Locked in Deadly Embrace

SCENE AT THE RECENT WRECK ON THE I. C. R.

The above picture shows a side view of the engine of No. 231 train, with the crane at the end of it. The mass of wood in front represents the box-car which contained the dynamite. The car was not damaged as bad as it appears in the picture. It was torn apart considerably in order to get the dynamite out. The view showing a box-car pushed up alongside the engine gives some idea of the force of the collision.

THE RATEPAYERS HAVE DECIDED IN FAVOR OF THE TOWN'S GRANT

By a Unanimous Vote of 189 to 12 the Ratepayers Have Made Our New Hospital an Assured Thing

The vote on the plebiscite has been taken and the ratepayers of the town have decided by a vote of 189 to 12 to support the council's recommendation of a yearly grant of $500 towards the maintenance of a new public hospital. The ratepayers now realize the good work that is being done by the executive of the Board of Trade, and have taken a very wise course by heartily endorsing this yearly grant by the town.

Newcastle is now alive to the fact that it is one of the thriving towns of his province, and nothing will be allowed to stand in the way of its progress.

With the establishment of the wireless station the details of which have already appeared in this paper, the building of the new bridge across the river, linking us with Nelson and other immediate points, and the location of new industries recently started here, all mean much for the future prosperity of our town and county.

Just where the new hospital will be built is not yet known, but the matter of a satisfactory site will be carefully considered before actually decided upon.

Much work still remains to be accomplished by the energetic committee of the Board of Trade, but the action of the ratepayers in so emphatically endorsing the grant from the town will greatly assist and encourage them in their future work in connection with this matter.

EXHIBITION WAS GRAND SUCCESS

Had a Record Attendance of 23,000—Prize Winners From Newcastle

The Chatham exhibition closed Friday night ending one of the best agricultural and live stock shows held in the province this year.

The quality of the exhibits was all that one could wish, and the lay-out of the booths and the display of the exhibits showed remarkably fine taste on the part of those who arranged them.

Never at any previous show did the building look so attractive and inviting as at this year's show, and the management have received many complimentary remarks from people who attended outside fairs stating that the Chatham exhibition in many respects was far superior to others held in the province.

Not having space to give a full list of the prize winners we give only those from Newcastle.

Crochet Thread—Miss Clara McAllister, 1st.
Point Lace Handkerchief—Mrs. Tom Tozer, 2nd.
Best Collection of Lace—Mrs. Brander, 3rd.

LADIES WORK—Miscellaneous

Best Pair Scrim Curtains—Mrs. Tom Tozer, 1st.
Towels with crochet lace—Mrs. Jack Troy, 3rd.

Probably one of the most interesting exhibits shown was one made by Coun. J. W. Vanderbeck of Derby, being a collection of forty-two kinds of native woods, all collected in Derby; an Indian or early French mill for the grinding of corn; and bee hives and other articles used by the producers of honey. The stone in the grist mill weighs 400 pounds and is easily turned by hand. Mr. Vanderbeck in his humorous and good-natured way showed how the wife of the Indian brave used to grind the corn for the morning meal. The bees in the glass hive, actively at work, was very attractive and had many admirers.

HOME RULE IN SCOTLAND URGED

That home rule in Ireland will be followed by home rule in Scotland was the assertion of F. J. Robertson, of Edinburgh, in an address on "Home Rule in Scotland" at a meeting under the auspices of the Scottish Home Rule Association of New York. He summed up the purposes of the movement to obtain representative government in these words:—

"It is proposed to relieve the present house of parliament of purely Scottish business and to set up a house of parliament in Scotland. The idea is that each of the four nations of Great Britain, Ireland, Scotland, England and Wales are entitled to and should have their own legislation and control of all affairs of government concerning their own national life with an imperial parliament to look after matters of general common interest to all."

Mr. Robertson was the chief factor in the organization last May of the International Scots Home Rule League. When he stepped from a New York Central train Friday afternoon he had completed 12,700 miles of travel in Canada and the United States, speaking in nearly every important city on the subject of Scottish home rule.

Heavy soups should be kept for the main dish at luncheon.

THE VERDICT OF THE AULAC WRECK

Coroner's Jury Recommends Investigation into Train Arrangements Between Moncton and Truro

The following is the verdict rendered by the coroner's jury empanelled to enquire into the cause of the I. C. R. wreck near Aulac:

"That we find that the said Enoch W. Rushton, Byron T. Colpitts, Frank Lynde and Oscar Hinsley, met death from injuries received in a head-on collision between trains Nos. 234 and 231 at a point about a mile east of Aulac station, known as Siddall's Cut, on Tuesday afternoon, Sept. 23, 1913; That the said head-on collision was caused from the fact that the crew on train No. 231 left Amherst with their train when they should have remained in Amherst until No. 234 arrived, or until they received orders to proceed, and in our opinion the collision would have been avoided had the operator at Amherst answered the calls made by the Moncton despatcher, between 15.25 and 16.05 o'clock, or had reported the departure of train No. 231 as he should have done."

"That from the fact that after the supplementary time-table went into effect on the I. C. R. on September 7, 1913, it has been generally discussed among trainmen that this time-table might lead to accidents, and from the fact that this collision occurred so soon after the time-table went into effect, we recommend that the railway authorities hold an investigation to determine if this time-table cannot be simplified."

GOT LARGE MOOSE; 56 INCH SPREAD

Two Pittsburg Hunters Spend Couple of Weeks on Miramichi

Probably the largest moose that has been shot during the past few seasons was one taken by Mr. L. H. Button, with a measurement of 56 inches, who in company with Dr. Hartung, both of Pittsburg, Penn., with Guides Miles McAllister and Wallace Johnson, has been spending a couple of weeks in the Miramichi forests.

Mr. Button informs us that this is his first hunting trip, and in fact was the first experience he has had with a gun any heavier than a thirty-two, and to say that Mr. Button is very proud of his achievement, there can be no doubt.

With a steady arm and good aim, at 220 yards his first shot did the deed, although he says it was only a chance hit.

The doctor, however, did not fare so well, although he got an exceptionally fine deer, with a 20 1/2 inch spread, and the peculiar part of it was that it had an old bullet wound in one ear where it had been shot at before. Dr. Hartung intends taking carcass and all back home with him.

The scene of their hunting was at Littleton, but in Malcolm they came across what they are convinced was a panther. At first it was at a distance, and Mr. Button took a chance shot but missed. Later it made another appearance but closer, and then when they could get a better view of it they could see by its shape and movements that it was a panther. The panther, we believe, is very rarely seen in our forests.

The watch which was carried by Fireman Byron Colpitts and which was picked up by Mr. Chesley Rushton at the scene of the wreck, was found to be badly smashed. The stem was driven down into the works. The watch stopped exactly at four o'clock.

BORDEN CLUB HAVE MEETING

Most Successful Re-Union of the R. L. Borden Club Held in St. John

One of the most successful reunions of the R. L. Borden Club was held Thursday evening last in their hall, Charlotte street, St. John, when a large number of members gathered to listen to addresses by Hon. J. D. Hazen, Hon. John E. Wilson and P. O. Soullis, president of the Nova Scotia Branch of the Royal Life Saving Society, and enjoy the entertainment marking the opening of the winter season. Mr. Hazen spoke at some length, pointing out that the predictions of the leaders of the Conservative party that it would be folly for Canada to barter her fiscal autonomy and Imperial connections for something the republic was bound to give her anyway was now in process of fulfillment by a democratic government at Washington, and calling attention to the fact that the attitude of those who believed the United States had designs upon the political integrity of the country had been justified by the famous letter of President Taft to Mr. Roosevelt, stating that the object of the reciprocity pact was to make Canada an adjunct of the United States.

Mr. Hazen also reviewed the discussion on the naval bill, and declared that if the Borden naval policy had been adopted Canada would have been raised high in the estimation of the world, and that the moral effect of the measure would have done much to stop the battle between Great Britain and Germany in the matter of building warships. In regard to the general policies and the administrative record of the government the minister pointed out that the country had never progressed at such a rate as it has done during the past two years, and declared that the government was expanding the revenues of the country in ways designed to promote the development of transportation and harbor facilities, and the progress and prosperity of the people generally.

The minister also paid an interesting tribute to the work of the Borden Club, and predicted for it a career of greater service in the future.

W. H. Harrison presided and the speeches were interspersed with songs by F. C. McNeill, D. E. Pidgeon, John Wood and E. R. W. Ingraham, with D. S. Robilliard acting as accompanist.

I. C. R. ENGINEER RETIRED ON PENSION

Mr. George V. Storey, one of the oldest locomotive engineers on the Intercolonial railway, retires from service to-day to take the pension, making his last run on Nos. 133 and 134 express, between St. John and Point du Chene on the 23rd instant. Mr. Storey who is sixty-two years of age was born in King's County and in the year 1872 when he was twenty-one years of age, he entered the employ of the I. C. R. Three years later he removed to Moncton and resided there until 1888 when he removed to St. John where he has since resided. Mr. Storey has been an engineer for about thirty years and has run practically on every division of the whole I. C. R. system. He was very fortunate in accidents, being in very few in comparison with the miles he has run.

He leaves shortly on a trip to the Canadian West on a visit, accompanied by his wife and two daughters, after which he will go to California to spend the winter.

Viola Reid, of Tracy Station, who was charged with the murder of her infant child, has been acquitted.

The Wreck at Aulac

SCENE AT THE RECENT WRECK ON THE I. C. R.

This picture, taken from the north side of the track, shows the men at work replacing the crane, which jumped the track in the midst of proceedings, as well as an interested number of interested spectators. The engine of No. 231 train with her front stove in can be plainly seen. To the left is the tender of the engine, with its steel side all torn out. Back of the tender can be noticed a box car, literally smashed to kindling wood.

FATAL SHOOTING ACCIDENT OCCURRED SUNDAY NIGHT

John Blaine of Ferryville is Accidentally Shot While Passing a Loaded Revolver to Companion

About half past ten Sunday night as John Blaine and Wm. Currie were taking a drive to Grand Downs, the former while passing a loaded revolver to Currie, was accidentally shot in the body and died before reaching home.

The deceased young man was only twenty-one years old and the only son of a widowed mother, Mrs. Annie Blaine, of Ferryville, and a brother of Miss Mildred Blaine of the telephone exchange here, and Miss Jean of Messereau's studio in Chatham.

His companion's account of the sad affair is that when the deceased passed him the revolver he handed it to him and that the barrel pointed at himself, and also that the hammer was left open, and in taking it he (Currie) must have unconsciously pressed the unfortunate man's index finger against the trigger releasing the hammer with the result that the bullet entered deceased young man's stomach.

He remained conscious, however, until they had reached Bartibous, when he began to feel a numbness through his body, and before they could reach Currie's home he expired.

Dr. Duffy of Chatham was summoned, but nothing could be done.

Much sympathy is expressed by the many Newcastle friends of Miss Blaine and also for the bereaved mother in the sad loss of her only son.

BAPTIST CONVENTION FINISHED ITS LABORS

The convention of the Association of the United Baptists of New Brunswick which was being held in St. John last week was brought to a close on Friday evening when addresses were delivered by Rev. Dr. Cutten of Acadia University, and by Prof. Kierstead of the U. N. B. Dr. Cutten stated that Acadia now had seven hundred students and seven buildings. The religious instruction of the students was receiving attention. Prof. Kierstead discussed the democracy which develops in children from their attendance at the public schools with those of other creeds and conditions. He defended the non-sectarian character of the schools and pointed out the impossibility of practical religious instruction.

At the afternoon session the report of the Temperance committee was submitted and Rev. F. S. Spence, Secretary of the Dominion Alliance, delivered a striking address. The report reaffirmed the opposition of the church to the liquor traffic, and contained the following resolution: "Resolved, that we endorse the sentiments of the New Brunswick branch of the Dominion Alliance and pledge our support and co-operation in all its undertakings."

The convention, which was brought to a close on Friday, was among the most interesting that has yet been held and was followed throughout with attention by the delegates.

A party of five persons while driving home were struck by a C. P. R. express near Montreal. Four were killed outright and the fifth died soon after.

Humphrey Lester, Nauwigewauk, lost a valuable Jersey cow last week. The animal, which was found with a bullet hole in her head, was probably mistaken for a deer by some sportsman.

WITHDRAWN FROM CANADA EASTERN

The train agents on the Canada Eastern Branch of the Intercolonial Railway have been withdrawn and it is said that the train agents in other parts of the system will also be withdrawn. The trial of agents of this kind has proven a most noticeable failure. The agents were most anxious to the conductors and other members of the train crew and very unsatisfactory to the public. At a salary of one hundred dollars per month not one agent has proved himself worth the money.

Train Agent Fred Youmans of Marysville who was on the Canada Eastern Branch finished his work Wednesday. He has been transferred to the Sussex-St. John route and will work on a milk-train between those points.

Knocking on the part of the people living along the Canada Eastern has been loud and long since the train agents took up their duties. Some of the loudest complaints have come from the railway men. Section-men and other employes travelling to and from their work have been compelled to pay fare. Sharpness in this direction has been counterbalanced by slackness in others for the people along the line soon found out that the train-agents through lack of experience, could not remember for what stations tickets were bought, with the result that frequently a ticket between the two stations supplied transportation over the greater part of the branch.—Fredericton Mail.

Pope Pius's health is improving. He was able to receive a group of Brazilian pilgrims and also give benediction to a number of girls who had just taken their first communion.

Emerson, the five months old child of Mr. and Mrs. Abraham Brewer, of Woodstock, N. B., died Monday morning of blood poisoning.

CARNIVAL OF MURDER IN MISSISSIPPI TOWN

Nine Lives Were Lost and Twenty Persons Injured by Two Drug-Crazed Mullatto Boys

Harrison, Miss., Sept. 28.—Two drug-crazed mullatto boys, brothers, began a reign of murder here this morning that ended only after three white men, four negro men, and a negro woman had been killed. Twenty persons were wounded, sixteen of them negroes, and the two boys lynched. A serious clash between the races was prevented by the arrival on a special train of a company of National Guardsmen from Natchez.

The trouble started at about two o'clock Sunday morning, and continued intermittently until 10 o'clock, when Walter Jones, the eldest of the two boys, who started the firing, was lynched just after the soldiers arrived. His brother, Will Jones, had been shot and killed by citizens earlier in the day. By noon the town was quiet. No more trouble is feared.

The shooting was started by Walter Jones, aged 26, in the negro quarter, where the negro woman and Thred Crayton were shot and killed. Walter then went to the home of his mother and aroused his 18 year old brother. Together they proceeded through the main street of the little town, firing at everyone in sight.

Citizens, aroused by the shots, peered out of the windows and then hastened to cover, believing that riots of more serious proportions had broken out.

The two boys went to the home of former Constable Frank Keinstly, and when he responded to their call to come out he was shot through the head by Walter Jones. Keinstly's son, William, saw his father fall and reached for a gun, but before he could fire he received a bullet in one of his hands.

The Yazoo and Mississippi depot is near the Keinstly home, and the two negroes walked in that direction. A train had arrived from Natchez just a few moments before and Conductor E. B. Appleby was standing at the station talking to Flagman W. C. Bond. Without warning the two negroes fired on them and both fell. Then the negroes directed their fire at Claude Freeman, who was waiting for a train to take him to his home at Fayette, Miss. He was instantly killed. The negroes then fired into the train, terrorizing the passengers.

With the blood lust at the highest pitch the two negroes made their way to a cotton seed house nearby. Frightened citizens by this time had telephoned for Sheriff Hammett at Fayette. Summoning former Sheriff Gillis to accompany him, Hammett started for Harrison on horse back, arriving about five o'clock. A small crowd of men were firing into the seed house but no one had ventured to lead the posse to the place. Taking a few men with him Sheriff Hammett, heavily armed, started towards the seed house, whereupon Walter Jones went to the tall grass nearby and as Hammett approached, the negro fired, killing him instantly. A shot from the seed house brought down Gillis.

By this time the countryside had been aroused and farmers came pouring in from every direction. A general fusillade of shots was directed at the seed house. A call was sent to Governor Brewer for troops.

Finding his hiding place too precarious, Will Jones started to run towards a coal chute nearby, but had gone only a few steps when a bullet ended his life. A rope was placed around the body, it was strung up to a telegraph pole near the station, and became a target for everyone not shooting at the seed house. Soon after Will Jones was killed, Walter Jones picked Tom Weeks, a negro, off the coal chute by his deadly aim. Weeks fell to the ground dead.

Not long after Weeks was killed the special train bearing the troops arrived. While the soldiers were descending, the crowd rushed to the seed house. Not a shot greeted them, and as the leaders went into the place with drawn weapons they found Walter Jones completely unnerved, but not injured. They quickly placed a rope around his neck, and rushed him to the coal chute. As the negro was drawn up the rope it broke and he fell heavily to the ground.

Not a word or act of protest came from Jones when a larger rope was drawn up the rope broke and he was pulled up. A large crowd looked on as the drug-saturated body writhed until life was extinct.

The crowd then went to the house of the Jones negroes, where they found two negro men, whom they were about to lynch when officers persuaded them to desist.

Later the body of Teller Warren, a negro, was found in a hut in the negro quarter, where Walter Jones first began firing. Evidently Warren was one of the first victims, but just when he was shot is not known.

It is believed that the Jones negroes had planned details of their murderous night, as they were well armed and had a plentiful supply of ammunition. Their mother said one of them had remarked that he was going to "shoot up" the town, but she thought he was joking.

There was no indication of further trouble after Walter Jones was lynched, and the Natchez guardsmen returned home. To-night the bodies of the Jones' brothers still were hanging to the coal chute. Authorities have decided not to hold a coroner's inquest.

Messages were sent by order of President Huerta to all the consuls representing Mexico in foreign countries to the effect that the revolution was ended and that the elections would be held according to the Government programme.

The work which the Borden government has accomplished since coming into office less than twenty-four months ago would do credit to an administration in power for a full parliamentary term.

The Welland canal is to be supplemented by the construction of a new waterway which will enable the large steam carriers that make transportation so cheap on the upper lakes to pass from Erie into Ontario, and reduce by one-half at least the distance which has to be covered by the more costly barge service between the head of the lakes and the ship's side at Montreal.

Other works in the same line be un in earnest since the Borden government came into power include the provision of efficient terminal equipment for the Intercolonial Railway at St. John and Halifax, and works in aid of navigation at Quebec, Montreal and other points where expenditure on business lines for business services was justified by known and established condition.

Under Mr. Pelletier parcels post has been established, which will give to all places the advantages now only obtained through the express companies or main lines of communication only. The postmaster general has succeeded also in getting cheaper rates and in extending the rural mail service.

Under Hon. George E. Foster, minister of trade and commerce, there has been consummated a reciprocity treaty with British West Indies and South American colonies. This treaty will be developed by the service of an improved line of steamships.

REMINGTON UMC METALLIC CARTRIDGES. Whether your arm is a Remington or any other standard make, whatever its calibre and the load you need, you want Remington-UMC metallics—not because they are necessarily stamped with the same name as your firearm, but because they give more accurate results. The company has been making ammunition for fifty years. We produce metallics for every standard make of arm—and every Remington-UMC cartridge is tested in the same way for which it is made. We need you a booklet explaining simply many of the technical points of ammunition manufacture. Your name and address on a post card will bring it by return mail. Remington Arms-Union Metallic Cartridge Co., Windsor, Ontario.

Flour trial is essential but—it is not your work!

Flour varies from time to time in baking quality. This is because wheat continually varies according to soil conditions, etc. Therefore, if baking results are to be constantly high, baking tests are essential. It is unreasonable to expect you to make these tests at your expense.

So from each shipment of wheat delivered at our mills we take a ten pound sample. This is ground into flour. Bread is baked from the flour. If this bread is high in quality and large in quantity, we use the shipment. Otherwise we sell it.

By simply asking for FLOUR bearing this name you can always be sure of more bread and better bread. "More Bread and Better Bread" and "Better Pastry Too" 523

Oiling Harness

I will give my way of oiling harness which I know from experience is good and very quickly done. Take warm water and wash all parts of harness thoroughly and wipe dry. Now take a large iron kettle, fill 3/4 full of water and pour in one gallon of good harness oil and heat to a milk warm temperature or a little more. Take each piece separately down one side of kettle and up the other very slowly using a small hook for the one end. Let them dry a few minutes and give second dip. This amount is sufficient for two sets of work and two of single buggy harness. If any is left it can be skimmed off and kept for next time.—C. L. Jackson, Rockbridge, Ohio.

A Fertilizer Caution

A word of caution may be given as regards the mixing of artificial manures or fertilizers. Sulphate of ammonia must not be used with any manure holding free lime, notably, basic slag and precipitated phosphate. The immediate result of making such a mixture is the liberation of the free ammonia, whose presence in the air can at once be detected by its pungent odor.

If it is desired to apply sulphate of ammonia with one of these substances to any particular area of ground, the phosphate should be put on a month or more before the other substance. Sulphate of ammonia may, however, be mixed with the ordinary manures, such as superphosphates, dissolved bones, kainit, bone-meal and nitrate of soda.

When Judging a Horse

In judging a horse he should always be made to stand still. Defects in the limbs or feet that would be unnoticed while in motion will, says a contemporary, be plainly seen by his care to rest weak or diseased muscles, when standing still. If perfectly sound he will stand firmly on all his legs, the feet flat on the ground and without moving. If one heel is raised disease of the navicular bone, or at least tenderness, is probable.

Hillsborough County, Florida, in which is Tampa, has voted overwhelmingly for a one million dollar bond issue for building seventy-five miles of brick roads. The Tampa Tribune is exultant over the result, for it sees in the bare announcement of this progressive move the turning of all eyes in the country upon Hillsborough county as the "recognized good roads county of the South."

At one time dairy Shorthorns practically held the field in Quebec province. Here and there were herds of the breeds specially developed for milk production. The farmers of Quebec had an opportunity to compare the relative profitability of their dual purpose Shorthorns and bred-to-milk animals. The result of their study is that to-day there are few Shorthorn herds in the Province of Quebec. The dairy cattle made good.

Building up a Dairy Herd

First, it is to be remembered that the road to the cow's udder is through her stomach. She cannot deliver from the udder what she has not eaten and digested. The dairy man does not know whether or not he has a good producing cow until she has given her a chance; also that a heifer is not developed until she is five or six years old. Some of the worst mistakes I ever made have been in passing opinion on a heifer too soon. I remember once selling a three year old heifer, that was well bred and had the dairy form, because her production was not up to my idea of what it should be. I sold her for less than half her real value to a plumber, telling him I did not regard her as one of my best. One night he came to my office and said "I called to see you about that cow you sold me. I want to know what is the matter with her." I told him she was all right and sound so far as I knew. I asked what was the matter. He said: "I know no same man would sell such a cow from his herd for the price I paid unless something was the matter. She is now giving from sixty to sixty-five pounds of milk per day. I know there must be something the matter or you would not have sold her out of your herd. I can't find anything wrong, so come to you to find out what it was." I had simply made a mistake, and had sold one of the largest producing cows in my herd for a nominal price. I had passed judgment too early. I don't do it now.

Second, I never buy a cow or heifer after she has been fresh, unless I am well acquainted with her. If I buy her as a heifer to come in, and know the mother and ancestry of the mother and father, and am a reasonably good judge of the contour of the dairy type, I stand as good a chance as the owner, and if a better judge of cattle than he, I have the advantage of him. I have many a time bought a heifer on the credit of her form and the record of her mother and ancestors, for less than half of what I would have had to pay if the owner had milked her for a season. He then knows her defects and faults, if she has any, as well as her virtues, for which I will have to pay after he finds them out. I have had full blood heifers that gave 35 lbs. of milk per day, that were well bred, but never exceeded that amount. Others were, as heifers, disappointments, that at four or five years old were fine milkers. I got rid of the one class first and gave the other class a fair trial before condemning them to the shambles.

What are you going to do with it? Finally, in building up a herd, first decide what you want to do with the herd when developed, then select the breed that in your judgment, will best meet the purpose, use the scales, the Babcock test, the shambles, or a shot gun as a skimmer. Breed from the best and to the best, sticking to the breed you have selected to the end, unless, for some reason, you be-

To Keep Your Fowls Healthy

Exercise is the best tonic. Never feed sour or tainted food. Cleanliness is next to godliness. High perches cause humble feet. Keep the draining fountains clean. Clean up the droppings every morning. Kerosene the roosts once a week for lice. Feather-pulling is a vice caused by overcrowding and idleness. Burn a pound of sulphur in each pen once a month to disinfect. The moment sickness is noticed separate the victims from the well ones. Before giving liquid medicine to a fowl see that the nostrils are clear. The majority of cases of "cholera" are nothing more than indigestion and lice. Quinine dissolved in water is an excellent wash for swelled head in roup. Keep a piece of asafetida in the drinking fountain as a preventive of gapes.

An ointment made of equal parts of kerosene and melted lard will cure scaly legs. For lice rub the heads of the chicks with a sponge that has been moistened with kerosene. A tablespoonful of kerosene in a quart of drinking water is a good remedy for cold in the head. Put four drops of tincture of acornite in half a pint of drinking water if there are signs of colds by sneezing. Gapes is a disease that shows itself in chicks between six and eight weeks of age and not generally after four months old.

come sure you have made a mistake, and build up within the lines of the breed you have selected. Mixing breeds undoes the work that has been required generations to develop, and in the end is pretty sure to end in failure. I never knew a good herd obtained by combination of several breeds combined in this manner. No intelligent man would think of trying to breed a speed and draft horse in one animal by combining the thoroughbred or standard bred to a Clydesdale or Percheron, expecting to combine the speed of one with the draft qualities of the other. I knew one horse of this combination breeding that could trot a mile in 2:17, but he was simply a freak not obtained once in a thousand times. It may be put down as a rule that crossing extremes as the Jersey and the Holstein or Durham, will destroy the breed qualities of both, four times out of five. Concentration of the principal best, followed by intelligent development, is the only way by which the great dairy cows of this generation have been produced. It is not likely that haphazard crossing of extremes will improve on this method. Decide first in the system of dairying you propose following whether butter, cheese or condensed milk, then select the breed best adapted for your work and stick to them, seeking to improve in their line only.

MARKETING THE DRESSED POULTRY

By M. A. Jull, Macdonald College, Que.)

The same principles hold good for dressed poultry as for eggs. A little care and skill in preparing poultry for market will often make a large increase in the selling price. The expense of killing, picking and packing poultry is small in comparison with the first cost of raising. All poultry should be carefully assorted according to size, color of shanks, age, and condition. Each case should be uniform in quality.

Market requirements—Fattened chickens when prepared for the consumer should conform to the following market requirements:

The dressed chicken should present a neat, clean, plump appearance. The preferable weight is about four pounds. Plump, crated chickens up to the weight of five pounds are more readily disposed of than heavier ones. The shape of the breast should be long and broad, to give a well-meated appearance.

The legs should be as short as possible, indicating the low, blocky type. The color of the flesh should be white and the grain fine. The minimum of bone and offal are two important factors in the best grade of marketable products. Do not market lean chickens. It is an unprofitable business both to the producer and the consumer.

Killing, plucking and packing—Before killing, the birds should be fasted at least twenty-four hours, which will prevent food remaining in the crop and the intestines, which would decompose and spoil the flavor of the meat. Several hours after the last feed allow the birds all the clean water they want, and then give them a complete fast until killed. The best method of killing is to stick the bird in the mouth, braining it, and at the same time bleeding the bird by cutting the arteries.

Suspend the bird by a cord from the ceiling of the killing room so that it will be as low as the operator's shoulder. To bleed, place the left arm over the bird, grasp the bird by the neck with the thumb on the throat. With the right hand insert the knife and sever the arteries by drawing the knife down, first on one side and then by a quick half turn down the other side of the mouth. Then pierce the brain by passing the knife through the roof of the mouth towards the top of the head and give it half a turn. To be successfully bled, both arteries must be severed. These arteries are exposed on each side of the mouth if the fowl squaks when struck, the operator will know that the operation has been successful.

Plucking should be commenced at once, pulling the body feathers first, then the wing and tail feathers. As soon as the fowl is roughly plucked the pin feathering and finishing can be done more quickly in a sitting position.

Returns are greater when shipped in a compact, plump condition than in a rough, unprepared condition. All birds for market should be properly shaped.

The shape is made by nailing two 8-8 by 6-inch plain boards together at right angles. The trough should be nailed into a frame and inclined slightly backwards. With legs placed alongside the breast and with the breast downward, force the bird into the angle of the shaper, cover with paper and lay a brick on the back and one against it, to hold it in position. The shaping should be done in as cool a temperature as possible without freezing, and should be continued for about twelve hours. When thoroughly cooled the birds are placed in shipping cases. Cases of basswood or spruce, with corners lock-joined, are most satisfactory. The box should be lined with parchment or paper.

Agent—Madam, I'd like to show you one of the best cream separators on the market.

Farmer's Wife—I don't want it; but if you have a coin separator that you can guarantee to work on my husband, I'll buy it.

SELECTING FARMS FOR DEMONSTRATION PURPOSES

Conservative Commission has representative in the Province.

Mr. K. M. Fiske, formerly of Florenceville, N. B., and now engaged as an agricultural expert on the staff of the Commission of Conservation, Ottawa, is making a tour of New Brunswick inspecting farms for the purpose of selecting those to be used for demonstration purposes by the Conservation Commission.

The establishment of demonstration farms in the different districts has been found by the Conservation Commission as the most effective aid they can give to agriculture. The farms but are used by them for demonstration purposes. The object being to show farmers what good results can be obtained from farming scientifically and introducing the methods advocated by the agricultural experts.

A large number of these demonstration farms will be established in the eastern provinces. Some are already in operation, and others will be taken hold of with the opening of the next season. Mr. Fiske will visit Mouth of Keswick, Doaktown and Gagetown in this district in the near future, investigating conditions and making agricultural surveys on which his report will be based.

The dairy inspector for Eastern Ontario says that the production of cheese in Ontario will show a decline this year of 17,000,000 pounds, or over $2,000,000 worth. The dry weather is the cause. In 830 cheese factories of Eastern Ontario the average decrease in production has been 80 pounds a day.

OUR NEW HOSPITAL

The result of yesterday's election is very gratifying to the executive of the Board of Trade. The ratepayers have shown that they are in favor of the town's yearly grant of $500 towards the maintenance of this public institution.

It is also very gratifying to this paper to know that the people have endorsed its sentiments in this matter as outlined in last week's issue and are willing to bear an increase in taxation when it becomes a matter of the town's advancement.

There is no telling how what other generous offers may not be forthcoming in the near future and if the ratepayers of the town will give their hearty support to the executive of the Board of Trade, the future advancement of our town is assured.

THE CENSUS OF MINERAL PRODUCTION

The census of the mineral production of Canada taken in June 1911 for the calendar year 1910, is presented in Bulletin XVI, and shows a gratifying expansion in this department of the country's natural resources during the last decade. Compared with the census of 1901 for the year 1900 it shows an increase in the tonnage of 819 in the number of mines or works of $65,734,248 in the value of buildings and plant, of 31,442 in the number of persons employed, of $24,518,777 in the earnings of salaries and wages and of $74,948,070 in the value of production for the two census years, together with the increase in totals and the increase per cent in the decade.

INLAND REVENUE INCREASES

The total receipts from the Inland Revenue Department during the fiscal year 1912-13 were $21,859,034, an increase of no less than 25 per cent over the year 1911-12, when they were $17,242,000.

The figures this year are the largest recorded in the history of Canada. This year's receipts are $2,181,600 greater than those of 1911-12, which then constituted a record—MacIntosh's Investment News.

HIGH COST OF LIVING

During the last fiscal year the output of manufactured tobacco was 22,105,869 pounds in the various forms used by smokers and to a small extent in the form of snuff. The number of cigarettes was greater than the number manufactured in the previous year by 195,000,000, and the increase in cigars was 48,834,581; the increase in snuff was 125,000 pounds. The total number of cigars made was 297,741,815. That the tobacco habit is on the increase in Canada these statistics conclusively prove, and they account also to a considerable extent for the "high cost of living."

There was an output of 6,645,452 proof gallons of spirits during the year; an increase of 1,874,052 gallons. As the excise duty is paid on the removal of liquor from the bonded warehouses the above figures do not show the amount consumed. The amount of such liquors remaining in bond at the close of the year was 20,532,928 gallons. The malt liquors produced during the year amounted to 62,314,400 gallons, practically all of which was consumed in Canada. The raw materials used in the production of these liquors were 16,637,629 pounds of malt, 63,948,555 of Indian corn, 11,695,490 of rye, 3,026,065 of wheat, and 26,885,495 of molasses. Had these substances been used by the people of Canada in their unfermented condition as food the cost of living would have been less and the community would have suffered less from moral and social deterioration.

MY QUEEN, A FANCY

(By Michael Whelan.)
Ah, well do I remember
In the sweet, serene September,
When sad summer to the world had said good-bye.
While the balmy breeze was blowing
And the golden grain was glowing,
That we wandered in the meadows,
you and I.
Far across these dark green meadows
Fell the slowly shifting shadows
While the sun in brilliant beauty bathed the scene.
As we walked along together
In the glorious autumn weather
I crowned my best beloved, my fair young queen.
Then she heard the old sweet story
As she gazed upon the glory
Of the meadow and the woodland and the stream.
All our souls were sweetly singing,
Heaven's blessed bells were ringing,
As we wandered in that dear, delicious dream!

Joseph A. McKinney, a teamster employed by Rhodes, Currie & Co., was struck on the head by a heavy derrick boom while hauling stone from the excavation work on the new post office at St. John, Thursday afternoon.

By a mandement read on Sunday at High Mass in the Roman Catholic Churches, Archbishop Bruchet placed a ban on Le Pay, the French weekly newspaper edited and published by Godfroy Langlois, M. L. A., for St. Louis division, Montreal. Mr. Langlois has been conducting an active campaign in educational reform in Quebec and the attitude of his paper has been regarded as an anti-clerical. The ban of the church means that the faithful are forbidden to read the paper.

A New York man, Captain Bagnone, who is walking round the world for a wager, called at Mansion House, London, and gave an interesting narrative of his journey to Alderman Sir John Knill, the acting Lord Mayor. He had, he said, traversed North and South America, Australia, and Africa, and was now on his way to John O'Groats, whence he intended to cross to Ireland, and he should then proceed through the Continent and Asia. The walk would be completed when he arrived at Bombay. Sir John Knill inquired whether the captain had met with many adventures on his journey, and he replied that on one occasion he was attacked by a lion and another was for some days without food in the desert. The walk is to end in March 1916.

CHURCH NOTICES

Mrs. Bate of this town and Mrs. Sargeant of Nelsca are at Leduc this week organizing two branches of the Women's Auxiliary in the parish of the Rev. Henry Waterion. Harvest Festival services will be held at St. Andrew's Church next Sunday. St. Mark's, Nelson, Harvest Festival will be next Thursday evening, October 2nd and again on Sunday afternoon. Both churches will be appropriately decorated and suitable music will be rendered.
Meetings of the Anglican Clergy of the neighbourhood and the North Shore will take place at Newcastle next Tuesday and Wednesday Oct. 7th and 8th. A special service for the parishioners will be held on Wednesday evening when the preacher will be the Rev. H. T. Montgomery, M. A., rector of Derby. A service of the Holy Communion will also be held each morning at 7.30.

LIBERALS DREAD QUEBEC DEFEAT

So serious do the Liberals regard the situation in Chateaugay that Sir Wilfrid is taking personal charge of the campaign and will stump the county, holding several meetings.
Sir Wilfrid evidently realizes that his future as leader in Quebec is at stake, and that a defeat in such a traditionally Liberal seat would be a hard blow at his prestige.
A strong effort is being made to secure Edward McGowan as candidate McGowan, despite his Irish name, is a Frenchman. He, however, is not anxious to run. If he will not stand Hon. Sydney Fisher is likely to be the candidate.

HELD AN INQUEST ON GUIDE'S DEATH

That Benjamin Phillips, who was shot and fatally wounded while hunting on the meadows near Harvey Station on Wednesday evening last, was killed by a bullet from the rifle in the hands of Russell Swan, a second cousin of the widow of the dead guide, was the finding of the coroner's jury at the inquest into the fatality conducted at Harvey Station by Dr. Dougan as coroner.
No arrest has been made in the case and none is likely to be made as the jury declared the shooting to have been perfectly accidental, the evidence brought out at the inquest showing that both hunters were firing at a mouse, which had been called out between them in the rapidly falling darkness. When the inquest was concluded Swan, himself, was of the opinion that it must have been a bullet from his rifle which killed his friend.

ENGINEER'S WATCH GOING WHEN FOUND

It is learned that the watch belonging to Engineer Rushton which was supposed to have been stolen after the wreck occurred, has been returned to the family, by a section foreman, who kept it for safe-keeping until it could be forwarded to his home. When the watch was taken from Mr. Rushton's pocket it was found to be going and was not injured as the engineer was in the habit of carrying it in his vest pocket under his overalls.

FOOTBALL INJURIES CAUSED HIS DEATH

A telegram has been received by Mrs. J. H. Hawthorn, Fredericton, conveying the sad news of the death of Verner Belyea, nephew of Mrs. J. B. Hawthorn, formerly of Fredericton, and now of McAdam, as a result of injuries sustained while playing football at Springfield, Mass. The young man was aged 22 years and would have graduated this year from the college which he was attending. His parents formerly resided in St. John.
A curious incident occurred at Beech Hill, near Pansec Junction, recently. Two young men were hunting and came across two bull moose standing side by side in the woods. One of the young men took care full aim with a high power rifle and fired. Both moose ran for some distance, then fell down and died. When they were examined it was found that the bullet had passed clean through the heart of one and had touched the bottom of the heart of the other. It is doubtful whether this feat has ever been duplicated in the province.

ANCIENT CRETE'S SECRETS AS LEARNED BY A WOMAN

Dr. Edith N. Hall Directing Her Workmen at the Cretan Excavations.

Antiquities Are Packed to the Coast for Shipment

Buttons and Safety Pins Used by the Minoans 4000 Years Ago, and Recently Recovered

Pitchers Like the Old Sea Kings Daughters Carried

The Work of Dr. Edith N. Hall, Who Has Been Finding Out Many Things About the Sea Kings Who Flourished 4000 Years Ago

THE island of Crete was being quarreled over this fall, as it has been quarreled over for hundreds of years. Turk, Greek and Italian have disputed its possession, one for sentimental reasons, another for religious reasons and another for the sake of military strategy, which appears in history to be about the most cogent reason of all.

But among the grasping crew of them, Crete and the Cretans occupy something of the unpleasant position of the bone slipping around amid the clashing of some very hungry pair of jaws; and, so far as any sustenance goes which it might provide, it is pretty nearly as bare now as any other bone would be after centuries of gnawings. A little bread and oil, and a few fresh snails, if they can find them, and your Cretans will work gratefully for the barest of bare livings.

Will that be what England, with its squadrons keeping the seas and its merchant fleets scouring every coast, will come to 4000 years from now?

For England is now only what Crete was nearly 4000 years ago. Nobody knows the language its people spoke, although plenty of specimens of their writings remain. Nobody knows just who they were, although it is easy to picture them in their pride and their splendor.

They were the sea kings of the known world, ruling and robbing it with as fine a freedom as any modern nation of conquerors. To them poured in the riches of lesser overlords and the fruits of the toil of distant slaves. A great and mighty people, puissant and dreaded, before whose sails cities trembled that are long since dust.

Now the tangible evidences of their riches and their pride are being revealed to the world, which only recently heard of their existence, by the hands of one woman from a land of whose existence those roving sea kings never dreamed.

Neighbors of the Excavators Were the Modern Cretan Shepherd Boys

of Minos had lived in the days of their declining power. It was in a wild and rugged district, where our ponies could scarcely make their way over boulders and along dizzy ledges, and where it was difficult to find a level spot big enough to pitch my tent. Our faithful workmen had no other shelter than the small bush huts which they improvised for themselves, and their food was confined to bread and oil, with an occasional dish of snails as a relish.

In spite of our hardships and difficulties, we accomplished our end, for we found deep deposits of earth crammed with pottery, the very best evidence possible. It seemed, in fact, that we might learn from an extended excavation of this site, especially if we could also find the tombs, the answers to some of the vexing questions as to what and how the Minoan power fell, and it was with this purpose in mind that I returned to Crete last March.

Crete is not an island which is easy of access. This year I tried going by way of Egypt, but the same difficulties beset me as heretofore. The steamers were small and dirty, and we were landed in rowboats at 1 A. M. in a heavy sea. It was two days before my companion and myself had sufficiently recovered from seasickness to start on our journey eastward. In the meantime I had an opportunity to see the new accessions of the Candia Museum and to arrange with the government for our excavation permit.

All traveling in Crete is done on horseback. Camp beds and the necessary food and clothing are carried on the pack-saddle of the muleteer. We stayed at the house of Mr. Seager, at Pachia ammos, until the rains were over, making ready to go into camp. There were tents to patch, stores and kitchen utensils to overhaul. In the meantime we dug a few stray tombs at Kavousi to which our attention had been called by our Kavousi workmen.

On the last of April we were ready. A Turkish caïque brought the picks, spades and wheelbarrows, as well as the tents and camp supplies, to a cove at the foot of the mountain. Our workmen, with the help of a few pack animals, carried them to a little plateau halfway up the mountain, where we had decided to pitch our camp this year. A small stone hut was secured for a kitchen by the payment of 19 francs for the seas.

We had no neighbors save the shepherds who pastured their flocks close by, but every night and morning the well of water near my tent presented a lively scene when the women and children from the village below stopped to water their "possessions"—generally a donkey, a goat and a pig apiece—on their way to and from their fields. This well of water was in fact the social center of the place, all the more so when the women learned that I would allow them to inspect my tent. Sometimes, at evening, when I rode home from work, I would find a dozen waiting for me to show them the wonders of my tent, which consisted of a camp bed, a table and two chairs.

SQUAD OF FIFTY DIGGERS

"On May 1 we began digging in earnest with about fifty men. I set them to clear away the brush and stones on the north face of the summit where unusually good walls were peering out from among the bushes, and where I thought well-preserved houses might be found.

"But I also started another project. Two years ago, under the gey ropes of my tent, I had noticed a heap of stones that looked like the top of a "beehive" tomb; but I had not investigated it because of the inconvenience of disturbing my tent. This year, however, I resolved to lose no time in trying this spot, and I sent one of the oldest and most trusted workmen there. The second day, when on my rounds, I visited him, and he showed me a piece of bronze, which I recognized as a piece of a foot from a very fine bronze tripod. He also pointed in triumph to a small pile of teeth and of human bones he had found. He had not yet cleared any of the walls of the tomb, but that it was indeed a tomb there could be no doubt.

"During the next week I spent most of my time sitting on the edge of this excavation, for every few minutes Nikolaos would hand me up something—another piece of the tripod, a bronze safety-pin, a porcelain bead or a bit of pottery. So much pottery came to light that we were able to put together forty vases, more than all the other workmen together found during that first week.

"The porcelain beads particularly interested me, for they looked to be Egyptian. I had already filled all the small boxes I had with them when Nikolaos, who was full of jokes about the value of beads in the next world, suddenly cried:

"Behold, I have his seal, too!"

"And, sure enough, there was a porcelain seal with Egyptian hieroglyphs; and that same day he found five more. I cannot read hieroglyphs; we had, accordingly, to wait until two weeks later, when we chanced to have a visit from an English Egyptologist. He pronounced them to be commemorative seals of the twenty-first or the twenty-second dynasty from about 850-850 B. C. We had thus accomplished our excellent purpose, for we had obtained evidence for dating the fall of the great Minoan civilization.

TOMBS WIDELY SCATTERED

"I had thought that, with one tomb found, the cemetery of our town was already discovered, and that it would be an easy matter to find more tombs. But such was not the case; the tombs proved to be widely scattered. We spent days in digging trial trenches which yielded absolutely nothing. We did, however, find more in the end, six of the "beehive" type, and at least fifty shallow graves, which yielded quantities of vases and many bronze safety-pins or fibulae.

"It is often said that Queen Victoria invented the safety-pin. But it was only a reinvention; it had been in use throughout the first millennium B. C. These pins, moreover, are of singular values to the archeologist; for, according to their shape and size, the peoples who used them may be classified. We had, therefore, good evidence for the solution of the other archeological problem as to who these people were.

"It was now the middle of June and the heat was intense. The women and children no longer returned to the village for the night; whole families were camping in the fields for the harvesting season. Near every threshing floor a family camped under a tree, while men, women and children helped with the work of reaping, threshing and winnowing, all of which is accomplished by the most primitive methods. We were daily visited at our work among the tombs by these neighbors, who brought us fresh almonds, apricots and plums tied up in the corners of their aprons or handkerchiefs; and they were delighted to receive in return presents of pins with colored heads.

"In spite of the heat, there was one thing more to accomplish. One of our basket boys had brought me excellent potatoes from a field in the plain, close to the sea. I was eager to try there for a week to learn if it was a site worthy of further excavation another season. Unfortunately, the Romans had been there before us, so that much of the pottery was badly broken. Some beautiful specimens of the very best period, however, were recovered during the week that excavation lasted; and there is every evidence that much more lies hidden away beneath the earth.

"But by this time our money was exhausted and we were obliged to send for the Turkish caïque, in which all our goods and chattels, together with our precious finds, were shipped to the house.

"A few days were spent there in sorting pottery excavated, and the antiquities in green cases and set sail with them in the small coasting steamer for Candia.

"The authorities of the Candia Museum, with their usual kindness, gave me the use of a large, cool basement room where I could spread out my pottery and bronzes on long tables. Here I worked for ten days, photographing and taking final notes and measurements. The last task of all was to petition the Cretan government in the name of the museum, for a continuance of the objects found. I asked for over sixty pieces, which, if they are granted to us, will reach the museum this autumn."

with open courts and winding corridors, with store-houses for treasure, a well-equipped bathroom, and a suite of apartments for the queen that would compare favorably with those of a high-born woman of today. But the tale is not yet told. We cannot read the writing of this faraway people of 2000 B. C. We do not know when they came or whether they later went, or how they were related to the Greeks of Pericles' time. All this must be learned by the spade. Only by the patient excavation of site after site can such problems be solved.

Two years ago I commenced excavating for the museum a town situated on a steep and lofty mountain crag in eastern Crete where the successors

FOOD THRIFT IN PRINCIPLE AND PRACTICE

By Prof. E. H. S. Bailey

Director, Chemical Laboratories, University of Kansas.

WHILE everybody is theorizing on the high cost of living, it may be worth while to look the problem squarely in the face and consider whether personally we have any part in bringing about this result, or whether "somebody else" is the one who alone is to be blamed.

It may seem hardly worth while to compare the food habits of the people of corresponding civilization in Europe with ourselves, because the conditions, surroundings and traditions are so entirely different from those in the United States that the comparison immediately breaks down from the weight of the "buts" that any one familiar with continental conditions would insist on adding to our statement.

It is possible, however, to get some light on the matter of economy of food by noticing the food habits of others.

FOOD abroad is often very expensive, as there is not a sufficient quantity raised for home consumption. Sugar, which is at the present time regarded as a food more than simply a luxury, costs in Italy as much as 18 cents a pound at retail because of the import tax laid upon it by the government. Salt is also almost a luxury there, although it is mostly of home production.

On account of the high taxes in various countries, breadstuffs and meats are high, and people with small incomes can afford only the coarsest and cheapest bread. It is not an uncommon sight to see signs indicating where horse meat is for sale, while "pumpernickel," a very coarse rye bread, is much in demand in many countries. Fruits and vegetables would not be called cheap, when compared with the wages received by those producing them; though it must be said that fruits and vegetables are abundantly raised.

How, then, do these people live? This is answered in one word by saying, "Simply." This would be the key to the whole problem in the United States if the people were willing to undergo personal sacrifices. You say, "We are not going to live on black bread and beer, even if it does cost less." So great a change in the method of living is not contemplated; but sacrifices must be made somewhere, or the conditions of living will not be improved.

It is the luxurious living that has come upon us so gradually that it has become a habit, and so we think it a necessity to decent living, that has brought the middle classes of our people to the point where saving for the future seems virtually impossible.

Among the little economies practiced across the water—economies which we ignore, but which, taken together, decrease the cost of living—it may be worth while to notice the following:

First, since the people have not lived luxuriously in the past, and have not learned what we call the necessity for such living, they are willing to suffer a little inconvenience to save small amounts of money. As an instance of the trend of the feeling in this direction, in London the underground railway company is calling attention by means of placards to the fact that a first-class ticket between stations costs only an additional penny, because most of the time the third-class cars are crowded, but the company must haul the first-class carriages almost empty.

The people are obliged to save their pennies. Second, they utilize everything that is "worth utilizing"; or, in a word, they eliminate the waste of resources. This waste may come from carelessness or laziness or lack of thought, which is often another name for laziness. The land is utilized; not a foot is wasted. It is a common sight to see the rocky hillsides in Italy, Germany and France terraced and made to yield abundant crops of grapes, olives and other fruit.

Third, the fertilizers that originate about the stable or farm are all utilized, as is abundantly shown by the great fertility of the fields where these fertilizers have been applied. With us the rich organic waste of the cities is dumped into the river or carried off with the garbage. Fourth, fuel is such an important item in the preparation of food that the peasants gather all the sticks and twigs in the woods, and they dig the "turp" (peat) in the lowlands. For household use, denatured alcohol and charcoal are also extensively used. The fuel is, however, used in a small stove or burner, so that 75 per cent of it is not wasted, as with us, in heating the stove, and when the meal is cooked there is not a large amount of residual heat to be thrown away.

The people abroad recognize the fact that it is often cheaper, especially in a small family, to buy cooked food than to cook it at home. In buying bread, it is true, we must pay quite a percentage of the cost to the baker; but it is often cheaper to do this than to pay for the fuel with which to bake the bread.

The same thing is true in the purchase of meats. It may pay better to let the dealer cook the roast in a wholesale way than to keep up our own fire for several hours. These things are all to be studied from the point of economy, and not so much on account of the labor of the housekeeper which is involved.

COOKING ON LARGE SCALE

As an illustration of what can be done by cooking on a large scale, the "Cuisine Populaire," of Geneva, may be mentioned. Here nutritious soup can be bought to take home at about 3 cents a quart; beans (two rations) for 3 cents; meat (two rations) for 12 cents; and wine for 10 cents a quart. This establishment, although charitable in design, is managed so as to pay expenses. That no food is wasted, it is proverbial that the French can live upon what other people would waste. "It is not too much trouble" for them to look after the household and see that there is no waste. The women save great quantities of their food, and they have been trained to do this through succeeding generations. Such economies among the common people have made the French nation unique in that the people always have money to loan to the government when there is a demand for it.

Seventh, the household food supply is in many countries supplemented, among the common people, by the milk from the cow or goat, or the few rods of ground around the cottage are utilized for raising vegetables. "It is not too much trouble" to do this, and in the aggregate it amounts to a large sum to the man of moderate income who has a large family to raise.

Eighth, the food is purchased in the open market, either by the mistress or servants, and in many cities fruits and vegetables are brought around to the house daily by vendors, who have a regular route and who supply their customers. This method of supply gives the mistress or a trusted servant a chance to see exactly what she is buying, and she does not "order by phone," with the liability of getting anything that the dealer happens to have on hand. Very often a boy with a handcart or with a bicycle delivers the goods previously ordered. By this method the customer does not have to pay for one or perhaps two phones, for the time of the man who takes the order and that of the man who delivers the goods. It is needless to suggest that all these expenses of order and delivery are ultimately added to the cost of the coffee or sugar or meat which you buy.

Enough has been suggested to show that there are ways for the economical working of the household which other people practice, but to which most Americans are strangers. These are simply suggestions, and some may be suitable for application in one place and others under different conditions.

With the abundant food supply in the United States, if to this could be added greater habits of thrift and economy and less carelessness and waste, we should have as cheap living as could be desired. In England and some continental countries the people would starve in a few months were it not for the foodstuffs which they import from other countries. This is not true in the United States, and it is time we utilized this fact and reduced the cost of living for the great mass of the people.

Finally, while we deplore the high cost of foodstuffs and believe that in many cases it is much higher than necessary, there is this other side to the matter which we actually can "do something." If we would diminish the cost of living, we must content ourselves with less luxury and be willing to do more of the actual labor, both mental and manual, ourselves.

People who are too indolent or careless to intelligently direct or actually do the work of the household have little excuse for complaining when the monthly bill equal or exceed the monthly income, and leave no margin of cash to lay aside for future needs.

ANCIENT SECRETS REVEALED

It is the most ancient fairy tale in the world, until now wholly improbable and just now proved beyond the last hesitation of doubt. For it was Miss Hall's work of this last summer which settled the most puzzling question of all: if, during those long centuries of resistance to civilization, the warlike Greeks sent to them the bitterly grudging tribute of maidens for the fabled Minotaur, and the known world paid them tribute in their eyes on high, the people of Minoan did continue invincible and secure, when could the blow have fallen, which hurled them down to ruin, and who were the greater, stronger conquerors who overthrew them?

It seems the irony of fate that a woman, one woman, should at last write the epitaph of the fabled Minotaur; yet it was Miss Hall who, this summer, proved that the end of the Minoan power came about 850 B. C., at the hands of the all-conquering Egyptians. How she did it is best told in her own words, for she has the gift of picturing the researches of the present, while she lifts the veil that lay for thousands of years over the past:

"The story of the archeological discoveries in Crete is now ten years old. Even our schoolboys are learning today that the labyrinth of Minos has been found, and that it was a palace three stories high,

"WOMAN AND MOSES"

(Continued) "You did it as soon as you knew," Avril wished to be comforting. "Ought to have known sooner, I suppose." Then, after a moment's pause, rather awkwardly: "She didn't die because—I mean it wasn't the shower-bath killed her?" Avril was beginning to understand his character. "Oh, no, she had some 'internal' complaint. She couldn't have lived." "Shower-bath may have hurried it up," with an awkward laugh. Avril laughed too. "Who knows? Perhaps it was as well," she remarked. She was a fearful trial to old Pouncey. After that Avril and Herbert Harding became quite friends, often stopping to chat in the village together and he was even induced to come over and shoot. The county shock its virtuous, but rather brainless, head, and wondered how the Chichesters could encourage that godless man, who never went to church, and had orgies in his house when doors were bolted and shutters barred. It may seem odd, but it was a little bit of comfort to Avril to think she would see him again. He might often have seen her in London, but he had a way of doing London all his own, and would have hated the idea of going to a dinner party or meeting a crowd of people. He, too, felt quite cheery and bright the morning after the Chichesters' arrival, and he considered it a pleasant coincidence that he should be one of the first to meet Avril.

She was not without strength of mind, and the first morning after their arrival, when her eyes opened on the familiar objects in her bedroom that had been hers since childhood she tried to make the wise resolution to throw herself into country pursuits and to try and forget Arthur Trefusis. Luxury and solid comfort play a more prominent part in our lives than we are aware of, both by their presence and their absence. And the sun shining into a rosebud beehived bedroom and falling on a hundred pretty reminiscence-enhanced gigmombs, with the addition of a cup of tea in a dainty china cup, and a big brown retriever wagging its faithful tail at the long desired sight of his mistress, went some way towards reconciling Avril to the situation. There was no sign of the aching heart in the sweet, frank smile with which she saluted Mr. Harding a few hours later. "They're all dead," he said, waving his hand towards the village. "The only one flourishing is the undertaker. He'll become Mayor if he goes on at that rate." Avril laughed. "I heard old Pouncey had died." "I really think he was better when the air came in at the top." "You are too bad," and so they walked along together between the hedgerows that seemed to bid them welcome. "I suppose you had no end of a time, balls and plays and all that?" The question brought back Arthur's image. The temporary cloud on her face did not escape him. "Oh, I don't know, it all seems such a foolish rush and hurry, doesn't it?" "Yet I suppose you'd shut up shop altogether, join old Pouncey I mean, if you couldn't go to London." "Oh, I don't think so," laughed Avril. "Something wrong," thought Harding. They were crossing the churchyard now. "Have you ever noticed that tomb?" It was characteristic of Harding that he knew every inch of his neighbourhood, its history and traditions. "I have often wondered what the epitaph meant. "Here lies Tom Jones, a lonely man. For from his side his wife she ran. Trusting to find a husband better. 'Twas God in heaven wouldn't let her." "Well, I used to puzzle over it when I was a boy, and a few months ago, when I was looking through some old papers of my father's, I came across the whole history. "Tom Jones was a shepherd, it appears, and his wife ran away with some squire of that day who promised to marry her, but no clergyman would marry them because she was divorced and so she came back to her husband and found him dying, but the old man wasn't going to take her back, not he, he sat up in bed and said: "You left me alone in bed and you'll leave me alone in my grave, and the story is that she committed suicide, and the villagers say that she comes every night and tries to open his coffin and get in." "How gruesome!" Doreen crossed Avril's mind. "Do you think it is wrong to marry a divorced person?" she asked. A strange expression came over Mr. Harding's face. "Don't ask me," he said. "I don't know what is wrong or right." "Of course you do, just as well as other people." "Thereby hangs a tale," said Harding. "That question ruined my life." And he made a start along the pathway again as if to close the subject. But the question was far too interesting to Avril to let it pass without an attempt to probe further. "I am so sorry," she said. "Perhaps one day you will tell me." "I don't think so," replied Harding. He didn't think divorce was quite the subject to discuss with a young girl. Avril felt an inward blush. She must have appeared unmaidenly, she feared. How could she explain that through being in love with a married man and keeping his wife out of scrapes, she had grown to think of nothing but the subject of divorce? "Why don't you ask the parson?" Mr. Harding was bidding her farewell. "Oh, a clergyman!" Avril's tone swept the profession from the inner circle left confidence and the ranks of counsel givers. "You don't like them," Harding laughed exultantly. "Nor do I." "I suppose there are some good ones." "I don't know where! All I know is Pouncey, I expect." On her way home Avril wished Mr. Harding hadn't told her the story of Tom Jones. It brought Arthur Trefusis back to her mind and made the old dissatisfied feeling come back. She found several letters in the hall. One from Doreen and one from Trefusis amongst them. Doreen's was one long wall of discontent and dullness. "I'm sure to get into mischief," she ended, and Arthur is too awful since you left. I really feel like committing suicide." Avril felt irritated with her. But Arthur Trefusis's letter made her wretched, as we generally are when we come face to face with the inevitable. Trefusis was a gentleman, and a gentleman not in the contingent sense in which the word is now applied. He realized that he was acting the part of a cad, and it was a part his better nature would not allow him to act. He had guessed Avril's secret and disclosed his own, but he had no right to show her that he had guessed hers or to divulge his. If he persisted in doing so he would most certainly ruin the girl's life. Side by side with the realization came the irritating thought that if only Avril had allowed him to divorce Doreen all would have been well. "A greater irritation still took hold of him when he realized that if he wished to behave honourably he certainly ought not to stay in England for Avril's sake. "The sooner I get off the better," he said to himself the next morning, when he had fully grasped his own state of mind. "She'll forget all about me, or some chap will propose to her, and it will be all right." The prospect of some young chap proposing to her was not however pleasant to him. "Why the deuce did I marry before I met her?" he asked himself. And he is not the first man who has asked himself that question, and to console himself he added: "Well, if I hadn't married I probably shouldn't have met her. It's a rummy world." But the honourable element having the upper hand, anyhow, for the moment, he wrote Avril a letter which he intended 'should break through' all the interweaving of their intimacy. It was perhaps not quite his fault if the letter betrayed between the lines the love that undoubtedly was there. "You asked me to stay with Doreen," he said, "but I feel that it is impossible. If I stayed it would be for your sake, and I must shake myself together and have the pluck to go. Pure and sincere as my feelings are towards you, yet in the present condition of affairs those feelings are an insult. I must go for your sake as well as mine. Surely I can be as brave as you have been." Then at the end he burst out with the reproach, "Why, of why, did you plead so for her? Yet if you had not I would have loved you less. Brave, wonderful Avril, let me call you that once, and let me say one word more however wrong it is. You may perhaps regret having shown me what it is my delight to have seen. Do not be ashamed of having thrown across my path the only happiness I shall ever know. I love you. No one can take this away from me. Yet I beg of you to try and forget me, if you do not you will make me wish what I ought not to wish." It was not a very wise letter perhaps. We are apt in the great crises of life to act as wisdom and common

A GREAT BELIEVER IN "FRUIT-A-TIVES"

Well Known Ontario Merchant Has Faith Because "Fruit-a-tives" Cured Him

BRONTE, ONT., MARCH 1st, 1912. "Fruit-a-tives has made a complete cure in my case of Rheumatism, that had at least five years standing before I commenced the treatment. The trouble was principally in my right hip and shoulder, the pain from it was almost unendurable, not being able to sleep on that side, I chanced to turn on my right side while asleep, the pain would immediately awaken me. This kept up until I started taking "Fruit-a-tives." I started by taking one or two tablets with a large glass of water, in the morning before breakfast and experienced pronounced relief very shortly. After a continued treatment for about six months, I was cured and am now in first class health. This, I attribute to my persistent use of "Fruit-a-tives" and I heartily recommend your remedy to any Rheumatic sufferers." JAMES DORSON. Soc. a box, 6 for $2.50—trial size, 25c. sense expect you to act, as others not concerned imagine they would have acted, and anyhow, the letter seemed to soothe the languishments of Avril's heart, to restate her self respect, for more than once she had asked herself, "Does he despise me? Does he after all care for me so much as I imagine?" At least she had not the dreadful sensation of having given her heart to one who wished not for its keeping. He cared for her, and the surging delirium of that joy held aloft for a moment the sadness of thinking of his departure. How well she understood him! Without wishing it she had made it almost impossible for him to stay with Doreen. Poor foolish Doreen! She thought of Doreen. Could she, she wondered, have done things better for them? If she passed out of their lives would they grow more together again? Had she been disloyal to her friend? Avril felt a little uneasy. "Our thoughts we cannot control," she said to herself; "it is our acts alone that we are responsible for, and I must never, never again, by word or deed come between them. He has given me the example I must follow." And she kissed the letter furtively as she ran upstairs. "We must be very, very brave," she repeated to herself, little knowing that it was the certainty that he cared for her that made it so easy to be brave.

CHAPTER VIII

"It never rains but it pours," is a proverb, which, while often failing to be supported by the weather, is nevertheless often illustrated by the advent of a rapid succession of events. The Trefusis family were not destined to break away from its interlacing with Avril's life, and a few weeks later its veracity was finally brought before Avril again in a manner, which, while it shocked her, she strove not to rejoice over. Arthur Trefusis had started on his yachting trip as soon as he could get away from the house. If he did not go so soon, he would never go; from sheer want of companionship he would be forced to fall at least into a sort of passive acquiescence in Doreen's propinquity, and this his pride forbade him to allow, for he could never, never forgive her, he told himself. Yet to remain from month to month under the same roof with a person without speaking, is a difficult thing to do. The morning of his departure, Doreen felt as if she were going to be hung. How could she part with him whom she loved so much, although she had so offended him? What if something should happen to him? How could she spend those long, lonely months without him? If she clung to him and begged him, would he stay? No, something told her that all was over between them. Whether she had snared or not, how much she knew, those were not the reasons that had led to this. He had ceased to care for her, and when a woman can say this to herself without a shadow of doubting in the saying of it, she may as well lay down in her coffin and bid the undertaker nail it down, for Earth holds no more for her. The very reason of her existence has vanished. His cab was at the door, his luggage was upon it. She stood alone in the drawing-room. Was he going to leave her without saying good-bye? She stood at the open window, and great tears welled to her eyes and dropped on her pretty lace blouse. While downstairs, answering absently the many questions of Mouché, Arthur Trefusis was asking himself whether he should say good-bye or not. He was trying to steele away without a word to show her by this very act that she was dead to him. Yet she was his wife, they might never meet again. Perhaps his coldness would drive her to—as the thought rose in his mind, another thought so vile, that he brushed it from him as if it had poisoned his love by its brief sojourn, came and stood alongside of it. "Don't forget to go and say good-bye to Mummy," said Mouché. With such certainty in the result of his act that he felt she must be obeyed. "No, I'll go now," he said, while the child ran into the hall to follow the servants with the rugs. Doreen's heart beat so as she heard his step on the stairs, that she felt as if she must faint. "Good-bye, Doreen," he said, coming only just inside the door and leaving it open. "Arthur!" She made a step towards him. He must kiss her before he left, or she would die. But he made no sign. "Write to Farquharson if you want anything. I've told Counts to let you have any money you want if you are in a bother. Good-bye, I shall be late for my train." He turned to go. "Arthur!" The cry was that of a wounded animal. Both hands were lifted to her head, as if she would go mad. "You cannot leave me like that. You will kill me." "Was he wrong after all? Did she love him? Had he been too hard? "Good-bye, little woman," was on his lips. "Good-bye, Doreen," was what he said, while her arms would round him and sought to clasp his neck. She drew close, so close as if she would keep him back. For one instant their lips met. Then he was gone. The cab rattled off. Doreen flew to the window, if only she could see him once again, but he was gone and Doreen cried for hours on the sofa. Mouché came to fetch her for luncheon, but she told Mouché she could not go down. "Are you crying because dad has gone?" asked the child. Then with infantine brutality: "He nearly forgot to come and say good-bye to you till I told him. Wasn't that naughty?" Then, after a few days, a letter came for Avril from George Farquharson. It had been a very difficult letter to write. One can hardly imagine a task more intricate than for a rather bashful young man to have to pen an epistle to a girl he loves and respects, about a woman he adores passionately. Moreover, he was not quite certain that it was exactly the sort of letter he ought to write to a young girl, but who else on earth could he write to? "Dear Miss Chichester—I hope you won't think it very cool if I write and ask you whether I may run down and spend the day with you this week. I really must see you so soon as possible about Mrs. Trefusis. I am very anxious about something I have heard."

It was not a difficult matter in the easy-going household of the Chichesters to get George Farquharson asked down to Redleigh for a couple of nights. "Let 'em all come," said Mr. Chichester, who, as the servants said, "would have his joke," and George Farquharson's ugly square face and reddish head made their appearance at Redleigh. "He looks like a horse chestnut under an autumn leaf," said Avril to herself. She had elected to fetch him from the station in her own pony-trap, which brought upon her the chaffing remark from her father: "So gone as all that?" "Indeed, not gone at all, father, but I know that he wants to talk to me about Doreen." Redleigh was one of those happy houses where subtleties were rarely resorted to, and still more rarely required. "What has happened?" she asked anxiously, an anxiety which left no illusions as to her feeling for him. "Nothing yet," was the cheery reply. "What I want is to prevent anything happening." "She really is too silly," said Avril, while her heart beat wildly, as he told his tale. "He should not have left her," George Farquharson remarked sternly. "He must be mad." Avril looked at her companion. The earnestness of his voice struck her. "I suppose you are in love with her like everybody else," she said mischievously. "I would do anything in the world to see her happy." The story was this. George Farquharson had arranged with Trefusis to continue to go to Bruton Street for a few weeks in order to finish some work Trefusis had on hand before he left for his holiday, and two days ago the butler, who, to describe him in George Farquharson's words, "Always treats me as he would a footman who can't clean plate, but is cut above his place, came to me as he generally does about everything, and told me that he had reason to believe the house was being watched. "Watched?" I said. "Who on earth would watch it, and what for?" "I haven't said a word to nobody, but in my opinion, it's Mr. Trefusis watching his lady." "Of course I pooh-poohed the notion, but Saunderson went on—you know what those people are when they are wound up—"Well, sir, it's not my place to speak, but I thought as how if there was to be any unpleasantness, a word from you to Mrs.

Trefusis might save us a lot of trouble.

George Farquharson didn't tell Avril the look of significance with which this remark had been accompanied.

"But why on earth should this house be watched?" I asked, since Mrs. Trefusis is in the country." And now, went on George Farquharson, lowering his voice lest the groom behind should hear, "I know I can trust you as her greatest friend." His look was an entreaty to her not to divulge the secret he was about to tell her. "Now comes the part that upsets me so, Saunderson told me that she comes to the house when I am gone, and that brute Lancaster comes to see her."

Avril was silent, silent while she fought a battle with herself. Why should she go on shielding a woman who so voluntarily rushed towards her own destruction? Was it right to Arthur to continue to help hoodwink him, to check a freedom which seemed so rightly his? Her voice was hard and unlike hers as she answered: "What can I do, Mr. Farquharson?" She herself wondered what had prompted Arthur to take this step. Was it, could it be? No, she pushed the thought from her. Yet she was right in her surmising. Arthur had done this thing, justifying himself by the thought that if, indeed, Doreen was running straight, she had nothing to fear; nay, more, that if he found he had been mistaken, he would go back to her; however tired he had grown of her, for Mouché's sake he would try and begin all over again. What he would not confess to himself was, that he dreaded to find himself mistaken; that he would not allow himself to dwell on was the alternative if after all he was right; it is when we are away from people, that we understand one's real feelings for them, and with Avril's photograph on the table of his cabin, he began to weave the dreams which the Bible tells us are tantamount to acts. "I thought you could warn her," George Farquharson's voice was almost piteous, and Avril softened. "Why didn't you tell her yourself?" It was so obvious that he could do so, that he would not answer for a moment. "It would come so much better from you."

"You don't know all I have done," said Avril wearily. "She is simply bent on going to the bad." "I don't wonder at it," remarked George Farquharson, a little testily. He was disappointed in Avril's resemblance to her sex, when he had thought her so far above its prejudices. "It would come so much better from one woman to another," he said, as they drove up to the door of Redleigh. Never had Avril felt so disturbed. With the remembrance of the letter he had written, a letter which she read over to herself at least once in twenty-four hours, it seemed like treachery to him to uphold Doreen any longer. "She is bent on being divorced," she said to herself. "Why should I interfere?" Something seemed to harden in her heart, yet all the while the words rang in her ears: "Whom God hath joined, let no man put asunder."

In the evening she had a chance again of speaking to George Farquharson alone. He did not begin the subject, although she knew he longed to. (To be continued)

PAYS TRIBUTE TO MINISTER

Hon. John Morrissy Pays Glowing Tribute to Hon. J. D. Hazen

At the opening of the exhibition at Chatham Hon. John Morrissy, who was among the speakers, paid a glowing tribute to the services the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has rendered to the province of New Brunswick.

Hon. Mr. Morrissy said he had been actively associated with Hon. J. D. Hazen in local politics, first in opposition and, later, as a supporter of the government. Their relations had always been of the most cordial character and he had found the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries at all times imbued with the single idea of giving the country good government and advancing the cause of the province of New Brunswick.

The speaker had followed Mr. Hazen's career with the greatest possible interest since he had entered the larger arena of effort, and as a New-Brunswick he had found pride in Mr. Hazen's achievements and position. It was a great thing for New Brunswick to be represented in the Dominion government by a man of his standing and ability. Mr. Hazen had been loyal all through to the interests of the province, and the speaker hoped he would long be continued as New Brunswick's representative in Ottawa. He felt that the people of New Brunswick would unite with him in extending best wishes to Mr. Hazen and, irrespective of politics, would unite with him in advancing the interests of the province.

Hon. Mr. Morrissy also, in practical manner, advocated the establishment of industries on the Miramichi which would provide the people with employment the year round. In Newcastle and Chatham they were largely dependent on the lumber industry and the mills were closed nearly half of the year. He felt there were large sums of money on deposit in Newcastle and Chatham which could be profitably utilized in industries and hoped to see the people unite in the effort to have their splendid hardwood lumber manufactured into furniture. Such an industry would add greatly to the prosperity of the Miramichi and he hoped to see it established. Hon. Mr. Morrissy's remarks were received with much appreciative applause.

Married at St. Andrew's Church
Quite a romance was happily concluded at the altar of St. Andrew's Church last Sunday, when Mr. Ernest John Upton of Lower Derby and formerly of Wells, Somersetshire, England, was united in the bonds of Holy Matrimony to Miss Gertrude Lucy Holloway of Glastonbury, Somersetshire, England.

Miss Holloway sailed by the S. S. "Royal Edward" from Bristol on Saturday September 20th arriving at Quebec last Saturday and upon the arrival of the Ocean Limited train on Sunday was met at Newcastle by Mr. Upton and friends.

Shortly afterwards the marriage took place and they were made man and wife at St. Andrew's Church by the rector the Rev. W. J. Bate and the same day went to their Derby home.

Although New Brunswick has many fair daughters of her own we are none the less glad to welcome those who come across the seas from Bonnie England to do their share in building up on this North American continent a greater Britain. The witnesses of the marriage were Mr. Ralph Clouston of Lower Derby, and Mrs. Coxon of Chatham, also a newcomer from the old country.

BORN
At Newcastle, N. B., Sept 29th, to Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Stables, a daughter.

The body of Alex. Donaldson, formerly chief engineer of the steamer Beatrice, was found on the shore at the dockyard Sunday. He had been missing since February 12. Deceased was about 45 years of age, and a native of Scotland. The firing of guns of warships in the harbor is thought to have brought the body to the surface.

TWO MORE FOXES ADDED TO RANCH

The Miramichi Black Fox Company now Have Three Pairs Genuine Black Foxes

A living enterprise in which fortunes are materialized while you wait and three hundred per cent. dividends are common must be regarded with respect, if not with awe. And if the mind harks back to historical records of the South Sea bubble or of Dutch tulip speculation it need not dampen the ardor or weaken the hope of the enterprising. Black fox ranching in P. E. I., has the wildest imaginative romance simply outclassed. Its profits are so great that some fear an absolute cessation of the supply of black fox pelts, all the animals being used for breeding purposes, while others see visions of a world divided into small areas with wire netting, and devoted exclusively to black fox propagation. But, unfortunately, we cannot all live by black foxes, however large the proportion of us who may get rich thereby.

At one time a man who killed a fox in England was punished by having his eyes torn out, and the foxes were the common red. What they would have done to the slayer of a black fox can scarcely be imagined. But we live in milder times, so far as Government vengeance is concerned, so the owners of black foxes protect them with bloodhounds and night watchmen. "Its weight in gold" is a common expression in black fox land. There are foxes whose owners would indignantly refuse four times their weight in gold if offered over the counter.

The man who owns a black fox can now bond it, capitalize it, and float his limited liability shares on a market that seems oblivious to the monetary stringency. Talk about wildcat mining flotations and western real estate preparations for the eastern market! The black fox exchange has everything distanced, and is not only selling stock but showing dividends.

The interest in this business is not only confined to the Island, but is extending all over the world. In this province alone black fox companies are being formed in nearly every town and city of any note.

In this county, situated at Douglastown, will be found one of the most thriving companies in the province. The Miramichi Black Fox Co. Ltd., with a capital stock of $99,900. Mr. T. W. Crocker of Newcastle in an interview yesterday morning, informed us that he had just added two more foxes to this ranch which he brought from Coverdale and that four more will arrive this week, two from Murray Corner and two from P. E. I.

When these have arrived they will then have three pairs of genuine black foxes. This company as yet have made no attempt to increase their business. During the past fortnight they have sold about $8000 worth of shares, leaving only about twenty five more, which they offer to the public.

The company are erecting a large barn with refrigerator and also a dwelling house which they expect to have completed by the end of October. They have secured the services of a competent keeper from P. E. I. who has had several years' experience in the fox business to look after their ranch.

The market for live foxes is still so strong that pelts are hard to obtain, and prices remain in the clouds. No one has devised a means for painlessly removing the pelts and inducing the foxes to grow new ones, as geese are plucked of their feathers, so sheep are shorn of their fleeces. So far shares are all that can be taken off and sold without injury to the foxes, and these, like the pelts, are far short of the demand.

The Miramichi Black Fox Co., is one of the strongest companies in the province, and the near future will see them the owners of one of the largest and best equipped fox ranches in the Dominion.
