my savings, to say nothing of what he earns by his own building speculations?

"And kindness and generosity also, I hope," continued Madame Lavinia, "for I have not forgotten M. Ferron, that my daughter and I owe everything to you, and if it had not been for the credit that you formerly gave me—"

"Don't speak for that, I intreat," abruptly interrupted Jacques, visibly embarrassed; "you must require refreshment. Come, Louise, you must do the honours of your new home, my child; I know nothing about receiving guests."

"Beside the customers and the lease to which he was indebted for his comfortable condition in life, the builder gave up to his son all his outstanding debt. Madam Lavinia, on her part, gave to Louise her household furniture, wedding-clothes, and twenty thousand francs payable on the wedding-day. This was much more than M. Ferron exacted, and he said as much."

"You may easily suppose," said he, "how happy it makes me to see these young people so comfortably off; to expose a young couple to poverty is like throwing wheat into the sewer. One must not, as they say, let the honeymoon rise over a barrel of rue; neither must we suffer the happiness of the young people to be the misery of the old."

"The noise of a char-a-banc disturbed at last the reverie into which he had fallen and he recognised the travellers in the midst of the clouds of dust which surrounded the horses and carriage. When they arrived at the gate of the park in front of the house, Ferron advanced to meet them, and was saluted by the joyful exclamations of the travellers. Those were Madame Lavinia and her daughter and a young man, who was almost concealed behind the boxes and packages."

"Good night, father," said Louise, who by an act of courtesy, anticipated in her situation to the old builder, the attention to which he would not be entitled for some few days.

had suffered some expressions of incredulity to escape her, fixed her eyes upon him interrogatively. At length after a short pause to collect his thoughts, he began as follows:

"Well, as our neighbour you, M. Ferron did just at the time we were taking down the scaffolding from his new house, and his affairs were in such disorder that everybody said, after the general winding up, the widow's whole fortune would consist of her cap. As to myself, I was not much alarmed, for the building was sufficient security for my debt; but it was necessary to adopt legal precautions, and to take possession for fear of accidents."

"Beside, if the widow Lavinia had a daughter, I had a son to bring up, and to whom I was the most attached, inasmuch as for six years I had always been expecting his death. His constitution is strong now; but at that time it trembled like a slight building with every puff of wind. Every one who looked at him seemed to say, 'Poor little thing!—this commiserating attention went to my heart. The doctor who had attended him in his illness, said his lungs were delicate; he recommended that cold and damp should be avoided, and said that another attack of pleurisy would infallibly carry him off. So I took the same care of him as I would of a bird in a cage; he never went out but with me, and in fine weather I almost measured the sun and wind before I exposed him to their influence."

"I was our business, as builders, to erect houses, repaired houses, and to make people pay for them at the proper time, replied the old lady; 'and when my husband died without having paid what he owed you, you would have been justified in taking possession of it.'"

"I intended to have done so," said Jacques, smiling; "I have kept a proper part for myself. Besides another sum of twenty thousand francs, there is my business, which is worth much more."

"I was too far advanced, however, to return, and as the clouds broke now and then, showing the blue sky, I hoped it would soon clear up."

"The two young people looked at one another with surprise, and sat down on either side of the builder. Madame Lavinia, who extremity, I raised the boy in my arms, pressed him to my breast, and ran forward shelter without knowing where to find it, without, indeed, knowing where I was, when the sound of a horse's feet and of some one calling me made me turn my head. I then noticed a carriage which had stopped: A gentleman with white hair put his head out of the window."

"What has happened? Where are you carrying that child?" he asked. "Into the first house where I can receive assistance," answered I. "Is he wounded?" "No; but the cold has seized him; he is just recovered from illness, and this weather is enough to kill him."

"He opened the door of the carriage, and received the child streaming with wet, on his knees. On seeing the child's face, and hearing him cough, he could not forbear an exclamation of emotion. 'Quick, quick,' said he, turning to some ladies who were seated by his side; 'help me to take off these wet clothes; we will cover him with your pelisses. There is danger, and the warmth must be at once recalled to the extremities. Alfred passed me the phial which you will find in the pocket of the carriage close by you.'"

"While he was thus speaking he undressed Stephen, with the assistance of the ladies, and began to rub his body with the contents of the phial. When the child appeared warm, he wrapped him up in several garments which his companions took off, made a sign to the young man whom he called Alfred to descend quickly, and laid the sick child upon the cushions. He then turned to me, inquired whether we were far from my house, and after receiving my reply, he ordered the coachman to proceed gently."

"I thanked him, and followed close by the door of the carriage. In my anxiety I had quite forgotten my donkey, but the young man who had left the carriage now brought her to me. We continued thus until we arrived at Thuan. The rain continued to fall in torrents, but I thought no more of it. I could not take my eyes from the interior of the carriage in which the child was lying.—The gentleman with white hair, leaning over him, observed him with attention, and watched his slightest movements. After a time he made a sign to me that all was going on well. The respiration of the child appeared more free, and drops of perspiration appeared on his face. At last we reached home, when the stranger himself carried the little patient to bed, which he had caused to be warmed, and in a few minutes he fell asleep. I endeavoured to thank him, but he interrupted me."

"Don't thank about it," said he; "but go and change your clothes; perhaps also you will permit my son to do the same; here he is coming up stairs."

is no justice where there is no humanity; when all at once recollected my premeditated treatment of the widow Lavinia and her little girl. They also, in their affliction required assistance, and instead of giving it to them I remained shut up in my rights, as the unknown physician might have remained in his carriage. The comparison touched my heart. It was an instant when emotion renders one impassioned by holy thoughts and principles. I remember the declaration of the great Teacher on this point, and felt a conviction that if I was without pity for the widow, God would not have compassion on my boy, and I should not be allowed to retain him. This idea took such powerful possession of my mind, that although the rain still continued to fall, I ran to the stable, mounted my horse, galloped to Mulhausen, and reached the house of the lawyer just as he was going to bed. When I told him that I thought to take back the papers, he thought me mad; but this did not deter me from my purpose. As soon as I had them under my arm, I felt pleased and tranquil. I returned to Thuan as fast as the horse could carry me, and found my darling boy still enjoying a calm and blessed slumber."

"You know the rest. Instead of being paid all at once, I allowed Madame Lavinia ten years to pay me in; and now her business has so much increased, and her daughter so grown, that the old lawsuit is languishing in a wedding. Henceforth you will understand why, whenever you remind me of what I have done for you, I blush like a school-girl. Praise that is not deserved weighs heavily on the heart. But now that I have confessed I still no longer feel ashamed; for you know my good action does not belong to me. I owe it primarily to Him who is the author of every good thought and holy purpose, and instrumentally to that excellent man whom I never saw again, but whose disinterested kindness taught me to understand what true justice is, and who was thus my unconscious preceptor."

"I have made up my mind, as I told you, to take possession of the widow's house in satisfaction of my debt; I was going to set out for Mulhausen with my papers, when the child ran after me. He begged me to take him with me. There was not a single cloud in the sky, the birds were singing in the hedges, and the old monk, who served me for a barometer, had fallen ill; there was every prospect of a fine day. I put the saddle on the donkey, and seated on it the child, who was as pleased as a courtesier. Everything went well till we reached the town. The lawyer took my papers, pronounced to me arrangements for putting me in possession, and said the house should be mine before six months were over. I went away rejoiced at this promise, and set out to return home with the little boy and the donkey."

"During the time we were with the lawyer, the weather had changed for the worse; the wind began to raise the dust in eddies along the road, and large clouds rose from behind the mountains. I hesitated a moment whether I should return on account of the child; but he was beginning to get tired and asked to go home. I thought we should have time to get there before the storm came on, and walked faster accordingly. Unhappily, the donkey had settled her own pace, and she would not be diverted from it. In vain did I call her by name and urge her on, she would not hasten her steps. Stephen offered her a cake by way of encouragement, which she ate to the last crumb, but went on nevertheless in the old jog-trot. I was more provoked at the obstinacy of the animal because the clouds had overspread the sky, and from then descended a small cold rain, which the wind was still raising higher, blew in our faces. We were too far advanced, however, to return, and as the clouds broke now and then, showing the blue sky, I hoped it would soon clear up."

"I was our business, as builders, to erect houses, repaired houses, and to make people pay for them at the proper time, replied the old lady; 'and when my husband died without having paid what he owed you, you would have been justified in taking possession of it.'"

"I intended to have done so," said Jacques, smiling; "I have kept a proper part for myself. Besides another sum of twenty thousand francs, there is my business, which is worth much more."

"I was too far advanced, however, to return, and as the clouds broke now and then, showing the blue sky, I hoped it would soon clear up."

"The two young people looked at one another with surprise, and sat down on either side of the builder. Madame Lavinia, who the young rising into strength for the old losing strength, the potato becomes dry and floury, for many years.

"This longer, once the price of potatoes, like its great progenitors, the barbers, the ker-kippers, white Turks, red Turks, slipper-potato, peeler potato of Gainsburgh, black-bull of Kerry, and a host of others each in their turn, raised up again. They are now gone. Here is the longer, the cup, English red, and Irish apple, and the red twelve years ago produced the best land, it produces only 60 barrels; but the ascending germs, they now blossom, but cannot grow apples; consequently all these kinds of potatoes enumerated may be called 'descending germs.' See this diagram showing the life of the longer. [Two diagrams showing the life of the longer, one ascending and one descending.]

"The first diagram shows the potato existing for 24 years in forced states of being; first as an ascending germ in blossom for five years; a potato, with apples, for nine years; and there not being any apples on the stalks for the last ten years, they then become descending germs, unable now to give any produce on mountain land, where they formerly grew. The law laid down in this diagram rates every potato, and the same law guides its steady march, and the potato grows up for fifteen years."

"The second diagram shows the plant ascending a vitality for ten years; its longest day, and green from five to seven months in proportion to its age; then descending, losing its vitality, from its tenth to its nineteenth year; at which period it remains green only five months, and produces no seed. Thus the seed supplied by the parent plant that at its longest period must of necessity be the best and strongest. The descending germ of the tenth year will remain green only three months, and with little produce. Hence, seed from the plant at ten years is perfect; the other only in proportion to its age; the descending germs, consequently I fear it is hardly possible to procure good seed now, and I question if ever perfect seed has been sown, except by fortunate accident, the belief latterly entertained being, that the seed was only to give variety of kinds."

"The plant at transplanting is as perfect in all its parts as the oak, the apple tree, or the female bird from the egg. The root performs the same functions to the plant that the umbilical does to the animal—sucks juices from the earth and transmits it through one set of vessels to the leaves, which are a continuation and extension of the same vessels and matter. These extend to absorb the nourishment and transmission of air and moisture, assimilate the juices and return them through another set of vessels to nourish and enlarge the various parts of the plant. Thus, the vessels perform the same functions as the lungs of the animal, besides giving shade to the vegetable. These truths point out the true mode of cultivating ascending and descending germs, and also the potato. The plant from a perfect potato lives seven months perfecting its fruit before it dies. The plant from descending germs lives only from five to three months, unable at either stage to perfect its fruit. Therefore when the plant dies, the fruit not being ripe cannot absorb the nourishment from the leaves and vessels, until these vessels close. Consequently, when we see the leaves getting spotted and black, and emitting an offensive smell from decomposing matter, we should at once dig the land, and save what potatoes exist, and turn them into some useful purpose. This is what we in our wisdom call, 'the incomprehensible potato disease; produced, you will observe by our own neglect on the immutable laws of God and nature.'"

"The largest potato, being first from the plant, and consequently longer in the world than the small one, is best for seed. This (producing a tuber) is a potato with twelve eyes, consequently twelve plants. If I set it whole I put twelve plants to live upon the land of one in other words, I put twelve cows to live on one cow's grass. Therefore, to see the eyes of the large potatoes for seed, is, we dig the land, and set potatoes to the largest and best in the light and they become green. They are thus best for seed, but not so good for the table, the oxygen having escaped. To keep potatoes for use, turf char is best; it will keep them perfect, though not a month old."

"To give an idea how to manage the potato seed for sale or use—Liang the apples in the barn or outside, in the light, until they become white, soft, and pearly, like a ripe gooseberry; then press out the seed into water, and throw away the hull; wash the glutinous matter from the seed by change of water, and dry it in the sun or take a jelly apple and press out the seed between the folds of blotting paper, the paper absorbs all the glutinous matter, and you will get from 300 to 320 seeds (a sufficient quantity for one farmer). Another mode:—Cover the apples in sand, which will absorb the glutinous matter; and in the morning sow sand and seed together in a hot bed, which is simply twelve inches of straw manure covered with two inches of earth. I cultivated 500 plants from a box four feet long by one foot wide, when the plants were from four to six inches above the earth, to drill eighteen inches between each plant. March or April is the best time for transplanting, and drills should be adopted in every instance in preference to lazy beds, because the latter retain rain and grow weeds, which prevent the germination of the seed, and cannot be easily got rid of."

"Observe, the potatoes are small, but had not strength to form an apple. Here exhibit (one year old) is the other, which is one year older. Observe the difference in the size of the tubers which it produced. They may be compared to small eggs increasing in size, and the larger potatoes that grow from seed contain to blossom up to five years, and then first begin to form apples. Here (exhibiting a stalk) is a plant six years old, which bore an apple; consequently I call the parent of this apple potato the plants before it not being able to perform the functions of a potato I call germs, Nos. 1, 2, 3, and so on ascending according to their age."

"Now to get at the descending germs, as the time of the year is now, and the plants are in the best of their health, I will trace the history of this kind of potato back to the year 1818; and I can tell that from 1825 to 1835 it was no longer with vitality that it would grow without sowing many wild, large size, and producing 100 barrels to the acre, but of a quality more fit for cattle than for man. This was the time to take seed from its apples and have

AGRICULTURAL SHOW. The annual exhibition of the County of Huron Agricultural Society at Goderich, took place yesterday. We are happy to be able to state that it is the opinion of those well versed in these matters, that the show was generally a good one, and especially does this apply to the outdoor exhibition.

The young stock and horses were well worthy of admiration. Several good cows were also shown. The Sheep and pigs were less numerous than usual, but made a very creditable appearance. The grain shows was of a very good quality and we question much if any County in Canada has raised heavier crops of spring grain than Huron this season.

The exhibition of domestic manufactures and dairy produce, was not so large as upon former occasions, although many of the articles shown were of splendid quality and were largely creditable to the fair exhibitors. We regret that the competitors in this important department were comparatively few, and hope on future occasions to see an improvement in this respect.

EXTENSIVE FIRE AT QUEBEC.—A fire, it is said, having in the house of Mr. John Giblin, grocer, Press-de-Ville, having left a candle burning in his bedroom, when he went to sleep, a fire broke out there this morning, at two o'clock, which has proved lamentable. Between fifteen and twenty houses have been completely destroyed.

THE NEW ORLEANS CRESCENT says: A few months ago, a merchant of this city, bred and went to reside in the Fourth District. Wishing to live in privacy he engaged only one servant—a fresh green girl from the Emerald Isle. She took the lever, and shared the same fate. A third and fourth filled the vacancy in the household, and followed in succession the sweeping summons of the same fell destroyer.

JUDSON'S CHEMICAL EXTRACT OF

CHERRY AND LUNGWORT, FOR THE CURSE OF Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Spitting of Blood, Night Sweats, Asthma, Liver Complaints, and CONSUMPTION.

DEATH can be and has been prevented in thousands of cases by the use of this nature's own remedy, Judson's Chemical Extract of Cherry and Lungwort. This medicine unlike most of the patent remedies of the day is the result of careful study and experiments of a scientific and experienced Physician.

When the strength of this is properly extracted in the best manner known for curing the worst Coughs and other pulmonary diseases, it cures the phlegm and enables the sufferer to expectorate easily, and above will cure the worst cold or cough, which is neglected, always leads to Consumption.

Lungwort - This is a plant the virtues of which are known to few. It has been used by the most learned men of all times, that "nature has provided a remedy for each and every ailment of the human system, and it is our duty to go to its source for truth. Lungwort is doubtless the most valuable remedy for Consumption, Coughs and other pulmonary diseases, and the remedy which cures the worst cases of Ulcerated Lungs, and other pulmonary affections, almost immediately, in a great number of cases.

These two articles combined with other pure and vegetable ingredients, form a medicine that is certain to cure the worst cases of Consumption if used in the manner directed. Do not be deceived by cheap imitations. Do not be discouraged by the small quantity of medicine which will cure the worst cases of Consumption if used in the manner directed.
