11.0 to 12.0 t

IMAGE EVALUATION TEST TARGET (MT-3)

Photographic Sciences Corporation

23 WEST MAIN STREET WEBSTER, N.Y. 14580 (716) 872-4503

STATE ESTATE OF THE STATE OF TH

O WE REST OF THE SECOND SECOND

CIHM/ICMH Microfiche Series.

CIHM/ICMH Collection de microfiches.

Canadian Institute for Historical Microreproductions / Institut canadian de microreproductions historiques

(C) 1984

Technical and Bibliographic Notes/Notes techniques et bibliographiques

original cop copy which which may reproductio	y available for fi may be bibliogr alter any of the n, or which may	to obtain the bea Iming. Features o aphically unique, images in the eignificantly cha , are checked bei	f this	qu'il de c poin une mod	lui a été p et exemple et de vue bi image repr lification d	crofilmé le n lossible de s aire qui sont ibilographiq roduite, ou ans la méth ci-dessous.	e procurer. peut-être ue, qui peu qui peuven	Les détails uniques du vent modifi t exiger une red covers/ rture de couleur		•		Coloured Pages de damaged/ rture endommag	j óo			Pages das Pages en	maged/ dommagées restored and/o					stored and/o title missing/ de couverture	manque		V		coloured, si colorées, ta red maps/ géographiques	en couleur			Pages der Pages dér
		r than blue or bla outre que bleue o			Showthro		*
	red plates and/or les et/ou illustra	r illustrations/ tions en couleur				f print varie légale de l'il
	with other mate		ų.			supplement d du metéri
La re li	interior margin/ ure serrée peut d	se shadows or dis causer de l'ombre marge intérieure	ou de la		Seule édi	ion available tion disponi	ble	ed by errata have to the property of the pr	r within the text seen omitted from out que certaine une restauration	ring restoration n. Whenever possil m filming/ s pages blanches apparaissent dan t possible, ces pa	ajoutées as le texte,	.1	ensure the Les pages obscurcie etc., ont	ues, etc., hi a best possi i totalement is par un fet été filmées : mellleure li	ble image/ t ou partiell lillet d'errat à nouveau (ement a, une pelui de façon à
	onal comments: entaires supplér				,			, duction ratio chec ux de réduction i		sous. 22X		26X		× 144	18X				Z0A
	2X	16X	20X		24X		28X	32X

The copy filmed here has been reproduced thanks to the generosity of:

University of Saskatchewan Saskatoon

The images appearing here are the best quality possible considering the condition and legibility of the original copy and in keeping with the filming contract specifications.

Original copies in printed paper covers are filmed beginning with the front cover and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression, or the back cover when appropriate. All other original copies are filmed beginning on the first page with a printed or illustrated impression, and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression.

The last recorded frame on each microfiche shall contain the symbol → (meaning "CONTINUED"), or the symbol ▼ (meaning "END"), whichever applies.

Mape, plates, charts, etc., may be filmed at different reduction ratios. Those too large to be entirely included in one exposure are filmed beginning in the upper left hand corner, left to right and top to bottom, as meny frames as required. The following diagrams illustrate the method:

L'exemplaire filmé fut reproduit grâce à la générosité de:

University of Saskatchewan Saskatoon

Les images suivantes ont été reproduites avec le plus grand soin, compte tenu de la condition et de la netteté de l'exempleire filmé, et en conformité avec les conditions du contrat de filmage.

Les exemplaires originaux dont la couverture en papier est imprimée sont filmés en commençant par le premier plat et en terminant soit par la dernière page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration, soit par le second plat, selon le cas. Tous les autres exemplaires originaux sont filmés en commençant par le première page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration et en terminant par la dernière page qui comporte une telle empreinte.

Un des symboles suivants apparaîtra sur la dernière image de chaque microfiche, seion le cas: le symbole → signifie "A SUIVRE", le symbole ▼ signifie "FIN".

Les cartes, planches, tableaux, etc., peuvent être filmés à des taux de réduction différents. Lorsque le document est trop grand pour être reproduit en un seul cliché, il est filmé à partir de l'angle supérieur gauche, de gauche à droite, et de haut en bas, en prenant le nombre d'images nécessaire. Les diagrammes suivants illustrent le méthode.

1	2	3
---	---	---

1 2 3

1	2	3
4	5	6

to

Itails

s du

nodifier r une image

pelure, n à

32X

5 Z . ericular va-

LETTER

ADDRESSED TO THE

ABBE RAYNAL,

ON THE AFFAIRS OF

NORTH-AMERICA:

IN WHICH

THE MISTAKES IN THE ABBE'S ACCOUNT

OF THE

REVOLUTION OF AMERICA,

ARE CORRECTED AND CLEARED UP.

BY THOMAS PAINE,

SECRETARY FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS TO CONGRESS DURING THE AMERICAN WAR, AND AUTHOR OF THE WORKS, "COMMON SENSE, AND RIGHTS OF MAN."

LONDON:

PRINTED FOR J. S. JORDAN, No. 166, FLEET-STREET.

M,DCC,XCI.

1014 IV

where and the state of the stat

The range of two policy cultures, against a special property of the cultures o

INTRODUCTION.

A LONDON Translation of an original work in French, by the Abbe Raynal, which treats of the Revolution of North America, having been reprinted in Philadelphia, and other parts of the continent; and as the distance at which the Abbe is placed from the American theatre of war and politics, has occasioned him to mistake several facts, or misconceive the causes or principles by which they were produced; the following Tract, therefore, is published with a view to rectify them, and prevent even accidental errors intermixing with history, under the sanction of time and silence.

The Editor of the London edition has entitled it, "The Revolution of America, by the ABBE RAYNAL;" and the American printers have followed the example. But I have understood, and I believe my information just, that the piece, which is more properly

Reflections on the Revolution, was unfairly purloined from the printer which the Abbe employed, or from the manuscript copy, and is only a part of a larger work then in the press, or preparing for it. The person who procured it, appears to have been an Englishman; and though, in an advertisement persixed to the London edition, he has endeavoured to gloss over the embezzlement with professions of patriotism, and to soften it with high encomiums on the author, yet the action, in any view in which it can be placed, is illiberal and unparadonable.

"In the course of his travels," fays he, " the translator happily succeeded in obtain-"ing a copy of this exquisite little piece, " which has not yet made its appearance from " any press. He publishes a French edition, " in favour of those who will feel its eloquent " reasoning more forcibly in its native lan-"guage, at the same time with the follow-"ing translation of it; in which he has "been desirous, perhaps in vain, that all the " warmth, the grace, the strength, the dig-" nity of the original, should not be lost. " And he flatters himfelf, that the indulgence " of the illustrious historian will not be " wanting to a man, who, of his own " motion, ee .

W.

"

"

"

abl for ter

witha

the

to t

and wo

this ftra

con

"motion, has taken the liberty to give this?
"composition to the public, only front ag "ftrong persuasion, that this? momentous a
"argument will be useful, since critical con"juncture, to that country which he loves a
"with an ardour that can be exceeded "only by the nobler slame which burns in a
"the bosom of the philanthrophic author, of for the freedom and happiness of all the a "countries upon earth.

This plausibility of setting off a dishonourable action, may pass for patriotism and sound principles, with those who do not enter into its demerits, and whose interest is not injured, nor their happiness affected thereby. But it is more than probable, notwithstanding the declarations it contains, that the copy was obtained for the sake of profiting by the sale of a new and popular work, and that the professions are but a garb to the fraud.

1

t di

It may with propriety be remarked, that in all countries where literature is protected, and it never can flourish where it is not, the works of an author are his legal property; and to treat letters in any other light than this, is to banish them from the country, or strangle them in the birth.—The embezzlement from the Abbe Raynal, was, it is true, committed by one country upon another, and therefore shews no defect in the laws But it is nevertheless a breach of of either. civil manners and literary justice; neither can it be any apology, that because the countries are at war, literature shall be entitled to depredation*.

But the forestalling the Abbe's publication by London editions, both in French and English, and thereby not only defrauding him, and throwing an expensive publication on his hands by anticipating the fale, are only the fmaller injuries which fuch conduct may occasion. A man's opinions, whether written or in thought, are his own, till he pleases to publish them himself; and it is adding cruelty to injustice, to make him the author of what future reflection or better information might occasion him to suppress or amend. There are declarations and fentiments in the Abbe's piece, which, for my

in the Burn of the city for the state own part, I did not expect to find, and fuch inter

rate degr

as

cafi

effe

and had mig

befo

ner

few at o revi

tem

tion

of j

with fanc

time to a

shall vigo

poste

argu

or th

It

ter,

^{*} The state of literature in America, must one day become a subjest of legislative consideration. Hitherto it has been a disinterested volunteer in the fervice of the Revolution, and no man thought of profits : but when peace shall give time and opportunity for study, the country will deprive itself of the honour and service of letters, and the improvement of science, unless sufficient laws are made to prevent depredations on literary property. It is well worth remarking, that Ruffia, who but a few years ago was fearcely known in Europe, owes a large share of her present greatness to the close attention fle has paid, and the wife encouragement fle has given to every branch of science and learning; and we have almost the same instance in France, in the reign of Louis XIV. and release to the

as himself, on a revisal, might have seen occasion to change; but the anticipated piracy effectually prevented him the opportunity, and precipitated him into difficulties, which, had it not been for such ungenerous fraud, might not have happened.

This mode of making an author appear before his time, will appear still more ungenerous, when we confider how exceedingly few men there are in any country, who can at once, and without the aid of reflection and revifal, combine warm passions with a cool temper, and the full expansion of imagination with the natural and necessary gravity of judgment, fo as to be rightly balanced within themselves, and to make a reader feel fancy, and understand justly at the same To call three powers of the mind into action at once, in a manner that neither shall interrupt, and that each shall aid and vigorate the other, is a talent very rarely possessed.

It often happens, that the weight of an argument is loft by the wit of fetting it off, or the judgment difordered by an intemperate irritation of the passions: yet a certain. degree of animation must be felt by the writer, and raised in the reader, in order to interest the attention; and a sufficient scope given

28

n

d

g

n

re

1-s,

n,

 \mathbf{d}

m er

ſs

ti-

'ny

ch

t of dy, ers, eto

שייטד lofe

ven

-1119

given to the imagination, to enable it to create in the mind a fight of the persons, characters, and circumstances of the subject; for without these, the judgment will feel little or no excitement to office, and its determinations will be cold, sluggish, and imperfect. But if either or both of the two former are raised too high, or heated too much, the judgment will be jostled from its seat, and the whole matter, however important in itself, will diminish into a pantomime of the mind, in which we create images that promote no other purpose than amusement.

The Abbe's writings bear evident marks of that extension and rapidness of thinking, and quickness of sensation, which of all others require revifal, and the more particularly fo when applied to the living characters of nations or individuals in a state of war. The least misinformation or misconception leads to some wrong conclusion, and an error believed, becomes the progenitor of others. And as the Abbe has suffered some inconveniences in France, by mis-stating certain circumstances of the war, and the characters of the parties therein, it becomes some apology for him, that those errors were precipitated into the world by the avarice of an ungenerous enemy.

LETTER

of

he

tiq

ju!

lo

the

ex

Ale

du

of

LETTER

ADDRESSED TO THE

ABBE RAYNAL,

ON THE APPAIRS OF

NORTH-AMERICA.

O an author of fuch diftinguished reputation as the Abbe Raynal, it might very well become me to apologize for the prefent undertaking; but as to be right, is the first wish of philosophy, and the first principle of history, he will, I presume, accept from me a declaration of my motives, which are those of doing justice, in preserence to any complimental apology I might otherwise make. The Abbe, in the course of his work, has, in some instances, extolled without a reason, and wounded without a cause. He has given fame where it was not Aleferved, and withheld it where it was juftly due; and appears to be so frequently in and out of temper with his Jubjects and parties, that few or none of them are decilively and uniformly marked.

B

MITTIE

tipels norts

CER

to ns, St; eel ereror-

its

orme hat

rks

ng,

all

cu-

ters

var.

ion

rror

ers.

-9Ví

cir-

's of ogy

ated

ene-

It is yet too foon to write the history of the revolution; and whoever attempts it precipitately, will unavoidably mistake characters and circumstances, and involve himself in error and disticulty. Things, like men, are seldom understood rightly at first sight. But the Abbe is wrong even in the soundation of his work: that is, he has misconceived and mis-stated the causes which produced the rupture between England and her then colonies, and which led on, step by step, unstudied and uncontrived on the part of America, to a revolution, which has engaged the attention, and affected the interest of Europe.

To prove this, I shall bring forward a passage, which, though placed towards the latter part of the Abbe's work, is more intimately connected with the beginning; and in which, speaking of the original cause of the dispute, he declares himself in the following manner—

"None," fayshe, "of those energetic causes "which have produced so many revolutions upon the globe, existed in North-America. "Neither religion nor laws had there been out- raged. The blood of martyrs or patriots had not there streamed from scaffolds. Mo- rals had not there been insulted. Manners, customs, habits, no object dear to nations, had there been the sport of ridicule. Arbitrary power had not there torn any inhabitant from the arms of his family and his friends, to drag him to a dreary dungeon. Public "order

e p

er 0

ec ir ec'ni

C

imp non that prov ener

Ameticul exist

exist was when the with decl must now effect was ee order had not been there inverted. The es principles of administration had not been "changed there; and the maxims of govern-" ment had there always remained the fame. "The whole question was reduced to the know-"ing, whether the mother country had, or had er not, a right to lay, directly or indirectly, er a flight tax upon the colonies?"

On this extraordinary passage, it may not be improper, in general terms, to remark, that none can feel like those that suffer and that for a man to be a competent judge of the provocative, or, as the Abbe styles them, the energetic causes of the revolution, he must have relided in America.

The Abbe, in faying that the feveral particulars he has enumerated, did not exist in America, and neglecting to point out the particular period in which he means they did not exist, reduces thereby his declaration to a nullity, by taking away all meaning from the passage.

They did not exist in 1763, and they all existed before 1776; consequently, as there was a time when they did not, and another when they did exist, the time when, constitutes the effence of the fact, and not to give it, is to withhold the only evidence, which proves the declaration right or wrong, and on which it must stand or fall. But the declaration, as it now appears, unaccompanied by time, has an effect in holding out to the world, that there was no real cause for the revolution, because it denies denies the existence of all those causes which are supposed to be justifiable, and which the

B 2

d

iì

n

n

P

61

Ь

b

0 h

to

to

ci

ft

to

I

k

Abbe styles energetic.

I confess myself exceedingly at a loss to find out the time to which the Abbe alludes ; because, in another part of the work, in speaking of the stamp-act which was passed in 1764, he stiles it "An usurpation of the Americans negli precious and facred rights." Consequently he here admits the most energetic of all causes, that is, an usurpation of the most precious and facred rights, to have existed in America twelve years before the declaration of independence. and ten years before the breaking out of hostilities .- The time, therefore, in which the paragraph is true, must be antecedent to the stampact; but as at that time there was no revolution, nor any idea of one, it confequently applies without a meaning; and as it cannot, on the Abbe's own principle, be applied to any time after the stamp-act, it is therefore a wandering folitary paragraph, connected with nothing, and at variance with every thing. I a steel ada ser

The stamp-act, it is true, was repealed in two years after it was passed; but it was immediately sollowed by one of infinitely more mischievous magnitude, I mean the declaratory act, which asserted the right, as it was stiled, of the British Parliament, "to bind America in all cases what. soever."

the Americans most precious and sacred rights,

h

d

g

C

ß

C

5,

d

C

h

the declaratory act lest them no right at all, and contained the full-grown seeds of the most despotic government ever exercised in the world. It placed America not only in the lowest, but in the basest state of vassalage; because it demanded an unconditional submission in every thing, or, as the act expresses it, in all eases what soever: And what renders this act the more offensive, is, that it appears to have been passed as an act of mercy; truly then it may be said, that the tender mercies of the wicked are cruel.

All the original charters from the Crown of England, under the faith of which the adventures of the old world fettled in the new, were by this act displaced from their foundations; because, contrary to the nature of them, which was that of a compact, they were now made subject to repeal or alteration at the mere will of one party only. The whole condition of America was thus put into the hands of the Parliament or the Ministry, without leaving to her the least right in any case whatsoever.

There is no despotism to which this iniquitous law did not extend; and though it might have been convenient in the execution of it, to have consulted manners and habits, the principle of the act made all tyranny legal. It stopt no-where. It went to every thing. It took in with it the whole life of a man, or, if I may so express it, an eternity of circumstances. It is the nature of law to require obedience,

ME

th

to 74 for

I a

ing

66 is,

an

of.

na

ing

**

66

66

66 not qu

M

cir

the

on 63.

to,

on,

1:30

but this demanded servitude; and the condition of an American, under the operation of it, was not that of a subject, but a vassal. Tyranny has often been established without law, and sometimes against it; but the history of mankind does not produce another instance, in which it hath been established by law. It is an audacious outrage upon civil government, and cannot be too much exposed, in order to be sufficiently detested.

Neither could it be faid after this, that the legislature of that country any longer made laws for this, but that it gave out commands; for, wherein differed an act of parliament, constructed on this principle, and operating in this manner, over an unrepresented people, from the orders of a military establishment?

The parliament of England, with respect to America, was not septennial, but perpetual. It appeared to the latter, a body always in being. Its election or its expiration were to her the same as if her members succeeded by inheritance, or went out by death, or lived for ever, or were appointed to it as a matter of office. Therefore, for the people of England to have any just conception of the mind of America, respecting this extraordinary act, they must suppose all election and expiration in that country to cease for ever, and the present parliament, its heirs, &c. to be perpetual. In this case, I ask, what would the most clamorous of them think, were an act to be passed, declaring the right of such a parliament

ment to bind them in all cases whatsoever? For this word, whatsoever, would go as effectually to their Magna Charta, Bill of Rights, Trials by Juries, &c. as it went to the charters and forms of government in America.

I am persuaded, that the Gentleman to whom I address these remarks, will not, after the passing this act, say, "That the principles of administration had not been changed in America, and that the maxims of government had there been always the same. For here is, in principle, a total overthrow of the whole; and not a subversion only, but an annihilation of the soundation of liberty, and absolute domination established in its stead.

The Abbe likewise states the case exceedingly wrong and injuriously, when he says, that the whole question was reduced to the knowing, whether the mother country had, or had not, right to lay, directly or indirectly, a slight tax upon the colonies?"—This was not the whole of the question; neither was the quantity of the tax the object, either to the Ministry, or to the Americans. It was the principle, of which the tax made but a part, and the quantity still less that formed the ground on which America opposed.

The tax on tea, which is the tax here alluded to, was neither more or less than an experiment to establish the practice of the declaratory law upon, modelled into the more fashionable phrase of the universal supremacy of parliament. For, until this time, the declaratory law had lain dormant, and the farmers of it had contented themselves with barely declaring an opinion.

Therefore, the whole question with America, in the opening of the dispute, was, Shall we be bound in all cases whatsoever by the British Parliament, or shall we not? For submission to the tea or tax-act implied an acknowledgment of the declaratory act, or, in other words, of the universal supremacy of Parliament, which, as they never intended to do, it was necessary they should oppose it in its first stage of execution.

It is probable the Abbe has been led into this mistake, by perusing detached pieces in some of the American news-papers, for, in a case where all were interested, every one had a right to give his opinion; there were many who, with the best intentions, did not chuse the best, nor indeed the true ground, to defend their cause upon. They selt themselves right by a general impulse, without being able to separate, analyze, and arrange the parts.

I am somewhat unwilling to examine too minutely into the whole of this extraordinary passage of the Abbe, lest I should appear to treat it with severity; otherwise I could shew that not a single declaration is justly sounded. For instance, the reviving an obsolete act of the reign of Henry the Eighth, and sitting it to the Americans, by authority of which they were to be seized and brought from America to

England,

En

any of t

Par

frie

dun

bef

aga

had

in t

of I

177 F

pro

nall

lutio

righ

the man

atta

proc

una

lar f

perf

The

wen

they riou

thec

beer

exac

England, and there imprisoned and tried for any supposed offences, was, in the worst sense of the words, to tear them, by the arbitary power of Parliament, from the arms of their families and friends, and drag them not only to dreary but distant dungeons. Yet this act was contrived some years before the breaking out of hostilities. And again, though the blood of martyrs and patriots had not streamed on the scassolds, it streamed in the streets, in the massacre of the inhabitants of Boston, by the British soldiery, in the year 1770.

Had the Abbe said, that the causes which produced the revolution in America were originally different from those which produced revolutions in other parts of the globe, he had been right. Here the value and quality of liberty, the nature of government, and the dignity of man, were known and understood, and the attachment of the Americans to these principles produced the revolution as a natural and almost unavoidable consequence. They had no particular family to fet up or pull down. Nothing of personality was incorporated with their cause. They started even-handed with each other, and went no faster into the several stages of it than they were driven by the unrelenting and imperious conduct of Britain. Nay, in the last act, the declaration of independence, they had nearly been too late; for had it not been declared at the exact time it was, I see no period in their affairs affairs since, in which it could have been declared with the same effect, and probably not at all.

But the object being formed before the reverse of fortune took place, that is, before the operations of the gloomy campaign of 1776, their honour, their interest, their every thing, called loudly on them to maintain it; and that glow of thought and energy of heart, which even a distant prospect of independence inspires, gave considence to their hopes, and resolution to their conduct, which a state of dependence could never have reached. They looked forwards to happier days and scenes of rest, and qualified the hardships of the campaign by contemplating the establishment of their new-born system.

If, on the other hand, we take a review of what part Britain has acted, we shall find every thing which ought to make a nation blush: the most vulgar abuse, accompanied by that species of haughtiness which distinguishes the hero of a mob from the character of a gentle-It was equally as much from her manners, as from her injustice, that she lost the colonies. By the latter she provoked their principles, by the former she wore out their temper: and it ought to be held forth as an example to the world, to show how necessary it is to conduct the business of government with civility. In short, other revolutions may have originated in caprice, or generated in ambition; but here, the most unoffending humility was tortured into

C

ir

P

C

to

T

q

di

ra

th an

m

w

in an

CO

m

CO

fid

ev

de

un

wa

to

wi

into rage, and the infancy of existence made to weep.

A union so extensive, continued, and determined, fuffering with patience, and never in difpair, could not have been produced by common causes. It must be something capable of reaching the whole foul of man, and arming it with perpetual energy. In vain is it to look for precedents among the revolutions of former ages, to find out, by comparison, the causes of this. The spring, the progress, the object, the consequences, nay, the men, their habits of thinking, and all the circumstances of the country are different. Those of other nations are, in general, little more than the history of their quarrels; they are marked by no important character in the annals of events; mixt in the mass of general matters, they occupy but a common page; and while the chief of the successful partizans stept into power, the plundered multitude sat down and forrowed. Few, very few of them, are accompanied with reformation, either in government or manners; many of them with the most confummate profligacy. Triumph on the one fide, and mifery on the other, were the only events. Pains, punishments, torture, and death, were made the business of mankind, until compassion, the fairest associate of the heart, was driven from its place, and the eye accustomed to continual cruelty, could behold it without offence.

0

d

of

y

RE

6 ic

r;

to 1-

7.

đ

ę,

d

to

But as the principles of the present revolu-C 2 tion tion differed from those which preceded it; so likewise has the conduct of America, both in government and war. Neither the soul singer of disgrace, nor the bloody hand of vengeance, has hitherto put a blot upon her same. Her victories have received a lustre from a greatness of lenity, and her laws been permitted to sumber where they might justly have awakened to punish. War, so much the trade of the world, has here been only the business of necessity; and when the necessity shall cease, her very enemies must consess, that as she drew the sword in her just defence, she used it without cruelty, and sheathed it without revenge.

As it is not my design to extend these remarks to a history, I shall now take my leave of this passage of the Abbe, with an observation, which, until something unfolds itself to convince me otherwise, I cannot avoid believing to be true; —which is, that it was the fixed determination of the British Cabinet to quarrel with America at all events.

They (the members who compose the Cabinet) had no doubt of success, if they could once bring it to the issue of a battle; and they expected from a conquest, what they could neither propose with decency, nor hope for by negociation. The charters and constitutions of the colonies were become to them matters of offence; and their rapid progress in property and population were disgustingly beheld as the growing and natural means of independence.

Thev

Th

red

one

and

and

me

end

exp

hov

and

but inte

the

of

poi

tory

Con Brid

mei

of I ful

aga

pow

lang

to t

and

read

erro

fcui

and

Ι

They faw no way to retain them long, but by reducing them in time. A conquest would at once have made them both lords and landlords, and put them in possession both of the revenue and the rental. The whole trouble of government would have ceased in a victory, and a final end been put to remonstrance and debate. The experience of the stamp-act hath taught them how to quarrel with the advantages of cover and convenience; and they had nothing to do but to renew the scene, and put contention into motion. They hoped for a rebellion, and they made one. They expected a declaration of independence, and they were not disappointed. But, after this, they looked for victory, and they obtained a defeat.

t

e

a,

e

Y

If this be taken as the generating cause of the contest, then is every part of the conduct of the British ministry consistent, from the commencement of the dispute, until the signing the treaty of Paris; after which, conquest becomes doubtful; they retreated to negociation, and were again defeated.

Though the Abbe possesses and displays great powers of genius, and is a master of stile and language, he seems not to pay equal attention to the office of an historian. His facts are coldly and carelessly stated. They neither inform the reader, nor interest him. Many of them are erroneous, and most of them defective and obscure. It is undoubtedly both an ornament and a useful addition to history to accompany it with maxims and reflections. They afford likewise an agreeable change to the style, and a more diversissed manner of expression a but it is absolutely necessary that the root from whence they spring, or the soundations on which they are raised, should be well attended to, which in this work are not. The Abbe hastens through his narrations, as if he was glad to get from them, that he may enter the more copious field of eloquence and imagination.

The actions of Trenton and Princeton in New-Jersey, in December 1776, and January following, on which the sate of America stood for a while trembling on the point of suspense, and from which the most important consequences followed, are comprised within a single paragraph, faintly conceived, and barren of character, circumstance, and description.

"On the 25th of December," fays the Abbe, they (the Americans) croffed the Delaware, and fell accidentally upon Trenton, which was occupied by fifteen hundred of the twelve thousand Hessians, sold in so base a manner by their avaricious master to the king of Great Britain. This corps was massacred, taken, or dispersed. Eight days after, three English regiments were in like manner driven from Princeton, but after having better supported their reputation than the foreign troops in their pay."

This is all the account which is given of these most interesting events. The Abbe has preceded prec mili time Yor men Hos muc to fe tory Illan tion: are l ton, hund of F loffe retre dista man the f the with leng pulli in bu

Panie
It
of da can of look
they
for t

preceded them by two or three pages on the military operations of both armies, from the time of General Howe arriving before New-York from Halifax, and the vast reinforcements of British and foreign troops with Lord Howe from England. But in these there is so much mistake, and so many omissions, that, to fet them right, must be the business of history, and not of a letter. The action of Long-Island is but barely hinted at, and the operations at the White-Plains wholly omitted: as are likewise the attack and loss of Fort Washington, with a garrison of about two thousand five hundred men, and the precipitate evacuation of Fort Lee, in consequence thereof; which josses were in a great measure the cause of the retreat through the Jersies to the Delaware, a distance of about ninety miles. Neither is the manner of the retreat described, which, from the season of the year, the nature of the country, the nearness of the two armies, (sometimes within fight and shot of each other for such a length of way), the rear of the one employed in pulling down bridges, and the van of the other in building them up, must necessarily be accompanied with many interesting circumstances.

It was a period of distresses. A crisis rather of danger than of hope. There is no description can do it justice; and even the actors in it, looking back upon the scene, are surprised how they got through, and at a loss to account for those powers of the mind, and springs of animation,

$

d

animation, by which they withstood the force of accumulated misfortune.

It was expected, that the time for which the army was inlifted, would carry the campaign fo far into the winter, that the severity of the season, and the consequent condition of the roads, would prevent any material operation of the enemy, until the new army could be raised for the next year. And I mention it as a matter worthy of attention by all suture historians, that the movements of the American army, until the attack upon the Hessian post at Trenton, the 26th of December, are to be considered as operating to effect no other principal purpose than delay, and to wear away the campaign under all the disadvantages of an unequal force, with as little missortune as possible.

But the loss of the garrison at Fort Washington on the 16th of November, and the expiration of the time of a considerable part of the army, so early as the 30th of the same month, and which were to be followed by almost daily expirations afterwards, made retreat the only final expedient. To these circumstances may be added the forlorn and destitute condition of the sew that remained; for the garrison of Fort Lee, which composed almost the whole of the retreat, had been obliged to abandon it so instantaneously, that every article of stores and baggage was lest behind; and in this destitute condition, without tent or blanket, and without any other utensils to dress their provision, than for the

wh

fur fur within from All cul gen trac from the lay affecting

the It Was

me

De

wii pli what they procured by the way, they performed a march of about ninety miles, and had the address and management to prolong it to the space of nineteen days.

By this unexpected, or rather unthought of turn of affairs, the country was in an instant surprised into confusion, and found an enemy within its bowels, without an army to oppose him. There were no succours to be had, but from the free-will offering of the inhabitants. All was choice, and every man reasoned for himself.

2 :0 :2 £

H

-

c

e

It was in this fituation of affairs, equally calculated to confound or to inspire, that the gentleman, the merchant, the farmer, the tradesman, and the labourer, mutually turned from all the conveniences of home, to perform the duties of private soldiers, and to undergo the severities of a winter campaign. The delay so judiciously contrived on the retreat, afforded time for the volunteer reinforcements to join General Washington on the Delaware.

The Abbe is likewise wrong in saying, that the American army sell accidentally on Trenton. It was the very object for which General Washington crossed the Delaware in the dead of the night, and in the midst of snow, storms and ice; and which he immediately recrossed with his prisoners, as soon as he had accomplished his purpose. Neither was the intended enterprise a secret to the enemy, information D having having been sent of it by a letter from a British officer at Princeton, to Colonel Rolle, who commanded the Hessians at Trenton, which letter was afterwards found by the Americans. Nevertheless, the post was completely surprized. A small circumstance, which had the appearance of a mistake on the part of the Americans, led to a more capital and real mistake on the part of Rolle.

The case was this. A detachment of twenty or thirty Americans had been fent across the river, from a post a few miles above, by an officer unacquainted with the intended attack: these were met by a body of Hessians on the night to which the information pointed, which was Christmas night, and repulsed. Nothing further appearing, and the Hessians mistaking this for the advanced party, supposed the enterprise disconcerted, which at that time was not begun, and under this idea returned to their quarters; so that what might have raised an alarm, and brought the Americans into an ambuscade. served to take off the force of an information, and promote the fuccess of the enterprise. Soon after day-light General Washington entered the town, and after a little opposition, made himself master of it, with upwards of nine hundred prisoners. a second with the work we.

This combination of equivocal circumstanders falling within what the Abbe stiles of the wide empire of chance," would have afforded a fine field for thought; and I wish, for the sake to the second se

of the ulin B

by I

folloces.
gen
and
the

fron to d paig war

erro mag

fian

the three formation post the was ver Wa par

fiel ind pol

of that elegance of reflection he is so capable of using, that he had known it.

But the action at Princeton was accompanied by still greater embarrassment of matters, and followed by more extraordinary consequen-The Americans, by a happy stroke of generalship in this instance, not only deranged and defeated all the plans of the British, in the intended moment of execution, but drew from their post the enemy they were not able to drive, and obliged them to close the campaign. As the circumstance is a curiosity in war, and not well understood in Europe, I shall, as concifely as I can, relate the principal parts; they may serve to prevent future historians from error, and recover from forgetfulness a scene of magnificent fortitude.

Immediately after the surprize of the Hefsians at Trenton, General Washington recrossed the Delaware, which at this place is about three quarters of a mile over, and reassumed his former post on the Pennsylvania side. Trenton remained unoccupied, and the enemy were posted at Princeton, twelve miles distant, on the road towards New-York. The weather was now growing very severe; and as there were very few houses near the shore, where General Washington had taken his station, the greatest part of his army remained out in the woods and fields. These, with some other circumstances. induced there croffing the Delaware, and taking possession of Trenton. It was undoubtedly a bold

, bold adventure, and carried with it the appearhance of defiance, especially when we consider the panic-thruck condition of the enemy on the loss of the Hessian post. But in order to give a just idea of the affair, it is necessary I should describe the place. I want to be well and

Trenton is fituated on a rifing ground, about three quarters of a mile distant from the Delaware, on the eastern or Jersey side; and is cut into two divisions by a small creek or rivulet. fufficient to turn a mill which is on it, after which it empties itself, at nearly right angles, into the Delaware, The upper division, which is to the north-east, contains about seventy or eighty houses, and the lower about forty or fifty. The ground on each fide this creek, and on which the houses are, is likewise rising; and the two divisions present an agreeable prospect to each other, with the creek between them, on which there is a small stone-bridge of one arch.

Scarcely had General Washington taken post here, and before the feveral parties of militia. out on detachments, or on their way, could be collected, than the British, leaving behind them a strong garrison at Princeton, marched suddenly, and entered Trenton, at the upper or north-east quarter. A party of the Americans skirmished with the advanced party of the British, to afford time for removing the stores and baggage, and withdrawing over the bridge. Ma a little time, the British had possession of one half of the town, General Washington of the 49.09 36.2

fic of Litt lar

ar

fo cfl ren ro

an

0:11

pro bu ten wh IV wh

wa the and dife the

the

mo 10 ele wei

whi can cha

atta

the other, and the creek only separated the two armies. 200 Nothing | could be a more critical ficuation than this ; " and if ever the fate of America depended on the event of a day, it was now. The Delaware was filling fall with large sheets of driving ice, and was impassable; fo that no retreat into Pennsylvania could be effected, neither is it possible, in the face of an enemy, to pass a river of such extent. The roads were broken and rugged with the frost, and the main road was occupied by the enemy. and About four o'clock, a party of the British approached the bridge, with a delign to gain it, but were repulfed. "They made no more atsempts; though the creek itself is passable anywhere between the bridge and the Delaware. It runs in a rugged natural-made ditch, over which a person may pass with little difficulty. the stream being rapid and shallow. Evening was now coming on, and the British, believing they had all the advantages they could wish for, and that they could use them when they pleased, discontinued all further operations, and held themselves prepared to make the attack next morning. This means to morning and that elegant as it was unexpected. The British were under arms, and ready to march to action, when one of their light horse, from Princeton, came furiously down the street, with an account that General Washington had that morning attacked and carried the British post ar that place, place, and was proceeding on to feize the magazine at Brunswick; on which the British, who were then on the point of making an affault on the evacuated camp of the Americans, wheeled about, and in a fit of consternation marched for Princeton.

This retreat is one of those extraordinary circumstances, that in future ages may probably pass for a fable. For it will with difficulty be believed, that two armies, on which such important consequences depended, should be crouded into fo small a space as Trenton; and that one on the eve of an engagement, when every ear is supposed to be open, and every watchfulness employed, should move completely from the ground, with all its stores, baggage and artillery, unknown, and even unfuspected by the other. And so entirely were the British deceived, that when they heard the report of the cannon and fmall arms at Princeton, they supposed it to be thunder, though in the depth of winter. - 1114

General Washington, the better to cover and disguise his retreat from Trenton, had ordered a line of fires to be lighted up in the front of his camp. These not only served to give an' appearance of going to rest, and continuing that deception, but they effectually concealed from the British whatever was acting behind them. for flame can no more be feen through than a wall; and in this situation, it may with some propriety be faid, they became a pillar of fire to the one army, and a pillar of cloud to the other:

oth abo Pri

twe ral. of Pri had the eve mai difta exh aba nigh and. and. the ! rest. com Ame which coun appr at B imm

H thele quit

off :

late i

no at other: after this, by a circuitous march of about eighteen miles, the Americans reached Princeton early in the morning. A company of

The number of prisoners taken were between two and three hundred, with which General Washington immediately set off. The vanof the British army from Trenton entered Princeton about an hour after the Americans had left it, who continuing their march forthe remainder of the day, arrived in the evening at a convenient situation, wide of the main road to Brunswick, and about sixteen miles distant from Princeton. But so wearied and exhausted were they with the continual and unabated service and satigue of two days and a night, from action to action, without shelter, and almost without refreshment, that the bare and frozen ground, with no other covering than the sky, became to them a place of comfortable rest. By these two events, and with but little comparative force to accomplish them, the Americans closed, with advantages, a campaign which but a few days before threatened the country with destruction. The British army, apprehensive for the fafety of their magazines. at Brunswick, eighteen miles distant, marched immediately for that place, where they arrived late in the evening, and from which they made no attempts to move for nearly five months. ail

Having thus stated the principal outlines of these two most interesting actions, I shall now quit them, to put the Abbe right in his misu-flatec

stated account of the debt and paper-money of America, wherein, speaking of these matters, he says, 60 %

Spe.

a d

fter

Aft

Am

ec F

et k

er di

ee he er he es bi

ee he

mak

cum are n

But.

mon

kind

mate

Ever

over

But

cann

a gr

nor cver

I

"These ideal riches were rejected. The more the multiplication of them was urged by want, the greater did their depreciation grow. The Congress was indignant at the affronts given to its money, and declared all those to be traitors to their country who should not receive it as they would have received gold itself.

" Did not this body know, that prepossessions " are no more to be controuled than feelings " are? Did it not perceive, that in the present " crifis, every rational man would be afraid of " exposing his fortune? Did it not see, that at " the beginning of a republic, it permitted to " itself the exercise of such acts of despotism " as are unknown even in the countries which " are moulded to, and become familiar with. " fervitude and oppression? Could it pretend " that it did not punish a want of confidence " with the pains which would have been " scarcely merited by revolt and treason? Of " all this was the Congress well aware. But it " had no choice of means. Its despised and " despicable scraps of paper were actually " thirty times below their original value, when " more of them were ordered to be made. " On the 13th of September 1779, there was " of this paper-money among the public, to " the amount of £35,544,155. The State " owed;  owed, moreover, £, 8,385,356, without rec koning the particular debts of fingle pro vinces."

In the above-recited passages, the Abbe speaks as if the United States had contracted a debt of upwards of forty millions pounds sterling, besides the debts of individual States. After which, speaking of foreign trade with America, he says, that "those countries in Europe which are truly commercial ones, knowing that North-America had been reduced to contract debts at the epoch of even her greatest prosperity, wisely thought, that in her present distress, she would be able to pay but very little for what might be carried to ther."

0

d

C

f

it

d

y

n

e.

35

O

te

ł,

I know it must be extremely difficult to make foreigners understand the nature and circumstances of our paper-money, because there are natives who do not understand it themselves. But, with us, its fate is now determined. Common consent has configned it to rest with that kind of regard which the long fervice of inanimate things insensibly obtains from mankind. Every stone in the bridge that has carried us over, seems to have a claim upon our esteem. But this was a corner-stone, and its usefulness cannot be forgotten. There is something in a grateful mind, which extends itself even to things that can neither be benefited by regard, nor fuffer by neglect; -but so it is, and almost every man is sensible of the effect.

But to return—The paper-money, though issued from Congress under the name of dollars, did not come from that body always at that value. Those which were issued the first year, were equal to gold and silver: the second year less, the third still less, and so on for nearly the space of sive years; at the end of which, I imagine, that the whole value at which Congress might pay away the several emissions, taking them together, was about ten or twelve millions pounds sterling.

Now, as it would have taken ten or twelve millions sterling of taxes to carry on the war for five years, and as while this money was iffuing? and likewise depreciating down to nothing, there were none or few valuable raxes paid, confequently the event to the public was the fame whether they funk ten or twelve millions of expended money by depreciation, or paid ten or twelve millions by taxation; for, as they did not do both, and chose to do one, the matter, in a general view, was indifferent. And therefore, what the Abbe supposes to be a debt, has now no existence; it having been paid by every body confenting to reduce at his own expence. from the value of the bills continually passing among themselves, a sum equal to nearly what the expence of the war was for five years.

Again---The paper-money having now ceased, and the depreciation with it, and gold and silver supplied its place, the war will now be carried on by taxation, which will draw from the public

tion they fuffe the a adva thou à co

to le prov to m he d tion,

It

A

pape ner; and debt noth coun it. his o the i duce a los

it by confi

for t

a con-

a considerable less sum than what the depreciation drew; but as while they pay the former, they do not suffer the latter, and as when they suffered the latter, they did not pay the former, the thing will be nearly equal, with this moral advantage, that taxation occasions frugality and thought, and depreciation produced dissipation and carelessness.

And again—If a man's portion of taxes comes to less than what he lost by the depreciation, it proves the alteration is in his favour. If it comes to more, and he is justly affessed, it shows that he did not sustain his proper share of depreciation, because the one was as operatively his tax as the other.

It is true that it was never intended, neither was it foreseen, that the debt contained in the paper-currency should fink itself in this manner; but as by the voluntary conduct of all, and of every one, it has arrived at this fate, the debt is paid by those who owed it. nothing was ever so universally the act of a country as this. Government had no hand in it. Every man depreciated his own money by his own consent, for such was the effect which the raising the nominal value of goods produced. But as, by such reduction, he sustained a loss equal to what he must have paid to fink it by taxation, therefore the line of justice is to consider his loss, by the depreciation as his tax for that time, and not to tax him when the war is over, to make that money good in any other person's hands, which became nothing in his own.

Again...The paper-currency was issued for the express purpose of carrying on the war. It has performed that service, without any other material charge to the public while it lasted. But to suppose, as some did, that, at the end of the war, it was to grow into gold or silver, or to become equal thereto, was to suppose that we were to get two hundred millions of dollars by going to war, instead of paying the cost of carrying it on.

But if any thing in the situation of America, as to her currency or her circumstances, yet remains not understood, then let it be remembered, that this war is the public's war, the people's war, the country's war. It is their independence that is to be supported, their property that is to be fecured, their country that is to be faved. Here government, the army, and the people, are mutually and reciprocally one. In other wars, kings may lofe their thrones and their dominions; but here, the loss must fall on the majesty of the multitude, and the property they are contending to fave. Every man being sensible of this, he goes to the field, or pays his portion of the charge, as the fovereign of his own possessions; and when he is conquered-a monarch falls.

The remark which the Abbe in the conclufion of the passage has made, respecting Amethe very perfect from the control of the control of ric

pr

br

ind red ch

mo ha

thr fol on exp

a f

we

pro the and tre

and

rica

rica contracting debts in the time of her prosperity, (by which he means, before the breaking out of hostilities), serves to show, though he has not made the application, the very great commercial difference between a dependent and an independent country. In a state of dependence, and with a fettered commerce, though with all the advantages of peace. her trade could not balance itself, and she annually run into debt. But now, in a state of independence, though involved in war, she requires no credit; her stores are full of merchandize, and gold and filver are become the currency of the country. How these things have established themselves, it is difficult to account for: But they are facts, and facts are more powerful than arguments.

As it is probable this letter will undergo a a republication in Europe, the remarks here thrown together, will serve to show the extreme folly of Britain, in resting her hopes of success on the extinction of our paper-currency. The expectation is at once so childish and forlorn, that it places her in the laughable condition of a famished lion watching for prey at a spider's web.

t

r ł.

ρf

r

11 rs

ρf

-1

)-

y

to

d

e.

es

st

0-ın

or

ŗn

r-

U-

e-

From this account of the currency, the Abbe proceeds to state the condition of America in the winter 1777, and the fpring following: and closes his observations with mentioning the treaty of alliance which was figned in France, and the propositions of the British Ministry, which which were rejected in America. But, in the manner in which the Abbe has arranged his facts, there is a very material error, that not only he, but other European historians have falleninto; none of them having affigned the true cause why the British proposals were rejected, and all of them have affigned a wrong one.

In the winter 1777, and spring sollowing, Congress were assembled at York-town in Pennsylvania; the British were in possession of Philadelphia, and General Washington with the army were encamped in huts at the Vally-Forge, twenty-sive miles distant therefrom. To all who can remember, it was a season of hardship, but not of despair; and the Abbe, speaking of this period and its inconveniences, says,

" A multitude of privations, added to fo " many other misfortunes, might make the " Americans regret their former tranquillity, " and incline them to an accommodation with " England. In vain had the people been bound "to the new government by the facredness of " oaths, and the influence of religion. In " vain had endeavours been used to convince "them, that it was impossible to treat safely. " with a country, in which one parliament might coverturn what should have been established " by another. In vain had they been threat-" ned with the eternal resentment of an exas-" perated and vindictive enemy. It was possi-" ble that these distant troubles might not be " balanced by the weight of present evils.

" So

ec (

cc r ce d

cc t

cc d

« b

" m ec p

ec w

66 W

er fu

es W

" af

" tro

" CO

" th

" fp

" fr

" St

" 6t

rema

Itanc

of wh

fulior

betw

nects

diate

Britis

is rig/

TH

·O

So thought the British Ministry, when they " fent to the New World, public agents, autho-" rized to offer every thing except indepen-" dence, to these very Americans from whom " they had two years before exacted an uncon-"ditional submission. It is not improbable " but that by this plan of conciliation a few " months sooner, some effect might have been or produced. But at the period at which it es was proposed by the Court of London, it " was rejected with disdain, because this meafure appeared but as an argument of fear and weakness. The people were already re-" affured. The Congress, the Generals, the "troops, the bold and skilful men in each " colony, had possessed themselves of the au-66 thority; every thing had recovered its first " spirit. This was the effect of a treaty of " friendship and commerce between the United " States and the Court of Versailles, signed the " 6th of February 1778."

On this passage of the Abbe's I cannot help remarking, that, to unite time with circumstance, is a material nicety in history; the want of which frequently throws it into endless confusion and mistake, occasions a total separation between causes and consequences, and connects them with others they are not immediately, and sometimes not at all related to.

The Abbe, in faying that the offers of the British Ministry "were rejected with disdain," is right as to the fact, but wrong as to the time; and this error in the time, has occasioned him to be mistaken in the cause.

The figning the treaty of Paris the 6th of February 1778, could have no effect on the mind or politics of America, until it was known in America; and therefore, when the Abbe fays that the rejection of the British offers was in consequence of the alliance, he must mean, that it was in consequence of the alliance being known in America; which was not the case: And by this mistake, he not only takes from her the reputation which her unshaken fortitude in that trying situation deserves, but is likewise led very injuriously to suppose, that had she not known of the treaty, the offers would probably have been accepted; whereas she knew nothing of the treaty at the time of the rejection, and confequently did not reject them on that ground.

The propositions or offers above mentioned were contained in two bills brought into the British Parliament by Lord North on the 17th of February 1778. Those bills were hurried through both Houses with unusual haste; and before they had gone through all the customary forms of Parliament, copies of the over to Lord Howe and General Iowe, then in Philadelphia, who were likewise Commissioners. General Howe ordered them to be printed in Philadelphia, and sent copies of them by a stag to General Washington; to be forwarded to Congress at York-town, where

re

the

mu

a C

the

Was

read

thei

tion

be t

cau

thol

lequ

fion

Yor

ately

refol

the !

. 0

the

twee Yori

had i

this

affer

mate

rica,

howe

prod

eithe

1 11 12

they arrived the 21st of April 1778. Thus much for the arrival of the Bills in America.

Congress, as is their usual mode, appointed a committee from their own body, to examine them, and to report thereon. The report was brought in the next day (the 22d), was read and unanimously agreed to, entered on their journals, and published for the information of the country. Now this report must be the rejection to which the Abbe alludes, because Congress gave no other formal opinion on those bills and propositions: And on a subfequent application from the British Commissioners, dated the 27th of May, and received at York-town the 6th of June, Congress immediately referred them for an answer to their printed refolves of the 22d of April. Thus much for the rejection of the offers.

S

t

r

0

7,

.

C

bt

d

h

d

d ry

nt

cri

1

bé

of

re ey On the 2d of May, that is, eleven days after the above rejection was made, the treaty between the United States and France arrived at York-town; and until this moment, Congress had not the least notice or idea that such a measure was in any train of execution. But lest this declaration of mine should pass only for affertion, I shall support it by proof; for it is material to the character and principle of the revolution, to show that no condition of America, since the declaration of independence, however trying and severe, ever operated to produce the most distant idea of yielding it up, either by force, distress, artistice, or persuasion.

And this proof is the more necessary, because it was the system of the British Ministry at this time, as well as before and since, to hold out to the European powers, that America was unfixt in her resolutions and policy; hoping by this artistice, to lessen her reputation in Europe, and weaken the considence which those powers, or any of them, might be inclined to place in her.

At the time these matters were transacting, I was Secretary in the foreign department of Congress. All the political letters from the American Commissioners rested in my hands, and all that were officially written went from my office; and so far from Congress knowing any thing of the signing the treaty, at the time they rejected the British offers, they had not received a line of information from their Commissioners at Paris, on any subject whatever, for upwards of a twelvemonth. Probably the loss of the port of Philadelphia, and the navigation of the Delaware, together with the danger of the seas, covered at this time with British cruizers, contributed to the disappointment.

One packet, it is true, arrived at York-town in January preceding, which was about three months before the arrival of the treaty; but, strange as it may appear, every letter had been taken out before it was put on board the vessel which brought it from France, and blank white paper put in their stead.

Having thus stated the time when the proposals from the British Commissioners were first received, of a of the value of the rica and denominations.

and reject their treat in d the t found answerathe ing fi

.. Be

entire attrib our ke have tish C And over

,5790

received, and likewise the time when the treaty of alliance arrived, and shewn that the rejection of the former was eleven days prior to the arrival of the latter, and without the least knowledge of such circumstance having taken place, or being about to take place; the rejection therefore must, and ought to be attributed to the fixt and unwavering sentiments of America respecting the enemy she is at war with, and her determination to support her independence to the last possible effort, and not to any new circumstance in her favour, which at that time she did not, and could not know of.

Besides, there is a vigour of determination and spirit of desiance in the language of the rejection (which I here subjoin), which derive their greatest glory by appearing before the treaty was known; for that which is bravery in distress, becomes insult in prosperity: and the treaty placed America on such a strong soundation, that had she then known it, the answer which she gave would have appeared rather as an air of triumph, than as the glowing serenity of sortitude.

Upon the whole, the Abhe appears to have entirely mistaken the matter; for instead of attributing the rejection of the propositions to our knowledge of the treaty of alliance, he should have attributed the origin of them in the British Cabinet, to their knowledge of that event. And then the reason why they were hurried over to America in the state of Bills, that is,

F 2

in coverie

before

sbefore they were passed into Acts, is easily accounted for, which is, that they might have the - chance of reaching America before any knowledge of the treaty should arrive, which they were lucky enough to do, and there met the fate they so richly merited. That these bills were brought into the British Parliament after the treaty with France was figned, is proved from the dates: the treaty being on the 6th, and the bills the 17th of February. And that the figning the treaty was known in Parliament when the bills were brought in, is likewife proved by a speech of Mr. Charles Fox on the said 17th of February, who, in reply to Lord North, informed the House of the treaty being figned, and challenged the Minister's

Though

111

2011 lie

eff

211 inv

the

of

eff

lea

wa

fro

ha

· of

be

co

up

of

ha

· ,ca

ab

. 116

. int

es of period

. · W

the 16 1

- be

∠o ⊈ ,∵wa

* IN CONGRESS, April 22, 1778.

amag pile o grasi come

"THE Committee to whom was referred the General's letter of the 18th, containing a certain printed paper sent from Philadelphia, purporting to be the draught of a Bill for declaring the intentions of the Parliament of Great Britain, as to the exercise of what they are pleased to term their right of imposing taxes within these United States; and also the draught of a Bill to enable the King of Great Britain to appoint Commissioners, with powers to treat, consult, and agree upon the means of quicting certain disorders within the said States; beg leave to observe,

That the faid paper being industriously circulated by emissaries of the enemy, in a partial and secret manner, the same ought to be forthwith printed for the public information.

The Committee cannot afcertain whether the contents of the faid paper have been framed in Philadelphia or in Great Britain, much lefs whether the fame are really and trilly intended to be brought into the Parliament of that kingdom, or whether the faid Parliament will confer thereon

Though I am not surprised to see the Abbe mistaken in matters of history, acted at so great a distance from his sphere of immediate obser-

m * 15"

the usual folemnities of their Laws: But are inclined to believe this will happen, for the following reasons:

efforts to fet on foot some kind of treaty during the last winter, though, either from a militaken idea of his own dignity and importance, the want of information, or some other cause, he hath not made application to those who are invested with a proper authority.

3dly. Because, believing the Americans wearied with war, they suppose we will accede to their terms, for the sake of peace.

116.46.4thly. Because they suppose that our negociations may be subject to a like corrupt influence with their debates.

effects they did from what one of their ministers thought proper to call his conciliatory motion, viz. that it will prevent foreign powers from giving aid to these States; that it will lead their own subjects to continue a little longer the present war; and that it will detach some weak men in America from the cause of freedom and virtue.

hath reason to apprehend that his sleets and armies, instead of being employed against the territories of these States, will be necessary for the defence of his own dominion. And, country being every day more and more manifelt, it is their interest to extricate themselves from the war upon any terms.

"The Committee beg leave further to observe, That upon a supposition the matters contained in the said paper will really go into the British Statute-Book, they serve to show, in a clear point of view, the weakness and wickedness of the enemy.

" THEIR WEAKNESS:

11

i-

ir

0

d

y

1-t8

in id

at 11

had a right to bind the inhabitants of these States in all cases whatsoever, but also that the said inhabitants should absolutely and unconditionally submit to the exercise of that taght. And this submission they have endeavoured to exact vation, yet I am more than surprised to find him wrong (or at least what appears so to me) in the well enlightened field of philosophical restection.

by the fword. Receding from this claim, therefore, under the prefent circumflances, flews their inability to enforce it-

"2dly. Because their Prince hath heretofore rejected the humblest petitions of the Representatives of America, praying to be considered as subjects, and protected in the enjoyment of peace, liberty, and safety; and hath waged a most cruel war against them, and employed the savages to butcher innocent women and children. But now the same Prince pretends to treat with those very Representatives, and grant to the arms of America, what he refused to her prayers.

tai

m wl

pa ful

ſai

Bi

tin

me

ań

fet

to

led

Br

th

go ha

int

pe

" 3dly. Because they have uniformly laboured to conquer this continent, rejecting every idea of accommodation proposed to them, from a considence in their own strength. Wherefore it is evident, from the change in their mode of attack, that they have lost this considence. And,

"4thly. Because the constant language, spoken not only by their Ministers, but by the most public and authentic Acts of the nation, liath been, that it is incompatible with their dignity to treat with the Americans while they have arms in their hands. Notwithstanding which, an offer is now about to be made for treaty.

"The wickedness and infincerity of the enemy appear from the following confiderations:

"1st. Either the Bills now to be passed contain a direct or indirect cession of a part of their former claims, or they do not. If they do, then it is acknowledged that they have facrificed many brave men in an unjust quarrel. If they do not, then they are calculated to deceive America into terms, to which neither argument before the war, nor force since, could procure her assent.

"2dly. The first of these Bills appears, from the title, to be a declaration of the intentions of the British Parliament concerning the exercise of the right of imposing taxes within these States. Wherefore, should these States treat under the said Bill, they would indirectly acknowledge that right, to obtain which acknowledgment the present war hath been avowedly undertaken and prosecuted on the part of Great Britain. 3 Should fuch pretended right be so acquiesced in, then of consequence the same might be exercised whenever the British Parliament should find themselves of a different temper and disposition; since it must depend upon those, and such reflection. Here the materials are his own; created by himself; and the error, therefore, is an act of the mind.

Hitherto

fuch like contingences, how far men will act according to their former intentions.

"4thly. The faid first Bill, in the body thereof, containeth no new matter, but is precisely the same with the motion before mentioned, and liable to all the objections which lay against the said motion, excepting the following particular, viz. that, by the motion, actual taxation was to be suspended so long as America should give as much as the said Parliament might think proper; whereas, by the proposed Bill, it is to be suspended as long as suture Parliaments continue of the same mind with the present.

King may, if he pleases, appoint Commissioners to treat and agree with those whom they please, about a variety of things therein mentioned. But such treaties and agreements are to be of no validity without the concurrence of the said Parliament, except so far as they relate to the suspension of hostilities, and of certain of their Acts, the granting of pardons, and the appointing of Governors to these sovereign, free, and independent States. Wherefore, the said Parliament have reserved to themselves, in express words, the power of setting aside any such treaty, and taking the advantage of any circumstances which may arise to subject this Continent to their usurpations.

" ofthly. The faid Bill, by holding forth a tender of pardon, implies a criminality in our judifiable resistance; and consequently, to treat under it, would be an implied acknowledgment that the inhabitants of these States were, what Britain has declared them to be, Rebels.

"7thly. The inhabitants of these States being claimed by them as subjects, they may infer, from the nature of the negociation now pretended to be set on foot, that the said inhabitants would of right be afterwards bound by such laws as they should make. Wherefore, any agreement entered into on such negociation, might at any suture time be repealed. And,

"8thly. Because the said Bill purports, that the Commissioners therein mentioned may treat with private individuals; a measure highly derogatory to the dignity of national character.

* From all which it appears evident to your Committee, that the faid Bills are intended to operate upon the hopes and fears

Hitherto my remarks have been confined to circumstances, the order in which they arose, and the events they produced. In these eny information being better than the Abbe's, fears of the good people of these States, so as to create divifions among them, and a defection from the common eaufe, now, by the bleffing of Divine Providence, drawing near to a favourable issue. That they are the fequel of that insidious plan, which, from the days of the Stamp-act down to the prefent time, hath involved this country in contention and bloodthed. And that, as in other cases so in this, although circumflances may force them at times to recede from their unjustifiable claims, there can be no doubt but they will as heretofore, upon the first favourable occasion, again display that luft of domination which liath rent in twain the mighty empire of Britain.

"Upon the whole matter, the Committee beg leave to report it as their opinion, That as the Americans united in this ardnous contest upon principles of common interest, for the defence of common rights and privileges, which union hath been cemented by common calamities, and by mutual good offices and affection, fo the great cause for which they contend, and in which all mankind are interested, must derive its success from the continuance of that union. Wherefore, any man, or body of men, who should presume to make any separate or partial convention or agreement with Commisfioners under the Crown of Great Britain, or any of them, ought to be confidered and treated as open and avowed enemics of these United States.

" And further, your Committee beg leave to report it astheir opinion, That these United States cannot, with propriety, hold any conference or treaty with any Commissioners on the part of Great Britain, unless they shall, as a prelimipary thereto, either withdraw their fleets and armies, or elfe, in positive and express terms, acknowledge the Independence of the faid States.

"And inafmuch as it appears to be the delign of the enemies of these States to hall them into a fatal fecurity—to the end that they may act with a becoming weight and importance, it is the opinion of your Committee, That the feveral States he called upon to use the most strenuous exertions to have their respective quotas of continental troops in the field as foon as possible, and that all the militia of the faid States be held in readincis, to act as occasion may require."

readi hono ftitu I ha

est lin wi

be

ene

me

the

are

wh

Th

per

The

3d

cam

acqu

fenti

in a "

be fe

crue

Sir

my task was easy. How I may succeed in controverting matters of sentiment and opinion, with one whom years, experience and long-established reputation have placed in a superior line, I am less consident in; but as they fall within the scope of my observations, it would be improper to pass them over.

From this part of the Abbe's work to the latter end, I find several expressions, which appear to me to start, with a cynical complexion, from the path of liberal thinking; or at least they are so involved as to lose many of the beauties which distinguish other parts of the performance. The Abbe, having brought his work to the period when the treaty of alliance between

The following is the Answer of Congress to the second application of the Commissioners:

York-Town, June 6. 1778.

SIR,

"I HAVE had the honour of laying your letter of the 3d inftant, with the acts of the British Parliament, which came inclosed, before Congress; and I am instructed to acquaint you, Sir, that they have already expressed their sentiments upon bills, not essentially different from those acts, in a publication of the 22d of April last.

"Be affured, Sir, when the King of Great Britain shall be seriously disposed to put an end to the unprovoked and cruel war waged against these United States, Congress will readily attend to such terms of peace as may consist with the honour of independent nations, the interest of their constituents, and the sacred regard they mean to pay to treaties. I have the honour to be, Sir,

Tour most obedient, and most bumble fervant,

HENRY LAWRENS,

President of Congress.

His Excellency, Sir Henry Clinton, K. B. Philad. France and the United States commenced, proceeds to make some remarks thereon, and it

"In short," says he, "Philosophy, whose first sentiment is the desire to see all governments just, and all people happy, in casting her eyes upon this alliance of a monarchy, with a people who are desending their liberty, is curious to know its motive. She sees at once, too clearly, that the happiness of mankind has no part in it."

Whatever train of thinking or temper the Abbe might be in when he penned this expression, matters not. They will neither qualify the sentiment, nor add to the desect. If right, it needs no apology: If wrong, it merits no excuse. It is sent into the world as an opinion of Philosophy, and may be examined without regard to the author.

It feems to be a defect connected with ingenuity, that it often employs itself more in matters of curiofity, than usefulness. Man must be the privy counsellor of Fate, or something is not right: he must know the springs, the whys and wherefores of every thing, or he sits down unlatissied. Whether this be a crime, or only a caprice of humanity, I am not inquiring into. I shall take the passage as I find it, and place my objections against it.

It is not so properly the motives which prolinced the alliance, as the consequences which are to be produced from it, that mark out the field of philosophical reflection. In the one, we only who be fended in bec mai that the best of t kno I

rica

loca and king we f only The precof ness Abb

tual

on t

only penetrate into the barren cave of secrecy. where little can be known, and every thing may be misconceived, in the other, the mind is prefented with a wide-extended profpect of vegetative good, and fees a thousand bleffings budding into existence.

But the expression, even within the compass of the Abbe's meaning, fets out with an error, because it is made to declare that which no man has authority to declare. Who can fay that the happiness of mankind made no part of the motives which produced the alliance i. To be able to declare this, a man must be possessed of the mind of all the parties concerned, and know that their motives were fomething elfe.

O

E

d

1 à ö.

će

ó-

d

ve

y

71:110

In proportion as the independence of America became contemplated and understood, the local advantages of it to the immediate actors. and the numerous benefits it promifed to mankind, appeared to be every day increasing and we saw not a temporary good for the present race only, but a continued good to all posterity. These motives, therefore, added to those which preceded them, became the motives on the part of America, which led her to propose and agree to the treaty of alliance, as the best effectual method of extending and fecuring happiness; and therefore, with respect to us, the Abbeishwrong, we so ye gong of boil er il

France, on the other hand, was fituated very differently to America. She was not acted upon by necessity to seek a friend, and therefore her G 2 her motive in becoming one, has the ftrongest evidence of being good; and that which is for must have some happiness for its object. With regard to herfelf, the faw a train of conveniences sworthy her attention; By lestening the power of an enemy, whom, at the same times the fought neither to destroy non distress, the gained an advantage without doing an evil; and created to herfelf a new friend, by affociating with a country in misfortune. The fprings of thought that lead to actions of this kind, however political they may be, are nevertheless naturally beneficent; for, in all causes good or bad, it is necessary there should be a fitness in the mind, to enable it to act in character with the object: therefore, as a bad cause cannot be profecuted with a good motive, for heither can a good cause be long supported by a bad one; and as no man acts without a motive, therefore, in the present instance, as they cannot be bad, they must be admitted to be good. * But the Abbe fets out upon fuch an extended feales that he overlooks the degrees by which it is measured, and rejects the beginning of good, because the end comes not at once. In the senot

It is true, that bad motives may in some degree be brought to support a good cause, or prosecute a good object; but it never continues long, which is not the case with France; for either the object will reform the mind, or the mind corrupt the object, or else, not being able either way to get into unison, they will sepa.

Typa.

rate

rate

pere

tion

feer

obje

ofor

bad,

tove

the

and

Wer

apho

Were

and

Main

prof

were

forwi

orest

love.

Thei

mind

to th

herni

fome

95,7

with

chara They

name

figure

perceived progress of association or contention between the mind and the object, is the secret cause of sidelity or desection. Fvery object a man pursues, is, for the time, a kind of mistress to his mind sail both are good or bad, the union is natural; but is they are inteverse, and neither can seduce nor yet reform the other, the opposition grows into dislike, and asseparation follows.

were many, who, in the flyle of adventurers and fortune-hunters, were daugling in her train; and making their court to her with every profession of honour and attachment. They were loud in her praise, and ostentatious in her service. Every place echoed with their ardour or their anger, and they seemed like men in love. But, alas I they were fortune-hunters. Their expectations were excited, but their minds were unimpressed; and finding her not to their purpose, nor themselves reformed by her influence, they ceased their suit, and in some influences deserted and betrayed her many force influences deserted and betrayed her many men and the suit and in some influences deserted and betrayed her many suits and in some influences deserted and betrayed her many suits and in some influences deserted and betrayed her many suits and in some influences deserted and betrayed her many suits and su

There were others, who at first beheld her with indifference, and, unacquainted with her character, were cautious of her company. They treated her as one, who, under the fair name of Liberty, might conceal the hideous figure of Anarchy, or the gloomy monster of Tyranny. They knew not what she was all fair, the was fair indeed. But fill the was fuspected, and, though born among us wape peared to be a stranger. ; har as once who not Accident with fome, and curiofity with others, brought on a distant acquaintance. They ventured to look at here They felt an inclination to speak to her. One intimacy led to another, till the suspicion wore away, and a change of fentiment stole gradually upon the mind; and having no felf-interest to serve, no passion of dishonour to gratify, they became enamoured of her innocence, and, unaltered by misfortune, or uninflamed by fuccess, shared with fidelity in the varieties of her fate(9) want This declaration of the Abbe's, respecting motives, has led me unintendedly into a train of metaphyfical reasoning; but there was no other avenue by which it could for properly be approached. To place prefumption against prefumption, affertion against affertion, issa mode of opposition that has no effect; and therefore the more eligible method was a to thew. that the declaration does not correspond with the natural progress of the mind, and the influence it has upon our conduct. -I shall now quit this part, and proceed to what I have before statedy namely, That it is not so properly the motives which produced the alliance, as the confequences to be produced from it, that mark out the field of philosophical reflection. It is an observation I have already made in some former publication, that the circle of Harry V civilization civi of cou Hero isois cacl whie like are i no c lyw Som work have into mino Upon mind the a we d bin TI oend. with begin first i enfier chine thems dition what: theam to be

HOLIAS

civilization is yet incomplete. A mutuality of wants have formed the individuals of each country into a kind of national fociety and here the progress of civilization has stopus for it is easy to see, that nations with regard to each other Inotwithstanding the ideal civil law which every one explains as it suits him) are like individuals in a flate of nature. They are regulated by no fixt principle, governed by no compulsive law, and each does independently what it pleases, for what it can in to be in ducy 59 Weregit possible we could have known the world then in a state of barbarismore might have a studed that it never could be prought into the order we now fee it. ... The upcomed mind was then as hard, if not harder, to wark upon in its individual frate, than the national mindissingits present one o'Yet we have feen the accomplishment of the one; why then should we doubt that of the other? ... animous mg buThere is a greater fitness in mankind to encendeand complete the civilization of mations with each other at this day, than there was to beginnit, with the unconnected individuals at first thin the same manner that it is somewhat eafier to put rogether the unaterials of a machine after they are formed, than it was to forest them from original matters. The prefence of the world differing to exceedingly from what informerly was, has given a new coath to the mind of man, more than what he appears to be fentible of a The want of the individual;

poursilert.

d

0 0

W

.

y

E

t

n

f п

which

which first produced the idea of society, are now augmented into the wants of the nation; and he is obliged to seek from another country, what before he sought from the next person.

Letters, the tongue of the world, have, in fome measure, brought all mankind acquainted, and, by an extension of their uses, are every day promoting some new friendship. Through them, distant nations become capable of conversation, and, losing by degrees the awkwardness of strangers, and the moroseness of suspicion, they learn to know and understand each other. Science, the partizan of no country, but the beneficent patroness of all, has liberally opened a temple where all may meet. Her influence on the mind, like the fun on the chilled earth, has, long been preparing it for higher cultivation, and further improvement. The Philosopher of one country, fees not an enemy in the Philosopher of another: He takes his feat in the temple of Science, and asks not who sits beside him.

This was not the condition of the barbarian world. Then, the wants of man were few, and the objects within his reach. While he could acquire these, he lived in a state of individual independence; the consequence of which was, there were as many nations as persons, each contending with the other, to secure something which he had not. The world had then no business to The tigo occenjo

of l man befo of g fava and man ledge

T

mark Thus lity, pering object in the war. out the they I being cumft

But the wo reach think

duced

to follow, no studies to exercise the mind. Their time was divided between sloth and satigue. Hunting and war were their chief occupations; sleep and food their principal enjoyments.

Now it is otherwise. A change in the mode of life has made it necessary to be busy; and man finds a thousand things to do now, which before he did not. Instead of placing his ideas of greatness in the rude atchievements of the savage, he studies arts, science, agriculture, and commerce, the refinements of the gentleman, the principles of society, and the knowledge of the philosopher.

There are many things which in themselves are morally neither good nor bad, but they are productive of consequences which are strongly marked with one or other of these characters. Thus commerce, though in itself a moral nullity, has had a considerable instuence in tempering the human mind. It was the want of objects in the ancient world, which occasioned in them such a rude and perpetual turn for war. Their time hung on their hands, without the means of employment. The indolence they lived in, afforded leisure for mischies; and being all idle at once, and equal in their circumstances, they were easily provoked or induced to action.

But the introduction of commerce furnished the world with objects, which, in their extent, reach every man, and give him fomething to think about, and fomething to do: By these, his attention is mechanically drawn from the pursuits which a state of indolence and an unemployed mind occasioned; and he trades with the same countries, which, in former ages, tempted by their productions, and too indolent to purchase them, he would have gone to war with.

Thus, as I have already observed, the condition of the world being materially changed by the influence of science and commerce, it is put into a fitness, not only to admit of, but to desire an extension of civilization. The principal, and almost only remaining enemy it now has to encounter, is prejudice; for it is evident. ly the interest of mankind to agree, and make the best of life. The world has undergone its divisions of empire, the several boundaries of which are known and fettled. The idea of conquering kingdoms, like the Greeks and Romans, does not now exist; and experience has exploded the notion of going to war for the fake of profit. In short, the objects for war are exceedingly diminished, and there is now left scarcely any thing to quarrel about, but what arises from that dæmon of society, Prejudice, and the confequent fullenness and untractableness of the temper.

There is fomething exceedingly curious in the constitution and operation of prejudice. It has the fingular ability of accommodating itfelf to all the possible varieties of the human mind. Some passions and vices are but thinly an dic ho and fca wh be fak har let

hat

fill

who fca

one pal and raci be I mai judi All and the ner mo tion eye oth Wd had fcattered among mankind, and find only here and there a fitness of reception. But prejudice, like the spider, makes every-where its home. It has neither taste nor choice of place, and all that it requires is room. There is scarcely a situation, event fire or water, in which a spider win not .. So let the rain? be as naked as the walls of an empty and forfaken tenement, gloomy as a dungeon, or ornamented with the richest abilities of thinking, let it be hot, cold, dark or light, lonely or inhabited, still prejudice, if undisturbed, will fill it with cobwebs, and live, like the spider, where there feems nothing to live on. If the one prepares her food, by poisoning it to her palate and her use, the other does the same; and as several of our passions are strongly characterised by the animal world, prejudice may be denominated the spider of the mind.

1

e

f

f

d

r

r

S

d

n

t

t-

n

Perhaps no two events ever united so intimately and forcibly to combat and expel prejudice, as the Revolution of America, and the Alliance with France. Their effects are selt, and their influence already extends as well to the old world as the new. Our style and manner of thinking have undergone a revolution, more extraordinary than the political revolution of the country. We see with other eyes, we hear with other ears, and think with other thoughts, than those we formerly used.
We can look back on our prejudices, as if they had been the prejudices of other people. We now fee and know they were prejudices, and nothing else; and, relieved from their shackles, enjoy a freedom of mind we felt not before. It was not all the argument, however powerful, nor all the reasoning, however elegant, that could have produced this change, so necessary to the extension of the mind and the cordiality of the world, without the two circumstances of the Revolution and the Alliance.

Had America dropt quietly from Britain, no material change in fentiment had taken place. The same notions, prejudices, and conceits, would have governed in both countries, as governed them before; and, still the slaves of error and education, the would have travelled on in the beaten track c. vulgar and habitual thinking. But, brought about by the means it has been, both with regard to ourselves, to France, and to England, every corner of the mind is swept of its cobwebs, poison and dust, and made sit for the reception of generous happiness.

Perhaps there never was an Alliance on a broader basis than that between America and France, and the progress of it is worth attending to. The countries had been enemies, not properly of themselves, but through the medium of England. They originally had no quarrel with each other, nor any cause for one, but what arose from the interest of England, and her arming America against France. At the

from the dut the que fter

the

the men agt disp itself the preimer men as t not not on and tion con pol

7:1

hea

uni

the same time, the Americans, at a distance from, and unacquainted with the world, and tutored in all the prejudices which governed those who governed them, conceived it their duty to act as they were taught. In doing this, they expended their substance, to make conquests, not for themselves, but for their matters, who, in return, treated them as slaves.

A long succession of insolent severity, and the separation finally occasioned by the commencement of hostilities at Lexington on the 19th of April 1775, naturally produced a new disposition of thinking. As the mind closed itself towards England, it opened itself towards the world; and our prejudices, like our oppressions, underwent, though less observed, a mental examination; until we found the former as inconsistent with reason and benevolence, as the latter were repugnant to our civil and political rights.

While we were thus advancing by degrees into the wide field of extended humanity, the Alliance with France was concluded; an Alliance not formed for the mere purpose of a day, but on just and generous grounds, and with equal and mutual advantages; and the easy affectionate manner in which the parties have since communicated, has made it an Alliance, not of courts only, but of countries. There is now an union of mind, as well as of interest; and our hearts, as well as our prosperity, call on us to support it.

5,00

en.

W

po

th ot

lia

de

tai

ſτ

po

on

be bu

Fr

Sw

and

as.

lik

go

kir

. to

it

to

ext

wo

fio.

tin

rat

The people of England not having experienced this change, had likewise no idea of it, They were hugging to their bosoms the same prejudices we were trampling beneath our feet. and they expected to keep a hold upon America, by that narrowness of thinking which America disclained. What they were proud of, we despised; and this is a principal cause why all their negociations, constructed on this ground, have failed. We are now really another people, and cannot again go back to ignorance and prejudice. The mind, once enlightened, cannot again become dark. There is no possibility, neither is there any term to express the supposition by, of the mind unknowing any thing it already knows; and therefore, all attempts on the part of England, fitted to the former habit of America, and on the expectation of their applying now, will be like perfunding a feeing man to become blind, and a fensible one to turn an ideot. The first of which is unnatural, and the other impossible.

As to the remark which the Abbe makes of the one country being a Monarchy, and the other a Republic, it can have no effential meaning. Forms of government have nothing to do with treaties. The former are the internal police of the countries feverally; the latter, their external police jointly: and so long as each performs its part, we have no more right or business to know how the one or the other conducts conducts its domestic affairs, than we have to enquire into the private concerns of a family.

But, had the Abbe reflected for a moment, he would have feen, that courts, or the governing powers of all countries, be their forms what they may, are relatively republics with each other. It is the first and true principle of alliancing. Antiquity may have given precedence, and power will naturally create importance, but their equal right is never disputed. It may likewise be worthy of remarking, that a monarchical country can fuffer nothing in its popular happiness, by allying with a republican one; and republican governments have never been destroyed by their external connections. but by some internal convulsion or contrivance. France has been in alliance with the republic of Swifferland for more than two hundred years, and still Swifferland retains her original form as entire as if she had allied with a republic like herfelf; therefore this remark of the Abbe goes to nothing.—Besides, it is best that mankind should mix. There is ever something to learn, either of manners or principle; and it is by a free communication, without regard to domestic matters, that friendship is to be extended, and prejudice destroyed all over the world.

But notwithstanding the Abbe's high profesfions in favour of Liberty, he appears sometimes to forget himself, or that his theory is rather the child of his fancy than of his judgment:

ment: for, in almost the same instant that he censures the alliance as not originally or sufficiently calculated for the happiness of mankind, he, by a figure of implication, accuses France for having acted fo generously and unreservedly in concluding it. "Why did they (fays he, of meaning the Court of France) tie thenselves down by an inconfiderate treaty, to condise tions with the Congress, which they might themselves have held in dependence by am-" ple and regular supplies?"

When an author undertakes to treat of public happiness, he ought to be certain that he does not mistake passion for right, nor imagination for principle, Principle, like truth, needs no contrivance. It will ever tell its own tale, and tell it the same way. But where this is not the case, every page must be watched, recollected, and compared, like an invented ftory.

I am surprized at this passage of the Abbe. It means nothing, or it means ill; and, in any case, it shews the great difference between speculative and practical knowledge. A treaty, according to the Abbe's language, would have neither duration nor affection; it might have lasted to the end of the war, and then expired with it. - But France, by acting in a style superior to the little politics of narrow thinking, has established a generous fame, and won the love of a country she was before a stranger to, She had to treat with a people who thought as Nature

Nat fhe ! to b bala from

F fecre faille of A low ftrik. form a po dang babil as m she b that cond to he coun preh

> TI fine r an op Mini on th Cour to fea

It joined office Nature taught them; and, on her own part, she wisely saw there was no present advantage to be obtained by unequal terms, which could balance the more lasting ones that might flow from a kind and generous beginning.

From this part the Abbe advances into the fecret transactions of the two Cabinets of Verfailles and Madrid, respecting the independence of America; through which I mean not to follow him. It is a circumstance sufficiently striking, without being commented on, that the former union of America with Britain produced a power, which, in her hands, was becoming dangerous to the world: and there is no improbability in supposing, that had the latter known as much of the strength of the former before she began the quarrel, as she has known since. that instead of attempting to reduce her to unconditional submission, she would have proposed to her the conquest of Mexico. But from the countries separately Spain has nothing to apprehend, though from their union she had more to fear than any other Power in Europe.

The part which I shall more particularly confine myself to, is that wherein the Abbe takes an opportunity of complimenting the British Ministry with high encomiums of admiration, on their rejecting the offered mediation of the Court of Madrid, in 1779.

It must be remembered, that before Spain joined France in the war, she undertook the office of a mediator, and made proposals to the British King and Ministry, so exceedingly favourable to their interest, that had they been accepted, would have become inconvenient, if not inadmissible, to America. These proposals were, nevertheless, rejected by the British Carbinet; on which the Abbe says,— "It is in such a circumstance as this; it is in "the time when noble pride elevates the foul " fuperior to all terror-when nothing is feen "more dreadful than the shame of receiving "the law, and when there is no doubt or hefi-"tation which to chuse, between ruin and dis-"honour; it is then that the greatness of a na-"tion is displayed. I acknowledge, however, " that men accustomed to judge of things by "the event, call great and perilous refolutions "heroismor madness, according to the good or " bad fuccess with which they have been attend-If, then, I should be asked, what is the " name which shall in years to come be given " to the firmness which was in this moment exhibited by the English? I shall answer, that "I do not know. But that which it deserves, "I know. I know that the annals of the "world hold out to us but rarely, the august " and majestic spectacle of a nation, which " chuses rather to renounce its duration than " its glory,"

In this paragraph the conception is lofty, and the expression elegant; but the colouring is too high for the original, and the likeness sails through an excess of graces. To fit the powers

þο

to

clu

no

Bu

he

une

rep

in '

wit

thir

and

and

COIT

ence by i

view

dan

rend

canr

had

tica,

than

ing

Pow

mor

But

she

nava

Was

1

n

if ils

4+

in

ul

en

ng

fi-

lif-

12-

er.

by ons

or nd-

the

ven

ent

hat

es,

the

rust

ich

han

fty,

ing

ress

the.

ers

powers of thinking and the turn of language to the subject, so as to bring out a clear conclusion, that shall hit the point in question, and nothing else, is the true criterion of writing. But the greater part of the Abbe's writings (if he will pardon me the remark) appear to me uncentral, and burthened with variety. They represent a beautiful wilderness without paths; in which the eye is diverted by every thing, without being particularly directed to any thing; and in which it is agreeable to be lost, and difficult to find the way out.

Before I offer any other remark on the spirit and composition of the above passage, I shall compare it with the circumstance it alludes to.

The circumstance, then, does not deserve the encomium. The rejection was not prompted by her fortitude, but her vanity. She did not view it as a case of despair, or even of extreme danger; and consequently the determination to renounce her duration rather than her glory, cannot apply to the condition of her mind. She had then high expectations of subjugating America, and had no other naval force against her than France; neither was she certain, that rejecting the mediation of Spain, would combine that Power with France. New mediations might arife, more favourable than those she had refused. But if they should not, and Spain should join, the still faw that it would only bring out her naval force against France and Spain, which was not wanted, and could not be employed I 2 against

th

of.

ciı

the

at

fha

me otl

the

hin

wa Th

bed

fou

kņ

Qf

1.111

def

obj

and

of

* E

against America; and habits of thinking had taught her to believe herself superior to both.

But, in any case to which the consequence might point, there was nothing to impress her with the idea of renouncing her duration. It is not the policy of Europe to suffer the extinction of any Power, but only to lop off, or prevent its dangerous increase. She was likewise freed, by situation, from the internal and immediate horrors of invasion; was rolling in dissipation, and looking for conquests; and though she suffered nothing but the expence of war, she still had a greedy eye to magnificent reimbursement.

But if the Abbe is delighted with high and striking singularities of character, he might in America, have found ample field for encomium. Here was a people, who could not know what part the world would take, for or against them: and who were venturing on an untried scheme, in opposition to a Power against which more formidable Nations had failed. They had every thing to learn but the principles which supported them, and every thing to procure that was necessary for their defence. They have, at times, feen themselves as low as distress could make them, without shewing the least stagger in their fortitude; and been raised again by the most unexpected events, without discovering an unmanly discomposure of joy. To hesitate, or to despair, are conditions equally unknown in America. Her mind was prepared for every * 42 thing ;

e

t

-

h

r,

d

n

at

e,

--

at

at

d er

ne

g

e, n

y

i

thing; because her original and final resolution of succeeding or perishing, included all possible circumstances.

The rejection of the British propositions in the year 1778, circumstanced as America was at that time, is a far greater instance of unshaken fortitude, than the resusal of the Spanish mediation by the Court of London: And other historians, besides the Abbe, struck with the vastness of her conduct therein, have, like himself, attributed it to a circumstance which was then unknown; the alliance with France. Their error shews their idea of its greatness; because, in order to account for it, they have sought a cause suited to its magnitude, without knowing that the cause existed in the principles of the country.*

But this passionate encomium of the Abbe, is deservedly subject to moral and philosophical objections. It is the essuance of wild thinking, and has a tendency to prevent that humanity of resection, which the criminal conduct of

Britain

^{*} Extract from " A Short Review of the present Reign" in England.

Page 45, in the New Annual Register for the year 1780.

"THE Commissioners, who, in consequence of Lord North's conciliatory bills, went over to America, to propose terms of peace to the Colonies, were exholly unsuccessful. The concessions which formerly would have been received with the time of American were rejected with distain. Now was the time of American pride and haughtiness. It is probable, however, that it was not pride and haughtiness alone that distated the Resolutions of Congress, but a distrust of the sincerity of the offers of Britain, a determination not to give up their independence, and, ABOVE ALL, THE ENGAGEMENTS INTO WHICH THEY HAD EN-

ec

"

**

32 mo

par

feri

esp

can rec

Th

cha

the

in t

ple

ano into

as r dee

feve

plea

Tup

duć

forc

mig

Britain enjoins on her as a duty.—It is laudanum to courtly iniquity.—It keeps in intoxicated fleep, the conscience of a nation; and more mischief is effected by wrapping up guilt in splendid excuse, than by directly patronizing it.

Britain is now the only country which holds the world in disturbance and war; and instead of paying compliments to the excess of her crimes, the Abbe would have appeared much more in character, had he put to her, or to her monarch, this serious question—

Are there not miseries enough in the world, too difficult to be encountered, and too pointed to be borne, without studying to enlarge the list, and arming it with new destruction? Is life so very long, that it is necessary, nay, even a duty, to shake the sand, and hasten out the period of duration? Is the path so elegantly smooth, so decked on every side and carpeted with joys, that wretchedness is wanted to enrich it as a soil? Go ask thy aching heart when sorrow from a thousand causes wound it, go ask thy sickened self when every medicine sails, whether this be the case or not?

Quitting my remarks on this head, I proceed to another, in which the Abbe has let loofe a vein of ill-nature, and, what is still worse, of injustice.

After cavilling at the Treaty, he goes on to characterize the feveral parties combined in the war—" Is it possible," fays the Abbe, "that a frict

" first union should long subsist amongst con" federates of characters fo opposite as the

"hafty, light, disdainful Frenchman; the

" jealous, haughty, fly, flow, circumspective

"Spaniard; and the American, who is fecretly

" fnatching looks at the mother country, and would rejoice, were they compatible with his " independence, at the disasters of his allies?"

To draw foolish portraits of each other, is a mode of attack and reprisal which the greater part of mankind are fond of indulging. The serious Philosopher should be above it; more especially in cases from which no possible good can arise, and mischief may, and where no received provocation can palliate the offence. The Abbe might have invented a difference of character for every country in the world; and they, in return, might find others for him, till, in the war of wit, all real character is lost. The pleasantry of one nation, or the gravity of the another, may, by a little penciling, be distorted into whimsical features, and the painter become as much laughed at as the painting.

But why did not the Abbe look a little deeper, and bring forth the excellences of the feveral parties? Why did he not dwell with pleasure on that greatness of character, that superiority of heart, which has marked the control duct of France in her conquests, and which has forced an acknowledgment even from Britain?

There is one line at leaft, (and many others might be discovered), in which the confederates unite,

unite, which is that of a rival eminence in their treatment of their enemies. Spain, in her conquest of Minorca and the Bahama Islands, confirms this remark. America has been invariable in her lenity from the beginning of the war, notwithstanding the high provocations she has experienced! It is England only, who has been insolent and cruel.

But why must America be charged with a crime undeserved by her conduct, more so by her principles, and which, if a sact, would be satal to her honour? I mean that of want of attachment to her allies, or rejoicing in their disasters. She, it is true, has been assiduous in shewing to the world, that she was not the aggressor towards England, that the quarrel was not of her seeking, or, at that time, even of her wishing. But, to draw inferences from her candour, and even from her justification, to stab her character by, and I see nothing else from which they can be supposed to be drawn, is unkind and unjust.

Does her rejection of the British propositions in 1778, before she knew of any alliance with France, correspond with the Abbe's description of her mind? Does a single instance of her conduct since that time justify it?—But there is a still better evidence to apply to, which is, that of all the mails which at different times have been way laid on the road in divers parts of America, and taken and carried into New-York, and from which the most secret and

confidential

P

P

th

m af

th

A

kr

gi

the

de

WO

rer

CH

md

mo

the

lof

de

wh

Riv

err

confidential private letters, as well as those from authority, have been published; not one of them, I repeat it, not a single one of them gives countenance to fuch a charge.

S

3

r

C

ėl

n

n ſe

n, ns

h

n

er

re

S,

es

ts

Ñ-

nd, ial This is not a country where men are under Government restraint in speaking: and if there is any kind of restraint, it arises from a sear of popular resentment. Now, if nothing in her private or public correspondence savours such a suggestion, and if the general disposition of the country is such as to make it unsafe for a man to shew an appearance of joy at any disaster to her ally, on what grounds, I ask, can the accusation stand? What company the Abbe may have kept in France, we cannot know; but this we know, that the account he gives, does not apply to America.

Had the Abbe been in America at the time the news arrived of the disaster of the sleet under Gount de Grasse in the West-Indies, he would have seen his vast mistake. Neither do I remember any instance, except the loss of Charlestown, in which the public mind suffered more severe and pungent concern, or underwent more agitations of hope and apprehension as to the truth or falshood of the report. Had the loss been all our own, it could not have had a deeper effect; yet it was not one of these cases which reached to the independence of America.

In the geographical account which the Abbe gives of the Thirteen States, he is so exceedingly erroneous, that to attempt a particular resutation would exceed the limits I have prescribed to myself: and as it is a matter neither political, historical, nor sentimental, and which can always be contradicted by the extent and natural circumstances of the country, I shall pass it over with this additional remark, that I never yet saw an European description of America that was true; neither can any person gain a just idea of it, but by coming to it.

Though I have already extended this letter beyond what I at first proposed, I am nevertheless obliged to omit many observations I originally designed to have made. I wish there had been no occasion for making any. But the wrong ideas which the Abbe's work had a tendency to excite, and the prejudicial impressions they might make, must be an apology for my remarks, and the freedom with which they are done.

I observe the Abbe has made a sort of epitome of a considerable part of the pamphlet Common Sense, and introduced it in that sorm into his publication. But there are other places where the Abbe has borrowed freely from the same pamphlet, without acknowledging it. The difference between society and government, with which the pamphlet opens, is taken from it, and in some expressions almost literally, into the Abbe's work, as if originally his own; and through the whole of the Abbe's remarks on this head, the idea in Common Sense is so closely copied and pursued, that the difference is

per

qu

pec

nat

fan

the

pei foo

of.

req

the

is only in words, and in the arrangement of the thoughts, and not in the thoughts themselves ?..

* COMMON SENSE.

"Some writers have fo confounded fociety with government, as to leave little or no distinction between them; whereas, they are not only different, but have different origins.

" Society is produced by our wants, and governments by our wickedness; the former promotes our happiness positively, by uniting our affections; the latter negatively, by restraining our vices."

ABBE RAYNAL.

« Care must be taken not to confound together fociety with government. That they may be known diffinctly, their origin should be confidered.

"Society originates in the wants of men, government in their vices. Society tends always to good; government ought always to tend to the repressing of evil."

In the following paragraphs there is lefs likenefs in the language, but the ideas in the one are evidently copied from the other.

COMMON SENSE.

" In order to gain a clear and just idea of the design and end of government, let us suppose a small number of persons meeting in some sequeflered part of the earth unconnected with the reft; they will then represent the peopling of any country, or of the world. In this state of natural liberty, fociety will be our first thought. A thoufand motives will excite them thereto. The strength of one man is founequal to his wants, and his mind so unfitted for perpetual folitude, that he is foon obliged to feek affiftance of another, who, in his turn, requires the fame. Four or' five united, would be able to raise a tolerable dwelling in the midst of a wilderness; but 21

ABBE RAYNAL.

" Man, thrown as it were by chance upon the globe, furrounded by all the evils of nature, obliged continually to defend and protect his life against the storms and tempefts of the air, against the inundations of water, against the fire of volcanoes, against the intemperance of frigid and torrid zones, against the fterility of theearth, which refuses him aliment, or its baneful fecundity, which makes poison spring up beneath his feet; in short, against the claws and teeth of favage beasts, who dispute with him his habitation and his prey, and, attacking his person, seem refolved to render themselves rulers of this globe, of which he thinks himself to be the

But as it is time I should come to a conclusfion of thy letter, I shall forbear all further observations on the Abbe's work, and take a concile

COMMON SENSE.

common period of life, without accomplishing any thing; when he had felled his timber, he could not remove it, nor crect it after it was removed; hunger, in the mean time, would urge him from his work. and every different want call him a different way. Disease, pay even misfortune, would be death; for though neither might be immediately mortal, yet either of them would difable him from living, and reduce him to a state in which he might rather be faid to perish than die .- Thus necesfity, like a gravitating power, would form our newly arrived emigrants into fociety, the reciprocal bleffings of which would fuperfede and render the obligations of law and government unnecessary, while they remained perfectly just to each other. But as nothing but heaven is impregnable to vice, it will unavoidably happen, that in proportion as they furmount the first difficulties of emigration, which bound them together in a common cause, they will begin to relax in their duty and attachment to each other; and this remissiness will point out the necessity of establishing fome form of government, to supply the defect of moral virtue,"

ABBE RAYNAL.

vi

in

CO

pa

thi

ag

po

thi

wh

for

and

of

WO

wit

Mi

the

tics

haft

Sho

they

and

felv

frek

difa

it w ftrik

Wh

Į an 1777

be

one man might labour out the master : Man, in this state, alone, and abandoned to himfelf, could do nothing for his prefervation. It was necesfary, therefore, that he should unite himself, and affociate? with his like, in order to bring together their strength and intelligence in common stock. It is by this union that he has triumphed over fo many evils, that he has fashioned this globe to his use, restrained the rivers, subjugated the seas, infured his subtistence, conquered a part of the animals, in obliging them to ferve him, and driven others far from his empire, to the depth of defarts or of woods, where their number diminishes from age to age. What a man alone would not have been able to effect, men have executed in concert; and altogether they preserve their work. Such is the origin, fuch the advantages, and the end of fociety. -Government owes its birth to the nevellity of preventing and repressing the injuries which the associated ndividuals had to fear from one another. It is the centinel who watches, in order that the common labours be not difturbed,"

view

view of the state of public affairs, since the time in which that performance was published to not

A mind habited to meanness and injustice, commits them without resection, or with a very partial one; for, on what other ground than this, can we account for the declaration of war against the Dutch? To gain an idea of the politics which actuated the British Ministry to this measure, we must enter into the opinion which they, and the English in general, had formed of the temper of the Dutch nation; and from thence infer, what their expectation of the consequences would be.

Could they have imagined that Holland would have ferroully made a common cause, with France, Spain, and America, the British. Ministry would never have dared to provoke: them. It would have been a madness in politics to have done so, unless their views were to haften on a period of fuch emphatic diffress, as should justify the concessions which they saw they must one day or other make to the world; and for which they wanted an apology to themfelves.-There is a temper in some men, which feeks a presence for submission. Like a ship. disabled in action, and unfitted to continue it, it waits the approach of a still larger one to strike to, and feels relief at the opportunity, Whether this is greatness or littleness of mind, I am not enquiring into. I should suppose it to be the latter, because it proceeds from the want of knowing how to bear misfortune in its original state.

But the subsequent conduct of the British Cabinet has shewn that this was not their plan of politics, and consequently their motives must be sought for in another line.

The truth is, that the British had formed a very humble opinion of the Dutch nation. They looked on them as a people who would submit to any thing; that they might insult them as they liked, plunder them as they pleased, and still the Dutch dared not to be provoked.

If this be taken as the opinion of the British Cabiner, the measure is easily accounted for; because it goes on the supposition, that when, by a declaration of hostilities, they had robbed the Dutch of some millions sterling, (and to rob them was popular), they could make peace with them whenever they pleased, and on almost any terms the British Ministry should propose. And no sooner was the plundering committed, than the accommodation was set on soot, and sailed.

When once the mind loses the sense of its own dignity, it loses, likewise, the ability of judging of it in another. And the American war has thrown Britain into such a variety of absurd situations, that, arguing from herself, she sees not in what conduct national dignity consists in other countries. From Holland the expected duplicity and submission; and this

11:12

mistake

fame fame
T
feem
Holl
ty of allies
them
fpect inful

feels becau

ter, t

howe

mil

An the p wife f is the line to Amer very n

Rep the im the sti mind, dition of the years, advan first st. mistake arose from her having acted, in a number of instances during the present war, the same character herself.

To be allied to, or connected with Britain, feems to be an unfafe and impolitic fituation. Holland and America are inftances of the reality of this remark. Make those countries the allies of France or Spain, and Britain will court them with civility, and treat them with respect; make them her own allies, and she will insult and plunder them. In the first case, she feels some apprehensions at offending them, because they have support at hand; in the latter, those apprehensions do not exist. Such, however, has hitherto been her conduct.

Another measure which has taken place since the publication of the Abbe's work, and likewise since the time of my beginning this letter, is the change in the British Ministry. What line the new Cabinet will pursue respecting America, is at this time unknown; neither is it very material, unless they are seriously disposed to a general and honourable peace.

Repeated experience has shewn, not only the impracticability of conquering America, but the still higher impossibility of conquering her mind, or recalling her back to her former condition of thinking. Since the commencement of the war, which is now approaching to eight years, thousands and tens of thousands have advanced, and are daily advancing into the first stage of manhood, who know nothing of Britain

Britain but as a barbarous enemy, and to whom the independence of America appears as much the natural and established government of the country, as that of England does to an Englithman. And on the other hand, thousands of the aged, who had British ideas, have dropped. and are daily dropping, from the stage of business and life. The natural progress of generation and decay operates every hour to the difadvantage of Britain. Time and death, hard enemies to contend with, fight constantly against her interest; and the bills of mortality; in every part of America, are the thermometers of her decline. The children in the streets are from their cradle bred to consider her as their only foe. They hear of her cruelties: of their fathers, uncles, and kindred killed; they see the remains of burnt and destroyed houses---and the common tradition of the school they go to, tells them, Those things were done by the British.

These are circumstances which the mere English State Politician, who considers man only in a state of manhood, does not attend to. He gets entangled with parties coeval or equal with himself at home, and thinks not how fast the rising generation in America is growing beyond his knowledge of them, or they of him. In a few years, all personal remembrance will be lost; and who is King or Minister in England, will be little known, and scarcely enquired after.

The

of an lê

de

fel

wh

thi

the

CO

Wil

it v

of

the

he;

opi

WO

con

tho

wife

ame

243

the

WOL

the

to f

can

the

mar

mif this

1.3

The new British administration is composed of persons who have ever been against the war, and who have constantly reprobated all the violent measures of the former one. They considered the American war as destructive to themselves, and opposed it on that ground. But what are these things to America? She has nothing to do with English parties. The ins and the outs are nothing to her. It is the whole country she is at war with, or must be at peace with.

Were every Minister in England a Chatham, it would now weigh little or nothing in the scale of American politics. Death has preserved to the memory of this statesman, that fame, which he, by living, would have lost. His plans and opinions, towards the latter part of his life, would have been attended with as many evil consequences, and as much reprobated here, as those of Lord North; and, considering him a wise man, they abound with inconsistences amounting to absurdities.

3

8

d

h

18 n

1

Æ

g

n

6

It has apparently been the fault of many in the late minority, to suppose that America would agree to certain terms with them, were they in place, which the would not ever listen to from the then administration. This idea can answer no other purpose than to prolong the war; and Britain may, at the expence of many more millions, learn the fatality of such mistakes. If the new Ministry wisely avoid this hopeless policy, they will prove themselves better pilots, and wifer men, than they are conceived to be; for it is every day expected to fee their bark strike upon some hidden rock, and go to pieces.

But there is a line in which they may be great. A more brilliant opening needs not present itself; and it is such a one as true magnanimity would improve, and humanity rejoice in.

A total reformation is wanted in England. She wants an expanded mind---an heart which embraces the universe. Instead of shutting herself up in an island, and quarrelling with the world, she would derive more lasting happiness, and acquire more real riches, by generoufly mixing with it, and bravely faying, I am the enemy of none! It is not now a time for little contrivances, or artful politics. The European world is too experienced to be imposed upon, and America too wife to be duped. It must be fomething new and masterly that must succeed. The idea of feducing America from her indedependence, or corrupting her from her alliance, is a thought too little for a great mind, and impossible for any honest one to attempt. Whenever politics are applied to debauch mankind from their integrity, and diffolve the virtues of human nature, they become detestable; and to be a Statesman upon this plan, is to be a commissioned villain. He who aims at it, leaves a vacancy in his character, which may be filled up by the worst of epithets.

as

pea

COL

the

int

She

WO

fac

in

atio

eve

tha

cha

a c gre

nat

jud

che

her

inv the

her

has tak

fal

m

m

If the disposition of England should be such as not to agree to a general and honourable peace, and that the war must at all events continue longer, I cannot help wishing, that the alliances which America has, or may enter into, may become the only objects of the war. She wants an opportunity of shewing to the world, that she holds her honour as dear and sacred as her independence, and that she will, in no situation, for sake those whom no negociations could induce to for sake her. Peace to every reflective mind, is a desirable object; but that peace which is accompanied with a ruined character, becomes a crime to the seducer, and a curse upon the seduced.

But where is the impossibility, or even the great difficulty, of England forming a friend-ship with France and Spain, and making it a national virtue to renounce for ever those prejudiced inveteracies it has been her custom to cherish; and which, while they serve to sink her with an increasing enormity of debt, by involving her in fruitless wars, become likewise the bane of her repose, and the destruction of her manners? We had once the setters that she has now: but experience has shewn us the mistake, and thinking justly, has set us right.

The true idea of a great nation, is that which extends and promotes the principles of univerfal fociety; whose mind rises above the atmospheres of local thoughts, and considers mankind, of whatever nation or profession they may be, as the work of one Creator. The rage for conquest has had its sashion, and its day. Why may not the amiable virtues have the same? The Alexanders and Cæsars of antiquity have lest behind them their monuments of destruction, and are remembered with hatred; while these more exalted characters who first taught society and science, are blest with the gratitude of every age and country. Of more use was one philosopher, though a heathen, to the world, than all the heathen conquerors that ever existed.

Should the present Revolution be distinguished by opening a new system of extended civilization, it will receive from Heaven the highest evidence of approbation; and as this is a subject to which the Abbe's powers are so eminently suited, I recommend it to his attention, with the affection of a friend, and the ardour of a universal citizen.

have author re stance fubje of se even gate mom other of time rions fcore meditions, may a as mu thou! dence

are in lead

POSTSCRIPT.

POSTSCRIPT.

Since closing the foregoing letter, some intimations respecting a general peace have made their way to America. On what authority or soundation they stand, or how near or remote such an event may be, are circumstances I am not inquiring into. But as the subject must sooner or later become a matter of serious attention, it may not be improper, even at this early period, candidly to investigate some points that are connected with it, or lead towards it.

The independence of America is at this moment, as firmly established, as that of any other country in a state of war. It is not length of time, but power, that gives stability. Nations at war know nothing of each other on the score of antiquity. It is their present and immediate strength, together with their connections, that must support them. To which we may add, that a right which originated to-day, is as much a right as if it had the sanction of a thousand years; and therefore the independence, and present governments of America, are in no more danger of being subverted, because they are modern, than that of England is secure, because it is ancient.

The politics of Britain, so far as they respected America, were originally conceived in idiotism, and acted in madness. There is not a step which bears the smallest trace of rationality. In her management of the war, she has laboured to be wretched, and studied to be hated; and, in all her former propositions for accommodation, she has discovered a total ignorance of mankind, and of those natural and unalterable sensations by which they are so generally governed. How she may conduct herfels in the present or suture business of negociating a peace, is yet to be proved.

He is a weak politician who does not underfland human nature, and penetrate into the effect which the measures of Government will have upon the mind. All the miscarriages of Britain have arisen from this defect. The former Ministry acted as if they supposed mankind to be without a mind; and the present Ministry, as if America was without a memory. The one must have supposed we were incapable of seeling; and the other, that we could not remember injuries.

There is likewise another line in which politicians mistake, which is that of not rightly calculating, or rather of misjudging, the confequence which any given circumstance will produce. Nothing is more frequent, as well in common as in political life, than to hear people

ped duction right proque

1

Bri No or l defi mad aga But

the

will

F

follopeo it w And cou ple will B of the defermance defe fend

ıaş

people complain, that fuch or fuch means produced an event directly contrary to their intentions. But the fault lies in their not judging rightly what the event would be; for the means produced only its proper and natural confequence.

nd

re-

in

not

on-

has

be

for

ig-

ind ge-

er-

iat-

er-

the

vill

of

or-

anent

ry. ble

not

oli-

itly

on-

will vell

ear ple

It is very probable, that in a treaty for peace, Britain will contend for some post or other in North America; perhaps Canada, or Halifax, or both: and I will infer this from the known deficiency of her politics, which have ever yet made use of means, whose natural event was against both her interest and her expectation. But the question with her ought to be, Whether it is worth her while to hold them, and what will be the confequence?

Respecting Canada, one or other of the two following will take place, viz. If Canada should people, it will revolt; and if it do not people, it will not be worth the expence of holding. And the same may be said of Halisax, and the country round it. But Canada never will people; neither is there any occasion for contrivances on one fide or the other, for Nature alone will do the whole.

Britain may put herfelf to great expences in fending fettlers to Canada; but the descendants of those fettlers will be Americans, as other defcendants have been before them. They will look round and fee the neighbouring States fovereign and free, respected abroad, and trading at large with the world; and the natural love of liberty, the advantages of commerce, the bleffings of independence, and of a happier climate, and a richer foil, will draw them fouthward; and the effect will be, that Britain will fustain the expence, and America reap the advantage.

love

One would think that the experience which Britain has had of America, would entirely ficken her of all thoughts of continental colonization; and any part which the might retain; will only become to her a field of jealoufy and thorns, of debate and contention, for ever struggling for privileges, and meditating revolt. She may form new fettlements, but they will be for us; they will become part of the United States of America—and that against all her contrivances to prevent it, or without any endeavours of ours to promote it. In the first place, the cannot draw from them a revenue until they are able to pay one; and when they are fo, they will be above subjection. Men' foon become attached to the foil they live up. on, and incorporated with the prosperity of the, place; and it fignifies but little what opinions, they come over with, for time, interest, and new connections, will render them obsolete, and the next generation know nothing of them.

Were Britain truly wife, fine would lay hold of the prefent opportunity to difentangle herfelf from all continental embarraffinents in North America, and that not only to avoid future broils and troubles, but to fave expences.

For

F

n

U

CO

of

sta

lan

U

nio

Wa:

pen

peo

plac

are

duc

reve

fupp

poli

want

at al prote

to m

com

it, o falsh

post,

nefit

this h

water

the ca

G

For, to speak explicitly on the matter, I would not, were I an European power, have Canada, under the conditions that Britain must retain it, could it be given to me. It is one of those kind of dominions, that is, and ever will be, a constant charge upon any foreign holder.

As to Halifax, it will become useless to England, after the present war, and the loss of the United States. A harbour, when the dominion is gone, for the purpose of which only it was wanted, can be attended only with expence. There are, I doubt not, thousands of people in England, who suppose that those places are a profit to the nation, whereas they are directly the contrary, and instead of producing any revenue, a considerable part of the revenue of England is annually drawn off, to support the expence of holding them.

Gibraltar is another instance of national ill policy. A post which, in time of peace, is not wanted, and in time of war is of no use, must at all times be useless. Instead of affording protection to a Navy, it requires the aid of one to maintain it. And to suppose that Gibraltar commands the Mediterranean, or the pass into it, or the trade of it, is to suppose a detected falshood; because though Britain holds the post, she has lost the other three, and every benefit she expected from it. And to say that all this happens because it is besieged by land and water, is to say nothing, for this will always be the case in time of war, while France and Spain keep up superior sleets, and Britain holds the place. So that, though as an impenetrable, inaccessible rock, it may be held by the one, it is always in the power of the other to render it useless, and excessively chargeable.

I should suppose that one of the principal objects of Spain in besieging it, is to show to Britain, that though she may not take it, she can command it; that is, she can shut it up, and prevent its being used as a harbour, though not a garrison.—But the short way to reduce Gibraltar, is to attack the British sleet; for Gibraltar is as dependent on a sleet for support, as a bird is on its wing for sood—and, when wounded, there it starves.

There is another circumstance which the people of England have not only not attended to, but seem to be utterly ignorant of, and that is, the difference between permanent power and accidental power, considered in a national sense.

By permanent power, I mean a natural, inherent, and perpetual ability in a nation, which, though always in being, may not be always in action, or not always advantageously directed; and by accidental power, I mean a fortunate or accidental disposition, or exercise of national strength, in whole, or in part.

There undoubtedly was a time when any one European nation, with only eight or ten ships of war equal to the present ships of the line, could have carried terror to all others, who had not

began

tu

ca

as

and

bu

Af

to fup

bui

tio

gin

bui

Th

whi

cft

tier

· F

Eur

hoo

fror

tant

nor

the

cafe

nav

gina

it to

bot

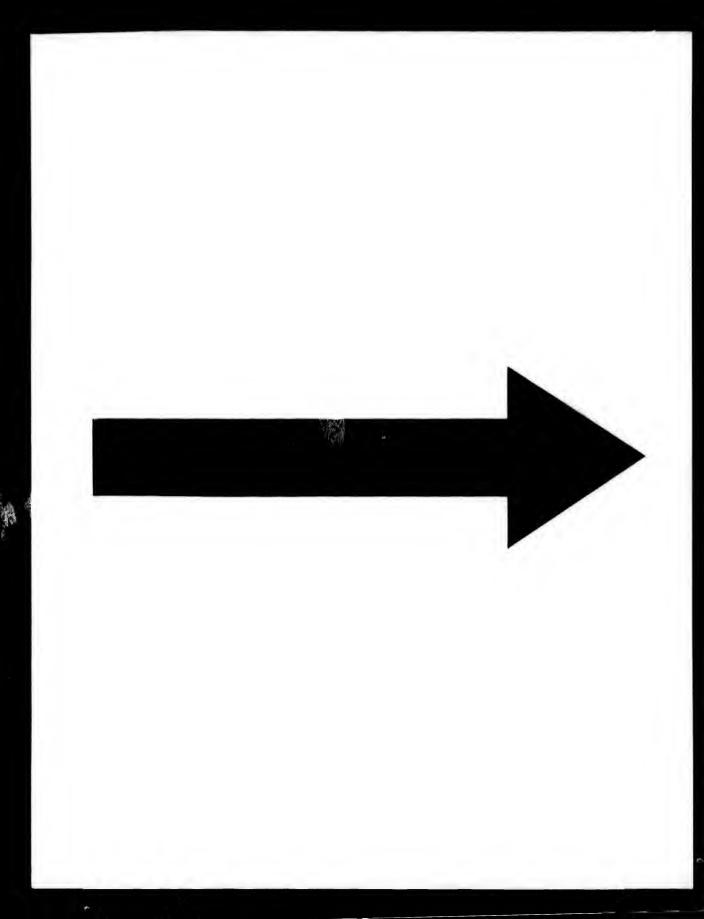

thei

fup

began to build a navy, however great their natural ability might be for that purpole; but this can be confidered only as accidental, and not as a standard to compare permanent power by, and could last no longer than until those powers built as many or more ships than the former. After this a larger fleet was necessary, in order to be superior; and a still larger would again supersede it. And thus mankind have gone on building fleet upon fleet, as occasion or situation dictated. And this reduces it to an original question, which is, hich Power can build and man the largest number of ships? The natural answer to which is, That Power which has the largest revenue, and the greatest number of inhabitants, provided its situation of coast affords sufficient conveniences.

France being a nation on the continent of Europe, and Britain an island in its neighbourhood, each of them derived different ideas from their different situations. The inhabitants of Britain could carry on no foreign trade, nor stir from the spot they dwelt upon, without the affistance of shipping; but this was not the case with France. The idea, therefore, of a navy, did not arise to France from the same original and immediate necessity which produced it to England. But the question is, That when both of them turn their attention, and employ their revenues the same way, which can can be superior?

M 2

I C WELL TO THE POPULATION OF THE POPULATION OF

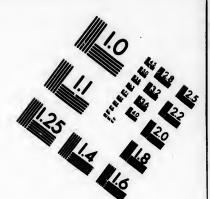

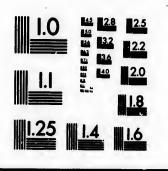

IMAGE EVALUATION TEST TARGET (MT-3)

STATE OF THE STATE

Photographic Sciences Corporation

23 WEST MAIN STREET WEBSTER, N.Y. 14580 (716) 872-4503 STILL SELLEN ON THE STATE OF THE SELLEN OF T

double that of England, and her number of inbabitants more than twice as many at Each of them that the fame length of coast on the channel, belides which, France has several hundred miles extent on the Bay of Biscay, and an opening on the Mediterranean and every day proves, that practice and exercise makes failors as well as soldiers, in one country as well as nother.

13. If, then, Britain can maintain an hundred ships of the line, France can as well support an hundred and fifty, because her revenues and her population are as equal to the one as those of England are to the other. And the only reason why the has not done it, is, because the has not till lately attended to it. But when the fees as the now fees, that a navy is the first engine of power, the can eafily accomplish it is yrays England very fallely, and ruinously for herfelf, infers, that because she had the advantage of France, while France had the smaller navy, that for that reason it is always to be so: Whereas it may be clearly feen, that the strength of France has never yet been tried on a navy, and that the is as able to be as superior to England in the extent of a navy, as the is in the extent of her revenues and her population. And England may lament the day, when by her insolence and injustice, she provoked in France a maritime disposition, w and dately or

winds in the power of the combined fleets to conquer every island in the West Indies, and reduce all the British navy in those places. For were France and Spain to send their whole naval force in Europe to those islands, it would not be in the power of Britain to follow them with an equal force. She would be still 20 or 30 ships inferior, were she to send every vessel she had and sin the mean time all the foreign trade of England would lie exposed to the Dutch.

It is a maxim which I am persuaded will ever hold good, and more especially in naval operations, that a great power ought never to move in detachments, if it can possibly be avoided in but to go with its whole force to some important object, the reduction of which shall have a decisive effect upon the war. Had the whole of the French and Spanish sleets in Europe come last spring to the West Indies, every island had been their own, Rodney their prisoner, and his sleet their prize. From the United States the combined sleets can be supplied with provisions, without the necessity of drawing them from Europe; which is not the case with England.

Accident has thrown some advantages in the way of England, which, from the inferiority of her navy, she had not a right to expect. For though she has been obliged to sty before the combined sleets, yet Rodney has twice had the fortune to fall in with detached squadrons, to which he was superior in numbers? The strict off Cape St. Vincent, where he had nearly where he had a majority of fix ships in Victories of this kind almost produce themselves: they are won without honour, and suffered without disgrace; and are ascribable to the chance of meeting, not to the superiority of fighting in for the same. Admiral under whom they were obtained, was unable in three former engaged ments to make the least impression in a sleet consisting of an equal number of ships with his own, and compounded for the events, by declining the actions.

To conclude, if it may be said that Britain has numerous enemies, it likewife proves that the has given numerous offences. Infolence is fure to provoke hatred, whether in a nation or an individual. The want of manners in the British Court may be seen even in its birth-days and new-years odes, which are calculated to infatuate the vulgar, and difgust the man of refinement : and her former overbearing rudeness, and unsufferable injustice on the seas, have made every commercial nation her foe. Her fleets were employed as engines of preys and acted on the furface of the deep, the character which the shark does beneath it. On the other handing the Combined Powers ware taking wa popular part, and will render their reputation immortal, by establishing the perfect freedom north.

See the accounts, either English or French, of three affions in the West Indies between Count de Guichen and Admiral Rodney; in 1780, y date we later and tady of a now right, and are interested in accomplishing. The seams the world's highway; and he that arrogates a prerogative over it, transgresses the right, and justly brings on himself the chastisement of nations.

Perhaps it might be of fome fervice to the future tranquillity of mankind, were an article introduced into the next general peace, that no one nation should, in time of peace, exceed a certain number of ships of war. Something of this kind feems necessary: for, according to the present fashion, half the world will get upon the water, and there appears no end to the extent to which navies may be carried. Another reason is, that navies add nothing to the manners or morals of a people. The fequestered life which attends the service, prevents the opportunities of fociety, and is too apt to occafion a coarfeness of ideas and language, and that more in ships of warthan in commercial employ: because, in the latter they mix more with the world, and are nearer related to it. I mention this remark as a general one, and not applied to any one country more than another. In patie

Britain has now had the trial of above feven years, with an expence of nearly an hundred million pounds fterling; and every month in which the delays to conclude a peace, costs her another million sterling, over and above her ordinary expences of government, which are a million more; so that her total monthly expence is two million million pounds feelings which is equal to the whole yearly expense of America, all charges included. Judge, then, who is best able to continue it.

She has, likewife, many atonements to make to an injured world, as well in one quarter as another. And, instead of pursuing that temper of arrogance, which serves only to sink her in the esteem, and entail on her the distike of all nations, she will do well to reform her manners, retrench her expences, live peaceably with her neighbours, and think of war no more.

Philadelphia, August 21, 1782.

Just Published, Price 38.

ambre (1912) (a. 1914) de la la la comprese de la maria de la comprese de la la comprese della comprese de la comprese della compres i he organica somice perito.

RIGHTS OF MAN:

Being an answer to Mr. Burke's Attack on the

ALSO

COMMON SENSE,

A New Edition, Price 250

