act, which act controls all insurance companies operating in Canada. The question of control has been under study more or less continuously in the co-operative movement, but intensely so during the past three or four years. There is an element among the co-operative membership which feels that the company should press once again for a private bill enabling it to operate under a delegate system of control similar to that of the major wheat pools. After extensive study, however, which included hiring and reporting of management specialists, the great majority of the co-operative membership agreed that, so far as this company was concerned, the delegate system of control should be abandoned as a possibility.

Finally, on this matter of control, the majority of policyholders feel that to impose a delegate system of control on the company, and to keep all members in all regions actively participating in a local unit, would be prohibitively expensive to the company. Thus, necessity and practicality have led the company to ask for the passage of this bill at least as a means of accomplishing a reasonable and workable system of control and still to keep within the framework of the general insurance act.

The company is presently controlled by advisory committees in six regions across Canada. These regions are British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario and the Maritimes. The company is licensed in Ontario but does not do business there.

The duties of the advisory committees are to further the interests of the company in their respective regions generally, and, in particular, to insure that their region is represented at the annual meeting of the company. At the annual meeting it is their further duty to ensure that two directors are nominated for their respective regions. The advisory committees consist of representatives from the major co-operatives in each region. When it is necessary for them to vote in the affairs of the company, they of course qualify themselves by becoming policyholders. It was this group of co-operatives which originally organized the company and put up the initial $200,000 to launch it in its corporate existence. There has always been a lurking fear that an individual or group might gain control of management and, thereby, the proxy-raising mechanics, and in this way gain control of the company. The co-operative movement in the United States suffered such an experience on at least one occasion. At least one experience of a similar nature has occurred in Canada. Therefore, the co-operative membership is somewhat concerned about any device which might give a certain group control, other than that of the membership.

The purpose of the proposed bill, therefore, is largely to firm up the control in the hands of the co-operative movement, that is to say, in the hands of those co-operatives which originally sponsored the bill, put up the necessary funds and guided its course from that day to this. After the passage of the bill, the advisory committees would remain the same and would be called shareholders, instead of policyholders as they are now.

Also, may we suggest for the moment that you look at the situation here from a slightly different viewpoint. When the sponsors of this company put up their initial $200,000 capital there was a reasonable anticipation that it would at some time be repaid. This was the experience of the same group when they sponsored the Co-operative Life Insurance Company. However, the nature of the fire and casualty field has been such that not only was the sum not repaid but additional funds became necessary. Accordingly, the same co-operatives have been called on for additional funds through the years, and the amount of contributions now has reached $1,200,000. I am informed by management that the need for additional capital is likely to continue. The sponsoring members of the company—which as has been seen are the major co-operatives across the country—now have more than a maternal interest in keeping this company within the co-operative fold; they have a large financial interest. These sizeable contributions, by virtue of the original act of Parliament, are repayable only at the discretion of the company. Accordingly, should a future management gain control by the gathering of proxies among casual and disinterested policyholders, or should an individual or group buy up a block of policies to gain control at an annual meeting, then the sponsoring co-operatives would stand to lose not only the possibility of repayment but also the right of control over a sum in excess of $1 million.

Looking at the picture from this viewpoint, it is clear that if any rights need shoring up it is the rights of the sponsors of the company who will, upon the passage of this bill, become the shareholders.

This bill in its present form is necessary from the standpoint of the continued good health of the company. Following from the last point made, it is understandable that the original sponsors might be expected to be reluctant to continue to advance funds as needed unless something is done to firm up control in the co-operative movement. If the health of the company is impaired by loss of access to funds, it would be purely academic to discuss these rights of policyholders as such.

A recent survey indicated that over 75 per cent of the company's business is done with the sponsoring co-operatives or their members or associates. As has been mentioned, this group controls the company through six regional advisory committees which will continue. However, with regard to the remaining small percentage of policyholders, it has not been the experience of the company that these have ever appeared at annual meetings or taken any interest in the affairs of the company other than the prompt processing of claims on their particular policies. Nevertheless, when the decision was made to proceed with the firming up of control by this bill, an advertisement was placed in the major co-operative newspapers across the country. In addition, this purpose was advertised in the advertisements required by the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act respecting meetings. When the resolution to proceed with the bill was put to the general meeting in question, it received the approval of every member present with the exception of a delegate from a Manitoba co-operative who still felt the company should press for a delegate system of control. In the face of this near unanimous decision to proceed, the bill is placed before Parliament.

The legal representative of the company is prepared to produce a certified copy of the resolution which was put before the general meeting of the company, asking permission to present this bill before Parliament and to the appropriate committees of both houses. This resolution, which received practically unanimous support, should assure honourable senators that the policyholders are behind this change. The one member who did not give his approval did not object except on the grounds that he would prefer to see control maintained on a delegate basis. However, if the present provisions of the bill are not sufficiently strong, section 12 of the bill requires that it be placed before a future meeting for final approval. I would therefore feel that this double precaution amply protects every shareholder's rights.

People familiar with the automobile and fire insurance field know that auto policies shall run for one year only and fire policies usually run for three years. Since at the time of receiving the existing policies, the policyholders expect to have the right to vote, these rights are preserved to the conclusion of the contract. Any renewed policy will not include that right, and the policyholder therefore has to make a personal decision as to whether he wishes to renew his contract under these circumstances. At the present time policyholders do not really have any more property value in the company than their own policies. The distribution of surpluses to policyholders presently is and must be discretionary with the directors.

There is one further point in connection with the distribution of surpluses, and this was raised by Senator Grosart. I would point out that the provision respecting the distribution of surpluses is exactly the same in the proposed bill as in the original act. The reason for the use of the word "may" instead of "shall" is the same in both cases. Directors of all co-operatives who strive to operate on a cost basis must have discretion as to the payment out of surpluses. If it were otherwise, every nickel of surpluses could be demanded by policyholders and the co-operatives could never grow and develop. The directors, therefore, must decide upon the application of surpluses as between development of the company and repayment to policyholders. This has always been the case and must continue to be if the company is to have continued existence.

Senator Roebuck raised the question that the written consent of all policyholders must be obtained before any change can be made.

I referred earlier to the fact that advertisements, notifying policyholders of the proposed change, were placed in the major co-operative newspapers across the country. The purpose was advertised as required by the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act respecting meetings, and when the resolution was brought before the general meeting it received the approval of every member present with the exception of one delegate from a Manitoba co-operative who still felt the company should press for a delegate system of control.

Honourable senators know that in principle if the written consent of every member of a company was required to effect any change which, in turn, affected the interests of every member directly or otherwise, no corporate change would ever be effected. Human beings acting in a large group are never absolutely unanimous. For example, in the present instance, all members active in all advisory committees in all regions are unanimous that something should be done to firm up control of the company. However, one member of one advisory committee, a Manitoba co-operative, still feels the proper means of doing this is by the delegate system. If the principle suggested by Senator Roebuck, that every policyholder must give written consent, were to be imposed on the company, no change could be made.

In this case, while all are agreed on the principle of control, there is not complete unanimity on method. Secondly, may I say that such a requirement would be impossible of fulfilment from a practical standpoint for the reason that every fire and casualty company finds that people are buying and cancelling fire and auto policies with their companies almost daily. By the time the branch managers could get a list of existing policyholders to head office, the list would be obsolete. For example, members consenting to the preparation of the petition may no longer be members by the time the bill is presented to Parliament and enacted as law.

A further point was raised as to what might be described as improper disbursement of the company's funds. On this point it can only be said that co-operatives, as other corporate entities, can only go so far in providing safeguards against mismanagement, or so-called misguided management. The best answer to this point is simply that the major co-operatives in Canada gave this company its corporate existence and have financed its corporate existence to this date to the extent of $1 million. They have controlled the management of the company from the date of its corporate existence to this date, and they now simply wish to firm up control in their hands so that the services of the company which they sponsor will not be lost to them and at the same time their investment will remain secure.

A further question was raised respecting the income tax position of the company. This company has always paid income tax, in the same way as any other mutual company operating in Canada under the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Do you mean by that that they paid taxes from the day they commenced operation?

Hon. Mr. Cameron: Yes, in the same way as any other mutual company. It will continue to do so, with one change under the new act. The interest which was paid to contributors of capital formerly was a tax expense of the company, being interest paid on borrowed money. In the future, however, the company will lose this benefit because payments now made to contributors of capital, as shareholders, will be dividends which are not a tax expense to the company. This could be an influence on the company reducing payments to contributors of capital—shareholders, upon the passage of this bill—which up to this date have been running at about 5 per cent per annum.

In any event, there is assurance that dividends to shareholders will not exceed 6 per cent; this is the law. This is not only because there is that limitation in the proposed by-laws of the new company, but also because their past record shows that that is not the way they do business. The present act permits interest up to a maximum of 6 per cent, and yet, though they have controlled the company throughout, they have never paid that high an interest rate.

I do not think it should be necessary to comment further on the possibility of donations being made by the company to a political party. The co-operative movement was sponsored in Saskatchewan by the Liberal Government and has been furthered by all parties since. We are dealing here with producers' and consumers' co-operatives. Their membership is made up of members of all parties. While their members may make contributions to various parties, to my knowledge the co-operatives themselves have never made a contribution to a political party. If such a motion were ever proposed at a general meeting of the company, there would be a fearful internal row as to which party it should be, with the result that the possibility would be dropped.

In conclusion let me emphasize that up to the present the Co-operative Fire and Casualty Company has been taxed as a mutual company. The change from a mutual to a joint stock company is quite typical of co-operative development in Canada. Most co-operative enterprises are joint stock companies. However, in the application of co-operative principles, the voting procedures are that one member has only one vote regardless of the number of shares; whereas, in private companies each share has one vote.

I trust these explanations will satisfy honourable senators, but I can assure you there will be ample opportunity for further questions before the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce. If this bill receives second reading tonight, I shall propose that it be referred to that committee. I therefore move second reading.

Hon. Austin C. Taylor: Honourable senators, before this bill receives second reading I would like to make one or two comments in relation to it.

The Hon. the Speaker: Order. I am very sorry, but the honourable senator who moved second reading, having spoken, has closed the debate.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): The honourable Senator Taylor (Westmorland) may obtain unanimous consent.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, has the honourable Senator Taylor (Westmorland) unanimous consent to speak now?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Mr. Speaker, I believe the honourable senator who has just spoken did so to answer questions rather than to close the debate, and there was no statement prior to his rising that his remarks would close the debate. I kept the matter open so that he might answer the questions raised by the honourable senator opposite. I think that is all he has done. He rose not for the purpose of closing the debate, but strictly in answer to the questions raised by Senator Grosart and myself. So perhaps a certain amount of latitude could be extended in this instance. Perhaps we should consider his speech as merely in answer to questions raised.

The Hon. the Speaker: Before the honourable Senator Cameron spoke I probably should have said that his doing so would have the effect of closing the debate. Not having done so, I believe that with unanimous consent we should allow Senator Taylor (Westmorland) leave to speak now.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): Honourable senators, I thank you for the courtesy you have just extended me. As a matter of fact, I did not think the debate had been closed, because it was adjourned by Senator Roebuck, and I thought I was quite in order in speaking to it. However, I wish to say only a few words in relation to the bill.

When the bill was first introduced and was explained by the sponsor, like the honourable senator from Pickering (Hon. Mr. Grosart) I was concerned about the relationship of this bill to the existing charter of the company, the membership of the company and, in particular, its relationship to the matter of taxation. I was personally concerned because there are three co-operatives in the Maritime provinces involved here. They are: la Fédération des Caisses Populaires Acadiennes Limitée, New Brunswick, the Maritime Co-operative Services Ltd., an organization having its headquarters in Moncton, and the Nova Scotia Credit Union League of Antigonish.

For that reason, and because there was a change in the membership setup of this organization, I was quite concerned. As a matter of fact, I took the opportunity of writing to a former Deputy Minister of Agriculture in Nova Scotia, Dr. Walsh, who is now Director of the Co-operative Advisory Services in the Atlantic provinces, and I am advised by him that the co-operative organizations across Canada have been working on this project for some time. He also advised me that just before dissolution last winter they had about completed their study of the terms and purposes of the bill, and recognition has now been given to it by all the organizations and their membership.

For that reason the co-operatives of the Atlantic area, and particularly the Co-operative Advisory Services, which represents all the co-operatives of the Atlantic region, are anxious to see this bill passed.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On the motion of Hon. Mr. Cameron, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

The Senate resumed from Thursday, June 27, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Croll for the second reading of Bill S-6, to make provision for the disclosure of information in respect of finance charges.

Hon. George S. White: Honourable senators, before making a few remarks on this bill may I extend to Your Honour my congratulations, firstly, on your appointment to the Senate and, secondly, on your appointment to the office of Speaker. Like many other honourable senators, I well remember the days when we were both members of the other place, and I recall very well the capable member you were. I also remember the kind consideration and assistance you extended to me on many occasions when I sought information from your minister's office. You are more than well qualified for the high office you now hold, and I am sure you will discharge your duties as Speaker with impartiality, dignity and fairness.

You are indeed fortunate, Mr. Speaker, in having such capable and efficient floor officers in the Senate to assist you. I am sure you have already found that your personal staff is not only competent and loyal, but is also most anxious and willing to help you in every way. I wish you every success in your term of office.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. White: Honourable senators, may I join with others who have congratulated the mover and the seconder of the address. May I also express a word of welcome to the newly-appointed senators. I am sure that every new senator coming to this honourable chamber receives a warm welcome from the senators already here.

I also wish to congratulate two old and valued friends, the Leader of the Government Senator Ross Macdonald, and the Leader of the Opposition Senator Brooks. These two gentlemen have had very distinguished parliamentary careers, and while they have recently changed positions in the seating plan of this house, I am sure they will continue, each in his particular capacity, to render a valuable contribution to the welfare of our country.

While my own term of office as Speaker of the Senate was brief, I shall always remember and cherish the great honour of having occupied that position. My most pleasant recollection will be the support and the many courtesies and kindnesses expressed in so many ways to my wife and to myself. My sincere thanks and appreciation I extend to every honourable senator.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: It was a short life but a merry one.

Hon. Mr. White: The present bill is an old friend—I have spoken on similar bills on other occasions. While there have been similar bills presented in this house in previous years, and while the honourable senator who presents this bill has removed the various objectionable sections, there remains in my mind the important question as to whether or not it comes within the jurisdiction of the federal Parliament.

Not only the honourable senator who has introduced the bill, but many other honourable senators have discussed similar bills during recent sessions. They have dealt at great length with the very high rates of interest charged, and have pointed out the grave injustices existing, and have gone into detail as to the methods adopted by certain companies regarding consumer credit. I think everybody will agree that there have been abuses and that fabulous rates of interest have been charged.

Many methods have been employed which one can rightly regard as unethical, but to my mind all arguments along this line do not apply to this present bill because it does not attempt to regulate the rate of interest or to put a ceiling on finance charges. The title of the bill is, "An Act to make provision for the disclosure of information in respect of finance charges", and the explanatory notes to it make it clear that the sole purpose of the bill is to require the giving of information in the form of a statement, to be handed to a purchaser, in which the rate of interest and the finance charges are set out in terms of simple interest.

The honourable senator who introduced the bill (Hon. Mr. Croll) has made it very clear on a number of occasions that it is not intended in any way to set a ceiling on finance charges. At page 87 of Hansard this session the honourable senator stated:

> Honourable senators, this bill does not attempt to set a ceiling on finance charges.

And on the same page the honourable senator stated:

> I repeat, because I think it is worth remembering, that the man who borrows money from a loan company and pays cash is protected by the Small Loans Act, whereas the man who goes in and makes an instalment purchase is not protected. This act would protect such a man.

Now the honourable senator has pointed out that if you borrow money from a small loans company you are protected because that act distinctly sets out what the rate of interest is to be. But this bill does not attempt to set the rate of interest. The honourable senator who introduced the bill has emphasized the fact that he does not wish to limit interest or to put a ceiling on it, and therefore I fail to understand how the senator can say that this bill will protect such a purchaser.

In the session of 1962 the honourable senator stated at page 142 of Hansard:

> This bill does not attempt to control consumer credit or interest.

And in the session of 1962-63 the honourable senator stated, at page 191 of Hansard:

> The sole purpose of this bill is to require credit financiers to tell the truth about these charges.

And on the same page the honourable senator repeated:

> Honourable senators, this bill does not attempt to set a ceiling on finance charges.

Other honourable senators have made it very plain in their speeches that this bill, like previous similar bills, would not impose any control of interest. I would especially refer to two speeches made in this house, one by the honourable Senator Bouffard, on March 28, 1962, at page 407 of Hansard, and another by the honourable Senator Hayden made on the same date.

Having in mind that the purpose of this bill is to give information by furnishing a statement, the lack of any provision in the bill to control interest, the admission by the mover of the bill that it does not attempt to control interest or put a ceiling on finance charges, and also the explanatory note that no criminal liability would flow from non-compliance with the bill, it seems to me, as a simple country lawyer, that this bill is not within the jurisdiction of the federal Parliament because it does not deal with interest.

This bill, in my opinion, deals with certain conditions regarding what we in Ontario call conditional sales. In this bill we are attempting to legislate for the giving of certain information in writing to a purchaser making a conditional purchase under a conditional sales agreement. In this province the majority of conditional sales agreements cover cars, electrical appliances and furniture. I think most honourable senators will agree when I say that under the British North America Act these matters come within the definition of property and civil rights, and therefore come under the jurisdiction of the various provincial legislatures.

Is this bill intended to cover the ordinary accounts that a housewife has with a department store? Here I am thinking of the great number of people who live in the country, whose wives deal with city stores and who under this arrangement can purchase goods in, say, the month of July and have until a certain date in August to pay for them, and if the goods are not paid for by the specified date in August certain interest charges will be added. Now if it is correct that this bill applies to accounts of this type, I presume the merchant must submit some form of statement with each sale of goods. This, in my opinion, would be a hardship.

In a previous speech I attempted to explain to honourable senators the provisions of the Conditional Sales Act in the province of Ontario. This act has been in existence for many years, and I understand a somewhat similar act exists in each of the other nine provinces. It provides that an agreement must be in writing, it must be signed by the purchaser or his agent, it must state the terms and conditions of the sale, the goods must be described, and a copy of the contract must be furnished to the purchaser. Now that is pretty comprehensive, and I submit that all the honourable Senator Croll is attempting to do by this bill is simply to add to the information which must now be given in the province of Ontario additional information setting out the rate of interest.

Such agreements in Ontario are registered and if they run for a certain period of time, a renewal statement must be filed. This is a sworn statement showing in detail the state of the account, the balance owing, the rate of interest, payments made, and everything of that nature. The members of the Bar of Ontario will, I am sure, agree that the Conditional Sales Act of this province is very full and complete in every aspect relating to consumer credit.

I contend that what the honourable Senator Croll is trying to do can be accomplished by a simple amendment to the Conditional Sales Act of the province of Ontario, and by amendments to similar acts of the other provinces.

Honourable senators will have noticed from the press that there is in the province of Ontario at the present time a committee of the provincial Legislature investigating all the ramifications of consumer credit.

I have here an act passed by the Legislature of the province of Manitoba in 1962 respecting the sale of goods under time sales agreements. This act did provide for disclosure of the rate of interest but, at the last session of the Manitoba Legislature held this year, it was amended and the clause relating to the rate of interest was repealed. The original act did not define finance charges but the amending act does, and the definition more or less follows that of Senator Croll in this bill.

Clause 3 of the bill provides that a statement is to be furnished before the transaction is completed. I suggest to Senator Croll that there may be some confusion as to just when a sale is closed. It could be said that a sale is closed when a payment is made, or when the agreement is signed, or it could be said that the sale is completed when the goods are delivered. It might even be said that the sale is completed when the conditional sales agreement is registered. I just draw these matters to Senator Croll's attention, and it may be that he will consider amending that clause when this bill goes before the committee.

Honourable senators, I spoke previously about clause 5, which is very objectionable because it deals with regulations. I do not think anyone realizes more than Senator Croll the curse of many Ontario statutes in providing for the passing of regulations. This clause says that three things are to be provided for by regulations, and I think it is only fair that these three features be incorporated into the bill.

Paragraph (a) of clause 5 says that the regulations may provide for the form and manner in which the written statement is to be made. There are any number of Ontario statutes which at the end set out the exact nature of the forms to be used, and I have noted two or three here. One is the Conditional Sales Act which contains the form of agreement and the form of renewal. The same can be said of the Bills of Sale and Chattel Mortgages Act and also the Partnerships Registration Act. The forms are given in the acts. I do not think it would be complicated to have a form included at the end of this bill.

Secondly, the regulations are to prescribe the manner of calculating the percentage relationship in terms of simple interest. Surely, this is a most important provision, and the formula should be included in the bill. Senator Croll and others have on various occasions indicated that the formula is a fairly simple one. If that is correct, then I do not know why it is necessary to provide for a degree of accuracy as to the rate of interest. If the figuring of interest is as simple as some honourable senators claim it to be, then it would not be very difficult to have the formula incorporated in the bill.

The honourable sponsor of this bill (Hon Mr. Croll) stated that he is willing to have the bill go before a committee where it can be studied, and that he is agreeable to having a clause inserted to the effect that the bill would not come into effect until there has been a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada. I commend Senator Croll for taking that stand. As honourable senators are aware, there is to be a joint committee of both houses of Parliament to study this important matter, and I am sure that one of the questions that will come before it will be the constitutionality of such a measure as this.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Hayden, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, July 10, 1963

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald tabled:

Report of proceedings under the Trans-Canada Highway Act, for the year ended March 31, 1962, pursuant to section 9 of the said act, chapter 269, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Order in Council P.C. 1963-920, dated June 14, 1963, authorizing, under section 21A of the Export Credits Insurance Act, long-term financing by the Export Credits Insurance Corporation for the sale by the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company Limited, of Montreal, Quebec, of engineering services and capital equipment for a zinc smelter and associated sulphuric acid plant to Cominco Binani Zinc Limited, Calcutta, India, pursuant to section 21B of the said act, chapter 105, R.S.C., 1952, as amended by chapter 33 of the Statutes of 1960-61. (English text).

Copy of the agreement entered into between the Government of Canada and the Government of British Columbia, dated July 8, 1963, concerning implementation of the Treaty between Canada and the United States of America relating to co-operative development of the Basin, signed on January 17, 1961. (English and French texts).

COLUMBIA RIVER TREATY

COPY OF AGREEMENT PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Honourable senators, the copy of the agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of British Columbia, respecting the Columbia River basin, the last document tabled today, has just been received. The agreement is signed by the Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Premier of British Columbia and the Minister of Lands and Forests of British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. Reid: May I ask the honourable Leader of the Government if the agreement is accompanied by a report? I understand that a report was tabled with the agreement in the House of Commons. We should have a copy of that too.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): The document I received and have tabled is an agreement between the two governments, in English and French texts. I am not aware of the report referred to by the honourable gentleman, but I will make inquiries and obtain a copy if there is one.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Can the Leader of the Government tell us whether the province of British Columbia will pay income tax on this development?

Hon. Mr. Drouin: Sales tax.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I received the agreement only a few moments ago, and I have not had an opportunity to peruse it.

Honourable senators, because of the importance of this document, I would move, with leave, seconded by the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) that it be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

For text of agreement see appendix, pp. 232-4.

Motion agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald moved the second reading of Bill C-74, respecting the Department of Industry.

He said: Honourable senators, the purpose of this bill is to create a new department of Government which will be especially concerned with the needs and opportunities of the manufacturing industries in Canada.

At present Canada's manufacturing industries provide direct employment for more than 1½ million Canadians. They also create work for the many persons who are supplying materials and other facilities to manufacturers. The importance of the industrial sector of our economy is quite obvious to all, and the Government intends to place more emphasis on it by establishing a department which will be concerned with fostering effective economic growth in the manufacturing industry.

There is now a greater need than ever before for such a department. We have a serious unemployment problem in Canada. Over the past calendar year unemployment has ranged monthly from 260,000 in the summer months to 583,000 in the winter months, representing from 3.9 to 9.1 per cent of our labour force. Added to this, Canada's labour force is growing rapidly and will expand at an even greater rate in the future. The anticipated annual increase in the labour force in each of the next few years is about 250,000 persons. Apart altogether from the large number unemployed, there are many young people coming into the labour force, and there are as well those who are being displaced by automation and technological change. Where will they find employment? Many of them will look to the manufacturing industries. We must face up to this serious problem, and I am satisfied that the results of this proposed legislation will be helpful.

The functions of the new department will be to maintain close, practical contact with industry, to review each branch of industry in order to ascertain what can be done to increase Canadian production and how government can be of assistance in that regard.

The bill provides that there shall be one minister who will be responsible both for the Department of Industry and for the Department of Defence Production. The Defence Production Department has been concerned with the industrial development of the defence production sector of Canadian manufacturing. By having one minister to preside over both that department and the new department, it will be possible to bring about co-operation and avoid duplication in the activities of the two departments.

It is vital that the proposed Department of Industry and the Department of Defence Production collaborate closely, because there is a close relationship between procurement and industrial development. For example, the Canada-United States Development Sharing Program stresses production development, and this has resulted in additional employment in Canada and as well has increased our exports.

Honourable senators will see that the functions of the new department are set forth in Clause 7 of the bill.

Under paragraph (a) of that clause the new department will be responsible for acquiring a detailed knowledge of every aspect of manufacturing industries in Canada, and for developing an effective liaison between industry and government in order to assist industry in eliminating obstacles to growth and efficiency.

Paragraph (b) provides that the new department shall promote the establishment, growth, efficiency and improvement in manufacturing industries. This can be realized in a number of ways. For instance, it is doubtless that a great many products are now being imported into Canada which could be manufactured here on an efficient and competitive basis. The new department will render assistance to industry by identifying such imported articles. Similarly, it could be that a more efficient use of engineering and industrial design could lead to the manufacture of better products. That is another area in which the department will render great help to industry. The proposed department will also study all aspects of manufacturing operations with a view to making recommendations to improve production in manufacturing industries.

Paragraph (c) provides that the department shall develop and carry out such projects and programs as may be appropriate:

> (i) to assist the adaptation of manufacturing industries to changing conditions in domestic and export markets and to changes in the techniques of production,
> (ii) to identify and assist those manufacturing industries that require special measures to develop an unrealized potential or to cope with exceptional problems of adjustment.

For example, any changes in the tariff structure might lead to exceptional problems of adjustment. The department would study these and make recommendations for their solution.

> (iii) to promote the development and use of modern industrial technology in Canada and improve the effectiveness of the participation by the Government of Canada in industrial research.

One of the most important features of the bill, honourable senators, is the provision for the establishment of an area development agency. This agency will be concerned with assistance to areas of high and chronic unemployment where special action is necessary to promote economic and industrial growth. The agency will develop and implement programs and activities to improve economic conditions in such designated areas with a view to fostering employment and higher levels of income.

Under the clauses of the bill relating to area development, the Governor in Council will be empowered to authorize and direct departments, branches and agencies of the Government to undertake such special measures as may be appropriate to facilitate economic development in the designated areas. As a result, it will be possible to plan and implement co-ordinated programs involving the facilities of a number of departments. The area development agency will also work closely—and this is very important—with provincial governments and regional bodies in developing and carrying out its programs. In so doing it is not the intention of the Government to lessen in any way, nor to interfere with, provincial responsibilities. The new Government will not in any way create new federal responsibilities.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: "The new Government", did you say?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): It is not new now. I meant to say "the new department", but I suppose in a wider sense that adjective applies also to the Government. I suppose we can still think of the present Government as the new Government.

Hon. Mr. Drouin: It looks pretty old already.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Not nearly as old as the one that recently passed out.

In any event, honourable senators, neither the new federal Government nor the new department will in any way create new federal responsibilities. Its sole concern will be to discharge more effectively and efficiently the responsibilities which already fall on federal authorities.

Honourable senators, the new Department of Industry, if it is to be effective, must be in a position to acquire as soon as possible the services of personnel with specialized industrial knowledge. I say it must acquire this personnel soon because the problem of unemployment is an urgent one, and we cannot let any time go by without facing up to it. The type of personnel required is not in some instances at present available in the Government. As a result it will be necessary during the initial stages of the department's development to obtain the services of a number of personnel from outside the public service. Clause 5 of the bill authorizes the employment of such highly qualified persons on a temporary basis. These people can only be employed until December 31, 1964. By that time the permanent staff will have been recruited and trained in the regular manner.

There is also provision under clause 15 of the bill whereby the Governor in Council can appoint advisory and other committees. These committees are to serve the minister in an advisory capacity and they are likely to be composed of persons in industry, trade associations and organized labour who have had extensive background and experience in matters relating to manufacturing industries.

That is a summary of the bill, honourable senators. I am quite enthusiastic about it for, as you will recall, over the years I have referred to the fact that not enough consideration has been given to developing the potential of our so-called secondary industries. The honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) and I have often questioned what percentage of manufactured goods were being exported from Canada. I contended that a very small percentage of our exports consisted of manufactured goods, and he claimed that a larger percentage than I indicated was being exported but that it was still not a large percentage. I still feel that far too small an amount of manufactured goods is being exported.

I am not going to burden honourable senators by reading my own speeches, but I would remind you that when I was sitting where the honourable Leader of the Opposition is now sitting I said, as reported at page 33 of the Debates of the Senate for 1962, as follows:

> Our total exports in 1960 amounted to $5,264,052,000 and of that total the largest item of manufactured exports was farm implements and machinery which amounted to $81,279,999.

That is $81 million out of a total of over $5 billion.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: You do not regard newsprint as a manufactured product?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): That was a question which arose in discussion with the honourable Leader of the Opposition. It is partly manufactured.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: There is no substantial manufacture in it.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): However, one might call newsprint a secondary industry. Even if I include it, for argument's sake, it still leaves exports from secondary industry very low on the list.

Honourable senators, I feel that something must be done if we are to absorb the ever-growing number of people who will require employment in Canada. I do not say that this is a perfect bill or that it will solve all the problems, but I am satisfied that it will be helpful and I trust that it will meet with the favourable consideration of this house.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Would the honourable Leader of the Government allow me to ask a question? I refer to section 6 of the bill, which says:

> The duties, powers and functions of the Minister extend to and include all matters relating to manufacturing industries in Canada over which the Parliament of Canada has jurisdiction, not by law assigned to any other department, branch or agency of the Government of Canada.

Would the honourable Leader of the Government give some indication to the house as to what types of industries are referred to in that section as being affected by this legislation?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Speaking now without having given detailed consideration to this question, though I appreciate what is being asked, I would think that would refer to practically all industries except those over which the provincial governments have jurisdiction. However, that may not be quite correct.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: It could also refer to some Crown companies.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Yes, certain Crown companies which come under the jurisdiction of some other branch of Government.

Although the legislation refers to industries over which the federal Government has jurisdiction, I am sure this new department will be pleased to assist any province which is carrying on industry.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: That is provided for.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): The question of Atomic Energy of Canada or other Crown companies has been brought to my attention. I do not think this department will be involved with those Crown companies for they are the responsibility of other government departments, but I feel the new department—and the bill so provides—will co-operate with the department under which those Crown companies operate.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I presume the honourable Leader of the Government has taken into consideration the doctrine of property and civil rights and the manner in which this bill impinges on that situation?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I have taken that into consideration. This bill does not impinge on that situation in any way. The bill will not interfere with any of the powers of the provinces in respect to property and civil rights.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, before entering into any discussion on this bill—and I may say at once that my remarks will be brief—I would like to take this opportunity of welcoming our new member, Senator Bourque, to the Senate. I had the honour and pleasure of sitting in the House of Commons with Senator Bourque for a number of years. He was regarded there as a very outstanding and hardworking member, and one who was most conversant with the work of the Commons. As we know, he also has had extensive experience in municipal affairs. Senator Bourque certainly will be an acquisition to the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): May I interrupt the honourable Leader of the Opposition at the moment and say I regret that inadvertently I did not refer to the new senator. I would like to join with the Leader of the Opposition and with other honourable senators in welcoming Senator Bourque to this house. I look forward, as we all do, to a happy association with him.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Honourable senators, I have just said that it is not my intention to make any extended remarks on this bill. I prefer to leave that to men who have had more experience in industry than I have had. I may also say, as one coming from the Maritime or Atlantic provinces, that we are more accustomed to lack of industry and our remarks have been more along that line than on industry.

I cannot say that I am quite as optimistic as my honourable friend the Leader of the Government. The development and encouragement of industry is one of the first functions of government and has been the first function of Parliament for a good many years. Even if this bill never had been introduced, and even if it were not passed, I am satisfied that the development of industry would receive the attention of governments of the future just the same as it has in the past.

I listened with interest to the explanation which the honourable Leader of the Government gave in regard to the bill. As he told us, it deals with probably the greatest problem we have in this country, that is, the development of industry. It involves the activities of practically every department. This is something which touches the homes of people in all walks of life.

However, I am still of the opinion that a bill establishing a new department was not necessary. A few weeks ago I spoke in the debate on the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne and I tried to emphasize that in my opinion we had departments enough and ministers enough. I saw no reason then why the number of ministers should be increased from 21 to 26, and I am still of that opinion. An increase in the number of departments results in an increase in the expense of government. This is well known to all those who take an interest in the cost of government.

In my opinion the Right Honourable the Prime Minister might well have been advised not to increase the numbers or the quantity of his cabinet; but he could very well, I think, have improved its quality.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Oh!

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Be careful.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: We are often told that too many cooks spoil the stew; I believe we might well apply that saying in reverse and say that too many ministers may create a stew.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: There is another expression: "Many hands make light work".

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: We are in the stew, anyway.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: In this case, too many heads are making things more difficult.

As we all know, this work was done by the Department of Trade and Commerce in the past year. This is one of the best departments of Government we have had. It has established a reputation of giving good advice.

At this point, may I say that any minister at the head of a department is well advised when he seeks and accepts the advice of the officials of his department; they are well trained in their particular work.

The former Government, realizing the necessity of further development along industrial lines, reorganized the Department of Trade and Commerce in 1960. There have been great changes in trade, as everyone knows. After World War II it was easy for Canadians to sell practically anything and everything they could produce. This situation continued until 1954 and into 1955, when it became more difficult to sell in foreign markets. The former Government, therefore, decided to reorganize the Department of Trade and Commerce and to bring it up to date so that it might be better able to further the development of industry.

In 1959, just before the reorganization, there was one deputy minister in the Department of Trade and Commerce and two associate deputy ministers. In 1960 two assistant deputy ministers were added. One deputy was in charge of trade policy, a second in charge of external trade promotion, and a third in charge of commodities, including the commodities branch and the agriculture and fisheries branch. There was an assistant deputy minister in charge of what was and still is called domestic commerce. All of this extension was promoted for the very reason the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford) told us a few moments ago, that industry might be encouraged and developed.

The Leader of the Government mentioned Clause 7 of the bill, which sets out the further duties of the minister, namely, to acquire a detailed knowledge of manufacturing industries in Canada, to promote the establishment, growth, efficiency and improvement of manufacturing industries, etc.

I wish to call to the attention of honourable senators the annual report of the Department of Trade and Commerce for 1962. In that report, honourable senators may find practically everything the honourable Leader of the Government mentioned this afternoon as being promoted by this bill. I do not intend to burden the Senate by reading long excerpts from this report, but I should like to read, for instance, the objectives of the industrial promotion branch:

> The primary responsibility of the branch is to foster industrial expansion in Canada, on an efficient and competitive basis, by assisting Canadian manufacturers to increase the output of existing product lines, to diversify production through the addition of new products, to achieve greater fabrication of Canadian raw materials and to overcome barriers to increased efficiency. To accomplish these aims, branch personnel maintain close liaison with businessmen, as well as with federal and provincial agencies. In addition, the branch actively co-operates with various other groups, such as Chambers of Commerce, railways, banks, power companies, boards of trade, and the Canadian Manufacturers' Association.

This industrial promotion branch also arranged visits to plants all over Canada. It brought in industrialists from all sections of Canada, arranged tours for our industrialists to visit other countries in search of trade, and also brought industrialists from abroad to Canada. These things are mentioned in the bill, but they had already been provided for in the reorganization of the Department of Trade and Commerce for this very purpose.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: That is the report of the present Minister of Trade and Commerce, who was formerly the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce. You can call on no higher authority.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: And the report also states what was done by the previous Government.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Right.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: So we might ask ourselves whether they were getting results. If we read the commercial standing of our exports and imports during 1962, I think we will find that the tide is definitely running in our favour. We had higher exports and lower imports in 1962, and we had surpluses in our commodity trade. All this is happening, as I say, under the present set up of the Department of Trade and Commerce, which we recognize as having as efficient a staff of personnel as can be found in any department of government anywhere in the world.

Another development, which also accrues to the credit of the former Government, is the devaluation of the Canadian dollar which has greatly improved the strength of our economy. As we all know, that principle was heartily criticized by the members of the present Government, not only in the last election but also in the earlier one. Devaluation of the dollar has been largely responsible for the more profitable position of many companies. It is encouraging producers for both domestic and foreign markets to seek new outlets. These are two features which help to lay a foundation for further industrial development in Canada.

There is another matter which I feel is assisting us at the present time, one over which we have no control or influence and for which we can claim no credit. In Germany, France, Great Britain and other such countries, competition in industry is now very keen. Just after the Second World War, when they were not enjoying the years of prosperity they are now, we could sell almost anything in those markets. However, at the present time wages in those countries have increased considerably and the cost of goods is high, with the result that Canadian prices are less and less at a disadvantage in those foreign markets.

For these reasons, honourable senators, I claim that there was no real need for the setting up of another department.

I agree with Part II of this bill, with reference to area development. I take that to mean, in the last analysis, more or less decentralization of industry. We have heard about that over many years; it is nothing particularly new. Canada is a country which does not lend itself too well to decentralization of industry, unfortunately, and people in the more distant parts of the country, such as the Atlantic provinces, and possibly the prairie provinces, know that only too well. However, we hope that development will be a success. It will mean much more for my part of the country and some other sections than for others.

Such a plan for assisting depressed areas has been tried out in the United States, to the great advantage of some of the southern states. By means of the Tennessee Valley Authority, the development of industry in the southern states has, I understand, become even greater than in many parts of the New England states. The plan was tried out in some middle and northwestern states, with similar success.

I recall that a few years ago there was extreme hardship in places like Durham, England, and in other parts of Great Britain, as well as in Wales. The same method of introducing industries was used there with much success. I do not see why the same idea could not be successfully carried out here in areas where there is not the same opportunity for industry as in central Canada. If it can be done, I think it will be a blessing so far as those sections are concerned.

There is much more to be said for it than just the fact that industries are being introduced into places where they are most needed. It would mean that people could stay at home instead of being sent to other parts of Canada. I have nothing against the great cities of central Canada, but as one flies over some of our cities today they look, to me at least, almost like huge, sprawling monstrosities. How much better it would be if people could remain in smaller towns and cities, and what a better life they would live if that could be brought about. We have raw material, and we have labour which is as good if not better than labour found in most other countries of the world.

I also agree with the provision that will permit the new department to make use of other departments of government, and provincial governments. This has already been done; it it not new. The Department of Trade and Commerce today uses the facilities of other departments. The Department of Agriculture is an industrial department, fisheries is an industry, as is lumbering, and they are all being used today by the Department of Trade and Commerce, and with good results.

In that connection, honourable senators, may I say that the question of transportation is one of the most severe handicaps and obstacles to decentralization. However, we have other facilities. We have cheap electric power now in practically all parts of Canada.

As I said, honourable senators, excellent groundwork has already been established and I do not think that this bill initiates anything particularly new. If we were to follow along the lines of the establishment which is already created I believe we would have just as good a result as we would under the terms of this bill.

If time permitted we might take a look at the future. I have the feeling that Canada is on the verge of a great industrial development. I read an article in the Financial Post of a few weeks ago headlined:

> How U.S. Will Gobble Resources Over Next 40 Years

The article spoke of the United States gobbling up her own resources and how, when her own resources are used, she will have to turn to Canada, and must turn to Canada, for the resources she would no longer have.

A subheading of the article reads:

> What Canadian producers and investors can expect, as this enormous market for materials surges ahead.

The article pointed out that after the United States has exhausted her own resources, along with what she is at present getting from Canada, the demand for our forest products, for instance, will be increased many times, as will the demand for our mineral products and other raw materials which we have. But there is one point that is not mentioned in this article, and that is that once we start to further develop and expand industry in this country we should see to it that it is not the raw material that is exported, but the finished product.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): That is one of the purposes of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: That should be one of the purposes of the Canadian people, and if the people and the Government have the interest there would be no need for a bill of this sort. As I said, the Department of Trade and Commerce already provides for that and any act could be amended to meet that situation as it develops. To say that this bill is going to do these things, honourable senators, is stretching things very far.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): It will assist in doing that.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: A government which realizes its duty would certainly enact legislation at all times to assist in developments of this kind.

Honourable senators, it is not my intention to take up more of your time, other than to say I hope that all the things my honourable friend the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford) hopes for will be accomplished. I hope they will be brought about and that industry will be benefited whether development takes place under this bill or under legislation that we already have. I think that is the responsibility and duty of government, no matter what the agency might be.

Hon. A. K. Hugessen: Honourable senators, I was interested in the entire speech of the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) and I agreed with a good deal of it, but I was somewhat interested in the criticisms in which he indulged in the first part of his speech with regard to this particular bill.

I think that his first criticism was against the multiplication of new ministers. We heard a good deal about too many cooks spoiling the broth and that sort of thing. May I direct my honourable friend's attention to section 8 of the bill which provides that the minister of this new department shall exercise and perform all the functions presently exercised by the Minister of Defence Production. So, in that respect there will be no increase in the number of ministers.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: May I just correct the honourable senator? Previous to that I referred to the fact that the ministers were being increased from 21 to 26, and in saying that I was not referring particularly to the minister of this department.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: So that was just a general criticism by my honourable friend, not directed to this particular bill. Do we understand that?

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I do not see why there should be any change in the Department of Defence Production.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: My honourable friend's second criticism was that the functions which should be performed by this proposed new department could well be performed by the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: They are being well performed, as it presently exists.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I suppose there is a certain amount to be said for the Department of Trade and Commerce as it is presently constituted, but I find it rather difficult to know exactly what its functions are. The Act setting up the Department of Trade and Commerce, which is chapter 78 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, simply says:

> 5. The duties and powers of the Minister of Trade and Commerce extend to the execution of laws enacted by the Parliament of Canada, and of orders of the Governor in Council, relating to such matters connected with trade and commerce generally as are not by law assigned to any other department of the Government of Canada—

In that connection I think one may properly say that the principal activities of the Department of Trade and Commerce involve trade in articles and materials after they have been manufactured, whereas the new department is to deal basically with the question of manufacturing. One might say that it is as if you had a large industry with two departments in it, first, the manufacturing department and, second, the department dealing with the sale of the products after they have been manufactured.

I looked up the sort of things which the Department of Trade and Commerce, as it is presently constituted, has under its control. Let me indicate some of them.

It has control over boards of trade; it deals with the Canada Grain Act; it controls the Canadian Wheat Board; it controls the Dominion Coal Board; it has jurisdiction over electricity inspection; it issues export and import permits; it looks after export credits insurance; it deals with gas inspection; it deals with grain futures, with the marking of precious metals and with statistics. As to the last subject, the Dominion Bureau of Statistics comes under the Department of Trade and Commerce.

I think that is enough for one department, and I see no reason why we should not have a new department separate from the Department of Trade and Commerce, to deal particularly and specifically with the planning of the manufacturing industries of this country.

I have no further comments to make on my honourable friend's remarks, but it does seem to me there is something to be said in favour of creating a new department for this specific purpose, particularly in view of the fact that the present Department of Trade and Commerce is over-burdened with a great many other responsibilities.

Hon. R. B. Horner: Honourable senators, I am opposed to this legislation for the very reason that I doubt whether we are altogether wise in assuming that the Government must provide for everyone. This measure would involve entering into manufacturing to create labour. Have we arrived at that point?

In reply to the honourable senator who has just taken his seat (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) as to the need for an additional department, I say that the creation of this Department of Industry is going to cause the Government any amount of difficulty. As to this idea of area development, is it intended to carry the goods and raw materials to places where labour is available? Some years ago, when someone suggested in the committee on agriculture that because fattened cattle shrank on shipment they ought to be shipped first and fattened at their destination, I remember that the late Senator Burns asked who suggested such nonsense as that. Cattle must be fed where the feed is; and in most cases manufacturing must be done where the raw material is.

If this department is formed the Government is going to have problems that no government has ever had. It is going to have individual communities waiting on the Government, asserting that their area has surplus labour and demanding that they have a manufacturing plant.

As the Leader on this side (Hon. Mr. Brooks) has pointed out, the main objective is to sell the goods we manufacture. That is Canada's present difficulty; it is not one of creating labour.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, I rise to support the position taken by my Leader (Hon. Mr. Brooks) in connection with this bill. I agree with him that it is an extraordinary and a most unnecessary bill. I believe it is going to have far-reaching effects on the economy of Canada, and they are not going to be good. I believe this bill is going to saddle the economy with an absolutely unnecessary division of Government responsibility in an area of the economy where there should not be such a division.

What business is seeking today is more coordination of the exercise of Government responsibility, not more spreading out. We have enough of that already. We are now going to have a Department of Industry as well as a Department of Trade and Commerce. This will mean a new staff and a new department. The honourable Senator Hugessen said: Oh no, we do not need to worry about this; we are not going to have an extra minister, because he will be the present Minister of Defence Production. But we are going to have a new department, the cost of which no one knows.

One of the remarkable things about this bill is that when the question was raised as to how much the department will cost, how many offices there will be and how large a staff will be entailed, the minister responsible for introducing the bill in the other place said that he did not know. Over and over again he said: We have not had time to find out. We are going to introduce this new department, and we have not the faintest idea what it will cost. Yet, this is the department which is to help Canadian industry improve its business efficiency. This is a department that is going to start in business with no idea of its cost. If honourable senators wish to check that reference, they will find the facts in Hansard of the other place of July 4. I repeat, over and over again, the minister said: We do not know the cost. This is how we start with a Department of Industry which is going to be the focal point of business efficiency in this country.

I agree with the principles set forth in the bill. They are largely statements defining the area of Government responsibility vis-a-vis business, trade and commerce; but I am convinced after reading the bill that if it goes into effect it will defeat its purpose.

I object to it on six main grounds. First of all, it adds, unnecessarily, a new department. Second, it places two departments under a single minister, which I think is a bad principle. Third, it dissociates, rather than coordinates, government function in regard to business. Fourth—this has been mentioned by the Leader on this side (Hon. Mr. Brooks), but I will go further than he did—I believe it will bring to a disastrous end the expansion of one of the great departments of this Government. I shall have more to say on that point in a moment. Fifth—and this I have already mentioned—it is being set up without any consideration of cost. Sixth, and finally, I object to it because, to my mind, it bears all the earmarks of political rather than public expediency.

I said I would not be against a new department were it needed. The previous administration set up a new department, and I believe it was generally agreed that in the great area of forestry it made sense. Why not, then, a Department of Industry?

Well, to begin with, I consulted my dictionary. When I looked up "trade" it said, "see commerce"; and when I looked up "commerce" it said, "see industry". So far as I know, in the discussions that have taken place on this bill to date this has not been done, but I wonder if someone is prepared to define—in a way that makes sense and will afford some kind of guidance to those who are going to have to work with this bill if it becomes law—where "trade" starts and ends, where "commerce" starts and ends, and where "industry" starts and ends.

It is true that an attempt is made in the bill to define "industry" as being the manufacturing segment of industry. I would say this is rather fancy semantics, because we speak every day of the fishing industry and of the agricultural industry. Now, all of a sudden, the administration of Canada says: under this bill, from now on "industry" means only the manufacturing industry.

I believe the confusion has arisen because the activities of the Department of Trade and Commerce have not been fully studied. Senator Hugessen read us some pro forma statements of areas of responsibility under the Department of Trade and Commerce. On the other hand, Senator Brooks read from the report of that department; and there is a good deal of other evidence that that department, in its historic development, is a much more important and effective department than the honourable Senator Hugessen suggested in his remarks.

In connection with this confusion over the terms "trade", "commerce" and "industry", it is rather interesting to note that these terms are used practically interchangeably by the various provincial governments. For example, in British Columbia the corresponding department is Trade and Commerce; in Alberta it is Industry and Development; in Manitoba, Industry and Commerce; in New Brunswick, Industry and Development; in Newfoundland, Economic Development; in Nova Scotia, Trade and Industry; in Ontario, Commerce and Development; in Prince Edward Island, Industry, National Resources and Fisheries; in the province of Quebec, Trade and Commerce; and in Saskatchewan, Industry and Information.

So the provinces certainly do not attempt to make this peculiar distinction between trade, commerce and industry. If the Government of Canada is able to make it stick, they will have done something that I believe will be the marvel of the whole business world internationally—if they can by any definition separate industry from trade and commerce.

The whole function of the Department of Trade and Commerce in its recent expansion has been to jell these two things together, to say they belong together. It has said to Canadian manufacturers: You must survey the markets as an essential part of your industrial decisions, in this limited sense. Your decision to produce is tied so closely to your ability to sell that in business today there is not this kind of distinction which would make sense of separate departments of Government, as between trade and commerce and industry. I say, with all due respect, that I believe this is an integral absurdity in the whole conception of this bill.

The second point I mentioned was that of placing two departments under one minister. I believe it is an unsound principle. I think it is the whole principle of chain of command and historical constitutional development that wherever possible there should be one department and one minister. That would make sense. Anybody who has had experience in trying to find a minister of two departments would, I think, agree that such a situation gives him an excellent opportunity to hide out. It means two offices in this building; it means two offices for this one minister scattered over the square mileage of Ottawa, and under the present trend in the development of government departments they may well be a long way apart.

The two departments, the Department of Defence Production and the Department of Industry, would be under the one minister, and we are asked to believe that it really makes sense to take Industry away from Trade and Commerce, with which it has a natural affinity, and unite it with Defence Production. With all due respect to the remarks of the honourable Leader of the Government, there is not that close relationship between the two. The Glassco Commission recommended that the Department of Defence Production become, in effect, the purchasing agency of the Government of Canada. We have been told by the administration that this is under active consideration, and now we are going to put the Department of Industry, with responsibility for the whole Canadian economy, alongside a department which is, in effect, a purchasing agency. I do not say it would not be a good place if it were a branch, but I do say there is no sense in making this part of a Department of Industry and taking Industry out of the Department of Trade and Commerce.

On the point of associating these vital functions, I think that somebody should apologize to those who over the years built up this great Department of Trade and Commerce. I refer particularly to recent years, and to the late Right Honourable C. D. Howe under whom the Canadian Department of Trade and Commerce became, in my view, one of the pioneer departments in the world in giving leadership to the development of the economy of any nation.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: That tradition was carried on, I think, by the Honourable Gordon Churchill, and the Honourable George Hees also made a great contribution to the expansion of that department. They built on the sure foundations that had been laid, and this department was expanding to take care of its new responsibilities.

Honourable senators know the pamphlet, "Organization of the Government of Canada", published by the Queen's Printer. At page 291 there is a chart of the Department of Trade and Commerce. It starts with the minister and deputy minister. Then the number one associate deputy minister is in charge of commodities and industry. As the honourable leader on this side said, this resulted from a reorganization carried out over a number of years and stabilized to some extent in 1960. It provided for this department a natural expansion with people who had experience in the problems involved, people who had been in on GATT negotiations and who had worked on trade commissions all over the world and in every field of development in Canadian industry. Then, suddenly we say, "Sorry, goodbye, we are going to have a new department". One must surely wonder why. Look at the record.

Was this decision arrived at because it was a matter of public expediency? Or did somebody say, "Oh, one of our fellows wrote a book called Troubled Canada, and it said there should be a Department of Industry," and did another say, "One of our new ministers down in New Glasgow, N.S., on December 13, 1961 said that we should have two new departments; we should have a minister and Department of Area Development and a minister and Department of Industry?" We should be thankful that nobody in the cabinet said, "Let us have all three." Instead they said, "We will settle for one, and that will be sufficient to show that we are going to do those things we promised during the election campaign.

The present administration has recently acquired some very enviable experience in the high political art of backtracking. I, for one, am very sorry that they did not use those recently acquired skills in connection with this bill. I think it would have been an excellent place for them to say, "All right, the 60 days are over, let us now get down to some common sense administration," as I cannot but believe that the real genesis of this bill is the situation into which the present administration got itself when it decided on a program of government by slogan.

The slogan was: Sixty days of decision. Well, I have always advised people not to go to Madison Avenue for ideas unless they understand the techniques. Once that slogan had been adopted they had to have a decision a day for 60 days. I can well imagine a cabinet meeting in those hectic days. I cannot say actually what happened because I was not there, but I can quite imagine somebody saying: "Has anybody got a decision today? We need a decision. We have 60 days in which to make a lot of them. We have gone on for a long time and we have not made any". Then somebody else said. "Let's have two ministers of agriculture. That's a good idea". Then another asserted, "Let's put a 30 per cent withholding tax on the sale of securities to foreigners". And yet another suggested, "Let's put an 11 per cent sales tax on building materials. We have got to have decisions." And we have had decisions, but a surprising number of those decisions did not last the 60 days. I suspect that that kind of genesis which some of these other decisions have had plays a part in this bill. Of course, they could have backtracked out of it. But there must have come a time when the backtracking was occurring with almost every headline, and the administration decided, "We had better have a new rule: if anybody wants to backtrack we shall have to ask whether it is really necessary, because we cannot backtrack on everything". Then, having reached the Rubicon and crossed it, the rest was inevitable.

I was thinking that one of the ministers must have said to the cabinet, "The die is cast. We have got to go ahead with this". The great Julius Caesar at one point in his career made that famous statement: "Let the die be cast". Plutarch describes the episode in this way—and I think this applies to some whom honourable senators might know—

> But finally, with a sort of passion, as if abandoning calculation and casting himself upon the future, and uttering the phrase with which men usually prelude their plunge into desperate and daring fortunes, "Let the die be cast", he hastened to cross the Rubicon.

I close my remarks with just one more quotation, honourable senators. We have had this slogan. We have had strange Government decisions, and we are going to have more. I would leave this thought with the chamber; the words are those of the fiery Old Testament prophet, Joel, who said at chapter 3, verse 14:

> Multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision: for the day of the Lord is near in the valley of decision.

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, this bill is quite obviously an effort on the part of the administration to stimulate Canadian industry and thereby hopefully to relieve unemployment. Well, I think it is an important bill, and I certainly hope we will have a good discussion upon it in this house. I would hope even more that when it goes to committee much more information can be supplied to honourable senators than is presently available to them.

Let me say at once that as far as I am concerned I am dubious about this bill. I have yet to be shown that it will be as efficacious and as useful as those who put it forward believe it will be. That is not to say that it has not merit; not at all. It may be that I am too dull-minded an individual to appreciate fully the benefits that might come from it, but I do think that much more information is required.

This involves the setting up of a new department of Government. It is quite true that it will be administered by the honourable gentleman who at present administers the Department of Defence Production, but that is not, as a matter of fact, the limitation of the department. The new department will require a deputy minister. It will require offices, telephones and all the adjuncts of a department of government, and those are things that run into far more expense than the mere payment of the salary of a minister.

I am bound to say that I do not like this business of extending and enlarging ministries. I am not going to enter into any detailed criticism of the late Government now, much as I might feel disposed to do so in certain circumstances, but it did extend ministries. We have now 26 ministers and 26 departments of Government. The house will forgive me I am sure if I travel back 23 years to the beginning of World War II in 1939. The cabinet of that day was composed of 16 ministers. There were 16 departments of government. There were no parliamentary secretaries and there were no executive assistants. There were efficient deputy ministers in most of the departments. I might suggest to the house that there were at that time perhaps more efficient deputy ministers on the average than there are today.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: They are all ministers today.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Perhaps upon reflection my honourable friend might wish to withdraw that remark.

That was the case then. During the war three ministries were added. There was a Minister of National Defence for Naval Services, the late Angus L. Macdonald, and a Minister of National Defence for Air, our colleague Senator Power. The late Colonel Ralston was the senior minister of National Defence. The other ministry created was that of National War Services, and that ministry continued through the whole period of the war, when it was dropped.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: How many dollar-a-year men did they have in the Government?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: The cost of government today frightens me. It seems to be expanding at an ever increasing ratio, and I cannot overlook the fact that today at all levels of government in this country—and we have to consider this—the costs are absorbing one third of the gross national product. That, I say to honourable senators, is a dangerous condition to get into because without any question, if history carries any lessons, that is going to mean sooner or later heavy pressures of inflation. If there is any one curse that can rest upon a country more heavily than inflation, then I do not know what it is. Our job as legislators in both houses of Parliament should be to try to confine expenditures and taxation in order to avoid these dangers that unquestionably lie in wait for us down the road ahead, if we do not change our ways.

We have gotten into a state of mind where we think that spending does not matter. In fact, we rather glorify spending. That is associated, of course, with what is called the Keynesian theory of economics. It is very interesting to reflect upon that, as no doctrines have been more abused in their application than the doctrines and theories of Keynes. May I relate a little incident to the Senate?

In 1951, some five or six years after Keynes' death, I was crossing the Atlantic, and the late Sir Edward Peacock, an eminent Canadian then living in London, who knew Keynes very well and who had been a fellow Governor of the Bank of England with him, told me that if Keynes were then living he would be horrified at the use being made of his theories. We have gone on, on that basis. I would like to see the energies of Parliament and of Government applied to see how we can cut down the enormous cost of running the government machine today. Think of it—we of this Parliament will be asked to vote at this session about $7½ billion to carry on the business of this country.

I have this to say, and I shall continue saying it because I believe in it most fervently, that this is a profound danger to this country. When this bill comes before a committee—as I expect it will and as it certainly should—there is some information I think we should have.

Clause 7 sets out the further duties of the department. It says:

> (a) cause the Department to acquire a detailed knowledge of manufacturing industries in Canada...

Now, what is meant by that? I do not know what is meant, but I do know that one can get almost any kind of information today about any manufacturing industry in Canada from the Bureau of Statistics. Is this new department to have a new barrage of questionnaires sent out to harass manufacturers everywhere? It is important that we should know what the cost of this will be.

Secondly, clause 7 says:

> (b) promote the establishment, growth, efficiency and improvement of manufacturing industries in Canada...

That is another responsibility placed upon the minister. Let our committee be told how it is proposed to do this. I have some little knowledge of industries in Canada and in my opinion they are, in the main, very efficient. For instance, the big pulp and paper companies carry on research all the time as to how they can become more efficient, how they can reduce costs and expand markets. I would like to know how this new department will assist them further. I think we should be given some information as to ideas about that, before we pass such a bill as this.

I know a little bit about our steel industry in Canada. Is it efficient? I do not think there is an industry anywhere that is more efficient than our Canadian steel industry in manufacturing or production. They are always striving to find out how they can cut down costs and improve their products, and how they can extend markets. I would like to know how this new Department of Industry proposes to assist them. What new ideas will this department have which could help those industries that have been studying this question from the ground up?

The same reasoning applies to practically all our major industries. Take our great sawmill industries and woods industries. They are efficient; they have to be if they are to compete in the world. There is nothing that makes for efficiency as much as competition. If any proof were needed, that has been given in the tremendous revival of West Germany following the Second World War, when competition was made as open and as lively as possible. That is what we need here, it seems to me, rather than more ministers to tell us what we should do.

Then there is the question of area development. That probably has much merit. As one honourable senator—I think it was Senator Grosart—said, already the provinces are very active in this field.

I know that in Manitoba there are several small industries, such as the canning industry of Altona which encourages farmers in the growing of vegetables. There is a soup manufacturing industry established at Portage la Prairie, and the processing of potatoes is carried on at Carberry. Several of those industries are growing up naturally. I would like to know in what way this new department will assist them.

I would also like to know what plans the new department has for area development. There are various factors in that. We should have this information before the committee.

Above all, honourable senators, I would really like to get some idea before we pass this bill as to the approximate amount of the total financial obligations. Surely some estimate must have been made as to what the expenditures of this new department will be. Let us get them, not in detail but in broad outline so that we can pass our judgment upon them. This is the kind of information which I feel would be very useful to the committee when this measure comes before it.

Hon. Salter A. Hayden: Honourable senators, as I sat listening to this debate I could not help observing what a remarkable effect the change in seating arrangements has made on the viewpoints which are expressed in this chamber at times.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: We all recognize that.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I always admire what my seat-mate (Hon. Mr. Crerar) says; I like to hear him speak, as he always has something worth while to say. On certain subjects, such as that on which he was speaking today, he follows a pattern. That took me back to 1960—not very far—when the positions here were reversed and we had a bill before us to create a department of government called the Department of Forestry. My friend and seatmate made, in many respects, the same kind of speech then as he has made today. It is true that in addition he raised then the question of constitutionality, which was raised today by another member from the same province, the honourable Senator Thorvaldson.

However, when I looked at the bill dealing with the Department of Forestry in 1960, I found that we were then taking the functions already being performed in relation to forestry and carving them up, lifting them out of two other departments of government—the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources—and in the case of many of the powers which we gave to the minister of the new department then, we used language not too dissimilar from the language to be found in some portions of the bill we have before us today.

My good friend Senator Pearson was the sponsor of that bill on its second reading. I looked at the reasons he put forward for creating the new department. I must assume that it was functioning very well as part, not of one but, of two other departments of government at that time. The arguments which he put forward were very interesting. For instance, I find that, as reported in Hansard for 1960, at page 1070, he said this:

> It is felt that the Department of Forestry should be established now to improve the flow of new knowledge which can be obtained by research and which will be of benefit to provincial forest administrators and industrial forest operators, and also to give all possible assistance to industry and the provinces in other directions.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Do two wrongs make a right?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: No, unless I may accept my friend's question as being an admission that they were wrong in 1960.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I agree.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Then I take my friend's agreement that they were wrong. However, I always like to quote an authority from the Opposition camp. The authority I am quoting now is the presentation of this bill in 1960 and its passage in this house, having been approved in principle on second reading, having gone through third reading and having been passed into law with the support of many of the honourable gentlemen who were sitting over here at that time, and possibly with the support of some who may find objection to this bill. Therefore, I think it is perfectly fair to refer to what was said in respect of that bill which in many respects was doing exactly the same thing as this bill proposes to do on this occasion.

Again, as some of the reasons Senator Pearson urged in support of that bill he stated the net value of our forest products in 1957 amounted to $2,200 million per annum, and that of that production 65 per cent were goods to the net value of $1,400 million that were exported, and he indicated the importance of that. Then he went on to say:

> In regard to employment, work in the woods and in plants manufacturing wood products—sawmills, pulp and paper mills, and wood- and paper-using industries—is equivalent to 350,000 man-years annually.

As I go down the list of reasons he gave—and I am not critical of them now, nor was I then, because I did not speak in opposition to that bill—they seem to parallel in many respects the grounds upon which the Leader on the Government side was urging for the favourable consideration of this bill in the Senate.

So I say, let us put the cards on the table. How much of what is being said here in the debate on this bill today has to do with the principle of this bill? How much has to do with the fact as to what party is proposing the bill in the Senate? I would prefer to discuss it on the basis of the principle of the bill. The principle of the bill, as I see it, resolves itself into the question: Are the objectives as stated in the bill objectives which would be beneficial to Canada, and the carrying out of which would be in the best interests of Canada?

Hon. Mr. Brooks: May I ask the honourable gentleman a question? Are they not objectives that could be attained by other means than through this bill?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: My friend was so impatient to ask me that question that he stopped me before I put the next question to be considered.

The next question to be considered, in my submission, is whether this bill to create a Department of Industry, and the Department of Industry itself, are needed in order to give full force and effect to these objectives in the best interests of Canada? I think even my friend would agree with that statement as being the point of view upon which we should focus attention.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Of course that is where our opinions differ.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Yes, our opinions differ as to whether there is the necessity to do this or not. However, as to what is the basis or the viewpoint we should take into our consideration, I do not think the Leader of the Opposition and myself, in view of what he has said, are far apart.

When it comes to following my friend Senator Grosart down the road of 60 days of decision and all allied things of that kind, I think it would be wasting time and it would be an imposition upon the good will of the senators to devote much time to comment in that direction. I only wish to point out that the institution or the creation of a Department of Industry is something that was discussed long before the voters decided who should form the next government.

When we come down to the question of the need for a Department of Industry, let us see within what narrow compass we can resolve this. The Department of Trade and Commerce is, and has been over the years, a very important department of the Government. It has become increasingly important with the expansion of world trade and the need for Canada to trade internationally in order to survive. However, the department has had a considerable run at this problem, a problem which has been thrown into sharper focus because of our continually heavy unemployment. Whatever the department has done in this direction, to whatever lengths it has gone, and whatever plans it has put into operation, it has not produced the visible result that we are seeking in the best interests of Canada. It may well be that a Department of Industry will not accomplish it either. However, in the interests of focusing our attention on the problem in a particular way, and by lifting some responsible person out of other responsibilities as minister and directing his efforts into the objectives of the proposed department, it is hoped that a better result will be achieved more quickly.

There is justification for a Department of Industry.

My friend Senator Grosart paid such reverential tribute to the Department of Trade and Commerce that I imagine if he had been wearing a hat he would probably have raised it each time he mentioned that department. I have nothing to say against the Department of Trade and Commerce, but that department has already a tremendous number of functions to perform. It is a sound principle that if a question develops of such importance that it requires undivided attention and concentration to see if it can be resolved, you are justified in doing or creating whatever is necessary in the hope of getting the result which is desired for all the people in Canada.

At this point, I would say that to cure or alleviate substantially chronic unemployment such as exists in Canada today, and has for some years in the past, justifies and obligates us to devote our consideration and best attention to find ways and means of solving it. Certainly, if we can improve industrial production, if we can make our industry, by research, by advice and direction, more efficient than it is now, or more efficient in a larger field, and develop even further our external trade, thereby providing more employment, then I do not think any person would criticize and say this was not a sound objective to pursue. Once you take that as a principle, then you must subscribe to the principle that if a separate department of government is the best means to produce that result we should be all for it.

My seat-mate has spoken of the information that should be sought in committee. I agree that we should get all those facts, or as many as we can at that stage, but I do not think the Department of Industry will suddenly spring into full-grown operation and be in full possession of every fact. In other words, though royal assent can be given to the bill after it has passed both Houses of Parliament, there will still be some problems in the setup that will have to be studied, such as designated areas and what can economically be done in those areas. Those are questions that cannot be answered in any complete fashion at this moment, because they must first be studied and examined very carefully. All the information must be collated, and conclusions must be reached as to whether it would be advisable to move industry or to create new industry in those areas so as to provide employment.

My friend the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) was talking about the geographic layout of Canada, with its 4,000 miles or so stretching out like a ribbon, with not too much depth in most places, with a concentration of population, particularly in the central area, and the position of the Maritimes—and I think my friend will agree that I have some fair understanding of industrial operations in the Maritimes—and of the well-recognized problem of the handicap of geographical location. That problem has been solved with respect to some industries. There are handicaps, but they can be overcome. Possibly that could be a subject for further study by the department. However, in the layout of a land such as ours there are many handicaps in geographical location; there are also benefits in geographical location, such as locating in the central areas of Canada, where you have your manufacturing operations close to your markets. There is also the problem of the depressed areas, where there is so much unemployment.

These are all problems worthy of and entitled to the undivided attention of a department of government—not a sharing with many matters in a department of government. For that reason, I think this bill in principle is sound.

The question of whether, once we have heard all the evidence as to the plans which are in contemplation, we shall then decide that the proposals are feasible, is another matter. However, in principle—and it is principle we are concerned with on second reading—the objectives are sound; they are worth while for Canada and they should be supported.

We have tried to accomplish these objectives as a part of the operations of another department of government, and with all due respect to that department, and casting no reflection at all upon the last minister in that department before the recent election, it did not work out. Unemployment still continues and, therefore, we must of necessity try this plan and endeavour to concentrate the effort and the energy of a department of government solely upon this objective.

On motion of Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton), debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

COLUMBIA RIVER TREATY

Agreement entered into between the Government of Canada and the Government of British Columbia, dated July 8, 1963.

THIS AGREEMENT made this 8th day of July, 1963

BETWEEN THE GOVERNMENT OF CANADA, herein referred to as "Canada",

AND THE GOVERNMENT OF BRITISH COLUMBIA, herein referred to as "British Columbia",

WHEREAS a Treaty between Canada and the United States of America relating to Cooperative Development of the water resources of the Columbia River Basin has been signed on the 17th day of January 1961; and

WHEREAS it is desirable that an Agreement be made between Canada and British Columbia concerning implementation of the Treaty and disposal of benefits arising thereunder:

Now therefore this Agreement Witnesseth:

1. In this Agreement

"Treaty" means "The Treaty between Canada and the United States of America relating to cooperative development of the Water Resources of the Columbia River Basin" signed at Washington, District of Columbia, United States of America on the 17th day of January, 1961, together with any protocol or exchange of notes relating thereto.

2. All proprietary rights, title and interests arising under the Treaty and particularly those with respect to

(a) downstream power benefits accruing to Canada,

(b) proceeds from the sale of downstream power benefits in the United States of America,

(c) monies payable and electric power accruing to Canada in return for flood control,

(d) the stand-by transmission services rendered by transmission grids in the United States of America,

(e) benefits arising in Canada from any dam constructed pursuant to the Treaty,

(f) rights of water diversion granted to Canada by Article XIII of the Treaty, and

(g) monies paid to Canada by the United States of America in settlement of any claim made by Canada under the Treaty which relates in any way to the obligations of British Columbia under this Agreement belong to British Columbia absolutely for its own use.

3. British Columbia shall at its own expense;

(a) construct or arrange for the construction of all the dams and operate or arrange for the operation of all of the storages as required by Articles II and IV of the Treaty;

(b) not operate and prevent the operation of any storage in British Columbia in the manner prohibited by Article IV(5) of the Treaty;

(c) prepare and make available for flooding the land in Canada required for the purposes of any dam constructed by the United States of America under Article XII of the Treaty;

(d) not make and prevent the making of any diversion of water prohibited by Article XIII of the Treaty;

(e) carry out or arrange for the carrying out of any variation in operation of any Kootenay River diversion agreed upon pursuant to Article XIII(6) of the Treaty;

(f) abide by and carry out or arrange for the carrying out of any decisions made pursuant to Article XVI of the Treaty which relate in any way to the obligations of British Columbia under this Agreement;

(g) pay to Canada, upon demand therefor, all costs incurred by Canada in connection with proceedings under Article XVI of the Treaty which relate in any way to the obligations of British Columbia under this Agreement;

(h) carry out or arrange for the carrying out of anything required to be done by Canada under Article XVIII(3) of the Treaty;

(i) carry out and give full force and effect to all conditions, provisions, orders and decisions imposed or made by the Permanent Engineering Board established by the Treaty; and

(j) generally do all those things which constitutionally it is capable of doing to ensure that Canada is not in default under the Treaty and not do and so far as it is constitutionally capable prevent any person from doing anything which Canada has under the Treaty undertaken to refrain from doing.

4. (1) It is acknowledged and agreed that Canada has the right and obligation to do all things which the Treaty requires Canada to do that British Columbia has not undertaken to do by this Agreement.

(2) Notwithstanding subsection (1) of this section Canada shall obtain the concurrence of British Columbia before:

(a) confirming by exchange of notes any operating plan pursuant to Article IV of the Treaty;

(b) making any election pursuant to Article VI(5) of the Treaty relating to payment for flood control;

(c) agreeing to any variation of entitlement to downstream power benefits pursuant to Article IX of the Treaty;

(d) confirming any electrical coordination arrangement made pursuant to the Treaty;

(e) agreeing to any diversion of water by the United States of America pursuant to Article XIII of the Treaty;

(f) agreeing, as provided for in Article XIII(6) of the Treaty, to any variation in the use of water diverted by British Columbia pursuant to that Article;

(g) charging the entities designated pursuant to Article XIV of the Treaty with any new power or duty; and

(h) terminating the Treaty.

5. Canada shall, if requested by British Columbia, endeavour to obtain the agreement of the United States of America with respect to:

(a) any variation of the operation of any dam constructed under Article XII of the Treaty;

(b) any modification of the area of land in Canada required for the purposes of the dam constructed under Article XII of the Treaty;

(c) any diversion of water not provided for by the Treaty;

(d) any new power or duty which British Columbia wishes to impose upon the entities designated under Article XIV of the Treaty;

(e) any direction which British Columbia with the concurrence of Canada wishes given to the Permanent Engineering Board established by the Treaty; and

(f) any proposal relating to the Treaty which Canada and British Columbia agree is in the public interest.

6. (1) Canada shall designate the British Columbia Hydro and Power Authority as the Canadian entity for the purposes of Article XIV of the Treaty and British Columbia shall ensure that the British Columbia Hydro and Power Authority fulfills the obligations imposed on the Canadian entity by the Treaty.

(2) British Columbia may nominate one of the two persons to be appointed to the Permanent Engineering Board established by the Treaty and Canada shall upon such nomination appoint the nominee to that Board.

7. (1) Canada shall do whatever is reasonably possible to ensure compliance with the Treaty by the United States of America and shall not waive any default or breach by the United States of America without having consulted British Columbia.

(2) Canada shall, at the request of British Columbia, present any claim deemed reasonable by Canada arising under the Treaty which British Columbia wishes made against the United States of America.

(3) Canada shall establish any arbitration tribunal necessary to settle differences under the Treaty and shall, after consultation with British Columbia, defend or prosecute, as the case may be, all differences submitted to such tribunal or to the International Joint Commission under the Treaty.

8. (1) British Columbia shall indemnify and save harmless Canada from and in respect to any liability of Canada to the United States of America arising under the Treaty.

(2) British Columbia shall not be required to indemnify Canada pursuant to subsection (1) of this section in respect of any liability to the United States of America directly attributable to any action or failure to take action by Canada.

(3) Canada shall not discharge any liability in respect of which it is indemnified pursuant to subsection (1) of this section without having consulted with British Columbia.

9. British Columbia shall maintain or arrange for the maintenance of complete accounts and records relating to;

(a) the discharge of the obligations of British Columbia under this Agreement;

(b) the receipt and ultimate disposal of all monies derived from the sale in the United States of America of any downstream power benefits arising under the Treaty;

(c) the receipt and ultimate disposal of all monies and other compensation derived from the provision of flood control under the Treaty; and shall comply with or arrange for compliance with any reasonable request for disclosure of any such account or record made by Canada of the Permanent Engineering Board established by the Treaty.

10. (1) Canada shall transfer to British Columbia the administration and control of any unimproved lands in Canada belonging to Canada which are required for the construction and operation of the dams and storages which British Columbia is obligated by this Agreement to construct or operate.

(2) For the purposes of subsection (1) of this section the expression "lands" does not include lands forming part of an Indian Reserve.

11. (1) As soon as may be convenient after execution of this Agreement, Canada shall undertake negotiations with the United States of America with a view to entering into a protocol to the Treaty embodying certain matters agreed to by Canada and British Columbia and Canada shall thereafter with due diligence proceed toward ratification of the Treaty.

(2) Any protocol entered into pursuant to subsection (1) of this section shall be attached to this Agreement as Schedule A and shall form part of this Agreement.

12. (1) Canada agrees that the downstream power benefits arising in the United States of America under the Treaty may be sold in the United States of America subject to terms that are acceptable to both Canada and British Columbia and that will ensure that the proceeds of the sale will contribute to savings in the cost of electric power in the Province of British Columbia.

(2) Any agreement concluded under subsection (1) of this section with respect to the sale of downstream power benefits shall be attached to this Agreement as Schedule B and shall form part of the Agreement.

(3) British Columbia will finance the Treaty projects by use of the funds derived from the sale of the downstream power benefits arising in the United States of America, from the flood control benefits and from other sources as required, so that Canada shall have no obligation for the financing of these Treaty projects.

13. (1) The construction of the dams and operation of the storages required by the Treaty shall be carried out in accordance with all laws in force from time to time whether those of Canada or British Columbia.

(2) British Columbia shall take whatever steps are necessary to amend or repeal any law, permit or regulation and shall not enact any new law or regulation or issue any permit which may operate to frustrate, hamper or interfere with the carrying out of any undertaking in the territory of Canada provided for by the Treaty.

(3) Canada shall do everything possible to expedite the issue of all licences and permits required under the laws of Parliament by either British Columbia or the British Columbia Hydro and Power Authority in order for them to carry out and perform their obligations under this Agreement, including Schedules A and B.

14. Canadian labour and material shall be used in all construction or operation of the dams and storages constructed or operated pursuant to this Agreement to the full extent to which they are procurable, consistent with proper economy and the expeditious carrying out of the construction and operation and no person shall be discriminated against in the course of the construction and operation by reason of his race, colour, religion or political affiliation.

15. (1) Canada and British Columbia will consult as required on technical and other matters of mutual interest with a view to facilitating the implementation of the Treaty, avoiding disputes and carrying out this Agreement.

(2) In particular a Liaison Committee shall be established consisting of senior representatives of Canada and British Columbia.

(3) If differences or questions arise or allegations are made as to loss arising out of any action or failure to take action by either Canada or British Columbia which cannot be resolved through consultation they shall be submitted to the Exchequer Court of Canada for decision and that Court has jurisdiction to determine the rights and liabilities of either party under this Agreement.

(4) British Columbia shall, in respect of itself, procure the enactment of whatever legislation is necessary to implement subsection (3) of this section.

16. (1) British Columbia agrees that generators will be installed in the dam at Mica Creek as soon as economically feasible.

(2) Subject to the requirements of British Columbia, British Columbia will make available to other provinces of Canada, through a national grid or otherwise, on a first call basis, electric power from the Columbia River and other power developments in the Province of British Columbia at prices not higher than those obtainable by British Columbia from time to time from the United States of America for any comparable British Columbia entity electric power exported thereto.

17. This Agreement binds Canada and British Columbia from the date of the Agreement and thereafter so long as any obligation or right of either the United States of America or Canada exists under the Treaty or any part thereof.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF THE UNDERSIGNED, DULY AUTHORIZED BY THEIR RESPECTIVE GOVERNMENTS HAVE SIGNED AND DELIVERED THIS AGREEMENT

For the Government of Canada on the 8th day of July, 1963.

L. B. PEARSON,
Prime Minister.

PAUL MARTIN,
Secretary of State for External Affairs.

For the Government of British Columbia on the 8th day of July, 1963.

W. A. C. BENNETT,
Premier and President of the Executive Council.

R. G. WILLISTON,
Minister of Lands, Forests and Water Resources.

THE SENATE

Thursday, July 11, 1963

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

OFICIAL REPORT

CORRECTION OF TRANSLATION

Hon. Jean François Pouliot: Mr. Speaker, I must say, first, that I have already talked about the new translation from French into English of the speech I delivered on June 19; it is most satisfactory, but the French translation of the English speech is deplorable. May I be allowed to make corrections which are imperative. There were three things that were amiss: first, there was the shorthand reporting. Maybe I talked too fast; but the English shorthand reporting was much better than the French shorthand reporting.

What I have to complain about today is the translation, and the deplorable proofreading at the national printing bureau.

The word "appartenance" was used instead of "allégeance", which would have been more appropriate. There are mistakes such as "faissons", instead of "faisions"; then, Senator "Powers" instead of "Power", etc.

No attention was paid either to the rule of grammar regarding the imperfect of the subjunctive; that matter was quite disregarded. On page 138, the word "parrainé" was used to translate "sponsor"; the meaning is quite different; in English, that word, "sponsor", used as a verb, means "stand as sponsor for, to accept the responsibility for". The word "parrainé" is a neologism that is not found in the Dictionnaire de l'Académie.

Another similar word is "motionnaire"; a word being used for the mover, the seconder of the Address. One might talk of "parrainé" and of "motionnaire" to any French-speaking elector, and nobody would understand.

There is also something remarkable about the translation or the proofreading; I had been talking about the Chief Justice of Canada and I had said: "I am sure he will continue to have the respect and esteem of all those who come in contact with him. In the French translation, it reads: "Qu'il se gardera le respect et l'administration de tous ceux qui l'approcheront", which is utterly idiotic. Then, the word "endroit" is given the meaning of "Chambre"—"House". The word "véridique" is used instead of "exact" or "correct".

I now come to something unimaginable: I had referred to the "complete set" of the Statutes of Canada; this was translated as follows: "D'abord vous devriez posséder un jeu complet des Statuts revisés du Canada de 1952." "Jeu" for a deck of cards or a set of paddles, yes—but never have I read or heard of such a thing; it requires a distorted mind to apply the word "jeu" to a "série" or a "collection" of books.

Then, "on a condensé ces lois" for "on a compilé"; it is quite different; that is on page 139.

The word "texte" is held in horror; the word "libellé" is used instead of "texte" which is the same thing in French and English except that in French a final "e" is added. "Libellé" applies to notarial deeds, not to texts of statutes.

Furthermore, "discussion" has been translated by "analyse" and "exposé". The word "discussion" has also been translated by "analyse" which is not accurate and by "exposé" which does not mean the same thing at all.

Elsewhere, about the delegates or members who attended the conference in Charlottetown, the expression "shake hands" was translated by "tendu la main" instead of "serré la main".

Elsewhere, the phrase "ils y rédigèrent 'avec diligence' les résolutions de Québec" was used to translate the words "in great haste", hurriedly, in a mad rush, which is not the same thing. The English words "nothing of the discussion came out" has been translated by "n'avaient donné aucun résultat". That is not accurate; the French version should have read: "rien ne fut divulgué de ce qui s'est passé dans les discussions". That is not all. The word "marriages" has been translated by the word "alliances".

The word "Statut" is also held in horror by the translator; he uses instead the phrase "recueil des lois". There is any number of them, such as Sirey, Dalloz, etc. When particular acts are being referred to, like the Statutes of Canada, such statutes must be identified. Besides, the word "statut", in French, is quite correct, and appears on the covers of all compilations of laws that we receive.

I truly think there is sabotage taking place, because there is one sentence in particular that is absolutely contrary to anything I had the honour of telling you, honourable colleagues; and it is this: "The exclusive jurisdiction over civil rights belongs to the provinces, but there is an exception to that". This was rendered by "Le mariage et les droits civils relèvent exclusivement des provinces" which is wrong as far as marriage is concerned, and that is why I say there is sabotage there, and that the translator has acted in bad faith.

The word "ressorti" has been used to translate the word "belongs". That is not it at all! It should be "relève du Parlement du Canada".

There is another mistake, and that is the word "reconduction" instead of "continuation" which is exactly the same word in French and in English. "Reconduction" does not apply to legislation but to rents and to farm leases. There are many other mistakes, but I shall not labour the point. I have reason to complain of this translation and did complain to the person concerned in the Bureau for Translations. I was told that it was not always possible to control the hiring of translators, that employment had to be given to those who applied for it. I would rather see blank pages than such mistakes as I have just pointed out in the French debates of the Senate of Canada.

Unless there is improvement, the necessary sanctions should be applied. In addition, I am going to suggest that the speeches be printed in the language in which they are delivered, that is, let speeches delivered in French be printed in French, and those delivered in English printed in English, untranslated, so long as there are two indexes—an English index and a French index. In this way, we would at least have gained something, if indeed it is impossible to find enough translators able to make a faithful translation.

Why not have translators appear before the Civil Service Committee of the Senate, so they may be asked why they speak the language of Les Précieuses ridicules, that laughable language that nobody understands. It is too bad that Molière has been dead these last three centuries, for he could paint the true portrait of Senate translators.

I shall not press the point; I only ask while giving all possible credit to Hansard, that the Bureau for Translations be more careful in the future.

When I was first elected to the house, the words "electors of my county, or my constituency" were being translated by "commettants de ma circonscription", an appellation that no one could understand. Today, the same thing is going on; and, after 40 years in politics, there is no way of getting a change for this appellation that no one understands.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald tabled:

Copies of replies received from the provincial premiers to the letter, dated May 15, 1963, addressed to them by the Prime Minister of Canada, concerning bilingualism and biculturalism. (English and French texts).

Report of Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation, including its accounts and financial statements certified by the Auditor General, for the year ended March 31, 1963, pursuant to sections 22 and 23(1) of the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation Act, chapter 42, and sections 85(3) and 87(3) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Capital budget of the Farm Credit Corporation, for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1964, pursuant to section 80(2) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952, and copy of Order in Council P.C. 1963-512, dated March 25, 1963. (English text).

BILINGUALISM AND BICULTURALISM

REPLIES BY PROVINCIAL PREMIERS PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): With respect to the first-mentioned documents tabled, it is likely that honourable senators would like to examine these letters. Therefore, I would move, seconded by the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks), that these letters be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Are the letters complete, in that a reply has been received from each province?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I do not have the list before me, but I believe each province has replied.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I understood that up until yesterday a reply had not been received from British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I have tabled copies of all the letters received, in any event.

Motion agreed to.

For text of letters see appendix, pp. 253-6.

SENATE REFORM

INQUIRY

Hon. M. Grattan O'Leary: Honourable senators, may I at this time direct a question to the honourable Leader of the Government? In the early stages of the debate on the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, mention was made by the Leader on this side of the house (Hon. Mr. Brooks) and by the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford) of the desirability of doing something about bringing about at least partial reform of the Senate, within the Senate and by senators themselves. Later the honourable Senator Hugessen seemed to agree with this idea, at least in so far as it concerned the operation of Senate committees.

My question is: Has this noble idea died aborning, or is it still in the mind of the Leader of the Government and, if so, is anything likely to be done about it?

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: The answer to the first part of the question is "no", and to the second and third parts the answer is "yes".

The reason consideration has not been given to the suggestion is that the debate on the Speech from the Throne has continued. It occurred to me that senators who speak on the Throne Speech might like to refer to the matter. In fact, I believe a number of senators who have spoken since the honourable Senator O'Leary (Carleton) spoke, have referred to this matter. I think the honourable Senator Willis referred to it the other day.

However, I assure the honourable Senator O'Leary that the suggestion has not been overlooked. I shall be pleased to confer with the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) in the near future as to the advisability of proceeding with this suggestion and, if any action is deemed desirable, to consider the form that such action should take. I think we are getting near the end of the debate on the Speech from the Throne. It is unfortunate we have not as yet been able to complete it.

While I am dealing with this subject, honourable senators, may I suggest, now that Government business is increasing, that we should be prepared to sit longer hours during the coming week. Indeed, it might be necessary to sit on Friday. We have now under consideration in this house one Government bill which has already passed the other house, and I understand that the bill respecting the Atlantic Development Board will receive third reading in the other house today, and will be before us next week. Also, a bill to set up an Economic Council will be considered and will likely be received by us next week.

In addition, we have the items presently on our Order Paper, which include the debate on the Throne Speech.

Having regard to these facts I am quite sure that honourable senators will be prepared to sit longer hours during the coming week, and to sit on Friday if it becomes necessary.

Hon. Mr. Reid: What about sitting on Mondays?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): It might be advisable to sit on Mondays, but in my opinion at the present time we have not sufficient business to make it necessary for us to come back next Monday. It is my intention to propose, with the approval of the house, that when the house rises today it stand adjourned until Tuesday night, and we will see how the work of the house progresses next week.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I ask a supplementary question? Has any consideration been given by the Government to the reform of the Commons?

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Honourable senators, I think I can assure the honourable Leader of the Government that the members on this side of the house will co-operate in every way in order to expedite the business of the house, and that we will sit whenever it is necessary to do so.

[Later:]

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Honourable senators, may I make the brief suggestion that, if it is found necessary to sit additional hours, consideration be given to extending the hours of sitting on the three days that we now sit rather than sitting on extra days. I am aware that there are committees sitting and that this may present difficulties, but I ask that consideration be given to my suggestion because I think some hardship might result from an arbitrary decision to sit an extra day on Friday or Monday. Some of us have already made other arrangements but, of course, our work here takes priority over everything else.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I thank the honourable Senator Grosart for bringing his opinion to the attention of the house. I assure him that the convenience of all senators will be taken under advisement. However, the business of the house and of the country must at all times be paramount.

Hon. Mr. Reid: I am still in favour of sitting on Monday.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I hear one honourable senator saying that he is in favour of sitting on Monday. I am sure we are all in favour of getting through the business of the house.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE

INQUIRY AS TO ANY REQUESTS OR REPRESENTATIONS FOR AMENDMENT OF BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT WITH REFERENCE TO LEGISLATIVE JURISDICTION RE MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE

On the notice of inquiry of Hon. Mr. Pouliot of March 28, 1962:

Referring (a) to the first seven words of section 129 of the B.N.A. Act, 1867, about the continuance of pre-Confederation existing Laws, Courts, Officers, etc., namely, "Except as otherwise provided by this Act",

—(b) to "the exclusive legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada" extending to marriage and divorce in virtue of subsection (26) of section 91 of the said act, with the exception of the exclusive powers of Provincial Legislatures to make laws "for the solemnization of marriage", in virtue of subsection (12) of section 92 of the said act, and

—(c) the interpretation of the said law by the Supreme Court of Canada and the Privy Council on appeal from the Supreme Court of Canada in the matter of a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada of certain questions concerning marriage, (1912 A.C., p. 880)—

1. Did the Government receive any formal request from any province or any specific representation from anyone to the effect that the B.N.A. Act, 1867, should be amended by repealing subsection (26) of section 91 of the said act?

2. If so, from whom and when?

3. In view of the Statutes of Canada:

45 V., (1882), c. 42;
53 V., (1890), c. 36;
13-14 Geo. V. (1923) c. 19;
22-23 Geo. V, (1932) c. 10;

and the Revised Statutes of Canada:

c. 105 of 1906;
c. 127 of 1927: and
c. 176 of 1952, the latter being intituled "An Act respecting Marriage and Divorce", did the Government of Canada receive any specific representation or any formal request from anyone to the effect that the Parliament of Canada, in virtue of the exclusive legislative authority conferred upon itself by subsection (26) of section 91 of the B.N.A. Act, should repeal article 1301 of the Civil Code of the Province of Quebec and the second paragraphs of articles 1265 and 1422 of the said Code, and amend articles 179 and 180 of the said Code concerning the rights of married women in the Province of Quebec?

4. If so, from whom and when?

On the supplementary inquiry of June 26, 1963:

If representations have been made by anyone to the Government of Canada, either for the transfer of the federal jurisdiction over marriage and divorce to the provinces, or,

If anyone has asked the Government of Canada for a federal amendment to the civil laws on marriage, and if so, who in either case?

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, may I revert to an inquiry that can be found at pages 160 and 161 of the Debates of the Senate for June 26 last respecting marriage and divorce.

I want to know if representations have been made by anyone to the Government of Canada since November 1, 1962 for the transfer of the federal jurisdiction over marriage and divorce to the provinces, or if anyone has since that date asked the Government of Canada for a federal amendment to the civil laws of marriage and, if so, who in either case. I presume that no answer is available now, but I hope to get it on Tuesday next.

INQUIRY ANSWERED

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Honourable senators, I am pleased to say that I have now received an answer from the Minister of Justice and the Attorney General of Canada to the effect that the answer to both branches of the question is "No".

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Thank you very much. This is one thing that is settled for the time being.

TABLE OF PRECEDENCE FOR CANADA

PORTRAITS OF PRIME MINISTERS—COMMONS COLLECTION

On the Notices of Inquiries:

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Honourable senators, there are two other inquiries I wish to mention. They are with regard to what was on June 25 last asked about the Table of Precedence for Canada, reported at page 150 of the Debates of the Senate, and as to the portraits of prime ministers, on July 9, as reported at page 202 of the Debates of the Senate.

If the former prime ministers of Canada are not to have the rank to which they are entitled by virtue of the Table of Precedence, then what is the use of keeping their portraits hanging in the corridor? If we are to keep the portraits there, let us give the former prime ministers—and there are two now instead of one—the rank to which they are entitled. I hope an Order in Council will be passed accordingly as soon as possible.

I thank the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford) for the answer he has given to my first inquiry, and I hope the other questions will be as favourably considered.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, July 16, 1963, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

COLUMBIA RIVER TREATY

QUESTION RESPECTING INCOME TAX

Hon. Gordon B. Isnor: Honourable senators, I asked a question yesterday in reference to this matter. It is reported at page 216 of Hansard:

> Can the Leader of the Government tell us whether the province of British Columbia will pay income tax on this development?

The development I referred to was the Columbia River Basin development under the agreement entered into between Canada and British Columbia, respecting a treaty with the United States of America. There was no response from the honourable Leader of the Government as to whether he would answer the question. Having read the agreement, I would like to know whether, this being a public project, any income tax on sales of any kind will be payable to the Dominion of Canada?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I will give consideration to the question. I have not had an opportunity to peruse the agreement since it was tabled, but I will do so and I hope to have an answer for the honourable senator on Tuesday evening.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Thank you.

PRIVATE BILLS

THE BOARD OF TRADE OF METROPOLITAN TORONTO—THIRD READING

Hon. Harry A. Willis moved the third reading of Bill S-25, respecting The Board of Trade of Metropolitan Toronto.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

THE SOVEREIGN LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA—THIRD READING

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson moved the third reading of Bill S-29, respecting The Sovereign Life Assurance Company of Canada.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ALLSTATE LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA—THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson moved the third reading of Bill S-28, to incorporate Allstate Life Insurance Company.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY BILL

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Honourable Mr. Macdonald (Brantford) for the second reading of Bill C-74, respecting the Department of Industry.

Hon. M. Grattan O'Leary: Honourable senators, before coming to this bill under discussion, I would like to refer to two interventions—perhaps I should call them two diversionary exercises—in this debate yesterday by Senator Hayden and Senator Hugessen, two gentlemen for whose talents I have the greatest admiration.

Senator Hayden's position seemed to me one of extraordinary confusion. He simply confused ends with ways and means. He said to the Senate, "Do you agree with the ends, the objectives, which we seek to reach here?" Then he said, "If you do agree with those objectives and those ends, then you have got to accept this particular bill as the ways and means to those ends."

Honourable senators, this surely is a new style in logic, and I submit respectfully that it is not the style of logic, not the style of reasoning, that has enabled the honourable Senator Hayden—I am sorry he is not in his seat in the chamber—to reach the shining position which he has reached in his chosen profession.

Now I come to the honourable Senator Hugessen. His tactic was to produce the statute which created the existing Department of Trade and Commerce, to cite the functions, duties and responsibilities given the department by that statute, then to find that these functions, duties and responsibilities did not include certain things which he said needed to be done. So he said, by implication at any rate, that we need this new department; we need what is provided for in this bill. And Senator Hugessen, like his colleague Senator Hayden, did not bother to examine the bill. He asked us to accept certain ways and means, but he did not even take the trouble to try to show us what those ways and means are.

I wondered as I listened to him—and I have always done so with the greatest attention—how many court cases Senator Hugessen has won by logic of that kind. He spoke of the need to encourage manufacturing industries. Nobody denies that that need exists, but let me put this to him and to the Senate, that that need also exists in England, a country which has three or four times our trade, where too they are trying to encourage new industries, and where too they have a problem of depressed areas. They have dealt with their problem of depressed areas, and they are dealing with their new manufacturing industries; but I have not noticed them setting up a second department of the Board of Trade.

The United States has ten times our trade and all the problems we have—all the problems mentioned in this bill. It has depressed areas; it has an unemployment problem, practically as great as our own. Has anybody noticed the United States setting up a second Department of Commerce?

Incidentally, the leader of this house (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford), in explaining this bill yesterday, became almost lyrical about what he thought it was going to do for our manufacturing industries. Let me ask him this question: Did Canadian manufacturers ask for this bill? Did they ask for a new department? Did the chambers of commerce ask for this bill and for a new department? Did our trade unions ask for it?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I shall be glad to answer those questions at the close of the debate.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): I sincerely hope so, and if they did make such requests I hope those requests will be brought to the Banking and Commerce Committee and shown to us in writing. I would like to see the dates on the letters of request.

Honourable senators, I am opposed to this bill. I reject this bill in toto, and I do so for seven reasons.

In the first place, I reject the bill because it is something that is useless and costly, that is dangerous in its trend and wrong in its philosophy, and is another step towards big government.

Secondly, I reject this bill because it rests upon the pathetic delusion, which is growing in this country, that governments are omnipotent, that they possess a wisdom not given to the rest of us, and that they know how to manage business better than businessmen themselves.

Thirdly, I reject the bill because I think it is an insidious encroachment upon the freedom of the individual. All one has to do is look at a certain clause in the bill, to which Senator Crerar drew our attention. That clause speaks of the powers given to the minister. Powers over whom? Powers to do what, and of what sort?

I reject this bill also because I think that this could become one more step, and we have taken many such steps, towards a managerial society by a managerial elite.

I reject the bill because I think that the ends and objectives cannot be achieved in this way, by young men in grey flannel suits, roaming around this country on planes and trains carrying brief cases and telling businessmen of this country how to run their businesses.

I say, honourable senators, that the objectives we are seeking in this bill can be achieved, and can only be achieved, by the energy, the enterprise, the free ambition and industry of the Canadian people themselves.

I reject this bill and all its works because it will be another step towards big and bigger government, which even now is crushing down this country under a burden of debt.

Honourable senators, we Canadians, partly because of our federal system, but for other reasons more grave, must be the most overgoverned nation in the whole democratic world.

I have here, and I am going to ask leave to put a part of it on Senate Hansard, a recent report of the Royal Commission on Government Organization, known as the Glassco Report. Mr. Glassco and his fellow commissioners, in introducing this report, sought to point out the tremendous extent to which government in Canada has reached out to interfere with the very lives of the Canadian people.

Let me give honourable senators some information from this report. At the time this was written we had in Canada 23 government departments, ranging in size from 93 employees to more than 43,000. We had the armed forces; we had 21 statutory boards, one of which had no employees of its own; another had 2,800. We had 42 corporations, including various undertakings such as the National Gallery, the Unemployment Insurance Commission, and so forth. We had 29 statutory officers and counsellors, including the Chief Electoral Officer and so forth. In addition, we had 132,000 civil service employees under the Civil Service Act, 214,000 other civilian employees, 120,000 members of the armed forces and, 14,000 revenue postmasters and assistants. All together 480,000 people were employed by the Government. The commissioner remarks that this was more than 7 per cent of the Canadian work force, being roughly equal to the number employed in the 25 largest industrial corporations of the country or the 60 largest manufacturing concerns of the country. And then he says:

> The popular notion that bureaucrats are desk bound was dispelled by the discovery that over $12 million is paid annually to public carriers to transport civilian employees travelling on public expense.

Those are largely the boys in the grey flannel suits, the boys carrying brief cases that you meet on trains and planes, the young men going about this country telling Canadians how to behave in various patterns of their lives.

Government and paper, the commission says, seem to go together. And here we are applying for another department to pile us with mountains of reports. Surely honourable senators get the reports of the Department of Trade and Commerce—scores and scores of reports on every conceivable subject and facet of trade and industry in this country. My desk in the Journal office is piled high with them, and I am sure that is true of every newspaper and every public man in this country.

I read further from the Glassco Report:

> Government and paper seem to go together. More than 100,000 different forms were identified and an additional 100,000 are believed to exist. About 50 million letters are written each year and over five million cheques are issued each month. The inactive files of the government occupy an estimated 200 miles of shelving, one-third of it in the Public Records Centre in Ottawa. Enough library material to fill ten miles of shelving is being acquired each year.
> Even without the vast public domain in the north, the federal government is by far the largest holder of real estate and the largest tenant in Canada. In 1960, about 180 million square feet of building space were occupied by departments and agencies—the equivalent of over 100 buildings, each the size of a football field and 28 storeys in height—and the value of real estate holdings was estimated at $4 billion.

The range of activities carried on by the Government may be further illustrated by the following:

> Departments and agencies conduct such varied activities as a gold refinery, power plants, a tailor shop, fumigation service, bait service, a mail order prescription drug service, pastures, hostels, cafeterias, swimming pools and golf courses.
> Over $50 million is spent annually to educate almost 75,000 students in federally operated schools.
> Departments operate 44 hospitals containing over 12,000 beds, scattered from Inuvik in the Northwest Territories to Zweibrucken in West Germany.
> Over $50 million is spent annually for telecommunications.
> About $12 million is spent each year to move the household goods of the government's civilian and military staffs from place to place.
> Outside Canada, in more than 100 locations, thirty-one departments and agencies employ over 11,000 civilians.

Honourable senators, I think it was Sidney Smith who once said that the only true function of a government was to get twelve good men into a jury box. Well, all of us know that the day of Sidney Smith is long gone; all of us know now that political parties and governments must adapt their principles and their policies to an incredibly changing world. But, honourable senators, surely we have not yet come to the day when a state administrator is needed for every human need. It may well be that we do not want to return to the old jungle of capitalism, that we do not want to return to the days of the robber barons; but, though we need government superintendence, though we need the government as a referee, though we need traffic lights, surely we do not need a policeman in every car. Yet that is the direction toward which we are tending, that is the principle, that is the philosophy of this bill—more and more big government, more and more interference with individuals, and more debt.

Honourable senators, for the past half century I have been in Ottawa and have observed Parliament and the trends of our legislation, and without any question whatsoever the trend is away from liberalism with a small "l", away from conservatism with a small "c", and away from freedom. The trend is in favour of those young men I have mentioned, who are not concerned with the old names and the old policy and principles or even with the old heroes of the Liberal or Conservative parties. How often did my Liberal friends in the last general election hear the name of Sir Wilfrid Laurier invoked? How often did they hear the name of Edward Blake invoked? And I may turn now to my own party and ask, how often did we hear invoked the great names of the Conservative party?

We have come to a condition in this country where government has been turned over to the young men in the grey flannel suits, as I call them; it has been turned over to the young executives, to the boys of the executive suites. That brings to my mind something in this bill that I almost overlooked.

Who is going to set up this new department? Is it going to be set up by the many able senior civil servants we have in Ottawa? Is it going to be set up by Mr. Mitchell Sharp, the saving grace of the present cabinet? No, sir. They are going outside for these young people—young business people they call them —to set up this department. I would have thought that, in the light of a certain tragic experience in this city in recent weeks, they would have been a bit chary of this business of going outside to find people to set up a department, disregarding our senior civil servants.

We are not here considering good intentions; we are considering ways and means of achieving an end, and I submit to you that this bill does not provide those ways and means.

There is something else, when you speak of ways and means. I would like to read from an article by Mr. Justice Brandeis, a great man of the law on this North American continent. This is what he warned against.

> What men who value freedom should be wary of most of all are good intentions and purposes by government. You can always be alert to evil men but the men to guard against are the well-intentioned people with good purposes but without understanding.

Heaven knows, honourable senators, certain events of the past two weeks in Ottawa have shown us a rather tragic and melancholy example of the truth of that statement by Mr. Justice Brandeis. We have seen a man, well-intentioned no doubt, high-minded no doubt, but without the wit and understanding to translate his good intentions into a workable, practical plan.

We have to guard against all these proposals. This, I fear, was not asked for by the manufacturers of Canada, by the chambers of commerce, or by the trade unions, whether in the Maritimes or elsewhere, but was put in the Liberal platform, dropped in a hectic moment of electioneering from a Liberal platform, and then incorporated into a Liberal statute.

Government in Canada! I repeat, we have more of it than any other nation on earth—economic councils, departments of industry, boards, bureaus, committees, commissions—and on top of all this we shall shortly have before us another bill, to set up an economic council in Canada.

Where, in heaven's name, are they going to find all the people to fill these positions? Do you mean to tell me, or does it appeal to the common sense of anyone in this chamber, that you can bring young men into these departments who are able to go out and tell men like Mr. E. P. Taylor how to run his business? Can you get one of these young men to go out and tell Mr. Sherman or Mr. Scully of Hamilton how to run the steel business, or go to Montreal and tell the Dominion Iron and Steel Company what to do? What sort of nonsense, what sort of twilight twittering this is, sending out young and inexperienced or second-rate business people!

Can anyone imagine that the leading industrialists and businessmen of this country are going to come to Ottawa to put this bill into effect? Who is going to "keep shop" in this country if our businessmen are to be brought to Ottawa to try to run a department like this?

There is no need whatsoever for this department, and I venture to say that hardly a man on the other side of this house feels in his heart there is such a need. It is useless, it has not been asked for, it is capable of great harm, and will lead to more and more infringements on liberty.

I, sir, would not even refer this bill to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce. I believe that were this chamber performing the old, historic functions for which is was created, it would reject a bill like this, lock, stock and barrel, and send it back whence it came.

Hon. G. Percival Burchill: Honourable senators, I must congratulate the honourable gentleman who has just resumed his seat (Hon. Mr. O'Leary, Carleton). Whether or not one agrees with his views or political philosophies, we must all agree that he has a talent for expressing succinctly what he thinks. His appointment to this chamber has added considerably to our array of speaking talent.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: I am sure I speak for every honourable senator when I say it gives much pleasure to hear him speak.

Honourable senators, as one who is very concerned with trade and industry, I have a few observations to make in connection with this bill. However, before doing so may I congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, on your appointment to this chamber and on your elevation to the Chair to preside over our deliberations? I feel sure we are all happy to have you among us, and I wish you an enjoyable and successful term of office.

To all those who have been appointed to the Senate since I last had the pleasure of speaking in this chamber, I want to join with the previous speakers in offering them a warm welcome. I hope they enjoy the experience as much as I have over the years, and I trust they will make as many warm friends as I have had the happiness of doing.

Honourable senators, this bill has as its object the creation of new industries and the expansion of our present ones. However, when we discuss industries I believe something should be said about, and I wish to pay tribute to, the great Canadians who have built this country, who have established industry and who, by doing so, have assumed grave financial risks and have exhibited courage, enterprise and hard work. With these qualities they have built Canada and have established the industries we have inherited.

I was impressed many years ago when I read a speech which King George V delivered in Liverpool on opening a tunnel which had just been constructed across the Mersey River, between Birkenhead and Liverpool. He said to the large gathering:

> I praise the imagination that foresaw, the minds that planned, the skill that fashioned, the will that drove, and the strong arms that endured.

To my mind those are the qualities of our forefathers, the men who built this country, and they are qualities which are just as essential today as in the days of our forefathers. They worked against great odds, and they did not have the credit facilities that we have in our day and age. In fact, much of the credit was provided from outside Canada, from across the ocean, and at that time they were begging people to invest in Canadian industry and resources.

Today, when we talk so much about becoming engrossed in government, we must not forget that we must continue to breed a race of men who have the same qualities as our forefathers, men who will spark industry and undertake the risks involved in present-day enterprises and in launching new industries across this nation. I say that because, as we all know, today Canada faces world competition both in quality and price.

I may add that while we are exalting the arts, sciences and education, that is all very fine, but in doing so we must not forget the men who are keeping the wheels of industry turning and keeping this country on the rails. We must remember that those men deserve a high priority in the society in which we live.

Having said that, I say that this legislation, in so far as it is designed to help solve the problem of unemployment, should receive our blessing. In spite of all that my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. O'Leary, Carleton) has said this afternoon, that problem is the number one priority in Canada at the present time, and if this legislation will assist in any way to solve that problem, then I believe this bill should receive our blessing.

I want to add, however, that to achieve practical results two things are necessary. First of all, there should be close liaison with the Department of Trade and Commerce. Yesterday afternoon Senator Hugessen aptly told us that the Department of Trade and Commerce's function was to find markets for the sale of our goods, while the Department of Industry would serve to help the manufacturer of those goods. That is true, but any of us who are engaged in industry know that to promote a new industry, or to expand an old one, the first consideration must be a market for the sale of the goods to be produced. That is why I say that there must be the closest possible liaison between the Department of Industry and the Department of Trade and Commerce.

The Department of Trade and Commerce is doing and has done a grand job. I could mention many instances in which it has helped Canadian industry. Only two weeks ago that department brought over from Great Britain a delegation of timber people and architects who are concerned in a big housing program upon which that country is about to embark. Apparently they need something like 50,000 houses, and need them at once. These men spent some time in Montreal, Toronto and Ottawa and even travelled as far west as Vancouver. At the end of their tour they came to New Brunswick and they were kind enough to say—perhaps I should not mention this, but I believe they were sincere—that notwithstanding all the grand places they had visited in Canada, they regarded their visit to New Brunswick as the highlight of their trip. Whether that be true or not, they issued a statement when leaving in which they said that their trip to Canada had been of immense value and that they had received much beneficial information. They were amazed at what we were able to do, the size of our timber, the design and fabrication of our houses, and they went home feeling that the trip had been very well worth while.

I mention that as being one thing for which the Department of Trade and Commerce was responsible and which has been of real benefit. My view is that this proposed Department of Industry, if it is to accomplish what we hope it will, must have close liaison with the Department of Trade and Commerce.

The second point I want to make is that in my view there must be close co-operation between the proposed federal Department of Industry and the departments of industry of the various provinces because, as was pointed out yesterday, the departments in the provinces are keen and active and are doing an excellent job in snatching up every possible industry they can get hold of. In fact, my own province of New Brunswick has been accused of stealing industries from other provinces, which charge, of course, is not true, but it does happen that we have advantages down there that other provinces do not have. The fact that we have been so accused shows that our provincial Department of Industry is right on its toes.

I mention this to emphasize the fact that a new industry coming to this country, or an existing industry desirous of expanding, naturally starts with the department of industry in the province concerned. If the federal Department of Industry is to give the assistance which we hope it will give, then it seems to me that in order to avoid overlapping the approach has to be through the departments of industry in the various provinces, and I presume that is the system which will be followed. It is for that reason, as I have said, that I urge the closest possible co-operation between the federal Department of Industry and the departments of industry in the various provinces.

There are other features of this legislation about which I, like Senator Crerar yesterday, am not too clear, and upon which I hope further information will be forthcoming when the matter goes to committee. However, I cannot agree with my honourable friend who has just spoken (Hon. Mr. O'Leary, Carleton) that everything is as dark and gloomy as he has painted it. I think we should take hold of this legislation; it is designed by the Government to cure, or at least to help to cure, the problem of unemployment, and I say that no government in Canada worth its salt can afford not to do everything in its power to solve what I consider to be the most serious problem we have today.

Honourable senators, I say that we in this chamber should give this legislation our blessing, pass it, and hope that it will accomplish what we expect it to do.

Thank you.

On motion of Hon. Mr. McCutcheon, debate adjourned.

PRIVATE BILL

THE MONARCH LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY—SECOND READING

Hon. J. Campbell Haig moved the second reading of Bill S-30, respecting The Monarch Life Assurance Company.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill requires only a short explanation. As the explanatory notes indicate, it is merely sought to add a French version to the English name.

This is a Winnipeg company, formed in 1906, with its head office in that city. It commenced transacting business in the province of Quebec in 1928. I have here the report, in both English and French, for the year ended December 31, 1962. In that year five per cent of the company's business was produced in the province of Quebec, and according to the investment portfolio something over 17 per cent of the company's assets are invested in that province. I am informed by company officials that all policy contracts, premium notices, forms, training courses, annual reports and promotional material for use in the province of Quebec are printed in the French language.

If this bill receives second reading I shall move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Haig, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, July 9, consideration of His Excellency the Administrator's speech at the opening of the session, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Lefrançois, seconded by Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland), for an address in reply thereto.

Hon. Malcolm Hollett: Honourable senators, having listened during the past few days to the excellent speeches coming from both sides of the house concerning the proposed new Department of Industry, I am rather reluctant to address you, particularly being conscious of my lack of oratorical power and because the Speech from the Throne now seems to me to be somewhat antiquated. It is a long time since we listened to the Speech from the Throne and I think it is about time that an expression of our appreciation was forwarded to the Governor General. However, honourable senators, I do not intend to take up too much of your time.

In the Throne Speech there was mention of matters which apply in a particular sense to the province from which I come, and about which I deem it my duty to say a few words. Before doing so, I wish to join in the sentiments of previous speakers and I am sure of every member of this house, when I say how happy we all are that His Excellency the Governor General has recovered from his recent illness which prevented his being present at the opening of Parliament.

I am also sure that we all subscribe to the congratulations which have been expressed here to the Honourable the Speaker of this house on his elevation to his high office. He is thoroughly familiar with the duties of his office, and I know I speak for all honourable senators in saying that we will all be happy to obey any order which he may deem it his duty to make from time to time.

To the honourable Senator Macdonald (Brantford) has come the high honour of being the Leader of the Government in this house, and I am sure with his many years of experience he will have no difficulty whatever in leading his forces—which are superior to ours, in a numerical sense only—along the trails of peace and quietude as we consider various pieces of legislation brought before us. After hearing what I heard yesterday and today I am sure that the honourable Leader of the Government is going to have quite a job endeavouring to lead us along these trails of peace and quietude.

Our own leader on this side of the house, Senator Brooks, and our former Speaker, Senator White, each still have a large contribution to make in the Senate. Of course, some contribution will be made from this side of the chamber, but I hope it will not be long before they are performing their duties on the other side.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): What a hope.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Senator Connolly (Ottawa West) is not present at the moment, but I am quite sure that all of us who heard him speak of his visit to Rome are proud of the fact that the Senate was able to send such a man to represent Canada at the illustrious gathering of people present at the coronation of His Holiness Pope Paul VI. Senator Connolly made a marvellous speech, and after hearing him, and Senator O'Leary (Carleton) who spoke today, I am quite sure that we have some real orators in this house. I suppose we are going to have an occasional squabble on account of that one of these days.

To the new senators who have joined us since the session opened, I say that we are all very happy to welcome them.

The mover of the motion for an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne (Hon. Mr. Lefrançois) and the seconder (Hon. Mr. Taylor, Westmorland) are well deserving of the congratulations that have already been voiced here, and I do no more than reiterate them. I noticed that both of them were mild in their criticisms of the previous Government; no doubt that was because they could not find anything about which to criticize it. They were quite sure, however, that the present administration will do nothing wrong. I quote the words of the mover of the motion (Hon. Mr. Lefrançois):

> The sixty days of decision will remain famous in our country's history.

I agree with him. They will remain famous, but not in the sense in which the honourable Senator meant them.

The seconder of the motion, Senator Taylor, (Westmorland), was quite correct when he said that the Speech from the Throne was brief and to the point, without going into detail in connection with the various matters that were raised in it. I hesitate to say anything about some of the various matters that were raised in the Speech from the Throne because I might be considered out of order by His Honour the Speaker. We shall have an opportunity of dealing with certain measures that were mentioned in it, as we shall probably be allowed to say something about a certain document which I think is called the budget. I do feel, however, that I cannot entirely agree with Senator Taylor when he said that he believes it is true that the Liberal party has always been recognized as the party of reform. I did not know that before, and so I tried to go back into history to find out if it were so.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): Especially in Newfoundland.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Well, now that you raise the matter of Newfoundland I am reminded that Senator Burchill spoke about the various industrial departments in the provinces, and I would suggest that if the federal Government wants to get some experienced information with respect to economic development —and Newfoundland's department is called the Department of Economic Development— all it has to do is to go down to St. John's, Newfoundland, and consult the premier. I am quite sure that he can find a man who can direct the Government with respect to the new industries that it is going to establish. That man lives in Montreal at the present time, but I shall not mention his name. The honourable Senator O'Leary should not interject things like that.

I agree, however, with both the mover and seconder of the motion that although little detail is given in the Speech from the Throne it does contain suggestions of various pieces of legislation which if enacted could undoubtedly make living all across Canada much better for a large number of people.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Hear, hear. That's a concession.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Before getting down to these items I fear I shall have to be a little critical of the things that were done during the recent election. I am not sure that I am allowed to do this, but I want to do it. It is my understanding that in the debate on the motion for an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne a senator may refer to anything.

I am sure honourable senators on the other side of the house—I notice still a few of them remain although many of them have left the chamber—all recognize the photograph in the centre of this page of The Daily News of St. John's of April 8 last. It is a picture of the Prime Minister, and the whole page contains an advertisement inserted by the Liberal Association of Newfoundland.

Nearly all the things mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, and nearly all of the things contained in the budget, are listed here. It reads:

> Make Canada strong and secure!
> In the first 60 days of a new Pearson Government these pledges will be honoured with speed and decision.

I want to refer to one pledge to which I take the greatest exception, and I am quite sure that members on the Government side of this illustrious house will be ashamed when they hear these words. The first pledge that is given reads as follows:

> Call Parliament together on Thursday, May 16th, to start at once cleaning up the mess left over from five years of indecision and delay.

Honourable senators, if the photograph of the Prime Minister had not appeared in this advertisement I would not have minded so much, but I was surprised indeed to note that the Prime Minister of Canada could have lent what approximates his signature to such a statement as that. I ask you honourable senators: What was the mess left over from the so-called five years of "indecision and delay"? What was it? I trust you will bear with me while I recite a few of the items which in the Liberal mind make up the mess brought about by the so-called indecision and delay. As you will remember, the Diefenbaker Government—I am not speaking politically, honourable senators—

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): No, no.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: The Diefenbaker Government was barely in office before it managed to increase the salaries of civil servants. I think about 100,000 civil servants were taken into consideration, and their salaries were increased at a cost of $110 million.

Honourable senators will recall that the university per capita grants were raised to $2. I am just quoting a few items to demonstrate the "mess" that the previous administration did leave. The Atlantic Development Board was set up just before Mr. Diefenbaker's Government was kicked out, and the export coal subsidy for Alberta and British Columbia was raised from $1 to $4.50 per ton, and increased subsidies were paid to the producers of coal in Nova Scotia, which allowed large amounts of coal to be shipped to the central provinces. With respect to low-cost housing, which undoubtedly affects many Canadians, a loan program of $150 million was brought in, and there were interest-free cash advances paid to farmers for farm-stored grain to the tune of $200 million.

Then I am sure all honourable senators are aware of the things that were done with regard to social services. I refer, of course, to the old age pension, pensions for the blind and disabled, old age assistance, and so on. Veterans' pensions and allowances were also increased. Some $425 million worth of grain was sold to China, and I am glad to see that the present administration is endeavouring to increase these sales.

The Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act was passed, and already over 400 schools have been built at a cost to the treasury of some $300 million. May I say, honourable senators, that one of the greatest and smartest things any government could have done in this age when we are moving from manual labour to automation was that which was done along the lines of building technical training schools. They are going to be a blessing to Canada in years ahead.

Municipalities all across Canada were assisted in many ways, and small business loans of up to $25,000 were made available. Unemployment insurance was granted to married women, and seasonal benefits were increased from 16 to 24 weeks, and later up to 52 weeks.

I want to get these things on the record, so that it will be understood that they have been mentioned in the Senate chamber.

Corporation taxes were reduced from 47 per cent to 20 per cent on amounts between $20,000 and $25,000. The excise tax on automobiles was cut by 25 per cent and later abolished altogether.

A National Crop Insurance Act was passed for the first time, and a Farm Credit Act which since 1959 has enabled some $300 million to be loaned to farmers.

Loans for home improvement were increased from $200 million to $500 million and long-term, low-interest loans were made available for the first time to universities for new student residences, the Government paying up to 90 per cent of the cost.

Exports insurance was increased from $100 million to $300 million, and income taxes were cut.

Federal mortgage lending was increased to $400 million from $250 million. Hospital grants were raised from $1,000 to $2,000 per bed.

Price supports on some 17 farming products were paid from a $250 million fund, which ensured fairer returns to our farmers.

I trust, honourable senators, you are not becoming wearied or bored by these citations. As I said, I believe that in the interest of all concerned it is wise to enumerate at least some of the benefits which were brought about by the Diefenbaker Government.

To continue, I note that available money for highway construction was increased from $100 million to $400 million.

It is noted also that banks were authorized to make loans up to $200 million to assist exporters of Canadian manufactured goods. The maximum amount of farm improvement loans was raised to $300 million.

In connection with our industries, I do not know if anyone here noticed in yesterday's Gazette the report on business profits. It is enlightening to note the increase in corporate profits which was made over the last year and a half.

The Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act was passed and Atlantic Provinces Adjustments Grants were paid out by the Diefenbaker Government for the first time at a rate of $25 million a year, and I understand it was afterwards raised to some $35 million.

The Provinces' share of personal income tax was increased by 3 per cent. For the first time there was a "Roads to Resources" program, at a cost of $150 million.

Everyone will remember the winter works program which provided employment for many thousands of our people.

Acreage payments were paid to western farmers to the tune of $40 million.

The Diefenbaker Government set up a National Hospital Insurance Plan, under which all ten provinces are participating to the extent of $1 billion already contributed by the federal Government.

Direct Government housing loans were increased from $400 million to $750 million and later to $1 billion.

For the children of our war dead, education allowances were increased from $25 a month to $60 a month.

These and many other things were done by the Diefenbaker Government and, apparently, they constitute the "mess" so called, left over from five years of "indecision and delay". Oh, how those words must hurt in some areas.

Furthermore, I should like to add that farm cash income, which in 1957 was just over $1¾ billion, was nearly $2¼ billion in 1962.

Everyone has been reminded that our gross national product went from $32 billion in 1957 to over $40 billion in 1962.

Our exports rose from $4 billion in 1957 to $5¼ billion in 1962.

Labour income rose from $12 billion in 1957 to practically $15 billion in 1962.

Take the matter of payments to our provinces. In 1957 the total amount paid to the various provinces was $689 million. This went up by 124 per cent, from $625 million up to $1½ billion. I may say that our little province of Newfoundland benefited greatly by this, but I fear that little appreciation has been shown there. These federal grants made it possible for the Liberal administration in Newfoundland to confer many benefits on our people there.

Honourable senators, I am sure that if you would just consider the many things which were accomplished during the past five years in the interests of our people as a whole, not one of you could agree with the statement in the advertisement which I showed you regarding the "cleaning up" of the so-called "mess" left over from the "five years of indecision".

Again, it appears that the former Diefenbaker Government steered Canada's economic policies to what I believe to be good results. For instance, for the year 1962 new car sales rose by 15 per cent, housing outlays of $1½ billion went up at least 8 per cent; 1962 housing starts were up by over 3 per cent, while housing completions in that year were up by 9.5 per cent. You will notice that everything was going up.

On a year-to-year basis, total employment increased by 168,000 persons, or nearly 3 per cent. I am quite sure we all understand that we still have a large amount of unemployment all across Canada, and particularly in Newfoundland. I made a note today from a booklet which was issued by the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council—APEC. It states that in 1961 in Newfoundland 20.5 per cent of the labour force was unemployed.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): What month was that?

Hon. Mr. Hollett: I am not sure of the month. I think that was the average for the year.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): It would not be that high.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: It is pretty high.

Hon. Mr. Drouin: It was a bad month.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Well, they are all bad months, at certain times or over certain periods.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Those are the official statistics. That was the time when fishermen were unemployed.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: It includes a large number of fishermen, I think about 18,500. When they stop fishing in October they are unemployed and get unemployment insurance. That would add up, of course, to a considerable amount.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): That was always the situation.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: We always had that, but it was never called unemployment before, and they did not get any unemployment insurance. Of course that goes with the fisheries, particularly in the coastal fisheries in Newfoundland.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: It goes with unemployment insurance.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: It takes a lot of unemployment insurance to look after it.

Honourable senators, to get back to what I was saying, I may point out that personal income in 1962 was up by 8 per cent. I am quoting these extracts to show that the Government over the past five years certainly did not do anything to hold up business or to cripple our economy.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): You are not quoting the 20 per cent unemployed, for that purpose?

Hon. Mr. Hollett: The present Government proposes to set up a Department of Industry to take care of all that. I am quite sure the honourable Leader of the Opposition will raise that point.

Again, I understand that this Department of Industry will go to Newfoundland to start a few new industries. I have already said you should go to the Premier of Newfoundland and he will tell you how to do it. He set up 17 new industries with the aid of the $50 million we had at confederation. I think about three of those 17 industries are functioning properly at the present time. There is one which I mentioned before, costing $2½ million, which was opened by the late Right Honourable C. D. Howe and which was to have manufactured heavy machinery. Although it was intended to manufacture heavy machinery, according to the economic planning of a provincial Government, it ended up by becoming a sort of garage for a certain company which builds a lot of our roads down there.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: May I ask the honourable senator if this achievement, under which the majority of the 17 firms went out of business, was not a function of a Liberal department of industry?

Hon. Mr. Hollett: I do not know where the Premier of Newfoundland got his ideas. He probably got them from some of the planners in the Liberal party. We have seen the work of some of those planners in the past few days.

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): Apparently he is still pretty well thought of down there.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: May I ask the honourable Senator Hollett if the Productivity Council visited Newfoundland to inquire into these conditions?

Hon. Mr. Hollett: I do not think the Productivity Council was ever much heard of in Newfoundland.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I think you will get along just as well without so many references to the Premier of Newfoundland, who I know is highly regarded in Newfoundland and generally throughout Canada.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: I am talking about these industries.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I am talking about the Premier of Newfoundland.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: I have high regard for everybody on the opposite side, but we are not industrial experts on either this or the other side.

Hon. Mr. Pratt: Could the honourable senator not deal with some ventures in Newfoundland that have been successful and prosperous, instead of dealing exclusively with those which he says are failures? Why not look at the situation generally?

Hon. Mr. Hollett: I suggest to Senator Pratt that he tell us about those things, if he so desires, at the right time. At the moment, my memory does not recall many things that went right when the Liberal administration took over in Newfoundland.

Hon. Mr. Pratt: Surely, you have heard about the developments in Labrador and elsewhere in the province.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Every time I think of Labrador I am inclined to get mad. Several millionaires have been produced by Labrador, not on account of its richness in ore and its mines but by—well, you know what the stocks and shares business is like.

Hon. Mr. Drouin: Some of them are politicians.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I should like to ask one question. Is there not something good to be said of Newfoundland and its premier?

Hon. Mr. Drouin: The climate.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: There must be something good about Newfoundland, because people from right across Canada were very happy when they took us into Confederation. There is a lot of good in Newfoundland.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: And Newfoundlanders are good people. Today the province has a population of a little less than 500,000. The roots of its people are in England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales. About 99 per cent of them came from those countries. If you want to know how the province stands by denominations: one-third are Roman Catholics, one-third Anglicans, and the remainder a mixture of—

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Protestants.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: I did not say Protestants. I was about to say United Church and Salvation Army. So, you see, we must be good in Newfoundland. We hated to have the Liberal government come into our province and do these terrible things to us.

I was speaking about personal income for 1962 being up by 8 per cent. The gross national product was up almost 14 per cent, and every quarter of 1962 showed an increase over the preceding quarter. Last year manufacturing production rose by at least 8 per cent, and durable goods production by 11 per cent. We must have had a good government. Gains were recorded in rubber products, paper products, petroleum products and chemicals, as well as in textiles.

With regard to textiles, may I quote from the June issue of Industry, a pamphlet published by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, entitled "Success Story":

> The plaudits which Canada's textile industry is winning these days on its remarkable recovery from the sickness which laid it low only a few years ago are nothing if not deserved. Less than a decade ago, the industry lay deep in the doldrums and appeared headed for early extinction. Saddled with high costs, outdated equipment, and sharply declining profits, it was in no shape to combat rising import competition at home much less abroad.

The article continues:

> How different is the picture today! Production last year reached its highest level in seven years, and along with profits, is continuing to rise as Canadian mills regain lost ground in the home market and develop new markets abroad.

For the record, let it also be known that electric power and gas last year grew by 6 per cent, while mining output increased by 8 per cent. Corporation profits were up 11 per cent over the average in 1961, and labour income was almost 12 per cent over the year 1961. Investment in new machinery and equipment has increased steadily and in 1962 was 9 per cent over 1961.

The honourable leader (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford) does not appear to be interested any more. Apparently I am citing too many of the good things.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I am very interested.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: I repeat that investment in new machinery and equipment has increased steadily, and in 1962 was 9 per cent over 1961. That is over the annual average. Personal income for 1962 was up 8 per cent, in line with increases in our gross national product. Undistributed corporation profits rose by nearly 26 per cent, while personal disposal income, after taxes, was 8 per cent higher and total savings rose 21 per cent to nearly $7 billion.

Let me again quote from the June issue of the pamphlet Industry, from an article entitled, "Largest by Far".

> Wages and salaries paid in Canada last year hit an all-time high of $19,492 million or nearly $20 million, an increase of $1,248 million over the 1961 total, or an increase of 6.8 per cent. Manufacturing made by far the largest single contribution to this massive total—its payrolls added up to a whopping $5,808 million (29.8 per cent), a gain of $404 million or 7.5 per cent of the 1961 figure.

Honourable senators, I wish to put these facts on record in this chamber. They are indeed facts, not fiction, for they are figures taken from the Bureau of Statistics. If the facts I have given constitute the so-called "mess" which the present administration is about to clean up, then I would suggest that it is the nicest "mess" that any Liberal government has ever inherited. There is no question about that.

There were several other promises in this advertisement. Mr. Pearson was to go to London. Just imagine; everything was outlined. I believe this advertisement continued for two weeks in both Newfoundland newspapers. Imagine the amount of money wasted on that. I am quite sure that the honourable Senator Pratt will recognize that.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Why do you say "wasted"?

Hon. Mr. Drouin: Because he has the votes anyway.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Perhaps I should not say "wasted", but I really think it was—

An Hon. Senator: Misapplied.

Hon. Mr. Pratt: Should you not put on the record, for comparison, information of this kind which appeared in the newspapers and was paid for by the party you represented in Newfoundland?

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Our party did not have the money to spend. You see, the Liberal party is supported by big business all across Canada. If you will examine the record you will find that practically every Liberal elected spent from $15,000 to $20,000 to be elected. If anyone can deny it, let him do so. The Progressive Conservatives did not have that kind of money. For some reason or other big business did not like the P.C.'s.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Who did?

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Of course the Liberals had Mr. Gordon. At any rate, that newspaper states that Mr. Pearson promised he would make a visit to London and also go to see Mr. Kennedy. I am glad that the Prime Minister was able to bring about these visits.

I believe it was Senator Hayden who said yesterday in this house something about how the side of the house on which one sits affects one's thinking. It is rather amusing how quickly and, indeed, conveniently, our friends on the opposite side of this house can change their opinions and their policies. On October 4 last the present honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford) who was then Leader of the Opposition—and I am sure he remembers this—severely criticized Mr. Diefenbaker for presuming to represent Canada at the Commonwealth Conference before calling Parliament together. I am sure we all remember that, and particularly the honourable leader. Now, however, I believe we may assume that the honourable leader gave his blessing to Mr. Pearson's visits to London and the United States before Parliament was called.

Honourable senators will recall that there were promises of 10,000 scholarships of $1,000 a year appearing in this advertisement I have referred to, and I believe that was referred to in the budget as well. These scholarships in themselves are a long way from measuring up to the results of the legislation brought in by the former government relative to universities and university grants. I am sure honourable senators opposite will readily agree with me on that.

There are two items in this advertisement and both are referred to in the Speech from the Throne. One was the statement that Mr. Pearson will establish the 12-mile fishing limit to protect Canadian fishermen against the draggers and trawlers of other countries. I sincerely hope that this can be brought about and I do hope that the 12-mile limit will extend from a base line which connects the various points of land, for until it does it would not benefit Newfoundland, because certain of our bays in which there are good fishing grounds are much wider than 24 miles, and unless the base line is taken from headland to headland or cape to cape, as the case may be, there will be nothing to prevent foreign trawlers from fishing long distances into these bays.

On this matter of fisheries, I refer again to this advertisement. The Speech from the Throne says that Mr. Pearson will launch an all-Canadian fishery development program to do for Canadian fisheries what is already being done for the farming industry. That, of course you will agree, is a pretty tall order. But that is what was promised in the advertisement. However, in the Speech from the Throne it says that the Government is initiating "consultation with the provinces to work out a program for national fishery development." I hope that the Government will get on to that quickly.

At one time fishing in Newfoundland was the mainstay of our economy and the source of employment for practically all our people. It was only after a few mining areas had been developed and two paper mills established, some 50 to 60 years ago, that new avenues of employment were opened up. These mines and woods works took many of our people from the fisheries and, indeed, improved their standard of living and their livelihood but, unfortunately, ever after that the tendency was for the fishermen to look for other and more remunerative occupations.

Unfortunately, in Newfoundland we now have a sore spot on Bell Island, the location of an iron ore mine that has contributed much to the welfare of thousands of our people over the last 50 years, and lately the work force there has been reduced from about 2,000 to 500 or 600 people. We have a problem there which I sincerely hope and pray the federal Government will take a hand in solving, and come in and assist the provincial Government to help out these unfortunate people who have been living there for years and years. I may point out that it is not easy for these families to move away from that area.

With Confederation, of course, there came other avenues of employment with the result that today there are probably no more than 20,000 or 25,000 fishermen in Newfoundland; therefore the fisheries would probably affect about one-quarter of our population. Unless an intelligent approach—and I am sure Senator Pratt will agree with me in this—is made to the problem of our fishermen, especially in Newfoundland, it will not be long before we shall have no fishermen left. May I point out that fishermen in Newfoundland are so far removed from the markets which absorb their catches, and so far removed from the profits which result from the processing of their catch, that they can barely make sufficient from their season's fishing to support their families. A few days ago I went in a grocery store here in Ottawa and saw packaged salted fish for sale. I had to pay 59 cents a pound for it. Honourable senators from Nova Scotia will know what fishermen get for their catch—it does not approach 59 cents a pound by a good many cents. By the way, the fish I bought came from Nova Scotia.

In Newfoundland fresh codfish which is caught inshore and, indeed, which is caught by the trawlers and draggers on the Grand Banks of Newfoundland, net the fishermen not more than two and a half cents per pound, as a rule. Occasionally the price goes up to three cents a pound. I believe fishermen in Nova Scotia and Cape Breton receive at least two cents per pound more for similar catches. That is quite a difference.

Therefore, in addition to assistance provided, there must also be found some way to assist with regard to fishing gear and improved fishing boats, so necessary today; regard must also be had to ensure that fishermen get greater returns for their catches. To do this they must either participate in the profits resulting from the processing and marketing of their catch or they will have to be subsidized some day—and I think all will agree that subsidization is not always the best way. But that is what is being done to a large extent with regard to farmers.

An extensive study will have to be given to the problems of our fisheries, and given quickly; a solution will have to be found, otherwise—and I hate to say this—it will not be long before our fishermen will leave their boats as did the fishermen on the Sea of Galilee. I do want so very much, as does every senator, to see an all-out effort made to assist our fishermen to the extent that they may be enabled to continue in this ancient and honourable occupation.

I am pleased to see that the Speech from the Throne contains an item stating that Parliament will be asked to provide additional assistance for the completion of the Trans-Canada Highway. We have in Newfoundland some 300 to 350 miles of Trans-Canada Highway still unpaved. One of the big slogans of the Liberal party campaign in my province during the last general election was that Mr. Pearson promised that the Government would pay 90 per cent of the cost of completion of our highway. Honourable senators, we are going to hold him to that, otherwise things will be different the next time around. We want our highroads paved. Our travel communications in the old days were by boat, motor driven or sailing vessels, and it is only within the last few years that we have been getting some roads. I must give credit to the present Government of Newfoundland for expending a good many dollars on local roads. This has allowed our people to get back and forth from one part of the province to the other much more easily than they did.

The Speech from the Throne did not say so definitely, but I do hope that additional assistance will be given to Newfoundland, for I can assure honourable senators that in our present financial condition we can ill afford to pave highways.

I believe I have already said in this chamber that when Newfoundland came into Confederation 15 years ago we had some $50 million in the Bank of Montreal and our national debt was practically nil—except for about $3.5 million, Canada took it all over. Today that $50 million is gone into new industries which are not producing very well, and our national debt is approximately $100 million. I notice by the budget brought down in the House of Assembly in Newfoundland some time ago that a further loan of some $13.5 million will have to be raised this year to balance the province's books. So we cannot afford to spend much money on road building.

Honourable senators, I cannot forget the scathing attack on the Diefenbaker Government made by the present Leader of the Government in this house on October 4, 1962 with regard to many of its policies, at which time he stated that loss of confidence in the Government was general. Senator Macdonald gave three reasons for this so-called loss of confidence. They were, first, that Parliament was not called to meet as he wished it, on July 19; second, that the estimates were not brought down—and I may remind honourable senators that the estimates of the last Parliament have been accepted in toto by the present administration—third, the neglect in not bringing in the budget.

The then Leader of the Opposition in this house and now the Leader of the Government did not tell us that this so-called loss of confidence resulted from the preaching of his party and of business, big and small, about the dire consequences that would result from the devaluation of the dollar—it was preached by our opponents all across Canada, and you know who I mean—unless we got rid of the P.C. Government.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I do not remember referring to that at all.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: I will say, however, that I do not think all the thinking men of the Liberal party believed what their political preachers were broadcasting to our people about this devaluation. In fact, if you will turn to page 174 of the Debates of the Senate for 1962 you will find the remarks of the honourable Senator Hayden, where he said in part:

> Do not delude yourselves that devaluation is a cure-all; we needed it and we took the necessary steps.

That is what the honourable Senator Hayden said last October. I say that the Diefenbaker Government took the necessary steps and, as a result, our general economy has improved.

I wish to quote once again from the pamphlet which I mentioned earlier, that of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, and I take it that this organization would speak with authority relative to the devaluation of the dollar. In the June issue of Industry that association said:

> The relative improvement in the competitiveness of Canadian manufactured exports vis-à-vis those of the industrial nations of western Europe in the past year or so owes much to the revaluation of the Canadian dollar and the comparative stability of our prices.

So the devaluation of the dollar was not such a fatal step after all, and I believe no one can deny that.

Honourable senators, I trust you will forgive me for taking up so much time in my recital of these things that were accomplished by the Diefenbaker Government. I felt it was my bounden duty to remind honourable senators that, instead of the present Government having inherited a "mess", it has inherited a country which has prospered immensely during the past five years; and if it was the result of "indecision and delay", I sincerely hope the present administration will not be lacking in such characteristics.

On motion of Honourable Mrs. Fergusson, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, July 16, at 8 p.m.

BILINGUALISM AND BICULTURALISM

REPLIES BY PROVINCIAL PREMIERS RESPECTING PROPOSED ROYAL COMMISSION

PROVINCE OF MANITOBA
Office of the Premier
Winnipeg

May 16th, 1963.

Dear Prime Minister Pearson:

In the Premier's absence I wish to acknowledge your letter of May 15 respecting a proposed inquiry by a Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Bilculturalism.

Your letter will be drawn to the attention of the premier immediately upon his return to the office at the end of next week. In the meantime, I have taken the liberty of forwarding a copy of your letter to the acting premier, the Honourable Gurney Evans, Minister of Industry and Commerce.

Yours respectfully,
Joan Cameron
Secretary to the premier

The Rt. Hon. Lester B. Pearson,
Prime Minister of Canada,
Ottawa 4, Ontario.

THE GOVERNMENT OF THE PROVINCE OF NEWFOUNDLAND
The Premier
St. John's

20 May, 1963.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson, P.C. M.P.,
Prime Minister of Canada,
Ottawa.

My dear Prime Minister:

I thank you for your letter of May 15, enclosing draft terms of reference of the proposed Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism and asking whether the Government of Newfoundland would approve appointment of a royal commission.

In the 14 years that Newfoundland has been united with Canada our people have come to appreciate the basic importance to the unity of our country, of good relations between the two founding races of Canada. We share a long land border with the province of Quebec and in Labrador are coming into immediate contact with the problems associated with the bilingual and bicultural character of Canada.

The Government of Newfoundland is ready and eager to make a constructive contribution to the solution of these problems; we cordially approve the proposal of a royal commission; we are quite happy with the draft of the terms of reference; and we are ready to cooperate fully in the work of the commission.

Sincerely yours,
J. R. Smallwood

PREMIER'S OFFICE
Regina, Saskatchewan

May 21st, 1963.

The Rt. Hon. L. B. Pearson, P.C.,
Prime Minister of Canada,
Ottawa, Ontario.

My dear Prime Minister:

This will acknowledge your letter dated May 15, 1963, regarding a possible Royal Commission inquiry on Bilingualism and Biculturalism.

As soon as my colleagues and I have had an opportunity to study and discuss the proposed terms of reference I shall write to you again with our detailed comments.

Yours sincerely,
W. S. Lloyd.

PRIME MINISTER AND PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL
Toronto, Ontario

May 24, 1963.

My dear Prime Minister:

I acknowledge the receipt of your letter of May 15 in which you invite our views on the establishment of a royal commission to inquire into and report upon the existing state of bilingualism and biculturalism in Canada and to recommend what steps should be taken to develop the Canadian Confederation on the basis of an equal partnership between the two founding races, taking into account the contribution made by other ethnic groups to the cultural enrichment of Canada.

As a province whose own history and development, from the days of Champlain, Frontenac and LaSalle, has been profoundly influenced and enriched by the sons and daughters of French Canada, along with leaders and peoples of other lineage of bygone days, Ontario has the largest French speaking community outside Quebec. It is natural and logical, therefore, that we should react positively to this all Canadian outlook, and we do so with a good heart.

Please accept, therefore, my assurance on behalf of the Government and people of Ontario that this course has our very warm approval, and as the terms of reference, as laid down, have been announced in the press, you will be proceeding on such basis. If the Canadian Confederation is to survive and flourish, our partnership must be a true one —in fact, in spirit, and in purpose—and may I say to you that when the proposed commission is finally established, we shall leave nothing undone to facilitate its work in our province.

I am fully persuaded that if we approach these unsolved problems with patience, understanding and good will, if we learn the necessary lessons from our failures and draw upon the wisdom gained from almost a century of experience, we can in the next four years do much to strengthen and ensure the concept of the Canadian confederation so that Canada's centennial will be an occasion of rejoicing and of fulfilment.

With kind personal regards and best wishes,

Sincerely yours,

John P. Robarts

Right Honourable Lester B. Pearson,
Prime Minister of Canada,
House of Commons,

THE PREMIER
Nova Scotia
Halifax

May 24, 1963.

Dear Mr. Prime Minister:

I wish to acknowledge your letter of May 15 with enclosure regarding the proposed Royal Commission concerning Bilingualism and Biculturalism.

I have now had an opportunity to confer with my colleagues concerning your inquiry.

It is, of course, not possible for the government of Nova Scotia to determine whether or not a royal commission is the best approach to this problem across the nation. That, of course, would be a decision for your Government to take. I can assure you, however, that if your Government decides to appoint such a commission the province of Nova Scotia will offer such a commission every co-operation.

Yours sincerely,

R. L. Stanfield

The Honourable Lester B. Pearson
Prime Minister of Canada

The Government of the Province of New Brunswick

THE PREMIER
Fredericton,

May 24th, 1963.

Dear Mr. Prime Minister:—

I have carefully reviewed the terms of reference of the proposed Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism in Canada and find them very comprehensive and quite adequate. Consequently, the government of New Brunswick endorses the proposal and offers our utmost co-operation.

Yours sincerely,

Louis J. Robichaud

The Right Honourable L. B. Pearson,
Prime Minister of Canada,
Ottawa, Ontario.

OFFICE OF THE PRIME MINISTER
Province of Quebec

Quebec, May 27, 1963.

Honourable Lester B. Pearson,
Prime Minister of Canada,
Parliament Buildings,
Ottawa.

Mr. Prime Minister,

I have your letter of May 15 concerning the holding of an inquiry on biculturalism and bilingualism.

I have submitted your letter to my colleague, together with the terms of reference of the royal commission that would conduct the enquiry.

I am pleased to inform you that the Government of Quebec favours the holding of such an inquiry, in consultation with the provincial governments, as you suggest.

In that respect, we trust that this commission will be made up in accordance with the principle set out in the preamble to the terms of reference, i.e. "an equal partnership between the two founding races of the Canadian confederation, taking into account the other ethnic groups".

Yours sincerely,

Jean Lesage

OFFICE OF THE PREMIER
Edmonton

May 28th, 1963.

Right Honourable L. B. Pearson,
Prime Minister of Canada,
Ottawa, Ontario.

My dear Prime Minister:

My colleagues and I have given careful consideration to your letter of May 15 and to the terms of reference for the proposed Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism.

In response to your request, we wish to advise that, while we are not opposed to such a study being undertaken, unless the terms of reference are clarified to make more explicit the objectives which it is hoped to achieve we have serious doubts as to its advisability and practical value.

To amplify, in the matter of biculturalism, if the objective is to encourage citizens of all racial and ethnic origins to make their maximum contribution to the development of one over-all Canadian culture embracing the best of all, we feel this would meet with widespread endorsation and support.

If, on the other hand, the objective is to give some form of official recognition to a dual English and French culture, we suggest that this is unrealistic and impracticable and we doubt that it would meet with any widespread public acceptance.

In the matter of bilingualism, if the objective is to encourage Canadian citizens to become fluent in two or more languages, certainly on the part of most Canadians this would be welcomed.

If the purpose is to extend recognition of French as an official language in areas and spheres beyond those in which it was guaranteed official status at the time of Confederation, we feel that it would not meet with general public acceptance and the consequences, in our opinion, would impair rather than strengthen Canadian unity.

We offer these observations for your consideration in arriving at a final decision in the matter proposed in your communication.

Very sincerely yours,

E. C. Manning
Premier.

PREMIER'S OFFICE
Prince Edward Island

May 28, 1963.

Right Honourable L. B. Pearson
Prime Minister of Canada
Ottawa, Canada

My dear Prime Minister:

I have your letter of May 15, regarding an inquiry with the provinces of Canada on bilingualism and biculturalism.

I have not had an opportunity of discussing this matter with other members of my cabinet, so I am not in a position to fully advise of their views regarding the most suitable approach to this important question.

Recognizing, however, that the decision of your government favors the formation of a commission to conduct the studies indicated, I can assure you that this province will accept your proposal, on the understanding as expressed in your letter that any commitments or recommendations from this commission will not be binding on the government of our province.

Yours sincerely,

W. R. Shaw,
Premier.

Province of Manitoba
OFFICE OF THE PREMIER
Winnipeg

May 31, 1963.

My dear Prime Minister:

My colleagues and I have studied with care the proposal outlined in your letter of May 15 to inquire into biculturalism and bilingualism in Canada by means of a royal commission.

May I say at once that this question requires full and serious attention by our people and that you may therefore be assured of the full co-operation of the government of Manitoba in the proposed investigation. Indeed I believe that this province may have a unique contribution to make in the search for a wholehearted consensus on national unity and cultural development because of our experience in integrating the contributions of many cultures into Manitoba's basic French-English cultural background.

In expressing agreement with the aim of the proposed royal commission I feel bound, however, to raise the question of whether the problem Canada faces today can be dealt with within these limits. The basic issue appears to me to go beyond the purely cultural relationships of Canadians, and may indeed embrace the intergovernmental framework of the nation, including its fiscal aspect. It would seem that this view has already been placed before your government by some at least of my fellow premiers, including the prime minister of Quebec.

I would hope, therefore, that the appointment of the royal commission would not delay a more fundamental examination of the question. This examination, I suggest, may best be considered by direct federal-provincial discussions, possibly along the lines of the meeting envisaged by your predecessor in his letter of February 4 last to provincial premiers. Manitoba would indeed be happy to join in the search for co-operative federalism, a phrase which well reflects our own policy of full co-operation in the working of our confederation.

In regard to the third point in the suggested terms of reference, I would mention that Manitoba has already taken steps to improve and extend the teaching of French in our public schools. While the educational aspect of bilingualism is of first importance, I doubt that this can usefully be separated from its constitutional implications. It is for this reason that I suggest that, as a matter of procedure, while the royal commission may seek information from the provinces and make recommendations thereon, the consideration of this subject should be a matter for intergovernmental discussion rather than of discussion between the royal commission and provincial governments.

I am taking the liberty of making this letter public as of Monday, the 3rd of June.

Yours sincerely,

Duff Roblin.

The Right Honourable L. B. Pearson,
Prime Minister of Canada,
Ottawa, Canada.

Dear Sir:

In the absence of the premier, I wish to acknowledge receipt of your letter of May 15, and enclosure, re commission of inquiry on bilingualism and biculturalism.

Yours faithfully,
(Mrs.) K. R. Mylrea
Secretary to the premier.

PREMIER'S OFFICE

The Rt. Hon. Lester B. Pearson,
Office of the Prime Minister,
Ottawa, Ontario.

My dear Prime Minister:

With further reference to your letter dated May 15, 1963 regarding a possible Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism, I now wish to advise that the province of Saskatchewan will be pleased to take advantage of any opportunities to discuss with the commission problems related to biculturalism.

In the meantime my colleagues and I are discussing ways in which we can best make a contribution to the commission's inquiry and how best to undertake appropriate provincial studies.

Yours sincerely,
W. S. Lloyd.

PRIVATE BILL

CANADA PERMANENT TORONTO GENERAL TRUST COMPANY—COMMONS AMENDMENT CONCURRED IN

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons returning Bill S-14, an Act respecting Canada Permanent Toronto General Trust Company, and acquainting the Senate that they have passed this bill with the following amendment to which they desire the concurrence of the Senate:

> Page 1, line 11: Delete the words "La Canada Permanent, Compagnie de Fiducie" and substitute the words "La Compagnie de Fiducie, Canada Permanent".

Hon. Lionel Choquette moved, with leave, that the amendment be concurred in now.

He said: Honourable senators, may I give a brief explanation regarding the amendment that was made in the other place.

The amendment does not delete or add any words: it merely changes their order so that the last ones in the original translation we submitted become the first. The translation that the company submitted was, "La Canada Permanent, Compagnie de Fiducie". In the other place they changed the order to read, "La Compagnie de Fiducie, Canada Permanent". That is the only amendment that was made.

Hon. Mr. Croll: But why?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: The question raised here, as well as in the other place, was that "La Canada Permanent" is not French but is English, and because the article "La" is feminine there is some confusion. If the adjective "Permanent" is used and the noun is feminine, an "e" must be added to it. So the English name remains, "Canada Permanent". The amendment reads "La Compagnie de Fiducie, Canada Permanent". "Canada Permanent" can be given the English pronunciation, if desired. That is the explanation.

Amendment concurred in.

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-80, to amend the Atlantic Development Board Act.

Bill read first time.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald moved, with leave, that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

SPECIAL APPROPRIATION BILL 1963

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-86, for approving certain expenditures authorized for the public service, and the application of certain amounts in the accounts for the financial year ended the 31st March, 1963.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford) moved, with leave, that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot presented Bill S-32, to amend the Marriage and Divorce Act.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

THE SENATE

ACOUSTICS IN PUBLIC GALLERIES

On the Notices of Inquiries:

Hon. J. Campbell Haig: Honourable senators, may I inquire of the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford) as to whether he or any officers of the Senate have received any complaints about the acoustics in the public galleries of this chamber. If so, what action has been taken? If no complaints have been received, may I ask the honourable Leader of the Government to make inquiries with the object of seeing to it that visitors to our public galleries enjoy better hearing.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I assure the honourable senator that I have received no complaints. If there is any hearing difficulty in the public galleries, I have not heard of it, but as the honourable senator has asked the question, I will bring it to the attention of the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts. He is a man of action and I know that something will be done about it.

PUBLIC BILLS

SUSPENSION OF RULES

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald moved:

> That, for the balance of the present session, Rules 23, 24 and 63 be suspended in so far as they relate to public bills.

He said: Honourable senators, may I say that those rules relate to the necessity of having two days' notice for second reading, one day's notice for third reading, and so forth. This motion has been made regularly over the years towards the end of each session.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Are we coming to the end of the session?

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Honourable senators, I have pleasure in seconding this motion. I notice, however, that it reads "for the balance of the present session". Does the honourable Leader of the Government mean for the balance of the session before the recess but not after the recess? It is my understanding that we will be back in the fall.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I had hoped that the honourable Leader of the Opposition would not have read my motion so carefully. I do agree with his suggestion. It is not intended that this motion be in effect when Parliament resumes in September and, accordingly, I am glad to rephrase the motion to read:

> That, until the summer recess, Rules 23, 24 and 63 be suspended in so far as they relate to public bills.

After the summer recess those rules will be in effect again.

Motion agreed to.

COLUMBIA RIVER TREATY

REPLY TO QUESTION RESPECTING INCOME TAX

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, on July 10, when I tabled a copy of the agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of British Columbia, respecting the Columbia River Basin, honourable Senator Isnor asked me a question as follows:

> Can the Leader of the Government tell us whether the province of British Columbia will pay income tax on this development?

The answer is that the provinces are not subject to federal income tax.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Then I take it that there is a difference between private enterprise and public enterprise?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): The honourable senator will have to draw his own conclusions in respect to that matter.

The Senate resumed from Thursday, July 11, the adjourned debate on the motion of Honourable Mr. Macdonald (Brantford) for the second reading of Bill C-74, respecting the Department of Industry.

Hon. M. Wallace McCutcheon: Honourable senators, I shall not delay you too long this evening. In the light of what my colleagues have said, much of what I may say now will merely be an underlining of that which has been said already. Yet I think it is important that that underlining should take place.

If ever the Senate received a bill which requires that "sober second look", about which the Leader of the present Government spoke a year ago when he was sitting on the Opposition side—and particularly when it comes from a minority Government—this is such a bill.

As I see this bill, it is the result of an impulsive election promise; it is a façade behind which the Government seeks to hide. The Government has said that the great problem of this country is unemployment. With that I do not disagree. During the election campaign the present Government promised: "We will cure that problem. You may ask how we will cure it—we will have a Department of Industry; we will have this and we will have that." This is the first occasion on which the results of one of those impulsive promises has come to this house.

Honourable senators, in my view if the bill has a principle, then it should not receive second reading. If it has no principle, then of course there is no harm in its going to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce where we shall learn more about it.

It seems to me that the bill is redundant. There is nothing it seeks to do which cannot be performed within the ambit of the present administrative machinery. It is an attempt on the part of the Government to convince the people of Canada that the Government now is taking bold steps to combat unemployment.

I think this bill will help to solve the unemployment problem. It will not do anything to solve that hard core of unemployment which my friends must know exists and which is one of the results of technological development, but it will put more people on the Government payroll. It will help in that respect.

As the present Minister of Finance has said, unemployment is the most serious domestic problem facing Canada today. We do not disagree with that statement. What we object to are those ill-thought-through measures which are produced in high-sounding terms to try to convince the Canadian people that this problem really is being attacked.

The Minister of Finance—and with deference to my friend the Leader of the Opposition, I will not read from the records of the other house, but I have the press release, if necessary—

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): The leader of whom?

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Of the Government. I knew I would make that slip sooner or later. The Minister of Finance detailed the measures that were going to be produced to resolve this problem, and presently in this house we shall have before us the tattered remnants of the budget.

The other evening, Senator Crerar expressed his doubts about this bill. In my opinion, the doubts of Senator Crerar are entitled to more weight—with no reflection on honourable senators—than are the affirmations of many honorable senators. I have no doubt that it was because of the doubts expressed by Senator Crerar that Senator Hayden decided to participate in this debate. Senator Hayden debated the principles of the bill. I am a great admirer of Senator Hayden. He is an eminent counsel. I would like to have his ability to stand up and to confuse an issue and yet leave the idea that it was clear. Unfortunately, I have not that ability. However, I should like to refer to Senator Hayden's speech because, after all, either this bill has a principle or it has not. If it has a principle, we are approving it in principle, but if it has no principle, then the approval means nothing, and the bill will go to committee.

Senator Hayden said, as reported at page 229 of Senate Hansard of July 10 last:

> The principle of the bill, as I see it, resolves itself into the question: Are the objectives as stated in the bill objectives which would be beneficial to Canada, and the carrying out of which would be in the best interests of Canada?

Well, the objectives are not set out in the bill. I think Senator Hayden was quoting from a speech made by a friend of his in the other place.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I was quoting nobody.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: All right, you were quoting nobody. You were reading a press release—

Hon. Mr. Drouin: Two great minds.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: —stating that this was going to help the great problem facing us. Then Senator Hayden went on to say:

> The next question to be considered, in my submission, is whether this bill to create a Department of Industry, and the Department of Industry itself, are needed in order to give full force and effect to these objectives in the best interests of Canada.

No one is going to quarrel with the first principle. One does not quarrel with righteousness; but occasionally one wonders whether the paving stones on which one walks are leading in the proper direction, and, in my opinion, the paving stones that mark the course of this bill do not lead in the proper direction.

Senator Hayden made some comments about the Department of Trade and Commerce, to which I shall return in a moment or two. Then he made this amazing statement:

> It is a sound principle that if a question develops of such importance that it requires undivided attention and concentration to see if it can be resolved, you are justified in doing or creating whatever is necessary in the hope of—

"In the hope of", he says.

> —getting the result which is desired for all the people in Canada.

And he concludes by saying:

> These are all problems worthy of and entitled to the undivided attention of a department of government—not a sharing with many matters in a department of government.

Now, Senator Hugessen said that he really did not know what the Department of Trade and Commerce does. He read from the act incorporating the Department of Trade and Commerce. I suppose that is one of the oldest acts in the Statutes. It is the only act which I know prescribes that a minister must be a member of the Queen's Privy Council. It was probably one of the earliest acts, and it is in very broad terms. I am not going to try to say what the Department of Trade and Commerce does. Honourable senators have the annual report of the Department of Trade and Commerce. However, according to the press, the Department of Industry is going to take a special interest in—according to the words of the bill—a knowledge of manufacturing industries in Canada.

According to press releases there are going to be two kinds of manufacturing industries, one in which the new minister will not take much interest, and another in which he will. By and large, from what one reads in the press the minister is going to take an interest in what I might call small secondary industry. The Leader of the Government does not believe that the newsprint industry is a manufacturing industry, and I do not believe the new minister is going to take an interest in it. Of course there will be a little confusion because a number of the largest newsprint manufacturing companies in Canada also manufacture fine paper which, even the Leader of the Government will admit, is a finished product. They also manufacture shipping containers and a wide variety of other articles. So they are going to be bifurcated down the middle, and they are going to have to walk into one of my friends on one day, and another on another day.

Senator Hugessen was wondering what the Department of Trade and Commerce did. Well, honourable senators, I will read some of the subjects that that department is responsible for:

Domestic Commerce Service

That seems to be what this bill is talking about.

(a) Industrial Promotion Branch

Import Analysis—studies made on request of industry. Fifty studies made each year.

Manufacturing Arrangements—in co-operation with provinces, seeking out licensing arrangements for manufacture in Canada on an economic basis.

Information Services—

Industrial Analysis—basic studies of selected industries or commodity groups to uncover manufacturing opportunities for Canadian industry. "Spotlight" studies (chemicals, oil drilling equipment furniture).

National Design Branch.

Another one of their projects is responsibility for the Small Business Branch; examining problems of small business and assisting in their solution. Another is responsibility for the Standards Branch.

I shall not burden honourable senators by going through the entire list. I have given merely a sketch of what the Department of Trade and Commerce does.

Senator Crerar asked, "Where are we going to get the staff? What is going to happen?" He expressed the kind of doubts which in my opinion are the equivalent of the affirmations of most of us.

Well, there is no mystery as to where we are going to get the staff.

Hon. Mr. Drouin: From Bay Street in Toronto.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: No, we are not going to go to that extent. It is set out in the Financial Times—I seem to have left the paper in my office—that we are going to bring over Mr. B. G. Barrow, Assistant Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce, who is in charge of these various functions I mentioned and some which I did not mention. Then his staff will be brought over. Mr. Dave Golden, for whom I have a high admiration, is going to be brought back. But his qualifications as a former Deputy Minister of Defence Production and recently as secretary of a trade association do not convince me that he has any special qualifications to set up this department that the present Deputy Minister of Defence Production or some official in the Department of Trade and Commerce has not got. I say that without any reflection on Mr. Golden.

So I ask honourable senators this question: Will Mr. Barrow and his employees do a better job under the direction of Mr. Drury than they would under the direction of Mr. Sharp? Is that the principle we are considering here tonight?

Now I turn to this matter of undivided attention. There is no more overworked man in government today than the Minister of Defence Production, who is also going to be the new Minister of Industry. I have before me the annual report of the Department of Defence Production for the year ended December 31, 1962, and I shall read from it some of the things for which the Minister of that department is responsible:

The department has:

(1) exclusive authority to procure the goods and services required by the Department of National Defence, and

(2) the responsibility to ensure that the necessary production capacity and materials are available to support the defence production programme.

The Department also has responsibility for defence development and production sharing with the United States, for defence production export activities with other Allied countries, and for armament co-operation within NATO. It co-operates with other Government departments to promote and strengthen the research capability of Canadian defence industry.

The Department utilizes the services of Canadian Commercial Corporation to assist it in obtaining foreign defence business for Canadian industry.

I might interject here that it is responsible for the so-called defence-sharing program with the United States, for which the department deserves a great deal of credit and which has been very important to this country in the matter of employment and in the matter of our balance of payments.

I am not going to read all that the department is responsible for, but let me say that there are five Crown companies which report to the minister. In addition, the minister—and I think there is no one more competent to assume the position—has recently been appointed Chairman of the Cabinet Committee on Scientific and Industrial Research.

Then, of course, there is the implementation of the Glassco Commission report which, if implemented—and I think it should be implemented—would make the minister the procurement agency for the Government of Canada. So we see that we are transferring a small segment of industrial activity to a new department, to a new minister, so that after having looked after all of these things that I have mentioned and some that I have not mentioned, he may give his undivided attention to this problem that Senator Hayden mentioned.

As I read Senator Hugessen's speech, he made his case on the basis that in a business organization you have two departments, a manufacturing department and a sales department. I do not know which department he thought was to be the sales department, whether it was to be the Department of Trade and Commerce or the Department of Industry, but that is what he said, in effect. That, may I say, is quite an improper analogy. It is true that in a business you do have a manufacturing department and a sales department, but you do not let the manufacturing department run wild if the sales department cannot sell the product, and you do not let the manufacturing department slacken down if the sales department has more and more sales. You have co-ordination, and you have one boss.

Now, where is the line to be drawn so that you can say this is Trade and Commerce and this is Industry? Frankly, I do not know, and I do not think my honourable friend who introduced the bill (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford) knows either. It is the sort of artificial division that will never work in a business, and if it is attempted in government or is put in government it can only add expense, duplication, frustration, and so on.

I am just thinking of some of my former associates who are engaged in trade, in commerce and in industry, and I am wondering who they are going to talk to when they come to Ottawa to discuss various matters. In other words, I just do not believe you can separate these things. If my friends had wanted to make political capital they could have said: Well, you know, the name of this Department of Trade and Commerce is old; it was adopted in 1867, and, after all, as we are nearing the centennial of Confederation, we had better change the name and bring it up to date, and we will call it the Department of Trade and Industry. We will carry on what the previous Government did, by developing a more intensive interest in the small business, in the secondary manufacturing industry. But they did not need to do what they have done.

Another thing that the new minister is going to have under his jurisdiction is an Area Development Agency. The bill is very vague as to what is a "designated area". We can assume that it is an area where there is surplus labour; we can assume that it is one where, for some reason or another, industrial development has not kept up with the population. As I say, the minister is going to have such an agency under his jurisdiction, and it will be under the direction of a commissioner and a deputy commissioner. Those officials are going to be paid salaries, are going to undertake research and make investigations respecting the means of increasing employment and income in designated areas, and are going to prepare and carry out such programs and projects as may be determined in those areas.

Let us see what we have. We have the Minister of Industry, presently the Minister of Defence Production, with an Area Development Agency. We have the Atlantic Development Board. That bill has just come before us this evening, and as I do not have a copy of it I cannot quote from it, but that board has similar powers and a fund of money. The Atlantic Development Board will report to the Secretary of State, and the Area Development Agency will report to the Minister of Industry.

Then we have the bill respecting the National Economic Council. I must be very careful at this point, but from what I read in the press I would say that a number of the powers of the National Economic Council duplicate those that the minister is going to have under section 7 of this bill. The National Economic Council is going to report to the President of the Privy Council.

As I see it, this just flies completely in the teeth of the recommendations of the Glassco Commission, and flies completely in the teeth of the ordinary person's sense of order and responsibility. The Minister of Finance, among the few resolutions he has left, has some concerning special incentives for designated areas. Again, I do not know what "designated areas" are. Is the Minister of Industry going to designate the areas? Is the Minister of Trade and Commerce going to designate the areas? Is the Minister of Finance going to designate the areas? We just get into hopeless confusion.

The suggestion was made by the Leader of the Government that, after all, our manufacturing industries were pretty poor, that we did not export much. According to his figures, the biggest export we had in 1960 was farm machinery. Other speakers rather reflected on the achievements of the department and said it had not accomplished very much.

I went to the trouble of obtaining a few figures on this subject, and I quote from the Canadian Statistical Review of May, 1963, published by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. In 1960—which I think was the year the Leader of the Government mentioned—our exports of farm implements—and I am proud of them—were some $67 million, give or take $1 million or so for minor mistakes in addition. In 1962 they were $85 million. The table from which I am quoting breaks the merchandise down into separate items. They are: Iron ore, ferro-alloys, primary iron and steel, farm machinery, other machinery, automobiles and parts, other iron and steel, and so on. So, "other iron and steel" are pretty well manufactured products. In the year my friend quoted, the exports of "other iron and steel" were $89.3 million, as against some $67 million. In 1962 they were $132.9 million.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): That is iron and steel, but not manufactured into any definite products.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: No, no—

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Yes, I am right.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Honourable senators, let me repeat what the categories are: Iron ore, ferro-alloys, primary iron and steel, farm machinery, other machinery, automobiles and parts, other iron and steel. I am not quoting the figures given under "primary iron and steel," but those under "other iron and steel". I am not going to make a point of this—

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): It is impossible to.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: —but, in fact, in both those periods we exported far more alcoholic beverages than we did farm machinery; and I am sure my friend will agree that that is a fully manufactured product.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I know nothing about that.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I am not referring to my short 10-week tenure as Minister of Trade and Commerce, but that department has accomplished some things in the last few years. There was a favourable balance of merchandise trade in 1954 of $13 million, and there was not another favourable balance until 1961. In 1956 there was an unfavourable balance of $728 million. Then in 1961 the favourable balance, the first one we had since 1954, was $173 million. The following year it was $155 million. I could go through the total balance of payments figures and draw almost the same conclusion.

Honourable senators, if there is a principle in this bill then it should not receive second reading. If there is any principle, the only one I can see is that of proliferation of Government departments and agencies. If the Leader of the Government agrees there is no principle, then I am happy to have the bill go to committee.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Would my friend permit a question? In speaking about the proliferation of branches of Government, my friend made reference earlier to the Atlantic Development Board. My friend is aware there is a statute by that name, quite apart from a bill which is before Parliament. Is he suggesting that when these industrial functions were being performed in the Department of Trade and Commerce, and you had superimposed on that the Atlantic Development Board and also the National Productivity Council, that there was not equally a proliferation, according to his thinking?

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: All I would say to my friend is that if we were wrong he should not be worse.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Well, of course, on that point I just could not be.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I wish to join the last speaker in the compliments which he paid to my friend from Spadina, whom he described as a very fine counsel.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: From Spadina? You always praise the Spadina senator.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Well, he is a good counsel too, but I am speaking of the honourable Senator Hayden. I also wish to refer to my friend's wish that he had as great a power to confuse as has the honourable senator to whom I referred. I think, however, he has been unduly modest in his statement, because as I listened to his rather lengthy address he certainly confused me as to whether he is in favour of this bill or opposed to it. He said it will put more people on the payroll, but I can see no particular attack in that. The Government of which he formed a part not long since put a great many people on the payroll. The question is not whether staff is increased, but rather whether those who are employed earn the money and perform a function in the public interest equivalent to the public obligation to keep them on the payroll. He asks if the staff will do better under the Minister of Defence Production than under the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and my answer is yes, because under the new minister the staff will have a definite purpose in view and will not be confused by many other purposes such as the honourable Senator Hugessen described when he read from the Trade and Commerce Act at the last sittings.

My friend says that in industry it is necessary to have one boss, but he fails to tell us that in most of the industries with which he and others have been connected there are separate and distinct departments; if there is one boss in private industry, so is there one boss in the conduct of the business of the nation, that is, the Prime Minister and the council surrounding him.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is the first convenient opportunity that I have had to express to you the warm welcome that I feel for you on your becoming a member of this house. You and I entered Parliament as members of the Commons in the same year, 1940. I well remember the part you played in those days; it was a distinguished part. I came to the Senate some time prior to you, but you are fast catching up to me, and indeed have far exceeded me in the position you now hold. I would like to congratulate you, sir, on the honour that has come your way in being appointed to preside over the senior legislative body in the Dominion of Canada.

I think I would be somewhat remiss if I did not express a welcome to the senators who have taken their place in this chamber since the opening of Parliament. I wish them a long life in their new environment, and a happy and useful tenure of office.

I should like also to convey congratulations to the Leader of the Opposition in this house (Hon. Mr. Brooks). His constant courtesy and kindness are appreciated by everyone on this side of the house. I think he must know how much he is admired across the aisle, and I might add that all on this side of the house sincerely hope he will long continue to enjoy the honour of being the Leader of the Opposition.

As a matter of fact, honourable senators, my congratulations extend not only to the Leader of the Opposition but to his entire following on the other side for the brilliance with which they have upheld, during this debate, the best traditions of the Conservative party. We are all agreed on that. From long experience in public life I have learned, to my sorrow, that the best tradition of the Conservative party in Canada, is to resist change of any kind and to display a deadly fear of progress. That is why on this occasion I congratulate the members opposite on upholding the best traditions of the Conservative party. It is, I notice, the custom of my friends opposite and of their party to "view with alarm", as did the honourable Senator O'Leary (Carleton) in his brilliant philippic at the last sitting of this house, the organization of this new Department of Industry. He was, of course, on sound ground in one respect, that is, in his criticism of any increase in Government expenditure, something to which his party has contributed so magnificently in its recent term of office.

Most members of this house were raised in an atmosphere of frugality. I myself was raised in such an atmosphere and I think most of my fellow members could claim the same thing. For this reason any motive of economy is well calculated to justify the main purpose of his address, which is, if I may use a farming phrase, to hang back in the traces.

When I was on the farm many years ago the story was told of a lady who was driving in a buggy to town. She came to the top of a very steep hill, and as she looked down the rather dangerous incline she said that she put her trust in the Lord and the breeching strap. I have no criticism, of course, of my friends' trust in Providence, but it does seem to me that they are inordinately fond of the breeching strap. That is why I say that the Opposition speeches in this particular debate are in the best traditions of the Conservative party. They are leaning back on the breeching strap, afraid to change, afraid of progress, and deadly afraid that the new arrangement may be a success.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: You don't run downhill if you do that.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I heartily agree, of course, that deficits of one-half billion dollars per year, year after year, call for economy.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: We had a $2 billion deficit in 1946 under a Liberal Government.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That was just at the close of the war. The war is now long since over. The fact that there were deficits years ago does not justify deficits today. Nor does it justify a succession of deficits year after year for a five-year period.

I agree that we should either exercise economy or we should increase revenues, or we should do both, but, honourable senators, I do not join in the scorn that the honourable Senator McCutcheon poured out this evening, and which I have heard from the other side of this house on other occasions, on the attempt that has been made in recent weeks in the Commons to approach, at least, a balanced budget.

I usually agree with the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar). He is my old friend. I often agree with him in his economy addresses. They have been wonderful addresses, but in this instance I say, with very great respect and with some diffidence, that I think the honourable senator was not quite realistic. He and I have had long experience in public life, and in consequence we run the risk of living in the past. Senator Crerar questioned the expansion involved in the creation of the new Department of Industry—

Hon. Mr. Pearson: Maybe he was holding back on the breechings too.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Perhaps he was. He agrees with you in this instance.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: He was not whipped in line by your Whip.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: No, our Whip does not whip anyone into line. That operation, honourable senators, is confined to your side of the house.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Nonsense.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: We know more about our side than you do about your own side.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Senator Crerar said that in 1939, just before the commencement of World War II, there were 16 ministers in the Canadian cabinet, and in 1963 there are 26. That, of course, is an impressive increase in the number of ministers. Shortly stated, this is calculated to astonish, but honourable senators, the Canada of today is not the Canada of 1939. In 1939 the population of Canada was 11,267,000—in round figures, 11 million. You will find that figure in the Canada Year Book of 1956 at page 1237. The population of Canada in 1962, according to the latest figures which you will find at page 1204 of the Canada Year Book of that year, was 18,570,000, and it is expected that before the conclusion of this year the population will exceed 19 million.

On the basis of the latest figures I have, those for 1962, which show that Canada then had a population of 18 million odd, honourable senators will note that the increase in the population of that year over 1939 was 64 per cent. How does that compare with the cabinet increase of from 16 members to 26, which troubles the senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) and which is seized upon by the members opposite?

Hon. Mr. Horner: What about Great Britain? She had an increase in population.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: We are talking about Canada now, not Great Britain.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: How many cabinet ministers are there in Great Britain?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: One of these increases is almost the exact equivalent of the other. The population increase during those years of 64 per cent is slightly more than the cabinet increase of 62.5 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: May I ask the honourable senator a question? If his argument has validity, how does he account for the fact that the United States with a population of 180 million has a cabinet of only 10 or 12?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The constitution of the United States is quite different from that of the Dominion of Canada. To begin with, the ministers to whom my friend refers do not have seats in either the House of Representatives or the Senate of the United States. They are mere assistants to the President, and are selected by the President, and have no direct responsibility to the elected houses. You cannot compare the Canadian ministry with the United States ministry.

On the percentage basis only, I suggest that the comparison of the increase in population with the increase in the members of the Government is little ground for my friends' alarm. But the comparison between the increase in the members of the Government and the increase in the population is by no means the whole story. In 1939 Canada was predominantly an agricultural country. According to the 1941 census the rural population of Canada at that time totalled 5,234,000.

Hon. Mr. Drouin: In what year?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: 1941. That is the nearest census year to 1939. The rural population in 1941 was 5 million odd, while the total urban population was 6,252,000. Thus, the urban population exceeded the rural population at that time by about one million persons.

If honourable senators will turn to the census of 1961, they will find that the rural population in that year was 5,537,000—it had remained stationary, or very nearly so—but by 1961 the urban population had risen to 12,700,000 people. During those 10 years the urban population more than doubled while the rural population remained almost stationary.

Let me express the same figures in percentages. In 1941 the rural population was 46 per cent of the total population, while the urban population was 54 per cent; in 1961 the rural population was 30 per cent of the total population, and the urban population was 70 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Horner: What has that to do with the point?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: If the honourable senator will listen and think it over he will see the point.

That is to say, in 20 years the rural population decreased from 46 per cent to 30 per cent of the total population while the urban population increased from 54 per cent to 70 per cent of the total population.

But even this does not tell the whole story. The growth of industrial Canada has far exceeded in these past years the growth in our population. In 1939 when we had 16 ministers the gross national product at market prices was $5,636,000,000, and in 1962 it was $40,401,000,000. In a period of 23 years the monetary value of the gross national product had multiplied seven-fold. Reckoned in constant dollars, that increase would of course be somewhat less, but still magnificently spectacular.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: This is due to the last Government.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes, we had good government in former years.

In 1939 rural Canada had a separate Department of Agriculture, but urban Canada had no separate Department of Industry. I would not, of course, deprive the agricultural community of its Department of Agriculture—

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: They are going to have two ministers.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I would not for one moment think of changing the relationship between the towns and cities and the country, but what excuse can there be under the circumstances for refusing urban Canada a separate Department of Industry?

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: The excuse that it is unnecessary.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: And the excuse that it is already provided for.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: It was unnecessary from the Conservative standpoint in the last five years. In the view of the do-nothing Government of that time, so far as unemployment was concerned it was not necessary to do anything but to sit in their seats and let 500,000 people starve, or nearly so.

Hon. Mr. Horner: You put them to work. Let us see you do it.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That is what we are going to do. That is the purpose of this bill.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: You are off to a good start.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: That was the purpose of the budget.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: No, it was not the entire purpose of the budget. The main purpose of the budget was to supply some extra revenue to satisfy the financial mess in which the Diefenbaker Government left this country.

Hon. Mr. Drouin: So you messed up the mess?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Now, honourable senators, I did not interrupt a single honourable senator on the other side of the house—

Hon. Mr. Drouin: This is because we like you.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: We did not say the things you are saying.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: What you said did not hurt me but what I said evidently hurts you. At the same time this is the Senate of Canada, where we exercise a certain decorum in the conduct of debate, even when we do not like what is said.

Let me point this out: the employers and employees have their Department of Labour; the railways, the truckers and the aviation people have their Department of Transport; the returned soldiers have the Department of Veterans Affairs; the medicoes the Department of Health; the lumberjacks, the Department of Forestry—thanks to the gentlemen opposite who, when that department was constituted did not object to that increase in government expenditure. The fishermen have their Department of Fisheries; and the farmers, as I say, have their Department of Agriculture.

Hon. Mr. Willis: With two ministers.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: But the vast secondary industry of manufacturing, the great employment agency of the towns and cities, is expected, according to my friends opposite, to remain an adjunct of the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Honourable senators opposite talk rather glibly about the additional expense of a separate Department of Industry. However, looking through Hansard of 1960 I did not observe any such outcry when a separate Department of Forestry was created by the Government of that day. As a matter of fact, the bill to create it was supported by the Opposition of that time; and the present Prime Minister, then Leader of the Opposition, spoke in favour of the measure. Such an outcry would have been more justified against that bill than it is against this one which we have before us. In 1960 when that bill was passed, employment in the forestry industry was 350,000 persons. I refer honourable senators to Hansard of 1960, page 1069. Employment in the manufacturing industry in Canada at the present time is 1,500,000 persons. That is a tremendous contrast. There are more than four times as many people engaged in industry today than there were in forestry in 1960.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Does that include the newsprint industry?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: It does. Those who are protesting now about a separate Department of Industry were silent at that time, when the forestry industry employed less than one-quarter of the number of employees involved in industry affected by this bill.

The net output of the forestry industry in 1960 was $2,200,000,000—and I think that includes newsprint—but the manufacturing output of the year 1959, at factory evaluation, was $23,311,000,000. That means $2¼ billion as compared with $23¼ billion.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Are those profits or sales?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That was the production, the manufacturing output at factory evaluation.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Yes. I agree.

Hon. Mr. Horner: And all without a department of industry—they did very well.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: They did, in view of the handicap under which they were working. They will do better than that if this bill is passed, and they get the encouragement that will come to them from the new minister, the new staff and the new set-up.

My friends talk as though secondary industry were a small matter. It is nothing of the kind. The figures in regard to this kind of industry are almost astronomical.

The total value of all imports into Canada in 1959 was $5,509,000,000. Those figures had grown in 1962 to $6,258,000,000. Those are the Department of Trade and Commerce figures of total imports. The magnitude of the imports does not frighten me in the slightest, because the total exports are in comparable figures.

In 1959 the value of our total export of goods was $5,140,000,000. That figure had grown in 1962 to $6,348,000,000.

There was a difference of only $9 million between our exports and our imports in 1962. That was what my friends across the aisle would call a favourable balance of $9 million.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: The balance was over $100 million.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I trust honourable senators will hold these overall figures in mind—that our exports and our imports are very large and that one about balances the other, within a few dollars. At the moment we are interested especially in manufactured goods, their import and export.

According to latest figures, our imports of fully or chiefly manufactured goods in 1959 were $4,262,000,000. Our exports of the same class of goods—that is, fully or chiefly manufactured goods—in the same year 1959 amounted to $1,861,000,000. That is given in the Canada Year Book for 1962. My friends can look at these figures and see if I am accurate.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I would prefer to take the figures of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: In 1962, in manufactured goods we imported two and one-third times what we exported, while in the case of our general imports and exports one balanced the other. I suggest to this house that there is no ground for the complacency with which the Leader of the Opposition faces this problem of the excess of importation of manufactured goods, which are so out of balance as compared with the general figures.

That is a serious situation, which was tolerated by the previous Government but which the present Government hopes and expects, as I do, at least to improve.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Would you consider imposing tariffs to keep imports out?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I did not hear that remark.

Now my friend the honourable senator from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner) loves to interrupt me when I am speaking, but I will agree with him on this occasion. He says that the key to industrial enterprise is the sale of the product.

Hon. Mr. Horner: There is no use manufacturing if you cannot sell.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I agree with that. Is that not also the key to the agricultural industry, the sale of the products?

Hon. Mr. Horner: Of agricultural products.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes. My friend should understand that the sale of the industrial product is much the same in principle as the sale of the agricultural product. Would he ask the Senate to make the Department of Agriculture a branch of the Department of Trade and Commerce?

Hon. Mr. Pearson: That is what the present Government has done.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Why oppose making industry a separate department, just as Agriculture is separate from Trade and Commerce?

Hon. Mr. Horner: I am satisfied that that is what is taking place.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The Department of Agriculture is not a part of the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Certainly not.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: My friend has been reading fiction.

The honourable Senator O'Leary, whom I see smiling at me from the other side of the house, sees something almost sacrilegious in young men in grey flannel suits, carrying brief cases, telling the great captains of industry how to run their business. I hope that no one in this chamber is wearing a grey flannel suit. My friend sees something suspicious about the carrying of a brief case. Well, I suppose it is very presumptuous, no doubt, on the part of these young men to tell the great captains of industry how to run their business. However, the farmers in this country are less intellectually arrogant; so far as I know, they have never objected to good advice and assistance from the Department of Agriculture, even when it has been given by young men in grey flannel suits.

Hon. Mr. Blois: They are scientists.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Yes, they are scientists. How can you compare—

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Are you asking a question?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Yes. Scientists, who are developing new methods in agriculture, and have become advisers to the Government, are not to be compared with these young men in grey flannel suits referred to by Senator O'Leary. Are you trying to convince us that scientists can be compared with these young men in grey flannel suits who presume to advise top-notchers in industry?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Why not?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Well, I won't believe it.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I am not trying to convince my friends opposite. There is an old saying "Convince a man against his will —he's of the same opinion still". I expect that my hearers across the aisle will remain of the same opinion still.

However, I should like to point out to the house what has been accomplished by these men in grey flannel suits in the Department of Agriculture, as, for instance, the development of rust-resistant wheat. I believe I can say without contradiction that agriculture in Canada would be poorer today, both intellectually and financially, had it not been for the Department of Agriculture. I suggest that industry will be poorer in future years without the assistance of a special Department of Industry, such as we are proposing to establish.

Honourable senators, I have a keen regard, of course, for the captains of industry to whom the senator from Carleton (Hon. Mr. O'Leary) referred with such eloquence. However, may I ask, and, of course, with respect and humility, why it is, with all these wonderful men commanding industry, as described by the honourable senator, that last winter we had over half a million men and women unemployed—over 9 per cent of our entire labour force?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Is that the present figure?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That is the figure given by the Leader of the Government in this house last week. I think you will agree with me that the unemployment that we endured at that time was not for lack of resources to be developed. Canada's resources are as fine as any in the world, if not the finest.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: You are going to regret that statement a year from now.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Speak up; I cannot hear you while I am speaking. In this chamber we usually have only one speaker at a time.

I am sure that the failure of industry last year to employ the entire labour force that was available will not be blamed by the gentlemen opposite on the government of that day. In the face of these facts, my friends opposite would argue that all is well and that nothing should be done in the way of promoting industry and employing the unemployed. I wonder if these great men, before whom the member from Carleton (Hon. Mr. O'Leary) bows down and worships and the Tories generally grovel, have so managed the industrial affairs of the nation that our natural resources are all developed and our wonderful human resources are all so employed that nothing is left to be desired and no change is required from the blank despair of the last winter. I am quite sure the captains of industry, of whom the senator from Carleton speaks with bated breath, would not adopt such an arrogant attitude. If a laissez faire attitude had been adopted in the past, as advocated by the gentleman opposite, had there been government neglect, which he sees as industrial freedom, had industrial management not been inspired and our human and material resources not been marshalled by the late C. D. Howe, we would not have achieved the industrial organization that won us the admiration of the whole western world. Had we not promoted organization of that kind, no doubt by men in flannel suits—I don't know how they were dressed, but I know they carried brief cases—had these men not organized industrial Canada at that time, we might have lost the war instead of winning it. With such an illustration in recent memory of what progress can be made by industrial leadership, why this attempt on the part of the Opposition to block the wheels of progress?

I know that for a long time the Diefenbaker administration refused to admit the existence of the unemployment problem, and even yet the honourable gentlemen opposite would sweep the subject under the rug. I do not share the complacency of the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) who gave us statistics with a view to wiping from the slate the unemployment of the Diefenbaker era.

The Government leader told us that during the past calendar year the unemployed of Canada ranged from 260,000 in the summer months to 583,000 in the winter months. That is 3.9 per cent to 9.1 per cent of the entire labour force. In addition to that, as he pointed out, there is an anticipated increase in the Canadian labour force in each year of the next few years of about 260,000 persons, most of them young people.

In the face of those appalling facts, you have the strident oratory of the Opposition speakers in an attempt to block a sincere attempt to alleviate the cruelties of a situation which the previous administration so shamefully neglected.

As I stated before, and as the honourable member from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner) well said, the key to industrial activity is the sale of the product, and that goes, I take it, for both home and abroad. That is where the previous administration fell down most disastrously. I am told that the Honourable Mr. Hees, then Minister of Trade and Commerce, had something over 1,000 men ranging the markets of the world, coaxing people to buy Canadian products.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: He did a good job too.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: He did a good enough job, yes. I have no criticism of that at all. At least, it would have been a good job if the other ministers who stayed at home had not done everything in their power to prevent our customers from paying us for the commodities which they purchased. Trade is not a one-way street.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Give examples.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The money sent to Canada for investment, or brought here by tourist traffic, is used by us to purchase goods abroad. The reverse is also true, if we invest abroad, or spend money abroad, they use that money to pay for the goods that are bought from us. That is elementary. The only other way possible in which our customers can obtain Canadian exchange is by selling something to us, that is, by Canada purchasing goods from its customers abroad, which we can use either in production or for the benefit of the people generally, increasing our standard of living.

The Government Leader (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford) suggested that some of the things that we import might be made in this country. I agree with that, but I hope that no one will understand that statement to mean the officials of this new department will be messenger boys for pressure groups seeking special privileges and by hiding behind tariff walls to charge extortionate prices to a hog-tied population. That is not the idea at all; rather, it will be the function of the staff of the new department to determine the classes of production in which the Canadian people have a natural advantage, such as proximity to raw materials, favourable climate, the skill of the workers, the know-how, the established organizations, and many other such natural advantages. The duties of this new department will be to furnish information, organize research and generally give leadership towards the improving of our competitive position and to this end, as I understand it, a survey will be made of the industry of Canada to determine a number of things: (1) The natural resources that may be available for development for the furnishing of raw materials—it is very important to make them available. (2) Such improvements as are possible in methods of production. (3) The marshalling of commodities for sale, or potentially for sale, both locally and foreign, to be brought to the attention of the salesmen of the Department of Industry. That is a big job, but in a situation such as this, in a country such as ours, with the magnificent proportions of the industries in our towns and cities, it can be a most beneficial job.

As important as sales abroad are purchases abroad. Let me illustrate. There was speculation at one time about promoting trade with the newly-created nations of North Africa, but I read in one of the magazines or newspapers that, while the desire of these countries for Canadian products was very great, they lacked the money with which to buy. Of course, we had bought little or nothing from them and they did not have the exchange with which to buy from us.

It is to our interest to discover what others have that we can use to our own advantage, and by buying something from them make it possible for them to buy something from us. That is the way a great trading nation is developed. The way to sell something is to buy something.

Modern trade, although it is carried out now with money, is essentially a barter. You give us something and we will give you something in return. I know that is heresy to the protectionists to whom buying abroad is a sin and selling abroad is a virtue.

I am in receipt of a message from Tory headquarters in Toronto, addressed to me as an elector of one of the ridings of Toronto, from which I will quote a paragraph.

It is stated here that:

> We Canadians, as individuals, are the world's largest importers of manufactured goods. In fact, we spend an average of $235 per person per year on imports of manufactured goods.

The letter goes on to say:

> Generally, $10,000 spent upon manufactured goods produces one job for one man. If we, in this province, can reduce our manufactured imports by $100 per person a year ($600 million) and replace those imported goods, by goods manufactured in Ontario or Canada, we would provide 60,000 new jobs in our economy.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: Is that not what the bill is supposed to do?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Now, honourable senators, is that not a simple solution to our problem? But, it seems to me that the writer of this letter has not gone far enough or has gone too far, because, if $100 in purchases from abroad were changed to Canada it would create 60,000 jobs, why not make it $200 and create 120,000 jobs? Or indeed, cut out foreign trade altogether and then we would all be employed and happy and everything would be lovely. Of course that is foolish. If we would sell we must also buy.

Thus, honourable gentlemen, the new nations of North Africa did not buy from us because we did not buy from them, and they had no exchange with which to purchase.

It is to our interest, I suggest, to discover what people abroad can make that will contribute to our economy, to our production, or to the comfort of our homes and then, at the same time, find out what we can make that they can enjoy and in that way bring about a great trading nation.

Had we reduced our foreign purchases as this foolish letter advises, or abolished them altogether, will somebody please tell me how we would be paid for these outstanding exports of ours, such as the iron ore from Ungava that we ship from Sept Iles to the coast states, the forest products of Ontario and Quebec and British Columbia that we ship abroad in huge quantities, the silver, gold and nickel of Ontario, the livestock, the field crops of all Canada that we ship abroad, including the oil of Alberta or the aluminum of British Columbia? How are we going to be paid for them unless we buy as well as sell? Or should we give away these commodities, or allow our customers to owe us in perpetuity?

I suggest it will be the function of the new Department of Industry and the Department of Trade and Commerce to inform us as to what we can buy abroad as well as what we can sell abroad to our own advantage.

Honourable senators, I look upon this proposed new Department of Industry as a great service agency. If it is vigorously administered it will promote industrial activity in our towns and cities; it will help to absorb the unemployed and it will add to the wealth and well-being of Canada generally.

Hon. Norman P. Lambert: Honourable senators, on account of the lateness of the hour, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Hon. Mr. Croll: If the honourable senator is not prepared to go on tonight, I am. In view of the short day tomorrow, I think we should get on with the debate, but it is up to the Leader of the Government.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Lambert, debate adjourned.

PRIVATE BILL

THE CANADIAN MANUFACTURERS' ASSOCIATION—SECOND READING

Hon. Paul H. Bouffard moved the second reading of Bill S-31, respecting The Canadian Manufacturers' Association.

He said: Honourable senators, I am going to be brief in dealing with this bill, which concerns only the use by The Canadian Manufacturers' Association of its English name and its French equivalent. The translation of the English name seems to be perfect as it is: L'Association des manufacturiers canadiens.

This association has existed for 92 years, and was federally incorporated in 1902. Its membership consists of about 6,000 manufacturers in Canada, located in 600 communities, and it covers about 75 per cent of manufactured products. It is a very active association. Its officials frequently communicate with the members of the association; they follow legislation; and though the head office is in Toronto they hold their meetings in most of the principal cities of Canada. As a matter of fact, not long ago they held meetings in Montreal and Quebec City.

The association has for a long time produced publications in French, and would now like to be able to sign its name in French. It is to be congratulated on recognizing its fellow citizens of French Canada and for seeking authority to sign its name in French, or in both English and French, in the province of Quebec.

Honourable senators, I believe there is nothing further I need add in explanation of this bill, many similar measures have already been passed. If this bill receives second reading I will move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Bouffard, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Leave having been given to revert to motions.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald tabled:

(English and French texts).

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

LETTER FROM PRIME MINISTER TO PROVINCIAL PREMIERS RESPECTING CONFERENCE, PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Honourable senators, with respect to the last two documents tabled, I have two motions. First, I would move, with leave, seconded by the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks):

> That the copy of a letter, dated July 12, 1963, addressed by the Prime Minister of Canada to all provincial premiers containing a proposal for a Federal-Provincial Conference to consider the subjects of pensions and of loans to municipalities for capital works programs, tabled today, be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate of this day.

Motion agreed to.

For text of letter see appendix "A", p. 291.

LETTER FROM PREMIER OF QUEBEC TO THE PRIME MINISTER, RESPECTING BILL C-76, PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Secondly, I move, with leave, seconded by the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks):

> That the copy of a letter addressed by the Premier of Quebec to the Prime Minister of Canada, dated July 11, 1963, together with a copy of a resolution adopted by the Quebec Legislative Assembly, dated June 26, 1963, concerning Bill C-76, "The Municipal Development and Loan Act", tabled today, be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate of this day.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: May I ask the honourable Leader if replies have been received from all the provincial premiers, or have some not yet replied?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I believe the letters which were received from the provincial premiers appeared as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate several days ago.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I do not think the list included one from Mr. Bennett, the Premier of British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I shall make inquiries and if a reply has been received I shall endeavour to obtain copies.

Motion agreed to.

For text of letter see appendix "B", p. 292.

PETITIONS FOR PRIVATE BILLS

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR FILING—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Thomas Vien, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Standing Orders, presented the committee's first report:

> The committee recommend that the time limited for filing petitions for private bills (other than petitions for bills of divorce) which expired on June 27, 1963, be extended to Friday, August 2, 1963.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Vien: Honourable senators, in view of the stage we have reached in this session I move, with leave of the Senate, that this report be concurred in now.

Report adopted.

DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford) for the second reading of Bill C-74, respecting the Department of Industry.

Hon. Norman P. Lambert: Honourable senators, this is the first opportunity I have had to address myself formally to His Honour the Speaker, and to congratulate him upon his elevation to the important office of Speaker of this chamber. I should like to associate myself with all the compliments and good wishes that accompanied this great event earlier in the session, and I wish for His Honour the best possible developments in the future.

May I also associate myself with the remarks addressed to the leaders on both sides of this house, and include in that association the most complimentary references that were made to the mover and seconder of the motion for an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, both of whom made an outstanding contribution to the debates of the house.

I would also like to add my word of welcome to the new members of the Senate, and to express the hope that they will enjoy their period here and that it may be long extended. I hope that they will experience some shorter and less verbose sessions than some of us have had to endure here in the past. At any rate, I am sure that they will enjoy their experience and contribute to the proceedings as we progress.

At the outset of my remarks on Bill C-74 I submit the proposition that it should be regarded as an honest effort on the part of the Government of the day to improve industrial and economic conditions of this country.

I almost imagine I hear the remarks of my honourable friend from Carleton (Hon. Mr. O'Leary) that good intentions are not enough to meet the situation at this time, and that the road to perdition too often is paved with good intentions. In that case, if my assumption is correct, I have the logical impression that he may still vote for second reading of this bill on the basis that he would at least glimpse, in the downward trend, the primrose path to the nether regions.

I wish to refer to the remark made yesterday by my friend from Gormley (Hon. Mr. McCutcheon) when he described the bill as an impulsive promise arising out of the recent election campaign. The fact of the matter is that this particular subject was presented in an authoritative statement of Liberal policy in October 1962 and was incorporated in the official appeal to the country during the election campaign in April of this year. Therefore, to be fair, it can be said that it was not an impulsive promise arising out of the election campaign alone.

Certain aspects of this bill, such as possible bureaucratic domination, have been emphasized by critics of the bill, but doubts of its efficacy, based on that thought alone, I submit are scarcely justifiable at this time.

This proposed legislation represents in reality an implementation of an undertaking given by the Leader of the Government in the last election campaign and prior to it. So it may fairly and reasonably be regarded as a response to a mandate from the Canadian electorate.

From that point of view, repeated representations have been made in this chamber by many of its distinguished leaders in years gone by to the effect that the Senate should give such Government measures a fair trial.

In this connection, the opinion of the late Right Honourable Arthur Meighen, expressed while he was a leader here, has often been quoted. His view was:

> Where there is a mandate for legislation which comes before the Senate, where such legislation was clearly discussed and placed on the platform of the successful party in an election, then only in most exceptional cases should there be any attempt or desire on the part of the Upper House to refuse to implement a mandate by its concurring imprimatur.

Another point of view which is worthy of emphasis in connection with this bill is the need of stimulation of private initiative, private enterprise and industry.

It is assumed by opponents of this bill that the work of the new department will be run by academic eggheads, with the employment of regimentation by order in council and the expenditure of needless sums of money. I submit it is unfair to draw that conclusion so soon.

One might remind honourable senators that this country has not yet by any means completely emerged from a period of 10 to 15 years of regimentation, subsidies and quotas, which characterized the Canadian economy during the years of war and post-war reconstruction. During that time much of our industry walked with the aid of sticks, supplied by government in the form of prices and wage controls and self-denying ordinances of many varieties. Like the athlete who has been denied regular training on the track and in the field for too long a period, industry, with a few marked exceptions—and later I expect to refer to those exceptions—has not yet regained full competitive strength and initiative. All too great a tendency to seek the aid and protection of government is still apparent. This certainly applies to agriculture and primary industry, as well as manufacturing. The Honourable George Hees, Minister of Trade and Commerce in the last government, made a commendable effort to arouse greater initiative amongst industrialists and his trade commissioners from abroad in regaining lost markets and developing new ones. Unfortunately for his effort, he was not supported by good measures of trade policy.

If such a new department as the one proposed can stimulate renewed effort in the fields of production and distribution in primary as well as in secondary industry, it will be well worth while, but it will still have to be supported by progressive trade policies which will promote competition and salesmanship. This is where co-operation with the Department of Trade and Commerce and the tariff-making departments of finance and revenue will be vitally important. Expanded trade abroad in this connection means expanded trade and employment at home.

In dealing with that aspect of the question, I should like to refer to an address that was delivered a few days ago in Regina by the Honourable Mitchell Sharp. His address was delivered before an audience composed largely of people interested in grain production and in grain markets. He spoke of primary industry which still, in spite of the growth of secondary industry and a marked increase in urban population, is a large and important factor in the export trade of this country. Mr. Sharp said:

> As efficient producers we must have terms of access to markets which permit us to compete on fair and reasonable terms against other exporters and against domestic production in importing countries.
> Where competition based on productive efficiency, is allowed to give way to a world-managed market and artificially high prices, we would lose the distinction between those who produce and those who do not.

Mr. Sharp concluded by saying:

> Trade expansion is particularly important this year in view of the excellent crop that seems to be in prospect, perhaps the largest ever produced, and far more than has ever been disposed of in a single year.

One can hardly think about this proposed Department of Industry without reference to the administrative organization of its outstanding predecessor, the Department of Munitions and Supply, under the direction of the late Right Honourable C. D. Howe. If ever there was a successful department of industry in this country, that was one. It should be remembered and emphasized that the Department of Munitions and Supply, and later of Reconstruction and Supply, was a result of the co-operative effort of a great minister and the staff of able executive lieutenants drawn from representative private industry throughout the country. Many people will say now, "Oh, but that was during a time of war and an immediate post-war period, when public opinion was willing to accept strong measures."

But with full allowance for the existence of the War Measures Act and its effective discipline in those days, is it not possible to do as great a creative work in peacetime as was done by that department during the war years and immediate post-war years? Why not? The new minister who is to have charge of this department is a man of experience and proven ability in the public service as well as in the field of private business. He and available leading men of business in this younger generation may well duplicate with voluntary effort in these promising days of peace the accomplishments of Howe and his associates twenty years ago. At any rate, they should be given an opportunity of doing so.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: I referred a moment ago to outstanding exceptions in Canada's industrial performance where enterprise and initiative and managerial ability had accomplished great things apart from favoured treatment by government. Last week Senator Burchill speaking on this bill, had he been less diffident and less modest than he is, would have referred to one of these exceptions in connection with his own business in New Brunswick and now under the able management of his son. George Burchill and Sons at South Nelson is a century-old family business in lumbering and wood manufacturing. Last year this firm opened up the first fir plywood mill to be located east of the Rocky Mountains and is successfully meeting competition from well-known and established producers of British Columbia, thus helping to enrich the economy of the eastern Maritime area.

One might also take the liberty of referring to another industry, one of the oldest and most widely known institutions in Canada and abroad, The Massey-Harris Company —now known as Massey-Ferguson—manufacturers of farm machinery, whose development and progress during the war and in the years following have made it one of the world's foremost manufacturers of agricultural implements.

Following the removal years ago of its last vestige of tariff protection, and as a result of able management and initiative, combined with what proved to be sound fiscal policy at that time, that institution achieved an outstanding international development. It is only fair to say that this firm had its beginnings in Ontario, before Confederation, and early in its history had its sights set upon expansion abroad. As early as 1929 it had acquired plants in the United States, in Germany and in France. In addition to its home plant, which is now located in Brantford, it has factories not only in the United States, France and Germany but also in Great Britain, Australia and South Africa. From annual total sales of $50 million in the early 1940's, an increase to $600 million was recorded in 1962. In the past 12 years its employees have increased from 20,000 to 40,000 people.

Other examples of industrial adaptability and progress during the post-war years could, I am sure, be cited in such fields as steel, motor vehicles, aluminum, pulp and paper and possibly other fields as well, if one wanted to record them.

Suffice it to say now with respect to this bill we may sincerely hope this new legislation will tend to stimulate rather than hamper the ability and experience of those who have been actually responsible for the conduct and progress of this country's industry and commerce to date. There is no good reason why it should not do that. Competitive effort in meeting demands of increased world trade will be the test of Canada's capacity to regain an improved economic position. The road to full employment lies indisputably in that direction.

I have in my hand a statistical statement supplied to me by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics showing the growth of manufacturing in Canada between the years 1946 and 1960, giving the number of establishments, the number of employees, the amount of salaries and wages paid, the cost at plant of materials used, the value added by manufacture, and the amount of the gross value of products. With the consent of honourable senators, I should like to have this table incorporated in the official report of today's proceedings.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

See p. 275.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: This table shows a reasonable increase in the number of establishments during those years, and an increase in gross value of products from $8 billion in 1946 to $24 billion in 1960. That growth was undoubtedly due in large measure to individual initiative and to successful co-operation between Government policy and industry, especially in the case of the exceptions to which reference has been made.

One of the aims of this bill is to add to these outstanding accomplishments by extending new industrial activities in areas of the country where, for economic and social reasons, they are needed. In identifying such areas and such assistance, great business discrimination and judgment will be required, and all the ability and brains that the Government and the Parliament of Canada can supply.

Therefore, I submit that this bill should be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce for a thorough discussion of the ways and means to be employed in the operation of the Department of Industry, and, if possible, for enlightenment in some detail on the prospective size and cost of its organization.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Honourable senators, the honourable senator who has just resumed his seat made a statement which I am sure he would not mind my correcting. He said that the Burchill plywood plant was the first to be established east of the Rockies. That is not correct. I personally know of one that has been in existence in Kirkland Lake for many years.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: I may say this to my honourable friend by way of enlightenment, that my authority for that statement is Senator Burchill himself, who pointed out that while there were distributing plants farther west, this is the first actual plywood manufacturing plant with a full complement of new machinery that has been erected east of the Rockies. If that statement is incorrect, I will leave it to my colleague, Senator Burchill, to correct.

Hon. Calvert C. Pratt: Honourable senators, may I be permitted to speak for just a few moments on this matter.

I am entirely in accord with the principle of this bill, and I also believe it will have a good, practical application. I know that the Department of Trade and Commerce is a highly efficient organization, that it is doing a splendid job in certain broad fields, and I do not for one moment believe that this bill is any reflection at all on the strength and ability of the department and the assistance that it is giving to trade and industry in Canada. However, we need a body to engage in the field of specific investigation and to come forward with recommendations for various types of assistance. I believe such an organization will prove very useful.

Today we are being confronted with changing conditions in world patterns of trade, and when we think in terms of trade of ten or even five years ago the patterns are outdated. Changes are being made so rapidly that we must keep in touch and adapt ourselves to changing times.

One of the most important aspects of this bill is the effect it should have on the development of manufacturing trade in the various parts of Canada. The Canadian manufacturing industry needs such impetus, and it should be more widespread than at the present time. It is true that certain lines of goods for export can be produced to better advantage in some locations than in others, and this situation requires closer study and more application than it is possible for the individual industry itself to apply. That is, with such help fresh light and a broader view will be developed, and industries will be brought into closer collaboration with each other and government.

I need not develop this theme further for, as all honourable senators know, there is a need for such assistance. It has already been mentioned here in considerable detail, and I do not intend just now to develop the point. I merely wish to express my views on the general principle involved.

Honourable senators, over the past few years I have had the interesting experience of attending international conferences under the auspices of the International Chamber of Commerce, the Commonwealth and Federated Chambers of Commerce, and so on. My travels have taken me to many countries, including Japan, Italy, Australia, the West Indies and Scandinavia. One of the things that strike me everywhere is that industry has a background of official support by governments in some countries that have just as strong feelings with regard to private enterprise as we have. In those countries there are various means, through government channels, by which industry is assisted in its development. While in a general way assistance does exist in this country, and our industrial organizations have progressed, up to now many of the currently changing problems have not been dealt with specifically and definitely, as they have in other countries.

It is amazing how many of these things come to one's attention. Just as an illustration, I remember sitting in on a conference in a far-away country and going through figures which showed that Canadian exports of a certain product had dropped by approximately $1 million. Such a discovery happened to be a piece of good fortune on my part. I ascertained from where that country obtained the balance of its imports of that product, and found that another country had increased its exports of the same product by $1 million. I asked how that came about. It was through a government organization in the exporting country. They had made an arrangement whereby a freight rate was brought down to give them a slight advantage which permitted them to capture what had been Canadian trade.

That is only one of numerous instances that have occurred where government departments are set up for the purpose of sponsoring industry, and not only industry in a general way to promote trade, but to watch the intricacies of industries in such a way that every possible opportunity of obtaining an advantage here or there is sought. I feel that notwithstanding the fine work the Department of Trade and Commerce is doing throughout the world, we do need a department which can concentrate on assisting in the development of industry in full co-operation with the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Honourable senators, as I have said, I am very much in favour of setting up a Department of Industry. I believe it is going to be of valuable assistance to Canadian industry, and it is certainly not going to decrease the initiative in trade and commerce. It is going to assist the initiative of trade. We need a department to carry out that function because time and again in various countries I have heard the question asked: Do you make this product in Canada? And, when the reply is in the affirmative, the next question is: Why is it not offered here? Well, sometimes it is not economical to do so. In so many instances certain industries are operating on a small scale and are taking care of domestic trade under protective tariffs, and do not take the broader issues of export trade into account. That observation does not apply to the larger, well-organized businesses but it does apply to numerous businesses which could possibly, with assistance and co-ordination of effort, introduce us to a much wider field of exports than we have at the present time. With the increasing need for greater domestic trade by a growing population, we certainly need more diversification and more industrial production for local trade.

Honourable senators, I regard money spent in creating such a department, if it functions in line with the opportunities, as a good national investment and not as an unnecessary expense.

(Translation):

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt: Honourable senators, I should like to add a few words in the hope of removing the confusion in some minds, because such confusion, if any, is caused by the fact that we are taking a different view of things.

I shall talk to you as a layman and not as a businessman. I know that there are in this house some people who, from a business point of view, may have no need for this legislation, because they are powerful enough financially to hire efficient men to assist them in the development of their businesses.

There are, however, medium-sized and small industries. Small industries are in need of assistance. They cannot afford to pay technicians, as Senator Choquette so ably said yesterday, or scientists to help them increase production.

For instance, let me tell you about an industry with which I am well acquainted and which needed the services of such experts. It is the maple sugar industry. Some forty years ago that industry was on its last legs. We then considered the establishment of a co-operative to co-ordinate the sale of the product. During the first two or three years everything was fine, because we were only receiving a few thousand pounds of syrup, but when eventually we began receiving several million pounds we ran into trouble. We were unable to sell all that syrup within a few days. It took several months. In addition, the quality of the product varied from year to year. Syrup kept in barrels fermented and some barrels exploded. The syrup lost its fine taste.

We therefore consulted chemists who specialized in the processing of beet and cane sugar. We tried to follow the advice they gave us but it was useless.

I then turned to the government of the province of Quebec and I told them: "Here is a product which has never been manufactured scientifically. It has always been made in an easy-going sort of way and these are the difficulties we encountered.".

I asked the government for the services of a specialist but there was none, so it was decided to train one. Afterwards I discussed my problem with a chemist of the school of sciences of Laval University. He told me that he would be interested in doing research in that field.

Then our former colleague Senator Godbout, who was at the time the Quebec Minister of Agriculture, told me: "Very well, the government will give you a grant to retain the services of a chemist".

After twelve months of research the chemist discovered why our syrup was fermenting and why maple syrup could not be processed the same way as syrup made with cane or beet sugar. The reason is that in addition to the saccharose that one finds in beet and cane sugar, maple syrup contains dextrose and minerals. I did not quite understand what dextrose and saccharose were. For the information of laymen, I can now say that dextrose is an invert sugar which does not crystallize.

After several months of research that man came to see us. Later on we hired more chemists who enabled us to discover new processes which we now utilize to great advantage and which bring us profits. At the outset we did not have the financial means to hire that expert; it is the provincial Departments of Agriculture and Industry who saved the day.

That is how I see the implementation of this bill. I feel that our medium and small enterprises need assistance in order to expand, develop and increase their output.

The commercial agents of our Department of Trade and Commerce do not bother about the expansion of our industry. Their business is rather to sell goods and to increase our trade with foreign countries. On the other hand, the new department's role would be to promote and organize industry and, as our leader put it so well, to develop above all our secondary industry. This would check unemployment and spread prosperity from coast to coast.

The powerful agencies such as those under the direction of our colleague Senator McCutcheon, for example, do not need a department of that type. Those corporations have all the experts they need; but the industries that will benefit from this department are the secondary industries, which are unable to get the help of renowned experts to show them how to produce in the most economical way, and also what to produce and in what particular area of the country.

The handicap which faces our economy, in our democracies, is that powerful organizations having enormous assets can do what they want, while smaller enterprises are often doomed and, unless we give them assistance of some kind, sooner or later what has happened elsewhere will happen in this country, that is, revolution.

If we want to live in peace in a democratic country, all sections of the country must benefit from social welfare measures; they must not be limited to a few large centres. If we are 10 to engage in good works, well and good, but if there are 100 of us, so much the better. The more benefactors there are, the more chance there is to succeed.

I should like to give you another example. Fifty miles from Lévis, there is a small industrialist who, a few years ago, began to manufacture plastic goods. At first he was manufacturing small plastic spoons, toothpicks and other similar goods; his was a very small industry. Then he said to himself: "Why should I not be able to manufacture plastic glasses and other types of plastic kitchenware, etc.? I cannot, because I do not have the necessary knowledge. I can make moulds, but I do not know how to prepare the mix."

I advised him to do as I had done. I went with him to Quebec where we paid a visit to the Department of Trade and Industry. We asked them to place at the disposal of this man a chemist who could advise him on the proper procedure. Another time, we went to the Science school of Laval university and today, this man operates a flourishing industry.

We heard a while ago of the mills of New Brunswick, those of our colleague Senator Burchill, but I can tell you that in that area, 50 miles from Quebec city, in a very small village isolated in the mountains where they used to employ 5 or 10 men, they now employ 100. Moreover, those workers stay in their village instead of going to Montreal or elsewhere to swell the number of unemployed.

That is the way I imagine, honourable senators, this legislation will be implemented.

A few weeks ago, I spent three days with Mr. Lamour the man who, in France, has been working for ten years in the planning of French industry and agriculture. Here is what he told me about our country with which he is very familiar: "You have in your country the same shortcomings we had in France for too many years. Consider especially the province of Quebec; you have a great drawing centre, Montreal and its suburbs; and elsewhere, what do you have? Not much, in the final analysis. As a matter of fact, people come to Montreal from all over the province; villages and small towns are losing their inhabitants; tomorrow one place will be overcrowded and the rest will be empty." And he added: "In France the same thing was true for many years; everybody was going to Paris. All our small industries were disappearing and there was unemployment in many parts of the country. And yet, today, after ten years of work, we are beginning to see the results of our efforts. For instance, in the south of France, on the Mediterranean where in the past wine-making was the only industry because people thought nothing but wine could be produced there—and the government had to buy the surplus, turning it into alcohol and losing 60 to 70 per cent of the initial purchasing price—today, thanks to our economists and our engineers, irrigation projects have been completed and vineyards are no longer the only industry. By making agriculture more prosperous, we developed secondary industries, and to such an extent that, at the present time, near Toulouse we are building another city almost as large as the first, that is to say, it will have a population of 25,000 to 35,000 inhabitants. Our people work at home now, Paris will be able to breathe a little easier, and prosperity will be spread all over France." And he went on: "Try and make it possible for medium industry to produce more economically, to produce and sell near home. Thus, you will do as we did; today, people in the south of France, on the Mediterranean, in Marseille, Toulouse and throughout that region, have stopped going to Paris in the last three years because they can earn a living at home; we have developed local industries and the people can live as they like to". "Finally", said he—and I have the proof here —"on June 1st of this year, there were in all of France 20,900 unemployed drawing unemployment insurance benefits. All those things do not happen overnight; our plan has been in operation for 10 years."

Seeing how successful it had been in France, Belgium adopted similar legislation. So did Italy.

If it succeeded elsewhere, why not in Canada?

When I read why this bill was presented, it seemed to me that we could obtain the same results here, with the help and assistance of the government because, let us not forget it, the government must not do everything but, in a democratic country, it must be there to help, to show how things should be done, to make suggestions. Finally, it is said that the Department of Trade and Commerce could do the same thing. No, the Department of Trade and Commerce could not do that work because it is not equipped to do so; it lacks experts to develop industry, but it can co-operate with the Department of Industry.

Dear colleagues, if only this great truth could be understood and followed with respect to co-operation: to co-operate, to do something with and not against someone, to co-operate with all the provinces because, in the end, our Canada is the union of ten provinces that must work together and work closely.

Our country is so spread out that if there is no co-operation, division will prevail and it will lead almost to the destruction of all.

Centralization of big industries in large centres is not only an industrial problem, it is also a moral problem. The big cities with their large industries may create some economic and social disturbances much more serious than if the industries were spread out all over the country.

In fact, in spreading out over the country, industries become diversified and crises are less serious; social agitation is less dangerous.

Let us be cautious so we shall not see in our country what is happening now in Africa. When we want to correct an evil, often the aftermath is worse than the evil which was intended to be corrected, and then it is anarchy.

This bill, in my opinon, is worthwhile. I am glad to support it. I take pleasure also in saying that this new department will not create division but that it will co-operate with the other departments and give them assistance; therefore, the nation will be better off.

(Text):

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, this morning's radio blared out news which was confirmed somewhat later by the press, that we in Canada have the highest percentage of unemployment of any industrialized nation, that ours is the worst record in the western world. Those of us who have seen the Dominion Bureau of Statistics' figures issued today by the Department of Labour were struck by the part which read:

> For the second consecutive year, there was an unusually large increase in unemployment among teenagers.

These statements, honourable senators, made responsibly, should shake all of us into action, for unemployment has become a Canadian plague. It is time we did something about it. I am not too sure that this is the only thing we can do, but it is one thing we can do, and I am certain it is better than doing nothing.

Before I get into the main body of my speech, may I say how intrigued I was by the statement made by Senator Grattan O'Leary —I want to differ with only one O'Leary at a time—and which he repeated in what I thought was a belittling sort of fashion, about the boys in the grey flannel suits carrying brief cases. For a while I wondered who these faceless people were, and then in the course of the honourable senator's speech I thought he let the cat out of the bag—

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): They helped to write the budget.

Hon. Mr. Croll: No, not at all. Those were not the people you had reference to.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): Oh, yes, they were.

Hon. Mr. Croll: In the course of his speech Senator O'Leary, asked: Are any of these people going to tell Bill Scully how to run The Steel Company of Canada? Well, I never thought that anyone should tell Bill Scully how to run The Steel Company of Canada, but then it struck me that Bill Scully at one time was one of the boys in grey flannel suits with brief cases. I remember his being here. I then started to recall some of the boys in grey flannel suits carrying brief cases in my time—and I have been around here for a few years. I thought of Mac Mackenzie, President of the Canadian Chemical Company; I thought of T. N. Beaupre, President of B.C. Forest Products Limited.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: You should have kept all of them.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Dave Golden was another. He took another job for a time and then they asked him to come back to be Deputy Minister of the new Department of Industry. These were not dollar-a-year men; they were all civil servants. There was Harvey Perry, who is with the Canadian Tax Foundation; Charlie Gavsie, who sits on many industrial boards in Montreal; Thor Stephenson, President of United Aircraft of Canada; John Lessard, President of Quebec Hydro; and Bill Bennett, Executive Vice-President of the Iron Ore Company of Canada. These were all boys in grey flannel suits with brief cases.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Nonsense; they were nothing of the sort.

Hon. Mr. Croll: I do not mind the honourable senator's interrupting, but would he please speak loudly and clearly so that I am able to answer him. If he does not do that I miss the interruptions.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: All I said was that you were away off the beam.

Hon. Mr. Croll: All right; let us get on with it and see who they were.

On top of it all there are two other men who once wore grey flannel suits and who now happen to be sitting on the front benches in the other house. I am referring, of course, to the Honourable Mitchell Sharp and to the Honourable C. M. Drury.

If these were the whirling dervishes of other days they were not angry young men, but they were certainly busy young men who answer the description of my honourable friend.

What we are attempting to do, as I understand it, is to send out to the country their modern equivalent, and perhaps we should describe them as boys in the Ivy League suits with attaché cases. That is a more modern expression than "boys in the grey flannel suits".

Those men to whom I have referred who were civil servants who helped to build up industrial Canada, did well for Canada. They did well for themselves and they are shining lights in the business world of today. So, with this new department, under one of the boys in the grey flannel suits who is now Minister of the Department of Defence Production, the sooner we start these people hurrying out, contacting, addressing, encouraging and assisting the establishment of secondary industries, the better it will be.

As I heard the speeches here yesterday, the objections raised were five or six in number. I will deal with a few of them.

There were arguments that the facilities are available at present in the Department of Trade and Commerce, that this method is too expensive, that it will not do the job, that the wrong people will be in charge, and that it means too much government.

Then came the lollapalooza of all—somebody said it was unconstitutional.

Whenever you run out of objections you can always fall back on unconstitutionality. If you say it once, it fogs the issue; if you repeat the argument, you becloud the issue.

On the other hand, Senator Grosart gave us six reasons. Senator O'Leary went one better; he gave us seven reasons. They are both reasonable men when not politically motivated.

Senator O'Leary said something about the Glassco Report. The Glassco Report is not for quick reading. There are five pretty heavy volumes. Though Glassco's name appears on the report, there were many excellent and brilliant minds at work in making up the report. In fact there were more than 100 people concerned in its compilation. It is useful reference material.

I compare that, as I will compare some other reports, with the Gordon report which in another day was a guidepost for us, and in time we read it, understood it and applied it. In another day we had the Archambault Report on penal reform, which is vibrant even today and points to our shortcomings in a field which has been horribly neglected.

But the Glassco Report cannot make an impact; it is an impersonal sort of thing; it does not project and it does not register on first reading. It needs study. I will indicate to you what I mean in comparing these three reports with a couple of others that come to my attention.

Let me take the O'Leary Report. That was not a composite document. When you read it, it was all O'Leary and what it had to say was in the O'Leary fashion. I agree that you will enjoy the report. It had character to it. It was something immediate: you could read it, or you could put it aside if you wished, but you could not ignore it, no more than you could the Norris Report, because it is positive and is immediate; it is all Norris and is full of character. It is easy to read and it is interesting. Nevertheless, we must not be carried away with its recommendations.

An honourable senator said yesterday that in the United States of America there are fewer cabinet ministers than in Canada. The honourable senator who said that just does not understand what is going on. He does not appreciate the American system, which is a fundamentally different system from ours. There the ministers do not sit in the House of Representatives, as ours sit in the House of Commons, subject to questions for an hour or an hour and a half each day. They are not under the gun, morning, noon and night. The impact is not there; the responsibility is not there. When one talks of the comparable opposite number in the United States ministry one has to relate it to the undersecretary, and each department has oodles of them. They get them from business, from labour, from universities—Harvard preferred—from wherever they can, and they are experts in their own business when they are brought in. Washington has more under secretaries of State than Carter has pills—and it is time we knew it.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: They are about as useful.

Hon. Mr. Croll: The Americans seem to be able to get along pretty well.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: It is a very good testimonial.

Hon. Mr. Croll: I think this bill has possibilities, because it is geared to the needs of secondary industries.

As far back as I can remember, when I first came into politics many years ago, and ever since, I have heard talk about establishing in this country secondary industries, but nobody has done anything about it that has been effective, and I have lived through governments of all political shades—that is, all that count.

I need hardly tell you, for it is absolutely true, that secondary industries are the Achilles' heel of Canadian economy. I remember when I was younger people used to say that the answer to the problem was tariffs. Well, I came into political life at a time when "tariff" became a nasty word. The only time you could talk about tariffs was when you said "lower the tariffs". Then someone would listen to you. The wisdom and the mood of the world today is not for tariffs. So we must forget about them. If we are to have an audience interested in secondary industries we must talk about the things they understand. For that reason, this bill, and what has been said about it, is in the language of today. It talks of incentives, of tax forgiveness, of accelerated depreciation, and of capital assistance.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Is that in the bill?

Hon. Mr. Croll: No, it is not in the bill, but if you read what many have said about it, that is what they have in mind.

There cannot be any question at all that the purpose of the bill is to establish in small cities and towns, more particularly in distressed and back areas, small industries which will have a present and a future. This will help employment; it will provide jobs; it will create stability for the community and an opportunity for the individuals.

In Canada we have unused manpower. Under this bill we will try to find out how we can use that manpower. We may need to provide capital, we may need to give some inducements, we may even have to provide some personnel to aid in planning, and to give further assistance we may have to do some planning; but it will always be cheaper than having half a million people walking aimlessly up and down the streets of this country.

As in another day, what they did yesterday we can do today. We will send across this country, wherever they have to be sent, the boys with the Ivy League suits, with attaché cases, by plane and by jet if possible —travelling economy, because we are trying to save money—to make a start on small local industries operating all year round, equipped with the most modern facilities, to provide not only for the home market but for the export market.

We are not attempting to put government in business; we are attempting to put business in goverment.

Canada is a country endowed with national resources, with a capable labour force, with ample technical know-how, with a reasonable amount of wealth, and with thousands of unemployed suffering varying degrees of privation, and with billions of dollars worth of unemployed productive capacity.

So, if this costs us money, it is worth it. If it is an experiment, it is a worthwhile experiment. So long as we spend money on social capital, on goods and services in Canada, we are doing what is in the interests of Canada.

As I see the purpose of this bill, it is to create jobs and employment, and it is a step in the direction of establishing secondary industries in the small towns and villages and in the dark areas of this country. We cannot possibly lose. All we are venturing are some dollars. Some good is bound to come from it, perhaps not all that we hope for, but certainly within any reasonable length of time we shall have better conditions in this country, as a result of the effort of this department, than we have at the present time.

Honourable senators, I support the bill.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: Before the honourable senator speaks, may I remind the house that if he speaks now it will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Honourable senators, I am sure you are all pleased that the debate is being closed, although you must agree with me that it has been a most interesting and informative discussion. At times politics has raised its interesting head. However, I do not object to a little politics in the Senate, as long as we do not get too much, for it adds a little spirit and spice to debate, and makes the afternoons more interesting. Those of us who have been in the Senate for some time have come to realize that when a speech is too political less attention is paid to it. In this debate we have had no speeches of that type.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Oh!

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Perhaps I should say, at least from the other side of the house. I am accustomed to politics, and it did not appear to me that the speeches were too partisan. In fact, I thought most of them were helpful and informative. They were all good speeches and they have left me with little to say.

I do not intend to make a second speech on this bill. I am fortunate to be surrounded by such able and eloquent senators that once I make an opening speech they carry the ball right along, as they did most ably on this occasion.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: They didn't score many touchdowns.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Well, I thought they scored a little too often, indeed, so often that they made the game a bit uninteresting on this side.

I do not intend to be political, but I did think that some of the speeches made on the other side were too much in the nature of the "stand pat" type of olden days. That observation is not political. I thought we might have had more enthusiastic speeches from the members on the other side of the house as to what might be done to relieve the conditions we all deplore. However, nothing was expressed of a positive nature, only of a negative nature. I suppose that is what we should expect from the Opposition, and possibly that is the attitude I took when I was on the other side of the house.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): In any event, I feel that the bill before us is a positive measure and one which will be most helpful to Canadians generally. I think we all admit, and there can be no denial of this fact, that we must do something to overcome the distressing problem of unemployment. The Government has a mandate to do that. If the former Government had remained in power, it would also have had a mandate to do so. We all agree with the aim.

The honourable Senator Croll stated that he was shocked when he awakened this morning at eight o'clock—probably he had been up much longer—to hear over the radio a report on the unemployment situation in Canada. I was so shocked with the statement that I got a copy of what was said over the C.B.C., so that I could read part of it to the house. Imagine hearing this as you get out of bed at eight o'clock in the morning—

Hon. Mr. Hayden: It serves you right for getting up so late.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: You should have stayed there.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Perhaps tomorrow I should wait until 8.15. This is what I heard on the radio:

> The National Industrial Conference Board says that Canada continues to be plagued with virtually the highest unemployment rate of any major industrial nation.

The report went on to say:

> The board notes that the Canadian unemployment percentage rate in recent years has been higher than that of the United States, Italy and Britain. It says the coastal provinces are Canada's biggest areas of joblessness, with unemployment running to nearly 11 per cent in the Atlantic provinces and close to 7 per cent in British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: May I interrupt the Leader of the Government to make this observation? I know the National Industrial Conference Board well. When comparing unemployment statistics it is perfectly proper to compare our statistics with those of the United States and, I believe, with those of Japan. These are the three countries which, as I understand at the moment, collect statistics on the basis recommended by the international labour office. When you start comparing our statistics with those of Italy, Germany, France, The Netherlands, Belgium and the United Kingdom, then you are comparing oranges and apples. I merely say that so that we shall not denigrate ourselves too much in this house.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I thank the honourable gentleman. I do not know if that lessens the seriousness of the statement that was heard over the air this morning.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I am not suggesting it does.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): The statement was that the Canadian unemployment percentage rate in recent years has been higher than that of the United States—

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: That may well be.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): —Italy and Britain.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I do not accept the comparison with Italy, Britain and France.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I do not know. In any event, I should not think that we could argue too strenuously against that statement, because at any rate it shows that conditions are very bad in Canada in so far as unemployment is concerned in relation to some other countries. However, I will not delay further on that. As I have said, the statement shocked me, as I am sure it shocked most honourable members of this house who heard it.

Another problem which strikes me as very serious is the immediate future in Canada for our young people. Honourable senators have heard often in the past few days that during the next few years 250,000 young people will come annually to the labour market. That refers to Canada. We do not know what is happening in Japan, Germany, Italy or Britain. I am talking only about Canada now. Surely, it is the duty of all of us to do what we can to make conditions such that those young people can find employment. That is one of the purposes of this bill.

From what we have heard here during this debate, I think we all agree now that most of these young people will have to find employment in secondary industry. Last evening we had a discussion here as to where secondary industry products come in our exports. I put them down as thirteenth on the list. I said that the largest exportation of manufactured articles came from the agricultural industry. I was corrected, because apparently there is a much larger exportation of newsprint. I believe I excepted newsprint from that statement; it is not wholly manufactured, but is very close to the forest products which produce newsprint. Therefore, excepting newsprint, agricultural implements with an exportation last year of about $100 million was the largest exportation of all manufactured articles from Canada, and stands at about thirteenth on our list.

Now, honourable senators, I feel that we must make every effort to improve our methods of manufacturing products of the secondary industries for greater exportation. That is where the market is, and if we can produce more in Canada we will have more employment.

Honourable senators, that is one of the purposes of this bill and that is one of the reasons I am asking that it be referred to committee. I agree that there is a lot to be learned about how this department is going to operate. All cannot be told in the debate on second reading; it will have to go before the committee.

Someone has asked how much it is going to cost. That too we can find out in committee; we can also find out how many jobs will be created; and who is going to benefit. All that information can be obtained in committee.

Honourable senators, it has been said that industry itself can do this work, that industry does not need this help. Well, I will agree that some of these large companies such as the Massey-Harris Company—

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Massey-Ferguson.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I was brought up in the Massey-Harris days.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: You are from Brantford.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): The Massey-Ferguson Company of today can employ experts who can do all the necessary research. But what about the smaller companies that are coming along? They are the ones that will need help; they will require the benefits of all these technological advances that are taking place. At least some of these smaller companies are going to need this help. Surely, honourable senators, no one would deny the smaller companies the benefit of the great scientific advances that are taking place, so that they too can produce goods which can be sold on the markets of the world.

Honourable senators, I am not going to delay you further by arguing as between the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Department of Industry, or whether there should be one or two departments. That has been answered several times. Of course the Department of Trade and Commerce will go along effectively, as it has in the past. I want to join with those who have already paid tribute to the heads of this department, and I include in that complimentary statement our own Senator McCutcheon, who headed that department for a time. He, like his successors, did very well indeed.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: His predecessors, you mean?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Yes, and like his immediate successor. And we can go back, as someone has said, to the days of the late Right Honourable C. D. Howe.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I would like to ask the honourable Leader of the Government a question. Did the late Right Honourable C. D. Howe, in making such a great success of the Department of Trade and Commerce, as we heard and as we in this country know, have a Department of Industry? Did he not do it under the Department of Trade and Commerce? I think if Mr. Howe were living today he would be the first one to object to this bill for the setting up of a new department.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I can inform the honourable Leader of the Opposition that Mr. Howe did set up the Department of Munitions and Supply, which dealt with industry; he also set up the Department of Reconstruction and Supply and the Department of Defence Production.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Yes, but he did not set up a Department of Industry.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): The Department of Defence Production specializes in a certain branch of industry. He did set up all these departments.

Someone has said that this will detract from the present Minister of Trade and Commerce. Honourable senators, the present Minister of Trade and Commerce endorses this bill; he wants it to go through. He does not oppose it; he admits that the activities of this branch of his department should be taken into a separate department.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Did he speak in favour of the bill in the House of Commons?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Yes, he spoke in favour of it.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: After some prodding at length.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): No prodding at length. He is enthusiastic about it. I do hope honourable senators are also enthusiastic about it, at least a little more than they were when this debate started.

When I am speaking about the honourable senator being the former Minister of Trade and Commerce, let us not forget that for a number of years we had in this house a member who took an active part in the debates, one of the most prominent members, in the person of the late Honourable W. D. Euler, who headed that department for a number of years.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: And he never suggested a Department of Industry.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): He headed the department before 1940. I do not know what he was thinking about in those days, but I am confident that if he were here today he would support this bill.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Does the honourable Leader expect this new department to last longer than the Department of Munitions and Supply, or will it suffer the same fate?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I am all for progress and, as time goes on, if it is found necessary that the Department of Trade and Commerce should be changed, I would go along with it. But I cannot forecast the future. We must be progressive; we must be prepared to go forward. There are great changes taking place in the world today; this we have to realize, and if it is necessary to make a change let us not hesitate to do so.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: A change can be made for the worse.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): It has been suggested that this department is going to run business. I do not think it is necessary for me to deal longer with that point because that suggestion has been disposed of. I do not believe any honourable senator thinks that the Government or this department is going to endeavour to run anybody's business. It is going to endeavour to assist businesses that want assistance, and it is very necessary that assistance be made available to them.

Honourable senators, there is one branch of this bill with which I believe we are all in favour, and that is the branch which provides for area development. It has been said that the coastal provinces are Canada's biggest areas of joblessness, of unemployment, running to nearly 11 per cent in the Maritime provinces and close to 7 per cent in British Columbia. This department will assist those provinces, with no question of provincial rights being invaded.

Hon. Mr. Drouin: Are the provinces asking for this department?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): The provinces are enthusiastic about it.

Hon. Mr. Drouin: And industry too?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I will come to that point right away. The provinces will welcome this legislation. The Government is pleased to co-operate in a study of the problems of these depressed areas which must be improved.

Senator Vaillancourt this afternoon told us what is being done along this line in other countries, and I myself saw what is being done in Great Britain. What is being done in those countries can and should be done in Canada.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Done by governments?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Yes, with the assistance of governments. My friend, the former honourable Speaker, (Hon. Mr. Drouin) asked, "Is industry asking for this legislation?" I do not say that all industries have asked for it, but I know of no industry that is objecting to it.

I have with me a pamphlet entitled, "Parliament of Canadian Industry" issued by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. It is the ninety-second annual report and is dated June 3, 1963. On page 13 of the report I read these words:

> The association notes with approval that all political parties recognize the role which manufacturing industry must play as a most important and most promising source of productive jobs for Canada's growing population.

I ask honourable senators to pay particular attention to this.

> This role amply justifies the Government proposal to establish a full cabinet voice for the manufacturing industry through the designation of a Minister and Department of Industry.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Did the association not afterwards withdraw that statement?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): This report is dated June 3, and they have not had much time.

Also, I would like to draw honourable senators' attention to an article which I read in the Toronto Globe and Mail of Monday, July 15, last. It probably appeared in the Ottawa Journal as well, but I was away that day and did not have an opportunity of reading that paper, as is my custom. However, in the Globe and Mail the article has a three-column heading which reads:

> Canada Must Automate or Lag, Domtar Tells Nipigon Chamber.
> This northwestern Ontario centre last week staged Domtar Day to stress the interdependence of the community....
> W. N. Hall of Montreal—

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Of Dominion Tar.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Did someone say he is quite a Tory? Well, some members can boast of that. However, I am not referring to his political persuasions.

> W. N. Hall of Montreal, president of Dominion Tar and Chemical Co. Ltd., argued in favour of the introduction of new methods and machines.

I am not going to read the whole report, but further on it says:

> The problems of dealing with the impact of automation clearly are beyond the capacity of labour, management or governments alone. What is required is a concentrated planning effort and program involving the three groups, Mr. Hall said.

Honourable senators, I feel that is an endorsement of this bill; at least, it is sufficient endorsement that we should send it to committee and find out some more about it. I have no doubt that you will send it to the committee. I can assure you that when it goes to the committee the young man who is to head this department, to whom Senator Lambert referred a moment ago, a man with both business and Government experience—as we know, he is a businessman from Montreal and was Deputy Minister of National Defence—will attend the committee meeting and I am sure will answer all your questions. At least, we will then obtain all the information that we should have before giving the bill third reading. Therefore, I trust the bill will be sent to committee, so that we can give it clause-by-clause consideration at the earliest opportunity.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, I do not wish to make any extended remarks, but the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford) has said that the Canadian Manufacturers' Association approved of the setting up of this department. Mr. Churchill, at page 1701 of House of Commons Hansard, quoted Mr. J. C. Whitelaw, Q.C., as follows:

> This role amply justifies the government proposal to establish a full cabinet voice for the manufacturing industry through the designation of a minister and department of industry.
> At the same time, the association has made it clear that it does not advocate the creation of yet another ministry and department, believing that the appropriate ends could be accomplished by reorganization and re-emphasis of existing facilities.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): It is certainly a very confused statement.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: That is my point; there is nothing definite about it.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): In one case the Honourable Mr. Churchill quotes the man as saying he is in favour of it, and in the next sentence he does not appear to be.

I question the right to quote from the Hansard of the other place, and I should have objected to the honourable leader doing so. I quoted from the actual document, and perhaps the honourable gentleman would like me to quote from it again.

Some Hon. Senators: No, no.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): It is definitely embodied in this document, which is an account of the speech, as I have said.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: You may provoke me to interrupt, if you continue.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford), bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Austin C. Taylor moved the second reading of Bill C-80, to amend the Atlantic Development Board Act.

He said: Honourable senators, in moving second reading of Bill C-80, which provides for certain amendments to the Atlantic Development Board Act, may I repeat what I stated on previous occasions, that all legislation, no matter how good it may be when originally passed, needs to be amended from time to time. In other words, no piece of legislation is ever perfect, even when it is amended.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Particularly if it is politically appropriate.

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): Therefore, as changes inevitably take place, as circumstances warrant and as the need arises, amendments are introduced in order that the legislation may be improved. This, honourable senators, is the purpose of the bill now before us.

You will recall that when the original bill to set up the Atlantic Development Board was before the Senate during the last session, I indicated my full support of the principle of the bill, but questioned whether the bill, when enacted, would perform the function for which it was originally intended. In order to indicate my position at that time I would like to quote a passage from my earlier remarks:

> It would appear to me, honourable senators, that there is no opposition to the principle of the bill now before us, but there is some difference of opinion as to its value as a means of improving the economic position of the Atlantic area.
> In studying this bill, and viewing it in relation to the intent, I feel that the purpose is good, but, like some others, I question whether or not it is to perform the function that some honourable members believe it will.

As a matter of fact, you will also recall that at the time I disagreed heartily with the then Minister of National Revenue when he stated:

> I consider that the proposed legislation to set up an Atlantic Development Board is the most forward step ever taken in my lifetime for the benefit of the Atlantic Provinces.

You will recall also that I stated I was not alone in my analysis of the bill, and I quoted an editorial from the Globe and Mail of December 7, 1962. Again, I should like to quote a part of that editorial for the record:

> It is difficult to share Mr. Flemming's enthusiasm. The legislation which he outlined will set up yet another organization to investigate the economic problems of the Maritimes, seek solutions, and make recommendations to the federal Government. It will, apparently have no executive authority and no funds to invest. If this sort of action could solve the difficulties of the Atlantic Provinces, Maritimers would have been prosperous years ago. If there is one thing they have not lacked in the past it has been investigation and advice.

Further on the editorial says:

> A wisely planned and administered program of federal investment in the area could create new jobs on private payrolls and swell the tax revenues of the provincial governments. This could bring about a real increase in Canada's production of wealth and a future saving in the federal government's expenses in the area. This is the type of action needed in the Maritimes. Fine words are not enough.

Then, again, may I repeat part of a statement made on December 16, 1962 by Mr. Richard Gwynn of Time News Service:

> A job needing to be done, certainly, and a promise to do something about it. Unhappily, performance turns out to be quite different from promise, and the Atlantic Development Board is quite probably the least competent piece of legislation offered to Parliament this year.
> Its terms of reference, the jargon for saying what it is supposed to do, its responsibilities, the methods it will go about meeting them, all are hopelessly ill-defined.

You will recall, honourable senators, that before I closed my remarks I stated as follows:

> —while I believe the bill is lacking in many respects, particularly since no provision is made for any reports that the board may come up with on capital projects recommended for approval, yet I support the bill, and at the same time I express the hope that there will be no conflict of interests between the National Economic Development Board, the National Productivity Council, and the board to be set up under this legislation.
> May I emphasize, honourable senators, that I am not one of those who believe the board to be set up by this legislation should be granted authority to spend money, but I do say that the Government should immediately introduce legislation complementary to this bill authorizing the establishment of a crown corporation or agency, such as an Atlantic Projects Commission or an Atlantic Provinces Development Bank or some similar institution, to bring into being and finance projects already found feasible, together with additional programs or projects that may be recommended by the board to be set up under this bill from time to time.

Honourable senators, it is because the bill now before us meets the objections I had to the original bill that I support fully the amendments incorporated in the bill we are dealing with now.

I shall take only a few minutes to refer to the various clauses of the bill itself. It appears to me that little explanation is needed because it is framed in language that is quite easily understood. Therefore, it is my intention to refer only briefly to the various clauses which I think are most important.

Clause 1 of the bill, which is the interpretation clause, provides for a new subclause to which is added the word "fund", which of course means the Atlantic Development fund.

Clause 3 provides for the establishment of the board, together with a provision that the membership of the board be increased. It will be noted that the bill provides for eleven members instead of the five provided for in the original act.

I support this amendment fully, first by reason of the fact that a membership of five does not, in my opinion, give proper area representation and, what is more important, it does not allow for some important segments of the Atlantic industrial enterprises to be represented. This amendment will permit the appointment of representatives of our three main industries in the Atlantic area, namely, forestry, agriculture and fisheries, all of which are not represented on the present board. It will also allow for labour representation.

The new section 4 in clause 2 of the bill provides for the appointment of the members of the board and sets out their terms of office. While the membership of the board has been increased, provision still exists for staggering the terms of office of the members, guaranteeing that the board will always have in its membership men of experience in its operation.

Honourable senators, I personally am happy to know the present members of the board are to be continued in office and that they are all eligible for reappointment for a second term. I confess frankly, I am not acquainted with any of them personally except the present chairman, and while he and I have not agreed on some matters in the past, and probably will not do so in the future, we do agree on the great need for industrial development in the Atlantic region and on some avenues of approach to these problems. I am sure he will continue to serve the board with distinction and with all the energy and ability he possesses, and that, honourable senators, is in no small measure.

Clause 4 of the bill adds a new section to the act immediately following section 8, to be known as 8A. This section provides that the board shall become an agent of Her Majesty. It also provides that, subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, the board may enter into agreements or contracts either in the name of the board or in the name of Her Majesty. It also provides that any property acquired by the board becomes as well the property of Her Majesty. Section 8A also gives directions in relation to legal proceedings in the event any action is taken against the board.

Clause 5 of the bill repeals section 9 of the present act and substitutes a new section therefor. While much of the original section remains in the new section, the principal difference is found in the objectives and powers. The first major change is found in section 1 of the new section, having to do with the board's recommendation to the minister regarding programs and projects involving the use of the fund as well as programs and projects not involving the use of the fund. This provision is new because in the original act no fund was provided.

Paragraph (a) of subsection 1 is a new provision which permits the board, in consultation with the Economic Council of Canada, to prepare an overall plan for the economic growth of the Atlantic area. The main provision, however, is found in paragraph (d) of subsection 1, which provides that the board may, > with approval of the Governor in Council, enter into agreements with

> (i) the government of any province comprised in the Atlantic region or the appropriate agency thereof, or
> (ii) any other person, respecting the use of the Fund in financing or assisting in financing the undertaking and the carrying out of particular programs or projects described in subsection (1) of section 16.

It will also be noted that the board shall, at all times and to the greatest possible extent, co-operate with existing powers, departments, or agencies, having similar aims and objects to those related to the board.

Clause 6 of the bill repeals section 16 of the act and substitutes therefor an entirely new section. This, in my opinion, is the key section of the act. It provides for the establishment of the Atlantic Development Fund, determining first how the fund is to be established, and the purposes for which it can be used in the development of the Atlantic area. It provides for the establishment of a special account in the Consolidated Revenue Fund to be known as the Atlantic Development Fund. It also provides that no payment may be made by the Minister of Finance to the board under subsection 1, unless approved by the Governor in Council.

The final provision of clause 6, which becomes subsection 4 of the new section 16, provides that the total amount that may be paid to the board under subsection 1 and credited to the Atlantic Development Fund is $100 million.

Honourable senators, there has been some criticism from certain quarters that this amount is not sufficient to meet the needs of the Atlantic area and is only a drop in the bucket compared to what is needed to get our economy going. I agree that, in the long run, much larger sums may be needed, and in that case I am sure the Government will provide additional sums as needed.

This procedure has been followed by every government—I only need to refer to the Farm Credit Act, by way of example. I should like to point out too that the amount provided under this bill is 100 million times greater than that provided under the original act.

It has been stated in some quarters that the present bill did not need a special provision for the allocation of federal funds to assist in the development of the Atlantic area, but that all the resources of the nation were behind the original act. While this may be true to a degree, honourable senators, surely we must realize that no federal funds can be used for any capital projects without legislation authorizing the Government to so invest, and certainly a provision of this character was not and is not now in the present act. For that reason I consider this to be the most important clause of the bill.

Clause 7 repeals section 17 of the act and substitutes therefor a new section which provides that all expenditures under this act, except any amounts described in subsection 1 of section 16, shall be paid out of moneys appropriated by Parliament.

Honourable senators, there are two major developments in the Atlantic area to which I am sure you would expect me to refer. They are the Chignecto Canal and the Prince Edward Island Causeway. While I would not expect these vast projects would be carried out under this legislation, I would anticipate, because of their national importance and the magnitude of the undertaking, that the board would support the need for immediate action in relation to them. Though the construction of the Prince Edward Island Causeway has been declared feasible, I believe surveys are continuing even at this time. I think you will recall that some questions were asked during the last session in relation to investigations and surveys then continuing after an announcement had been made to the effect that it was feasible. I believe those surveys have continued since that time. I read in the press only a few days ago that soundings are still being taken across the strait to locate the best possible site for the causeway. However, once all doubts regarding its feasibility are removed I urge that prompt action be taken.

With respect to the Chignecto Canal, so far as I am aware, all surveys—and there have been many—declared its feasibility from a combined transportation and power development standpoint. I urge the Government to give immediate consideration to it because, as I have said on many occasions, the St. Lawrence Seaway will never be completed until the Chignecto Canal is an accomplished development.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: May I inquire of the honourable senator how many surveys have been made?

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): I think there have been about 16. Each one of them has reported that it is a feasible project. I refer to a statement made by the President of The Foundation Company of Canada in Saint John a few years ago when he reiterated the same statement that was incorporated in the last report.

Incidentally, honourable senators, I would like to say at this point that I have in mind the development of the Chignecto Canal will be of tremendous importance to the farmers of the Atlantic area. I am thinking in terms of the Freight Assistance on Western Feed Grains plan that is now in effect, and has been since 1941, under which many millions of tons of grain have been shipped to the Atlantic area from western Canada.

I should also say that the western farmers have supported that idea and policy. While it is not backed by legislation at the present moment, I hope that it may be soon. I do know that there has been some criticism of it because it has been stated on more than one occasion that the farmers have not received all the benefits of that transportation assistance. I agree to a certain extent because during the closed season of navigation, when there is not sufficient storage for grain in the Atlantic area, some advantage is taken of that condition, prices have gone up, and the farmers have paid more than they should without getting the full benefit of the transportation assistance. I am hopeful, because of the fact that the location of the proposed Chignecto Canal is in the centre of the agricultural areas of the Maritime provinces, that vast elevator space may be provided there as storage for the grain when it is shipped down during the transportation season.

I believe that these two major projects are of the class and character that may well come under the provisions of Part II of the Department of Industry Bill. I am referring to the part which makes provision for area development. It will be noted that this is contained in subclause (b) of clause 10 of the bill, and as well in clause 11. In order to indicate the particular provision I should like now to read from clauses 10 and 11 of the Department of Industry Bill. Clause 10, which is on page 3 of the bill under "Part II. Area Development", reads as follows:

> The powers and duties of the Minister in relation to the Agency referred to in section 12 shall include—

I omit paragraph (a) and read (b):

> (b) the preparing and carrying out of such programs and projects to improve the economic development of designated areas as may be appropriate to the purposes of this Part and that cannot suitably be undertaken by other departments, branches or agencies of the Government of Canada.

Clause 11 of the bill reads:

> Subject to any existing statutory provisions, the Governor in Council may authorize and direct departments, branches and agencies, of the Government of Canada to undertake in the execution of their respective duties and functions such special measures as may be appropriate to facilitate the economic development of any designated area or the adjustment of industry in that area.

Honourable senators, I believe this confirms my analysis of the particular provision I have referred to. I feel confident that the new board after an analysis of all reports to date will recommend an early start on these two major developments.

If I am permitted, I should like to make reference to the Executive Secretary of the Board, Dr. Ernest Weeks. This young man grew up in my home community. The son of a United Church minister, he is a brilliant scholar, a man of ability and integrity, and being a native son of the area and one who is familiar with our needs he will, I am sure, render valuable service to the board.

Honourable senators, I think those of you who know me best will agree when I say that throughout my political career I have placed my country before party politics. I am confident that the honourable senator from Madawaska-Restigouche (Hon. Mr. Fournier) will bear me out in that statement. He will recall on many occasions when he was a member of the government of the province of New Brunswick, and I was the Leader of the Opposition for a short time, that I supported measures which his government introduced and which I felt were in the best interests of the province of New Brunswick. I am sure he will agree with that statement.

I think this also is evidenced by the fact that since my appointment to this honourable house I have supported fully legislation which I believe to be in the interests of the Canadian people. I need only refer to the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act, the Farm Credit Act, and a number of amendments to existing legislation that were introduced by the recent Conservative Government.

Therefore, honourable senators, in concluding my remarks in this debate on second reading of this bill, I solicit in a sincere way the support of all honourable members of this house for the Government's attempt to assist in the development of the economy of the Atlantic area, which it is hoped will have the result that we who live in and love that part of Canada may become equal partners with the other parts of Canada and share in the benefits accruing from the development of the vast natural resources of this nation.

Honourable senators, if this bill is given second reading, I shall move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce for further consideration.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Blois, debate adjourned.

28906-6—19

NEWFOUNDLAND SAVINGS BANK ACT, 1939

BILL TO REPEAL—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Calvert C. Pratt moved the second reading of Bill S-4, to repeal The Newfoundland Savings Bank Act, 1939.

He said: Honourable senators, in moving the second reading of this bill I should say that its purposes are to repeal the Newfoundland Savings Bank Act, 1939, to provide for the payment into the Consolidated Revenue Fund of the Province of Newfoundland of the surplus money received by the Newfoundland Savings Bank from the disposal of its assets and liabilities, and to facilitate the winding up of the bank.

As stated in the explanatory note to the bill, the Bank of Montreal has acquired all the real and personal property and has assumed all of the active deposit accounts of the Newfoundland Savings Bank pursuant to an agreement dated March 30, 1962. The remaining minor and contingent liabilities have been paid by the savings bank or assumed by the province.

The legislation in respect of the Newfoundland Savings Bank appears in the Statutes of Newfoundland, having been continued therein after Union in 1949, but this Parliament may repeal, abolish or alter that statute as the subject of banks is within its exclusive jurisdiction.

The bank has no capital stock, and the surplus money remaining after the disposal of its banking business becomes the property of the province upon the winding up of the bank. The province has stated that all related transactions have been completed and has expressed a wish that the Newfoundland Savings Bank Act be repealed.

It may be of interest to honourable senators for me to mention at this time some of the facts in relation to the establishment and operation of the Newfoundland Savings Bank. The bank was established in 1834, during the period of representative government which came into being in 1830.

All the deposits had been guaranteed by acts of Parliament, introduced first by the representative government, then by responsible government which came into being in 1855, and later by governments in changing forms, namely, dominion government, commission government, and then the provincial government.

It had always been a savings bank, with its assets having been created by the investment of the savings of the people and accrued interest. The operation throughout the years had been conducted by three trustees appointed by the Newfoundland Government.

The bank survived during the period of serious economic conditions in the 1890s which caused the failure of the two commercial banks of Newfoundland in 1894.

The Newfoundland Savings Bank continued in operation until March 30, 1962, when a sale made by the Government of Newfoundland to the Bank of Montreal came into effect. The bank sold to the Bank of Montreal real and personal property valued at approximately $29,600,000, with deposit accounts of approximately $27,800,000. In addition to that, the Bank of Montreal paid approximately $771,000 with, of course, the assumption of liability for deposit accounts.

It will be applicable to point out that in the budget speech which was presented in the provincial house in March 1962, a statement was made that the surplus amounts from this transaction that came to the Government over and above the existing liabilities were not to be retained in the actual Government revenue, but were to be distributed in this way: About three-quarters of a million dollars was to be paid by way of adjustments to the depositors of the savings bank, about $1 million by way of a special endowment fund to the children of Newfoundland, and the balance by way of assistance to fishermen in the acquisition of better fishing gear and in other ways helpful to those engaged in the industry.

One other fact, which I am sure will be of interest, is that under the terms of the transfer the Bank of Montreal had agreed to employ all existing officers and clerks of the savings bank on terms of employment not less favourable than those pertaining to the bank's own officers and employees, with full pension privileges in so far as the by-laws of the Bank of Montreal pension fund allow, as if such officers and clerks had been employed by the bank for the years they served with the savings bank.

Honourable senators, that sums up the general position. I have pleasure in moving the second reading of this bill.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: May I ask the honourable senator a question? What is the amount of the surplus assets which are to be vested in Her Majesty in the right of Newfoundland, under section 2?

Hon. Mr. Pratt: From the information available to me I would judge that assets approximate $2½ million.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Hollett, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

LETTER FROM PRIME MINISTER TO PROVINCIAL PREMIERS RESPECTING CONFERENCE

OFFICE OF THE PRIME MINISTER

Ottawa, July 12th, 1963.

(Copy of letter sent to the Premiers of all the Provinces)

Dear Premier .....

The replies that I have so far received to my letter of June 20th indicate that the Premiers of the Provinces generally look with favour on the suggestion of a federal-provincial conference to discuss matters of mutual interest in the sphere of pensions and related insurance benefits.

It is now expected that the resolution regarding the Canada Pension Plan, which I sent to you with my earlier letter, will be moved in the House of Commons next week. At that time the Minister of National Health and Welfare intends to make a statement fully outlining the Government's proposal. Copies of this statement will be sent to you as soon as it is made.

The Provinces will therefore shortly have before them the information needed in order that there may be useful federal-provincial discussion about pensions. This is already the case in another matter of interest to the Provinces, namely the federal government's proposal to promote increased employment by financial assistance, in the form of loans with provincial approval, to enable municipalities to augment or accelerate their capital works programmes. This proposal has been set out in detail in the Bill which is before the House of Commons.

I think it would be of value to the public, as well as to governments and others directly concerned, if federal-provincial discussions on these two matters were held as soon as possible.

Accordingly, I am now writing to enquire whether you would be able to attend a two-day conference in Ottawa on July 26th and 27th.

In addition to discussing pensions and this assistance to municipalities, such a meeting would provide opportunity for consideration of the procedure and timing of a full federal-provincial conference later in the year.

I would propose that the conference on July 26th and 27th should be held in camera, though of course each of us would be free before or after to make such public statements as he may wish regarding his government's views on the subjects under discussion.

Yours sincerely,

LETTER FROM PREMIER LESAGE TO PRIME MINISTER RESPECTING BILL C-76, AND EXTRACT FROM MINUTES OF LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY

OFFICE OF THE PREMIER

Province of Quebec

Quebec City, July 11, 1963.

The Right Honourable Lester B. Pearson, P.C.,
Prime Minister of Canada,
House of Commons,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Mr. Prime Minister:

Following my letter to you of June 7, 1963, asking you not to proceed with the establishment of a municipal loans fund until the provincial Premiers have had an opportunity to confer among themselves in the matter early in August, I feel I should formally draw your attention to a resolution that was unanimously agreed to in the Legislative Assembly on June 26.

Herewith is a copy of that document.

I must add that I am sure of expressing the unanimous feeling of the members of the Quebec Legislative Assembly when I say that they consider as a breach of your promise fully to respect provincial rights, in your management of the affairs of this country, the fact of proceeding unilaterally to establish a municipal loans fund which, according to your platform, was to be instituted solely in co-operation with the provinces.

Under the circumstances, your attitude forces me, most regretfully, to table this letter forthwith in the Legislative Assembly.

Please accept, Mr. Prime Minister, the assurance of my regards.

(signed) Jean Lesage

EXTRACT from the minutes of a meeting of the Quebec Legislative Assembly, held June 26, 1963:

"Moved by Mr. Dozois, seconded by Mr. Ducharme:

"That this House feels that bill No. C-76, respecting the "Municipal Development and Loan Act", which was introduced in the House of Commons by the Minister of Finance of Canada, is a serious infringement upon the exclusive jurisdiction and the autonomy of the province of Quebec in matters pertaining to municipal affairs, and requests that the provincial government consider the possibility of establishing a provincial system of municipal credit which would facilitate municipal loans."

"Motion unanimously agreed to."

Clerk of the Legislative Assembly.

THE SENATE

Thursday, July 18, 1963

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DIVORCE

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I desire to present 522 petitions in divorce. These petitions all concern cases that have previously been heard and passed by the Senate but have not yet been passed by the Commons.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: May I ask the honourable senator if we are still receiving petitions for divorce?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: We are still receiving them, yes, but we are simply filing them. The petitions I am now presenting are not those that have come to us in this session. Petitions coming in during this session will, we expect, be attended to when we reassemble in the fall. These are cases which have already been tried by the Senate Divorce Committee, passed by the Senate and sent on to the Commons. I am presenting them now merely as a precaution; I am taking time by the forelock.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: How many petitions have been received this session?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: At the moment I have not the complete count, but it is something of the order of 500.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: There was an article in the Montreal Gazette this morning to the effect that a tribunal or committee was to be set up for the hearing of divorce cases.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: A commission.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Yes, a commission. I do not wish to go into details, but will that commission be formed of members of the Senate, or is it to be a commission apart from the Senate?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I have no knowledge of such a proposal. I have received no indication of any kind that such is in the wind. I cannot answer for the Government, of course, but I think I would know something about it if such a suggestion were really in the air. I think it is not in the air; it is pure newspaper talk, and no such suggestion has been contemplated.

I should add that, as honourable senators know, there has been a bill before the House of Commons which I, in collaboration with the law officers of both houses and the then Chairman of the Private Bills Committee of the Commons, drew two sessions ago. It is not officially before any body, but it is in the air.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: It is in the offing.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes, it is in the offing. There is nothing official about it, and the Standing Committee on Divorce, for whom I speak, knows nothing officially. However, I would think there is a good possibility of that bill being passed, otherwise I would not have drafted it. That bill would give us authority to finish the work here, as well as initiating it. In that way the Commons would be relieved of responsibility in the matter.

Hon. Mr. Drouin: These divorce bills would not go to the Commons?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: No.

Hon. Mr. Drouin: What you are contemplating is that the bills would be handled solely by the Senate?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That is what I would advise, that the Senate be empowered to dissolve marriages by resolution. I am speaking now as an individual, of course. I think that is the proper solution to the present situation. We must not change the fundamentals of the judicial procedure which has been in vogue since Confederation. On the other hand, we can do all the work here and thus bring divorce cases to a just conclusion.

Hon. Mr. Drouin: Would it still require a bill, or would it be a mere resolution of the Senate?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: A resolution.

As I suppose all honourable senators know, and will agree with me, I am not in favour of changing the Constitution of Canada subversively by allowing one of the two houses to consent to a measure and send it to the Governor General and so cause it to become an act of Parliament with the consent of one house only. I am not in favour of that and I think every senator in this house will share that view.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The Parliament of Canada is a trinity of the two houses and the Crown.

Hon. Mr. Drouin: I would not call it a holy trinity.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It is also a mystery.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): It is not unholy.

Hon. Mr. Drouin: Considering those who are in charge of it.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: It is an arrangement which has worked very well for the people of Canada. We have had an orderly nation since 1867. We have made great progress in a law-abiding and well-organized and happy community. I am not for changing the fundamentals of our procedure. I am not in favour of any suggestion involving the passage of Acts of Parliament consented to by only one of our two houses.

On the other hand, the bill which I advise would provide a practical way of giving the Senate authority not only to do all the work and take all the real responsibility, as we have in the past, but it would let us finish the job as well by resolution. If Parliament makes that arrangement we will carry on this divorce work judicially, as we have in the past, to the very best ability of the many thoroughly experienced members on the Divorce Committee; and I am quite sure that we will in future hear much less about the subject when divorce procedure is carried on in that way.

PRIVATE BILL

THE NATIONAL LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY—FIRST READING

Hon. Harry A. Willis presented Bill S-34, respecting The National Life Assurance Company.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Willis moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next.

Motion agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY BILL

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the following report of the committee on Bill C-74, respecting the Department of Industry:

> Your committee recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 600 copies in English and 200 copies in French of their proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I move that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Mr. Hayden reported that the committee had considered Bill C-74, respecting the Department of Industry, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

Report adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, we had an extended and, I feel, a thorough debate on second reading of this bill. This morning the bill was considered before an excellent and well attended meeting of the Banking and Commerce Committee. The minister designate was present and answered all questions that were put forward. Under the circumstances, may I suggest that the bill receive third reading now?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Honourable senators, I move third reading of the bill now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

RIGHTS OF WOMEN

JURY SERVICE IN NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Muriel McQ. Fergusson: Honourable senators, in the Ottawa Journal of July 17 there appears a news item entitled, "Jury Duty out for NWT Women". The item, datelined, "Inuvik, N.W.T.", says:

> The Northwest Territories Council has rejected a bill that would allow women to serve on juries in criminal cases despite an objection by Commissioner B. G. Silvertz.
> Mr. Silvertz branded the move as "out of step with the times." He said the north was a pioneer country where women work along with men and that the importance of their work was steadily increasing.
> R. B. Olson, legal counsel for the Parliament of the North, recommended that the all-male council continue to exclude women from serving as jurors in murder, rape and comparable cases.
> He said women tend to have an emotional and not an intellectual approach needed in such cases.

I shall not read further from the article, honourable senators, but I wish to give notice that on Tuesday, July 23, I will inquire of the Government:

(1) If the statements and a recommendation to continue to exclude women in the Northwest Territories from serving on juries in certain cases, which statements appear in the Ottawa Journal of July 17th, were actually made by Mr. Olson, who, it is stated, is Legal Counsel for the Parliament of the North?

(2) If the statements and recommendations were made by Mr. Olson, did he seek or obtain any authority from the Department of Justice or any other department of Government for taking such a position?

(3) If no such authority was obtained, what action will be taken to discipline Mr. Olson for taking this position which is definitely opposed to the rights of women in Canada?

EMPLOYMENT

MUNICIPAL WINTER WORKS INCENTIVE PROGRAM—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, I give notice of an inquiry which I will make of the Leader of the Government on July 22 next.

Along with other honourable senators, I have received a copy of a memorandum addressed to members of the Senate and the House of Commons dated at Ottawa, July 12, 1963, signed by the Honourable Allan J. MacEachen and written on the letterhead of the Department of Labour, Mr. MacEachen being the Minister of Labour.

First of all, I would like to commend the minister for his action in this respect. To me, it is a rather unusual courtesy. The sending of a copy of this memorandum and a copy of the letter addressed to the provincial premiers, to members of the Senate as well as to members of the other place is an excellent precedent.

The inquiry that I propose to make has direct reference to paragraph 3 of the minister's letter, and is as follows:

> What measures will be taken to enforce the requirement described in paragraph 3 of the letter dated July 12, 1963 signed by Honourable A. J. MacEachen, Minister of Labour?

Honourable senators, as one of the instructions going forward to the provinces and to those who will be administering the winter works program, paragraph 3 reads:

> It is provided that the bulk of those employed under this plan must be persons who are unemployed or persons who would be unemployed if it were not for the employment made available through projects authorized under the program.

The inquiry is simply, what is going to be done to enfore that provision?

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Monday next, July 22, 1963, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

THE SENATE

ACOUSTICS IN PUBLIC GALLERIES

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, may I answer an inquiry of the honourable senator from River Heights (Hon. Mr. Haig) about the acoustics in the galleries of this chamber.

Hon. Mr. Drouin: Would you speak a little louder, please?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I did not know my honourable friend was sitting in the gallery.

The Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford) has directed me to answer the question.

I say this because I believe it is rather unusual for the chairman of any committee to be answering questions. Inquiries have already been made and an investigation is now under way to improve the acoustics in the galleries of this chamber. It is hoped that by the time Parliament reassembles after the recess a remedy will have been provided.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Honourable senators, may I thank the honourable chairman of the committee for the most efficient and expeditious way in which he made the inquiries.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, may I say that I have asked honourable Senator Blois, who adjourned the debate on the bill to amend the Atlantic Development Board Act, if he would allow me, with the leave of the Senate, to say a few words in explanation of Order No. 3, a bill to amend the Marriage and Divorce Act. He has agreed to that course being adopted. I am not to speak more than five or six minutes, and then I shall adjourn the debate until Wednesday next.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: May I ask when copies of the bill are going to be distributed? None have as yet been received.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: I am not starting to speak on the bill yet. I am merely telling the Senate that I have asked Senator Blois if I may proceed with Order No. 3 ahead of Order No. 2, for just a few minutes.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed that Senator Pouliot should proceed with second reading of this bill now?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot moved the second reading of Bill S-32, to amend the Marriage and Divorce Act.

He said: Honourable senators, I have been asked a few questions about the scope of this bill. It often happens when a bill is given first reading that the sponsor is asked to make a brief explanation. It is just such a summary explanation that I wish to give today, on the understanding that next week I shall be pleased to answer all questions about the bill.

The bill reads thus:

> Married women shall have the same rights as unmarried women for the sale and alienation of immovable property.

The first question that I have been asked is: How is it that you sponsor that legislation in the Senate when civil rights, according to the Constitution, belong to the provinces? I agree; but there is an exception for the solemnization of marriage, which is under the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces. Therefore, to understand my first point, I refer you to the British North America Act, sections 91 and 92, which deal with the exclusive jurisdiction, on the one hand, of the Parliament of Canada and, on the other hand, of the provinces. It has been submitted to the courts, and if you want to refer to the jurisprudence in the matter you will find the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada, covering several hundred pages, in one of the Reports for the year 1912. Then on an appeal to the Privy Council, the judgment of the Supreme Court was confirmed.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Have you the reference? What is the case?

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: The case was a reference by the Department of Justice to the Supreme Court of Canada about marriage, and it is so mentioned in the Supreme Court Reports. There are three volumes of Reports for 1912, and it is easy to find the appeal to the Privy Council. As soon as I return to my office I shall send my honourable friend a summary of the Privy Council's judgment.

Hon. Mr. Drouin: What year was the judgment?

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: 1912.

Hon. Mr. Drouin: Was that the judgment of the Supreme Court or of the Privy Council?

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Both judgments were given in 1912.

Hon. Mr. Drouin: Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: The judgment of the Privy Council was read by Lord Haldane, and is summarized as follows in Appeal Cases (1912) at page 880, and is also found in one of Plaxton's books.

Hon. Mr. Monette: Would the honourable senator permit me a question? Do I understand him to say that the passage he wishes to quote is a summary of the decision? I would prefer to have the exact text. This is a delicate matter, and if he has the text of the Privy Council's decision on that point I would prefer it to a summary.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Well, I am quite embarrassed: I asked for five minutes and to read the full decision would take me an hour. I gave the reference to my honourable colleague: Appeal Cases (1912) page 880. My honourable friend will have the summary and the text which he can read over if he wishes, but I wonder if honourable senators are interested in hearing the summary. It is not long, just a few lines.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: Go ahead with the summary.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Who made the summary?

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: It is the reporter for the Appeal Cases in London.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: You did not make the summary yourself?

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: It would have taken me some time and I could not have done it as well as the one who did it. It is 51 years ago.

Hon. Mr. Drouin: Read it.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: The headnote is—they call it headnote in England; and we call it juge—

Hon. Mr. Drouin: Here we call it footnote.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: It reads as follows:

> Under sections 91 and 92 of the British North America Act, 1867, the exclusive power conferred on the provincial legislature to make laws relating to the solemnization of marriage in the province > operates by way of exception to the exclusive jurisdiction as to its validity conferred upon the Dominion and enables the provincial legislature to enact conditions as to solemnization, and in particular as to the right to perform the ceremony which may affect the validity of the contract.

I am not the author of that quotation, but I have made a translation in French and I may read it or I may dispense with it. The language in the headnote is very clear, provided that one takes the trouble to read it twice—then there could be no difficulty in understanding it. But it is one of those things that deserves—

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Cogitation?

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Cogitation and concentration.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I ask the honourable senator a question? I caught the drift of the language while he was reading. Does the case refer in any way to the subject of property and civil rights?

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: It touches civil rights in the sense that civil rights are supposed to be under the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces, and an exception is made in section 91 of the B.N.A. Act to take it from the provinces and give marriage and divorce to the Parliament of Canada. Even then, it is not done very generously; they take part of it, the solemnization, and give it to the provinces to be under their exclusive jurisdiction.

I should like to be able to pass it now to my honourable friend, but I have had so much trouble recently that I want to send the text first to Hansard, and then I will send him another copy as soon as I return to my office. I hope that will be satisfactory.

Today I would ask my honourable colleagues not to ask me too many questions, but on Wednesday next I shall be at their entire disposal to answer all questions, and I will bring the books with me, because I think I owe you that. You are so generous to me that I must show some consideration to you, sir, and to my colleagues.

Now you know the source of the authority: it is the B.N.A. Act, and not even the whole of the B.N.A. Act but sections 91 and 92 of it, and then not the whole of those sections but one paragraph in each section. This is the source of the power, and if you act within the power conferred upon the legislative body, then you pass valid legislation. If you go beyond that, you encroach upon other legislative powers and the legislation is invalid. This seems to be clear.

When it was submitted to the Supreme Court and to the Privy Council it was submitted in reverse. It was about the validity of legislation concerning solemnization, and the Privy Council decided that that act was invalid because Ottawa did not have the right to pass legislation about the solemnization of marriage. Do you follow me? It means that all the rest beyond the solemnization belonged to the Parliament of Canada.

I will quote precedents. Honourable senators will find the precedents in the question that was put first on March 28, 1962. At first it was not answered. Parliament was dissolved. It was asked again in the fall, and my genial colleague, the honourable Senator Choquette, answered it, as I had done before. I was not a mind reader, but I knew the facts. He gave me a reply to my question.

My question, to summarize it and leaving aside all the previous considerations, was very simply:

> As the provinces did not have any jurisdiction concerning marriage except for the solemnization of it, did anyone ask the Government of Canada for the transfer of the exclusive legislative power on marriage from Ottawa to the provinces?

It means that the British North America Act should have been amended by the Imperial Parliament at London. The answer was "No". Nobody had asked anything. That was the answer on October 31 of last year.

My second question was:

> Did anyone ask the Government of Canada to use the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada to enact legislation about marriage?

The answer was "No". This covered the period from March 28, 1962, when the first question was put, until October 31, 1962.

Then I asked the same question, which can be found in the Debates of the Senate of July 11 last, to cover the period from November 1, 1962 until that date. The answer of the honourable Leader of the Government was the same as that given by honourable Senator Choquette, that nobody had asked the Government of Canada to take the necessary steps to have the Constitution changed in order that the exclusive powers of the Parliament of Canada with respect to marriage should be transferred to the provinces. Nobody had asked for it.

The second point is that nobody had asked the Government to pass legislation to remedy a situation about which so many complain. Now, that is that. The Parliament of Canada has full jurisdiction. In order to stop the complaints about the province of Quebec being such a backward province, that women do not have the rights they should have, the only thing to do is to unite and use our right to pass legislation to give married women the same rights that spinsters, widows and married or unmarried men have. It is that simple.

But, give them rights with respect to what? It is with respect to the power to sell or alienate immovable property, or real estate. That is the first step.

There are precedents of such federal legislation which have been cited in the question that was first answered by the honourable Senator Choquette in his capacity as acting Leader of the Government at the time, and later by the present Leader of the Government. You have the reference to the sections and the subsections of the British North America Act with which I have dealt. You have the quotation and the resumé of the judgment of the Privy Council which you can read, if you wish. It is available in the library.

You have also the precedents of federal legislation concerning marriage and civil rights. What was it? In the first place, it dates back to 1880 or 1882 when there was legislation sponsored by a distinguished lawyer of the time, who ended his days as a judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, Mr. Justice Girouard, to legalize the marriage of a brother-in-law to his sister-in-law. Afterwards there were various acts passed to legalize the marriage of a widow to her brother-in-law, or of an aunt to her nephew, or of an uncle to his niece.

It may seem queer to some honourable senators, but it is valid legislation, and it is a contradiction of the Civil Code of Quebec. That does not matter. The Parliament of Canada has passed that legislation which is valid, and today if a widower wishes to marry his sister-in-law then he may do so.

Honourable senators, in order to give my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Blois), who has been so generous, an opportunity to proceed with his legislation, I am willing to continue this debate on Wednesday next.

Hon. Mr. Dupuis: May I ask the honourable senator if during the recess he will find out whether Mr. Justice Mignault, one of our most eminent jurists, was in favour of the legislation he proposes to the Senate today? Does the honourable senator know his opinion in the matter?

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: If my honourable friend is asking a question, then I will say it is very interesting but it would take me a long time to answer it. If honourable senators wish me to answer it now—

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Answer it next week. Adjourn the debate.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Very well, I will move the adjournment of the debate until Wednesday of next week. I do it with regret, but I must follow the rules of sportsmanship. I express my thanks to the honourable Senator Blois and to all my honourable colleagues.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Pouliot, debate adjourned.

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland) for the second reading of Bill C-80, to amend the Atlantic Development Board Act.

Hon. Fred M. Blois: Honourable senators, this is the first opportunity I have had to speak this session in this chamber and to congratulate His Honour the Speaker on the high and honourable office he holds. I assure you, sir, that even though my commendation may be late it is nonetheless sincere.

I wish also at this time to extend a word of greeting to the new senators who have taken their seats during this session.

Honourable senators will recall that on the evening of February 5 last I started to make a speech but, due to great interest in the proceedings of the other place, I adjourned the debate and Parliament was dissolved the following day. I have not yet had an opportunity of making that speech. I do not intend to burden you with it today, but I should like to say that I intended at that time to make a report on the activities of the Canadian delegation to the Seventeenth Session of the General Assembly of the United Nations in New York, similar to the report I made during the session of 1960. It was my intention at that time to pay tribute to two other senators who attended that session as observers. Perhaps I might be allowed just to mention them now, because I may not have another opportunity for some time.

Honourable Senator McLean was there for the first part of the session and, unfortunately for us, it was at a time when there was a general debate going on in the Assembly. We had not got down to real work in the committees and, for that reason we lost considerable of the advice we might have had from a man with the business training of Senator McLean. However, he had a number of friends in the secretariat and around New York and in the Canadian Club. I met them with him, and these people were of considerable service to me later on during the Assembly meetings.

Also, following Senator McLean, Senator Fergusson attended the Assembly and she stayed on for the rest of the time. Being there as an observer and not attached to any one committee, she was able to be in attendance at any of the six committees. I must say that she did an excellent job. She seemed to know just when exciting events were going to take place and she was on the job. I know that she attended many meetings of my Committee No. 2 on social and economic affairs. I think I have already expressed the thought to some of the members of the house that I believe Senator Fergusson left the General Assembly with a broader general knowledge of what went on during that session than perhaps any of the rest of us.

I trust that the present Prime Minister, the Right Honourable L. B. Pearson, will recognize her knowledge and ability for the next session of the General Assembly coming up this September.

I would like to compliment Senator Taylor (Westmorland) on his very able presentation on second reading of Bill C-80. We on this side of the Senate always listen with attention whenever Senator Taylor speaks. That of course does not mean we always agree with all he says, although at times we do on certain points.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: We very seldom do.

Hon. Mr. Blois: The Atlantic Development Board Act was discussed at some length both in the other place and in the Senate in December of last year. We have now before us Bill C-80, which is an act to amend the Atlantic Development Board Act. The original act was designed to study and recommend to the Government ways and means of giving aid to the Atlantic provinces, so that those provinces would have a standard of living more in line with the rest of Canada.

It is not necessary for me to go into details of the reasons for the present conditions in the Atlantic provinces. There are many such reasons, and a recital of them at this time would probably accomplish nothing. I do believe, however, that all of the other provinces of Canada realize that we do have many problems. I believe further that the other provinces are ready and willing to assist us. I know that all of Canada recognizes the fact that we in the Atlantic provinces have a special situation, deserving of special attention, special consideration and prompt action.

When Bill C-94 was introduced in the other place at the last session, the press of the Atlantic provinces gave headlines to the event to such an extent that some of our citizens thought that this would be a cure-all for our problems. However, after careful thought, our people realized that the problems which had been building up ever since Confederation could not be removed at one stroke or by adopting some simple formula. To bring about any worthwhile improvement in the Atlantic economy will take time and will require most painstaking negotiations between the federal Government and the provinces, as well as the co-operation of the presently existing bodies which are doing much to improve the situation there.

None of us from the Atlantic provinces expected this board to solve all our problems immediately, but, as Senator Connolly (Halifax North), speaking in this chamber on December 13 of last year, said:

> In its intent this bill at least offers some little hope.

Later in his remarks, Senator Connolly said:

> . . . it is the only tangible gesture in more than thirty-five years . . . that has been offered to the people of the Atlantic provinces.

The honourable senator in his fluent style had much more to say, with some of which I could not agree. I am sorry Senator Connolly is not in his seat at the moment when I am referring to him. It may not be surprising that we do not always agree. Since our days of the late 1930's in the Nova Scotia Legislature we have agreed and we have disagreed but, I am happy to say, we have remained close friends.

I am not one of those who expected the Atlantic Development Board to be a cure-all for our problems. However I think it had excellent possibilities.

In my opinion, the five-member board was composed of men who had extensive knowledge of our problems and doubtless would come up with some worthwhile suggestions for our betterment. These men, along with the executive director, a native of the Atlantic provinces, Dr. E. P. Weeks, in my opinion were in a position to do much for the Atlantic provinces.

With regard to Bill C-80 now before us, I am not going to suggest that it is a bad bill, or that it should be killed in this chamber. On the other hand, I think it is unnecessary, and I cannot see that the amendment it proposes will accomplish anything which could not be accomplished under Bill C-94. In my opinion, increasing the membership of the board from five to 11 will not improve it. I have always been in favour of small boards with as few members as is practical—I emphasize those words, "as is practical".

Honourable senators, I should like to quote further from what honourable Senator Connolly (Halifax North) said during the last session:

> Questions were asked in another place about the size of this board. It was said on one occasion that the board should be enlarged to 15. To me such a number would be a nuisance, and would simply nullify or seriously impede the work of the organization.

Once again I can agree to a large extent with Senator Connolly.

It has been said in certain quarters that the enlargement of the board is for political control. In my opinion this is much too important to the Atlantic provinces to have politics enter into it.

Another section of the amendment deals with the setting up of a fund of $100 million. Many of us would have preferred to leave this open, without any definite amount being set for any definite time. As you will recall, this $100 million is for a period of five years. $100 million does seem like a lot of money, but when we consider that there are four provinces and it is to be spent over a period of five years on a pro rata basis, it means $5 million per year for each province. To those who know anything about industry, such a sum of money will accomplish little. However we in the Atlantic provinces are thankful for small mercies. If it is necessary, there may be some way of raising more money.

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): May I ask the honourable senator where he gets the idea that it is to be for only five years?

Hon. Mr. Blois: I think the act says that, if I have read it correctly.

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): I do not think so.

Hon. Mr. Blois: It says, up to 1969.

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): No, that was not in the bill that was passed.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I believe it was in the original bill submitted in the other place, but there was an amendment.

Hon. Mr. Blois: There was a change in the date.

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): That has been deleted in the bill now before us.

Hon. Mr. Blois: You are probably correct, and I may be wrong. However, it is not a large amount. There is no time limit now. It may run up to 50 years, which would be still worse. The amount is fixed.

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): It is $100 million more than provided for in the previous bill.

Hon. Mr. Blois: No, there was no limit in the previous bill. Obviously there is no point in passing a bill unless you can spend money under it.

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): Where is it in the bill? My friend knows better than that.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): The restriction to five years was taken out of the bill at the request of the Opposition in the other house.

Hon. Mr. Blois: I am glad it was taken out. I agree it should be out.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Oh, I thought you were in disagreement with it.

Hon. Mr. Blois: Honourable senators, while admitting we have serious problems in the Atlantic provinces, I am not one of those who believe that everything is going to the dogs. We do have some depressed areas, but we also have some very bright spots, and I am proud of the fact that there has been substantial development in the past few years. I have always been an optimist. I refuse to be a pessimist. Perhaps my reason for having faith in my province of Nova Scotia is the fact that I have been connected with a firm there for 46 years. I refer to Stanfields Limited, which for over 80 years has been manufacturing in Nova Scotia and shipping its goods to every section of Canada. I believe what one firm can do could be duplicated by others.

The success of this firm has not been due to any government intervention, but to good management, up-to-date equipment, a study of market conditions, manufacturing quality goods and having a working force of men and women second to none on the American continent.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Blois: I am proud to say this company is giving employment to 700 persons. I do not think I am being partisan when I say the best thing that has ever happened to Nova Scotia was the election of the Stanfield government in 1956. The improvement in our overall economy since that time, while perhaps not dramatic, has been steady and has continued, and I firmly believe it will continue as long as the present government of Nova Scotia remains in office.

A great deal of research has been carried out by the four provinces themselves and by the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council. It is my intention to refer particularly to the economy in Nova Scotia, as no doubt other senators will speak for their own provinces.

As I have already mentioned, the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council is doing a splendid job for the four provinces, and my province works closely with them. In return, they co-operate with all our industrial and tourist committees.

Then we have the Nova Scotia Research Foundation, under the able direction of its president, Dr. H. D. Smith, which is doing considerable research work for various industries interested in locating in the province. One survey has extended over a period of nearly five years and, working closely with other government boards, has resulted in a new industry which will spend some $12 million in plant and equipment. In addition the foundation places the services of its technical staff to assist industry already established.

One of the first accomplishments of the Stanfield government was to set up a Crown corporation known as Industrial Estates Limited, which operates to attract industry to the province. It does this by offering to build and lease on long and favourable terms whatever buildings may be necessary. This is done only after the most thorough study of the product to be produced, the financial standing of the interested party and, perhaps most important of all, the proposed management.

Industrial Estates Limited, as I have mentioned, is a Crown company financed by the Nova Scotia government. It works quietly, without any government interference. It is composed of a 12-man board of directors and a six-man advisory council. The president, Frank H. Sobey, is a prominent and successful businessman. The I.E.L. works closely with the Nova Scotia Department of Trade and Industry, the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council and the Nova Scotia Research Foundation.

Since Industrial Estates was set up some six years ago, it has assisted in the establishment of more than 30 new industries, seven or eight of which have been established since the first of this year. Time does not permit the naming of all of these, but I might mention some very recent ones: Volvo, a Swedish automobile manufacturer. In this industry credit must be given to the co-operation of the Honourable George Nowlan, who was Minister of Finance at the time. Another great advantage that the establishment of a company like Volvo carries is that usually it does not manufacture all the component parts of the car. The company inserts advertisements in the newspapers inviting various industries to supply parts that are needed. As one instance, we have a small battery factory in Nova Scotia which has been successful in getting a contract with Volvo, and will now require additional buildings and an enlargement of its staff.

At Brookfield, eight miles from my home town of Truro, the Canada Cement Company is to build a $12 million plant which will have an annual production of five million bags of cement. Also, in my home town a carpet industry is under way, a joint venture of an old-established English carpet company and an old American carpet company.

On Saturday of last week the Chronicle-Herald of Halifax published the announcement that an agreement had been reached between the government of Nova Scotia and Acadia Fisheries of Mulgrave, whereby the Nova Scotia government would loan the company $1½ million toward the re-establishment of a $3 million fish plant at Canso.

Honourable senators, may I be permitted to read an editorial from the Chronicle-Herald, dated July 16:

> No part of Nova Scotia has suffered from economic stagnation for a longer period than the Strait of Canso area.
> The first indication of an upturn in the fortunes of this picturesque but unemployment-ridden section of the province came with the establishment by Nova Scotia Pulp Limited of a $40 million pulp mill at Point Tupper. Unfortunately, few of the benefits from this huge industry have accrued to the town of Canso or its immediate environs.
> All Nova Scotians, therefore, will rejoice in the announcement that Acadia Fisheries Limited is to build a new $3 million fish processing plant at Canso. Not only will the move mean expansion in the fisheries, with particular advantages for hard-pressed inshore fishermen, it will reverse the decline in population which has been the result of a stagnant economy.
> In 1921, for example, Canso had a population of 1,626. Since then the decline has been gradual but steady so that by 1961 the town had only 1,151 people, a drop of thirty per cent in four decades.
>
> In the words of Mayor James E. Hanlon, the weekend announcement was "the best thing for Canso in the last half century."
> In all, employment will be provided for about 775 persons.

The editorial goes on to state:

> Some 30 million pounds of fish annually will be required to supply the operation.

The article continues:

> Other benefits will flow from establishment of the processing plant. New trawlers will be needed; and, with the aid of federal subsidies, there is a good chance some of these will be built in Nova Scotia. Negotiations are also underway with the federal government for the provision of new and improved wharves and other harbour facilities.
> Perhaps most important, the people of Canso have shown they are prepared to shoulder the financial responsibilities entailed in expansion. Only last night they ratified an earlier informal decision to install a water utility needed to service the plant.
>
> New schools, churches and businesses are sure to follow.
> Canso's participation in Nova Scotia's burgeoning economic development is doubly pleasing. It means the revitalizing of a long-dormant area; and it will add something to the prosperity of every Nova Scotian.

The editorial also referred to the $40 million pulp plant on the Strait of Canso that was put into operation some three years ago and has become a tremendous enterprise.

Another problem of serious concern to Nova Scotia has been the tourist industry. The difficulty in Nova Scotia has been lack of accommodation and the scarcity of good restaurants.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Would the honourable gentleman repeat that last statement?

Hon. Mr. Blois: I said that the problem in Nova Scotia had been the lack of accommodation and scarcity of good restaurants. These were the two main factors that impeded the tourist trade. The Nova Scotia government is actively supporting those who build motels, by lending up to 60 per cent of the cost of construction and allowing the owner up to 18 years to pay off the loan.

The Nova Scotia Government has been so concerned about the economic situation in the province that over a year ago it set up a new department under the able guidance of the Honourable G. I. Smith, as Provincial Minister of Economics and Finance. At a recent meeting Honourable Mr. Smith said that Nova Scotia has embarked on a systematic program of voluntary planning. He defined voluntary planning in this way:

> It is the mobilization by mutual action of the knowledge, skill, energy and creativeness of all our people in a planned voluntary and determined effort to increase our rate of economic growth.

Honourable senators, we have been doing fairly well in our manufacturing. In 1962 the sales value of factory shipments in Nova Scotia was up over the previous year by 8.6 per cent, and the all-Canadian increase was 8.3 per cent. So, for once we are beginning to average with other sections of Canada. On a per capita basis, the wage rate in Nova Scotia from 1956 to 1961 rose by 17 per cent, against an 11 per cent rise in the Canadian average.

I have mentioned these facts and figures to show that Nova Scotia is doing much for herself. Perhaps Premier Stanfield stated it rather well the other day at the first voluntary planning conference when he said:

> We have so many prophets of gloom wailing in the wilderness today that some of us overlook the progress our economy in Nova Scotia has made.

I have mentioned the many things Nova Scotia is doing for herself, but our limited financial resources do not allow the province to do as much as is needed. Therefore, we welcome the advent of the Atlantic Development Board Act and the Department of Industry Act. We welcome their assistance in the so-called distressed areas; we trust and believe they will work in close harmony with our present boards, and that in a reasonable time the Atlantic provinces will have an economy comparable with that of the other provinces of Canada.

Last week I had the honour and pleasure of taking part in the Tenth Annual United Nations Seminar held at Mount Allison University, Sackville, New Brunswick. Close to 150 senior high school students from the four Atlantic provinces were in attendance. They represented the various member nations of the United Nations. They conducted a regular United Nations General Assembly, and I can assure you that the speeches made by those young people would do credit to the regular delegates to the General Assembly at New York. I know my good friend Senator Isnor will agree with me that the future of the Atlantic provinces is in good hands. That is the feeling I left there with, and I was extremely proud that I could claim to be from one of those provinces.

Hon. Muriel McQ. Fergusson: Honourable senators, like the senator who immediately preceded me in this debate, I would like to welcome you, Mr. Speaker, to this house, to congratulate you on your elevation to your high office, and to extend to you my best wishes. I also extend good wishes to the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford) and to the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks), both of whom have shown that they are fully capable of carrying on the responsibility that devolved upon them. Also I would extend warm and sincere good wishes to all new senators.

I should like to thank the honourable Senator Blois for his kind reference to my attendance at the General Assembly of the United Nations last year, an experience which I enjoyed immensely and concerning which I hope to be able to speak to honourable senators later on in the session. I was greatly impressed by the work of the honourable Senator Blois at the General Assembly which I attended.

Honourable senators, I was not in Canada when the Atlantic Development Board Act was passed by the last Parliament. Had I been here I would doubtless have spoken on it, because while I was happy that the board had been set up I was deeply disappointed that no money had been set aside for carrying on its work, and I also felt at that time that there should be more members on the board. For these reasons I certainly welcome the amendments now before us.

It is my opinion that the Maritime provinces, with some assistance such as we hope to secure through the amended Atlantic Development Board Act, can become as thriving a part of this country as we all know they were before Confederation in 1867. I also believe that such assistance will greatly help the economy of Newfoundland.

It seems to me that in those provinces we need to give more attention to the development of electric power, for power is essential to cheap electrical rates and cheap electrical rates are essential for progress.

In New Brunswick, where I come from, we are making strides in technical training, but I believe that even more attention should be given to it so that in our eastern coastal provinces, which have always supplied a great deal of the human resources that have enriched much of Canada, we can build up a pool of machinists, chemists, and many other technical trainees needed to carry on secondary industries. Cheap power and the availability of a large pool of technically trained people will undoubtedly bring to the Atlantic provinces the much-needed secondary industries, without which we cannot hope to compete with other provinces.

Honourable senators, I welcome the addition of members to the board. I have much admiration for the present members, but I do not think they represent a sufficiently wide diversity of interests.

When I was fortunate enough to be a member of the New Brunswick Regional Reconstruction Council in 1945, I remember that there were 10 members on that board, drawn from all walks of life. There were representatives of manufacturing, labour, industry, agriculture, lumbering, fishing, coal mining and others, as well as a representative of the women of the province, and they all contributed a great deal to our deliberations.

I believe the membership of the Atlantic Development Board should have as broad a base as the Reconstruction Council had, and I trust that at least one woman will be included among the members, for women make up almost 50 per cent of the population of the Atlantic provinces.

Hon. Malcolm Hollett: Honourable senators, I hesitate to say I will not be more than five or six minutes because I recently witnessed one senator get up for five or six minutes and sit down twenty minutes later.

It is indeed a privilege to have an opportunity to say a few words in this house on this amended version of the Atlantic Development Board Act. I do not intend to enter into a debate relative to the need, or otherwise, of this amendment, except to say that it was perhaps a smart political move. But knowing politics as I do, I realize how important it was for the present administration to look to the future.

If this board makes a success of fulfilling its objects and powers—and I pray that it will—then naturally the Liberals will endeavour to take the credit, and I don't blame them. If, however, the desired success is not forthcoming, then the originators of the act will undoubtedly get some blame.

Personally, I have no strong objection to the increase in the board membership. Political arguments aside, the board's usefulness in assisting the Atlantic provinces will depend, first, on their individual qualifications and vision, secondly, upon the degree of assistance, financial and otherwise, of the federal Government and, thirdly, upon the co-operation of each of the four provinces concerned.

The one item in this amendment I do not approve of is the limitation in the amount of expenditures to $100 million.

I cannot speak with certainty for any of the other three provinces concerned, but for Newfoundland, where I have lived all my life, I feel I can speak with some measure of accuracy.

Our per capita income in Newfoundland is only about 57 per cent of the national average and only 81 per cent of the average in the Maritimes. On the other hand, our cost of living there is approximately 20 per cent higher. These figures are taken from recent statistics.

We came late into Confederation and, in consequence, our social capital expenditures up to that time were small compared to mainland Canada and, since 1949, they are only about 60 per cent of the national average. Our public services are likewise low, compared to the rest of Canada.

Naturally, in a large measure these conditions can be attributed to our low level of industrial development; and this in turn, to some extent, is caused by our position in the Atlantic Ocean, being so far removed from the great centres of population in North America and Europe. We can hope only for successful secondary industries in relation to the raw materials we possess, which I think are in abundance. We have fish of all kinds; we have minerals—lead, zinc, copper, iron, and so on; and we have our forests, not to mention our water power. Around these must be built new and secondary industries, if our people are to prosper and continue to live on the island and have equal opportunities with the rest of Canada.

Our fisheries and our fishermen have been neglected—there is no question about that; they have been overlooked and, I regret to say, in my opinion have been exploited unfairly for so long that an all-out effort will be necessary if we are to convince them that being a Canadian is really something of which to be proud.

Honourable senators, I want to quote a few sentences from an economic survey which was made by the Newfoundland Board of Trade in 1961, in proof of some of the things I have said:

> While this development has been quite significant in itself, it has not yet been able to bring us within hailing distance of the Mainland. On a per capita basis, our holdings of social capital—housing, roads, public buildings, etc.—undoubtedly are lower than those of any other Canadian province or state of the American Union. In fact, the Canadian or American average must be several times that of Newfoundland. This provides a direct indication of our inferior level of material welfare. In addition, our holdings of industrial capital are of a low order by comparison to North American standards. This reflects adversely on the present productivity of our economy and on its capacity to generate a higher level of output from its internal resources.

Further it says:

> Yet, we are hard put to find profitable employment for the present labour force of the province. This is, indeed, our most crucial problem.

I believe this is the problem, to some extent, all across Canada.

> It stems from the fact that our economy rests too exclusively on the exploitation of a narrow range of resources—

It says, "a narrow range of resources", but I do not agree with that.

> —requiring a limited labour force in their processing. Unfortunately, efforts to bring what diversification we may to our economy will be hampered by the unpreparedness of our workers.

Of course, this has been taken care of to a certain extent, and will be taken care of in the future to a larger extent by the vocational training schools which have been set up.

Honourable senators, in the mail this morning there came to my office the APEC Newsletter of July 1963. It contains an interesting article which is headed:

> APEC looks at European Regional Development.

In case any honourable senator does not remember the exact meaning of APEC, it is the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council. APEC has been looking at the economic conditions in the Atlantic provinces, and, as a matter of fact, looking at them quite extensively, in my opinion. The article begins:

> In April and May this year, Nelson Mann, APEC's Executive Vice-President, visited England, Scotland, Northern Ireland, Eire and the Netherlands and contacted senior government and business officials and university professors and consultants. This is the first in a series of two articles in which he tells what these countries are doing for regional development.
> Briefly, the highlights for the attraction of industry to "slow growth" areas or regions are: in England, Scotland and Wales, the Government will give an outright grant of up to 25 per cent for new plant plus 10 per cent for machinery, and these capital assets can be depreciated at the rate the owners wish; in Northern Ireland new industry establishing may receive 33⅓ per cent grant against its capital needs (plant and machinery) or rental of factory space at attractive rates (lower than 25c per sq. ft.); in Eire the Government will pay a grant of up to 66⅔ per cent of the cost of the fixed assets for factories built in Western Eire, and up to 50 per cent in all other areas; in the Netherlands the Government grants paid amount to approximately $1 per sq. ft. for space under 20,000 sq. ft. with larger plants being eligible for grants up to $2 per sq. ft.

Then the article makes some comments about the promotion of "slow growth" regions in the Netherlands. I commend the reading of this Newsletter to all honourable senators.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): To the new Minister of the Department of Industry?

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Mr. Mann?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): No, I was suggesting you might commend the reading of that article to the new Minister of the Department of Industry.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: I would leave that to the honourable Leader of the Government, who is more familiar with the new minister than I am—at least, I hope so. It is a good article and has reference to things which definitely apply, if not to the whole of Canada, to the Atlantic provinces.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I will be glad to bring it to the minister's attention.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: I thank the honourable Leader.

Getting back to the Atlantic provinces, from statistics released by the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council the following facts are of interest in connection with my own province: In 1961, 406 million pounds of cod fish—and I am getting right back to Newfoundland now—netted Newfoundland fishermen $10\frac{1}{3}$ million, or $2\frac{2}{5}$ cents per pound. In that same year, 101 million pounds of cod netted Nova Scotia fishermen nearly $3\frac{1}{2}$ million or $3\frac{2}{5}$ cents per pound; that is, one cent per pound more than was paid to Newfoundland fishermen.

Hon. Mr. Blois: Better fish!

Hon. Mr. Hollett: My honourable friend from Nova Scotia says, "better fish". Most of our fish comes from the Grand Banks off Newfoundland, and it must be of the best quality.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Everything from Nova Scotia is the best.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Newfoundland fishermen caught nearly 26 million pounds of haddock in 1961, which fetched less than $600,000, or $2\frac{3}{10}$ cents per pound. On the other hand, Nova Scotia fishermen that same year caught and sold 63 million pounds of haddock for $\$2\frac{3}{4}$ million, or $4\frac{2}{5}$ cents per pound. In other words, the Nova Scotia fishermen received $2\frac{1}{10}$ cents per pound more for their haddock than did the Newfoundland fishermen.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: What year was that?

Hon. Mr. Hollett: 1961.

There are certain reasons why there should be some difference between the price obtained by the Nova Scotia fishermen and our own, but to my mind $2\frac{1}{10}$ cents per pound is rather a big difference. I am talking in pounds, not 100 pounds.

Then again, Newfoundland lobster netted the fishermen there 32 cents per pound, whilst Nova Scotia lobster brought 39 cents, or a difference of 7 cents per pound. They may be good fishermen in Nova Scotia, but the lobsters are not any better.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Can the honourable gentleman say why there is this price differential?

Hon. Mr. Hollett: I hinted at some of the reasons, but I shall come to that later.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Was the retail price the same as in Nova Scotia?

Hon. Mr. Hollett: I do not know, because I have taken the average amount of fish caught and the amount of money that came in and have worked it out at so much per pound.

Hon. Mr. Pratt: Does the honourable senator know that most of the fish to which he refers is sold at these prices on the Canadian market? From the plants in Nova Scotia it is loaded on cars and dispatched directly to consumer interests or distributors, while from Newfoundland it is sent by steamer to warehouses, which is the only way it can be done, and is then redistributed and the resultant cost means that you have practically no Canadian market.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: That is just an excuse.

Hon. Mr. Pratt: If you knew the entire case you would not make such an emphatic statement.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: If the honourable senator would wait until I finish he would not be so caustic in his remarks. The honourable senator is interested in fishing; at least, he has knowledge of concerns that are interested in fish.

Let us take for a moment the case of salt bulk codfish.

Hon. Mr. Pratt: Salt bulk codfish is not the correct term, in the circumstances.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Heavy salted fish. We do not have any filleted heavy salted fish, do we? I never heard of it.

After that slight interruption I scarcely know where I left off. I was talking about lobsters.

Again, primary fishery employment in Newfoundland brought in $15 million—that is the catching and curing of fish in the first instance—to 18,291 fishermen, while in Nova Scotia 12,780 fishermen earned $26 million. If you include those employed in processing, we find that 21,346 workers in the Newfoundland fisheries received $$33\frac{3}{4}$ million, which works out at some $1,580 per worker. Nova Scotia, however, has some 17,167 workers in their fisheries earning 51¾ million dollars, or $3,000 per worker. That is practically twice the amount earned by the similar Newfoundland worker on fisheries. In New Brunswick they were even better, with an average of $3,670. Nova Scotia has taken second place there, at any rate.

I want to point out these figures and ask why the Newfoundland fisherman, who works as hard as the New Brunswick or Nova Scotia fisherman, if not harder, gets $1,580, whereas the Nova Scotia fisherman gets $3,000. It is not his fault. I also point that out to show that it is necessary to do something special with regard to the fisheries in Newfoundland.

Hon. Mr. Horner: May I ask if you have any figures on what the fish dealers in Newfoundland get in comparison with those of other provinces?

Hon. Mr. Hollett: I am sorry, I did not hear the question.

Hon. Mr. Horner: The question is, have you any figures as to what the fish dealer gets? It may be that the fisherman is being exploited by the fish dealer.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: They have been exploited for 300 years now.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: May I ask my honourable friend what price the fisherman receives for his fish, as contrasted with the 59 cents a pound which we pay here in general stores for fish sticks or similar products?

Hon. Mr. Hollett: That is heavy salted fish. I do not think they would get any more than, say, $15 per quintal. Perhaps the honourable Senator Pratt could tell me what the fishermen are paid for heavy salted cod.

Hon. Mr. Pratt: What you speak of is a cut-up product.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: What does the fisherman get for a quintal, which is 112 pounds?

Hon. Mr. Pratt: It is quite complicated; it depends on the grades.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Who is answering this question?

Hon. Mr. Hollett: I will find out and give the answer later.

Hon. Mr. Pratt: I understand the answer is $15 per quintal. May I ask if the fish referred to earlier was from Nova Scotia?

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Yes, that was from Nova Scotia. I do not think we could get that much per pound.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Does my honourable friend realize it takes three or four pounds of fresh fish to make the one pound of fillet he mentions?

Hon. Mr. Hollett: I am not sure about that. I fished when I was a youngster, but we did not make fillets then; we split the fish open, salted them, dried them and sent them to Oporto and the European markets. I have been in touch with fish since I was born, and I know how much it takes to make a pound of filleted fish. I am glad that there are some other honourable senators here who know something about fish.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): We are very interested in them. Senator Aseltine, to my knowledge, is one of the best fishermen here.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: I believe Senator Aseltine is one of the best filleters of fish I have ever seen. He can take a fish, cut it and clean it and you have the nicest bit of fish you can get.

I mention these things to point out how important it is to have something special done in regard to fisheries. I have pointed out that the cost of living in Newfoundland is 20 per cent higher and the returns from our labour in the fisheries are nearly 100 per cent less than in Nova Scotia, our nearest neighbour province. If cost of transportation is the cause of these differences, then one of the steps to be taken is fairly obvious. I believe this is what the honourable Senator Pratt has been telling us.

An hon. Senator: Why don't you buy all your fish from Nova Scotia?

Hon. Mr. Hollett: No, no; I am suggesting that it is necessary to lower the cost of transporting Newfoundland fish to markets elsewhere in Canada and in the United States. Until we can get something done in regard to this I am quite sure our fishermen are not going to get the price they should. The cost of transportation of wheat and all types of grain has been subsidized, I believe. I do not see why the same thing cannot be applied in some form to our fishery products.

To limit the amount of expenditure to $100 million, as set out in the bill, seems to me to be a bit short-sighted. We too have a liberally-minded premier. Honourable Senator Blois spoke with respect of his premier, Premier Stanfield, and I do so now of ours. He has already suggested an ambitious new plan for the fisheries in our province alone, which he estimates will cost $75 million over the next five years, and he is asking the federal Government to supply $50 million of that. At that rate, how far is the federal Government going to get with this $100 million set aside in this bill?

We have huge supplies of wood in Newfoundland and Labrador, and in 1961 our loggers cut 787,000 cords. Most of this was turned into newsprint for export, which is as it should be, but a considerable amount of wood is exported as pulpwood.

I am quite sure all honourable senators will agree with me that there ought to be some way found to turn that pulpwood into articles which can be sold on the mainland of Canada, in Newfoundland, or in the United States, instead of shipping the raw wood across the Atlantic Ocean. I think we should be able to find some way of utilizing it to more advantage.

All our minerals such as iron ore, lead, zinc and copper, are exported as ore. Surely, there must be room for various secondary industries in these fields.

I am just passing out a few suggestions which I know the honourable Leader of the Government in this house (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford) will pass on to this board which is a liberally-minded board.

We had hoped for a pelletizing plant in Newfoundland-Labrador to upgrade the ore in the Wabush area but, alas, even our imperturbable premier had to yield when big business and Premier Lesage wanted it built in Quebec.

Suppose my honourable friend from Nova Scotia (Hon. Mr. Blois), had discovered iron ore in his province. Would he consent to having a pelletizing plant erected in New Brunswick for the processing of all that ore? I do not think so. Of course our premier was very much against it being done, as he said, "No; it will never be built in Quebec, except over my dead body".

It is regrettable, honourable senators, that this pelletizing plant has been snatched so suddenly from the people of Newfoundland. Such a plant would have cost $70 million to build, and would have given much needed employment to Newfoundlanders, both in its building and in its operation. It seems that, as always—as ever before Confederation—Newfoundland's natural resources are for others than Newfoundlanders.

Even our electric power potential from Hamilton Falls is now destined to enrich the coffers of Quebec Hydro. Honourable senators will have heard the story of the power at Hamilton Falls. I believe 7.5 million kilowatts of power is going to be generated there. Quebec has definitely consented to allow us in Newfoundland to have what we need. I am sure honourable senators from Quebec are glad to hear this, if they have not heard it before. I see my honourable friend, Senator Quart, looking at me with a critical eye. However, Quebec Hydro has the right to buy and export that power across the border to the United States and elsewhere.

As far as the tenth province is concerned, I am sure the board, as finally set up under this act—we are not sure of how it will be set up; we are not even sure about the budget yet—will have unlimited scope wherein to report to the minister upon programs and projects for fostering its economic growth and development, and that of the other Atlantic provinces.

We have the raw materials in Newfoundland, and the other provinces have them as well. We have the manpower. I told you a few days ago about unemployment in our little province. Given the will and determination of the federal Government and the provincial Government, I feel sure the Atlantic Development Board will be able to suggest—and I quote from the bill:

> —appropriate methods of furthering the sound economic development of the Atlantic region, whether such methods involve new programs and projects or the removal or mitigation of existing factors that may be considered to inhibit such development.

I certainly support the bill, and I have no great objection to the proposed amendments contained in it.

On motion of Hon. Mrs. Inman, debate adjourned.

NEWFOUNDLAND SAVINGS BANK ACT, 1939

BILL TO REPEAL—SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Pratt for the second reading of Bill S-4, to repeal The Newfoundland Savings Bank Act, 1939.

Hon. Malcolm Hollett: Honourable senators, I should like to say that last year I was asked to introduce this bill, and at that time I put these few remarks together. I hesitate to proceed today but I shall be as brief as possible.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: You may adjourn the debate, if you wish.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: If honourable senators will bear with me I will proceed as quickly as possible so that the bill may be read the second time today.

As I have mentioned, I was asked to say something in introducing a similar bill during the last session, but owing to certain events it could not be proceeded with. This bill was introduced at the beginning of this session.

I was very much interested to hear what Senator Pratt had to say about it yesterday, and I should like to add these few remarks.

It is with somewhat mixed feelings that I speak on this bill. It is brief and to the point, and with only three sections it repeals The Newfoundland Savings Bank Act of 1939; indeed, it dissolves a bank around which could be written some 129 years of Newfoundland's history.

Prior to the establishment of the Newfoundland Savings Bank, no other bank existed or did business in Newfoundland. Each merchant, in a sense, was his own banker, and he held the necessary goods and currency with which to supply his customers. It was on June 12 in the fourth year of the reign of King William IV that an act for the establishment of a savings bank in Newfoundland was passed. This was just two years after representative government was granted to the colony. By the way, representative government was granted to the colony in 1832. I believe Senator Pratt made a slight error yesterday when he said it was granted in 1834.

Honourable senators will not object, I am sure, if I quote a part of the preamble to show what in those days was considered the proper functions of a bank. Do not forget that this was 129 years ago.

> Whereas the establishment of a Bank for savings in Newfoundland will greatly tend to encourage and promote habits of industry, economy and sobriety among the poor and labouring classes of the community by affording them a safe place—and so it goes on. I read that to demonstrate the reason why any bank should be established.

The Receiver General of the public revenues of Newfoundland and the depositors were constituted a body corporate under the name and style of The Newfoundland Savings Bank. The members of Her Majesty's Executive Council and an equal number of the members of the House of Assembly, including the Speaker, were the governors of the bank. All deposits were to be paid into the Colonial Treasury, which was to take care of any losses through default of the treasurer. Interest of 3 per cent was to be paid on all deposits over 20 shillings and less than £50 sterling. If a person had anything over £50, there was no use putting it in that bank.

Sir Thomas Cochrane, the Governor of the colony, in referring to this bill at the time, described it as an institution > —which has in other countries tended greatly to the improvement of the condition of the lower orders of society—and which, in his view:

> was peculiarly adapted to the state of the inhabitants of this island—

Hon. Mr. Horner: It did not hurt the higher orders either.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: No; there were none. He went on to say that the earnings of the inhabitants of the island when industrious, > —exceed in one year those of most other countries—

We have taken a fall since then.

> —but which, being received in large payments—

Imagine fishermen being paid large payments 129 years ago.

> —are too often improvidently spent.

That inducement, said the governor, to dissipate "will now no longer exist".

Then, the honourable Judge Brenton in 1834 in his address to the Grand Jury referred to the bank as a means of, > encouraging and promoting habits of industry and economy among our lower classes—

We had lower classes in Newfoundland in those days.

> —and of inducing them to lay up against the day of adversity and for the support of their families, those sums which are now so improvidently squandered in the dram-shops to the ruin of both soul and body.

So they had their troubles 129 years ago.

Incidentally, the bank was to be opened for deposits only on Mondays between one and two o'clock, at the office of the treasurer of the colony. So there could not have been many people making deposits at that time.

Now, 129 years ago the means of communication between St. John's, Newfoundland and, say, New York or London were few and far between. Ottawa as such did not exist. There were two small villages known as Upper Town and Lower Town, separated by a wooded section now known as Parliament Hill, comprising a lumbering centre. This area was incorporated as a town in 1827, known as Bytown, and had a population of 5,000 people. This town became the city of Ottawa on January 1, 1855—which incidentally is the year we got responsible Government in Newfoundland—and in 1857 it was chosen by Queen Victoria as the capital of Canada. However, that is old news for many honourable senators.

Gradually, the bank won public confidence and by the end of 1836 the deposits amounted to over £3,000. By 1840 the deposits were up to £7,000, and six years later they had reached £48,000. That was a lot of money in those days. In 1853 the total amount on deposit was £88,000, and by 1855, when Newfoundland secured responsible government, the total deposits were £370,000.

Some honourable senators will have heard that Newfoundland in the 1890's passed through very difficult times in a financial way. I believe my honourable friend Senator Pratt referred to that yesterday. Although two of the banks at that time closed their doors, the Newfoundland Savings Bank carried on successfully, but on one occasion it was saved from default only by the fact that the then premier—and I hesitate to say this, in a sense, because he was a Liberal—Sir Robert Bond, pledged his own personal fortune to the extent of $150,000 to save the bank. We had some good Liberal premiers—at least one, and perhaps two or three.

In 1892 it was decreed by the Government that profits then existing and "as they shall accrue from time to time" were constituted a "sinking fund" for the liquidation of the public debt. It is worthwhile noting too that at that time, 1892, it was also ordered that the total of all salaries and incidental expenses of the bank were not to exceed the sum of $8,000. So they were not paid very much. In 1912 there were seven branches of the Newfoundland Savings Bank throughout the island.

In the year 1934, under commission of government, an amendment was made to the act whereby only the profits were paid into the consolidated revenue fund. Again, in 1937, it was decreed that the profits were to be paid into a general reserve fund, this fund to be invested by the Crown agents. When the reserve fund reached an amount equal to 20 per cent of the deposits in the bank, then all other amounts over the 20 per cent went into the consolidated revenue fund.

The act of 1939, which made only slight amendments to the original act, provided that Newfoundland was to be liable for all money deposited in the Newfoundland Savings Bank and for the interest thereon, and a general reserve fund of the Newfoundland Savings Bank was created from the profits of the bank, but any amounts over this 20 per cent were to be paid into the consolidated revenue fund. The bank was forbidden to invest in bonds and debentures of the Government of Newfoundland—they did not trust Government in those days—unless such bonds were guaranteed by the Government of Great Britain.

Much more could be said about the history of this old bank and, as I have already said, a good portion of our history is tied in with the growth of this bank.

The general purposes of this bill are to repeal the Newfoundland Savings Bank Act, 1939, and to provide for other matters which I do not need to go into now as my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Pratt) has mentioned them.

I should like to say a word about the Bank of Montreal, which last April entered into an agreement with the Newfoundland Government and the said Newfoundland Savings Bank for the taking over of the said bank. I would say that the history of Canada itself, in large measure, could be tied in with the activities of the Bank of Montreal which as you know was established in the year 1817. Speaking as a Newfoundlander, the only satisfaction which I get from the sale of the said savings bank assets is the fact that they have been taken over by the Bank of Montreal which has carried on business in Canada for the past 146 years.

This great Bank of Montreal has more than 900 offices throughout the 10 provinces, as well as offices in the United States of America, England, France, Germany and Japan. It is noteworthy too that it has operated in Newfoundland for the past 67 years and now has some 22 branches there.

Until 1894 regular banking service had been provided by two local banks but they discontinued business in December of that year and Newfoundland was left without regular banking facilities. The Government of that day intervened and invited the Bank of Montreal to provide services in St. John's, that is, when these two local banks failed. Then the Bank of Montreal opened for business in the same Duckworth Street premises which had been occupied by the Newfoundland Savings Bank. These premises had formerly been used by one of the original local banks.

Since the 1895 opening, the Bank of Montreal representation in Newfoundland has grown to a network of 22 branches in widely varied locations ranging from the Memorial University of Newfoundland in St. John's to the Wabush Lake iron ore development in Labrador.

The Bank of Montreal has served as banker to the Government of Newfoundland for more than 60 years, and that, honourable senators, as I may remind you, has not always been an easy task.

Many Newfoundlanders are serving with the Bank of Montreal in all parts of Canada. Senior of these is Arthur C. Jensen, chairman of the board of directors, who was born at Harbour Breton on the southwest coast of Newfoundland and who has been a banker since 1914. Harbour Breton is a little fishing village on the southwest coast of the island, and I am quite sure that not only this little fishing village but the whole of Newfoundland is proud of this gentleman Arthur C. Jensen, proud of the position which he holds and proud of him for the work which he has done with the Bank of Montreal. As I say, he is now chairman of the board of directors.

Sir Leonard Outerbridge, a former Lieutenant Governor, is a Newfoundland representative on the board with Mr. Jensen, having been elected to membership at the bank's 144th annual meeting in December 1961.

The entire staff of the Newfoundland Savings Bank was transferred to the Bank of Montreal after the merger on April 1, 1962, including the Honourable R. F. Sparkes, former Speaker of the House of Assembly, who had been manager of the Newfoundland Savings Bank for the last five years. Since the amalgamation, Mr. Sparkes has become a special representative of the Bank of Montreal in Newfoundland. To quote Mr. Sparkes:

> The Bank of Montreal is no stranger to the people of Newfoundland and is well established in the public confidence. To it, the Newfoundland Savings Bank brings its good will, the confidence of its depositors and its 128 years of Newfoundland experience and history.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Pratt, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, July 22, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Monday, July 22, 1963

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that he had received the following communication:

Government House
Ottawa

22nd July, 1963

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Hon. Gerald Fauteux, Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 22nd July, at 9.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
A. G. Cherrier
Assistant Secretary
to the Governor General.

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate.

PRIVATE BILL

UKRAINIAN NATIONAL FEDERATION OF CANADA—COMMONS AMENDMENTS

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons returning Bill S-12, respecting Ukrainian National Federation of Canada and acquainting the Senate that they have passed this bill with the following amendments, to which they desire the concurrence of the Senate:

1. Page 2. Line 2. After the word "corporate" insert the following words:
"known as Ukrainian National Federation of Canada with the name of the municipality in which the Branch is located affixed thereto in brackets and";

2. Page 2. Line 2. Delete the word "name" and the comma after the word "such";

3. Page 2. Line 23. After the word "Canada" insert the following words:
"and cause the same to be published in The Canada Gazette forthwith."

4. Page 2. Immediately after subsection (3) add the following subsection (4):
"(4) Subsection (3) of section 147 of The Companies Act shall be applicable to any such body corporate established."

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these amendments be taken into consideration?

Hon. John M. Macdonald: On behalf of the honourable senator from Saskatoon (Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn), who sponsored this bill, I move, with leave, that the amendments be taken into consideration now.

Senator Hnatyshyn is unable to be present this evening, and has asked me if I would inform the Senate that these amendments proposed by the other house are not matters of substance, but rather have the effect of clarifying the bill. The sponsors are quite agreeable that the amendments be concurred in by this house. Therefore I move, on behalf of the sponsor of the bill, that these amendments be concurred in now.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: May I ask the honourable senator if he can explain what is meant by section 147 of the Companies Act being made applicable to this corporation?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Cape Breton): I was afraid that I might be asked that question. I did not have time to look at the Companies Act, but I think the honourable senator has better knowledge of the Companies Act than I have.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: In fairness to the house, consideration of the amendments should be adjourned until tomorrow, when no doubt the honourable senator could answer my question.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Cape Breton): That is quite agreeable.

The Hon. the Speaker: Consideration next sitting.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-87, an act to amend the Customs Tariff.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

TABLE OF RATES OF DUTY PRINTED AS AN APPENDIX TO MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS OF SENATE

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Honourable senators, I present a table setting out the rates of duty provided for in Bill C-87, intituled an act to amend the Customs Tariff and the corresponding rates in effect prior to the 1963 budget.

Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move, seconded by the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks), that this table be printed as an appendix to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent record of this house.

The Leader of the Opposition has already consulted me about this, and we feel that it would be helpful to honourable senators if this table were before them when the bill is considered on second reading tomorrow.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald tabled:

Statement, dated July 18, 1963, made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, respecting The Canada Pension Plan. (English and French texts).

CANADA PENSION PLAN

STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE PRINTED AS APPENDIX TO DEBATES OF THE SENATE

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move, seconded by the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks), that the statement dated July 18, 1963 which was made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, respecting The Canada Pension Plan, tabled this day, be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

For text of statement see appendix, pp. 322-7.

DIVORCE

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, on Thursday last I presented a number of petitions in divorce. On that occasion I was asked whether further petitions were being received by us, and I answered that they were and that they were being filed. The thought passed through my mind as to whether we were dealing properly with them under all the circumstances by simply leaving them in the files or whether they should be presented here. So, in collaboration with the law officer of the Senate, I made some inquiries as to what the picture really is with regard to petitions.

I have always held the impression that the subject has the right to petition the Crown, and that no one may stand between him and the Crown. Now I find that the subject was specifically referred to in the Bill of Rights of William and Mary in the year 1689. This right of the subject was presented by Parliament to the Crown at that time. Of course the division of authority between Parliament and the Crown has changed greatly in the years that have followed. Today the administration is the Queen in Parliament, so that what was directed by Parliament to the Crown of that time is now directed towards ourselves. The Bill of Rights of William and Mary of 1689 says this:

> That it is the right of the subjects to petition the king and all commitments and prosecutions for such petitioning are illegal.

The line to which I call attention is:

> It is the right of the subjects to petition the king...

Well, honourable senators, under those circumstances I thought it was proper for me to bring the petitions that have been filed with the Senate and present them, which I propose to do tonight.

I followed the subject further, of course, and I found something in the last edition of our own constitutional authority, Beauchesne, Fourth Edition, citation 456, at page 336, which reads in part as follows:

> The ancient rule as to petitioners for private legislation was laid down by Mr. Francis Palgrave before a Special Committee of the British House on the 22nd of June, 1832. The principle was, said he, that no person should come before Parliament as a suitor, or trouble it, if, on the face of his petition, he could have his right at home.

It is in accordance with that principle that when a suitor from, say, the province of Ontario, or any of the provinces which enjoy the luxury of divorce court, comes to this Parliament for divorce we tell that suitor to go to the courts of his own province, because there is where he may obtain justice at home. But as far as the two provinces are concerned, where there is no divorce court, the following applies—and I read on from Beauchesne, at the page I have already cited:

> If there were any other mode of obtaining redress, he was not to apply to Parliament, but, if from the insufficiency of the law or any other similar cause, he could not obtain redress, then the Supreme Court of Parliament was to give him a speedy—

I repeat the word "speedy".

—and effectual remedy.

That is the parliamentary law of this country, as it is the law of Great Britain, because we follow the law of traditions of Great Britain. When there is no method of obtaining justice at home, to use the ancient words, then the subject has the right to come to the Parliament of Canada, and it is our duty to give him a "speedy and effectual remedy".

When Palgrave laid down these ancient principles before a special committee of the British house, he no doubt was referring to ancient law. I find in the Magna Carta this very significant statement:

To no one will we sell, to no one will we refuse or delay—

Note the word "delay".

—right or justice.

I will read it again:

To no one will we sell, to no one will we refuse or delay, right or justice.

Commenting on that statement, I find in the commentaries of McKechnie on "Magna Carta", at page 398, this paragraph:

...it has been interpreted as a universal guarantee of impartial justice to high and low; and because, when so interpreted, it has become in the hands of patriots in many ages a powerful weapon in the cause of constitutional freedom.

I repeat the words of the Magna Carta:

...to no one will we refuse or delay, right or justice.

So, honourable senators, I thought it my duty to not leave these petitions in the files of the Senate but to bring them here and present them to the Senate of Canada in open session.

I have in my hand for presentation 540 petitions. These, together with the 522 petitions presented last week make a total of some 1,062 petitions actually presented. There are some further petitions just received and being processed in the Committees Branch, which raise the total number that are before the Senate to over 1,100 petitions.

I now present these petitions.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Might I ask a question of the honourable senator? A lot of people are wondering how it is that two, three, or more, persons are able to stop the progress through the other house of the divorce bills under all these petitions. I would like to know, once and for all, under what law or procedure this delay is being effected.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I should like to know, too, how any two men can hold up for two long years and more effective action of the whole Parliament of Canada. I cannot answer that question, except to say that by the rules of the House of Commons delay can be achieved by simply talking out a private bill. These Senate private bills are, of course, "sitting ducks" because all a member has to do to waste time is to read the evidence. The rules of the Commons are such that private bills have an hour only at varying times during the week, so it is very easy to talk them out. That has been the method adopted. How it is possible to do such a thing to the Parliament of Canada I cannot answer.

An Hon. Senator: It is illegal.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: May I ask the honourable Senator Roebuck if the 1,062 petitions mentioned by him are in addition to the bills that are being held up in the House of Commons?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: There are no bills in the House of Commons at the moment. When a bill goes from this house to the Commons and is not passed there before the session concludes, it dies on the Order Paper. During the past two sessions the Senate sent bills to the House of Commons which had died once previously on the Order Paper. There are no divorce bills on the Order Paper of the Commons at the moment. There are no divorce bills anywhere at the moment.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: I think the question from Senator Burchill is as to how many of the total that went over became "dead ducks".

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Approximately half of them have been studied by us; the evidence has been heard and the parties have been adjudged entitled to divorce so far as we have power to determine. The bills which were passed by this house and sent to the Commons are about one-half of the 1,062 petitions which I have now presented.

Hon. Thomas Vien: What happened to them?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Nothing happened; they died on the Commons Order Paper.

Hon. Mr. Vien: But what happened this year?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: This year the Senate Committee on Divorce decided it was futile and dishonest to induce litigants to hire lawyers, to subpoena witnesses and to come to Ottawa with all the paraphernalia of a lawsuit for the purpose of asking the Senate for something to which they may be legally entitled, but which we may be powerless to grant. Therefore ,I announced on behalf of the committee in the early stages of the present session that we would not hear cases until assurance was forthcoming that they would be carried to a successful conclusion when, on the evidence, it was right that they should be carried to a conclusion.

The Commons, of course, has as much right to pass on these applications as we have. If the Commons decide against a bill, it does not become law even though it may have passed here. So, without interfering in any way with the right of the Commons to exercise its jurisdiction in these matters, we decided that until we had some assurance a proper adjudication would take place, we would not encourage people to incur the considerable expense and trouble of coming before us. The Divorce Committee has not been sitting, and it is not sitting now, although it will meet tomorrow morning to consider the situation as we now find it.

Hon. Mr. Vien: But as regards such cases as were heard last year, could not the committee again recommend to the Senate the passage of a bill in each case, which we would in turn send to the other place?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That is the very question we discussed.

Hon. Mr. Vien: This could be done simply on the strength of the printed evidence, without hearing the witnesses again.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That is what we have already done twice. The last session and the session before that we did not ask these poor people to come before us again to present their cases. In each case we accepted the evidence of the previous hearing. What we shall now do, the circumstances at present prevailing, will be considered by the committee tomorrow morning.

Hon. Mr. Vien: Honourable senators, this question of divorce and the procedure leading to petitions for divorce being brought to the Senate and passed by both houses has been the subject of discussion for many years. It is a troublesome question.

I have the highest admiration for the members of the Standing Committee on Divorce, who have sat day in and day out, who have given of their best in studying the applications that have been submitted to the Senate, and have dealt with them under the terms and conditions of the Constitution with great public spirit.

I think the answer to the question put by the honourable senator from Ottawa East (Hon. Mr. Choquette) is a simple one. It is embarrassing for all concerned to discuss the attitude adopted in the other place, and I do not wish to pursue it except to say that one obvious fact is that they want to rid Parliament of the obligation of having to deal with divorce cases. That is an opinion in the other place that has been stated more than once, and there is a lot to be said for it.

When I consider the time and effort given to divorce cases that honourable senators could devote to other legislation and to other public business, it seems to me indeed a pity that they should be compelled by the circumstances and the rules presently applicable to sit day in and day out to hear and consider divorce cases. Their time and effort spent on divorce should be made available to this house and to the country at large for something more worthwhile. I have suggested informally to members of the Divorce Committee in previous years that we could easily relieve them of much of the arduous discussion which absorbs their time.

In view of the fact that public opinion in Quebec and in Newfoundland will not allow divorce courts in those provinces—I am quite satisfied that I speak the mind of the vast majority of the people of Quebec when I state that public opinion in that province is against the institution of divorce courts—there must be another way of doing the job.

It is said that there is no public law on the statute books which allows divorce. Marriage, at present, is perpetual and cannot be dissolved. When a bill of divorce is passed by Parliament it becomes a law of exception and, therefore, the general principle that divorce is not part and parcel of the law of the country is maintained. We make a law of exception with respect to each of these particular applications.

I must concede that I am a bit confused about that reasoning, but that is what presently prevails, and I think it is accepted by the vast majority of the people of my province.

If that is the case, would it not be possible for the Senate within its powers, and without any special legislation, to adopt a procedure whereby a divorce court is created, a court which would be within the Senate itself? It could be composed of retired members of the bench, or members of the bar who would be willing to accept the task. Such a committee could be composed of five or six, or 10 or 12, men who understand the problem and who would sit the year round to hear witnesses.

If such a court were established the procedure would be as follows: An applicant would send in his or her application to the Senate. After the application had been examined by officers of the Senate to ascertain that all public notices had been given and that the regulations had been complied with, it would be referred to the divorce court. That court would hear the witnesses. It would examine all oral and documentary evidence, and then report to the committee of the Senate. The committee would examine the proceedings, and if they were right and proper the committee would recommend to the Senate, as it does now, that a bill of divorce be presented. In due course the bill would be read the first, second, and third times, and then sent to the House of Commons. The House of Commons would have the satisfaction of knowing that a body of legal men of ability and experience had examined the case, had heard the witnesses, and had reported to the Standing Committee on Divorce of the Senate which had reviewed the evidence and had ascertained that everything had been carried out according to the Senate's rules respecting divorce, and had so reported to the Senate.

Such a procedure would relieve the members of the committee of the arduous and exceedingly onerous work of listening to the parties and all the witnesses. By this procedure the principle of each case being made the subject of a private bill, a law of exception would be maintained, and the members of the Divorce Committee of the Senate would be relieved of the onerous task of hearing the witnesses.

To summarize, the evidence would be printed, as it is now, and it would be referred to the Divorce Committee which would examine it and refer it to the Senate with a recommendation that a bill be introduced, read the first, second and third times, and then sent to the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: To be blocked again, probably, by the same people in the House of Commons. Has not the honourable senator something in his plan by which a divorce bill could be passed without having to be referred to the House of Commons? If we had a plan whereby the Senate could deal with divorce from beginning to end, we would not be in the position of having to send these bills to the other house to be blocked.

Hon. Mr. Vien: There is a very serious problem in the suggestion made by the honourable senator. It implies that a bill once passed by the Senate should go to the Governor General and, having received royal assent, become law.

I concur in the remarks which the honourable Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) made the other day. A basic principle of the Constitution is to the effect that a law must be passed by both Houses of Parliament. To cause divorce bills to become acts of Parliament without reference to the House of Commons would be the thin edge of the wedge, and if we once allow it with respect to this basic principle we do not know when the House of Commons might suggest that some particular legislation should be passed by that house without the sanction of the Senate. It is a danger that I would wish to avoid.

I agree with the honourable Senator Roebuck that we are governed by the principles of the Mother of Parliaments. I am in favour of that because it has the experience and wisdom of centuries, and I am extremely anxious that we follow the principles which have been tried and adopted there. However, it will be recalled that at one time in the Imperial Parliament the House of Lords refused to sanction certain legislation that had been adopted by the House of Commons. The result was that under Mr. Lloyd George, the powers of the House of Lords were curtailed, and today when a law has passed by the Commons and is refused by the Lords, and is again passed by the Commons it becomes law without any further ado. I do not think that that would be in the interest of a young country like Canada, which has maintained as a basic principle of its constitutional rights that there should be a house of second thought to which should be submitted all laws introduced in Parliament before they are submitted for royal assent. I think that principle should be maintained here. It is my opinion, therefore, that if we adopt the principle that a bill of divorce passed by this house can go to the Governor General for royal assent without having been considered by the House of Commons, then we accept the principle that similar legislation might be passed by the Commons without requiring the consent of the Senate. It is this that I want the Senate to guard against.

Therefore, in answer to the honourable senator from Ottawa East (Hon. Mr. Choquette), I do not believe the House of Commons would have the same objection to a recommendation of the Senate, based on the recommendation of a court of justice constituted as I have mentioned. The Committee on Divorce would appoint a subcommittee or a board of referees, consisting of retired judges or of lawyers willing to accept appointment. They would be retained, paid, and instructed to hear these cases. They would report to the Committee on Divorce, which would in turn report to this house, recommending that a bill be passed in the usual manner.

I think that would answer the objection of the House of Commons, that all these cases should be sent to divorce courts. There is strong objection in Quebec and in Newfoundland to sending these cases to divorce courts. Are we going to force it on them as a law at this time? I do not believe that it would be advisable for this house, or for Parliament, to run against the will of a majority of public opinion in a province.

My humble suggestion is that we should constitute such a committee of lawyers or judges as I have indicated. By doing so we would have answered the objection of the House of Commons, that these cases be dealt with not by Parliament but by a court of justice. They would be dealt with by a court of justice, and a bill would be passed in the manner that I have outlined.

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, I do not wish to prolong this discussion, but I think it would be wrong if this matter were left as it has been dealt with by the honourable Senator Vien. This is a matter of tremendous importance and is becoming of increasing importance day by day.

My main reason for rising at this time is to give my wholehearted support to the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck), first, in regard to the substance of his remarks tonight and, secondly, because I think Canada, Parliament, and the Senate owe a tremendous debt of gratitude to him for his selfless devotion and the unselfish work he has done for Parliament as chairman of the Committee on Divorce during the past few years.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I speak from knowledge, by virtue of the fact that during my first few years in the Senate I was a member of the Committee on Divorce. Any senator who has served as a member of that committee has to recognize the tremendous amount of work done, and the loyal devotion shown by the honourable Senator Roebuck.

I say this in the light of the fact that in the past two years he and his committee and this Senate have been completely frustrated in the work we have been doing in regard to divorce.

As I say, I do not think this matter should be allowed to stand where it was left by the honourable Senator Vien. He suggested—and he spoke at length on the point—some other system by which this matter should be dealt with. But what are the facts of the case? As I see them, they are these. The Committee on Divorce has listened to hundreds and hundreds of cases, according to the law and the Constitution of this country. Those cases have been approved by the Committee on Divorce and the bills concerning them have been enacted by the Senate. They have been sent over to the other place where their progress has stopped. I say they have not been stopped by the other place as such, but they have been stymied by two men. I would remind honourable senators that these two men are not from Quebec; they are not objecting to this legislation on religious principles or on scruples of that kind. They have just been obdurate and stubborn persons who have said to themselves: We will put the Parliament of Canada in its place. And they have succeeded in doing so.

Honourable senators, these are the facts. Two men have succeeded in blocking approximately 700 bills passed by the Senate of Canada, the passage of which was desired by 263 of the 265 members of the other place. Yet these two men, by virtue of, shall I call it, the perversity of the rules of the other place, have been enabled for some reason to prevent the passage of these bills.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Well, perhaps it is not the rules. It is a fact that in the other place one member or two can talk out any private bill which is sent to that house from the Senate.

Honourable senators, it could be a private bill to incorporate a company which would have a far-reaching effect on the prosperity and economy of this country. It could be a private bill which would help to solve the problem of unemployment, or be for other good causes. Yet, under the rules of that house, as I understand them, one or two men can "talk it out" and thereby prevent its passage.

An Hon. Senator: Amend the rules.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, perhaps we should not say anything about the other place; but, as you know—and I say this advisedly—a lot has been said about reform of the Senate. I am not going to say anything more about that. But perhaps there are other things that should be reformed before the Senate becomes reformed. I say this with the greatest amount of sincerity because the matter of the holding up of the divorce petitions, which have been passed through the Senate, is to my mind a public scandal in this country.

Honourable senators, only a few moments ago there was present in our public gallery Senator Mem de Sã from Brazil. He came to Canada as a representative of the Brazilian group of the Interparliamentary Union. He was a guest of His Honour the Speaker of the Senate at dinner this evening. I make these remarks especially because what we are concerned with in this matter are the rights and powers of Parliament. So where do we go from here?

As the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) said, this goes right back to the Magna Carta. It goes back to the principles enunciated in the Bill of Rights, one of the most important of which is, "Justice delayed is justice denied." Hundreds of people have come to Parliament, which is the only forum entitled to give them justice according to law, and that justice has been denied for two years now. I say that this is a scandal, and that many years from now we shall look back upon this day and ask, "How could this have happened in the Parliament of Canada?" It is no answer for us to say now: Let us abandon this whole procedure and find some other way; let us establish a system of divorce courts or let us hand this over to the Exchequer Court of Canada. Instead, we should find a way to prevent two men in the other place from holding up the legitimate and legal business of Parliament.

Honourable senators, I feel that the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity has not had enough help and support from this side of the house in regard to these matters. I say that Parliament owes to him a great debt of gratitude.

Hon. Mr. Vien: Will the honourable senator allow me to ask a question? What power have we either to change the rules of the House of Commons or to direct that house to deal with the objections that the honourable senator has raised?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Of course, we have no power.

Hon. Mr. Vien: What can we do?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: But it is to be hoped that the other house may have listened to some of the things that the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity has said in this matter, beginning no less than 18 months or 2 years ago, and also what he has said today, regarding the legal and constitutional principles and regarding justice for many of the people of this country. If the people of Canada are not entitled to go to the courts for justice, they are entitled to come to Parliament as a constitutional right, and for two years, in the matter of divorce, justice has been denied. To my mind, it is time that somebody started to deal with this matter, not with kid gloves, but with knuckle-dusters.

Hon. Mr. Vien: Would the honourable senator think that a joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons might be appointed to study the question and find a remedy to the situation of which we all complain?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I say to my honourable friend that I think perhaps we can find a solution which is better than the procedure of today, by which people have to come to the Parliament of Canada seeking justice. However, what I am talking about right now is the 700-odd bills of divorce which were passed by the Senate and were held up by the House of Commons because of procedural difficulties there and nothing else.

(Translation):

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt: Honorable senators, I have only a few words to say to conclude the debate, I hope.

Everybody knows that when divorce bills are passed in the Senate, there is always someone who says: "On division", which clearly means: "I am against divorce".

The great majority of the people in Quebec are against divorce. In 1867, Quebec accepted the British North America Act. I must say, however, that I do not agree with our colleague from De Lorimier (Hon. Mr. Vien) who is suggesting the establishment of a Senate extrajudicial committee. If we, under a democratic system, accept that other provinces of Canada have their own divorce courts; if we in Quebec, also under a democratic system, submit to the provisions of the B.N.A. Act, we are shocked to find that two members of the Canadian parliament can say to the province of Quebec: "Do this instead of that." We object to that.

I agree with what has just been said by the honourable Senators Roebuck, Thorvaldson and Vien. I suggest it is unthinkable that two individuals could behave in that manner and impose their views on the majority. Is this a new form of democracy? It is dictatorship! Action should be taken to put an end to it as soon as possible.

(Text):

Hon. Gustave Monette: Honourable senators, I should like to add a few words.

I agree with many things that have been said. We are all honestly endeavouring to find a solution to the problem. From what has been said, I deduce that two things should be considered. First, is there a way by which we could put an end to a stubborn decision of two men in the House of Commons not to pass divorce bills which have already been recommended by the Senate Committee on Divorce? I am not familiar with all the rules, but is the Parliament of Canada unable legally to deal with this stubborn opposition by arranging that if the majority in the House of Commons are in favour of the present procedure to hear divorces, then the decision of the majority should be given effect to?

Is there something in the rules that we have inherited that would prevent the other house from deciding upon the matter of divorce? On that point, may I draw attention to the reference made to the Senate passing a law to incorporate a very large company, designed to be highly beneficial to the country. Such a measure, when passed by the Senate, must receive the sanction of the other house. Is it possible for two men in that house to prevent such a bill from passing?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: They have been doing it for two years.

Hon. Mr. Monette: If it is possible for two men to block the incorporation of a company of national interest, then is it not possible for the House of Commons, with our consent, to pass a general law to prevent two men from blocking the passing of a bill? Or, does it stand as a permanent situation that two men can block not only a bill of divorce, but any bill, and that Parliament cannot remedy that situation?

If that is so, we should seek to amend the Constitution; otherwise, measures agreed to by the majority, both in the Senate and House of Commons, will be in the hands of two possible nuisances, and Parliament will have no remedy. I am not qualified to say. If a remedy is impossible, then I submit that this house has the right to find a way by which bills which have passed in the Senate, and so blocked in the other place, can be remedied.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Of course there is a remedy.

Hon. Mr. Monette: I am glad to hear that, because I cannot conceive that there is no remedy.

Honourable senators, I pass now to the second aspect, leaving the first aspect to experts in procedure to determine if a remedy is possible. My next point is this: If we desire that legislation shall not be blocked by two members, or by the House of Commons generally, there is a way by which that can be done. Full and exclusive jurisdiction in matters of marriage and divorce is, by the Constitution, placed in the hands of the Parliament of Canada, which has two houses. I am convinced that Parliament could enact a general law—but I am disposed to listen to other representations—that, with the approval of both houses, in future divorce petitions be dealt with by the Senate only.

A law passed by the two houses determining that in future divorce be dealt with solely by the Senate, without going before the House of Commons, would, I know, appear at first sight to be modifying the Constitution, but to my mind it would not be doing so.

I develop my opinion in this way. The Constitution sets out that matters of marriage and divorce are to be the exclusive legislative resort of the federal Parliament; so, the federal Parliament would have within that jurisdiction exclusive power to deal with marriage and divorce. Is it not in the exercise of that exclusive power that Parliament has decided for Ontario and for other provinces that they will have a law of divorce and will decide the grounds on which the local courts of those provinces will grant divorces? It is in the exercise of that exclusive jurisdiction that the federal Parliament has passed laws for those provinces to give power to the local courts to grant divorces, to institute in some cases new courts of divorce, or perhaps federal courts, such as the Exchequer Court of Canada, as was mentioned.

Could not the federal Parliament in the exercise of that exclusive and most general jurisdiction grant to a particular institution, that could be called an institution for divorce, the power to deal with divorces? If the Parliament of Canada were to create a board or institution to deal with divorce it would be doing it in the exercise of its exclusive and fullest jurisdiction.

I agree with what has been said that Quebec and Newfoundland—Quebec, particularly—do not want to set up divorce courts, and there is a very good reason for that. Will honourable senators permit me to make the following comment, without offence or without appearing to bribe or unduly please the English people who are sitting in this house?

After the conquest of Canada the Parliament of Great Britain maintained for the French people in this country—who had been defeated on the Plains of Abraham, and thus were in the position of a defeated people—the right of Catholics to retain their religion, their civil laws, and other privileges. That was provided for in the capitulation acts and incorporated in the Quebec act.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Honourable senators, I rise to a point of order. This discussion has lasted over an hour and twenty-five minutes and there is nothing before the Senate. This is the first time that a discussion has gone on for an hour and twenty-five minutes with nothing before the Chair. My honourable colleagues agreed to listen to the first speaker (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) just by general and unanimous consent. Now I refuse my consent, and I hope that the house will turn to Orders of the Day. There is no longer unanimous consent.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, as no honourable senator got up and raised a point of order until now, I allowed this discussion to take place. Now that one honourable senator has said that he is no longer giving his consent, I cannot do other than rule that the discussion is out of order, however interesting it may be. We shall now carry on with the routine proceedings of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Monette: Honourable senators, may I ask Senator Pouliot if he will allow me five minutes to finish my speech?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Honourable senators, might I also appeal to Senator Pouliot. This discussion has gone on so long now, that to cut Senator Monette off so abruptly might be a little unfair. We have only twenty minutes left, so we can scarcely start any other business. I think it be only fair to give Senator Monette, say, another five minutes.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: I agree, for five minutes.

Hon. Mr. Monette: Thank you, honourable senators.

My suggestion is that it would be within the jurisdiction of Parliament to pass a general law to give to the Senate exclusive and final jurisdiction to deal with divorce petitions, make inquiries, hear the evidence and then decide whether the evidence shows grounds for divorce—which, up to now, is adultery—and having been dealt with by the Senate, all that would be necessary would be to have the sanction of the Governor General. Such a law would enable the Commons to get rid of bills of divorce, because the general law would give jurisdiction to the Senate only. As I said, after Senate approval the bills would require only the assent of the Governor General.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I have a point of order too.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if we could go directly to Orders of the Day so that I could be given the opportunity of explaining the special Appropriation Act for 1963. I had hoped this bill would get second and third readings and be given royal assent tonight. There may still be time, if I have permission of the house.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

SPECIAL APPROPRIATION BILL 1963

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford) moved second reading of Bill C-86, for approving certain expenditures authorized for the public service, and the application of certain amounts in the accounts, for the financial year ended the 31st March, 1963.

He said: This bill, honourable senators, is Bill C-86, and is Order No. 2 on today's Order Paper. Its passage will be more or less a formality.

Honourable senators will recall that when Parliament was dissolved last February the final appropriation bill had not been passed, with the result that the Government of the day was not in funds to enable it to carry on the business of the country during the period of the election. That was not the first time such a situation had arisen. Honourable senators will recall that in 1958 there was a similar situation. When Parliament re-assembled that year, a bill was passed approving the money that had been spent in the meantime. The only difference at the present time is that under an amendment to the Financial Administration Act we are required to pass this bill this session.

Honourable senators will also recall that during the election period the former government obtained what are known as Governor General's Warrants, and the business of the country was carried on in that manner.

Probably you have had an opportunity of perusing the Report on Supply which was tabled in this house on July 16 last. From page 3 of that summary it would appear that there were two Governor General's Warrants issued—one on February 8, 1963 for $239,-143,321, and the other on March 4, 1963 for $402,163,293. The report gives the particulars of how that money was spent.

There were also 36 items of expense in addition to those provided for by the Governor General's Warrants. These payments were actually made last year under the provision of certain statutes, but the money was not placed in the hands of the departments during the last fiscal year, and is properly a charge against the finances of the year 1962-63. Therefore, the total amount provided by this bill is $853,162,680.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: And it has all been spent.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): And the money has all been spent.

I ask the approval of the house of this bill so that it can receive Royal Assent this evening. As the money has already been spent, I think it well that we give this bill our approval.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, as the honourable Leader of the Government has just explained, this bill concerns expenditures that have already been made. I am sure the money was well spent—most of it, at least. As far as these 36 additional items are concerned, the honourable Leader of the Government says they should be charged to the former Government's expenditures. I believe there is some question about that. However, in the limited time available to us tonight we cannot very well argue the matter and I shall not hold up this bill. The matter is settled: the money has all been spent, and we could not change one dollar of it, even if we talked all night. So, I am perfectly in agreement with the suggestion of the honourable Leader of the Government.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Honourable senators, may I ask the honourable Leader of the Government one question on Vote No. 80, page 32 of the bill, "Newfoundland Ferry and Terminals, $8,180,400"? Could he furnish some information—not now, but at a future date—concerning the progress that has been made on this ferry and when it is likely to come into operation?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I shall be pleased to obtain the information and let the honourable senator have it at the earliest opportunity.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Thank you.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Under the circumstances, I move third reading of the bill now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Gerald Fauteux, Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Speaker of the Senate said:

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General has been pleased to cause Letters Patent to be issued under his Sign Manual and Signet constituting the Honourable Gerald Fauteux, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, his Deputy, to do in His Excellency's name all acts on his part necessary to be done during His Excellency's pleasure.

The Commission was read by the Clerk Assistant.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give the royal assent to the following bills:

An Act respecting the Department of Industry.

An Act to amend the Export and Import Permits Act.

An Act respecting Canada Permanent Toronto General Trust Company.

An Act respecting Confederation Life Association.

An Act respecting The Great-West Life Assurance Company.

An Act respecting Chartered Trust Company.

An Act to incorporate Baptist Convention of Ontario and Quebec.

An Act respecting The Canada Board of American Missions of The United Lutheran Church in America.

An Act respecting The Evangelical Lutheran Synod of Canada.

An Act respecting The Evangelical Lutheran Synod of Western Canada.

An Act to incorporate Fidelity Mortgage and Savings Corporation.

An Act respecting General Mortgage Service Corporation of Canada.

An Act respecting Quebec Fire Assurance Company.

An Act to incorporate Standard Trust Company.

An Act to incorporate Ukrainian Canadian Foundation of Taras Shevchenko.

An Act to incorporate The Union of Slavic Churches of Evangelical Christians and Slavic Baptists of Canada.

The Honourable Alan A. Macnaughton, Speaker of the House of Commons, then addressed the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General as follows:

May it please Your Honour:

The Commons of Canada have voted certain supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Honour the following bill:

An Act for approving certain expenditures authorized for the public service, and the application of certain amounts in the accounts, for the financial year ended the 31st March, 1963.

To which bill I humbly request Your Honour's assent.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give the royal assent to the said bill.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See p. 312)

STATEMENT BY THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE,
HONOURABLE JUDY LAMARSH,
RESPECTING THE CANADA PENSION PLAN,
JULY 18, 1963

The purpose of the Government's proposed legislation is to ensure that, as soon as is possible in a fair and practical way, all Canadians be able to retire in security and with dignity.

The advantage of a federal plan is that it is the only type of pension plan that can be made available comprehensively to all Canadians. This was recognized in 1951 when the British North America Act was amended. The Canada Pension Plan is comprehensive in this sense. It will mean that a contributory program is available to Canadians to provide for their old age. Coverage will be compulsory for, broadly, all employees; such exceptions as are made will be for those types of employment in which the collection of contributions is not administratively feasible. Most other people having earned incomes—broadly, the self-employed and the majority of employees not covered compulsorily—will be able to belong to the plan voluntarily. If a provincial government wishes, its employees will be covered.

The Canada Pension Plan is not intended to be comprehensive in any other sense; it is not designed to provide all the retirement income which many Canadians wish to have. This is a matter of individual choice and, in the Government's view, should properly be left to personal savings and to private pension plans, subject in the latter case to such degree of supervision as the provinces may think appropriate. The recent Ontario legislation is the first example in Canada of an attempt at close supervision of private plans.

The purpose of the Canada Pension Plan is to make reasonable minimum levels of income available to all Canadians at normal retirement ages. There will be scope for the continuation and extension of private pension plans to provide benefits over these minimum levels.

The present minimum provided in Canada is the old age security benefit of $65 a month from age 70. Unfortunately, many people are unable to go on earning until they reach age 70.

Realistic minimum levels of pensions cannot be achieved, in a country like Canada, simply by increasing the flat-rate pension. Living costs vary greatly between town and country, and between different regions of Canada. What people need, in order to make satisfactory provision for retirement, is related in part to the level of earnings to which they have been accustomed. The Canada Pension Plan will therefore both increase the flat-rate benefit and provide new levels of pensions related to previous earnings.

Main Features

The Canada Pension Plan will make these main changes in the provision of pensions:

1. The flat-rate pension will be raised to $75 at age 70 for everyone who meets the residence requirements of the Old Age Security Act.

2. People whose pensions begin after the plan is in operation will receive, if they have made contributions under the plan, a further pension in proportion to the earnings on which they have been contributing. The scale of pensions will rise during a ten-year transitional period.

3. The increased flat-rate pension and the earnings-related pension will both be available at any age between 65 and 70, according to the preference of the pensioner. The amount of both pensions will be graduated so that anyone with average life expectancy will receive the same total payment, from the age he starts his pension to the time he dies, whatever starting age he chooses.

The main features in the financing of the plan are:

4. Since the new benefits will be related to earnings, the Canada Pension Plan will be financed by contributions of a percentage of earnings. The rate of contribution during the ten-year transition period will not exceed 2% of the earnings on which contributions are made. For wage and salary earners, the employer will be required to pay a half of this contribution.

5. Initially contributions will be made, and benefits will be paid, on the first $4000 of annual earnings. This level will be raised in line with any increase in average earnings.

6. Contributions will be deductible from taxable income. This is the same as for private pension plans.

7. The Canada Pension Plan will be entirely self-financing. The contributions are designed to cover all pension costs over and above the continuation of the existing $65 pension at age 70. The cost of administration will also be covered from the contributions.

Timing

It will take a good part of a year to set up satisfactorily the administrative machinery for collecting contributions under the Plan. Graduated pensions cannot be paid until the contributor has a record of earnings as the base for determining the rate of benefit. Graduated pensions will therefore begin in January 1966. Contributions before this date will be used to finance the earlier addition of $10 to flat-rate pensions.

In January 1966 two things will happen. The Plan will begin to provide pensions related to earnings. People will become able to start drawing pensions, both flat-rate and earnings-related, before age 70.

Until the Plan is ten years old, pension rates will build up steadily. In 1966, the graduated benefit at age 70 will be $10 a month for anyone who retires after contributing on earnings of $4000 a year. For anyone retiring in 1967, the maximum will be $20 a month, and so on until the top rate of $100 a month is reached after ten years. For people with lower earnings, the benefits will be proportional to these. The flat-rate pension of $75 will, of course, be available in addition to the graduated benefit. The amounts available in total pensions will therefor rise from $75 to people already retired to $175 for contributors with average earnings of $4000 in 1975.

Financing

The Canada Pension Plan will not build up a huge investment fund in the hands of the federal government. Instead, it will be financed on a pay-as-you-go basis. The money received in contributions will in most years approximately match the money paid out to pensioners. While the programme will operate with a contingency reserve, in order to avoid short-run fluctuations in contribution rates, this reserve will normally be small by comparison with the size of the annual payments.

This method of financing is a fundamental difference between a public pension plan and the private plans. While full funding may be provided under private pension plans, it is not the practice in government old age insurance programmes. Indeed, full funding on the scale of a nation-wide plan would be a quite excessive form of saving enforced by the state.

The practical consequence is that this plan can provide benefits within a few years—to people whose working lives are already well advanced—whereas a private plan ordinarily provides good pensions only to people who join the plan when they are quite young.

Contributions under the plan will not be required before the age of 18. They will stop at whatever age, between 65 and 70, a pension benefit is taken.

The initial contribution rates will be adequate for the financing of the plan through the transition years. The rate will slowly rise for about a generation afterwards, as the plan matures and an increasing proportion of people have retired at the full rate of graduated pension.

The ratio of benefits to contributions is especially favourable for those who retire during the transition period. It is therefore reasonable during this period to assess the voluntary contributor at or close to the combined employer and employee rate. However, after the programme has been in operation for a period of time and adjustments have to be made in contribution rates, the rate paid by voluntary contributors may be less than the combined rate for employer and employee.

Calculation of Benefits

Pensions are to be 30 per cent, adjusted if the starting age is before 70, of "what a man has been earning."

This obviously cannot mean what the pensioner earned in, say, the last year, or even few years, before beginning the pension. That would be very unfair to the man who suffered sickness or unemployment in the last few years before retirement. On the other hand, the pensioner cannot be allowed to pick the best year or few years of his earnings record; that would excessively favour the man whose earnings have been erratic and it would tempt voluntary contributors to contribute only in good years.

The pension benefit will therefore be based on the man's average earnings from the effective date of the plan to the time when he starts to draw his pension. These earnings cannot, however, be used without adjustment. To do so would mean that, as the general level of earnings rises over the years, there would be a widening span between earnings recorded in the early years and those shortly before retirement. The pension benefits paid would therefore be a declining proportion of "what a man has been earning" shortly before retirement.

Accordingly, for calculating pensions, earnings will be adjusted in line with changes in the general level of salaries and wages. The current average of salaries and wages in Canada is about $4,000 a year, the ceiling chosen for earnings under the Canada Pension Plan. This ceiling will also be adjusted with changes in the general level of wages and salaries. The pension programme will therefore permanently provide a satisfactory standard of pensions for people with earnings up to the average level.

If a man starts his pension in, say, 1970, "what he has been earning" will be calculated by averaging his actual earnings in 1969 and, for each earlier year, his earnings adjusted by the change in average salaries and wages between that year and 1969. In other words, all his earnings will be put on a 1969 equivalent.

The use of average earnings would excessively penalise people whose earnings in some years are abnormally low because of sickness and unemployment. This will be overcome, to a reasonable degree, by excluding a man's years of lowest earnings from the calculation of his average earnings. Also, for each year beyond 65 that a man continues to work, he will be able to exclude, from the calculation of his average earnings, an additional low year. This will provide quite a powerful incentive to go on working after 65, for the man who is able to do so without any large reduction in pay.

The graduated contributory and flat rate universal pensions will be paid to beneficiaries in one cheque. At existing wage levels the total pension available to a single person at age 70 will range from $75 to $175 monthly, as indicated in the following table:

Combined Pensions Available to Single Contributor at Age 70, by Average Monthly Pensionable Earnings

Average Monthly Pensionable Earnings	Monthly Graduated Pension	Flat-rate Pension	Payable Combined Pension
$	$	$	$
100	30	75	105
150	45	75	120
200	60	75	135
250	75	75	150
300	90	75	165
333	100	75	175

Adjustment for Age

Pensions drawn before the age of 70 will be reduced by a small percentage for each month between the date when the pension starts and the date of the pensioner's seventieth birthday. For anyone who takes his pension at the earliest opportunity, when he reaches 65, the pension received would be 32.5 per cent less than the pension he could have claimed at age 70. The reduction at ages between 65 and 70 would be proportional to this.

Anyone who is eligible for both the flat-rate and the graduated pension must choose the same age for starting both.

There will be no retirement test: a man may start drawing the appropriate rate of pension at any time between his 65th and 70th birthdays, whatever his other earnings. Once he elects to draw his pension he cannot go off pension for a while and then come back on at a higher rate.

At existing wage levels the total pension available to a single person at age 65 will range from $51 to $118 monthly, as indicated in the following table:

Combined Pensions available to single contributor at age 65, by average monthly pensionable earnings

Average Monthly Pensionable Earnings	Monthly Combined Pension [a]

(a) Rounded to nearest dollar for illustration.

Widows and Widowers

The income available to the surviving partner of a marriage will be rather more than half the previous combined income of the couple. To achieve this, since the flat-rate pension is halved, the income-related pension available to a widow will be 60% of the benefit available to the couple.

This provision will apply with equality to the sexes. That is, it applies equally to either a widow or, if a deceased wife had earned income entitling her to a pension, to a widower.

A widow or widower will be entitled, from age 65, to whichever is the larger of either (a) her or his own combined pension, or (b) her or his own flat-rate pension plus 60 per cent of the combined earnings-related pensions of the couple-subject, however, to the maximum which applies at the time to the total pension of any one person.

Administration

The Department of National Health and Welfare will administer the Canada Pension Plan. The contributions under the Plan will be collected by the Department of National Revenue. Employers will be responsible for deductions from their employees and will then remit these deductions monthly, together with their own contributions, to that Department. Voluntary participants will make annual payments to the Department.

The Department of National Health and Welfare will maintain an index of contributors, and will be responsible for the payment of benefits. The Department of National Revenue will forward to the Department of National Health and Welfare the record of pensionable earnings so that this information can be credited to each individual contributor's account. The maintenance of the records and the calculation of benefits will be achieved through the use of modern data processing equipment.

The necessary provisions will be made for appeal procedures to ensure that contributors, beneficiaries and employers may have an impartial review of any disputes which may arise in relation to the programme.

Authority will be provided to work out reciprocal agreements with other countries for the coverage of people who move between countries.

Relation to Other Pension Plans

A great contribution to old age security has been made, and will continue to be made, by the considerable growth of private pension plans, which now cover more than 1,800,000 people in Canada. Not all of these plans, however, provide sizeable pensions, particularly for workers who do not join the plan early in life. Also, since vesting is rarely complete, private plans have operated as a growing restraint on the mobility of labour.

Several provinces are interested in lessening these and other problems connected with private pension plans, particularly by the establishment of rules for portability and solvency. These are, in the view of the federal government, useful steps forward.

However, since such private plans would be funded, even their compulsory extension cannot make possible retirement at an adequate standard for people now in their forties to sixties who have not been covered previously. Moreover, self-employed people cannot have access to such plans.

The Canada Pension Plan not only provides early benefits but also automatically provides Canada-wide portability of pensions for people with earnings up to an average level. It is thus designed for those whose needs cannot be fully met by the extension of private pension plans under provincial supervision. It will be available comprehensively and it will quickly provide fair-size pensions to those who retire in the next decade or two.

The plan is designed to meet these needs of the Canadian people while helping to establish a pension system which, through the combination of private, provincial and federal action, will be sound and satisfactory in the long run.

The Adjustment Period

The adjustment of private pension plans to a public program with graduated benefits cannot be altogether easy. However, this does not appear to have been a deterrent to private plans in the United States. Since the American Old Age, Survivors and Disability Insurance program was established there has continued to be a substantial growth in private pension plans. The number of employees covered by private pension plans, expressed as a percentage of the wage and salary workers in private industry, rose from 31 per cent in 1954 to 45 per cent in 1961 in the United States.

The Canada Pension Plan has been designed to ease as fully as possible the adjustment of private pension plans to the developing public programme. The fact that the Canada Pension Plan will be financed on a pay-as-you-go basis, with a small contingency reserve, ensures that contributions in the early years of the programme are at a very modest level. The absence of large reserves means that there will not be large transfers of funds from the private sector to the public sector of the economy. Transfers will be from the working population and employers to retired people, who will spend their benefits largely on consumer expenditures. It is not proposed that large reserves be built up as a vehicle for federal debt management and public investment.

Some employers and employees will no doubt wish to revise existing pension plans by reducing contribution rates approximately in line with their contributions under the Canada Pension Plan. The ten-year transitional period means that such adjustments can be made carefully and gradually.

In sum, the advantages of the fairly lengthy transition are:

1. to provide adequate time for existing pension plans to be adjusted to the federal plan;

2. to enable contribution rates to begin at a low level and rise fairly slowly, so that companies and individuals not now paying into pension schemes will have time to adjust to this new financial situation;

3. to avoid too sharp a contrast between people who have already retired—who will get the new $75 minimum pension—and people who start drawing pensions only a few years later.

Economic Progress

In the government's view, the great merit of the Canada Pension Plan is that it is a social security programme which is realistically geared to the growth of the economy. It can help to provide a foundation for other social programmes, notably for those who are disabled, for widows with dependent children, and for orphans. In itself, it quickly makes modest pensions available. These benefits will grow until, in ten years, an adequate scale of pensions is available for people of low and moderate incomes. As such incomes grow, with economic progress, the scale will rise in a way which ensures that people who make contributions now can be assured of pensions which will still provide a secure retirement in line with the economic conditions of the time.

In the growth of the economy, importance is rightly placed on the role of private pension plans in providing savings to finance investment. All pension arrangements, of course, require payments out to the beneficiaries as well as savings by those who are now working. In a static economy no mature pension plan would be in itself a source of savings. The net saving through private pension plans arises from the growth of the plans as the population increases and income levels rise.

Such growth is of continued importance. The Canada Pension Plan will provide, on a permanent basis, the scale of pensions for low and moderate incomes which is an appropriate first charge on a society that values the security and dignity of those whose working life is past. But there will remain full scope for private saving above this minimum. The scope will be enlarged with economic progress. The individual, in association in many cases with his employer, will remain responsible for the saving which a rich and growing country needs for its further economic development, and by which more and more people can afford to provide for themselves a truly comfortable retirement.

International Comparisons

Since their inception, pension programs in many countries have changed greatly. Although a number of older systems date back to the late nineteenth century, the majority of the programs were initiated in the decades immediately preceding or following World War II.

The programs in effect in Great Britain and France were extensively revised in 1946 and 1945, respectively. Revisions occurred in the West German program in 1957 and in the Swedish program in 1959.

It is of significance that the programs in Great Britain and Sweden were both revised in 1959 for the purpose of adding graduated benefits to the existing flat-rate benefits. Most pension programs now in operation relate the rates of pension in some way to the pensioners' prior earnings.

The benefits under the Canada Pension Plan will inevitably be compared with those available under the Old Age, Survivors and Disability Insurance program in the United States. Set out below are the rates of benefit payable to workers with no dependents but with various average monthly earnings, up to the maximum under the United States program. The minimum pension under the United States program is $40, compared with the flat-rate $75 at age 70, or $51 at age 65, in Canada.

RELATED PROGRAMMES

Survivors and Disabled Pensions

A full programme of social insurance would provide benefits for survivors and disabled persons who have not reached an age at which benefit would normally be considered an old age pension. Doubts have been expressed whether such benefits are within federal jurisdiction under the existing provisions of the British North America Act. Certainly such programmes as now exist for these people are provincially administered. This is, accordingly, a subject which requires full consultation and discussion between federal and provincial governments to ascertain the wishes of the Provinces and to determine whether a mutually satisfactory approach can be worked out.

The persons who might be covered under wage-related pensions for survivors and disabled persons would be as follows:

(a) Widows with Dependent Children: A pension payable from the date of the death of a contributor to his widow, if she has one or more dependent children, until the youngest child reaches age 18.

(b) Orphans: A pension payable in respect of the orphans of a contributor from the date of death of the last surviving parent until the youngest orphan reaches age 18.

(c) Disabled Persons: A pension payable to a contributor under the programme who suffers such a prolonged disability that he is unable to secure gainful employment.

If such coverage were to be provided as an additional part of the Canada Pension Plan, the scale of pensions would be related to the benefit otherwise available to the contributor at age 65, and the cost of the benefits would be financed as a part of the contributory programme.

Federal-Provincial Shared Programmes

Another related matter concerns federal-provincial assistance programmes. The introduction of an adjusted pension at age 65 will reduce federal-provincial expenditures under the old age assistance programme. Once the Canada Pension Plan is in operation many persons in the 65 to 69 age group will not have to seek old age assistance because the adjusted benefits will be available. Similarly, if a disability pension is subsequently included as a part of the Canada Pension Plan, many persons who would otherwise have sought assistance through blind persons or disabled persons allowances will find their needs met under the new programme.

Since payment of old age assistance, blind person's and disabled persons' allowances is made by the provincial governments and the cost is shared, it is important that any federal plans for future improvement of the provisions of this legislation should be the subject of consultation between the federal and provincial governments. If the provinces will agree to share the additional cost the federal government is prepared to increase the maximum assistance payment under the federal legislation to $75 a month. One question of special interest to the federal government is whether the age of eligibility under the old age assistance programme can be lowered from 65 to 60 for widows and unmarried women.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, July 23, 1963

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald tabled:

Report of the Canadian Commercial Corporation, including its accounts and financial statements certified by the Auditor General, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1963, pursuant to sections 85(3) and 87(3) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Statement agreed to on July 21, 1963, between the representatives of the Government of Canada and the United States of America, respecting the United States Interest Equalization Tax. (English and French texts).

Bills read first time.

SECOND READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck moved, with leave of the Senate, that the bills be read the second time now.

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: On division.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, last night we were the witnesses of an unusual performance. Everybody knows what Virgil says of the God Neptune during a storm. Neptune angrily said to the waves, "Quos Ego . . ."—"You that . . ."

Last night I realized that there were several King Neptunes in the Senate. They vituperated—if that word is not parliamentary I will withdraw it—against the two members of the House of Commons who have been objecting to divorce bills. I understand that we have on our statutes an act for human rights and fundamental freedoms. Though I have no power of attorney to defend those members, I speak as a member of Parliament, as a Senator of Canada, and I say that everybody is free to enjoy his own liberty, to take whatever stand he or she wishes for the public good.

Honourable senators, those members of the other chamber are not opposed to divorces; they are opposed to the manner in which divorces are granted, and their view is that divorces should be taken from Parliament to be given to a court, a court under the jurisdiction of the Government of Canada. That is all. It is an opinion which deserves consideration and respect. When have we heard members of the House of Commons complaining about the members of this august chamber as bitterly as was done here last night against the members of the other house? I was really surprised. I thought of the human rights and fundamental freedoms that we hear so much about, which allow everyone to enjoy the right to his own opinion.

Now, some people feel that there is an excessive number of divorces. I admit that one divorce would be one too many. On the other hand, we should not lose our sense of proportion: we should consider the proportion of divorces to marriages. How many marriages were there in Canada in the year 1960? There were nearly half a million—478,000 marriages. And what was the number of divorces? It was about 6,900—let us say 7,000 in all. Seven thousand divorces compared to 478,000 happy marriages.

Naturally it means that there were more marriages than divorces, and that the number of divorces compared to the number of marriages was rather infinitesimal. I do not say that to defend divorces; I say that in order that we should not lose our sense of proportion in the Senate.

I have thought of saying this for a long time, and have hesitated, but I will say it now. In Europe there are three small, well-known principalities. There is Monaco, which has been made famous by Princess Grace and her blessed union with Prince Rainier; there is the principality of Andorra, near the boundary of France and Spain; and there is the principality of San Marino in Italy. In the whole North American continent there is one "principality," which is noisier than the three European principalities put together: it is the Senate Divorce Committee, under the kingship of our honourable colleague the senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck). His Divorce Committee has more importance than any other question—the air is full of it all the time.

I have great sympathy for those persons who are in domestic trouble, but let us not magnify the Divorce Committee beyond ordinary measure. It is concerned with 6,900 cases—and not all of them, because many divorces are granted by the provincial courts. It is concerned with about 600, cases which have come to the Parliament of Canada.

Yesterday, in a few minutes, if not in a few seconds, we passed legislation concerning the expenditures of the previous administration. The money was spent, whether wisely or not, I do not know. It had to be paid out. That is all right. Today we are going to be asked to give all three readings to several divorce bills.

I have made my protest; I am through; my conscience is clear; I have said what I wanted to say. But, in the future I hope that my colleagues will unite in order to get rid of the divorce business. We should have no divorces committee here. Divorce should come under a federal court, the Exchequer Court of Canada, and as many judges as are needed to look after divorce cases could be appointed. As Senator Dupuis said two or three years ago, let us have a federal court to dispose of these cases.

I have great respect for all members who work on the Divorce Committee. I do not want to be unfair to them, because I know they work like slaves. I give them full credit for that, but it is not their job. The most important job they have is to look after legislation concerning the welfare of the Canadian people, in other words, legislation for the public good.

Our honourable colleague Senator Dupuis said two or three years ago that the best way to deal with the divorce situation was to entrust it to the Exchequer Court, and in my opinion he was right. While it was a suggestion not shared by all, it was nevertheless a good suggestion and one deserving consideration by the Government and by the members of both houses.

It was said yesterday that the province of Quebec is opposed to divorce being entrusted to a federal court. This I do not know. Perhaps it was the situation some years ago, but great changes have taken place in the discipline of the Roman Catholic Church; and it is precisely for that reason the second Vatican Council, the Ecumenical Council, has been convened in Rome. Many changes have already been made by certain eminent bishops. Who would have thought some years ago that a cardinal, a prince of the Church, would attend a meeting of all religions to discuss unity? Nobody could have believed it, but now we see that it is an accomplished fact. It shows that progress is being made in all domains toward an increase in tolerance and broad-mindedness.

I do not want to be accused of lacking in these two great qualities, and therefore I will not insist any longer. But what I have said today is what I have thought for a long time. To show my earnestness in mentioning the suggestion of my colleague about the Exchequer Court, may I refer to one of my speeches in which I quoted it verbatim because I considered it was one of the best suggestions made by any member of either house. I would also mention, honourable senators, that Mr. Stanley Knowles, M.P., made the same suggestion, and when a suggestion is made by several people I think it deserves consideration.

I would conclude, sir, by saying that these bills will pass first, second and third reading today and I shall not object. I will show what Mr. Mackenzie King called good will. It did not apply to me in particular, but that was a phrase he liked to repeat very often. I show my good will, provided that in the future the Standing Committee on Divorce is not described as something that ought not to be discussed.

I admit that the members of the committee work hard, but, on the other hand, I do not forget that many investigators are in jail because they perjured themselves before the committee. It has been put on record that those investigators do the same work in different cases, that they are gifted with the eyes of an eagle, and that from a point some 300 feet away they can see through a key hole what happens in a room. Let us not forget that some investigators are in jail, and that judges have used strong language when imposing a penalty upon them, a penalty they richly deserved.

On the one hand there are the members of this house who have worked hard, members whom I respect and whom I encourage to continue to work; but on the other hand, there are the fellows who are in jail because they did not tell the truth, and who were highly paid to organize schemes for divorces.

There is the ray of hope, that in the future the members of both Houses of Parliament will understand that it is possible to have a competent federal court to deal with any divorce case that is submitted to it, thus giving our colleagues a free mind to devote to legislation of public concern.

Hon. F. W. Gershaw: Honourable senators, the honourable senator from De la Durantaye (Hon. Mr. Pouliot) has made several suggestions to meet this problem that is facing us all. There is one other suggestion I wish to make. The honourable Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) has drafted a bill which I believe, if passed by this Parliament, would largely solve this difficult problem.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: There is no member of this house for whom I have more respect than the honourable Senator Gershaw.

Hon. Vincent Dupuis: Honourable senators, I rise on a question of privilege to say a word or two.

I know that the Senate does not like to spend too much time on the question of divorce, but as I have been implicated in this debate by the previous speaker (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), may I say that the only suggestion I made at the time—and it was made not only by me but by many other honourable senators—was that we should, as the Government had done in many other instances, delegate the power of the Parliament of Canada to hear and decide divorce cases.

I know that we are reluctant to do that because of the view held by the people of Quebec, the majority of whom are Roman Catholic, but in the pre-Confederation debates of 1867 the people of Quebec were represented, and they allowed a clause to be inserted in the British North America Act to the effect that marriage and divorce would be under the jurisdiction of this Parliament. Nobody objected to it at that time.

I do not see why we should not establish a court, under an appropriate name, in the province of Quebec and the province of Newfoundland, as is done in other provinces, to hear and decide these divorce cases and thus relieve the Houses of Parliament of that work.

There is another way to get rid of this problem, which I would suggest in passing. These bills are blocked in the other place just because they are private bills, and under an old law only one hour in each week can be devoted to the discussion of private bills. That is why two members of Parliament are able to block any private bill they wish. That is not fair. I think that representatives of both Houses of Parliament should meet and decide whether or not divorce bills should be considered as general or public bills, rather than private bills. If that were done, these divorce bills could be discussed for as long as was necessary to pass them, and I am sure that two honourable members of the House of Commons could no longer insist on prolonging a session of Parliament unduly. In that way this problem would be solved.

Motion agreed to and bills read second time, on division.

BILLS—THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: With leave of the Senate, I move the third reading of these bills now.

Motion agreed to and bills read third time and passed, on division.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON AGING

NOTICE OF MOTION STANDS

On the notice of motion by Hon. Mr. Croll:

That a Special Committee of the Senate be appointed to examine the problem involved in the promotion of the welfare of the aged and aging persons, in order to ensure that in addition to the provision of a sufficient income, there are also developed adequate services and facilities of a positive and preventive kind so that older persons may continue to live healthy and useful lives as members of the Canadian community and the need for the maximum co-operation of all levels of government in the promotion thereof;

That the said committee be composed of twenty honourable senators to be named later;

That the committee have power to engage the services of technical, clerical and other personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of the inquiry;

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate; and

That the committee be instructed to report to the House from time to time its findings, together with such recommendations as it may see fit to make.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I intended to proceed with this motion today, but the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford) has indicated that he is anxious that Item No. 5 on the Order Paper, an Act to amend the Atlantic Development Board Act, be proceeded with in order that it may go before a Senate committee tomorrow. Therefore, I would ask that this motion stand until later this day, on the understanding that, when Item No. 5 receives second reading or is adjourned, I shall proceed then.

I do not wish to be misunderstood. It is only to allow Item No. 5 to proceed that I am standing my motion. There are some controversial items in front of it and I do not intend to include them.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I assume then that Item No. 5 may be called first, and that when the debate on it has been concluded or adjourned we will revert to motions and proceed with the motion of honourable Senator Croll. Then, when that motion has been disposed of, we will return to the Orders of the Day and deal with Item No. 1.

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

PRIVATE BILL

THE CROWN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY—FIRST READING

Hon. A. Neil McLean presented Bill S-35, respecting The Crown Life Insurance Company.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. McLean moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Thursday, July 18, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland) for second reading of Bill C-80, to amend the Atlantic Development Board Act.

Hon. F. Elsie Inman: Honourable senators, I wish at this time to extend congratulations to my friend and colleague, the honourable senator from Montague (Hon. Mr. Grant) and also to Mrs. Grant. He is himself a medical doctor, and an excellent one. He has now four sons in the medical profession, the fourth having graduated recently from Dalhousie University. He also has a grandson and a son-in-law practising medicine in Prince Edward Island. Another son is a dentist and yet another is an optometrist. In addition, Senator and Mrs. Grant have a daughter who is a registered pharmacist, four daughters registered nurses, and another daughter who is a laboratory technician. I doubt if anywhere a parallel record can be found. Senator and Mrs. Grant have a family of 13 children, all living. Prince Edward Island is exceedingly proud of the Grant family, and I know we are all proud to have the honourable senator a member of the Upper House.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mrs. Inman: I do not intend to speak at length on Bill C-80, but the subject is a very important one to the Atlantic provinces and is of special concern to Prince Edward Island on account of its insular position, its limited natural resources, its markets and its transportation problems.

When this measure came before us last fall, I, along with many others, welcomed the idea of an Atlantic Development Board. The principle of the bill was good, but it did not go far enough. It was not broad enough to realize the end for which it was created, namely, to promote the economic development of the Atlantic area of Canada.

In the first place, five members seemed to be too few to deal adequately with the many and varied issues and questions which would face the board.

Each province has its own economic and other problems, and these must be dealt with according to the facilities available for developing the resources in each province. Many problems, of course, are common to all four provinces. For example, unemployment in this area is the highest of any part of Canada, but incomes average much lower. We will look to the Atlantic Development Board for assistance and advice in order to put the Atlantic region on a parity with the other provinces of Canada.

One serious need in these eastern provinces is markets. If we are to produce more, we must sell more, and the new board can be of tremendous assistance in finding new markets and increasing sales in present outlets.

In Prince Edward Island we have three main sources of livelihood: farming in all its branches, fishing and tourism.

To promote these to their full potential we require a dynamic approach to increased production and local use of our natural resources. Processing plants to take care of our land and sea harvests and co-operatives to take care of marketing are necessary. We should have more lumber mills to process some of our forest products into building materials; we need concrete building-block plants and many other industries suitable to our resources. All this would considerably help our employment situation and be an incentive to our young people to stay at home.

Tourism is one of our most important assets. The only limit to this industry is the size of the Island and the capacity of its facilities. It would be difficult for us to look after 10 million people at the present time; however, I have no doubt we would make the effort. "Islanders" are not easily discouraged. Our province could well be developed into the tourist mecca of Canada—the Riviera of the Atlantic—but we need promotional assistance. We need parks—hundreds of them—camping grounds, motels and hotels. We require recreation centres, swimming and bathing supervised for those not familiar with the surf and sea. We should have supervised playgrounds for young children in order to relieve parents of the care and attention of their little ones for a few hours each day. All this takes time, money and careful planning. Here the Atlantic Development Board can be of inestimable value.

Speaking of education, may I say that Prince Edward Island has come ahead well in the matter of high schools and vocational schools and, while we have one excellent university in our province—St. Dunstan's—there is a great need for a second university. This is an age when our young people have little chance in life, unless they have the opportunity of education. On our Island it is often a heavy tax on parents when children have to be sent elsewhere to obtain education at university level.

I wish to speak for a few minutes on transportation—perhaps the most serious of all problems that we have to deal with in our province, since it affects every phase of our life and economy. Improvement in our communication and transportation systems is very necessary for the progress and prosperity of Prince Edward Island.

For a long time the causeway has been talked about as a solution to the transportation problem, but little is being done to make it a reality. Someone facetiously remarked that it could remain an indefinite political football. It has been a discouraging project to date.

I wish to read from Hansard of the other place, dated April 4, 1962. At page 2483, the member from Northumberland-Miramichi asked the following question:

> 1. Has a survey been undertaken of the engineering feasibility of a causeway across Northumberland strait from New Brunswick to Prince Edward Island; and, if so, has it been completed, and what are its findings?
> 2. If the survey has not been completed, when is it expected to be completed?

On April 17, 1962, the then Prime Minister, now the Leader of the Opposition, replied. Again, I ask leave to read from Hansard of the other place, at page 3033 of that date:

> Mr. Speaker, I have two or three announcements I wish to make today. The first has to do with the Northumberland strait causeway. As the house knows, comprehensive studies were authorized by the government in January, 1958, as to the whole question of the building of this causeway. The government has now decided that a causeway will be built between New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island.
> Studies to date have involved several government departments, consulting engineers and the national research council. An important part of the work was the construction of a scale model of the area by the national research council. The purpose of the studies undertaken has been to determine whether the project would be feasible from an engineering point of view and justified from an economic point of view. The answer in both cases is in the affirmative. The most economical crossing for road and rail traffic appears to be a combination causeway with navigation locks and a bridge between Jourimain island, New Brunswick, and Borden point, Prince Edward Island. The estimated cost is $105 million.

I understand the surveys were discontinued for a time on account of loss of equipment due to ice conditions in the Strait of Northumberland, but those surveys are underway again. It does seem peculiar that those surveys have been going on for six years with so little progress. It is only nine miles across the Strait and much of it is shoal water. This project could well be expedited by the consideration and influence of the board.

In the meantime I am pleased to know that we are to have a new, efficient icebreaker to complement the boats already in service across Northumberland Strait between Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick.

The Atlantic Provinces Economic Council, of which I am a member, has done excellent work for the Atlantic provinces and will welcome and fully co-operate in every way with the Atlantic Development Board, as amended. We in this region of Canada look to Bill C-80 as the means whereby the gates to progress and prosperity will be opened to our citizens of the Atlantic provinces. I am pleased to support this bill.

Hon. Edgar Fournier: Honourable senators, last Thursday and again this afternoon, we were privileged to listen to the two charming feminine voices representing the Atlantic provinces in the Senate. I wish to compliment the two honourable senators for the interest they are taking in public life, and especially for what they are doing to advance the interests of the women of Canada. We have also heard speeches from Senator Hollett and Senator Blois, both of whom were most instructive and to the point in what they said.

The bill under discussion was introduced by my honourable friend from Westmorland (Hon. Mr. Taylor). I was highly amused by the method by which he tried to convince honourable senators that I was in agreement with what he said. At one point he said that when he was Leader of the Opposition in the Province of New Brunswick, and I was sitting on the other side of the house, we more or less shared the same views at that time. The only time the honourable senator and I ever shared the same views was when we were both asleep—and not in the same bed at that. However, it shows that good debates make good friends. Senator Taylor is one of my best friends. He is doing a good job in the Senate, and we in the province of New Brunswick are proud of him.

Bill C-80 is an amendment to Bill C-94 of last session, and has a direct bearing on the economy of the Atlantic provinces and closely touches all of the Maritimes. Last year Bill C-94 was widely discussed among members of both houses. Many good points were raised. People of the Maritime provinces looked at the bill as a new horizon, a brighter future and a new hope.

It is not my intention to burden honourable senators with what was said last year, nor do I wish to repeat what I said then. However, I wish to quote one statement from my remarks of last year:

> Let us have faith. Time will tell. Let us be confident. If this measure proves to be successful, so much the better; this is what we want. If it does not prove to be successful, then I hope we will all be here again to get behind this project and make it successful.

Well, honourable senators, we are all here today; but surely no one in this chamber will agree that the amendments proposed in this measure, Bill C-80, are of any value or have any merit to improve the function of Bill C-94. The following are my reasons for that opinion:

1. The Atlantic Development Board is still in its infancy, being less than eight months old.

2. Its organization is getting ahead as fast as can be expected.

3. The nomination of the board members has been recognized as non-partisan, being composed of well-qualified businessmen of the highest calibre, and accepted by the people of the Maritime provinces.

4. So far, no one can find fault with or justly criticize the work already accomplished by this board. So at this early stage, why increase its membership?

Naturally, it is evident that the Government of the day can foresee three major reasons for this amendment. The reasons are short, simple, to the point, unjustified and undeniable. In my opinion the three major reasons for this amendment are: first, patronage; second, more patronage; and third, still more patronage. I have not been able to satisfy myself with any other answer.

One sad feature in this bill is that the expected $1 billion has been reduced to a mere $100 million. This is not enough even to complete any of the major projects expected, such as the canal, the causeway and many others.

The Government of the day talks in terms of $100 million. We appreciate this amount, for it is by far the largest amount ever granted to the Maritimes in the history of any Liberal government.

The proposed amendment is a great disappointment to the Maritimes, but not a surprise, for this is a typical example of the old "buck-passing" attitude and routine of a Liberal government towards the Maritime provinces. After 22 years of Liberal government, from 1935 to 1957, we have developed a strong physique for endurance, tolerance and patience by feeding on federal Liberal crumbs.

After six years of good Conservative government, which opened up a new era of economic growth in the Maritime provinces, I regret that, with the stab that the milk industry has received lately, we of the Maritimes will have to go back to stale bread and water.

Bill C-80 has now cast quite a shadow on the new hope of the Maritimes, and especially on my own province of New Brunswick; therefore my few remarks will be in the interests of my province.

Honourable senators, with your indulgence, I shall limit myself to four major projects urgently needed to bring the economy of New Brunswick up to Canadian standards. They are, namely, the Chignecto Canal; the Prince Edward Island Causeway, a joint project with Prince Edward Island; the Corridor Road; and the development of tidal power.

What is the Chignecto Canal? We have for years and years advocated the construction of the Chignecto Canal. This canal would provide a passage for ships between the Bay of Fundy and the Northumberland Strait areas, at a cost estimated by reliable engineering firms to be approximately $100 million.

The building of the canal would be the direct means of establishing over $105 million in new industries in the Fundy area, and of this total $100 million would be for the undertaking of industrialist K. C. Irving interests, as outlined in the report prepared for the Chignecto Canal committee and submitted by the Economic Research Corporation Limited in April 1960.

The Chignecto Canal would be a natural extension of the St. Lawrence Seaway, linking it with a sheltered route for Atlantic coastal shipping. For this new waterway a laker-type boat will be used which will be much cheaper to build and to operate than the ships normally used in ocean operations.

There were many sound reasons for its construction and, furthermore, it was found to be financially self-supporting; today, we can add to all these advantages the fact that the building of the Chignecto Canal will be of primary importance in aiding the depressed economy of the Atlantic provinces.

The history of the Chignecto Canal project is a subject that has been highly discussed for almost three centuries. Its building was first suggested back in 1686 by Jacques de Meulles, who was the Intendant of New France. No less than 12 major engineering reports dealing with its construction have been submitted, and three royal commissions have made a study of those reports.

The following history of the project is taken from records—and here, I assure honourable senators, I will be brief and will not go into lengthy details.

In 1686, its construction was first suggested by Jacques de Meulles.

1783—Colonel Robert Morse made another report.

1822—The New Brunswick Government instructed Robert C. Minette to carry on more surveying. It is well to note that the estimated cost at that time was $298,000.

1826—Thomas Telford reviewed the proposed structure and recommended a larger canal. At that time the cost was estimated to be $685,952.

1836—A canal company was incorporated in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick to build the canal, but it was never built.

1838—The Board of Trade of Saint John petitioned the Imperial Government to select qualified engineers for another survey.

1843—Captain H. O. Crawley of the Royal Engineers gave his report and recommended construction of the canal.

1850—The Province of Canada retained the services of Mr. Francis Hall to review the project and again recommendations were made.

1864—A Quebec conference of the provinces was held and construction of the Chignecto Canal was recommended.

1868—Parliament requested that Nova Scotia and New Brunswick turn all surveys and reports over to the Minister of Public Works.

1870—The Honourable Hector Langevin, Minister of Public Works, reported that all surveys and reports indicated construction of the canal.

1871—The Sir Hugh Allan Royal Commission recommended groups of canals to be built in Canada, and Chignecto was listed as number one in that report.

1872—Mr. G. P. Baillarge recommended a tidal canal.

1873—Mr. Gzowski and Mr. Keefer of the Allan Royal Commission recommended a half-tide canal at an estimated cost of $5,317,000. Tenders were called but no contract was ever awarded.

1874—Construction of the Chignecto Canal was mentioned in the Speech from the Throne and $500,000 was voted, and the federal Government was to appropriate $1 million. However, due to a general business depression at the time, the appropriation was reduced to $20,000. At that time a new element was brought into the discussion as to whether transport by canal vessels could compete successfully with the railroads then under construction on the Prairies.

1880—Mr. H. G. C. Ketchum incorporated the Chignecto Maritime Transport Railway Company. The company was formed to build a railroad to transport ships across by rail rather than build the canal, and a federal subsidy was voted providing that the railway was constructed at once.

1890—Mr. Ketchum ran into financial difficulties and the time limit was extended to 1893. By 1893 the railway was three-quarters constructed and more difficulties arose. However, by 1894 Mr. Ketchum had overcome his financial difficulties but the bill allowing further extension for the federal grants was defeated in 1896 by a vote of 55 to 54 and the railway was never completed.

1920—The project for the construction of the Chignecto Canal was revised under the Maritime rights.

1926—Robert K. Smith, M.P. for Cumberland, asked for a further study.

1930—The Frank M. Ross Commission was appointed to review the whole situation, but due to the defeat of the King Government the commission never sat.

1931—The Arthur Surveyer Commission was appointed to study the need for the canal.

1934—The commission reported without any doubt in favour of the feasibility of the project but again, due to recession, the matter stood in abeyance. The infiltration of potential hydro-electric power came into the picture, coincidental with the development of axial flow turbine generators with reversible blades, producing power during the up-tide and during the down-tide.

For about 22 years engineering specialists across the country took an interest in this project, but their interest was mostly on the tidal power potential rather than on navigation. So the canal became secondary, and not until 1958 was it possible to divorce the tidal power from the canal.

I had the honour to be chairman of the meeting at which these discussions took place. They were held in the conference room of the New Brunswick Electric Power Commission, of which I was chairman at the time. The meetings ended with a recommendation that another survey be made, omitting the electric power factor, to build a canal on its own merits for navigation.

Resulting from this meeting, the Chignecto Canal Committee was formed and the services of the Economic Research Corporation Limited of Montreal were retained to make another survey. It was about at the same time that the Foundation Company of Canada carried on its own survey for building the canal on its own merits. Both surveys were again favourable. I have never changed my opinion that the canal should be built on its own transportation advantages.

The electric-power potential of the tidal power is a different problem altogether, as there is no power potential in the canal itself. The tidal power potential is at Shepody Bay, Cumberland Bay and Minas Basin. With the possibility of nuclear development for the production of electrical energy and the success in turbo generators, construction cost of tidal power plant may just fall, to become a dream of the past.

So, honourable senators, the Chignecto Canal was first considered in 1686, just 277 years ago, and we are still talking about it. I am sure no other project in Canada, and perhaps in the whole world, has received such long and chaotic treatment.

(Translation):

Honourable senators, another project I have at heart is the construction of a causeway linking the provinces of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. That is another project much talked about through the years and which is needed more than ever.

The difficulties to get to that wonderful island, arising from the problems of the crossing of the strait and the maintenance of ferry boats, entail an expenditure of several millions of dollars every year and, thus, the economy of that province is seriously affected.

The tourist industry could easily increase threefold if a causeway were constructed in order to provide road and railway services. The crossing problems would automatically be eliminated for the C.N.R. freight and passenger trains. High voltage transmission lines belonging to the integrated interprovincial grid system for Nova Scotia and New Brunswick would also help to settle the costly problem of generating electric power with expensive machinery.

This project would present no difficulty when you consider the gigantic equipment provided by the evolution of mechanization. Nowadays, moving a mountain presents no problem.

The Conservative government had decided to build that causeway. Now, I hope that the Liberal government will not shy away from this project which is so necessary.

(Text):

Another project is the Corridor road. The Corridor road has long been proposed to link the Maritime provinces with the populated region to the west, including Montreal and vicinity, by a direct, short-cut road through the state of Maine. For example, the distance between Fredericton and Quebec, via route No. 2, which is the Trans-Canada Highway, is approximately 375 miles. By the Corridor road it would be 250, a reduction of some 125 miles. It would be of standard quality, with easy construction. It would benefit Maritime agriculture tremendously, as the popular markets of Montreal and Quebec City would be easier of access and less costly to reach. It would be a timesaver and would promote the tourist industry.

This brings me to the last one, which is tidal power. Honourable senators, of all three projects mentioned, the one I have most at heart is the development of the Maritime tidal power.

In 1957 I had the pleasure of visiting several European countries, mainly to study new and modern methods of producing electrical energy. In Germany I devoted myself to the production of thermal power produced by coal from the Ruhr valley. In France I spent most of my time studying hydraulic and tidal methods. After visiting the construction site of the tidal plant at St. Malo, on the river La Rance, I directed myself to Grenoble, where huge laboratories are situated and tests are conducted on tidal development. It was there, to my surprise, that I learned that the Maritime provinces—mainly, New Brunswick—had the world's largest tidal power potential. I refer to the Passamaquoddy, the Shepoday Bay, Minas basin and Cumberland Bay.

The production of tidal electrical energy is now a reality, by using a new type of turbine generator which produces energy down-tide and up-tide for a period of some 20 hours per day. The balance of the time, which is approximately one hour each tide at the neutral time, the same turbine generator can be used as a pump, powered by off-peak energy, to pump water in or out of storage, to create different water levels so that at the first change of the tide the generator becomes effective.

Naturally, in the production of electrical power the cost of the kilowatt and horsepower is primordial. Studies of the Maritime tidal power potential show this to be practical and economical, and such a development could produce power to supply the states of Maine, Massachusetts and Connecticut and reach the city of New York. Officials in the United States are now reviewing these matters. Such a development would supply more power than that required today for the whole of the Maritime provinces. With interconnection with Quebec, it could very well reach Ontario. By using the new methods of direct current on highline transportation, the line loss is reduced to a minimum and makes it economical for long-distance transportation.

So you see, honourable senators, in the Maritimes we have many facilities, and it is an accepted fact that heavy industries are interested in locating in areas of high electrical energy power potential.

To follow this electric energy potential, the full development of the Saint John river—with the co-operation of the United States in the development of the Rankin Rapids—would be beneficial. But, electrical power should be no problem in New Brunswick, even if only half the potential were developed. A mighty power potential stands just above New Brunswick as a shining star. I wish to refer to the potential of Hamilton Falls of Newfoundland, where over 4 million horsepower can be made available for the expansion of the area, to be carried over a great distance at a very low cost. This is one subject I hope this development board will study and take an interest in.

Honourable senators, I would like to take a few minutes of your time to say a word about unemployment, because much has been said in this house lately on the subject, and Bill C-80 has a strong influence to bring to bear on the relief of unemployment.

I can appreciate that the introduction of more industries is a step in the right direction, but are we making a real and true effort to find out first what are the causes of this large-scale unemployment? Is it not true that, for many reasons, we find people are leaving the country, or the farm to move to industrial centres, and those areas soon become overpopulated by people looking for work, as existing industries cannot absorb them all? Is it not true that push buttons have replaced thousands of tradesmen and labourers of all categories? Is it not also true that mechanization has replaced several thousands of men employed in the lumbering industry? The same applies to all other industries, including fishing and agriculture. Is it not true that the introduction of diesel power on the railroad has resulted in several thousands of men becoming unemployed? Today even public works and road construction are heavily mechanized, and few men are employed except as machine operators.

If we are going to do something to relieve unemployment, let us start with the causes and work from the bottom up, instead of working from the top down, trying to find more jobs and doing nothing at the source to halt the true cause of this terrible national disease called unemployment.

Many people have called this the century of progress. Is it progress when a bulldozer can replace 100 labourers? Is it progress when a payloader can replace another 50 men? Is it progress when push buttons send thousands of men home without a job and without the hope of finding one? Is it progress when chain saws or wood chippers are responsible for reducing the lumbering operation by more than 50 per cent? This may be progress for the employer, but surely not for the employee.

Furthermore, we are still feeling the effects of the last war, when our women were asked to leave their domestic work to replace men in the factories. Many thousands of women have never returned to their domestic work, although the men have been released from the services to go back to the factories. Furthermore, each year a new crop of individuals, coming from all walks of life, is added to the working force. Unemployment will not be solved by building only large industries using more push buttons, but by promoting small industries where manual labour will find its place.

Perhaps one might also say that our high cost of production is responsible for a large measure of unemployment. Perhaps our high standard of living must also take its share of the responsibility.

Honourable senators, in my opinion these are some of the true causes of unemployment, and unless we tackle the disease at its source, I am afraid this situation will go from bad to worse.

Returning to the consideration of Bill C-80, I am glad to read that an amendment to the the original bill was introduced in the other house. When this bill was first presented in the other house it had the guillotine set to dispose of it in 1969. I am sure everyone will agree with me that it was due to the efforts of the Honourable Hugh John Flemming and his associate that the guillotine was wrecked. I am sure that the people of the Atlantic provinces will be grateful to Mr. Flemming and his associate for this achievement.

It is amusing to read Hansard of last year, when Bill C-94 was debated from both sides of the house. It is interesting to read the arguments brought forward by the members who formed the Opposition of the day but who, unfortunately, are on the Government side today. It is shocking to see such a change of mind. When one reads Bill C-80 one would expect to find that what was strongly opposed and condemned last year by the Opposition of the time would be rectified today in their amendment. It is notable that no fewer than six amendments, including five from the Liberal side, were introduced concerning Bill C-94; yet in Bill C-80 most of those amendments are completely ignored.

When one reads the statements made during that debate by the present Secretary of State one would surely expect a completely different bill from that which is presented to us today. Practically every member of both houses took an active part in the debate, and in my closing remarks I would like to refer to one honourable senator's contribution. I very much regret that the honourable senator is not in his seat at this moment. He used to stand where I am standing at this moment. As one of the seven Trojan horses, as we were called last year when a group of us were introduced in this chamber—an introduction which was not called for and which was not very well received by honourable senators—I have this to say. The honourable senator, on December 19 last, for 45 minutes gave us a flagrant demonstration of physical torture and endurance, in a fruitless effort to condemn, section by section, the whole structure of this bill. I am sure that if any member of the honest and respectable trade of shoemaking had been here to witness such a contortion of mind and body he would have certainly seen a gloomy picture and would have described it in a language that could not be translated into Latin. I am sure that only Ed. Sullivan could surpass such a demonstration of a senator talking so much, saying so little, and accomplishing nothing. It was fortunate that this demonstration took place in December, as then there was no heat problem. Apparently for once the translators pleased the honourable senator.

In closing, I repeat that we place our hope in this amendment, but I have my doubts that we are doing the right thing by vesting power in a public body to spend public funds. I have never shared those views. The power to spend should remain the responsibility of the elected members; otherwise we are getting away from our democratic system.

Honourable senators, I thank you sincerely for your kind attention.

Hon. Gordon B. Isnor: Honourable senators, we have heard much about this bill already, and I do not intend to make extended remarks on it. However, coming as I do from Nova Scotia, I wish to take this opportunity to express my approval of the general principles and the objects as outlined in Bill C-80.

Before doing this may I join with other honourable senators who have spoken, Mr. Speaker, in offering my congratulations to you. I do so now because it is the first opportunity I have had to speak since you took over your important post as Speaker. I recall when you entered the House of Commons in 1940 and the active part you took there down through the years. In particular, I recall your efforts as Parliamentary Assistant to the then Minister of Public Works, the Honourable Robert H. Winters, who made such a splendid contribution to Canada by his work in connection with the Trans-Canada Highway. You, Sir, as an engineer took a very active part in that work, and I had the opportunity of consulting with you on many occasions.

I also recall something which perhaps you may have forgotten, namely, the very deep interest you took in the construction of the Halifax-Dartmouth bridge. I have forgotten the name of the engineer who prepared the plans—I think it was Dr. Pratley—but I remember we studied them and talked the matter over together. It was your deep interest in the project which made your assistance so valuable.

You are following in the footsteps of the many fine senators who previously occupied this high office. In saying that I have particularly in mind the honourable Senator White, your immediate predecessor, who graced the Chair and the office in a very worthy manner. I am sure that you will continue to uphold the dignity of that office.

Honourable senators, this too is my first opportunity to congratulate my own Leader (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford). We who work with him are agreed on his very fine qualities. He entered Parliament, as did the honourable Senator Brooks, in 1935, so we have had full opportunity to know him and to work with him in a very friendly way.

I am sure you will not misunderstand me when I say that the honourable Senator Brooks also made a very fine contribution, and acted in a most dignified manner as Government Leader in this house. But in the very next breath I wish to say that we were all very pleased when the situation was reversed and Senator Macdonald took over his old post as Leader of the Government in the Senate. I think I speak for all on this side of the chamber in saying that we hope that the two gentlemen will continue to occupy their respective places for many years to come.

Honourable senators, I also wish very briefly to refer to the way in which the sponsor of this bill introduced it. He did so in his usual able manner. I wish I could do half as well as he in his reference to and explanations of the various terms of the bill.

I agreed with practically everything he had to say about it until he referred to the Chignecto Canal. This also applies to the speech today by the honourable Senator Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche). He too referred at some length to the years of study of this project, but, unfortunately, he stopped short of bringing the situation down to the present time. After all, we are discussing the present stage, 1963, and I thought he would have referred to the very last contribution made by a well-known member of his own province, a professor at the University of New Brunswick, Dr. W. J. Reddin, who said "Wardell is wrong on Chignecto", and he said it in pretty definite terms. I refer to his speech of January 29, 1963 and recommend it to the two honourable gentlemen who are such strong advocates of the Chignecto Canal.

In that speech he outlined his reasons and made a public statement as to why he did not think this was feasible at the present time.

Like Professor Reddin, I have read all the reports and studies on the Chignecto Canal. If I remember correctly, there have been four publications since 1949, each one of them well prepared. The first is "The Case for the Chignecto Canal" by N. S. Sanford, Chairman of the Canal Commission, June 22, 1950. The second is "The Story of the Chignecto Barrier". Then there was a strong article by a well-known citizen of New Brunswick, L. L. Harrison, a person acquainted with the shipping field, who said it was neither feasible nor justifiable, and gave very good reasons for his views. He looked at the situation from the point of view of dollars and cents and pointed out how the money could be used in other ways to much better advantage.

It is for these reasons I say that I agree with the honourable sponsor of the bill in everything he had to say about it with the exception of this particular matter.

Now I should like to join with the other speakers in welcoming the new senators. I know a great many of them and have sat in the House of Commons with some of them. I am sure they will all contribute and add to the knowledge of the other members of this chamber.

In this debate we have heard from New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. I do not know if the contribution made by my honourable friend Senator Hollett would please Premier Smallwood, having regard to what he had to say about the opportunities in Newfoundland and its lack of opportunities. However, I am glad to see that the other three Maritime provinces are in a somewhat different position. I think all the other speakers without exception expressed praise and saw the possibilities for Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick, despite the gloomy picture painted by the senator from Newfoundland, Senator Hollett. I am sure his view is not shared by all Newfoundlanders, and I am also sure that the picture is brighter than he outlined.

I hope my remarks will not be misunderstood; they are said in a friendly way because I am interested in the progress of all the Maritime provinces. However, I could not let this opportunity pass without saying that we in Nova Scotia have a different view as to the possibilities of Newfoundland than those expressed by Senator Hollett in his remarks the other day.

I particularly liked the speech by Senator Blois. He outlined what Nova Scotia was doing, and he showed that we were not asleep, that ours was a province with possibilities, and to illustrate this he pointed to the many industries now being established there.

I do not propose to go over those at the moment, although I might refer to one or two in keeping with the picture that I think is worth presenting to the rest of Canada, and thus show the possibilities contained in this bill. I feel sure that the members of the Atlantic Development Board will put their wholehearted effort into bringing about good results in so far as the Atlantic provinces are concerned.

Naturally, I am more particularly interested in Nova Scotia, the Ocean Playground, than in the other provinces. To me Nova Scotia is the more outstanding of the four Atlantic provinces—that is only natural. Anyone who has been to Nova Scotia will appreciate why I say that. We have wonderful harbours, and our politics are not narrow minded. All the Maritime provinces are good provinces, but in any group there is always one that is better than the others, and in this instance it is my opinion that the province of Nova Scotia is truly the Ocean Playground.

My honourable friend from Prince Edward Island (Hon. Mr. Grant), says: "Isn't that awful?". Honourable senators, it is easy to tell the truth and it is also a good quality.

I know that Senator Croll is anxious to proceed with his motion—

Hon. Mr. Croll: No, no; I enjoy listening to you.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: —so I do not propose to speak further at any length, but I do want to mention that we have in Nova Scotia organizations working towards somewhat the same objects as stated in this bill.

In the Halifax and Dartmouth areas there are commissions that have done wonderful work. We have in Halifax the Industrial Development Commission, which is financed entirely by the city of Halifax. In Dartmouth there is an industrial committee, which is another local concern being financed by the city of Dartmouth and composed of citizens of that city. There is the Industrial Promotion Committee of the municipality of the county of Halifax, and the organization that has already been mentioned by Senator Blois, Industrial Estates Limited, which is a Crown company financed by the province. It has done exceptionally good work.

I do not give Premier Stanfield all the credit, as my honourable friend Senator Blois was inclined to do the other day. The premier has done some very good work, but the members of these committees and commissions have also done exceptionally good work in bringing industries to the province.

Hon. Mr. Horner: You are not quoting anything from the Gordon Report with respect to your province, are you?

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I can do it myself much better than by quoting from the Gordon Report. I doubt very much whether the honourable senator would give that report the same interpretation we would.

I do want to mention one industry that is of real value to our province. I am referring, of course, to the Dominion Steel and Coal Company, which is our major employer. It employs 14,000 persons, and expends $125,000 a year—

Some Hon. Senators: $125 million.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Yes, $125 million a year. I am so used to dealing with small amounts that I find it difficult to comprehend these sums that run to the millions.

In Halifax there is a subsidiary of DOSCO, the Halifax Shipyards, which has been of considerable help particularly to the north end of the city.

Fish was mentioned on one or two occasions. I do not know whether honourable senators are aware of National Sea Products, which has seven plants throughout Nova Scotia, and whose products are marketed in every province of Canada and in every state of the Union. They employ approximately 2,000 persons in their processing plants, and I might add that whenever honourable senators want good fish they should ask for a brand of National Sea Products.

It will appeal, I think, to Senator Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche) who preceded me, if I mention the Nova Scotia Light and Power Company, a privately-owned electrical company that works in conjunction with the Nova Scotia Power Commission to supply power to the rest of Nova Scotia. It is, of course, linked up with New Brunswick by the grid, and from time to time when New Brunswick is short of power and the company has a surplus it supplies the New Brunswick Power Commission. It is well that the Maritime provinces will be tied together by the work of this board, and that is why I am in favour of this bill.

We have also in Nova Scotia outstanding seats of learning. We have sent young men from our colleges to every part of Canada. There is in Halifax, as honourable senators know, Dalhousie University and Saint Mary's University. There is Acadia University at Wolfville, and St. Francis Xavier University at Antigonish. King's College is, I think, the oldest university in Canada. There is also the Nova Scotia Technical College. All these institutions are turning out good graduates to help the rest of Canada and to carry on the work of this wonderful country.

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): There is also Saint Anne's College.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Yes. There are many others, but I have just mentioned those six.

Some honourable senators are perhaps thinking that I have spoken far too long, so let me draw my remarks to a close by again referring to the very fine manner in which the honourable sponsor (Hon. Mr. Taylor, Westmorland) introduced this bill. It is my view that if one has anything to say, he should say it. I quote from John Ruskin, who once said:

> When we fail to praise a man who deserves praise, two sad things happen: we run the chance of driving him from the right road for want of encouragement, and we deprive ourselves of one of the happiest of our privileges, that of rewarding someone who has earned our appreciation.

I thank Senator Taylor for the very fine manner in which he introduced this bill.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Honourable senators, I wonder if I might ask the honourable senator a question? Can he point out the black in the picture I painted the other day of Newfoundland?

Hon. Mr. Isnor: It was so black that it would be hard to point to any particular spot. The whole picture was rather dull. Perhaps I should have called it a dull picture rather than a black picture.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: In other words, you cannot point out the black at all except in the fisheries with which, perhaps, you are concerned.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, it is not my intention to take up very much time of the Senate in speaking in this debate. The subject has been thoroughly debated, not only during this session but also during the last session when the original bill was before us.

I want to commence where the honourable senator from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor) left off, and to congratulate the honourable sponsor of this bill (Hon. Mr. Taylor, Westmorland) for his excellent presentation.

There has been a lot of talk with respect to this bill. I remember when I was in the House of Commons a few years ago a gentleman there said: "The trouble with you people from the Maritime provinces is that you talk too much." I am afraid that sometimes we may be accused of that, and we will be now if we debate this bill much longer. However, I make the excuse that I am afraid that if I do not say something it might be misunderstood by the people down in New Brunswick because while in that province silence is considered golden, silence on such a proposition as this would not be so considered. In such a matter as this we are rather constrained to give voice.

The legislation before us was discussed quite extensively last year, as I have said, and it received a very enthusiastic reception in the Atlantic provinces. The people there were all for an Atlantic Development Board, and so expressed themselves. So far as these amendments to the Atlantic Development Board Act are concerned they have been discussed very little in the Maritime provinces or, perhaps, I should say in the Atlantic provinces. I sometimes wish that Newfoundland had decided to be a maritime province as the other three provinces did, because I do not know of any province of Canada, except perhaps Prince Edward Island, that is more a maritime province than is Newfoundland. Both are islands. Besides, it is much easier to say the "Maritime provinces" and that one is a "Maritimer", than it is to say that you belong to the Atlantic provinces and you are an "Atlanticer".

Honourable senators, the principles of this legislation were fully accepted last year when the Atlantic Development Board was set up, and there were no demands for any changes.

I do not think there was a hint from anyone that the board as set up was a political board. I know all the members of the board, some better than others, and the only man who might be considered a politician is the representative from Prince Edward Island who was, I think, attorney general of that province at one time.

In regard to the chairman of the board, Brigadier Wardell, I may say that although I have been connected with politics in New Brunswick for a considerable time I never knew what his politics were—and there are people unkind enough to say they do not think the brigadier himself knows.

One thing of which we can be sure is that, in regard to the improvement and development of that area, that work is 100 per cent the politics of the chairman of the board, Brigadier Wardell. I agree wholeheartedly with the remarks of the honourable sponsor of this bill (Hon. Mr. Taylor, Westmorland) when he paid Brigadier Wardell a fine compliment a few days ago.

Honourable senators, in regard to the $100 million fund, an amendment to the bill, in my estimation the general public were satisfied that it was not necessary to mention an amount.

The honourable the Secretary of State, in introducing this measure at the resolution stage in the House of Commons, said that the $100 million fund envisaged by this bill would not be the sole means of stimulating development in the Atlantic provinces.

No one could conceive of its being the sole means of stimulating development there. There are four provinces concerned and the period originally was five years; so a division of $100 million amongst the four provinces over that period of time would leave very little for each of them.

On that occasion the honourable the Secretary of State referred to departments of government which would figure prominently in the Atlantic development plan. He indicated that the Department of Mines, the Department of Forestry, the Department of Agriculture, etc. would figure prominently.

It seems to me that that in itself is an admission by the Government that the act as it stands should not be changed, that the board, far from having a limitation set on its activities by a specific fund, would in fact have the resources of the Government of Canada behind it and that its proper role would be to co-ordinate the development of the region and perform its role as an advisor to the federal Government in this regard.

There is no doubt that if $1 had been mentioned instead of $100 million, it would also have been a nominal amount, just as a nominal amount is mentioned in many bills of this kind.

The people of the Atlantic provinces will do whatever is necessary to carry out successfully the plans envisaged in the original intention of the act. I am sure also that this is what the people of Canada want.

The act itself had a good reception everywhere across Canada, with very few exceptions. One exception which rather surprised me was the attitude of the Toronto Globe and Mail. It published an editorial which I think did not do that newspaper any credit, and which I am sure did not express the opinion of the people of the city of Toronto.

That editorial was published on July 12, 1963 under the heading: "Atlantic Development", and had this to say, in part:

> Wisely, the Government refused to go along with another Opposition demand:

The first Opposition demand mentioned was that placing a time limit on the board.

> That the $100 million provided for the Board be regarded as a minimum figure.

Honourable senators will remember that a request was made in the House of Commons that the $100 million be regarded as a minimum figure. Although it was not changed in the bill, the honourable the Secretary of State said that that might be done.

The editorial continued:

> Without a limit on funds, the board would be in real danger of becoming a dispenser of more of the sort of unproductive subsidies and handouts that sectors of the Atlantic economy have been given for years.

I think that is a very unfair statement. I am satisfied that all right-thinking people in the city of Toronto and in Ontario do not agree with that statement. It continues:

> The insistence on some sort of limit should tend to curtail this danger.

I shall not take more time this afternoon to enlarge on what I have said; I know that it is not necessary to do so in a body of this kind, so I am curtailing my remarks as much as possible. Speakers who have preceded me have mentioned what the Atlantic provinces have been doing for themselves. That is one strong argument which we feel we can use to other parts of Canada, namely, that we are not lying idle ourselves in that region but are using every means at our disposal to improve the condition of our people.

The Atlantic Provinces Economic Council, APEC, has been mentioned. I do not think it is possible to estimate the splendid work which has been done by this voluntary group of persons for the development of our people there. This work has been praised by the honourable senator from Northumberland-Miramichi (Hon. Mr. Burchill) and by practically all the speakers. Honourable Senator Inman mentioned that she was a member of APEC, and I think that practically every Member of Parliament from the Atlantic provinces is a member. Also, most of the outstanding businessmen in those provinces are members of that council. I could mention the individual activities of many of our businessmen there. They have laid a wonderful foundation for the development of industry, in spite of many difficulties.

Honourable Senator Burchill was not present the other day, but I was pleased to hear honourable Senator Lambert mention what is being done by Senator Burchill's company on the north shore of New Brunswick. We could point out many instances.

The honourable Senator Blois mentioned what Stanfields have done for Nova Scotia over a long period of years. We could point in Saint John to one of the big industrialists of the Dominion of Canada and show how many, many people have been employed and thousands of jobs have been provided through the efforts of this one man.

Taking one of the activities there, the Saint John Dry Dock, only a few years ago the Saint John Shipbuilding Company gave employment to only 300 men and was practically bankrupt. It was taken over by these industrialists, and today between 3,000 and 4,000 men are employed in the same Saint John shipping yard.

I may also point out that it would not have been possible to do this had not the previous Government encouraged shipbuilding in this country by paying 40 per cent of the cost of building ships and aiding in the building of draggers and other ships and boats used in the fishing industry.

These are some of the industries which the businessmen in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland are bringing to the fore. However, that is not enough. Therefore, we are asking the people in other parts of Canada to support this work, and we have high hopes. It is well known that unemployment in the Atlantic provinces is much greater in proportion to other parts of Canada. I should like to refer to that later.

Honourable senators, we have in our four provinces what is needed for secondary industry. We have the raw materials, which should be processed more widely. That is why I say that industry, such as the Geo. Burchill Company, on the Miramichi, is a great asset because that company is using one of our important raw materials in the development of a great secondary industry. We have the mines, the mineral forest, farm and fishery products. All of these natural products are second to none in any other part of Canada. One of the major reasons they have not been developed is their long distance from markets, and also that we have not had cheap power and have had to pay higher transportation costs than other parts of Canada. These problems can be solved, we hope, and to a large extent through the efforts of this board.

Honourable senators, in my opinion, regardless of what is specified in the bill, the key to the success of this whole proposition is in the hands of the federal Government. An excellent editorial in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of July 11, 1963, makes this point very clear. The editorial says, in part:

> The Act—

That is, the Atlantic Development Board Act.

> —as it now stands, empowers the board "to inquire into and report to the Minister upon measures and projects for fostering the economic growth and development of the Atlantic Region". This could mean everything or nothing depending upon the disposition of the board and of the government of the day.

If the Government of the day is sympathetic and will supply the necessary funds, there is no question in my mind but that the board can be a great success. The editorial continues:

> By themselves, these changes are neither good nor bad—

It is speaking about the changes in the number of men on the board and of the fund set up.

> —the success or failure of the board ultimately will depend, not on the terms of the legislation, but on the willingness of the federal government to approve the expenditure of large sums of money in the region. For even with the creation of a $100 million capital fund, the Cabinet, as before, will retain control of the purse strings.

I do not think truer words could have been written. However, to ensure success in industry, two things are necessary. One is cheap power; the other, cheap transportation. I believe cheap power is possible in the Atlantic provinces.

There is another development which is being talked of at the present time and which I think will be good, namely, the development of the Passamaquoddy, in which the United States is greatly interested. That is the great inlet of rushing waters where the tide rises 40 or 50 feet with tremendous power, between the state of Maine and the province of New Brunswick. We are told that this power can be harnessed and developed fairly cheaply. Of course it can be developed more easily by the United States than by Canada, for the United States has for some years set up a fund whereby money can be borrowed at low interest rates—2½ to 3 per cent, I believe—for the development of hydro-electric power, whereas we would probably have to pay a rate of 5 or 6 per cent. They are anxious that Canada, and particularly New Brunswick, of course, should join with them. I am sure that by doing so we would have a great abundance of cheap power.

As far as transportation is concerned, different means, such as the Chignecto Canal, have been mentioned. I agree with the views expressed by Senator Taylor, but not with those of Senator Isnor. The latter is way down in the southern part of Nova Scotia, and has a somewhat twisted view of the Chignecto Canal and its possibilities.

We also hear about the causeway, and the corridor through Maine.

These developments may come, and I hope they will, for they would assist transportation, and in the days to come they would probably go hand in hand with the success of the Atlantic provinces.

Success, I submit, depends almost entirely on the attitude of the federal Government—not on the present administration, for I hope there will be a change. I think success will depend on federal governments of the future. If these matters are to be treated as a handout, or as was suggested by the Globe and Mail, something to be got rid of as soon as possible, success will never be possible. If, however, the intention is to take steps to introduce more permanent secondary industries into this area, success will be possible, and I am sure the board and the people of the Atlantic provinces will each and all do their part. As I said earlier, we already have the raw materials used in primary industry.

Senator Isnor mentioned another resource that we have—education. No part of Canada has paid greater attention to the education of its people than the Maritime provinces, which have an abundance of well-educated people. The time has come when industry must depend almost entirely on people who are educated along specific lines. I was greatly shocked to hear a speaker on the radio the other day say that in 25 years' time there would be no such thing as common labour in Canada, and that such persons would have to receive training in the universities and be obliged to operate push buttons, such as spoken of by my friend from Madawaska-Restigouche (Hon. Mr. Fournier).

Honourable senators, I want to touch briefly on unemployment in the Atlantic provinces, about which a great deal has been said. According to records, the Atlantic provinces have had a larger proportion of unemployment than other regions of Canada. This is true of certain parts of the country which have to depend on primary industries to a great extent and can provide only seasonal employment. No area in Canada is more seriously affected by seasonal unemployment than the Atlantic provinces.

This of course will be the dominant factor in the thinking of the board when it undertakes various studies to improve the economy of the region, such as that of the fishing industry, which I am taking as one example. Others are forestry and farming, all of which are important to the economy of the Maritime provinces. Indeed, nearly 60 per cent of the fishermen in Canada come from the Atlantic provinces. There are between 55,000 and 60,000 men employed in the fishing industry, and that does not take into consideration those who are employed in the factories and packing plants. The report of the committee of inquiry into the Unemployment Insurance Act, better known as the Gill report, devotes a whole chapter to fishermen. Since fishing is one of the established industries and would be greatly affected by the Atlantic Development Board, I thought I should make some reference to the Gill report. The chapter dealing with fishermen is at page 174:

> While the payment of benefits to fishermen has undoubtedly been of great assistance to them, it has not operated as a satisfactory assistance scheme since the largest benefits are paid to those who have had the best record of fish sales. Thus those who most need assistance may get the least amount.

May I point out at this stage that fishermen were not included under the unemployment scheme until just a few years ago. Being an occupation of great seasonal employment, after perhaps four or five months of work every year they are not employed and go on the unemployment list. That is one of the major reasons that the unemployment roll in the Atlantic provinces is so much greater than in other parts of Canada.

The Gill report goes on to say:

> We are convinced that the existence of the unemployment insurance plan has become so dominant a feature in the life of some fishermen that it has distorted the normal economic operation in certain areas.

The report then makes certain recommendations that would take fishermen off the Unemployment Insurance Act and set up a separate scheme for them, which would be administered mainly by the Department of Fisheries. This, it seems to me, would do two things. First of all, it would eliminate what has been a serious drain on the fund. As honourable senators probably know, fishermen receive in benefits more than ten times the amount they pay into the fund, but there is no reason why they should not receive the same amount as men working in any other industry. Secondly, it would, by removing this important group from the list of registered unemployed during the peak of winter employment, give a more realistic account of the actual number unemployed, especially in the four Atlantic provinces. That is where I say there is a distorted picture of unemployment in the Maritime provinces, due to the fact that there are about 45,000 fishermen and many of them are unemployed in the natural course of events for four or five months of the year. Fishing is and always has been a seasonable occupation, largely influenced by our climate. A fisherman is virtually unemployable during the winter months, and those same remarks also apply to the forestry industry and farming.

My point is this, that besides these primary industries we must have more secondary industries in the Atlantic provinces than we have at present. Our businessmen, manufacturers and others are working hard themselves at the present time to bring this about. We have the raw materials and we have the people necessary to make secondary industry a success, and I am satisfied that if the federal Government, the governments of the four provinces, and the people all work together this legislation can be very beneficial in the future.

Hon. Austin C. Taylor: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I must inform you that if Senator Taylor (Westmorland) speaks now, it will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): Honourable senators, I need only say a few words in closing the debate in relation to this bill.

First of all I would like to thank those who have taken part in the debate for the general tone of their discussions and their arguments, and while some have been tinged a little politically, in the main I think it can be well said that the majority of those on this side of the house, as well as those on the other side, are in support of this bill.

In introducing this measure, I said that I supported the original bill, and that my only objection to it was that there were some omissions from that bill which I thought would have made it a much more effective piece of legislation, and one which I felt would create a better, shall I say, climate for the development of new industry or some increase in the industrial development of the Atlantic area.

I am rather surprised at the reference of my honourable friend, the senator from Madawaska-Restigouche (Hon. Mr. Fournier), to the committee as being a patronage committee. He mentioned three things, all of which had to do with patronage.

I am not familiar, as I said the other day, with all of the present members, but I do know two of them rather well. I was somewhat surprised at the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) when he said a few moments ago that he did not think he knew what the chairman's political views were. Well, if he had been in my position in 1956 he would have known very well what the political views of the chairman were.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: What does Mr. Smallwood say?

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): I am only referring to the views of those I know something about. I do know he is a partisan man politically and, as I said the other day, he and I agreed to disagree on many things, but we do agree fundamentally on the need for the development of the Atlantic area, particularly its industrial development.

I want to repeat what I said at that time. I believe he has created a situation where anyone going on that committee will recognize he has contributed a lot to the board and will continue doing so as long as he is a member of it. The other member of the board—I think he was a defeated member of the Conservative Government in Prince Edward Island—

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Is that to be held against him?

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): No, it is not. I am not objecting to anyone holding partisan views in relation to it. I am not blaming the former Government for naming five Conservatives to the board, nor am I going to blame this Government if they appoint Liberals to it. I think it is necessary to have men of the calibre that they can work with and recognize as serving in the interests of the Atlantic area.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): I also want to thank Senator Isnor of Halifax for his compliments; I am human enough to recognize and appreciate all the compliments handed me. I also want to thank him for the little kick he gave me—I more or less expected it—in relation to the Chignecto Canal, but that does not change my opinion one iota. When he referred to the statements made by certain individuals, he did not say upon what basis or upon what survey it was thought they based their conclusions. The statements I made the other day were borne out by the historical review given today by the senator from Madawaska-Restigouche (Hon. Mr. Fournier), when he gave a truly enlightening history of the project.

I too would regret sincerely any attitude by any members, or by any public men, or by any individual, that this is a mere handout for the Atlantic provinces. I do not regard it as a handout, and I hope that no one in the Atlantic provinces regards it as such. I did not regard the South Saskatchewan dam as a handout, nor did I consider the St. Lawrence Seaway as such. We all helped to pay for those undertakings, and I do hope that all Canada is going to help and be pleased to help pay for our developments, so that we may become self-supporting the same as other parts of Canada. I do regret that these things have been said.

In regard to the $100 million referred to by Senator Blois of Truro, when he said that it may be 50 years before this is spent, I do not think that can ever happen. However, I am glad in a way that the five-year period was taken out, although it might have been considered as an incentive to the committee to get busy and get something done before the period was up. I think that is one of the reasons which prompted that section of the bill.

I am confident that the committee, once it is set up and functioning, will do its best to try to see to it that something can be done. I do not consider this bill a panacea for all our problems and ailments in the Atlantic provinces, but I do hope it will help to bring about a revival of industrial development in the area so that we may become citizens along with the rest of Canada and hold our heads up without getting a handout from anybody. That is my view.

With respect to the proposal made in the other house to limit the fund to a minimum of $100 million, I think the provision, if passed, would mean that nothing could be done unless projects totalling $100 million had been approved. I am glad that that section was taken out. There may be many projects in the area that may come well within the $100 million, and which could be carried out in the period of the next two or three years. For that reason I am glad the provision was deleted.

Honourable senators, I do not think I need say more about it. May I say again how pleased I am that in general the provisions of the bill have been approved by all members of this house, and I do hope that the bill will pass this house without division.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING NEXT SITTING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): Honourable senators, if it is felt necessary, I will move that the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce. If not, and there is no objection to doing so, I will move that third reading be given now.

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Honourable senators, I would suggest that third reading be given tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): Honourable senators, in deference to my leader—there is a lot of business on the Order Paper to be dealt with—if he has no objection and there is no objection from the house, I move third reading now.

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: I understood the Leader of the Government suggested third reading should be given tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I understood some honourable senators said, "tomorrow". So far as I am concerned, it can receive third reading now.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I think it is unanimous.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Honourable senators, I do not think we should hurry these things. One honourable senator spoke to me a little earlier this afternoon and said that he wanted to speak on third reading. Why not have third reading tomorrow?

The Hon. the Speaker: Do I understand that the bill should be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce?

Some Hon. Senators: No, no.

The Hon. the Speaker: Next sitting?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): There is a motion that the bill should be read the third time tomorrow.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed that this bill be read the third time tomorrow?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, before we revert to motions, may I intimate to the house what my wishes are with respect to the balance of the day. I am going to suggest we sit this evening. If we do, we can take up the bill to amend the Customs Tariff. Honourable Senator Leonard will be dealing with that bill. Also, if items 1, 2 and 3 on the Order Paper are not dealt with this afternoon, we could take them up this evening. It depends how long Senator Croll takes with his motion.

I therefore would suggest that when the house rises this afternoon it do stand adjourned until 8 o'clock this evening.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON AGING

MOTION TO APPOINT COMMITTEE TO CONDUCT STUDY—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. David A. Croll moved:

> That a Special Committee of the Senate be appointed to examine the problem involved in the promotion of the welfare of the aged and aging persons, in order to ensure that in addition to the provision of a sufficient income, there are also developed adequate services and facilities of a positive and preventive kind so that older persons may continue to live healthy and useful lives as members of the Canadian community and the need for the maximum co-operation of all levels of governments in the promotion thereof;
> That the said committee be composed of twenty Honourable Senators to be named later;
> That the committee have power to engage the services of technical, clerical and other personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of the inquiry;
> That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate; and
> That the committee be instructed to report to the house from time to time its findings, together with such recommendations as it may see fit to make.

He said: Honourable senators, this motion is based on the proposition that the time has come for an examination in depth of the problems involved in promoting the welfare of aged and aging persons in Canada. It appears to me that to recognize that a problem exists is the first step towards its solution, and that a select committee of the Senate would constitute the best possible vehicle for conducting such an inquiry.

As I would envisage it, the inquiry would have a five-fold purpose:

First, to take an overall look at the whole situation, to examine the problem and stimulate and co-ordinate appropriate action; to make a full and complete study of all matters pertaining to the problems of the older people, including, but not limited to, problems of maintaining health, assuring adequate income, of finding employment, of engaging in productive and rewarding activity, of securing proper housing and, when necessary, care and assistance.

Second, to consider what should be the aims of governments in this field, and the role of the voluntary social agencies.

Third, to ascertain the facts in Canada so that the areas of achievement and of leadership alike may be made known; and we can ascertain for ourselves how far we are away from the "poor house" approach to old age.

Fourth, to ascertain what has been accomplished in Canada and in this field outside of Canada—for example, in the United Kingdom, the United States and Scandinavian countries.

Fifth, to recommend ways and means of making greater progress in this field.

I do not wish to anticipate the deliberations of the committee, but I would like to indicate what I consider should be the aims of legislative efforts on behalf of our older citizens. I do not suppose that these will differ much from what I could hope for on behalf of all Canadian citizens, regardless of age. However, there are these differences. We have to recognize that the state owes a special obligation to citizens who have devoted their lives to the development of Canada. Also we have to recognize that by virtue of the inexorable ravages of time our senior citizens are increasingly less able to provide themselves with the facilities necessary to enjoy freedom from care and want in the sunset of their lives.

I have grouped these aims under five headings, and hope to make some observations on each but cannot be all-inclusive.

I believe that we have come a long way from the "poor house" philosophy, but I ask the Senate what clear-cut philosophy we have substituted for it.

Here are the areas I believe we have to concern ourselves with:

Employment: I believe every senior citizen, regardless of age, should be gainfully and usefully employed, so far as he is employable.

Health care: Every senior citizen should, at the very least, be provided with all the care necessary to maintain him in good health, and should include medical-hospital care as well as nursing and dental care.

Pensions: These should ensure an adequate standard of living, regardless of the circumstances of the recipient.

Housing: There should be adequate housing, attractive and well located, for all senior citizens.

Leisure: Facilities should be provided so that senior citizens may make the most of their leisure time. An important freedom is freedom from boredom.

The need is for a more practical, rather than a sentimental, approach to the problems of aging. The second half of this century will be terminated with an increasing number of older people, and medical science tells us that the life expectancy will rise even above the present 71 years, so that the proportion of senior citizens to the rest of the population will continue to increase.

The Canadian figures for persons over 65 years of age are as follows: In 1921, 420,300; in 1941, 760,800; in 1961—and that is the last census—1,391,154. You will appreciate that the numbers have doubled every two decades, and the percentage has also been rising. In 1921 it was 4.8 per cent, in 1951 it was 6.7 and in 1961 it was 7.7 per cent. Yet in Canada the fountain of youth is overflowing. Canadians under 20 years of age number 7,624,481; between the ages of 20 and 44 there are 6,054,638, between 45 and 64 there are 3,167,974, and between the ages of 65 and over there are 1,391,154.

In the year 1931 the average life expectancy for males was 60 years of age, and for females 62.1. The last figure I have is for 1956, and in that year the life expectancy for males was 67.6 and for females 72.9. We can project these figures somewhat, and the projection of percentage increase in the population for those aged 65 years and over, by sex, from 1961 to 1981 is as follows—and I am taking five-year periods:

	Total	Male	Female
1961-1966	12.8	9.6	15.8
1966-1971	13.3	11.2	15.2
1971-1976	14.6	13.1	16.1
1976-1981	15.5	13.7	17.0

I have here two tables prepared by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. The first table shows the "Numerical and percentage change in the population 65 years old and over by sex, for Canada and the Provinces and Territories, 1951-1961." The second table shows the "Number and per cent of population in specified age groups, (a) 60 and over, (b) 70 and over, (c) 80 and over and (d) 90 and over, for Canada and the provinces for census years 1931, 1941, 1951 and 1961."

Honourable senators, I ask permission of the house to have these tables placed on the record.

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

For text of tables see appendix "B", p. 363-4.

Hon. Mr. Croll: It is interesting to know what is now available in Canada. There is of course Old Age Security, a universal pension drawn monthly in Canada by 930,000 beneficiaries of 70 years or over, who are now receiving $65 a month. Then there is Old Age Assistance, of which there are two types. The first is Old Age Assistance paying a benefit of up to $65 to those from 65 to 69. Income property tests are applied. This is shared by the federal and provincial Governments. The second type is assistance on the basis where a need or a means test is applied. The federal Government makes funds available under the Unemployment Assistance Act, to the extent of half the costs of assistance payments to needy persons who qualify. The province uses funds available to supplement the $65. This means that where a monthly pension of $65 is insufficient, as indicated by a means or a need test, additional financial aid is provided.

It is interesting to note that Canada first gave consideration to income maintenance for older citizens in 1908, through the sale of annuities. In this way the Government endeavoured to encourage individual savings. However, it was not until 1927 that the federal Old Age Pension was introduced providing for a federal-provincial program. Then in 1952 came the Old Age Security Act. And now in 1963 we have the Canada Pension Plan. That brings us pretty well up to date.

It is my view, and I hope this view is shared by other members of this house, that what the senior citizen needs today is "a place in the world," not by sufferance and not by taking up room in somebody else's world, but by retaining his earned right in his own world. Very few of the problems of aging are problems for the federal Government alone. They are problems which need the help of the federal and provincial governments and, to a large extent, the help of volunteer agencies. Most of all they require solid work in each community, day in and day out.

Medical science has found methods of prolonging man's life, and this is indeed a remarkable and noteworthy achievement. Technological progress has created an economy which provides a long period of leisure for man after his working career has ended. The result is a rapidly increasing population of senior citizens in a society totally unprepared for the explosion. Consequently, man's long period of leisure at the end of a career becomes a shock, a dislocation instead of a pleasure.

The fundamental answers must be found at a deeper level and in the midst of the society surrounding the elderly. The crucial people are not the aged themselves, but those of us who at the moment are younger. It is up to us to improve the image, the status and the position of senior citizens in our society.

It is the community, however, which must provide status for the person retired from his life's employment. It is the community which must make him feel wanted and needed. The provinces, municipalities and social agencies are making a considerable contribution. I cannot possibly deal with them all at the present time, but I can say that in some provinces the approach to the problem of the aged and the aging has been noteworthy. The speakers who will follow me from provinces other than my own will be able to relate what is being done, but I repeat that in some instances the achievement has been considerable and has not been entirely dependent on the wealth of the province.

Voluntary social agencies such as local welfare councils, family social service agencies, churches, and others too numerous to mention, are active in promoting community planning and services for the aged. Among these are counselling and recreation services and, in some places, the extension or initiation of visiting homemakers' services. Recreational facilities vary from specially built centres, offering a wide range of opportunities for five or six days a week, to rented premises where social meetings may be weekly or monthly.

In 1962 the province of Ontario introduced a program to aid recreation centres for elderly persons, the first legislation of its kind in Canada, under the terms of the Ontario Elderly Persons Social and Recreational Centres Act. The province will assume 30 per cent of the cost of providing a centre under certain specified conditions.

The University of Montreal established an Institute of Gerontology late in 1961. The objectives of the institute are research, training and social action and, in the course of time, it will be an important centre for documentation for workers in the field.

The very act of developing a comprehensive plan of drawing together and evaluating existing services will enable us to discover where gaps exist and where unnecessary duplication lies.

The overriding reason for unrest among the senior citizens is not only lack of health or money. What our retired elders yearn for more than anything else is involvement. They are crushed by the feeling of being no longer wanted, useful or important to others. I remind this house—and I do not think it needs reminding because it knows it too well —that senior citizens are not just some indefinable group, separate and apart. They are our mothers and our fathers. They are ourselves in a few short years. They are those who have made contributions to society and to our country. They are those who have given their energies, their skills and their children for the good of society, and society, at its peril, must not ignore them when their hair is grey and their shoulders bent.

With many interested people working on the problem I would agree with the statement:

> Men are never so likely to settle a question rightly as when they discuss it freely.

The solution is not to throw old people a bribe in the form of an increase of a few dollars in the pension before each election, or after each election; it is to consider their problem as a whole, and to recognize that it is a problem of the nation and that they face only what all Canadians will face if they live.

This is the important thing that we have to try to understand, and to have young people understand. It is the young people who will be carrying this burden in the future, and it is to the young people that we must look for the greatest amount of education related to an understanding of the facts.

Can a human being be obsolete? Because when we talk about obsolescence we are talking about a machine, and there has been a strong tendency in our society to think about people as machines. It is too bad that we have this kind of analogy. That is why we have such expressions as "people being on the shelf". I think that is why so many elderly people, when they retire, have such difficulty in reformulating in their minds an image of themselves as a person with dignity. We must develop again a respect for elderly people. We have a great need for their sense of wisdom; a great need for people who remember pioneer days. We need the inspiration that grandparents can give to their grandchildren, and to the young people around them.

The number of older people is so large, and the problem is accelerating at so fast a rate, it is essential that in addition to the efforts of the individual there must be a range of community services to give aid not only in situations of crisis but also in preventive circumstances, and to provide these services which can only be made available through private and public agencies.

Honourable senators, I am speaking of the vintage years, of old age in a youth-oriented system where the leadership in the country is dedicated to youth and the pursuit of youth. Yesterday you mattered, but today you are 65 plus one, and in our system you no longer matter very much. It is unfortunate, but it is all too true. It is not exaggerated. So I think such a committee of the Senate can make a real contribution to the knowledge and public understanding of the complex problem of the aged and aging persons.

I have said something about the voluntary field. I do not want to overlook it, because in it there are many outstanding and concerned agencies in this country. We need the development of the homemaker and the home-nursing services to permit old people, normally institutionalized in hospital or old people's homes, to live at home. We need old people's visiting services designed to make it possible for older people to live out their lives in their own homes where they are happier, and where they throw fewer burdens on the community than if they are placed in publicly provided homes for the aged, however well run those institutions may be.

As early as February of this year, the Canadian Welfare Council, with many co-sponsors, began to make plans to convene a Canadian conference on aging. Although the time is not yet fixed it appears that the conference will be held late this year or early next year. I point out that this is no small undertaking. When our committee is established and begins its deliberations it may well be the springboard for the Canadian conference on aging. This could really focus attention on the problem, and the country would get the benefit of the very best qualified and most concerned people in that field of social endeavour.

It cannot be denied—nor do I wish to do so—that a good deal is being done by governments and private agencies, but it is all poorly co-ordinated. No one knows what is being done or who is doing it. What we need to do is to map out what exists already and where the gaps are. Then governments at all levels and voluntary agencies can be helped to work together in a coherent plan in which support is given on the basis of a clearly articulated policy that looks at the whole need of these aged persons.

We have an opportunity here to add a new dimension to the dignity and self-respect of our older citizens. But, whatever needs to be done cannot be done by governments alone. I do not think that is desirable, nor is it possible. It must be a partnership of all levels of government with private organizations, community and church groups, and trades unions, which can pool their collective strength. Thus not only can older citizens participate in Canada's affairs, but more fully share the fruits of its labour.

A few days ago I had occasion to look up the words of a love song that was written for an old man to sing. I recalled seeing the late Walter Houston in a legitimate play, the name of which escapes me, and I remembered these words and looked them up. Mr. Houston did not have much of a voice, but he did very well, and the memory of his song stayed with me. It was as follows:

> Oh, its a long, long time > from May to December;
> but the days grow short > when you reach September, > and the autumn weather > turns the leaves to flame.
> Then one hasn't got time > for the waiting game.

In effect, it has been a waiting game, and it is true that the old have not the time for that.

The problem with which we are confronted is an accelerated one. On the one hand, medical and social science has provided a substantially increased normal life span and, on the other hand, studies on what is often called "geriatrics" has greatly added to our knowledge of the physical and psychological consequences of aging. The longer life expectancy and the increased understanding of the aging process we owe to science. What to do about these things is a problem for the philosopher and the law-maker.

Those who study the word's great civilizations measure their quality by the respect and care given by them to their older citizens. We are blessed with many such. I have already indicated that all levels of government have a responsibility, but in this case some have to give leadership and it has fallen upon our shoulders, in co-operation with private organizations and individuals, to aid collectively towards improving the lot of the aged. Public efforts will have to be undertaken primarily by local communities and by the provinces, but the problem is a nation-wide one and calls for federal action and federal leadership.

Honourable senators, I ask you to endorse this resolution. It has been on the Order Paper since May 29. It is not the fault of this house that you have not had an opportunity to deal with it sooner. All of you have received mail, as I have, from people in all walks of life and from all sorts of organizations, endorsing this and seeking to help in any way possible, by offering services or any other contribution which can be made.

I should like to see this committee established before we leave here. It can be done in a short time. A committee could be set up and we could arrange for a small staff to work during the recess preparing material so that we could make early progress when we resume. We could do a study which would make this country proud of the achievements of the Senate, in the same way as our people were proud when we did the study on manpower, which today is spoken of and studied by persons concerned with matters of public welfare and employment.

Thus, with confidence I leave this matter in the hands of the Senate, asking that those who wish to participate in the discussion do so as soon as possible so that the committee may be established.

Honourable senators know that people in all walks of life are doing what they can to help the aged; but unfortunately they do not know what their neighbours are doing; they do not understand what the federal Government, the provincial governments or the municipalities are doing. This study, when completed, would enable the people of Canada to take an overall look at this problem, see what is being done at present, where the gaps lie, what more needs to be done, and what roles are played by the various people and bodies involved in this question.

Honourable senators, this appears to me to be an excellent opportunity for the Senate to be of real service to the country and therefore I ask your endorsement of this motion.

On motion of Hon. Mrs. Quart, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 8 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

PRIVATE BILLS

THE CANADA ACCIDENT AND FIRE ASSURANCE COMPANY—SECOND READING

Hon. L. M. Gouin moved the second reading of Bill S-33, respecting The Canada Accident and Fire Assurance Company.

He said: Honourable senators, the sole purpose of this bill is to add the French version to the English name of the Company.

If the bill receives second reading, I shall then move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Gouin, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

THE NATIONAL LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA—SECOND READING

Hon. Harry A. Willis moved the second reading of Bill S-34, respecting The National Life Assurance Company of Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, this is not the ordinary application for a new French name. By the original bill the company was given a French name which, however, was a pure French translation of the English name. The board of directors feel that the name does not convey what it is intended to mean in the province of Quebec, and they are asking that it be changed to a French name which would more reasonably conform to the business they are doing in that province.

The National Life Assurance Company of Canada is a well-known company; the chairman of its board is the honourable Senator McCutcheon. I do not think I need to explain the bill further, except to say that if it receives second reading I shall move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Willis, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

UKRAINIAN NATIONAL FEDERATION OF CANADA—COMMONS AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the amendments made by the House of Commons to Bill S-12, respecting Ukrainian National Federation of Canada.

Hon. John M. Macdonald: Honourable senators, yesterday the honourable Senator Hugessen asked a question about the proposed amendment that subsection (3) of section 147 of the Companies Act shall be applicable to any such body corporate established.

To understand the amendment, upon examining the bill it will be found that subsection (2) of section 8A in effect gives what might be called the parent body the right to incorporate branches of this federation. Subsection 147 of The Companies Act in effect brings Bill S-12 under the provisions of section 125 of The Companies Act. Section 125 provides that every company shall, on or before the 1st day of June in every year, make a summary as of the 31st day of March preceding, specifying the following particulars. The ones which apply in this case are:

(a) the corporate name of the company;

(b) the manner in which the company is incorporated and the date of incorporation;

(c) the address of the head office of the company, giving street and number thereof when possible;

(d) the date upon which the last annual meeting of shareholders of the company was held;

(n) the total amount of debentures authorized and the rate of interest thereon;

(o) the total amount of debentures issued;

(p) the total amount paid on debentures showing severally the amounts of discount thereon and the amounts issued for services and assets acquired since the last annual return;

(r) the names and addresses of the persons who at the date of the return are directors of the company.

The rest of the section deals with the penalties for not doing this and proof of the failure to file the summary, and things of that kind.

So the effect would be that the parent company incorporates branch companies; then the branch companies would have to file this information each year with the Department of the Secretary of State.

As I understand it, the reason this amendment was put forward was that the bill actually gives some extraordinary powers whereby one company can incorporate another without coming to Parliament or using The Companies Act of the province, and it was felt by the committee of the other place that when such powers are granted the summary of their proceedings during the year should be on file in the Department of the Secretary of State and be a matter of public record. Also, I understand that this was, you might say, a matter of principle with the committee. They did not have any special objection to this bill, but they wanted it known that should any bills of this type come forward in the future they would want that provision in it.

If there are any other questions, I shall do my best to answer them.

Amendments concurred in.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard moved the second reading of Bill C-87, to amend the Customs Tariff.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill C-87 is before you, and before proceeding to explain its provisions I think I should call your attention to the fact that there is printed as an appendix to today's Minutes of the Proceedings the changes which are provided for in this bill, together with the rates in effect on the various items prior to those proposed by the budget. The printing of that appendix is something which I think was originally suggested by my seat-mate, Senator Connolly (Ottawa West), several years ago, and it was adopted at that time when I believe Senator Aseltine was Leader of the Government. We are all indebted to them for introducing this procedure which, in turn, has been followed again by the present Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford). It enables us to consider the items with a good deal more intelligence and clarity.

In so far as the bill itself is concerned, may I make a few preliminary remarks of a general character? The changes follow on the budget resolutions of the Minister of Finance, and in introducing the resolutions he said that on balance these budget changes represent a reduction in tariffs. There are some increases and some decreases, and a good many technical changes and changes of wording.

The major portion of the changes concerns textiles, and the genesis of these changes is rather interesting. It illustrates the pattern which has now been pretty well established in Canada in dealing with tariff changes.

In 1957 the then Minister of Finance, the Honourable Mr. Fleming, directed a reference to the Tariff Board to study the entire structure of textile tariffs. The board proceeded with that work. It held numerous hearings; it heard representations from all those interested in the textile industry—manufacturers, consumers and importers; and as a result of its inquiries over a period of years the board has made some 10 reports dealing with textiles. As these reports reached the Government they were, in due course, implemented by legislation, and this bill before you this evening embodies the results of the three final reports of the Tariff Board on the textile industry.

However, after the board had made its reports, because most of the items covered by its reports were bound under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, it was necessary for Canada to negotiate with the other countries concerned before any changes could be effected. These negotiations have gone on for the past year or so, and in the course of them with some countries the ups and downs balanced out and there was no necessity for any compensatory items. However, with other countries, in order to obtain the concessions Canada desired as a result of the Tariff Board's reports, it was necessary to make compensatory concessions to these other countries on items other than textile.

In the result, after the negotiations were concluded, a package deal was evolved whereby the concessions that Canada desired with respect to textiles were part of the package, and the concessions it had to give with respect to items other than textiles formed the rest of the package. Again, on balance, in that package deal the increases and decreases would balance out. So you will find in section 1(a) all the items affected by the package deal; that is, the textile items plus the compensatory items.

The first item covered in Part I of Schedule A is tariff item No. 24, which is chicory. That is a compensatory item brought in at the GATT negotiations as a result of Canada's desire for a concession with respect to certain textile items. Therefore it was reduced. In most cases I think you will find that the compensatory items are reductions; that is to say, the other country concerned desired a reduction in the Canadian tariff in order to compensate for whatever change the Canadian Government desired with respect to the textile item. Those items are all in Part I of Schedule A.

The total amount of imports in the items covered by Part I of Schedule A is in the region of about $45 million. The largest single item is 542b, covering jute, and jute fabric. The current imports under that heading amount to about $18½ million, mostly from India. They enter Canada duty free, but the section is being broadened in scope. The various other major items imported under 543a relate to fully manufactured products of vegetable fibres other than cotton, and they amount to a total of about $6 million.

So, honourable senators, as far as section 1 (a) is concerned it is a package deal resulting from the inquiry and report of the Tariff Board, plus the result of negotiations carried on by civil servants with other countries. This is a pattern established and followed for a good many years in Canada.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Before you leave those items would you care to comment on 543b, and give us the values and the reasons for the change?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: I would suggest, if I may, that I should finish the general remarks, and if there should be questions with respect to individual items, on which I shall probably have to plead ignorance, I could then deal with them. However, if the bill receives second reading we could refer it to the Banking and Commerce Committee, where further questions could be answered about it. I shall deal with 543b when I have finished my general remarks.

With respect to section 1 (b), this makes renumbering to numerical changes only and there are no changes so far as the items themselves are concerned.

With respect to section 1 (c), this is a group of miscellaneous changes, and it has nothing to do with the textile industry. In some cases it is simply a matter of improving the wording. In other cases it is a matter of providing temporary reductions in tariff for a period of time, and in yet other cases it is also the result of a recommendation from the Tariff Board.

Section 2 of the bill deals with Schedule B, which is the drawback section of the Customs Tariff. There are, I think, three items in Schedule B, the first relating to steel, at page 272 of today's Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate. The first item is No. 1004, steel when used in the manufacture of files, and the drawback there is 99 per cent. That is putting into statutory form what has been in effect under Order in Council. The other two drawback items relate to changes that are made in the textiles section of the Customs Tariff as a result of the Tariff Board's recommendations.

The final clause of the bill is the usual one as to its coming into force, namely, on the 14th day of June, 1963 which, I believe, was the day after the Minister of Finance introduced his budget.

I make special reference to Tariff Item No. 703b that is to be found in the table at page 271 of today's Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate. That is the item dealing with tourist exemptions, and one with which I think we are all familiar in actual practice. It will be recalled that if a person went to the United States for not less than 48 hours he was entitled to bring back goods to the value of $100 free of duty. If he was away from the continental limits of North America for 14 days he was entitled to bring back additional goods up to the value of $200. The first exemption of $100 was good for four months, and the special exemption of $200 was good for 12 months; so, in effect there was an aggregate exemption of $300 for 12 months.

After what has been called the austerity program was instituted last year those amounts were changed. The amount of $100 was reduced to $25, and the special exemption of $200 was reduced to $75. That was done by Order in Council by the previous Government; and is now being made statutory by this bill.

This provision has a very important bearing on Canada's balance of payments. The estimated amount of United States dollars that are saved as a result of this change is of the order of $70 million or $80 million a year.

As I said before there may be particular items in which honourable senators are interested, and while I have some information upon certain items, I am sure that there are other honourable senators here who know more about them than I do. I shall endeavour to answer any questions there are to the best of my knowledge, but I will say that if I do not know the answer to any question, perhaps it can be answered more fully when the bill goes before the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, where we shall be able to question senior officials of the Department of Finance and the Department of Trade and Commerce.

I believe Senator Isnor had a question.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: It was with respect to Item 543b which is to be found at the top of page 264 of today's Minutes of the Proceedings.

Hon. Mr. Leonard: I am afraid I cannot give an exact answer to that question. It looks as though the duty on the main item is left the same as it was before, and by reason of the changes that are shown by the italicized words, other duties which were at a higher rate were applied to those fabrics, which are now brought into this one. They are now all in the one rate, which is a lower rate than any of the rates that were in effect before. I am not sure that that satisfies the honourable senator, but that is one of the items with which the Tariff Board dealt.

Hon. Mr. Stambaugh: What will be the effect on general revenue of these changes in tariffs? Will they increase or decrease the general revenue, and to what extent?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: All I can say is that the Honourable Mr. Gordon, Minister of Finance, said in his Budget Speech that on balance there would be some reduction in revenue.

Hon. Mr. Pratt: Does that mean that there were no figures as to the total extra cost or reduced cost? When they say "some reduction on balance", does that mean primarily because of the British Preferential Tariff and the negotiated items, or has it any relation to what is in the general tariff, whether it is up or down, and to what degree, in the sum total?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: As I understand it, on the textile package deal, by reason of the fact that it resulted from negotiations with other countries, the amounts of reductions would balance off there. In so far as the other items are concerned, which are under section 1(c) of the bill and which have nothing to do with the Tariff Board, you will notice that they are nearly all free, or extensions of the free category, or reductions—I think almost in entirety.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Honourable senators, I should like to refer to the point Senator Pratt has brought up. As I read the statement of the Minister of Finance on Thursday, June 13, which sets out the position in Hansard much more fully than it is set out in the bill, I understand what has happened is that the materials which are described in italics—which were formerly 25 per cent British Preferential Tariff, 25 per cent Most Favoured Nation Tariff and 35 per cent General—have been reduced to the figures which apply to the items which are set out in black type.

Hon. Mr. Leonard: That is correct. They have been put in one item. If I did not make it plain, the honourable senator has done so now.

Hon. G. Percival Burchill: Honourable senators, we are all very much indebted to the honourable Senator Leonard for the clear explanation he has given of this bill. However, I might add something to what he has said. In regard to the second last paragraph on page 271, item 703b, there has been some misunderstanding and confusion with respect to the exemptions one enjoys when travelling abroad. If you avail yourself of the exemption under the second section, you must allow twelve months to elapse before you can take advantage of the exemption in the first section. That is something which honourable senators who travel abroad should bear in mind.

Hon. Lionel Choquette: Honourable senators, I should like to say a few words on the bill, not because I have become an authority on this question but because it became my privilege for five years to introduce similar bills to amend the Customs Tariff.

Consequently, I understand such expressions as "negotiations" and "GATT", and representations made to the Tariff Board, and so on. I even had the privilege a few years ago of introducing a bill which was called "Class or Kind" and someone told me I must have mispronounced it by saying it was a "clashin' kind" of a bill. As you know, there were a few clashes.

Honourable senators, I think the sponsor of the bill is entitled to congratulations for his clarity and conciseness in explaining the bill. It is not that I would want to complement anything he has already said, but I think that section 3, which was not mentioned by my friend, relates to "coming into force". It is in the usual form, and provides that the act and the schedules shall be deemed to come into force on the 14th day of June 1963—which is the usual practice, the day after the reading of the budget.

Honourable senators, I am going to make a few remarks, and probably ask a few questions. I do not expect the sponsor of the bill to give answers to all the questions. There will be top-notch men and experts present before the committee which is to meet tomorrow morning, and I know that, as in the past, they will be willing to help and to give explanations to us.

As I understand it, this is a "stand pat" bill, since it does not affect the ways and means in any manner so far as the tariff is concerned, although the first two resolutions embody changes in tariff rates, and the wording recommended by the tariff board in its last three reports under reference number 125, which reference was made on the initiative of the former administration. The tariff board was asked to review all items covering textiles and to recommend a new tariff structure. We can scarcely take exception to that, particularly in view of the fact that, as I understand it, the new bill will have little or no overall effect upon the revenue, and thus can hardly be regarded as a vital part of the budget proposal.

Perhaps what I have said is praise enough. This bill does no damage, and "butters no parsnips". Perhaps I may be permitted to say that this is a strange and refreshing change from the other budget resolutions, the bills respecting which are yet to come before us. This particular bill was not marked in its early stages by the pauses, interruptions and retreats which characterized some of its brethren.

No doubt some honourable senators may have some questions to ask in clarification or expansion of some aspects of this bill, but speaking for the Opposition in this chamber I do not see how we can oppose it, since it accomplishes nothing of substance or significance. It is a simplification of the tariff —a tidying-up job. In the net result, we are assured that these proposed changes in the Tariff Act will not affect the ways and means, nor will they affect the budget in any way. "Negotiated package" is what it has been termed. In many items under GATT, negotiations were required and were completed by the United States, the United Kingdom, the European Economic Council, India, Japan and a few other countries.

Coming now to the questions I had planned to ask, I am now referring to the bill itself and not to the table appearing in today's Minutes of the Proceedings. First, I wish to deal with item 312d:

> Woven fabrics, wholly or in part of asbestos, for use in the manufacture of clutch facings and brake linings.

I understand that Canada is the largest asbestos producer in the world. I believe we produce 85 per cent of the world's asbestos. I am wondering if it would be possible for the sponsor of the bill to tell us, not necessarily this evening, exactly what quantity Canada imports every year.

Then item 179 provides that:

> Tickets issued by railway systems in the British Commonwealth (not including railway systems operating in Canada), shall be exempt from customs duty, ...

In parenthesis are the words "not including railway systems operating in Canada", which means that we must pay duty and that some of our railways must purchase printed tickets. I do not care about other railways but must the C.N.R. import such tickets? Surely in this country we have printers qualified and equipped to print such tickets.

Another question I wish to ask and which I should like answered refers to item 440m, appearing on page 8 of the bill. I think the effect of that item is to extend for another twelve-month period free entry for aircraft and aircraft engines of types or sizes not made in Canada. Apparently this is an extension from year to year. I remember that on July 1, 1961 the bill provided an extension to July 1, 1962. From that date the extension was until July 1, 1963. Now the extension is to be until July 1, 1964. My information is that in 1961 the imports of aircraft stood at $98,126,660, and aircraft engines, $48,875,926. My question is: Did the air industries and the Transport Association of Canada, on behalf of both Canadian manufacturers and operators, support a further extension? I presume that would be the case, but I am not certain. That question can probably be answered in committee.

Honourable senators, in conclusion, may I again congratulate the sponsor of the bill on his clarity and conciseness. I must say also that I am in complete accord with those who say that the act should be revised and rewritten from top to bottom. This has been advocated on many occasions in the past, and those advocating such a revision were always faced with the same answer, that such a revision would be a ten- or twelve-year job, perhaps longer. I agree with the present Minister of Finance that this is not a reason why it should not be attempted, and I hope it will be done. It is just like working on an old house. You have to add to it every year. Sometimes it is cheaper to demolish and rebuild. I think this whole act should be revised and rewritten, rather than be patched up from year to year.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: It would be a good idea to abolish it altogether.

Honourable senators, I have two comments to make. The first is that this is a left-over in part from the previous administration and it is pure routine so far as we are now concerned. Nevertheless, I am pleased that the general effect of the changes is reduction in tariff rather than an increase, even if the actual amounts are small.

The second comment I wish to make is that I regret that the liberty, the freedom, given our citizens when travelling to the United States and elsewhere has been so drastically curtailed with regards to goods they bring back to Canada. The United States was always generous in this matter in the past. I understand that they also have curtailed the freedom of their citizens to buy in Canada and carry their purchases back without charge. We are doing the same. I had hoped that when the foolish austerity program had passed we would get back to normal again, and that when our citizens travelled abroad they could bring back some purchases without having to pay a fine for doing so. I hope the fact that it has now been stereotyped in a statute will not interfere with future changes, and that in due season we shall again extend to our citizens a privilege once enjoyed and valued by thousands of people. I hope that we shall soon return to higher and more reasonable amounts which a traveller may spend on goods he wishes to bring home, rather than such a picayune amount as $25.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Honourable senators, the privilege has cost us scores of millions of dollars, and I am sure the Minister of Finance will be interested with my friend's suggestion to put into statute form the very necessary regulation that was put in by order in council last June.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That is a difference in view between the two parties.

Hon. Mr. Leonard: I shall deal as well as I can with the comments of honourable Senator Choquette. His first question related to item 312d with respect to asbestos. In so far as this bill is concerned the only change with respect to that item is in the numbering of it. The item itself has been in the tariff for a good many years, and the rates are the same, but it has been renumbered as 312d. So that the bill does not concern itself really with the question of the amount of asbestos. Nevertheless, I imagine we are all interested in the question that Senator Choquette raised and even though it may not be particularly relevant to this bill, I think we should all like to know just what Canada does import in the way of asbestos.

The next one was with respect to tickets. Again there is no change in this bill in so far as this item is concerned. It has been there also for a number of years, and there probably was some particular reason for it being there in the first place. Again, I think we might ask that question from someone who might look up the story behind it and see just what is covered by that particular item.

With respect to aircraft, item 440m is for aircraft not made in Canada and item 440n is for aircraft engines not made in Canada. Now, as Senator Choquette has said, this is an exemption that is being carried on from year to year. If this were not put in now the present exemption put on by the previous government would have expired on July 1, 1963. This carries it forward to July 1, 1964 when again it will have to be reviewed. I presume it is always possible that somebody might start to make an aircraft or aircraft engines, which would involve a change in this particular item. In the meantime I think that seems to be a rather good way of dealing with it temporarily, by extending it this time for another year.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Leonard, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

FINANCE CHARGES (DISCLOSURE) BILL

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, July 9, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon.

Mr. Croll for the second reading of Bill S-6, to make provision for the disclosure of information in respect of finance charges.

Hon. Salter A. Hayden: Honourable senators, this is the fifth time around for a bill of this nature. On each of the previous occasions I spoke, let me say to my own satisfaction, with force and with conviction and, I would hope, conclusively.

I do not want to describe the bill as being a hardy perennial, because it is not. It has been remodelled and restyled so that in the form in which we have it now it is confined in its application to consumer credit and, as the bill indicates, that covers consumer goods where the transaction is one where some part or all of the purchase price is payable after the transaction has been completed.

Now, in the ordinary way in the field of consumer goods you have such things as automobiles, radios, television sets and things of that kind, where the vendor of the article is very anxious to retain his title to the goods until such time as he has been fully paid. That involves, of course, the use of the conditional sale agreement, so that the title may remain in the vendor. That means that the vendor must comply with provincial law, as that is a matter of property and civil rights in the province. Under provincial law in Ontario, and in the other provinces in varying forms, information, and very considerable information, must be given in connection with the transaction in order that the vendor may protect his position.

For instance, in Ontario a conditional sale agreement must be drawn up in writing and it must be signed by the purchaser or his agent, and it must state the terms and conditions of sale, describing the goods to be sold. Pursuant to that there are forms, and the agreements which are in force in Ontario and elsewhere are of the type that I used to illustrate the point I was making when I was speaking last time. That agreement had to do with the sale of a Ford Galaxie four-door sedan. The first item in the conditional sale agreement was the cash selling price of $2,412, provincial sales tax $72.36.

Total delivery price	$2,484.36
Cash down payment	$ 650.00
Balance of price	$1,834.36

That is the balance of the price which the purchaser wanted to finance.

There were finance charges of $192.44, so the total deferred balanced in this case amounted to $2,026.80.

In some cases there were additional items in the conditional sale agreement. In this case the purchaser was providing his own insurance, property damage and liability, but in some cases even that is part of the financing. And as part of the financing of the balance of the purchase price there will be the inclusion of insurance premiums, and the registration fee to register the agreement, generally $1.50, and in some cases there will be the premium on the life insurance policy.

This conditional sale agreement goes on to provide in this case that the balance is payable in eighteen consecutive monthly instalments of $112.60, payable every fourth Friday of each month, commencing in the month of January 1962.

Now, there is the detail which the purchaser gets in Ontario, by law. But, I ask you, and I have said this before, how does a purchaser know when to start paying, or how much he has to pay or when he stops paying, if he has not this information? Yet we find purchasers of these consumer goods paying their monthly instalments, and when they have paid so many they stop; so they are obviously informed as to what they owe and for how many months they have to pay how much money.

The point I am trying to make in this regard is that my friend has urged this bill on you with the catch phrase, "To tell the truth in lending, the whole truth and nothing but the truth." What more of truth is there to tell a purchaser than to tell him what the price is of the article he is buying; to tell him what the other additional elements of charge are—insurance premiums, registration costs and finance charges; to tell him what the balance is that he owes; to tell him, if he wants it at 18 months or 24 months, how much he has to pay per month?

In order to have a valid conditional sale agreement, in Ontario the purchaser has to sign that document. True, the purchaser might be so anxious to get the car that he would sign the document without reading it. But how are we, by legislation, going to protect a person who proceeds in that fashion?

So, when my friend talks about truth in lending, I say this bill provides nothing in the way of additional truth in lending because when you give the information to the purchaser, which I have recited, you have given him the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth. What I want to urge on you is this: do not think that this bill is giving the purchaser any more useful information.

Having told the purchaser what the total amount of the unpaid balance is—that is, how much he owes—and the total of the finance charges, the other thing, and the only other thing, that this bill requires is that the vendor give the percentage relationship of the total amount of the finance charges to the unpaid balance. He wants that expressed in terms of simple interest. But do not be fooled because the bill says, "in terms of simple interest." He still wants the percentage relationship. It is not, by any stretch of the imagination, interest. My friend does not even call it interest. He talks about the total amount of the finance charges and says: Give the percentage relationship in relation to the unpaid balance.

When he is talking about finance charges, he is talking about them as defined in this bill, not as the vendor puts down the item of finance charges on his conditional sale agreement, because my friend's definition of "finance charges" is the total cost of credit to the consumer, which includes items peculiarly beneficial to the consumer.

Here is the list of finance charges as my friend defines them in the bill: Interest; fees, if they have a lawyer draw up the conditional sale agreement; bonuses, which may partake of the character of interest; service charges, which may be a commission to some person; discounts and any other type of charge whether described as interest or not. So, when I am arriving at the total of finance charges, in order to express this percentage I am taking in the premium, the life insurance premium, if there has been a life insurance; and yet the property damage and public liability policies one must have in the operation of a motor vehicle are things designed for the benefit of the owner and operator of the vehicle and also for the protection of the public. The registration fee of $1.50 is something that has to be paid in order that the document may be properly recorded.

So, you are including in this total of finance charges under this bill a group of items, and policies in connection with them, that are for the peculiar benefit of the purchaser; and yet you are asked to express the percentage relationship of all those charges to the balance unpaid.

My friend suggests that if the purchaser gets that information it may give him some standard by which he can measure. The only way in which it could do so would be if he went shopping for credit. But he can go shopping for credit as much as he likes. There is no law which prevents him shopping for credit. The man whom he approaches is the vendor of consumer goods. Two different vendors can arrive at the same total purchase price with all these charges, and one can have lower finance charges than the other because all he does is price his merchandise in a different way. He has lower finance charges and, therefore, the intending purchaser is no better off and he has no reliable standard of information.

Therefore, I say I am not opposed to what my friend says this bill would do, but I am opposed to this bill because it does not do any of the things my friend says it would do. The title of the bill is: "An act to make provision for the disclosure of information in respect of finance charges." I can assure my friend he has no monopoly of desire that the buying public should be fully informed as to what the cost is of any merchandise, and as to what the finance charges are; but this bill does nothing of the kind. The bill, so far as dollars and cents are concerned, contains provisions for the disclosure of information the purchaser gets as a matter of course; otherwise he would not know what to pay, how to pay, how often to pay or when to stop paying. In my submission, the percentage relationship tells him exactly nothing.

My friend has sponsored this bill on previous occasions. This time he was shorter in his explanation, and I do not blame him because I find it hard, on the fifth occasion, to become full of enthusiasm for this bill. I too am not going to take much time. However, I must say that this bill does not regulate interest; it does not set a rate of interest; it imposes no penalty for charges above a certain rate of interest; it does not define or provide any regulation or law against abuses of credit. Yet, on previous occasions when my friend sponsored this bill, he gave us example after example of abuses of credit, where rates were being charged that seemed grossly excessive, from the ordinary point of view.

My friend Senator Grosart this time adopted what I might say is an unusual approach to justify his support of this bill. First, he said it was impracticable, but he supported it. That is new. Secondly, he said that in the form in which it was, it was probably unconstitutional; nevertheless, he supported it. Thirdly, he supported it because it had been before the Senate on four different occasions, and he said that having regard to the principle of the bill the Senate could be very severely criticized if it did not do something about it this time.

When it came to discussing the principle of the bill I had difficulty in appreciating from my friend Senator Grosart's remarks what was the principle of the bill, because he spent some time pointing out the abuses and the advantage which automobile dealers took of people who were potential customers. Then he delved into the Scriptures at considerable length, to tell us the evils of and how the Scriptures were against the practice of usury. If I am to accept that as the principle of the bill, or that that is what he tells us is the principle of the bill, and therefore the reason he supports it, I can assure him that there is nothing in this bill about usury; there is nothing in this bill that deals with and regulates or corrects or does anything about the abuse of credit.

If my friend the sponsor of the bill, and Senator Grosart, wanted to be consistent, I think there should have been some discussion as to what kind of bill this is which would, based on the examples they gave, cover the things that have to be taken care of, and not do as we have been doing for four or five years, with the sponsor saying the bill is constitutional and some of the rest of us saying it is not, because in pith and substance it does not deal with interest, and interest is the matter which would bring it within the federal jurisdiction.

This time my friend has removed the necessity of discussing the constitutionality of the bill because he said that when and if it gets to committee he is prepared to have a paragraph added to the bill before it is reported out of committee, saying that royal assent shall not be given to this bill until after the constitutionality of the bill and whatever principle there is in it have been decided by the Supreme Court of Canada. So the question of constitutionality has been taken out of serious discussion as far as consideration of this bill is concerned. Therefore, in this respect, we are simply back on that phase of it. The bill requires that certain information be furnished, which I say every purchaser gets in any event, and which I say every vendor would insist on giving in any event if he wanted to retain title to the goods.

Then I consider this percentage relationship is a fanciful sort of thing. I have difficulty in appreciating the value of telling a man on the basis of the total finance charges, as I have defined them, or on the basis of the balance owing, the percentage relationship expressed in terms of simple interest. That is to say, you calculate the relationship of the finance charges to the principal amount of money over whatever period of time you have to pay it, and then reduce it to the basis of $100 for one year. That is not interest; it is a percentage relationship as my friend correctly terms it.

My friend and some of those who support the bill say that this calculation of percentage is the easiest thing in the world. There have been many people who found it difficult. A bill similar to the earlier bills which my friend brought before us was before Congress in the United States. I remember a problem arising concerning the purchase of a car over a period of 18 or 24 months with all the supporting charges, and all these relevant figures were submitted to half a dozen or more of the supposed mathematical experts in various national companies in the United States. The report afterwards was to the effect that they all came up with different calculations of what the percentage relationship was. A lot of people may consider it a simple matter, but you must remember you have a diminishing balance of principal payments, and in addition to that you have accumulated interest, charges, premiums and registration fees, and with all these elements how are you going to correlate the whole thing?

Although my friend says it is a simple matter, he must feel that it is not so simple because in his bill he provides that after you have passed the bill, the Governor in Council may make regulations prescribing the manner of calculating the percentage relationship and the degree of accuracy within which you must operate. In other words, you are going to approve of the bill, and the Governor in Council will decide what the degree of tolerance is; that is, to what extent you can be wrong and still not be punished or penalized under the bill.

Furthermore, if it is a simple problem why should we provide that the Governor in Council by regulation shall prescribe the method of calculation and the degree of tolerance? If it is as simple as some of the supporters of the bill represent it to be, then it should be left in the form in which it is, a very simple calculation. I agree it is an easy calculation to take the total amount of finance charges and relate them to the total balance unpaid and relate the two to the total. But when you have to do this calculation in the context of a period of 18 or 24 months, with a diminishing principal balance month by month, it is an entirely different animal. As far as my range of mathematics is concerned, I certainly would not attempt the calculation, and I have a lot of support for this point of view.

In the province of Manitoba in 1962 a bill was passed, which was assented to on May 1 of that year, called an Act respecting the Sale of Goods under Time-Sale Agreements. They had provisions in that bill requiring at least all the detail that my friend wants in his bill in relation to all the various elements to ascertain the cost to the purchaser of consumer goods. Then they also required the rate of interest paid and the basis upon which the interest was calculated.

Now the strange thing was that while that bill was assented to, as I said, on May 1, 1962, it was never brought into force. Apparently doubts began to develop as to whether this problem of calculation of interest was a simple thing or not, and when the Legislature met again in 1963 there were amendments to that bill. The amending bill was assented to on May 6, 1963, and one of the things which it did was to remove the requirement of stating the rate of interest charged and the basis upon which the interest was calculated. It is rather interesting to read in Hansard of the Legislature of Manitoba just what the Attorney General had to say about this. May I just read some lines of it? He said:

> I tell my honourable friend that I received only this morning that very interesting little wheel with the two rates of interest, the simple and the compound interest on it. I remind him that there are seven, at least seven different ways of computing interest known to the actuaries; I have tables which account for, I think, three or four or five of the different ways, and each one of the tables shows figures that with respect to figures given in other tables are slightly different. So he can see exactly what I'm getting at when I tell him that there are ways, enumerable ways of computing interest, and the whole purpose and substance of this legislation is to bring home to the purchaser in the truest way that we can, and in the truest sense as we have found from our own consideration, the truest sense that we can the cost of the time-sale agreement to him, that is, by expressing that cost in dollars and cents. You can argue about five per cent or seven per cent; whether it's compounded; whether it's simple interest; whether it's on a declining balance and so on, and you can get into a series of permutations and combinations that would drive any actuary out of his mind, but you can't argue with dollars and cents. If you're told that a contract is going to cost you $20.00 for the privilege of buying it on time-sale and that the purchase price is $100.00, it's really immaterial to you in a sense as to how the vendor computes the rate, because you're not going to be paying him the rate, you're going to be paying him the $20.00, and it doesn't matter how he tries to manoeuvre or misrepresent $20.00, $20.00 remains $20.00. There's only one way of computing it; that's by adding up the dollars and the cents and coming to that figure. And so we feel that by putting a re-emphasis in the Act upon the dollars and cents value of interest and finance charges, that we are serving the public interests in the best way that this Legislature can, remembering of course, that we are all human, subject to all human foibles, and that nothing we do in this Chamber, nothing is probably going to be perfect.

Now there is the reason why in Manitoba they changed their requirement of calculating interest. Apparently it had been demonstrated fairly forcibly by this time that it presented many problems and many difficulties, and they felt that the burden should not be cast on the vendor of the merchandise.

At the same time in Alberta you had the situation where they had a time-sale agreement act for some time, and they provided originally in the alternative; that is, they required the information which my friend's bill requires, but they said the facts should be set out in dollars instead of this percentage relationship. By some strange quirk, in March of this year there was a bill before the Legislature of Alberta—and I have not been able to find out whether it passed into law or not—in which they were doing exactly the opposite. In other words, they were asking that the total cost to the buyer above the regular cash selling price be expressed with the equivalent of simple interest to the nearest whole number and that the declining balance from time to time be stated. There you have another variation of it.

There are two significant things in this; one is that you have some of the provinces operating in this field. You have the conditional sales agreement in the provincial Legislature, where it properly belongs. You have Manitoba with one concept and passing a law in one regard containing the principle, if there is a principle, contained in my friend's bill, while in Alberta you have a change to another basis by indicating the percentage calculation on the excess of the cost of buying on time as against paying cash for the item of consumer goods.

In this area where there are all these doubts, we then have this bill, and we are asked in the interests of protecting the purchaser of consumer goods to pass this legislation. Even my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Croll) does not say: "Pass this bill into law and all the abuses will disappear", although he very hopefully said on one occasion that if this percentage figure was made known to these people they might think twice. This is what Senator Croll said:

> . . . if people knew what they were being charged they would be less likely to make instalment purchases which would leave them hard up or destitute, and at the very least, would enable them to shop intelligently for credit.

Well now, this is the objective of the bill. Do you think we have to pass this bill in order to advise these people that they should shop for credit? They shop for merchandise. They are very intelligent and very alert in canvassing the shopping areas to see what the prices are, and they take the best advantage they can of those prices. But, suddenly these very intelligent people who are excellent shoppers of merchandise do not know anything about shopping for credit. I find that hard to believe and hard to accept, unless the explanation is that they are so anxious to acquire, perhaps, a motor car and to get behind the wheel and go driving, or they are so anxious to get the television set home and operating in order to see the latest fight, or to get the record player, that they will pay whatever they are asked to pay, because they earn so much and can make those payments, and that if they become unemployed it is just too bad so far as the vendor is concerned. He may have the car in its then condition, or he may have the television set or the record player.

But, this should not be all one-sided. Certainly the approach of the purchaser to credit should be an educated one. But the people who usually suffer from the so-called abuses of credit are the ones who spend more than they should on it, and this is because their objective is different. They are looking only to today, and living for today. I am not complaining about that. It is their money, and they can spend it in any way they wish. But, my friend, on the basis of wishing to protect these people, says that these additional burdens must be imposed upon the vendors of the merchandise. The result produced is not a result that provides any real protection at all.

I am going to suggest to my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Croll) and to all honourable senators that there is a way by which we could have perfectly valid legislation that would do the thing that this bill is intended to do. In the province of Ontario we had a law called The Unconscionable Transactions Relief Act. It went away back into common law days, and it was on the statute books of the province of Ontario for some years. It provided that if a transaction got to the stage where it might be regarded as unconscionable the victim could apply to the courts, and a judge would assess all the facts in relation to it and would make an order. If the interest charges were too high the judge could reduce them.

That law in the last year has been declared unconstitutional so far as Ontario is concerned. An appeal was argued recently in the Supreme Court of Canada, but that court has not yet given judgment. My own feeling is that the judgment of the court of appeal of Ontario, on balance, is right, and that it will be upheld by the Supreme Court of Canada. The court of appeal of Ontario said that this act dealt with interest, which is a federal matter. If its judgment is upheld then the area in which the federal authority can operate is that area, but not, I hope, in a way where it will set a specific rate of interest because, remember, in setting a specific rate of interest you are penalizing many people who have no security upon which they can obtain credit. But, they have their youth, their energy, and they have a job; they may be newly married and should have the opportunity of buying things with which they want to live and be more comfortable, and should be allowed to contract into the future for a while as long as it is reasonably done.

If you set a rate of interest on consumer credit, then you are going to shut out a lot of deserving people. So far as the others who are careless are concerned, and those who are not as much concerned about what it is going to cost them as they are about getting possession of the merchandise, they will find a way of doing it anyway. So, I say that the risk of setting a rate of interest is a serious one, because many people who should be able to buy on these terms would be penalized.

I rather favour as federal legislation the Unconscionable Transactions Relief Act, but in a form in which all this information that my friend's bill calls for, other than the percentage relationship, is furnished. It should be furnished under federal law, and then you can have your general regulation empowering a court to inquire into particular cases in order to determine whether or not the transaction, in the circumstances, is unconscionable. By such means a little more scope is given to the court, and the information as to the cost of the credit can properly be required under federal legislation because that will be ancillary to the main purpose of the bill, which is to determine whether or not the transaction is unconscionable.

If my friend (Hon. Mr. Croll) really has the objective of protecting people who are victimized, then that is the kind of federal legislation we should be looking for, and not the proposed legislation that we have here, which is represented as being a cure-all and which, by no stretch of the imagination, can be a cure-all.

Many people and organizations have written to me over the years when this bill has been before the Senate, all urging that I support this bill, and that the Senate pass it because it is so good and will protect the poor victims of the purchasing of merchandise subject to consumer credit terms. I took the position finally, in view of these representations which I could not accept, that those who made them had done so either because they had not read the bill or because they did not understand it. The bill gives no protection except the pious hope that users of consumer credit might get frightened if they see what the percentage figure is. I am not at all hopeful that they would be frightened, but rather that they would still go ahead as long as they could acquire the merchandise and pay whatever the carrying charge was.

Although my attitude on the previous occasions when this bill was introduced has been to oppose it vigorously, I am not opposing it now in the sense that I do not want it sent to committee. There are many of these people who I expect will come before the committee, and I would certainly like to find out, first of all, why they think so highly of the bill and, secondly, what particular experience they have had that they think could have been avoided had this bill been in force.

I have one other comment to make before I sit down. I must comment on the speech Senator Vaillancourt made, because in it he gave a most excellent exposition on the subject of capital and consumer credit. I think the only place where he went wrong in the whole speech was when he came to the point where he said he supported this bill, and if he could support it 10 or even 100 times, he would still support it. I think the honourable senator missed the point in dealing with the field of credit unions.

Just to show you that there is some value in what I have said about the attitude of those who are buying on time, the experience that Senator Vaillancourt gave in his remarks on credit unions was that if you are thrifty and intend buying some article on consumer credit, you can deposit money for a year in a credit union, if you can wait that long for the article, and collect the interest rate. If you do that you get a better price because you can pay cash for the article. In this way you can accumulate a lot of money. The honourable senator said that you are better off if you can contain yourself for a year. Then he demonstrated by a series of transactions that even if you were impatient to get a particular article of merchandise you could join a credit union, borrow the money and pay cash for the article, and pay your interest charge to the credit union. The person who uses the credit union to provide the financing for these consumer goods is much better off in that the cost to him is considerably less. The proof of that lies in the figures he has given regarding the tremendous volume of increase in the business of credit unions. Perhaps there should be a bill in which there would be another clause for people wanting to buy on consumer credit, that they must shop through a credit union. Then there would be a complete assurance of honesty and good terms, and perhaps we would make a few more thrifty people in the process.

As I said in the beginning, the honourable senator has no monopoly on the desire to protect people who have to buy on time. I am not speaking against the practice of buying on time. It is one of those things which contribute tremendously to the economy of the country, and I think it is a modern feature which is highly desirable for people who can afford it. If they have good jobs and good income, they should be able to provide themselves not only with the necessities but with things that provide comfort and ease in living—as long as they do not go wild in the process.

However, it is one thing to say that I support anything which will protect them, anything that is reasonable and will provide a measure of protection; but I just cannot go through the motions of offering them something which, in my opinion, will do them no good. That is why I say that this bill is no good for the purposes for which my friend represents it to be, that is, that it is going to put a check-rein on abuse of credit.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Honourable senators, I would like to ask honourable Senator Hayden one question. He has indicated that he is prepared to let this bill go to a committee.

In introducing the bill, Senator Croll, at page 86 of the Debates of the Senate, said:

> The identical bill received second reading—which connotes approval in principle—on previous occasions, and during the last session by unanimous consent.

I should like to ask honourable Senator Hayden if I may take it that, when he says he is prepared to let the bill go to the committee, he considers there is no principle in the bill.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I may say that I indicated in almost the same language a few times tonight as to whether there is a principle. I am prepared to let this bill go to a committee. I feel I am not subscribing to any principle in the process, as I do not see any principle in the bill.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Acting Speaker (Hon. Mr. Vien): Honourable senators, I should like to draw your attention to the fact that if the mover of this bill speaks now it will have the effect of closing the debate.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Croll, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

UNITED STATES INTEREST EQUALIZATION TAX

STATEMENT BETWEEN THE REPRESENTATIVES OF THE GOVERNMENT OF CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, RESPECTING THE UNITED STATES INTEREST EQUALIZATION TAX, AGREED TO JULY 21, 1963

Representatives of Canada and the United States met during the weekend to appraise the impact on the Canadian financial markets of the proposed United States "interest equalization tax".

The two governments recognized the need for effective action to improve the balance of payments position of both countries and are both equally determined that such action shall not impair the intimate economic relationships between the two countries, nor impede the growth essential for both economies.

For many years the capital markets of the two countries have been closely interconnected, the United States exports of capital to Canada have financed a substantial portion of the Canadian current account deficit with the U.S. This need continues. A portion of these flows must be supplied through the sale of new issues of Canadian securities in American markets. U.S. officials had considered that ample flows for these needs would continue under the proposed "interest equalization tax". However, Canadian representatives stated that this would require a very substantial rise in the entire Canadian interest rate structure. It was recognized by both governments that such a development would be undesirable in present economic circumstances.

In the light of this situation U.S. officials agreed that the draft legislation to be submitted to the Congress would include a provision authorizing a procedure under which the President could modify the application of the tax by the establishment from time to time of exemptions, which he could make either unlimited or limited in amount. The President would thus have the flexibility to permit tax free purchases of new issues needed to maintain the unimpeded flow of trade and payments between the two countries, and to take care of exceptional situations that might arise in the case of other countries. U.S. officials made clear that this did not modify their proposals regarding the taxation of transactions in outstanding securities; over the past year such transactions between Canada and the U.S. have not been a major factor.

The Canadian authorities stated that it would not be the desire or intention of Canada to increase her foreign exchange reserves through the proceeds of borrowings in the United States, and it is the hope and expectation of both governments that by maintaining close consultation it will prove possible in practice to have an unlimited exemption for Canada without adverse effect on the United States.

It was agreed that active consultations would continue to strengthen the close economic relations between the two countries and at the same time facilitate measures for making the maximum practicable contributions to economic expansion and the strength and stability of both currencies.

The conversations which were conducted in the United States Treasury on Saturday and Sunday included for Canada Ambassador Charles S. A. Ritchie, Louis Rasminsky, Governor of the Bank of Canada, Wynne Plumptre, Assistant Deputy Minister of Finance, and A. E. Ritchie, Assistant Under Secretary of State for External Affairs; for the United States Douglas Dillon, Secretary of the Treasury, George Ball, Under Secretary of State, Robert V. Roosa, Under Secretary of the Treasury for Monetary Affairs, and Stanley Surrey, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

PRIVATE BILLS

CO-OPERATIVE FIRE AND CASUALTY COMPANY—AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Norfolk) presented the following report of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on Bill S-26, respecting Co-operative Fire and Casualty Company.

> Your committee recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 600 copies in English and 200 copies in French of their proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Norfolk): I move, with leave, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Norfolk) presented the following report:

> The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce to whom was referred the Bill S-26, intituled: "An Act respecting Co-operative Fire and Casualty Company", have in obedience to the order of reference of July 9, 1963, examined the said bill and now report the same without any amendment.
> A similar bill in this matter was passed by the Senate during the last session of Parliament, but owing to the sudden dissolution of Parliament in February last, the proceedings on the bill were not completed.
> Your committee recommend that the Parliamentary fees paid upon the bill of the last session apply to the bill of this session. It is noted that the promoters have again paid the printing costs.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Cameron moved that the report of the committee be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

EMPLOYMENT

MUNICIPAL WINTER WORKS INCENTIVE PROGRAM—INQUIRY ANSWERED

Hon. Allister Grosart inquired of the Government, pursuant to notice:

> What measures will be taken to enforce the requirement described in paragraph 3 of the letter dated July 12, 1963, signed by Honourable A. J. MacEachen, Minister of Labour?

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, the answer to the honourable Senator Grosart's inquiry is as follows:

> The requirement that the bulk of those employed under the Municipal Winter Works Incentive Program 1963-64 must be unemployed at the time they are hired or persons who would be unemployed in the absence of the program is not a new provision. This has been one of the conditions of the program since its inception. Tied in with this provision is a further requirement that the facilities of the National Employment Service, where available, will be used in hiring workers to be employed on accepted projects.
> The provinces are responsible for the detailed administration of the program including the audit of claims. Where the facilities of the National Employment Service have been used payrolls are supported by N.E.S. referral slips. In other cases the provinces generally require some certification by the municipality.

SUPPLEMENTARY INQUIRY

Hon. Mr. Grosart: I thank the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford), and I would like to make a supplementary inquiry based on his reply.

The inquiry referred to one of the conditions under which federal payments are made in respect to winter works projects. The condition was that the additional employment under these projects be directed to those who were currently unemployed, or who would be unemployed if these works did not proceed.

I was concerned about the fact that in some cases it is possible that these winter works projects are not being directed to that very admirable objective. The reply I have received confirms my suspicion.

It is only fair to say that the honourable Leader of the Government in his reply has pointed out the fact that this is not a new regulation, that it has been in effect since the beginning of the winter works program. The reply also indicates that the detailed administration of the program, including the audit of claims, is in the hands of the provinces. After some further references, this further information is given:

> In other cases the provinces generally require some certification by the municipality.

I presume that is some certification that unemployed persons are being used. It occurs to me that this is not, or may not be, a very rigidly enforced regulation.

I give notice, therefore, that on July 30 I shall inquire of the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford):

> For any recent representative period, the total number of persons employed on winter works projects and the number of these who would otherwise be unemployed within the meaning of paragraph No. 3 of the memorandum referred to in my inquiry, notice of which was given on July 18.

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. Austin C. Taylor moved the third reading of Bill C-80, to amend the Atlantic Development Board Act.

Hon. John J. Kinley: Honourable senators, we have had a full discussion of this bill on second reading, and it is now before the house for third reading. Both sides of the house have been heard from, and it seems that everyone is in favour of the principle of the bill. The bill has not been sent to a committee, and I would like to take this opportunity of saying a few words on the motion for third reading.

This bill affects the Maritime provinces, and especially the province of Nova Scotia. I was for a long time in the public service of that province, and in the federal arena, and I think it is expected that I should say something in regard to such a bill as this.

This is important legislation. The Atlantic Development Board Act was passed during the last session of Parliament; now in this session we have before us an amending bill, and there is general agreement that the amendments are salutary.

The remarks I heard about the bill from different speakers, especially on the other side, indicated that what they objected to was the enlargement of the board by the appointment of new members to supplement those who are already on the board.

I do not know why we should object to that. I do not have to go out of this chamber to illustrate what is being done in other instances. We have had an election and some new senators have been appointed since then. I am sure they were all of the same political complexion. I think they have strengthened the Senate; we welcome them here, and we are glad to have them. I believe that the Senate is in a better condition now to do its business that it was when it was a one-sided house. These additions make for more spicy discussions; they bring new minds to our deliberations. That is the result we expect in the case of the board, with the new members added, in the Atlantic provinces.

It seems to me to be a mistake to have too small a board in a matter of this kind which is of public concern. The actions which are being taken are a cause of discussion and an expression of differences of opinion. With respect to matters with which the board deals, the application of the minds of those who live and move in different spheres of life and under different conditions in the area will, it seems to me, be salutary. I think all would agree that the board can function even better with the new appointments.

The position of chairman rotates a bit, and I do not think much exception can be taken to that. In this case we have done what has been done in the Senate: we have brought in the new and we have kept the old. We are leaving the chairman there for the time being, and I think everyone will agree that that is a good arrangement.

There was some criticism about the $100 million which is being given to this board. A board without funds is a pretty ineffective body. It seems to me they should have some funds which could be considered as belonging to and for the use of the board. In that case, the $100 million may be only an arbitrary figure. I notice that the board can make recommendations not involving the use of the fund. I think the senator who introduced the bill (Hon. Mr. Taylor, Westmorland) told us that.

That being the case, they are not restricted precisely to the amount of $100 million. However, we believe they should have that sum, so that they will at least have some funds and not be operating with empty pockets. Everyone likes to have a little money—it gives confidence.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: May I ask the honourable senator a question? Can they pay out any moneys? Without the approval of the Governor in Council, they have no money.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: No, they have no such authority, but money has been earmarked for their use. The money has been given to them, the same as was provided when the party opposite was in Government; but the board now holds the tiller more than they did when the party opposite was in power. It is well that the board should have some funds which they can call their own.

Honourable senators who have spoken have recommended enthusiastically certain projects. We notice that there are some differences of opinion. Senator Isnor objected to the Chignecto Canal project. On the other hand, Senator Taylor was very enthusiastic about the recommendations regarding the Chignecto Canal. This question has been under discussion for a long time. The very existence of these differences is one reason why we should have a good board, to make recommendations to the Government with regard to those things which can be done for the benefit of those provinces.

With regard to the functions of the board, we hear a lot of talk about what the board can and will do for us. In regard to the advice which the board can give, I suggest that it might be restrictive in some cases, while in others it may be a recommendation to go ahead. This is very important, as any government would be slow to go ahead with a project if the board recommended against it. On the other hand, a project might not be accepted even if the board reported favourably. Such a procedure would make for progress with stability.

My honourable friend from Colchester-Hants (Hon. Mr. Blois) spoke glowingly of the Stanfield firm in the province of Nova Scotia. I gladly join in the tribute to such a fine firm. It fills me with enthusiasm and inspiration to hear how well they are doing in that province. I knew the forefathers and heard about those who founded the Stanfield firm in Colchester. I believe the grandfather moved there from Prince Edward Island and, being aware of the superior quality of Nova Scotia wool, he started the manufacture of woollen underwear, known under the brand name "Stanfield's unshrinkables". Stanfield's woollen underwear has enjoyed a splendid reputation throughout Canada and sales have always been good. Canada is a cold country in winter, and woollen garments have always been in demand. Experience has shown that the name Stanfield is in the forefront in the manufacture and sale of woollen garments, and I feel that Canada owes a debt of gratitude to the founder and to those who have kept up the high standard of the Stanfield firm throughout the years. My friend from Colchester, Senator Blois, was for many years the manager of their factory. He must have contributed a great deal to the progress of the firm and I congratulate him. Manufacturing is a difficult business in Nova Scotia, and the establishment and development of the Stanfield firm is the exception that proves the rule in that province. Do not forget that in Nova Scotia we have very little but tide water and what the sea gives us. Our great heritage is the sea, and Nova Scotia is prosperous when she is prosperous on the sea.

The Rowell-Sirois report, which was published some years ago, was one of the finest reports we have ever had on conditions in Canada's maritime provinces. Incidentally, I do not know how far the Stanfield firm goes back, but I think it had its start in what has been called the golden era of Nova Scotia, and I am very pleased that it still survives.

While it is true that in Nova Scotia we want new industry, it must be remembered that our population is small and that our markets are not extensive. Markets are needed if industries are to succeed, and our greatest competitor for markets is central Canada. In Nova Scotia we are subject to the competition of the large industries of Upper Canada, as it is sometimes called, that is, the industries of Ontario and Quebec. It is hard to meet that competition. Our great need is technical assistance.

I have been hiring men in industry for over 60 years. At the present there are about 300 persons in my employ. We have little unemployment in our county. However, there is unemployment among our seamen who take summer employment on the Great Lakes. Following freeze-up they are obliged to return home and are listed as unemployed in Nova Scotia, and they remain unemployed until navigation reopens. There is also unemployment among our inshore fishermen who are able to operate only very little in the wintertime.

I have always felt that inshore fishermen, when they could not carry on their calling on the ocean, were just as entitled to unemployment insurance as the unemployed of other industries. I have always been in favour of that. I think that if a little more attention were paid to the proper administration of the Unemployment Insurance Act in Canada, unemployment would be less. I think the act is almost an invitation to slacken work to some extent in wintertime. People should realize that honest work is not only good for the body, but also for the conscience and the soul. We should try to keep as many people working as long as we can.

The senator from Colchester-Hants said that many things have been done in Nova Scotia by way of inviting industry into the province to promote general progress. I agree with him. For instance, the last government gave a bonus to the fisheries. I am all in favour of bonuses for primary industry. When a man wants to catch fish he needs a hook, line and bait, and possibly a boat. That starts the wheels of industry moving, providing work on shore and creating trade and commerce. When a bonus is given to a primary industry, it is beneficial to the country. I am strongly in favour of a bonus for primary industries, if properly administered, for the secondary inndustries cannot exist without the primary industries and it is the combination of the two that is good.

I do not like reducing municipal taxation by provincial statute for the purpose of enabling factories built by the Industrial Estates to obtain lower taxation than others. I believe there are instances of new industry obtaining reduction of taxes by provincial statute, thus causing other people to pay higher taxes. Again I think we should be careful to preserve what we now have in the Maritimes. Because an industry is doing well, it is no reason why the government should grant bonuses and divide the opportunity when there is enough for only one. An astute board should not be concerned with political or uneconomic considerations. An industry must grow from below, in the same way as the sap in a tree has its source below and works its way to the top.

Some big companies such as Ford are able to ignore political economics altogether and make their own economics, but a small businessman cannot do that. It is just as well to progress with stability.

I read in a New Brunswick newspaper yesterday that firms from outside the province working on public contracts would have to be 5 per cent lower to get consideration in that province. Well, on public contracts that is some protection. I was quite surprised to read that. If I, who live in Nova Scotia, go over to New Brunswick to do some work, I would be considered an outsider, and I do not like that.

Honourable senators, I am addressing you today particularly on account of a matter in which I am exceedingly interested, and which I have brought to the attention of this house on many occasions. When the Commonwealth Merchants Shipping Agreement was passed, it was passed concurrently with the Statute of Westminster. The Mother Country was a good trader and she wanted to continue her seafaring activities, so we gave equal privileges in our ports and in our coastal trade to British ships generally. We had always felt that our coastal trade should be more or less for our own people. We believed that it was just as much an industry as were industries situated on land. However, foreign competition, paying lower wages and using less costly vessels, had affected the marine industry in Canada for many years. Then, in 1961 there was passed in the other house an amendment to the Canada Shipping Act, which I felt was a forerunner of the time. It altered the meaning of the home trade voyage.

It also changed the definition of inland waters. Previously, inland waters included those from Cap des Rosiers to West Point, Anticosti Island; now it is to be extended from Anticosti Island to the north shore of the River St. Lawrence, along the meridian of longitude 63 degrees west. That means that alongshore up the Gulf of St. Lawrence in Quebec is now included in the definition of inland waters of Canada.

I think the Speech from the Throne in 1962 forecast that legislation was to be introduced with regard to Canada shipping, and it was only because of the sudden dissolution of Parliament that it was deferred for consideration in the future. I think there is rumbling in the mulberry bushes that we might get a bill of that kind later in this session. That, honourable senators, would be of importance to the Maritime provinces. If that bill is to involve changes in the Canada Shipping Act it means that they are going to protect themselves on the St. Lawrence and its entrance to the Seaway, and are going to leave the Maritimes open. I do not know whether that would be good or bad, but I would like to see it tried out. We in the Maritimes are privileged to come up to central Canada and move cargoes down to seaboard—and this is true in reverse—but whether the Maritimes should be open to the world is something I am not quite sure about.

I know that in the Maritimes we have many people in the shipping business who are agents for foreign companies, and I find they are in the forefront and very vocal in their disapproval of Canada coastal shipping being restricted to our own ships. I am more interested in unemployment in Nova Scotia.

We have a problem with Newfoundland, because coasting trade means carrying cargoes from one part of Canada to the other. Newfoundland wants the best facilities possible, and our being left outside will favour them very much. But, honourable senators, I say I would like to see it tried out.

The reason I am bringing this up at the moment is that this development board is an advisory body set up to advise the Government. As Senator McCutcheon intimated, they are not a board of directors; they are an advisory board. I think this is one of the things they will have to consider and give advice on, and I want it done in a way so that people will not think that political considerations are behind it; I want it done in an economic way. I want it to be considered carefully, and I believe that this board will be able to look after that.

All the undertakings that we do in the different parts of Canada should be beneficial to the particular area in which they are built, but they should also be for the national good. Canada is one country and, as they say, we must hang together or hang separately. In the interests of Canada we must be strong in our own right, and when we are strong in our own right we can have confidence in the future.

I am reminded of Kipling's poem about the law of the jungle—and I must say that the world is a jungle today. Kipling said:

> Now this is the Law of the Jungle—as old and as true as the sky;
> And the Wolf that shall keep it may prosper,
> but the Wolf that shall break it must die.
> As the creeper that girdles the tree-trunk the > Law runneth forward and back—
> For the strength of the Pack is the Wolf, > and > the strength of the Wolf is the Pack.

Honourable senators, in these days when so many think that we are going to have nations co-operating for our good, it is time to beware and think of our own strength and try to negotiate from strength. That is the best way.

Hon. Calvert C. Pratt: Honourable senators, I shall speak very briefly on this bill.

Previous speakers have emphasized the needs of their various provinces. Senator Kinley has just referred most interestingly to many aspects of conditions in each of the Maritime provinces. As for me, I shall bring out a few comments on the needs of Newfoundland and the application of policy which I hope this organization will have towards assisting in the development of my province.

There is one idea of policy that I would like to bring forth now in reference to the general operation of this organization. I have no objection at all to increasing the number of members on the board. However, I feel that it is also important that experienced consultants be employed. I know that that would run into a substantial sum of money, but nevertheless it should be done. Experienced advice may save more money than it costs. There are business and professional consultants who make a specialty of examining industry, the suitability of areas and so forth. I think great value would accrue if when the need arises experienced consultants were brought in to examine conditions and appraise them in the light of the prospects ahead. In such an undertaking as this, experience will be required in many fields, and it cannot be found in a committee around a table or by occasional visits.

I feel we have to be careful that this organization does not become a round-table discussion club. By bringing in consultants I do not think that will happen. I do not say this organization is going to go to that extreme, or is not going to be more directive in its work, but nevertheless there is always the danger of round-table discussions, without the facts being examined and analysed and without prospects being appraised. I hope that the organization will bring in men who can be used in the various areas of their operations.

I would now like to say a few words particularly in reference to the needs in this regard in the province of Newfoundland. Our province is chiefly one of primary industries, as we know. We have great developments under way and in prospect at the moment, but they are in the primary industry class. I shall mention some of them. The Iron Ore Company, operating in Labrador, has invested between $200 million and $300 million, apart from transportation facilities. It is now producing 7 million tons of concentrates and about 3½ million tons of pelletized metal. Another is the Wabash enterprise, with an investment of around $235 million.

These organizations are associated with the leading steel companies of the United States and Canada and some in Europe, and they are bringing in earnings of substantial consequence to Canada and the province of Newfoundland. These earnings will increase further as time goes on.

In addition, we have new electrical power development in being and in prospect. As a matter of fact, 120,000 horsepower has already been developed in Labrador for the use of the plants to which I have just referred.

Also we have the copper mines, with a new one just about to open up. We have an asbestos mine in the north, which is a new $25 million project. There are many other resources, such as lead, zinc, fluorspar and gypsum. Mineral production in Newfoundland last year was about $100 million, with substantial increases expected in the near future. The reason I bring this up is that I want to point out that practically all of this production goes outside of Canada and brings money into Canada.

Also there is the paper industry. In Canada we do not have a market for a substantial portion of our paper production; it practically all goes abroad. The mills on the mainland, of course, supply the domestic requirements, so we have a small, if any, market there.

With reference to our fisheries, I have recently spoken on that subject and do not need to go into it further now. However, we certainly need a program of more efficient operation and establishment of fishing industries than is in sight at the present time.

These industries to which I have referred earn for Canada a tremendous sum of money, and they do not enter into substantial competition with other provinces. The money that comes from abroad helps to finance the purchases by the people of the province of Newfoundland, most of which are made in Canada. As a matter of fact, it is estimated that Newfoundland, with very little money from the sale of its products coming from the mainland, buys $250 million to $300 million worth of goods from the other provinces.

I mention these facts because they are matters for special consideration in dealing with economic matters in relation to Newfoundland.

I have referred to our principal primary industries, but what we need is a more balanced economy than we now have, in order that our people may better fit in with the economic growth that is in prospect for our province. I hope that one of the results of the work of this organization will be assistance in promoting more secondary industries, to spread employment more widely throughout our province than is now the case.

Newfoundland has an unemployment problem which is far beyond that of the other Atlantic provinces. We all realize that the nature of our productive industries brings about more seasonal unemployment than is the case in most other areas of Canada.

I have here a publication of the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council of January 1962, which gives some figures in reference to the employment position in the Atlantic provinces, under the headings of employment by the primary industries and the secondary manufacturing industries. I note that in the primary industries Newfoundland employs 6,447 persons, or about 23 per cent of the total in that category for the four Atlantic provinces, while the population is about 24 per cent of the total. On the other hand, in the secondary manufacturing industries Newfoundland is listed as having an employment figure of 3,173, or about 10 per cent of the total for such industries in the four Atlantic provinces.

Putting the primary and the secondary industries together—and I am referring now to manufacturing within these primary and secondary industries, as that is what the comparison deals with here—our employment figure is about 16 per cent under these categories, notwithstanding the fact our population is about 24 per cent of the total for the four provinces.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: Does that include your shore workers in fisheries?

Hon. Mr. Pratt: That includes those who are in the processing. Primary manufacturing is referred to as fish processing, mineral processing, pulp and paper, lumbering, and so forth.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: Then there is Bell Island and Corner Brook.

Hon. Mr. Pratt: This does not include mining, woods work and such.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: You do not include that?

Hon. Mr. Pratt: No. What I am referring to is manufacturing, not mining or fishing.

Honourable senators, we also have some serious local situations. We have one which is extremely serious for Newfoundland and, in particular, for the people who live on Bell Island. Over the years, the iron ore operation there has been built up, and as a result there has been created a town with a population of about 14,000. During 1959 the company started laying off employees because of lack of markets for their ore, and today about one-third of the population of that town is on relief. I hope that this development board will make that a priority issue, to see what can be done to assist that area and its people in getting employment or creating new industry. It may have to be done by assisting industry, for it is just too bad that a town that has been built up over the years finds itself in this situation. Numerous homes have been closed because families have had to leave the area. However, the major part of the population remains, with about one-third being supported by relief. In dealing with the problems of the Atlantic provinces I believe that is one of the major issues which this organization will have to face, and I hope they will give it preferential treatment.

Honourable senators, there is just another matter to which I would refer. In co-operation with a movement such as this, there is an effort being made today in Newfoundland which I believe could tie in well with this organization. I refer to the establishment of vocational schools.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Pratt: We have a vocational training college starting in St. John's, and I believe there are to be ten others in various parts of the province. Young people are being brought in to these schools to be trained, to gain skills in various classes of industrial work. It would be lamentable if after pursuing their various studies and courses we found we had no work for them within the province. We want people to learn how to work so that they can occupy the positions to be created or already existing. I hope that this organization will be able to pursue an active policy of creating industry whereby these young people who come in with the ambition to improve their future, and voluntarily go through these courses, will have a better opportunity to fit into industry in Newfoundland than is now in sight for them. As a matter of fact, I really believe that by training the many thousands of young people who will be coming into the labour market during the course of the next few years, we will be availing ourselves of one of the best aids in setting up an industrial policy for our province, and I hope that the scholars now going through will from time to time find opportunities made available through the operation of an organization such as the Atlantic Development Board.

Hon. G. Percival Burchill: Honourable senators, I am almost ashamed to rise to speak on this bill, and I want to assure the house that my remarks will be brief. Senator Brooks told us yesterday afternoon that we Maritimers talk too much, and I am inclined to agree with him. However, he also said that one of the reasons he spoke was that while he believed silence was golden, he was afraid his silence might be construed in his constituency in New Brunswick as a lacking of interest in this great project and in matters which concern us so deeply in the Atlantic provinces.

In saying that he reminded me of something that happened in this chamber some years ago. I had complained that our public relations were not as good as they ought to be, and that our propaganda was not working too well, because since I had come to this chamber we had had many able speeches from some brilliant speakers on both sides of the house which I felt every Canadian should hear. Unfortunately, in the press there was hardly any reference to those speeches, and on one occasion I complained it was a pity that the Canadian public could not share my pleasure and my information in listening to these speeches. Senator Lambert rebuked me; he said that publicity was not one of the things we should seek in the Senate. Publicity was a matter of secondary importance. He referred me to the remark that Senator Meighen made on one occasion when he said that the Senate was the "workshop of Parliament, and not a theatre", and as members of the workshop we should not look for any publicity for our speeches.

I just wanted to pass that comment on to Senator Brooks or to any other senator who might think he should get recognition in the press for his remarks.

Now I wish to express my appreciation of Senator Lambert's remarks the other day about our efforts to bring industry to New Brunswick by establishing a plant to make spruce plywood. Senator Brooks made some kindly references yesterday afternoon, and those also I appreciate very much indeed. But as much as we extol big industry and big public projects as being necessary, I am concerned more with our rural areas in New Brunswick. The cities and towns of New Brunswick are comparatively prosperous. If one might use telephone messages as a barometer of our prosperity, the long distance messages this year in New Brunswick have shown a healthy and satisfactory increase.

But it is the rural areas, the agricultural and farming areas of the countryside, that I am concerned about. I refer to what the honourable Senator Taylor (Westmorland) has said on many occasions and which he repeated in introducing this bill, that any help, stimulation or encouragement that can be given to agriculture in New Brunswick is important and is something which should be given our first attention.

I am sad to say that in the province of New Brunswick many of our farms have been abandoned. In days gone by they were the backbone of our province, and they produced many outstanding men, men who achieved positions of prominence in the church, the state, the professions and business all over Canada. To illustrate this we need not look further than this chamber, for we have here some distinguished Canadians, who have had notable careers and have become prominent in many spheres, and who were raised on New Brunswick farms. I would refer to my friends Senator Taylor (Westmorland) and Senator Brooks as examples of what I mean. They will, I am sure, support everything I have to say.

However, we have had an unfortunate exodus from the farms during the past 25 to 50 years. Unfortunately, this exodus has not been merely to the cities of our own province, or of Nova Scotia, but to the cities of central Canada, to places where employment and wages were available.

I believe that this Atlantic Development Board might well start at the beginning, and in my view the beginning is our agriculture, the basic industry of our province.

It has been mentioned that certain industrialists have done something to improve the situation regarding employment in our province and to develop our natural resources. In the sphere of agriculture, I should like to refer to the McCain Food Company, which is comprised of four sons, encouraged by their distinguished mother, who have established a modern plant at Florenceville for the processing of frozen agricultural produce. This company goes back to the days of the grandfather, who was a prominent man in that community, a member of the legislature, and to his son, the late A. D. McCain. These four young men by their vision, their industry and ability, have built up a magnificent business, not only national, but international in scope in that they are selling frozen agricultural produce from New Brunswick in many markets of the world. They grow their produce not only in New Brunswick, but also in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. This, I think, is the type of industry that should be encouraged and stimulated in the province of New Brunswick, and I give these young men and their business at Florenceville full credit for what they are doing.

Referring to Senator Isnor's remarks yesterday regarding fishing establishments, I might add that we have some modern fishing plants in New Brunswick. He mentioned the fishing plants in Nova Scotia. While I am not going to take time to mention our New Brunswick plants today, I shall just say that they are very modern, and if my friend thinks that Nova Scotia has a monopoly of modern fishing plants he should come to New Brunswick and see what we have done in this industry.

As I have said, I think everything possible should be done to encourage the small industries in rural communities. In saying this

I have in mind a small woollen mill in my own community, where a young man, Mr. Harry F. Brown, has been carrying on a textile business under extreme difficulties and in competition with the larger textile industries in Canada. This is the type of industry, the smaller industry in the rural community, which needs support and which will bring back a sound basic prosperity to our province.

I think that this bill now before us gives the opportunity of doing big things for our Atlantic provinces.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON AGING

MOTION TO APPOINT COMMITTEE TO CONDUCT STUDY—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Croll:

> That a Special Committee of the Senate be appointed to examine the problem involved in the promotion of the welfare of the aged and aging persons, in order to ensure that in addition to the provision of a sufficient income, there are also developed adequate services and facilities of a positive and preventive kind so that older persons may continue to live healthy and useful lives as members of the Canadian community and the need for the maximum co-operation of all levels of governments in the promotion thereof;
> That the said committee be composed of twenty Honourable Senators to be named later;
> That the committee have power to engage the services of technical, clerical and other personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of the inquiry;
> That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate; and
> That the committee be instructed to report to the house from time to time its findings, together with such recommendations as it may see fit to make.

Hon. Josie D. Quart: Honourable senators, as this is the first time I have spoken in this chamber since the winds of change or, should I say, the fickle fortunes of politics, placed us on this side of the Senate, I should like to associate myself with my colleagues and join in the chorus of praise to the honourable senators who moved and seconded the motion for an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. Their oratory and excellent performance left nothing to be desired, and it is a pleasure to extend to them my congratulations.

(Translation)

To you, Mr. Speaker, I should like to offer my congratulations for the honour conferred upon you when you were appointed to preside over our deliberations. Regardless of political convictions, your friends are happy that a son of la belle province has been chosen to fill a position he deserves so well.

I must also commend the people of Lévis who expressed their gratitude by offering a magnificent reception to their illustrious fellow citizen who is also a native of that community. I am greatly flattered at having been invited.

From a strictly feminine point of view, I must say that Mr. Speaker is most fortunate indeed to have such a charming wife. Mrs. Bourget is beautiful and gracious, and is an excellent hostess; she knows how to please each and every one. I commend Senator Bourget on his good taste.

Mr. Speaker, I hope your career in the Senate will be a happy, successful and satisfying one.

(Text)

Therefore, from a Québecoise to a Québecois, félicitations. Personally, I shall endeavour not to cause you any trouble.

I was delighted to hear so many honourable senators pay tribute to our former Speaker, the honourable Senator George S. White, for the able, dignified and impartial manner in which he presided over the deliberations of this chamber.

Honourable senators, due to the unpredictable swing of the political pendulum, the former Leader of the Opposition, the honourable Senator Ross Macdonald, has crossed the floor of this house to become the Leader of the Government in the Senate, which I understand is a repeat performance. In his humility he wished to absolve any honourable senators from making complimentary remarks in connection with his new role. However, fully realizing that my expressions of appreciation may labour repetition, I shall not be deprived of the pleasure of voicing my congratulations and wishing him every success. Because of his long parliamentary experience, he is well qualified to carry on the arduous duties entrusted to him.

To our Leader of Her Majesty's loyal Opposition, the honourable Senator Brooks, I tender my congratulations coupled with my loyalty. And, as "turn about is fair play", I wish him a short but fruitful term on this side of the Senate chamber prior to once again becoming the Leader of the Government in the not-too-distant future.

Both he and the former Deputy Leader of the Government, Senator Choquette, can look back with satisfaction upon the manner in which they performed their duties when they led the Government in this chamber.

To avoid further repetition I shall be very brief in my words of welcome to the new senators. Although new in the Senate, they have already a long list of credits and achievements on the Canadian scene, and we can count on their making a worth-while contribution to the debates of this house.

I was in London when I learned of the passing of the late Senator Higgins. I wish to extend my heartfelt sympathy to his wife and family.

Now, as to the motion before us, may I congratulate its sponsor, Senator Croll, for a most timely and humane proposal to set up a special committee of the Senate to deal with the problems of our aged and aging citizens. This committee should prove a very rewarding, timely and creative project.

Senator Croll, your exposé in support of your motion covered almost all aspects of what could and should be done for our senior citizens, and there is really little that one can add to strengthen what you have already said. However, old age is of interest to everyone. We cannot dodge it if we live long enough. We all realize that the life span is lengthening, thereby increasing the number of old people who will live on to a ripe old age, and that medical science will even continue to prolong their years by the new miracle drugs, or by merely keeping them as active, mentally and physically, as their general health will permit.

In voicing my approval of this motion I trust, and I am confident, that this committee will not be just another committee, but will make full use of its members effectively and appropriately to explore all angles involved in the promotion of the welfare of Canada's senior citizens, particularly of those who find themselves in financial or other difficulties, or merely alone or lonely.

The former Conservative Government during its term of office made great strides towards alleviating some of the suffering caused by these problems, by increasing the old age pension from $55 to $65 per month. And, beyond a doubt, had they been re-elected they would have enacted further social justice legislation to increase benefits for our old age pensioners.

However, although an adequate income is an important aspect which cannot be overlooked, money alone is not sufficient to assure a happy and useful old age. A major challenge facing old people these days is the callous attitude of modern society to old age.

Many voluntary associations have become extremely conscious and deeply concerned about our aging citizens. Considerable funds have been raised to furnish institutions with equipment, libraries and even competitive games for the additional enjoyment and comfort of the inmates, as well as appropriating large sums of money towards research in the study of geriatrics.

Dr. David Sherman, the president of the American Geriatric Society, said recently that "our ultimate goal is creative aging".

It was noted as a dramatic coincidence that the 20th annual meeting of the Geriatrics Society in Montreal coincided with the passing to his eternal reward of Pope John XXIII, whose life was tangible proof of how much can be accomplished by making the last years of life the years of creative action. Pope John was frequently quoted as saying:

> It is true that your Pope is growing old, but also true that wisdom is part of age.

Old persons have a direct appeal to most volunteers, and this is a field of service which is constantly expanding. To meet this need, the army of volunteers of all ages is increasing to cope with the demand to help staff institutions for older men and women. They teach them handicrafts, play games with them, take them out for motor rides, and conduct all these activities to challenge and exercise their mental and physical capacities.

Volunteers render invaluable services. They help in these apartment-like homes which permit old married couples to live together and enjoy their last remaining years in each other's company. Volunteers teach them to cook, to try out new recipes, to budget their incomes and to perform many tasks to keep them active and interested in life.

It is my opinion that steps should be taken where possible to assist old people who are mentally and physically capable of finding part-time employment. This would not only be a valuable asset to the environment in which they live, but would also be an excellent means for the older folks to re-establish their confidence and assurance in themselves as individuals thus enabling them to feel they were not discarded citizens and written off as useful members of the community.

I was happy to hear that one of the objectives of this Senate committee would be to furnish guidance, not merely to government but to voluntary leaders in the domain of welfare for the aged and aging persons, and that the committee would in turn invite suggestions from professional and voluntary agencies and individuals specializing in social welfare to arrive at an overall assessment of how best to cope with this area of social welfare.

I am sure that most honourable senators know that last month, on June 6, over 300 delegates attended the annual meeting in Montreal of the American Geriatrics Society, and were told by many speakers that elderly people make up the next lost generation unless more is done to help them enjoy the longer life now promised by the latest medical advances.

It was also stressed that young people should be educated not to fear old age, but to try to grow old gracefully and endeavour to retain a significant place in society; also, that a new approach should be taken to aging, instead of viewing the aged and aging through eyes veiled by eigtheenth and nineteenth century concepts.

Mr. Max Swerdlow, director of education for the Canadian Labour Congress, said industry had a social responsibility not to discard elderly workers "in the name of profit and progress". Some employers believed that older workers were less productive, more liable to sickness and accidents, and unable to keep up with continuous technological change. Nevertheless, studies in several countries have shown that capacity for work lasts longer than is commonly recognized.

Most men and women who have worked long hours for many years anticipate retirement—that longed-for leisurely time to be spent in full enjoyment of living—but frequently disappointment awaits around the corner. Disillusionment sets in and one becomes bored with so much free time. Even when financially secure, they become tired travelling about aimlessly. Well, that is the time when homes, clubs and activities for aging citizens fill a much-needed want.

In these clubs and homes for the aged, our elderly citizens are taught to forget the word "leisure" and to work at something, to develop their talents and hobbies, to take up new careers, and even to make new friends among the members of the retired society.

Doctors agree that the best prescription for many imaginary ills caused by boredom is work—even volunteer work. Dr. Joseph Peck, retired doctor, wrote that "it is only the retired person who fully appreciates the dignity of labour and realizes that work is the noblest word in the dictionary."

Dr. Penfield says:

> Toward the close of life, there is some misconception of the capacity of the human brain. . . Rest is not what the brain needs most at 60 or 65. It is challenge. Aside from the normal rhythm of sleep, too much rest destroys the brain and even destroys the health in time.
> This does not mean that a person need continue at the same pace as when younger. What an older person needs is to change harness and begin a second career, one more suited to the physical condition without decreasing the mental challenge.

I read an article in the Montreal Gazette of June 25 which gave me great pleasure. I heard a great deal about this golden age organization in the United States and of course in that paradise for the aged in St. Petersburg, Florida. I was never invited to one of their teas, but I heard that the undertakers there give teas to the aged. It is prospective business, of course. This golden age organization which is to be self-controlled, self-supervised and self-operated, was announced on June 25. I quote from the Montreal Gazette:

> The organization is called the International Golden Age Associations and its initial group is Montreal Unit No. 1.
> Made up originally of some 20 Montrealers over 65, it hopes to give birth to similar units in the immediate future. Each unit would be made up of a maximum of 100 members.

The article goes on to give the aims and objects of the organization. Its director said, as quoted by the Montreal Gazette:

> We want our club to be a veritable magnet for men and women so that they can participate actively instead of being bored over a card table or trying to dance some long-forgotten routine.

The newspaper report continued:

> In addition to regular club activities, the association plans to emphasize such things as the arts.
> The summer program will include visits to historical spots, picnics, and other events.

If the session had not been so prolonged, I should probably have been able to join in some of those events.

Many changes may be required in existing services to the aged, and further legislation may be needed. Ways and means of providing adequate and desirable additional services will no doubt be studied.

This special Senate committee is bound to promote action and speed up co-operative planning by governments, as well as by public and private organizations on the national, provincial and local levels. As the honourable Senator Croll said yesterday, it will undoubtedly conduct surveys, compile statistics and undertake research. In short, it will pilot projects and give leadership in improving the existing services, so that our senior citizens may spend their twilight years in happiness and comfort.

This pretentious program may require a considerable expenditure by the Government, but I have no doubt that the sponsor of the motion (Hon. Mr. Croll), will be able to use his influence, persuasion and perseverance to see that the necessary funds are made available to the committee to assure its success. Let us then look forward to this Senate committee, which will be composed of 20 honourable senators, as being dynamic, and never static.

One of Canada's greatest assets is her people—and not least of these are her aging citizens. For what they lack in youth and vigour they make up with their wealth of experience. Therefore, it gives me great pleasure to support this motion.

On motion of Hon. Mrs. Inman, debate adjourned.

The Senate resumed from yesterday, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Croll for the second reading of Bill S-6, to make provision for the disclosure of information in respect of finance charges.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I would like to say a few words at this time about this bill. However, for reasons which will become apparent to you, I do not propose to conclude today the debate on the second reading of the bill.

Two significant events have occurred since I moved the second reading of the present bill on June 5 last. There now appears on the Order Paper in the House of Commons a Government notice of motion, the operative portion of which reads as follows:

> That a joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons be appointed to enquire into and report upon the problem of consumer credit, more particularly but not so as to restrict the generality of the foregoing to enquire into and report upon the operation of Canadian legislation in relation thereto; . . .

That is an event of great importance, not only to this country but to other countries as well. Britain has a situation not dissimilar to ours, which has been referred to in the London Times as being pregnant with social evil and legal injustice.

In Britain, somehow or other, they have been able to work out the rates of interest and they indicate them in the contract. I do not think there is any real trouble in disclosing the simple rate of interest, but there is much being said about it that is misleading.

I do not wish to comment at this time on this notice of motion, except in so far as it affects the situation regarding this bill now before the Senate. A further and better opportunity will be afforded to me when that motion is brought before the Senate for consideration. I feel compelled to remark however that, in so far as I know and in so far as I have been able to ascertain, it will be the first large-scale examination in depth of the problem of consumer credit inaugurated in a parliamentary body anywhere.

Honourable senators are aware of the frustrations which have attended the efforts of Senator Douglas of the United States Senate and others, including President Kennedy, to have something done by the Congress of the United States.

A vast and growing segment of our economy, which is generally known as consumer credit, is to a large extent not only uncontrolled but is unexplored. Perhaps this is because it is in some respects comparatively new in our economic experience, and also because, like Topsy, "it just growed".

At this time I must express my pleasure and delight that a decision has been taken by the Government of the day to explore this vital and, indeed, sensitive area in all its aspects and in depth.

When I speak of the action taken by the government of the day, I think I should make it known to this house, for the purpose of the record, that it is supported by all the parties in the other house; that there were some nine bills on the Order Paper, some from Conservatives, some from Social Crediters, others from the N.D.P. and from Liberals. This motion, of which notice has been given, is not a party measure.

What may emerge from the parliamentary investigation, we do not know; but I indicated on an earlier occasion that there may, as a result of this investigation, be exposed a need for a consumers' bill of rights, which will have regard for the fact that we are living in the last half of the twentieth century.

On another occasion I spoke about a consumers' bill of rights. I think this investigation or this hearing will raise the question. It is my view, and I present it in a preliminary sort of way, that a consumers' bill of rights will have to be considered, will have to give attention to interest rates on consumers credit, consider what is fair, and, in the same manner that we control the small loans interest, there will have to be controls of finance charges. They will have to concern themselves with advertising, in an effort to raise it above the level of a carnival barker; they will have to concern themselves with the matter of packaging, to avoid deception; and with labelling, to indicate the quality of goods.

There is also the question of repossessions, to protect the equity of the purchaser. We have not done enough in that field. The British are far ahead of us. They will also have to consider a time lapse for the consummating of contracts made by door-to-door solicitation without the signature of both the husband and wife.

We are now entering into a new phase, and it is well for us to realize that we are not living in the age of the dinosaur, nor even of the horse and buggy, but of the credit financier, who in some form or other is ever present in our day-to-day existence.

So far as legislation or investigation is concerned, one would think that we did not know the facts, or at least that we are determined to ignore them. There has been some apathy and some ignorance about consumer credit. I do not think that we are now suffering from apathy. On the contrary, there is every evidence that the people of Canada are far from apathetic about this ever-present phenomenon.

I am glad that the Senate has been a forum in which it has been possible to play some small part in bringing the problem to the attention of the public. There remains, however, a great deal of ignorance, much of which may well be removed as a result of the investigation about to be undertaken in consumer credit. For this reason, at the conclusion of my remarks I shall propose to move the adjournment of this debate, thus keeping the bill alive but not pressing it at this time to a conclusion.

I have already dealt with event No. 1, which is the government notice of motion to establish a joint committee of both houses on consumer credit. I said two events have happened since I last spoke to the bill. Event No. 2, to which I must refer, has to do with the question of the constitutionality of the Unconscionable Transactions Act of Ontario. That question was pending before the Supreme Court of Canada when I moved the second reading of the bill. I pointed out then that the unanimous judgment of the Court of Appeal of Ontario, which found that the act in question was beyond the powers of the province of Ontario to enact, was relevant to the question of the constitutionality of the present bill. The appeal of this judgment to the Supreme Court of Canada, supported by counsel for the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, and resisted on behalf of the Government of Canada, has already been heard. Judgment has been reserved by the Supreme Court.

My suggestion is that it would be the course of wisdom for us to reserve judgment until the verdict of the Supreme Court of Canada is made known. That court is now, of course, our court of last resort on questions of constitutionality and of other matters. Even now it is giving consideration to the ambit of the legislative jurisdiction of Parliament and of the provincial legislatures in respect of interest, as the expression appears in section 91 of the B.N.A. Act of 1867.

When a final judgment is rendered, one of three things will inevitably emerge. First, there may be a clear indication that the present bill is valid, as being properly within the scope of the legislative authority of Parliament. Secondly, it may become clear that the present bill, regardless of its merits, is within the exclusive jurisdiction and competence of the provinces. Thirdly, since judges do not always express themselves on questions not strictly germane to the narrow issue before them, the question of and the answer to the constitutionality of the present bill may remain obscure and unresolved. This will give us further opportunities for deliberations and discussions on the constitutional question. I hope that does not happen.

I do not suppose that the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada in this matter will long be delayed. The appeal was heard about a month ago. Not only the Unconscionable Transactions Act, but the present bill, as well as a dozen or so bills with comparable purposes which are on the Order Paper of the House of Commons, may well hinge as to their constitutionality on the judgment to be rendered.

Moreover, I would anticipate that the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada will be available in due course for the guidance and assistance of the joint committee of both houses which will be examining the problem of consumer credit. That committee should be in a good position, as a result of that judgment, to determine the ambit of the federal power, and therefore of the federal responsibility in relation to "Interest".

Honourable senators, probably I should make some observations concerning the remarks made last evening by my honourable friend, Senator Hayden, who has been as persevering in his opposition to this bill as I have been in sponsoring it. Of course, if I had agreed with him in the past I would not have persevered with my bill. Moreover, I have not found myself in agreement with him in the past and I do not agree with him now.

Senator Hayden took considerable time yesterday in reaching the conclusion that the bill would accomplish nothing. Yet, the warm support that has been indicated for the principle of this bill in all parts of Canada, and indeed even the hard core of opposition which has persisted in some quarters, does not suggest to me that anybody, whether for or against the bill, really believes that it would not be effective.

Since the last election some of you may not be reading the Globe and Mail as religiously as you did before the election. If that is so, you would have missed an article in this morning's edition which started out by saying "Jesse James Piker Compared with Money-lenders."

The provincial Government, in its wisdom, has a committee looking into the matter of consumer credit, and for weeks the evidence before it has been disclosing practices that ought to horrify most people. According to the newspaper report there was before the committee yesterday a corporation, the owner of which admitted that he was not aware, in fact he did not know, that the interest rates were so high. The record indicates that he was receiving rates of 87.3 per cent, 37 per cent, 55 per cent, and some even as low as 30.5 per cent.

I am not suggesting that these are normal, but they are some of the disclosures that are being made before a committee of the Legislature of the province of Ontario on consumer credit.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Would the transactions referred to be affected by my friend's bill?

Hon. Mr. Croll: No, not entirely, but I made it quite clear that the select committee on the cost of consumer credit was dealing with the point of consumer credit not directly affected by this bill but correlated to it. It would have been affected by the bill as I originally had it drawn, but I have since modified it.

Nevertheless, it was in that climate and in that atmosphere that that information became available. Over a period of time I have put on the record consumer credit interest transactions that are as smelly as these, but 87 per cent is one I never cited on other occasions.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: Are these real estate transactions that are referred to?

Hon. Mr. Croll: Yes, in the main they are.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Do they come under the Small Loans Act?

Hon Mr. Croll: No.

Honourable senators, I have, in addition to perseverance, some degree of patience and, therefore, I am prepared to hold this bill in abeyance pending a determination by the Supreme Court of Canada as to the constitutionality of the Unconscionable Transactions Act of Ontario, and pending also the report of the proposed joint committee of both houses of Parliament on consumer credit. On the one hand, I believe that a broad and liberal, rather than a narrow and technical, construction will be placed on the word "interest" as it is used in section 91 of the British North America Act of 1867; and, on the other hand, I am satisfied that the parliamentary examination that will be given to the whole field of consumer credit will indicate the need and the desirability of positive and remedial legislative action by the Parliament of Canada.

Honourable senators, I move adjournment of this debate until July 30 next.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Croll, debate adjourned.

The Senate resumed from Thursday, July 11, consideration of His Excellency the Administrator's speech at the opening of the session, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Lefrançois, seconded by Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland), for an address in reply thereto.

Hon. Muriel McQ. Fergusson: Honourable senators, although I had a previous opportunity to extend my congratulations to Mr. Speaker and the leaders on both sides of this house, I have not congratulated the mover and seconder of the motion for an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne for their excellent speeches, and I would like to do so now. I also wish to compliment the speakers who have preceded me in this debate. I have found all their speeches most interesting.

In the Speech from the Throne it was pointed out that the principles of Canadian external policy are those of the United Nations Charter: to maintain peace and justice and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms. I found this exemplified by our Canadian mission to the United Nations, and today I would like to tell you a little about my experiences when I was at the United Nations last year as a parliamentary observer with our Canadian delegation.

I would have preferred to give you some idea of my experiences as an observer at the United Nations immediately after my return from New York while I was still living—mentally at least—in what was to me the rarified and exciting atmosphere I found at the United Nations. However, as I did not have the opportunity at that time—now that I have mentally and physically settled in the more normal, although still exciting atmosphere of Ottawa, I would like to tell you about a few of the things that made life as an observer at the United Nations a thrilling experience for me.

This experience was veritably a highlight in my life and it seemed to be the focal point to which many of my previous experiences led. Many honourable senators may know that through the years I have worked with and for, on local, provincial and national levels, various Canadian organizations having international connections or affiliations. Among these have been UNICEF, United Nations Association in Canada, Canadian Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, Women's Councils, University Women's Clubs, Women's Institutes and others.

UNICEF, the United Nations Children's Fund, has its headquarters at the United Nations with a staff there of 570 and 30 field offices throughout the world. It was fascinating to me to meet many of the people from all over the world who, in these offices in the Secretariat building, are carrying on that very worthwhile work of helping children in the under-developed countries of the world. Maurice Pate, the director of UNICEF, prefers to use the word "developing" countries rather than "under-developed" countries, and I shall adopt this more appropriate word in the future.

You may be interested to know that Sir Zafrulla Khan, President of the 17th Session of the General Assembly, says that two-thirds of the membership of the United Nations are in his classification. At the United Nations the UNICEF staff are planning the programs to make the best possible use of the $30 million raised for this work this year through donations from over 60 different governments and also from voluntary UNICEF committees in a number of countries, including Canada. Last year the Canadian Government gave $800,000 to this work, and in addition voluntary groups organized through the Canadian UNICEF Committee of the United Nations Association in Canada, by means of their Hallowe'en project and the sale of UNICEF Christmas cards, raised over a half million dollars for the work of UNICEF.

My good friend, Mrs. Adelaide Sinclair, one of Canada's most distinguished women, formerly with the Department of National Health and Welfare, now holds one of the highest posts yet given to any woman at the United Nations, that of Deputy Executive Director of UNICEF.

Miss Phyllis Burns of Canada, another friend who was formerly with the Canadian Welfare Council, is now employed with the Economic and Social Affairs Branch of the United Nations and is liaison officer to the UNICEF Program Committee.

Although Adelaide Sinclair is a very busy woman and, as she told a reporter who interviewed her last fall—the report of the interview was published in the Toronto Globe and Mail in November, 1962—she is sometimes at her desk all day, late in the evening and sometimes even until two o'clock the next morning. Nevertheless, she was kind enough to arrange many pleasant contacts for me and to entertain me at dinner in her delightful home where she had as guests a number of people connected with UNICEF. Because of my special interest in this work Miss Burns also gave a reception for me to which the senior UNICEF officials at the United Nations, who come from many countries, were invited. It was fortunate for me too that, just after adjournment of the General Assembly and before I left New York, there was a meeting of the executive board and of the Program Committee of UNICEF which was attended by representatives from many nations. I had the privilege of attending these meetings.

Canada has been a member of the UNICEF board ever since it was created in 1946, except for a short period from 1958 to 1961. As we are again members of the Board our country was ably represented at the December 1962 meeting by our Deputy Minister of Welfare, Dr. Joseph Willard, and by advisors from the Canadian Permanent Mission to the United States. The opportunity to attend this meeting gave me a much clearer understanding of the changes which are taking place in the UNICEF program.

I learned that, although in earlier stages UNICEF specialized in projects that would bring food and medicine to hungry and sick children, they are now trying to do more than this. They believe there is little point in keeping children alive if you cannot teach them to earn their own living when they grow up. New, extensive educational projects will be undertaken and will probably take third place hereafter in UNICEF programs. Because of the great need which still exists in many countries, health projects will still receive the highest proportion of available money, followed by nutrition projects, and for some time yet both of these will rate much higher than the new projects in regard to education.

Honourable senators probably know that to plan the annual program for UNICEF is not only to plan how to spend money to bring medicine and food to sick and hungry children although, as I said, it will assist in this way in emergencies. However, UNICEF normally provides only the material and the personnel sufficient to enable the recipient countries to go ahead on their own and provide for the needs of their own people. UNICEF will draw up plans for a project, will provide essential supplies that are unavailable locally, and will see that proper use is made of supplies. Beyond that, except in emergencies, it will not go; and, as things have worked out, UNICEF spends one dollar for every two and a half dollars contributed by the countries aided. To overcome hunger and malnutrition, many dairies and milk-drying plants have been set up under these programs.

UNICEF collaborates with other United Nations agencies such as UNESCO—United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization; FAO—Food and Agricultural Organization; and, WHO—World Health Organization. These agencies collaborate in many projects, including educational projects and projects to arrest child-killing diseases such as malaria, TB, yaws and leprosy, in giving help and services to blind children. UNICEF is welcomed throughout the developing countries as the bearer of health, happiness and nutrition to millions of deprived and underprivileged children of the world.

I was happy to learn that besides those I mentioned there are other Canadians who have given outstanding service in this field, such as Milton F. Gregg, a former minister in our federal cabinet, who has just returned after spending three years representing UNICEF in Indonesia. Mr. Stewart Sutton, another well-known Canadian who was the former head of Welfare Services for the Canadian army, has been Regional Representative of UNICEF for Africa. Another was Newton Bowles, one of the senior administrators in UNICEF. I was proud to know we had a number of Canadians contributing to this work.

I welcomed the opportunity to learn about what this great organization is doing, and I assure you that I will work with added enthusiasm for the Canadian UNICEF committee. I hope that this year our Government's contribution to this work will be increased from $800,000 to at least $1 million; and I hope, too, that our Canadian voluntary UNICEF committee will be able to raise more than it did last year.

Honourable senators, you may wonder how my association with other organizations in Canada would contribute to making my stay at the United Nations more interesting. The reason is that practically all of these great Canadian groups are affiliated with their own international organizations, and these international groups—voluntary, non-government organizations—have consultative status with one or more of the agencies which are connected with and form part of the United Nations. Most of these non-government organizations send representatives to the United Nations when the General Assembly meets, and my previous contacts with many of them proved very useful to me. In fact, if during my life I receive no other recompense, while in New York last fall I felt I was fully rewarded for all the hours I have spent, and will spend in the future, on the projects of these groups in Canada.

These international representatives of non-government organizations at the United Nations are known as N.G.O.'s. They have been given their own lounge in the United Nations Building, have the freedom of the building and are recognized as being very useful to the United Nations, for they can give advice and information on the opinions of their national organizations in various parts of the world. Many of the delegates and observers to the General Assembly of the United Nations from various parts of the world are members of the same organizations which the N.G.O.'s represent, and through the N.G.O.'s I was able to make friends with people of many countries who are working on the same or similar projects in their own country as I have been working on for years in Canada. Toward the end of the session I felt I had almost as many friends in the United Nations as I hope I have in the Canadian Parliament, and I found it a stimulating experience.

One of the experiences I will always remember was sitting in the General Assembly with our delegation while tributes were paid by delegates from all over the world to the memory of that wonderful woman, Eleanor Roosevelt. I had long held the greatest admiration for her and it was very moving, in the midst of that large gathering where 110 countries were represented, to see them all, with one accord, set aside any acrimonious debate which was taking place in any committee or elsewhere and pay wholehearted tribute to a woman they all loved and respected.

As time did not permit each of the delegates from the 110 countries to speak from the podium, in some cases one person spoke for a group of countries. For instance, Mrs. Agda Rossel, Permanent Delegate for Sweden, formerly Acting President of the International Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, whom I have known many years, spoke for the Scandinavian countries of Finland, Denmark, and Iceland, as well as for her own country. She and Miss Helen Marsh, member of the Canadian delegation who spoke on behalf of Canada, were the only women chosen by their delegations to speak on that occasion and I thought it was most appropriate that women should be chosen to pay their country's tribute.

In speaking for the United States, Adlai Stevenson, United States Ambassador to the United Nations, said of Mrs. Roosevelt:

> She would rather light candles than curse the darkness, and her glow has warmed the world.

Honourable senators, I was also privileged to attend, as the only representative of the Canadian delegation and of the Canadian mission, the memorial service for Mrs. Roosevelt, held in the beautiful cathedral of Saint John the Divine, where more than 10,000 people gathered and listened to a moving eulogy given by Adlai Stevenson. Friends of the Roosevelt family and United Nations representatives were assigned to a special section of the cathedral and, following the service, were thanked for attending by the members of Mrs. Roosevelt's immediate family, to whom I was introduced as the Canadian representative, by an American woman judge with whom I had become acquainted immediately preceding the service.

This was really a memorable occasion for me. I will never forget that beautiful cathedral, the impressive procession of bishops and other clergy, the wonderful music, the sight of Adlai Stevenson standing in the pulpit in his crimson academic robes, and the deep grief and sorrow in his voice and on the faces of the thousands listening to him.

There were many gay occasions that I shall also remember, one of which was an elaborate reception at the beautiful private home of the President of WAIF—which is the designation for an organization known as World Adoption International Fund—followed by a dinner and entertainment at the wonderful Hotel Pierre. Our ambassador to the United Nations had been invited but because of previous engagements was unable to attend.

As WAIF is a branch of the International Social Service, and as the ambassador was aware of my interest in several social work organizations, he asked if I would like to substitute for him. I was permitted to take someone with me and chose Phyllis Burns who, through her work on the Social Affairs Branch of the United Nations, has wide connections with such groups. This group has been written up in various magazines as being dedicated to bringing for adoption in the United States children who have been abandoned in other countries. The International President is the well-known actress Helen Hayes, who was not able to be at the dinner, but Jane Russell, of motion picture fame, was mistress of ceremonies. Entertainers, who gave their time voluntarily, included Rudy Vallee and Alan King.

As representatives of the Canadian Mission to the United Nations, Miss Burns and I sat at one of the two small headtables and the hostess at our table was the fabulous Perle Mesta, "the hostess with the mostest", and I might add that she has the "mostest".

We met many of the members of this group who have brought to the U.S.A. and have adopted into their own homes one, two, three and even more of these abandoned children. We learned that more than 10,000 children have been brought to the United States under this plan. If you inquire you will find that Canada has done little for children such as these.

I would not want you to think that all I did was make friends, pleasant as that was. Early every morning except Saturday and Sunday we went to the office of the Canadian Mission where there were about 80 employees, members of the Department of External Affairs. It seemed to me these people were all greatly interested in their work, which I feel they do very well. The Ambassador, His Excellency Paul Tremblay, former Canadian Ambassador to Chile, was a Canadian delegate to the 16th session of the General Assembly and again last year to the 17th session.

Few people realize the responsibility that rests on the shoulders of our Ambassador to the United Nations. Not only must he represent Canada and Canada's ideas, and the stand that Canada takes on all matters that arise in connection with the United Nations—which in itself is an occupation that takes more than a 40-hour week—but he must also be prepared, as far as humanly possible, to accept invitations from the representatives of the other 109 United Nations countries, and from many organizations which honour Canada by inviting our representative to be present on various important occasions.

Mr. Tremblay and his wife are charming and delightful representatives, and did all they could to make the work of the delegation successful, and to make the delegates and observers feel welcome. The same can be said of all the other members of the Canadian Permanent Mission with whom I came in contact. Three meetings a week of the members of the delegation, including the Parliamentary observers, took place at the Canadian Mission where the Canadian representatives on various committees reported what had taken place in their respective committees since the previous meeting and discussed the stand they proposed to take in forthcoming meetings.

Immediately after the session at the Mission, and earlier on other mornings, we all went to the United Nations to sit in on the committees to which the delegates were attached, or in which observers were interested, or to sit in on a plenary session of the General Assembly, if one were scheduled for that day. Personally, I tried to make a point of being present at any committee where I knew Canada proposed to make an intervention, and I was pleased to hear that Senator Blois apparently noticed me on those occasions. However, I did not want to confine myself to one committee, for I was interested in everything that was happening.

When I arrived in New York the Cuban crisis had just passed, but one could still sense great tension and concern among the delegates. They realized that nuclear war over Cuba had been avoided only by a hair's breadth, and pleas for disarmament, which obviously came from the heart, replaced what I was told had previously been more perfunctory statements.

On looking over previous volumes of Hansard I found that a number of earlier representatives to the United Nations have described in detail the set-up there, including the General Assembly and the six regular committees and one special committee which meet during each session. It is not necessary for me to do this again, but I would remind you that in the various committees, each one being comprised of 110 members, or one member from each country, many matters placed on the agenda of the Assembly for the current session are debated at length. When a committee has completed a debate and passed resolutions or recommendations, these are brought before the General Assembly in plenary session where they generally pass through fairly quickly, although sometimes there are further debates and amendments.

Many honourable senators are aware, from speeches I have made, that it is my opinion that women, if they are qualified, should take part in the work of government and of planning boards on the policy-making level, and that their contribution to such work should not be restricted to cultural and welfare fields. For this reason over the years I have been openly critical because the women who have been sent by Canada as delegates to the General Assembly of the United Nations have invariably been assigned to the Third Committee which considers social, humanitarian and cultural matters. I have argued that men should sometimes sit on this committee as they too should have interest in such matters. I have also contended that women should sit on other committees, such as the Second Committee, which deals with economic subjects —many Canadian women have an excellent understanding of, and training in, economics —or on the Fourth Committee, which deals with trusteeships and in which problems that have to do with oppressed minorities, a subject close to women's hearts, are often debated; or the Fifth or Budget Committee which, in effect, does the housekeeping for the United Nations and decides how the budget shall be set up. Who has more experience with housekeeping and drawing up and keeping within budgets than women? I have asked why properly qualified women delegates should not be on the Legal Committee.

Mindful of my previous statements in this connection, when I had the opportunity to attend as an observer whichever committee I wished, I visited first the Fourth or Trusteeship Committee in which Canada's representative was His Excellency Jean-Louis Delisle, Canadian Ambassador to Costa Rica, who is very knowledgeable indeed regarding the countries of Latin America. At that time Sir Edgar Whitehead, Prime Minister of Southern Rhodesia, was presenting arguments on behalf of his government, and Afro-Asian delegates were replying to his arguments, all of which I found extremely interesting. In spite of Sir Edgar's arguments, the Fourth Committee passed a resolution, which was later adopted in the General Assembly, requesting the United Kingdom to intervene in Southern Rhodesian affairs by rescinding the constitution, cancelling the election scheduled for early December and calling a constitutional conference with a view to setting up an African majority government with complete independence. Canada was amongst the nations that abstained from voting on this resolution—I believe because Canada agreed with the contention of the United Kingdom that the United Kingdom did not have a constitutional right to intervene in this matter.

When I visited the special Political Committee where Canada was represented by Mr. Morley Scott, who has served External Affairs in London, Berlin, New Delhi and Tokyo, and who from 1954 to 1957 was High Commissioner to Pakistan and who, at the time, was a counsellor in External Affairs, a debate was taking place on the policy of apartheid of the Government of the Republic of South Africa. I watched with bated breath when the resolution was passed which recommended that each member government should impose diplomatic and economic sanctions against South Africa, and which also recommended the expulsion of South Africa from the United Nations.

I was naïve enough to feel that with the passing of such a resolution, member nations which supported the United Nations would be morally obliged to comply with it even though they had not voted for the resolution. As it has turned out, obviously I was wrong, and I have been advised since that the Afro-Asian countries, although they had pressed for and voted for this, had had little hope of the resolution being implemented by the countries that voted against it. However, they wanted to have it passed for the moral effect it might have on South Africa and as a statement of principle. Although Canada had expressed opposition to apartheid, our country voted against this resolution on the basis, I believe, that the sanctions seemed likely to be ineffective to persuade South Africa to change its policy. I understood that Canada was also opposed to expulsion on the grounds that the United Nations would have more opportunity to influence South Africa to abandon this policy if South Africa remained within the organization.

This last argument against expulsion seemed inconsistent to me on the part of Canada in view of the fact that Canada had previously voted against the admission of Red China to the United Nations. It would seem to me it would be equally important to have Red China within the organization if the United Nations hopes to bring influence to bear on that country.

In the Second Committee, which deals with economic and financial matters, I felt very much at home because the Canadian representative was our colleague, Senator Blois, and the reporteur was Miss Gay Sellars, Counsellor for External Affairs, who was attached to the Canadian Permanent Mission to the United Nations, and who was attending the General Assembly as an adviser.

Miss Sellars was the only Canadian elected as an officer at the 17th session of the General Assembly and her reports to the plenary session of the General Assembly, most of which I heard, were well prepared and well delivered, and reflected credit on Canada's Department of External Affairs.

One of the subjects debated in meetings of this committee when I was present was the proposed World Trade Conference. I am sure all honourable senators have either read in the press or heard on the radio and television reports of the good work which Senator Blois did in connection with this proposed conference. All members of our delegation were disappointed when the resolution of the Second Committee regarding this trade conference, at the insistence of the smaller nations, set a date for the conference which was unacceptable to the larger trading nations, a date at which the larger trading nations would, in all probability, have declined to be present. This would have made the results of such a conference practically useless.

Between the passing of this resolution by the Second Committee and the time when the matter reached the plenary session of the General Assembly to receive approval or defeat in the General Assembly, I watched with interest and with sympathy the prolonged negotiations carried on by Senator Blois and others with representatives of many nations, in an effort to find a formula which would establish a new date for the conference that would be satisfactory to all.

After many meetings with various groups, the result was that when the resolution came before the plenary session of the General Assembly, Senator Blois, on behalf of Canada with the co-sponsorship of Peru, was able to introduce an amendment to the original resolution, which set a date for the conference that was acceptable and which received practically unanimous approval when the vote was taken in the General Assembly. This will make it possible for a trade conference to be held that has some hope of success.

Honourable senators will remember that Senator Blois was a member of the Canadian delegation to the 15th session of the General Assembly of the United Nations, and I feel sure that, had he not had that previous experience through which he had become known to the delegates of many countries and had become familiar with procedure, in all probability he would not have been able to carry out such satisfactory negotiations. This supports my previous statement in this chamber on January 30 last that on our delegations to international meetings we should have at least a nucleus of representatives who have had some previous experience in the same field.

The next committee I visited was the Fifth or Budget and Housekeeping Committee where General Price, a well-known business man of Montreal, represented Canada. I was aware that for years Canada has pressed for serious consideration of the grave problems involved in financing the United Nations. I realized how important that is, and I realized also how necessary it is that some arrangements be made to cut down the congestion in the committee rooms of the United Nations, and in the delegates' lounges and dining room. All of these were designed when the membership was not more than 51 nations, and it is now 110. Each nation has five delegates and five alternates, as well as observers and a large number of advisers.

When the United Nations was built plans had been made for expansion but not for expansion on such a large scale. It was envisaged that membership might reach 75 at the most.

The providing of money which was being discussed is basic, I know, as is the provision for adequate space, and if I were charged with the responsibility of representing my Government, I would devote my time and energy to it, but as a free-lance observer I sought subjects more interesting to me.

In the Sixth Committee Mr. Ralph Genser, Q.C., a well known lawyer of Montreal, represented Canada. There I found debates were taking place regarding the principles of international law concerning friendly relations and co-operation between states. In this committee Canada took the lead in the debate by introducing with co-sponsors a resolution calling for an affirmation of the rule of law and of the United Nations Charter as the fundamental statement of principles underlying friendly relations between states.

Of course, I was deeply interested in the debates of the First Committee where Lieutenant-General E. L. M. Burns, former commander of the United Nations Emergency Force in the Middle East, represented Canada, and where discussions on general and complete disarmament were in progress.

However, to my surprise I found that my deepest interest drew me to the Third Committee which considers social, cultural and humanitarian matters and to which I had said I did not think Canadian women delegates should invariably be assigned. I found the Canadian delegate on that committee, Miss Helen Marsh, Editor of the Herald of Dauphin, Manitoba, deeply concerned with her work. A number of delegates made the comment to me that Canada could well be proud of her.

The matters that were being debated in that committee were of the greatest interest to me because in relation to many of them I had done considerable research for Canadian organizations. They included the Convention on Marriage, which aims to protect the rights of women. The rights of the child, and the right of asylum, were also being discussed. This committee was also considering measures to eliminate manifestations of racial and religious intolerance.

I heard discussions on the draft covenants on human rights regarding the inclusion in the proposed covenants of guarantees that the rights mentioned in the covenant should be exercised without distinction of any kind on the grounds of race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status, and whether there should also be included special sections to insure the equal rights of men and women to the enjoyment of all economic, social and cultural rights.

In addition, in the Third Committee the work of UNICEF was reviewed following a report from the director of the United Nations Bureau of Social Affairs, and a resolution was passed by the committee commending the work of UNICEF in developing countries. The chief initiative of Canada in this Third Committee dealt with questions of the renewal of the mandate of the United Nations High Commissioner's office for refugees for another term of five years. I followed the work of the Third Committee on this resolution, and certainly commend Miss Marsh and her advisers from the External Affairs Department for doing an excellent job.

It was with pride that I saw this Canadian-sponsored resolution, due to the work which had been done on it, go smoothly through the Third Committee and the General Assembly without even one amendment. Less well prepared resolutions often had to face many amendments, and were hardly recognizable when they were finally passed. This Canadian resolution passed with almost unanimous support—only one nation voted against it, without giving an explanation for the vote.

I found that in the Third Committee I was most at home. I followed its work so closely that toward the end of the session, when Miss Marsh and I were being entertained by the Ceylonese delegate, she introduced Miss Marsh as "my fellow-Canadian colleague on the Third Committee," and me as "my fellow-Canadian semi-colleague on the Third Committee," which I took as a real compliment.

There were many experiences which I had that will never be forgotten. Just to sit with the Canadian delegation in the General Assembly or in committees between the Central African delegates and the delegates from Cameroons, for we sat in alphabetical order, was an experience. To see in the delegates' lounge the Middle East diplomats in turbans talking to men in conservative English tweeds, to see distinguishedly greying western statesmen talking to African men and women delegates in beautiful and colourful national robes, gave a truly international flavour to the scene. To get to know so many people, as I was fortunate enough to do, makes life more interesting and, as Helen Marsh said, "I will never be able to get through reading the papers now for any news about people from the 110 countries of the United Nations is news about personal friends, and has to be read in detail". To sit in the General Assembly and hear delegates from all over the world speak for their respective countries, supporting or attacking decisions reached in the various committees, made one understand better their philosophy and motives.

We may be critical of the United Nations but any of you who visit it must, like me, come to realize it is our one hope of world understanding and world peace. Besides the matters reported to the General Assembly after debate and resolutions passed in the various committees, I also watched numbers of items considered initially by the General Assembly, such as the debate on the admission of Red China, which last year was defeated by 56 to 42, with twelve countries abstaining and Canada voting against the resolution.

I also watched the election of U Thant as Secretary General and this was a memorable ceremony. From what I saw of him, I believe that under his steady hand United Nations can be expected to maintain the stability needed to face the complications of today's international developments.

It is necessary that we in Canada should know more than we do of the United Nations and its work. You may be aware that the United Nations Association in Canada is dedicated to spreading understanding of the work of the United Nations. One of the most devoted members of the United Nations Association in Canada, when he made his first visit to the General Assembly, was so moved that he wrote with a pencil on the back of an envelope a short set of verses which have been published in the press. Mr. Willis does not claim to be a poet, but he has expressed very well in his verses what I feel about the General Assembly, and I would like to quote them to you:

Here, clothed in Flesh, and world's opinion stands
To judge and to be judged of all mankind,
Here mortal men, wise, selfish, or purblind,
Speak for whole nations, and with lifted hands
Lead on to realms where we perchance, may find
Justice and peace to bless earth's weary lands.

Bethink you, ye at home who idly prate
What you would do if you were in their place
That in this hall those men must vote the fate
Of unborn generations and must face
Posterity's encomiums or hate
For leading up or down the human race.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Horner, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

Bills read first time.

SECOND READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: With leave of the Senate, I move that the bills be read a second time now. I may say that in the last three days I have presented 251 of these bills.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I oppose the second reading of these bills. This procedure must come to an end. It is a real farce; it is a racket. This has been done on two days in succession; it was done the day before yesterday, and yesterday. It is nonsense; it is a farce, and it throws ridicule on the Senate. We pass these bills at full speed, faster than the astronauts could go around the world. I object to it; I put my veto to it; I cannot agree to the second reading today. It is a shame.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: It is neither a shame nor a fiasco nor anything else, but is ordinary routine. Most of these bills were passed two years ago and some were passed one year ago. The present action by the house is the mere routine of sending them back to the House of Commons. Of course, they are not now being considered by this house: they have been considered by the Divorce Committee, and they have been brought up to date, in each instance, by an affidavit of the applicant. The circumstances have not changed; that is to say, the offence upon which each report is based has not been condoned. The parties have not lived together, or done anything of that nature, and now request that the bills go forward, notwithstanding the delay.

I repeat, it is purely a matter of routine and nothing more. It is not a fiasco, nor is it something of which to be ashamed. We are getting them over to the Commons in the hope that they will be passed before we rise for the summer recess. If we take the time, day by day, Parliament will probably have risen before they can be acted upon in the other house. For this reason it is a matter of urgency. In my view it would be an injustice if we were to stop now with respect to the few bills that are left.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Honourable senators, if you will permit me—yesterday, Wednesday, was the 32nd sitting day of the Senate in the present session of Parliament. There were many sitting days when nothing was done with regard to these bills; we waited until we were near the adjournment for the summer and then we find ourselves in a terrific hurry to pass these bills. We are told that everybody will suffer an injustice if they are not passed. They will go nowhere because they will be in No Man's Land and will remain there until they are disposed of by a real tribunal, a federal court of justice. They cannot pass against my protest; it is just to stop them; there must be an end to it.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, as I understand the situation, it is that these bills were all passed last year by this house. The petitions were considered by the Divorce Committee and bills were brought in and, as I said, passed by this house and were then sent to the House of Commons. If Parliament had not been dissolved the bills would still be there or would have been passed. So, this is just a procedural motion.

I would agree with Senator Pouliot if these were new bills, and if they had not been considered by the committee before, but some of these bills that are now going over to the House of Commons were considered by our Divorce Committee two years ago. They were sent over to the other house at that time, they were held up, and they came back here; they went through this same process last session, and they were sent to the other house for the second time.

In view of the fact that this is the third consideration being given these bills perhaps Senator Pouliot might consider letting them go to the House of Commons where they were before. I wonder if Senator Pouliot would reconsider his decision.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Honourable senators, I cannot refuse anything which is asked in such a nice manner, and especially by my Leader, but what I wanted to do was to take each one of these bills and check them to see if any evidence which led to these reports was given by the investigators who are now in jail. I do not know if there is any evidence from the jail-birds which resulted in those reports. This is why I am so much interested in the matter.

However, to finish this graciously I will not insist any more, and just to show my good will I will say, "This time, but not Monday".

Motion agreed to and bills read second time, on division.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: With leave of the Senate, I move that the bills be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bills read third time and passed, on division.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

On the motion to adjourn:

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, before I move the motion for the adjournment, may I comment on the business of the house. Honourable senators will note from the Order Paper that when we conclude our business today there will be very little left, and because of that I am going to move that we adjourn today until Monday afternoon.

Items 1 and 2 on the Order Paper are third readings of bills; item No. 3 is the consideration of a report of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce. These three items will no doubt be passed quickly. Item No. 4, the adjourned debate on Senator Croll's motion, will, I think, stand this afternoon as Senator Inman is not ready to proceed.

I presume Senator Horner is ready to proceed with item No. 5. Item No. 6, which is the second reading of a private bill, will be disposed of this afternoon. Item No. 7 will stand until Monday, but I hope that we will be able to proceed with item No. 8, the second reading of Bill S-5 respecting public harbours in Ontario. I hope that early next week we can dispose of the motion to set up the Special Committee on Aging.

My information is that little further business is likely to come from the other house before we adjourn for the summer recess. I understand that we will receive the bills on the Budget resolutions and probably a bill in connection with the resolution on surcharges.

There will also be the bill respecting the Economic Council, the interim supply bill, and the bill on municipal development.

Apart from that, I do not know of any business that will come forward. I cannot be certain, but that is the conclusion at which I arrive from reading Hansard of the other house.

Honourable senators, I hope we may get through for the summer on Wednesday or Thursday of next week. I would like by that time to have disposed of the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. After honourable Senator Horner speaks today, that debate will be either continued or adjourned, but it is unlikely that we will have many speakers on it next week.

In reference to the Special Committee on Aging, honourable senators will realize how important it is that we should dispose of that motion soon, so that the committee can be set up before we adjourn.

I am sure I will have your co-operation in concluding expeditiously the business at present on our Order Paper, so that we may be free to consider any further business that comes to us.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, I see no objection to carrying out the wishes of the honourable Leader of the Government. In regard to item No. 7, an Act to amend the Bankruptcy Act, may I ask him why we have not made more rapid progress with this? I should also like to know whether the interim supply bill will be for one month or for two months.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I do not know the answer to the last question, as I have not seen the bill. I was about to ask the Leader of the Opposition the same question, thinking he might know more about the number of months for which supply would be granted. I have been informed by the grapevine that it will be for two months, which means that supply would be for August and September. If that be so, we would have to be back here at the end of September. It would appear that when we adjourn, we will stand adjourned until September 29.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Might I ask the honourable Leader of the Government why it is that he, as a member of the cabinet, has to receive his information through the grapevine?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I do not see what being a member of the cabinet has to do with that.

With regard to the Bankruptcy bill, it cannot be proceeded with this afternoon, as honourable Senator Croll will not be here.

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: I think the honourable Leader of the Government mentioned September 29. That is a Sunday. Surely we will not come back on Sunday.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I understand it will be the Monday nearest to Sunday, September 29.

Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Monday next, July 29, 1963, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

[Later:]

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Honourable senators, apparently I did not make myself clear with respect to the adjournment until Monday afternoon. I meant to say that I was sure there was enough business to keep the house in session both Monday afternoon and evening.

RIGHTS OF WOMEN

JURY SERVICE IN NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—INQUIRY ANSWERED

Hon. Muriel McQ. Fergusson inquired of the Government, pursuant to notice:

> (1) If the statements and a recommendation to continue to exclude women in the Northwest Territories from serving on juries in certain cases, which statements appear in the Ottawa Journal of July 17th, were actually made by Mr. Olson, who, it is stated, is Legal Counsel for the Parliament of the North?

(2) If the statements and recommendations were made by Mr. Olson, did he seek or obtain any authority from the Department of Justice or any other department of Government for taking such a position?

(3) If no such authority was obtained, what action will be taken to discipline Mr. Olson for taking this position which is definitely opposed to the rights of women in Canada?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): The answer to the honourable senator's inquiry is as follows:

Mr. Olson is a senior officer of the Department of Justice and for many years was the Justice officer assigned to the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources; he has also been designated by the Council of the Northwest Territories to be their legal adviser. At the meeting of the Council at its last session consideration was given to a measure to extend to women the obligation of serving on criminal juries. It was pointed out to the Council that certain practical difficulties were involved by reason of the requirement that jurors in criminal matters must be kept together, and if women were required to serve it would be necessary to provide matrons and more elaborate living conditions, which might not be possible, having regard to the conditions in the Northwest Territories, particularly in the eastern and high Arctic. The Council, therefore, postponed consideration of the measure until it could be given further study, and it was contemplated that the local Bar and Judiciary, as well as the Department of Justice, should be consulted. After the Council had decided to postpone consideration of the measure, an informal discussion took place, at which various views were expressed.

The answers to the questions are therefore as follows:

(1) The newspaper report referred to is not accurate in stating that Mr. Olson recommended that women should continue to be excluded from serving on juries in certain classes of criminal cases.

(2) Mr. Olson did express a view along the lines of that indicated in the report after the Council had decided to defer consideration of the matter, but had not received instructions from the Department of Justice to express or refrain from expressing any views in this matter.

(3) On a measure of such importance as this, it would obviously not be desirable to impose any restriction on freedom of expression. No disciplinary action is therefore contemplated.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard moved the third reading of Bill C-187, an act to amend the Customs Tariff.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

THE NEWFOUNDLAND SAVINGS BANK ACT, 1939

BILL TO REPEAL—THIRD READING

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald moved the third reading of Bill S-4, to repeal The Newfoundland Savings Bank Act, 1939.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

PRIVATE BILL

CO-OPERATIVE FIRE AND CASUALTY COMPANY—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the report of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on Bill S-26, respecting Co-operative Fire and Casualty Company.

Hon. Donald Cameron moved that the report be adopted.

Motion agreed to.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Cameron: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate I move that the bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

The Senate resumed from yesterday, consideration of His Excellency the Administrator's speech at the opening of the session, and the motion of Honourable Mr. Lefrançois, seconded by Honourable Mr. Taylor (Westmorland), for an address in reply thereto.

Hon. R. B. Horner: Honourable senators, it has been some time since the Speech from the Throne was delivered, but even at this late date there are some remarks that I wish to make. Before doing so, however, I would like to congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, on your appointment to this chamber and also on your appointment to the office of Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to hear your clear voice at all times, and may I say that this is one of the important requirements for a Speaker. I often think of Professor Leacock's amusing account of the many meetings he attended and the different chairmen of those meetings.

I also wish to congratulate the mover of the address in reply to the Throne Speech (Honourable Mr. Lefrançois), and the seconder (Honourable Mr. Taylor, Westmorland). Later I may have something more to say about them. As to the speech itself, for the little there is in it may I say that some of it requires a little elaboration, in view of the campaign that has been going on continually since the defeat of the previous Liberal Government.

Honourable senators, this paragraph in particular interests me:

> Steady work is the basic need on which men and women depend for the well-being of themselves and their families. Unemployment, on the serious scale of recent years, is therefore the most urgent of our domestic problems. To provide the many new jobs that are needed every year, we must create new industries. The fiscal and monetary policies of the Government will give priority to the encouragement of soundly-based industrial expansion.
> Provision will be made to assist labour and management to make manpower adjustments—

Another sentence in the speech that interests me is this:

> —it is the purpose of my Ministers to expand Canada's export trade, to strengthen our payments balance with other countries, and to ensure increasingly high confidence in our economy and currency.

During all the years that the Conservatives were in power we heard a continuous wailing throughout this country, a wailing that I promise the Government in power today will never hear from the Conservatives in Opposition. From them the Government will get nothing but helpful suggestions. I hope that no Conservative will belittle his country for the sake of political gain, and that is what I accuse the Liberals of doing deliberately for political advantage.

I am sorry that I interrupted the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Honourable Mr. Roebuck), during his speech last week on the Department of Industry Bill, and I am disappointed that he is not at the moment in the chamber because I have some things to say to him. I am also sorry that Senator Farris is not present, because I have some things to say to him.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): He will be here next week.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Well, he should have been here this week.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I was just warning you.

Hon. Mr. Horner: You will remember that he told us his grandfather was a Liberal.

There is something else in the Throne Speech that I question and that is the word "biculturalism". "Bilingualism" I understand, but I am in the same position as many others as far as "biculturalism" is concerned. I am worried about that. I would say it is one of those things that we were doing very well by leaving alone, that everything would work out right. I think it is asking for trouble when you start drawing compartments, placing people here and there, and ruling this and ruling that. Take the matter of the appointment of those ten persons to the commission dealing with that subject: I ask if anyone can tell me where their discussions will begin and where they will end. Just what will they talk about? I think I have some idea.

The honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck), and the honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris) told us that they were Liberals. Senator Farris said that his grandfather was a Liberal and I imagine the senator from Toronto-Trinity is in the same fix. I am going to tell you why I am a Conservative, and I think it may be interesting in view of this question of biculturalism, and so on.

Some 57 years ago I left the Ottawa Valley and made my way to western Canada, and there I found myself placed with people from all over the world, as I thought at the time; and, after quickly realizing their culture and what they would do for Canada, I determined in my own mind to at least try to set what I thought was an example of what a decent Canadian ought to do.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Horner: I know that some people may make the crack that I was a horse dealer. Yes, honourable senators, that is true. Yet I can still go all over that country and my word will be taken, even if I do boast a little.

At the time of the first election there I had never voted in this country, and my father, I know, had voted both Conservative and Liberal—he was not a party man at all. Well, at that time I was annoyed at what was going on and at what I heard. This is what was being said: "You must be very careful. You have to vote Liberal, or the Conservatives will run you out of the country. They will take your homestead away from you; you will never get your patent", and so on. It annoyed me. I had to explain to them that no such thing could be done so long as they obeyed the laws of the country. Then came the war.

During the debate on the Throne Speech at the last session, Senator Farris criticized the senator from Peel (Hon. Mr. Willis) for praising the then Prime Minister as being the greatest of all Canadian Prime Ministers. Well, that was to be expected, for he certainly would not scold the man who appointed him to this chamber. However, the senator from Vancouver South was greatly annoyed and proceeded to mention the names of other Prime Ministers, among them Mackenzie King. He wobbled about a bit on that, but he said:

> Mackenzie King had a great deal more criticism than that which my friend is worrying about concerning Diefenbaker, but I want to tell you that, in my book, Mackenzie King contributed something to the unity of Canada that no other man in Canada at that time could have done.

I say that Mackenzie King contributed more to disunity. I hesitate to talk about these things because they are in the past, but in considering Canada's culture as it is today you must look to the past. If you want to make a survey line you have to look back to run your line; you cannot always look ahead. Certain things were done when the war came that should not have been.

This same Mackenzie King went out to Blaine Lake at the time my Doukhobor friends were having their St. Peter's Day celebration, and he told them if they voted Liberal there would never be a war, that the Conservatives were the party for war. What about that for unity in Canada? Then at a later election he went where it suited him. I know that he went to neighbouring villages near my own, and I went to listen to him. He was fighting over the Lord Byng affair and the election of 1925-26. He was fighting the Englishmen and denouncing them, saying that no Englishman was going to tell us how to run our country, and so on.

So, I make the statement that he did more for the disunity of this country, for political purposes, and told a different story in Quebec from that which he told in other parts of the country.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Did not Mr. Diefenbaker also address the Doukhobor women?

Hon. Mr. Horner: Yes. They attended a meeting that he was holding but he did not tell them that the Liberal party was the party of war, to secure their votes.

In 1917, when I was a candidate for the provincial house, a big man, weighing 250 pounds, came along to vote. When this poor man came out of the polling booth it was explained to him where the names of the individual candidates were to be found on the ballot. As a result he told them that he had voted for me. Then he leaned against the school house and the tears came rolling down his face; he wept and asked the Lord to forgive him for voting for a man who would make war.

Then the years 1939 and 1940 came along, with the strain that everyone was under, and we had a Liberal Government under Mackenzie King who said there could be no war. I said all along that no one in Canada wanted war. I thought of that situation last year when there was a great deal of discussion about the trouble the Doukhobors were causing in British Columbia. Some of the trouble may have developed from that.

To get back to what I wish to stress concerning what Canada went through during the recent election, there is a man in Saskatoon, Pat Waldron, who for many years was editor of the Western Producer. He now writes for that journal a column entitled, "Notes and Comments". I do not seem to have the excerpt here.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): We have lots of time; find it.

Hon. Mr. Horner: I cannot find the article, but in it he pointed out that Canada could not afford another election like the last one. I do not know what his politics are, but when you stop to think of it, what he said is true. During the last election one party promised to extend the age limit for receiving the baby bonus, if the youngster was going to school, to 18 years of age, and another promised to raise it to 20 years of age. All sorts of promises were made, including $2 a bushel for wheat to the western farmers as a floor price.

On the question of nuclear power and war, that is one thing my friends have convinced me of, and I can express my opinion on it. I am opposed to any kind of war and any kind of build-up for war. I am a complete Doukhobor in that regard. I have come to the conclusion that if the whole world could be converted to the Doukhobor way of thinking, there would be no war. Just consider for a moment what Bertrand Russell, the great philosopher, said when asked a question by a newspaperman. I believe he is an atheist, but he is 91 years of age and has behind him a lifetime of experience. He was asked how he thought the emerging nations—the black nations, if you will—would do. He replied that he thought they would do a good deal better than we have done.

Just stop and think of what we, the so-called advanced Christian and civilized nations, did in the last two wars. We produced machines to wipe out one another in the first Great war, the war that was to end all wars. In 1939 and 1940 we had a real war on our hands, and throughout this period, in fact for 22 years, we had a Liberal Government. Fortunately, Canada survived practically untouched. We had wonderful opportunities to expand the Canadian economy throughout the twenties and during those years of Liberal Government.

They talk in the Throne Speech of manufacturing and exports. Why did not they the Liberal Government take advantage of the situation? They did not need to send salesmen to other parts of the world that were laid waste. The markets collapsed in 1929 and 1930, and we still hear Liberals criticizing the Government of that short period. Then Mr. Dunning, as Minister of Trade and Commerce, came out to western Canada, to Regina, and said there was only the British market left for Canada, that there was an 80 cents-odd a bushel duty against our wheat in Germany and the other European countries, and that was the only market left for us.

Then, honourable senators, a lot was made of the devaluation of the dollar to 92½ cents. What of those earlier years of prosperity, when Canada could sell anywhere in the world without having to use a salesman?

I remember settling for some land and, as many people do, I had signed the agreement without reading the fine print. In the fine print it was stated that the purchase price was to be paid in gold, or its equivalent, and I had to pay $114. I said to the vendor: "Look, you bought that land in Canada, and you made a lot of money on it. I think I will take you by the arm down to the bank and offer you full payment in Canadian money." He said that he was an old man, which he was, and then added, "If you have any law in this country..." I said, "Don't start that, or we will have a real row." He told me he could not take care of my troubles, as well as his own, and that I did not need to pay right then. I replied that the experience had taught me a lesson.

On another occasion there was a 13 per cent discount. Then I did not go raving around the country saying that Canada was ruined and that our monetary supply was depleted. On one occasion I remember visiting a big city in the United States, and had a meal at one of those great open-air restaurants. When I went to pay my bill I found that there was 20 per cent discount on the Canadian dollar. I remarked that it was not very nice, when I was visiting the States and offered Canadian money, to find they did not even know what it was. It was a great opportunity for me—I was younger then—and I made quite a speech about the value of Canadian money, and what was behind it, and that it was the best money in the world. I did not say, we have a Liberal Government that is no good up there. You would not hear a Conservative saying that.

In reading the remarks of the honourable Leader of the Government of a few months ago, I notice that he laid great stress on the fact that the then Prime Minister had visited England, without first calling the house into session when he was heading a minority Government. Of course, we must recognize that we still have a minority Government, after all this wailing up and down the country.

I have before me an editorial from the Toronto Globe and Mail of May 16 last entitled, "Confidence in Canada." How conditions have changed since then. They could not write an editorial like that today. And why not? Well, what of the budget? What of these other things that have happened to shake confidence in Canada?

There has been some criticism of appointing two ministers of agriculture. It is mentioned in the budget, and it has been criticized. I think it is unnecessary and I also criticize it. I notice that the Globe and Mail says "Sure, fine, he is an auctioneer". But, whether he is going to donate the proceeds and all his commission is not really the question. There are a lot of good auctioneers in western Canada. In fact, I did some auctioneering myself. But when I was appointed to the Senate, I decided I would leave the other fellows to do the auctioneering and I would not go about the country on a Government pass competing with other auctioneers who had to depend upon this occupation for a livelihood. But this is true Liberal policy, a kind of clean-sweep, take-all policy—and then to make a political act of attending these sales is taking advantage of one's position. But that should not be his dish.

This situation reminds me of the early days of homesteading. Honourable Senator Croll should hear this, though likely he knows all about it. The homestead inspector was working for a mortgage company and he travelled about inspecting the homesteads. Most of the homesteaders took a mortgage on their property as soon as they had title to it, and of course the inspector knew when they were getting title. They also had other papers, and he took the mortgage at the same time, and the homesteader paid 8 per cent and $50 for the inspection of the place. The inspector was being paid by the Government for inspecting as well, so he had a very nice business. But the homesteader was charged interest on a full $1,000 although he only got $940. That meant his interest was quite a lot more than it should have been.

This was typical of the seemingly God-given right that the Liberals assumed they had to take everything in the country, and also to remain in power forever and ever, and that no other party or people had any right to govern Canada.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): That is pretty severe.

Hon. Mr. Horner: That was their attitude, to my way of thinking.

I have a map of northern British Columbia in my room which many members will have seen, and I mention it for this reason. Many people are alarmed by the idea of debt. From my experience in life I should say it all depends on the reasons for which you go into debt. One thing is certain, everybody must go into debt at times. If some man in Canada had been sufficiently wise to buy Alaska, that would have been a worthwhile debt and would have been worth any interest cost. As you can see on the map I have mentioned, there is a big jog into British Columbia just above Prince Rupert, a kind of panhandle that belongs now to the United States. To incur a debt to purchase this land would have been a very wise move.

The senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) started off by accusing the Conservatives of holding back on the breeching straps, and told an amusing story about the woman at the top of the hill depending upon God and the breeching straps. He said the Conservatives were always holding back on the breeching straps.

Well, honourable senators, who was holding back when the great events which made this country took place? Who was holding back when the question of a railroad to British Columbia was proposed, before that province became a part of Canada? We remember the Liberals said that this was throwing money away, and that there would not be sufficient money to pay for the axle grease.

Who opposed the establishment of a central bank in Canada? Of course the chartered banks did not like it, and of course bankers had votes. Senator Roebuck spoke of the old lady in the buggy. In reply I would say that any kind of an old horse can stagger uphill, but you have to have a good horse to go downhill. This is also true of trucks because there have been many accidents when brakes have failed. To go downhill successfully requires a sound machine or a well-trained horse.

I remember as a boy my father had a white horse that was over-trained. It was up in Mattawa where a fellow had a job taking timber from the mountain. This horse would come to the brink of the hill and he would stop there for a moment and then he would light out and run like a deer to the foot of the hill where he knew the level ground was and then swing off sharply. We had a man working for my father at that time who had a very nice covered buggy and he liked to take young ladies out for a drive. He borrowed this white horse once and when it came to the top of the hill it ran down to the bottom and, swinging off sharply, it upset the buggy. He had also been trained to protect his heels from the logs that came behind him.

I suppose I am the only man in this chamber who knows what it is like to ride a set of sleighs. It is a sensation that is really horrifying. Sometimes when you are on a sanded hill the sleigh runners get hot, and they start shaking violently and shake the logs loose in the binding chains causing them to roll out onto the horses. These and other thoughts ran through my mind when the honourable senator spoke of the breeching strap and the trip downhill.

Honourable senators, I have spoken about the lack of confidence and the story that was put up by the Liberals throughout the country and about what happened in 1929 and 1930 and the men we backed. Senator Roebuck took exception to Senator O'Leary (Carleton) talking of the men in the grey flannel suits. Well maybe they are like brokers' agents, or like men who have no money, or who are afraid to invest what little they have of their own, and they get a room and start a business by running a poker game and taking a rake-off. They are perhaps a little out of the game, but at the same time they like to be near where the money is and take a rake-off.

The honourable senator from Toronto, Senator Hayden, in his remarks quoted something very interesting that some banker had said. But I have here a book called Tides in the West. It is the story of the Wheat Pools and it is quite an interesting book. The writer in one paragraph says:

> In the summer of 1929, the failure of the Hatry financial interests in London, England, precipitated a flood of selling on the stock markets. Then an important bank in Vienna, Austria, closed its doors and admitted bankruptcy. The long established grain firm of Strauss & Company, London, England, collapsed with losses of around $5,000,000. The failure was brought about through speculation in oil seeds in India and created a sensation on the Baltic Grain Exchange. The general manager of the branch of the firm in India committed suicide...

Then it goes on to point out:

October 29, 1929, is a date to be remembered. On that day the volume of trading on the New York Exchange was 16,410,030 shares, the greatest of all time, and the paper loss was $9,000,000,000. Between October 14th and October 29th the list as a whole fell $18,000,000,000. On the morning of October 30th, John J. Raskob was telling the American people "now is the time to buy stocks." A year or so later he admitted to a congressional committee that he had been selling "short". The banking firm of J. P. Morgan & Company declared that "bankers feel that the present price levels are safe". Bankers, businessmen and government officials united in a campaign to convince the public that prices were going to rise, even when at least some of them were convinced of the opposite. Hornblower & Weeks ran an advertisement in forty-five prominent newspapers, declaring that "present conditions are favourable for advantageous investment in standard American securities".

President Hoover called a conference of leading industrialists and they promised to maintain business activities and wage levels; but many of them went home and shut down their plants. They felt that there was obviously an overproduction of manufactured goods and a downtrend in public purchasing. The orgy of wrong guessing and misrepresentation continued, and subsequent court and congressional investigations revealed unsavoury activities on the part of prominent bankers, businessmen and stock promoters.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Their judgment may have been poor. They were not necessarily dishonest.

Hon. Mr. Horner: No, they had no business advice. They did it for an ulterior motive, in some cases.

The public of that period lost a lot of previously held faith in business leadership.

As the great city of New York had become the financial centre of the world, the collapse there had reverberations in all countries. When the depression deepened and widened, it seemed that the whole world had sunk into misery and despair. Of course, the prices of commodities followed the downward trend of stocks to ruinous levels. The strivings of statesmen in about every country proved, for the most part, ineffective in relieving the impact of the greatest depression the world had ever known.

I merely quote these paragraphs to set at rest the minds of those people who believe that it was because of the Conservative Government that we had a depression during the years 1930 to 1935.

Let me read some more, and see what became of values:

Similar conditions to these in the United States were experienced all over the world, and Canada was no exception. The depreciation in the value of stocks on Canadian exchanges in the five months following October 1929 was $6,000,000,000. Premier Taschereau of Quebec said in 1932: "A few years ago the capitalization of the power, paper and pulp companies of Eastern Canada was $30,000,000. By 1929 these companies had financed themselves into a capitalization of $714,000,000. By 1932 the valuation on the stock market was back to $25,000,000. Who lost the $690,000,000?"—

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I lost some of it. I remember it well.

Hon. Mr. Horner: The honourable senator says he lost some of it. Well, it was:

—Principally the unsuspicious and gullible small investors of Canada."

Hon. Senators: Oh, oh.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Now, I am keeping honourable senators too long.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: No, there is lots of time.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Perhaps I can go back for a few minutes to the matter of this Royal Commission on Biculturalism. We now know that the ten members have been chosen. But, as I say, we in Canada have benefited by many cultures other than the English and French. There was a lot of comment going on about it in the press, which I read while I was lying in the hospital. At that time I had plenty of time to think, and the thought occurred to me that in such a situation one soon realizes the meaning of the phrase in the Bible:

—for better is a neighbour that is near than a brother far off.

There were many expressions such as "two great cultures" and "two great nations", and I sometimes paused to think just how the two great nations would fare if they were forced to start from scratch.

I am sorry to admit that my people would not come out first, but neither would the French. I think we would be about the third or fourth in line of all those who came out to make a living in really difficult circumstances.

Some things have been done which, I suppose, neither of the two so-called great cultures can be very proud of, and for this we ought to make amends. But, I am very disappointed in the choice of the man from western Canada. He is a man who has lived most of his life, I believe, in Poland, yet he is chosen to serve on this royal commission when we have thousands upon thousands of outstanding men whose cultures have been mixing with ours for over 55 years, and who have demonstrated their very great ability in mixing their cultures with ours. Why was not one of those men chosen instead of a man who has been in the country for only ten years, and who, during that time, has not been in a position which would afford him an opportunity of visiting and knowing the country as a whole? As I said before, I am afraid that this appointment will do more harm than good, but I hope for the best.

Everybody passes through a period of intolerance in his or her life. I know that I did as a young man, but I think I have managed to get completely free of it. The thing that concerns me now, and which is something that should concern the Government because it concerns everybody in western Canada, is the fact—and a very serious fact it is—that we are being watched by the world, and particularly by China. Senator Fergusson yesterday, in a very fine speech, touched upon a point that I have been maintaining for a long time, that it does seem ridiculous that we are not recognizing China. We should have recognized China when Britain did, and China should be seated at the United Nations.

Attempts were made to start a campaign to force the Conservative party in this respect. We are close friends with the United States. We visit back and forth with people in the United States and I do not understand how we could have any quarrel with that country. Unfortunately, they prevented us from recognizing China. At the time of that discussion the present Prime Minister was Minister for External Affairs, and I was very disappointed with his action.

When the late Judge Davis was returning from China I met him in Victoria. I know he was determined to recommend to the Government that China be recognized. However, all that occurred many years ago and we have to consider the position as it exists now.

Honourable senators, there were questions in this chamber as to whether we should sell wheat to China and whether China would ever pay for it. Now we would give anything to be able to sell more wheat to them, but China is buying from France and is giving us a bad time simply because of our actions. They have backed Chiang Kai-Shek. Another unfortunate situation arose in regard to Syngman Rhee in South Korea.

Honourable senators, some people may consider that I am going a step out of bounds, but after all a person has some responsibility, has but one life to live, and I am in duty bound to do the best I can for world peace. This man was educated in the United States of America and proved to be a vile dictator.

During the last election campaign we were asked to respect Canada at home and abroad I had a young engineer come to dinner one day. He had been all over the world, as his company had large contracts in Nigeria. I asked him what people in other countries thought of Canada. He said that everyone talked very highly of Canada and regretted that there was a move for separation.

Then we can take Dr. Penfield, a very great brain surgeon, of McGill University, who has retired now and who has travelled in many parts of the world. He spent some time in China, and has reported that Canada is very highly thought of in that country and that we could do business in a short period of friendliness. I hope that point will be attended to and that we will move quickly to take advantage of good feeling before it is too late. Canada is a country of 20 million people, while China has 700 million people.

Then there is India and Pakistan.

Recently a great gathering was held at Addis Ababa in Ethiopia, at which President Nasser attended. That meeting took in the whole Asian territory. Thinking of Ethiopia reminds me that Canada had a chance to do something worth while in the old League of Nations. Speaking of Mackenzie King, the Leader of the Government knows what he did. I remember when Dr. Riddell instituted sanctions at the League of Nations to prevent Mussolini raping Ethiopia. The Italian ambassador to Canada waited on Mr. Mackenzie King, and Mr. King said he was not speaking for Canada. Mussolini went on with his actions. The Hitler and Mussolini troubles might never have occurred if we had stepped in at that time.

In connection with all that, I would advise all honourable senators who may not have done so to read The Days of our Years by Pierre Van Paassen, who was world correspondent for world newspapers and for Canadian newspapers. I have just recently read that book a second time. Writing about the Second Great War, he tells us that when the blood and the treasure was being poured out France was making a deal to set up a dictatorship. Pierre Van Paassen goes on to say that if it were not for the kindness of the Ethiopian people he would have been torn limb from limb because he was white. The attackers of Ethiopia were not satisfied with flying over the country and shooting the poor people from aeroplanes, but also they unleashed mustard gas. The poor people of Ethiopia had no defence against that and could not understand it; and they suffered. It was on that account that the author said if it were not for the kindness of Ethiopians he encountered he would have been torn to pieces simply because he was a white man in their country. This is all history of which Canada can well be ashamed.

Honourable senators, there are many more matters to which I intended to refer. However, I have endeavoured to do my part as I see it and to hope for the best.

Let me assure the Leader of the Government again that the members of the Conservative party will not go around the country wailing that it is ruined and that our money and credit are no good. We will not do that. We will leave that and we will encourage the people and the Government to get along as best they can.

On motion of Hon. Mrs. Quart, debate adjourned.

PRIVATE BILL

THE CROWN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY— SECOND READING

Hon. A. Neil McLean moved the second reading of Bill S-35, respecting The Crown Life Insurance Company.

He said: Honourable senators, the purpose of this bill is to change the name of the company in English from The Crown Life Insurance Company to Crown Life Insurance Company and to add a French version to its name.

The Crown Life Insurance Company was founded in 1900 under a special act of Parliament. The present president is Mr. C. F. W. Burns, and the chairman of the board is Mr. H. R. Stephenson.

Canadian residents own 78.93 percent of the shares of the company. The company operates throughout the world. To the end of the fiscal year 1962 the total assets of the company were $396 million, and at the end of June 1963 these total assets had increased to $114 million. To the end of the fiscal year 1962 the total assets of the company in Canada were $250 million, of which $55 million were assets situate in the province of Quebec. Of these $55 million of assets in the province of Quebec, $28.5 million were investments in real estate mortgages.

To the end of the fiscal year 1962 the total insurance in force was $3,364 million. Of this total, $1,766 million was in force in Canada, of which $578 million was in force in the province of Quebec.

All of the company's policy forms have been printed in French since the beginning of the company's operations in the province of Quebec. The company's application forms, claim forms and annual reports are also printed in French. The company has seven branches in the province of Quebec and has bilingual branch secretaries. It conducts advertising in French in the province of Quebec, and French-speaking personnel are employed at the head office in the translation department. The training course for agents has been produced in French.

If honourable senators have any questions to ask, it is my intention to refer this bill to the Banking and Commerce Committee where all questions arising out of this bill could be conveniently answered.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. McLean, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

ONTARIO HARBOURS AGREEMENT BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Norman P. Lambert moved the second reading of Bill S-5, to approve an agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of the province of Ontario respecting public harbours.

He said: Honourable senators, the purpose of this bill is to give legislative authority to an agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of the province of Ontario respecting public harbours which lie along the shores of the Great Lakes within the bounds of that province. The need for approval of this bill now is due to the fact that it was not possible to complete the endorsement last session because Parliament dissolved. The measure is being reintroduced here now, after a thorough discussion in the House of Commons last session.

This bill was introduced by the previous government in the House of Commons and was given second reading on December 3, 1962. It was then referred to the Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines, which committee reported the bill back to the house, but the bill failed to receive third reading at that time, and also failed to come to the Senate for final approval.

Section 108 of the British North America Act, and the third schedule to the act, vested in the Crown in right of Canada ownership of the bed and foreshore of all harbours in Canada that were actually used by ships at the time of Confederation. The British North Amrica Act did not, however, list and describe these harbours, and confusion has arisen as to which harbours became the property of Canada and what were their precise limits.

Subsequently, a study has revealed that there were approximately 60 harbours in use in Ontario in 1867; but of these, only some 28 are now considered suitable for development or management by or for the Government of Canada. After some prolonged negotiations between the officials of the Department of Transport and of the Government of Ontario, it was decided that only 27 harbours should be deemed to be public harbours within the meaning of the B.N.A. Act. These 27 harbours are set out in Schedule "A" of the bill. One exception is noted in the harbour of Hamilton, which is omitted from the list because the bed and foreshore were conveyed to the city of Hamilton before Confederation.

The agreement which has been entered into with the province of Ontario also determines and defines the limits of these 27 harbours and confirms all grants and quit claims by Ontario and by Canada of the water lots listed in the agreement.

The agreement further provides that all mines and minerals within the said limits are the property of the province of Ontario. The only known mines and minerals are salt beds under Goderich and Windsor harbours and iron under Kingston harbour; and because of the control of the province over such resources, the definition in the plans making these exceptions is according to the provisions of the B.N.A. Act.

The agreement has already been signed by the Minister of Lands and Forests and the Minister of Mines on behalf of the province of Ontario, and by the Minister of Transport on behalf of Canada. It is dated September 27, 1962, and it shall take effect upon being duly approved by the Parliament of Canada and the Legislature of Ontario. So far as the Legislature of Ontario is concerned, approval was given to this agreement on April 26, 1963.

When the bill was before the committee of the House of Commons, officials of the Department of Transport appeared before the committee and elaborated on the administrative problems inherent in the present situation and the improvement that would result from defining "public harbours" and their limits more definitely than was possible in the past. The report of the proceedings of that committee are on record. In view of this, and also the fact that the bill has already been approved by the province of Ontario, it is considered that the Senate might pass this bill without reference to committee; but if, in the opinion of the house, it would like further information from the department, we would gladly have the bill referred to the Committee on Transport and Communications.

Honourable senators, I think that covers the purpose of the bill. I have already mentioned that the proposed measure was thoroughly discussed in the other place during the last session of Parliament.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Would the honourable sponsor of the bill be good enough to say how many of the 27 harbours mentioned will be taken over by the National Harbours Board?

Hon. Mr. Lambert: The National Harbours Board, as I understand it, has nothing to do with this problem at all. It has been handled in the past by the Department of Transport, and not by the National Harbours Board which has the direction of Halifax harbour and all other salt-water harbours on either coast. These harbours have been developed along the great waterways generally, and I would say they have been emphasized more recently since the St. Lawrence waterways system began to operate, making a clarification of the provisions of the British North America Act more necessary.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Am I to take it from your answer that none of these harbours come under their jurisdiction?

Hon. Mr. Lambert: None of these harbours comes under the jurisdiction of the National Harbours Board.

Hon. Harry A. Willis: Honourable senators, I was prepared to introduce this bill last fall, but owing to a change of circumstances it has been introduced by my good friend Senator Lambert and there is nothing left for me to say.

However, I do wish to point out that I am very pleased with the agreement, which is signed by a Conservative Minister of Transport, a Conservative Minister of Lands and Forests of Ontario and a Conservative Minister of Mines of Ontario, and I think any agreement with those signatures on it warrants the approval of this house. I do not think I can enlarge on anything that my honourable friend said because he said it so well. I support the bill.

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): Honourable senators, I understood from the sponsor of the bill that the agreement will come into effect when the bill is given royal assent. If that is the case, I do not think that the former Conservative Minister of Transport's name should be on it.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move that the bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, July 29, at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

PRIVATE BILLS

KINROSS MORTGAGE CORPORATION—COMMONS AMENDMENT

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons returning Bill S-27, to incorporate Kinross Mortgage Corporation, and acquainting the Senate that they have passed this bill with the following amendment, to which they desire the concurrence of the Senate:

> Page 1, line 13. After the word "Corporation" insert the words: "and, in French, La Société d'Hypothèques Kinross,".

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this amendment be taken into consideration?

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Later this day.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

THE CANADIAN UNION CONFERENCE CORPORATION OF SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTISTS FIRST READING

Hon. David A. Croll presented Bill S-36, respecting The Canadian Union Conference Corporation of Seventh-day Adventists.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Croll moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Wednesday next.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald tabled:

> Copy of statutory orders and regulations published in the Canada Gazette, Part II, of Wednesday, July 24, 1963, pursuant to section 7 of the Regulations Act, chapter 235, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

On the Order for Notices of Motions:

Hon W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, may I take this occasion to say something about the business of the day.

I understand that Senator Quart has kindly consented to allow Order No. 2, the adjourned debate on the motion of Senator Croll with respect to a Special Committee of the Senate on Aging, to resume this afternoon, and she will speak on Order No. 1, the debate on the Speech from the Throne, this evening.

The only other item on the Order Paper is the debate on the motion for second reading of the bill to amend the Bankruptcy Act, and that will stand over until this evening.

That is the business of the house for the day, unless we are fortunate enough to receive some bills from the House of Commons. We are now waiting for work from that house.

NEWFOUNDLAND FERRY AND TERMINALS

ANSWER TO QUESTION

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Before the Orders of the Day are called may I remind honourable senators that on Monday, July 22, when this house was considering Appropriation Bill No. 2, 1963, Senator Hollett asked me the following question with respect to Vote 80, Newfoundland Ferry and Terminals, $8,180,400:

> Could the honourable Leader of the Government furnish some information—not now, but at a future date—concerning the progress that has been made on this ferry and when it is likely to come into operation?

The answer is:

> Two ferry projects are under governmental study. First, a project for a ferry to the east coast of Newfoundland. In this case, ship design work is well advanced and funds are available for a start on construction this fiscal year, but there are certain operational and technical problems remaining to be settled by the Government before final decisions can be taken.
> The second project under review is an additional ferry for the service between Sydney and Port aux Basques. This project is at an earlier stage of consideration, namely, the stage at which detailed study is being given to the question of what type of ship and terminals would best satisfy the growing requirement. It is expected a report will be ready for governmental consideration later this year. In both cases, of course, additional terminal works would be required, as well as construction of new vessels.

Hon. John M. Macdonald: Honourable senators, there is one small correction I should like to make. Honourable Senator Macdonald (Brantford) mentioned a ferry between Sydney and Newfoundland. I believe it should be between North Sydney and Newfoundland.

Hon. Malcolm Hollett: Honourable senators, I wish to thank the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford) for his kindness and courtesy in this regard.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON AGING

SPECIAL COMMITTEE APPOINTED TO CONDUCT STUDY

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, July 24, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Croll:

> That a Special Committee of the Senate be appointed to examine the problem involved in the promotion of the welfare of the aged and aging persons, in order to ensure that in addition to the provision of a sufficient income, there are also developed adequate services and facilities of a positive and preventive kind so that older persons may continue to live healthy and useful lives as members of the Canadian community and the need for the maximum co-operation of all levels of government in the promotion thereof;
> That the said committee be composed of twenty Honourable Senators to be named later;
> That the committee have power to engage the services of technical, clerical and other personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of the inquiry;
> That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to sit during sittings and adjournment of the Senate; and
> That the committee be instructed to report to the house from time to time its findings, together with such recommendations as it may see fit to make.

Hon. F. Elsie Inman: Honourable senators, in rising to support the motion moved by honourable Senator Croll for a special committee of the Senate to deal with the problem of our elderly citizens, I wish to congratulate the senator from Toronto-Spadina for his interest in this problem and his efforts to do something about it.

We are a sophisticated generation, and we cannot ignore the fact that we have a responsibility toward the generation preceding us. We have already waited too long. Governments must get on now with the job, and must provide enough suitable homes for those who can no longer look after themselves, and also for those who can yet provide for themselves, although on a lower scale than in their younger and more fruitful years.

This is a large field, but it is one which must be considered by every responsible member of Government, as what concerns one concerns all. Many elderly people are faced with adjustments, especially when for various reasons it is necessary for them to move, and the gap between the old and the new environment must be bridged under the best possible circumstances.

The retirement of the grandparents into the chimney corner, reminiscing in ways not understood by today's generation, is over. A few years ago there was scarcely a home to be found in which there was not living with the family an elderly relative—a grandparent, perhaps two, an uncle, or aunt, or a cousin. This was good. The children gained something from the association with the older generation and the older folks in turn got pleasure and lived again their own childhood and youth by being with the children.

In our day, however, homes are not geared for such living together. Conditions have changed and we must accept and try to ease those changes. In this time of rapid and awe-inspiring advances, it is the members of the older generation who have taken the giant step from familiar past to fearsome present.

All people yearn for happiness and serenity in their lives, but this yearning is often frustrated by tension, anxiety and fear in the later years. People wonder where they can go and what they can do when the time comes that the burden of old age seems great. Just when does old age begin? Who can say? It varies according to the health and activity of the individual.

It is true that many service organizations, municipalities and some provincial governments have already done excellent work in this matter of caring for the aging and older people; but as the life span lengthens, due largely to the progress of medical science, more and more of our citizens will live long past the "three score years and ten".

I feel that we are duty bound to see that the sunset of life will be happy and peaceful, free from financial worry and hardship, for those elderly citizens who in their younger years contributed to the development and building of Canada.

Honourable senators, I would like to say a word or two about employment for those older citizens who can still be gainfully employed, perhaps on a part-time basis.

This country has a massive resource of mature talent. Our senior citizens are being urged to utilize their capacities and to use this available talent with the knowledge that much of the great work in the world has been done by people over sixty years of age. With this in mind, I think we should give every encouragement to those older citizens who are willing and able to give to this country the benefit of their knowledge, experience and training. It would give them happiness and peace of mind to know that this usefulness is not yet ended, for the feeling that one is of no more use in the world is a very sad state of mind. This is another phase of care for the elderly that must be considered before too long.

At this time I wish to congratulate the mayor and city council of Ottawa for the thought and consideration they have given to the aging in this city and surrounding areas—embracing, I believe, practically the whole of the province of Ontario—by providing Island Lodge Home for the aged, and the Geriatric Centre. This will be the second housing project for elderly citizens undertaken by the city of Ottawa.

Honourable senators, I wish to take a few minutes to tell you something about what is being done in Prince Edward Island in regard to making the future brighter for our elderly citizens. In 1962 a Senior Citizens' Housing Corporation was set up. Owned by, but operating apart from, the provincial government, the corporation is a non-profit organization. Its object at present is to provide modern low-rental homes or units for about 400 senior citizens in the 65 years of age and over group in several areas of the Island. May I say that our province is small. We have a population of approximately 100,000, and accommodation for 400 is a good start.

Couples using these homes or units will have well-built, well-lighted and insulated apartments, where they will have independence and privacy. These housing projects are located within easy reach of churches, stores and medical facilities.

Tenants are expected to supply furniture for their homes, which consist of a living room, kitchen, bedroom and bath in a space of 500 square feet. Heating and hot water will be paid for by the corporation, leaving only rent and light bills for the tenants. The rent is expected to be about half that charged by private owners or housing firms. The provincial Government is paying 10 per cent of the building cost, and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is lending 90 per cent.

Preference for accommodation will be given first to married couples, then to two relatives, such as sisters, next on the list. For unmarried elderly persons another phase of the housing project is to be started very soon, something along the hostel idea.

Honourable senators, the solution of many of this world's problems begins with the individual's acknowledgement of the rights of his relatives, friends and neighbours. We must demonstrate that we realize our responsibilities in this respect, that we care deeply for our aging and elderly citizens.

I shall not take more of honourable senators' time now, but should like very much to speak further on this subject later. In the meantime, I am happy to support heartily Senator Croll's motion.

Hon. J. Campbell Haig: Honourable senators, in speaking on this motion of the honourable Senator Croll, I wish to make two or three preliminary comments. The first is that my notes were made prior to the introduction of this motion, so that anything I may say which corresponds to what has already been said is in my own words. Secondly, I should have liked this bill to have been proceeded with earlier, so that the committee could have been appointed and its work started.

I am glad to be able to take advantage of the opportunity afforded me, in line with what the honourable senator said in his introductory remarks to this motion—which, by the way, I think was a most brilliant exposition of the subject. He said:

> The speakers who will follow me from provinces other than my own will be able to relate what is being done .....

I wish to indicate in the short time at my disposal what is happening in my own province, in the city of Winnipeg. I shall not deal with the question of medical care for the aged, for I do not know too much about the subject and therefore I should like someone to discuss it who has more knowledge than I have.

In Winnipeg we have the Age and Opportunity Bureau, which has been in existence for six years. I wish to read from parts of the annual report of the president and executive director for 1962, which was introduced in January of this year, and also from the report of the present year.

As part of this report for 1962, he said:

> If we look back six years, our original function was to provide research, planning and leadership in addition to a referral service for people over 60. This is still true, but in the past year we carried out an intensive self-study of our activities so that we could build a solid foundation for the next five years.

Regarding the work of the Age and Opportunity Bureau, I wish to refer to one or two matters. Senator Inman has indicated what has happened in regard to housing accommodation in her area.

In 1957 there were two projects in and around Winnipeg, housing 12 single persons and 28 couples. In January 1963 there were eight projects, housing 279 couples and 71 single persons. At the end of 1963 in and around Winnipeg there will be accommodation of this type for 412 couples and 458 single persons.

That is a very impressive record established over the past five or six years. True, it has been done through service clubs putting up a certain amount of money, plus other sums being put up under the National Housing Act or by individuals sponsoring limited dividend companies.

Before I go on to the other services provided in the city of Winnipeg, I would like to refer to what we call the Senior Adults Committee. In that connection I wish to read a letter from the deaconess of my church, Westminster United, in which she says:

> We have a group of 150 persons with an average attendance of 85. Most of these are well over 75 years of age. As I see the difference such a weekly program makes, I realize a little the tremendous task which needs to be done, as the numbers of aged in our population increase so quickly.

Again, in addition to that church group and the Age and Opportunity Bureau which I have mentioned, we have certain community groups and service clubs sponsoring recreational activities for the aged and aging. There are two which I personally know something about: one is the Logan Neighbourhood House and the other is the Norquay Neighbourhood House, both of which are located in the northern part of our city. The Logan Neighbourhood House deals with both adults and children, assisting them in their recreational and family life needs.

I mentioned earlier something about the field of housing and read from the 1962 report of the executive director of the Age and Opportunity Bureau.

We also have another organization—I do not know whether it seems peculiar or not, but it is successful in our city—and that is the Good Neighbours Club. This is mainly for single men who live in rooms. They have access to a building or an area to which they may go and which, as the word indicates, is a club for them, and at that club during the season there are certain activities and some entertainments put on for them. It is a place for them to go and feel, as Senator Croll has said, a sense of involvement, of participation.

Now, as to the motion before us, it calls for maximum co-operation at all levels of government in the promotion of these services and facilities.

Honourable senators, one thing that should never be forgotten is the fact that we cannot do away with the volunteer or the voluntary agency in these activities because, as I see it, this is the basis for dealing with these charitable and helpful organizations, for you cannot buy the services or the help that the volunteer gives.

I read again from the president's report of the Age and Opportunity Bureau of January 14, 1962. He talks about the upgrading of his staff and what they are doing in the way of research in different fields like living arrangements and so on, and he makes this point:

> So in any other agency, the relationship between the Professional Social Worker and the Volunteer is very important and each cannot work without the other.

So when this committee is appointed—which I hope will be done shortly—we must not forget the time, effort and, at times, money expended by a person, as one of a group, a service club or other organization or as an individual. I believe this committee could obtain some assistance and useful information from this Age and Opportunity Bureau and the various conferences it holds.

Before this motion passed, I wanted to say a few words on what is happening in my own city, to indicate that in addition to participation of government at all levels we must have the voluntary service of the individual.

Honourable senators, in conclusion, I strongly support this motion and feel it will fill a great need in certain areas which, up to the present time, have not tackled this problem adequately.

(Translation):

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt: Mr. Speaker, I could not encourage and support too strongly the motion of our colleague, Senator Croll. However, I have a suggestion to make which, in my opinion, would make this motion more complete.

By this motion, Senator Croll wishes to improve the welfare of old and aging people. But, as our colleague said, when does a person become old and aging? It is also said:

> ...that in addition to the provision of a sufficient income, there are also developed adequate services and facilities of a positive and preventive kind so that older persons may continue to live healthy and useful lives as members of the Canadian community...

I should like to express a viewpoint based on personal experience during the depression years of 1930 to 1939. I was then doing social work and I especially looked after people who lived in poverty and distress, not because they had misbehaved, but rather due to circumstances, they were in a somewhat precarious situation. We had to care for about 137 families.

Such social work was done by the Conference of St. Vincent de Paul societies. The distinction must be clearly established: the St. Vincent de Paul Conference is not the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary. The Conferences of St. Vincent de Paul societies are organizations which help the poor and the needy by providing them with food, clothing, fuel and shelter. During those years, I realized that we were forced to separate some couples, not bachelors or spinsters, but married couples of 70 or 75 years of age, before old age pensions started being paid. Those elderly couples who had lived happily together for 40 or 50 years, were forced to separate in order to live in homes for old people, the men in one section, the women in another. It is heart-rending for people who have lived harmoniously all their lives to realize, at an advanced age, that their home is broken by their separation, when they have not long to live.

Now, those organizations attempted, with some difficulty, to set up institutions where those couples, with enough money to live comfortably, could keep on living together.

As Senator Inman pointed out a moment ago, our life nowadays is quite different than it was in the past. Are children less attached to their parents? I do not think so. Just the same, grandparents are unable to live with their children who are raising their own families in modern homes, because elderly people weary of boisterous children in a very short time.

Therefore, we should find some means of establishing homes where those old people could continue to enjoy their wedded bliss and their privacy.

For those reasons, in order to complete this resolution, I suggest the setting up of villages, or if you prefer, sections of villages or towns, where old couples could continue to live and die peacefully.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I am pleased to rise to support this motion and to commend Senator Croll and those associated with him in bringing it forward.

Already this session we have discussed certain bills which have been more concerned with middle-aged and younger people, and other bills are coming forward. We are more concerned with finding employment for younger people coming on to the labour market. You will recall in an earlier debate in this house that figures were given as to how many young people would be coming onto the market each year. The number is large, and work must be found for them. Mention was also made of the number of unemployed, and at that point we were considering unemployment among the middle-aged and younger groups.

A bill has already been passed this session amending the Atlantic Development Board, and the primary purpose of that board is to develop enterprises in the Maritime provinces which will provide work for the young and the middle-aged.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: In the Atlantic provinces.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I stand corrected. I got mixed up earlier with "Sydney" and "North Sydney" and now I am confusing the "Atlantic provinces" and the "Maritime provinces". In any event, I believe the purpose of that bill is to develop those provinces so that work will be provided for the younger people who are growing up and coming onto the labour market, as well as for the middle-aged now looking for employment.

I suppose the same remarks would apply to the purpose for setting up the Department of Industry. In that instance the idea is to assist industry in developing itself so that it can retain the great masses of workers who now find it difficult to obtain employment, and to assist the young to find work opportunities for themselves. The same would apply to the Economic Council of Canada, the bill concerning which will be coming before us shortly.

I anticipate that we shall be considering the bill to establish a Municipal Development Fund before the house rises for the summer recess. It is set forth that one of the purposes of that bill is to provide the municipalities with funds so that they can proceed with enterprises which create employment. I am not going to debate that bill now, but I believe we would all admit that is its purpose. In most instances I suppose it will be work for the middle-aged and younger people.

So, honourable senators, I feel that so far this session we have not given enough attention to those who have reached just beyond middle life.

I know that in the city of Brantford we have a club called the Senior Citizens' Club. One does not have to be 75 or 70 to belong to it; I understand one can be admitted to it, as a full-fledged member, at 60 years og age. The members gather together, hold concerts and enjoy entertainment. I would say it is an excellent club. I believe such clubs should be encouraged right across Canada. I would like to see in each community a clubhouse of some kind where older people could gather together.

I believe that this committee should not be concerned primarily with the financial aspect of the problem, but more with building up the morale of those who are getting on to 60, 65 and over. This proposed committee can do much in that regard.

There is, of course, always the problem of housing, since it is not always possible for older people to live with members of their families. I have no doubt that the committee will consider the possibility of establishing individual units where older people can have their own homes and their own fireplaces. I should add that I do not like to think of a person of 60 years of age being described as an older person, for many of them are still very active at that age. I consider this is a matter which should also be studied by the committee.

Because of the increase in automation, both men and women are being retired much younger today, and this in itself poses a staggering problem. Recently an editorial dealing with retirement at an early age appeared in the Brantford Expositor, and I trust you will bear with me if I read an extract from it.

> The day may come when the economy may ill-afford to use the work of older man. For in the last 10 years automation has set in with a vengeance. There simply may not, in the years ahead, be enough work available for older men and young ones, too.
> The speed with which machines are replacing men's work was pointed out a couple of years ago by Lord Chandos, president of the Institute of Directors in Britain. He said that if the 40-hour week were kept up, by the year 2000 all workers would have to retire at age 35.
> One of the deep dilemmas of our society, where work is both a goal and a moral justification, is this very condition: Too little to do and too much time to do it in.
> It poses difficult questions for management and labour and government concerned with retirement pensions.

It poses problems other than that of pensions; it poses the problem of trying to alleviate conditions for those who are aged and retired. They will be happy in that they will not have to live with their families, but instead will have their own homes.

As I said in opening my remarks, I am very pleased to associate myself with the mover of this resolution. I trust the committee will shortly be set up. In fact, if the motion carries, I shall be prepared to name the members of that committee immediately. I discussed this matter with the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) before coming into the house, and we are prepared to set up the committee immediately. I trust the motion will carry today, and I assure the proposed committee that I shall do everything in my power to make its work worth while.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, I wish to add a few words to what has been said to associate myself with the motion of the honourable Senator Croll. First of all, I should like to congratulate him on bringing forward this subject. As the honourable the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford) has already pointed out, we mostly consider legislation which, in the last analysis, deals mainly with younger and middle-aged people. It is refreshing to know that there is now such a great interest being taken in the activities of older people.

I listened with much interest to the comprehensive statement of the mover of this motion, and with equal interest to the other honourable senators who have spoken. I do not think there can be a question in anyone's mind as to the urgent necessity for something more to be done than is being done at the present time.

I had the opportunity and the pleasure of being in the House of Commons when considerable legislation was put on the statute books relative to old age pensions and old age security. I recall when the old age pension was increased by various stages from $20 to its present level of $65, and I am one of those who believe that it should be further increased. I also had the pleasure of seeing the Old Age Security Act extended so that pensions could be paid to those who now live outside Canada. This I consider was also an excellent move. It shows that there has been a great evolution in matters relating to pensions and to our older people.

Like my good friend Senator Vaillancourt, I remember well the attitude towards and the lack of facilities for older people in years gone by. I remember as a boy seeing those who had no homes or families to look after them, as Senator Inman mentioned, being put in poorhouses, which in many cases were terrible institutions. We have come a long way from those barbarous days, and I think the change has been a happy one indeed. We know that in all provinces great strides are being made, and we appreciate the efforts of public and private organizations which are doing so much in this regard. I think if we can co-ordinate the activities of government, social welfare organizations, and private individuals who are much interested in this splendid work, we shall have accomplished much.

I recall when I was Minister of Veterans Affairs much was done for veterans along the lines now suggested by Senator Croll for older people. As minister I visited a number of projects in different parts of Canada. In those establishments the veterans were not separated from their wives; a man and his wife were given a cottage in a centre where recreational facilities and nurses were available to look after them. I found this situation in quite a number of centres across Canada.

Senator Vaillancourt mentioned what was being done about organizing villages for the older citizens. When I was overseas during the First World War I was taken to a village of this kind in London. This was over 40 years ago, and I was amazed at what was being done at that time. They had a village where older people, a man and his wife, could live together in a two- or three-roomed cottage. They also had places where the bachelor or spinster, the widow or widower lived in good surroundings. There were recreational centres for them and nurses were available, and it did indeed seem to be an ideal situation. Consequently, I was glad to hear Senator Vaillancourt mention the possibility of something of that nature being done in Canada.

I am 100 per cent in sympathy with this motion. I know we can form an excellent committee and, in fact, we could, if necessary, get three or four excellent committees from the Senate for a project of this kind. From the witnesses who would come before such a committee, whether from government, from social welfare organizations, or private individuals, information would be obtained from which we could learn how to co-ordinate the work which needs to be done.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, it is obvious that it is unnecessary to argue in favour of this motion in this house. We ourselves have been threatened with something in the nature of retirement in the not-too-distant past, and perhaps it is a situation in which a fellow-feeling makes us wondrous kind. However, I should like to make one comment.

I appreciate highly the privilege which I have had of seconding this resolution proposed by my friend and colleague, Senator Croll. It is right down my alley, if I may use that expression. My lines of thought have always been humanitarian, and I have sympathy for those who require our assistance and sympathy.

I read not very long ago that the civilization of a nation may well be judged by its treatment of its women and children, and I would like to extend that thought to include its older people. Our civilization may well be judged by the wisdom as well as the generosity with which we treat our older citizens.

Senator Macdonald (Brantford) read an editorial a few moments ago in which it was said that the progress of automation may in some distant future require the retirement of our workers at 35 years of age. Well, my answer to that is, "Bunk". Not until the resources of our country are completely developed, until all human wants are satisfied, will there be any shortage of work. There is no need of retiring anybody who is capable of working and who wishes to do so.

That brings me to the real point I wish to make in this short address in support of a most important motion. Man does not live by bread alone. As important as groceries, clothing and housing, is the right to take part in the activities of one's community.

I came into the Senate in 1945, and some short time after that we reduced the retirement age of civil servants from 70 to 65, or we allowed civil servants to retire at 65. I opposed that with all the strength I had at that time. We actually went into Committee of the Whole as the result of my protests against that barbarous piece of legislation. I still maintain it is barbarous. The idea of depriving a man of his right to work and his right to the occupation which may be the only work he has ever learned—work which he has studied all his life and which is his only skill—is wrong. To compel him to retire while he is still in the prime of life—and many of our civil servants last very much longer than 65 years—is in my judgment positively barbarous.

I have seen people retire voluntarily, and mistakenly, from the farm, and take a little house in the nearby village and live for just a further two years. A person doing that might very well engage the undertaker in advance.

Man surely does not live by bread alone, and one of the very essentials of living mankind is activity. We were constructed and designed by nature to scratch—to scratch for a living and for accomplishment, to do something and thus be one of our generation, and to take part. That is most necessary to healthy, happy living.

I hope that this committee will make an intensive study of the custom—not only in governmental circles but very generally—of retiring people compulsorily at any fixed age while they are still in good health. That is barbarous. It is wrong. It is inhuman. It is most unkind. I trust that this is one of the things this committee will study.

My honourable friend Senator Brooks spoke about the barbarism of the poorhouse. There is a poem entitled, "Over The Hill to the Poorhouse". Had I known I was to speak this afternoon I would have brought it with me. But, one must not forget, too, the position of older people of past days had it not been for the poorhouse. We have improved a bit on that piece of well-intentioned legislation, and I am sure we can improve on much of the legislation, the customs and the practices of our present civilization.

I congratulate Senator Croll on moving the establishment of this committee. It will be a great success, and I know that we will give the work every possible attention. As I said, a fellow-feeling makes us wondrous kind.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, first may I express my appreciation of all the kind words that have been said about my participation in this motion.

There is little I can add at this time to the discussion, but I do want to say to the house that I had discussed this matter with many honourable senators, and I am particularly appreciative of the encouragement I received from the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford). I am sure that if I had spoken also to the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) he would have encouraged me just as much. However, the Leader of the Government is in the position of controlling more governmental monies than is Senator Brooks, and I felt that I should discuss the matter with him. With his encouragement, I feel sure that the committee will receive every possible co-operation.

The unanimity in this house, coming as it does from a cross-section of Canada, is an indication that there is not only an interest in this problem but a deep concern. What has been said in this debate will be studied closely by the committee.

All that remains to be done is the adoption of the resolution and the organizing of the committee. We will then have to retain the services of a small, competent staff which will be able to organize the work for us while we are away during the months of August and September, and be ready when we return some time in late September or early October.

I do not know whether there is among us any one who was in the House of Commons in 1927 when the Old Age Pensions Act was put on the statute books—that is a long time ago—but there are some members of this house who were present when the Old Age Security Act was placed upon the statute books, and many of us will be here when the Canada Pension Plan is put upon the statute books. These are all memorable events in the social history of this country.

We have here an opportunity. It is a natural for the Senate to make an examination of this problem at the national level. It has not been done heretofore. I have been asked by many: Do you mean that no one has ever done this before? That is the truth of it. At the national level this problem has never been examined although, as I stated in my earlier remarks, many of the provinces, municipalities and private agencies have done a great deal in that field. We just have not had the opportunity or the occasion to take this matter up in the Senate, and now is our opportunity.

This study will be carried out by a committee of senators who know the problem intimately because they have lived it, and from this committee will come a more complete and integrated knowledge of the problem. From that discussion and from that investigation will come guideposts which will improve the lot of the aged and aging, and which will certainly make us feel that we have made a real contribution to a problem that is worthy of our efforts.

There is nothing I can add. All I ask is that the motion be adopted. With complete confidence, I commend to you the adoption of the motion.

Motion agreed to.

MEMBERSHIP

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, may I at this time say with respect to the motion we have just carried that I have discussed the membership of this committee with the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks), and I have here a list of names which I submit for the unanimous approval of the house.

Therefore, I move, with leave of the Senate, seconded by the honourable Senator Brooks, the following motion:

> That the Special Committee of the Senate appointed to examine the problem involved in the promotion of the welfare of the aged and aging persons, in order to ensure that in addition to the provision of a sufficient income, there are also developed adequate services and facilities of a positive and preventive kind so that older persons may continue to live healthy and useful lives as members of the Canadian community and the need for the maximum co-operation of all levels of government in the promotion thereof, be composed of the Honourable Senators Blois, Brooks, Croll, Dessureault, Fergusson, Gershaw, Grosart, Haig, Hollett, Inman, Jodoin, Lefrançois, Macdonald (Brantford), McGrand, Pearson,

Quart, Roebuck, Smith (Kamloops), Smith (Queens-Shelburne) and Sullivan.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, the first meeting of the Special Committee on Aging will take place tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock.

We have not received any further business from the other house, but we expect some to come before us. Therefore, if the honourable Senator Quart is prepared to speak on the Speech from the Throne debate this evening, I suggest that we rise now until 8 o'clock.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 8 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

The Senate resumed from Thursday, July 25, consideration of His Excellency the Administrator's speech at the opening of the session, and the motion of Honourable Mr. Lefrançois, seconded by Honourable Mr. Taylor (Westmorland), for an address in reply thereto.

Hon. Josie D. Quart: Honourable senators, I was honoured and privileged beyond expectation to have been given an opportunity to be a member of the Canadian delegation to the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association Conference and tour as a guest of the United Kingdom branch. Perhaps it would be apropos to give you here the aims and activities of the association.

The Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, whose history goes back for half a century, exists to serve the parliamentarians of the Commonwealth. It provides the sole machinery for regular consultation and exchange of ideas and information among members of Commonwealth parliaments, and in this way helps to further the urgent and practical ideal of fellowship and understanding which the Commonwealth represents.

The association thus plays a vital part in binding together those peoples who, irrespective of race or religion, nationality or culture, are united in the Commonwealth by community of interest and by respect for the rule of law, the freedom and rights of the individual citizen, and the ideals of parliamentary democracy.

Membership in the association affords many practical benefits. The greatest advantage, however, is the opportunity enjoyed by members at one time or another to meet their fellow Commonwealth parliamentarians at conferences, through visiting delegations and as individual visitors. From these personal contacts have grown up the friendships, understandings and exchanges of ideas which belong to the essence of the Commonwealth as a vital, living community.

Incidentally, I should like to mention that Canadians visiting London do not take advantage too frequently of the office and the services of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association. The secretary asked me to mention that if you know of visitors going to London, do tell them to go to the office of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association at Westminster Hall. I am sure they will find them most co-operative.

The countries and delegates which participated in this general conference were: Australia, Canada, Ceylon, India, Jamaica, Kenya, Malaya, Malta, Mauritius, Nigeria, Sierra Leone, Tanganyika, Trinidad and Tobago, and Uganda.

At this point may I tell you a story about the delegate from Sierra Leone, a Paramount Chief who has four wives and was always boasting about them. I believe I told this story once before in the Senate when I spoke either on the United Nations General Assembly or on the United Nations Commission on the Status of Women.

Many of the delegates were not opposed to polygamy, so I told them that where women now have the vote such as in Tunisia, a sheik joined the campaign against polygamy, and his slogan was: "One wife is a necessity, two wives a luxury, three wives waste and four wives punishment". The delegates laughed, but I am sure I did not convince some of them.

Honourable senators, I should also like to say here that Dr. Ray of India was one of the most ardent supporters of the Commonwealth, as well as of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association. When at times there was some dissension, particularly with the African delegates—and I am not being critical of them at all, because I think they made quite a valuable contribution—Dr. Ray steadied the discussions by his timely intervention. Afterwards he told us that he had been in prison for five years for demonstrations against the United Kingdom when India was seeking independence. Now, as I have said, he is an ardent supporter of the Commonwealth.

The Commonwealth Parliamentary visit to the United Kingdom started on June 23 and ended July 15.

The other member of the delegation, Mr. A. J. P. Cameron, Member of Parliament for High Park, Toronto, and I, only joined the party in Belfast on July 2 for a tour of Northern Ireland as guests of the local branch of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association.

On leaving Ottawa, the R.C.A.F. graciously provided air transportation in their luxury Yukon plane, which left Uplands airport on July 1 at 6.40 p.m., flying direct to Heath Row Airport, London, arriving there at 10.45 a.m. Tuesday, where we were met by Miss Burwash from Canada House who brought us greetings from the High Commissioner, the Honourable George Drew, who was in Germany for a few days.

At 3.30 p.m. Mr. Peter Molloy, Secretary of the United Kingdom branch, joined us in London and brought us by commercial plane to Belfast, where we met up with the entire delegation at the Midland Hotel; all then set out on our tour of Northern Ireland.

Even today there is not a parish or town in the country which does not bear some sign of days gone by in Ireland's glorious history.

Highlights on our three-day tour were, first, a state dinner at Stormont, Parliament of Northern Ireland. On July 3 we were luncheon guests of the mayor, Mr. Joseph Gray, M.B.E., and the Urban District Council, at the city hall of the city of Armagh. We were told that when first the mists of time parted and the story of Ireland began to take shape, it was largely written in Armagh.

Even archaeologists do not agree as to the age of Armagh. Some say 3,000 B.C., others 300 B.C. It sounds very much like politicians talking.

Be that as it may, whatever age Armagh is, its history is packed with legend and romance which its citizens loved to relate, and we loved to listen to their stories.

Our visit to the famous Belfast harbour was followed by a reception and luncheon in the beautiful old building on the harbour estate. A high tea at the estate of Sir John and Lady Stronge was a memorable occasion. To those of you who have already met him, Sir John sends his regards. A cocktail party by the Belfast branch of the English-speaking Union gave us an opportunity to meet many local citizens. A visit to the agricultural experimental farm was most interesting and instructive; we were treated to the very special Cambridge and Talisman strawberries, of which they are justifiably proud.

On July 4, at 2.50 p.m., we left Nutt's Corner Airport, Belfast, for Scotland, arriving at Glasgow airport at 3.30 p.m., from where we motored through the beautiful countryside to Edinburgh, to the Caledonian Hotel, which was our headquarters during our four days in Scotland.

On July 5 we visited the Forth Road bridge under construction at South Queensbury. When completed it will be the second longest suspension bridge in the world, only 900 feet shorter than the Golden Gate bridge in San Francisco. Following our visit to the bridge we were guests at luncheon of the contractors, Harland and Wolff. We were also guests of the magistrates and council of the city of Edinburgh in the city hall. In the unavoidable absence of the First Magistrate, Bailie Filselm, a woman, who is the second senior magistrate, presided. Incidentally, it was said by some that she did a better job than the First Magistrate. However, I am not saying that.

A reception and visit at Edinburgh Castle was indeed a thrill. The guests were received by Lady Tweedsmuir, M.P. She is Under Secretary of State for Scotland. Edinburgh Castle, with its soaring ramparts, is a massive stone structure set on a high hill, and dominates the landscape. Its site was chosen for its natural beauty, as well as for defence. To visit Edinburgh Castle and view the Crown jewels was a delight.

I was very privileged to be invited by the delegation to present the thanks of the party to Lady Tweedsmuir.

Another memorable event was the military tattoo on the parade grounds of the castle. It was reported that this was the first time in the history of the Duke of Argyle's Highlanders that the parent band and the three territorial bands all took part in the same ceremony. The military tattoo this year was to celebrate the return of the parent Highland regiment from Germany.

We visited the Westfield Park Hostel for the aged and aging, and as we were going through there we thought of our own Senator Croll, and we had our own ideas at the time as we looked at the home, that conditions would be better in Canada when the special committee of the Senate gets going.

Then we visited the Edinburgh Youth Hostel where we met about ten Canadian girls and boys who were visiting Europe for, as they said, "as long as our money lasts". We took their addresses and we have written to their parents to say that we saw them and they are well and hearty.

On Sunday, July 7, we took off at 2.20 p.m. from the Edinburgh Airport to arrive at London Airport at 3.40, and motored to St. Ermin's Hotel. This was the headquarters of the entire delegation.

Tours such as these do help to give one a better picture of each other's country, and meeting with local citizens at receptions and so on, help immensely. This social exchange and the friendships formed are vital to better understanding.

On Monday, July 8, we began our working sessions. After all the invigorating play and full enjoyment of the warmest hospitality in Ireland and Scotland, all the delegates, especially those from the African countries, were really "on the beam" and became quite vocal. All our sessions were held at the C.P.A. headquarters at Westminster Hall in the Houses of Parliament.

Visiting the C.P.A. rooms, Mr. Cameron and I were proud to see a picture taken on October 27, 1950 of the conference held that year in London, the chairman of which was no other than our distinguished colleague, the honourable Senator Arthur Roebuck. In order to get Senator Roebuck's name on the record—which is not published but is kept for the next conference—I said to Mr. Cameron, "I am going to ask who was the chairman of the first conference." We asked the Right Honourable Sir Roland Robinson, M.P., and he replied, "Well, you should know—your own colleague, Senator Roebuck."

The Right Honourable Sir Roland Robinson, M.P., deputy chairman of the United Kingdom branch, welcomed the delegates and gave an inspiring talk on the aims of the C.P.A. He presided at all our sessions. Every day during our entire stay in London we were invited to informal luncheons in the parliamentary dining rooms by peers from the House of Lords or Members of Parliament. In the afternoons we attended the debates in the House of Commons or in the House of Lords, and were able to learn at first hand the parliamentary procedure of that Mother of all Parliaments in London.

When I saw the woolsack in the House of Lords my thoughts went back to an article I read about my honourable colleague Senator Pouliot, when he was a member of the House of Commons, and his explanation of the woolsack, when debating the Government's Supreme Court of Canada bill in October 1949. I think you said, honourable senator, that the woolsack is a bag of cotton covered with cloth—maybe moth-eaten—and the judges of the Supreme Court sit on it like urchins at the opening and closing of the session, and that in England the woolsack has such importance in history that sometimes the position of the Lord Chancellor was described as the "Woolsack".

To return to my report, we had a working session almost every morning during our eight days in London. On two mornings we did not have a session, because I think we were up too late the night before.

We were privileged to hear many important parliamentarians, among whom were: Sir Arthur Henderson, the Right Honourable Selwyn Lloyd, C.H., C.B.E., T.D., Q.C., M.P.; the Right Honourable Harold Wilson, O.B.E., M.P., Leader of the Labour Party; the Honourable Peter Jones, M.P., Colonial Secretary to Africa; Mr. Emmanuel Shinwell, M.P.; Mr. Robert Carr, M.P., Minister for Technical Co-operation, and Mr. Peter Emery, M.P. The Right Honourable Duncan Sandys, M.P., was slated for the agenda, but had to leave London to deal with Commonwealth affairs in Africa. I think at that time he went to Rhodesia.

The chairman, Sir Roland, suggested that in view of the number of countries represented and because the agenda was a heavy one, the co-operation of the delegates was important in limiting the discussions on each item, in order to deal with all the business before the conference.

As most honourable senators who have attended these C.P.A. meetings know, frank discussion is invited and the press is excluded. In fact, the only record of the proceedings is kept at the U.K. branch and is not for publication. Therefore, my report must be somewhat limited as to the working sessions.

Mr. Cameron made a valuable contribution to the discussion and presented Canada's policy on trade and commerce, and disarmament and security. I had chosen to speak on Canada's external aid and technical assistance, which was on the agenda for the last day of the conference. As most of the delegates had expressed gratitude to Canada for our part in the Colombo Plan and help for other projects, plus our technical assistance programs, we decided to follow the lead of Jamaica, as time was running out, and table the statistical papers for circulation to those countries interested in receiving a copy.

In connection with the documentation necessary for preparing our papers for the conference, we are deeply grateful to Mr. T. R. Montgomery, secretary of the Canadian branch, who succeeded in gathering the necessary data for us from the different departments at very short notice.

The highlights of our London visit, apart from our sessions, were an honorary fellowship in the Royal Commonwealth Society accorded to us during our visit, and the use of the headquarters of the Royal Society, Northumberland Avenue. Other events of interest were:

July 9: A reception by the Federation of Commonwealth and British Chambers of Commerce, at the Waldorf Hotel on the Strand, to meet a group of parliamentarians and businessmen. Our hosts on that occasion were: the Right Honourable Selwyn Lloyd, M.B.E., Past-President, assisted by Mr. Charles D. Gill, Vice-President of the Federation; Mr. H. Allan Walker, Chairman of the Council, and Sir Patrick Hamilton, Treasurer. At 8 p.m. we were guests at the performance of the musical version of "Oliver".

July 10: At 2 p.m., a tour of the London docks on the London Port Authority yacht, St. Katherine.

July 11: Dinner with Sir Henry and Lady Studholme. Dr. Ray, of India, Mr. Cameron and I were the ones to enjoy their hospitality. Arrangements had been made that U.K. parliamentarians would each have three or four delegates for dinner in their homes.

July 12: We were honoured to attend Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth's garden party at Buckingham Palace, from 4 to 6.30 p.m. The Queen was radiant, as usual, and was accompanied by the Queen Mother. Then there was a reception by Honourable George Drew, P.C., Q.C., High Commissioner for Canada, held at MacDonald House, Trafalgar Square, for the professors attending the 9th Congress of the Universities of the Commonwealth.

Mr. Cameron and I visited Canada House. When we visited the House of Lords we were privileged to hear Lord Coleraine make a speech on the contracts for nuclear arms, which was reported as the roughest type of denunciation of the Government that had taken place in the House of Lords for many years.

Friday night, July 12, was a never-to-be-forgotten farewell dinner party in the Harcourt Room of the Houses of Parliament. Cocktails were served prior to the dinner, on the beautiful terrace overlooking the Thames. Our hosts were the Executive Committee of the United Kingdom. With their wives and delegations from the Houses of Parliament, we were about 200 persons. Sir Roland Robinson again presided, and it was a very gay gathering.

Sunday afternoon, July 14: A four-hour tour of greater London included many places of historical and contemporary interest in the London area not visited by the regular tourist tours. Major James Batten, Assistant Secretary of the C.P.A. United Kingdom Branch, was our host and guide on this our last "get-together". Again, on behalf of the delegations, I presented the three gifts to the executives officiating.

Thus ended an interesting, instructive and most enjoyable experience. Too much praise cannot be given to all those responsible for planning this general conference. The itinerary was so arranged as to fill every day with combined interest and pleasure. I should mention that while there we met the Minister of Education of Nigeria. He was looking for French teachers, and he is coming to Canada in September. Major Batten, who had met Senator Vaillancourt, told the Minister of Education that when he came to Canada he should contact Senator Vaillancourt because he liked the way the Senator speaks Franch.

Monday, July 15: Again we were indebted to the R.C.A.F. for sending a staff car to St. Ermin's Hotel to drive us to Gatwick Airport, where we once again were privileged to enjoy the luxury of the R.C.A.F. Yukon plane, which landed at the R.C.A.F. air base at Marville, France, around noon. Group Captain Hall, our host, showed us every consideration and delegated Flying Officer Norman Richardson to drive us to Verdun, to visit the Meuse Valley. It was with feelings of deep respect that we visited the sacred ground, to pay tribute to the war heroes who on these battlefields laid down their lives in a terrific and desperate encounter in which the enemy was hurled back by a magnificient defence.

On July 16, we left Marville for Paris, landing at the United States Air Force base at Orly. There we were joined by Madame Vanier, her son, daughter-in-law and two grandchildren, and at 3 p.m., Paris time, we took off for Ottawa, arriving at Uplands Airport at 9.30 p.m.

Honourable senators, whereas it is a "gentleman's agreement" that no report of our work sessions be published or given to the press, it is possible for delegates to give their general impressions of the proceedings.

It seems to me that to begin with one gets the impression that Britain is proud of the achievements of the old British Empire for having converted it peacefully into the new independent Commonwealth, a development without parallel in history.

Britain is not clinging nostalgically to the last fragments of her once imperial glory. Indeed, at these conferences, one cannot but admire the calm and almost apologetic manner in which the British parliamentarians answer the severe, and sometimes brutally frank and unjust, criticisms of the newly emerging nations.

Britain strives so hard to vindicate her colonial policy by claiming that she has no desire to hold on to her remaining colonies a day longer than is necessary. But she has a duty not only to lead them into independence, but also to prepare them for the responsibilities which this involves.

For reasons of history, geography and economics, each member country naturally sees the Commonwealth from a somewhat different angle. This unique association of independent member states has grown step by step from colonial states to national sovereignty.

As you know, responsible government was first instituted in Canada, Australia and New Zealand over a hundred years ago. Their sovereign independence was confirmed by the Statute of Westminster of 1931. In 1947 and 1948, India, Pakistan and Ceylon attained full nationhood. Since then Ghana, Malaya, Nigeria, Cyprus, Sierra Leone, Trinidad and Tabago and Jamaica have also attained that status, and so will Malaysia in August, and Kenya in January.

The most difficult colonies for which to find a solution are left. Territories such as Rhodesia with multi-racial populations present special problems. Then there are other high commission territories, such as Basutoland, Swaziland and Bechuanaland, a protectorate in South Africa, which for the present do not wish to lose the protection of Britain.

During our stay in London we met four members of Parliament from Bechuanaland, two white-skinned and two dark-skinned gentlemen. They gave us some facts about the situation in South Africa, and all agreed that many newspaper reports were grossly exaggerated.

The independent nations of the Commonwealth now have a combined population of over 700 million people, which is nearly a quarter of the entire population of the world. The population of Britain's remaining colonies is less than 35 million, spread among 43 separately-governed territories. Notwithstanding all our squabbles, there is a strong family spirit which runs through the Commonwealth. It is a tangible proof of the possibility of friendly relationship between sovereign independent countries.

As in a family, there are feelings of affection and affinity between its members and, as in most families, its members do not always see eye to eye. Therefore, it is not surprising that Commonwealth countries frequently hold different opinions on world problems, and at the United Nations often vote against each other.

As to the United Nations, I found it was a wonderful advantage for me to have been a representative delegate for three and a half months at the General Assembly in 1957, as well as attending the United Nations Commission on the Status of Women for three years, for when you meet delegates from these countries you invariably discover that you know someone from their country, and right away a link of sympathy is established which helps enormously.

Then again, it is most gratifying to be a Canadian at these gatherings. You feel that Canada has top priority with these African and Asian delegates, as well as with our friends from the West Indies. They seem to believe in our sincerity, and I hope Canada will never betray their confidence in our diplomatic relationships.

In my opinion, the Commonwealth can survive only if we, the so-called "Have" countries, can be successful in deserving the allegiance and respect of the younger generation in these "Have-not", underprivileged and underdeveloped countries. We must find a way to prove to them our sincerity and talk to them in a language they understand.

In countries like Canada, it is all too easy to get a distorted picture of the young people growing up in these countries. But behind all the sensationalism that we read about, and their striving for independence—even their acts of violence—it is my opinion from talking to these delegates that there is developing a new seriousness and sense of purpose.

There is a passion for education, a growing urge to travel and to meet people of other countries. They show a deep respect for this new world of science and technology. But their main concern seems to be for a world of peace, a world without discrimination, a world which respects the dignity of all men, irrespective of race, colour or creed. And who can blame them, for that should be the true spirit of the present day.

All member states seem to accept the Crown as a symbol of the Commonwealth, but not all these countries embody in their laws the notion of allegiance to the Queen.

As to the implications on the Commonwealth if the United Kingdom joins the Common Market, there seemed to be unanimous disapproval of the United Kingdom doing so, and great concern was expressed by many delegates as to the disastrous economic effect this would have upon their respective countries.

There was also a similarity in the policy objectives of the delegates for the cessation of nuclear testing, the surmounting of political obstacles towards signing a test ban to eliminate all nuclear testing, the formulation of a general treaty on arms control, and the achievement of gradual disarmament under the supervision of the United Nations.

When the Moscow Treaty is ratified by the three nations, it will reduce some of the fears of atomic fallout. In fact, the whole free world should rejoice that this is the first step.

The next general conference of the C.P.A. will be held in October 1963, in Malaya, and Jamaica hopes to play host for 1964. A formal invitation was received from New Zealand for 1965.

Dr. Hugh M. Horner, M.P., chairman of the delegation to the Lagos-Nigeria conference in November 1962, on behalf of the then prime minister, the Right Honourable Mr. Diefenbaker, extended an invitation to the C.P.A. to give consideration to holding its 1967 general conference in Canada, to join with Canadians in celebrating our 100th anniversary of nationhood.

Although the C.P.A. cannot accept invitations for more than two years in advance, the enthusiasm expressed in private talks with the delegates and executive officers would indicate that our Commonwealth family will be with us in 1967 to help us have a real "bang-up" birthday party.

I was also privileged to have been a member of the federal delegation to the 1961 Canadian Area Conference to which the province of Quebec played host for the business meetings held on the SS. Tadousac, sailing up and down the majestic St. Lawrence and Saguenay rivers to Bagotville, in northern Quebec. The United Kingdom delegation spoke about it in glowing terms at the meetings in London.

I must be honest in regard to Toronto too. They did speak glowingly about Ontario as well, when they went to Toronto. Therefore, to be just, I must say this about the sister province. I am quite sure that some honourable senators from Ontario would have taken me to task if I had not reported that fact.

As to the area conference, it was noted again at this year's general conference that the Honourable Roland Michener, former Speaker of the House of Commons, had been an ardent supporter of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, and had founded the Canadian Area Conference four or five years ago, which has been carried on so successfully every year.

The Canadian Area Conference, unlike the General Conference, brings together delegations from Canada's ten provinces as well as a delegation from the federal Government. All area conferences are attended by some of the executive officers of the United Kingdom branch.

The next Canadian Area Conference will begin on August 11 in Regina, when I presume the province of Saskatchewan will play host.

Apart from the Prime Ministers' Commonwealth Conference, the C.P.A. is one of the most important instruments to promote better understanding and good will in Commonwealth relationships. The continuous contact which is maintained and the friendships formed bind members together.

Every generation has its own problems, but no generation has faced the extent and rapidity of change which faces and challenges us.

Canada, as other countries, is rapidly facing new and heavy responsibilities. It is certain that these reponsibilities will further increase before Canada celebrates, in unity we hope with our ten provinces, our centennial in 1967. But let us be optimistic, for even the Commonwealth of Nations is still indeed an experiment, with no sure guarantee of lasting success. So, like Canada, unless mutual respect, understanding and tolerance exist within our midst, we are doomed to failure. Our ultimate survival as a commonwealth, and of Canada as a nation, requires that we must all strive to learn to live together in peace—and "learn" is the keyword.

Let us hope that common sense and justice will strengthen the many ties which bind us together, and create a climate of good will and better understanding, so that Canada may continue to live within the Commonwealth and continue to progress and enjoy the respect of all peoples and countries throughout the world.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière), debate adjourned.

BANKRUPTCY ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Thursday, May 30, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Hayden for the second reading of Bill S-2, to amend the Bankruptcy Act.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, let me say first, following the speech made by Senator Quart, that the reason she got a good report about Toronto was that we had four representatives there: Senator Pearson, Senator Méthot, Senator Dessureault and myself. None of us, of course, could add the charm and grace imparted by the last speaker.

Honourable senators, I took the adjournment of the debate on this bill some time ago. It seems highly inappropriate this evening, in view of what is happening in the other place and is likely to happen here, to talk about bankruptcy, because if anything, this is not the time to discuss the subject of bankruptcy. However, it is my turn and I must go on.

The last time this bill came before the Senate I was highly critical of it, and I am no less critical of the bill today. I pointed out then that the Government which was presenting an identical bill had been in office for some six years. On the other hand, the Government which is presenting this bill has been in office less than 90 days, and has had actually 52 sitting days. This bill does not deal with the core of the problem. It seems to me that it does not dig down to the root in order to do away with the abuses and evils. The problem of bankruptcy in this country is crying for solution and all we are doing is patching and tinkering.

On the previous occasion I indicated that the incidence of bankruptcy was increasing. I think some of the members who were then sitting on this side did not quite agree with my point of view. At the time I did not have the figures, but now I have them from the Bureau of Statistics in a report in the Globe and Mail of March 18 last, as follows:

> Bankruptcies recorded in Canada under the Bankruptcy and Winding Up Acts rose 19.8 per cent in 1962 to 3,185 from 2,659 in 1961, the Dominion Bureau of Statistics said yesterday.

The article contiues:

> Of the total number of business failures, 1,692 were in Quebec in 1962, up from 1,450 in 1961. Estimated liabilities totalled $75,197,000 in Quebec, compared with $49,133,000 in the previous year.
> The largest number of business failures in 1962 was in the trade sector, 1,495 compared to 1,234 in 1961, with most of the increase being caused by the failure of food, automotive products, apparel, hardware, and miscellaneous stores. Liabilities in the trade sector rose to $51,139,000 from $46,286,000.
> In manufacturing the number of bankruptcies increased to 325 from 285 and liabilities rose to $28,370,000 from $18,696,000.
> Number of failures in the construction industry advanced to 572 from 470, with liabilities rising to $27,366,000 from $23,665,000. In the financial sector failures increased to 82 from 69 and liabilities rose to $13,346,000 from $5,127,000. Bankruptcies in the service industry rose to 476 from 402 and liabilities to $16,368,000 from $11,614,000.
> There were 30 business failures in the Atlantic provinces in 1962 compared with 47 in 1961. Liabilities dropped to $2,540,000 from $4,714,000.
> In Ontario, failures rose to 1,177 from 932, with liabilities rising to $55 million from $48 million. In the Prairie provinces insolvencies advanced to 177 from 126 but liabilities fell to $6 million from $7 million.
> Failures in British Columbia increased to 109 from 104 and liabilities eased to $7.18 million from $7.25 million.

Those of you who have read the financial page of the Ottawa Citizen tonight will have seen an article by Ben Dworkin headed, "Bankruptcy toll soaring despite economic boom". The article relates:

> In many cases it is a matter of overexpansion, without the cash reserves to fall back on in these times of high costs and meagre gains. With the rest it is the usual number of things—new ventures, inexperience, changing times, and the pummelling by bigger and rougher competition.

One of the things that troubled me when we were discussing the Bankruptcy Act at the last session—we had a hearing on it in the Banking and Commerce Committee on November 21, 1962—was the appearance before the committee of the Credit Grantors Association of Canada. They said that their association had in excess of 4,000 members divided into 143 separate credit units located across Canada, and that its membership was composed of chartered banks, consumer loan companies, fuel companies, national department stores, petroleum companies, retail stores and sales finance companies.

That all appears on page 57 of the Banking and Commerce Committee report of 1962. But, honourable senators, here is a significant part of the report, and I quote from page 62, where they were giving an analysis. They had this to say:

> Yet an ever present factor contributing to the excessive number of these Summary Administration Bankruptcies, is the fact that such debtors have, in the past, been the subject of solicitation, both direct and indirect, by trustees in the Province of Quebec, who, for a fee in the neighbourhood of $300, agree to provide the debtor with a discharge from his obligation to pay his just debts. Admittedly, such debtors are not entitled to such discharge, but, in practice, they generally obtain it because creditors are unwilling to defray the disproportionate costs of contestation, or pursuit, or enforcement of their rights under the Bankruptcy Act.

At the time I heard it I was a member of the committee, and it troubled me. Here were men, responsible people, who came before the committee and said that there is fraud being committed under the act. You might say, "Well, this is a matter of administration." But, it is more than administration, and they point out it is much deeper than that. In the face of that it seemed to me we were doing a little something less than our duty to just go along with it.

I realized that they suggested that this went on in the province of Quebec, but let the rest of us not feel too lily-white about the matter, for those of us in the practice of law know what goes on in other places than Quebec. I do not know why they said Quebec particularly. To apply a little heat to the department will not do any harm in order to make sure that something is done about correcting such situations as this. I am sure the department does not countenance this at all. It just does not know.

I realize that when one talks about bankruptcy the rural members sit back and say:

"Well, you city folks are the people who are involved in that; it hardly ever happens as far as we are concerned." Does it hardly ever happen, and should not you be concerned?

Let me give an instance. I know something about this because it happened in my county of Essex, where we produce great quantities of fruit and vegetables that the farmer grows and sells to the processor. The produce is produced and delivered to the processor in the summertime, and the producer is paid in the fall. That is the normal way of doing business. In this particular instance the farmers made inquiries of the bank about certain processors, and were told the processors were financially in good shape. The producers sold to the particular processors for one year, and for a second year, but in the third year the group of processors went broke and the producers received nothing. They found that once their tomatoes and other early vegetables got into the plant and into cans they did not belong to them and that the bank had a mortgage on them. The vegetables lost their identity and the producers their money, since the producers could not possibly follow them even to the door. As a result, they were completely out in the cold.

Under the Bankruptcy Act the wage earner has some protection. The federal Government makes sure it has some protection. However, the primary producer has none. In this instance they were fortunate in having a member in the House of Commons, named Gene Whelan, who is a farmer and a fine and capable young fellow. He was very much concerned, and drew a bill which he introduced in the House of Commons, asking to exempt the primary producers from having their products in the hands of a bankrupt processor classified as assets for general distribution, even though these products may have been pledged by the processor as collateral for operating capital. The bank takes a pledge under section 88 of the act, and everything including the kitchen stove is covered.

The House of Commons gave the bill second reading and sent it to committee for further study. The presidents of the banks made their objections, and according to the rules they are within the law. They suggested that if section 88 were not available to the banks they would be less likely to give credit. I often wonder how the Americans extend credit without a section of the Bank Act such as ours. Yet it was pointed out at the committee hearing that since 1954 five grain dealers have been forced into dissolution—which means bankruptcy—involving over 200 primary producers, all of whom became common creditors, although in every instance grain, either in store or unsold, was the major portion, if not all, of the claim of the producers. In some cases the primary producers delivered grain to the processors on the very day the processors declared bankruptcy.

I do not know what will become of that bill, but I point out to those of you in this chamber who are always concerned, and rightly so, the necessity for making sure that the farmer gets a square deal, particularly for his primary products, because, after all, they are his bread and butter.

What is happening today—and I think I will indicate it to you before I sit down—is that many people are finding the Bankruptcy Act a haven and a sanctuary, and it was never intended to be that.

Like many others in this house, I do not like to quote myself, or say that I was right on any particular occasion because I am not too sure about that. But I did say in October, 1962, that > ...I have known instances where the bankrupt attended the first meeting of creditors, having arrived in his wife's Cadillac car, the children's sports convertible not being available. I have known of cases when creditors' meetings have been adjourned or postponed to await the bankrupt's return from a trip to Florida. These people are commercial pickpockets. They sometimes break a creditor, but more often they hurt him. It is time that this Bankruptcy Act were considered by those who are experts on it.

> There is need to establish under this act a bankruptcy fraud squad, men with long noses, big ears and inquisitive minds, with a determination to root out the evil. The type of bankrupt I am speaking of is the man without shame or decency or a sense of honour. Most of the time, they plan to defraud their creditors: they are looters and ought to be in jail. More often than not, they have been able to use the act in a way in which it was never intended to be used, as a haven. Some of these unprincipled people have grown rich by bankruptcies.

Now, I wish to give a few illustrations, but first may I quote from what the Globe and Mail had to say about this matter on June 14.

> An obvious deficiency in the present legislation would seem to be the requirement that the estate pay the cost of investigating suspected fraud. If a trustee in bankruptcy presses for investigation, he runs the risk of depriving the creditors of whatever small amount is left to them. In fact, a fraudulent bankrupt can escape detection by milking his business so severely that there is no money left to finance an investigation. On top of this, the procedures involved in investigating possible fraud are necesarily so complicated and require such diverse talents that they are bound to be costly.

Further in this article they say:

> Another weakness in the present legislation exists in cases where the debtor is aware that his business is going under and arranges to give preference to certain creditors and then keep the business going for three months. If he does keep on for that period, the payments cannot be attacked under the Bankruptcy Act. Such a practice permits collusion.

That concludes that part of the quotation. Later they say:

> There is inadequacy in provisions for investigation of possible fraud in bankruptcy cases, an enormously complicated and specialized field. Because of the involvement of the Revenue Department and the Government's general responsibility for law enforcement, the federal Government should provide a trained staff of investigators to be used in such cases, working with local police.

Then here are some bankruptcies you may have heard of; the first one was reported in the Telegram on May 17, 1963. I quote:

> Creditors in the bankruptcy of The Zelsman Corporation and its wholly-owned subsidiaries, Starlite Stores Ltd., Taffy Stores Ltd., and Starlite Stores (Hamilton) Ltd. were told here yesterday liabilities are $1,500,000.
> William L. Walton, Toronto chartered accountant was appointed trustee in bankruptcy for the four companies, which operated 17 stores in Toronto and Hamilton.
> Estimated total liabilities of the four interlocking companies is about $1,500,000. Tangible and intangible assets that can be estimated, total around $190,000.

You can appreciate what a shellacking those creditors are taking.

This is from the Toronto Star of May 28:

> Joseph Sprackman yesterday was appointed trustee in bankruptcy for Caldwell Foods Ltd., of Toronto, after company president Morris Walderman, announced it could no longer meet its obligations.
> Secured creditors claimed $148,680, preferred creditors $5,650 and unsecured creditors $190,694. Assets were listed at $18,258.

I have one here from the Montreal Gazette of May 16. Some honourable senators may remember the United Loan Corporation in the province of Quebec. It took people for a $5,000,000 ride in that province three years ago. A protection committee was formed, but nothing has been done since that time. There has been no investigation and nothing at all has been done to bring those people to heel.

I have spoken about the people in Cadillacs and people of affluence in this business of bankruptcy. Here is something from the Toronto Star of May 30:

> Monty Lampard is a dapper little man with a keen sense of the dramatic.
> When he's not in his fashionable apartment on the Avenue Rd. strip just north of St. Clair Ave., he might be ghosting around town in his Rolls Royce. Or at the helm of his yacht near the Royal Canadian Yacht Club.
> Reginald Stuart Lampard was always well connected on Bay St. . . .
> His interest in culture—as well as an educated accent he has maintained since he left England 35 years ago—have made him a favorite in the social circles among Toronto's affluent stockbrokers . . .
> A statement of the affairs of Lampard and Co. Ltd., filed at Osgoode Hall, shows the broker-dealer company had assets of $63,141.95 on March 15. Liabilities were totted up at $625,642.87 . . .
> This left a deficiency, according to the statement, of $562,500.92.

And he is still sporting around Bay Street.

Here is a clipping from the Globe and Mail of June 20, 1963.

> Michele Martino Ltd., Toronto building firm, which owns the MM Discount Centre in Galt, has made an assignment in bankruptcy, leaving about 100 creditors, liabilities of $984,629 and assets of $129,075.

Here is one from last Saturday's Globe and Mail:

> Kenneth Jack McPhail, president of McPhail Vending Services Ltd. which headed a Toronto-based ball-gum vending venture, yesterday made a voluntary assignment at Osgoode Hall under the Bankruptcy Act.
> He declared no assets, and debts totalling $1,973,759 . . .
> Some of the largest creditors are finance companies. Mr. McPhail indicated he owes $416,966 to Industrial Acceptance Corp. Ltd., $237,426 to Triad Acceptance Ltd., and $188,580 to Kent Finance Co. Ltd.

Then he had other creditors, but I suppose the reason for there being no assets is that they took everything as security, which they were entitled to do under the law.

The sums are staggering, and yet nothing happens.

Here is one from the Toronto Star of July 12—

Hon. Mr. Vien: Is this July 12, 1963?

Hon. Mr. Croll: Yes, these are all in 1963.

Hon. Mr. Vien: Not the Quebec one.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Well, I had to find one that would impress itself upon the honourable senator. This one reads:

> A few more persons lost money at Piggyland yesterday.
> More than 1,100 armchair farmers lost an estimated $1,500,000 when Piggyland went bankrupt 16 months ago.

Piggyland was an enterprise that some hotshot sold to farmers up in the North Toronto district. It took 1,100 of them for a ride of a million and a half dollars, and the promoter skipped back to Germany before the bubble burst. I do not think anybody has laid a charge. They cannot be at fault. I do not think the Crown has laid any charge. I do not know, but I suppose that for fraud he could be extradited. However, nothing at all has happened.

Hon. Mr. Farris: What do you suggest?

Hon. Mr. Croll: There are many things I could suggest, and I propose to suggest some things. I suggest that the federal Department of Justice should investigate these grave losses. They may be perfectly honest, but I suspect—

An Hon. Senator: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Surely that is a matter for the attorneys general in the provinces?

Hon. Mr. Croll: These are cases of bankruptcy. All these people have gone into bankruptcy and have sheltered themselves under the Bankruptcy Act. I am not worried about what happens in the provinces. What they are doing is running away from the criminal action and coming under the Bankruptcy Act, and they are getting away with it.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): But criminal actions are undertaken by the provincial attorneys general at the present time.

Hon. Mr. Croll: In all these instances, nothing was done. When you start by trying to interest the local crown attorney in this, he always tells you that he has enough work to do, that this is a civil matter and that if you want to prosecute you can go and lay an information. It may be the business of the attorney general to do this, but he does not do it. However, I am not talking about the attorneys general in the various provinces. Let them do what they like. These people are running away and hiding under the Bankruptcy Act, and this is a matter for the federal Government, and that is why I am speaking about it.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: In regard to the last example you gave, he did not hide under the Bankruptcy Act. He hid in Germany.

Hon. Mr. Croll: But before he went, there was a receiver in charge. He made an assignment, he ran away, and the receiver was put in charge, and he came under the Bankruptcy Act.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I suspect he ran away before the receiver was put in charge.

Hon. Mr. Croll: It does not make any difference when he ran away. The point is that nothing was done, because the matter is one dealing with bankruptcy and the attorney general and the local people will not deal with it.

Hon. Mr. Farris: The Criminal Code is a federal statute and it is for the provinces to enforce it.

Hon. Mr. Croll: I am not suggesting for a moment that this has anything to do with the Criminal Code at all. I say that these people have brought themselves in under the umbrella of the Bankruptcy Act, that bankruptcy is a matter for federal jurisdiction and has nothing to do with the provinces at all. What I suggest now, and what I suggested on the last occasion, is that the bankruptcy section of the federal Department of Justice should have a fraud investigation squad for the purpose of looking into these cases that look suspicious, to see whether fraud has been committed.

Honourable senators, there is also the Piggyland business, with which I was dealing. It is true that this man skipped. He may have skipped before it went into bankruptcy, but it is interesting to note that the pattern is about the same. Too many people are getting away with it, to the point where it is becoming a kind of practice. This fellow, when he skipped away, left behind, according to the press reports, 40 suits—

Hon. Mr. Farris: Not lawsuits?

Hon. Mr. Croll: No, indeed. He also left a Cadillac and a yacht.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: He could not take those on an aeroplane.

Hon. Mr. Croll: He also left $3,000 worth of liquor. I should not think he would have made that sacrifice. However, it is people of this sort who are committing offences and getting away with them. It is a matter for the Government of this country to reach for them as far as they possibly can, by every conceivable law, to make sure they do not get away with this sort of thing.

Very well, honourable senators, I will now bring up something which is a little closer to home. Again within the past week, on July 27, 1963, there were press reports which stated that the Piccadilly club—and now we will see who went into bankruptcy—had in some guise or another been collecting money for tours to the extent of about $85,000.

Hon. Mr. Vien: That is the Piccadilly Club in Toronto.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Yes, in Toronto.

Hon. Mr. Vien: There is a Piccadilly Club in Montreal also. I do not want them to be involved.

Hon. Mr. Croll: They would not wish to be involved in Montreal.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): It was much more than $85,000.

Hon. Mr. Croll: What happened was this. The club was in bad circumstances and they collected $85,000 from about 170 persons for whom they agreed to provide transportation, and they used the money for purposes of running a club. Now they have 170 people stranded—some Britons in Canada and some Canadians in Britain. What happens? They take your money today, assign in bankruptcy tomorrow, and tell you the day afterwards, yet nothing whatever happens. Not only that, but in a statement made to the press, I find this:

> Gerald Peters, managing director of the Piccadilly Club until Friday, told a press conference he operated the social club with money paid by members for charter airline flights.

He is not in jail yet, and I do not know when he will be.

These many, many instances I have indicated are outrageous bankruptcies that ought to be looked into. Something should be done to curb these serious abuses. There should be no umbrella here in Ottawa to protect these people. Ottawa should not be the climate for frauds. I think it is about time that we took it into our heads to end this sort of bankruptcy racketeering. We should not be deterred from taking what may be a first step now, and perhaps some other steps later. I have given ample proof here that some of these fast-buck artists are short-changing and defrauding everything and everybody. We had the Credit Grantors Association tell us in committee of little frauds that took place. Here I come and indicate to you what appear to be serious matters.

I think the time has come, before we entirely lose control, for something to be done about amending the Bankruptcy Act so that it is available to honest people who are unfortunate.

Mr. Choquette: Were there not representations made for over a month by members of local bar associations, or the bar associations from Ontario and Quebec, experts in bankruptcy law? Were these representations not all made to the committee on this very bill, which is identical with the one we had introduced last session?

Hon. Mr. Croll: I have the record of the proceedings here, and none of the representations had anything to do whatever with what I was talking about.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Why did you not come up with representations at the time?

Hon. Mr. Croll: Last October, when this came up, you were sitting in your seat on the other side. You thought I was exaggerating. I presented everything I had available at the time. I was not prepared to argue the matter at all at the time, but since then these matters have been aggravated.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: This bill, Senator Croll, if I may add, has been on the Order Paper since the beginning of this session, and there was ample time, I suggest, for your representations to have been made. Now you bring them up when we are two or three days away from a recess. I doubt your sincerity at times.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That is not parliamentary.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Sincerity in what? That is a pretty serious statement for you to make. This bill was not proceeded with—

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Your Honour, I do not think an honourable gentleman should make a statement—

Hon. Mr. Choquette: I will withdraw that. I meant the delay in proceeding with this particular bill.

Hon. Mr. Croll: It might have been delayed still further, and I do not know that I was responsible for the delay. There was no urgency about the bill at any time. However, in the course of preparing to speak to the house I had occasion to collect these facts and present them here. Strictly, the matter is one for another bill. I know that as well as anyone else. However, it opens the Bankruptcy Act for discussion, and that is what I have been doing here. I hope that these representations are heard by the Minister of Justice and those who are concerned.

Hon. Thomas Vien: Will my honourable friend permit a question? Is it not open to the creditors in every case to lay a charge against any debtor who has committed a criminal act? They can order the trustee to lay a charge before the criminal court—the Bankruptcy Act allows that. If there was any negligence in the cases that my honourable friend has so aptly referred to, I would suggest that the negligence, if any, was on the part of the creditors themselves who did not take the trouble of asking the trustee to lay a charge before the criminal courts.

How could the attorney general of a province follow up all the bankruptcy cases that have developed in every city or town? It is up to the creditors themselves, who are gathered together, who elect inspectors and who are protected by the trustee, to act under the law.

Hon. Mr. Croll: I am aware of that, Senator Vien.

Hon. Mr. Vien: You agree?

Hon. Mr. Croll: I do not agree at all.

Hon. Mr. Vien: You do not agree?

Hon. Mr. Croll: I am only aware.

Hon. Mr. Vien: Do you not agree that this remedy is open?

Hon. Mr. Croll: Yes, under the law, you might be right. But let me tell you that the remedy that is open—

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Senator Croll is worried about those four large finance companies which were bilked of $700,000 or $800,000, and they did not know enough to protect themselves.

Hon. Mr. Croll: I will tell you one thing, that the last people to lay a charge will be the large finance companies—they will do everything in the world to get their money but will not go to court. You cannot look for any relief there.

Of course, they can lay a charge and take the responsibility but there is always a lack of funds in these bankrupt estates. So you wind up with some friendly inspectors who are unwilling to prosecute, and the crown attorney does not want to get mixed up in what he calls civil or business matters. A good many things may be suspected, but they may not be true. What I am suggesting is that you investigate before you say anything about it. When you investigate you will see the disparity between the large liabilities and the small assets—in one case almost $2 million with no assets at all. Surely that should arouse some suspicion in somebody.

So I point out again that this matter of bankruptcy is an involved matter and needs the attention of the officials in the department. They assured us last time that they would be dealing with an amendment to the Bankruptcy Act when this was out of the way. I suspect that they are doing it, but I feel we should keep in mind that it is part of unfinished business, and make sure that the doors of evasion and fraud, which are now open to those people who do not mean well and who have an effect upon our economy, should be closed as quickly as possible.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: May I ask the honourable senator just one question to clarify my mind. What connection if any has the Credit Grantors Association with any one of the cases cited by him?

Hon. Mr. Croll: I did not suggest that there was any. I indicated that when they came before the committee this was their brief.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: They did not have any connection with it?

Hon. Mr. Croll: This information was contained in the brief which they presented to the committee last October, when the original bill was before us.

Hon. Mr. Vien: Honourable senators, I would like to add only a few words to what I have already said.

This bill was studied during the last session of Parliament. It was a well prepared bill. It had given the employees of the Bankruptcy section of the Department of Justice a great deal of concern, and I am told that there is at present an investigation being carried out by that department concerning a complete revision of the Bankruptcy Act.

After consultation with eminent practitioners in various cities and towns across Canada—particularly in Toronto and Montreal, where the most glaring cases arose—it was thought advisable that the amendments which were prepared and presented at the last session should be introduced, for the time being, into the Bankruptcy Act, and that would give us the opportunity to obtain some experience as to the efficiency of the remedies covered by these amendments. While this is being done the officers of the Department of Justice are carrying out a further investigation and study, and are preparing a complete revision of the Bankruptcy Act, which should be presented to Parliament, if not at the next session, at least within the next two years.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That is too long.

Hon. Mr. Vien: In the meantime, I agree with the honourable gentleman that these amendments are not a cure-all. There will always be loopholes through which debtors will defraud their creditors. That has been the case from the beginning of the world, and I do not think that we shall see an end put to fraud in Canada, or elsewhere, during our lifetime. However, it is our duty to do our utmost to improve the Bankruptcy Act and the administration services at Ottawa and in various large centres in Canada where these instances take place in greater number.

I think the bill, as is, is a good one. It is not a perfect bill, and it will not put an end to all frauds. After all, who are the most interested people in the matter of bankruptcy? Are not the creditors themselves interested more than anyone else? They are gathered together; they have their voice when the trustee is chosen by the bankruptcy court; they elect inspectors from among their own number, generally chosen from among the largest creditors. The creditors themselves can always ask the trustee to convene a meeting of the creditors, and if the inspectors appointed by them under the supervision of the bankruptcy court are not capable of rendering justice, I believe that the fault lies in the negligence of the creditors who do not look after their own interests.

What is the most frequent reason for not prosecuting? In my experience the most common reason has been that it is not always easy to prove the criminal intent of a debtor to defraud his creditors. Before laying a charge in the criminal court the trustee will ask the creditors to deposit the money required to carry out the investigation, at least to cover the preliminary investigation. They are generally rather reluctant to commit themselves to send good money after bad money, and the result is that they lose interest in the case, and it becomes a bad debt. That is their own fault. If a criminal act has been committed and they lay the charge and if the debtor is committed to the assizes, then the attorney general will take charge and will prosecute the accused. But the attorney general could not very easily, in a matter between creditor and debtor, presume to lay a charge alleging a criminal act before the creditors themselves decided that it should be done.

Therefore, I would suggest that there might be some closer attention given to the powers of the Superintendent of Bankruptcy to supervise the trustees in various sectors of the country. I think they are doing that to a much greater extent than they did years ago. The supervision may not yet be adequate, but I believe that this bill, as it is, and the improvement it will bring to the Bankruptcy Act, together with the experience acquired within a year or two of the effective use of these amendments, will help those who are studying the complete revision of the Bankruptcy Act to determine what is the final form to be adopted to bring about the results which my honourable friend so aptly and eloquently suggested should be adopted.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: May I ask the honourable senator if there is anything in the present act, or in the proposed amendments, which throws any obligation on the trustee to bring a criminal action when he finds there has been fraud on the part of the debtor? What happens as a rule in these bankruptcies is expressed by the old phrase, that what is everybody's business is nobody's business. It is all right to say that the trustee in bankruptcy may take action, but as a rule there are several of them, and each one is only partially responsible. The inspectors leave it to the trustees because they are in charge and know the whole story.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): And the creditors leave it to the inspectors.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The inspectors leave it to the trustee, and there is no money in it for him to go to the criminal courts.

Take some of the instances that my friend so eloquently laid before us. Take the last one where a company, under a certain manager, takes from people considerable sums of money on the understanding actually expressed, and certainly implied, that it shall be used for the purpose of transportation, in some instances from England to Canada, and in other instances from Canada to England. He does not apply that money to the purpose for which he has accepted it; he uses it for other purposes, and in doing so leaves these people stranded. It seems to me that that is clearly a matter of fraud and a breach of trust.

I would think it was a matter, not for the attorney general but rather for the crown attorney of the district in which the fraud took place. I think there is a duty there, and it should be made a duty of the trustee in bankruptcy to bring such a situation to the attention of the crown attorney. It should not be a matter of expense because he should not have to underwrite the prosecution. The crown attorney does that and usually the county bears the expense.

Therefore, my question is, is there anything in either the act or the amendments which throws any obligation upon the trustee to bring before the proper authorities, under the Criminal Code, a criminal act which comes to his attention? If not, an appropriate amendment is required.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Let me tell my honourable friend that the act provides that the trustee shall make a full report of all he knows about the conduct of a debtor. He has to report any of these incidents of fraud, and everything that the debtor has done prior to or during the bankruptcy, in the administration of the estate.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Honourable senators, before the question is put may I reply to the suggestion that Senator Croll has waited several weeks before presenting his case. The responsibility for that is mine. I was the one who suggested that this debate be held up so that other matters could be discussed in the Senate.

I must say, so far as Senator Croll is concerned, that he was ready to proceed several weeks ago and, in fact, he suggested that he should proceed. However, I felt that there was so much work in the other house that there was no point in our sending over this bill just to add one more item to the many that were already on their Order Paper. If there has been any undue delay I assume full responsibility for it.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING NEXT SITTING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Honourable senators will recall that during the last session this bill was introduced in the House of Commons. It was passed by that house and then came to the Senate. It received second reading here, and was referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce. That committee held several hearings on the bill. Representatives from different organizations and officials of the department were present, and the bill was drastically changed. That bill as amended was presented to this house just about the time Parliament dissolved.

Honourable senators, the bill before us tonight is the bill as revised by the Banking and Commerce Committee last session. In view of these circumstances I suggest that the bill should receive third reading without being sent to the Banking and Commerce Committee. It can then go on to the House of Commons. Accordingly, I move that this bill be placed on the Order Paper for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILL

KINROSS MORTGAGE CORPORATION—COMMONS AMENDMENT CONCURRED IN

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the amendment made by the House of Commons to Bill S-27, to incorporate Kinross Mortgage Corporation.

Hon. John J. Connolly moved that the amendment be concurred in.

He said: Honourable senators, when this bill was before the Senate the proposed company was seeking to be known under the name of Kinross Mortgage Corporation. When the bill reached the House of Commons an amendment was proposed adding to the name clause of the bill the words "La Société d'Hypothèques Kinross". The proposed amendment simply gives the company a name in French.

With leave, I move concurrence in the amendment proposed by the House of Commons.

Amendment concurred in.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Leave having been given to revert to the order for Notices of Motions:

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I table the following documents:

Supplementary Estimates (B) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1964. (English and French texts).

Supplementary Estimates (C) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1964. (English and French texts).

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, before moving that the house do now adjourn, may I refer to business that is likely to come before us tomorrow.

Today we have set up the Special Committee on Aging, and we have also given second reading to a bill to amend the Bankruptcy Act, which bill will be up for third reading tomorrow. This leaves on the Order Paper for tomorrow the resumption of the debate on the motion for an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

At the present time there are, to my knowledge, three senators who would like to speak on that debate. I hope we can hear them all tomorrow afternoon. One is Honourable Senator Fournier (De Lanaudière), who adjourned the debate. There is also the honourable senator from Vancouver South—

Hon. Mr. Farris: Have you forgotten my name?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Certainly not—I have not forgotten the name of your constituency. As there are several senators from Vancouver, probably I should have referred to the honourable senator by name. I am sure we are all glad to see honourable Senator Farris with us. I hope that he will speak tomorrow in this debate in reply to the Throne Speech.

There is another honourable senator who may speak. If I name him as the honourable senator from Ottawa, you will wonder who it is. Honourable senators, you may be surprised when I say that honourable Senator Paterson would like to participate in this debate. Therefore, we should have a very good afternoon tomorrow.

We must not forget that there is also on the Order Paper the bill sponsored by honourable Senator Pouliot, to amend the Marriage and Divorce Act. I presume the honourable senator will be ready to go on tomorrow.

In addition to that, there is considerable business before the other house, some of which may reach us. However I expect we will sit both tomorrow afternoon and evening.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, July 30, 1963

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald tabled:

Report on the administration of allowances for blind persons in Canada, for the year ended March 31, 1962, pursuant to section 12 of the Blind Persons Act, chapter 17, R.S.C., 1952 and amending Statutes. (English text).

Report on the administration of allowances for disabled persons in Canada, for the year ended March 31, 1962, pursuant to section 12 of the Disabled Persons Act, chapter 55 of the Statutes of Canada, 1953-54 and amending Statutes. (English text).

Report on the administration of old age assistance in Canada, for the year ended March 31, 1962, pursuant to section 12 of the Old Age Assistance Act, chapter 199, R.S.C., 1952 and amending Statutes. (English text).

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON AGING

REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. David A. Croll, Chairman of the Special Committee on Aging, presented the following report:

The Special Committee of the Senate on Aging make their first report, as follows:

Your committee recommend:

1. That their quorum be reduced to seven (7) members.

2. That they be authorized to print 1,000 copies in English and 300 copies in French of their day to day proceedings.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Croll moved that the report of the committee be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

ICE CONDITIONS—ST. LAWRENCE RIVER

REPORTED CONSTRUCTION OF ICE-BOOM AT MONTREAL—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Gordon B. Isnor: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are called I wish to ask a question of the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford), based on an article which appeared in the Financial Times of Montreal on July 15, 1963 entitled: "World's Fair could give ice-free port".

This article refers to the construction of a boom across the St. Lawrence River which is to be commenced at once, and in 1967 and in following years it will be maintained by the Government.

As all honourable senators know, the official icebreaking work is performed to prevent flooding, but if what is said in this article is correct then it will mean that an icebreaker will be regularly on the St. Lawrence.

I do not need to remind honourable senators, particularly those from the Maritimes and from Quebec, that last year the first ship entered the river on January 30, as compared to March 12 the previous year. This was made possible, of course, by the extensive work done by icebreakers.

The article reads in part:

> Maritimes interests are fighting this movement, claiming that the government-supported icebreaking amounts to an artificial shipping subsidy which is causing a loss of business for their ports. Halifax and Saint John depend for a large part of their traffic on up-river ports being ice-bound for part of the year. But since the ice-breaking program began in the mid-fifties, both Trois Rivières and Quebec have become year-round ports.
> The big fear in the Maritimes is that Montreal will follow them, and although port officials here are non-committal about it, the new ice-boom could speed this day.

I am particularly interested in the cost. In this respect the article says:

> It will cost about $8 million, $2.5 million of which will come from the City of Montreal. The federal government will build and maintain it after the fair is over.

My questions are as follows:

(a) Is the statement as printed in the Financial Times of Montreal, July 15th, 1963, correct as to fact?

(b) To which department of the government will the $5½ million be charged?

(c) To which department of Government will the maintenance be charged?

(d) What is the annual estimated cost of maintenance?

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE ACT

BILL TO AMEND—DEBATE ON MOTION FOR SECOND READING STANDS

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Pouliot, seconded by the Honourable Senator Stambaugh, for second reading of Bill S-32, intituled: "An Act to amend the Marriage and Divorce Act".

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, may I, with leave of the Senate, move that this order stand until Wednesday, October 9 next.

Motion agreed to.

BANKRUPTCY ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald moved the third reading of Bill S-2, to amend the Bankruptcy Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

The Senate resumed from yesterday consideration of His Excellency the Administrator's speech at the opening of the session, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Lefrançois, seconded by Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland), for an address in reply thereto.

(For report of speech delivered this day by Honourable Senator Fournier (De Lanaudiere), see Debates of the Senate tomorrow.)

Hon. Norman McL. Paterson: Honourable senators, I take this opportunity of extending to His Honour the Speaker congratulations on his appointment and my very best wishes for the future.

The story I have to tell today is somewhat in the nature of a report of a committee. It is a success story, and I hope it will be found interesting.

On June 2, 1955 I introduced a bill in this house having to do with a convention between the United States and Canada in regard to the control of a parasite known as the sea lamprey. The convention required nine signatures in the United States and two in Canada. Eight of the states of the union and one Canadian province, Ontario, border on the Great Lakes. I shall have to go back a little, because a number of senators who are here now did not hear my speech of June 2, 1955.

When the Welland Canal was first built in 1829 there was no sign of the lamprey, but in 1921, two years after the larger and deeper Welland Canal was finished in 1919, a fisherman found a peculiar dark eel in his net. He took this eel to the authorities in Toronto and was told that it was a sea lamprey, a parasite which preyed on lake trout and whitefish.

Since 1921 the sea lamprey has almost completely eliminated the valuable trout fishing and whitefish fishing in Lake Erie, which indeed has little that the sea lamprey has not destroyed. Further up the Great Lakes, to Lake Michigan, Lake Huron and Georgian Bay those areas used to find fishing highly profitable. I understand that from Lake Huron and Lake Michigan 14 million pounds of trout per year, valued at from $5 million to $7 million, were once taken. This has been brought to as low as 500,000 pounds per year.

All during this time, the control of the sea lamprey was by trial and error. First of all, it was necessary to ascertain the habits of the sea lamprey. These creatures go up muddy creeks and rivers; they lay their eggs in sandy soil, and in about three weeks' time they hatch out what are called ammochete. This can hardly be termed a fish, but it finds its way out of the sand into the soft mud, where it lies from five to seven years. When it comes out of the soft mud it becomes at once a parasite, about ten inches long, and goes into the open water, where it preys mostly on young trout and game fish. The idea was to build barriers across these muddy creeks and rivers to stop the lamprey from going up, for if they are thus prevented, they do not lay eggs and they die.

The convention to which I have referred was extended for ten years for the purpose of having the cycle complete—the five years, plus one year for growth. The result was then to be complete, and a review was to be made in eight years. This is the eighth year of the convention which was made in 1955. The report will not be out until the fall. Possibly senators will be interested in hearing the report when it becomes available.

I mentioned that I was going to tell more or less a success story. May I indicate what has ensued? These iron barriers and the electrodes they put across the rivers and streams to prevent the entry of the lamprey were all right to a certain extent, but when a moose came along and knocked them down, or a rainstorm washed them away, or one of many other things interfered, the lamprey still made progress. In the meantime there were on hand supplies for five years anyway.

The University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, Michigan, started working on a chemical. After 6,000 trials with different chemicals they developed one called T.F.M., a phenol poison, which proved to be very successful in a proportion of two parts of the chemical to one million of water. That is toxic to lamprey. There had to be seven parts of the chemical to one million of water to be toxic to fish. You can just imagine the difficulty of testing the amount of water going through the stream so as to add exactly the correct amount of chemical, and, remember, this chemical is pretty expensive, $2.50 a pound. The success part of the story is, I am told confidentially, that there is a great deal cheaper way of making it.

Our Dr. Pritchard is chairman of the committee working with the people at the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor. I spent a morning with him, and he explained to me that these barriers were kept up for the purpose of trapping the eels. There are 80 creeks being treated on Lake Superior, and from 1958 to 1962 there were approximately 60,000 eels trapped. The last trap showed only 8,000 as against 60,000 the year before, which proves conclusively that the lamprey is being conquered.

A week ago yesterday, Rossport, a little town on Lake Superior this side of Nipigon, had its annual fish derby, which has been held for many years. The local paper reports that they very seldom have had a successful fish derby, and the catch is mostly young, four- or five-pound fish. They would much rather get ten-pound fish; but to the members of this convention one of the best signs is that the young fish are coming along, and very few are showing signs of being wounded by the lamprey.

They have very high hopes of continuing with the work to further success in conquering the lamprey, and they hope that before long Georgian Bay will make a comeback with its fishing.

Hon. J. W. de B. Farris: Honourable senators, I found that this unusually hot weather disturbed my throat a little, and this morning I dropped into a store and asked for some tablets that would cure hoarseness. The girl waiting on me asked some questions and I told her that I wanted to speak in the Senate this afternoon. I added, "I hope you are a Liberal". She glared at me and said, "On the contrary". However, I took the medicine, and if anything happens to me I want to be on record.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: You are a very bold man.

Hon. Mr. Farris: I have had other adventures as well as that.

Honourable senators, I took part in the opening of this session, and I regard this somewhat as the closing of the session because I think our resumption in the fall will really constitute at that time a new session after we have had the summer to think things over. But in the meantime I took some satisfaction, not in my absence but in the fact that before I left I moved a motion to permit us to refer to our fellow senators by name rather than by designation. That was carried, and I congratulate myself on it, because I think we have got along much better in a good family way by using our names rather than some reference to designation or place of residence.

It is usual in addresses made in reply to the Speech from the Throne to congratulate the various persons who are taking part, including you, Mr. Speaker. I have read the speeches of others who have made these expressions of congratulation and, beginning with yourself, I do not need to repeat them—I most emphatically endorse all that has been said.

One thing has disturbed me a little. There is one senator opposite for whom I have the highest regard. I consider him as one of the best appointments that Mr. Diefenbaker made. I can see good reasons for that appointment—the then Prime Minister was selecting a man who could give him advice on industrial and financial matters. I do not mind using the privilege I secured for myself to tell you that I have in mind Senator McCutcheon. Notwithstanding what I am about to say I still believe he is one of the most useful gentlemen we have in this house to give advice which we need from time to time on financial and industrial matters.

So I turn to the speeches that were made in regard to the new Department of Industry, and knowing that Senator McCutcheon had had this branch of activity in his portfolio as Minister of Trade and Commerce, I thought that now we would get some real enlightenment on how this new department would work out. I have been greatly disappointed. I found him as critical as he could have been. While criticism is all right in this house, and I have been guilty of it more than once myself, I think the purpose of this Department of Industry was most obvious—it was to try to improve financial conditions and make better provisions for employment. I would have thought that once it had become inevitable that this was going to come about, my honourable friend Senator McCutcheon, with his wide experience, would be one of the first to give it support.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I accepted the inevitable in the Banking and Commerce Committee.

Hon. Mr. Farris: We have this legislation, it is going to go ahead, and it needs all the assistance we can get from experienced men to make it as successful as possible, and they should not be deterred by any political considerations.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Honourable senators, I now wish to come to some of the matters which I consider of great urgency at this time. I mention these matters at this time knowing that we cannot cure them today or tomorrow, but at least if they are not cured we know we will have an opportunity to think about them and give consideration to them later on in the year.

One of the things that seems to me that ought to be considered first is that justice in some form should be given to those who have applied for divorce and whose cases are pending, some for two years, some for one year, and some more recent. I understand there are now about a thousand divorce petitions on record, and half of them are cases which, under the very able and conscientious leadership of Senator Roebuck, were passed on by his committee, were referred to the Senate, and without a single challenging voice from anyone as to grievances they might have, were unanimously accepted and passed by the Senate and sent to the House of Commons.

Now, honourable senators, the practice for a good many years has been for the House of Commons, generally speaking, to accept the report of the Senate and the Senate committee and without undue delay to pass the bills through that house so that they could then be attended to by the Governor General and become law. But two years or more ago two men undertook to set themselves up in the Commons as being of higher authority than the Parliament of Canada, and in the intervening period the system that had been carried on so satisfactorily for many years past has been completely blocked.

Now I know that there is opposition in the Senate and Commons to divorce, and that it is largely on religious grounds. It is for that reason that those of us who disagree with that view, with the greatest respect, bow to their wishes in a way that we would not think of doing if the objections were political and not religious.

And so it has developed that in all of the provinces of Canada except Quebec and Newfoundland there are now courts of divorce. There are no courts of divorce in those two provinces, and while members who are opposed to divorce have accepted that fact, they have done so on a theory that I do not intend to discuss except to say that if there must be divorces they prefer them to be granted by act of Parliament rather than by a divorce court.

My honourable friend Senator Aseltine, some few years ago when he was Leader of the Opposition, brought in a bill to provide that these cases go to the Exchequer Court. I supported him in that measure, but it was defeated in the Senate and never went to the House of Commons. So we are continuing this system of divorce by act of Parliament.

Now that system has fallen down. It has not failed because of religious opposition or, so far as I know, for any intelligent reason whatever; but it has been blocked. How? By obstruction. And how was that obstruction possible? These are private bills and when they go to the House of Commons, under the rules there they have the same limitation of right as do other private bills. I have forgotten, if I ever did know, how many hours a week are allowed for private bills, but it is a very limited time. The result is that these two men—under the guise of saying, "Oh, we must investigate all the evidence in every case, therefore, we must read all the evidence on each case"—have blocked the passage of most of these bills. I do not know how many divorce bills have been allowed to pass in the course of a session, but I would say at the most two or three, or perhaps a half dozen.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Very few.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Very few—and the rest died on the Order Paper.

I challenge the good faith of any men who undertook such a task in defiance of the will of the Senate and the Commons as a whole. How many bills are passed on the recommendations and investigations of officials? There is legislation involving hundreds of millions of dollars voted by Parliament—and which these two men must vote for—concerning which we accept the investigations and recommendations of others. That is necessary in business, and it is necessary in sensible, political administration.

The suggestion has been made that we turn the divorce work over to the Senate alone. The irony of that is that these two men cannot turn it over for each individual case, but they are willing to turn it over holus-bolus for every case.

I am a practising lawyer; last month was my sixtieth anniversary of practice, and I know something about divorce proceedings in other provinces. I have been a member of the Senate Divorce Committee, though I do not attend its meetings as often as I should. However, when at times my honourable friend, the chairman of the committee, has been short of a lawyer of experience he has called on me and I have always been very glad to serve. It is my considered opinion that there is no tribunal in any province that more carefully and more efficiently deals with the investigation and recommendation of divorces than does the Senate Standing Committee on Divorce.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Farris: I know what I am talking about, and I have never heard a sensible challenge to that statement.

That being so, honourable senators, what are we going to do about it? I do not know how much you appreciate, or how much the public appreciates, the tragedies that are being created. A great many of these petitioners for divorce are women with husbands who are not worthy of the name, and they are not entitled to say, "Whom God hath joined together, let no man put asunder," because I am sure God never had anything to do with joining them.

What is the result? They have had children; life with these men has become impossible, and divorces are applied for. These people are separated: the husbands would not live with their wives, and their wives would not live with them. They have come to Parliament under the law; they have paid their money under the law; they engage lawyers, and as part of the established custom these lawyers appear, and they have to wear their gowns and ties, just as they would in any court. Witnesses are called, and the procedure is the same as in the courts, except for one difference. While in the provincial courts you have only one judge, here you have, generally speaking, five judges—certainly never fewer than three—to consider each case. The members of the committee generally comprise a lawyer, a doctor and a businessman. For those reasons they are better qualified to size up these cases than any single judge in Canada. Now it has all gone by the board.

There are a good many remedies being suggested.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): May I interrupt the honourable gentleman for a moment? I might point out to him that so far this year no one in the House of Commons has blocked any of the divorce bills which have been sent forward from this chamber. The other day we sent 150 bills forward from this house.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: No; 250.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): The first lot?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The first lot was 50.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Those 50 bills were presented to the House of Commons, received first reading, and were referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills without objection from anyone.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: They received second reading.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Yes. They received second reading, and were referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills, from which it would appear there is no objection this year in the other house to the passing of those bills.

There are now several hundred other bills before the House of Commons, and I am hopeful that they will also be referred to the Miscellaneous Private Bills Committee without objection.

I bring these facts to the attention of the honourable senator so that he will know that, at any rate up to the present time, in the other house there has been no blocking of divorce bills.

Hon. Mr. Farris: There is no passing of them either.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I am not defending anyone, but I think we should face the facts. It is true there has been no passing of them, because there has been no opportunity to pass them in the other house.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I think we should also face the fact that the other house has passed very few bills of any kind.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): That is correct, with respect to private bills. Speaking of these divorce bills, the House of Commons has not had a chance to pass any of them this year because the first bills arrived in the other place only on Tuesday or Wednesday of last week. They immediately received first and second reading and were referred to the Miscellaneous Private Bills Committee. I am merely bringing these facts to the attention of the honourable senator.

Hon. Mr. Farris: I think it would be a good idea if Senator Roebuck gave his views on what is happening. I would like to ask permission for him to do so.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: A sort of tripartite speech!

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: If information is being sought in the course of another honourable senator's address, I am very glad to say what I know about it.

In the earlier part of the session the two gentlemen to whom my friend Senator Farris has referred made a public announcement which was printed in the press generally, to the effect that they would not allow our bills to pass this session. Largely in consequence of that and because of our experience of last session and the two previous sessions, under the authorization of the Divorce Committee I announced in this house that we would not ask people to come here, with all the expense attached to a lawsuit, until we had some assurance from the other house that these bills would be attended to properly.

We have carried out that understanding during this short portion of the session, until very recently when there was some intimation—the exact details of which it is unnecessary for me to describe—that perhaps the old bills, those of last session and the session before, might be allowed by the objectors to pass. Consequently, as an emergency measure, we re-processed 251 of these bills—and that is not a small matter—and sent them to the other house in the hope that something might occur.

It is true that the present session is different from the previous ones. In the course of the previous sessions there was time available to take care of this matter, but it was neglected and allowed to fall into this condition.

I have at present an assurance from the most responsible people in the Commons that something would be done. There was a recognition of the injustice, the outrageous character of the situation, and I have been assured that something will be done. So far nothing has been done, but I know that the situation has been recognized, considered and dealt with to the extent of the ability of those in charge, and I am very hopeful that, at least some, if not all, of the 251 cases will be passed. I am still hopeful. I would have resigned long since if I had not continued to be hopeful that common sense would in due season prevail.

Hon. Mr. Farris: There is an old saying that hope deferred maketh the heart sick.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes, and mine has been sick on many occasions.

Hon. Mr. Farris: I hope my friend is right in his hopefulness, but I do not think that that hope, based on very slight evidence, justifies my honourable leader in interrupting my speech.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I am sorry. I thought I was giving my honourable friend some information which he did not have, to the effect that the other house had given second reading to the bills that went over there this session.

Hon. Mr. Farris: They have done that in other years.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): No, they have not; they were blocked. This is the first time it has been done in the last three years. I thought I was giving the house information which it did not have.

Hon. Mr. Farris: I understand the difficulty is in getting them through the committee, not in getting second reading.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The difficulty is getting them through the house, not through the committee. The committee has been well chaired in the past.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Then all I have to say is that if the Government has this matter in hand to the extent that the old procedure will be adopted, and as a result the blockade by these two men will no longer be operated, then I highly commend the Government for what it is doing.

It has been suggested that the Senate be given the power to pass on divorce bills without their having to be passed by the Commons. Of course, that is utterly impractical, because under the British North America Act all legislation must be passed by the Commons and the Senate, and assented to by the Crown. Otherwise it would be entirely unconstitutional.

The other suggestion I have heard is that power should be given to the Senate to pass, instead of a bill, a resolution which would have the effect of giving a divorce. I do not approve of that. I think if that were done as a last resort we might accept it, but I would point out to honourable senators that that would have the effect of making the Senate a kind of divorce court, and this we do not want.

While there is the feeling that we would prefer to have divorce turned over to a court altogether, a motion to this effect brought in by Senator Aseltine was defeated. As I say, while we would prefer to have it done that way, we are willing, and I am sure my honourable friend the chairman of the Divorce Committee is willing, to give our time and energy in perpetuating the system we have had heretofore. But, I repeat, that to give the Senate power to pass on divorce and to dissolve marriages by resolution would be simply turning this house into a kind of divorce court. I, for one, hope we will find a better remedy than that. It seems to me that the difficulty today arising out of this blockade in the other place, whether it be in second reading or the committee stage, can be cured by adopting the simple method of changing the rules of the other house so that divorce bills shall be treated as public bills. That action would very soon overcome the obstruction.

It gives me pleasure to join in the hopes of the chairman of our committee that there will be a satisfactory solution to this matter. That, however, does not conclude the speech I have in mind. It is only one of the matters I intend to deal with.

I understand there is to be legislation after the adjournment in regard to redistribution of electoral divisions so that voting shall be on a fairer basis than it is at the present time. I feel it should be more representative, and I think every member of the House of Commons and every senator is in favour of that. But I would point out that there is a difficulty in our system of voting that results in the disenfranchisement of more voters than does the question of defective assignment in the definition of and dividing of the electoral divisions.

I have here the report of the Chief Electoral Officer for the year 1962. I had another volume of it at home in which I had marked many cases to illustrate the point I am making, but I have not had an opportunity to mark this copy. However, anybody who is interested can look it up.

I remember one case in which there were two candidates so close together that there were only about 100 votes between them. But there were in that particular constituency about 5,000 voters who had not voted for either one of those two high men. As a result there were in that constituency 5,000 voters who did not have a say about who was elected.

I spoke on this subject once before in this chamber, either last year or the year before, and I call attention to it again. I do not expect my views to be accepted but I hope that some honourable senators at least will give some thought to what I am suggesting. The remedy I propose is not a new one. I recall the father of the honourable Senator Haig telling me they had the system of the single transferable vote in operation in parts of Manitoba and that it was working satisfactorily. We once had that system in the province of British Columbia. I was not in the Legislature at that time, but I was fairly close to some of its members. Many years before that I had been attorney general and I had used my influence and the influence of other people to persuade Boss Johnson, the premier, to introduce the single transferable vote system into British Columbia. That was done, and the electorate voted according to that system.

What is this single transferable vote system? It is very simple. If there are three candidates running in an election, you simply vote twice. This does not mean that you vote at different times, but on each ballot paper you have a first and a second choice. If your first-choice candidate gets a clear majority, that of course ensures his election. However, if he does not get a clear majority, and if he is, in fact, the lowest of the three, his votes are lost, and his second preference votes are distributed between the two higher candidates. Applying this to the illustration I have already given, the result would be that where the two high candidates were only 100 votes apart, the 5,000 voters would have had an opportunity of deciding which of those two, with only 100 votes separating them, should be elected.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Could a voter vote Liberal and then vote Conservative on the same ballot?

Hon. Mr. Farris: You might have that opportunity.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: I do not know of any who would avail themselves of it.

Hon. Mr. Farris: I do not know why it hurts my honourable friend so much that he would repudiate the whole system. It may be that of the two that were high, one was a Liberal and the other a Conservative, and that it was a Social Crediter that was the first choice which was thrown in the discard. He might have an opportunity of voting as between Liberal and Conservative, and in that case I am sure he would have sense enough to know which one to vote for.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: The Liberals voted with Social Credit, so why should he not vote for them?

Hon. Mr. Farris: As a result of our having that system in British Columbia in that election our Liberal Government under Boss Johnson was defeated, and on the first vote the socialist was elected; but when the second votes that were provided for under the act were added to the first vote, Mr. Bennett was elected. The first thing Mr. Bennett did after he came into office was to pass legislation throwing down the ladder upon which he had climbed. There may be many honourable senators who will say: "Well, it would have been better had he had only the first vote and let the socialists in", and others may say no. But, whichever way it may happen in any individual case, the principle was sound in that every voter in that election had a choice of determining who was to be the victor in the end.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: But Mr. Bennett was not prepared to take a chance the second time.

Hon. Mr. Farris: No, he was not. I am not by any means defending Mr. Bennett.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Neither is anybody else these days.

Hon. Mr. Farris: I am not so sure about that. Strange things happened yesterday, but I do not intend to discuss them at this time. There will be some interesting developments as a result of that judgment, but I am making no predictions.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: There is nobody more qualified than you are, sir, to make those predictions.

Hon. Mr. Farris: I have not been retained to do so. I may say this to my honourable friend Senator McCutcheon, that when this case first arose I was approached by both sides to act as counsel.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Why didn't you accept?

Hon. Mr. Farris: It was for the very good reason that before that bill was brought in by Mr. Bennett there were rumours of it, but at that time the B.C. Power Company and B.C. Electric were practically one. I was counsel for both of them, and we had long conferences as to whether or not that legislation could be brought in. When Mr. Bennett did bring it in I felt I was bound by professional etiquette, at least, not to take a brief from either side.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): That might not apply on the appeal.

Hon. Mr. Farris: That is a different question. I have not been approached on that.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): The judgment was handed down only yesterday.

Hon. Mr. Farris: It might be a case of where Barkis is willing, but I do not know.

I think I have said about all I wish to say on the question of proportional representation as opposed to the single transferable vote. Many people confuse the two, but they are the antithesis of each other. Proportional representation tends to increase the number of parties. Every time a man gets his proportion he gets elected whether he has a clear majority or not, while under the system I am talking about it is the reverse; nobody is elected until he gets a clear majority, and everybody is given an opportunity to take part in that clear majority.

There are two reasons why I still urge this system, and will urge it in another session if I am spared to do so. First, I do not favour multiplicity of parties at all. If people want it that way they will get it that way, but they may be very sorry in the end that they encouraged more separate parties. I think an opportunity of voting in such a way as I have described would tend to eliminate a superfluity of parties.

Secondly, it certainly will be more representative in the democratic form of government, and it is well worth while being carried out. I do not know whether my friend Senator Haig is in favour of it or not. He has seen it at close range, and it might be interesting for us at some time to hear his views on it.

Honourable senators, there is another subject matter which, although not mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, was actively discussed and considered before the election. I refer to the question of reform of the Senate. It will be remembered that Mr. Diefenbaker introduced a bill for the reform of the Senate. I have always had an idea that this phrase "reform of the Senate" is a misnomer. I think what should be said is that there is a need of reforms in Parliament, and that those reforms should be divided into two groups. It is not reform of the Commons, but reforms in the Commons; it is not reform of the Senate, but reforms in the Senate. We are not presuming to reform the Commons, although some of us could give some mighty good advice on that if asked for it, but reforms in the Senate should be initiated in the Senate and by the Senate, and the advice of the experienced senators should be at all times sought.

I have been a member of the Senate for 27 years. There are only two senators ahead of me, and they are my friends, Senator Horner and Senator Aseltine. When I first came down here I was uneasy for much of the time. I was at that time active in the practice of law—I was much younger and more vigorous then than I am now.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): You were younger. We do not agree with the latter part.

Hon. Mr. Farris: I will say that I was more contentious in those days. I did not like the way things were going here. I left a busy practice and came down to Ottawa. This was during the days of Senator Dandurand, and the Senate at that time was a little different from what it is now. It has gradually drifted into the present system whereby we sit, generally speaking, on Tuesday nights, very often for half an hour or an hour, then again on Wednesdays, and on Thursdays we hurry up to get through the business so that the boys can catch their trains to Toronto, Montreal and other places.

That system did not appeal to me. I made complaints to the leaders of the day, and I was not alone. Senator Wishart Robertson, who was at one time the leader of our party here, was very co-operative, and he held the same views. We asked: "Why don't they send more government bills over from the Commons to be initiated in this house?" After all, the great bulk of legislation is government legislation. "Oh", they said, "the ministers like to introduce their bills themselves".

We soon corrected that. We passed a rule, which is still in force in the Senate—and I venture to say that many of the new senators do not even know it—that allows ministers from the House of Commons to come into the Senate to introduce bills. They can take a seat here and discuss their bills, and they have the full right of reply, just as they have in the other place.

That, to my mind, affords us a great advantage. It does two things. It gives senators more to do at the particular time and, honourable senators, make no mistake about the fact that there is a basic difference between discussion in the two houses.

As a rule, in the Senate our only objective is to analyse and discuss bills on their merits. Over in the other house—this is not a criticism but a recognition of facts—members have not only to remember the merits of the particular bill, but they have to remember the merits of it from the standpoint of the political situation of the party. That is human nature and there would be no good in trying to change it; I would not be foolish enough to suggest that such procedure should be changed. It should not be changed. From the time a member rises and makes a speech on the merits of a bill, on its political advantages and its industrial advantages, and then says a few words for the boys back home, that is the end of it.

In addition, there are many more members of the House of Commons than there are members of the Senate. Consequently, a bill can be fully dealt with, investigated and passed through committee in the Senate very often in one-fifth of the time it takes in the House of Commons.

If a certain number of these bills were brought in here by the minister concerned, were presented in the Senate in the same way as they would be presented in the House of Commons, and if we had an opportunity to go into them as they do in the Commons, it seems to me that the country would benefit more by the intelligent discussion and consideration of those bills by the members of this house.

I am quite willing to put up the members of this house against an equal number of members of the House of Commons and say that the ability and the earnestness of the members of this house is quite equal to that of the members of the Commons.

The full investigation of many of these bills could take place in this house contemporaneously with the investigation of other bills in the House of Commons. What would be the result? I suggest the result would be that it would give a freer discussion in the Commons of the bills which are dealt with there, and it would mean an effective investigation of the bills which would be sent here to the Senate. I would say also that if such a practice were adopted and if full advantage were taken of it, it would shorten the sessions of Parliament by four to six weeks at least, without sacrificing anything in so doing.

When the Liberals were in office they took some advantage of that. The Honourable Mr. Chevrier, the present Minister of Justice, came over to this house a couple of times. So also did the Honourable Brooke Claxton. I do not remember the names of all the ministers who were here. The procedure worked all right for some time. Then I think the ministers really felt they would prefer to get the first crack at those who represent the voters directly, than those who represent the voters in an indirect way in the Senate. Then the idea was more or less dropped.

A few sessions ago, when honourable Senator Aseltine was Leader of the Government in this house, I asked him if there was any intention to take advantage of such a procedure. He shrugged his shoulders and rather intimated that they did not think much of it. To my mind, that is a mistake. I believe this procedure would be for the good of the Senate; it would be good for the morale of the Senate; it would be a demonstration of the effectiveness of the Senate, with the full opportunity given to it. It would also hasten the end of the sessions, so that senators and members of the House of Commons would not have to sit through this blistering weather. It would be a good thing and I still heartily recommend it.

The introduction of such a practice would not require any amendment of the rules. I think it should be recognized as something worth while.

I suggest to my honourable Leader that he nudge some of his colleagues and suggest that they bring some of their bills over here —not merely formal bills but those which would require some investigation and discussion—and let us deal with them. This would not lessen but would increase the respect for and benefit of Parliament.

There is another point about reform in connection with the Senate. This point is not one of reform in the Senate but reform of the procedure by which senators are appointed. I do not suggest that the right to nominate senators should be taken away from the Government. I have thought this over many times and I have read much discussion about it; and even when the Conservatives were in power I was quite satisfied that it was the best system we had.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I do not know.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Well, I do. I think it is the best system. I have never heard a better suggestion. I have heard it suggested that the Senate should be abolished altogether, but I would not be in favour of that. Honourable senators know that I have quite an advantage, speaking at my age, in that I can be pretty independent in my thinking. I would like to live and die a senator; but as far as being a senator is concerned, if it be thought that I am useless and no good, well, that is all right—I take my chances on that.

Honourable senators, in concluding on this particular matter, I might add that at an earlier time when the Liberals were in power the Minister of Justice was the Honourable Mr. Garson of Manitoba. I called on him one day and said: "Mr. Garson, we have too many Liberals in the Senate and not enough vigorous Conservatives. Why don't you put in one or two outstanding Conservatives to give more aggressive representation in that house?"

He looked at me. I suppose this was a private conversation, but I do not think he would object to my mentioning it. He looked at me and said: "I think every minister would agree with your suggestion, except with respect to his own province." That is no reflection, as that is the practical way all politicians look at things.

As far as I am concerned, I am not one of those foolish people who say, "No patronage!" Patronage is a mighty useful thing in politics, if it is not abused. If you do not look after your friends, you are not going to have many; and if you do not have many friends you will not get elected, and those who get elected will not be as good as you would be. Therefore, we must be practical in these things; but the practical application of that rule should not be carried to the extent of public disadvantage.

With very few exceptions, there are admittedly only two groups in this house, Liberals and Conservatives. If there are independents, they are mighty few, and I do not know just what you would call them.

Hon. Mr. Molson: Well, now—

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Where do you stand?

Hon. Mr. Farris: He is my next-door neighbour in this building. He is a good senator, anyway.

What I am saying would be an illustration of the fact that some men like honourable Senator Molson would be of considerable value here. I am not advocating that the Government should pick outstanding men in the New Democratic Party, for instance, nor in the British Columbia Social Credit party. But I do say that from the fine illustration we have already had, that it would be a good idea to have here some more people who are not labelled either Liberal or Conservative. For instance, I would suggest one man of whom I am thinking, Mr. Coldwell. One certainly could not call him a Liberal or a Conservative.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): We would like to see him here.

Hon. Mr. Farris: He is a man who, if he were a member of this house, would give his undivided and conscientious time and thought to the welfare of the country, as he saw it.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I think he would make a great contribution.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Yes, he would make a great contribution to this house. When I said that to one of my friends, he replied, "Why should we encourage the New Democratic Party?" I am not encouraging the New Democratic Party. I have no use for them; I do not approve of their leader; I do not approve of their policies; but I do approve of Mr. Coldwell as an outstanding man, whom it would be worth while to have in this house.

Honourable senators, I am watching the clock in order that I shall be able to conclude before the hour of adjournment. I am not going to speak about the bill which I believe is expected to arrive here shortly in regard to indemnities.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: You must not, because the Leader of the Government would not allow me to speak about bills that have not arrived here.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Well, if you are in favour of it—

Hon. Mr. Farris: At this stage I am not expressing my opinion as to whether or not allowances are too high. However, I do wish to say that possibly it will bring home to us senators the fact that there ought to be more activity in the Senate, and that such activity is not going to come by just getting up and making abstract speeches. That does not work. Once in a while I have heard some of the finest speeches on abstract questions by members of this house, but they did not get publicity, and without publicity they are not of great value.

The question of whether remuneration is sufficient or is too much reminds me of a story I once told when I was president of the Canadian Bar Association. It was my final address, and I was speaking about lawyers' fees. I said that I believed that a lawyer's remuneration should be such that he is worthy of his hire. To illustrate my point I told this story.

Mr. Hall, once a lawyer in Victoria B.C., and at one time a member of the legislature, and for many years police magistrate in Victoria, came to my office in Vancouver to retain me in a proposed action. I went all over the case with him and I said, "Henry, I believe you have a good case and I think you should succeed." He said, "Well, there is one drawback; my client hasn't much money." I drew myself up and said, "Well, Henry, a lawyer is worthy of his hire". To which he rejoined, "Oh, hell, we are going to do better for you than that." So I do not wish to say any more about this question of being worthy of one's hire. There will be lots of comments to the contrary, no matter how convincing we may speak in Parliament.

Honourable senators, I want to say a word about old age. Last session Mr. Diefenbaker introduced a bill to reform the Senate. The basis of that reform was to get rid of the old fellows in the Senate. I think the first thing he should have done was to consult many members of the Senate, including some of the senior members. I would like to ask Senator Aseltine, who was leader in this house at one time, if he had ever been consulted by Mr. Diefenbaker on the proposed reform of the Senate. As far as I know, certainly no member on the other side of the house was consulted and yet I think we have forgotten more about the matter than Mr. Diefenbaker knew about it. I put a question, and I would like to hear Mr. Diefenbaker answer it. Does he think that age is a full test of the reforms that are needed in the Senate? Certainly I could tell him things which are far more needed, even if he were right in saying that might be included.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Honourable senators, may I ask my friend if he thinks it was a full test of reform of the banks that the Government he now represents put an age limit of 75 years on bank directors?

Hon. Mr. Farris: Well, not only did they do that—

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: They did a lot of other things too.

Hon. Mr. Farris: But I do not think they established any precedent. I do not think my honourable friend wishes to suggest that we ought to learn from the bankers or from the directors of the banks in regard to old age. They hire young men on starvation wages, and they kick them out at 65 years of age.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I would not know; I have retired.

Hon. Mr. Farris: That is just about the time they are getting really useful. They do that because they can get younger fellows cheaper. I want it understood that I did not raise this question, being a solicitor for a bank. I should like to put to Mr. Diefenbaker this question on the reform of the Senate, and with regard to these old fellows in the Senate. Has anybody ever pointed out a single action on the part of the Senate that has been detrimental to the welfare of the country; and, in particular, is he able to point out a single case where harm has been done by reason of some older members of the Senate?

It is an embarrassing subject to discuss in more particulars than that. However, let me name a few of the older members: Tom Crerar, Dr. Grant, from Prince Edward Island, Senator Roebuck, the chairman of the divorce committee—the best chairman, in my experience of 27 years, that that committee has ever had—Tom Reid, who is still giving service on the International Pacific Salmon Fisheries Commission. I would hesitate to mention myself, except that it might be useful as one horrible example among the prime group of senators I have mentioned. In any event, on the subject of all the talk about reforming the Senate by kicking out old senators and limiting the age of new senators, I insist on the proposition that it is not possible to point to a single instance since Confederation of any action by the Senate to the detriment of this country.

Honourable senators, in conclusion, may I say that I have tried not to be contentious in my speech. I think the time has come when in the Senate, of all places, there ought to be all possible co-operation and friendliness of spirit. Indeed, I feel that this spirit exists to a large extent, and even if there have been times when perhaps we have become a little excited and a little over critical, on the whole our best service has been done when we have shown a spirit of co-operation and recognized each others good qualities rather than our possible failings.

I have before me the poem of a man who was great in his time—Thomas Babington Macaulay, born in 1800 and died in 1859. He had not reached the stage of being an old man when he wrote this poem. I shall read one stanza:

> Then none was for a party;
> Then all were for the state;
> Then the great man helped the poor,
> And the poor man loved the great:
> Then lands were fairly portioned;
> Then spoils were fairly sold:
> The Romans were like brothers
> In the brave days of old.

I do not have ideas that would justify hoping for that condition in this country, particularly the line which says, "Then spoils were fairly sold." However, the idea that the poet embodied might well be taken to heart in our wishes and our dream for Canada.

Hon. L. M. Gouin: Honourable senators, it is very difficult to rise to speak after Senator Farris, a man of such intellectual power, such experience and such wisdom.

Moreover, I have to apologize for taking part in this debate so late in the session and at this late hour, but for some personal reasons it has been absolutely impossible for me to speak before the present date.

I attach the greatest importance to the remarks which I am going to make because I consider that it is my duty, owing to the present situation in Quebec, to call your attention to the various points which I am going to discuss. I hope that I will offend nobody, but I consider it as an imperative duty to give the explanations that will follow.

In the Speech from the Throne special stress is laid on the importance of fostering among us a spirit of co-operation. It is on that very word "co-operation" that the senator who has just spoken finished his address. Such a spirit of co-operation is essential to the survival of Canada and to its normal growth and progress.

At the beginning of the Speech from the Throne it is stated:

> You are deliberating the course of our country in times of great change throughout the world...

It must be realized that radical and fundamental changes are taking place just now, particularly in Quebec.

In my own province, again to refer to the Speech from the Throne, I read:

> Familiar ways of thought and action are becoming less certain guides...The task before us is to seek out... new paths that will lead us surely forward.

Our present Governments, here in Ottawa, as well as in Quebec, are of opinion that a new direction must be given to our federal system. I share that opinion and I am convinced that the vast majority of French-Canadians believe, as I do, that the partnership between our ethnic group and the English-speaking group must be made truly equal.

In my youth I learned from Laurier's own lips that racial harmony is essential to the welfare of our country. All my life I have tried to be faithful to that doctrine of mutual respect and toleration. Therefore, I consider that the attainment of this is within our power, through the constitutional means of which we dispose to solve our present problems. The situation in Quebec has reached an acute stage. Some angry young men have rendered a terrible disservice to our people by resorting to violence. Of course, I dissociate myself completely from those who consider murder as an instrument of their ill-advised policy. French-Canadians have always enjoyed a reputation of moderation and of sound judgment. I trust that we will preserve those traditional qualities. But, we want a greater degree of equality and of fair play to prevail in our relations with the other members of our federal union.

In order to understand our mentality and our aims, other Canadians must realize that French-Canadians form what I would call a distinct nationality in the sense given to that word by William Henry Moore. This great writer published in 1918 a book intituled "The Clash". He depicted in terms which have never been surpassed the chasm which separated our two great races at the end of the First World War.

Mr. Moore considered that seven factors are required to constitute a nationality:

1. Ethnical identity.
2. Identity of language.
3. The unity of religion.
4. Common economic interests.
5. Habitation subject to common geographical conditions—

what I would call habitat,

6. Common history and traditions.
7. A uniform theory of government.

I submit that French-Canadians clearly form a nationality according to the standards set forth by Mr. Moore. I do not think that the term "A French-Canadian Nation" would be more appropriate. Though that expression is now currently used in Quebec, I believe that it would be perfectly applicable only if our French-Canadian population were a distinct political entity enjoying separately complete independence and sovereignty.

Personally, I have always spoken of our Canadian nation which comprises as its two main elements on one hand the offsprings of the original settlers who came from France and, on the other hand, all those who belong to the English-speaking world. I do not want to be misunderstood, and I am absolutely opposed to the brutal system of the melting pot. All Canadians are entitled to continue to cherish and foster the particular culture which they have inherited from their ancestors. This not only applies to Canadians of English, Scottish, Irish or Welsh extraction, it applies also to our fellow countrymen whose old country is Germany, Poland, Ukraine, Italy, Greece, Iceland, Scandinavia, Japan, China or any other country in the world. Of course, a distinction must be made between those two main partners, as I would
